The last supper. This is the most expensive last supper, Mr. Chairman, that has been indulged in during our generation. As I have said earlier, this is a poor agreement, a poorer arrangement for Canada than was the old Kaiser deal, the deal that was blocked by the International River Improvements Act. I believe it is wrong. I believe this treaty should be renegotiated.

There are any number of reasons for renegotiating it and there is one reason that I have not heard mentioned in the house, although it might have escaped my notice. I believe the senior member for the Kootenays did mention the fact there had been no definitive decision concerning the feasibility of the base for a dam on the High Arrow. Of course, the High Arrow is the crux of this treaty. Under the treaty we accept full responsibility for maintaining the project. The High Arrow dam will hold back some 20 billion tons of water. Mr. Deane, a professional engineer in the west Kootenay, writing in the Nelson daily News, had this to say:

> —since foundation conditions at High Arrow have turned out to be worse than hoped for at the time of drafting the treaty, Canada should re-open negotiations with the U.S. to find alternatives which do not force B.C. and Canada into such an uncertain engineering and financial gamble. The Mica dam site, in contrast to High Arrow, is considered ideal for a large storage dam with rock extending right across the river channel, at shallow depth, allowing the dam to be completely founded on rock.

This is one reason why the agreement should be renegotiated. There is no reason in the world why this agreement should not be brought before the House of Commons at this time to determine whether or not it is feasible or whether this parliament is prepared to accept it. The day after the Prime Minister returned to the house, he was questioned by the Leader of the Opposition. This question appears on page 1166 of Hansard for January 18, 1961, and I quote:

> May I ask the Prime Minister whether the government proposes to submit this treaty to the committee on external affairs of this house before the agreement has been concluded with the province of British Columbia?
>
> Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I cannot go any further at the moment than to say to the Leader of the Opposition, as I already stated, that it is the intention to have this question placed before the committee on external affairs. When that will be, I cannot say at this time.

Of course, it would have been unusual if the Prime Minister had admitted at that time there was even a suggestion there should be an agreement with British Columbia before this parliament dealt with the matter. He had just left a dinner at the White House after signing this agreement. Then, nine or ten months later he finally said we would have to have an agreement with the province of British Columbia before the matter was referred to a commons committee.

This matter could come before the committee now. However, we might have a third parliament before this treaty comes before a committee of this house. This is the second parliament since the treaty was signed, and there will probably be a third. I am afraid that the minister himself, because of his resignation from the cabinet, will not be in a position to sign it. I feel quite confident that no one on that side of the house will ever ratify the agreement.

Mr. McGee: Before the hon. member takes his seat, I wonder if he would tell that funny story about the last supper again? Some of us did not quite appreciate the humour.

Mr. Byrne: Would the hon. member repeat his question?

(Translation):

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Chairman, I did not intend to take part in the debate. However, after listening to some of the statements made this afternoon, I feel it is my duty to make a few remarks. I wish to assure you, however, that I will not be long.

We are asked to approve interim supply in order, we are told, to pay the civil servants, and we will be asked later to vote supplementary estimates for the Canadian National Railways.

Mr. Chairman, when will this patchwork system come to an end?

I admit that I have barely three months' experience but if anybody other than the federal government were administered in this way, I am convinced, on account of my business experience, that the country would be driven to utter bankruptcy on short notice.

Mr. Chairman, if there is one body in the world which must have a clearly determined and very precise budget, it is the government of Canada.

Whereas we expected to find an accurate bookkeeping with specific items for such a month, such a week or such a day, we are in presence of the greatest administrative jumble ever seen. Enormous expenditures are made in all fields and, then we are told in the house that more money is needed to pay unforeseen expenses.

As an example, I shall give the specific case of the C.N.R. to which the government is constantly giving money. Now, representatives of the two old line parties find it strange that Social Crediters should ask questions in committee, because they want to know what use was made of the $50 million passed unanimously in previous years.

Moreover, our group wants to know what use will be made, or rather has already been made, of the further amount of $20 million that we are being asked to vote today, because we are sure that those $20 million have already been spent.

Besides, those questions will remain unanswered like all those we have asked on financial matters.

As a matter of fact, when it is a matter of providing credit to the C.N.R. or to any department concerned with top administration, a wall of silence that a private member is unable to penetrate, is seen rising between the administrators and the government.

Now, we see again today, like this afternoon, some Liberal puppets play their comedy, and cry shame to the Conservatives who grant over $130 million per year to the C.N.R. in order to help this crown corporation wage an unfair war against all our organized truckers across Canada.

The Liberals say that the government wants to bankrupt private enterprise. The jokers forget that in 1957, for instance, as shown at page 3313 of Hansard for April 5, 1957—I believe the Liberals were in office at that time—they voted C.N.R. grants in excess of $318,700,000 to enable it to wage its war against the truckers' association. Those are amounts which supported the fight against the truckers' association.

And now these people pose here as defenders of private enterprise. What a joke, Mr. Chairman.

I am not against giving some assistance since our Social Credit principle is that the government should not exist to give prodigally to all organizations but to give reasonable assistance.

But when such assistance is of such magnitude, when it replaces any efforts those industries should make to help themselves, I consider this kind of assistance harmful even for the companies. Because if you take a man and give him enough money to live without having to lift a finger, you will be rendering this man the greatest disservice. The same goes for the large industries which receive more and more every day from the government to make up for their deficits.

If we have so much money to give away, Mr. Chairman, let us do it as a really democratic government. Let us do it in the interests of the people who have elected us the same as they did you. Let us give assistance to heads of families, to their children who are awaiting our legislation, instead of laughing and joking.

I expected to find in this house a group of seriously dedicated men. I was most disappointed. What did I find? I did not find administrators, I did not find men who came here to prepare the budget the people have been expecting for over a year. We find here electoral jokers aping puppets and playing politics.

That is why we have in some instances supported this government, because we came here to act in all sincerity. We came here not to launch an election after one or two months. We came here, members of the Liberal party, to administer this country.

What is administration? Administration is to foresee, to prepare legislation so as to put bread on the table of our Canadian families tomorrow.

As for yourselves, you came here to play politics, and to chant: let us go to the country, let us go the country.

We came here to administer the affairs of the country, and this we will do as long as we feel like it, by fastening you to your seats. You will have to stay there and to put up with us.

Mr. Chairman, if the government have so much money, let them fill up the unemployment insurance commission fund—

An hon. Member: With what?

Mr. Gauthier: —in order to enable—

An hon. Member: We will tell you.

Mr. Gauthier: If you do not know, others do and you will just have to learn it.

Mr. Chairman, let them fill up the unemployment insurance commission fund so as to make for a more equitable distribution of unemployment insurance benefits.

I should like to say a few words on the Unemployment Insurance Act. It seems that the act has been drafted, not to protect certain groups of people, but to take away the unemployment insurance contributions which they made while they were working.

I want to deal especially with the problems concerning our woodsmen. Mr. Chairman, I am not joking, although I see some hon. members grinning stupidly on my right.

I am not joking. This is too serious.

I wish to tell the house about one case concerning unemployment insurance, but there are 40 or 50 such instances in my riding.

Many farmers of my district must go in the woods during the winter because they are unable to support their families on their income alone. Everybody understands that, and those who are interested in my area know that farmers have to spend five or six months in the woods every year. I have here a letter from one of my constituents. I shall not read it to you, but it is pathetic. He is the father of eight children, he owns eight milch cows, and every fall, he has to take to the woods.

It is his wife—stop laughing, because you also have wives—who has to look after the animals in the winter, do the chores and milk the cows. This is nothing to be ashamed of—you surely drink milk—but his wife has to do that. The man has to stay away working in lumber camps for six months.

On the first day, Mr. Chairman, his unemployment insurance booklet is taken away from him and, during the six months he is going to spend in the woods, stamps are affixed in it. He comes back in the spring and goes to the unemployment insurance office only to find he is not entitled to benefits because—

An hon. Member: It is in another riding.

Mr. Gauthier: No, it is not in another riding. Look at what is going on in your own and you will see how painful it is. As for me, I know the people, I get around in my riding.

That man, three years in a row, did the same thing each spring. He thought the law was the same for him as for the others. So, when spring came around, he reported to his office and got his unemployment insurance benefits. Now, his whole case is being re-examined. And there are fifty such cases in my riding. All are being reviewed. And, after three years, that farmer is being told to pay back $2,700 before the month of March. The sum of $2,700 is being claimed from him. He was informed in writing by a lawyer, if you please. He was then forced to sell his cattle and all his machinery to pay off and had still $784 to pay. He got another letter from the lawyer whose cost he had to pay, which made a total of $870.

The man became a labourer and it so happens that his salary was seized. He does not even have enough money to support his eight children.

The Deputy Chairman: I am most interested in the remarks of the member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier) but unfortunately I can scarcely hear him. I would ask the members of the committee to co-operate and invite them to tone down their private discussions in order to allow the hon. member to proceed with his observations. Surely the members will understand and I thank them for their co-operation.

Mr. Gauthier: I thank you very kindly, Mr. Chairman. Fortunately there are still intelligent people in this house.

I have only quoted this as an example. I have written to the Minister of Labour in this regard, but I know he is not acquainted with all such cases, and I am sure that he will examine the situation with great care, for I am told that there are cases of that kind not only in my constituency but in every constituency, Mr. Chairman.

We are here in order to work in the interest of the people. First, we have to discover the diseases from which the people are suffering because to cure the ill, a precise diagnosis must be made in the first place. That is the reason why I pointed it out to the house.

If it is money which is lacking in the unemployment insurance fund, we only have to provide the necessary amount so that the farmers may get the products which will allow them to live like human beings, instead of taking away from them the assets which they took 30 years to build.

If I mention this situation, it is because the related facts are absolutely true.

It is possible to improve their condition through unemployment insurance. I beg of you not to deal lightly with this matter but to take the humanitarian action the people expect of all the hon. members.

With regard to the second point, I shall be brief. If, after having made up the shortfall in the unemployment insurance fund, we still have money—we should have money, for, since I have been here, millions have been paid out without anybody knowing for what purpose—we shall have at least the satisfaction of knowing to what end it has been employed, because the benefits will be felt throughout the population.

We have only to increase the number of projects in the winter works program, which are a great help in some areas. It is just a palliative, but it is better than nothing. Let us double the amount for winter works, to help all our unemployed survive this off-season of four months without too much hardship.

We hope that the government and all hon. members, when those items are discussed in the house, will feel duty bound to make a thorough study of this and to take serious action for the benefit of all our people.

Mr. Drouin: May I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Gauthier: Yes.

[The Deputy Chairman.]

Mr. Drouin: How can the hon. member explain to the people at home that he voted to keep in power a Conservative government which wants them to give back the unemployment insurance benefits they received under a Liberal administration?

The Chairman: Order. Standing orders prohibit all comments on the way an hon. member voted, either in the house or in committee. For that reason, I declare the question out of order.

(Text):

Mr. Stewart: This evening we are being asked to vote ten twelfths of the fiscal requirements for 1962-63. Nevertheless, we have had before this house in committee only one of the estimates for the fiscal year. This is the kind of financial mismanagement which would be intolerable on any farm, in any university or, certainly, in any business concern. Consequently, when the motion is made that the tenth twelfth of the requirement for the present fiscal year be granted, I have serious doubts that I should vote affirmatively.

Having said this, I want to talk this evening about three specific matters that concern eastern agriculture. These are matters which cause doubt to arise in the minds of many people in this country; and I am sure the Minister of Agriculture will want to come into this committee before this motion is voted on and try to still the doubts which persist in my own mind and, I think, in the minds of many others on these points.

First, there is the question of the reduction in the assistance for lime. In the original estimates for the present year, $2,640,000 was provided for this important form of assistance. That sum has now been cut to $1,608,900. As hon. members know, the liming of land makes a very important contribution to its fertility. We have had some difficulty in accustoming some farmers to the use of lime, and anything that interrupts this practice in any degree is to be deplored. The government's decision to reduce assistance in this instance is, I think, to be deplored. This decision is especially surprising when we have on the statute books of this country an act passed in the 1960-61 session, the Agricultural Rehabilitation and Development Act, which in one of its sections provides that the minister may make agreements with the provinces, involving the expenditure of money, for projects for soil improvement and conservation which will improve agricultural efficiency in a province, or in any area thereof specified in the agreement. In other words, in the 1960-61 session there was placed on the statute books of this country an act with a certain aim, and now within the past few months this government proposes to take action that is directly contrary to the purpose of that recently-made statute. There is a kind of contradiction there, a kind of irresponsibility, which I think ought to be explained to this committee before this present motion passes.

The second matter that raises doubts is the question of the premium subsidy on hogs. We are not talking here about a mere temporary hardship for farmers. This premium was introduced not as an immediate assistance to the agricultural sector of our population, but, as I understand it, as part of a general policy. The policy was that by giving these premiums the quality of hogs would be improved. As you know, sir, this is the kind of policy that has to be pursued consistently if it is going to be effective. Now, suddenly, when we have encouraged our farmers along certain lines of thinking, and have led them to believe that the government of this country approves those lines of thinking, we give them what I think the psychologists would call "negative reinforcement" by reducing this premium. Not only that, sir, but this premium was supposed to permit us to retain, and indeed to develop, markets for our agricultural products in certain parts of the United States and to help us retain our own domestic market for pork products.

It is said that Canadian bacon is among the best in the world. We have been trying to expand our production so that the quality of our bacon will become known to larger and larger numbers of people. Our hope, I believe, was that by selling more bacon abroad and by supplying more of our domestic market, we would improve somewhat our balance of payments position. It would be no vast contribution to this generally difficult problem, but it would be something of a help. But now, sir, without any very great saving in money, this premium subsidy on hogs has been cut back quite sharply, and in a quite unpredictable manner. This has worked great hardship, not only for the farmers, but for the whole agricultural sector of our national economy. I am sure that the Minister of Agriculture will want to tell the committee before this motion passes what is the basic, fundamental, and justifying reason for this change, other than the mere notion that every sector of the nation should contribute to balancing the budget.

Mr. Chairman, there is a third reason in this field of agriculture why I am hesitant about supporting the motion now before the committee. I refer to the hardship caused to many maritime farmers by the strange application made by the Minister of Agriculture of the regulations concerning freight assistance on corn. You may recall, sir, that on April 16, 1962, in response to requests made by various farm organizations during a period of many months, the government, because of the shortage of western feedstuffs, on which freight assistance normally would be paid, made shipments of corn into the maritime provinces eligible for freight assistance on a temporary basis. During September, 1962, it became evident that western feedstuffs from the 1962 crop would not be available in the maritimes until some time about the first or the middle of the month of November. Consequently, the Minister of Agriculture was asked to extend this special and temporary corn subsidy for one month; that is, until the end of October, 1962. This the minister decided not to do, on the ground that sufficient feed grains had been moved into maritime positions to meet the foreseeable needs in those provinces until such time as western feed grains had become available there.

Unfortunately, it appears that the minister did not put himself in possession of certain important facts before making this serious decision.

I am informed that in July, 1962, a shipload of corn was landed at the Halifax elevator, and that this shipment filled much of the space available for domestic storage in that elevator. It was held there until late in September. During this period the owners of this shipment were unwilling to sell any of this corn, evidently because it had been committed to one company, namely Canada Packers. Towards the end of September this corn was moved into Canada Packers storage. The minister alone can tell this committee precisely what the facts of this transaction were.

This very large supply of corn owned by one company evidently entered into the figures the minister used when he decided that there was enough corn available in the maritimes until such time as western feed grains became available. Moreover, it would appear that something like 50,000 or 60,000 bushels of corn owned by a distiller—of course, on this no freight assistance was paid—stored in the same elevator, and 100,000 bushels of export wheat may have entered into the figures used by the minister in deciding that sufficient grain was available.

I understand that the company in question, Canada Packers, would not have been able to take advantage of the special subsidy on corn in this way if the Department of Agriculture had not allowed it a dual status as both wholesaler and retailer. I am informed that at Truro, Nova Scotia, and at Sussex, New Brunswick, this company is classified for the purposes of the Department of Agriculture as a wholesaler, but that at their very much larger plant at Port Williams,

Nova Scotia, they are classified as a retailer. As you may know, sir, under the regulations the freight subsidy can be claimed when feedstuffs are transferred from a wholesaler to a retailer. The fact that this company has a dual standing in the eyes of the Department of Agriculture for these purposes means that it does not forgo freight assistance during any long period in which grain bought by the company is in wholesale storage; nor does the company have to worry about losing the freight subsidy on losses in bulk caused by shrinkage during wholesale storage.

From all the facts that are ascertainable it would appear that this particular manufacturer of feed stock was able to stock up on approximately 200,000 bushels of subsidized corn. Naturally I have nothing whatsoever against this particular company. The important thing is that, by making the acquisition of this subsidized corn attractive to the company, and by terminating the subsidy on the basis of figures which evidently included the holdings of the company, the Department of Agriculture made it necessary for the majority of those farmers who buy feed to pay the higher, unsubsidized transportation costs on the feed corn they had to use during the period between the time when the subsidized corn ceased to be available to them and the time when freight-assisted western feedstuffs became available.

This unfortunate situation was noted in a submission by the eastern agricultural conference to the Minister of Agriculture on November 6, 1962. After recommending that feed freight assistance is a sound national policy which should be embodied in a statute of this parliament, the submission continued as follows:

> This does not mean that there are no improvements needed. Some adjustments are outlined in the attached federation statement. Also the conference feels quite strongly that definite improvements can be made in the administration of the policy. Great care should be taken to see that in the administration of freight assistance, all parties receive equitable treatment and that no special advantage is gained by individual commercial interests. Such a special advantage, and we believe a violation of the intent of the policy, has been gained recently in connection with the assisted movement of corn to the maritimes.

Later a resolution was passed by the Maritime Co-operative Services Limited, at its annual meeting at the middle of November, and, the following resolution passed at that time would appear to be substantially correct. It reads in part as follows:

> Whereas an unusual interpretation of subsidy regulations, which we believe was not the intent of policy permitted one large feed manufacturer to obtain the advantage of the subsidy on corn stored before September 30 by being classed as a retailer at one point while as a wholesaler at another and other companies, including this co-operative doing similar business by being classed as wholesalers could not qualify for the subsidy payment on corn put in storage;
>
> Therefore be it resolved that . . . this annual meeting expresses disappointment—

I am leaving out certain words there which do not advance this argument and which are not germane.

An hon. Member: They should be in there.

Mr. Stewart: The quotation continues:

> —at the cancellation of the subsidy before western feed grains from the new crop were available,—

Then it goes on to resolve further that there has been > —a definite inequity between companies doing the same class of business and that apparently decisions were based on statistical presentations that were not accurate or did not reveal all the facts.

An administrative fumble apparently so disadvantageous as this one to many of the farmers of the maritimes makes one wonder whether this government should be granted the supply for which it now asks. I am quite sure that the Minister of Agriculture will be anxious to come into this committee and deal with the doubts many hundreds of people have because of these three specific matters I have mentioned.

However, before I conclude I wish to return to the point on which I opened. This government is coming to this committee, and it is asking for the tenth and twelfth of the supply for the fiscal year 1962-63. Yet the members of this House of Commons have not had put before them for examination here the estimates which might justify the money that is being voted. It is astonishing to me if the people of this country or the members of this parliament are prepared to tolerate this situation much longer.

Mr. McGee: The Liberal filibuster caused that.

Mr. Stewart: No reasonable business man, no university administrator and certainly no farmer could hope to conduct a satisfactory business in this way. I submit to you, Mr. Chairman, that the time must very soon come when this committee must refuse supply to this government.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, I feel humiliated and embarrassed at being obliged to rise at this hour of the evening under a motion for interim supply in order to use the only opportunity which has arisen in this session since September 27 to discuss what undoubtedly is the most important public question affecting the province from which I come. It is a public question which in its magnitude is, in my opinion, at least as important to this nation as was the St. Lawrence seaway project which was the subject of some discussion in this House of Commons a number of years ago. I am referring to the matter of the Columbia river draft treaty which has been discussed by two of my colleagues previously during this debate, namely the hon. member for Kootenay West and the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard.

Since this session began a great many indications have been given to the government that many hon. members of this House of Commons were desirous of an opportunity of discussing this question. All that we have been able to do is to attempt to address certain questions to some of the ministers on the orders of the day and in some cases to place some questions on the order paper. Shortly some of us are going to be returning to our home provinces for the Christmas recess. Those of us who come from the province of British Columbia are going to be obliged to return without having the kind of detailed relevant information with respect to this matter which we had anticipated we should be able to secure when we came down here for this session. Those hon. members who, like myself, have not been in this House of Commons for a time had taken at its face value the indication which had been given that this matter would be referred to the external affairs committee for full discussion under appropriate circumstances, where we would have a full opportunity of getting the detailed sort of information which, on a complex matter such as this, can be secured only by having called before it expert witnesses. This opportunity we have not had.

As far as I am concerned, one of the principal reasons why I feel I must rise and take part in this desultory sort of discussion, which is all that we can have on an interim supply motion, is the fact that it has been impossible for us to secure in a responsible manner the sort of information which we had expected the government would make it possible for us to secure. As I speak tonight I note that none of the ministers primarily responsible for this matter are here to take part in such a discussion. A few minutes ago I looked along the treasury benches and realized that the only minister occupying one of those seats was the Postmaster General. While I have a great regard for her—

Mr. Crouse: On a question of privilege, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Barnett: —I do not believe she would be the one who would speak for the government on this subject.

Mr. Crouse: On a question of privilege, Mr. Chairman; for the last three quarters of an hour we have had the Minister of Labour in the house as well as the Postmaster General.

Mr. Nowlan: And the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Crouse: We now have the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Veterans Affairs. I think the hon. member should be factual in his remarks.

Mr. Habel: Can the ministers not defend themselves?

Mr. Jones: We have more ministers than the New Democratic party has members.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, I am not at all sure that the hon. member had a question of privilege and I think he might have allowed me to finish my sentence before he rose so precipitately. I was about to say that during the last few minutes the Minister of Veterans Affairs and more recently the Minister of Finance had arrived. As far as I am aware, neither of these ministers has been primarily responsible for matters pertaining to the Columbia river treaty. As I say, it is most unfortunate that we have to discuss this kind of subject under these circumstances. That is the only point I had in mind making. I know that all members of the cabinet are busy people and I do not expect that they are going to be here every minute of every day that the house sits. As I was trying to say, in my opinion it is most unfortunate that all we have been able to find out as to what is going on has come from one or two statements made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs that certain informal discussions are taking place. We have been given no real information as to the nature of these discussions. We have been given no information as to the direction in which they are leading.

We have been told that the government of British Columbia is involved in these discussions and that fact gives me real ground for concern in that when we come back to the house on January 21 we may very well once again be faced with one of those faits accomplis into which the premier of British Columbia seems to be able to manoeuvre this government. We are going to come back here and perhaps be faced at that time with a suggestion that this matter go before the external affairs committee, and when it does we are going to find that yet a new twist has been added to the many twists that have been already given to the development of this project, and the treaty that has been signed. That, Mr. Chairman, is the real cause for concern from my point of view.

While I do not minimize the area of provincial responsibility under the constitution in respect of development of this kind, nevertheless in my view this is primarily a Canadian matter. This is not something with respect to which parliament can accept dictation from someone who happens to be the premier of a province. This has not always been the case as far as this house is concerned, nor do I think it should be. In my opinion the least the government would have done was to arrange for this matter to go before the external affairs committee so that at least the members of the house who are concerned about the matter could have been fully informed when they went back to meet their constituents during the recess. If the government had done that, while perhaps saying at the same time that certain discussions were going on, I see no reason why we could not have reached an understanding that any final decision by the house in respect of ratification of the treaty in its present form would be deferred until completion of those discussions and until the external affairs committee had had the benefit of the full results of those discussions.

I think all members of the house are aware that there has been growing and increasingly impressive evidence of concern on the part of many well qualified people with regard to the implications of this treaty. When my colleague, the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard, was discussing this matter earlier, the Minister of Public Works tried to suggest that perhaps he was not fully qualified to understand the treaty. I am not at all sure that the Minister of Public Works is fully qualified to understand the treaty and I certainly do not make any undue claims with regard to my own ability to understand the treaty in all its complexities. Nevertheless the Minister of Public Works must recognize that a great many well qualified people in addition to General McNaughton have expressed grave concern about the treaty.

I am sure that the Minister of Public Works or any other member of the government would hardly attempt at this stage to brush aside lightly the considered opinions of General McNaughton, even though they may not be prepared to accept them in their entirety. As far as I am concerned, I can think of no other Canadian to whose views greater weight should be given in the consideration of what is involved in this treaty. I do not think the statement can be challenged that General McNaughton has been more intimately associated with matters concerning the development of the Columbia river basin, and for a longer period of time, than any other living Canadian. Nevertheless, as I say, other qualified people have been expressing very grave doubts.

[Mr. Barnett.]

All of us in this house who are laymen recognize, I believe, that when it comes to highly complex engineering matters we have to rely on expert opinion. We also recognize that from time to time there may be a division of views among experts as well. But when we see the sort of analysis that was made in the Engineering and Contract Record, to which reference has already been made, and when we see other references, those of us who are attempting to understand the implications of the treaty really have cause to be concerned. As my colleagues have said, on the basis of the evidence we have at hand so far we in this party are completely convinced that the treaty in its present form should not be ratified by parliament. In my view the question of the ratification of this treaty by the parliament of Canada is something which should have priority over any views that may be advanced by the person who may for the time being happen to be in charge of the government of the province of British Columbia.

Now, among other opinions which have recently been expressed in this connection, Mr. Chairman, I find the opinion of a very well known member of a firm of consulting engineers in Vancouver by the name of Mr. Bartholomew. His name is well known in British Columbia. He is known as the head of a firm which has designed large projects not only in Canada but all over the world. I believe his opinions merit the consideration of hon. members of this house. He had this to say:

(1) It gives United States 25 per cent more downstream firm power than British Columbia receives.

(2) British Columbia's share of downstream power diminishes from year to year at an alarming rate only controlled by the United States.

(3) United States downstream power costs the U.S. one fifth, or less, of what British Columbia's share would cost if British Columbia can use it when available, which is doubtful.

(4) The value to the United States of their downstream power benefits increased greatly and steadily in value.

(5) The control of water flow in the Columbia river in Canada is handed over completely to the United States.

(6) The High Arrow dam robs Canada of 400,000 kilowatts (half of Vancouver's total power consumption), robs British Columbia of forest and agricultural land and destroys an unequalled tourist area and lakes.

(7) The value of Canadian storage at Mica dam is undervalued in the treaty by over 50 per cent.

(8) The treaty is essentially for United States benefit only.

So, Mr. Chairman, I submit that there is on the face of it a clear case that this treaty is not in the best interests of Canada or of British Columbia. As a matter of fact, I thought that the decision the development envisaged by this treaty was not in the best interest of Canada had been made by this parliament a number of years ago. Some of the members of this house will recall that in 1955 we had before us what was known as the international rivers bill. The international rivers bill was occasioned by a proposal to build what is now called the High Arrow dam. In those days it was known as the Kaiser dam. I was a member of the external affairs committee which considered that bill. Those of us who were on that committee at that time had the advantage of hearing a very full and thorough review of what was involved in the development of the whole of the Columbia river basin. We heard at that time a very detailed representation presented on behalf of the government of British Columbia by the attorney general, Mr. Bonner and the then minister of lands and forests, Mr. Sommers.

As some hon. members in this house will recall, we had what amounted almost to a filibuster on the subject in the house. The filibuster was conducted by a group of members in the house who were then under the Social Credit label. I will not associate the present Social Credit group with that filibuster because actually only two of the present Social Credit group were involved in the debate at that time. We heard a lot about the High Arrow, the Low Arrow, Waneta No. 1 and Waneta No. 2. It went on for quite a number of days. I think all hon. members will recall that after a full and detailed examination of the whole Columbia river basin the members of this house, with the exception of those in the Social Credit group, gave as their considered opinion that that kind of development of the Columbia river was not to the advantage of Canada. This bill was passed with the full support of the members of the Liberal party, the Conservative party and those of us who were in the house at the time in the C.C.F. party.

I must say, Mr. Chairman, I do find it a little difficult to reconcile the position now being taken by some Conservatives who were then in the house, and who now occupy leading positions on the treasury benches, with the position they took after a detailed examination of this proposition. They seem to be taking this position now, I would say rather reluctantly, at the behest of the premier of British Columbia. They seemed to be prepared to stand up on the earlier occasion and say to the premier of British Columbia that this same type of development was not in the best interests of Canada.

Some reference was made earlier in the discussion of this subject to the fact that the Minister of Public Works is a signatory of the treaty. I should like to point out, in concluding my remarks this evening that there is another signature on that treaty on behalf of Canada. This signature stands above that of the Minister of Public Works, and is the signature of the Prime Minister. I want to make it quite clear that I feel the person who should stand up in this house and answer for what has happened in connection with the Columbia river treaty is the Prime Minister of Canada. I think all of the evidence surrounding the situation is such, especially if one thinks, for example, of the references that were made by the hon. member for Kootenay West to the speech made in Prince George by the Minister of Public Works, that it points to the fact that responsibility for the situation rests on the shoulders of the Prime Minister. He is the one who should stand up in this house and tell us why he has decided to sell half of British Columbia down the river into the United States.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I am rising at this point not to talk about the Columbia river but to talk about the subject of trade. I should like to start off by asking if I may call it ten o'clock.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Chevrier: I assume tomorrow we will go on with this debate.

Mr. Churchill: Yes, the same order of business, Mr. Speaker, as I announced last night and as appears on page 2603 of Hansard.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, may I make a suggestion to the minister leading the house? For all of this week we have been seeking, without success, to get some statement from the Minister of Justice regarding certain activities of the R.C.M.P. I want to suggest that if there is to be any co-operation in dealing with this interim supply I hope we might have some such statement tomorrow.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Churchill: That sounds like a threat to me.

Mr. Douglas: It is not a threat. I am simply asking the minister to reply.

Mr. Speaker: I would indicate to the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam that under these circumstances it is the custom of this house that the house leader of the opposition will seek information from the house leader of the government as to the business that is to be forthcoming, and beyond that there are no comments.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, on a point of—

Mr. Speaker: With the greatest deference, this has been a practice of this house for many years and I do not see at the moment how we can extend the privilege to the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam without extending it to any other hon. member.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, surely if we are discussing the business of the house for tomorrow and any party wants to offer their co-operation or suggestion as to how the business should be expedited, they are free to do so. If they are not allowed to do that, then the government must accept some responsibility, and Your Honour too, if the business of the house is not expedited as it might otherwise be.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Notwithstanding the apparent comment of hon. gentlemen who have felt otherwise, I think they will recognize that it has been the practice over many years that the house leader of the opposition—

Mr. Peters: It was the practice to have a Liberal government for all those years too, but we changed it.

Mr. Speaker: —shall seek information from the house leader of the government. Otherwise any hon. member could rise. I am not trying to lay down any hard and fast lines, but to follow the accustomed practices of this house. If there are to be any negotiations, or suggestions offered, then I think there are means for doing so. But as far as I am aware—and I think hon. members generally would agree with me—that has been the accepted practice—

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: —as far as the Chair has been aware, and there has been no departure from it.

It being five minutes after ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, December 14, 1962

The house met at 11 a.m.

(Translation):

AIRPORTS

DORVAL—TRANSPORTATION BETWEEN AIR TERMINAL AND MONTREAL

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Transport a question? Has the minister received now the brief prepared by the chamber of commerce of the district of Montreal concerning the means of transportation between the Dorval international airport and downtown Montreal and which he had not yet received the other day? Has he had an opportunity to study its recommendations and does his department intend to put them into effect?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I still have not received that brief. I inquired at my office yesterday and it had not come in yet. When it does, I shall reply to the question.

Mr. Chevrier: I am taking the liberty of sending it to the minister right away, since I have it in my possession.

(Text):

MINES AND TECHNICAL SURVEYS

ONTARIO—INQUIRY AS TO DISCOVERY OF DIAMONDS IN MOOSONEE DISTRICT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hubert Badanai (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys. Is the minister in a position to inform the house whether any diamonds have been found in the district of Moosonee, in the province of Ontario, as the result of recent explorations?

Mr. Speaker: Order. With the greatest respect to the hon. member, I think that question should go on the order paper.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON SECURITY INVESTIGATIONS IN UNIVERSITIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Justice. The minister has had several days in which to inquire into the allegations that R.C.M.P. officers are interrogating students and faculty members across the country. Could I ask the minister whether he is prepared to make any statement on this matter now, or would he give the house the assurance that he will make some statement when the interim supply motion is before the committee of supply?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Justice): Whatever may be the wish of the house, Mr. Speaker. There is no hesitation on my part to discuss this matter any time it happens to be in order under the business before the house at the moment. If the hon. member wishes to do it in committee of supply, perhaps there might be a little more freedom there.

Mr. John R. Matheson (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Justice when the government will be in a position to produce the correspondence from the Canadian association of university teachers respecting security practices as they presently affect association members?

Mr. Speaker: Order. Has the hon. member made a request for the production of this correspondence?

Mr. Matheson: Yes, sir, and some time ago the Minister of Justice was kind enough to indicate that this would be done.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, it was only a few days ago that the motion was passed. I think it was passed on November 28. I can assure the house that there will be no delay in the tabling of the correspondence. It is not extensive.

[Later:]

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, may I correct the answer I gave a moment ago to the hon. member for Leeds in respect of his notice of motion to produce certain papers. I said his motion was passed on November 28. I was wrong about the date. It was passed on December 5, as appears in Votes and Proceedings of that date at page 362.

TRADE

DENIAL OF U.S. CARGOES TO SHIPS TRADING WITH CUBA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John H. Addison (York North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Transport and in view of the mass of blue flowers across the floor of the house this morning I should like to direct the question to the Atlantic ocean. Has the Canadian government been notified of the intention of the United States to deny American cargoes to our vessels if they are trading with Cuba?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I will take this question as notice.

AGRICULTURE

PERMANENT ACREAGE PAYMENTS—INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. I wonder if the Prime Minister could inform the house whether it is the intention of the government to introduce legislation at this session in keeping with the Prime Minister's election pledge to make annual permanent acreage payments?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the hon. gentleman for his conversion to a belief in the things which he previously ridiculed.

Mr. Argue: I voted for them.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I can only say that when a decision is made in these matters it will be announced in due course.

(Translation):

FINANCE

REQUEST FOR BONUS TO LOW INCOME FAMILIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Bernard Dumont (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Prime Minister. On this occasion of so much happiness but also of so much misery for the oncoming of Christmas, does the government intend to grant a cost of living bonus of $50 a month to every family whose income is less than $1500?

[Later:]

Mr. Dumont: Mr. Speaker, I should like to address another question to the Prime Minister. Since I did not get an answer to my earlier question, could the Prime Minister tell the house whether we could not get at least a pair of moccasins for Christmas?

(Text):

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not know what answer I could give to that question. In so far as the earlier question is concerned, that too is a matter of government policy. It is not as simple as the hon. gentleman seems to think. Governments cannot give Christmas presents.

Mr. Byrne: It could dissolve the house.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

TRANSLATION OF REPORT OF GILL COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Labour whether he has yet received the French translation of the Gill report? If he has not received it, can he tell the house what steps he has taken in order to see that it is made available as soon as possible so that we might save some indication as to wnat it contains, and so that we might have some action by this government with regard to the state of the unemployment insurance fund in this country.

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, every possible step has been taken to get this report as soon as possible.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): I was going to ask the Secretary of State whether the printing bureau has yet delivered the printed copy of the Gill report to his colleagues?

Hon. G. E. Halpenny (Secretary of State): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Pickersgill: Can the minister explain the reason for the additional delay?

Mr. Halpenny: The other day I said this report would be delivered some time before the end of the year so that it can be studied during the recess.

Mr. Pickersgill: Can the minister say when the printing of this document started?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

PUBLIC SERVICE

RECOMMENDATIONS FOR SALARY INCREASES NOT ACTED UPON

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Is the minister yet in a position to answer my question of yesterday as to whether there are any categories of civil servants for whom pay increases were recommended by the civil service commission but who were not included in the list in last Monday's announcement?

Hon. George C. Nowlan Minister of Finance): No, Mr. Speaker, I have not had time to check on the matter. I will do so and advise the house early next week.

INQUIRIES FOR RETURNS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John R. Turner (St. Lawrence-St. George): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Would the Minister of Finance consider making the production of the tables showing the forward commitments entered into by the Bank of Canada on behalf of the minister during the months of April, May and June one of his New Year's resolutions?

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am very glad to be reminded of New Year's resolutions. I was wondering what I should adopt, and I will take the suggestion made by the hon. member into consideration.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a supplementary question of the Secretary of State. I wonder whether over the week end he could have tabled, for the convenience of hon. members, an up to date list of the returns that have not been made?

Hon. G. E. Halpenny (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, the last one I tabled was on November 20. I will get a current one and table it next week.

UNITED NATIONS

CANADIAN RESOLUTION RESPECTING SELF DETERMINATION FOR CAPTIVE PEOPLES

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, on December 10 the Leader of the Opposition asked me a question on the subject of Soviet imperialism and consideration of this problem by the United Nations.

As I have stated on several occasions, my objective has been that the Canadian government should through international consultation secure sufficient international support to focus United Nations attention squarely on the unsatisfactory conditions in the Soviet empire. This government deeply deplores Soviet Russia's hypocritical position on colonial questions arising in the United Nations, especially in the light of the Soviet union's own record of subjugation and tyranny over races and nations. Our view is that the provisions of the charter of the declaration on human rights and of the declaration on colonial independence are universal in their application.

I had hoped that the consultations which have been going on throughout the year and also during the current session of the general assembly would serve to mobilize sufficient support for a resolution in regard to the question of Soviet colonialism. At a time when the concern of a great many members of the United Nations is principally engaged in respect of colonial questions affecting Africa, the moment for the successful presentation of a resolution aimed at the situation in the Soviet empire has not yet come.

Nevertheless there is a growing awareness that a Soviet imperialistic system does exist and that the United Nations cannot ignore it. The forthright condemnation of Soviet imperialism which the Canadian representative, the hon. member for Queens (Mr. Macquarrie), made in the general assembly on November 23 was intended to bring home to all members of the United Nations the essential fact of Soviet domination of subject peoples.

I assure the house that it will not be long before this resolution can be introduced. Every effort is being made to secure the widest possible general support and as soon as we are in a position to be reasonably assured of substantial and, indeed, more than a bare majority support, the resolution which we undertook to introduce will be brought before the assembly.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

INQUIRY AS TO AMENDMENT OF RAILWAY ACT THIS SESSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Transport whether the government informed the national legislative committee of the railway operating brotherhoods within the last day or two that the government planned action this session on amendments to the Railway Act in line with the committee's recommendations.

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I informed the committee that at this session we will have a motion on the order paper to refer some matters that have been raised by the committee to the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines.

Mr. Fisher: A supplementary question. Did the legislative committee request the government to support public Bill No. 26 to amend the Railway Act, which is now on the order paper?

Mr. Balcer: They did not mention my hon. friend's bill.

Interim Supply

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Chown in the chair.

INTERIM SUPPLY

Resolved, that a sum not exceeding $330,089,511.93 being the aggregate of—

(a) one twelfth of the total of the amounts of the items set forth in the revised estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1963, laid before the House of Commons at the present session of parliament, except atomic energy item 5, Canadian Broadcasting Corporation item 5, finance items 45 and 50, forestry item 11, labour item 40, legislation items 30 and 35, mines and technical surveys items 30, 35, 40, 70, 80, 125 and 130, national defence item 70, national health and welfare item 25, northern affairs and national resources items 10, 45 and 90, public works items 5, 45, 70, 100, 105, 125, 145, 168, 170, 180, 190 and 200, Royal Canadian Mounted Police items 5, 15 and 25, transport items 35, 40, 60, 80, 85, 100, 125, 222 and 225, loans, investments and advances item, L20, $292,175,958;

(b) an additional one twelfth of the amounts of defence production item 25, external affairs item 5, northern affairs and national resources item 105, of the said revised estimates, $1,842,041.67;

(c) one twelfth of the total of the amounts of the items set forth in the supplementary estimates (A) for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1963, except external affairs item 112a, transport items 213a and 222a, $8,738,178.92;

(d) ten twelfths of the total of the amounts of the items set forth in the supplementary estimates (B) for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1963, $27,333,333.34, be granted to Her Majesty on account of the present fiscal year ending March 31, 1963.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): When I rose immediately before the close of proceedings last evening I indicated to the committee that I wished to address a few remarks on this occasion on Canada's foreign trade policy. In bringing this question forward at this time I should like to associate myself with the remarks made by other members of this party with regard to the fact we are being asked now to vote the tenth of twelve instalments of expenditures totalling approximately $6 billion by the federal government for the current fiscal year. I deplore the fact that an important question like Canada's trade has not been brought before the house before this time, so that the members of this house have not had an opportunity to consider in detail the estimates of the Department of Trade and Commerce or to examine more fully with representatives of the government the trade policies which the government is following at this time.

I submit to the committee that the question of Canada's foreign trade relationships is perhaps one of the most critical questions arising in Canadian public affairs today, and one of the questions which should commend itself to the attention of hon. members of this house. Perhaps the best point at which to commence this discussion is to make reference to the actions of the government itself in this field. We have heard from the Minister of Trade and Commerce and his assistant, as well as various other spokesmen, and we have seen evidence in the press and elsewhere in recent weeks about the government's principal action in this field, a program known as "Operation world markets".

May I hasten to say that members on this side of the house can only commend the minister and the department for the effort being made in connection with that program. The program is really designed for the purpose of disseminating more widely information on trade prospects and trade possibilities, and indicating to both Canadian manufacturers and foreign purchasers the opportunity for trade with Canada. In fact an even more extensive compliment has been paid to this program, not so much by members on this side of the house but by the Ontario department of economics and development and particularly the minister of that provincial department. He has emulated the federal minister's policy with Ontario's trade crusade.

I should like to address a few remarks to the committee on the question of Ontario's trade crusade, particularly with a view to bringing to the committee's attention the fact that one aspect at least of that crusade represents an invasion by the provincial government into the federal field. It represents a usurpation by the province of Ontario of the responsibility of the minister in the field of trade.

Hon. members cannot have escaped being exposed to the extensive advertising campaign which has been conducted by the Ontario government in radio, television and the press during recent weeks. The principal purpose of that particular advertising is to persuade the Ontario consumer to discriminate in his buying decisions between domestic and foreign products where quality and price are equal, purely on the basis of national production. I submit to the committee that this is discrimination, a boycotting of the products of our trading partners, and that as such it involves Canada in a serious derogation from its international legal obligations with regard to trade.

In support of that argument I should like to refer the committee to the opinion of Sir H. Lauterpacht, a recognized authority on international law in this generation and formerly one of the British judges of the international court of justice, as outlined in an article entitled "Boycott in International Relations", which may be found in volume 14 of the British Year Book of International Law, page 125 and more particularly at page 131. The writer makes particular reference to commercial treaties entered into between nations, similar to the kind entered into by Canada for foreign trade relations whereby access to the Canadian market is assured for foreign products, and he makes the following observation:

> The commercial treaty obviously implies that the state cannot prohibit generally the importation and sale of goods coming from the territory of the other contracting party. But does it mean that it may not exhort its citizens not to buy the goods of the state with which it has a commercial treaty and that it must not place its governmental departments at the disposal of the boycott propaganda? ... If a state promises to another state to grant to its merchants "complete protection and security for their commerce" then it ill becomes it to exhort its citizens to suppress such commerce and to make its governmental services available for propaganda to this end. By no stretch of interpretation could such an attitude be squared with the undertaking to confer upon foreign merchants the same "privileges, liberties and favours" as are enjoyed by the state's own citizens.

On the basis of that authority, Mr. Chairman, I submit that the Ontario trade crusade, or that part of it which is directed to discriminating between foreign and domestic products purely on the basis of nationality, involves the federal government in a breach, on the international scale, of Canada's foreign trade obligations.

I would also like to bring to the attention of the committee at this time a further legal objection to that aspect of the Ontario trade crusade. Under the constitution of Canada, the British North America Act, and more particularly under the provisions of section 91(2) of that statute, it is provided that the regulation of trade and commerce is the exclusive responsibility of the government of Canada. The general words of that section have been more particularly elaborated upon by the courts in various discussions through the years, and it has been conclusively established with respect to import and export trade that the government of Canada, not the provinces, has sole jurisdiction with regard to legislative and executive measures affecting the import and export trade.

In support of that proposition I would like to refer the committee to the margarine reference in the Supreme Court of Canada in re the validity a section of the Dairy Industry Act which may be found in 1949, Supreme Court Reports, page 1, and more particularly in the remarks of Mr. Justice Rand at page 53. Mr. Justice Rand, in upholding the fact that the federal government has exclusive jurisdiction over imports, made reference to the particular import restriction contained in the federal statute there in question:

> Such scope of action is clearly necessary to the nation's jurisdiction over trade with other states. Only parliament can deal with foreign commerce; provincial power cannot in any mode, aspect, or degree govern it: and it would be anomalous that the jurisdiction to which regulation is committed, which alone can act, and which in this segment of trade is in substance sovereign, should be powerless to employ such an ordinary measure of control.

I therefore make the observation that this government, and more particularly the Minister of Trade and Commerce, should take an early opportunity to make representations to his colleague who represents the provincial riding of Riverdale that this aspect of the Ontario trade crusade program which relates to restriction of the free circulation of imports in the province of Ontario is in derogation of federal government responsibility in law, and is also in excess of the provincial government's power in trade and commerce. Indeed, the failure of the federal government and of the Minister of Trade and Commerce to take action in this regard is an astonishing failure. In fact just the other day, on Tuesday, the minister spoke in this house, and I quote his words as recorded at page 2527 of Hansard:

> I am always interested to hear any observation of Mr. Macaulay because in representing his government he is doing the same kind of job for the producers of Ontario as this government is doing for the producers of Canada.

My submission is that it is not Mr. Macaulay's right or duty to do the identical kind of job. It is rather the exclusive duty of the Minister of Trade and Commerce to make regulations with regard to the export and import trade. The minister has failed to carry out that duty. It is all the more interesting to note that as a result of the initiative which Mr. Macaulay has shown he now appears to have taken over the trade and commerce of this country altogether. In answer to a question yesterday it was indicated that the Minister of Trade and Commerce had complied with an invitation from Mr. Macaulay summoning him to attend a meeting on trade and commerce next January.

Reference to the Ontario trade crusade assists me in introducing a second aspect, namely the limitations of a trade policy which is based entirely on an advertising campaign. It is all very well to provide the public with trade information and intelligence as to the availability of Canadian products, but at the same time there must be some assurance that the products available are capable of competing in international trade. In this connection I should like to quote what the Canadian consumer has to say for he, perhaps better than any other, can judge the effectiveness of Canadian products in this regard. I intend to refer to a number of letters which appeared in the Toronto Globe and Mail in connection with the Ontario trade crusade. The first appeared on November 26, 1962. I quote:

"Who is the world's greatest importer?" I am asked every morning over the radio. And I am not kept in suspense, but told right away that I am—that is, the Canadian public is the greatest importer—and I am urged to buy fewer imported goods and more Canadian ones.

With this in mind, I inspected the Christmas gifts I had bought the night before. I found that I had purchased:

One necktie—made in Switzerland; one ladies' scarf—made in France; one pair slippers—made in England; one pair gloves—made in Japan.

Frankly, I was dismayed. So I set out to buy some more gifts, this time inspecting the place of origin before buying. Specifically, I was looking for a key chain (found that it was made in Italy) and a plastic cosmetic case (found that it was made in Sweden). The only Canadian gifts I could have purchased were coasters with flying Canada geese on them, or a leather bookmark—Indian handcraft—but even there sometimes you discover a tag saying "Made in Japan".

I ask again: "Who is the world's greatest importer?" The answer is obvious. It is not the public, certainly. If the public wishes to buy, it has no choice but to buy imported goods, as these are the ones offered on the counter.

So, may I suggest, instead of wasting time and money on this radio announcement day by day, let's rather ask those responsible:

"Why don't you sell more Canadian goods?"

That letter invited a second which appeared on December 1 as follows:

For six Christmases now we have played the "Made in Canada" game in our search for gifts to send to Britain. If anything we are even more frustrated than Mrs. A. E. Vayk (Who is the Greatest Importer?)—November 28, by the Ontario government's fanciful commercials.

So far, this is what we have bought: Writing paper and envelopes (made in Sweden)—the alternatives were made in Britain or the United States; phonograph records (made in Canada by a British owned company); wooden bowl (made in Canada)—surpassed in quality by U.S. products which we decided not to buy; books (all printed in the United States); nylon stockings (made in the United States).

It's the old story: the consumer will buy Canadian if well made products are available at the right price. My answer to the Ontario government is nuts (from Brazil).

Mr. Fisher: I wonder if I might raise a point of order. The hon. member has almost succeeded in proving to our satisfaction that trade is under federal not provincial jurisdiction. Now he is carrying on with an attack on the Ontario government's trade plan. It seems to me that the very logic of the argument he used in the first part of his statement makes the remarks he is now addressing to the committee out of order. If not I would like to ask you, Mr. Chairman, whether we can embark on comments along the same lines, because I should certainly like to say many things about the Ontario government's trade plan.

The Chairman: I thank the hon. member for Port Arthur for bringing this point to the attention of the committee. The legal argument presented so ably by the hon. gentleman is one of relativity. It must be related to a particular item in the resolution, which he can probably do now for the benefit of hon. members of the committee. Apart from that I would have intervened had he continued in the provincial field, dwelling too heavily on the policies of that government.

Mr. McGee: My suggestion concerning the point raised by the hon. member for Port Arthur is that clearly the hon. member from Rosedale is denouncing the activities of the Minister of Trade and Commerce and saying why he is opposed to them, and he is opposing the policies of the Ontario minister inasmuch as these relate to them. I think it is interesting for the country to note that the Liberal party is opposed to this policy.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I thank the parliamentary secretary, and I think I can anticipate the concern of the hon. member for Port Arthur. The crux of my argument was that there is an inadequacy, as indicated by the material I have quoted, in the Canadian products offered in this purchasing field. I was going on to suggest specific measures which this federal government could take to encourage Canadian manufacturers to remedy that inadequacy. I am suggesting that the improvement of Canadian products cannot be brought about by any fiat of the Canadian government. The ultimate decision must be taken in the private field.

In the session of 1960-61 this parliament included the activities of the design centre in a statute known as the National Design Council Act, which endowed that council with certain powers in respect to design in Canada. I suggest to the minister that the activities of the national design council should be expanded, and that in particular the council should set up a procedure whereby it would carry out examinations from time to time of all the products offered on the Canadian market in a particular field.

What I am suggesting is action of the kind carried out in the United States by the consumers' union, the results of which are published in the Consumers Reports. There would be an evaluation of the functional quality, design and workmanship of the products being placed on the Canadian market, both domestic and foreign, and the results could be made available to Canadian manufacturers so they might determine whether their products were competitive and the manner in which they could be improved. One benefit of such a study would be an indication, in a manner which has not been possible under previous arrangements and under the jurisdiction of the tariff board, of what the real interest of the domestic consumer is. If it turns out that there are no competitive domestic products offered, the argument becomes impressive that whatever tariff charges exist should be dropped.

But the principal question arising in the trade field at this time surely concerns the action which Canada should be taking with regard to foreign trade agreements. For the first time in a generation the log jam of structural arrangements in the international economy is being broken. We are now, and will be for the next two or three years, in a period of flux. In that time we will have an opportunity to make for ourselves trade arrangements which could assure the Canadian manufacturing industry and other Canadian producers effective participation in world trade.

I would like to enunciate a number of principles which I think should govern the government in its trade policy, and more particularly a number of realities which the Canadian government and the Canadian public should bear in mind regarding their forthcoming trade negotiations.

The first of these principles is this. We should recognize that not only should the British be sympathetic to our position but we should show some sympathy for theirs. Their current negotiations with the European economic community are nothing less than negotiations for the continuing survival of their community. The British, in exactly the same way as we have, have inherited from the past an economic system and a societal structure which may not be too directly related to the political realities of the present. No doubt all hon. members of the house over the years have approved the political decisions whereby the British government gave up control of its overseas colonies and thereby gave up control of economic matters in those countries. In the same way we must recognize that to sustain the same population and to maintain the standard of living for the British community we must permit them, and indeed assist them, to establish an equally advantageous trading relationship so they can be assured of continued prosperity.

The second major reality is that the arguments of the high protection group, and the argument in particular that Canadian prosperity can be assured by a general raising of tariffs, is no longer valid. This is so not only because of the fact—and I think we must recognize this—that the Canadian consumer will not tolerate a lower standard of living which would be the result of greater protection, but also in an increasingly interdependent world our trading partners will not tolerate this sort of action.

Third, we must bear in mind that tariff negotiations have all the aspects of a primitive bargain; that in going into these negotiations we must be prepared to give in order to get.

We must also bear in mind that Canada is at a not inconsiderable disadvantage in the sense that with our domestic market of only 19 million souls we do not have as advantageous a plum to offer as the European economic community which, including the United Kingdom, has a population of 225 million people. In other words we wish to secure access to that very much larger market for a limited number of products, but we can only offer a very much smaller market for a wider range of products. We must bear in mind the fact that it is not so much a matter of our being able to blast our way into world markets, or negotiate our way in, but that we do not have that much to offer in the way of an advantageous market for, particularly, the producers in the European economic community.

The fourth reality I think we should bear in mind is that the tariff reductions which must come as a result of the multilateral negotiations will have a severe effect on Canadian industry. Indeed, in some industries the effect may be well nigh fatal. This is the necessary cost of expanding to make our products competitive on a world basis, and this is the kind of problem that we face. Hon. members will find in title III of the U.S. trade expansion act of 1962 very elaborate provisions for adjustment assistance to both employers and employees in industries which have been affected by adverse import competition.

The fifth and final reality, Mr. Chairman, is that we must in the interval prior to negotiations, govern our trade policies in such a way that we enter those trade negotiations, which require nimble footwork, not on a limping basis but with full ability to assure our trading partners that we will accord them fair treatment and also live up to our obligations. I suggest that in very recent years, perhaps even more so in the past five years, this government has failed to discharge its international obligations with respect to foreign trade, first by acting in direct contravention of our obligations under the general agreement on tariffs and trade and imposing the tariff surcharges, and second by the boycott campaign which has been carried on by the Ontario provincial government. We must be prepared to act fairly in the agreements arising out of these trade negotiations, and we must be prepared to win the confidence of the other negotiators by indicating that we are prepared to live up to our existing agreements.

Mr. Chairman, the action which I propose in the face of these realities is, first, that Canada should take every step to assist the United Kingdom negotiators in their Brussels discussions. It has been suggested previously in this house that there has been some hesitation on the part of the common market negotiators to reach final agreement with the United Kingdom, particularly in reference to products in which this country and others of the senior dominions have an interest, because the common market is looking forward to the negotiations which will take place next year and they are unwilling to act now in regard to something they may well be asked for next year, something they may well need as a bargaining advantage then.

I suggest that if this is feasible within the terms of the negotiations, a Canadian team should be dispatched to Brussels endowed with full powers to negotiate any arrangements with the European economic community that may assist Britain in arriving at a favourable bargaining position with the community. Second, bearing in mind the relative weakness of our bargaining position, we should take very action to assist the United States, and especially the United States efforts in the field of agriculture, to deter and reduce the present tendency toward high protection that the common market negotiators are showing. In other words we must not give a delayed and lukewarm response to President Kennedy's initiative; we must back him up and come forward with a detailed list of our own proposals on what we seek to gain in the multilateral tariff negotiations in early 1964.

Finally, we must and should have presented to this house for consideration a type of program similar to the program set out in title III of the U.S. trade expansion act of 1962, which would provide adjustment provisions for Canadian industry in the case of loss of trade, loss of markets and loss of domestic possibilities due to import competition.

I submit, Mr. Chairman, that this is an area in which at an early date there should be some opportunity of hearing the definitive proposals of the government and of considering its own recommendations on Canada's foreign trade policy. This is one of the principal questions upon which we have very little time left to take decisive action, and I suggest that at an early opportunity we should consider not only the estimates of the minister's department but we should have a full scale debate and full consideration of these matters so that we may know exactly where we stand in these negotiations and where we are going.

Mr. Chairman, when I rose last evening I indicated that I intended to speak on trade and not on the subject of the Columbia river. However, moved by the eloquence of my colleagues on this side of the chamber I should like to add a few remarks to what I have already said. In doing so I wish to stress the fact that I believe I am the first person to rise in this party on this subject who is not a resident of or representing a British Columbia riding. The point I should like to make is that the Columbia river treaty in its present form is a matter of national concern, not only by reason of the fact that the revenue of Canada will be charged with an initial sum of not less than $250 million for the purposes of construction of the dams in question, but also because of the very much broader contingent liability to which Canada will be subject in the event of failure or accident on our part in the flood control provisions.

I suggest to the committee that if the treaty in its present form is ratified, this would amount to a national disgrace, I suggest to the committee that the treaty in its present form imposes upon Canada Carthaginian terms which may be found only in international treaties where the victor nation has imposed a treaty upon the vanquished nation. I wish to associate myself with the view of a very authoritative source, which has pointed out the fact that since the Alaskan boundary dispute there is no more gross example of a bad deal for Canada and a sell-out to the United States.

The Chairman: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired.

Mr. Berger: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member who spoke last said he was the first member of his party to participate in this debate who did not come from British Columbia. I take it that was because the Liberal party had run out of British Columbia members. We are not faced with the same difficulty in this party; we have plenty of British Columbia members.

We in this party are concerned about a matter which we have raised in the house on two previous occasions this week. During the orders of the day on Tuesday we asked the Minister of Justice whether the R.C.M.P.

was interviewing students and faculty members at Canadian universities about the political activities that students and faculty members were engaging in. We raised this matter on Tuesday with the Minister of Justice. It was raised by three members of this party, and the minister did not give us an answer. He said there had been no complaints. However, we take the view that it is not a question of whether the minister has had any complaints. Members of this party have had complaints, and we should like to know whether in fact the R.C.M.P. is being instructed by the minister to carry out this sort of activity.

We raised the matter again yesterday on the orders of the day. We asked the minister whether in fact the R.C.M.P. was interviewing students and faculty members at Canadian universities for the purpose of getting them to inform on one another with regard to their political activities, and once again we failed to get any response from the minister. We take the view that the minister's silence is significant and bolsters the information which we have received from a number of sources; and we should like to have from the minister an assurance that this sort of thing will not continue but will stop at once.

This, of course, is something which it seems to me cannot be blamed on the R.C.M.P. The R.C.M.P. is simply acting under instructions from governmental authorities, and it is the government's responsibility if in fact the R.C.M.P. is interviewing students and faculty members at universities for the purpose of discovering what political activity is taking place on our campuses and who is taking part in such political activities. This is something which the members of this party wish to see stopped. We would welcome from the minister an assurance that in fact it is going to stop.

We believe it is wrong for the R.C.M.P. to engage in this activity. We believe that universities ought to be places where young men and women and faculty members may speak their minds, about politics and ideas and do so freely, without members of the national police force coming on to their campuses and asking them questions about the political activities of their friends, their teachers or their fellow students. We believe that otherwise no university can be truly free or can really spawn the kind of discussion that produces new ideas or new concepts or the kind of thinking which must be in the van of any civilization that is moving forward. For the R.C.M.P. to engage in interrogating students and faculty members about their political activities and about the political activities of their colleagues is to engage in something which can only breed suspicion and fear at Canadian universities. If this continues the effect, of course, will be to curb freedom of thought discussion, and the development of ideas.

If subversion is taking place or if the government is fearful that subversion is taking place in this country, may I make this suggestion; and when I speak of subversion let me make it perfectly clear what I mean. I mean violations of the Criminal Code, violations of the criminal law. That is all I mean, and I hope this is all that hon. members in all parts of the house mean by subversion, namely violations of the laws of this country, violations of the Criminal Code or other federal or provincial statutes which relate to the problem. With great respect I submit to the minister and to the members of the committee that the only thing which can justify the intervention of the national police force is evidence of overt acts in violation of our laws, and not the kind of tittle-tattle and gossip that we have found has in so many cases prompted these interrogations.

If the ministry is concerned about violations of the Criminal Code we suggest there is a way in which to go about the matter. There is a way in which to carry out effective police work, and there are ways in which to carry out what will only turn out to be quite ineffectual police work. There are ways of enforcing the laws of this country. We in this party suggest that one way which has nothing to do with law enforcement, which has nothing to do with protecting this nation against violations of the Criminal Code and other federal and provincial statutes, is by having police officers interrogating students and lecturers at Canadian universities for any purpose.

We suggest that this sort of thing, emulating the methods of the police state, must come to an end. We suggest that this sort of thing constitutes a misguided attempt to protect freedom and can only result in destroying freedom. Let me read to members of the committee what was said by a distinguished Canadian educator, the former president of the University of British Columbia, Dr. Norman MacKenzie, at the University of New Brunswick delivering the founders' day address on February 16, 1953. Hon. members will recall that it was during that period in the early fifties that Senator McCarthy was riding high in the United States. It took someone with a good deal of courage to deal with McCarthyism which had crept across the border and was seeping into Canada, and to deal with that subject in the forthright language which Dr. MacKenzie used. He said this:

> That is why I view with such perturbation both the development of fifth columns in our society and the repressive and authoritarian measures that are frequently taken to deal with this. For these are certain to become a threat and injure or destroy many who have no other folly than that they are nonconformists, or liberals—

That expression is used with a small "l" here, I may say, so that there will be no misunderstanding about it.

An hon. Member: It is the same thing.

Mr. Berger: The quotation continues:

> —or in real fact are foolish or stupid people. Fear, suspicions, hatred, persecution, and repression, together with the smear, the big lie, and domestic espionage are among the instruments and weapons of the menace of communism and fascism, and are properly identified by us with those ideologies. Their introduction into our lives, and their use and indeed growing use in whatever measure in our western society is, to me at least, one of the most disturbing aspects of the continuing crisis. For it will not provide many of us with satisfaction if we save ourselves from the external attacks of the nazis, the fascists and the communists, only to discover that we, unwittingly under their pressure, have destroyed our own freedom; have established through ourselves their form of dictatorship and authoritarian control—we having, in fact, demonstrated for our enemies the proof of the proposition which they all along had been interested in making, that the values they esteem and the way of life they follow are superior to our own, that they are inevitable and must succeed.

I commend to the members of the committee what was said by this very distinguished Canadian, Dr. MacKenzie, because he has put his finger on the real problem. We do not want to use the technique of the smear and the big lie, we do not want to use tittle-tattle and gossip to discredit our fellow Canadians. We do not want to see through advertence or inadvertence members of the student bodies and members of the faculties of Canadian universities being subjected to this sort of treatment.

It seems to me that people who believe that the R.C.M.P. should engage in this work are people who do not really understand the real basis of our western civilization and society. Our society, our civilization, rests on human rights and fundamental freedoms, and these exist for the purpose of facilitating the development of our culture, primarily to assist us in the search for truth, to enable us to move forward. If we destroy these human rights and fundamental freedoms, if we curb freedom of thought, freedom of speech, freedom of discussion—the freedom to generate new ideas, we are doing a disservice not only to the people who are concerned about this matter today but to so many who in past generations fought to achieve these things.

There must be an opportunity to discuss ideas put forward from every political quarter, because surely if the ideas and institutions in which we believe, and which the R.C.M.P. are being used to protect when they are interrogating students and faculty members of Canadian universities, are valid, if they are proper institutions for Canadians, if they are the kind of institutions which will serve to preserve the things that we regard as the highest and the best in human culture, then they do not need any protection from the R.C.M.P. against the force of ideas opposed to them. Surely we can permit ideas from every quarter to contend in the market place of ideas. That was the view of a great liberal, John Stuart Mill, who said in his famous essay on freedom, in effect "Let these ideas clash in the market place of ideas". If the ideas which we espouse are the ideas which are most consistent with the truth and which lead us toward the truth, then they will emerge triumphant in the clash of ideas. If our beliefs are not tested they can have no firm basis. They can only be tested by exposing them to ideas opposed to them.

I was astonished to read in the Globe and Mail of Wednesday a report of a speech by the head of the Chrysler Corporation of Canada in which he said:

> For some reason which I have never heard satisfactorily explained, a great many of our young people in the western world begin to sneer at the principles of democracy somewhere around the age of 16 and they keep it up for the next five or six years. It's a stage they seem to go through, like adolescent measles. And it's not a very flattering commentary on our educational system.

The article continues:

> Mr. Todgham said to combat the problem businessmen should encourage youth to form junior achievement clubs, miniature companies with shares.
>
> "Everything they learn, observe and absorb in the course of junior achievement activity is calculated to expose the fallacies of communism and to emphasize the virtues of the free enterpise theory," he said.

He also said that on most of Canada's college campuses there are communist or pink cells. I do not know what pink cells are, but probably this gentleman has some knowledge of the subject. He also said there is a danger of some of the students becoming "permanent converts to alien ideologies". I do not know what junior achievement clubs are all about or whether the real answer to this problem is to set up miniature corporations and dish out shares, but I am not entirely convinced that this is really the way to deal with alien ideologies. I think the way to deal with them is to have them out in the open, discuss them and put them up against the ideas we espouse. In those circumstances I suggest that young Canadians are far more likely to find the truth and to adopt ideas that are consistent with the truth, and to learn the real basis and the real validity of the ideas that western civilization holds dear, than by forming junior achievement clubs and miniature companies with shares. I do not think young people are likely to benefit a great deal from that when it comes to a question of ideology.

I think members of the committee should realize that we will not be protecting the human rights and fundamental freedoms which we regard as the basis of western society and civilization if we do not allow ideas which are opposed to our beliefs to find expression because, as Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes said, there must be freedom for the ideas that we hate. Members of the committee will recall that John Milton in his "Aeropagitica" said that he could not praise a fugitive and cloistered virtue. You cannot praise the virtue of adherence to the principles of western democracy if you have never been exposed to the ideas that are in contention all over the world with the principles of western democracy. How can our young people be equipped to contend with the ideology of communism if they have never been exposed to it, if they have never tested it against the ideas they themselves hold? I suggest that if the R.C.M.P. are interrogating students and faculty members of universities all over the country about their political ideas the result will be that we will simply breed a generation of students who have never been out of the incubator, who have never been out in the world where these things are real.

Many of us have to contend with the forces of communism. Surely, Mr. Chairman, it is nonsensical to expect R.C.M.P. officers to be able to find through interrogation what the political beliefs of faculty members and university students are, and to find out the type of political activity in which they are engaging. How do you tell? Do you tell by listening to lectures in the classroom? Suppose an R.C.M.P. officer asks a student what the political views and ideas of a faculty member are and the student ventures an answer on the basis of classroom lectures. Surely such an answer would be completely uninformed and completely spurious, because the lecturer may put forward any number of ideas to test the mettle of his students.

How do you tell from bull sessions what a student's political views are? Can you tell because he has engaged in the burning of an effigy of Donald Gordon or somebody like that? Sometimes it is difficult even in this house, Mr. Chairman, to tell what the political views and ideologies of members are. We thought that those gentlemen who sit opposite us were liberals, yet not very long ago we saw them espousing the idea of debt free money. What are we to do under these circumstances? How can we tell what they are? How can we tell where they stand?

I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that to expect Royal Canadian Mounted Police officers at second hand to discover anything about the views of university students and faculty members is nothing more or less than extravagant nonsense. If the government is really trying to find out anything about the communist party, or any other party for that matter, this is an absurd way to go about it; because when you drive these ideas out of the market place you simply drive them underground, and they fester and sometimes grow in a cancerous fashion when you do that. The best way is to have these things out in the open, and they will not be out in the open—as they should be on our university campuses—if the Royal Canadian Mounted Police are going to inquire of university students and faculty members about the political activities of these people.

The great danger is that in our zeal to defend freedom we will wind up by destroying it. I suggest that if we are going to build a truly free society we must allow, we must encourage the widest expression of ideas, because this is the only way in which Canadians will be intellectually equipped to defend the ideas that I believe the vast majority of the people of this country regard as of fundamental importance. I suggest, with all respect to the chairman of the Chrysler Corporation, that junior achievement clubs are not the best way of achieving this end.

We would welcome a statement from the Minister of Justice that this sort of thing is going to stop. We know it has been happening in the past. We believe it was a grave error on the part of whoever was responsible, and the ministry must take the responsibility for directing the R.C.M.P. into this activity. We would welcome an assurance from the minister that this sort of thing is going to stop and will not occur again. I know the minister is anxious to get the floor to make a statement on this subject, so I will not burden the committee with any further remarks.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, it is a rather different sort of assurance that I wish to give to the committee.

Let me observe, in the first place, that when questions were put in the house earlier this week on this subject, they were put on orders of the day and Mr. Speaker felt called upon to indicate that those questions were not of a nature that it was proper to ask on orders of the day. There was no reluctance on my part to deal with this subject at any time when the rules of the house properly permitted it.

I must draw attention to the fact that in his remarks the hon. member has been saying things which, in terms of general principle, I am sure are fully subscribed to and supported by all members of this house. But, Mr. Chairman, the hon. member has gone on to make statements about things he says are happening. The word "if" abounded throughout his remarks, and I must say that the assumptions upon which he has based his assertions this morning are, according to my information, quite unwarranted.

First of all, how does this matter arise? The hon. member makes certain statements as though they were of a positive nature. Well, one might have expected that if there were some intrusion upon academic freedom in this country by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police the matter would have come to the attention of the Minister of Justice. Let me say at once that, having been Minister of Justice for just over four months now, I have not received any letter from any person on this subject. There is one exception I shall mention, but apart from that one exception I have received no letters. I have had my office check the files again this morning, and with this one exception which I shall mention I have received no letter on the subject from anyone.

Mr. Berger: Will the minister yield the floor so that I may ask him a question?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Perhaps the hon. member will allow me to continue. The letter to which I refer, Mr. Chairman, was written to me on September 17 by Dr. A. J. Stewart, the executive secretary of the association of university teachers. He had been in discussion last summer with my predecessor in this office. He asked a number of questions. He had a questionnaire that he wished to have answered. This is the one communication which I have received on this subject since I assumed this office.

Now, in so far as representations are concerned, one member of this house in all this time spoke to me about this subject. He had some incident, not of a very definite nature, and there was nothing toward which one could direct any specific inquiry. So I say, Mr. Chairman, I am unaware of what has suddenly agitated this question or given rise to assertions and inquiries in the house by some hon. members. I know what has appeared in several newspapers this week. The articles that I saw in one or two newspapers indicated simply that there had been a comment on this subject in an editorial appearing in an undergraduate newspaper of the University of Toronto, the Varsity.

Let me make matters very clear. The hon. member suggested that I had given some instructions to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police to make inquiries on campuses or interrogate members of the faculties or students. I have given no such instructions whatsoever. The suggestion was also made that the Royal Canadian Mounted Police were supervising political activity. Let me make it quite clear that the police are not interested in political activity. Their job is law enforcement, law enforcement throughout Canada. This is the function which the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, the finest police force in all the world, is under duty to carry out.

Mr. Douglas: Is the minister specifically saying that the R.C.M.P. have never made any inquiries about political activities?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): If the hon. member will be patient, I am making what I hope will be a complete statement on the subject. He has asked for it and perhaps he will allow me to make it.

There are questions, I am told, that are asked from time to time by prospective employees as to whether applicants—this applies to persons coming from academic life as well as others—are good security risks. Obviously a number of these people are going into situations where security considerations are important. I am told that the R.C.M.P. do have inquiries of this kind, and in those situations they have made inquiries in order to furnish information in relation to persons applying for jobs where security questions arise, and this of course can happen in public employment as well as in private employment. Apart from that, Mr. Chairman, let me make it quite clear—

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): May I ask the minister a question?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): There is one example—

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Can the minister say—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, may we have an orderly statement at this time?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Why should you refuse to answer the question?

The Chairman: Order.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I am told, Mr. Chairman, that there are no special security activities in relation to students carried on by the R.C.M.P., and that the police have not been approaching persons in universities with a view to developing sources of information. Let me add further that my information is that there has not been, in relation to inquiries, anything apart from what I have clearly indicated is the sort of thing the police are asking all the time.

Let me give an example of the sort of thing that happens in various fields of life. When persons apply to the registrar in bankruptcy for licences as trustees in bankruptcy the police invariably are asked to make a report on those persons because this is a matter of giving protection to the public.

Mr. Pickersgill: On political activities?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Not on political activities, Mr. Chairman. It is not on their political activities. This is a matter of law enforcement accordng to the laws of this country. That is the duty of the police, and that is their proper function. So may I say, Mr. Chairman, that any suggestion that there is some kind of police state here in Canada, or some kind of McCarthyism in Canada, is completely without shadow of truth or foundation.

There is no interference with academic freedom in the universities, and as long as I have any responsibility in this respect there will be no interference with academic freedom in our Canadian universities, or with freedom of speech, or with political activities. I might add that I have spent a great part of my life trying to stimulate political activities in places like that.

Mr. Pickersgill: But not controversy.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I do not see any reason why controversy should be shunned, and as long as the law of this land is observed there will be no interference with any political activities. I do not think the suggestion that is made will commend itself to those who have knowledge of conditions in this country and of the make-up of the Canadian people.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the minister if I correctly understood him to say that the R.C.M.P. were being used to investigate applicants for private employment. The minister said, and maybe he did not mean to, that they were being used to investigate applicants for private employment, and I want to get that cleared up.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The hon. member has clearly misunderstood it. I related this to security situations where the public security is involved, because there are situations in private employment where that security is involved.

Mr. Pickersgill: The minister had better define them.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The hon. member will appreciate that that is the kind of situation I am referring to.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think the minister should define them very clearly in his own interest and the interests of the police. He should tell us what these situations are, very precisely, because I think the suggestion the minister has left is that we are living in a kind of police state.

Mr. O'Hurley: You would love that, wouldn't you?

Mr. Pickersgill: The minister should explain why and in what circumstances applicants for private employment should be investigated by the police paid for by the taxpayers, if that is justified at all, and I am not saying that there may not be such circumstances. I think I know personally what the minister has in mind, but it would be in the public interest to have the position made very, very clear.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I am not going to attempt an exhaustive review of those situations. I think the hon. member and all hon. members will realize what are those types of situations. Let me give an example. Suppose you take an industry that is engaged in defence production of something that is of a highly secret nature. There must be security clearance in these situations, just as there must be in other agencies directly related to the public service.

Mr. Matheson: May I ask a question of the Minister of Justice? The minister will note that for some weeks I have had a number of questions on the order paper asking for the relationship of the Minister of Justice with these security operations of the R.C.M.P. Does the minister not feel that it would be highly in the interests of our important security section, the "I" section of the R.C.M.P., that the over-all policy of the government in regard to security be clearly indicated? Because I submit with great respect to the minister—and I am sure everything he said today was said sincerely—that there have been many irritations, even to persons serving on university faculties across the country. People have been very much concerned with the nature of the inquiries taking place in the last several months.

I have discussed this matter with people on the campus of the University of Toronto and other universities, people who in some cases held important appointments. We recognize that security investigations are necessary, but I suggest that the investigating constables and the officers of the R.C.M.P. would be assisted by being provided with a pro forma series of questions. Frequently in past months the police have commenced their investigations by appearing to ask standard questions, but what has become particularly obnoxious is when they embark on their own line of questioning in the course of an investigation. This has caused offence to many thoughtful people who felt the police were really witch hunting.

The Minister of Justice has a very competent staff, and the R.C.M.P. have highly qualified and dedicated people. We have only to remember their work in the Leopold investigation or the Gouzenko case of some years ago, or the roundup of fascists at the beginning of world war II to recognize that. But I think the time has come for us to have some kind of standard investigation for people employed in, say, a nuclear capacity. There should be a standard line of questioning and the police should not be left to ask tendentious questions on their own. I have no objection to information files, files on anybody and everybody including members of parliament. I have no objection to these investigations where they are deemed necessary, and I believe the R.C.M.P. have built up very wise and wide experience in this regard, but I know of cases which were irritating in the extreme and contrary to the concepts of liberty as expressed by the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, let me say very briefly that I appreciate the views expressed very earnestly by the hon. member for Leeds. I am very happy to make inquiry into anything that is brought to my attention that calls for inquiry, but to me it is an amazing fact that, if there are grounds for complaints in the universities, these complaints have not been brought to my attention. If there are persons who consider that they have been asked questions they ought not to have been asked, then why do they not write to me? As I say, with the exception of that letter back in September from an organization which had been in communication with my predecessor about a questionnaire, I have not had one single communication on the subject.

Mr. Douglas: When the minister says there has been no security investigation on the university campuses does he include in that statement that there have been no investigations of students and faculty members taking part in meetings to state their opposition to the acquiring of nuclear weapons?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I did not use the expression which the hon. member has just attributed to me. I made it quite clear that there are no special activities on the part of the R.C.M.P. in relation to students or academic circles. The function of the police is in relation to the enforcement of law in all parts of Canada and in all sectors of Canadian life. The security investigations will obviously involve the police keeping their eyes open as to anything which might go on which relates to the enforcement of the law or the subversion of our institutions by unlawful methods.

Mr. Hees: I would ask the indulgence of the committee to report progress so that Mr. Speaker can take the chair and I can ask him to revert to motions in order to make a brief announcement with respect to the talks which have been concluded on oil exports to the United States.

Mr. Pickersgill: Cannot that be done equally well at one o'clock without interrupting the proceedings of this committee? It is only half an hour from one o'clock.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall I rise, report progress and request leave to sit again?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Pickersgill: We can do it at one o'clock.

Mr. Orlikow: I must say the statement made by the minister is one of the most amazing, confusing and disturbing statements I have heard in all the years I have been an elected representative, which now number almost 20 years. The minister makes the statement that the R.C.M.P. are not carrying out security investigations on his instructions. The fact is, however, that the R.C.M.P. have been making security investigations over the years going back 25 or 30 years, and nothing has changed since the present minister assumed the office he now holds.

The matter has been raised repeatedly in the House of Commons, and members only need to look at the index of Hansard in order to see that every year one or more hon. members of the house have raised specific cases. The minister has said that the R.C.M.P. are only interrogating people about subversive activities, illegal activities. Well, I wonder if it is not time for us to know what the government considers to be subversive activities or illegal activities. I wonder also if we have the right to believe that the R.C.M.P. officers who are doing this work are really qualified to make these investigations.

An hon. Member: Oh, oh.

Mr. Orlikow: Somebody says "Oh". Let him look at Hansard of last year when the former minister of justice made a statement—or an hon. member made a statement and it was not denied—that the minimum qualification for R.C.M.P. officers in this particular section is a grade X education. I question the ability of a person with a grade X education to decide what activities are subversive and what activities are illegal.

The minister may think, though he did not say so, that the movements which have sprung up in the universities and in other places urging the banning of nuclear armaments or nuclear bombs are subversive or illegal. I suggest that no law has been passed in Canada which makes this an illegal act. Yet the fact is—and the minister did not deny it, nor did the former minister deny it, although he questioned a complete report which appeared in La Presse last year—that investigations are always being made at Laval and other universities about this type of activity.

The minister says the R.C.M.P. investigates illegal activities. As to communism, I want to make it very clear, as one who comes from the constituency I represent, and who has had 25 years of experience of fighting it—I have certainly no use for the ideas of communism—that communism is not illegal and that the communist party is a legal party in Canada. The minister said he had only had one discussion with a member of parliament on this question. I want to make it clear, for the sake of the record, that I was the member of parliament who discussed the matter with him.

What was the matter I discussed with him? It was the fact that the R.C.M.P. came to make inquiries of a teacher in the city of Winnipeg, who happens to be my brother, about certain things he had done in what he considered to be the best interests of promoting a discussion among a group of students. I went to the trouble of telephoning my brother yesterday to find out what happened. What happened was very simple. I am not concerned with whether the teacher who happens to be my brother made a wise choice in doing what he did. He is a teacher, and every teacher needs the fullest freedom to promote questioning, to promote the free discussion of ideas.

What he did was to arrange for a group of students to hear a talk by the Manitoba secretary of the communist party; and I presume he would not be considered illegal, because he ran against me in the last election. That was permissible. He did not get very far, but he did run. My brother tells me that the R.C.M.P. officer who came to call on him told him that somebody "just happened" to see this group going into the headquarters of the communist party. What an amazing coincidence. They "just happened" to find out that this group from the United States was visiting Winnipeg and that my brother was making the arrangements. One of the things for which he also happened to make arrangements was to hear a talk by the attorney general for the province of Manitoba. I do not know whether that was subversive, but he happened to arrange for that, too.

I am not concerned about whether or not my brother had arranged a good educational project. The fact is that here is one more proof, added to all those cases related in this house and outside, that the R.C.M.P. is carrying on surveillance of this kind. I agree with the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard that it is neither necessary nor desirable that this kind of surveillance be carried out. However, if it is necessary the people of this country have a right to know what the policy of the government is.

Having said that, I wish to turn to the very brief and, I think, very careful reference the minister made to the supposed one letter received from the Canadian association of university teachers. My information is that in fact this association has been in correspondence with the Department of Justice for well over a year. While it may be true that the present minister has received only one letter, there has been a whole series of letters sent to the department. As a matter of fact the hon. member for Leeds has asked that this correspondence be produced. In addition to these letters there have been numerous telephone calls all connected with the desire of the association to discuss with the department the problems which have arisen.

Why should the association want to have these matters discussed? Surely it is because they must have been hearing from their members about these problems. The minister tries to make this whole matter seem unimportant. I presume the R.C.M.P. are as competent and as diligent in keeping reports of what university teachers are saying as they are in keeping reports of what trade unionists and members of the New Democratic party are saying. The C.A.U.T. board reports as follows:

> At the June meeting of council at McMaster University the following resolution was proposed and referred back to local associations for consideration. It will come before council in November.

I quote:

> Resolved, that the Canadian association of university teachers express its disapproval of questions concerning the political or religious beliefs, activities or associations of students or colleagues.

Members of the association are advised not to answer such questions, even when they are part of the security investigation of persons seeking government employment.

That is a pretty drastic resolution. I am not expressing an opinion at the moment as to whether it is a good or a bad resolution to pass, but I suggest to the Minister of Finance that the Canadian association of university teachers would not put this kind of resolution on the agenda for their next meeting unless they had some pretty strong feelings that their members are concerned.

And why are their members concerned? I wonder whether the minister looked at the file of correspondence which the former minister of justice received from that organization. I wonder whether he looked at the questions which the Canadian association of university teachers submitted to the former minister of justice. If he did, I find it inconceivable that he could have made the kind of speech that he made this morning, in which he tried to wipe this away as being of no consequence.

I have those questions, Mr. Chairman, and I intend to put them into the record. The committee will realize that no responsible organization—and I suggest nobody would question that the Canadian association of university teachers is a responsible organization—would ask these kinds of questions of a minister of the crown unless they were satisfied there were valid reasons for asking them.

I want to quote from these questions, Mr. Chairman, and I do this because this document has gone out to members of the association across Canada and I think it is pretty public knowledge. These questions were addressed to the former minister of justice and have not yet been answered by the government. As a matter of fact neither the former minister nor the present minister in over a year has found the time to meet with a committee of this organization. I think that is a disgraceful situation.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, is the hon. member not aware that my colleague met the representatives of this organization in August?

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Chairman, I think here again we are getting the kind of backhanded answer which I guess is all we can get from the minister. Certainly the former minister met with the people concerned. When did he meet with them? After he was no longer the minister of justice, and he made it very clear to them that he could only speak to them in that capacity, that he could not speak as minister of justice and was not representing the government of Canada. I presume that the present minister has the file in front of him and has not taken the time to read it. He has been all over the world making speeches. He has been speaking to boards of trade. I suggest that the university teachers of the Dominion of Canada are just as entitled to an hour with the present Minister of Justice as are boards of trade or the other organizations to whom he has been speaking, because these are the people who are helping, rightly or wrongly, to mould the minds and the thinking of the people who will be the future leaders of the Dominion of Canada. If they are disturbed, if they are uncertain—I am not saying that the minister has to agree with them; I am not saying that they will not go away from the meeting, if and when they meet, with a difference of opinion—this is a matter that should be looked into. There will be a difference of opinion; in fact I am almost certain, in the light of what the minister has said up to now, that they will disagree and disagree completely. However, Mr. Chairman, I think they were and are entitled to that kind of meeting so there may be the fullest discussion of the problems as they see them.

What are some of the questions which they ask? Let me read them:

1. Do you consider it advisable to protect the members of the Canadian university communities from the impact of communist ideas?

2. If so, do you believe that the R.C.M.P. is the proper body to provide this protection?

3. If not, what in your view are the legitimate reasons for R.C.M.P. investigation of university organizations and university people?

4. Do you agree that the university community is a special kind of community, with a special need of, and a special right to, freedom from pressures on matters of opinion or belief? Do you think that there is a case for "special treatment" of the universities?

5. A statement of yours in the House of Commons last June has been rather widely quoted. You are reported in Hansard for June 9, 1961 (page 6120) as wishing that the R.C.M.P. were "mind-readers", and "supermen, so that they might know what people are thinking, and would not have to ask questions at all". Would you wish to qualify this wish as far as university investigations are concerned?

6. What do you feel about a view which has been advanced by one American professors' group (at the University of California) that "the professional duty of faculty members requires them to refuse to disclose to anyone, under any circumstances information regarding the beliefs of students, present or past, obtained in the course of instructing them, whether on a formal class basis, or informally on other occasions".

7. During your term of office as Minister of Justice, has the R.C.M.P. conducted any investigations of members of Canadian university faculties, for purposes other than the investigation of actual or suspected crime? If there have been any such investigations, would you tell us (a) the purpose of them, (b) who requested them, (c) what procedures were followed, and (d) what use was made of the results?

Mr. Chairman, I think these are very pertinent and very legitimate questions and would not have been asked unless there had been proof in the minds of association members across the country that these questions were being asked in the universities.

Having been unable for over a year to obtain a meeting with the minister of justice, present or former, where these matters could be discussed and possibly—I say only possibly—some amicable conclusion mutually arrived at, the C.A.U.T. is now circulating a form used by the British association of university teachers. I want to read this to the minister because this has resulted from his action in refusing to meet with them. His action in refusing to discuss this matter with them is going to bring a result that I am sure those people who believe in security arrangements, which I do not, are going to dislike intensely. I wish to read from the November issue of the C.A.U.T. bulletin.

> Form used by the (British) association of university teachers: (supplied as a sticker, for attachment to security questionnaire forms):
>
> "The association of university teachers has expressed its disapproval of questions concerning the political or religious beliefs, activities or associations of students. I share this view, and am not prepared to answer such questions.

Then there is a space for a signature and date. That is the kind of thing which the refusal of the minister to even discuss this matter is driving the university professors of this country to do. They have no alternative. Again, Mr. Chairman, I quote from a resolution adopted by the faculty association, University of California, Berkeley, October 28, 1958 and subsequently by the university senate:

> This faculty asserts that the freedom of discussion in the classroom and in academic consultation is fundamental to higher education. The essential freedom of a university can be seriously jeopardized if argument and expression of opinion are inhibited, particularly in those subjects which are held controversial in some quarters and at some moments in history. Therefore, reports by a teacher concerning the beliefs, attitudes, activities and associations of a student regarding religion, politics and public affairs in general, are not permissible when the reports are based on information acquired by the teacher in the course of instruction or in the course of other student-teacher relations that involve the student's academic program".

This is the kind of discussion that is now taking place amongst the university people. The minister says he has had only one complaint. I can tell him that the professors in universities from one end of Canada to the other are now discussing this matter. The resolution which I quoted earlier was proposed to the C.A.U.T. by the following people, so the minister will be under no misapprehension: Professor L. C. Clark of the University of New Brunswick, Professor L. Lorch of the University of Alberta and Professor S. R. Mealing of Carleton University. Does the minister or do the members of this house think for one moment that professors of this type and from such widely separate universities are discussing these matters, raising these questions and proposing this kind of resolution out of thin air? Obviously they have facts to back up what they are saying.

The facts are clear that the R.C.M.P. is asking questions of students about views expressed by their professors and is asking professors about views expressed by their students. I do not believe that we can have a really effective educational system unless and until we have the widest spirit of freedom and unless and until professors and students can feel that they can express any opinion or that, professors can recommend to any student the reading of any book whether it be popular or not.

There can be nothing easier than to say that we believe in democracy for those people who agree with us. That is not democracy. That is a perversion of democracy. If democracy means anything it means the widest freedom for those people who disagree with the accepted standards. Surely the democratic system in which we believe is big enough and strong enough that it can withstand the widest discussion and the sharpest criticism, whether it comes from the totalitarian left or from the totalitarian right. For the minister to say today, as ministers have said in the past, that all the R.C.M.P. is doing is making inquiries is, in my opinion, patently wrong and it ought to be stopped immediately.

I have no confidence in the ability of the R.C.M.P. in this field. I do not think they have the trained people with which to do a job of assessing what are subversive or what are illegal opinions; and I do not think the universities or the schools are the places in which to do this sort of thing. I do not know from personal knowledge of a single professor in a Canadian university who is a communist. But even if it were so, I suggest to the members of this House of Commons and to the public that if one communist professor, two communist professors or five communist professors from one end of Canada to the other were a threat to democracy, then the democratic system in which we believe is indeed on shaky foundations.

I believe in democracy. I believe that democracy can stand up to any competing ideology without the use of the police. When we permit the R.C.M.P. to continue the kind of activities which they have been carrying on for the past 30 years or more—and in fact it seems to me that they are intensifying these activities—I believe that what we are doing in our desire to avoid the police state or the totalitarian state is in fact succumbing to that police state. It is my opinion that unless we stop it, in our desire to oppose communism we shall adopt the very procedures and the very methods which the communists have made so well known across the world. Speaking for myself, and I think for all other members of this group and indeed for every liberally minded, progressive and free thinking citizen of Canada, may I say that this procedure is not necessary and is not desirable, and that whatever has been done in the past ought to be stopped now.

I wish to conclude my remarks by quoting from a famous decision given by Mr. Justice Black of the United States supreme court. In dealing with precisely this kind of question he states that it is imperative to preserve—> —the interest of the people as a whole in being able to join organizations, advocate causes and make political "mistakes" without later being subjected to governmental penalties for having dared to think for themselves. It is this right, the right to err politically, which keeps us strong as a nation. For no number of laws against communism can have as much effect as the personal conviction which comes from having heard its arguments and rejected them, or from having once accepted its tenets and later recognized their worthlessness. Instead, the obloquy which results from investigations such as this not only stifles "mistakes" but prevents all but the most courageous from hazarding any views which might at some later time become disfavoured. This result, whose importance cannot be overestimated, is doubly crucial when it affects the universities on which we must largely rely for the experimentation and development of new ideas essential to our country's welfare.

I commend that quotation to the Minister of Justice for study and thought.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. Shall I rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again?

Mr. Pickersgill: There was agreement that it would be done at one o'clock and it is not yet one o'clock.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

The Deputy Chairman: I recognize the hon. member for Verdun.

Mr. Mackasey: Before commencing my speech, Mr. Chairman, may I ask a question of the hon. member who spoke last. I should like first of all to congratulate him on his remarks and to state that I agree fully with his principle. However, I should like to ask him whether or not he feels it is rather dangerous to allow one or five communist professors to have freedom to preach this kind of propaganda to those whose minds, on his own argument, are not yet formed.

[Mr. Orlikow.]

Mr. Orlikow: I would say this, Mr. Chairman. One cannot eliminate dangerous ideas by driving them underground. In my opinion in Canada at the present time it would be worse to drive communist opinions underground than to permit them the freest expression, which can then be answered and exposed for the fallacies which they are.

Mr. Jones: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether I might now call it one o'clock.

Some hon. Members: No.

An hon. Member: The hon. member for Verdun has the floor.

Mr. Jones: I am quite prepared to begin my speech now if that is what the committee would rather have.

The Deputy Chairman: I was under the impression that the hon. member for Verdun had concluded his remarks.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Ricard: He asked a question and then sat down.

Mr. Mackasey: I prefaced my remarks by requesting permission to ask the hon. member who preceded me a question, which the hon. gentleman was gracious enough to answer. I fully appreciate his courtesy.

Mr. Chairman, it is almost three months ago since I and so many other new members entered this house of parliament for the first time. However, I had a little experience in the realm of civic politics; hence I came here with a preconceived idea of the problems which a government must face and which sometimes impede the rapid progress of legislation.

May I call it one o'clock, Mr. Chairman?

Some hon. Members: No.

An hon. Member: Ask the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate.

Mr. Ricard: The hon. member has half a minute to go.

Mr. Boulanger: Very well.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall I rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again at the next sitting of the house or later today?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Progress reported.

Mr. Peters: One o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Minister of Trade and Commerce wishes to revert to motions. Will the house give unanimous consent to reverting to motions?

Mr. Peters: One o'clock.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

TRADE

OIL—REPORT ON OTTAWA MEETINGS CONCERNING CANADIAN EXPORTS TO U.S.

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, conversations were held yesterday and today with a United States delegation concerning trade in oil and petroleum products between Canada and the United States. The United States delegation was led by His Excellency Walton Butterworth, the ambassador of the United States, and included Assistant Secretary Griffith Johnson of the United States department of state and Mr. John Kelly, assistant secretary of the department of the interior. The discussions were useful and informative and provided an opportunity for the United States representatives to explain the President's recent proclamation concerning the mandatory control system for importations of oil into the United States, and the amendments which have been introduced into this system.

The two delegations noted that no change has been made in the overland exemption for oil which permits sales of Canadian oil in United States markets without licensing. The continuing importance to the security of the two countries of the availability of continental supplies was recognized. The two delegations discussed estimated trade in oil and oil products in the first six months of 1963. It was agreed that a further meeting would be held to review the situation and to discuss the future growth of trade in the light of the mutual interests of the two countries.

Mr. Pickersgill: To be continued.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The house will now revert to the business that was interrupted by the reversion to motions for the purpose of permitting the Minister of Trade and Commerce to make his announcement.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Chown in the chair.

INTERIM SUPPLY

Resolved, that a sum not exceeding $330,089,511.93 being the aggregate of—

(a) one twelfth of the total of the amounts of the items set forth in the revised estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1963, laid before the House of Commons at the present session of parliament, except atomic energy item 5, Canadian Broadcasting Corporation item 5, finance items 45 and 50, forestry item 11, labour item 40, legislation items 30 and 35, mines and technical surveys items 30, 35, 40, 70, 80, 125 and 130, national defence item 70, national health and welfare item 25, northern affairs and national resources items 10, 45 and 90, public works items 5, 45, 70, 100, 105, 125, 145, 168 170, 180, 190 and 200, Royal Canadian Mounted Police items 5, 15 and 25, transport items 35, 40, 60, 80, 85, 100, 125, 222 and 225 loans investments and advances item L20 $292,175,958;

(b) an additional one twelfth of the amounts of defence production item 25, external affairs item 5, northern affairs and national resources item 105, of the said revised estimates, $1,842,041.67;

(c) one twelfth of the total of the amounts of the items set forth in the supplementary estimates (A) for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1963, except external affairs item 112a, transport items 213a and 222a, $8,738,178.92;

(d) ten twelths of the total of the amounts of the items set forth in the supplementary estimates (B) for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1963, $27,333,333.34, be granted to Her Majesty on account of the present fiscal year ending March 31, 1963.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 2.30 p.m.

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Chairman, almost three months have passed since I, like many new members, first took my seat in this parliament. Like most new members, I approached my new role with a preconceived idea of what parliament was all about. I had based this conception of parliament possibly on the many years I have spent in civic administration. I resolved to approach my duties without a very rigid party outlook on the affairs of parliament and a willingness to admit some merit in the present government. I came here, for instance, with sincere admiration for the performance of the previous minister of justice in so far as his efforts in the area of penal reform were concerned. I came here in appreciation of the winter works program which the Tory government had instituted, because the city of Verdun has taken full advantage of this program. I can realize how many other communities across the country have found it to their advantage.

I came here also, Mr. Chairman, fully aware of the problems that face this great country of ours. Like many Canadians not too well versed in financial problems I realized the pegging of the dollar indicated something drastically wrong with the economy of the country. I realized the necessity for the introduction of the austerity program. I realized, too, that the last few years of the history of this world have been very momentous ones, a period when flying around the world has become commonplace. I thought possibly this Tory government could be partly excused if they had not had an opportunity of adjusting to the times. I was even willing to realize that by the fortunes of war this government had been given a second chance to rectify its errors by introducing some of the plans that were so badly needed to get Canada's economy rolling again.

Almost three months have passed, Mr. Chairman, and those three months have convinced me that this government cannot or will not face reality; it will not provide the leadership and the legislation that this country needs. The lackadaisical, almost callous manner with which interim supply is treated makes a mockery of the fundamental rights of parliament. This is the tenth request for interim supply and it indicates the reluctance of this government to bring to the attention of the house the specific reasons for which this money is needed. In the three months that we have sat here, only the estimates of the Department of Agriculture have been discussed in any detail. Once again we are being asked to grant this government vast sums of money without being accorded the opportunity of protecting the interests of the people of Canada.

There may be a precedent for such a procedure, Mr. Chairman but I, for one, being used to the businesslike administration of civic affairs, cannot comprehend how a government can come back month after month and ask for money without indicating to parliament how this money is to be spent.

Mr. Nasserden: I wonder if the hon. member would tell us from what document he is reading?

The Chairman: I did not hear the hon. member for Rosthern on his point of order.

Mr. Nasserden: I wonder if the hon. member would tell us what document he is reading from?

Mr. Habel: His own notes. He has not got to write his speech like you do.

Mr. Mackasey: From notes I prepared; and I would say without any question, regarding the precedent established by the hon. member a few weeks ago when he spoke on the farm bill, that at least I think I read them well, which is more than I can say for him.

I can only say that the government must feel the average Canadian is not aware of the implications of interim supply, or does not care. So long as the government continues to ignore the fundamental rights of parliament the role of a useful minority cannot be exercised and, Mr. Chairman, since we are talking about reading I am one who has taken the Speaker's advice and read Beauchesne. It contains one paragraph which is of particular interest to me, a quotation from a speech made by Edmund Burke in 1784 in which he emphasized that the role of a parliamentarian should not be limited to his interest in his own constituency but that he should be interested in all the affairs of his country.

In the light of that I would like to say a few words on the Columbia power treaty. For many years parliamentarians and leaders in civic life have viewed with alarm the constant encroachment of American culture into our periodicals, radio, television and private industry. Our newspapers and parliamentarians have cried out for a cessation of this trend and for a cessation to the constant outflow of Canadian profits into American industry; yet the government refuses to debate what is possibly the largest sellout of our natural resources in the history of our young nation.

I am the first to admit I know very little about the Columbia treaty, but many years ago I learned that the difference between a wise man and a fool is that the wise man knows how little he really knows. So long as there are great Canadians like General McNaughton who express misgivings and opinions that this treaty is not in the best interests of Canada, I feel parliament is duty bound to discuss the matter at the first opportunity, if only to convince the people of Canada that it is a good treaty. Certainly I cannot understand the reluctance of the government to discuss fully the merits of the treaty, if it is indeed good for the country; and in reviewing it we ought to bring to the attention of the house the fact that the day has long passed when we should sell our birthright and the birthright of future generations for immediate gain.

As a newcomer, I think our most productive hour of the day is that devoted to private members business. I believe that hour sifts out the interested parliamentarians from those who, just ten minutes ago, tried to mock my remarks. I wish to transcend political boundaries to pay tribute to hon. members in the corner, in the new party, who have introduced much useful legislation during that hour, and which the Conservatives find to their advantage constantly to talk out.

If I felt free to speak about the Columbia treaty I feel a little freer to speak about the Atlantic provinces. Although I do not live there I am happy to say my parents were born in the city of Halifax, and I am fully convinced that Canada cannot be prosperous as a nation as long as one segment of the country is not prosperous. The day has gone when there can be two standards of prosperity in Canada whether in the economic field or in the field of opportunities, and whether these opportunities lie in the crown corporations or in federal departments.

One of the items in the speech from the throne, which I regarded as a definite indication the government intended doing something about our economy, was the reference to the establishment of the Atlantic provinces board. Later however I was shocked to realize how little the government understands about the problems of Canada. Here was a golden opportunity; but instead of providing this board with adequate powers to implement projects, instead of establishing a board with money at its disposal—

The Chairman: Order. The hon. member for Verdun is getting into a subject matter that has already been disposed of by the house, so anything he says in that connection is out of order.

Mr. Mackasey: Then, Mr. Chairman, I might deal with another board that has not been passed by the house, although the time has long gone by when it should have been. I am referring to the centennial board, to which the leader of the government said he might eventually appoint a chairman. While we may all differ in our interpretations of planning, we all realize planning is necessary in some form or another, and I had hoped that the government's plans for celebrating Canada's centennial would be further advanced than they are. I refer particularly to the centennial board. This legislation was passed in 1960 but as yet the chairman and the commissioners have not been appointed.

If this board is to fulfil its designated role it must get about its business. We must remember that this board with the proper personnel on it, with the proper outlook and with the full co-operation of the house, can play a very useful part in the economic recovery of the country. It is to distribute almost $20 million all across Canada on projects such as parks, concert halls, civic auditoriums, libraries and so forth, projects which will do a lot to stimulate the economy of the country. However, local civic administrations must be made aware at the earliest possible moment of the projects which are suitable. They must be given time to promote them in order to get the approval of the board. They must be given time to draw plans and implement them if the projects are to be completed by 1967. Therefore I would urge the government to give priority to establishing this board in the manner in which the legislation was designed.

Earlier I said I approved of the winter works program as a means to combat unemployment. Representing, as I do, a community that has taken full advantage of such legislation I take this occasion once again to congratulate the government on its original implementation of that legislation, but I feel the time has come for the government to up date it. Under present circumstances it would not require much of a mathematician to realize that the government is diverting money from the unemployment insurance fund to the winter works program, but I feel the time has come when the government must assume some of the cost of capital equipment and some of the cost of materials that go into capital projects which it tries to encourage during the winter months.

Another field in which the government has failed so far this session to introduce legislation is that dealing with the building of houses for our senior citizens. We are woefully behind most countries in this regard, and with the continuing increase in the life span of the average Canadian, plus the constant pressure to reduce retirement age, we are gradually building up a problem that can only get worse until it becomes, if it has not already done so, a major problem which the government must face. Our senior citizens are growing in numbers, and I might add that their patience is astounding.

The day has gone when this or any other government could salve its conscience towards the aged by increasing old age pensions, and then forgetting about them until inflation once again rendered their plight desperate. I would suggest to the government that possibly our capital works program designed for the centennial celebrations in 1967 could take into consideration a richer and more rewarding form of housing for our senior citizens, carried out in close co-operation at the federal, provincial and municipal levels.

The other night during the private members' hour I heard a very enlightening discussion on the question of portable pensions. The reason I have found this hour probably the most satisfying occasion in the house is because this is when members are prone to forget their party differences and get down to the business in hand. The hon. member for Welland had introduced a private member's resolution, and once again I would say that members of the new party contributed greatly to some of the discussions that took place. However, I was very disappointed that the speaker representing the government stated that nothing could be done in this field until the unanimous consent of the provincial governments could be obtained. As a newcomer to the house I would be more prone to follow the Leader of the Opposition who in his remarks stated, referring to portable pensions—and I quote from Hansard of October 1 at page 73:

> There is something in the speech from the throne on it and as could be expected, there is reference to discussing it at a provincial conference. The government says it will talk about it with the provinces before discharging its responsibility as a federal government. But a pension plan, as such, does not require any further constitutional amendment. It can be drafted by this parliament if any government would take the responsibility for doing it.

The Leader of the Opposition did qualify that by saying:

There is doubt, of course, about widows and orphans benefits but that need not hold up the main plan if the government had one.

I am inclined to think the only impediment is that the government does not have one.

As a new member of this house I am appalled at the way in which the rights of this house are shoved aside with apparent disdain when it suits political expediency. I am referring to the fact that at this moment we are asked to provide interim supply without there being any indication of when, if ever, we shall be provided with an opportunity of discussing the full budget—an opportunity of examining the sources of revenue, the proposed objects of expenditure, and so on. Certainly, in business both big and small everyone must periodically give an account of their financial position. Certainly, small business men render accounts periodically to government agencies which have been set up to receive them. Why is the government shirking it responsibility? Our government has a responsibility in this regard. How long is it going to shirk this responsibility and make a mockery of parliament? How much longer can this government expect to borrow and spend money without rendering an account to the Canadian people?

In closing I feel that this great nation will yet reach the heights predicted for it by Sir Wilfrid Laurier, for underlying the fumbling and inefficiency of the present government are the Canadian people who have the power to remedy the situation. This government has made a serious mistake in not taking full advantage of its second chance to rectify its errors, and I am sure the Canadian people will do it for them.

Mr. Nesbitt: Would the hon. member for Verdun, who has just spoken, permit a question? The hon. member in his remarks was criticizing the government for not bringing forward the estimates of more departments for discussion. I ask him this question: is it not his own party which has taken the lead in this house in requesting that legislation should be put on the books before time is spent in discussing the estimates?

Mr. Mackasey: That is a fair question which deserves a fair answer. I would imagine that in the long interval between June and September 26, when the government insisted that this parliament should do nothing for almost three months, a great deal could have been accomplished. Had parliament convened, as we had asked, in the month of August, the affairs of the government would be much further advanced.

(Translation):

Mr. Marcoux: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Chairman.

May I submit to the attention of the Chair, in all due respect, that none of our members has spoken since last night.

(Text):

Mr. Jones: Mr. Chairman, in what I am about to say I am not referring to the remarks which have just been spoken by the hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency, because I think the Social Credit party together with the Conservative party have taken very little time in the debate on this supply motion. I think we should try to advance the progress of the work before the house and get the legislation passed.

When I heard the silly and irresponsible speech just made by the hon. member for Verdun, calling for this house to discuss simultaneously legislation, interim supply, estimates and the whole works, complaining with all the words at his command that one thing or the other had not been brought down, it was obvious what an exaggerated speech it was. I think the members of this house must get to the point of using some sort of language which would relate to the language of Her Majesty the Queen, either in English or French. We have got so far from the real meaning of words that one cannot decide, on listening to a speech and trying to interpret it according to the ordinary use of the language, what a person means. We have heard the speech by the hon. member for Verdun. He was the one who was talking about the pegging of the dollar as indicating something drastically wrong with this country. This is one example of the sort of nonsense that has been coming from the Liberal party for months now.

Mr. Chairman, I want to deal first of all with what has been laid before the House of Commons. In the 53 days up to December 11, ten days have been spent in this house on the speech from the throne, 26 days on legislation, two days on supply motions, nine days on ways and means, two days on interim supply and three days on estimates. Every item of legislation that could be brought before the house to give the house an opportunity to consider it has been brought forward consistent with giving it the attention it deserved. Mr. Chairman, 26 items of legislation have been placed before the house for its consideration, in addition to the various supply motions, the speech from the throne, the ways and means motions and the estimates.

To talk, as the hon. member for Verdun has talked, about there being some sort of lack of action on the part of the government just defies understanding in the English language. It is the sort of talk people from other parts of the world are inclined to use when they say black is white, red is blue, and so on. It seems to me that in this House of Commons we have to get down to using the English language as it is spoken in this country, otherwise the people simply will not pay any attention to any of the politicians here. I have heard over and over again the dreary and trumped up charges that characterize the speeches of the Leader of the Opposition, epitomized by the unreality which has been the hallmark of all Liberal discussions on the question of national affairs during these last eight months, this complete unreality in debate, unrealistic forays introduced into the discussions of our national affairs. This has resulted, I submit, in a breakdown of communication between parliament and the people, which is a very serious matter. Charges are made which are unrelated to actual conditions, opinions are expressed that are of a most exaggerated and wild nature. Inflamed and irresponsible utterances are made by the hon. member from Russell, for example. All this is leading us further and further from communication with the Canadian people. We must get back to this. Mr. Chairman, I will give the committee some examples, if hon. members wish.

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes, let us get back to the people.

Mr. Jones: I will give you an example right now. I just heard the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate interjecting in this debate. He has been the leader in one of the most distorted presentations of facts to the Canadian people that this country has ever known. All through the election campaign, and ever since, we have been told by him and other members of the Liberal party that this country was going to wrack and ruin.

Obviously, Mr. Chairman, by any statistical records this has been the best year that Canada has ever had, and 1963 will be an even better one.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, could I ask the hon. gentleman a question. Does the hon. gentleman say this has been the best year for the Canadian dollar that Canada has ever had?

Mr. Jones: Certainly this has been the best year for the Canadian exporters that they have ever had for the last 12 years.

Mr. Pickersgill: I said, the Canadian dollar.

Mr. Jones: I will deal with that point before I get through my remarks today, perhaps.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Chairman, does the hon. member suggest that this has been the best year for the unemployed that Canada has had?

Mr. Jones: I will be dealing with the question of unemployment and the great strides that have been taken by the Minister of Labour to improve the situation in that regard, strides that were ridiculed by the members of the Liberal party, strides that they said would be ineffective. I will be dealing with that in the course of my remarks. Be patient, my friends.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to tell the committee a little story that I heard the other day about conditions down in the Spanish main in the days of the sailing ships. In those days there were pirates who used to place on the shoals and rocks around Cuba false lights and beacons to lure the ships that were passing by into those shoals and rocks near the shore. Those people used to be called moon cussers because they used to cuss the moon when it was out; it would shine on the lights and show them up, and the ships would not be lured on to the rocks. These people in the Liberal party have caused a new phrase to be invented. They are the boom cussers; they cuss when we have a boom. This has been going on in our country with growing intensiveness for the last eight months. Boom cussers Martin, Pearson and Pickersgill—the greatest collection of boom cussers we have seen in our nation's history.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, could I ask the hon. gentleman who wrote the script?

Mr. Jones: I will tell the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate that if he would like to come over and sit in this seat beside me he will see the extent of my notes—and they are all mine, my friend. The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate used to be called the surreptitious milk drinker, because when he worked for Mackenzie King he did not even dare take a drink of milk unless he took it surreptitiously. He even admitted this in the book that he wrote about Mackenzie King. I can imagine the fear and trepidation that was his. I hope he is in a better state of nerves now. Down in the maritimes you do not have to go very far; you just have to mention his name and they say, "Is that the surreptitious milk drinker from Bonavista-Twillingate that you are talking about?"

Mr. Chairman, I would like to give a few other examples of the wild and exaggerated talk that has been going on in this house, unrelated to actual facts. When the leader of the New Democratic party was making a speech the other day he was talking about the great need for a housing program. Somebody mentioned to him that $1 billion of federal money had been put into a housing program. He then decided it was about time he switched his tactics, so he said, "Well, not a general housing program but a housing program for the aged". The hon. member for Verdun mentioned housing for the aged a moment ago. Mr. Chairman, at the present time there is going on the greatest expansion of housing for the aged in this country's history. It is going on all across this great country. In Saskatoon there are several houses going up—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Jones: —under C.M.H.C. plans. These are houses for the old folks, and this program is placing them in a position where they can obtain accommodation at reasonable rates and conditions which they have never had before. Then there is another situation. The leader of the New Democratic party was also discussing the question of technical and vocational training a few days ago. Mr. Chairman, have you ever seen greater advances made by any country in this free world of ours than those made by this government to promote and advance technical and vocational training? I can tell the committee that there is not in any country of the free world a program to equal the present program of this government in the field of technical and vocational training, regardless of the size of the country. I will give the committee some figures on this so hon. members may appreciate the tremendous effort that is being made in this regard. The figures as at November 14 indicate that approvals of capital projects in the technical and vocational training program amount to $442,326,268, of which the federal share, a 75 per cent contribution, is no less than $284,680,549—$284 million spent in building technical and vocational training schools in this country.

Mr. Nasserden: And that isn't peanuts.

Mr. Jones: And that isn't peanuts, as my hon. friend from Rosthern says. We only have to look at the use that is made of some of these tremendous projects. Mr. Chairman, I should like to turn to the record in Ontario to see what use Ontario is making of this great scheme. What use did Ontario make of this great scheme? I noticed that one of the hon. members who spoke earlier was jeering at the Ontario government. He asked what use the Ontario government is making of this federal government scheme. May I say that, as of November 14, they are taking no less than $186,654,000 worth of federal money to help construct technical and vocational training schools. This scheme is open to any province. Any province can put forward to the federal government a scheme for approval by the Minister of Labour. The size of the contribution of the federal government to any particular province does not depend on the federal government but rather on the province. If the province asks for these schools, they will get them. The federal government is contributing $186 million worth of technical training schools in Ontario alone. That is just the federal government's share. It represents a tremendous advancement in technical schools.

I should like to give some of the figures with regard to the situation just in the Toronto region alone. In Toronto the total estimated cost of the approved plan for the technical and vocational training capital projects is $30,239,806, of which the federal government's share is $21,161,417. In this technical training school program Toronto alone is getting more from the federal government than is any other individual province in Canada.

I think one of the arguments that has been put forward in the course of this debate and in past times is that this government plans its projects in some bits and pieces manner. What a false charge that is. One thinks of the situation in Toronto. One thinks of how we have been building in Toronto a great marshalling yard so that the manufacturers and labourers in Toronto can get their produce out of that area and into the world markets and into the markets of Canada and the United States. One thinks of that $143 million marshalling yard. They are getting a $40 million or $50 million airport in Malton at the edge of Toronto, and this $21 million technical and vocational training school project. All these things are working together to increase the productivity of that area.

It is a great and co-ordinated project, particularly when you consider the actions which have been taken in bringing down the value of the Canadian dollar in order to give our exporters an advantage in world markets so that exporters not only in Toronto but in all parts of the country, and particularly in the agricultural and primary producing areas, have a good chance to get their exports into the world markets on favourable terms. This is a great and co-ordinated plan, a great and co-ordinated project, and it deserves commendation.

Certainly it may be the fact that not too many Conservative members were elected from Toronto, but that is not the fault of those three cabinet ministers and the other members who represented Toronto previously, as they certainly worked in the best interests of their area and of Canada in promoting these great schemes.

These technical and vocational training school projects which I just mentioned are ones that deserve the special commendation of all people in this country, no matter from what part of the house they may come. I would ask for special support for this project. If we can induce the people of this country to make the proper use of these schools in order to get the training they need, so as to upgrade Canadian skills and Canadian abilities to the end that Canadians can compete in the matter of skills with the other nations of the world, then we shall be doing a great service to the people of Canada. This is a matter which should be beyond partisan consideration. It is the greatest project for technical training that has ever been devised in the western world in recent times.

It would seem to me that we hardly need to refer to some of the remarks which have been made in this House of Commons during the course of this debate in order to substantiate further the charge I have made that the speeches in the house are getting so far from English usage that they become almost meaningless. I wish to refer to comment which appeared in an editorial in the Ottawa Journal of December 13, and in which the writer deals with this problem or one aspect of it. The editorial is entitled, "The Tyranny of Words", and it reads in parts as follows:

> Somebody some years ago wrote a book on "The Tyranny of Words".
>
> We think of it as we read a charge by the Toronto Star that Senator Wallace McCutcheon, recently appointed by the government to advise on implementation of the Glassco report, has become an "economic czar".
>
> Now a czar, a term applied to Russian emperors, means a Caesar, somebody whose word is law, or who is above the law, responsible only to himself; all-powerful.
>
> Has Senator McCutcheon become that?

The editorial goes on to answer that question, "Hardly"—as, of course, Senator McCutcheon is obliged to submit to the cabinet any proposals he makes. The editorial finishes up in this manner:

> Actually, our political vocabularies have become shot through with words and phrases that are utterly meaningless, phrases and terms that represent nothing more than an alien hangover from Europe.
>
> An example is an article in the current print of Maclean's on the Conservative party, telling how the party has a "right," or "left" and "centre". Which is complete nonsense. One might write of a "left" and "right" and "centre" in the politics of Italy or France or Germany; applied to the politics of Canada, or to a party in Canada, it is meaningless gibberish.

Then the editorial concludes as follows:

> Finding one's way through the jungle of existing Canadian politics is hard enough at best; to further confuse it with a fog of alien terms and phrases sins against clarity—and sometimes against honesty.

That is my plea today, namely that we get back to discussing the affairs of this nation in terms of fact; that we do not characterize boom in this country as doom; that we do not characterize programs for progress as programs of regression; that we do not make such silly statements as the one which was made by the hon. member for Rosedale earlier, namely that the minister of economic affairs in Ontario had taken over the post of the Minister of Trade and Commerce in the federal government. Silly and irresponsible remarks of this sort do not do anything to raise the dignity and level of debate in parliament. That is my plea today. During the course of the rest of the life of this parliament I hope that we can get back to discussing our nation's affairs in a manner of which we can be proud and in a way which will make the Canadian people proud of us.

(Translation):

Mr. Marcoux: I thank the Liberals who cheered when I rose.

Mr. Chairman, when, a little while ago, I pointed out that the Social Credit members had not spoken since this morning, I did not mean that other hon. members had done so too lengthily. I simply wanted to say that we think ourselves justified in taking part in this discussion, and the speech of the hon. member for Winipeg North (Mr. Orlikow), incites me more and more to do so.

The hon. member held forth on the question of communist indoctrination in Canada. There may be different points of view in this matter, but I think that it is precisely because of the recognition of free speech for all Canadian citizens that he was able to make his statement.

Yet, I think that arguments like those he advanced today can only lead us to that very police state which he fears the present system might bring about in the more or less immediate future. I might, incidentally, bring to his notice that Russia does not have a communist but a socialist government. Russia is, indeed, called "The Union of Soviet Socialist Republics".

This morning again, I received, as most hon. members did, a letter from the Canadian communist party in which the Prime Minister is urged to take an open stand against nuclear weapons. Those people have a perfect right to do so. However I think that they cannot accuse us of suspecting communist infiltration when they themselves say, for instance, that some communist organizations are in favour of nuclear disarmament.

I do not believe anybody could deny those facts, because they are true. That is why, when we speak of communist infiltration, or of subversive ideas, it is most important for us to have an exact definition of the word, so that we may establish what is subversive and what is not.

I would not assert that what the communist party says is subversive, but I think that there is some reason for suspecting the communist party of being subversive. It is simply a question of principle which we think an essential one.

When we ask, for instance, that the national railway company reveal their method of operating their system, we think this is a question of principle. We say that the C.B.C. is a closed corporation, a corporation which does not allow every group to use its facilities in all fairness, and we also mention the national film board, as this board and the C.B.C. are means of information and education. To my mind, it is important to follow a definite policy in order to avoid what the hon. member for Winnipeg North mentioned this morning, that is, communist infiltration, because the better we shall know the communists the more able we shall be to contend with them.

Mr. Chairman, I wanted to refer to this matter in order to explain what the party of which I am the spokesman means when we demand freedom. As a matter of fact, we shall continue our efforts along this line even though we are called fascists or any other name. We know the names our opponents, particularly the socialists, have been calling us. But it does not deter us in any way.

We believe that it is only fair that all Canadian citizens may enjoy the right to investigate all the crown corporations and the activities of organizations such as the C.B.C. and the national film board, in order to insure freedom of expression for any idea.

As for the freedom that is cherished to such an extent in Russia, it is freedom for a single idea. Besides, as it was sometimes said about the people's democracies, liberty is only a matter of selecting one candidate from one party. Mr. Chairman, that is not the kind of freedom we are asking for, and it is in order to prevent our going in any such direction unknowingly or maybe unwillingly, that we are requesting freedom of expression for any ideology. As a matter of fact, we do not want us to get into a situation such as exists in socialistic countries.

Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to delay longer the passage of this legislation. If I took part in this debate, it was because it somewhat extended beyond the customary scope. As a matter of fact, I decided to make a contribution only after the remarks of the hon. member for Winnipeg North. This being said, I now conclude my remarks for today.

(Text):

Mr. Drury: Mr. Chairman, I rise in this debate to renew a plea made by the Leader of the Opposition as recently as October 26 for a special committee of the house on defence policy, and reiterated by him on November 7. The background against which this plea is made is, I suggest, a sombre one. Time and again the opposition has sought from the government statements of defence policy. Such requests appear to have fallen on deaf ears. Time and again questions have been asked with respect to specific aspects of our defence efforts and answers have not been provided. The questions have been parried with, I regret, very great persistence. Attempts to secure a general defence debate in the house have likewise been unsuccessful. In such a situation how can the people of Canada find out what the defence policy of Canada is, in so far as the government is responsible for it?

Mr. Fisher: I wonder whether the hon. member would answer a question. I should like to ask him whether the confusion that exists has been a factor in leading his colleague and defence spokesman for his party to the decision he has made sort of unilaterally and on his own.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Chairman, the question endeavours to impute motives and ascribe intentions to members of the Liberal party. I will let the statement of the hon. member for Trinity stand on its own feet.

How can the public ascertain what the defence policy of the Canadian government is? There have been scattered statements by high ranking officers who have retired, but unfortunately on a number of occasions these statements have tended to conflict. It is difficult to get a consensus from them. There has also been a series of attempts by ministers of the crown in a vague general way to deliver an assurance not to worry, that everything is all for the best. This, however, fails quite naturally to assuage the worries and perplexities that the present situation inflicts on the public.

The lack not only of a policy but perhaps even of an intention to enunciate a policy is evident from the last white paper issued by the present Minister of National Defence which is dated May 1, 1961, about 18 months ago. Previous white papers on defence had started off as an introductory theme, with a number of paragraphs under the heading "Defence Policy," in which some attempt was made to enunciate a coherent whole and into which the armed forces programs would fit. The present Minister of National Defence has, however, studiously avoided even using the word "policy" in his white paper and has plunged from the first page into an outline of the activities, rather than the ideas, of the various armed forces and the defence research board. I suggest that if the government either is unable or unwilling, but in any event declines to provide leadership to the people of Canada in this important field, it then remains for those of us elsewhere and those other Canadians who can, to ascertain as best they may what the facts are and to attempt to discuss them in an intelligent way. I would suggest to the hon. member who just asked the question, that is precisely what the hon. member for Trinity was endeavouring to do. In the circumstances, he appears to have been better informed than the Minister of National Defence has been willing to admit himself to have been informed, and to have drawn what one can only conclude were logical and serious conclusions from his information.

In a broader field it is agreed, I think, by all in Canada that in defence matters it is impossible for Canada to go it alone. There is universal agreement on the necessity, in our circumstances, to form part of a system of collective security. I do not think there is any dispute, at least I have never heard it seriously argued, that adherence to a system of collective security is anything but necessary for Canada. One of the advantages to be derived from forming part of such a system is that it does provide for each of the members thereof an opportunity to choose and play a role which is appropriate to the circumstances of that member. It would be hoped that in any such system, each of the members would play its fair and appropriate part. Perhaps the only practical way of measuring what should be an appropriate scale of effort is to examine defence budgets expressed in terms of currency, to examine the size of the defence budget.

Our defence budget has remained substantially constant over the past ten years and, for the year 1961, accounted for 5.7 per cent of our national income. Amongst our NATO allies this occupies roughly the middle range of scales of effort. It does represent a standing of fourth in the list in respect of the size and scale of our defence effort over the years and appears to have represented a fair share. But it must be recognized that any substantial change in our defence budget, either up or down but more particularly any decrease of significance, would be interpreted by our allies as a significant change in our military and political relationships to them. The defence budget, and in particular its size is significant in our relationship with our allies and a sudden change, except in the event of substantial change in the international climate, would give rise to some further serious questions.

I might try to look briefly at what the threat is to Canada in the present circumstances. This would appear to reside largely in the Soviet union and its satellite countries. The military threat posed by the Soviet union to North America is in the form of both nuclear and conventional forces. The conventional forces would be, for attacking this continent, so unecomomical and so expensive to put into operation and sustain, that it is unlikely to enter the mind of a strategist that this would be an appropriate choice to make. There does, however, remain the possibility of the employment of nuclear weapons.

The Soviet union is known to possess a number—not very large—of submarines capable of launching nuclear weapons, a number of intercontinental ballistic missiles with nuclear warheads, and a very large number of high speed, long range, high altitude aircraft. I think military experts are in general agreement that the Soviet union now possesses a sufficient volume of these nuclear weapons that, used in combination, it would be possible in spite of any efforts we may make on this continent, to visit on North America a weight of attack which would cause organized society, as we know it, to cease to exist. For technological and financial reasons combined, I suggest that North America cannot provide a scale of defence which can effectively prevent the Soviet union from landing on this country sufficient nuclear weapons to cause virtual annihilation.

Fortunately for us, perhaps, there is in the hands of the United States an arsenal which is capable of doing precisely the same thing to the Soviet union in spite of any effort now or in contemplation by the Soviet union to prevent this. This, then, is described as the nuclear stalemate. However, we in North America have expressed as an article of faith, the conviction that under no circumstances will the western forces, and in particular those in North America, initiate one of these annihilating attacks. In order, then, for us to be effective militarily against the Soviet union, it must clearly be possible for us to survive in North America the launching of a massive attack on this country and still be able to reply so as to visit annihilation on the Soviet union.

Mr. Pugh: From Canada?

Mr. Drury: I said North America.

Mr. Valade: I want to know if the hon. member includes Canada.

Mr. Drury: I would hope the hon. member who spoke from his seat would try to be patient for a little while, come out of his parish and look a little farther afield.

Mr. Valade: May I ask the hon. member a question for clarification? When he talked about a "parish" does he consider Canada is similar to a parish?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): He did not say that.

Mr. Drury: Before this outbreak, I suggested we had undertaken and firmly persuaded ourselves that we would never make the first attack. We would, therefore, have to have the capacity, in the event of a massive attack being launched on North America, to reply. This, in current terms, is described as the second strike capability. To do this we must have the means of ensuring that, should there be launched a massive attack on this country, the nuclear riposte of the United States would not be neutralized. If it is apparent to the Soviet union, and clearly apparent, that a massive attack launched on North America will invite a successful massive retaliation on them, it is then reasonable to assume that reasonable men in the Kremlin, not wishing a successful retaliation, will never in the first place launch a massive attack.

Canada does not form part of the retaliatory force. We do, however, have a role in trying to ensure that the retaliatory force, the second strike capability, in fact has a second strike capability; and to examine how we achieve this one has to look briefly at the nuclear forces of the United States. These are composed of Polaris missiles carried in nuclear submarines, intercontinental ballistic missiles stored for operation in hardened or reinforced concrete covered bases, and a very large force of bomber aircraft under the control of strategic air command.

The nuclear submarines bearing nuclear missiles, by their very nature, by their ability to hide under the oceans, are in themselves their own protection and by themselves can remain invulnerable. The intercontinental ballistic missiles must rely for their invulnerability on the thickness and depth of the concrete, and on the possible inaccuracies of an attack. They are safe from all except a direct hit. The bomber aircraft of strategic air command are extremely vulnerable to attack when they are on the ground. If, however, they get up into the air they then become invulnerable, so the problem then is to organize ourselves so that in the event of attack warning can be given to these aircraft in sufficient time to allow them to take off, become airborne and consequently be invulnerable. This then in the role or function in which Canada can be of assistance.

Warning of an attack is now provided by means of very powerful, very large radar systems installed in Alaska, Greenland and the United Kingdom which have the ability to detect and record immediately ballistic missiles from the Soviet union very shortly after the moment of launching. If these can be detected at the time of departure an amount of warning can then be transmitted to continental United States which will enable the aircraft of strategic air command to become airborne before the arrival of these missiles, and if the strategic aircraft become airborne before the arrival of missiles, no useful purpose would be served in endeavouring to attack the airfields from which they have taken off.

In so far as attacks by enemy aircraft are concerned there is a system of warning lines of which everyone is well aware, the distant early warning line, the mid-Canada line and the Pine Tree line. These also provide sufficient warning of an attack to enable, in their present state of alert, strategic aircraft to get off the ground before they can be destroyed.

This then is the function that we can and do perform in safeguarding the second strike capability, in making the retaliatory forces of the United States invulnerable to an attack and consequently able to survive an announced massive attack and be able to retaliate after that. The theory is, and I think it is a sound one, that so long as we have second strike capability it would be disastrous and completely unprofitable for an aggressor to visit an attack on North America.

There is, however, one other possibility, and that is a sneak attack on the strategic air command bases. This could be attempted by placing in North American air space a sufficient number of nuclear carrying vehicles to be able simultaneously, and without any warning, to drop their nuclear bombs on the airfields before SAC aircraft could take off. To do this it would be necessary to introduce unbeknownst to us, an estimated 200 aircraft, or perhaps less than 200.

To prevent this is I suggest one of the principal day to day functions of NORAD, and it is achieved in this fashion. The perimeter of North America is divided into a series of sectors or zones called air defence zones. Any aircraft flying into, through or from these zones is required to file a flight plan. The flight plan is fed into a computer in Colorado Springs, and immediately on taking off in flight each of these aircraft is tracked by radar. The report on this tracking is then fed into the computer and when the report and the flight plan match, the aircraft can be assumed to be identified. When they do not match there is a demand on the local authorities to identify the tracked aircraft.

This is done by radio-telephone, by wireless means, or if all else fails by sending up one of the NORAD aircraft to establish contact and make a visual identification. Because this is done 24 hours a day, 365 days a year, it is quite apparent that it is impossible—and I stress impossible—for a number of hostile, clandestine aircraft secretly to get into North American air space within range of these SAC airfields without North American air defence having knowledge of them. So, if it is apparent to a possible aggressor that they cannot proceed to do their jobs in secret, that they must of necessity be discovered before they can achieve their purposes, then there is no sense whatever in attempting an attack in that manner, and the fact of our being able to identify every aircraft flying through the perimeter of North America makes a sneak attack impossible to achieve on a secret basis and consequently not worthwhile attempting.

If such an attempt were made it would of necessity fail, not by reason of the incoming aircraft being destroyed before delivering their bombs, but because of discovery, the target they were seeking on the ground, the SAC aircraft, would have left by the time they arrived.

There is one further aspect of this warning system and that is the possibility of the positioning in North American waters, on the east and west coasts, of nuclear propelled or even conventional submarines with nuclear missiles therein. For warning against this and the detection of such operations we rely mostly on naval craft, sea-going waterborne craft, with very limited means of detection indeed. There is not nearly, in this area, the assurance there is against the possibility of clandestine operations that we have in respect of clandestine operations in the air. This problem of the detection of possibly hostile undersea craft is a serious one and a problem to which we should probably give the highest priority in terms of military and intellectual effort.

If, then, in respect of the North American defence we have an adequate system of warning and we have the ability to guarantee a retaliatory force with a second strike capability, then there will be little likelihood that short of virtual insanity there will ever be either an attack by surprise or a deliberate attack launched on North America. Essentially the elements in this are a retaliatory force capable of dealing a knockout blow to the Soviet union regardless of any defensive measures which might be taken and the means to render this retaliatory force invulnerable to an attempt to destroy it before it could become operative. This, I suggest, we now have. In this Canada has a role to play and is playing that role.

In Europe the situation is somewhat different. In the fifties the NATO concept was that if one could place along the perimeter of the Soviet a screen sufficient to cause an aggressor to concentrate substantial numbers of forces in order to penetrate it there would be no possibility of a lightning stroke as a result of which the Soviets might overrun western Europe without resistance and, once installed, be difficult to remove. This temptation would be removed by a sufficient depth of screen to compel any break-through to be made on a fairly large scale. With this screen in position it was the declared intention of the United States that serious endeavours to penetrate it would be regarded as deliberate aggression on all the NATO countries and would be replied to immediately by the launching upon the Soviet union of the retaliatory force from the United States.

Latterly, however, it has come to be recognized that this all or nothing philosophy does give rise to serious dangers. There is the ever present danger that the Soviet union might conclude that the United States would be unwilling in the face of a light provocation to launch the one and only reply of a total nuclear attack. This has led to efforts by the United States recently to have established under NATO a force which in itself would be sufficient to accept and deal with serious and heavier forms of aggression. This is the reason for the initiative currently being taken in Paris.

The Deputy Chairman: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. gentleman who has the floor, but it is my duty to inform him that his time has expired.

Mr. Douglas: Perhaps the hon. member could be allowed to finish giving the house this useful information. He could do it in two speeches, so he might as well do it all at once and preserve the continuity of his ideas.

The Deputy Chairman: Is it the unanimous wish of the committee that the hon. member be allowed to proceed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Drury: I am grateful to the committee and particularly to the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam.

I was saying that these considerations led the United States to attempt to increase the size, scope and potential of the military forces in Europe. The new concept provides not only the NATO countries in Europe but the free world in general with a wider range of choice as to responses to be made in the event of aggression in Europe, which may start more likely as a consequence of error or by miscalculation than as a consequence of deliberate intention. In this system of collective security which I have endeavoured to outline, Canada, as I have suggested, can have a choice of roles to play. With the strengthening of NATO forces in Europe there is manifestly required a vast array of military weapons systems and of military roles. We, as a member of this collective security organization, have not only the freedom but we also have the duty to contribute a role or function, or series of functions, appropriate to our situation.

If I have anything useful to say today it is to try to give the committee some suggestions as to what might be the considerations which would affect our choice of role.

First, we should seek military functions which call for highly trained military personnel and require a relatively high degree of technical skill. This is appropriate for the long service, volunteer military personnel we have. It is also appropriate to the product of our defence industry in North America and it is appropriate to the standard of living we enjoy and the standard of the products we make. It is more useful to us and to our allies if advantage is taken of the fact that we in Canada can produce highly trained personnel in both a technical and a military sense who are equipped by reason of a voluntary long term engagement to serve continuously over a period of time. Our soldiers, sailors and airmen now enjoy a reputation of being, if not the best equipped, at least the best trained in the world. I think it is highly desirable that we should see this kind of reputation continued. Second, we should seek a military function which corresponds to an essential—and I emphasize the word "essential"—military purpose within the alliance. In so far as can be foreseen this military function should be likely to continue to be essential.

There is the danger, as we see it here today, of adopting a function or a role which is non-essential in the general scheme of things and will possibly fall by the wayside. We must adopt a role or a function which is essential for the moment and which also is not going to fade out in a short time. We, for financial and other reasons, cannot afford the luxury of plunging into expensive military training, expensive military organization and hardware for a very short period of time. We have to try and take a long look at the problem and engage in the kind of function which, as I say, is not only essential for the moment but is likely to continue to be essential for some time to come. This does not mean that the weaponry, the hardware which this role or function will require will not change. It must, of necessity. But we want to try and ensure that the role or function of itself is not likely to disappear.

Third, we should seek military functions which are geared more closely to our industrial economy and which, certainly in large part, lend themselves to research activities within our industrial complex. Then perhaps, more than has been the case in the past, this would serve to provide in respect of our scientific community, a counter attraction to the vast attractions of the United States. The number of highly educated scientists we have lost over the past few years has been, to say the least, distressing. It has been very serious indeed for Canada. A military function which is geared to our industrial economy would also serve in some measure to alleviate the serious balance of payments problem we are now facing and which in my view are likely to continue to face for some time to come. No means should be overlooked which would be useful in tackling this major economic problem which we face.

Fourth, we should seek a military function which does not impede or run counter to the possibility of useful diplomatic initiatives which Canada can, and if it can, should, undertake in the world. We have, or had in the past at least, a reputation and an influence in this area which far outweighed the size of our population and the size of our economic efforts. We should under no circumstances allow ourselves to be put in a position where our military functions and roles are such that we are estopped from putting forward in the diplomatic field a constructive, productive effort on behalf of peace.

Fifth—and I think this will be understood and almost goes without saying for all Canadians—such functions and roles should be adopted not unilaterally by ourselves but in the light of the fullest discussion and agreement with our partners. We must not become isolationist in this field, even in approach; we should not become unilateral. We are members of a coalition; we are members of a partnership and we should behave like partners. We ask for consultation from our other partners. We must and should be equally prepared to provide consultation to them on what we intend to do.

I would suggest that perhaps consideration of the criteria I have suggested, when applied to our apparent dilemma in North America, might shed some light on this problem.

In respect of NORAD we perform two functions. One of them corresponds to all the tests I have outlined and the other does not. The military task of identification and warning which is NORAD's main task does correspond to the criteria I have just outlined. The function of aircraft interception and destruction—more particularly aircraft destruction—with nuclear weapons, does not correspond, and it is because this particular function into which we appear in the past three years to have rather drifted does not correspond, that we are faced with the spectacle—

Mr. Bigg: That is better than bird watching.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Chairman, I will address myself to the hon. gentleman in a moment. Because of that we are confronted with the spectacle of two senior cabinet ministers apparently locked in an unresolved dispute, talking with different voices. We see, as a consequence of this, a government which avoids at all costs and on all occasions any discussion of defence issues, other than certain of its backbenchers being bright with slogans such as "bird watchers".

Mr. Bigg: That is your slogan, not ours.

Mr. Drury: I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that if this kind of tactic is the government's defence policy we should get rid of the government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Drury: I say that in view of all the evidence that is available—I am prepared to admit that we Canadians outside the government are not in possession of all the facts; indeed, we clearly cannot be, in the light of refusal to give them—Canada is now in the apparent position of dishonouring her international obligations.

I suggest, Mr. Chairman, this is a serious condition for any country to find itself in, particularly a country with our glorious past. Even if in the view of a number of critics some of our undertakings may have been inappropriate—and I am one of those who suggest they have been inappropriate—we must either forthwith and now honour these undertakings; or if we are not prepared to go through with these undertakings, we must immediately, in the fullest consultation with our partners, initiate alternatives which are satisfactory not only to us but to them.

As the hon. member for Trinity expressed the matter elsewhere: For Canada this is the moment of truth. We must do the right thing and we are lucky that, in choosing the right thing, we still have two alternatives. We are currently doing the wrong thing and, I regret to say, we have been doing so for the past many months. Under these circumstances it is the primary responsibility of the government to take a decision and to stand by it. If they have not the courage to do that, then let them be prepared to tell the public of Canada what the facts of the situation are and to let the public take the decision for them.

Mr. Bigg: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Drury: Most certainly.

Mr. Bigg: Is the hon. member prepared to say where he stands in respect of our relationship to NATO and NORAD, with respect to a firm committal?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Chairman, the house has been very tolerant of me in running over my time and I think perhaps the hon. member will not regard me as being too discourteous if I suggest that, rather than asking me to repeat what I have said, he be patient and wait until Hansard comes out. I have been pushed into a little bit more than I would wish of what is jocularly called debate.

I am seriously making a plea for a special committee of the House of Commons on defence policy. I do not think that defence policy in Canada is a subject on which any reasonable man would wish to seek disagreement. I do not think that this is a topic on which any honest Canadian would wish to seek political advantage. By long tradition there is a desirable absence of partisanship in our external non-military policy matters. In recent years military affairs have come to be inextricably mixed up with foreign policy. I suggest that it is time that defence matters were taken out of the realm of partisan politics. It is for this reason that I make an earnest plea to the government to agree to the proposal made by the Leader of the Opposition for the setting up of such a committee.

If such a committee is set up I for one—and I think I can speak quite sincerely for the members of the party to which I belong—will not employ such a committee for partisan purposes. We are seeking the truth. We are prepared to do the things which the truth requires in this field. If, however, the government will not take action to restore us to the position of honour in the international world to which we aspire and which we deserve, we in the opposition shall obviously be compelled to do what we can to get at the facts.

Mr. Valade: I have a question for the hon. member. As we have extended his period of time I am sure the hon. member for St. Antoine-Westmount will not mind if I ask him a question. In his speech the hon. member said he was in fact suggesting that the NATO forces should be equipped with atomic retaliation weapons. Canada being a member of the NATO countries, I wonder whether he is at the same time suggesting that Canada make an atomic warfare contribution to the NATO forces. Where does he stand as far as Canada's commitment to atomic warfare is concerned? This would require him to say yes or no. Where does he stand? Is he for it or against it?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Chairman, may I say—

Mr. Valade: Answer yes or no.

Mr. Drury: I decline to answer yes or no. I suggest that it is a little bit unreasonable to expect an answer of yes or no. I listened to a series of questions; and without wishing to be disrespectful to the hon. member may I say to him that the question itself to which he asked for a yes or no answer is somewhat akin to the question "Would you rather be red or dead?" That is not the kind of question that I should like to answer yes or no. In so far as nuclear weapons for NATO are concerned, may I say this. If the NATO alliance adopts the view that nuclear weapons for the alliance are necessary, we as a member of that alliance should go along with that view. We as a member of that alliance should have and employ nuclear weapons under NATO control.

(Translation):

Mr. Beaule: Mr. Chairman, I shall be very brief for I only have a few remarks to make before we approve the interim supply for the current month.

Ten weeks have already gone by since the beginning of the session and we have had all sorts of discussions. We have heard talks on the speech from the throne and we have also seen the old line parties indulging in petty politics, which is just like them.

An hon. Member: Which party are you talking about?

Mr. Beaule: The one my hon. friend belongs to.

We have also seen the government propose the establishment of some economic boards, as well as the setting up of an economic development board for the Atlantic area, etc.

Mr. Chairman, I suggest that we should have first carried out the recommendations of the boards which have been already set up by the Conservative government. These boards are established, they conduct an investigation and then their recommendations are put in some bottom drawer to gather dust. Later on, we are asked in this house to set up more advisory boards which, I believe, shall meet the same fate.

We expected the government to put forward legislative measures likely to solve the serious economic problems of today.

We expected the government to come forward with a great program of public works so as to cope with the present unemployment.

We also expected that the government would bring forward an amendment to the Income Tax Act, and that it would have, above all, increased the basic exemption for Canadians, especially for workers who have been claiming, these last years, an increase in the basic exemption from income tax, that is already too heavy for them to carry. We also thought that the government would amend the Family Allowances Act by bringing under its scope the students from 16 to 20 years and by increasing these allowances to keep up with the increase in the cost of living.

We had thought also that the government would increase the old age security pensions to meet the cost of living and grant them to people 65 and over.

But we have found the government very slow in legislating in those fields.

We had also thought that we could resume the debate on the bill respecting the creation of an advisory council on manpower adjustment, but I doubt very much that we can do it before the Christmas recess. There again, we are dealing with a consultative service.

I am of the opinion that the first step the government should take to stem unemployment is to create new jobs.

Mr. Chairman, we are in favour of the establishment of consultative services, but we are of the opinion that, first and foremost, it is up to the government to create new jobs throughout the country in order to alleviate the present unemployment situation.

Mr. Chairman, all this seems to be impossible for some political parties at the present time. Indeed, some are inclined to believe that setting up a municipal development bank the purpose of which would be to grant interest-free loans to municipalities wishing to carry out extensive public works programs, would be an illogical step.

It was also suggested to have the Bank of Canada finance the work undertaken by municipalities, and there again we are told that that is impossible.

In this connection, Mr. Chairman, allow me to quote from Einstein's book. This scientist is considered as the greatest mathematician in the world and his teachings are accepted by all economists.

I quote excerpts from the book entitled "How I see the world" by Einstein, which was edited by "Les Editions Flammarion". Einstein said:

Production and purchasing power.

The gold standard has, in my opinion, one great shortcoming: when there is a tightening up of this metal supply, it automatically entails a contraction of credit and of legal tender in circulation. Price and salary cannot adjust quite fast enough to such contractions.

The natural means to overcome those drawbacks are in my opinion the following:

I am still quoting Einstein:

The legal and gradual decrease, along trade lines of working hours in order to suppress unemployment, together with the fixing of a minimum salary, to control the purchasing power of the masses, in accordance with the available production of goods:

Control of the money supply and the volume of credit in circulation while maintaining a constant average price of goods, together with the elimination of any legal cover.

And it continues:

The main virus of the system as I see it is the almost unlimited freedom on the labour market, together with the extraordinary means of production. To produce the current requirements one is far from making use of the full available labour force. Therefore, there is unemployment and unhealthy competition among workers and both cause a reduction of the purchasing power and an unacceptable strangulation of all the economic blood stream.

I am obviously aware that the economists partial to freedom claim that any reduction of the labour force is compensated by an increase of the requirements. But, first of all, I must say that I do not believe that, and that even if such an assertion were true, those factors would always point out to the fact that a great number of men would be abnormally restricted in their standard of living.

I also agree with you that we must be very careful to see to it that the youth are compelled to contribute to the production activity. I also believe that older workers should be excluded from certain occupations (that I would call unskilled occupations).

But as a compensation they should receive a pension since they previously contributed for quite a period a productive labour which is acknowledged by society.

I am also of the opinion that we must prevent fluctuations in the exchange rates of our currency and that we should accomplish this by replacing the gold standard by a standard based on determined quantities of goods—

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I regret to point out to the hon. member that he may criticize the present government but that unfortunately this is not the time to extoll a political philosophy. I have not the least doubt that the hon. member might be trying to put forward his political philosophy, but he should always do it in the light of the criticisms that he intends to level against the present administration without expressing in a purely theoretical way his political ideas.

Mr. Beaule: Mr. Chairman, I was just coming to that. I only wanted to state certain facts for the benefit of those who say that the Social Credit philosophy is a utopia. I wanted to refer you to Einstein. Einstein was not a utopian. He wrote this book himself and I suggest that those who are anxious to get information on the subject should buy this book and peruse it.

An hon. Member: You are advertising.

Mr. Beaule: Einstein's reputation does not need advertising.

Now, Mr. Chairman, we have to face serious economic problems. As I said a little while ago the government has been too slow in trying to solve the unemployment problem, this crucial problem which is hanging over us today.

I would have expected the Minister of Labour, with the support of the government, to bring forward a program that could alleviate the hardship of our people.

As the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Olson) said yesterday, we will therefore almost have to deliver an ultimatum to the government. So, if the government does not come forward next month with concrete measures, with a positive policy, a policy for the distribution of our production in Canada, we shall have to refuse passing the budget estimates and to take our responsibilities. Then, the Canadian people will know that we have no longer confidence in the government which they elected on June 18, and they will be able to make a decision.

Make no mistake about it, if the next budget does not bring forward the measures we are asking, we shall have to refuse voting the estimates.

Mr. Laniel: Mr. Chairman, after three months of session and as we are getting near the Christmas adjournment, I thought I would take a few minutes to set out the policy which the Conservative government has followed since it came into power and to try and assess what it is doing at present.

It is impossible for me to deal with all subjects and examine them fully. But I shall try to express the views of the people in general about the Conservative team and its administrative incompetence.

It is common knowledge, Mr. Chairman, that judgment was passed a long time ago, that is on June 18 last, and that since then, the Conservatives have been enjoying a suspended sentence which will be passed at the next election, the one that will be induced by my colleague.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) is quite aware of it, and that is why he is putting off going to the country, preferring instead to act in complicity, now with the Social Credit party mostly, now with the New Democratic party.

It is shameful all the same, Mr. Chairman, to act in collusion with a political party which merely wants to lead our country to ruin, without having the courage to enlighten the people adequately on its funny money policy, its system of dividends for everyone, as long as the money printing machine can go on working. The stories about the monkey in the banana tree, the worm in the apple and the rabbit running in the hollow tree trunk raised a good laugh. It was funny to hear about the stomach of the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Gregoire) and of the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher), whose head should roll for the sake of better planning as far as the leader of the New Democratic party, the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas) is concerned.

Believe me, I would not object to that head rolling, especially because of the inconsiderate statements made occasionally by the hon. member for Port Arthur about French Canadians.

Do you think those people are serious? Is the Prime Minister himself serious? The Canadian people are surely not being fooled. The Social Crediters must hide their real selves under the cloak of nationalism in order to secure the acceptance of a small group of people, who soon realized the mistake they had made on June 18, while the government seems to be living behind a smoke screen, that colossal hoax which is the preamble to the coming disappearance of the Conservative party, which will never succeed in administering our country properly with its day-to-day policy and its lack of foresight.

I would never pretend that this government has done nothing for the past five years. It has established its own records and when I say records I mean record deficits, record unemployment, record policy reversals, record devaluation, record tax surcharges, record tight money, etc.

An hon. Member: Of what government are you talking, please?

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I should like to point out that the hon. member who has the floor should not be subject to interjections and that he is entitled to make known his views about the present administration.

Mr. Valade: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman. I thought that the hon. member was referring to the provincial administration of Mr. Lesage.

The Chairman: I declare this question irrelevant to the debate.

Mr. Laniel: Mr. Chairman, I could say by the way to the hon. member for St. Mary (Mr. Valade) that Mr. Lesage has proven himself at the last provincial election.

However it must be admitted that the Conservative government has nevertheless succeeded in doing certain things; it has improved certain pieces of legislation, especially social security legislation and legislation relating to short term projects. It had much trouble in solving major problems: its economic policy was never clear. Today it betrays its action in the Coyne affair, which was for the Conservatives a personality conflict and a stubbornness in not admitting their bad administration. The government has always tried to avoid its responsibilities; it laughs at the Liberals' economic planning, when the only alternative it has to offer is the appointment of commissions—another of its records.

Mr. Chairman, it seems they are afraid of keeping up with the times; they fear evolution and change; in fact they are more and more conservative. The Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) went to London; he lamented and his general attitude was not cheering for the Canadian people, and less so for the English people. Has he thought of the consequences that would result from a rejection of Great Britain's entry into the common market? What benefits would we gain from a weakened Great Britain, isolated from the west European bloc?

What about the statement by the secretary of state for commonwealth relations, published in the Toronto Telegram of September 17, 1962, which reads as follows:

> While Australia and New Zealand were practical and helpful in looking for means of improving common market conditions to the commonwealth, Canada was uncompromising.

Great Britain's purpose is quite clear. If she succeeds in associating with Europe, that will only strengthen the free world and help to offset the communist empire.

Why did the government not consider seriously the observations of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) who, on February 28, 1961, urged the Prime Minister to face the problem and suggested closer economic ties with the United States and other free nations to provide for negotiations in order to possibly participate in or even take advantage of the experience of the common market.

Mr. Chairman, what do the people think of the austerity program enforced immediately after the last election and which brought about credit restriction and custom surcharges? Obviously, the government said nothing to the Canadian people about the foreign exchange situation during the election campaign. The then minister of finance pretended it was only during the third week of June that the situation took a turn for the worse, while the Prime Minister stated that it is only on June 15, 16 and 17 that losses became larger. Well, according to figures supplied by the government on October 26, losses amounted to $50 million on May 31, June 1 and June 2; a loss of $17.4 million on June 13; a loss of $35.2 million on June 12 and another loss of $17 million on June 14, for a total of $70 million for the three days preceding the T.V. broadcast where the Prime Minister stated that everything was rosy in the country and that the Canadian economy was booming. And to think that later on, it was said that the Liberal party was responsible for that situation and our party was blamed for certain statements made during the election campaign which were said to have been disastrous for the Canadian economy. What a joke.

That is not all, Mr. Chairman. Is it not unthinkable that those surcharges were imposed by order in council without approval by parliament and that they have kept on levying them for almost six months while denying parliament the right to decide whether those additional taxes were justified or not?

It was the Prime Minister's duty to convene parliament as soon as possible, as suggested by the Leader of the Opposition, in order to inform the house of all the facts instead of playing hide-and-seek even in the speech from the throne.

Not only has the government thus levied taxes by means of import surcharges, but it has collected taxes in the most unfair way of all, by means of tariff increases. Such taxes, more than any other, affect the average man, the housekeeper that is, those who are least able to bear the load. This has raised the cost of living to an all-time high. We can but rejoice at the latest alleviations recently announced by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Nowlan) and I am convinced that all members of this house await the day when all surcharges will be removed and credit restrictions reduced to a minimum.

I do not want to overlook the recent salary "un-freeze" concerning 60,000 federal civil servants and I express the hope that the government will also consider the situation in which the other government employees, who have not benefited from those increases, find themselves. There again, the government has treated the civil servants unfairly by making them pay a larger share of the austerity program than the other Canadians, through a decision which was certainly not in keeping with the procedure established under the Civil Service Act. We have a government which always does too little too late, a fact that is borne out even by the measures it has introduced in the house since the beginning of this session.

A farm credit bill was put before us. But what will the eastern farmers get out of it? Nothing new, except an increase in the number of loans. Why did the government not think of bringing back up to $3 the subsidy on hogs, which had been reduced to $2 following the restrictive measures imposed by the Conservative government? During the debate on that bill, it was suggested that grain elevators be built along the St. Lawrence river to enable western farmers to sell their feed grain directly to eastern farmers. I hope the Minister of Agriculture will not overlook these suggestions.

It is a good thing that the Quebec government is most interested in farm problems because we are too often forgotten when federal legislation is passed. Agriculture is a basic element of our economy and things must be set straight. Our farmers have to be helped and directed by legislation which will deal with the whole agricultural problem. A.R.D.A. has been passed but surprisingly enough no agreement has been made with the provinces even though $50 million have been voted for that purpose. And why this enormous increase in the sale of margarine under a Conservative government, an increase which is the cause of a sharp decline in the sale of butter, which works against eastern farmers.

Mr. Vincent: Would the hon. member allow me a question?

Mr. Laniel: At the end of my remarks.

Are the farmers happy with the department's latest regulations concerning losses due to animals suffering from brucellosis and tuberculosis? Ask them. This matter, it seems to me, is just as important as crop failures in other parts of the country. New impetus should be given to the measures taken to improve farming and to provide farmers with new sources of income. Support prices for agricultural products should be more effective and farmers should be helped to set up more efficient co-operatives and marketing boards.

Mr. Chairman, the house has passed legislation concerning exports credit insurance but is that sufficient to cope with the problems of our industries, to restore our balance of payments and to eliminate unemployment?

Three years ago, a pharmaceutical firm had to close down its plant in my riding, after having invested thousands of dollars in it. A new plant was established in Japan because our laws did not provide enough protection and left them no other alternative.

Like many other places in the province of Quebec, we have a textile industry whose problems are so serious that recently it had to reduce the hours of work of its employees. The textile industry has been the industrial backbone of many Quebec municipalities but what is being done to protect it against dumping and foreign competition?

The Canadian Garment Manufacturers' Association issued a statement this year to the effect that the importation of Japanese textiles would rob 10,000 Canadians of their jobs. I am not necessarily against Japanese exports to Canada, but I believe there should be a more equitable spread between the various imported products, thus avoiding the ruin of an industry, which, in my opinion, has done a great deal by itself in order to solve its problems and increase its production potential.

Mr. Chairman, at this point I would like to suggest to the government an alternative way of fighting unemployment which has plagued the nation since 1958; this would also promote education. I refer to the winter works program which I consider as a short term solution, but of which we must take as much advantage as we can until we see an improvement in the economic conditions. I consider that the terms of the bill should be widened in order to include school boards thereby endowing this measure with a greater degree of efficiency. However, I wish to point out, since I am dealing with the winter works program, and the Conservative government is happy with this program, that in the province of Quebec, under the leadership of Hon. Jean Lesage our government has placed this act within reach of our municipalities by contributing 40 per cent of the labour costs, thereby increasing the government's share to 90 per cent.

Mr. Chairman, I wish to request the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) to speed up the action for the choice of a national flag and other national symbols if he does not want this matter on which a great deal has been said in the past few years, to be settled by a Liberal government.

I consider that those symbols are most important for Canadian unity, not only because they will stand as symbols of our national pride but mainly because they are the gateway to a serious study of other more vital problems for the improvement of federalism based on co-operation, and respect for the rights of all.

When our two ethnic groups raise proudly a distinctive emblem and sing heartily the same officially recognized national anthem, I sincerely believe that a closer relationship will broaden the minds of all Canadians in regard to bilingualism, understanding and good relations between the province of Quebec and the rest of Canada.

The Gordon affair is an unfortunate happening, not because of the loud demonstrations or public statements it has brought about, because, personally, I am in favour of them and I think that the claims of the French Canadians are justified, but it is unfortunate because all English Canadians, even Mr. Gordon, do not understand us as they would like us to understand them. It may be due to a small number of people who are disappearing, but they are vocal in too many quarters. We, the representatives of the people, must try to promote in our own riding and our own province the great understanding that should exist A mari usque ad mare.

Mr. Vincent: Mr. Chairman, I wish to direct a question to the hon. member for Beauharnois-Salaberry.

He said a while ago that no agreement had been reached by the provinces under the Agricultural Rehabilitation and Development Act. Can he tell me if the authorities of the province of Quebec signed an agreement with the federal government under that act? If so, why? If not, for what reason?

Mr. Laniel: Mr. Chairman, the agreement may have been reached effectively, but a board has not been set up to apply the provisions of the act.

Mr. Vincent: What does the hon. member think of the statement made by Mr. Lesage on October 19, 1962?

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I had recognized the hon. member for Nicolet-Yamaska.

Mr. Vincent: Mr. Chairman, I only wanted to ask the hon. member for Beauharnois-Salaberry a question.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, before interim supply is passed, I would like to make a few remarks concerning the way money paid by Canadian taxpayers is spent.

We must not overlook the fact that the credits we are asked to vote today come primarily from our own pockets. That money comes from the people. It is taxpayers' money that we are asked to spend. It comes from the taxes we pay. Mr. Chairman, I wish to protest today against that practice which was used not so long ago to spend the people's money, the money which has been taken from the taxpayers' pockets.

In fact, seven or eight years ago, the federal government established the Canada council, giving it $100 million. This money came from our taxes. And the council was told to invest that money and to use the income to help deserving groups.

So, public funds were given to the Canada council.

Here is what the council did with that money. It is precisely against those investments that I protest. Amongst other things, it made seven loans to the Industrial Acceptance Corporation, one of which was granted on April 9 last on a promissory note for $300,000 at 3½ per cent. The Industrial Acceptance Corporation has to pay only 3½ per cent interest while it charges Canadians who borrow that money which comes from their own pockets, 30 per cent.

In other words, Mr. Chairman, the government takes money out of my pocket to lend it to a finance company at 3½ per cent interest, and the same company lends back to me the same money which comes from my pocket and charges me 30 per cent for this service. We on this side of the house protest against such a practice. I had to pay the Industrial Acceptance Corporation 32 per cent for financing my car and yet that company pays only 3½ per cent interest on a loan which was granted thanks to the income tax I pay.

Mr. Chairman, I want to protest against such facts.

And now, let us consider the list of directors of the Industrial Acceptance Corporation. We notice there former ministers of the Liberal government from 1945 to 1957 who voted for the act providing for a $100 million payment to the Canada council—

Mr. Ricard: Who?

Mr. Gregoire: —and who can now obtain loans from that very Canada council.

Mr. Ricard: Name them.

Mr. Gregoire: Needless to name them. Let them go to the companies and see for themselves. I do not want to make personal remarks but there are former ministers who established that council and who are now using that money; they have given $100 million to the Canada council from which they borrow at 3.5 per cent interest and lend me money at 32 per cent interest because they are directors of the Industrial Acceptance Corporation.

That is a shame, Mr. Chairman, a shocking state of affairs which requires that the government investigate without delay and find out where the public money is invested.

And at the same time, Mr. Chairman, the present government is borrowing money on the commercial market and issuing bonds at 5.5 or 5 per cent interest whereas its money is being loaned to finance companies at 3.5 per cent.

I shall name other companies, Mr. Chairman. The Industrial Acceptance Corporation has in fact seven different loans for more than $1.5 million. Let us not forget that they lend us that same money at 32 per cent.

An hon. Member: In what year?

Mr. Gregoire: Miron Limited is another company that got a loan. A director of Miron Limited was formerly a member of the Liberal government and the same man is a director of the Industrial Acceptance Corporation.

I could point out several other companies whose president or director is the same man and also one of those who established the Canada council.

(Text):

Mr. Scott: The hon. member has said that members of the late Liberal cabinet are directors of these companies. So far he has not shown us he is able to give us the names of these people. Can he do so?

Mr. Gregoire: I have the names and I can name them.

(Translation):

Mr. Chairman, I personally approached the federal office which controls finance companies here in Ottawa to get some information. I do not care to give names. Just look up the list of directors of the Industrial Acceptance Corporation, and you will see. You will find the names of former cabinet members. You will know whom I mean.

The same applies to Miron Ltd.

If you want any names, Mr. Chairman, I can give them to you: the former prime minister of Canada, the Right Hon. Mr. St. Laurent, director of the Industrial Acceptance Corporation, is among those who—when he was prime minister—voted $100 million to be paid to the Canada council. He is just one of them. He is also a director of Miron Limited.

Now, there is Traders' Finance, with another loan at 5¾ per cent. Traders' Finance is a company which finances motor car purchases at 24 per cent.

Mr. Chairman, what I think is shameful is somebody taking my money and lending it at 5 per cent or 3½ per cent to some finance company, so that when I want to finance my car, I am lent my own money at 24 per cent interest.

That is unacceptable, and calls for a general protest. Therefore, I shall ask for an investigation on the use of the people's money levied in the form of taxes. I think this government might investigate this matter.

I also see here the Union Acceptance Company. It is strange, Mr. Chairman, that all finance companies which borrow money from the government, take unfair advantage of the people, causing much distress because of the excessive interest rate they charge. And they do this with our own money. This is intolerable.

I might also mention other insurance companies, loan companies and finance companies.

The Quebec Natural Gas Company even borrowed $475,000 at 5¾ per cent interest, while the federal government has to issue bonds. Those bonds are quite difficult to sell and the government has to pay a high interest rate.

Mr. Chairman, what would you think of an individual having $5,000 who would loan that sum at 3 per cent interest to his neighbour while borrowing from another neighbour at 6 per cent? What would you think of such a man? You would say: "It is time for him to put his business in order". It is also high time that the government put some order in its finance business, if it does not want to carry on with a perpetual deficit, as has been the case for too long a time.

Mr. Chairman, I would also like to mention the questions I asked the other day in the house. I tried to get them answered, more particularly with regard to the C.N.R., its board of directors and its management. I failed to get any answer.

At that time, Mr. Speaker had replied that it was not the right time for putting grievances forward in the house, and that is why I am coming back to the point today.

Mr. Chairman, when we look at all that happens in the Canadian National Railways at this time, nobody can be very much surprised to see that this crown corporation does not want to answer.

For instance, everyone knows that the Canadian National Railways operate a trucking business in the province of Quebec, without having a license from the transport control board; in fact they are being prosecuted by that board. The transport commissioners in Ottawa tell us: "Well, we are waiting for the courts to decide."

I do not want to labour the point, Mr. Chairman. However, it is somehow like a bank thief who would say. "I shall steal and if I am caught, it will be too bad. If I am not caught, I shall go on."

That is exactly what the C.N.R. is doing at present in the field of trucking in the province of Quebec. While all other operators have to obtain a licence from the transport board to be able to start their business, the C.N.R. is launching its operations right now and awaits prosecution. Obviously, this company is saying: "We shall wait for two years until judgment is rendered".

This is similar to someone committing a crime and awaiting the results, while saying: "Too bad if I get caught". This is the situation.

May I call it five o'clock, Mr. Chairman, and continue at the next sitting?

(Text):

The Deputy Chairman: Order. In order that the house may proceed to the consideration of private members' business, pursuant to section 8 of standing order 15, it is my duty to rise and report progress and request leave to sit again later this day or at the next sitting of the house, as the case may be.

Progress reported.

INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS

AMENDMENTS REVISING MEDIATION AND CONCILIATION PROCESSES, ETC.

On the order:

Second reading of Bill No. C-23, to amend the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act —Mr. Howard.

Mr. Peters: Stand.

Mr. Churchill: Stand.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Other hon. members have bills, and is there any reason why a public bill should keep its priority when the hon. member is not here to proceed with it?

Mr. Speaker: At the government's request the bill may stand; that has been the accepted practice. We will call the next item.

SENATE AND HOUSE OF COMMONS ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING ELIGIBILITY OF MINISTERS

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-24, to amend the Senate and House of Commons Act.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this is a very simple bill. It would put into the Senate and House of Commons Act as a new subsection the following words:

No person who is a director of a company incorporated under the Companies Act or under any other public general act of Canada, or incorporated by a local or private act of Canada, shall be eligible to be a member of the Queen's privy council for Canada and a minister of the crown.

When I had the privilege of introducing this bill on October 1 I said by way of explanation that the effect of the bill is to establish by law what is now recognized in practice. As hon. members know, it has long been a subject of concern that two things be maintained, (1) the independence of parliament and (2) the avoidance of conflict of interest. There are a number of provisions in the Senate and House of Commons Act and in other pieces of legislation which aim to secure the independence of parliament and the independence of members of parliament from undue influences. But we also recognize that it is important that so far as cabinet ministers are concerned there be no conflict of interest between their public responsibilities and any private duties or obligations.

During the regimes of the Right Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King and the Right Hon. Louis St. Laurent there was considerable interest in this subject. It is well known that both of these former prime ministers requested members who joined their cabinets to relinquish directorships of companies in so far as it was possible, but he did not require them to do so. It is a matter of record—this can be found by consulting various sessional papers that were brought down a number of times in response to motions of mine—that most members of the cabinet of the last two prime ministers who had directorships resigned them on becoming members of those cabinets. However, this was not in those days a universal practice. During the last few years of the late Liberal government there was an outstanding case of a minister of that cabinet holding the directorship of a company, and many of us on the floor of the house felt there was a conflict of interest. We endeavoured to persuade the government of that day that that minister should either resign from the cabinet or resign his directorship. We did not win the point at that time, but at any rate the public did come to realize that the point we were making was valid.

I have to say quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, that the present Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) seems to have accepted this contention. Naturally, we outside the cabinet do not know all the secrets of what goes on inside the cabinet; we do not even know the secrets involved in getting appointments to the cabinet. But it is our general and public understanding that the present Prime Minister requires of anyone who would become a member of his cabinet that he resign any directorships he has. I understand, for example, that one of the most recent appointees to the cabinet—who does not happen to have a seat in this House of Commons—resigned a long list of such directorships and did so before he became a member of the cabinet. I placed on the order paper not long ago a series of questions similar to questions I put on the order paper in previous years, to which answers were given that make it clear that no member of the present cabinet is, or has been since becoming a member of the cabinet, a director of any company as defined in the new subclause which I think should be written into the Senate and House of Commons Act.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, it is not necessary for me to argue for the acceptance of the principle contained in this bill, as I had to do when the Liberal government was in power and had in the cabinet at least one minister who was a director of a company. But it seems to me that now that this has been accepted as a recognized principle of practice we should write it into the law. I suggest that this is in the same category as the requirement that members of parliament shall not hold any office of emolument under the crown, or that members of parliament, whether they are private members or cabinet ministers, shall not be involved in any business relations with the government. As I say, Mr. Speaker, there are a number of other requirements of that nature protecting the independence of parliament. I think this same procedure should now be followed with regard to the position of cabinet ministers. As I have already said, I do not have to argue with this present government that cabinet ministers should not be directors; the present Prime Minister has accepted that. But it seems to me we should write into the law what is now practice, and we should make it clear that any future government, no matter what party it might be, will have to continue the practice that is now being followed.

I do not know whether the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Gregoire) in the remarks he made just before five o'clock in another debate was seeking to set the stage for the discussion of my bill. At any rate, some of the remarks he made at that time were certainly relevant to my suggestion that it would be a good idea now to make this kind of protection for the future. I am free to admit that, so far as I am concerned this bill of mine does not go far enough. Men can resign from directorships in companies and corporations and still have a fairly strong personal interest in those companies. However, I do not yet know of any way, so long as we have the present kind of economic system, by which we can compel these men to divest themselves completely of their connections, although it is a fact that in the United States the law goes much further than is the case with respect to this bill.

In that connection may I say this. We feel that the affairs of our country should be run by people with the interests of the country at heart, and that this situation will come about only when we have a government made up of people drawn from all walks of life, particularly with representatives of the working people, the farmers, the consumers and those engaged at the ordinary level in the life of our country. I may say quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, that is why some of us have tried to organize in this country the kind of party of which we in this corner are members and for whose progress we are working for all we are worth. However, under conditions as they are it seems to me that this is perhaps as far as we can ask this house to go. However, we certainly feel that the house should go at least this far.

[Mr. Knowles.]

I therefore have pleasure, Mr. Speaker, in moving the second reading of this bill the effect of which would be to provide that no directors of Canadian companies shall be eligible as ministers of the crown. In view of the fact that this is the practice now being followed by the government I dare to hope that the government might accept and support this bill.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Parliamentary Secretary to the Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I doubt that anyone in the house would quarrel with the principle which the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) has sought to clothe with legal words in order to make it effective. However, the point on which I find myself in most agreement with him is when he says he had to admit he had experienced the utmost difficulty in attempting, if I might paraphrase his words, to find a legal bill or a legal vehicle which would carry forward into actual practice the thought which he has expressed. I wish to deal with the bill on a technical basis. I am going to deal with it on broader principle later on.

On the technical wording of the amendment which is proposed by this bill I think prima facie there are certain obvious defects which must appear to those who examine it. It reads as follows:

> No person who is a director of a company incorporated under the Companies Act or under any other public general act of Canada, or incorporated by a local or private act of Canada, shall be eligible to be a member of the Queen's privy council for Canada and a minister of the crown.

I refer particularly to these last lines, "to be a member of the Queen's privy council for Canada and a minister of the crown". I am assuming that, in order to be a minister of the crown, you must be a member of the Queen's privy council and that these are interchangeable words. If that is so, while the word "and"—and I hope the hon. member is following me—is usually conjunctive, I wonder if it would have that interpretation here. I suggest that the words "a member of the Queen's privy council" must be regarded as surplusage unless the word "and" is interpreted to mean "or". I can take no other meaning from it. If this be the case you would then have this situation, and this is the sort of thing which arises when legislation of this kind is drafted to serve a purpose and is subjected to the attacks which most legislation at one time or another is at least considered to be eligible for. You would have a situation where there are, I think, according to the last returns, approximately 86 or 87 members of the Queen's privy council, including those who are ministers of the crown. If this amendment has the meaning I take it to have, or could very easily have, you would then have a situation where those who were at one time ministers of the crown and have ceased to be such, or those who have been appointed for other reasons—and there are some very distinguished names which appear on this list—would come under the sanctions of this particular amendment. For example, I notice the name of a former prime minister, namely Mr. St. Laurent and Hon. Robert Winters who obviously, or at least apparently, are not now interested in the public life of this country. I use the word "apparently" with deliberation.

Mr. Knowles: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Baldwin: Surely.

Mr. Knowles: Is it not a fact that each of the gentlemen to whom the hon. member has referred is a member of the Queen's privy council and will be one for the rest of his life, but that he is not both a member of the Queen's privy council and a minister of the crown?

Mr. Baldwin: As I say, this is begging the question. You go back to what would be considered to be a reasonable interpretation. I submit that it is quite reasonable for the word "and" to be construed as "or" in this particular case. If I am correct in this suggestion, then a member of the Queen's privy council but not a minister of the crown would be subject to the provisions of this bill.

Then there is a restriction, of course, as there necessarily must be, to a company incorporated under the local or private acts of Canada or public general acts of Canada. I do not know whether there could be an evasion. I am considering the matter. Quite possibly there could be an evasion of the spirit of the principle which the hon. member has in mind by being a director of a provincial company, a situation which might still bring up this question of conflict of interest just as frequently and just as substantially as if the minister of the crown were a director of a company incorporated under an act of Canada. This would rule out those who might hold directorships in companies incorporated under an act of Canada and of a charitable or community nature. I am not in a position to indicate whether there are or might be any. However, I think it is quite conceivable that the board wording which the hon. member has seen fit to use here could prevent people of that description from being a minister of the crown.

Before I go on to deal with the larger aspects of the proposition and to give my views as to why I do not think this particular amendment will serve the purpose which the hon. member has in mind, I think I should put on the record the position which has been taken by this government. The hon. member was good enough to refer to it. I think we can go back prior to 1959. In the debates of 1956, as recorded at page 5539, I find there was at that time a debate which took place in connection with the review of the estimates of the Department of Defence Production. The point at issue there was whether or not Mr. Howe, because of his position as an executor of the estate of Sir James Dunn, was in a position where the conflict of interest principle applied. I notice these comments by the Prime Minister on June 29, 1956, as found on page 5539 of Hansard:

> I began by a reference that I believe summarizes the general attitude of parliaments in the British tradition to the need for ministers of the crown at all times to act in such a way that their conduct is in keeping with the proprieties of parliamentary traditions, and also in their conduct at all times to appear to keep within the limitations that the traditions of the past have imposed upon all who hold the high and honourable position of minister of the crown.

There then follows a quotation from a statement made by Sir Winston Churchill who at the time he made the statement was prime minister of the United Kingdom.

> It is a principle of public life that ministers must so order their affairs that no conflict arises, or appears to arise, between their private interests and their public duties.

After the government changed in 1957 the principle which had been enunciated was repeated on at least two occasions by the right hon. gentleman who is now Prime Minister. I refer first to Hansard for 1960-61, page 6599, where the Prime Minister said in response to a question:

> Mr. Speaker, the first act of the present government when it came into power was to ensure that no minister in the cabinet would hold a portfolio while at the same time having a position as a director of any company, whether public or private. That was to prevent the possibility of there being any connection between the award of contracts and the relationship of a minister to a company which might be in receipt of a contract.
>
> I can only say in answer to the hon. member what I said the other day, that at no time did I ever hear directly or indirectly of anything which would have supported the suggestions that were made the other day during the course of the royal commission hearing. I can only say that we took measures we had advocated through the years, that ministers should not be connected in any way with corporations. That was a course we felt was necessary in order to preserve and maintain the integrity not only of ministers but also of the administration.

As found on page 7037 of Hansard for the same session the Prime Minister again answered a question in these words:

Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. gentleman answered his own question when he quoted what I said, namely that the ministers were asked to remove themselves as directors of companies. The hon. gentleman realizes that, as an eleemosynary or philanthropic organization, a hospital organization does not come within the category of companies. I am surprised that he is so shocked that the Parliamentary Guide so records the fact after the experience we had through the years of ministers of the crown being directors of companies that were dealing with the previous government.

That was the position being taken before this party formed the government and it was the consistent position adopted afterwards, a position which is not the same, as was mentioned by the Prime Minister, as that taken by the previous government. There is a noticeable distinction, and I find that nowhere is that better expressed than in two statements made by Mr. St. Laurent when as prime minister he was participating in a debate on May 12, 1955, and said, as found at page 3690 of Hansard, in response to a question asked by the present Prime Minister:

That is a matter about which I inquired before I became a member of the government, and I was told there was no rule of law or even traditional practice that required anyone who accepted such responsibilities to sever any previous connections he might have had. I was told that was something for each individual to consider in respect of his own position, and he might feel that it was desirable to sever all connections. In fact I felt that it was desirable to sever all such connections to avoid occasions for the kind of criticism—which I feel is not justified—

He referred to the criticism then being directed against one of the ministers. He later repeated this same comment and went on to say that this was a suggestion which had been made to him by Mr. Mackenzie King. I think there is a plain distinction there. The present Prime Minister has laid it down in the position he takes, which is consistent with that he took before 1957, that ministers of the crown should divest themselves of directorships. The position of the official opposition, as expressed in 1955 when they formed the government, was that this was something for each individual minister to consider according to his own views and the dictates of his own conscience.

There is another great error which I think has crept into the reasoning of the hon. member in his attempt to obtain adherence to this principle by means of legislation. I have been engaged for a great many years in the study and practice of law, in fact since I began as a student at the age of 17. While it is essential and necessary from time to time to amend the law in order to try to obtain needed and necessary reforms and changes in legislation to meet the exigencies of the day, where there is, as in this country, an adherence to the common law system, a tradition of constitutional practice and an opportunity to build up a body of good, sound practice, I have come to the conclusion after all these years it is better to let this matter be dealt with in that way and to let it be molded and changed according to the changes in day to day and year to year requirements rather than embodying it in legislation which, as the hon. member has admitted, simply cannot meet the varying situations it must meet in order for his requirements to be completely served. I think this is a good illustration of this particular viewpoint.

There is a legal principle known to members of my profession that the mention of the one is the exclusion of the other. It seems to me that when the hon. member is attempting to incorporate this principle imperfectly in the form of legislation he is in effect saying that this matter will now be in statutory form, that within the statute will be contained the four corners of what he considers to be necessary to meet the problem of conflict of interest and that from now on nothing else goes. This is a very reasonable interpretation which could be made if this amendment to the Senate and House of Commons Act should become law. I think we would be left in that position.

It seems to me it is better to leave things as they are in view of the fact that the government has now adopted this principle. While I cannot offer any hope to hon. gentlemen opposite with respect to when they may cross the floor and occupy the positions of the government, I suppose that some day Liberals yet unborn will come here and form a Liberal government. But when this does happen I think they will then find enshrined and embodied in the constitutional practice of this country the system advocated and put into practice by the Prime Minister, and a principle which cannot then be altered. Having in mind the fact that you may have to envisage a situation where you would be dealing with more than just a directorship in which there might be a conflict of interest, I feel that this situation should be covered by our body of constitutional jurisprudence.

For example, in conducting a little research on this subject I find that in 1918, I believe it was, there was an attempt to cover this situation. At that time a great many members of parliament were directors of companies which had engaged in contractual relationships with the government and some members felt something should be done to remedy the situation. A resolution was offered for the purpose of dealing with it. While there is, of course, a difference between an attempt to prevent a member of parliament from being a director and preventing a minister of the crown from being a director, nevertheless I read this to indicate to hon. members the type of language which was considered essential at that time to meet the situation.

The resolution was to disqualify any member during the time he is a director of or holds, either directly or indirectly, a controlling interest in any incorporated company from having a contract or agreement with the government, express or implied. Now, legislation framed in those words might come closer to meeting the situation, but it seems to me there could still be other combinations of facts which might give rise to a conflict of interests. It is my submission we have now made substantial progress towards covering the situation and I think the sensible thing to do would be to leave the matter open to become just as much a matter of constitutional practice as is responsible government.

Mr. Knowles: Would the hon. member permit a question? Would the hon. member, then, apply the same principle to the sections of the Senate and House of Commons Act that relate to the independence of the house? Would he take those sections out of the act and leave that matter open? In other words, I am asking, why not treat cabinet ministers the same way members are treated by writing the appropriate requirements into the law?

Mr. Baldwin: I am afraid I would not want to answer that without reading the particular sections. I think the hon. member and I might have a very interesting philosophic dissertation about it, and I shall be glad to meet him and discuss it with him.

Mr. Hubert Badanai (Fort William): In rising to support this bill, I might point out that it is based on a well founded tradition of this house. The parliamentary secretary to the Prime Minister (Mr. Baldwin) referred to an occurrence in 1918. I submit that one of the earliest and certainly one of the clearest opinions of the principle involved in this bill was once given by a prime minister of Great Britain nearly 50 years ago. The Right Hon. Herbert Asquith, speaking in the British House of Commons during a debate said, and I quote:

> Ministers ought not to enter into any transaction whereby their private pecuniary interest might, even conceivably, come into conflict with their public duty. . .Again, no minister is justified under any circumstances in using official information, information that has come to him as a minister, for his own private profit or for that of his friends . . . Again, no minister ought to accept from persons who are in negotiation with or seeking to enter into contractual or proprietary or pecuniary relations with the state any kind of favour.

Now, what the bill is attempting to achieve is to incorporate into the law a principle which is usually recognized in practice. I realize that there have been times when this practice, unfortunately, has been ignored. However, I think the principle of the bill is sound and I do not wish to prolong the debate unnecessarily because this would prevent the passage of timely legislation about which there should be no objection from any quarter of the house.

With all due respect to the parliamentary secretary, I may say that his chief objection to the bill is the reference to members of the privy council who are no longer members of parliament, and who may be affected. As a matter of fact, this bill does not envisage any such restrictions at all. I should like also to bring to the attention of this house a possible further application of this principle, one that has particular importance today because of the widespread personal financial interest in corporations with wide ramifications in almost every phase of industry and business.

All governments today are connected in one way or another with big business. The actions and decisions of the federal government have a continuing impact on all sectors of the economy. This is one factor that was not present when the rule pertaining to ministers having conflicting interest was originally drafted. At this point I should like to suggest a further development of this principle by providing that for a period of one year an ex-minister may not hold a directorship in a publicly owned corporation.

Any day now the Prime Minister may stumble across his February, 1958, dissolution speech and rediscover his conclusion that Canada cannot be governed very well by a minority government. If this happens, then presumably he will call an election. One result of that election conceivably might be that the 22 present cabinet ministers would find themselves without their ministerial responsibilities. No doubt they would find other work, and more lucrative work. Some of them might be asked to serve on the boards of corporations. By virtue of the fact they held positions as ministers of the crown they would naturally have gained knowledge that would be invaluable to the operation of industries of various types. These ex-ministers could use their acquired knowledge to the great advantage of the private corporations. It is with the possibility of this development in mind that I make the suggestion that the rule of obligation, as we now understand it and as it is embodied in this bill, be extended beyond the actual date when a minister ceases to hold a cabinet position and that he be barred from holding a directorship for a period of one year.

I should like to point out, Mr. Speaker, that I do not wish to imply present ministers would take advantage in any way of such a situation. Indeed, I do not wish to cast any reflection on any members of the present cabinet. Sir Winston Churchill, on February 25, 1952 as recorded on page 702 of the British Hansard, had this to say:

> It is a principle of public life that ministers must so order their affairs that no conflict arises or appears to arise between their private interests and their public duties.

What I am suggesting, Mr. Speaker, is that this principle should apply for a reasonable period of time after a cabinet minister leaves office in order to avoid the appearance that his private interests are in conflict with his past public duties. This need not take legislative form but could become, rather, a part of the code of ethics which, although unwritten, governs the role of the executive under our parliamentary system.

This bill contains no controversial objectives. It is simply a confirmation of a practice which ministers generally have adhered to, and if approval of the bill will do away once and for all with possible situations embarrassing to this and future governments then I urge unanimous approval for it, and in so doing wish to commend the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre for introducing it.

(Translation):

Mr. Lucien Plourde (Quebec West): Mr. Speaker, I will only say a few words because I am in favour of this bill.

However, I would like to suggest to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) that he should have included in his bill the bank directors.

(Text):

Mr. Knowles: They are included.

(Translation):

Mr. Plourde: To me, this point is very important.

So as not to waste time, we should pass this bill immediately. It would be appropriate to support it and pass it, so as to eliminate all those who could creep into these agencies or find, as substitutes, somebody who would only be concerned with their private interests. It is therefore only fair and reasonable that we pass this bill without delay.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

(Text):

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I observe the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre attempting to try to close the debate, and I must say I sympathize with his effort, but we cannot proceed with this measure without giving it more careful examination. I feel that while in principle it is a very good bill there are a great many deficiencies in it. To begin with, the parliamentary secretary pointed out one of the difficulties, and that is in making an act of parliament or in defining a situation we sometimes lose the spirit of what is intended.

As the sponsor of the bill has said, the present government and members of the cabinet have resigned directorships and have carried out in effect the spirit of the bill; but it is open to question whether the bill as worded is broad enough to cover many of the situations that exist even now. I would like to mention some of these loopholes, so that the bill might be altered before it is passed.

The first and major problem I see is the lack of inclusion of provincially incorporated companies. The bill itself is quite clear that it can only apply to acts of the parliament of Canada; but most of the corporations operating within provinces are incorporated by provincial charter. Therefore the exclusion of directors of provincial corporations is a basic exclusion and to that extent the bill should be amended. It has a wide open clause which could easily be avoided by a person who is a director of a provincial company.

There are several other difficulties. As has already been pointed out, non-profit making corporations are also governed by directors, and they should also be covered. I do not think that directors of fraternal organizations and other such philanthropic corporations should be required to resign their directorships, and to that extent the term "director of a company" is too broad.

In addition to these generalities there are a good many ways by which an individual who wanted to get around the spirit of the bill could do so. There is no mention in it of the wives of directors, and the possibility of directorships being carried on in effect by the party involved but actually being in the name of his wife or a member of his family.

Another comparison should be made in connection with shareholders, and if we consider what happens in other countries we find that shareholders in large corporations which deal with governments are required to divest themselves of their shares before taking cabinet posts. This is particularly true in the United States where many cabinet ministers have been shareholders in large motor corporations and have had to divest themselves completely of their shares, at very great personal loss, in order to take up duties as cabinet ministers. Whether or not the bill should be extended that far I am not prepared to say at the moment, but it is something that should be carefully considered.

Then there is always the possibility of a person holding stock in a company in trust, in the name of some other person, and there is also the situation of a director or shareholder in a controlling company which exercises control over a subsidiary. I am not suggesting that any ministers of the crown would adopt these methods I have mentioned in order to get around the provisions of the bill. It would be most unworthy of them and I would not expect it to happen; but my point is that in defining in very narrow terms what a cabinet minister shall do before assuming his cabinet post, we leave open a large number of things that probably should be included. I agree with the parliamentary secretary, that to legislate is not always in the best interests of securing results.

Mr. Knowles: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Aiken: Certainly.

Mr. Knowles: I thought the hon. member would. Since he seems to favour the principle of the bill but would like to see it improved, how would he like to agree to second reading being passed and the bill being referred to the committee on banking and commerce, of which he is the chairman, where he could play a very distinguished role in helping to improve it?

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Speaker, I will answer this by saying that I believe the bill is so basically deficient that it should be withdrawn and redrafted before we send it to the banking and commerce committee, or any other committee.

Mr. Knowles: That is a reflection on the distinguished lawyer who drew it up.

Mr. Aiken: I do not know who drew it up but I suspect that whoever drafted the bill did so in accordance with principles which were set forward. I am pointing out that the principles are not broad enough. The bill is open to misinterpretation and there are loopholes. The hon. member himself is an authority on the question of amendments. It seems to me the bill is so basically deficient that if we tried to amend the clauses we would find ourselves out of order. The bill includes only directorships in companies incorporated by act of Canada. If we are going to deal with this matter the bill should be redrafted before we even try to amend it.

The parliamentary secretary mentioned the wording of lines 11 and 12. He called attention to the inclusions of the word "and" in the phrase "a member of the Queen's Privy Council for Canada and a minister of the crown". I would agree with the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre that this is the type of change which might well be made in committee. If the words "who is" were substituted for the word "and" so that the phrase would read "a member of the Queen's Privy Council for Canada who is a minister of the crown" the matter would be more clear. If that were the only difficulty about this bill I would agree it might be worth sending to a committee where it could be further considered.

Another point I wish to raise concerns the fact that the words "directly or indirectly" are not used. I realize that many people who are not lawyers say lawyers are quibbling with words when they use such expressions as "directly or indirectly", but in this case I think it is important. A person can control a company without actually being a director. The words of some of the earlier statutes were probably more apt.

Mr. Knowles: Is the hon. member suggesting that some of the members of the present cabinet who have resigned directorships are indirectly still controlling the companies with which they were connected?

Mr. Aiken: I am not suggesting that. A moment ago I said I did not believe that any cabinet minister either in the past or in the future would be likely to resort to underhand methods of controlling a company where direct methods are prohibited. I am positive he would not do so. None the less, if we are asked to legislate we must legislate carefully. If certain words are used, those are the words which apply, and everything else is excluded. At present this is a question of trust. It is a question of the policy which has been laid down. If there is legislation, you have only the words to follow, not the spirit of the institution. For that reason I feel that the principle of the bill is deficient. It is deficient in its spirit and it is deficient in relation to the provincially incorporated companies.

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Justice): I was not sure that my hon. friend was going to give me an opportunity to speak, though I am anxious to take part in this debate. I agree 100 per cent with the thought behind this bill, but I would question whether it is necessary at the present time to set this principle in statutory form. I do, however, want to say that in my opinion the hon. member for Winnipeg

North Centre deserves credit for continuing his efforts to bring this type of thing before parliament and the people.

I also believe we are fortunate in Canada that we have at the present time, as well as in the past, little difficulty about conflicts of interest such as have prevailed to some extent in the United Kingdom and in the United States. The parliamentary secretary to the Prime Minister has expressed in an able way the legal disabilities which exist with regard to this bill. One of the thoughts he put on record was whether the bill in its reference to privy councillors would include all privy councillors or just those who are members of the cabinet.

When I look quickly through the record, one case which strikes me is the McCann controversy which arose in 1955. Information about this is to be found on page 6040 of volume 6 of Hansard for the 1955 session. I draw no conclusions from that brief controversy which concerned the then minister of national revenue, and I only mention it because of its interest in the light of the issue which has been raised by the parliamentary secretary this afternoon.

The present Prime Minister and the then leader of the opposition, Mr. Drew, were questioning the then prime minister, Mr. St. Laurent, as to whether Dr. McCann, who was the minister of national revenue, had obtained certain tax information in his capacity as minister of national revenue or in his capacity as a director of the Guaranty Trust Company. Mr. St. Laurent refused to answer, saying that this was a matter of cabinet privilege. However, he invited Mr. Drew, who was a privy councillor, to come to him confidentially when the information would be made available to him. Mr. Drew declined, but I suggest that here is an instance where information of a cabinet nature might be available to other privy councillors who are not members of the cabinet, which would strengthen the argument of the parliamentary secretary that this bill should include all privy councillors if it were to be enacted.

Mr. Speaker, I see it is six o'clock. I merely add that I feel there is no need for this thought to be expressed in statutory form at the present time. I think we in Canada are very fortunate that our public men have never had any serious conflict, certainly since this government has been in office.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hour appointed for the consideration of private members' business has now expired.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, since the house will be adjourned on Thursday next will the house leader give the business not only for Monday but for the rest of the week until the adjournment?

Mr. Churchill: It is very difficult to outline the business for four days when we are not certain how much can be accomplished in any one day. We will of course have to finish interim supply in order that money will be available to carry on the normal duties. It would be followed by the national economic development board bill. Our hope, expressed some time ago, was that we could complete before the Christmas recess the national productivity council bill as well. Then there are three or four smaller matters which perhaps the house at the appropriate time would consider fairly rapidly. But we will wait until Monday evening to see what progress we make.

Mr. Chevrier: Would the house leader care to mention those small bills that he has in mind?

Mr. Churchill: The ones I had in mind are these. There is the one under the heading of dominion-provincial tax rental agreements, which affects the universities and another small one dealing with sewage disposal projects. We might be able to bring before the house something with regard to the world's fair at Montreal. Then there is a railway bill dealing with the extension of a railway line in New Brunswick, which perhaps might be considered. These are smaller items which perhaps could be passed rather rapidly through the house. I would also like to bring before the house another subject that was mentioned earlier; that is the proposal to adjust the method of dealing with divorce bills in parliament. On Monday I will ask unanimous consent of the house to raise that particular bill to top place at five o'clock when private members' hour is reached.

Mr. Knowles: The house leader means Tuesday, does he not?

Mr. Churchill: Yes, five o'clock on Tuesday.

It being three minutes after six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, December 17, 1962

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

RAILWAYS, CANALS AND TELEGRAPH LINES

Fourth report of standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines—Mr. Howe.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NATO—REPORT ON MEETING OF COUNCIL OF MINISTERS

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I thought the house might be interested in a brief report on the NATO ministerial meeting which took place in Paris last week and which I had the privilege of attending along with my colleague the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Harkness), who has gone on to visit Canadian troops in the United Nations emergency force and so is unable to be in the house today.

In the background of this particular NATO meeting was the Cuban crisis; and by the way, may I say that this crisis should not be regarded as having been finally settled as yet. It is true that big steps have been taken toward a settlement, but this has not yet been concluded. The Cuban crisis has had quite noticeable effects on the alliance. One is that as a result of the crisis the diplomatic position of the alliance itself has been considerably improved. Then in my opinion the crisis has served to draw the allies much closer together than they were previously and in the case of the government of each country—and certainly this is true of Canada—it has increased the value we place on this defence organization.

The meetings in Paris lasted for three days and were very harmonious. In fact they were the most harmonious meetings of NATO that I have attended. Great credit, of course, was given to the United States for the firmness yet moderation shown in the Cuban crisis. Some question was raised with regard to methods of consultation in a crisis like this, but no real complaint was made against the United States for the manner in which the allies were consulted or informed.

I think we in the alliance face a new position with regard to consultation. Many threats are of global nature, and furthermore one can never be quite sure in what part of the world the next threat is going to come. Then there is the question of the rapidity with which a crisis may arise. That, of course, was true in the case of Cuba, and it made consultation difficult. The permanent council will be studying from now on methods by which consultation can be improved. There is no doubt that we could have a better system, and an attempt will be made to work one out.

On the first day of the conference there was an extensive review of the international situation dealing primarily with east-west relations. On behalf of Canada I took the position that NATO now has the initiative as a result of the Cuban crisis, and that every effort should be made to retain that initiative rather than getting into the position of always waiting for the communist world to make the first move with NATO then acting in response to communist initiatives.

It was agreed that the alliance must be kept strong, and we believe as well that it should be prepared to negotiate at all times. I think that is a sound policy provided there is no letting down of the guard. We also suggested that there should be an attempt made now to do some contingency planning, as it is called, in the political and diplomatic fields. There has been such planning in the military and economic fields but not sufficient in the diplomatic field. For example, I think there should be several plans worked out which would cover what the alliance should do in case the Russians sign a peace treaty with East Germany. This is the type of contingency planning I think should be done in the political and diplomatic field.

Then we went on to point out that there is a contact with the communist world in the disarmament negotiations which are going on in Geneva. I did not deal with this subject at any length, but Canada is one of the four NATO countries represented on the disarmament committee and, of course, it is a very good field in which to negotiate.

We also dealt with the relationship between NATO and the United Nations. In days gone by there has been a tendency in NATO to write down the United Nations, for quite frequently NATO nations have been criticized in New York. Canada has felt that more importance should be placed in NATO on the activities of the United Nations. For example, we pointed out several ways in which NATO's position had been improved by activities at the United Nations within the last year, and perhaps the house might be interested in these six examples which I gave.

1. The increasing support which U Thant is receiving and which indirectly undermines the prospects for the troika approach.

2. The determined current effort to find a solution in the Congo and to reduce United Nations operations and costs. These are all examples of how United Nations activities have been of great help to NATO.

3. The satisfactory outcome of Belgium's transfer of power in Ruanda and Burundi.

4. France's brilliant achievement in bringing independence to Algeria.

5. The decision of the international court on the sharing of the peace keeping expenditures of the United Nations.

6. The gain in prestige for the United Nations as well as for the west which has taken place as a result of the outcome of the Cuban crisis. As hon. members know, U Thant has played a significant role in these negotiations, and there can be little doubt that Soviet prestige has fallen in the United Nations and in the eyes of the uncommitted nations of the world.

In this international review I also dealt briefly with the Chinese attack on India. Here again, NATO is vitally concerned with all the developments arising from that unfortunate conflict. Canada feels that India must not be expected to rush to align herself with the west—or, for example, to make application to join NATO. Some people may think that would be very nice, but if India were to give up her unaligned position she would certainly lose a great deal of her standing in Asia and in Africa. We have quite a good understanding of India; there is not only the commonwealth relationship but we serve with India in the United Nations emergency force in the Gaza strip and in the Congo forces, as well as on the supervisory commissions in Indochina. We believe India's position should be viewed with a great deal of sympathy by the members of the NATO alliance.

In the military field the second day was devoted to a consideration of military questions. I think the most significant feature of that discussion was the suggestion by the United States that there is now ample deterrent capability on the western side. Of course there is great deterrent power on the communist side, as well, with the result that it is very unlikely that either of the great nuclear powers would wish to precipitate a nuclear war and the resulting terrible destruction that would ensue. Thus it follows that the crises are likely to be of a nature not quite serious enough to precipitate a nuclear war. In other words the communists may go just so far that they do not actually precipitate a nuclear war.

There is a realization that NATO forces could be improved considerably to deal with that type of situation. In Europe there are, of course, some proposals for a European nuclear deterrent in the shape of medium range ballistic missiles. This question was not decided. It will be studied further by the council. It involves great expenditures; these missiles cost a great deal of money, and I think the European nations would be expected to provide a good deal of the cold, hard cash for such a deterrent. There would also be the question of control, how they would be handled and so on. The Europeans seem to favour land based medium range ballistic missiles, while the United States is more interested in having such a force at sea.

With regard to the conventional forces, there was a plea made by the United States for strengthening them, but this would not apply to Canada; in effect the proposal was made to the European nations. As hon. members know, Canada strengthened her conventional forces a year ago at the time of the Berlin crisis. We were very pleased to have it pointed out, not by ourselves but by the military authorities and the United States, that Canada had lived up to her commitments and, for example, that our brigade was the only combat ready unit in the NATO forces other than those of the United States. In spite of rumours which I have seen in the press at home since my return, there was not a word of criticism of Canada's military efforts in NATO.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Green: There was also a discussion on research development and production. As you know, Mr. Speaker, in NATO Canada has always been in favour of sharing arrangements for this type of development, and the Minister of National Defence made a statement to that effect in the course of the discussions.

Finally there was a discussion about special aid to Greece to help her with her defence expenditures. She is unable to continue the heavy expenses to which she is committed, and all the nations, or most of them in any event, are now arranging to give her some help with her defence costs. For example, Canada in 1963, subject to parliamentary approval, will provide $1 million in the way of spare parts for planes which Canada supplied to Greece at an earlier date, and also $1 million in the shape of foodstuffs for the Greek army. Greece is a strong, close friend of Canada, and is very grateful to us for taking this position.

It was agreed that the next meeting, which takes place in the spring, will be held in Ottawa on May 21, 22 and 23. I am sure that had hon. members of the house been in Paris they would have been very gratified if they had been attending the meetings—I am not looking at anybody in particular, Mr. Speaker—with the reaction of the delegates from the other member nations. They were simply delighted to be coming to Canada for this meeting, and I am sure we will all see to it that they get a warm welcome and that they leave Canada with as good an impression as they have of our country at the present time.

It might be of interest to hon. members if the communique which was issued at the end of the meeting were printed as an appendix to Hansard and, Mr. Speaker, if that is the wish of hon. members I have it here.

Mr. Speaker: By leave, the minister wishes to have the communique issued at the end of the ministerial conference printed as an appendix to Hansard. Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's note: For text of document above referred to, see appendix.]

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, we on this side of the house join other hon. members in welcoming the minister back from the NATO council meeting. We knew, as it was put in another place, that he would be safe in Paris. We also knew he would be busy.

The minister's statement, as well as the communique of the council meeting, have been received with much interest but, Mr. Speaker, as so often happens in these matters they are perhaps more interesting for what they do not reveal than for what they reveal. The minister said that in his view this was the most harmonious meeting of the NATO council he had attended. There are two ways of ensuring harmony at meetings of this kind. One is to avoid making decisions on important matters; the other is to face important matters and try to come to agreement in respect of them.

It seems to me from what the minister has said that there has been one important decision—certainly one, and no doubt others—that has not been made, and which has been under consideration by the NATO council for a long time now. That is the question of whether or not a tactical nuclear deterrent should become part of the NATO defence system. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that until a decision is made in that regard it is very difficult indeed to make a decision with regard to the build-up—and it is important that they should be built up—of the conventional forces which will relieve NATO's dependence to the maximum possible extent on the use of nuclear weapons.

The minister has mentioned with satisfaction that it was agreed at the NATO council that Canada has fulfilled all her commitments. It seems to me, though this may not be a NATO commitment at the moment in the narrower sense, we cannot discharge the role we have undertaken in the air defence division without equipment to carry out that role. That equipment, it is at present agreed, requires nuclear warheads for the strike reconnaissance role. This is a commitment which seems to me to be an important one and which should be carried out or altered.

The minister also said that the question of consultation was again raised. It is raised, I am sure, at every NATO council meeting. It is going to be studied again. I cannot myself see what additional study can add to the studies that have been made in the past with regard to the necessity for consultation. The machinery for consultation surely is there. It is the will to use that machinery in an emergency that is important. While I share with the minister and others who have spoken in the satisfaction the council must have felt over the way the Cuban crisis was resolved by strength and restraint on the part of the United States, it also exposed, as I am sure the minister will agree, this fundamental weakness in consultation before a crisis takes place.

The minister talked about the necessity for emergency planning, contingency planning he called it, in order to avoid a sudden unilateral decision—and I understand contingency planning has been going on for many months now—as to what the coalition should do in case of certain eventualities in Berlin. Surely we have some right to expect that as a result of this kind of discussion and consultation the alliance has agreed what to do in these circumstances. The minister talked, and quite rightly so, about the interrelationship of all problems that confront NATO, whether they cover the NATO area or otherwise. Cuba has certainly underlined the importance of that.

May I say in conclusion, Mr. Speaker, how glad we are that the NATO council has decided, because of the emergency of an election in the Netherlands, to meet in Ottawa in May. I hope the same sort of emergency here will not require a postponement on this occasion. May I remind the minister that of course the NATO council met in Ottawa before—I think it was about ten years ago—when some very important decisions were made. I hope the meeting, if it takes place in Ottawa this May, will be as successful as the one that took place here ten years ago.

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, time hardly permits us to enter into a full scale debate on external affairs and defence policies at this time, even though it is regrettable that we in this house seemingly so studiously avoid discussion of these two topics. I often feel that we who are members of this house do not have sufficient concern for matters within the realm of external affairs, and the question of defence relates to that. I trust that before long we may be able to have a full scale debate on these topics.

Mr. Speaker, I would say to the minister that it is good to have him back. I am sure that his role and his presence in NATO help to restore and re-establish the confidence of Canadians in regard to NATO. He has mentioned that the NATO council will be meeting in this country in the spring. I congratulate him for making this possible, as I am sure that he had a great deal to do with it. However, I remind the house that it would not be too good to have an election campaign during such a meeting, and I wonder whether we might be informed if we could have this election either before or afterward. Perhaps the leader of the official opposition could help on this. If there is any trouble about making a decision, perhaps some of us could consult together and make our leaders' recess meeting more effective than was the meeting to arrange some of our program before Christmas.

We have noted with much interest the remarks made by the minister. I believe they are constructive. To hear him speaking for Canada at large in this way gives us, particularly at this season, some hope that we can have peace in our world. Without going into any of the details of the matters he mentioned I note particularly his confidence, which I think is felt across the country, in what the United Nations has done. I also note his reference to disarmament, and I trust that Canada shall continue to play her important role in trying to lead to some settlement of this question. The objective that we had hoped might be reached before the end of the year has not been attained, nevertheless, as long as we are working constructively toward it and making some progress, there is hope. I was also interested in his remarks with regard to aid being given to Greece. I think this is an aspect of assistance that we in Canada have not yet fully exploited. Prevention is far better than cure, and here is one way in which we can put the tremendous potential which we have in Canada to some constructive use in avoiding that which I am sure none of us want.

So, Mr. Speaker, we would just say that we are pleased to hear the report of the minister about the progress which has been made. Again, I trust that we in this house will not shirk our own responsibilities in relation to defence, which we think of as being related to NATO; because certainly we cannot continue with the indefiniteness and ambiguity which so many Canadians feel we have toward this very important matter.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, we in this group would like to join all members of the house in saying how glad we are that the Secretary of State for External Affairs has returned safely from his visit to the NATO conference, and to say how interested we were in the statement he has just made. I was somewhat surprised when the minister said there were no complaints regarding the lack of consultation during the Cuban crisis, because I am sure that most people in Canada and throughout the western world were disturbed that unilateral action was taken without consulting the other members of NATO. When we realize that in a world situation such as ours no conflict could be limited to one area but would, in all probability, spread throughout the world, it seems to us imperative that there be consultation. It also seems idle to talk about improving the techniques of consultation. The techniques have been well established, and surely they are there. What is lacking is the will to use those techniques. When one considers the very serious situation in Berlin, which may flare up at any time, it seems to us imperative that there be some definite understanding that the fullest possible consultation will be held before any action is taken by any of the powers.

I should like to express our agreement with the statement of the minister regarding seizing the initiative at this time. It seems to us in this group that this is an excellent opportunity for the western powers to seize the initiative, not in a military sense but in a diplomatic sense, to promote the chances of extending disarmament and mutual understanding. This might be an excellent time to advance once again the idea of military disengagement in central Europe, and to do in Berlin and in central Europe what has already been done in Austria; that it might be possible to get both the east and the west to withdraw from certain areas and thus lessen the possibilities of tension.

Mr. Speaker, I would have been pleased if the minister had been able to tell us more about this question of making NATO a nuclear power. The minister made some reference to the desirability of medium range missiles and the problems of control. I would have hoped that the Canadian government would have made some fairly positive statement in this regard. Before the minister left to attend the conference I asked him whether he could give an assurance that Canada would resist any attempt to make NATO a nuclear power, because I agree with the minister's statement that the deterrent on both sides is now so massive that the likelihood of a nuclear war has diminished. Canada can probably play its most effective role by supplying conventional weapons, and in our opinion we would lessen our moral authority by agreeing to NATO becoming a nuclear power.

Mr. Speaker, I think the statement made by the minister and the statements made by the leaders of the other political parties simply help us to point out the need for a debate on external affairs, or for a meeting of the external affairs committee, or for the setting up of a defence committee, so we can have an opportunity to debate and discuss some of the very important problems facing the human race and having to do with the survival of mankind.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. S. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs arising out of the statement he made at the beginning of this afternoon's sitting. Were the actions of Portugal in her west African colonies discussed at the NATO meeting, and particularly the use there of equipment supplied under NATO?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the foreign minister of Portugal made a statement dealing with the situation in Angola, but I think that was the extent of the discussion.

[Later:]

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Will the Secretary of State for External Affairs inform the house whether the resolution which was passed at the plenary session of the United Nations last Friday, in respect of Portugal's behaviour in its colonies, was discussed at the NATO council meeting? If so, were any plans made to implement the request that the sale and supply of arms and military equipment to the Portuguese government be stopped?

Mr. Green: Mr. Speaker, I happened to be sitting next to the foreign minister of Portugal at one of the dinners and we had quite a long discussion on this Angola subject. I might add that it is not as one sided as it sometimes looks from here.

In so far as the resolution is concerned, it contained a provision that would have meant none of the NATO countries could supply any arms to Portugal. Of course Portugal is a member of NATO. Canada, as a matter of fact, has not supplied any arms to Portugal for approximately two years but we could not support a resolution containing a provision of that kind in fairness to our other NATO partners, so Canada abstained on that resolution.

PRIVATE BILLS

REFERENCE OF DIVORCE BILLS TO STANDING ORDERS COMMITTEE

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, by unanimous consent I move:

That divorce Bills SD-28, an act for the relief of Marie Claire Roland Dubois, SD-36, an act for the relief of Hale Calvin Reid, SD-446, an act for the relief of Daisy Emily Dorothy Pearl Ryan, and SD-447, an act for the relief of Elizabeth Peck, be referred to the standing committee on standing orders, together with the reports of the examiner of petitions for private bills thereon tabled on Friday, November 16, and Friday, December 14, for any recommendation the committee deems advisable.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, was unanimous consent given for this procedure?

Mr. McIlraith: It was not asked for.

Mr. Pickersgill: No, it was not asked for. The hon. gentleman just said "by unanimous consent".

Mr. Speaker: In so far as putting the "agreed" is concerned may I say that I was anticipating an indication one way or another if there should be dissent or consent. There seemed to be no dissent.

Mr. Pickersgill: I suggest that we follow the customary practice of asking the house whether there is unanimous consent in each of these cases.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the hon. member for drawing that matter to my attention. The motion should have been preceded by the request for uanimous consent. Is it agreed? Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

PERSONNEL OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON DRUGS AND CHEMICAL FOOD CONTAMINATION

Mr. Theogene Ricard (St. Hyacinthe-Bagot) moved:

That the special committee on food and drugs appointed on December 7, 1962, be composed of

Questions

Messrs. Baldwin, Enns, Fairweather, Haidasz, Harley, Horner (Jasper-Edson), Marcoux, Martin (Essex East), McDonald (Hamilton South), Mitchell, Nicholson, Orlikow, Patterson, Rynard and Valade.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

FAIR VALUE FOR DUTY, FRUITS AND VEGETABLES

Question No. 1,018—Mr. McNulty:

1. To date, in 1962, what is the name or type of each fruit or vegetable respectively for which a request was made for a "fair value for duty"?

2. On which date was each request received, and the date "fair value for duty" implemented in each case respectively?

3. Was the request for "fair value for duty" in each case respectively received, prior to the season, during the season, at the height of the season, or at the end of the season?

4. Was implementation of "fair value for duty" in each case respectively made, prior to the season, during the season, at the height of the season, or at the end of the season?

5. In each case respectively, what reason or grounds did the person or body give for asking for "fair value for duty"?

6. On what grounds was the request refused or delayed?

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): 1. (a) Frozen red pitted cherries; (b) Fresh prune plums; (c) Fresh potatoes.

2. (a) Request received May 1, 1962—not implemented; (b) Request received September 11, 1962—not implemented; (c) Request received September 11, 1962—implemented October 16, 1962.

3 and 4. Answered by 2.

5. (a) Low prices for frozen red pitted cherries prevailing in the country of export. As substantial stocks were on hand, due to the considerable carryover from the 1961 Canadian crop, importations in large quantities would cause serious consequences to the Canadian industry.

(b) Low prices of fresh prune plums in the U.S.A. Heavy imports would cause hardship to the B.C. fruit growers.

(c) Low prices of imported potatoes constituted threat to Canadian growers.

6. (a) and (b). Frozen red pitted cherries and fresh prune plums—following investigation it was determined that the circumstances did not warrant implementation of fixed values.

(c) Fresh potatoes—delayed only for the period required for investigation to determine whether the request warranted action.

[Mr. Ricard.]

CRAWLEY-MCCRAKEN COMPANY

Question No. 1,024—Mr. Marcoux:

Have there been any transactions between the Crawley-McCraken Company, the Canadian Prepack Company, and the Canadian National Railways and, if so, who are the directors of the Crawley-McCraken Company?

Mr. Halpenny: Yes, with Crawley-McCraken Company. Since Crawley-McCraken Company is not a federally incorporated company the identity of the directors is not known.

CANADIAN PREPACK COMPANY

Question No. 1,025—Mr. Marcoux:

Have there been any transactions between the Canadian Prepack Company and the Canadian National Railways and, if so, who are the directors of the Canadian Prepack Company?

Mr. Halpenny: There is no record of any transaction.

SONS OF FREEDOM, B.C.

Question No. 1,048—Mr. Laing:

1. Since October 1, 1962, has the Minister of Justice had any correspondence with the attorney general of British Columbia dealing with the Freedomite sect?

2. Has the attorney general of British Columbia formally sought any assistance of the government of Canada in dealing with the Freedomites since October 1, 1962?

3. How many Freedomites are now in prison, and what is the sum total of years of sentence imposed?

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): 1. Yes.

2. No.

3. The number of Freedomites now in prison is 147. The sum total of years of sentence imposed is 887 years and 8 months.

BRUSSELS FAIR—CANADIAN TRADE COMMISSIONERS

Question No. 1,070—Mr. Addison:

What are the names of the two Canadian trade commissioners who manned the booth for six months at the Brussels world fair?

Mr. Nesbitt: The following trade commissioners were on duty at the Brussels world fair in 1958 on the dates specified:

B. I. Rankin, April 17-22; R. Campbell Smith, April 17-22; W. J. Millyard, April 21-26; W. R. Hickman, April 22-May 5; D. A. B. Marshall, April 29-May 5; S. G. Tregaskes, May 6-12; A. P. Bissonnet, May 13-26; G. H. Rochester, May 20-26; E. H. Maguire, May 27-June 2; H. Leslie Brown, June 3-9; W. Gibson-Smith, June 3-16; J. A. Stiles, June 17-23; J. C. Depocas, June 24-July 2; T. F. Harris, July 1-7; H. A. Gilbert, July 8-14; S. G. MacDonald, July 15-21; R. K. Thomson, July 22-28; A. W. Evans, July 29-August 4; J. H. Bailey, August 12-18; K. F. Osmond, August 19-25; W. J. Jenkins,

August 26-Sept. 1; R. Grew, Sept. 8-15; J. G. Ireland, Sept. 16-22; B. C. Butler, Sept. 23-29; M. T. Stewart, Sept. 30-October 6; B. Horth, October 7-15; J. M. T. Thomas, October 16-19.

Additionally, L. H. Ausman and J. R. Roy, trade commissioner and assistant trade commissioner respectively at Brussels during 1958, were in attendance on a semi-permanent basis from April 17 until October 19. K. G. Ramsay was on permanent duty from April 17 to July 11.

(Translation):

TRACADIE, N.B.—CARETAKER FOR PUBLIC BUILDING

Question No. 1,079—Mr. Robichaud:

1. Has a caretaker been appointed for the federal public building at Tracadie, New Brunswick, and, if so (a) was the appointment made following the calling of tenders, and (b) what were the names of the applicants and the amount submitted by each?

2. Were any of the applicants qualified for veterans' preference and, if so (a) was any consideration given for military service in making this appointment (b) what is the name of the person selected for this particular service (c) if selected after the calling of tenders, was the service awarded to the lowest tenderer and, if not, for what reason?

Mr. McCleave: 1. The caretaker's work at Tracadie will be done under contract;

(a) A contract was awarded following a call for tenders.

(b) The following tenders were received:

Alex F. Lavoie, $1,200 a year, (assistant postmaster); Reginald Basque, $1,200 a year, (postmaster); B. B. Losier, $1,400 a year; Edgar Landry, $1,800 a year; Arthur Savoie, $2,496 a year; Eutrope Basque, $2,850 a year.

2. Yes, although veterans' preference does not apply in the awarding of contracts of this type, unless there is more than one tender in the lowest amount.

(a) No.

(b) The contract was awarded to Mr. B. B. Losier, for the price tendered, i.e. $1,400 a year.

(c) No, because it is not department policy to award contracts to crown employees, unless it is impossible to do otherwise.

(Text):

MORTGAGE INSURANCE FUND, N.H.A.

Question No. 1,086—Mr. Scott:

Under the provisions of the National Housing Act, in each of the years ended December 31, 1958, 1959, 1960, and 1961 (a) what was the total amount of the mortgage insurance fund (b) in each province, what was the number of claims against the fund, and what was the aggregate amount of the claims (c) how many of the said claims were in respect of (i) single family dwellings (ii) apartment projects (iii) limited dividend projects (iv) low rental projects?

Mr. McCleave:

(a)

TOTAL ASSETS OF THE MORTGAGE INSURANCE FUND AS AT DECEMBER 31, 1958, 1959, 1960 AND 1961

1958	1959	1960	1961
$ 45,680,766	$ 61,081,653	$ 72,595,971	$ 86,768,574

(b)

NUMBER AND AMOUNT OF CLAIMS PAID OUT OF THE MORTGAGE INSURANCE FUND

	1958		1959		1960		1961		1958-1961
Province	No.	Amount	No.	Amount	No.	Amount	No.	Amount	No.	Amount
		$		$		$		$		$
Nfld.....	1	12,336.42	—	—	1	11,785.23	1	9,264.48	3	33,386.13
P.E.I.....	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
N.S.....	—	—	—	—	—	—	2	24,147.64	2	24,147.64
N.B.....	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Que.....	1	10,760.79	8	79,345.01	35	353,516.64	66	691,687.58	110	1,135,310.02
Ont.....	3	30,088.76	17	184,325.00	81	905,238.65	684	7,290,212.85	785	8,409,865.26
Man.....	—	—	—	—	—	—	1	12,823.13	1	12,823.13
Sask.....	—	—	1	9,539.49	—	—	2	21,298.24	3	30,837.73
Alta.....	1	7,984.70	—	—	3	30,175.60	13	144,435.85	17	182,596.15
B.C.....	—	—	—	—	8	96,602.36	63	723,713.40	71	820,315.76
Canada.....	6	61,170.67	26	273,209.50	128	1,397,318.48	832	8,917,583.17	992	10,649,281.82

Questions

(c)

(i) Single family dwellings	990
Duplex dwellings	2
Total claims	992

(ii) Apartment projects—nil.

(iii) Limited dividend projects—nil. Limited dividend loans under section 16 of the National Housing Act are not covered by the mortgage insurance fund.

v) Low rental projects—nil. Low rental projects under section 36 of the National Housing Act are not financed by way of loans but by capital investment by the federal-provincial-municipal partnership. They are not covered by the mortgage insurance fund.

PUBLICATION OF TECHNICAL FORESTRY MEMORANDA

Question No. 1,089—Mr. Laprise:

On what dates were the following technical memoranda published (a) No. 18 entitled "Grading Hardwood Logs for Factory Lumber" (b) No. 34 entitled "How to Evaluate the Quality of Hardwood Logs for Factory"?

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): (a) December 22, 1960.

(b) October 18, 1962.

DOWNSTREAM POWER BENEFITS, COLUMBIA RIVER TREATY

Question No. 1,101—Mr. Davis:

1. Did the Canadian government arrange for a competent engineering firm or firms to evaluate the amount of downstream power and flood control benefits created in the United States by the proposed Columbia river treaty project prior to the signing of the treaty?

2. What is the estimated amount of the downstream prime power benefits which are returnable to Canada under the present Columbia river treaty in the years 1970, 1980, 1990 and 2000?

3. What is the principal reason, or reasons, for any change in these annual benefits during the life of the Columbia river treaty?

Mr. Dinsdale: 1. A competent international group of engineers who had assisted in the preparation of the terms of the treaty evaluated the approximate downstream benefits obtainable under those terms. These engineers represented the following agencies:

Canadian Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources; Canadian section, international joint commission; British Columbia power commission; British Columbia department of lands, forests and water resources; United States corps of engineers; Bonneville power administration (United States department of the interior).

2. The treaty, in accordance with international joint commission power principle No. 4, does not call for the division of prime power benefits. However, Canada's share of the increase in average annual usable energy produced in the United States by Canadian storage is to be returned to Canada in equal amounts each month and is therefore a prime power resource to Canada. Estimates of quantities are available for the years 1972, 1985, and 2010 and are as indicated below: It has to be emphasized that these are estimates and may not occur to the extent indicated at the various dates.

Year	Prime Energy in Megawatt Years	Capacity in Megawatts	Available Load Factor
1972	768	1375	56%
1985	400	1230	33%
2010	210	0	—

These benefits are exclusive of downstream benefits generated at Canadian plants on the Kootenay river in Canada through storage operation at the Duncan lake and Libby dams.

3. During the initial years of the treaty period, Canadian storage will be called upon to provide three services:

(a) Release stored water over a critical streamflow period and thereby increase primary energy production at the United States generators (Canada's capacity credit is equal to one half of this primary energy benefit divided by the critical period load factor).

(b) Conserve water which existing United States generators could use to produce secondary energy, but for which no secondary energy markets are presently available. This water is then released at times when firm or secondary loads require it.

(c) Conserve water which would presently exceed the hydraulic capacity of existing United States generators and later release this water at times when the generating facilities could use it and when firm or secondary loads require it.

(Canadian energy credit is one half of the increase in usable energy developed by (b) and (c)).

By approximately the mid point of the treaty period it is expected that the thermal-electric component of the United States system will have developed to the point where all secondary energy generation at hydroelectric plants will be usable as thermal replacement energy (to conserve fuel at thermal plants). The regulation service outlined in section (b) above would, if this happened, no longer be necessary and Canada's energy credit would reduce accordingly. Regulation to produce maximum primary energy would still be required and therefore no substantial change in Canada's capacity entitlement is expected.

Towards the end of the treaty period it is expected that the United States thermal-electric development will have increased to the point where the ultimate hydroelectric installations at the United States plants will be usable on the United States load without the assistance of primary energy from storage operation. Canada's capacity benefits would, if this happened, decrease to zero. At the same time the added facilities at the United States hydroelectric plants would be capable of producing more and more power from unregulated flows of the river and as a result the need for Canadian storage for average energy generation under (c) would also decrease. Once the maximum feasible number of hydroelectric units have been installed at United States plants (assumed for the year 2010), Canada's remaining energy benefits should remain relatively constant for the balance of the treaty period.

Whether or not the above mentioned set of conditions will ever occur cannot be known in advance. Therefore, the treaty is designed to measure benefits under any conditions that may actually occur in the future.

COLUMBIA RIVER TREATY—DIVISION OF POWER

Question No. 1,102—Mr. Davis:

Of the total amount of prime power created as a result of the construction of the Columbia river treaty projects in Canada, what proportion is returnable to Canada, and how much is estimated as remaining in the United States in the year 1970?

Mr. Dinsdale: The following table sets forth the increase of both primary and average annual energy benefits from the treaty for estimated load conditions in the period 1970-72 (all data expressed in megawatt years):

	Primary Energy	+ Saleable Secondary Energy(*)	— Total Usable Energy (Primary + Saleable Secondary)
U.S. system with Canadian storage:	9063	939	10,002
U.S. system without Canadian storage:	6861	1606	8,467

The increment of primary energy after the introduction of Canadian storage is thus 2202 MW years, of which 667 are the firming up of saleable secondary energy already available in the U.S. The increment in average annual usable energy (which is the product to be divided in accordance with I.J.C. power principle No. 4 and under annex B paragraph 1 of the treaty) is thus 2202–667=1535 MW years. Canada would receive 50 per cent of this gain, or 768 MW years of energy.

* Assumes the Hanford atomic energy works operating as a single purpose development for the production of thermal-electric energy and therefore providing a substantial thermal replacement market for secondary hydroelectric energy. With this plant operating as a dual purpose project (plutonium and thermal energy production) it would operate continuously and therefore not provide a secondary energy market. Under this latter condition Canada's energy benefits are presently estimated to be 820 megawatt years rather than the 768 megawatt years indicated in the table.

REVENUE OF BANDS, MIRAMICHI INDIAN AGENCY, N.B.

Question No. 1,112—Mr. McWilliam:

What revenues have been derived by each of the Indian bands of the Miramichi Indian agency at Red Bank, Eel Grounds, and Burnt Church on the sale of gravel, sand, logs, pulpwood, and Christmas trees, and for any other revenue producing transactions, for each year from 1955 to 1961 inclusive?

Mr. McGee:

Red Bank	1955-56	1956-57	1957-58	1958-59	1959-60	1960-61	1961-62
Timber dues	613.38	1210.16	782.53	826.16	1668.35	1637.20	414.63
Gravel and sand	97.34	329.20	——	30.46	100.00	46.90	100.00
Gov.t int.	715.37	697.37	689.14	724.98	758.57	812.49	695.84
Fishing rights	——	37.50	——	——	——	——	——
Rentals	——	25.00	62.50	62.50	37.50	——	——

Questions

Eel Ground	1955-56	1956-57	1957-58	1958-59	1959-60	1960-61	1961-62
Timber dues	279.44	494.91	659.14	119.27	522.95	500.97	197.04
Rentals	125.00	25.00	612.00	62.50	37.50	175.00	——
Gov.t int.	236.39	264.74	285.20	296.20	287.58	292.04	264.36
Gravel dues	——	——	60.95	304.50	——	14.00	867.65
Burnt Church
Rentals	100.00	100.00	100.00	100.00	100.00	100.00	——
Gov.t int.	124.09	111.95	120.27	127.53	128.73	138.55	141.45

BALSAM WOOLLY APHID—FORESTRY THREAT

Question No. 1,115—Mr. Fairweather:

1. Does the balsam woolly aphid pose a serious economic threat in Canada?

2. What is the Department of Forestry doing to reduce the effects of this insect in eastern Canada, especially in Newfoundland?

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): 1. The balsam woolly aphid is a foreign pest that reached the maritime provinces several decades ago and Newfoundland in the late 1940's. It is also well known in northeast and northwest United States and was found in southwest British Columbia in 1958. In the maritimes, the distribution and population level of the balsam woolly aphid have been static in recent years; unusually cold winters are a major controlling factor. However, a great deal of tree mortality has occurred over the past 30 years and normal stand development has been prevented or delayed over wide areas. In Newfoundland, outbreaks near St. John's on the Burin peninsula, and particularly along the southwest coast are causing considerable tree mortality and deterioration. Recently the aphid was found in central Newfoundland and intensive surveys are establishing just how widespread it is. In British Columbia, the outbreak is still restricted to an area in the lower Fraser river valley but many thousands of trees have been killed or defoliated. The balsam woolly aphid is unquestionably a serious forest pest and the Department of Forestry is studying biological, chemical, and silvicultural methods of control.

2. The Department of Forestry has long been interested in the balsam woolly aphid problem in eastern Canada. The biology and habits of the insect are reasonably well understood and the distribution and status of the pest are under continuous surveillance. The results are regularly communicated to provincial authorities and interested industries in publications and reports. A concerted ground and aerial survey was organized in 1962 in central Newfoundland where the aphid was first observed in 1961.

The cryptic habits of the insect make control with conventional chemicals difficult except on individual trees. However, recently developed systemic insecticides offer some hope of controlling the aphid with aerial sprays. Their effectiveness is being tested in carefully devised laboratory experiments and small scale field trials may be conducted in Newfoundland next year.

Past efforts have been directed mainly toward biological and silvicultural controls. Potential predators are being studied in several countries and a number of species have been released in Canada with modest success. At least four are now established in the maritime provinces and Newfoundland but the degree of control is not yet satisfactory. This program is continuing with the major emphasis in Newfoundand in the hope that better predators will be found or that the present efforts become more effective with the passage of time, as often happens in biological control programs. Research is in progress on means of converting forest stands to a high proportion of non-susceptible species by controlled burning, by reducing natural fir reproduction, or by planting exotic tree species.

In summary, the Department of Forestry is exploring all reasonable prospects for controlling the balsam woolly aphid as actively as possible.

NEWFOUNDLAND OVERSEAS FORESTRY UNIT—INCLUSION UNDER VETERANS CHARTER

Question No. 1,118—Mr. Douglas:

Has the Minister of Veterans Affairs received representations from the chairman of the Placentia branch of the Newfoundland overseas forestry unit concerning this unit's inclusion under the veterans charter and, if so, what answer has been given?

Mr. Churchill: The Minister of Veterans Affairs has received such representations and the following answer has been given:

When the Civilian War Pensions and Allowances Act was amended last year, the Canadian government recognized that the Newfoundland foresters, along with a number of other groups, had aided materially in the war effort.

A comparison has been made between the services of the forestry unit and those of the Newfoundland forestry unit of world war I, which formed part of the imperial forces, and the Canadian forestry corps of world war II, which was a corps within the Canadian army.

These latter units formed part of the armed forces and were subject to military discipline in all respects. However, members of the Newfoundland forestry unit of world war II were not recognized by the Newfoundland commission of government as members of the forces, and they served as civilians under contracts willingly entered into with specified rates of pay, length of service, etc.

With regard to the restriction contained in part XI of the Civilian War Pensions and Allowances Act concerning the length of contract entered into, I am pleased to advise you that the war veterans allowance board, after securing legal opinion, has been able to modify its ruling in favour of those foresters who, although they did not sign contracts for the duration, actually served until the end of world war II and received discharge certificates dated after May 8, 1945.

The basic definition of a "veteran" is a former member of H.M. armed forces and consequently cannot apply to former members of the Newfoundland forestry unit of world war II or to the other civilian groups covered under the Civilian War Pensions and Allowances Act.

STUDY OF AIR POLLUTION

Question No. 1,123—Mr. Mather:

Is the government giving consideration to the advisability of an examination of the problem of air pollution so that steps may be taken to protect Canadians against the detrimental effects of same?

Mrs. Casselman: During the past four years the Department of National Health and Welfare has been developing a national air sampling network in co-operation with the provinces and large municipalities for the purpose of measuring levels of air pollution and determining the influence of community sources on diurnal and seasonal factors. Advisory, consultant and laboratory services are being supplied, as requested, to provincial health departments and municipalities in the organization of air pollution surveys, the assessment of control measures and the analysis of samples.

In addition research in a number of universities is being assisted under the national health grants. Research is also being carried on in the laboratories of the department to develop better methods of determining the small amounts of pollutants found in the air and studying their effects on health.

To supplement this program, close contact is being maintained with all other countries having advanced programs in this field.

Questions

RESEARCH PROGRAM IN PHYSICAL FITNESS, U.B.C.

Question No. 1,129—Mr. Mather:

Has the Department of National Health and Welfare received any requests from the British Columbia division of the Canadian Medical Association to assist in the establishment, at the University of British Columbia, of a research program in physical fitness?

Mrs. Casselman: A letter was received on November 9 from the executive director of the British Columbia division of the Canadian Medical Association, in support of an application which he understood would be made by the University of British Columbia for a research grant for 1963-64. No formal application has been received from the University of British Columbia.

*AIR TRANSPORT REPORT BY STEPHEN WHEATCROFT

Question No. 1,130—Mr. Chevrier:

1. When was Mr. Stephen Wheatcroft engaged to make a study for the Minister of Transport of the desirability and economic consequences of competition in Canadian transcontinental air services?
2. How long did it take to prepare his report and when was it made?
3. What was the total cost to the government of this report by fees paid, travel expenses, secretarial and stenographic assistance, and miscellaneous?

Mr. McBain: 1. February 4, 1958.

2. (a) Four months; (b) May 30, 1958.

3. $7,971, as follows: Retainer, $3,500; travel expenses, $1,686; living allowance, $2,375; secretarial, stenographic and miscellaneous, $60; printing and distribution of the report, $350.

MARITIME COMMISSION VESSEL CONSTRUCTION, N.B. AND N.S.

Question No. 1,138—Mr. Fairweather:

Have any vessels been assigned to shipbuilding facilities in New Brunswick and Nova Scotia by the maritime commission under the recent subsidy program and, if so, (a) where are the shipyards located (b) what is the total amount of money paid or authorized under the subsidy program in each location in New Brunswick and Nova Scotia?

Mr. McBain: Vessels being built under the ship construction subsidy plan are not assigned to shipbuilding plants by the Canadian maritime commission but are built in yards of the owner's selection. Up to the present subsidy agreements amounting to $2,397,261.10 have been signed in respect of four ships at Bathurst and Saint John in New Brunswick, and in respect of 16 ships, amounting to $2,052,458.17, at Day Spring, Lunenburg, Meteghan River and Shelburne in Nova Scotia.

Questions

REGULATION OF SALE OF ELECTRICAL APPLIANCES

Question No. 1,142—Mr. Tucker:

Does the government intend, in the interest of public safety, to regulate sales of electrical equipment and appliances not certified for safety requirements?

Mr. Nesbitt: The certification of electrical equipment and appliances for safety requirements, and the regulation of sales are responsibilities of the respective provinces.

CANADIAN MILITARY COMMITMENTS

Question No. 1,143—Mr. Wahn:

Is Canada committed in any way to any other country or countries to take any military action or to provide armed forces and, if so, by what convention or other means has each such commitment been created?

Mr. Green: As a signatory to the North Atlantic treaty, Canada has agreed in article 5 that an armed attack against one of the members of the alliance in Europe or North America constitutes an attack against them all, and has undertaken to assist the party or parties attacked "by taking forthwith, individually and in concert with the other parties, such action as it deems necessary, including the use of armed force, to restore and maintain the security of the north Atlantic area".

The Canada-United States region is an integral part of the north Atlantic area. The air defence of the region is provided for in the NORAD agreement under which a Canada-United States integrated command was established and to which both countries contribute air defence forces.

By virtue of article 43 of the United Nations charter, Canada has undertaken to make available to the security council such assistance, including armed forces, as may be necessary for the purpose of maintaining international peace and security.

UNIVERSITY AVENUE ARMOURIES, TORONTO

Question No. 1,144—Mr. Wahn:

1. Who owns the property known as the University avenue armouries in Toronto?

2. Have any of the reserve regiments using these armouries requested that other armouries be provided for their use?

3. Has any decision been made to discontinue the use of the University avenue armouries and, if so, (a) what are the reasons for this decision (b) what are the locations of the armouries which will replace the University avenue armouries (c) what is the total estimated cost of replacing the University avenue armouries by such other armouries?

Mr. Sevigny: 1. The property is owned by Her Majesty the Queen in right of Canada and is under the administration and control of the Department of National Defence.

2. No.

[Mr. McBain.]

3. Yes. (a) In 1958, an agreement was made with the municipality of metropolitan Toronto to sell this property to it for the sum of $2,000,000 for a new court house to accommodate the courts and administrative offices of the supreme court of Ontario, the county court of the county of York, and courtroom facilities for the Exchequer Court of Canada and the board of transport commissioners.

(b) and (c) An armoury has been constructed in the township of North York, adjacent to and immediately south of Downsview airport at a cost of $989,867. This provides approximately one third of the replacement accommodation required. The site or sites of the remaining accommodation have not been finally settled. The estimated costs of such accommodation will depend on the location and whether one large or two smaller armouries are built.

PENITENTIARIES, INMATES AND STAFF

Question No. 1,153—Mr. Orlikow:

1. What is the total number of inmates in federal penitentiaries as of the last date for which the annual report was prepared?

2. What is the total staff employed in these penitentiaries and, of these, how many are guards, teachers, psychologists, psychiatrists, etc.?

3. What qualifications are required for the professional staff?

4. What are the minimum qualifications for guards employed in penitentiaries?

5. Is there a compulsory training course for people hired as guards and, if so, what type of course, and how long does it take to complete this course?

6. How many penitentiaries are there in Canada?

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): 1. 7,039.

2. Total staff establishment for the federal penitentiaries is 2,953 comprised as follows:

Custodial	1,488
Teachers	43
Vocational training instructors	68
Psychologists	19
Psychiatrists	8
Physicians	11
Dentists	8
Chaplains	19
Hospital staff	99
Farm staff	19
Service and maintenance officers	631
Industrial instructors	135
Administrative and clerical officers	405
Total	2,953

3. The professional staff are required to be graduates from universities of recognized standing with specialization in their own particular field. Teachers are required to be graduates of a recognized high school and have had normal school training with a teacher's certificate for the province concerned and some practical teaching experience.

4. The minimum qualifications for guards in the penitentiaries are at least grade X education or equivalent, age 23 to 40 years, satisfactory physical condition, at least 5'8" in height, additional credits for military or police experience.

5. Every person hired as a guard in the Canadian penitentiary service must undergo probationary training, which begins at the initial appointment and continues to the end of the probationary period (6 months under penitentiary service regulation 1.36), before he is considered for permanent employment. This probationary training includes an initial orientation program and an induction training program of formal and on the job training. This probationary training is conducted at every institution.

6. 25.

FEDERAL RESPONSIBILITY FOR PRISONERS SENTENCED TO ONE YEAR OR MORE

Question No. 1,155—Mr. Orlikow:

Has the government yet decided when they will implement the recommendations of the Fauteux committee, that the federal government assume the responsibility for prisoners sentenced to one year or more?

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): No.

PORT DE GRAVE, NFLD. BREAKWATER

Question No. 1,156—Mr. Tucker:

Has the government decided to construct a breakwater at Hibb's cove, Port de Grave, Newfoundland and, if so, when will work commence?

Mr. McCleave: No, not at the present time.

INSTALLATION OF SIMULTANEOUS TRANSLATION EQUIPMENT

Question No. 1,157—Mr. Dumont:

1. What time was required to instal the simultaneous translation equipment for the second world conference on adult education held in Montreal during August, 1960, and what was the cost of such installation?

2. What time was required to instal the simultaneous translation equipment for the world meteorology conference held in Toronto during July, 1962, and what was the cost of such installation?

3. Aside from the North American forestry commission meeting scheduled for June, 1963, will the simultaneous translation system owned by the Department of National Defence be used again?

4. Would it be feasible to instal such a system in a suitable room for use by parliamentary committees and, if so, how long would it take to complete such an installation and what cost?

Mr. Sevigny: 1. Three days were required to instal the equipment at a cost of $795.

2. Three days were required to instal the equipment at a cost of $829.79.

In both instances these costs covered living expenses for technicians and transportation of equipment only. No charge was included for the use of equipment nor were the salaries of the technicians included.

3. To the present date, this simultaneous translation equipment is committed for use as follows:

(a) North American forestry commission at the N.R.C. building on Montreal road, Ottawa, from 24 to 27 June '63.

(b) Defence research board conference at St. Jean, P.Q. during first week of July, 1963.

(c) Dominion bureau of statistics for the 34th session of the international statistical institute at Carleton University, Ottawa, 20-29 August, 1963.

4. The simultaneous translation equipment owned by the Department of National Defence consists of heavy equipment connected by cables and is not suitable for permanent installation in rooms with movable furniture. The cables would have to be fixed to the floor which is most undesirable. The equipment is designed for large conferences with up to 400 persons using it. It is far too big and unnecessarily complex for a conference of 50 to 60 people only. The equipment is capable of handling four languages simultaneously. Much simpler equipment would serve for two languages only.

DOMINION BUREAU OF STATISTICS, MONTREAL—EMPLOYEES LAID OFF

Question No. 1,158—Mr. Lachance:

1. Since June, 1962, have any casual employees been laid off by the dominion bureau of statistics in Montreal as part of the government's austerity program and, if so, what are their names?

2. Does the government intend to re-employ those persons when the austerity measures are removed?

Mr. Nesbitt: 1. The services of the following casual employees who were hired from time to time on an hourly basis in the Montreal regional office of the dominion bureau of statistics have not been employed since the date indicated:

Bayard, M. A., August 2, 1962; Bourgeois, S., August 7, 1962; Pinsonneault, B., August 1, 1962; Garardi, E., August 31, 1962.

These are the only casual employees whose services have been terminated as a result of the limitation of funds available. All of these employees were casual clerks employed in the Montreal regional office.

2. Cannot be determined. Decision would depend on the volume of work requiring temporary assistance.

DOMINION BUREAU OF STATISTICS, MONTREAL—CASUAL EMPLOYEES

Question No. 1,159—Mr. Lachance:

Since June 1962, have any new casual employees been taken on by the dominion bureau of statistics in Montreal and, if so, what are their names and what are the duties of each?

Mr. Nesbitt: Yes. The following casual employees were hired in Montreal for varying periods since June 1, 1962, by the Montreal regional office of the dominion bureau of statistics:

Amadori, I., Arbique, M., Barrot, A., Bazinet, G., Beaudry, C., Bellavance, B., Bleau, G., Bergeon, M., Bourgue, F., Cofsky, G., Dagenais, P., Dupont-Hebert, J., Gaoust, G., Gerardi, H., Hebert, G., Kemp, J., Labrie, M., Lamarche, J., Landry J. B., Laurencelle, A., Lavigne, T., Merizzi, J. C., Payette, J., Paquin, P., Prevost, M., Quinn, M., Samson, S., Thibeault, G., Thibeault, J., Vannelli, I.

The duties of all but two of these employees were to interview households assigned to them in order to obtain information relating to employment and unemployment of the members of the households. These enumerators usually work from 3 to 5 days in each month. The duties of the other two employees were to interview business establishments and to obtain reports concerning their operations.

(Translation):

RIVIERE DU LOUP, QUE.—CONSTRUCTION OF WHARF

Question No. 1,162—Mr. Gagnon:

Did the Minister of Public Works receive a delegation or petition from Riviere du Loup on the subject of the la Pointe quay and, if so, has a decision been made to begin work in the spring of 1963?

Mr. McCleave: Yes. This project is still under consideration and we hope to undertake it in 1963. However, nothing has been decided as yet.

(Text):

MIRAMICHI INDIAN AGENCY, N.B.—BAND FUNDS

Question No. 1,167—Mr. McWilliam:

What are the present amounts of the funds held by each of the Eel Ground band and the Burnt Church band of the Miramichi Indian agency, New Brunswick?

Mr. McGee: Eel Ground band: Capital, $5,208.84; revenue, $99.29. Burnt Church band: Capital, $2,076.99; revenue, $2,832.13.

TRADE COMMISSION OFFICES, EUROPE AND CANADA

Question No. 1,171—Mr. Badanai:

1. In what countries of Europe has Canada established commercial or trade commission offices, and how many in each country?

2. Have European countries established commercial or trade commission offices in Canada and, if so, which countries, and how many offices?

Mr. Nesbitt: 1. The Department of Trade and Commerce has trade commissioners stationed in the following countries and cities in Europe:

Austria, Vienna; Belgium, Brussels; Britain, London, Liverpool, Glasgow; Denmark, Copenhagen; France, Paris; Germany, Bonn, Duesseldorf, Hamburg; Greece, Athens; Ireland, Dublin; Italy, Rome; Netherlands, The Hague; Norway, Oslo; Portugal, Lisbon; Spain, Madrid; Sweden, Stockholm; Switzerland, Berne; Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, Moscow.

2. The latest edition of "Canadian Representatives Abroad and Representatives of Other Countries in Canada" lists the following European countries as having commercial representatives or trade commissioners in Canada in the cities indicated:

Britain: Ottawa, Edmonton, Halifax, Montreal, Regina, Toronto, Vancouver, Winnipeg; Czechoslovakia: Montreal; Denmark: Montreal,; France: Ottawa, Montreal, Toronto; Germany: Ottawa, Montreal, Toronto; Italy: Ottawa, Montreal, Toronto, Vancouver; Netherlands: Ottawa; Poland: Ottawa; Spain: Ottawa; Sweden: Toronto, Vancouver; Union of Soviet Socialist Republics: Ottawa.

CANADIAN CENTENNIAL—MUNICIPAL PROSPECTS

Question No. 1,172—Mr. Badanai:

1. How many municipal centennial projects, such as parks, concert halls, civic buildings and other community facilities of a significant and lasting nature, have been approved or undertaken since the government's announcement in September 1961?

2. What is the location of each, and the amount of federal assistance involved in each?

Mr. Ricard: 1. Nil.

2. Not applicable.

R.C.M.P. CONTRIBUTIONS TO COMMUNIST PARTY

Question No. 1,175—Mr. Fisher:

Did the R.C.M.P. provide funds to the communist party of Canada through (a) membership, and (b) contributions, during each of the last five years and, if so, what was the amount in each of the said years?

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): I have to advise the hon. gentleman that it is considered contrary to the public interest to give specific answers to his questions.

U.S. MARKET VALUE FOR DUTY

Question No. 1,178—Mr. Clunis:

Is the Minister of Trade and Commerce aware that the application of the "fair market value for duty purposes" clause in American import tariff legislation is injuriously affecting many Canadian exporters and, if so, will the government take immediate steps to assist the adversely affected Canadian exporters?

Mr. Nesbitt: 1. As hon. members will be aware, there has been improvement in recent years in U.S. valuation law and practice. In 1958 the U.S. moved to accept freely offered export prices as the basis for duty over a broad area of trade. Unfortunately, however, anomalies remain, inasmuch as some goods are still subject to what are, in effect, penalty values. The Canadian government is very conscious of the effect this situation has on many Canadian exporters, and has placed its views on the matter before the U.S. authorities. As for the particular valuation problems being encountered by individual Canadian firms, my department is always anxious to learn of them and to do what it can to help resolve them.

TELEVISION RECEPTION, ST. LAWRENCE NORTH SHORE

Question No. 1,180—Mr. Maltais:

1. Is the board of broadcast governors aware that television reception is very poor and often non-existent in localities situated on the north shore of the St. Lawrence from Sept Iles to Blanc Sablon?
2. Has the B.B.G. taken any steps, or does it intend to take steps, to improve this situation?
3. Has the B.B.G. received an application for permission to instal a television station at Sept Iles in Saguenay county?

Mr. Halpenny: 1. Yes. The board's advice is that there is reasonably good television reception in Sept Iles and for a short distance east along the coast. As the distance from Sept Iles to Blanc Sablon is about 400 miles most of this sparsely settled coastal area has no adequate television service.

2. The initiative for the establishment or improvement of broadcasting service rests in the first instance with licencees or applicants for licences. However, the board did recommend for approval an application for a change of facilities of the television station at Matane, P.Q., which provides service to the Sept Iles area.

3. Yes. The board received such an application and recommended it for denial following a public hearing in August 1961 giving the following reasons:

"In its announcement of March 3, 1961, the board recommended for approval an increase in power of station CKBL-TV, Matane, and is now recommending the establishment of a new AM radio station in Sept Iles. In view of the extension of service to be provided by these facilities, the board is not prepared at this time to recommend an additional rebroadcasting service from Rimouski, P.Q."

INTEREST PAID ON NATIONAL DEBT

Question No. 1,181—Mr. Mather:

1. What was the amount of interest paid on the national debt in the fiscal year 1961-62?
2. What was the amount of interest paid on the national debt in the period 1952-1962?

Mr. Nesbitt: 1. The amount of interest paid on the public debt* in the fiscal year ended March 31, 1962 was $802,919,207.

2. The amount of interest paid on the public debt* in the period fiscal years 1952-1962 (11 years), inclusive was $6,291,589,344.

*Public debt consists of unmatured debt (bonds and treasury bills) and other liabilities (deposit and trust accounts; annuity, insurance and pension accounts; and miscellaneous).

Source: Public accounts of Canada for the fiscal years ended March 31, 1952 to 1961, inclusive, Part I, appendix No. 5 in 1951-52 and appendix No. 6 in 1952-53 to 1960-61, and the financial statements for 1961-62 appearing in the Canada Gazette.

INDUSTRIAL DEVELOPMENT BANK—BOARD OF DIRECTORS

Question No. 1,197—Mr. Cote:

1. How many members are there on the board of directors of the industrial development bank?
2. How many of these directors are French Canadians?
3. How many of the 13 top officials of the I.D.B. in the office of the general manager in Montreal are French Canadians?

Mr. Grafftey: 1. 16.

2. 2.

3. 1.

(See industrial development bank report for 1962, pages 20 and 21.)

INVESTIGATION INTO QUEBEC FISHERMEN'S COSTS AND REVENUES

Question No. 1,207—Mr. Sauve:

Have the investigations and other specialized studies regarding the Quebec fishermen's costs and revenue, as mentioned on page 10 of the 15th report of the fisheries prices support board, been completed for Iles-de-la-Madeleine constituency?

Mr. McPhillips: Records kept by fishermen for the year 1962 are now being completed in the field. These will be summarized and available for distribution about April 1, 1963.

MAGDALEN ISLANDS—FISHING BY FOREIGN BOATS

Question No. 1,208—Mr. Sauve:

Has the government taken the appropriate measures to enforce the law concerning use of territorial waters by foreign boats doing fishing operations near the Magdalen islands and, if so, (a) what departments are responsible for such enforcement (b) how many ships and planes are at the disposal of such service?

Mr. McPhillips: Yes. (a) The Department of Fisheries of Canada in co-operation with the department of game and fisheries of the province of Quebec which, by agreement, is responsible for the enforcement of fisheries laws within that province; (b) (1) Quebec department of game and fisheries—1 patrol vessel; (2) Department of Fisheries of Canada—3 patrol vessels; aircraft chartered as required.

Orders for Returns

SEAL FISHING, GULF OF ST. LAWRENCE

Question No. 1,210—Mr. Sauve:

Does the government intend (a) to control harbour seal fishing in the gulf of St. Lawrence and (b) to propose an international agreement in order to protect the species which intensive fishing threatens to render extinct?

Mr. McPhillips: Assuming that this question was meant to refer to harp seals rather than harbour seals, on the basis of the reference to intensive fishing and the need for international agreement, the answers to the question are as follows:

(a) Yes. Regulations designed to control harp seal fishing in the gulf of St. Lawrence during the coming season are being developed and will be announced in due course.

(b) A Canadian proposal to bring the conservation of harp and hood seals found in international waters off the Atlantic coast of Canada under the provisions of the international commission for the northwest Atlantic fisheries received unanimous approval at a meeting of the international commission for the northwest Atlantic fisheries held in Washington, D.C., early in 1961. Although most of the member governments have indicated their intent to sign the new sealing protocol to the convention, there are still two or three countries which have not done so and final ratification of the protocol must await an expression of intent from these countries.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

SUBSIDIZATION OF BOOKS BY P. A. TAVERNER

Question No. 963—Mr. Howard:

1. Has the federal government, directly or indirectly, subsidized the production of any books or works by P. A. Taverner with special reference to "Birds of Canada", and, if so, how much money was contributed, by whom, in what years, and to whom, for the production of each such book?
2. How many copies of each were printed, and are the books still being printed?
3. What has been the demand for these books?
4. Is there any intention to resume the printing and production of these books?

Mr. Halpenny: Return tabled.

*FRENCH EDITIONS OF GOVERNMENT PUBLICATIONS

Question No. 1,061—Mr. Cote:

Are the following publications available in both of the official languages of Canada and, if not, is the government giving consideration to their printing in the French language: "Statistical summary supplement Bank of Canada"; "The Canadian Balance of International Payments 1960"; "International Investment Position"; "Quarterly Estimates of the Canadian Balance of International Payments"?

Mr. Halpenny: Return tabled.

[Mr. McPhillips.]

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY CHANNEL, WOLFE ISLAND

Question No. 1,111—Mr. Benson:

1. What was the total cost of dredging in the Canadian channel of the St. Lawrence seaway at the foot of Wolfe island during the past two years?
2. To what company was the contract given for this dredging?
3. Is the contract now entirely completed?
4. What is the ordinary depth of the St. Lawrence seaway channel?
5. To what depth was the Canadian channel dredged at the foot of Wolfe island?
6. Did the Minister of Transport issue instructions that only ships proceeding to Kingston were to use the Canadian channel when passing Wolfe island?
7. How many ships, other than pleasure craft, proceeded to Kingston harbour upstream through the Canadian channel during the 1962 navigation season?
8. How many ships, other than pleasure craft, proceeded downstream through the Canadian channel during the 1962 navigation season?

FORESTRY DEPARTMENT RESEARCH

Question No. 1,116—Mr. Dube:

1. Since its creation, what amount has the forestry department spent for research?
2. What research projects have been undertaken?
3. What action has been taken as a result of such research projects?

COLUMBIA RIVER TREATY—SALE OF POWER BEFORE RATIFICATION

Question No. 1,127—Mr. Davis:

Does the Columbia river treaty, as it now stands, permit Canada to finalize a price for the sale of surplus power prior to the ratification of this treaty by Canada?

REVENUE, EXPENDITURES AND VISITORS, NATIONAL PARKS

Question No. 1,137—Mr. Whelan:

What were the operating and capital expenditures and revenue for each of the following national parks, and number of visitors for each of the following years, 1957, 1958, 1959, 1960, 1961, 1962 to date: Banff, Cape Breton, Elk Island, Fundy, Georgian Bay islands, Jasper, Kootenay, Mt. Revelstoke and Glacier, Point Pelee, Prince Albert, Prince Edward Island, Riding Mountain, St. Lawrence islands, Terra Nova, Waterton lakes, Yoho?

Mr. Dinsdale: Return tabled.

*SUPERNUMERARY EMPLOYEES, UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE COMMISSION

Question No. 1,140—Mr. Deschatelets:

1. How many supernumerary employees are at present on the staff of the various offices of the unemployment insurance commission?
2. How many persons male and female are now employed as supernumeraries?
3. How many hours do they work each day?
4. What is their hourly rate of pay?
5. Is any increase in pay for this particular class of employee contemplated in the near future?

Mr. Starr: Return tabled.

*VOCATIONAL TRAINING ASSISTANCE, QUEBEC

Question No. 1,163—Mr. Beaule:

1. Has the federal government made any contribution, under the assistance act for technical and professional training, to apprenticeship centres under the department of works of the province of Quebec?

2. If so, what sums have been paid and for what particular projects, for (a) construction of centres (b) equipping of centres (c) help to apprentices (d) training of monitors and teachers, and (e) training of the unemployed?

3. If not, has the federal government received requests about this from the provincial authorities in Quebec, and what has been the reply of the federal government?

Mr. Starr: Return tabled.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VISIT BY PRIME MINISTER TO U.S. PRESIDENT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister whether he has any plans to visit the President of the United States on his return from his visit to Prime Minister Macmillan?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, not at the moment.

FINANCE

REQUEST FOR REMOVAL OF SURCHARGES ON U.K. AND EUROPEAN CARS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Kootenay East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Revenue. Will the minister consider immediate removal of the tariff surcharges on British and European automobiles, which have been so disastrous both to the trade and to the dealers in this country?

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a supplementary question to that asked by the hon. member for Kootenay East. Has the minister received any representations from the trade pointing out the serious losses they are suffering under the present circumstances in respect of these surcharges?

Mr. Lewis: I have a supplementary question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Mr. Byrne: A supplementary question to the Minister of National Revenue. Would the Minister of National Revenue—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Byrne: —please put on a hearing aid?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Speaker: Order. If the minister has not answered I have some difficulty in seeing how there can be a supplementary question. There may be a related question later on.

Hon. H. J. Flemming (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I do not carry around with me the information contained in every letter I have received since June 24. I would be glad to get the information and supply it but I certainly cannot do so now.

(Translation):

AIR TRANSPORT

BAGOTVILLE, QUE.—APPARENT DUPLICATION OF INQUIRIES INTO ACCIDENT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): I would like to direct a question to the Associate Minister of National Defence.

Is the minister acquainted with the statement in which the Canadian Association of Air Pilots complained that he made a statement in the house on the causes of the recent accident at Bagotville without having first become acquainted with the investigation made by the Department of Transport? Has he any comment to make on that?

Mr. Speaker: I am extremely sorry but the hon. member is putting his question in a way that invites the minister to engage in a controversy with individuals or an organization outside this chamber. It may be that his question is in order but he will have to reword it.

Mr. Chevrier: My reason for asking this question is that there seems to be duplication between those two departments. I will therefore rephrase my question.

As I stated a moment ago, did the minister make that statement in the house without first inquiring about the decision taken by the Department of Transport?

Hon. Pierre Sevigny (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I made a statement to the house concerning the accident without reading the request submitted by the pilots. Indeed, I was unaware of the existence of that request. Neither did I read the article mentioned by the hon. member for Laurier, but I will read it and report to the house.

[Later:]

(Text):

Mr. Charles M. Drury (St. Antoine-Westmount): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport in relation to the airplane accident between a Viscount and an R.C.A.F. aircraft at Bagotville. Has the minister been provided with a report on the accident by his department, and if so does it correspond with the statement made by the Associate Minister of National Defence in the house a few days ago?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): So far as the report made by my colleague the Associate Minister of National Defence is concerned, a copy of this report was sent to me prior to the time it was made in the house. In so far as the investigation of the Department of Transport is concerned, it has not been completed as yet. I have not received this report.

(Translation):

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

REQUEST FOR REPLY TO QUESTION ON ORDER PAPER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Prosper Boulanger (Mercier): I should like to put a question to the Minister of Transport.

Could the minister tell me whether I may expect an answer to my question No. 1,108 before December 20, 1962, since I have to prepare a talk for an organization of Montreal and Three Rivers businessmen?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, my departmental officials are at the hon. member's disposal to help him prepare his talk.

AIRPORTS

DORVAL—TRANSPORTATION BETWEEN AIR TERMINAL AND MONTREAL

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, last Friday, the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier) asked me whether I had received a brief about the Dorval airport from the Montreal chamber of commerce.

Since then I did receive this brief and I want to tell him that the officials of the air transport division of my department are now giving the fullest consideration to the various suggestions submitted by the chamber of commerce.

However, I would like to add that, with regard to passenger transportation between the Dorval airport and downtown Montreal I had various talks with the mayor of Montreal on the matter, in order to see whether it would be possible to serve the public either by extending the underground railway which is now being built in Montreal, or by establishing a monorail or some other system. I shall soon meet Mayor Drapeau with regard to this matter.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Would the minister be so kind as to return the brief to me, as it is my only copy.

(Text):

IMMIGRATION

ALLEGED CONTINUATION OF PROCEDURES RESPECTING ILLEGAL CHINESE ENTRIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. M. Benidickson (Kenora-Rainy River): I should like to address a question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration of which I have given him notice. I have reminded him that on November 16 he indicated that certain interrogations in respect of the Chinese community were being abandoned and I indicated that in so far as my own area was concerned, I had been informed recently that the R.C.M.P. had no notice of this government policy. I should like to know from the minister whether what he said as recorded on page 1693 of Hansard, to the effect that we have reached a point where there cannot be any further interrogation in respect of Chinese immigration was conveyed to the Department of Justice and from that department down to the ranks of the R.C.M.P.?

Hon. Richard A. Bell (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): This is perhaps a question more appropriate to my colleague the Minister of Justice. I would say that the statement which I made on November 16 has been very widely distributed, as my hon. friend will see from what I show him. It was undoubtedly one of the most eloquent statements I have ever made. Ignorance of this statement on the part of any public official, I think, would not be excused.

Mr. Benidickson: May I ask a supplementary question of the Minister of Justice. How would it be possible, as late as December 9, for officials of the R.C.M.P. investigating the Chinese community in my district, under similar circumstances, to have an official of that force say to the person interrogated that he had not had this information conveyed to him which I had conveyed to the Chinese community by sending Hansard after the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration made his speech?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Justice): The hon. member, under guise of asking a question, has made a statement. Now,

I am not prepared to accept that as factual, just coming without any notice off the end of the hon. member's tongue.

Mr. Benidickson: I rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): If the hon. member will do the proper thing, and put his complaint forward, with notice, of course it will be looked into.

Mr. Benidickson: Because of the nearness of the Christmas adjournment, as a matter of privilege I rise to say that this statement was made in November on motions when the government policy I have indicated was announced by the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration, yet the Chinese community continues to be harassed in this way by the R.C.M.P.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have some difficulty in seeing the question of privilege the hon. member raises. He is attempting to argue the question on the basis of privilege, and I think he has put his point forward.

Mr. Benidickson: May I explain the matter of privilege?

Mr. Bell (Carleton): In raising his question of privilege the hon. gentleman makes the statement that the Chinese community continues to be harassed and that, sir, is quite untrue.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for St. Antoine-Westmount; I think we have gone far enough.

Mr. Benidickson: On the matter of privilege—

Mr. Speaker: What is the point of privilege?

Mr. Benidickson: My point of privilege is that I have communications which indicate that in my riding now at least a government policy is not being enforced and that one department is not carrying out what has been announced in this House of Commons by a minister of another department last month.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order. That is hardly a point of privilege.

REPORTED DESIRE OF U.S. MENNONITE GROUP TO COME TO CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. R. Nicholson (Vancouver Centre): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration, of which I have given him notice. I may say, Mr. Speaker, there is some urgency about it in view of the television broadcast on the subject. Have inquiries been received by the Department of Citizenship and Immigration on behalf of a community of Amish Mennonite farmers in the state of Iowa indicating a desire to emigrate to western Canada?

Hon. Richard A. Bell (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the simple and direct answer to the hon. gentleman's question would be no but inquiries and applications in some few instances have been received from individual Amish Mennonite farmers in the United States indicating an interest in emigrating to Canada. No inquiries have been received from or on behalf of a community as such.

COMBINES

REPORTED REQUEST FOR CRITICISMS AND SUGGESTIONS RESPECTING ACT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Lewis (York South): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Justice, of which I gave him notice. Would the minister inform the house whether he or someone in his department has sent inquiries to any business firms, organizations or persons requesting recommendations for amendment of existing legislation or for new legislation in the field of combines and mergers?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the answer is no, but I must say at the same time that in the course of replying to letters I have indicated, as I have orally in the house and elsewhere, that if there were any suggestions on the part of anyone with respect to the legislation or the administration we shall be glad to receive them and study them carefully.

Mr. Lewis: I have a supplementary question. Will the minister inform the house whether, in these letters he has just referred to, he has invited those organizations to send in recommendations?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, I thought I just said that in responding to letters in my replies, and in statements in this house and outside it, I have extended an invitation to anyone who has any suggestion of that nature to bring it forward and we will examine it.

TRADE

OIL—ANTICIPATED EXPORTS TO U.S. IN FIRST HALF OF 1963

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. J. McIlraith (Ottawa West): I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce based on the statement he made in this house on Friday last on the subject of Canadian oil exports to the United States, in which he said:

> The two delegations discussed estimated trade in oil and oil products in the first six months of 1963—

—and further based on an article in today's Globe and Mail headed "United States indicates sharp cut in oil imports".

Will the minister advise the house as to the expected amount of Canadian exports of oil to the United States in the first half of 1963 as compared with the first half of 1962?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Trade and Commerce): No, Mr. Speaker, I am afraid that will be impossible. It is not possible to forecast accurately exports of oil from Canada in a period of that kind.

Mr. McIlraith: As a supplementary question, would the minister agree with the United States estimate that this year's increase will be 7.2 per cent as compared with 45 per cent for the corresponding period last year?

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, I would have no way of agreeing or disagreeing with that information.

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): I have a further supplementary question. I wonder would the minister be prepared to say to the house whether, in the opinion of the government, the U.S. president's recent proclamation affecting oil imports in the United States does in fact place a limit on increases in the exports of Canadian oil to the United States?

Mr. Hees: I would like to repeat to the hon. member, in answer to that question, part of what I said in the house on Friday last. I said:

> The two delegations noted that no change has been made in the overland exemption for oil which permits sales of Canadian oil in United States markets without licensing.

Mr. Argue: I would like to ask the minister—

Mr. Speaker: Are we getting into debate?

Mr. Argue: —whether the 12.2 per cent quota established by the United States—

Mr. Speaker: Order. We are getting into debate on this question.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

USEFULNESS OF VOODOO AIRCRAFT AND BOMARC MISSILES WITHOUT NUCLEAR WARHEADS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Red Deer, and I apologize for not seeing him earlier.

[Mr. McIlraith.]

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): I wish to direct a question to the Associate Minister of National Defence. Will the minister inform the house whether there is any useful role for the Voodoo aircraft or for the Bomarc missile other than being equipped with nuclear warheads?

Mr. Speaker: Order. That is in the nature of an argumentative question and reply, and I think it should be asked on another occasion than orders of the day.

[Later:]

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Speaker, I was going to rise on a point of order. I asked a very legitimate question and I expected a yes or no answer. I may point out there was no ulterior motive behind my question.

Mr. Speaker: I am not suggesting there was an ulterior motive, but in the way the question was put I felt it was leading to controversy. Certainly the answer would be controversial, and perhaps the hon. member may be able to recast his question. The Chair is the judge.

Mr. Thompson: There was nothing argumentative about it at all.

NUCLEAR WEAPONS—DECISION BY PARLIAMENT OR PUBLIC

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of reports of mounting pressure being put upon Canada to get her to accept nuclear weapons, will the Prime Minister assure the house that before any commitment is made to adopt such equipment the matter will be referred either to the public or to the parliament of Canada for a decision?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there is no pressure being placed against the Canadian government. Therefore the operative portion of the question does not apply.

[Later:]

Mr. Thomas R. Berger (Vancouver-Burrard): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister relating to the one asked a moment ago by the hon. member for New Westminster. May I ask the Prime Minister whether the government has reached a decision to refer the matter to the public or the parliament of Canada before Canadian forces are equipped with nuclear weapons?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, the presumption inherent in that question is that the government has decided upon such a course.

[Later:]

Mr. Berger: Mr. Speaker, may I follow up the question I asked of the Prime Minister a moment ago. Can the Prime Minister tell the house whether the government has decided to acquire nuclear weapons or not to acquire them?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, the policies of the government have been brought to the attention of the house on a number of occasions in connection with this and other matters. That policy, when and if changed, will be brought to the attention of the house as usual.

Mr. Berger: What policy?

(Translation):

PUBLIC WORKS

ST. SIMEON, QUE.—INQUIRY AS TO WHARF CONSTRUCTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. P. A. Belanger (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Public Works a question. Does the minister intend to have the needed transformation project of the St. Simeon wharf, in the riding of Charlevoix, started in the near future so that the new ferry which was built with government grants and is now ready to start operations between St. Simeon and Riviere du Loup, may actually do so?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I want to point out to the hon. member that he could speak of ferries, bridges and wharves until—

Mr. Belanger: Mr. Speaker, the boat is ready, but the wharf is not.

Mr. Speaker: This is like a litany, endless.

(Text):

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

BRITISH COLUMBIA—REPORTED LEGAL ACTION RESPECTING OFF-SHORE RIGHTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I wish to direct a question of national importance and interest to the Minister of Justice. Has he received any official word from the government of British Columbia that that government intends to take legal action to prove its title to off-shore oil rights?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Justice): No, sir.

(Translation):

AIR TRANSPORT

DORVAL—ALLEGED UNSATISFACTORY INFORMATION SERVICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Jean-Paul Cook (Montmagny-L'Islet): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Transport a question. Can the minister tell us whether he would have a talk with the chief of personnel, or the official responsible for the information office at Dorval air terminus, so that his employees may give better information than I received this morning, which caused me some serious inconvenience—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am extremely sorry to have to interrupt the hon. member, but I do not think that the trouble any hon. member may encounter while travelling can be made the subject of a question asked at this stage of our proceedings.

Mr. Cook: Mr. Speaker, this could have happened to anybody, even to you.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

REQUEST FOR USE OF BILINGUAL CHEQUES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Transport a question. Since the government took the commendable action of issuing bilingual cheques, would the Minister of Transport ask the president of the Canadian National Railways, Mr. Gordon, to follow suit as far as that crown company is concerned?

(Text):

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

CHRISTMAS MAIL DELIVERIES BY REGULAR MAILMEN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Azellus Denis (St. Denis): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Postmaster General. Would the minister consider the advisability of allowing the regular mailmen to deliver the mail on their respective routes at least once or twice during the Christmas period so they might not be deprived of Christmas gifts, which they deserve for their faithful and efficient services?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I feel sure the hon. member has made his representations, and this hardly forms the subject of a question on orders of the day.

(Translation):

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

Inquiries of the Ministry

I think my question is urgent, since it deals with several thousand mailmen who will be deprived of hundreds of dollars, more particularly because they are included in the group of civil servants who have not yet obtained any salary raise.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member has made his representations.

(Text):

GRAIN

WHEAT—REPORTED STATEMENT RESPECTING LOSSES ON CREDIT SALES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture arising out of the recent concern of wheat producers that they may be called upon to pay certain losses on credit sales of wheat. My question is, can the minister inform the house of his reasoning in making the statement, as reported in the press, that the government has taken precautions against default and that when it makes credit sales there is no possibility of default in those sales?

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I think you will realize as well as I do that this is the type of question that should not be asked on orders of the day. I should be glad to take the hon. member aside and explain the simple facts of life to him.

Mr. Argue: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, having to do with the suggestion of the Minister of Agriculture that this is not a proper question, the urgency and importance of this question arises out of the fact that there is a widespread report that there may be losses on certain credit wheat sales. The minister is reported as having said there is no possibility of a loss, and I think that should be explained to the house.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member knows that he cannot comment on the nature of a reply. Certain personal allusions made by the minister may be questionable, but on the other hand the hon. member cannot comment and there is no point of order.

PUBLIC SERVICE

INQUIRY AS TO COMPLETION OF SALARY INCREASES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Finance. In view of the disillusionment experienced by many civil servants for whom no increase was announced a week ago, can the minister indicate to the house whether steps will be taken to complete the job?

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the job will be completed, as I said, as required under the act, the regulations and the practice.

(Translation):

HOUSE OF COMMONS

TRANSLATION INTO FRENCH OF WORK BY BEAUCHESNE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Jean-Paul Cook (Montagny-L'Islet): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Prime Minister.

In reply to an inquiry I put to him at the beginning of this session, relating to the French translation of Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms, he stated that he would take all the necessary steps in this regard. I now wish to ask him if there is any further information which he can give the house on the feasibility of this translation?

(Text):

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Chown in the chair.

INTERIM SUPPLY

Resolved, that a sum not exceeding $330,089,511.93 being the aggregate of—

(a) one twelfth of the total of the amounts of the items set forth in the revised estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1963, laid before the House of Commons at the present session of parliament, except atomic energy item 5, Canadian Broadcasting Corporation item 5, finance items 45 and 50, forestry item 11, labour item 40, legislation items 30 and 35, mines and technical surveys items 30, 35, 40, 70, 80, 125 and 130, national defence item 70, national health and welfare item 25, northern affairs and national resources items 10, 45 and 90, public works items 5, 45, 70, 100, 105, 125, 145, 168 170, 180, 190 and 200, Royal Canadian Mounted Police items 5, 15 and 25, transport items 35, 40, 60, 80, 85, 100, 125, 222 and 225 loans investments and advances item L20 $292,175,958;

(b) an additional one twelfth of the amounts of defence production item 25, external affairs item 5, northern affairs and national resources item 105, of the said revised estimates, $1,842,041.67;

(c) one twelfth of the total of the amounts of the items set forth in the supplementary estimates (A) for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1963, except external affairs item 112a, transport items 213a and 222a, $8,738,178.92;

(d) ten twelths of the total of the amounts of the items set forth in the supplementary estimates (B) for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1963, $27,333,333.34, be granted to Her Majesty on account of the present fiscal year ending March 31, 1963.

(Translation):

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, following the few remarks I made last Friday, I should like to deal once more with a matter of concern to at least some of us who are sitting here, that is to say the French speaking members of this house.

I have known for a long time that the English speaking Canadians constitute a great nation which can be fair and respectful of the rights of other racial groups, particularly when the latter know how to respect themselves and command the respect of others; the fact remains, however, that we sometimes meet a few rare individuals who may destroy that desire for perfect harmony and good understanding between the two nations forming this country.

When we hear, for instance, a man who has left school at the age of 15 say that the educational system of the province of Quebec is inadequate and cannot train competent men, we cannot help but think that this man is a victim of his own incompetence and that, to correct such a situation, he is simply trying to gather around him men who are more competent than himself.

In fact, if we excluded those few individuals, those few fanatics, we would then have two great races living side by side, that is to say English speaking Canadians and French speaking Canadians. Our country would then have two racial groups able to live in harmony with one another, commanding the respect of one another and respecting the rights of one another, both participating in the achievement of what may become one of the greatest countries in the world, Canada.

Mr. Chairman, we French speaking Canadians do not suffer from an inferiority complex when it comes to entering this struggle to develop our country and make it one of the greatest in the world.

We have survived for more than four centuries in our country. You can be sure, Mr. Chairman, that we shall not only continue to survive but to live as a nation here in Canada.

We have fought for the survival of our nation. That might be why we are all the more proud to be French speaking citizens.

Mr. Chairman, before I came to Ottawa as a member of the House of Commons, I had been warned that I would be treated as a stranger in a city where one can hardly expect to be understood in French and where we would not be considered as full Canadian citizens.

I do not know what was the situation before, but since my arrival I believe, on the contrary, that it is possible for the two great nations of the country to reach a perfect understanding.

Mr. Chairman, French Canadians have always been knocked about and crushed by politics in the past. Today, the tendency is to deal with all questions without regard to politics and indeed politicians.

Since the beginning of this session, we have constantly made representations on certain points concerning bilingualism, and we have obtained satisfactory results from this government on several occasions. But then, we have invariably been dealing with specific points.

Today, we want a general understanding on all points, a complete policy statement on bilingualism and on the participation of French Canadians at all levels of the civil service.

Mr. Chairman, I am satisfied that this purpose may be achieved, for I have had the opportunity to realize, since I came to this house, that there are, in all parts of parliament, Canadians who are sincerely hoping for complete co-operation so that the two great nations of our country can live side by side, respecting the rights of one another.

Mr. Chairman, I have met in this house some of those Canadians who are really hoping for a full understanding between our two nations. I have had talks with members from all the parties in this house, who want to see this co-operation between the two nations.

To name only a few of those who have shown this hope for a perfect understanding between the two nations, I shall mention the Prime Minister of our country as well as some members of his cabinet, like Mr. Nowlan and Mr. Fleming.

I met English speaking Liberals, also, like Messrs. Walter Gordon, Turner, Paul Martin, as well as members of the New Democratic party, like Mr. MacInnis, Mr. Peters and others, and in our own party, Mr. Thompson, Mr. Leboe—

(Text):

The Chairman: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but I would inform him that it is not the practice to mention hon. members by name either in committee or in the house. If he refers to them again I wish he would refer to them by their constituencies.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, I used their personal names because I did not know the names of their constituencies.

(Translation):

Mr. Chairman, I had the opportunity of meeting some English speaking members of this house and after talking to them, I found them sincerely anxious to foster a spirit of co-operation between the two great racial groups which form our country, this Canada of ours.

Mr. Chairman, I feel that it is time now to set up a royal commission on bilingualism and on French Canadian participation in the civil service at all levels. Many individuals and organizations have asked for the establishment of such a commission.

Mr. Laurendeau of Le Devoir has taken the lead and other papers have followed suit. I have personally been asked, as well as several other members of this house, that a royal commission on bilingualism be established. St. Jean Baptiste societies, chambers of commerce, social clubs, student groups and many individuals are among those who are asking for the setting up of such a commission.

Mr. Chairman, there is no question here of threatening or blackmailing, but we feel it is time to review the situation. French Canada will survive whatever happens, it will develop in the whole of Canada in full recognition of its rights, or it will go towards a separate existence.

I think the time has come to study the matter seriously, to consider the situation as a whole, and that is why we take the opportunity of claiming, even of demanding of the government positive action in the form of this commission which has been insistently requested these last several months.

(Text):

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Chairman, we are now considering interim supply which, when passed, will have provided for ten twelfths of an expenditure of $6 billion, no single dollar of which has been passed by this house as an estimate. This fact has been pointed out by other hon. members and it will be pointed out again. At this moment I do not propose to spend any more time on that subject, but I should like to say something about a matter which, even in a technical sense, is covered by interim supply, because it is a subject which does involve intervention by the federal government in provincial-federal relations, and in other ways which bring the whole question to our attention; the question of provincial-federal relations, which has been dealt with in the last few minutes by my hon. friend who preceded me. I propose to deal with one aspect of it shortly and I hope in an entirely non-partisan way.

[Mr. Gregoire.]

Mr. Chairman, our country is now preparing to celebrate the centenary of our confederation. We have a bill before us, at least certain proposals are before us, which make us conscious of this fact. It should be an occasion for thanksgiving and for hope. And yet, as we prepare for this centennial celebration, we in Canada are anxious, indeed uncertain, about our future. We seem doubtful and confused about our place and our role in a rapidly changing world. Our wealth and our resources, both human and material, are great. Our standard of living is high. But we worry, and in my opinion rightly, about inadequate economic growth and the unemployment which results from that, about our unfavourable international balance of payments, and about other things which may affect our future. We worry because we are becoming more and more dependant instead of less and less dependant upon the United States economically, culturally and even politically. This leaves us with a feeling of frustration and irritation. Recent events have shown clearly that we are going through another serious crisis of national unity, and I do not think it is an exaggeration to call it this. Not only have we been unable in this country to agree on all the symbols of nationhood long after we have become a nation, but in some quarters the very foundation of our confederation is being questioned. Professor Frank H. Underhill, a perceptive if somewhat astringent commentator on the Canadian scene, said the other day in a speech:

> The unpleasant fact is that we seem to be drifting without a compass. We have lost that conviction of positive national purpose which inspired our forefathers in 1867... We are fumbling for that lost sense of impending greatness which once buoyed us up... What the times demand of us is a higher degree of sustained intellectual effort, a more courageous imagination, a more experimental spirit than has ever been before required in our history.

Confederation was our declaration of faith in the destiny of a united Canada. It was also our declaration of independence from the United States. We would go it on our own on this continent from coast to coast, first as part of the British empire and later as an independent nation of the commonwealth of nations. We knew at that time that such a declaration, based on such a faith, would involve an economic price. We were ready then in Canada to pay that price—and I hope and believe we are still ready to do so—namely, the price of being Canadian.

Confederation, however, also involved another price which too many of us either forget or do not wish to pay because perhaps it is inconvenient for us to pay it. Confederation meant the rejection not only of political and economic annexation by the United States but also of the American melting-pot concept of national unity. Confederation may not have been technically a treaty or a compact between states, but it was an understanding or a settlement between the two founding races of Canada made on the basis of an acceptable and equal partnership. That settlement provided that national political unity would be achieved and maintained without the imposition of racial, cultural or linguistic uniformity.

I sometimes think that the understanding was more academic than actual. Outside Quebec, and as Canada grew from coast to coast, this understanding was more often honoured in the breach than in the observance and for reasons which any of us who know about the development of Canada can understand. As a result, there has grown up in this country two different interpretations of confederation. It is this difference in interpretation of confederation itself which has created and is creating today confusion, frustration and indeed some conflict.

To French speaking Canadians confederation created a bilingual and bicultural nation. It protected their language and their culture throughout the whole of Canada. It meant partnership, not domination. French speaking Canadians believed that this partnership meant equal opportunities for both the founding races to share in all phases of Canadian development.

English speaking Canadians agree, of course, that the confederation arrangements protected the rights of French Canadians in Quebec, in parliament and in federal courts; but most felt—and I think it is fair to say this—that it did not go beyond those limits, at least until recently. This meant that, for all practical purposes, there would be an English speaking Canada with a bilingual Quebec. What is called the "French fact" was to be provincial only.

Mr. Chairman, this difference over the meaning of confederation was obscured for many years after 1867 by other considerations, other considerations which I have not time to go into now. However, it is the basic source of present misunderstandings and difficulties in relations between the two founding Canadian races.

The first important clash perhaps between those two different interpretations occurred when the school question was raised in Manitoba. Then, during and after world war I, French Canada and indeed English speaking Canada too—French Canadians and English speaking Canadians—were perplexed and disheartened by the conflicting interpretation of the obligations of Canada in her participation in that war. French speaking Canadians also, and increasingly, felt they had failed somehow in their attempt to secure the acceptability of their culture in other parts of Canada. Hence they tended to withdraw, with their frustrations, into what has been called at times the Quebec reserve. This tendency to withdraw did not, of course, prevent important changes in Quebec, especially in the twenties, brought about especially by rapid industrialization.

I think it is fair to say that French Canadians were often slow to adjust themselves to this new industrial environment. Most of their leaders were trained in law, theology or in medicine. They saw Quebec's future in terms of political autonomy, decentralization and a mainly agricultural economy. There was fear of the new industrialization as something that would break up French Canada's cohesion and weaken its special values, special traditions and special culture. I believe that fear was increased, as I think the record will show, by the fact that the capital, management and skilled personnel required for industrial growth were largely imported from English speaking Canada or from the United States of America. These managers, these financiers, these technicians from outside rightly felt that they were helping to bring wealth and material progress to Quebec, and they were. It was hard for them to realize that, often through no fault of theirs, French speaking Canadians were being excluded from the direction of and even from satisfactory participation in the economic development of their own province. Changes, then, which brought economic advantages to Quebec suffered from the political disadvantage of being so often imported from outside and of often being alien to the spirit of Quebec.

There was ample room for misunderstanding here. We English speaking Canadians ought to be able to appreciate this because we often react critically to American financial control and management of industrial growth and resource development in the English speaking parts of Canada. In the English speaking provinces the barriers, when they existed, were national, not racial. In Quebec they were primarily racial but they tended also to become national when the English speaking Canadian managers, engineers and technicians made no greater effort to adapt themselves to a Quebec cultural and linguistic environment than did Americans who had come there.

This, Mr. Chairman, was bound to bring about political strains and stresses in Quebec's economic progress. In spite of much sincere and conscientious effort on both sides, and I think that effort has increased in recent years, to reduce and remove these strains, "The Two Solitudes" developed side by side in many of the cities and industrial areas in the province of Quebec. In earlier years after confederation this state, if I may call it that, of bicultural co-existence did not raise many or obvious problems. In those days there were only marginal contacts between the two groups and English had become the language of bilingualism. Even after world war II, when things began to change rapidly in Quebec, the Union Nationale regime helped to hide what was taking place in French Canada from the English speaking community.

This Quebec industrial revolution was accompanied, as revolutions of this kind nearly always are, by parallel revolutions in other fields. Perhaps it was most apparent in the arts and in literature. But the structure of society was also changing in other respects as well. Co-operatives, labour unions, credit unions all grew rapidly in that province. Even more important were the changes taking place in the system of education there. Engineering, commerce, the natural sciences and the social sciences began to attract a greater and greater number of students.

People in English speaking Canada were aware, of course, that something was happening in Quebec. We were becoming more and more conscious than we were before of Quebec's importance as a partner in confederation. We were not lacking in good will and in a desire to understand the special situation of Quebec. But perhaps we needed shock treatment to make us appreciate the full significance of what had happened, of Quebec's social revolution. That shock was given in recent years by separatism, by the agitation in some quarters, which got so much publicity, for what was called political liberation. That was an extreme reaction to what had been going on for at least 15 years in industrial and social change. Less extreme reactions, however, were perhaps even more significant and quite as sincere as a reflection of Quebec's impatience with her present position in confederation. In any event, for Quebec the period of rural isolationism was over and the prospect of mere survival, even industrial survival, in confederation was not good enough.

It is now clear to all of us, I think, that French speaking Canadians are determined to become directors of their economic and cultural destiny in their own changed and changing society. They feel that in doing so they are not being isolationists but that, on the contrary, only in this way can they make their rightful contribution to the true development of Canadian confederation. To this end they also ask for equal and full opportunity to participate in all federal government services, in which their own language will be fully recognized. This right flows from the equal partnership of confederation.

Are these objectives of full participation in the discharge of national responsibilities along with the full enjoyment of rights and opportunities attainable for all French speaking citizens in our country as it is at present organized in confederation? I submit that the answer depends in part on French speaking Canadians themselves, on their willingness to continue the effort they have been making, on a large scale since 1960, to develop educational facilities and to ensure that there will be enough qualified French speaking Canadians to exploit the opportunities and fulfil the responsibilities that develop.

But the answer also depends, and I believe in greater degree, on English speaking Canadians because we are in the majority. In managerial levels in industry, for instance, and in the federal public services it is the English speaking Canadians who must accept the changes which are required to make a reality of full partnership. Are we willing to do it? Are we prepared not only to accept those long term objectives of partnership but, perhaps more important and more difficult for us, to take immediate and concrete steps to achieve them?

If the answer to these questions is in the affirmative, then we can be confident of the future of our united country and we can look forward to a new era of strength and unity which will enable us to overcome any economic, cultural and political differences and to go forward together as Canadians. But if the answer is negative, not so much the answer in words but the answer in fact, and if we become unaware or careless of the obligations and opportunities of true partnership, we will continue in this country to drift from one difficulty to another until a majority of people on both sides will have had enough of this unique Canadian experience. The final result of that would, indeed, be separatism. I am sure we are all in full agreement that this course would be only a desperate and despairing solution, for it would mean the end of our united country and the betrayal of a great national heritage. It would be a loss, an indescribable loss to us all.

Today, when the greatest need of free men and free nations is to come closer together politically, economically and culturally, to accept and act on the compulsions and opportunities of interdependence; at this time of all times it would be a tragic thing for Canadians to have to admit their failure to unify their own country in any real and meaningful sense, which means unity without sacrificing special and separate values. No Canadian, surely, could contemplate with anything but bitter regret the weakening, let alone the failure, of confederation, especially when Canada has grown so much in stature and achieved so much respect in the world.

But we cannot afford to be complacent about this. The world around us shows that nations, when reasonable and acceptable compromises are postponed or are offered too late, will resort to desperate solutions which earlier had appeared to be unthinkable to them, and against their own best interests.

So, Mr. Chairman, we should be careful not to be complacent about what is happening. We should also be careful not to let emotions created by immediate controversies or special incidents warp our judgment or distort our perspective. We should not assume that cracks mean the wall is falling. On the other hand, we will never restore strength merely by papering over the cracks as they occur. It is a time, Mr. Chairman, not for extremists and their passions but for a deep, responsible, and understanding examination of basic situations.

This means, I believe, that we have now reached a stage when we should seriously and collectively in this country review the bicultural and bilingual situation in our country; our experiences in the teaching of English and French, and in the relations existing generally between our two founding racial groups. In this review there should also be in my view, every opportunity and every encouragement for Canadians, individually or in their associations, and organizations, to express their ideas on this situation. If they find it unsatisfactory they should suggest concrete measures to meet it and to reach a better, more balanced participation of our two founding groups in our national affairs.

Are we ready, for instance, to give to all young Canadians a real opportunity to become truly bilingual? If the answer is yes, as I am sure it would be, what concrete steps should be taken at the different levels of our educational system to bring about this opportunity, having regard to the fact that constitutional responsibility for education is, and must remain, exclusively provincial? What further contribution to this end have we the right to expect from radio, from television and from films in both languages? How can we encourage more frequent contacts between young Canadians?

Then, there is the question which has already been mentioned in this debate, one of specific and inescapable federal responsibility. What are the reasons why there are relatively so few French speaking Canadians in the professional and administrative jobs of the federal civil service, including crown corporations and federal agencies? How can that situation be improved as it must be improved? Would it be desirable, for instance, to have a bilingual school of public administration operated by the federal government in Ottawa?

There are a great many more questions that we might ask ourselves. These questions are now very much in the minds of Canadians, more so I believe than ever before in our history. They deserve concrete answers because they are vital to our future as a united country. They should be thoroughly examined and Canadians should be given an opportunity of expressing their views about them. There could not be any better preparation for the celebration of the centenary of confederation than to seek and find these answers. The federal government, as I have already stated and as is obvious to us all, has a special and exclusive responsibility to do something about the federal service and the crown companies. But an inquiry here, Mr. Chairman, and even necessary changes, will not in my view go far enough. Many of the most important problems to be solved fall within provincial jurisdiction, especially those arising out of the teaching of both languages. Therefore, if this wider inquiry into the means of developing the bicultural character of Canadian confederation is to be undertaken, the provincial governments would have to be associated with it.

I suggest that to this end the federal government should consult with the provincial governments without delay. If these consultations—I hope this would not happen and I cannot see any reason why it should—do not result in a positive response or if they are delayed, then of course any federal government would have an obligation to go ahead with the inquiry into matters which fall within its own jurisdiction. One additional advantage, Mr. Chairman, of the joint inquiry, that is with the provinces, is that it would show the importance of the contribution to our national development made by Canadians other than the founding races, which has been of special and indeed exciting value since world war II. This contribution of new Canadians from old races has added strength, colour and vitality to the pattern of our national life. It has enriched Canadianism by qualities inherited from old and noble traditions and cultures of other lands.

What better way could we prepare for our centenary than by taking effective steps now to deepen and strengthen the reality and the hopes of confederation so that all Canadians, without regard to race or language or cultural backgrounds, may feel with confidence that within this nation they can realize, without discrimination and in full partnership, a good destiny for themselves and for those who follow them. In that spirit of hope and confidence we can all work together and build up a greater and more united Canada.

(Translation):

Mr. Sevigny: Mr. Chairman, we have heard two remarkable speeches this afternoon. The first one by the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Gregoire), and the second one by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson).

Of course, I am in agreement with the remarks of the Leader of the Opposition when he says that it is essential to have a better understanding between the two great racial groups forming this country.

It is quite obvious that our country will reach the full scope of its magnificent destiny when the two great racial groups in this country will live in a climate of mutual understanding and full co-operation.

This good understanding is now facing obstacles, the first of which being, it seems, a mistaken view of the educational system in the province of Quebec. As a result some people in the other provinces and even in our own province think that the graduates of our secondary schools and of our universities are not qualified to occupy important positions in nearly all spheres of Canadian activity.

It is unfortunate that such publicity should be made at this time about certain incidents and statements involving businessmen or company heads who, perhaps in order to excuse their regrettable omissions, try to put the blame on a lack of education in order to excuse the faults of their own administration.

Mr. Chairman, as several members of this house, I am a graduate of our secondary schools, and I have studied a few years in our universities. I have had the opportunity of talking with graduates of secondary institutions or university establishments of other provinces, and I have been in a position to realize that the graduates of Laval or Montreal universities, of the Quebec school of commerce, of the Montreal school of higher commercial studies, of Polytechnique, and of our other schools, are as qualified as graduates of any other similar school or university in Canada to occupy commanding positions in any sphere of activity.

That is why I do not hesitate to say that if, in private industry or elsewhere, French Canadians could not be found to fill important posts, it is mainly due to the fact that no effort has been made to find competent people where they could be found.

The other day I made the following suggestion: let the heads of big corporations carefully examine the list of graduates of our secondary and university establishments for the last ten years, let them pick the first ten in each year, and they will have immediately a reserve of qualified men among whom they will be able to select the French Canadians they need, not only in order to give French Canada its fair share, but in order to improve the quality of their own concerns.

Mr. Chairman, our English speaking fellow citizens have their own faults too, just as we have ours in French Canada. Those faults must be eliminated. Any act done on the spur of spontaneous anger which deeply hurts not only our English speaking fellow citizens but also our French speaking ones constitutes a stumbling block which may destroy the hopes of those who see in the existence of harmony and unity between both races the solution to the main problems of the country.

I condemn those who allowed the war memorial in Ottawa to be desecrated. I also condemn those who were responsible for the taking-down of the red ensign on Place Ville-Marie or who allowed this thing to happen.

I long with all my heart for the day when, united at last, all Canadians will rally behind one clearly distinctive flag which every patriotic Canadian will salute as the emblem of national unity.

It is precisely with that purpose in mind that the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) announced recently that early next year the government would call a conference of provincial and federal statesmen to promote the adoption of a symbol around which all Canadians will rally and which will permanently identify our Canadian sovereignty.

Mr. Chairman, a while ago, I was asking our English speaking fellow citizens to show better understanding and to make a better study of the undeniable qualifications of our university graduates, but I think it is also necessary to ask the children of French Canada to realize that too stormy public protestations are not likely to bring our fellow citizens in other provinces to understand that we must go ahead in a conciliatory spirit.

I approved most of the remarks of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson), but I regretted a statement that we hear all too often at the present time in every speech of those who adopt the Liberal philosophy or support the Liberal policy in Quebec or elsewhere. In fact, it is suggested that nothing was done in Quebec before the present provincial administration took over in 1960. To deny that projects were carried out prior to 1960 is simply to deny the truth. Those who studied what happened before 1960, in the province of Quebec, are in a position to note that under the provincial administrations that were in office before the present one, all our schools and our education system made tremendous progress. More than 4,000 schools were built in the province of Quebec, and it is absolutely false to say that nothing was done in our province before 1960. People who say that are simply giving those who claim that we are not qualified one more reason to refuse us key posts in our industries.

If, in fact, nothing was done before 1960, those who claim that we are not entitled to key posts in industry or elsewhere, because of our lack of qualifications, would be right. But a lot was done and I repeat what I said at the beginning of my remarks: the graduates from our universities, our secondary schools, are just as qualified today to hold those key posts as they were before the present government, that is the Liberal government, took office in the province of Quebec.

I commend the present Liberal authorities for the impulse they are trying to give to education in our province. I believe that all those who take an interest in the vital question of education will encourage any party that seeks to improve the training given our young people and advance the cause of education. But the cause of education has not progressed to a satisfactory level. The programs of our schools and colleges have not been modified sufficiently during the last two years for anyone to claim that before 1960 our education system was nil in Quebec and that at last today perfection has been attained for the sole reason that there is a new political regime in Quebec city.

Intellectuals who are anxious to acquire culture would have occupied as high a rank before 1960 as they do now under the present government.

But to say that intellectual activity has existed in the province of Quebec only for two years is, unfortunately, using political arguments for the sole aim of convincing voters that they are better off with one party instead of the other, but that is not so, actually.

A few moments ago, the Leader of the Opposition suggested in most convincing terms that a federal-provincial conference should be called for the consideration of this problem of applying integral bilingualism and giving a fair share to our people in the civil service and in crown corporations. There is merit in that suggestion and, as I said before, a federal-provincial conference will be called at the beginning of the year in order to determine, in a spirit of co-operation and understanding, what is needed and should be done in order to endow our nation with the symbols of its sovereignty.

All those steps should be taken and all those problems studied most carefully, in a spirit of good will, as mentioned earlier by the member for Lapointe (Mr. Gregoire) when he said that he had noticed among his English speaking colleagues in the house a desire for Canadian unity, similar to that which exists in the province of Quebec.

Such an atmosphere should prevail during this conference when all those other steps will be taken jointly by Canadians called upon to settle this most important question of national unity.

I feel that it would now be proper to ask all Canadians to write to their members of parliament and send suggestions on matters pertaining to the emblem of unity that we want, to that sovereignty which is so essential, because as long as the Canadian people will not rally around those symbols, the principle of a bi-ethnic and bilingual culture will not be fully respected. Unfortunately, we shall witness demonstrations similar to those staged following the incident which involved the president of the C.N.R. We shall see other such incidents multiply and give rise to all kinds of uneasiness which far from bringing us together, will draw us apart, thus almost justifying those who see in false theories an answer to our problems.

No, Mr. Chairman, far from separating, we must unite more than ever, here in Canada. Far from separating, we must understand the necessity of joining around the symbols of sovereignty I mentioned earlier.

At a time when the nations of the world, having understood at last, after so many wars and sacrifices, that it is definitely essential to unite if we want final peace, would it be logical for a country like Canada, which is only at the beginning of a wonderful destiny, to disunite because of pointless quarrels which could be settled with a little goodwill and mutual understanding.

Mr. Chairman, those who advocate separatism are working against the best interests of Canada. They forget in particular the sacrifices made during the two world wars by Canadians who went to the battlefields to defend not a foreign cause but the cause of freedom, the cause of Canada which some of them cherished even more than their lives.

Canada has to be united. It is essential for Canadians to find, through the representatives they have elected to parliament to give them guidance and unity, formulas which will bring about mutual understanding. Canadians must unite, and that objective will be achieved only when Canadians will have understood that the role which is reserved for French Canadians, in this Canadian land, must have the same importance on the federal scene as well as in private enterprise, as the one which is entrusted to English Canadians or other racial groups living in this country.

Our English speaking colleagues must understand not only our problems, but also the fact that we, French Canadians, are here to stay, that we are deeply attached to our French traditions and that we wish to keep on speaking this language which is our mother tongue, and one of the most beautiful in the world. English Canadians must understand the need which French Canada has of maintaining its cultural tradition, because it is only through the maintenance of that cultural tradition that the citizens of French Canada will fully develop.

On the other hand, French speaking Canadians must understand that there exists among their English speaking colleagues a desire to understand them, to be conciliatory and to sit down with them around a conference table, in order to find the formulas which may bring about good understanding between all groups.

Mr. Chairman, I am of the opinion that this debate is necessary.

The Deputy Chairman: Order.

Mr. Sevigny: I think it behooves us—

[Mr. Sevigny.]

(Text):

The Deputy Chairman: Order. It being five o'clock, it is my duty to leave the chair in order that the house may proceed to the consideration of private members' business, pursuant to section 3 of standing order 15.

Progress reported.

Mr. Speaker: It being five o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on the order paper, namely the notices of motion which appear on page 28.

BROADCASTING

REQUEST FOR SURVEY OF COMMERCIAL ADVERTISING ON RADIO AND TELEVISION

On the order: Private members' notices of motion:

That a special committee be appointed to carry out a survey of all aspects of commercial advertising on Canadian television and radio, in certain newspapers and other fields of mass communication, for the purpose of recommending what steps, if any, should be taken to prevent the distribution of fraudulent and misleading advertising to Canadian consumers;

That the said committee consist of fifteen members to be named at a later date, nine of whom shall constitute a quorum;

That the said committee be empowered to send for persons, papers and records; to sit while the house is sitting; to report from time to time; and to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be ordered by the committee, and that standing order 66 be suspended in relation thereto.

Mr. MacRae: Stand.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member requests that this motion stand, but it was called for the first time on December 12. If it is not proceeded with today it will disappear from the order paper pursuant to standing order 48, subparagraph (1). Is the hon. member still requesting that the order stand?

Mr. MacRae: Stand.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

SUGGESTED INTRODUCTION OF MEASURE TO ENSURE FULL EMPLOYMENT

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre) moved:

That, in the opinion of this house, the government should give consideration to the advisability of introducing a measure to be known as "The Canada Full Employment Act", and that consideration should be given to including in the said proposed measure, inter alia, the following provisions: (a) a clearcut recognition by parliament of the importance of full employment as a national policy; (b) a declaration that it is the responsibility of the federal government to take the steps that are necessary to provide and maintain a full employment economy; (c) the establishing of a council of economic advisers, empowered to make regular reports containing economic analyses and projections based on objective research, such reports to be made public; and (d) a requirement that there be an annual report to parliament, by the minister responsible for the administration of the act, on measures taken under its provisions, with opportunity for scrutiny and debate, so that parliament might make sure that the purposes of the proposed act are fulfilled.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this motion, as its terms indicate, asks that consideration be given to the enacting of a statute to be known as "The Canada Full Employment Act". I believe that this is the first time such a proposal has been formally placed before the House of Commons. If one has in mind the batting average of private members' motions and private members' bills, I suppose I should not be too hopeful that it will pass in the hour allotted to it. However, hope does spring eternal, and because of the great importance of the subject matter of this motion I dare to hope that the house might give its approval to it. If this does not happen today I am satisfied, Mr. Speaker, that it will happen some day; that the day will come when there will be on our statute books an act of this description. When that day comes a full employment act, or a guaranteed employment act, will rank with what I hope by that time is a proper bill of rights, and with other such pieces of legislation as amongst the most important items on our statute books.

Mr. Speaker, when Canada first came into being in 1867, and when the parliament of Canada was created by the British North America Act of that day, it was felt that the role of government was somewhat limited. It was the job of parliament and of the government to arrange for the administration of essential services, to provide for the defence of the country, to organize the postal services, and things of that sort, but it was the feeling of that day that the functions of the government should be limited. In the 95 years since confederation the picture has changed considerably. The number of responsibilities which fall to parliament and government has grown, and will continue to grow in the years which lie ahead. In particular we have multiplied the services, the organization and provision of which we recognize as the responsibility of government. We have gone a great way, even in the political lifetimes of many of us in this chamber, in the field of social security in the enactment of measures which were visionary and idealistic a generation or two ago. Things which are thought to be beyond the responsibility of government are now on our statute books. I feel, Mr. Speaker, that one of the next areas into which we must move, and move with determination, is the question of seeing to it that full employment is provided for our people. The fact that this sort of thing is happening is, of course, supported by certain pieces of legislation which are before this parliament. The rules prevent me from referring to them in any detail, but I think it would be in order for me to say in passing that the very fact that we are discussing such items as an Atlantic development board and a national economic development board is an admission by the government and this parliament that there is a job now for both government and parliament to do in the economic field.

Mr. Speaker, we feel that what is required is far more than is suggested in these other pieces of legislation which are before this house. We think that something comparable to a bill of rights, something comparable to the assertion that there are basic things which belong to the people of this country, should be done in the field of guaranteeing full employment. That is why we suggest in the terms of this resolution that this house should ask the government to give consideration to the advisability of bringing such a measure before parliament. As suggested in the resolution, we propose that such a statute should include a number of things. In the first place, it should include a clearcut recognition by parliament of the importance of full employment as a national policy. When we reach the point where we accept that responsibility as a parliament, we will be able to do something about it, rather than just hoping that private industry, under benefits and arrangements made by the government, will do the job for us. I suggest this becomes just as important a responsibility and as important a function for the parliament of Canada now as the social services we provide, as the defence of the nation, as our diplomatic policy, and as our basic human rights. In fact, one of the things missing in the discussion which took place in this house during the last parliament on the bill of rights was the question of the important economic and social rights which belong to our people. Therefore, we feel that parliament should declare quite clearly and in forthright manner that we do not leave this responsibility to private sectors of the economy, that we do not leave it to chance. We accept it as parliament's responsibility to maintain a policy of full employment.

A second recognition which we feel should be in a full employment act or a guaranteed employment act should be a declaration that it is the responsibility of the federal government to take the steps necessary to provide and maintain a full employment economy. Here again it will be noted that we are asking for a good deal more than that which is proposed in other items of legislation before this parliament at the present time. We ask not just for boards or committees to discuss these things; we ask for recognition in a statute of parliament that it is the responsibility of the federal government to take the necessary steps which will provide full employment for our people.

A third proposal which we think should be in a statute of this kind would be one for the setting up of a council of economic advisers. This is something far more than is proposed with regard to a certain board being discussed under another item. We feel that this council of economic advisers should be empowered to make regular reports containing economic analyses and projections based on objective research, and that all these reports made by the council of economic advisers should be made public.

The fourth of the items which we suggest should be in such a statute would be the requirement that there should be an annual report to parliament, by the minister responsible for the administration of the act, of measures taken under its provisions so that there would be an opportunity for scrutiny and debate, to the end that the House of Commons will be able to make sure that the purposes of the act are being fulfilled. In other words, what we are suggesting is that concern for the economy or concern that the economy produce full employment be put at the very centre of our responsibilities as the elected representatives of the people of this country. If the House of Commons will take this responsibility and if we will get down to business and do the things which are necessary in terms of economic planning, enlarging the public sector, and greater public ownership, in order to provide full employment, on that basis we believe we can do just about all the things we feel we should be doing for our people.

For example, we know that we have a long way to go in this country in terms of providing adequate housing. We know that we have a tremendous way to go in terms of providing health care for all our people. A moment ago I spoke about the progress we have made in the field of social security. However, we have a great deal to do yet in that field. We cannot do these things as we should do them while we are suffering from unemployment and while we are failing to produce the wealth or the goods and the services which we have the capacity to bring into being. However, if we provide full employment, if we make that responsibility a major concern of the parliament and the government of Canada, we can really fill the bill in terms of housing, health, security, education and all the things our people need.

[Mr. Knowles.]

There is one other area which concerns us greatly today, namely our contribution to building up the economies of the underdeveloped countries of the world. We know that in this way and in this way only can we achieve and maintain permanent peace. In order to do this, in order to make a significant contribution—and I suggest that it should be a massive one—to the development of underdeveloped countries, it will be necessary to have full employment and to have people at work producing goods and services on a scale far beyond anything in existence in Canada at the present time. In other words, we are concerned not just with taking up the slack so that there will not be unemployment and the suffering that goes with it; we are concerned about the kind of full, effective and efficient employment that produces goods and services which will provide a good economy and a good standard of living for our people and which will enable us in Canada to make a significant contribution to improving the conditions of life for people the world around and in so doing will enable us to make a significant contribution toward the peace of the world.

So, Mr. Speaker, I emphasize as I did at the start the fact that this is the kind of statute that would put concern for full employment at the centre of our parliamentary responsibilities; it is comparable to a bill of rights or to those thinks that belong in the basic constitution of a nation such as ours. This kind of statute is one that sooner or later we must have. Because of the present need for action in our own time we hope that something may be done about this matter at an early date.

By the very nature of things this resolution cannot put the proposed statute on the statute books; it is put forward as a private members' resolution which asks that the government give consideration to the advisability of taking this course. Because of its importance I hope that there will be a reasonable amount of discussion of this proposal but that the house may see fit to endorse the motion and ask the government to consider this extremely important matter.

Mr. H. E. Gray (Essex West): Mr. Speaker, in listening to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) who just spoke, I noted one of his remarks in which he indicated, if I may paraphrase his words, that this was the first time something of this nature had been brought before this house. I would suggest that this is not really the first time something of this nature has been before us. Back in 1945, in a somewhat different form, the Liberal government of that day brought down a famous white paper on employment and income which laid out the chart for Canada's progress in the post-war years until 1957. In that white paper it was set forth as a matter of government policy that full employment was an aim of government for the Canadian people. I quote from page 1:

> The central task of reconstruction in the interests of the armed services and civilians alike, must be to accomplish a smooth, orderly transition, from the economic conditions of war to those of peace and to maintain a high and stable level of employment and income. The government adopts this as a primary object of policy ... In setting as its aim a high and stable level of employment and income, the government is not selecting a lower target than "full employment".

In summarizing, at page 23, the various policies set forth in this famous white paper, it concluded as follows:

> In this paper, the government has stated unequivocally its adoption of a high and stable level of employment and income, and thereby higher standards of living, as a major aim of government policy.

In this white paper were set forth policies which stimulated the expansion of the Canadian economy and created jobs for hundreds of thousands of soldiers returning from the war. They included policies with regard to low interest rates, incentives for private investment, public investment, the stimulation of housing and slum clearance. When we look at the record of Canada between 1945 and 1957 we can see the record of achievement which resulted from this clear statement of policy in this famous white paper in 1945. We had a rate of growth that made us the envy of the world. We had a rate of employment that certainly ranked with the best in the world either before or since.

I do not think I need to dwell at this time on what has happened since 1957. The Canadian people know only too well the differences between the years before 1957 and the years after, the lag in economic growth, in fact the outright decay and stagnation of our economic life, the startling increase in our rate of unemployment which, unfortunately, at times put us among those countries with the highest rates of unemployment in the world.

It is true that the time has come once again for a further clear cut and definitive statement of policy that full employment shall once again be a major aim of the government of Canada. But if once again we adopt this as a policy, I suggest that we must make sure that the policy is carried out in ways which continue to provide freedom of choice for workers in going from job to job, freedom of movement for those workers who want to move. As a basic aim, however, this aim of full employment is still as valid today as it was in 1945. Unfortunately, in spite of the manner in which this has been brought most forcefully to the attention of the people of Canada and the manner in which the people of Canada have brought their dissatisfaction with this state of affairs to the attention of the government, a dissatisfaction expressed most forcibly in the rather startling decline in seats now held by the government compared with after the previous election, we still see, in looking at the dominion bureau of statistics publication dealing with the labour force, that the unemployment rate in November of this year was 5.2 per cent compared with 5.4 per cent in November, 1961.

I mention this not only to draw to the attention of the house something which is all too obvious to all too many people in this country, but also to point out that statements of policy, whether in a white paper or in an act of this parliament as suggested by the last speaker, are really not enough. There has to be the will and desire to carry out and implement policies based on the basic policy to which I have referred. The bill of rights, to which reference was made by the hon. member who just spoke, is a good example of this particular point. It is on the statute books and reads very well, but we still do not have the achievement of all the basic rights that are supposed to be embodied in it. In fact, Mr. Speaker, I am sorry to say it even appears from time to time that the present government, which seems to take such pride in the passage of that act, ignores its precepts in carrying on their activities. Therefore I suggest that if you have an act of this type on the statute books it must be accompanied by the will and desire to carrry out the appropriate policies foreshadowed in a piece of legislation of this type.

I do not think it is necessary to discuss in detail the various parts of the resolution. Some of them are now before the house in other forms. In passing, however, I must say that I was interested to note the remarkable similarity of this resolution to the employment act of 1946 of the United States. I do not say this by way of criticism particularly. Certainly we have not reached the stage of perfection in this country that we can afford not to get good ideas from other places in the world, but I thought I should remark upon that in passing. In any event, Mr. Speaker, measures of this type are already before the house in other forms in one way or another.

But I do want to conclude my remarks by pointing out that full employment remains and even more than ever is a basic policy of the Liberal party today. Full employment in an expanding economy will be the first aim of the new Liberal government. So we stated during the last election, so we stated previously; and I do not think we can reiterate this basic principle of policy too often because I am sure we will have the first opportunity to put this policy into effect.

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I should like to take a few minutes to speak briefly on this motion. At the outset let me say that there is reference to such an act in the submission presented to the cabinet by the Canadian Labour Congress in March of 1962. It is in substantially the same terms as the resolution now before us in the name of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). However, there is no reference to such an act in the latest brief of the Canadian Labour Congress presented to the government last week. Perhaps in the interval they have had second thoughts about the efficacy of such a bill, or perhaps its omission from their latest brief may be connected with the fact that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is no longer executive vice president of the Canadian Labour Congress. In any case, although the motion leaves a lot to be desired it is all we have to go on at the present time and the present discussion must, therefore, be based on the terms which the hon. member has seen fit to place before the house.

In a general way, before examining in detail the terms of the proposed bill, it is perhaps useful to consider the general principle of a bill to legislate full employment. It is, of course, in line with socialist thinking that by simply waving a legislative wand, as it were, all problems of the economy can be cured. Perhaps this is what they mean when they talk about planning, that it is merely a matter of putting legislation into effect to bring about those desirable objectives which we would all like to achieve and to eliminate all problems which are currently the lot of troubled humanity. Would it were that easy.

There are some problems that cannot be solved simply by saying "let there be light". At least, in the past they have only been solved in that manner through the possession of those divine faculties which the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has not yet given satisfactory evidence of possessing. In effect this bill, if passed, would simply say, "let there be full employment", and the minister would be in the position of reporting from time to time on the extent to which this injunction was being realized.

I have strong doubts, Mr. Speaker, that simply by passing a bill of this nature full employment can be created. If it were only that simple then, of course, all our problems would be over. If the bill obviously cannot accomplish what it sets out to accomplish, then what is its purpose? I am afraid that it would become simply another case of window dressing.

When you examine the resolution closely, Mr. Speaker, you will find that the hon. member has included a number of provisions which he would like to have in the proposed bill. They are in summary: First, clearcut recognition by parliament of the importance of full employment as a national policy. Surely, Mr. Speaker, there is not an hon. member in this house who does not favour full employment as a national policy. The only possible exception might be the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. Gordon) who, I believe in the course of some of his writings, has stated that a certain level of unemployment "helps to keep the economy flexible". That statement can be found on page 421 of the Gordon commission report. With that possible exception every member of the house, I am sure, has favoured the principle of full employment.

This is a proposal that, when looked at closely, will not provide one single job for one single Canadian, and from that point of view simply reduces itself to a form of legislative wishful thinking. I do not think parliament should be asked to approve legislation dealing with wishful thinking. I would suggest that if the hon. member has some definite and positive, some concrete and practical proposition to provide jobs, then he should bring it forward. Were he to do so, I feel he would get quite a bit of support. I do not think it can be done by the embodiment of a pious platitude in the form of parliamentary legislation. When the time comes that parliament indulges in this sort of phraseology as a substitute for hard, legislative action, then we will have gone a long way towards losing our effectiveness.

The second provision would require a declaration to the effect it is the responsibility of the federal government to take the steps that are necessary to provide and maintain a full employment economy. This is another of those vague generalizations. I would have been far more eager to support the hon. member's motion if he had told us specifically what those necessary steps are. I would contrast this with the program of the present government which, right from the beginning, has accepted fully the fact there was an unemployment problem in this country, has accepted fully its constitutional responsibilities, and has evolved specific measures to deal with the problem. I would say that nine out of ten of those measures receive the unanimous support of this house when brought before parliament.

I would point out to the hon. member that the responsibility in this field is not solely that of the federal government. The federal government can act and has acted. Under our constitutional system, there remains a substantial field of provincial jurisdiction. I believe it was the present Liberal premier of Quebec who maintained during his 1960 campaign that unemployment was the responsibility of the province. I do not know what his stand is now since, unfortunately, unemployment in Quebec under that government is considerably higher than it is in Ontario and on the prairies. I believe it was the late Mr. King who, on one occasion, made the classic statement that there would not be one five-cent piece for those provinces which did not have Liberal governments in office. Presumably this is an example of classical politics, Liberal version. In any case, there are different viewpoints on this question of responsibility.

The hon. member's next suggestion relates to the establishment of a council of economic advisers whose only function apparently would be to make reports. Surely, the national economic development board would make this suggestion obsolete, even before it gets off the drawing board.

The final suggestion made by the hon. member relates to an annual report. In summary, therefore, the suggestion before us boils down to this; a declaration of full employment policy by parliament; a declaration by no one knows who to the effect that the federal government is responsible; regular reports from the advisory board and an annual report by a minister. No matter how I look at this bill, Mr. Speaker, I cannot see it as a vehicle to provide jobs. It is not in a class with the municipal winter works program; the vocational school program, which is providing training facilities on a national scale; the manpower adjustment measure recently introduced by the Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr); the Atlantic provinces development board which opposition members from the maritime provinces have been praising with such faint damns in the last few days, or the various other incentives and encouragements provided to industry and labour by this government.

As I say, it is a measure couched in vague generalities, embodying pious aspirations and hoping for the best. All I can say is that if we pass this bill at this time it would not result in one additional job for one single Canadian. Surely, that is the test. Let us not try to provide the public with window dressing. Let us either put forward the kind of practical, positive steps as the government has been doing, and which the house has supported, or let us refrain from taking up time.

I commend the hon. member's idealism, but certainly I cannot commend his realism in the matter. In conclusion, may I also commend to the hon. member the views expressed by Dr. Eugene Forsey at the founding convention of his party on full employment and regimentation.

Mr. A. B. Patterson (Fraser Valley): Mr. Speaker, I rise at this time to make a few observations on the measure now before the house. At the outset, I should like to say that the objective I believe is in the mind of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is indeed very commendable. His objective is to realize the desirable goal when everyone will be assured the opportunity of gainful and productive employment. As we consider that objective I am sure, as the hon. member who has just taken his seat has said, everyone in this house would agree with it. However, as we look at it there are a number of criticisms I should like to make, and I would make them I trust not in the spirit in which some criticisms have been levelled this afternoon. I want to make them as constructive as possible. I should like also to raise some questions with regard to the various sections that are in the motion.

The problem that faces us at the present time, a problem that has faced us over the years, causes us to consider the best methods and means by which we can assure the people of Canada the opportunity of gainful employment, to assure to them the possibility of meeting their own needs and the need of their families from an economic point of view. There are those who can look back to the years when this objective was far from possible even for the majority of Canadian citizens. Those were the years when dire poverty stalked the land, when the morale of the people was broken down because of their inability to provide for themselves and their families. I am sure that none of us anticipate a recurrence of the situation that faced us back in the thirties. Nevertheless, we are faced with a situation where, year after year, a considerable percentage of our people are unable to find productive and gainful employment.

I believe that this is wasteful when we consider the tremendous possibilities and the potential of this nation of ours. When we consider the needs of our people and the needs of other people, as has been pointed out by the hon. member who introduced this measure, we would say it is wasteful when people are unable to find an opportunity to employ their time and their energy in productive enterprise, and make their contribution to society in the way they would like to make it. Not only is it wasteful but it is demoralizing as well, because I am still convinced that by far the greater percentage of Canadian people would rather provide for their own needs than have agencies, organizations or governments provide for them.

They are only asking for an opportunity to use their skills, their brawn and their brain to provide for themselves and for the needs of others. So I say that this bill before us now is commendable in that it points forward towards the realization of that goal when everyone will be assured of the opportunity of gainful and productive employment. However, I would raise a number of questions concerning the measure put forward to deal with the situation.

In the first clause, it suggests that there must be a clearcut recognition by parliament of the importance of full employment, in other words a national policy of full employment. I should like to ask the hon. member, what is full employment? What does he mean by full employment? In order to have full employment, is it required that everyone work so many days a week or so many hours in a day? Does full employment mean adequate work, sufficient work to enable a person to provide adequately for himself and others who are dependent upon him? Sometimes we refer to what we call the problem of automation. Unfortunately, so far as information is concerned at the present time, it would almost seem as though automation is the problem. I suggest that it should be a blessing when people can be relieved of the drudgery of manual labour and can spend at least a certain percentage of their time in cultural and other pursuits, developing their personalities, and making contributions not only in the field of economics but in the field of arts and so on. It seems to me this is a very desirable objective to attain.

In connection with the question of full employment I would like to ask what is full employment? As I said, is it so many days a week, so many hours in each day, or is it sufficient labour to produce the goods and services that are required with the workers receiving for themselves adequate returns commensurate with their contributions?

The next clause speaks about the role of the government and suggests—

> —a declaration that it is the responsibility of the federal government to take the steps that are necessary to provide and maintain a full employment economy.

I do not know just how far the hon. member would go in applying this particular clause. He states that it is the responsibility of the government, but I do not believe it is the responsibility of government to give everyone a job. I do not believe it is the responsibility of the government to expand its services and engage in projects and all these different activities in order that it can employ more and more of the Canadian people. In contrast, I suggest the responsibility of parliament and of the government is to create a climate in this nation that will enable industry and business to move forward and produce the goods and services that are required in abundance sufficient to meet the needs of the people of Canada and of other nations. The responsibility of the government is to create an economic climate where business, industry and commerce can work and thereby provide gainful opportunities to the people of the nation.

The next clause in the motion speaks about the establishing of a council of economic advisers. The hon. member has indicated that he does not believe there would be any overlapping of responsibility between this and other activities that have already been considered in this house; but I would suggest that, in view of the fact we have so many other matters under consideration for setting up boards, commissions, committees and so on to consider these various factors, this would be a duplication of those other bodies. I just refer to one, the industrial change and manpower adjustment measure. The appointment of a council of advisers, such as indicated by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre would be a duplication of activities and interests that will be considered with respect to that measure.

Once again we raise the question as to how many of these boards, commissions and committees we are going to have in order to get our economy moving and meet the changing situations of our nation. I do not think this council would be necessary in order to achieve the desirable objectives we have in mind.

So, Mr. Speaker, we support the principle of adequate employment for our people. We support the idea that everyone who desires it should have the opportunity and privilege of engaging in gainful employment. We agree with that; but so far as some of the measures that are proposed to reach that objective are concerned, we have some questions in our minds.

I come back once again to one of the basic proposals of our group. I know it has been raised on a number of occasions and so far it has not gained universal support, but we still maintain that if we are to meet the challenges and problems facing us at the present time the government must accept responsibility to introduce measures to bring into being a financial system adequate to meet the changing situations as we find them today. That would require that adequate means be provided whereby purchasing power will be placed in the hands of the Canadian people, supplementary to wages and salaries, and that will bear a proper relationship to our production.

We believe and insist that if this were done, and goods and services moved to the people who require them, then we would achieve the objectives outlined by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre; because if this is done, then the wheels of industry and production will continue in motion, more men will be employed, wages and salaries will continue to rise and all our people will share in the national prosperity. I do not raise these questions or issues in any critical manner. We believe the objective is good, but we have reservations with regard to the means that are being proposed to remedy the situation.

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I have read with great interest the motion by the distinguished hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, and I think one might safely say that this is really an over-all attempt to legislate full employment in one fell swoop, so to speak. This motion is very much like being against sin. It is something we are all in favour of in principle and I do not think any member of the house could possibly oppose it.

Mr. Patterson: In favour of sin?

Mr. Nesbitt: Against sin. I am sorry if the hon. member for Fraser Valley (Mr. Patterson) did not understand what I meant. He is very much against sin and likewise I am sure are most other hon. members. But I would say, as I have already mentioned, that while I am sure every hon. member would agree with the principles behind this motion, I feel that it suffers a little bit from being vague and rather generalized, and because it fails to set out any positive recommendations.

I also think the motion is redundant because there are a number of pieces of legislation now before the house, indeed some that have already been passed by the house this session, which cover to a considerable extent what the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has in mind.

There are one or two other points I would like to deal with specifically. Some hon. members have already touched on them. One is paragraph (b) of the motion which suggests—> —a declaration that it is the responsibility of the federal government to take the steps that are necessary to provide and maintain a full employment economy.

I cannot help feeling that this particular section of the motion could not avoid running into constitutional difficulties at some time or another. It reminds me very much of a case back in the thirties, a very famous case before the Supreme Court of Canada, the labour convention case, where Canada agreed at an international convention to carry out certain reforms in the field of labour in Canada and then found, when the delegates came home, that they did not have the constitutional authority to do it because that power, of course, lies with the provinces. For this reason I feel that any catch-all bill, no matter how well intentioned it may be—and as this one undoubtedly is—dealing with the question of employment purely on a federal basis would run into that type of situation sooner or later, and very probably sooner.

There is another matter in paragraph (b) of the motion which has been discussed by the hon. member for Fraser Valley, and that is the question of what is meant by full employment. Full employment is one of those catch-all terms that has become coined and used in our vocabulary in modern times. It is like "disarmament". Nobody can explain exactly what disarmament means, and likewise I do not think anybody can explain what full employment means. Full employment means one thing to one person and another thing to another. For instance, I think the idea of the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. Gordon), who is so frequently quoted in this house one way and another, is that we have full employment when 4.5 per cent of the labour force is unemployed. Another person—I believe it was Mr. Claude Jodoin, but I may be mistaken and no doubt the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre will correct me on this—stated to the trades and labour congress—

Mr. Byrne: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker; I am sure the hon. member for Davenport did not say that unemployment of 4.5 per cent of the labour force would constitute full employment.

Mr. Nesbitt: I do not really think the hon. member for Kootenay East believes that is a point of order at all. However, Mr. Speaker, I qualified my remarks—

Mr. Byrne: I think what he said—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member cannot take the floor. He may only rise on a point of order or to seek to ask a question.

Mr. Byrne: On a question of privilege, Mr. Chairman, I am sure the hon. member is misquoting the hon. member for Davenport when he says that.

Mr. Speaker: Order. If the hon. member for Davenport wishes to appear in the debate, that is up to him. For an hon. member to suppose that there may be a misquotation hardly raises a question of privilege. It is a point of argument.

Mr. Byrne: It being near Christmas, Mr. Speaker, I thought the hon. member would like to be a little more charitable.

Mr. Nesbitt: Mr. Speaker, I am not in the least interested in the viewpoint of the hon. member for Kootenay East. I would point out, however, that I qualified my remarks; I said that I believed this was the figure stated by the hon. member for Davenport. I have not the slightest desire to misinterpret the hon. member, but I believe that is the figure. I was speaking off the cuff; it may be a little more or a little less, but I think it is approximately that figure. I notice that the hon. member for Kootenay East, in trying to be so helpful did not make any attempt to offer information as to what the figure might be.

To get back to where we were before the interruptions, I would like to say that this question of full employment is a matter of opinion or interpretation. Some people feel that when 2 per cent of the labour force is unemployed, this constitutes full employment, and some people think it is more. No two people seem to agree exactly. I hoped that when the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre was speaking on his resolution he would give us some idea of his interpretation of the percentage.

Mr. Speaker, I see that time is getting on and I know other hon. members would like to express their views on this resolution. Therefore I will conclude my remarks by saying that I think the problems of unemployment must be dealt with by measures that are realistic and positive, and where we can see some results in the immediate future. I would commend to hon. members some of the legislation that has been presented to this house by the present government over the last few years, and in particular during the current session. I refer, of course, to the Atlantic development board measure, which has been passed, and particularly to the national economic development board measure, which is now before the house. This development board must certainly encompass some of the suggestions that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has in his resolution. Then there is, of course, the bill standing in the name of the Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr) dealing with manpower adjustment in the face of automation. In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I should like to impress upon hon. members of the Liberal party in particular that if they were to stop conducting the filibuster in this house and get along with the legislation, something positive might be done about this problem.

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Kootenay East): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. McCleave) a day or two ago said outside the house—if I may be permitted to refer to this question—in speaking to the Conservative women's organization, that the Liberals read speeches prepared in another office. I am not sure who prepared the speech for the hon. member for Cape Breton North and Victoria (Mr. Muir) but I must say that he read it well.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) has again come forward with one of those resolutions that would give the impression that the socialist party has the elixir for all national problems. That, of course, is not true. The Liberal party, as has been pointed out by the hon. member for Essex West (Mr. Gray), has had a full employment program throughout the years. In 1956 we had very close to full employment. It was pointed out by the hon. member for Fraser Valley (Mr. Patterson) that the important thing, after all, is production and the amount of goods and services which can be purchased by a minimum amount of work.

Even the Soviet union, the nation that is truly socialized, has come to this conclusion. At the present time Mr. Khrushchev is advising his people to go to the free enterprise system to find out how production can be increased and maintained. Socialist planning does not have all the answers; this is the point I want to get across before sitting down, to give us time to vote on this matter. The socialists do not have all the answers, despite the "holier than thou" attitude, which they adopt in respect of almost all questions that arise in this house. That is all I have to say, Mr. Speaker, and I will resume my seat in order to give the house an opportunity to vote on this question.

Mr. R. J. McCleave (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to see that my remarks outside this house are read by old women of both sexes.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. McCleave: I meant to say, by women of both sexes; and now I am really in hot water and I make my apologies right, left and centre. If I ever come back to Ottawa again, sir, it will probably still be too soon for my own safety.

I believe this is the first time that a resolution of this nature has been debated anywhere in Canada since the founding convention of the New Democratic party, in which Dr. Eugene Forsey, one of our most respected economists, disagreed violently with the thesis that underlies this resolution, that is, a state program for full employment. I think in making his remarks to that convention Dr. Forsey pointed out that if such legislation were to be enacted by a socialist parliament, the members of that socialist parliament would find a line up of job applicants stretching from outside their doors in Ottawa all the way to the St. Lawrence river. The weakness, as I say—

Some hon. Members: Six o'clock.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The time allotted to the consideration of private members' business having expired, the house will now revert to the business that was interrupted at five o'clock.

(Translation):

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Paul in the chair.

INTERIM SUPPLY

Resolved, that a sum not exceeding $330,089,511.93 being the aggregate of—

(a) one twelfth of the total of the amounts of the items set forth in the revised estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1963, laid before the House of Commons at the present session of parliament, except atomic energy item 5, Canadian Broadcasting Corporation item 5, finance items 45 and 50, forestry item 11, labour item 40, legislation items 30 and 35, mines and technical surveys items 30, 35, 40, 70, 80, 125 and 130, national defence item 70, national health and welfare item 25, northern affairs and national resources items 10, 45 and 90, public works items 5, 45, 70, 100, 105, 125, 145, 168, 170, 180, 190 and 200, Royal Canadian Mounted Police items 5, 15 and 25, transport items 35, 40, 60, 80, 85, 100, 125, 222 and 225, loans investments and advances item L20 $292,175,958;

(b) an additional one twelfth of the amounts of defence production item 25, external affairs item 5, northern affairs and national resources item 105, of the said revised estimates, $1,842,041.67;

(c) one twelfth of the total of the amounts of the items set forth in the supplementary estimates (A) for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1963, except external affairs item 112a, transport items 213a and 222a, $8,738,178.92;

(d) ten twelfths of the total of the amounts of the items set forth in the supplementary estimates (B) for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1963, $27,333,333.34, be granted to Her Majesty on account of the present fiscal year ending March 31, 1963.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

(Text):

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

(Translation):

Mr. Sevigny: Mr. Chairman, when you called it five o'clock, I had almost concluded my speech.

In the course of my remarks this afternoon, I insisted on the positive need for the two great races of our country to try to understand and know each other better.

It seems it would be relatively easy to find an answer to this dilemma if we could, through the setting up of a body, either here, within parliament, or outside this house, call upon experts in this field, both in the federal civil service and in the management of crown companies, to look carefully into all aspects of the participation of the two main racial groups of Canada in the administration of the country. The important thing is to find a simple formula which would enable us, precisely because of its simplicity, to settle this matter promptly and definitely from all points of view.

In my opinion, the whole matter should be considered immediately, because the uneasiness resulting throughout Canada from the differences that separate us, we of French Canada from our fellow citizens of English Canada, threatens to grow rapidly to disastrous proportions for our way of life.

Mr. Chairman, during the campaign which preceded the election of June 18 last, it was easy to realize that a feeling of concern existed among the people in general. Through interviews on radio and television, the public was consulted in relation to that problem, because it was of interest to all voters. To the questions "What is your interest in this federal election? What do you expect from the party that will be elected on June 18 next?" Quebec voters answered three times out of five and perhaps more often: In the first place, we want national unity to become a reality; we want a distinct national flag under which we can unite; we want a national anthem about which we can become enthusiastic; we want some way to get along better, to understand each other better.

In fact, this only confirmed a personal opinion I have had for some time because some ten months before the general election I had a fairly thorough survey of public opinion made by very responsible friends in my own riding. In that survey, I asked the question: "What do you expect from the federal government?" And most voters in my riding, who represented more or less all classes of voters to be found in any urban riding, had in fact answered that what interested them most of all was the adoption of distinctive symbols which could give the Canadian nation its sovereignty and at the same time provide for that better understanding which is asked for nowadays.

That is why I believe that the solution to this problem is that we, the federal government, must consider it with the provincial authorities. Furthermore, it will have to be studied through a simple body to be established here by the federal government and which will find the necessary formula to study all its aspects in order to find the formula so much desired and so desirable. In that way, we shall learn to know each other better and thereby we shall have more consideration for each other.

Mr. Chairman, there is in Canada something incomprehensible. As a matter of fact, if we take a look at what happened to our mighty neighbour to the south, we find that Americans, whatever their ethnic origin, whether they be of English, French, Italian, Jewish or other descent, have all rallied around the symbols of national sovereignty and to everybody who asks, they say: "I am an American." That does not mean that they have lost the characteristics one relates to their respective origins. But one thing is certain. They have all assembled around those symbols, whatever part of the country they may come from. Indeed, they are Americans first and foremost, that is before being loyal to their land of origin.

It is essential that this extraordinary unity and this national pride which exist among our neighbours to the south, both of which have made them so powerful, be found here in our country. It is worthy of note that, at this moment, all members of this house, be they from the government party to which I belong, from the Liberal opposition to which the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier) belongs, or from the Social Credit opposition to which the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Gregoire) belongs, are trying to unite, to join forces and to find a formula which, by going above and beyond political partisanship, will indeed become a formula for national patriotism, a formula which will enable all Canadians to develop and prosper; in short, a formula which will perhaps do away, once and for all, with each and every one of those unfortunate dissensions which have hurt us in the past, which threaten us now and which must be eliminated for the best interests of the Canadian nation.

(Text):

Mr. Knowles: All of us in this House of Commons cannot but welcome the statement made this afternoon by the Leader of the Opposition. He dealt with a very important issue. He dealt with it in a thoughtful and constructive manner. I would say that we also welcome the response which has been made by the Associate Minister of National Defence. I dare to hope that, as a result of this kind of thoughtful discussion of an important problem, we can make some headway in dealing with it.

We, as members of the New Democratic party, support wholeheartedly the proposition that every effort must be made to establish mutual respect and equality between the two great races that brought this country into being. We feel that it is not only a matter of according rights and adjusting certain grievances that have grown up, but that it will add to the richness of life in this country if we can further the binational, bicultural and biethnical heritage which is already ours. This was the position this party took at its founding convention in the summer of 1961. I am happy to remind hon. members that a few months later the leader of the New Democratic party, my colleague the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam, called for the appointment of a royal commission to study all aspects of this feature of our national life.

I say again that we welcome speeches of the kind made this afternoon. We hope this indicates we are turning a bit of a corner with regard to this problem and that instead of its being one about which nasty things are said, it might be one to which we shall apply our constructive efforts.

I rose to take part in this debate, however, intending to base what I had to say mainly on the words used by the Minister of Finance when he opened this debate on December 12. The words in question are to be found at page 2590 of Hansard of that date, at which time the minister said:

Mr. Chairman, I can give the usual assurance which all ministers of finance give at this time, that the passing of this bill will not prejudice the rights and privileges of hon. members to criticize any item of the estimates when it comes up for consideration in committee of supply, and the usual undertaking that such rights and privileges will be respected and will not be curtailed or restricted in any way as a result of the passing of this measure.

Let me read again the last few words of that undertaking given by the Minister of Finance:

—such rights and privileges will be respected and will not be curtailed or restricted in any way as a result of the passing of this measure.

I am fully satisfied that the Minister of Finance gave that undertaking in good faith. I am fully satisfied that when he gave it he meant it. I am equally satisfied that this undertaking will not be kept. I make the flat prediction that this fiscal year 1962-63 will pass without our having the opportunity to deal with the estimates, a portion of which we are now being asked to vote by way of interim supply. I suggest that this is more than just a procedural point. This is something which is leading into a crisis, so far as the operations of the parliament of Canada are concerned.

As the Leader of the Opposition pointed out in an opening sentence this afternoon we are, in this interim supply bill, being asked to vote the tenth twelfth of the revised and supplementary estimates for the fiscal year 1962-63. At this point, however, we have not voted in committee of supply a single one of the main, revised or supplementary estimates. This money we are now voting is for the month of January.

This Thursday night at ten o'clock we are supposed to adjourn for a Christmas recess. We do not meet again until Monday, January 21. By that time we shall be approaching the month of February and it is inevitable that, within a few days after we return, the Minister of Finance will come down with another interim supply bill in which he will seek money for the month of February, 1963. In that instance he will be asking for the eleventh twelfth of the estimates before this House of Commons, and in all probability at that point we shall still be exactly where we are now in that not a single item of the estimates themselves will have been passed. On that occasion no doubt he will again give us the assurance that the passing of that interim supply bill will not curtail or restrict our right to discuss the main estimates.

However, Mr. Chairman, even if the House of Commons is not dissolved and an election is not brought on, even if we stay here, the weeks of February will come swiftly and before we know it we shall be approaching the end of that month, and we shall be faced with the question of whether or not we are going to give the government its twelfth twelfth of the year's estimates.

At that point other questions will arise. At what stage shall we be with respect to the estimates as a whole?

As hon. members are aware, the rules of this House of Commons require that in each session of parliament there shall be six supply motions with Mr. Speaker in the chair. Unless all six of those motions are put, debated and carried, it is not possible to get all of the main estimates opened in committee of supply. Thus far we have had only one supply motion in this session of parliament. It will take five more supply motions, each of which can be debated for two days, just to get the departments of the government opened in committee of supply. It takes no expert calculation to realize that, in the light of that situation, it is utterly impossible to get the estimates passed before the end of February in order to vote the supply bill, or before the time will come when the minister will want his twelfth twelfth.

What is this house going to do when that point is reached? I hear noises from across the way that this is the last time the Social Credit group is going to vote for an interim supply bill unless, of course, the government does certain things in the meantime. But I say to my hon. friends across the way, despite their saying that they are not going to vote further money, I say this to the Liberals and I say to all of us that the point gets reached where parliament is boxed in. The point gets reached where the administration of the affairs of the country has to carry on. Salaries have to be paid and the withholding of the actual money to carry on the essential services of the government is something that this parliament may find it is impossible to do.

So what happens when that point is reached? I suggest that either one of two things will happen. Either the government will come before us with some kind of omnibus bill asking us to vote all the estimates in one swift action because by then the government will argue it is time to start talking about the estimates for 1963-64, or because parliament stands on its feet and because parliament seeks to debate these items there will either be prorogation of the session so the government can use governor general's warrants or there will be dissolution and an election. I do not know which of these various courses is going to be followed, but I do know that no matter which one of them is pursued we are going to witness the fiscal year 1962-63 as one in which parliament and the House of Commons in particular did not have its traditional, its constitutional right to discuss the items in the estimates as the Minister of Finance on December 12 assured us we would have. Not because there was anything lacking in the assurance he gave, but rather because of the time that has been taken with a long summer interval when there was no session of parliament and the failure of the government to organize the business of this session, we are going to be in the position where one of the main rights that is supposed to belong to parliament will have been lost.

That main right to which I am referring is parliament's control over the purse strings. That is what we are supposed to have, not the kind of government in which the executive makes all the decisions and spends all the money but the kind of government we are supposed to have is one in which, whatever else the executive may be able to do by order in council, by executive action, control of the purse remains with parliament itself. We are going to lose that control in this fiscal year 1962-63 either by the passage of time or by dissolution and an election.

I submit that this is more than what some people sometimes call just a procedural question, and it is more than just a political question with regard to whether or not there is going to be an election. I submit that this is a serious situation which points up that the authority and the rights of parliament are being downgraded, are being whittled away, by the way in which things have been going in the last little while, particularly in this session.

I have taken the trouble to spell out what is happening to us in terms of the estimates to portray what I believe to be the situation we face, in that we are getting to the point where the government of this country is entirely an executive operation rather than something in which the authority of parliament really plays its part. This, Mr. Chairman, is just one phase of this session which points up the fact, but I submit it points it up very dramatically. If we go on, if we get another of these supply bills for an eleventh twelfth and another for a twelfth twelfth, it will be pointed up so that everyone in the country will be able to see that parliament's control of the purse strings has been taken away.

This is not the only thing that has happened in this session. We have had difficulties regarding a budget, and just as I said that we would go through the fiscal year 1962-63 without a full discussion of the estimates—in fact, we may go through without finally voting any estimate in committee of supply—so we shall go through the year 1962-63 without a formal budget debate, without an opportunity to discuss in the traditional way the budgetary policies of the government of this country. I need not spell it out at length because we have done so on other occasions when we have had the opportunity, but some of us feel that even the power to impose taxation has been taken away from parliament and exercised by the executive because of the way in which customs surcharges were imposed on June 24 by an order in council.

What I am underlining in all of these things, Mr. Chairman, if I may use the same language again, is that it is not just a matter of a point of order being got around, but rather that what is happening is that the authority of parliament, the place of parliament in the government of this country, is being downgraded. This very debate is one that is bringing out the frustrations that this session of parliament has experienced. We had a very interesting speech the other day by the hon. member for St. Antoine-Westmount on the subject of national defence. Whether or not one agrees with his conclusions is another thing, but the point is he had to choose this debate on interim supply to have a discussion on this subject, and no doubt before this debate is over others will make a contribution to that subject. This simply turns the searchlight on the fact that in this critical time in our nation's history, in this critical time in the world's history, the parliament of Canada has been given no proper opportunity to discuss defence policy or external relations.

This afternoon on motions we had a bit of a discussion when the Secretary of State for External Affairs spoke on his trip to NATO and there were comments from the leaders of the other three parties. Then we had attempts on the orders of the day to get certain information about nuclear policy and other aspects of external policy. But here we are, Mr. Chairman, in the third month of this session of parliament without parliament itself having had any opportunity to discuss these terribly important questions of defence policy and external policy. Even the chances we have to question the ministers are very limited and the answers that we get, for example the answers the Prime Minister gave today, suggest that somehow or other this government feels that this is an executive preserve. The government will make the decisions and when announcements are made, be they announcements of policy or changes in policy, they will be made known to the house and to the country.

We are not in the kind of state, Mr. Chairman, where a small group is elected to run things. We have a parliamentary form of government. This country elects 265 people to be their representatives, to be their parliament, to which the government is responsible. Yet opportunities for discussion of important matters such as I have just named, estimates, a budget, taxation, external affairs, defence, have been completely denied to this first session of this twenty fifth parliament. Rumours that are flying around suggest that anything could happen, that parliament itself could end without anything of this sort having been discussed. Even if parliament does not end, to come back to the prediction I made earlier, we are going to see ourselves going through the fiscal year 1962-63 without parliament really being in the picture so far as these issues are concerned. Oh, we have a government and the government is making decisions. The government is passing orders in council. The government is staying in power. The government is keeping things going. But this, Mr. Chairman, has the effect of downgrading parliament, robbing parliament of its authority, of the role it is supposed to play in the life of our country.

I submit, Mr. Chairman, that this issue is bigger than the question of which party is in power. My hon. friends of the Liberal party do not need to sit back and enjoy the fact that perhaps I am roasting the present government a bit, because when they were on the government side their record was not too good on the subject of maintaining the authority of parliament. When they had something they wanted to put through their motto was, who can stop us? What I am complaining about is that the damage the Liberals did to parliament is not over. This attitude, who can stop us, is still with us. We still have a government that is acting by executive authority and treats parliament as a nuisance, a debating society that has to be called into session but which has to be kept from making any decisions on major matters such as estimates, the budget, external policy, defence policy and so on.

Mr. Pickersgill: And taxation.

Mr. Knowles: I included taxation before. Let me go on. During the last four or five years some of us believe this government made significant and serious changes in policy regarding two crown corporations, the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and Trans-Canada Air Lines. We do not like the changes in policy that the government made during the years 1957 to 1962. On June 18, 1962, there was an election and the government that had been in power for the last four years with a clear majority received a minority of the popular vote. I do not suggest that everybody who voted against the government disagreed with it on every matter of policy that was before the country at that time. I do suggest that the policy pursued by the government in at least those two areas, the question of what is being done to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and the question of what is being done to Trans-Canada Air Lines, should not continue to be pursued wtihout being discussed in parliament.

Have we had any opportunity of discussing questions relating to radio and television broadcasting? Have we had any opportunity of discussing questions relating to the air policy of this government or to transportation policy in general? Oh, questions have been asked on orders of the day. The reports of the Canadian National Railways and Trans-Canada Air Lines have been before the committee on railways, air lines and shipping. There have been one or two little bills regarding branch lines; but in the main, so far as policies affecting these two areas of our national life are concerned, there has been no opportunity to discuss them at all.

We think what is being done to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation is bad for Canada. We think it was one of the things which, before it was interfered with by the recent changes, was something of which we could be proud as a nation. It was something distinctively Canadian. It was something that added to our sense of national unity. The extent to which recent changes of policy have changed that picture alarm us. At this point I am trying to debate the issue, Mr. Chairman, or any of these issues. I am simply making the point that no opportunity to discuss these matters has come before this house.

My hon. friend who interrupted me, if I heard him correctly, says that we can discuss them now. Of course, we can discuss anything now, and that is what is happening in this debate. This is the reason this debate on interim supply which was started last Wednesday, the kind of debate that sometimes takes a couple of hours, is already now in its fourth day and may go two or three more. We have had no opportunity to discuss these things in the way in which parliament can express itself in terms of making decisions. The Columbia river situation has been brought into the debate because the government has failed to bring the treaty before parliament. Hon. members have had to take advantage of this debate to discuss that subject. The question of investigations by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police has been raised because we have had no chance to discuss it in a formal way so that decisions could be made. We have had to discuss that subject in this debate on interim supply.

I do not know how many other questions may yet be raised before this debate on the granting of the tenth twelfth of interim supply is completed. All of this, Mr. Chairman, as I say could be classed as a procedural complaint. People may say, as some member did a moment ago, we can talk now if we want to do so. What it points up is that this is a sterile session of parliament in which we can talk the number of hours that are allotted to us but in which we are being denied the right to make decisions on matters that are of real concern.

One of the matters that is concerning Canada today is the whole question of health and health services. I know there are some members who thought that at the time a certain battle was taking place last summer interest in this whole question would subside. However, interest in it has grown since then, instead of subsiding. The fact of the matter is that in this session of parliament we have had no chance to discuss health insurance or the related subject of social security. I have tried on orders of the day to raise the question of what is happening in respect of the proposed amendment to the British North America Act to provide for contributory pensions. I think I have the record for monosyllabic answers; I get yes or no to this or that. We have had correspondence tabled, but it all adds up to a pretty clear indication that nothing is going to be done at this session in the important field or social security. We have a motion on the order paper which will not be reached. After all, only eight of the provinces have agreed to it and at least one of the provinces, perhaps more, suggested that if you cannot get this amendment through at least do something about raising the old age pension from its present level to $75 per month or some such figure as was promised in the election campaign.

Do we get a chance to discuss this? Do we get these things brought before us? No, we get the stock answer from the Prime Minister and other ministers of the government, if and when government policy is decided upon it will be announced in the house. It all adds up to this body of 265 men and women elected by the people of Canada to represent them here, the body to which the government is responsible, being just a debating forum. The newspapers are doing that; radio and television are holding their forums. These things are taking place. Indeed, the same job is being done that we are doing here.

The Chairman: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but I must inform him his time has expired.

[Mr. Knowles.]

Mr. Knowles: Thank you, Mr. Chairman; I should like to come back later. Meantime, I hope something will be done to restore to parliament its authority.

(Translation):

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, listening to the hon. member who has just resumed his seat, we could not help thinking that he was just repeating what we have been saying in the house since last September. He took half an hour to do that.

Before coming to the point of my remarks, I feel it is my duty to express, on behalf of the members of this group and of all hon. members, our most sincere condolences to the families of the two policemen who were shot down in Ville St. Laurent. Notorious bandits, disguised as Santa Claus, cold-bloodedly shot down at close range officers Claude Marineau and Denis Brabant while they were on duty. It will be a sad Christmas indeed for the wives and six children of the two murdered policemen.

After such barbarism in a Canadian city, namely Ville St. Laurent, I wonder what some hon. members think now of the abolition of capital punishment.

On many occasions, we have heard urgent pleas for the abolition of capital punishment for murderers. And yet, in Montreal, a few days ago, that is last Friday, December 14, four notorious bandits killed two policemen on duty.

I congratulate the federal authorities as well as the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fleming) for maintaining the death penalty in Canada, to punish that kind of people, those despicable individuals who go about not only in the city of Montreal, but also in Toronto, and elsewhere in Canada, and against whom there is no protection. The government is well-advised to protect society against such individuals.

The murders committed last week are of a kind to rouse to indignation the whole population, and we should of course take steps to prevent the recurrence of such crimes.

Mr. Chairman, I have said enough on this matter. I believe the members of this house are unanimous in their desire to offer their condolences to both bereaved families and particularly to the children who will always bear in their mind the picture of Santa Claus killing their father. Let us have a thought for them and let us hope that such terrifying things will not occur again within our borders or in any of our provinces.

Mr. Chairman, this afternoon, I listened to the magnificent contributions of the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Gregoire), the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) and the Associate Minister of National Defence (Mr. Sevigny), who reiterated in this house what has been said in many instances over the years.

I commend those who contributed to the discussion this afternoon, because they kept the debate free of any partisan and political considerations.

The Social Credit group in this house will do all it can to help achieve any measure of Canadian unity—that understanding between the two great Canadian cultures—without using it as a political football.

In my opinion, Mr. Chairman, members of all parties have kept the discussion, this afternoon and tonight, above those partisan and political questions. Indeed, I believe that the Leader of the Opposition delivered this afternoon his best speech since he went into active politics.

In recent months, I had the opportunity of visiting all Canadian provinces. I was surprised to find as much among my Anglo-Saxon and English Canadian fellow citizens as among French Canadians, a wish, even a need, to feel joined and united together. I went to British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan, Manitoba, and Ontario, and especially in the province of Ontario, which was described throughout Canada as an inaccessible province, I was able to meet 2,000 students of the University of Toronto. I also met members of the Ontario junior chamber of commerce, in Toronto more exactly, who were tactful enough to introduce me in French to an all-English audience. How pleasant it is for a French Canadian to go to Toronto and to be introduced in his mother tongue to his English speaking fellow citizens who do not understand perhaps a single word of French. I also had the opportunity of meeting 300 or 400 young engineers in Toronto. Last week, I met colleagues from Sales Advertising, in Guelph, about 60 miles from Toronto, and there again the master of ceremonies was glad to introduce me in my own language, in French.

As a colleague, the hon. member for Lapointe said this afternoon, French Canadians are looking for and want a real understanding in Canada. They are not French Canadians, no, they are Canadians. They are Canadians who recognize the existence of the two cultures which enabled Canada to be what it is today, what it will be tomorrow, what it will be in the future if this understanding between the two cultures exists in this country of ours.

I would blame myself if, at this stage, I did not congratulate the government of Ontario from the bottom of my heart, for introducing a bill which provides for the teaching of French in Ontario schools at a higher grade than was the case only a few weeks ago. Recently, I met people from western Canada—people of 45 or 50 years of age who told me quite frankly that, if 30 years ago somebody had suggested they learn French, they would never have done so, but who today regret not having learned it. Well, even at that time, we, in our own province, were glad to learn English from the second or third grades, that is from the time we were seven or eight years old, so that, at the age of 20, 25, 30 or 35, we could go anywhere in Canada and express ourselves in the mother tongue of other Canadians in any province.

We are proud of this achievement and we are convinced that English Canadians would get exactly the same satisfaction if they had done the same, and my own conviction is based on the reception given me all across Canada.

We want a united Canada and the closer we are together, as this great country of ours pursues its destiny, the better can this mutual understanding on a national scale become a reality.

As the Leader of the Opposition was saying this afternoon, we have been misunderstood by English speaking Canadians. French Canadians have been misunderstood.

In the province of Quebec, as we all know, the Anglo-Saxons, the English speaking Canadians receive exactly the same treatment as the French Canadians, in every respect: education, church, public assistance to schools, etc.

In the city of Montreal, English speaking Canadians are treated exactly the same as French Canadians, and it is the same in Quebec city, or in Rouyn-Noranda, where I live.

That is what we are asking for: that same understanding all across Canada. To that end, we suggest, as the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) indicated this afternoon, the setting up of a department of federal-provincial affairs which would allow provincial authorities to meet and to know each other better.

We realize that in this very House of Commons, because when French and English speaking Canadians meet here, they get along perfectly well together. The same thing could be carried out on a national basis for the welfare of the whole Canadian population, and not only in one particular part of the country.

That is why, Mr. Chairman, the Social Crediters want to do their share without playing politics. I repeat what I said at the outset of my remarks, not to play politics. I repeat that all parties have kept above partisan considerations because we recognize that before being Liberals, Conservatives N.D.P.'s or Social Crediters, we are Canadians and it is as Canadians that we are responsible to the people we represent here in this House of Commons.

Mr. Chairman, national unity and friendly understanding can come true. All we need is good will, and my deep conviction is that we shall succeed.

We had our failures in the past. True, we have played politics instead of trying to understand each other. However, we were not so successful in achieving the purpose of our existence as Canadians.

Mr. Chairman, there have been internal divisions in the past between one racial group and another. That was mostly due to our economic system which prevented one group from developing and progressing at the same rate as the other. Both groups suffered from exactly the same misgivings, made the same mistakes and lacked the same things.

It is no use talking about unity which cannot be realized, but there is one sphere in which we can achieve unity, that is the economic sphere. Everyone including the Prime Minister, the Leader of the Opposition, and indeed, all members of parliament, have heard it said throughout the Canadian provinces that 80 per cent of our economy is in the hands of foreigners while we control the remaining 20 per cent.

Yet, it is the Canadian people who are working and building. Canadian materials and products are being used for the development of our country and no solution is being found. We have solutions for practically any problem. We tackle all kinds of problems but we are doing nothing about the most important problem of all, that of money and credit in Canada.

A few days ago, an hon. member of this house set out to attack Social Credit, as if one could expect anything else. I am speaking about my friend, the hon. member for Beauharnois-Salaberry (Mr. Laniel) who accused the Prime Minister of acting——in complicity, now with the Social Credit party mostly, now with the New Democratic party.

He added:

It is shameful all the same, Mr. Chairman, to act in collusion with a political party which merely wants to lead our country to ruin—

There, he wanted to name Social Credit, but he was a bit shy.

Mr. Chairman, I see the hon. member for Niagara Falls (Miss LaMarsh) applauding, without quite knowing why. It is a habit of hers.

—without its having the courage to inform the population sufficiently on its policy of crazy money—

Mr. Chairman, I underline the words "crazy money", because the hon. member refused to do it.

—its system of dividends for all—

That is funny. A system of taxes for all, that is more serious, of course. A system of money, enough money to kill, that is logical. A system of money to enable everybody to make a living, that is funny, that makes people laugh, especially the member for Beauharnois-Salaberry. He will have the people in his own riding laughing at him with that.

—its system of dividends for all, as long as the money machine holds out.

The money machine must be allowed to keep on working.

Everybody thought it was funny to hear about the monkey in the banana tree, the worm in the apple, the hare or the rabbit in the hollow log.

That was funny—to watch a monkey die from hunger.

Mr. Laniel: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order. I just want to thank the hon. member for Villeneuve for repeating my speech. I appreciate it very much.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, it was not a point of order but rather a question of privilege. I am satisfied because he may not remember what he said.

Mr. Chairman, to see a monkey die from hunger in a banana tree, because there are too many bananas, that is funny. But, on the other hand, to see children, human beings, adults, in some lanes in the city of Montreal, and maybe even in the riding of my hon.

friend from Beauharnois-Salaberry, going through the garbage pails, behind restaurants, to pick up scraps of food because they do not have the right, like the financiers, to go and buy in stores, that is not funny. It is serious, and no doubt that happens in my hon. friend's riding.

But to speak of a monkey that dies from hunger in a banana tree, of a rabbit that runs from one end of a log to the other, that is funny.

And I continue:

It was funny to hear about the stomach of the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Gregoire) and that of the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher), without forgetting the head of the member for Port Arthur which should be cut off for the sake of better planning with regard to the leader of the New Democratic party, the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas).

And a little further down, the hon. member stated:

Do you think those people are serious? Is the hon. Prime Minister himself serious? The people of Canada are surely not being fooled. The Social Crediters must hide their real selves under the cloak of nationalism—

Mr. Boulanger: Quite apt.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, I just heard the hon. member for Mercier (Mr. Boulanger) who said "Quite apt". He saw me in my own constituency when I met businessmen. At that time, we were discussing Social Credit, we were discussing monetary reforms. Now, the reforms which are a must at present are as important as the replacement of some hon. members. The monetary reform is still of the utmost importance throughout the country, and that is why the Social Crediters believe in it and preach it across the province and the whole of Canada.

Mr. Laniel: You were not elected on the Social Credit platform.

Mr. Caouette: You bet I was.

Mr. Laniel: Not at all.

Mr. Caouette: It is a fact that we explained Social Credit. If the hon. member had listened to the radio and television, he might have understood a few things. Maybe he does not have the possibility of understanding, but his constituents in Beauharnois-Salaberry understand very well.

Mr. Boulanger: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order. The hon. member for Villeneuve says that the Social Credit members were elected after they explained the Social Credit doctrine. That was not the way they were elected at all. They promised $100 a month. They knew they could never succeed in giving such an amount, because they will never be called upon to form the government.

Mr. Gregoire: He sounds like a drum.

(Text):

The Chairman: Order. There really is not a point of order there; it is a matter of debate. The hon. member for Villeneuve.

(Translation):

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, I like to hear my friends in the Liberal party tell me: Go ahead Réal. It sounds good coming from Liberal members.

Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Beauharnois has stated:

The Social Crediters must hide their real selves under the cloak of nationalism—

Mr. Chairman, I shall not say that the hon. member was being dishonest when he made that statement, but he knew that it was not true when he said it, and he still knows it.

The hon. member went on:

—in order to secure the acceptance of a small group of people—

A small group of people, indeed—550,000 voters in the province of Quebec alone and close to a million in Canada voted Social Credit. How can the hon. member speak of "a small group of people".

He can be sure that there are a great number of Social Crediters in his own riding and he will see for himself when the next election comes around. I do not know when, however, but I shall give him an advance notice of one month.

Who soon realized his mistake of June 18—

Enough of this speech. I shall now read a letter I have just received from the citizens' league of Malartic, in the riding of Villeneuve. It is not from a Social Crediter. It is dated December 11, 1962.

Dear Sir,

We should like to extend to you and to your courageous members our sincere congratulations on your fine work in the house for the French fact.

You can be assured, dear sir, that we follow your parliamentary activities with great attention and interest and that we are pleasantly surprised at the results achieved.

That is exactly along the lines of what was reported in the press throughout the country about the Social Credit party. It is acknowledged today that Social Crediters from Quebec and from all Canada are a real asset to parliament as a whole.

Mr. Laniel: Come and say this in the riding of Beauharnois-Salaberry.

Mr. Caouette: I can go there anytime. Mr. Chairman, our group is accused of not having any economists. I have here a report published in the newspaper Le Soleil of December 9, 1962, and it is a known fact that this Quebec paper is friendly to our party. In true Social Credit fashion, it reports on the brief submitted by Mr. Jacques St. Laurent, an economist—

A third of the population of the province of Quebec will be unemployed in 20 years if—

In his findings that may appear revolutionary at first sight, Mr. St. Laurent states that because of technological progress, Canada, like all highly industrialized countries of the world, will soon have an economic system unable to provide enough job opportunities for everyone.

That means automation. Full employment advocated by the Liberals and by our friends of the New Democratic party. And the economist goes on:

Mr. St. Laurent states that we will have to find public or private means, of paying people to do nothing.

Our growing capacity to absorb workers and the fact that the necessity of work is eliminated without new uses for that work being found immediately, confronts us with the necessity to find something other than work to allow everbody to participate in consumption if they cannot participate in production.

Stating that people are already being paid to do nothing, through unemployment insurance or supplementary benefits to the unemployed, Mr. St. Laurent says that we may have to continue along the same line by establishing the 20-hour week, retirement at 50, education up to 25 and even salaries out of public funds for unproductive workers such as artists and students.

In conclusion, Mr. St. Laurent says social justice requires that we invent new ways to give purchasing power to the permanently unemployed. We must develop a basis for revenue unrelated to work as a standard. That is why respect for law and government should be restored so that they may become instruments of general well-being.

As for public works and territorial development plans, says Mr. St. Laurent, they are useful means for improving the present situation, but they do not go to the heart of the problem. They are makeshift solutions. No planning, whether capitalist, socialist or communist, can do away with economic factors.

Mr. Chairman, the hon. member said a while ago that, during the election campaign, we had promised $100 a month to Canadian citizens. Well, just three weeks ago, at Laval University, the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Hees) told representatives of the Canadian economy that the purchasing power had to be raised so that Canadian products could be sold on the domestic market.

His suggestion was: spend more. Now, it is easy to tell Canadians to spend more, it is easy to say to a Canadian who has $10 in his pockets to spend $10, but it is far from easy for him to buy $50 worth of products when he does not have a cent in his pocket.

[Mr. Laniel.]

If the government really wants to stimulate the Canadian economy and to get Canadian prosperity rolling again, let it distribute, through the Bank of Canada, a $100 bond, not $100 a month, as mentioned by the hon. member for Mercier (Mr. Boulanger), not $100, as the hon. member for Beauharnois-Salaberry (Mr. Laniel) was saying, but a $100 bond invested in the Canadian economy.

Mr. Boulanger: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order.

The Deputy Chairman: The hon. member for Mercier is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Boulanger: As he is wont to do, the hon. member for Villeneuve is misquoting me. They have said $100 a month, but the Canadian people know very well that they will never make up the government. Therefore, it will never be able to give anybody anything.

The Deputy Chairman: In my opinion, the hon. member is merely replying to the hon. member for Villeneuve. He will have ample time to do that later.

Mr. Caouette: I thank you, Mr. Chairman, for your kindness. When I referred to this $100 bond, I never mentioned $100 a month. If this is what the hon. member for Mercier understood, it is because he never understands anything.

If the government really wants to get the Canadian economy moving again the way I suggest to them is to issue $100 bonds to every Canadian citizen, to all men, women and children.

An hon. Member: Rich or poor.

Mr. Caouette: I know my hon. friend is quite rich and does not need that. So, he could give it to the poor.

Mr. Chairman, that $100 bond should be made valid only if spent on consumption of Canadian products to encourage our own industry so that no one could say: "If you have five children, you will get $500 and spend it in the United States". That bond would be valid only for the purchase of Canadian commodities and so it would boost consumption. That $100 bond would open new jobs in industries which would have to get new equipment and produce more, and then we would witness a business recovery or upsurge. I believe there is no other way—

An hon. Member: It would be temporary.

Mr. Caouette: I hear my friend say it would be temporary. We have been starving temporarily for 25 years. Has it not been going on long enough?

Let us try to give a little prosperity to the Canadian people. And the way to do it is to increase the consumers' buying power. There is no other way. We have the industry, the equipment and everything. We have manufacturers among us and they are quite willing, I am sure, to double or triple their production. In order to increase that production, we must in the first place finance our first market, our domestic market. When the needs of that market, the domestic market, are met, if we still have a production surplus, very well, let us then go into the international market.

The Deputy Chairman: I am sorry to inform the hon. member for Villeneuve that his time has expired. Would there be unanimous consent of the house to allow the hon. member for Villeneuve a few minutes more?

Some hon. Members: No, no.

The Deputy Chairman: There is not unanimous consent.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, this has been a rather historic day for this house. It began, in fact, with the masterly speech made this afternoon by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) and with those of the four speakers who followed.

I feel that the house had the opportunity, on this occasion, to hear several excellent speeches on a very important question that is of particular interest to all of us, not only with regard to national unity but also and especially in connection with practical ways to attain that national unity we are all seeking in Canada.

This afternoon, the Leader of the Opposition made not only a far reaching but also a very important speech for the country. He suggested some measures to bring about a solution to two forms of extremism that exist in our country at the present time. I should like to comment on the speech of the Leader of the Opposition as well as some other remarks made in the course of this debate.

I take this opportunity to congratulate all those who have taken part in this debate and also my colleague the Associate Minister of National Defence (Mr. Sevigny), whose contribution was excellent.

In connection with the five speeches which have been delivered today, what impressed me was the absence of politics, the fact that the debate was put above politics. That is why I say to the Associate Minister of National Defence that he did the right thing in taking the position he took this afternoon. I wish to make a reservation, however, with respect to that part of his speech when he said that the Leader of the Opposition did not do justice to the former government in the province of Quebec.

If the minister had carefully listened to what was said then, I believe that he would not have made such an assertion because what the Leader of the Opposition said, was this: The future of the French Canadians rests with themselves, depends upon their willingness to carry on the efforts already made—and this includes the former governments—to improve their educational system, in a large part, since 1960, to make sure that there will be "qualified" French Canadians to hold the positions referred to.

There was also a reference a while ago to a provincial-federal conference to deal with the selection of a flag. Without wishing in any way, to belittle that suggestion, I wonder whether a conference of this type is necessary to select a flag, and whether it is not rather the responsibility of the federal parliament to make that selection. I am not making that comment by way of criticism, I am simply asking the question.

I should like, Mr. Chairman, to come back now to what the Leader of the Opposition said this afternoon.

As he stated so well, Canada is presently going through a crisis of national unity, a crisis which seems to become more serious as we are getting closer to our country's centennial.

We have reached a point where we seem to be at the mercy of events and where the smallest incident could unleash most violent outbursts and cause breaches which it would be almost impossible to close.

For those of us who believe in national unity it is high time to intervene, to examine, as the Leader of the Opposition did so objectively, the deep causes of that crisis and to recommend long term and short term remedies which will enable our country to survive such a crisis and to prevent its recurrence.

Right now, two extremes, two intolerable forms of separatism are facing us in Canada. On the one hand, some English speaking Canadians are strongly against the expansion of French culture beyond the frontiers of the province of Quebec. They are dead set against learning French because they feel that they would thus be degrading and lowering themselves. At the other extreme, some French Canadians would like to do away completely with English influence in the province of Quebec; they refuse to speak English even if they can. Both extremes meet. One keeps the other alive.

The manifestation of one form of separatism is bound to provoke the other and to contribute to its development.

Both clearly lead to the extinction of Canada as we know it today, and sooner or later to assimilation in the American melting pot. Mr. Chairman, separatism would be suicide for English speaking Canadians, but also, perhaps a little later, for French Canada.

The Leader of the Opposition has analysed very clearly the reasons of the present crisis. On the one hand, French Canadians are long in adapting themselves to industrialization, with all that implies from the standpoint of technical and professional know-how in the private as well as in the public field.

Professor Leon Dion, of Laval University, noted that delay in a remarkable study recently published in Le Devoir.

On the other hand, English speaking Canadians take time in acknowledging the bicultural phenomenon in our country and getting used to it in practice.

Mr. Donald Gordon, for one, so admitted in the interview he gave La Presse a few days ago.

I think we have there the deep-rooted reasons for the frustrations and inequalities which, more and more, are degenerating into differences, conflicts and crises.

The only enduring solution to such maladjustments is at the educational level. French Canadians have, for several years now, undertaken to reform their educational system. For the past two years in particular, and without ignoring what was done before, the province of Quebec has made quite remarkable efforts. This endeavour, which exacts a high price in sacrifices, has already shown some results. A great many young French Canadians have all the competence required by our industrialized society, and they are now getting the experience and maturity which will enable them to reach the highest levels both in crown corporations and in the various departments.

In a way, it is the very revolution now happening in Quebec which caused this deadlock. As a matter of fact, French Canadians, realizing that they are in the professional as well as the technical field, more and more prepared to take an active part in public administration and industrial development also notice that, in order to give a concrete expression to such ambition, they have to learn English, because only a few of their English speaking fellow citizens have sufficient knowledge of French.

The attitude of English speaking Canadians with regard to the French language has changed considerably. There was a time when a great majority considered that learning French was an inacceptable political concession rather than an intellectual enrichment enabling them to come in contact with one of the finest civilizations and greatest cultures in the world. Fortunately, this attitude is only that of a minority today. At the other extreme, it has been noted that an ever-growing number of English speaking Canadians are learning French sometimes at great sacrifice, for, unfortunately, the older people get, the more difficulty they have in learning a second language, and the less time they have for doing so.

In our time it is probably true—though we lack information to confirm this—that the majority of English speaking Canadians are not opposed to French any more, but they believe they cannot acquire even a working knowledge of that language without sacrificing other essential elements of their programs. For my part, I am convinced that this is a mistake.

First of all, what are we trying to accomplish in this field in Canada? The aim is not to make every Canadian perfectly bilingual. Such an aim would be quite impossible to attain. It is not even desirable.

Our purpose should be to have as many Canadians as possible speak a second language, either French or English, the knowledge of which would vary according to the educational level of the individual. We are also aiming at a practical rather than a scientific knowledge of the second language, at least for children, at the primary school level. In other words, we must first of all stop teaching a second language as if it were a dead language, because this is what is unfortunately happening in the provinces of Quebec and Ontario. We should teach children how to speak rather than stress the teaching of grammar.

Is it impossible and unrealistic to seek such practical knowledge of a second language in this country? Dr. Penfield and other well known experts do not think so. Besides, the experience of the world around us points to the contrary. A great number of citizens, in most countries have mastered a second language, even when the ethnical or political structure of the countries they live in do not prompt them to do so. This is true for Europe, South America, Asia and even Africa. For well-known, historical reasons, the United States is an exception. I, for one, am satisfied that the young English Canadians are as intelligent as children in other countries and that they will easily acquire a practical knowledge of French if given the opportunity to do so.

Mr. Chairman, in this morning's Globe and Mail, I came across an article under the heading "On Teaching French", which indicates very well the attitude of the Toronto school board. In fact, the members of that board have decided to have French taught in the elementary schools, not as a dead language, but as a modern one. For the information of hon. members, I should like to quote a paragraph from this editorial, which runs as follows:

(Text):

By embarking on a program of French instruction in the elementary schools, the board of education has taken the first step toward teaching French as a living language.

(Translation):

Mr. Chairman, it is therefore possible for a great number of Canadians to acquire such a knowledge of a second language. This is also extremely desirable, not only as a personal achievement, but because it enables us to benefit from the two greatest cultural media of the western world and because it is a factor of unity in this country. As stated by all previous speakers, I would even say that it must become one of our national purposes, for without it, it will be more and more difficult to maintain internal harmony and political stability in our country.

It has now become a matter of self-examination and we should ask ourselves whether we are mature enough honestly and wholeheartedly to accept this form of bilingualism as a long term national aim and whether we are ready to take positive steps, including especially the reform of our educational system in order to begin working on this together immediately.

That is a vital and really essential question. I realize that in asking that question publicly and collectively we run certain risks; but we can no longer avoid that question. Furthermore, I have confidence that we shall be able to answer it on both sides, with serenity and lucidity, fully conscious of the gravity of our answer and the consequences it can have.

That is why I enthusiastically endorse the suggestions made to the house by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson). The federal government must take the initiative at once, and try to obtain the co-operation of the provinces in order to undertake a study of bilingualism and the means to achieve it. Such an enquiry could not be complete without the approval of the provinces, because the means at the disposal of the federal parliament in that field are limited. In fact, until we have undertaken the reform of education which comes exclusively under provincial jurisdiction, we may be able to improve the situation temporarily and apply certain remedies, but we will not have found the final and permanent solution to the fundamental issue.

It is not a case, especially in that delicate field, of imposing anything to the provinces.

In order to better pave the way, and in view of the fact that the leaders of the federal parties have already given their opinions on the matter, I would ask the other members, who will no doubt wish to participate in this debate, to tell us whether they are in favour of such an investigation and of its objectives. I do not want to challenge anyone; it is rather a wish on my part. If, as some previous speakers have stated, we could agree unanimously in this house on the general objectives to be achieved, we would immediately remove any political partisanship from this delicate issue, we would set an example to all provincial premiers and to all those who have any influence on public opinion in this country.

Canada is now at a cross-roads. We are preparing to celebrate an historical event: the centenary of confederation.

That is why I now appeal to all Canadians of good will. If we wish to celebrate that centenary simply by erecting monuments and by organizing festivals and exhibitions, we are in for bitter disillusions, because the unity we shall then celebrate, if it still exists, will only be artificial and transparent.

If we wish to celebrate confederation together and in a united spirit, we must begin at once a spiritual retreat, we must reflect not only on what we are, but on what we want to become. We can no longer be satisfied with mutual respect in isolation. We must prepare to remake, so to speak, confederation, and especially redefine its spirit.

We must learn, on both sides, not only to remain ourselves and better to live our own culture, but also to become a little like the other, and to participate more actively in the culture of the other. We shall then become better citizens, and we shall form a richer and more united nation. We must seize this opportunity, which is offered to us and which is perhaps the last one, to renew concretely our collective will to live together on a really equal footing.

Otherwise, there may not be a second centennial of confederation, which would be, I am quite sure, a great disaster for all Canadians. Because, after all, as I attempted to explain earlier, this question is beyond the competence of parliament. It concerns every Canadian citizen.

There is a great deal of good will in Canada today; we should take advantage of it. If there seems to be unanimity in this house on a question of such scope and of such importance, it is time to take action. Without entrusting this responsibility to anyone in particular, it seems to me, as I said earlier, that the federal government should take the lead in making this inquiry and in consulting the provinces. There are various methods of consulting the provinces. In reply to a question put to him, the Prime Minister has already shown that such a consultation is possible, and can promptly take place when good will prevails. I am convinced such is now the case, and now is the time to act.

Indeed, it is very important for the two main racial groups of our country to live together on equal terms, as stated by the Leader of the Opposition. It is a good thing to preach national unity, as everybody did so well in the house today. All that is very fine, but it is not enough, Mr. Chairman. Much more must be done; action must follow.

That is why the Leader of the Opposition suggested that an inquiry should be made into the fields under our jurisdiction, namely into crown companies and various departments, and as concerns all fields not entirely under our jurisdiction, let us consult the provinces and obtain their approval so that French Canadians would feel at home throughout Canada, from coast to coast.

So I invite the house to support the suggestions and proposition of the Leader of the Opposition and to act. If the house does that, I am convinced that it will help to place on an indestructible basis the future of this beloved country of ours, Canada.

[Mr. Chevrier.]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, we should be pleased, as some hon. members have mentioned, that this debate has been maintained above partisan considerations.

Mr. Gordon's statement will have contributed to national awakening. As far as I am concerned, I had the opportunity, on June 8, 1961, to give my opinion on Mr. Gordon. I feel, Mr. Chairman, that Mr. Gordon's statement has, as I said, contributed to national awakening.

We stopped to take a look at what has been done and to appreciate what remains to be done to improve relations between the two main ethnic groups in Canada, with a view to closing gaps and being able to celebrate the centenary of confederation in national unity and not to see it break up.

I think that this uneasiness resulting from bilingualism and the disproportion in representation of French speaking Canadians has existed not only in departments—and for a long time, although the situation has improved in recent years—but especially in crown corporations.

In my opinion, Mr. Chairman, taking advantage of the announcement made in the speech from the throne at the beginning of the session, of convening a federal-provincial conference, that is a general assembly of our nation, to give Canada national emblems, it should be important to place on the agenda a royal inquiry on relations between the two ethnic groups, as well as a review of or an inquiry on the constitution.

The problem between the two ethnic groups has reached an acute phase at present. Well, I believe that this problem has existed for a long time.

I remember that in the province of Quebec, the report of the Tremblay commission outlined the gaps which existed and also the solutions that could be resorted to.

That is why, if we refer today, for instance, to the Tremblay commission report, I believe that we shall see what causes the troubles because for a number of years the constitution has been undermined and the taxation fields have been mixed up. I believe that if we included as I said a while ago, in the agenda of the federal-provincial conference, regarding the choice of a national flag, an inquiry on the constitution or a complete review of it, it would be a useful step. I really believe that this question would be appropriate as, in these last few years, there has been a development towards the undermining of taxation powers. For example, the Canada Council interferes in the field of education which belongs to the provinces; the federal government is even giving grants to universities; and some members, without consulting the provinces involved, like Quebec and Newfoundland, would like to bypass the provincial authorities in order to regulate the question of divorce.

I believe, Mr. Chairman, that we should take advantage of the federal-provincial conference to be held soon and which was announced in the speech from the throne—the convening of the states general—to make a complete review of the situation and to stop to devise the means to achieve a better understanding between the two ethnic groups.

Mr. Chairman, I think it was fitting that a debate such as this one should have taken place in this house. It was kept above petty politics and all members are to be congratulated. I say again that a stock-taking should be done on the occasion of the general meeting to be held shortly, in order to select national emblems, so that we may all take the time needed to consider a complete review of the constitution and, if possible, to graft upon it a royal inquiry on the relations between the two ethnic groups, for the best interest of the Canadian nation, so that in 1967, we can all celebrate the centenary of confederation together instead of crying at its funeral.

Mr. Perron: Mr. Chairman, I cannot let a debate as important as this one go by without congratulating all those who have taken part in it. They have kept it above political partisanship. I feel that a member from the Beauce area must be heard in the course of a debate of such magnitude, since the question of bilingualism in Canada was raised this afternoon.

Since one of my predecessors who sat for 12 years in this house asked on many occasions that the French fact be recognized in the public service in Ottawa and, through his motions and his bills also asked many times that cheques be made bilingual, I am glad to congratulate him and to mention his name. I am quite sure he will be most happy tomorrow when he sees the newspaper headlines on this question of bilingualism. I refer to the former member for Beauce, Mr. Raoul Poulin.

It will do his heart good to see that today, in this house, putting aside all political partisanship, members from all parties have taken part in this debate and proved to the Canadian people that we are their representatives before being members of a political party.

I know that my predecessor will be comforted when he reads the report of today's debate. He will realize what headway has been made since he made his requests in this chamber. He will also find that the constituency of Beauce has made it a point to take part in this discussion and that there is an increasing awareness of the need for national unity.

This debate will not only bring about the recognition of the French fact throughout the whole country of Canada, but also a glimmer of hope as to the possibility of giving the entire population social justice, social security. Moreover, let us not forget that it will surely enable one and all to consider the debates from an economic and financial point of view.

Mr. Chairman, I was just thinking about the well-known fable of the cat and the mouse. Some were wondering, at a certain moment, if they had not clung to the cat's neck. You will note that all those who took part in this debate have done so with a generosity full of understanding for those who do not speak the same language. I am sure that today we took a great step towards national unity.

During the election campaign, we pointed out the need to review ministerial representation. Since the problems of eastern farmers are different from those of western farmers, we advocated representation of both ethnic sectors of the country in the Department of Agriculture.

We also advocated representatives from the east and west as regards the many economic difficulties in order to promote a better understanding between the eastern and western producers and to provide for an easier disposal of western farm products which would at the same time encourage eastern producers.

On several occasions since the beginning of this session, we asked questions about bilingualism, about the French fact. We did not do that with any intention to hide—

Mr. Pigeon: Would the hon. member for Beauce permit a question? Is he aware of the fact that recently the Minister of Agriculture appointed a French language deputy minister in order to improve relations between east and west?

Mr. Perron: I am perfectly aware of that and I take this opportunity to congratulate the government for that move.

I was just saying that we demanded and advocated that kind of representation in several federal departments.

Of course, the Gordon incident took place. The hon. member who just spoke before me referred to that. The reasons underlying that situation are due to the maturity of the whole Canadian people. The people want national unity, economic stability and good understanding throughout the country.

We shall celebrate, in a few years, the centenary of confederation. We must take that opportunity to act as wisely and as quickly as possible to give our country a national emblem, a national anthem, that is to say national symbols, so that all may rally round that Canadianism about which we heard so much this afternoon from French speaking as well as English speaking members. I hope that these discussions will bring about the possibility of giving our country all the national symbols that will mark the one hundredth anniversary of life within the confederation and that, all together, we shall sing the praise of this country where life is so good.

I would also like during this debate to deal with economic matters. In my riding, the producers, farmers, workers, small industrialists and shopkeepers are grateful to bilingualism, but they also all want an economic policy that will give justice, in Canada, as much to factory workers as to farm workers. All those classes of society want a policy that will enable the consumers to obtain the goods they need.

It seems that people accuse us of hiding behind bilingualism during the last election campaign. Well, we believe in bilingualism but we conducted that election campaign under the banner of security, and freedom, because we believe in that security and freedom for the whole of Canada.

That is why, since the door has been opened on budget matters, it is normal, in my opinion, that we deal with them a little more closely and that we study the reforms that must be made in the financial system.

Earlier an hon. member said in this house that 80 per cent of the natural and industrial resources in our country were controlled and managed by foreign corporations. That is a problem of tremendous importance that we must put above politics, that we must consider in our discussions on the budget. The monetary situation towards which we are leading today is in the process of taking away from the Canadian people its opportunities and its natural resources.

Last week we talked about the establishment of the Atlantic development board and we shall discuss, at the first opportunity, the establishment of a national economic development board. In reading the newspapers and the editorials every day we note the importance given to that measure which provides for the establishment of a board which may advise and help financially the development of our natural resources in the interests of all Canadians.

That is an obvious sign of the fact that our financial policy must be overhauled in such a way that the working class and all other classes may contribute to the economic development of our country.

As the hon. member for Villeneuve stated, the best solution would be to teach the matter under a new angle which would be more in accordance with the twentieth century so that the abundance of products we have in Canada may be put at the disposal of everybody thanks to progress, automation, applied sciences and the know-how of past generations. It would be easy to put that production at the disposal of the Canadian people and to give them the security they are seeking.

Lately I have been receiving hundreds of letters from my constituents. I am told of fathers and mothers who have lost a social security pension or allowance in the last two or three months, of wives whose husbands have been out of work for the past six months, who are living on nothing but family allowances and are worried on the eve of Christmas and New Year.

As long as under our monetary policy money is not put at the service of the people, and the fundamental freedoms of the individual are not respected, fathers and mothers will have to go without the basic necessities of life.

Let us give the Canadian people the security to which they are entitled, let us follow the march of time and look at our financial problem the same way as that economist who is not a Social Crediter and who wrote in the newspaper Le Soleil, last week, that we must absolutely give new orientation to our possibilities and that we must get away from the beaten track.

Our task is to give to our people, to our citizens, a social security that will allow the development of the human personality and the fulfilment of our liberties.

I hope that following a debate so auspiciously started and above petty politics, we shall be able to glance upon the economic apparatus in our country and should a revision of our monetary policy prove necessary, we will be able to make a contribution free from party politics.

We have had a foretaste during the discussion on the budget when we heard hon. members opposite say that it was not possible to create interest-free money in this twentieth century, for the development of our municipalities and of our natural resources. These remarks have been printed in Hansard.

Some speakers from the Liberal party have admitted, in this house, the need for revising our monetary policy so as to enable the Canadian people to expand by developing its natural resources in the interest of the whole nation, which is groaning under the present burden of social insecurity and asking for this security as well as for the respect of freedom.

We have set up various boards since the beginning of this session. There will be another important discussion concerning the national economic development board. Shall we have to ask many questions to know if this achievement is physically possible? Have we not heard, during a whole week, the claims of hon. members of the Atlantic provinces about the Canso strait, and a thousand other important projects to be carried out as soon as possible? Have we not heard about a steel plant in Quebec, so that all Canada can develop its natural resources in the interest of its people? And is the same not true in the western provinces?

Why are those plans not being carried out? Is there any great shortage of manpower? Is it not a fact that there are more than 500,000 unemployed in this country? What do we need to put the economy back on the rails?

I suggest that the best way to do this is to support the suggestion made earlier by the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette). I am of the opinion that it is through those new methods that we will give the Canadian people the purchasing power it needs and which will enable our economy to progress according to the rate of possibilities of Canada.

If we had set up so many commissions when the war started in 1939, I wonder if in 1945 the government would not have still been at the stage of commission setting. But instead, the Canadian economy was allowed to boom in 1939 through a mushrooming of plants across the length and breadth of the country. As a matter of fact, in a jiffy we succeeded in creating for 10 years a production for this country which was dying of hunger in the midst of plenty. The Canadian economy was pushed forward for political reasons, for wartime purposes.

Today we must give our economy and our national development a new orientation, but in doing this we must take into account the tremendous possibilities in the field of natural resources development, as far as available labour is concerned, in the field of science, and learning. It is time that we launch across the country, through legislation brought forward by the federal government, a broad program which will permit our people to regain some confidence in the future and in the possibilities of Canada.

But as long as we do not consider an expansion of the purchasing power of the consumer through means other than those tried so far, and until we adopt, as was suggested by the economist Jacques St. Laurent, other means of financing purchasing power, even for those who cannot at present participate in production, we will not be able to give our people security and freedom, while fully respecting the dignity of man, an opportunity to choose his occupation according to his ability.

Mr. Chairman, today's discussion gave us evidence that when we wish to we can raise ourselves above politics. We saw it, we felt it, and it was a heartening experience for the English as well as the French speaking or even the new Canadian members of this house to see that at last Canada, through its parliament in Ottawa, wants that national unity which will enable us in 1967—

The Chairman: Order.

(Text):

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, may I inquire what the house will do tomorrow?

Business of the House

Mr. Churchill: I hope we will finish interim supply tomorrow, and then carry on with the national economic development board.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, on Friday the house leader indicated that he had a number of small bills which he was anxious to put through. I should like to tell him that so far as we are concerned we would facilitate the passage of those bills tomorrow, if that is the wish of the government and they would like to get them along. So far as we are concerned we would be prepared to interrupt this debate—provided these bills will not take too much time, and so far as we are concerned they will not.

Mr. Churchill: Well, that might be arranged; but to interrupt this debate and not get interim supply through would be rather a bad thing for all the employees of the government. I will phone around tomorrow morning and perhaps we might make some arrangement.

It being three minutes after ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

APPENDIX

FINAL COMMUNIQUE, NATO MINISTERIAL COUNCIL MEETING

The regular ministerial session of the North Atlantic council was held in Paris from 13th to 15th December, 1962.

2. Ministers reviewed the international situation. They noted that the alliance is sound and vigorous, and that the dynamism of free societies continues to demonstrate its advantages in promoting world progress and well being.

3. The recent attempt by the Soviet union to tilt the balance of force against the west by secretly stationing nuclear missiles in Cuba brought the world to the verge of war. The peril was averted by the firmness and restraint of the United States, supported by the alliance and other free nations.

4. Ministers also discussed the grave implications of the recent communists actions in Asia.

5. The aim of the Atlantic alliance remains what it has always been—peace, freedom, and security based on the rule of law. However, the alliance is determined to respond appropriately to any hostile action affecting the security and freedom of countries of the alliance subjected to threats and pressure. Regarding Berlin, the council recalled and reaffirmed its determination, as expressed in its declaration of the 16th December, 1958, to defend and maintain the freedom of West Berlin and its people.

6. In the light of their discussions, ministers concluded that constant vigilance and unity of purpose in a spirit of interdependence, as well as readiness to examine any reasonable possibility of reducing international tension, must continue to guide the policies of the alliance. It is a prerequisite of any progress toward equitable settlement of outstanding international issues that the alliance should maintain its defensive strength.

7. Ministers emphasized the value of close political consultation in regard to the constructive tasks of the alliance, as well as in preparing to deal effectively with contingencies which may arise. They agreed that this consultation should be intensified.

8. The council reaffirmed that general and complete disarmament, under effective international control, continued to be a question of major concern. It emphasized the importance of reaching an agreement which would step by step bring peace and security to the world. It expressed the hope that the Soviet attitude, which has so far frustrated concrete agreement on any of the key questions at issue, would change.

9. Ministers took careful stock of the threats which face the alliance and the resources available for defence against them as established in the course of the 1962 triennial review. They agreed that it was necessary to increase the effectiveness of conventional forces. They further agreed that adequate and balanced forces, both nuclear and conventional, were necessary to provide the alliance with the widest possible range of response to whatever threat may be directed against its security. They recognized that a sustained effort will be required to provide and improve these forces. Ministers invited the permanent council to review procedures in order to secure closer alignment between NATO military requirements and national force plans as well as an equitable sharing of the common defence burden.

10. The council also reviewed the work done over the past six months in the exchange of technical information on nuclear weapons and the study of various suggestions for the further development and co-ordination of NATO nuclear capabilities. They decided to pursue and intensify exchanges in this field to facilitate the continuing review of NATO defence policy.

11. Ministers also noted, in accordance with the resolution taken during the Athens meeting, that in a spirit of solidarity and interdependence, measures had been decided on to assist Greece in solving the special defence problems with which she is at present confronted.

12. At their separate meeting on 15th December, defence ministers reviewed the report of the high level group established to seek means of obtaining improved co-operation among member nations in research, development and production of military equipment. In approving this report ministers reaffirmed their will to co-operate and their intention to translate it into positive action at all levels.

13. Ministers noted that the free world had continued to advance toward an ever greater degree of prosperity. Only on the basis of continuing economic expansion can the alliance foster the well being of its peoples and provide a sound basis for a defence effort equitably shared among the allies and commensurate with their economic potential. Furthermore, economic expansion in the west, by facilitating the provision of increased aid and stimulating world trade, is essential to steady economic progress and a rising standard of living in the developing countries.

14. Ministers emphasized their determination to intensify measures to sustain the efforts of those countries of the alliance which, while making an important contribution to the common defence, at the same time are faced with the urgent problem of speeding up their economic development.

15. Ministers examined a report on national and international civil emergency plans, which are an essential complement to the defence effort.

16. The next ministerial meeting of the North Atlantic council will be held, on the invitation of the Canadian government in Ottawa, 21st-23rd May, 1963.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, December 18, 1962

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

Fifth report of standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines—Mr. Howe.

Second report of sessional committee on railways, air lines and shipping owned and controlled by the government—Mr. Rowe.

(Translation):

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

ANNOUNCEMENT OF STUDY OF SITUATION RESPECTING FRENCH CANADIANS

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, as the house has been told, the president of the Canadian National Railways, at my request, has brought before the board of directors the problem of the promotion of French Canadians in the C.N.R. organization.

Following a meeting of the board of directors, the president has sent me the following report:

I am informed by the chairman of the board of directors of Canadian National Railways that, at its meeting on December 13, the board carefully reviewed the company's methods and procedures for the recruitment, appointment and promotion of supervisory and management employees, having particularly in mind the current discussions respecting the status of French Canadians in the organization. Included in the review were the present methods and procedures for appraising the qualifications for and the performance of personnel in positions throughout the organization and the existing delegation of authority to approve appointments and promotions.

The board considered that, while the present methods and procedures are designed to produce fair and equitable treatment of all the company's employees and applicants for positions, it is of prime importance that a thorough-going study be made to ensure that, in the practical application of these methods and procedures, their objectives are in fact being achieved. In particular, the study should seek to determine whether more effective measures can be adopted

(a) to attract to the company's service qualified French Canadians in larger numbers, and

(b) to see that French Canadian personnel have full opportunity to enlarge their experience and qualifications for promotions to positions of greater responsibility at all levels in the company.

The study is to be undertaken by a committee of the board consisting of the chairman and Messrs. Charbonneau, Koerner, Levesque and Stewart. All necessary staff assistance will be furnished to the committee to enable the study to be completed and a report made to the full board as quickly as possible.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, it gives me pleasure to learn through the Minister of Transport (Mr. Balcer) about the decision taken by the board of directors of the Canadian National Railways to undertake a thorough-going study of the situation in order to find out whether the present promotion system in that company is satisfactory and, especially, to see whether it should not be amended, considering the way many positions can be filled and considering the qualifications and specialties existing among French Canadians in the province of Quebec and elsewhere.

We are all very happy about the decision reached. That decision is all the more important, Mr. Speaker, as yesterday we almost had complete unanimity in this house, not so much concerning this matter referred to by the minister, but about the whole field of bilingualism and our two cultures in Canada.

That discussion was initiated by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) and all hon. members who spoke after him were unanimous to conclude that the existing standards should be changed.

I also believe, Mr. Speaker, that this decision is complementary to the interview given by the president of the C.N.R. to a reporter of La Presse.

I am convinced the whole house will be happy about that decision which we hope will achieve good results.

Canadian National Railways

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I want to associate myself with the member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier) in expressing the congratulations of our party to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Balcer) and to the board of directors of the Canadian National Railways for the action taken today.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to add that the committee set up to find a solution to the treatment given French Canadians at all administrative levels in the C.N.R., will not have any difficulty in finding among French speaking Canadians men with the necessary qualifications to hold those important positions in the management of the C.N.R. There are such men in the two great nations that make up our country.

That committee will have an easy task, even an agreeable one if he will make it so.

We want also to warn those who are entrusted with that mission that the role of the members of parliament is not over now that a committee has been set up; they will have to see to it that measures follow the decisions taken on December 13.

A lot has been done already. But the work must go on until the great nations that make up our country can realize that their rights are entirely recognized, which will bring about understanding and harmony between our two great races.

(Text):

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, it is more than two years since I raised the issue, in this house and in the railway committee, concerning the fact that French Canadians were not represented on the executive board of the C.N.R., but at this time I would like to offer my congratulations to the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Gregoire); because previously when I raised the issue it did not seem to get the response that it has met very recently, and I think the hon. member for Lapointe and his colleagues may take some credit for the fact that there now seems to be a firmer and keener interest in biculturalism in the Canadian National than there has been in the past.

I would also like to express the hope that this move by the Canadian National, appreciated as it is, will not get in the way of the government's consideration of the other suggestion made by the chairman of the C.N.R., that we have a royal commission on this entire problem. I hope the government will not let this step interfere with serious consideration of that point, and I particularly hope it will not take seriously some of the carping criticisms made in the house, especially by the official opposition, that there have been too many royal commissions. I know my party would welcome one in this particular field.

THE MINISTRY

REPORTED INTENTION OF PUBLIC WORKS MINISTER TO RESIGN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Kootenay East): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. In view of the fact that so many of us on this side of the house are concerned about having the minister appear before the external affairs committee, I wonder whether events in Point Grey yesterday would have assisted the minister in changing his mind about leaving the federal cabinet?

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Public Works): Not at all, Mr. Speaker. On the contrary, it seems to me the events in British Columbia yesterday have effectively disposed of the myth that there is only one alternative to socialism in British Columbia, namely the Social Credit party. That myth has been exploded.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ANGOLA—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON CANADA'S POSITION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. S. Macdonald (Rosedale): I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It is related to questions asked yesterday by myself and the hon. member for York South, and following perusal of the NATO ministers' communique which was tabled yesterday. Will the minister consider making a statement to the house, before we rise for Christmas, on Canada's position with regard to Portuguese actions in her African territories, in view of the absence of any reference to that question in the NATO communique?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, Canada's position with regard to the situation in Angola has been very clear from the start. We have been against the action that has been taken there.

ORGANIZATION OF AMERICAN STATES—INQUIRY AS TO CANADIAN PARTICIPATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hubert Badanai (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, based on an article which appeared in yesterday's Ottawa Citizen. Can the minister indicate to the house whether Canada is now prepared to join the organization of American states?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as the house knows this question has been under consideration for some time. When a decision is reached it will be announced in the usual way.

BRAZIL—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON INJURIES TO CANADIAN JUDGES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Leon Crestohl (Cartier): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Can the minister inform the house whether his officials have received any further report on the incident which took place in Brazil, in which two Canadian judges were injured?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker, I have no further report. I sent off a message this morning expressing sympathy for and admiration of the president of the Exchequer Court, and in addition giving our ambassador instructions to do everything he can to help.

INQUIRY AS TO EXTENSION OF TERRITORIAL WATERS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether in his recent conversations with the secretary of state of the United States he had any opportunity informally to find out whether it would be possible to open active negotiations to secure a 12 mile fishing limit without further delay.

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker. That subject was not discussed in Paris.

(Translation):

PRIVILEGE

MR. GREGOIRE—REFERENCE TO REPORT OF CANADA COUNCIL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege following the reply given by the Canada Council, which has violently denied charges that the Canada Council is illegally disposing of funds to loan companies.

Mr. Speaker, as recorded in Hansard of last Friday, I have never said that the Canada Council was disposing of funds to loan companies. I did say, however, that the Canada Council was lending money to companies at interest rates as low as 3½ per cent. And, in order to support my contention, I should like to table the Canada Council report. You will note on page 167 that $300,000 was lent to the Industrial Acceptance Corporation on a promissory note bearing a 3½ per cent interest.

Mr. Speaker: Order. An hon. member may rise on a question of privilege only if he can indicate that his words have been wrongly interpreted. There is no question of providing evidence and the hon. member cannot table these documents now.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. It is not only a matter of interpretation. The statement I made has been denied, and I have the Canada Council document here to prove—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think it is permissible to an hon. member to deny what has been said in the house but, in this case, he is denying something that has been said outside the house, thus raising a controversial issue.

[Later:]

Mr. Jean-Paul Cook (Montmagny-L'Islet): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Prime Minister.

Can the right hon. gentleman tell the house whether he has received from the chairman of the Canada Council board of directors, Mr. Weldon, a communication explaining the policy of the council? And if such is the case, could he summarize it for the benefit of the house?

(Text):

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): I have a lengthy statement here which was sent me by Dr. Trueman, director of the Canada Council, and by leave of the house I shall read that statement.

The Canada Council does not lend money to governments, corporations or individuals. It invests its funds, subject to the terms of the Canada Council Act, in securities which are sold in the market place, having due regard to the return from these securities, their term to maturity and their quality. These investments include the employment of funds for temporary periods in the short term market, and among the securities purchased are treasury bills, short term bonds and commercial and finance company notes. The investments in short term securities, as indeed in all the securities purchased, are made with the objective of maximizing the fund's income, and the selection of securities depends on their relative yield and quality at the time of purchase. The council is very much concerned that it obtain the highest possible return from its investments in its efforts to meet the urgent and growing demands upon it for scholarships and grants.

The investments of the Canada council are made on the recommendation of an investment committee, four members of which are appointed by the governor in council and one by the members of the council itself. At present the membership of the investment committee is as follows: Mr. Graham Towers, former governor, the Bank of Canada; Mr. G. Arnold Hart, president and chief executive officer, the Bank of Montreal; Mr. Marcel Faribault, president and general manager, le Trust General du Canada; Mr. J. G. Hungerford, president, National Trust Company; and Mr. Weldon as chairman of the Canada Council.

The council's investments are carried out and supervised by the firm named in this statement. If there is any further information necessary in this connection it could be secured when the accounts of the Canada Council are before the public accounts committee.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

MANITOBA—REPORTED NEED FOR AIR LIFT OF FOOD SUPPLIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Roger J. Teillet (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. Did the government first authorize, then rescind, an order for an air lift of food supplies to Indians in northern Manitoba, as reported from Winnipeg under date December 17, in the Toronto Globe and Mail?

Hon. Richard A. Bell (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): No, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, could I ask a supplementary question. Could the minister tell us, because of the great public interest in this matter, what is being done about it?

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Speaker, immediately there was any suggestion of difficulties in this particular area I instructed that an officer of the department, the assistant superintendent at The Pas, should go to the area and personally inspect the problems the Indians are alleged to be encountering. He has been there since last Thursday. He has been around and through more than half the homes in the area. There is no doubt that the economic conditions of some Indians in this area are not the best, but the reports which I have received by long distance telephone as late as this morning do not indicate that there is any emergency or that there is urgent need. The Indian agent has the fullest authority, on specific, direct instructions from me, to provide welfare when needed, and he is doing so. Arrangements are being made for a community development officer to be stationed in the area, and everything which can be done is being done. We will welcome the assistance of Christmas comforts from the Salvation Army but it did not seem necessary, or indeed realistic and practical, to have an air lift at the present time.

[Later:]

Mr. Teillet: Mr. Speaker, I have a further question to direct to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. Has the government investigated the charges made by Mr. Dinsmore in the Toronto Star of December 15, regarding the exploitation of Indians in Manitoba? If so, what were the results of this investigation, and what action is contemplated?

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I am not familiar with any charges made by Mr. Dinsmore. I think the hon. gentleman would have to identify the matter more closely before I could reply.

[Later:]

Mr. Teillet: Mr. Speaker, for the purpose of identifying for the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration the source of a question asked a moment ago, the charges are contained in—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member may pass it over, but he cannot proffer information in asking a question. If he has another question to ask he may do so, or he may send over the information.

Mr. Teillet: With all due respect, if I may I will repeat the question I asked earlier and identify it more clearly, which is what the minister requested me to do. The question I asked a moment ago was, has the minister or the government investigated the charges contained in an article written by Mr. Dinsmore from Gods Lake Narrows, Manitoba under date of December 15, which appeared in the Toronto Star and is headed "Indians Sell Potatoes at 15 Cents and Buy Them Back at 25". If the government has investigated these charges what were the results and what action is contemplated?

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I have already told the house this afternoon of the action which was taken. A senior officer of the department is in the area. He has been reporting to me daily and I have indicated that he has not found any suffering, privation or urgent need. He is under specific instructions to do everything possible to see that the welfare of these Indians is properly attended to.

(Translation):

HOUSE OF COMMONS

USE OF FRENCH IN CORRIDORS BY MEMBERS' SECRETARIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Prosper Boulanger (Mercier): My question is directed to the Prime Minister. Before putting it I might say that it could be made a question of privilege, but I shall make it an ordinary question.

Following publication in the newspaper La Presse of December 12 of an alleged statement by a member of this house during a conference in Toronto, would the Prime Minister tell us if it is true that secretaries were not allowed to speak French in parliament halls before the totally unexpected arrival of Social Crediters, as Mr. Caouette suggested when he spoke to university students in Toronto?

Mr. Speaker: I think that the hon. member will admit that his question is out of order.

[Later:]

Mr. Boulanger: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. A moment ago, when I put a question to the right hon. Prime Minister, I said that if it was out of order, I would make it a question of privilege.

I should like to call to your attention a statement made by the hon. member for Villeneuve while he was addressing university students in Toronto. In fact, he stated that the members of his group had done a lot for French Canadians in parliament, and he went as far as saying that from now on the secretaries would not have to be ashamed to talk French in the corridors of parliament.

Mr. Speaker, I have checked with the personnel of secretaries, and I have been informed that no member, either French or English speaking, had ever forbidden them to speak another language than English. In fact, they have always been free to speak the language they choose.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member can discuss this point with the member for Villeneuve, but I suggest he has no question of privilege. In any case, he has made his statement.

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order, for I notice that the hon. member for Mercier is trying to look more important than he really is. That is why he picks on people who are more important than he is.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I wish to call the hon. members' attention to the rule dealing with the order which must prevail in this house. When a member rises on a point of order or on a question of privilege he is given the floor first, but when a question is out of order, like the one which was put a moment ago, there is a violation not only of the procedure of the house, but also of the rights of other hon. members who may wish to put more serious questions.

REQUEST FOR ADDITIONAL HOLIDAYS FOR SESSIONAL STAFF

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Prosper Boulanger (Mercier): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. We all know that there are only three working days between Christmas and New Years, that is December 26, 27 and 28. Here is my question.

Since several members' secretaries, messengers and pages live in eastern or western Canada, could the Prime Minister give those people a holiday during that period? Could he not get into the Christmas spirit and give them a well deserved holiday.

Mr. Speaker: I must point out to the hon. member that this matter does not come under the Prime Minister but under the internal economy commission. All decisions in that regard have already been announced.

INQUIRIES OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Vincent Drouin (Argenteuil-Deux-Montagnes): I have a question for the Prime Minister. It concerns a statement made in the house last night by the hon. member for Villeneuve, to the effect that he would tell us a month ahead of time the date of the next election.

Can the right hon. gentleman tell the house whether he has arrived at an agreement with the hon. member for Villeneuve on the date of the forthcoming general election?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I trust the hon. member was not expecting to get an answer to his question.

Mr. Bernard Dumont (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In order to check subversive ideas in this country, is it the government's intention to interdict the Liberal party, as there are socialists with communist tendencies within its ranks?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I wish to bring to the attention of all hon. members the first and second paragraphs of Beauchesne's citation No. 171, because I have the impression that they are forgotten from time to time. It must be remembered that the rules of the house have to be observed and that we are not in school.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Vincent Drouin (Argenteuil-Deux-Montagnes): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct to the Prime Minister a question on an urgent matter of national interest. Does the Prime Minister intend to carry out the wish expressed yesterday by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson), by establishing a royal commission on bilingualism in Canada?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think the hon. member is aware that no question concerning a previous debate may be asked at this stage of the proceedings in this house.

Mr. Drouin: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The question asked follows from the debate which took place yesterday. That debate will be continued, if ever we can get to that stage of the business of this house.

(Text):

TELEVISION

HOCKEY—STATEMENT ON REQUEST FOR COMPLETE BROADCAST OF MAPLE LEAF GAMES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. G. E. Halpenny (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, the other day the hon. member for Trinity-Conception asked me to see whether all three periods of the Toronto Maple Leafs hockey games could be televised both on Wednesdays and Saturdays. I am advised by the officers of the corporation that they have no intention of altering the programming this year.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

ONTARIO—INCREASED REMUNERATION FOR JUDGES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Justice a question relating to word that the Ontario government is presenting legislation which would effect an increase in remuneration for judges in Ontario. Could the minister indicate whether this initiative for higher incomes for judges is to be followed by other provincial governments or by the federal government?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I have not seen the bill which was recently introduced in the Ontario legislature; I know only what I have read in the newspapers about it. What is proposed in the measure introduced by the attorney general is that the payment made by the province to judges exercising jurisdiction in the surrogate courts of the province be increased. This is not new. The province has always either made a payment to the surrogate judges in lieu of fees or allowed them to receive the judicial fees from the business of the surrogate courts. This, then, represents simply an increase in the amount provided from that source. I have no knowledge whether other provinces intend to follow this example. As far as the federal government is concerned anything of this nature, of course, is a matter of government policy to be announced in the usual course.

CANADIAN CENTENNIAL

INQUIRY AS TO APPOINTMENT OF COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Charles M. Drury (St. Antoine-Westmount): I wish to address a question to the Prime Minister. Some time ago in answer to a question concerning the nomination of commissioners to the centennial commission the Prime Minister expressed the hope that he could get some unnamed gentleman on the payroll very soon. In view of the right hon. gentleman's impending departure for the sunny south, could he make an announcement soon?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there is not going to be any departure to the sunny south. There is simply going to be an absence for a few days on official business. As to the hon. member's question, I can only say that the appointment is about to be made.

(Translation):

FINANCE

LACK OF FRENCH CANADIANS AMONG SENIOR OFFICERS AND EXECUTIVES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Maurice Cote (Chicoutimi): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Nowlan).

Could the minister tell the house when it will be possible to rectify the gross injustices that exist in the industrial development bank, where there are only two French Canadians among sixteen directors and only one French Canadian senior officer out of thirteen in the general manager's office in Montreal?

(Text):

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of Finance): I have no personal knowledge of this matter. The industrial development bank has branches in various places, and I have no idea how the personnel is divided in particular areas.

I will be very glad to take a look at the matter and discuss it with the hon. member as soon as I get the information.

DEFENCE PRODUCTION

REPORTED INTENTION OF U.S. TO REDUCE FOREIGN DEFENCE PURCHASES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Defence Production. Has the Canadian government made any formal representations to the government of the United States with respect to the decision of defence secretary McNamara to reduce foreign purchases for the United States defence department and his personally supervising and deciding on all orders over $100,000?

Hon. Raymond O'Hurley (Minister of Defence Production): Mr. Speaker, this question has been followed very closely and there has been a full discussion with Mr. McNamara and Mr. Rusk on just this question of production sharing and the other questions relating to research and development activities of the United States government here in Canada.

TRADE

WHEAT—STATEMENT ON FURTHER SALE TO CHINA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Thomas R. Berger (Vancouver-Burrard): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Agriculture. Can the minister advise the house, in so far as he is free to do so, with regard to the details of the most recent contract which the wheat board has negotiated with the government of China for the sale of wheat to that country?

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I have been waiting for some time for that question to be asked from the official opposition. I am very glad to be able to give that information.

The recent contract was for 870,000 long tons of wheat. The amount is roughly 34 million bushels. The estimated value is approximately $65 million. This is part of the long term agreement. This is the seventh contract under the agreement which, as hon. members know, allows for purchase of up to 187 million bushels of wheat. This particular contract brings the total contract under that long term agreement up to 145 million bushels.

As previously, payment will be made in sterling. The terms are 25 per cent cash and 75 per cent on 365 days' credit with interest. This is an extension of three months from the previous credit terms granted. This transaction was completed within the $100 million credit guarantee made by the government to the wheat board in order to facilitate the sale of grain to China.

The wheat under this latest contract will be shipped from west coast ports, including Prince Rupert, during the first half of the calendar year 1963. I hope the railways and all those concerned will co-operate in meeting the heavy orders that will be moving through the west coast in the next few months.

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might ask a supplementary question.

An hon. Member: Peanuts.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member has a supplementary question.

Mr. Argue: I wonder if I might ask a supplementary question following the very welcome announcement that has just been made by the Minister of Agriculture. May the house take it that the sale is a firm one, without it being necessary for the Minister of Agriculture to fly to Hong Kong in order to add his signature to the agreement?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I recognize the hon. member for Spadina.

Mr. Argue: I think this is an important question.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I recognize the hon. member for Spadina.

CUBA—INQUIRY AS TO CHANGE OF POLICY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. S. P. Ryan (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Prime Minister. Since the recent trouble in Cuba has there been any change in government policy with regard to trade with Cuba?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the policy with regard to trade with Cuba has been set out on a number of occasions in the house.

Inquiries of the Ministry

(Translation):

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

EXERCISE OF PATRONAGE BY DEFEATED CONSERVATIVE CANDIDATES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gerard Chapdelaine (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, in order to add a touch of colour to this question period, I should like to put a question to the Postmaster General (Mrs. Fairclough). Is it a fact that the Conservative candidates who were defeated at the last election are keeping the patronage and contracts in the ridings where they were defeated?

Mr. Speaker: I believe the hon. member should put his question on the order paper if he is seeking some information or would he be only making an allegation?

(Text):

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

REQUEST THAT GILL COMMITTEE REPORT BE MAILED TO MEMBERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Kootenay East): Mr. Speaker, as the government benches seem to be concerned about the lack of questions from the official opposition I should like to direct an urgent question to the Minister of Labour. In view of the fact that the report of the Gill committee which was commissioned to investigate the unemployment insurance fund was to have been tabled early in the fall, will the minister assure the house that if perchance this report is completed before the recess is over, he will mail the report to the members so they may study it during their absence from Ottawa?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I think an assurance has been given, and will be carried out, that after the report is in the hands of the government hon. members will be given an opportunity to study it during the recess. I imagine that the only way they could study it during the recess would be if they received it.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Since we were supposed to have received this report last fall, can the minister assure the house that we will receive it soon?

HARBOURS

VANCOUVER—APPOINTMENT OF LAND USE COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. R. Nicholson (Vancouver Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question I should like to direct to the Minister of Transport. On November 26 he replied to a question which I had asked earlier in the month with regard to appointment of a land use committee in connection with the land surrounding Vancouver harbour. This committee was promised in October, 1961. The minister stated that he expected shortly to announce the government's decision. May we expect that decision before the end of the year?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I would just repeat the answer which was previously given, namely that it will be announced shortly.

INQUIRIES FOR RETURNS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to either the Minister of Finance or his parliamentary secretary. On Wednesday, October 17, over two months ago, the house passed a motion of mine calling for the tabling of all correspondence with ministers of the government regarding pay increases and negotiating procedures for the civil service. Can something be done to expedite the tabling of this return?

Hon. G. E. Halpenny (Secretary of State): I will check into it, Mr. Speaker. I do not know what the situation is right now.

[Later:]

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the Secretary of State could give a progress report on the laborious task of preparing a list of returns that have not yet been made to the house.

Mr. Halpenny: Mr. Speaker, I suggested to the hon. member earlier this week or late last week that it would be tabled.

IMMIGRATION

INQUIRY AS TO SPEED UP OF ADMISSIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. S. P. Ryan (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. Has his department been instructed to speed up the admission of immigrants since he became the minister in charge?

Hon. Richard A. Bell (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the department has been expeditious at all times.

PUBLIC SERVICE

RECOMMENDATIONS FOR SALARY INCREASES NOT ACTED UPON

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Is the minister in a position now to answer my questions of last week, as he indicated on Thursday and Friday he would try to do, with regard to whether there are any categories of civil servants for whom pay increases were recommended by the civil service commission but which were not granted by the government?

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have asked for a report on this matter. I have been tied up with treasury board all week and have not had a chance to look into it.

Mr. Knowles: May I ask the Minister of Finance if he will do his best to have an answer to these questions before we adjourn on Thursday.

Mr. Nowlan: The hon. member knows that I always do my best.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Chown in the chair.

INTERIM SUPPLY

Resolved, that a sum not exceeding $330,089,511.93 being the aggregate of—

(a) one twelfth of the total of the amounts of the items set forth in the revised estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1963, laid before the House of Commons at the present session of parliament, except atomic energy item 5, Canadian Broadcasting Corporation item 5, finance items 45 and 50, forestry item 11, labour item 40, legislation items 30 and 35, mines and technical surveys items 30, 35, 40, 70, 80, 125 and 130, national defence item 70, national health and welfare item 25, northern affairs and national resources items 10, 45 and 90, public works items 5, 45, 70, 100, 105, 125, 145, 168 170, 180, 190 and 200, Royal Canadian Mounted Police items 5, 15 and 25, transport items 35, 40, 60, 80, 85, 100, 125, 222 and 225 loans investments and advances item L20 $292,175,958;

(b) an additional one twelfth of the amounts of defence production item 25, external affairs item 5, northern affairs and national resources item 105, of the said revised estimates, $1,842,041.67;

(c) one twelfth of the total of the amounts of the items set forth in the supplementary estimates (A) for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1963, except external affairs item 112a, transport items 213a and 222a, $8,738,178.92;

(d) ten twelths of the total of the amounts of the items set forth in the supplementary estimates (B) for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1963, $27,333,333.34, be granted to Her Majesty on account of the present fiscal year ending March 31, 1963.

(Translation):

Mr. Perron: Mr. Chairman, when the house adjourned last night, I was speaking of the joy of hon. members of the House of Commons at the thought of being able in 1967 to approach the centenary of our confederation, in a bilingual and bicultural atmosphere in this our Canada, which can certainly give the best way of life to a people who wants security and freedom, which is everybody's aim.

To come back to the budget we are now discussing, I understand that this budget was submitted last spring when there was no Social Credit member in the house, and when those who had had an opportunity of privately discussing monetary problems from the Social Credit angle at the time were also but few. That is why we are now asked to approve a budget which comprises such important amounts as $1,616,412,380, for national defence. We also see there other very large amounts like $788,181,300 for servicing the national debt, and we will be asked at the same time, to vote only $536 million for social security, under the Family Allowances Act.

As do quite a few other Canadian citizens, I consider social security as important as national defence. I also realize that, as in today's tormented world, whole nations have, under the pretext of ensuring their security, accepted to be crushed and dominated by world communism, the democratic countries must come to the fore, and that Canada in particular, because of its immense opportunities for the development of its natural wealth, should show leadership, but Canada should also give security and freedom to the Canadian people, to the fathers and mothers of families, by providing an amount higher than the $536 million which it has earmarked this year for family allowances, so that, thanks to this raise in family allowances, our Canadian families may enjoy a better standard of living, and all our small business people, in our villages and cities, may benefit every month from this increased buying power and keep their businesses at a sufficiently high level to make it worth their while.

I do not want to repeat what I said before on family allowances. But I mention it a second time because I consider this eminently social piece of legislation which was voted several years ago, extremely significant. I shall not quote any figures, this year, with regard to a substantial increase under that legislation, because I want to prevent the present minister from committing the same error as the Liberals in 1957, when they increased family allowances by only one dollar, hoping to persuade every Canadian into voting for them again.

Now, as I said a moment ago, we are called upon to vote a budget on the preparation of which we have in no way been consulted. However, I suppose it will be our duty to approve it since we shall have to approve or reject the current expenses, required by this government. However, knowing that another budget will be prepared during January, February or March, I hope that the Christmas and New Year spirit will inspire those responsible for the budget to provide more for family allowances so as to somewhat rejoice the hearts of many mothers who are now suffering from insecurity.

Yesterday, I made reference to hundreds of letters I have received. By doing so, I did not want to discredit certain families in Beauce who are going through hardship. In fact, if the people knew their member a little better in all our Canadian ridings, in the cities, particularly cities like Quebec, in Montreal and Toronto, they would send more letters describing the extreme poverty in which they live, having very little to put on the table, lacking the necessaries of life, and in need of a little more of the comfort and cares required for the better health of a growing generation. And we would not have to see, as we did during the last world war, enlistment in the active army of our country denied to 30 or 35 per cent of our young people because they had been underfed when they were growing up during the 1930-39 depression, under both Liberal and Conservative governments.

I hope that 1963 will bring more than an austerity budget, a budget which has been prepared last spring and which is being brought forward in slices of two twelfths, six twelfths or eleven twelfths—as one of our hon. friends opposite was telling us yesterday —thus forcing us to vote it or to accept it by piecemeal. I hope that the next budget which will be brought down when this session reconvenes, after the holidays adjournment, will include a more adequate sum as regards social security for fathers and mothers, as well as for children, these children who are growing up and who need to be better understood than we were when we were 16, 17 or 18 years old.

In 25 years from now, we should not have what are still being called, in 1962, children of the depression of the thirties.

[Mr. Perron.]

Mr. Chairman, I believe that those wishes are shared by many of us. I know that hon. members sitting on the government side have been hoping for many years to see a substantial increase in the family allowances under this eminently social piece of legislation. I have also had the opportunity to discuss privately this family allowances problem with members from the party sitting next to us in this house, and they too believe there is urgency for a substantial increase in family allowances which are now distributed in this country.

I hope that after the discussion on this budget, putting aside all political partisanship, it will be realized that tomorrow's economy will have to be directed more and more towards a distributive economy.

Let us then start by improving the legislation we already have. I therefore hope, speaking for myself and for the people of the county of Beauce, that the next federal budget will provide more than $536 million for family allowances and social security in our country.

(Text):

Mr. Beer: Mr. Chairman, I assume it is obvious or soon will be obvious that this is my initial contribution to the twenty fifth parliament of Canada. Since it is alleged that the life of this parliament hangs in the balance, I am at a loss to know whether I am making my maiden speech or delivering my farewell sermon. In any case, I believe that can only be decided posthumously.

By way of personal introduction I wish to say I have the honour and the responsibility of representing the constituency of Peel. To many of you my constituency will be known as the constituency that was so well represented by the late Mr. Gordon Graydon, who sat in this house and served this country well for 18 years and who occupied the seat immediately in front of the one from which I speak today. Of his enormous talents he gave unselfishly and without regard for his own health or his own wealth. Peel county and Canada were greatly enriched by his service, strengthened by his honour and his personal integrity and encouraged by the warmth of his personality. His passing left an insatiable vacuum in the public life of Peel county and indeed in the public life of Canada.

By way of further introduction I wish to remind this committee that Peel county is known to those of us who reside in it as the banner county of the province of Ontario. We believe we have some justification for thinking this way because Peel is a very rich and productive agricultural area, and in addition there is a very large urban population. There has been, or there was up until 1957, a very rapid industrial growth in this area. I am pleased to suggest also that this industrial development had attained such momentum prior to 1957 that it has continued at a reasonably satisfactory rate until the present.

The purpose of debate on interim supply is to provide hon. members with an opportunity to question and criticize the government on its policies. It is a great pleasure for me to participate in this debate even though we have not as yet had an opportunity to debate a budget. Today we are asked to approve of ten twelfths of the over-all appropriation without having had a real look at some of the forward looking measures that were supposed to be envisaged—and I use that word advisedly—in the speech from the throne.

I wish to deal with three main headings in my remarks, two of a general nature and one specifically directed to eastern agriculture. Speaking in this house some few weeks ago the hon. member for York South suggested that the Liberal members were acting as though they had been out of power for 50 years instead of five years. In reply I wish to suggest that the economic decline was so great in the last five years and unemployment was so severe, and with five whopping deficits in a row, that it would not require a lot of imagination to believe in fact that the Liberals had been out of power for 50 years.

The government seemed to take considerable pride in its introduction of the Farm Credit Act and the amendments thereto, and I suggest this was a very appropriate and responsible action to take. I would remind the committee that this is a measure which makes a larger sum of money available for loans to farmers, and I say it was a very responsible and appropriate action because farmers always need more credit under a Tory administration than under a Liberal administration.

As a farmer I am not only interested in making money available to farmers at 5 per cent. I am interested in seeing to it that all our people, our small business people and home owners, have money available to them at lower rates of interest; because you cannot bleed people white with high interest rates and then expect them to buy all the manufactured articles which you wish to sell them. If the people are not able to buy the manufactured articles then the manufacturer has no choice but to discontinue manufacturing them, and if he does that he has no further choice but to discharge or displace some of his employees. These high interest rates, which go back to the conversion loan policy of the government, have had a very substantial effect on the decrease in our economic growth and on the high unemployment we have experienced since that policy was introduced.

In my opening remarks concerning the constituency of Peel I should have reminded this committee that Peel was the home of the Avro Arrow before its untimely demise in 1958, and as a farmer I suggest to the government that I am just as much interested in economic growth and development as I am in agriculture. There used to be a saying that if the agricultural community was prosperous then so also was the rest of the country. That is not true in Canada today, and as a farmer I suggest that if our economic community is prosperous, and if our business community is active, then so will our farmers be reasonably prosperous. I also suggest that the government cannot throw important industries out the window and expect our economic growth to continue at a high level.

Dealing briefly with the Avro Arrow affair, I say that no one on this side of the house would question the right of the government to cancel government contracts. Certainly the government has information at its disposal which we do not have, information on which to base its decisions; but where there is right there is also responsibility, and I believe the government had a responsibility, before cancelling the Arrow, to endeavour to find other projects which would employ the people they proposed to displace.

Second, I believe it is incumbent upon the government to endeavour by every means possible to retain our young and skilled people in the country in order to make our country grow. As I said earlier I, as a farmer, am as interested in seeing substantial economic development as I am in the policies which affect me personally, and I wish now to deal with eastern agriculture.

First I want to offer my congratulations to the Minister of Agriculture for performing his duties to the very best of his ability, but I think eastern agriculture has been conspicuously absent so far from our deliberations in this house. I have not the exact quotation with me and if I misinterpret his remarks I would apologize and endeavour to make a correction, but speaking in Calgary some time last summer the minister made a statement to the effect "that now everything is in good shape in western Canada I am going to devote all my attention to eastern Canada." In substantiating that statement I would refer to page 688 of Hansard for October 18, 1962, where the minister is reported as having said precisely what I have indicated, and I think it is not necessary to read it into the record.

The minister has made a few speeches concerning agriculture in eastern Canada, in one of which he told the farmers "If you fellows don't cut down on your dairy production we are going to cut off your supports," and his second suggestion was that a lot of the farms now in dairy production should be transferred into beef production. I learned two or three things as a youngster, and one I remember particularly was that when young folks talk to old folks they should know what they are talking about. I suggest that when the Minister of Agriculture starts telling farmers they should transfer from dairy production to beef production he is making a very dangerous recommendation. It is quite possible for a farmer with a few cows to milk those cows and make a living for his family, whereas if he transfers into beef production he gets involved in securing more capital and a lot larger acreage of land to engage in one of the most highly specialized games I know of. Therefore I say that his suggestion to the farmers of eastern Canada to transfer from dairy production into beef production is a very dangerous one indeed.

I am surprised that someone has not found an opportunity to address the committee on the parable of the prodigal son. We all remember how the prodigal son dissipated his reserves through irresponsible spending and, because of his ill conceived policies, was confronted with austerity and what are now known in this house as emergency measures. These austerity measures have had a far reaching effect on eastern agriculture, and time will only permit me to mention two of the ways in which they have this effect.

I first want to mention the recognized need for the government to reduce the premium on grade A hogs. This was a premium for the production of quality hogs, and its abolition is going to take between $2.3 million and $2.4 million out of the pockets of many farmers in eastern Canada. In my opinion this austerity measure will hurt farmers in general.

Because of austerity some of the essential services to farmers are being curtailed and discontinued. I want to mention the dairy industry in particular. The dairy industry of this country is a very substantial one, and I do not believe that any phase of livestock production in this country has made a greater contribution to our economic well-being than has dairying. The inventory of dairy cows in Canada runs to approximately $6 million. Our milk production last year amounted to well over half a billion dollars—$616 million. Our exports amounted to $14 million. Then we have the slaughter value of the dairy cattle. Somebody is probably apt to ask me "Well, how can you get $14 million worth of exports out of a $6 million inventory?" The answer to that question is simply this, that according to the Canada Year Book the average value of all cows in milk production is $198 per head, which is how we arrive at a $6 million inventory, whereas the cattle exported to other countries are much more valuable and probably average in the neighbourhood of $500 each.

Mr. Chairman, I suppose the dairy cow has not been dignified by having been mentioned in the House of Commons since 1957, but I make no apology for mentioning it at this particular time. A dairy cow is an animal which gets a lot of pleasure out of consuming large amounts of feed and providing milk to feed the human race. As in all animals there is a difference in the degree of efficiency, so yardsticks have been established for measuring the efficiency of a dairy cow in turning feed or fodder into milk. There are three main yardsticks in use. One is known as ROP or record of performance. This is used by purebred breeders. There are two plans, A and B. They weigh the milk from these cows daily. At regular intervals government inspectors come in and check the weighing of the milk. They also draw samples, and it is on this basis that the butterfat content is computed. Then we have a system known as DHIA, which is dairy herd improvement association. This is used largely in Ontario as a yardstick for measuring the efficiency of grade herds. Then in Quebec, in addition to the systems I have mentioned, there is another system known as the mail order record whereby the farmer weighs the milk regularly and sends in his statement, and an unofficial record is submitted.

Some hon. members may wonder what this has to do with a debate on interim supply. Well, in the first place I want to say that the backbone of the livestock industry is the purebred breeder. This is the man in the dairy business who is using the ROP system or making ROP records. It is suggested by animal geneticists that at least 25 per cent of all our dairy cattle should be under some system of record of performance. For example, in the United States their average is much higher than ours. The number of dairy cattle on ROP in some states in that country runs as high as 47 per cent of all dairy cattle. There are other states which grade down from that figure to 25 per cent, and so on. In Europe all countries, excluding France, test 24 per cent of all their dairy cattle, and in Canada we test 8.2 per cent. The value of these records has been ascertained through a study which extended over a three year period in which 9,000 cows were sold at public auctions, and it was established that the cows which had ROP records sold for an average of $100 more than the cows which did not. So I suggest that records of performance have a very real value to the dairy producer in Canada, especially in view of the fact that we export tremendous numbers of dairy cattle each year.

It is my information that this government, as a result of austerity, has found it necessary to cut down or curtail this service. I have been advised that it has issued instructions that if any ROP inspector retires or passes out of the picture for one reason or another he is not to be replaced and will not be replaced until such time as this service is cut down to 75 per cent of its present volume. At the moment 95,000 cows in Canada are tested, and we have engaged in this particular type of work 188 inspectors. There are 102 in Ontario. The total cost of this service is approximately $1 million per year, so that if it is cut down to 75 per cent it will involve a saving of $250,000. I think this is probably false economy. I suggest to the government that in this way our austerity at this particular time is hurting farmers in Canada by limiting these essential farm services, and this is important business for us.

Therefore, in summing up, I am disappointed that austerity has made it necessary to reduce premiums on better quality hogs and that it has made it necessary to reduce these essential services to farmers. I also regret that this government has not embraced the problem of marketing agricultural products on a national basis; that it has not brought up for review the standards and grades affecting all farm products, and in particular livestock products. I am equally disappointed that there does not appear to be any recommendation regarding the health of animals and meat inspection, which was so widely mentioned in the press not many months ago. In fact this government has proven itself quite incapable of presenting to parliament any comprehensive plan for agriculture.

One of the things I learned in my youth was that it is a pretty poor concern about which you cannot say something good. I want to say about this government that I think they did a wonderful job in 1957 and 1958 in promising their way into power. I also suggest that they were fortunate in being able to purchase a short term lease of life in 1962. This reminds me of a little story. I had an Irish neighbour who said he had a hired man who was such a poor planner that he could not plan his way out of a pigsty even if both ends were open. I do not think that is true of this government, but I am suggesting that in the event of fire they might have difficulty in deciding which exit to use.

Mr. Douglas: Yesterday we had a useful discussion on the need for a better appreciation and understanding of the fact that Canada is a binational, bicultural and bilingual country. I think all of us were glad there was general unanimity in recognizing that if we are to have and preserve national unity in this country it can only be done by recognizing that there is a partnership in confederation which brought together the two great races, the two great cultures, which make up this country of ours.

Last night my hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre pointed out that the New Democratic party has long advocated this approach. I will quote a paragraph or two from the platform which was adopted at the founding conference in August, 1961. Under the heading "Co-operative Federalism" it says:

> The New Democratic party strongly affirms its belief in a federal system which alone ensures the united development of the two nations which originally associated to form the Canadian partnership, as well as that of other ethnic groups which later made Canada their home. Canada's constitution particularly guarantees their culture. The New Democratic party will fully maintain and respect these guarantees. Canadian federalism must provide for the protection of cultural, religious and other democratic rights, permit the vigorous and balanced growth of the country as a whole, and assure provincial autonomy.

It goes on to say:

> Immediately following confederation, a federal minister was given special responsibility for relations with the provinces. It is time to revive this post. The New Democratic government will create a department of federal-provincial relations to maintain and extend co-operation with the provinces, to co-ordinate and act as a special secretariat for joint committees and councils.

Then on February 20 last, in the city of Montreal, I issued a joint statement along with the president of the provisional council of the New Democratic party for the province of Quebec. Again I should like to put on record a paragraph or two from that statement because at that time we advocated what is now being suggested, namely the setting up of a royal commission to look into how we might better implement the idea of a binational, bicultural and bilingual society. This is the statement:

> Canadians must face the fact that, almost a hundred years after confederation, our federal-provincial and French-English relations continue to be seriously unsettled and unsatisfactory. The New Democratic party believes we must not permit this situation to drift until it gets out of hand. We believe there is urgent need for a thorough study of our experience of Canadian federalism and for a careful rethinking of the relations between the two nations which together make up the basic partnership in confederation.

To this end, the federal and Quebec executives of the New Democratic party propose that a federal-provincial commission on Canadian federalism and biculturalism be immediately constituted. Such a commission should bring together and draw upon the experience and knowledge of outstanding Canadians from all parts of the country. It should hold public hearings throughout the country and invite representatives of every section of the Canadian community to present their point of view and make recommendations for appropriate action.

The New Democratic party believes that a new approach is necessary on the important problem of Canada's unity. We believe that the program adopted at our founding convention, with its pioneering conception of co-operative federalism, presents such a new approach. True Canadian unity depends on equal recognition and respect for both the main cultures of our country and this is the basis on which the New Democratic proposals are formulated.

However, the task we face as a country must be understood by all our people and this requires much more intensive thought and study.

The commission of inquiry proposed in this statement will provide the fullest opportunity for such further study. Naturally, the personnel of the commission is a matter for the government in power to decide. To illustrate the calibre of Canadian we have in mind, we mention such outstanding people as the following:—

M. Andre Laurendeau, editor in chief of Le Devoir; Professor W. L. Morton, chairman of the department of history of the University of Manitoba; M. Gerard Pelletier, editor of La Presse; Dr. N. A. M. Mackenzie, president of the University of British Columbia; Professor Pierre-Elliott Trudeau, professor of public law, Universite de Montreal; Mr. Kurt Swinton, president of Encyclopedia Britannica of Canada; M. Jean Marchand, president of the confederation of national trade unions; Dean F. R. Scott, of McGill's faculty of law; M. Jean-Louis Gagnon, editor of Le Nouveau Journal; M. Claude Jodoin, president, Canadian Labour Congress; Dean H. E. Read, faculty of law, University of Dalhousie; Mr. Blair Fraser, editor, Maclean's.

Canadians of this stature—and one could name many others—would make a lasting contribution to the constitutional and cultural future of Canada. The New Democratic party urges that the commission should be appointed now, without delay, so that Canada may celebrate the hundredth anniversary of confederation as a united country, with clear guide lines for the future.

We should like to see such a commission established, and we hope the government will give this suggestion serious consideration. But there are many things which could be done now. The civil service commission could review its whole policy of recruitment. I have been appalled, as have many other hon. members, to see the dearth of French Canadians in some of the upper brackets of both the departments and the crown corporations. It is the sheerest nonsense to say this is because there is not an adequate number of French Canadians with the necessary training or qualifications to fill these positions. The civil service commission needs to follow a policy of recruitment under which French Canadians with the necessary training and experience could be made understudies so they might automatically move into the higher positions in both the public service and in the crown corporations. This is something we have needed to do for a long time.

I was impressed by the eloquent plea made last night by the hon. member for Laurier when he asked members in all parts of the house to give their support to this idea. I would have been more impressed if I could have forgotten that he and his associates sat on the treasury benches for 22 years during which time they had ample opportunity to carry out that kind of recruitment program, a program which would have seen to it that trained French Canadians occupied senior positions in the service of the government of Canada.

The organization and methods division of the civil service commission could also reexamine the whole administrative structure to ensure that we are operating as a bilingual and binational country. I am told that in many departments letters come in French, are translated into English, the whole problem is dealt with on an English basis, then the answer is dictated in English, that letter is translated into French. This is a hangover from Canada's colonial days. An entirely new approach must be made to our administrative set-up.

There are further measures which we have been advocating, together with other members. There is the question of a national flag, a national anthem, and a constitution fully amendable in Canada. These are goals whose attainment should be proceeded with now. While I do not want to inject a partisan note into the discussion, let me say to the hon. member for Laurier who was telling the government the other night that this was their responsibility, and that they must take the initiative—and I fully agree with him—that I cannot help remembering that the Liberal government set up a parliamentary committee on a national flag which sat for two years, collecting hundreds of designs, and then dropped the matter like a hot potato. I think the time has come for all of us in all parts of the House of Commons seriously to set ourselves to the task of acquiring these national symbols which will give to the Canadian people a sense of national pride so that we can reach our centenary with a sense of greatness and a sense of belonging to a nation which has become of age.

I wish to underline what was said by my colleague the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre last evening on this whole question of supply and the granting of money to the government. I think this parliament has really been a shameful exhibition. It is the privilege of members, before voting money, to be able to query ministers; to ascertain what money is being spent for; and to ascertain what the government's policy is. During this period of almost three months in which this parliament has been in session we have been unable to discharge that responsibility. When we try to move to adjourn the house in order to discuss a matter of public importance, we are told that the matter is not urgent. When we ask questions on the orders of the day, we are told that these matters are more properly for discussion when the estimates come up for consideration. However, no estimates have come up for consideration, except for a few hours when we discussed the estimates of the Department of Agriculture. When we come to discuss interim supply we find that many of the ministers are absent. During Thursday and Friday of last week hardly any ministers were present. With the exception of the Minister of Justice and the Associate Minister of National Defence, no minister has taken part in the debate or made a government statement on the many questions which have been raised in the course of this debate.

When this supply motion passes, parliament will have voted to the government between $3,000 million and $4,000 million without having had an opportunity to pass a single estimate or an opportunity to interrogate a single minister. I must say that I have been disappointed that, with respect to the various questions that have been raised during the course of this debate, no statements have been forthcoming from the ministers of the crown. Let me just touch on a few of the items. Some of my colleagues raised the matter of the Columbia river treaty which is now almost two years old. Parliament has had no opportunity to discuss it. It has not been referred to the committee on external affairs. There are many questions to which members of this House of Commons have a right to get an answer. For instance, we wish to know why the McNaughton plan was shelved in favour of the plan which is incorporated into the treaty. I think we have a right to know why a treaty was signed with the United States prior to an agreement being signed with the province of British Columbia.

Many of us wish to know if this treaty leaves the Canadian government with authority to divert sufficient water to meet our expanding needs for irrigation and for domestic and industrial consumption. This matter is important not only to the people of British Columbia, although for them it is important as there are large areas of British Columbia in which irrigation would be of value. The members who come from the prairies know that if only 10 per cent of the flow of the Columbia river were diverted into the Nelson river basin it would double the flow of the South Saskatchewan river, a result which would be of immense value to the farmers in the three prairie provinces.

I think we have a right to know whether or not the government intends to facilitate the sale of downstream power benefits. The Minister of Public Works, when he was minister of justice and was speaking in Prince George on November 28, 1961, stated the government's position clearly and beyond any shadow of doubt. He said this:

> Canada is opposed to the sellout of the power we are entitled to under the treaty. Canada is opposed to long term contracts tying up Columbia downstream benefits. This would confer an enormous benefit on the Americans but, we are not prepared to permit that at the expense of British Columbia. The Bennett-United States squeeze play won't work. The power sellout has to be resisted.

Then he went on to say this:

> This is a sensible, practical and mutually profitable arrangement between two neighbours. To exchange it for a penny-wise-and-pound-foolish agreement under which this country would dispose of a great resource in its entirety would be sheer madness.
>
> It would be an act of such reckless and improvident philanthropy that would make this country the laughing stock of the world.

I submit that it will make us an even greater laughing stock if we supinely surrender and agree to the sale of these downstream benefits. Any excuse that this is being done in order to get United States dollars is surely a very lame one indeed, since the need for United States dollars is a short term requirement. The need for this power is something which will affect this country for many years to come. To me it is amazing that in this whole debate no minister from the government has stood up in order to clarify the government's position. It is true that the Minister of Public Works interrupted the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard two or three times but, although we invited him to do so, he has made no statement clarifying the government's position.

There is also the matter of defence which I might mention. The Canadian people are anxiously waiting for some clear cut statement on the government's position with regard to nuclear arms, either with regard to whether we are going to have nuclear arms on Canadian soil, or whether NATO is going to become a nuclear power. From the Secretary of State for External Affairs and from the Minister of National Defence we have had contradictory statements. From the Prime Minister we have had some soporific platitudes. However, we have had no clear cut statement as to what the government's intention is. In the money we are voting there is money for defence, without our having any opportunity to discuss and debate what the government's defence policy is. It is common knowledge that there is now a good deal of pressure to have NATO become a nuclear power. At the meeting of NATO parliamentarians the under secretary of the United States said that the United States government was willing to consider a request to make NATO a nuclear power. Yesterday in his report on the NATO meeting of last week, the Secretary of State for External Affairs told the house that there was discussion among the nations meeting there of the possibility of setting up medium ballistic missiles if they could be kept under some form of control. If the government is going to make a decision like this, I submit that it should be made only after there has been the fullest opportunity for debate in this House of Commons, so that members in all parts of the house can express their views, and that it should not be given to us merely as a fait accompli.

The government's position is as yet undisclosed. The Liberal party's position is also not too clear. I congratulate the hon. member for St. Antoine-Westmount on the excellent presentation he made the other day. I take it from his statement that the Liberal party, if NATO expresses its desire to become a nuclear power, would agree that Canada should acquiesce in that regard. As a matter of fact, according to the press the hon. member for Trinity has gone even further and suggested that we ought to enter into an agreement with the United States for nuclear weapons.

In my view there is an opportunity now for all parties in the house to state clearly where they stand on this important matter. I want to say that as far as this group is concerned we are convinced that the meagre military gains from making NATO a nuclear power would be more than offset by the tragic consequences of increasing the membership of the nuclear club. Making NATO a nuclear power is an open invitation to the Warsaw pact nations also to become a nuclear force. If the Cuban crisis demonstrated anything, it demonstrated that there was great apprehension on the North American continent when it was found that there were nuclear missiles within 90 miles of the shore of this continent.

I think we should consider what would be the effect on the Warsaw pact nations if there were nuclear weapons in the possession of West German forces, even though they were under some type of NATO control, because how effective that control would be would always be in question. I cannot imagine any way in which you would harden the situation in middle Europe more than by having West Germany armed with nuclear weapons.

We in this group believe that the ultimate hope of the world and of maintaining peace is that eventually we shall be able to get a ban on nuclear testing and that eventually we will get nuclear disarmament under international inspection and control. That is a long, hard road and it will only come about if we can lessen the tensions which are abroad in the world. We suggest that making NATO a nuclear power will not lessen the tensions but will increase them. It will harden the situation, which will make the cessation of nuclear tests and a program of nuclear disarmament much less likely to succeed.

We contend that if Canada becomes a nuclear power it will weaken our moral authority. It will lessen our effectiveness to work for mutual disarmament between the great powers in the world.

Mr. Crouse: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Douglas: If it does not take up my time.

Mr. Crouse: I have been following his remarks very closely. I should like to know what in his opinion was the deterrent that caused Russia to remove her nuclear weapons from Cuba during the Cuban crisis?

Mr. Douglas: I am not sure that is relevant to what I am talking about. If my hon. friend is talking about deterrents, may I point out that the United States today has a deterrent power about ten times as great as that of the Soviet union. We have an adequate deterrent power now and the choice we have in the world is whether we are going to develop two great armed camps each equipped with a nuclear deterrent and with no room for flexibility, resulting in an impasse out of which there can come only one thing, a war of annihilation. The alternative is to have sufficient flexibility so that nations like Canada can help to lessen the tension and prepare the way so that we can move step by step toward a cessation of nuclear tests, and the achievement of nuclear disarmament and eventually general disarmament.

One of the steps that could be taken is military disengagement through central Europe, including Berlin. No one can long maintain a static situation with two great powers increasing their deterrent capacity, because this will eventually lead to war unless something is done to lessen these tensions. We believe that Canada can play an important role in this regard and that our best military role probably lies best in contributing conventional forces to NATO. But even more important is our diplomatic role in which we can be a power that has the confidence of other nations. Because we are a non-nuclear power, because we have no territorial ambitions and because we are not a colonial power we can help to negotiate, to lessen tensions, and thus help lay the groundwork for a peaceful solution.

Mr. Matheson: May I ask a question on that point?

Mr. Douglas: Yes.

Mr. Matheson: Does the hon. member not feel that when this government in September, 1958, selected the Bomarc, and in July, 1959, selected the CF-104, and in March, 1960, selected the Honest John, in effect they decided the policy for Canada without giving us any chance to debate it or to consider the implications of this selection of weapons, and that to some extent we are now involved in an alliance with allies to whom we have certain obligations, not because parliament had any choice in the matter but because this government—

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Chairman, my hon. friend is not asking a question; he is making a speech, and he is perfectly at liberty to do so when I have finished. I have been saying all over the country that the moment we committed ourselves to weapons which are useless without nuclear warheads we are ipso facto committed to a nuclear program and this is one of the things to which I object. I am raising the matter now because I suspect that we are again being led down the garden path and are going to find ourselves part of an alliance which is going to become a nuclear power, with the result that we will have no choice but to become a member of the nuclear club or to withdraw from the NATO alliance.

I see that my time is going, Mr. Chairman, but there are two or three other items that have been raised in this debate and on which we have had no reply from the government. Before I leave defence I should like to say that I support those who have been advocating that we should have a defence committee. Even if in that committee we could not agree completely on a non-partisan defence policy we would at least have common and reliable information, so that the members of that committee would have all the facts regarding Canada's defence forces and would be able to formulate their ideas of what should be done in the light of those facts and not on the basis of bits of information which members have to pick up from time to time.

There are two other matters I want to raise, and I will deal with them in a sentence or two. I want to raise the matter of R.C.M.P. interrogation of students and members of faculties on the campuses of universities. The other day the Minister of Justice made two statements which in my opinion were quite specious and quite evasive. He said with reference to these interrogations: "No such instructions have been given by me". Second, he said, "No special security investigations are being conducted on university campuses". This is playing with words, Mr. Chairman. Perhaps no special instructions have been given by the minister, but there are standing instructions. This questioning and interrogating of students and members of faculties of universities has been going on, and as far as we can learn it is still going on. It may be that there are no special security investigations, but the fact is that there are investigations. The Minister of Justice is not here and since he is not here I will give specific instances during the consideration of his estimates, instances which are on the record. Interrogations have been conducted, not because some student was applying for a job but students who were interrogated, and their parents interrogated, because those students took part in a ban the bomb demonstration. If the minister will look up his departmental files he will find records sent to him by the attorney general of Saskatchewan concerning interrogations which took place in that province in the year 1961.

The Deputy Chairman: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but I must inform him his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Continue.

The Deputy Chairman: Does the hon. member have the unanimous consent of the committee to continue his remarks?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Douglas: I want to thank the committee and I can assure you I will not encroach upon its generosity.

I should like to say, with reference to this question of the R.C.M.P., that this is a continuous policy that has been carried out. No one in this party or anywhere in the house will ever object to the enforcement of law or to the arrest or punishment of those who, by overt actions, are seeking to overthrow democratic government by the use of force. However, when we prosecute innocent people on the basis of secret reports which they have never seen, on the basis of gossip, on the basis of evidence from stool pigeons, we violate the basic tenets of justice and of the bill of rights. I am prepared, when we get to the estimates of the Department of Justice, to document some of the things which I know personally have happened. I do not lay this at the door of the present Minister of Justice. This has been going on for many years, both under this government and the former government.

The other matter I want to raise is the abandonment of railway lines on the prairies. I hope some opportunity will be given for discussing this subject. I hope we shall have some statement from the government at an early date because this is a pressing matter. As a matter of fact, I understand the premiers of the three prairie provinces are calling a conference to consider this subject. They will undoubtedly be making representations to the government as a group. I know some of them have already made representations to the government individually.

In a nutshell the situation is this, Mr. Chairman. The royal commission on transportation, in its report, said that there were about 4,300 miles of light density lines on the prairies. The Canadian National has informed the three prairie governments that there are about 2,200 miles of railway lines that are candidates for abandonment. Mr. R. A. Emerson, the operating vice president of the Canadian Pacific, has indicated there are about 2,500 miles. This means that there are between 4,000 and 5,000 miles of line that may be abandoned, and between 2,000 and 3,000 miles of this is in the province of Saskatchewan.

I will not take the time of the committee to go into what it means to have lines abandoned, to leave small communities in rural areas without railway transportation for shipping their products; the loss of investment in grain elevators, places of business and homes that have been constructed along those railway lines. What I do want to point out is that the royal commission on transportation recommended that if there were to be a program of abandonment it should be conducted in an orderly manner; that there should be a five year period of adjustment between the time permission was granted to abandon the line and putting the abandonment into effect. It was recommended there should be larger depreciation allowances to ease the adjustment, and other forms of compensation.

Mr. Donald Gordon, president of Canadian National Railways, has advocated that a master plan should be drawn up so that the citizens would know what lines were going to be abandoned and when they were going to be abandoned. He advocated that this be done in an orderly fashion. I should like to suggest to the government that representations should be made to the board of transport commissioners that no more abandonment be authorized until the government has formulated a policy and a master plan containing adequate compensation provisions. Already over 180 miles of line in Saskatchewan have been abandoned or are the subject of applications for abandonment. The chairman of the board of transport commissioners quite properly said that legally he must hear these applications and he must pass upon them. It is not his business to hold them up until the government has produced a master plan.

I hope that before we come to the next request for interim supply the government will be prepared to give some statement to the committee concerning their program and that in the meantime they will make representations to the board of transport commissioners to hold up any further authorization for abandonments.

In closing, Mr. Chairman, may I say that I have dealt with several matters, concerning all of which we would like an opportunity to question the ministers, and to hear from them statements of policy. When we come back after the recess we will be asked to pass the eleventh twelfth of these estimates. I should like to say that we should not then be blackmailed into passing them by being told, "We must have this money passed in two or three days, otherwise we cannot pay the civil service." I think we have a right to expect that when the interim supply motion is considered again we are going to get adequate replies to some of these questions, and we are going to have an adequate opportunity to question the responsible ministers regarding the supply which they are asking this parliament to pass for them.

(Translation):

Mr. Sauve: Mr. Chairman, we have been in session for 58 days, as shown on the order paper, and, all the while, we have been entitled to ask ourselves what the government intends to do about the great problems facing this country.

I quite understand why the government decided to wait until September 27 to convene the twenty fifth parliament for its first session. That does not surprise me at all. I also understand why, in a few days, the government will give us a month's holiday. It is because it has not been able to prepare legislation to deal with the great problems that are crushing the people.

The government is undecided; it does not know where it is going. The fact is borne out by the speech from the throne of the first session of the twenty fifth parliament and that of the last session of the twenty fourth parliament. Those two speeches are almost alike. If, at the time of the last session of the twenty fourth parliament, we were faced with important problems, if, at the opening of the current session, we were faced with even more serious problems, as the Prime Minister indicated after the election, I completely fail to see why the government persists in refusing to adopt a definite policy concerning the great problems of the moment.

At the opening of the last session, a series of measures had been proposed. We came back to parliament on September 27, and the problems were still the same. We had been told that the problems were very serious.

The government, in my opinion, is incapable of dealing with the situation. We are now at our third interim supply. For the third time since the beginning of the session, the government is asking us for interim supply. We are still without a budget and we know that, upon our return in January, the government will again ask us for interim supply.

When will the government bring down a budget?

On the other hand, we know also that within the cabinet there is not so much unity as discord. In fact, the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Fulton) has seen fit, only a few months before the general election, to leave this house in order to become the leader of a provincial party which is not represented in the legislature.

Ministers are absent from the house when we are discussing legislation which the government tells us or would have us believe is important legislation. They are not here for the examination of their own interim supply. That is strange; where could they be? They must have very good reasons for being absent from the house.

When you look at the present situation, it is obvious that the government does not know where it is going.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. The hon. member's speech is very interesting and I should like to hear it. I am sure all other hon. members will agree with me and kindly co-operate.

(Text):

Mr. McGee: Would the hon. member permit a question? The hon. member was mentioning absenteeism, and I wonder if he could tell us where he was during the Quebec election?

Some hon. Members: Winning it.

Mr. Pickersgill: Where was your party?

Mr. Sauve: If the hon. member does not know, then he does not follow what is happening in this country.

Mr. Pickersgill: Where was the Tory party in the Quebec election?

Mr. Sauve: Mr. Chairman, hon. members on at least two occasions have noticed the filibuster engaged in by members of the government party on two bills. They were so much afraid of presenting new legislation that they kept on questioning and questioning various ministers. We have never seen filibustering conducted this way. May I add that in another field the government is also avoiding its responsibility; we know very well that the establishment of a national flag and anthem is solely the responsibility of the federal government. However, the government is calling a federal-provincial conference and leaving it to the provinces to decide. Then it will say to the provinces "We cannot get an agreement; it is your fault, not our fault."

Mr. Ricard: Why did you not have them before 1957?

Mr. Sauve: As my hon. friends who are learned in economics would say, when there is no input there can be no output.

(Translation):

Mr. Chairman, this government has no policy, either with regard to all the great Canadian issues or in respect of significant international problems.

Indeed, last September, all Canadians were ashamed of the attitude taken by our Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) in London, when he condemned the action of Great Britain who was about to decide joining the common market. Mr. Chairman, I say that what is good for Great Britain is also good for Canada. The Prime Minister should have satisfied himself of that fact before his departure, and he should have resorted to logic rather than expediency. Indeed, our friends in Great Britain took it upon themselves to tell him at the time what they thought of him and his policy.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Green) attended the NATO conference. What did he do there? He simply told our western allies: I have no policy, I cannot commit my government, my government does not know what to do, therefore I am waiting and you should wait too—you should wait as far as western defence is concerned.

I might go on and on, Mr. Chairman, and mention many other issues.

In fact, according to some forecasts, there will be 500,000 unemployed in Canada this winter. The spokesman of the Canadian Labour Congress and of the federation of national unions came to tell us that we might have even more than 500,000. The Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr) just said: "There are more people working now than last year."

There probably are more people working now than last year. But the fact remains that those 500,000 workers are unemployed, and have been looking for jobs for quite some time. Will the reply of the Minister of Labour give them jobs?

The position of those 500,000 unemployed creates an urgent problem which the government is unable to face.

Neither does the government know how to organize this country's economic development. Experts told us so, and everybody has noticed it since 1957. The pace of national production has slowed down, yet the government just tells us one month after another: "There may, perhaps, be an increase".

We have some extremely serious problems in the field of national health. A royal commission has been investigating the problem for two years. There is no answer yet, no decision yet.

And we come to the famous Columbia river issue. I remember that during the elections, in 1957 and 1958, hon. members of this government were roaming about Canada, stating that the Liberal party did not always look after the interests of Canadians, but that they would look after them, and defend them, in spite of ever effort made by the United States.

They were promising to stand up for our interests. But did they stand up for our interests when the Prime Minister himself and the then minister of justice signed in Washington a treaty through which we were sold down the river to the United States, without the least guarantee. Since then, they have realized what they have done and they do not want to answer for it before parliament or have the matter discussed by a committee. And those are only a few of the problems I could mention. We are facing housing problems, municipal problems.

In Quebec, these last few years, efforts have been made to bring the province up to date. An economic planning board has been set up and has already produced its first report. They have tried to develop an education policy which would enable every youth to continue his studies, whatever his financial resources. School allowances have been given to parents of 16 and 17 year old students who want to continue their studies.

The provincial government has embarked upon a hospital insurance policy.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I regret to have to remind the hon. member for Iles-de-la-Madeleine that he has to stay within the limits of federal policies and that he cannot comment on acts or legislation of the Quebec government.

[Mr. Sauve.]

Mr. Sauve: By so doing, Mr. Chairman, Quebec wanted to become an asset for the rest of Canada. We want to be full citizens and we want our confederation partners to make things easier for us. We, from the province of Quebec, want to be equal partners within confederation.

I wish to recall the wonderful speech of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) on this issue, as well as those made by other hon. members who have supported the fine words of the Leader of the Opposition.

What is our impression when we consider what has happened since confederation? What do we French Canadians think of federal politics? We certainly get the impression that we have given our partners the right to govern without our effective participation.

We have often given our mass support to this or that party which has made up the government, but we have given to our partners, to the Anglo-Saxon majority, the right to govern. We have nearly always obtained unimportant portfolios. True, there have been exceptions, but one constant trend can be noticed. No French Canadian, for instance, has ever been Minister of Finance. To support that statement, I only have to look at the guide of Canadian ministries since confederation. And if I had had time to peruse it further, I might have found out that there are other departments which have never been headed by a French Canadian.

That is within the jurisdiction of the house. Political parties are responsible for the present situation.

When I consider what goes on, and when I read the document entitled "Federal Administration in Canada", I find the same situation again: little or no French Canadians in important positions in the administration.

Within parties, what happens when it comes to solving problems which are particular to the province of Quebec? The situation is the same in any party. When it comes to the province of Quebec, we are told: "That is a Quebec problem. You, members from Quebec, settle that among yourselves; you discuss the matter and solve the problem."

Fear is the only word for it. Our English speaking fellow citizens are afraid to interfere in our particular problems, so that we tend to isolate ourselves. We are led to close our ranks, even in the house, and we forget that there are Canadian problems of extreme importance which it is our responsibility to solve.

I must say, Mr. Chairman, that our English speaking partners do not always make our task an easy one.

On the other hand, I note that throughout Canada there is great sympathy for our dual culture, for the French fact in Canada. Our colleagues in the house have certainly shown much understanding and interest in the French fact, in French culture.

I should like to point out here that some members of the Liberal opposition are taking French lessons every Wednesday night.

But that is not the problem. Mr. Chairman, there exists, in some quarters, a state of mind which is not in keeping with this generous ideal shown towards the French fact in Canada by a great number of our English speaking colleagues and by the majority of English speaking citizens of this country.

One has only to consider the board of directors of the Canadian National Railways to understand my point. Besides the same situation prevails within the board of directors of the Canadian Pacific, where there is not a single French Canadian. The same goes for several crown corporations.

I have here the Directory of Directors published by the Financial Post, an annual publication in which are found the names of 10,000 directors of companies, of which 550 or 600 only are French Canadian names. These figures indicate a state of mind. There is a lack of faith in us. It is no wonder then that following an incident such as the one that occurred recently in the committee on railways, when the president of the C.N.R. gave evidence, there should have been an outburst of nationalism in the province of Quebec. It made it possible for a nationalist feeling to flare up.

That incident in the committee on railways simply gave us an opportunity to show what we feel since confederation. It is often said that no French Canadians are available, that they do not want to come to Ottawa, that they refuse to sit on the boards of large companies, that they do not want to leave the province of Quebec and settle in other provinces—that is probably true—but you know as I do that we are not in a bilingual environment in Ottawa, that we do not feel at home.

How can you expect a French Canadian to settle here permanently when he does not feel at home? As long as he does not feel at home, he will hesitate to settle here.

We want to feel at home here, in Ottawa, as well as in the other provinces. If we are equal partners, we have the right to take part everywhere in the nation's business, whether in Montreal, Ottawa or Vancouver.

It is possible that if one or two great French Canadian personalities were brought to Ottawa and gathered around them other French Canadians, there would come a time when the number of French Canadians would increase in the civil service. Perhaps a solution could be found then. Perhaps it would be advisable to find a man of competence and good will who would try to attract, both to the public service and to private enterprise, other French Canadians who would work with him. It is not by limiting ourselves to the recruiting of "professional French Canadians" that we will solve the problem.

Mr. Chairman, we have been in a difficult position since confederation. In my opinion, the house earnestly wishes to find a solution before the centennial, in 1967. We will have to work hard and show some generosity because if we fail to get along with each other, we will then be in an extremely difficult position. Our English speaking partners are well aware of the problem which has been facing Canada since confederation.

Over the past ten years, the Massey royal commission, the Gordon royal commission and others have carried out investigations which have led to the conclusion that French Canadians have a tendency to make their voices heard more and more and that English-speaking Canadians wish to fight against the influence of the United States.

We know very well that the United States may soon exert progressively as much influence on our political decisions as they do at present in the military, cultural and economic fields. That is why our partners in confederation, English speaking Canadians, are just as anxious as we are to maintain the political sovereignty of our country. However, we wish to be equal partners. If we fail to achieve that ideal, we may well start having our doubts about confederation, thus jeopardizing the interests of all Canadians, both French and English speaking.

All French Canadians, I am sure, will want to support the proposals put forward by the Leader of the Opposition yesterday. The sooner we learn to understand each other, to remove difficulties and to intensify comprehension between us, French and English speaking Canadians, the sooner we will be proud to be Canadians.

I take the liberty to say this, Mr. Chairman, because I represent the Iles-de-la-Madeleine riding which, proportionately speaking, had the largest number of men and women in the armed forces during the last world war. There were more "Madelinots" enlisted in Canadian armed forces than people from any other riding in the country, and I am very proud of that fact.

I do not intend to speak at great length about my riding in this debate. I will have another opportunity to do so later on. I should simply like to draw attention to an anniversary. On January 11, 1963, it will be 35 years since the inauguration of air mail service in the Iles-de-la-Madeleine, which meant that the Madelinots could get mail during the wintertime. But even today there is still one island that gets its mail from the air during the winter. In fact, they must wait till spring for mail shipments out of Entrance island. That is a problem I will discuss when the post office estimates are before us.

Mr. Chairman, my time is just about over and I should like to insist that this government must introduce legislation in accordance with the needs of the country. We want appropriate legislation to meet our needs and we are conscious that in working to that end, we are doing it for the good of the nation and in the best interests of our country.

Mr. Cook: Mr. Chairman, I should not want this debate to end without making my modest contribution.

First, I wish to congratulate the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson), the Associate Minister of National Defence (Mr. Sevigny), the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Gregoire) and all the members who took part in the debate, whatever party they belong to, for having ventured into a field which has been neglected for too long. I refer of course to the debate which took place all day yesterday on full bilingualism and the harmony which should exist between the two great Canadian cultures, that is the French and English cultures. This debate, in my opinion, should have been held long before today.

Mr. Chairman, in a few years, we shall be celebrating the confederation centennial. I feel that the Canadian government should begin to take its responsibilities right away and give Canada all it needs to achieve national unity.

It was said yesterday that a board of inquiry, made up of representatives from the federal and provincial governments, was on the point of being established for the purpose of providing Canada, at last, with a distinctive national flag and a national anthem.

[Mr. Sauve.]

Mr. Chairman, I must point out that, since the beginning of the session, many members have made speeches on those two questions. As a matter of fact, the hon. member for Chicoutimi (Mr. Cote) introduced a motion for the adoption of "O Canada" as our national anthem. His motion was discussed for an hour and killed at six o'clock.

The same thing happened when the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Olson) put forward a proposal to provide Canada with a distinctive flag. Several members took part in that debate, congratulated the hon. member for having introduced a motion of that nature. In short they made their comments to extend the debate, and at six o'clock the bill was talked out.

Mr. Chairman, I sincerely believe that the adoption of a flag and a national anthem is not a matter for provincial authorities, but rather for the Canadian parliament. I do not see why the premiers should participate in the discussion since, as the country has ten provinces represented by three different parties they might perhaps raise difficulties.

Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to go on speaking about national unity, bilingualism, a distinctive flag and a national anthem, because I think that we are now considering the supplementary budget which will enable the government to continue its operations during the Christmas recess.

In fact, I am of the opinion that the best way to attain this national unity which we all want would be to start by agreeing ourselves, among Canadians, and for the government, whichever it is, to understand the needs of Canadians in order to be in a position to give them what they ask for and what they need.

If I consider the details of the supplementary budget that was issued to us recently, I see that very few estimates can interest the working class, our family heads and our Canadian unemployed.

Maybe it is normal that we have a deficit budget every year. But if despite these deficiencies we have unemployed and Canadian citizens who starve to death in a country as rich as ours, I do not believe it is normal to have such deficits. I would agree to a deficit if we were giving to one and all a decent living. But if we visit the country, we see that those deficits have not settled unemployment and that the ills which existed in many of our ridings are still there.

(Text):

An hon. Member: Order.

The Deputy Chairman: It being five o'clock it is my duty to leave the chair in order that the house may proceed to deal with private members' business under the provisions of standing order 15.

Progress reported.

Mr. Speaker: It being five o'clock the house will turn to private members' business. We shall consider, first, private bills appearing on page 21 of today's order paper.

PRIVATE BILLS

MERIT INSURANCE COMPANY

The house in committee on Bill No. S-14 respecting Merit Insurance Company—Mr. Macnaughton—Mr. Paul in the chair.

On clause 1—Name in French.

Mr. Berger: I think all members of the committee have some knowledge of the purpose of the bill which is, as I understand it, to give to the Merit Life Insurance Company the right to use a French version of its name. In my view, before the House of Commons passes this bill—though I understand that in the past bills of this nature have gone through as a matter of course—we should know something about the company which is seeking to have the right to use a French version of its name. I think the committee is entitled to know who owns the company and who controls the company. We in Canada have seen more and more of our industries, our resources and, in fact, even our savings drifting away from Canadian control. At some time during the debate on clause 1 of the bill I should like to see the hon. member who sponsored the bill rise and tell the committee who controls this company. My information is that the Merit Life Insurance Company is connected with the Industrial Acceptance Corporation and that in fact it is controlled by the Industrial Acceptance Corporation. May I say that it is a large investment corporation which is under the control of the Murchison brothers of Texas—

Mr. Douglas: Of pipe line fame.

Mr. Berger: Yes; as the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam says, members of the Murchison family of pipe line fame. I do not think the parliament of Canada should allow this bill to go through without finding out some of these things—without finding out why we are being asked to give to a company which is controlled in the United States the right to use a French version of its name. Was this decision to apply to the parliament of Canada for the right to use this name a decision which was made in Canada or was it made in the United States? I suggest that it is time the parliament of Canada became interested in what is happening to Canada's economy, as we are losing control over our own resources, industries and savings.

As a new member of the House of Commons and, I hope, a reasonably conscientious one, I tried to find out something about this company. I studied the report of the superintendent of life insurance. It is an extremely bulky report which runs into many hundreds of pages. The report of the superintendent of life insurance does not reveal the ownership of the insurance companies which are mentioned there. I suggest that this is an astonishing state of affairs when there is published and made available to members of parliament no information which will tell us who owns the company upon which we are being asked to legislate—who owns the company to which in this case we are being asked to give the right to use a French version of its name.

From the report of the superintendent of life insurance we can find out that the life insurance companies received $1 billion in premiums from Canadians last year. We can find out that this money was reinvested in government bonds, in mortgage loans to Canadians wishing to build homes and in many other types and varieties of investments. However, the startling thing, the thing about which I think all hon. members of the House of Commons ought to be concerned, is that we cannot find out who owns these life insurance companies.

My information is that the Murchison brothers of Dallas control a gigantic financial empire, and have control over $6½ billion worth of industrial and financial assets. Of course, the Merit Insurance Company is part of that empire; it is a part falling under the Industrial Acceptance Corporation. These people control mutual funds, mortgage companies, railroads and all kinds of things. I am concerned about this. Canadian savings are falling under their control. When one of the offshoots of this financial empire comes under the scrutiny of the parliament of Canada, I suggest that members of parliament ought to take the trouble to require the member bringing this bill before the House of Commons to tell us exactly who owns this company.

When I say that it is a company which is controlled by the Murchison brothers of Dallas, Texas, I hope that no hon. member will think I am seeking to deprecate or to criticize the fact that the Murchison brothers of Dallas, with the benefit of a few million dollars which their father just happened to have around, were able to obtain control of a good deal of industrial and financial wealth. I am not deprecating or criticizing the fact that they used this money in order to build this financial empire. What I am deprecating, however, is the tendency of the parliament of Canada simply to pass a bill of this kind as a matter of course.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. The hon. member is now discussing the board of directors of the Merit Insurance Company. I am obliged to tell him that we are discussing the opportunity to give a French name to the Merit Insurance Company. If the hon. member reads rule 59(2), I am sure he will agree that at this time he cannot discuss all the business of the company. I am also sure he will try to stay in order and discuss only clause 1 of this bill.

Mr. Berger: I appreciate very deeply, Mr. Chairman, your advice as to the propriety of the remarks I have been making. I can assure you that it was my intention throughout to discuss only clause 1 and to deal only with matters which were relevant to clause 1.

Let me make it clear that, if this company is seeking to use a French version of its name, this is a matter of some moment not only to members of the House of Commons who represent constituencies in those parts of Canada which have a predominantly French speaking population but also to all other members of the House of Commons since, in my opinion, it is something which affects the whole question which I sought to raise and which I will try to justify to you, Mr. Chairman; I refer to the question of foreign control over Canadian industry.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I cannot accept the remarks of the hon. member, as he is again trying to discuss the activities of the company. The principle we are discussing is the opportunity or otherwise for this company to use a French name and an English name in its business. That is the only question we have before us for study at the present time. In my opinion, the hon. member may not discuss any other subject than this one, which is included in clause 1 of the bill respecting Merit Insurance Company.

Mr. Berger: Let me say at once, Mr. Chairman, that if the only thing we had under consideration was whether or not it is a good thing for corporations carrying on business in Canada to use French versions of their corporate names in French speaking parts of Canada, I suppose all of us would agree with the clause in question which gives effect to this intent and would agree to pass it without any objection whatever.

Mr. Crestohl: That is the only question before the committee.

Mr. Berger: However, Mr. Chairman, we are concerned about the propriety of this corporation being given the right to use a French version of its name. We are not dealing only with the question whether it is advisable generally to allow corporations to use French versions of their names. We are concerned about this corporation. I suggest to you, Mr. Chairman, and to members of the committee that, in the exercise of its supervisory jurisdiction over the insurance companies which carry on business in this country, the House of Commons must know who is seeking to use this name.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. The committee is not to discuss or try to ascertain the purposes of the directors of the company in seeking to use a French and an English name. We are not to discuss all the activities of the company. We are only to study the merit of this bill and the opportunity for this company to do business under either a French or an English name. That is the only matter we can discuss. If the hon. member will look at the bill he will see that the explanatory note says:

> The sole purpose of this bill is to add a French version to the name of Merit Insurance Company.

I am sure the hon. member will try to be in order and to make his remarks relevant to the principle of the bill.

Mr. Douglas: On the point of order, Mr. Chairman, I recognize that there are limitations to what one can deal with on the first clause, but I submit that if this committee is being asked to allow the company to adopt a French name surely the committee also has some responsibility to ascertain who it is that is asking for this privilege. Are they responsible people? What is their background? What is their rating in the community? Surely these are relevant questions. Surely the committee is not going to be faced with a simple yes or no with regard to whether the company should be granted or denied this right. How can the committee decide unless it ascertains who it is that is making the request, what their status is and whether or not they are worthy of receiving this privilege?

The Deputy Chairman: With regard to the remarks made by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam, if he will read standing order 59 (2) I am sure that with his experience he will realize I am obliged to ask the hon. member who had the floor to be in order and to speak only on the purpose of the bill. It is not my privilege to extend the limits of the debate. I am obliged to ask the hon. member to respect the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. Gregoire: On the point of order, Mr. Chairman, in the same clause 1 provision is made for the company to sue or be sued in either or both names. If such permission is given to a company it is normal to investigate that company to decide whether permission should be given to do business in this way. Therefore, why should we not investigate the whole company? I suggest that the hon. member was completely in order.

Mr. Macnaughton: Mr. Chairman, if I may be given the opportunity to answer some of the allegations I would be delighted to do so. As my first point I should like to say that private bills, of course, need a sponsor and accidentally, or co-operatively if you wish, I happen to be the private member sponsoring this bill. I have no personal, financial interest in the company or its shares and no personal interest in the directors or anything else.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman—

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I think the hon. member is not discussing the point of order but is answering the remarks that have been made.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I should like to say a word on the point of order.

Mr. Berger: Mr. Chairman, I would be pleased to—

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I would ask the hon. member for Mount Royal to discuss the point of order only at this time.

Mr. Macnaughton: Are we discussing the point of order? I should like to answer the points raised if I may have the opportunity.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I should like to say a word on the point of order. What the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam is saying is that some people should be denied the right to use both of the official languages of this country. That is the gist of his point of order. It seems to me that is a most extraordinary doctrine to be propounded in this house, that we have to investigate the background of someone before we will allow him to speak French. Considering the debate we were having up until this bill came before us, I must say I am absolutely astonished to hear the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam favour a certain measure of unilingualism in this country.

Mr. Crestohl: On the point of order, Mr. Chairman, I should like to point out that we are not now examining whether or not this company should be created by statute. The company has been created. Its powers have already been established. It is an existing company and we cannot go into that phase of the company's existence or history. The company has already been established by parliament. You are perfectly right, Mr. Chairman, that the only question is whether or not the company can use a French version of its name, a name that has already been established by parliament. In my view that is the sole issue that anyone can possibly debate.

Mr. Macnaughton: Mr. Chairman—

The Deputy Chairman: The hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska.

(Translation):

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Chairman—

The Deputy Chairman: Do you still address yourself to the point of order?

Mr. Ouellet: Yes, I may deal with the point of order.

Mr. Chairman, it is agreed that we are faced with a normal situation. Hon. members have discussed in the past a bill to incorporate this company, when it was organized. If at that time, it was not wanted, they should have opposed it then, I think.

Faced with this problem, some may be embarrassed. But we must be realistic about the request submitted by this company. I agree with the point you have raised, Mr. Chairman, that details cannot be debated at this stage, because the point is out of order and is not relevant to this bill.

However I suggest it is most unfortunate that such things should happen. Besides, this is no time to go back because parliament has already decided.

Now, that company asks us permission to use a French name. Why? Because it suits them. It is rather difficult for us to refuse.

On the other hand, I think it would be time for parliament, when new requests are made by foreign companies, to discuss their merit before approving them, so as not to be faced again with the same problem.

When companies want a change, which is consistent with the charter given them by the federal government, they should not bother parliament with this kind of thing. I understand the hon. member's remarks in that respect, but I agree with the point you raised, Mr. Chairman, and I think the house could hardly turn down the company's request for a French name.

(Text):

Mr. Berger: On the point of order, Mr. Chairman, let me deal very briefly with the proposition advanced by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate. He suggested that the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam had attempted to deny to Merit Insurance Company the right to use one of the official languages. We are considering quite a different thing here. We are considering the right of a corporation to carry on business under a certain firm style or name.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Pickersgill: The same name in both languages.

Mr. Berger: This is an entirely different thing. I suggest that it must cause some consternation to hon. members to see the hon. member advocating the indiscriminate use of names, perhaps of historical significance, perhaps of significance of another kind, by anyone who wants to use them. I was surprised to see his willingness to champion the life insurance companies of Canada carry him so far. When parents have a baby christened and give it a name they give serious consideration to what name they will bestow upon it. This name is being bestowed upon this corporation by the parliament of Canada and I suggest that the parliament of Canada should consider whether this name ought in fact to be bestowed upon this company. I would plead that members of the house have a right to know who it is that is seeking to have the right to use this name in Quebec, and in other parts of Canada where the French language is spoken. I suggest that the rules of order, and I have read the rule to which you referred me, Mr. Chairman, do not prevent parliament from investigating that matter.

Let me say I would be very pleased to yield the floor, when we have disposed of the point of order, to the hon. member for Mont-Royal so that he might have an opportunity to enlighten the house on the questions I raised earlier in the debate.

Mr. Macnaughton: Mr. Chairman, I am delighted to have the French version of Mount Royal given by my hon. friend. It is not my purpose to engage in a debate with any hon. member. However, the hon. member made one or two unsubstantiated allegations. I think it is my duty, indeed my solemn duty, to bring these facts to the attention of the committee.

The allegation is that the Murchisons are interested in this company. First of all, let us start at the beginning. Merit Insurance Company is wholly owned by the Industrial Acceptance Corporation. The information I am going to give to the committee I got on the end of the telephone a week ago and I reconfirmed it this afternoon with the attorney for Industrial Acceptance Corporation. There are 9,331 shareholders of Industrial Acceptance Corporation holding 5,889,039 shares. Of these shareholders, 8,319 are in Canada. The Canadian shareholders hold 77.1 per cent of the company's stock and 813 of the shareholders are citizens of the United States holding 19.1 per cent of the stock of Industrial Acceptance Corporation. In other words, generally speaking, 8 per cent or 9 per cent of the stock of Industrial Acceptance Corporation is scattered throughout the United States and 90 per cent is held in Canada by Canadians. I am told that the Murchisons have no interest whatever in Industrial Acceptance Corporation and do not own any stock, consequently they own no stock in Merit Insurance Company.

The company was incorporated in 1953 and has been writing insurance policies throughout Canada in English or French at the request of the applicant. About 30 per cent of the business is done in Quebec; 25 per cent of the business is in Ontario—I am speaking of the Merit Insurance Company—25 per cent is done in the maritimes and 20 per cent is done in the western part of Canada. There are 67 offices throughout Canada and in the year 1961 the Merit Insurance Company employed 472 persons. The premium volume of insurance written in 1961 amounted to about $12 million. Approximately one third of the company's offices are located in the province of Quebec and perhaps a little bit less than one third of the company's business arises in Quebec province. It seems to me not only normal but right that the company should ask for a French version of the company name. I would be delighted to give any further information that I have.

(Translation):

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, I should like to speak of the name of the company. It is called the Merit Insurance Company, but I would call it myself a finance company. What happens when an insurance company such as this one is directly connected with a finance company, like the Industrial Acceptance Corporation, for instance? When you buy a car, the finance company puts you on a financing plan and then you have to get insurance from that company.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but I believe his remarks are not relevant to the item now under consideration. The committee is called upon to decide whether the Merit Insurance Company may use in the future, in the transaction of its business, either a French name or an English name. The hon. member for Mount Royal (Mr. Macnaughton) explained to the committee why the company wishes to obtain a French name.

I regret to have interrupted the hon. member but I feel sure that he will comply with paragraph 2 of section 7 of standing orders.

Mr. Gregoire: In compliance with that standing order, I should like to speak about the use of a French name, to which I do not object. On the contrary, I am pleased that this company wants to use a French name. But that name is composed of three words: Merit Insurance Company. I have something to say about the word "Insurance" because I find that it is not appropriate. When a company deals with financing instead of insurance, why should it use the word "insurance" in its name? It is precisely about that word that I wish to speak because, as I was trying to explain, Mr. Chairman, when an insurance company is related to a finance company which requires the purchaser of a car to obtain insurance with that company—

The Deputy Chairman: Order. The hon. member will please note that his remarks are irrelevant. He is dealing with possible business connections between the Merit Insurance Company and the Industrial Acceptance Corporation. I respectfully submit that his remarks are out of order.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, I shall then conclude my remarks. I thought that the French words had a certain meaning, according to their use. Since it is out of order to define the meaning of words, I prefer to refrain from speaking.

(Text):

Mr. Herridge: I did not intend to say anything in this rather interesting and unusual debate but I have been prompted to do so as a result of the discussion. I trust that you will not rule me out of order, Mr. Chairman, because you will find I am in order when I am finished. I must say that I feel your ruling is rather narrow because, during my 17 years experience in this house, when telephone companies have come to ask for an increase in capital or other changes in their acts of incorporation, there has been a wide discussion of the affairs of the companies. This applies also to pipe line companies and companies of that sort. These bills have frequently been referred to committees for further study. However, I shall bow to your ruling and not go into the affairs of this company.

I do want to bring something to the attention of the committee which is somewhat related to this bill. We should support the right of the company to have its name printed in both languages according to the terms of the bill, and I suggest the company should have its policies and other literature printed in both languages so that all Canadians, regardless of their descent, will be able to understand them. This bill will not affect my constituents to any great extent and for the following reason—I want to give the reason, and it is based on a telegram I have just received from the mayor of Trail.

I want to point out, Mr. Chairman, that while the government fumbles and goes along a certain way in respect of the necessity for insurance, the people of Kootenay West continue to set records. I wish to bring to the attention of the committee the fact that on Saturday, December 15, the city of Trail completed eight full years without a fatal accident. This is a record for cities of over 10,000 population, not only in Canada—

The Deputy Chairman: Order; I think the hon. member has forgotten the remarks he made when he started to speak. When he speaks about some accidents, I think he is straying from the bill.

Mr. Herridge: You quite misunderstood my remark, Mr. Chairman, and if you will just let me finish the next sentence or two you will see the point.

This is a record for cities of over 10,000 population, not only in Canada but in the whole of North America; a record indicative of a safety conscious citizenry, particularly in view of the fact that Trail has one of the highest per capita ratios of cars in Canada. This record set by the city of Trail emphasizes the civilized society which prevails in Kootenay West. Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to point out that if the people of the rest of Canada established such records there would be little necessity for bills of this type, either in the English or French language.

My second point is that, regardless of the care my constituents take and the records they establish in this respect, they do not get any particular benefit from that care and for acting in such a civilized manner, under this bill or any other insurance bill. I suggest that this record established by the city of Trail should be studied by the companies concerned, and even by the governments concerned, to find out why this record is possible. I say it is possible because of good civic government and a very civilized people.

Mr. Berger: Mr. Chairman, since the debate is now of wider limits than it was intended to be, I wish to conclude my contribution to it by acknowledging what I think will be the thanks of the committee as a whole to the hon. member for Mount Royal. I hope, that, having heard me use one of the official languages of Canada in describing his constituency, there will not be any attempt on the part of any hon. member to question my right to use both official languages, although perhaps it would be understandable if there were such an attempt. At any rate, my wish in speaking to clause 1 was not to impede the progress of commerce in Canada, but rather to make sure that—

Mr. McCleave: You should apologize.

Mr. Berger: I think there was an interjection by some hon. member to the effect that I had made a lot of fuss, but I think that it is the right of hon. members to make a lot of fuss when they think something is happening which requires clarification, and I make no apologies for speaking under these circumstances.

Mr. McCleave: False facts; you must apologize for them.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Chairman, I object. The hon. member should stand up.

Mr. McCleave: The hon. member is giving us false facts and should apologize instead of putting a halo over his head.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member who interrupts has been sitting muttering into his beard for the last five minutes. If he has anything to say let him get up and say it. There has been no false start. The hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard has a perfect right to contribute to the debate. If the hon. member for Halifax wants to be a trained seal that is, of course, his business, but he need not expect any other hon. member to act the same way.

Mr. McCleave: I will repeat, the hon. member from the N.D.P. has been giving the committee false facts about the ownership of the company. He was basing his whole argument on that, and at least should have the grace to apologize for wasting our time.

Mr. Douglas: If that allegation is going to be made I am going to ask that we postpone consideration of this bill until all the facts are brought down, until we know how many shares are held by these various directors, how many in trust and how many in escrow, so that we will know which of these people are actual directors.

Mr. Crestohl: That will be completely out of order.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. May I point out that if an hon. member wants to have the floor he must be recognized by the Chair, and if another hon. member is speaking he is obliged to ask his permission to ask him a question. If all hon. members of the committee try to keep this rule I think we will not have trouble. I now ask the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard to complete his remarks.

Mr. Berger: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I was about to acknowledge my thanks, and I think the thanks of the committee, to the hon. member sponsoring the bill for providing the committee with what is really, with all respect to him and I do not think he will take it amiss, a fairly scanty rundown of the company's corporate structure. One hon. member suggests that I did not give the committee the facts, but hon. members will recall that I opened the debate by telling them I had certain information, that I had taken the trouble to study the report of the superintendent of life insurance, that I had checked with the companies branch of the Department of the Secretary of State and I had discovered that there was no public document available to members of parliament which gave them the information I was asking from the sponsor of the bill and which he was good enough, at least in part, to provide the committee.

Under those circumstances I suggest there is no necessity for an apology. I think some hon. members of the committee will regard it as worth while that the committee now has some idea of what and who Merit Insurance Company is. I also believe that because of what has transpired today the committee requires additional information. The hon. member for Mount Royal did his best, but I suggest we really do not have a complete picture regarding the ownership of the company.

He said the majority of the shares were held by Canadians, but how many of those shares are held by Canadians as nominees, how many are held in trust and how many are held in escrow? In other words we certainly do not know who controls this company, and I urge the hon. member to consider asking leave of the committee to have this bill stood down so that upon another occasion he might come before the committee and advise it fully, as I am sure he would wish to do, regarding the ownership and control of the company.

I say, as I attempted to point out a moment ago before an hon. member in the Conservative ranks interrupted me, that I was not seeking to impede the progress of commerce in this country and to prevent a company in the life insurance field carrying on legitimate life insurance business. I simply wanted to know who these people were who have come before parliament asking to use a French version of their name. I now have some idea who they are, but I do not think we have been given a complete picture. I do not think anyone can blame the hon. member who sponsored the bill for that, and I suggest to him he ought to consider asking leave to have the bill stand so that on another occasion he can tell all hon. members of the committee everything they want to know about the ownership of Merit Insurance Company.

The Acting Chairman: Shall clause 1 carry?

(Translation):

Mr. Plourde: Mr. Chairman, if the propaganda in favour of bilingualism has awakened those corporations, I congratulate them on their reaction, it is marvellous. But if their only intent is to extend their operations and to increase their volume of business, then it is a different story. As a matter of fact we will still be the ones to suffer, because we will have been unfairly dealt with.

Mr. Chairman, if all the English insurance companies want to add a French name to their English one, it would be preferable to amend the act and to generalize its application, so that corporations may have an official name in both the official languages of the country, French and English. I suggest that in a bilingual country such as ours, such a situation should have obtained a long time ago.

(Text):

Clause agreed to.

Clause 2 agreed to.

Preamble agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported and read the third time and passed.

SECOND READING—SENATE BILL

Bill No. S-16, respecting The Imperial Life Assurance Company of Canada—Mr. Hellyer.

BRUCE REID CAMPBELL

The house in committee on Bill No. SD-2, for the relief of Bruce Reid Campbell—Mr. MacEwan (for Mr. Mandziuk)—Mr. Paul in the chair.

On clause 1—Marriage dissolved.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 1 carry?

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I am wondering what scrutiny the committee gave to this bill, particularly in light of the previous bill which we discussed, in which certain charges were made which were quite easily established. I notice that in this bill there is reference to investigators. To my mind this always raises the question as to who those investigators are, whether they are licensed by the Senate and have the right granted to them by the Senate to practice their profession. I also wonder whether the Senate has made investigation of these people. I raise this point not only in relation to this bill but also in relation to a number of cases in which investigations took place and perjury charges were laid. Some of the detectives concerned, with whom I am not familiar, have been convicted in various courts in Ontario and in the province of Quebec, and I am wondering whether the committee took the trouble to investigate these particular witnesses to ascertain whether they fell into that category.

Mr. Chairman, this is doubly important because the evidence we are looking at was obtained on January 29, 1962, which is a long time ago. It has been renewed by petition, in which the Senate asked whether the parties wished to go ahead with the case and whether or not during the period which had elapsed between the two hearings the petitioner and the respondent had got together and continued to live as man and wife. This is very important because certainly jurists have indicated that evidence given by detectives has to be closely scrutinized in view of the fact that these people are paid for the information they give. They are not disinterested witnesses; they are paid witnesses. It is interesting to note that in the supreme court of Ontario—

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I should like to raise a point of order. Your Honour was commendably strict, I thought, when we were considering another private bill, in having the discussion adhere strictly to the bill and to the clauses in the bill. I have been listening attentively to the hon. gentleman and he appears to be wandering all over the lot, talking of this case, that case, and the other case. It appears to me that there is only one case before us, and that is the particular case we are discussing. I submit the hon. member should be confined strictly to clause 1 of this bill and to no other.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, on the point of order raised by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, I was listening closely to the remarks of the hon. member for Timiskaming. While it is true that he did make reference to the fact that investigators were used in various cases, I felt that he was leading directly to an assessment of the particular bill before us and that he was merely comparing the manner in which investigators were used in this case with what was a general practice in connection with such bills. With all deference to the remarks made by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, I submit that his point of order is not well taken. I think the hon. member for Timiskaming was relating his discussion to the question whether or not it was advisable for this bill to pass through the committee stage at this time.

Mr. Berger: Mr. Chairman, on the point of order, I was listening with a good deal of interest to the remarks of the hon. member for Timiskaming, and I appreciated the way in which he was developing in a logical fashion his argument on this part of the bill. The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate criticized him because he was discussing other cases.

Mr. Pickersgill: I did not criticize.

Mr. Berger: I suggest that anyone who, in developing an argument, contrasts and compares experiences in other cases with what has happened in this case is using a perfectly legitimate technique of logic or advocacy. It may be that in the past the hon. gentleman who objected has not been used to listening to well developed, logical arguments; but I think now that he has been exposed to that type of discussion, at any rate since September 27, from the members of this party perhaps he should restrain himself and listen for a while. I think that he would then appreciate that, far from being out of order, the hon. member for Timiskaming was in fact enlightening the committee in a way in which in the past it has rarely been enlightened.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, may I say a further word on the point of order. I was not arguing or criticizing anything. I was drawing attention to the fact that the hon. gentleman had not mentioned the clause of this particular bill; that he was talking about a number of other cases. I was just suggesting that the same rules should be applied in one case as in another. I might add, since the hon. gentleman who has just spoken is, of course, so much more experienced than some of the rest of us, that in committee stage of a bill it is not a question of advocacy; it is a question of examining the clauses. The advocacy is done in the house, not in committee. In committee we examine the clauses and stick strictly to the clauses. At any rate, that is what the rules say.

Mr. Berger: On the point of order, Mr. Chairman, may I reply briefly to the hon. member who has just spoken. The hon. member will recall that when we were debating the motion for second reading he urged upon the speaker that there should be no advocacy allowed at that stage. Now the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate says that there ought to be no advocacy at this stage of the bill. I take it that the hon. member feels that there is no room for advocacy in this House of Commons. I realize he has had a great deal more experience in this house and in other spheres of government than many of us here, but I suggest that none of us who are new members of this house ought to be bashful about putting forward what we consider, after reflection, as being legitimate comments about the way in which the business of the house is conducted.

Mr. Crestohl: On this point of order, I am afraid Your Honour has been deluged more by the experience than by the actual case. I know the hon. member for Timiskaming has no intention of being unfair in what he is saying, but when he speaks about investigators who have been before the courts, investigators who have been convicted, he is speaking in general terms and we have no way of knowing whether these are the people who should now concern us. Unless the hon. member has something to say which casts doubt upon the accuracy or upon the character of these particular investigators, it is not permissible for him to make the statement he made. From his general statements about investigators who have been before the courts or who have been convicted, one might assume he was speaking about investigators who appear in this particular case, in this bill which is now before us, and he might be unfair in doing so although he did not mean to be unfair.

I think my hon. friend from Bonavista-Twillingate was right on the point when he asked that the hon. member should stay closely to the allegations made in the bill and not go far afield, unless there is an association between the statements he has just been making and the present investigators. Otherwise, as I say, it is unfair and an injustice is being done to them.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I thank hon. members who have taken part in the discussion on the point of order raised by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate. I think there was a wide discussion. I am sure the hon. member for Timiskaming, with his experience, will try to stay within the limits of this debate.

Mr. Peters: I appreciate the remarks which have been made on the point of order. I am trying to follow the advice which has been given me. Unlike many other members of this house, all the legal training I possess has been received in the house itself. I am seeking to argue my point under the eyes of many learned counsel here and, sometimes, I am confused about the different opinions they give me. However, I understand that in law that is often the situation.

The two gentlemen we are concerned with here are George Roland Foucher, of Montreal, Quebec and Jean Vinet, also of Montreal. I do not know if they have been involved in court proceedings but I think the hon. member for Cartier would agree with me that somewhere along the line we shall have to ascertain which people have been convicted of offences, whether I do it personally outside the house or whether it is done here in the miscellaneous private bills committee or in the committee of the other place. There would, then, be no aspersions cast on those who were left. On the other hand, cases in which those who had been convicted were involved would be thrown out. This question would not be so serious if it were not for the fact that there have been six or eight persons of this sort before the courts in the last six months. I am not in a position to say who they are. Perhaps these two gentlemen are not among them.

Since detectives have been used in this case I think the committee should give consideration to some of the legal opinions which have been expressed on this particular subject. I should like to refer to one which was quoted in the case which arose fairly recently. Power at page 335, puts it thus:

Evidence of adultery given by private detectives is subjected to the most careful scrutiny.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am rising again on a point of order. Can the hon. member relate what he is now saying to this particular bill? Are the investigators he is talking about people who have anything to do with this case? Has the hon. member ascertained that to be so? If he has not, why did he not go to the miscellaneous private bills committee and find out?

Mr. Peters: The hon. member who has just spoken draws attention to one of the ignorances of the house in relation to these bills. I do not know this, and until I do they are all suspect as far as I am concerned.

Mr. McCleave: And smear everybody while you are doing it. It is nothing but a smear.

Mr. Peters: Every time the hon. member for Halifax stands up in this house he does not smear me, he smears himself. He has cast so many of these aspersions that I suggest people will judge him according to those aspersions.

Mr. Pickersgill: After that exchange of compliments could we have a ruling on the point of order I have raised?

The Deputy Chairman: I thank hon. members for the remarks they have made. It is my view that the last comments, in particular, made by the hon. member for Timiskaming were very far from the principle of the bill. I am sure he could make his observations apply directly to clause 1 of the measure we are considering. In any case he cannot discuss activity leading up to the bill.

Mr. Peters: I presume, therefore, that we should proceed to study the evidence given by these gentlemen so that we can judge for ourselves in this particular case. The record tells us:

George Roland Foucher appeared as a witness on behalf of the petitioner and, having been duly sworn, testified as follows:
Q. What is your full name?
A. George Roland Foucher.
Q. What is your age?
A. 45.
Q. Where do you live?
A. Montreal.
Q. What is your occupation?
A. Investigator.

Here, Mr. Chairman, is the point at which I suggest the question should have been asked whether or not the witness has been found guilty of any infraction of the law in relation to his occupation. This question should have been replied to in the negative—

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the hon. member permit me to ask him if that is not precisely the kind of question the late Senator McCarthy used to ask in another committee?

The Deputy Chairman: Order. It being six o'clock shall I rise, report progress and request leave to sit again at the next sitting of the house?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause stands.

Progress reported.

Mr. Speaker: The hour for the consideration of private members' business having now expired, the house will revert to the business which was interrupted at five o'clock.

(Translation):

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Paul in the chair.

INTERIM SUPPLY

Resolved, that a sum not exceeding $330,089,511.93 being the aggregate of—

(a) one twelfth of the total of the amounts of the items set forth in the revised estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1963, laid before the House of Commons at the present session of parliament, except atomic energy item 5, Canadian Broadcasting Corporation item 5, finance items 45

and 50, forestry item 11, labour item 40, legislation items 30 and 35, mines and technical surveys items 30, 35, 40, 70, 80, 125 and 130, national defence item 70, national health and welfare item 25, northern affairs and national resources items 10, 45 and 90, public works items 5, 45, 70, 100, 105, 125, 145, 168, 170, 180, 190 and 200, Royal Canadian Mounted Police items 5, 15 and 25, transport items 35, 40, 60, 80, 85, 100, 125, 222 and 225, loans investments and advances item L20 $292,175,958;

(b) an additional one twelfth of the amounts of defence production item 25, external affairs item 5, northern affairs and national resources item 105, of the said revised estimates, $1,842,041.67;

(c) one twelfth of the total of the amounts of the items set forth in the supplementary estimates (A) for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1963, except external affairs item 112a, transport items 213a and 222a, $8,738,178.92;

(d) ten twelfths of the total of the amounts of the items set forth in the supplementary estimates (B) for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1963, $27,333,333.34, be granted to Her Majesty on account of the present fiscal year ending March 31, 1963.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

(Text):

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

(Translation):

Mr. Cook: Mr. Chairman, when I had to interrupt my speech to enable the house to revert to the consideration of private bills, I was giving my general impressions on yesterday's speeches.

I was saying that it was desirable that goodwill should exist first of all within the government itself. I also said that all past governments ran into enormous deficits, and that in spite of their accumulating deficits they never managed to settle the problem of unemployment, and there still is a great deal of hardship in spite of our abundant natural resources.

Mr. Chairman, we speak of national unity. But have we stopped to think, as we consider these supplementary estimates, that they do not provide anything for the eastern farmers. I am pleased to see that the western farmers get all the assistance they need in order to remain on their farms, but I had hoped that the government would take the same attitude with regard to the eastern farmers.

Moreover, Mr. Chairman, coming back to supplementary estimates, I notice that the Department of Public Works gets only $1. I just wonder what the Minister of Public Works will do with an increase of $1 to end this fiscal year.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Let me draw to your attention a few items, from page 4, of the supplementary estimates (A):

Gift offered to the Queen of the Netherlands and Prince Bernhardt on the occasion of their 25th wedding anniversary: $700.

Gift offered to commemorate the independence of Nigeria: $10,000.

Gift offered to commemorate the independence of French-speaking African states: $2,100.

Gift offered to commemorate the independence of Tanganyika: $5,000.

Gift offered to commemorate the 150th anniversary of independence of the republic of Mexico: $4,100.

Mr. Chairman, I know it denotes good will to commemorate anniversaries such as these, but I would fully understand the government giving away gifts—I say "gifts" but it would actually be mere justice—to the citizens of the country, to the unemployed and the mothers who, with their pensions and family allowances so ridiculously low, must be content merely to exist.

Well and good to offer gifts to all the countries in the world, but I think we should start by offering gifts to our own Canadian people.

I also see in the estimates an item amounting to $1,081,000 for a contribution to a world food program; I fully agree that the government of Canada should assist underdeveloped countries. However as the proverb goes: "Charity begins at home".

In our own country, human beings are underfed, I therefore wonder what the government is thinking about when they prepare their yearly estimates.

I also see an item of $179,000 as Canada's dues to world organizations. There again, I am in full agreement with the item, because it may further good understanding among the countries of the world. But, on the other hand, Canadians are having a hard time getting along with one another.

We also find in this budget which contains fantastic expenditures, the following item:

Expenses of the royal commission on banking and finance, $166,630.

If only governments had read and given effect to the recommendations made by the commissions which were set up over the years, we would not find ourselves in the midst of such a depression today. Thousands of dollars are being spent on the establishment of commissions and after the latter have examined certain problems, the government does not even take the trouble of considering their recommendations.

Expenses connected with royal visits: $50,000.

And a little further on:

Gifts for furniture to the International Communications Union, $10,000.

Interim payments under the Freight Rates Reduction Act, $50 million.

Mr. Chairman, a bill respecting that act was adopted yesterday morning in an underhanded manner by a parliamentary committee. Everyone knows that, normally, parliamentary committees never sit on Monday morning. It was well known that at 9.30 on a Monday morning, the members who sit on that committee would not have arrived in Ottawa from their homes where they had spent the week end. The committee sat just the same and railroaded that bill.

Mr. Chairman, there is something wrong with that bill. In fact, under it, shippers cannot choose the transportation means. They have to use the railways. When they use trucks, they do not benefit from the grants.

Mr. Chairman, all previous administrations just as the present government did their utmost to claim they were against monopolies and trusts of all kinds. I think that this Bill C-91, gives proof that the government is practising a form of monopoly or control. Let us not forget that private enterprise built up Canada to what it is now. It is by giving more assistance to private enterprise that we shall succeed in building up a prosperous Canada.

The trucking industry which took 30 years to develop is just about to vanish completely because of certain unfortunate legislation passed by the government. I have never been and even today, I still am not in favour of that policy adopted by the government towards our truckers. I am wondering whether some day our governments will take their responsibilities and give more assistance to private industry, the very basis of our Canadian economy.

I shall not spend any more time on those supplementary estimates and I hope they will be approved as quickly as possible. I should also like to remind the Minister of Finance (Mr. Nowlan) and the Conservative government that, for their own good, they should have something better to show us in their next budget, because, otherwise, I, personally, will support it no longer.

I shall not dwell at greater length on that matter. We had thought since September 27, that the government would bring a solution to this country's problems, but, more and more, we realize that, with the present government, we are continually accumulating deficits and that the budgets it is submitting are not solving any problems.

In closing I must say that I feel sure beforehand that the government will take its responsibilities and will wake up soon in order to give the Canadian people what it is waiting for.

Mr. English: Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to join with all members who took part in the present debate which has been lasting for a few days. I listened yesterday to speeches devoid of all political partisanship and imbued with really patriotic principles. In fact, the atmosphere in this house has changed completely. We did not hear politicians, but statesmen concerned with the problems facing us.

We all realized that unity was essential in this parliament, if the clarion call for unity is going to be heard, and especially by all the people who live in our beautiful country, Canada.

We are now in a troubled age. We see a combination of facts that prompts us to look farther than ever before.

On each side of us new groups appear, more important than we think, and which could, tomorrow, create a wide chasm between both our ethnic communities.

What are we to do? Are we to declare open war to all new movements? Are we to condemn them? Are we to consider them as undesirable? No, Mr. Chairman, let us rather consider them as our brothers, let us try to understand them. In a word, let us be the apostles of mutual understanding.

Mr. Chairman, no movement is born without a cause. Let us try to find out that cause and the best way to do it is not to investigate, it is not merely to form movements to oppose those already existing, the best way is simply to look at ourselves, English Canadians and French Canadians, and each of us to examine our conscience.

We shall then discover that everyone of us has his share of responsibilities to assume. We shall perhaps find out that we caused unconsciously the spark that started the fire which seems at present to take alarming proportions. Let us stop eyeing each other like divided brothers. Instead, let us consider each other like united brothers. Those movements did not spring up overnight. It might have been possible to prevent them from coming into being if right from the start our politicians had lent a more attentive ear to their claims.

Let me give you an example. The selection of a name for the C.N.R. hotel in Montreal was not a momentous question; the request made by all social organizations of the province of Quebec could have been granted.

The province of Quebec has always advocated, not only with words but with action, the respect of minorities.

Has the province of Quebec not always had a public education board formed of two committees, one called the Catholic committee and the other, the Protestant committee?

Succeeding provincial governments in the past have always treated those two groups with the same fairness. Subsidies granted for the building of schools were not higher for French schools and lower for English schools. Indeed, those subsidies were the same for both groups.

Mr. Chairman, that is what we, in Quebec, call true fair play. That is what we, in Quebec, call well understood unity. That is what we, in Quebec, call respect of minorities. That is what we, in Quebec, understand by practising what we preach.

Mr. Chairman, I represent in this house one of the finest ridings not only of the province of Quebec, but of all Canada, the riding of Gaspe which comprises 10,700 French speaking families and 1,800 English speaking families. Mine is a united county where it is good to live in peace and harmony. We all look upon each other as brothers, as true people from Gaspe, and true Canadians.

There is no question of race, religion or language. Our French Canadians always made an effort to speak English, and our English speaking Canadians did the same.

Since I have been in the house, I have always defended the interests of the English-speaking minority in my county.

For the last few years, the English speaking municipalities in my riding made some representations to me to the effect that they were lacking television service, and asked me to intercede on their behalf with the government authorities. They were right in asking for fair treatment, Mr. Chairman. I did approach the proper authorities on many occasions and appreciate their having acceded to my request.

This is what we find in the report on the matter, established by the board of broadcast governors and dated December 4, 1962:

[Mr. English.]

Mont Bechervaise, Gaspe West (Que.)

Licence for the establishment of a new television relay station at Mont Bechervaise, in Gaspe West (Que.) via the Gaspe South Telecasting Syndicate, to pick up programs of station CKAM-TV, of Upsalquitch (N.B.) on channel 12, and retransmit to channel 4 with 5 watt power and directional antenna.

Recommendation: APPROVED.

Reasons: The board thinks that the facilities requested by the Gaspe South Telecasting Syndicate are the only ones that could answer the needs of the English speaking people in the district where the proposed relay station is to operate. The board trusts that it will be possible to collect sufficient funds to build and immediately operate those facilities, and that steps may be taken to ensure the maintenance of those installations.

Is not Gaspe, Mr. Chairman, a magnificent example of unity, which we may quote with pride on any occasion?

This afternoon, I listened to the hon. member for Iles-de-la-Madeleine (Mr. Sauve) when he pointed out that, in his beautiful riding, there were, proportionately speaking, more veterans from the two wars than in any other riding. I entirely agree with the hon. member for Iles-de-la-Madeleine, and I have to tell him that the riding of Gaspe is one of those which have given the most soldiers to our country. In my county, there are three legion branches: one at Chandler, one at Gaspe, and one at Murdochville. In those three areas, there is no difference of class, race or religion.

Those four different communities form a single area where all fair-minded people in Gaspe irrespective of race and religion, discuss under the same roof the common interest of the county of Gaspe, and I am proud to say that this county has distinguished itself. Under the circumstances, I am not surprised about Iles-de-la-Madeleine, because that riding followed in the steps of Gaspe, because it belonged for a long time to Gaspe county.

Mr. Chairman, as united and as rich as it may be through its mineral, forest and fishing industries, through the moral fibre and the courage of its inhabitants, the riding of Gaspe has nevertheless been neglected by all previous governments.

Unfortunately, this great courageous population has all too often been used for purely political purposes.

We have been deprived of high schools and classical colleges far too long. In fact, many children have not had the necessary education because their parents did not have the means to send them to the classical colleges in Quebec city or Montreal. The only university our ancestors had really gone to is that of hard knock.

Mr. Chairman, how can we explain the fact that such a rich country has been left undeveloped for so long? How can we explain that this country, discovered by Jacques Cartier in 1534, had to wait until 1956 to see its first city, Murdochville. However, its wealth had been lying underground for a long time. Providence had put it there so that it could be developed and benefit the whole community.

At this stage, Mr. Speaker, I should like to refer to the Gaspe copper mines financial report, submitted by the president of the company, which clearly shows that the Gaspe peninsula is a rich country. I quote:

Gaspe Copper is going through a prosperous year. The net profit of Gaspe Copper Mines Limited for the first six months of 1962 will reach—

You will have noticed, Mr. Chairman, that the figure is for the first six months of 1962.

—$2,700,000, compared with $400,000 for the whole year 1961.

This was revealed today by Mr. John R. Bradfield, president of the company, to the shareholders now holding their annual meeting here.

This substantial improvement in the results of the operations of the company is explained by the fact that better prices for copper as well as the Canadian dollar exchange rate have brought about an increase of $500,000 in the revenues of the company. Besides, as was revealed by the annual report sent out two months ago to the shareholders, the amortization of substantial capital and preproduction expenditures has been completed during 1961. Mr. Bradfield also underlined that the company's debt, which amounted to $47 million in 1956 has been substantially reduced. More than $40 million have been paid off, so that the current is only totalling $6,500,000.

Mr. Chairman, the debt amounted to $47 million in 1956 and is but $6 million today. And these figures were only for a period of six months in 1962, which means that the $6 million current debt will be completely paid off before the end of the year.

Mr. Chairman, there is not only one mine in the Gaspe peninsula. There are several, which are only waiting for mining companies and strong arms to put them at the service of the public. And, merely to prove that the Gaspe peninsula is a rich area and that I was right in asking for the construction of a railway which would contribute to its economic expansion, you only have to look at what is happening at the moment.

In fact, Mr. Chairman, when the Conservative government decided to consider the fate of the Gaspe peninsula, it realized that it had to do something for its exiled brothers and adopted an act which received the unanimous approval of both houses, an act which finally permitted to give to the Gaspe peninsula what it had been seeking for more than 75 years.

Mr. Chairman, that is a promise which suddenly became a reality. And the reality brought about considerable economic expansion in the Gaspe peninsula.

Until now, companies that owned mining claims did not want to develop them until they had the essential transport facilities to do so.

I also recall that I was asked at the time if I had consulted provincial government authorities to determine whether it would be a self-liquidating project.

I must say that, at the time, I could not reply, because I was in communication with the Quebec authorities, and I could not reveal information before it was made public by the government itself.

Following the passing of the bill by the House of Commons, the Quebec government granted one company a 32-square mile area in the national park of the Gaspe peninsula. That park had always been closed to mining operations in the past, because it was preserved as a sanctuary.

Mr. Chairman, it is all very well to look after caribou, but I feel it is even more important to look after human beings and, according to order in council No. 616, the provincial government granted Mr. Pierre Beauchemin and his Gaspe associates a 32-square mile area. A short while later, drilling operations began, and the results are most promising. This will allow us to have in the near future, not only one, but at least three mines in operation in the constituency of Gaspe. For that, credit must go to the Conservative government which has made it possible to build that railway to develop that area.

Mr. Dumont: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. English: Certainly.

Mr. Dumont: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member says that the building of that railroad had been promised for 75 years. Does he not believe that the grain elevators in the east will not be erected before 75 years also?

Mr. English: Mr. Chairman, I must say to the hon. member that if grain elevators had to be built in my riding, I would speak up with as much courage as I did for a railroad in my region.

Mr. Chairman, I seem to remember that at the time the bill concerning that railroad was under discussion, all members agreed. In addition, I remember having read a brief submitted by the north Gaspe chamber of commerce and stating:

The north Gaspe chamber of commerce associates itself with the statements made by Messrs. Hees, Gordon and others on the occasion of the official opening of the Chibougamau railway:

There are two essential prerequisites to our national economy:

1. A large portion of our natural resources is still awaiting means of transportation to be developed; 2. Our railways are still taking the lead and opening new areas to economic development.

This is what Mr. Donald Gordon, president of the Canadian National Railways, had to say: "In a country such as ours where distance is the determining factor in the cost of goods, natural resources development cannot be envisaged without thinking of the railway".

Mr. Chairman, it is rather surprising that it took him so long to think of the construction of that railway.

(Text):

Mr. McLean (Charlotte): Mr. Chairman, will the hon. member permit a question?

The Chairman: Order. The hon. member for Charlotte wishes to ask a question.

Mr. McLean (Charlotte): We know that the Quebec ground is full of gold. Why does the government not raise the price of gold?

(Translation):

Mr. English: Mr. Chairman, I regret having to waste so much precious time because of the hon. member's question.

I continue:

The chamber of commerce also appreciates the following statement made by the Hon. George Marler, former federal minister of transport: "The present opposition in the parliament at Ottawa will never criticize what the Diefenbaker government will undertake to lengthen anywhere the railway branch lines in the mining regions of Quebec and the rest of Canada—"

In our area, we have enormous resources, but, without that vital artery, our economy is anaemic and has not developed on a par with that of the other areas in the province and even in the country.

Three factors are essential to the development of the Gaspe peninsula: an abundance of electric power; enough capital to develop our resources; and the railway. The government of the province of Quebec and our mining companies have already procured for us the first and second factors respectively and only the federal government can give us the third one.

[Mr. Dumont.]

Well, Mr. Chairman, I think I have stated the need of a railway which is only 57 miles long but which is vital to the economic development of the Gaspe peninsula, and the benefits the government brought to that region when it decided to build it.

Mr. Chairman, I have but one thing to ask. I know that the government has shown diligence and I have no blame at all to address to the Canadian National Railways because during the summer, the lay-out was proceeded with and now, that being completed, the plans and the expropriation of land are being looked after.

I am simply asking the government to bring pressure to bear so that the work can start during the winter season. Winter is always a hard time for the Gaspe peninsula, for fishermen, lumbermen and farmers.

Mr. Chairman, if we want our young people to stay home, if we want to prevent them from leaving their native land—at the present time, I note with sadness that people are leaving my riding to seek fortune and work in Montreal because they have heard that a world fair will be held there and will create a lot of jobs—let us work together, without political partisanship, to help that region of the province that has been too long neglected. It is now forgotten because its problems do not resemble those of Quebec city or Montreal, or even those of the agricultural ridings in the rest of the province of Quebec.

I would even say, Mr. Chairman, that that part of the province of Quebec should be brought under the study made by the royal commission set up to examine the problems of the Atlantic provinces, because our difficulties in the Gaspe peninsula are very similar to those of the maritime provinces: fishing, mines and forests.

Mr. Chairman, I apologize for taking up perhaps too much of the time of the house but until now I have been very patient. I was content to listen, and even before you tell me that my time has expired—

(Text):

Mr. Cowan: Mr. Chairman, when the distinguished member for Davenport opened the debate in the House of Commons some weeks ago, he remarked that he was taking part in a budget debate that was not considering a budget and could not be considered a debate. The nearest we are coming to a budget in this first session of the twenty fifth parliament is on motions for interim supply. As the hon. member for Davenport continued his remarks, pointing out that he was commenting on the financial state of the nation without a budget before him, and intimating that the debate did not have teeth in it because of the manner in which the committee of supply was set up, it struck me that we had here all the settings of a Gilbert and Sullivan light opera. What is more, we not only had the settings, but at that time we had a minister of the crown going to Japan and right on location, intimating to the prime minister of that nation what the province of Ontario could do in the matter of trade and commerce.

The hon. member for Rosedale has ably covered the subject of the federal government of this self-governing nation allowing provincial governments to intrude upon the federal field of trade and commerce without so much as asking permission or being given a by your leave by the head of that department. We have the interesting situation of a minister of the crown stating that the province of Ontario can conduct trade with a foreign country because the provinces are not governed by international treaty and have no customs tariff. It makes one wonder whether the Minister of Trade and Commerce is aiding and abetting a plan whereby Japanese goods may be brought into Ontario through an all-weather port on Hudson bay, thus short-circuiting the Department of National Revenue. I just refer to this episode, this trip to Japan, where a minister of the crown, on return to this country, said that he found there a tremendous market for western style goods as we have received word from the land of the rising sun that the businessmen of that nation do not favour dressing their geisha girls in ten gallon hats and chaps, as favoured on this side of the Pacific; and if local trade is going to be upset by western styles being forced upon the Japanese market, they feel that they will have to cut off entirely all international trade. But the federal government is not taking any stand on this matter of trespass on any part of the realm of national government, and is abdicating its position in that field, as it has abdicated in so many other fields.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, in a speech last night which will probably be the zenith of this session of parliament, outlined the manner in which this parliament is being reduced to the level of a debating society by the actions of the executive arm of the party in power. I regret that the speech of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre was not heard last night by all members of this House of Commons, as it was certainly an outline of the ridiculous position into which this parliament has been forced by the present government with regard to the discussion of estimates and budgets for this nation. This is the third time in five and a half years under the present government that we have given interim supply or interim financial statements instead of a budget. Never before has parliament been treated in such a callous manner as at the present time. I would like to see the address given by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre pasted on the face of every copy of the bill of rights hanging on the walls of this country today so that the public could see that the gifts which the government has so ostentatiously given to the citizens is being counteracted by the withdrawal of the rights of parliament.

I regret that in this house of minorities the largest minority should be kept in power by the open co-operation of a smaller section of the house. However, when we consider the irresponsibility of some of their actions and speeches we can accept anything. We have been given five different reasons by the leader of that party why they are voting in favour of a government which they were pledged to defeat. We have been told they had agreed to maintain the government in power only until it had corrected the mistakes of the Liberals. We were told they would keep this government in power until the spring. We were told the government would be defeated unless it brought down progressive legislation. Then we were told in a speech on June 28 by the leader of the Social Credit party: "Let us be frank about it; we do not want an election this year. We want to win the next election and we want time to get ready." This is from a man who, as leader of the Social Credit party, might be expected to know something about credits and debits. Yet we find that on November 5, referring in this house to the Chinese-Indian war, he made mention of the theory that when the government was supplying arms to the people of India it was assisting in the destruction of Canada's creditors. Well, when the leader of that party does not know the difference between a creditor and a debtor we cannot expect too much assistance from that quarter.

I wish to draw the attention of the committee to what was said by our own leader speaking in Sorel on September 22 when he said:

> Thus the members who take their seats on the opposition side of the house are on that side because the electors gave them a mandate to manifest their non-confidence in the Diefenbaker government.

So a member of the opposition could not give a vote of confidence to the present government without being a traitor to the mandate he has just received from the people.

I would draw these words by the Leader of the Opposition to the attention of hon. members on this side of the house. My hon. friend pointed out that those who do not live up to the mandate they received from the electors are traitors to the mandate they received. The greatest betrayal this world has ever seen involved 30 pieces of silver. We are now witnessing the betrayal of 30 constituencies because of sessional silver indemnities.

Now I should like to draw the attention of the committee to a feature of this government's policy which I am sure we all heartily endorse. I appreciate the opportunity given to me tonight to commend the Minister of National Health and Welfare, and I sincerely trust that some of the words I utter in this debate will be spread across Canada at a time when budgets are being set for hospitals from Newfoundland to Victoria. As hon. members of this committee know, the greatest problem which faces hospitals in this country today is the shortage of staff. I have taken the trouble to go through the briefs submitted to the royal commission on health services. I have read them as submitted from one end of Canada to the other. In every province we find the same tenor in the submissions—shortage of personnel. The submission of the government of Nova Scotia given by Mr. Donahoe, minister of health, points out that in the academic field of nursing there is an alarming shortage of teaching personnel. In Newfoundland it was stated by Dr. Leonard Miller, the deputy minister of health, that the total number of dentists in the province was only 44 or one to every 11,000 people. The figure for graduate nurses showed a total of 937 or 2.1 per thousand of the population whereas in Canada as a whole there are four graduate nurses per thousand. In New Brunswick the Hon. Georges L. Dumont, minister of health, commented: "If we had these nurses... it would be a wonderful help in solving the health problem of the province; so there it is." A Manitoba submission said the province did not have enough graduate nurses and could do with more of them. So the story runs throughout the ten provinces of Canada. In Ottawa, a statement was made by C. F. Gilhooly, who, speaking for the nurses section of the Professional Institute of the Public Service of Canada, stated:

Then their brief moves into the area of shortage of nurses, and they admit from the start that the problem of shortages is extremely complex. It is a continuing problem and there are no simple solutions.

[Mr. Cowan.]

Attention is drawn particularly to the need for qualified mental health nurses.

The great difficulty in securing a larger supply of qualified nurses is the present rate of remuneration. I regret to say that nurses are the most poorly paid of all the professional people in the country. However, the federal government through the Department of National Health and Welfare has been helping to meet this problem in an indirect way and I sincerely hope that they will both continue these efforts and expand them.

I was talking about hospital staff shortages with Dr. Rae Chittick, the lady who is the head of the McGill University School of Nursing. This was last April. The difficulty is that there is not sufficient staff for the hospitals which are already open. As a result, there is a minimum of staff and the number of patients accepted is geared to the number of staff available. Dr. Chittick told me last April that she did not think there would be any solution to these staff shortages until it was recognized that hospital staff should be paid on a shift differential and a day premium basis. I looked at the lady and remarked that I had never heard such a thought advanced before, but I could agree with her wholeheartedly. She remarked to me with some surprise "I thought you were a businessman". To this I answered "You would have to ask my competitors about that". She said "You are the first hospital trustee who did not hit the roof when payment on a shift differential and a day premium basis was mentioned. Then I made a second comment: "Dr. Chittick, I have been engaged in the printing trades for 40 years where we pay shift differentials and day premiums and in that business it is the normal way of life". My father who is 85 years of age is sitting in the gallery tonight. He has been used to paying shift differentials and day premiums, before me, so that is nothing new in our industry. How can I register any objection to bringing this system into the hospital nursing field?

In talking over hospital practices I was indeed pleased to find that in the province of Quebec a shift differential between day, night and evening shifts has been paid for the past ten years in the great majority of hospitals. I spent one day at Notre Dame hospital in Montreal discussing the matter and another with a second hospital in Montreal. I was advised that in that city there is a normal differential of 15 cents an hour or $1.20 a shift as between the evening shift and the day time shift, and that a differential of 10 cents an hour is paid on the night shift as compared with the day shift. To me it was interesting to learn that a higher differential is paid on the evening shift than on the night shift. However, the sisters who operate this hospital pointed out that the staff prefer to enjoy the social amenities from three o'clock until 11 o'clock in the evening much more than at night, and that it is more difficult to recruit staff for that evening shift.

To find the province of Quebec paying a shift differential was interesting. However, in an effort to locate a hospital paying a day premium for sixth day work, Sunday work or holidays I found the situation was slightly different.

I have in my hand a regular copy of the agreement between the hospital of Notre Dame and the labour union. This agreement was signed on October 16, last. In this contract, when it comes to a consideration of the day premium, we have a clause stating that with regard to holidays, employees will be given a day in lieu of the holiday, within 15 days before or 15 days after it, but that if the hospital fails to give the day off in lieu of holidays, they will pay double time. You therefore have a day premium in the contract involving a Montreal hospital.

In the province of Saskatchewan we have the shift differential between day, evening and night shifts. In British Columbia we again have the shift differential. However, it is impossible to locate any day premium scale set-up in Canada, other than the one that prevails in Montreal, and in that case they reduce the staff rather than pay the day premium. By that I mean that if the holiday is worked they give the employee time off rather than pay double time.

I commend the Department of National Health and Welfare in this matter because of the fact that they go along with these three provinces, namely Quebec, Saskatchewan and British Columbia, and they meet the necessary portion of the charges involved by the day premium and the shift differential rate.

I have in my hand the annual report of the Minister of National Health and Welfare under the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1962. On page 10 thereof is found the following:

> Generally speaking, shareable costs are the operating costs of the hospital which have been approved by the provincial authority and which have been determined in accordance with recognized and generally accepted accounting principles and procedures . . .
>
> The province is required to review and approve the costs of each hospital and these approved costs form the basis of the federal sharing formula.

We have the federal government, which pays one third of the operating costs of the hospitals today, quite gladly and willingly paying the differential in Quebec, Saskatchewan and British Columbia. I sincerely hope that other hospitals throughout Canada, particularly in the other seven provinces where the differential is not now in effect, will take note of this co-operation on the part of the federal government and that the staffs will appeal to the respective hospital boards for similar treatment.

It is not my intention to occupy the time of the committee by extolling the merits of the riding which I represent, namely York-Humber. The hon. member for Peel stated today that his constituency was the banner riding of Canada. This statement must make mine take second place. However, rather than argue with him, I would extol the qualities of leadership which have been displayed by the board of directors of Northwestern General hospital in Toronto. They are a group of 14 men and women. Included in their number is Mr. W. G. Beech, former Conservative member of parliament in this house and former member of the provincial house in Toronto. Unanimously they have submitted to the Ontario hospital services commission for 1963 a budget which calls for shift differentials and day premiums. The board unanimously has suggested that the premium for the sixth day in the week shall be $6 per Saturday, or sixth day, $8 per shift for work on Sunday, and $10 per shift for work on statutory holidays. I may tell you, Mr. Chairman, that the problem of securing staff for hospitals can be solved only by a satisfactory monetary return and satisfactory labour relations.

In the American Journal of Nursing for November, 1962, at page 62 will be found this comment by Sister Magda Marie, director, school of nursing and nursing service, St. Catherine's hospital, Brooklyn, New York:

> Today's hospitals are "big business" and nursing must develop a "big business" approach. More studies and research must be done to find ways and means. Principles of personnel management and practices need to be investigated and applied to nursing. Better and more dynamic administration in nursing service should be developed to keep the profession abreast of the times in order to meet the current health needs of patients.

I wish to commend the day premium rate of pay. I would point out that looking at the help wanted advertisements in the Nursing Outlook and other nursing periodicals to be found in the Department of National Health and Welfare or in our own parliamentary library, one will find advertisements from the Midland hospital of Midland, Michigan, in which it is pointed out that they pay evening, night and week end differentials. You will find advertisements by the Mission hospital, Huntingdon Park, California, emphasizing that they pay day premium rates. In talking with officers of the American hospital association I was informed that in Minneapolis and St. Paul, the twin cities of one of the most progressive states in the United States and the site of the University of Minnesota, they have a contract with their hospital staffs in those two cities under which they pay a day premium for Saturday and Sunday work. There is no widespread national pattern to this effect. However, by paying day premium rates hospitals should be able to attract from the ranks of married women the trained hospital personnel who refuse to come out for Saturday, Sunday and holiday work at the present rates of pay.

With a shift differential and a day premium scale I am confident that hospital staff problems can be easily solved. It is the greatest problem facing the hospital world today and therefore the greatest problem facing the Department of National Health and Welfare. Our veterans hospitals administered by the federal government are operating at 11.2 per cent shortage of nursing staff on the establishment. We get these figures from the Department of Veterans Affairs. When we cannot secure help in order to meet the establishment figures of the department, it is time that we looked at the method of payment. I want to commend the Minister of National Health and Welfare for his co-operation with the provinces of Quebec, Saskatchewan and British Columbia in paying the basic charges for shift differential rates of pay for hospital personnel and for the co-operation with the few hospitals of Quebec that now have the day premium rate of pay. I would sincerely urge the government to exert every possible means at their disposal to impress on the other provinces of Canada the beneficial results that can be expected to follow from the differential rate of pay and the day premium.

I am certain hon. members will be interested to know that only last week Riverdale hospital in Toronto, an 808 bed institution which will be re-opened in March, came to an agreement with their help whereby they will pay differential rates of pay, not a day premium but a shift differential. They will pay an extra 10 cents per hour on the afternoon shift and 12 cents per hour nights. These figures are interesting because they are paying higher on the night side than on the afternoon or evening shifts. This contract was negotiated by union labour officials who are accustomed to negotiating for a higher differential on the night shift than on the evening shift; but when that hospital opens you can rest assured that in a short time you will find a higher differential on the evening shift than on the night shift.

In the case of Northwestern hospital in Toronto they are suggesting to the Ontario hospital services commission 15 cents an hour on the evening shift and 10 cents an hour on the night shift, as prevails in the city of Montreal and in the province of Quebec. I sincerely hope that the benefits that will follow the introduction of such a method of compensation for hospital personnel will be spread widely across this nation so that the greatest problem facing hospitals today may be solved, and I sincerely commend the Department of National Health and Welfare for their co-operation with the three provinces who now pay a shift differential.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Chairman, this afternoon the leader of this group outlined to the House of Commons a number of matters of such serious import that in the view of this group they should not only be debated in this assembly but there should be definite statements by the government on its policies with regard to the matters to which our leader made reference. It is my desire in the time at my disposal this evening to add a couple of other items to the list which he outlined.

I should like to introduce the first of these items by asking members of this house to remember the clarion call, the challenging call, of the Prime Minister to the people of Canada in 1957 and 1958. I want to be sure that I have his call absolutely correct and to make clear that it was not just a statement made once. Therefore I should like to read from the official record just what this challenging call, this clarion call, was. If hon. members will refer to the House of Commons debates for the 1957-58 session, volume I, page 650 they will see this statement by the Prime Minister:

> Private enterprise does not carry with it the right of exploitation. As to foreign capital coming into Canada, it is not the purpose of this government to interfere with that investment. However, we want to ensure—and I think the house generally will agree with that stand—that investment in Canada shall be for Canadian purposes and under Canadian law.

Again, in volumes 9 and 10 of the proceedings of the external affairs committee of 1957-58, page 275, we find this recorded statement of the Prime Minister:

> There is an intangible sense of disquiet in Canada over the political implications of large scale and continuing external ownership and control of Canadian industries.

Again, in the House of Commons debates for the session of 1957, volume 1, page 1155, we find this statement of the Prime Minister:

> We did not object to United States investment but we asked for a positive national policy which would prevent foreign investment from furthering the process of continental economic integration and ultimately undermining our national identity.

I give just one more quotation because I want hon. members to remember this challenging call of the Prime Minister. In the House of Commons debates for the session of 1957, volume 3, page 3407, we find this statement by him:

> We believe in foreign investment, but we also believe that investment in Canada should provide for Canadian considerations first.

We maintain that what is happening with regard to foreign investment and control in Canada is of such a nature that at least we had a right to expect some action on the part of the government since 1957 and 1958 with regard to this most serious situation, because foreign investment and control have increased under this government since the Prime Minister made these statements in 1957. According to the latest figures of the dominion bureau of statistics, which are for 1959, United States capital has led to that country controlling 52 per cent of Canadian industry. Fifty two per cent of all Canadian industry is now in the control of United States investors. That may not appear to be very important to the government but I was very interested to note that it seems to be of the utmost importance to the Financial Post. In its issue of November 3 of this year the Financial Post pointed out that it had spent many months in exhaustive study of the question of foreign investment and control in Canada, and as a result of their studies and their conclusions they have a message not only for the people of Canada but for this government. I believe I should place on record what the Financial Post thought was so important that they put it in very large black-face type. Here is what they say:

> Great issues of growth and trade now beset this nation. But none raises more profound implications for the survival of Canada than the tidal sellout of Canadian companies to foreign owners. On this and the following three pages is the hard evidence of who controls Canadian industry. They show the astounding depth and degree of the invasion by foreign capital. They document a development of immense historic significance for this country.
>
> Most certainly Canada has gained from foreign investment. And most certainly Canada needs an inflow of foreign capital to help maintain a healthy foreign exchange position. But what about Canadian independence? Where is this country going? Is our political sovereignty a pathetic pretence when economic independence goes?
>
> Future generations looking back at the 1950's and 1960's may be able to give an answer. But the reality of the movement is that this is the age of the big take-over.

I say that in the view of this group no truer statement has ever been made. This is the age of the big take-over. This take-over is so pronounced that the information available leads us to believe the vast majority of the underwriting of fire and casualty insurance in Canada is no longer done by Canadian companies. We find, Mr. Chairman, that since 1950 an astounding number of companies have been taken over and, in the majority of instances, the take-over has been accomplished in the last four years.

We say this is something about which the Prime Minister and the government have definitely let the country down and are letting it down now. We can only take what was said in 1957 and 1958 as being solely for the purpose of political expediency, statements which they never intended to do anything about if they got government responsibility. This is not good enough, not only in so far as foreign control is concerned but also in connection with what takes place when some of these United States companies take over our Canadian operations.

I want to deal in particular with a matter which I raised the other day during the question period and which, apparently, the Prime Minister did not believe was of any importance whatever. In 1956 Canadian Canners was the largest canning operation in the British commonwealth. In that year the California Packing Corporation bought out two thirds of Canadian Canners for the sum of $14 million. At that time control of the largest canning operation in the commonwealth passed to the United States. What are they doing? They are deliberately adopting a policy of closing down our Canadian operations. About a week ago we had an announcement that the Canadian Canners operation in my own city of Vancouver is going to be closed. This is going to have a direct effect on 200 employees of the canning operation itself, upon 800 people who are employed during the picking season and it is going to affect farmers right outside of Vancouver who operate 700 acres and who have supplied the needs of this packing plant. This policy is going to have a serious effect on the economy because of the loss of wages and purchasing power, amounting to well over $3 million annually. All of this comes about because an outfit in California says so.

I want to say, sir, that this government owes it to the people of Canada to introduce legislation to protect Canadian farmers, Canadian workers and Canadian consumers when control of Canadian companies passes to foreign interests. I want to say, sir, that this policy adopted by California packers as it pertains to Canadian packers, and which I am outlining now, was adopted for one major purpose only, and that was to get the Aylmer brand. When our wives and mothers go shopping they buy according to brand names and the Aylmer brand is well known in Canada. Who-over looks at the tiny print at the bottom of the label? If you do, you will find, and this has been going on for some time now, the words, "Produced and packed in the United States". When people think of the Aylmer brand they think of Canadian farmers and Canadian workers.

I say, sir, this situation is an example of the betrayal of the real meaning of foreign investment in a country. I say it is a betrayal by this government when we have been bringing it to the attention of the government for the past four or five years. One day when I spoke I had the whole desk covered with produce I had purchased in Ottawa with the Canadian brand name on it but which had been produced and packed outside of Canada. I say, sir, there is a major responsibility on the shoulders of this government to show that they were not a bunch of confounded hypocrites in 1957, by doing something to fulfil the promises they made at that time. The Tories will say the people did not let them down in 1958. They are certainly letting the people down now, as they found out to a great extent on June 18 of this year. A lot of hon. members sitting here now will not be back again because the people are fed up with promises and no action.

I say, Mr. Chairman, that this matter was amply catalogued and indexed by the Financial Post and deserves the immediate attention of the government. All decency and honesty demands that the government provide an opportunity for discussing this issue as soon as possible in this house so that we can have a clear enunciation of government policy. Otherwise, we will be confirmed in our belief that the government has not either policies or principles.

There is one other matter I want to raise and it has to do with something of which the government is essentially proud and about which they do a lot of talking. I refer to the Canadian Bill of Rights. I should like to quote section 2 of the Canadian Bill of Rights:

> Every law of Canada shall, unless it is expressly declared by an act of the parliament of Canada that it shall operate notwithstanding the Canadian Bill of Rights, be so construed and applied as not to abrogate, abridge or infringe or to authorize the abrogation, abridgment or infringement of any of the rights or freedoms herein recognized and declared, and in particular, no law of Canada shall be construed or applied so as to
>
> (a) authorize or effect the arbitrary detention, imprisonment or exile of any person;
>
> (b) impose or authorize the imposition of cruel and unusual treatment or punishment;
>
> (e) deprive a person of the rights to a fair hearing in accordance with the principles of fundamental justice for the determination of his rights and obligations;

There it is, sir, in the bill of rights; words that can be understood by a layman let alone by a lawyer or perhaps the other way around. I am stating that this government not only does not understand this section of its own bill of rights I have quoted but does not enforce the principles outlined in that section of the bill of rights. I have no sympathy, definitely no maudlin sympathy for a person or persons who are anti-social. If a person breaks the law of this country, then that person should be charged, should be tried and if found guilty should receive the effect of the law in accordance with his degree of guilt.

I believe, too, that the bill of rights as I have outlined it applies to a person incarcerated in an institution, just as it applies to other people. This is not the case in Canada today. It is definitely not the case as I will indicate by an example I am going to give you. This is a case I have been trying to handle through the Minister of Justice, but that course is useless. Right now in Kingston penitentiary there is a man who has been in solitary for 13 months—13 months in the hole —and for what reason? Because of a suspicion he knows something that the authorities want to find out; and because they have not been able to get evidence in any way at all regarding a most serious incident, which I shall tell you about, Mr. Chairman, they are resorting to the torture of the hole to try to force a confession, whether it be good or bad, as the means by which this man can get out of the hole.

I do not know how many hon. members visit our jails and penitentiaries. It might be a good idea if all did, and I can assure hon. members that being members of the House of Commons they cannot only get in but get out, which is unfortunate in some respects so far as some people are concerned.

This man has been in a small cell for 13 months. He is allowed out only for a few minutes for recreation, and in recreation he is not allowed to have his exercise with anybody else. He is just as much in solitary when he is taking exercise as he is in the cell. In his cell he has the canteen privileges; he can send out letters and receive letters. If he could not I would not have got the original letter which gives rise to this. He has the radio, but what else? A bed, but not a normal bed—a bed about six inches off the floor, and he has no table and no chair. During the past three years he has improved his education by about four grades, and he wants to continue doing this. He has been requesting a table and chair to help him, but the answer is always no.

Ten feet away from his cell is the cell where the officials mete out corporal punishment to the other inmates who have to be disciplined. During the 13 months he has been in solitary, this man ten times has had what you might call a front row seat while other inmates are receiving the paddle.

What is the reason for all this? Let me give it in the words of the minister of so-called justice, and I may say it took me three weeks to get this. The reason this man is in solitary is because of a most unfortunate, disgraceful incident that occurred 13 months ago, not only unfortunate and disgraceful but something we all deplore. A guard was killed in Kingston penitentiary.

Whoever did it should be found and he should receive the penalty of the law for murder, but so far no charges have been laid, and a man is kept in solitary. Why? I quote from the letter of the Minister of Justice written to me on December 11:

Cochrane—

The man's name

—was one of the inmates who was in the Kingston penitentiary dormitory in which officer Wentworth was murdered in November, 1961. Since that event Cochrane has been segregated from the general inmate population under regulation 2.30 of the penitentiary service regulations—

He was in the dormitory when this most unfortunate incident of a guard being killed occurred, and he has been in solitary for 13 months for that reason. Why? I have it, not only on the basis of a letter this man got out to me, not only on the basis of a statement from his brother in Toronto, who got in to see him several weeks ago, but also on the basis of a letter I received just a couple of days ago from a lawyer who got in to see him for the first time since he was put in solitary, that the reason is that the authorities had a suspicion he might have murdered the guard.

They had no evidence but they had a suspicion. I understand now they have dropped that, but they still have a suspicion he knows something about it, or that he may know who did it. So, because of a suspicion that he may know something about it, he being one of the inmates who were in the dormitory when the homicide occurred, this man has been kept in the hole for 13 months. He has not a decent bed to sleep on, and he has no table or chair. This is torture, to try to obtain something of which the authorities have a suspicion.

I have no sympathy for those who break the law, but I do say I care not who the individual is, he is entitled to humane treatment and to justice. I say that if the authorities have evidence that this man murdered the guard, then let them charge him and bring him to trial. If they have not got evidence, and if they have not got any definite evidence that he knows something about it, that he was a party to a conspiracy, then I say under Canadian justice and the bill of rights which says that:

—no law of Canada shall be construed or applied so as to . . . impose or authorize the imposition of cruel and unusual treatment or punishment—

—this is a matter which, in all sincerity, is the responsibility of members of parliament to take up and try to do something about.

I may say I am very grateful to the newspaper in Kingston the editor of which, when he discovered this matter, took such an interest that he was the one who sent the lawyer to the penitentiary to find out what was the situation. That is the reason why we now have this additional information on what has taken place.

Mr. Chairman, my time is just about up. I do not have time to speak as completely as I would like on these two matters, but in conclusion I would ask that this matter of our Canadian economy and who owns and controls it be considered very soon. As we are a sovereign nation I ask that the government immediately bring in policies to stop foreign companies from buying out our Canadian industries and then closing them down. I also ask that the bill of rights be enforced and, as an example to everyone else in Canada that it should be enforced, that the government give the lead itself.

(Translation):

Mr. Pilon: Mr. Chairman, during the next few minutes, I shall try to make a review of the events that took place since the opening of this session.

Being a new member, I will be very objective about the legislation enacted in the past.

I must tell you that I have had among the best attendance records in this house and that I have been disappointed with the policies of this government and also with the attitude of some opposition groups.

The minority government should not boast over the fact it has remained in office due to a party which not only preaches politics opposed to its own, but also advocates highly irresponsible monetary reforms. They are people who attach no value to the word equity and who have shown, since the opening of this session, no sympathy for our banking institutions which, as we all know, have greatly contributed to the economic development of our country and have made possible the economic operation of several Canadian corporations and which, as a whole, have trained men in all fields of our economic activities.

Mr. Chairman, I am the member for one of the most beautiful and prosperous constituencies on the south shore of the St. Lawrence river. We, of the south shore, like to go ahead, not to mark time.

Farmers and industrialists are to be found in my constituency. The former must get everything from the provincial government. The present acts favour the western provinces for which I have great admiration. We are not opposed to this treatment, but we demand to be treated equitably if not identically. I am pleased to learn that the provincial and federal authorities have reached an agreement as regards ARDA.

We, in the district of Beloeil-St. Hilaire-Rougemont have grown 3 million bushels of apples of all kinds. As a result of the inertia of the federal Department of Trade and Commerce, 600,000 bushels have remained in the orchards for the lack of markets. We have lost $1 million and we hope that the representations of our local farm organizations will be needed and steps taken in order to correct this situation. A commission is required for the finding and opening of markets for our products. We are not asking for grants amounting to $200 per arpent, we are only asking that our voice be heard and our claims taken into consideration.

Negotiations on dairy products should be taken up with the Quebec department of agriculture. The present Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hamilton) should not be so free in making public statements to the effect that we should restrict our milk and butter production; he sings another tune to the western farmers in connection with wheat. Let us make political capital where we can, seems to be his motto.

I would say, after those who spoke before me, that the province of Quebec will not countenance the austerity program in the federal Department of Agriculture, as regards premiums on hogs.

Mr. Chairman, I should like to remind the house that the province of Quebec has the resources and skills required to make Canada economically strong in all fields. Nothing is being done yet concerning the deepening of the Richelieu river, a project which would go a long way towards improving the economic situation on the south shore of the St. Lawrence. A Liberal government would undertake that project and you can be sure, Mr. Chairman, that it will not give rise to as many disputes and arguments as the Columbia river development.

During the past few weeks, very little has been said about the small companies financing act. That is also an important part if not the backbone of our economy. If we feel that we owe our success to our skilled workers, let us give them a chance to make a name for themselves both on domestic and foreign markets and to fight against unemployment, this national plague, on which I do not want to dwell now, since matters are going from bad to worse.

With regard to small businesses, we should extend the purpose, define the terms and modify the interest rate; we should also promote the establishment of an agency in order to free the financial institutions from extended and detailed preambles. Such an agency—which might be tied in with Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation—could study each case in greater detail and, if need be, advise our businessmen. To come back to C.M.H.C. which I have already mentioned, a great deal has been done through this organization created by the Liberals but under the Conservative government fewer people could take advantage of it because without warning the interest rate has been raised from 5¾ per cent in 1957 to 6¾ per cent in 1961, and then brought down later on, to 6½ per cent. Such a step taken by this government will cost the Canadian taxpayers about $3 million in the next 30 years.

After all, Mr. Chairman, this government did not take wise and responsible administrative action. I grant that the ministers have done their best, but they worked only with the tools given them by the Prime Minister. If the latter had more ideas of a practical nature, we would not be where we are now.

(Text):

In closing, Mr. Chairman, we on this side of the house are and should be very constructive critics, and we have the right to ask this government to contemplate our problems on a national scale and with a non-political outlook. We as Canadians have acted so as to keep the structure of our country in one piece. The effort, if we might use that expression, was made years ago. Our party builders have maintained the prestige of Canada at its highest peak for many years. This duty is now cast on this new and younger generation. This is the challenge which the Liberal party is dedicated to meet, believing that our greatness must be found in a united Canada.

(Translation):

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Chairman, I understand that the measure before the house seeks to grant the government the amounts it will require to pay its bills up to January 31.

Hon. members have spoken of just about everything. One dealt with nurses' salaries, another with jails. In my opinion, if we keep on like that, we will all be thrown in jail before long.

Mr. Chairman, I can hardly understand why so much time is taken up to achieve practically nothing. The estimates the government is asking us to vote will be appropriated to the payment of expenses made under certain legislation already passed by this parliament. Even though we might extend this debate for 15 days, I feel that we would have to meet those expenditures. I find it difficult to explain the attitude of certain members. As a matter of fact, people claim that we are not serious and frankly, I do not know whether it is due to my inexperience, but I am under the impression that I should be at a loss to answer, because I think that they may be right in the end.

Mr. Chairman, we have been here for three months and we have done so little that I feel we should make up for lost time on the occasion of Christmas, so as to prove to the Canadian people that we can be serious when we want to.

In my opinion, the house should vote the funds the government needs to meet its obligations. In fact, if we keep on like this, there will not be enough money to pay our parliamentary allowances for the next month. It is high time we took action since we have discussed about everything except the supplies which the government has asked us to approve.

We should show a sense of responsibility and discuss the supplementary budget to determine whether we approve the government's way of spending public funds. There is nothing to be gained by lengthy discussions since most of the relevent bills will be submitted to the house for consideration.

I might add that those who may be trying to get some publicity out of this have chosen a very bad time for it because, right now, Canadians are much more interested in buying Christmas gifts than reading our speeches.

That is why I feel this debate should be postponed until after the holidays.

(Text):

Mr. Roxburgh: At this point I should like to speak on a subject which is of the greatest importance to this nation, and that is the physical fitness program which has not yet been dealt with in this house. The importance of this program is possibly greater than hon. members realize.

On August 25, 1961, the Prime Minister at the opening of the hockey hall of fame promised $5 million for a physical fitness and athletic program. He went on to say that such a program was vital to mental and physical health in a demanding world and for purposes of national prestige in the fight against communism. That is fine.

I am glad to see that the Minister of National Health and Welfare has come in. It has been my privilege to have travelled with Canadian hockey teams not only throughout Canada and the United States but throughout Europe. It has been my privilege to be with Canadian hockey teams in Russia and in the city of Moscow. In that city, which contains between six million and eight million people, they have ten recreational parks established at a cost of a million dollars a year to the city. The smallest park extends over 250 acres, and the largest is approximately 2,000 acres. In each one of those parks there is every known facility for the development of physical fitness and an amateur program. While I was there I read some Russian sport magazines and in those magazines full credit was given to their physical fitness program for the success of Russian athletes in world competition. And I will tell hon. members this, that in days of peace the performance of our athletes in world competition creates the prestige which other countries go by. Do not let us forget that.

I think we were all ashamed, and every Canadian in this house was ashamed at the reports which came back during the last two world wars of the physical unfitness of so many of our young men who went to serve in the armed forces.

An hon. Member: What did your government do about it?

Mr. Roxburgh: If hon. members opposite have something to say I will be very glad to hear them after I have finished. If any one of them wants to take me on in a debate on this physical fitness program I should be glad to take him on.

After the Prime Minister had made his statement, one of the leading press writers in Toronto told me: "Jack, look, this is a wonderful idea but politics are going to get into it." I said: "No, you are absolutely wrong." However, I was wrong. The Minister of National Health and Welfare is here. I want to say I have every respect for him as a man, and when the Prime Minister handed him the job of handling the physical fitness program he handed him a tiger by the tail.

I do not know how other hon. members borrow money, but when I have to borrow money to conduct my business I go to the bank. What does the bank say? Does the bank say: "Here are so many dollars, Jack. You can make up your program after I have given you the dollars." No. They say: "Give me a plan and then we will lend you the money". But what did the Prime Minister do? Right out of a hat—and I will make a bet there was no other minister who knew what he was going to say—he promised $5 million, against nothing. The thought was "We will get the plan rolling after we get the $5 million." I am sorry to say the plan does not exist.

Coming back to the politics within the physical fitness program may I say this. As I said previously, I realize that when I am making this statement it is certainly not personal in any way, shape or form. In the beginning when people were asking for information, it was my privilege—

The Chairman: Order.

Mr. Churchill: I wonder whether the committee would continue for a few minutes in order that we might perhaps finish interim supply.

Mr. Roxburgh: I am sorry, but if the committee wish to continue for half an hour that is fine with me.

Mr. Churchill: That is fine with me.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. It being ten o'clock, shall I rise and report progress and request leave to sit again at the next sitting of the house?

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder if the house leader could indicate how he hopes to have the business conducted for the next two days?

Mr. Monteith: Expeditiously.

Mr. Pickersgill: I would advise the hon. member to leave it to the house leader.

Mr. Churchill: I hope it will be conducted in an orderly fashion. I would be quite content to sit here tonight for another hour or two if we could finish interim supply. If not, we shall be obliged to go on with interim supply tomorrow. I urge hon. members to consider the fact that time is beginning to run out and that we should pass this business.

Mr. Nowlan: We will adjourn over Christmas and come back on December 27.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

[Mr. Roxburgh.]

Mr. Churchill: I think it is a little bit difficult to go beyond tomorrow, without some knowledge of when this debate will conclude. I should like to make this request for tomorrow on a different subject. I had hoped today at five o'clock to ask the house to give consent to consider Bill C-82 on procedure with regard to divorce, but other private bills which had precedence took up the allotted time. I now put this request before the house. Instead of discussing notices of motions tomorrow at five o'clock could we take under consideration Bill C-82? As far as this party is concerned, it is open to any member to vote as he wishes on it. It is not a party matter. However, we should like to bring this bill forward in order to get on with the question of divorce. This bill seems to present a method which might be tried out by parliament, even if it is not the most satisfactory one. I should like to hear from the other parties whether tomorrow at five o'clock we could consider that bill.

Mr. Pickersgill: So far as we are concerned, Mr. Speaker, I think I can safely say that we would be prepared to accept the suggestion made by the hon. gentleman on the understanding that this was not just going to be an hour's debate but rather that there was some disposition to reach a determination of this matter. We take the same view as the minister has expressed so far as his friends are concerned, namely that as far as any vote on the bill is concerned, it is up to each individual member to vote as he wishes. We have no position on the bill itself, except that we are prepared to have it come to a determination. However, it does not seem to me that any purpose whatsoever would be served by merely taking an hour appointed for some other purpose just in order to have a futile debate. Speaking for myself and, I think, for my friends I may say that unless there is agreement among the parties to bring this matter to a determination tomorrow, we would be willing, and we think it would be much more sensible, to use the hour in order to enable the government to get through those two or three measures about which the minister spoke earlier, on the understanding that this hour would not be lost if the session progresses later on.

We see a certain problem which the minister has with respect to university grants and this sewage treatment project measure, and I understand that is all that is involved. There is also this bill concerning a railway branch line in New Brunswick which I understand the C.N.R. is just waiting to have passed so that they can provide jobs for some people. We should very much like to do that.

As I say, I agree with the minister that if we can reach a determination of the divorce business in one hour we should be very happy to agree to that suggestion. However, if there is not agreement that it can be determined in one hour I suggest that instead we allow the government to have that hour, not for supply but rather to help the government with these three other measures which I think there is fairly general agreement we should all like to see passed.

Mr. Patterson: We in this group are in accord with the suggestion made by the house leader in this particular regard. We would be prepared to have this bill brought before us tomorrow at five o'clock. We would also hope that it would come to the point of determination during that hour. It is not our intention to debate the bill to any great extent. We would possibly just have one speaker make a brief statement presenting our position on it and then would allow it to pass. However, we would hope that if it was brought forward it would come to the point of determination and that we would have a vote on it.

Mr. Speaker: I recognize the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, I thought you said the other day that you did not want members of the various groups getting into this discussion.

Mr. Speaker: These are peculiar circumstances which the Chair will recognize.

Mr. Douglas: If Your Honour is recognizing these peculiar circumstances, I should like to say that I prefer not to make any commitment at this time. However, I should be glad to discuss the proposals that have been made both by the leader of the house for the government and by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate. I should be glad to discuss them with my colleagues in the morning and to let the Minister of Veterans Affairs know the result in plenty of time before the house opens.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think that is a very sensible suggestion, and I concur in it. I hope that in one way or another we can use this time to better advantage than in discussing the motion that is set down for tomorrow. We recognize that there is some public business that ought to be concluded.

Mr. Churchill: I have just one last word to say, Mr. Speaker. Will the representatives of the various parties meet in my room, 426N, tomorrow at two o'clock?

It being eight minutes after ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, December 19, 1962

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

BROADCASTING ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING RESTRICTIONS ON POLITICAL BROADCASTS

Mr. Harry C. Harley (Halton) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-100, to amend the Broadcasting Act (political programs).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Harley: Mr. Speaker, at present the Broadcasting Act prohibits political broadcasts anywhere in Canada on election day and the two days preceding election day whether the election is federal, provincial or municipal. This bill is to amend the act so that it will apply only to those radio stations or broadcasting stations where the broadcasting range reaches the actual election area.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

*TUNNEL BETWEEN VANCOUVER AND SEA ISLAND

Question No. 778—Mr. Prittie:

Has the government in its possession a report from CBA Engineering Limited of Vancouver concerning the feasibility of a tunnel connecting the city of Vancouver and Sea island and, if so, has this report received further consideration since the Vancouver international airport came under federal ownership?

Mr. McCleave: A report from CBA Engineering Limited on a tunnel from Vancouver to Sea island was received by the Department of Public Works. This report was not prepared at the request or cost of the federal government. No further consideration has been given to it, since at the time of the agreed payment of $400,000 by the federal government to the province in 1958 for a portion of the capital cost of this access tunnel, it was understood that the structure would be a provincial responsibility and that federal responsibility for access to Sea island was discharged.

(Translation):

C.N.R.—SERVICE BETWEEN EDMUNDSTON, N.B. AND LEVIS, QUE.

Question No. 907—Mr. Dube:

Has the Canadian National Railways Company reconsidered its decision to suspend during the summer months, and to continue every second and third day during the winter season, the service between Edmundston and Levis (trains No. 67, 70 and 68, 69) with a view to providing a regular daily year-round service for the large population of the entire region?

Mr. McBain: The management of the Canadian National Railways has sent me the following information:

There was a day coach service three times a week during the winter and the autumn of 1961. In December 1961, a complete train service was re-established. From Montreal this train had a sleeping car connecting with the ocean limited at Levis. Passengers using this service were few and most of them got on at Edmundston. There were also few passengers picked up from intermediate points in the areas of Charny and of Monk. As there had been so few passengers last winter and in the light of a careful analysis of the market possibilities for this winter, a semi-weekly service has been established between Edmundston and Levis with connection for passengers going to Montreal. Traffic on this service will be carefully considered and any future service or changes will be made according to the traffic potential of those trains.

(Text):

ALTERNATIVE ACCESS TO SEA ISLAND AIRPORT, VANCOUVER

Question No. 972—Mr. Laing:

1. Is the Minister of Public Works aware of the congestion and occasional failure of the swing-bridge over Moray channel, being the sole approach to Vancouver international airport?

2. Is consideration being given to or have any studies been made of, an alternative access to Sea island from Vancouver city?

3. Have any submissions of plans been made to the government for a tunnel approach from the south end of Granville street thence direct to the site of the new terminal building and, if so, has the government plans to proceed with this undertaking?

Mr. McCleave: 1. Yes; and that the bridge is under the jurisdiction of the province of British Columbia.

2. Not by the Department of Public Works.

3. Yes. An engineering firm made such a study on its own initiative, and submitted a copy to the Department of Public Works. No consideration has been given to the report here, since at the time of the agreed payment of $400,000 by the federal government to the province in 1958 for a portion of the capital cost of this access bridge, it was understood that the structure would be a provincial responsibility and that federal responsibility for access to Sea island was discharged.

FREIGHT RATES, PINE POINT RAILWAY

Question No. 1,053—Mrs. Hardie:

Do the provisions under which the Pine Point railway is to operate ensure that upon its completion carlot shipments from eastern Canada will have applied to them the one and one third transcontinental rate structure that applies to destinations in Alberta and, if so, what will be (using present tariff) the rate per 100 lbs. on (a) minimum carlots canned vegetables, Toronto-Hay river (b) carlot furniture, Toronto-Hay river?

Mr. McBain: The management of Canadian National Railways advise as follows:

The Great Slave lake railway is under construction and the projected estimated completion date is the fall of 1966 at which time, when it is in full operation, it will be subject to the then existing statutes and regulations of the Board of Transport Commissioners for Canada covering the operation of such railways. As a matter of information, section 337 of the Railway Act defines "eastern territory" as any point on a line of railway east of Port Arthur, Ontario or Armstrong, Ontario; "western territory" as any point on a line of railway in British Columbia to which competitive transcontinental tolls apply, and "intermediate territory" as any point between eastern and western territory on any line of railway.

The provisions of this section of the act stipulate that rates to intermediate territory shall not exceed by more than one third the competitive toll in effect to eastern or western territory.

Generally speaking, as destinations on the Pine Point railway qualify under the term "intermediate territory" the effective rates, if that railway were today in operation, would be those within the scope of one and one third of any applicable transcontinental competitive rate.

(Translation):

BAGOTVILLE, QUE.—CONSTRUCTION OF AIRPORT TERMINAL

Question No. 1,056—Mr. Cote:

1. Are plans under way for the construction of a civilian terminal building at the military airport at Bagotville and, if so, when will construction be undertaken?

2. What is the estimated total cost of the construction program and has any amount yet been appropriated?

Mr. Balcer: The immediate construction of a civilian terminal building at the Bagotville airport is not being considered, although that project is included in the long-term program of my department. The construction date of that project will be determined by the needs of the air lines, the increase in traffic and the availability of the necessary funds.

It would be too early to try to establish the approximate cost of those works as long as no decision is taken concerning their execution.

Mr. Speaker: The Secretary of State asks that questions 1,145 to 1,149 inclusive stand.

(Text):

C.N.R. ATLANTIC REGION—EMPLOYEES IN PERSONNEL WORK

Question No. 1,060—Mr. Crossman:

1. What are the names of the C.N.R. employees stationed in the Atlantic region who are engaged in personnel work as distinct from the labour relations field?

2. What is, for each of the above persons, (a) length of service with the company (b) educational background (c) ability to speak both official languages of the country?

Mr. McBain: The management of Canadian National Railways advise as follows:

The same answer applies as that given to question No. 935, wherein it was stated that the policy of the management concerning the questions raised was expressed on many occasions, especially in answer to question No. 344 of the session of the 24th parliament, where it was said that it is not the policy of the management to supply information from the personal files of officers and employees, a position which met with the approval of the sessional committee on railways, air lines and shipping, and that appointments are made after careful consideration of the qualifications and experience of the persons concerned.

PASSENGERS CARRIED BY FERRY "WILLIAM CARSON"

Question No. 1,077—Mr. Tucker:

1. What was the total number of passengers carried on the C.N.R. coastal ferry William Carson to and from Port aux Basques, Newfoundland, between January 1 and December 31, inclusive, during the years 1959, 1960, and 1961?

2. (a) Was the William Carson able to carry all passengers who sought transportation from January 1 to November 30, inclusive, 1962, to Port aux Basques (b) were extra ferries added to the service (c) what was the number of passengers carried during this period?

Mr. McBain: The management of Canadian National Railways advise as follows:

1. 1959, 52,251 passengers; 1960, 62,366 passengers; 1961, 62,566 passengers.

2. (a) No. (b) Yes. (c) William Carson, 66,930; others, 6,458; total, 73,388.

Questions

COUNCIL ON FITNESS AND AMATEUR SPORT

Question No. 1,078—Mr. Roxburgh:

1. (a) What is the total amount to date, including grants to provinces, spent by the government on the recommendation of the national advisory council on fitness and amateur sport (b) does the amount include any of the projects recommended by the advisory council at its November 16 meeting and, if so, what are the projects and the amount granted for each?

2. Has the province of Quebec become an official member of the national advisory council on fitness and amateur sport and, if so, as of what date?

Mrs. Casselman: 1. (a) $397,435 has been spent on the recommendation of the national advisory council on fitness and amateur sport. In addition, grants totalling $214,785 have been made to the provinces. (b) No.

2. The provinces are not represented as such on the national advisory council on fitness and amateur sport. Members serve as private individuals, though residents of each province are included on the council.

All provinces except Quebec have now signed a federal-provincial agreement under the Fitness and Amateur Sport Act.

LIMITED DIVIDEND, LOW RENTAL AND REDEVELOPMENT LOANS

Question No. 1,084—Mr. Scott:

Under the provisions of the National Housing Act, in each of the years ended December 31, 1958, 1959, 1960, and 1961, in each province, how many (a) limited dividend loans were made, and what was the total value of such loans (b) low rental loans were made and what was the total value (c) loans were made for the acquisition of existing rental projects, and what was the total value (d) loans were made for slum clearance and/or urban redevelopment, and what was the total value of said loans?

Mr. McCleave:

(a)

NET LIMITED DIVIDEND LOANS APPROVED 1958-1961
(LOW RENTAL HOUSING PROJECTS)

Area	1958		1959		1960		1961
	No. of Loans	Amount $000	No. of Loans	Amount $000	No. of Loans	Amount $000	No. of Loans	Amount $000
Newfoundland	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Prince Edward Island	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Nova Scotia	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
New Brunswick	—	—	1	80	1	42	—	—
Quebec	16	18,450	9	6,683	3	1,811	—	—
Ontario	23	21,831	23	21,730	14	7,961	26	18,707
Manitoba	7	4,113	2	1,412	4	282	5	551
Saskatchewan	1	596	4	856	3	629	3	307
Alberta	3	3,533	3	4,491	—	—	5	4,671
B.C.	11	711	4	218	5	308	14	1,247
Yukon	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Northwest Territories	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Total	61	49,234	46	35,470	30	11,033	53	25,483

Questions

(b) Low rental projects under section 36 of the National Housing Act are not financed by way of loan but by capital investment by the federal-provincial-municipal partnership. The federal government bears 75 per cent of the capital cost. In the years 1958, 1959, 1960 and 1961 the following are the number and costs of projects approved:

	1958		1959		1960		1961
Province	No. of Projects	Estimated or Actual Cost* $000	No. of Projects	Estimated or Actual Cost* $000	No. of Projects	Estimated or Actual Cost* $000	No. of Projects	Estimated or Actual Cost* $000
N.B.	—	—	—	—	1	1,101	—	—
N.S.	—	—	—	—	1	2,466	—	—
Ont.	8	8,352	6	6,197	—	—	4	10,445
Sask.	—	—	1	1,108	—	—	—	—
B.C.	—	—	—	—	2	4,105	1	776
Total	8	8,352	7	7,305	4	7,672	5	11,221

*Estimates used where final costs not yet determined.

(c) Section 36 (1)(c) of the National Housing Act provides for the acquisition, improvement and conversion for housing purposes of existing buildings situated in an area designated as an urban renewal area. No projects have been acquired and developed under this section.

Under section 16 of the National Housing Act, the corporation may make a loan to a limited dividend housing company for the purchase of existing buildings and the land upon which they are situated and their conversion into a low rental housing project. There have been no such loans for the years in question.

(d) Urban renewal projects under section 23 of the National Housing Act are not financed by way of loan. The federal government may contribute up to one half the costs of acquiring and clearing such projects. In the years 1958, 1959, 1960, and 1961, the federal government approved the following contributions:

	1958		1959		1960		1961
Province	No. of Projects	$000	No. of Projects	$000	No. of Projects	$000	No. of Projects	$000
N.S.	—	—	1	90	—	—	—	—
N.B.	—	—	—	—	1	1,613	—	—
Ont.	—	—	2	6,242	1	1,585	—	—
Man.	—	—	—	—	—	—	1	3,690
B.C.	—	—	—	—	1	2,401	—	—
Total	—	—	3	6,332	3	5,599	1	3,690

INCOMES OF PURCHASERS OF N.H.A. HOMES

Question No. 1,085—Mr. Scott:

Under the provisions of the National Housing Act, in each of the years ended December 31, 1945, 1946, 1947, and 1948, in each province, (a) how many single family dwelling loans were made (b) what was the total amount of the said loans (c) how many approved purchases of houses built under the said act received, per year, (i) under $2,000 (ii) between $2,000-$2,999 (iii) between $3,000-$3,999 (iv) between $4,000-$4,999 (v) between $5,000-$5,999 (vi) between $6,000-$6,999 (vii) between $7,000-$7,999 (viii) between $8,000-$8,999 (ix) between $9,000-$9,999 (x) over $10,000?

Mr. McCleave: Questions

(a) and (b)

TOTAL N.H.A. LOANS APPROVED FOR HOME-OWNERSHIP DWELLINGS, 1945-1948*

Area	1945		1946		1947		1948
	Loans	Amount $000	Loans	Amount $000	Loans	Amount $000	Loans	Amount $000
Newfoundland	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Prince Edward Island	—	—	5	26	5	25	35	196
Nova Scotia	60	270	114	541	263	1,351	316	1,664
New Brunswick	24	104	89	424	128	686	300	1,702
Quebec	465	2,212	739	3,643	1,558	9,604	2,820	20,176
Ontario	2,502	10,573	3,713	16,843	4,191	21,611	7,156	39,961
Manitoba	734	3,158	1,149	5,699	1,371	7,210	1,266	7,596
Saskatchewan	97	415	261	1,150	166	805	111	571
Alberta	479	2,099	669	3,060	983	5,048	2,019	10,787
British Columbia	684	2,759	1,299	5,506	1,255	5,484	2,273	10,659
Yukon Territory	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Northwest Territories	—	—	—	—	—	—	2	13
Total	5,045	21,590	8,038	36,892	9,920	51,824	16,298	93,325

* Data do not take account of cancellations.

(c)

NUMBER OF BORROWERS AND PURCHASERS UNDER THE NATIONAL HOUSING ACT, BY SELECTED INCOME GROUPS, 1946*

Applicants' Income	Number of Borrowers and Purchasers
$
Under 2,000	1,533
2,000 to 2,999	2,145
3,000 to 3,999	644
4,000 to 4,999	164
5,000 to 5,999	73
6,000 to 6,999	27
7,000 to 7,999	8
8,000 to 8,999	4
9,000 to 9,999	1
10,000 and over	9
Total	4,608

*Data available only for Canada, with no provincial breakdown.

Questions

NUMBER OF BORROWERS AND PURCHASERS UNDER THE NATIONAL HOUSING ACT, BY SELECTED INCOME GROUPS, 1948

Family Income*	Number of Borrowers and Purchasers
	P.E.I.	N.S.	N.B.	Que.	Ont.	Man.	Sask.	Alta.	B.C.	Canada
$
Under 1,800	2	11	5	10	57	8	2	12	56	163
1,800–2,099	6	34	17	58	415	99	8	94	255	986
2,100–2,399	5	67	39	104	797	198	9	225	302	1,746
2,400–2,699	7	77	31	214	1,350	315	20	355	407	2,776
2,700–2,999	5	29	22	131	785	185	17	212	214	1,600
3,000–3,499	3	50	28	247	1,135	229	21	321	325	2,359
3,500–3,999	1	25	27	159	574	127	10	179	164	1,266
4,000–4,999	2	19	21	168	482	109	15	16	1430	1,119
5,000 and over	3	17	27	144	318	124	14	156	82	885
Total	34	329	217	1,235	5,913	1,394	116	1,714	1,948	12,900

* Data available only on a family income basis and with different income intervals than those requested.

NOTE: Data for the years 1945 and 1947 not available.

C.N.R. PASSENGER SERVICE, HALIFAX-SYDNEY, N.S.

Question No. 1,099—Mr. MacInnis:

1. Have any complaints or criticisms been received by the Canadian National Railways with regard to the rail liner services between Halifax and Sydney?

2. Is the Canadian National Railways prepared to make available more comfortable accommodation for passengers willing to pay higher fares, than what is presently available?

Mr. McBain: The management of Canadian National Railways advise as follows:

1. Some representations have been received in the Atlantic region concerning the scheduling of these trains. The revised schedule will go into effect December 31, 1962.

2. It is the objective of the company to compete vigorously for passenger business in those areas where facilities and size of the travel market provide a reasonable expectation that the company can realize a profit by so doing, and to withdraw from those services that in spite of reasonable efforts do not produce sufficient revenues to offset their operating costs and have no reasonable prospect of doing so.

C.N.R. TRAINS 603 AND 604, TRURO-SYDNEY, N.S.

Question No. 1,100—Mr. MacInnis:

1. What arrival and departure time changes are involved in the revised operating schedule of the Canadian National Railways with regard to trains 603 and 604 between Truro and Sydney?

2. Does the management of the C.N.R. anticipate that increased passenger traffic between Truro and Sydney will make up the loss in assured annual revenue of some $91,000, the sum paid by the Post Office Department to the railway for the use of postal cars on trains 603 and 604, under their revised operating schedule?

[Mr. McCleave.]

3. Does the C.N.R. intend to continue the operation of trains 603 and 604?

4. With respect to the changes in the schedule of trains 603 and 604 on December 29, 1962, has the Post Office Department indicated that it was prepared to continue to operate postal services on said trains?

5. Is the management of the C.N.R. prepared to co-operate with the Post Office Department by making it possible to continue the railway postal service?

Mr. McBain: The management of Canadian National Railways advise as follows:

1. Effective December 31, 1962, the scheduling of the trains referred to is as follows:

Trains 607-604 will depart Halifax at 7.30 a.m. and leave Truro at 8.55 a.m. (1 hour 55 minutes later than at present), arriving Sydney at 2.30 p.m. (1 hour 15 minutes later than at present). Trains 603-608 will leave Sydney at 3 p.m. (1 hour 5 minutes later than at present), arriving Truro at 8.35 p.m. (35 minutes later than at present) and run through to Halifax arriving at 10 p.m. (20 minutes earlier than at present).

2. It is expected that the improved schedule will result in a more favourable cost versus revenue ratio for this operation.

3. The new schedules are designed in an endeavour to attract additional passenger traffic. A careful market analysis will be made over the next few months covering the actual operation.

4. No.

5. The Canadian National Railways has excellent relations with the Post Office Department and is prepared to co-operate at all times.

(Translation):

C.N.R.—QUALIFICATIONS AND RECORDS OF MESSRS. GORDON AND WILSON

Question No. 1,108—Mr. Boulanger:

1. In what year did the president of the Canadian National Railways, Mr. Donald Gordon, emigrate to Canada?

2. What educational certificates did he have when he joined the C.N.R.?

3. Did the present chief of personnel of the C.N.R., Mr. W. T. Wilson, act during the war years as Mr. Gordon's assistant at the wartime prices and trade board and, if so, what railway experience did Mr. Wilson have when he joined the C.N.R.?

Mr. McBain: We are informed by the management that biographical notes concerning Messrs. Donald Gordon and W. T. Wilson are found in the reference books.

(Text):

DREDGING, FRASER RIVER, B.C.

Question No. 1,117—Mr. Douglas:

Has any dredging been done by an agency of the federal government during the first ten months of 1962 in that portion of the Fraser river from Port Mann to Hope and, if so (a) how much, and at what cost (b) whose dredge or dredges are at present engaged in this portion of the river (c) what capacity have these dredges, and (d) what are the financial arrangements?

Mr. McCleave: Yes.

(a) Approximately 81,000 cubic yards at a total cost of $36,220.00.

(b) One owned by Scuffler Dredging Company, Chilliwack, and another owned by Fraser River Dredging Company, Chilliwack.

(c) The Scuffler dredge is a Saureman scraper type and has a production capacity of 440 cubic yards per day. Excavated material is moved distances up to 1,000 feet. The Fraser River Dredging Company plant is a water dozer type limited to short haul operations of less than 500 feet. It has a production capacity of 840 cubic yards per day.

(d) The dredges were employed on a plant rental basis after public tender call and the contracts were awarded to the lowest bidders. The contract rates are:

Scuffler plant	—	$245 per day
Fraser River plant	—	$276 per day

(Translation):

APPOINTMENT OF TRADE PUBLICITY DIRECTOR

Question No. 1,121—Mr. Legare:

1. Does the Department of Trade and Commerce propose to appoint a director of trade publicity who, among other duties, would be called upon to travel in Canada and abroad and, if so, would it be an asset if this officer were bilingual?

2. Does the civil service commission intend to give priority to a bilingual candidate?

Mr. Nesbitt: 1. The position of trade publicity director in the Department of Trade and Commerce was advertised recently by the civil service commission. Even though, according to the commission and under section 47 of the Civil Service Act, a knowledge of English and French is not deemed essential to enable the new incumbent to perform his duties properly and provide an adequate service to the public, nevertheless, the commission feels that a knowledge of both languages would prove most useful. Therefore, this consideration will be taken into account when the candidates to this position are examined.

2. Answered by 1.

T.C.A.—PUBLICITY PAMPHLETS IN BOTH LANGUAGES

Question No. 1,141—Mr. Deschatelets:

Are the various publicity pamphlets, placed at the disposal of the passengers on T.C.A. printed in both official languages?

Mr. McBain: The management of T.C.A. informs me that publicity material on board its aircraft are either in several languages, including French, or in both French and English. The company's timetables are now fully bilingual and are distributed everywhere in Canada, the United States, the United Kingdom, Europe and the West Indies. The magazine "In Flight", its French language counterpart and a booklet of multilingual maps are at the disposal of passengers on T.C.A. aircraft.

At the end of 1962, T.C.A. will have published 43 folders in French, 2,885,000 copies of which have been distributed through the company's offices, travel agencies or directly through the mail.

(Text):

JUVENILE OFFENDERS IN FEDERAL PENITENTIARIES

Question No. 1,151—Mr. Orlikow:

1. In connection with juvenile offenders who are in federal penitentiaries, who decides that they should be incarcerated there?

2. In how many cases did the court have presentence recommendations from social workers, probation officers, psychiatrists, etc.?

3. What facilities, if any, are there for segregation of these juveniles from the adult inmates?

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): 1. The judge or magistrate of the adult court in which the juvenile is tried.

2. Information not available.

3. No separate facilities exist as such. However, in the Montreal area many are transferred to the federal training centre, an institution for young offenders, and an attempt is made to segregate them from the older aged groups. In other federal penitentiaries, attempts are made to segregate juveniles from the adult inmates, but the overcrowded conditions in the federal penitentiaries preclude the provision of completely segregated areas.

PAROLE OFFICERS, DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

Question No. 1,154—Mr. Orlikow:

1. How many parole officers are employed by the Department of Justice, and what is their jurisdiction?

2. How many of these are trained social workers?

3. How many are university graduates in the social sciences?

4. Does the department make provisions for bursaries for the training of more parole officers and, if so, how many bursaries, and for how much?

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): 1. 42. The jurisdiction of those employed in the field offices is geographically limited to specified areas and the duties include the direct interviewing of applicants for parole; the direct or indirect supervision of persons on parole and the maintenance of liaison with crown authorities.

Generally speaking, the jurisdiction of parole officers employed at headquarters is geographically limited to a specified area and their duties include the assembly of data necessary to the study of parole cases; the preparation of summaries, based on the data assembled, for consideration by the national parole board and the performance of incidental duties.

2. 14.

3. 12.

4. No.

PAYMENTS TO INFORMERS RESPECTING TAX EVASIONS

Question No. 1,160—Mr. Benson:

Has the government made payments during the 1960, 1961, and 1962 fiscal years to persons who inform on fellow citizens in the matter of tax evasion and, if so (a) are such payments considered as taxable income in the hands of the recipient (b) what was the total amount paid to such informers during the 1960, 1961, and 1962 fiscal years (c) what was the number of such informers in each taxation district in Canada during the 1960, 1961, and 1962 fiscal years (d) what was the total amount of such payments in each taxation district during the 1960, 1961, and 1962 fiscal years, and (e) where are such payments reflected in the public accounts?

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): (a) Yes.

(b) $2,272.

(c) Newfoundland taxation division, 1; Montreal taxation division, 1; Toronto taxation division, 1.

[Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert).]

(d) Newfoundland taxation district, $242; Montreal taxation district, $1,030; Toronto taxation district, $1,000.

(e) Such payments are reported in the public accounts as expenditures for law costs.

*CHANGE IN METHOD OF CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

Question No. 1,164—Mr. Roxburgh:

Has the government any plans for a more humane method of capital punishment than by hanging?

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): The answer to this question is that legislation would be required to effect a change in the method of capital punishment. None is proposed at present.

*CENTRAL PLACES OF EXECUTION

Question No. 1,165—Mr. Ryan:

Has the government any plans for a central place of execution in each province and for the territories?

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): The answer to this question is that this matter falls under provincial jurisdiction. So far as the territories are concerned the answer is no.

BURNT CHURCH INDIAN RESERVE, N.B.—ROAD PROJECTS

Question No. 1,166—Mr. McWilliam:

Were road construction and road repair projects carried out on lands of the Burnt Church reserve of the Miramichi Indian agency, New Brunswick, within the last five years and, if so, were the costs of these projects defrayed from the Burnt Church Indian band fund in whole or in part, and what was the amount for each project?

Mr. McGee: Yes, all of the amounts shown in the following table were expended from departmental appropriations. No expenditures from band funds were made for road work during the fiscal years shown.

Year	Repairs	New Construction
1957-58	Nil	Nil
1958-59	$ 994.93	Nil
1959-60	Nil	Nil
1960-61	$3,523.70	$9,080.04
1961-62	$ 47.50	$6,919.27

INTEREST PAYMENTS ON BONDS HELD OVERSEAS

Question No. 1,169—Mr. Gregoire:

What are the sums of money which have been sent out from Canada since 1942, in payment of interest on foreign bonds on overseas markets by (a) the government of Canada (b) the provincial governments (c) municipal corporations, and (d) school boards?

Mr. Nesbitt:

Interest payments on Canadian bonds and debentures held abroad for selected years[1]

	1942	1946	1955	1959	1960	1961
	(millions of dollars)
(a) Government of Canada	26	30	17	20	23	25
(b) Provincial	23	25	34	51	64	68
(c) Municipal, including school boards (for which data are not available separately)	15	13	16	34	42	47

[1]Estimates are not available for other years.

INTEREST AND PROFITS TO FOREIGN COMPANIES

Question No. 1,170—Mr. Gregoire:

What are the sums, interest, and profits that companies with foreign capital have realized in Canada since 1942, and what are the sums, interest, and profits which have gone out of Canada to foreign countries since 1942?

Mr. Nesbitt:

Earnings and transfers of Canadian companies with foreign capital for selected years[1]

	1942	1946	1955	1959	1960	1961
	(millions of dollars)
Estimated total earnings on foreign direct investment in Canada (no estimates are available for portfolio investment)[3]	[2]	279	672	768	700	[2]
Total dividends paid to non-residents on direct and portfolio investments, including profits of non-financial corporations net of withholding tax[4]	152	187	356	461	414	511
Interest paid by corporations on Canadian bonds and debentures held abroad, net of withholding tax[1]	54	57	60	105	110	119
Sub-total	206	244	416	566	524	630

[1]Estimates are not available for other years

[2]Not available

[3]Estimates for other years since 1946 are found on page 23 of "The Canadian Balance of International Payments, 1960" (Cat. No. 67-201)

[4]Estimates for other years since 1946 are found on page 77 of "The Canadian Balance of International Payments in the Post-War Years, 1946-1952", (Cat. No. 7503-508) and on page 22 of the publication cited in footnote [3].

LOWER FRASER VALLEY, B.C., FLOOD CONTROL

Question No. 1,176—Mr. Douglas:

What consideration, if any, is being given to federal participation in a flood-control scheme for the lower Fraser valley in B.C.?

Mr. Dinsdale: By agreement between the governments of Canada and of British Columbia the Fraser river board has studies under way which include consideration of flood control for the lower Fraser valley. No application for federal participation in such a flood control scheme has been received from British Columbia, and accordingly no consideration is being given to this question at the present time.

INDIAN RESERVE NO. 70, MATHESON, ONT.—LUMBER PERMITS

Question No. 1,177—Mr. Laprise:

1. In 1960-61-62, were any lumber permits granted to lumber operators in Indian reserve No. 70 at Matheson and, if so, what are the names of the licencees?

2. Were any applications for lumber permits refused in the years 1960-61-62 in the same reserve and, if so, by whom were these applications made?

Questions

Mr. McGee: 1. No. However, timber licence No. 452 which was issued to Lorenzo Baillargeon on October 15, 1959 expired on April 30, 1960.

2. Yes—Murray McArthur, Lorenzo Baillargeon, Alfred E. Wisman, La Sarre Telephone Inc.

Note: The applications and refusals listed in item 2 were refused principally because of the opposition of the chief and the Indians.

WINTER WORKS PROGRAM, TERRA NOVA NATIONAL PARK

Question No. 1,179—Mr. Pickersgill:

1. Has the government decided to undertake a winter works program in the Terra Nova national park and, if so, when is the program to begin?
2. How many additional employees will be required?
3. What additional sum of money will be spent, and what particular projects will be involved?
4. Is any additional work on the Eastport road included in any such program?

Mr. Dinsdale: 1. Yes. The program will be under way this month.

2. 35 to 40 (est).

3. Approximately $85,000 on the development of camp grounds and picnic sites, the clearing of fire trails and water supply line right of way, and other improvements to park facilities.

4. No.

CANADIAN CENTENNIAL—PROVINCIAL CO-OPERATION

Question No. 1,182—Mr. Mather:

1. How many provinces have indicated their readiness to co-operate with the federal government and the municipalities in taking advantage of federal grants for centennial projects?
2. Does the government contemplate an announcement during 1962 as to arrangements for processing applications for such grants?

Mr. Diefenbaker: 1. At the inaugural meeting of the national committee on the centennial of confederation, held in Ottawa on February 8, 1960, the representatives of each of the ten provinces gave assurance of the full co-operation of their respective governments in the preparations for the observance of the centennial. Seven provinces have either enacted legislation or established committees, or both, to facilitate centennial arrangements. To date, none of the provinces have forwarded firm applications for federal grants for particular local projects, but numerous local projects are known to be at various stages of study.

2. During October 1961 the Minister of Transport, as co-chairman of the national committee, announced the conditions and arrangements governing the making of federal grants for local centennial projects. Any changes that may be made in these arrangements from time to time will be announced.

*CRIMINAL LEGISLATION RESPECTING MENTAL CASES

Question No. 1,185—Mr. Ryan:

Is the government considering the introduction of any new legislation in respect to criminal or quasi-criminal procedures in mental or suspected mental cases by amendment to the Criminal Code or otherwise, either with or without collaboration with the provinces?

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Mr. Speaker, the answer to this question is that this subject is under continuing study.

REGIONAL INDUSTRIAL EXPANSION CONFERENCES

Question No. 1,188—Mr. Gray:

1. How many regional industrial expansion conferences were held under the sponsorship of the Department of Trade and Commerce between September 27 and December 14, 1962, and where were these conferences held?
2. How many representatives of labour attended these conferences, and (a) what are the names of each of these individuals (b) what are the names of the organizations they represented or were associated with?
3. When and where will other such industrial expansion conferences take place?

Mr. Nesbitt: 1. Between September 27 and December 14, 1962, two regional industrial expansion conferences were held under the sponsorship of the Department of Trade and Commerce. These conferences were held in Montreal on November 8 and in Hamilton on December 12. They were jointly sponsored with provincial government departments. The regional conferences followed the national industrial expansion conference which was held in Ottawa on September 7.

2. The labour representatives who attended the regional conferences are:

Mr. Russell Bell, acting director of research, Canadian Labour Congress, 100 Argyle avenue, Ottawa, Ontario.

Mr. J. Morris, C.L.C. executive vice president, Canadian Labour Congress, 100 Argyle avenue, Ottawa, Ontario.

Mr. Victor Trudeau, regional director of organization for Quebec, Canadian Labour Congress, 100 Argyle avenue, Ottawa, Ontario.

Mme. Huguette Plamondon, C.L.C. regional vice president, United Packinghouse, Food and Allied Workers, 4645 Iberville st., Montreal, P.Q.

Mr. L. Laberge, C.L.C. regional vice president, International Association of Machinists, 5697 Langelier st., Montreal, P.Q.

Mr. Marcel Pepin, Conf. des syndicats nationaux, Quebec city, P.Q.

Mr. Jean Marchand, president and general manager, Conf. des syndicats nationaux, Quebec city, P.Q.

3. The next regional industrial expansion conference will be held in Winnipeg on February 20, 1963. Tentative plans are also under way for a further conference in Vancouver.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE—CENTRALIZATION OF ADJUDICATION

Question No. 1,191—Mr. Martin (Essex East):

1. Has the Minister of Labour received complaints about the centralization of the processes of adjudication in contentious claims arising out of the Unemployment Insurance Act?
2. Will the minister take steps to provide for authority to local officers particularly in unemployment insurance bureaux such as that in the city of Windsor?
3. Has the minister received complaints that delays arise because of the present policy of centralizing decisions on contentious claims?

Mr. Hales: 1. Yes. The unemployment insurance commission since the implementation of the new procedure in 1960, has received 1 complaint in 1960 and another recently.

2 and 3. No delays in the handling of claims for unemployment insurance benefit are attributable to the present centralized system of adjudication. Investigation of complaints received showed that the reason for them was not attributable to the new system. Consequently no change in procedure is being contemplated by the commission at this time.

POLICY RESPECTING WATER AND AIR POLLUTION

Question No. 1,193—Mr. Haidasz:

1. Has the government a national policy with regard to water and air pollution and, if so, what are the guide lines of such policy?
2. What steps does the government take to implement its policy?

Mrs. Casselman: 1. The primary responsibility for the control of air and water pollution rests with the provinces except in the case of international pollution problems and those arising from interprovincial railway systems and shipping within Canadian waters.

The federal government actively participates in studies of international and national significance through the provision of laboratory services, expert consultative service, technical assistance and financial aid under the national health grants program. The federal government also provides loans for municipal sewage treatment projects to abate water pollution as authorized under the National Housing Act.

2. The federal government implements its policy by the adoption of recommendations of the international joint commission. Regulations for the control of air pollution from railway locomotives are formulated by the Board of Transport Commissioners for Canada and regulations for the control of water pollution by oil, by the Department of Transport.

BALTIC STATES—DIPLOMATIC RECOGNITION OF CONSULS IN CANADA

Question No. 1,194—Mr. Haidasz:

Has the Prime Minister taken any further action with regard to the question of granting diplomatic recognition to the exiled consuls of the Baltic states now resident in Canada?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, in keeping with the remarks I made in Toronto on June 14, 1962, concerning the government's attitude regarding the status of the representatives of the Baltic countries in Canada, we have listed these officials as acting consular representatives in the October edition of the Department of External Affairs official publication "Canadian Representatives Abroad and Representatives of Other Countries in Canada".

INSTRUCTIONS TO U.N. DELEGATION

Question No. 1,195—Mr. Haidasz:

What stand has the Canadian delegation to the United Nations been instructed to take with regard to (a) the Rapacki plan for a nuclear free zone of central Europe and (b) the Oder-Neisse western boundary between Poland and East Germany?

Mr. Green: (a) The Rapacki plan was referred to by a number of delegations during the general assembly's consideration of the disarmament item, but the plan as such was not up for discussion.

(b) There is no question on the Polish-German boundaries before the United Nations.

BUTTER—EXCESS OF PRODUCTION OVER CONSUMPTION

Question No. 1,196—Mr. Matheson:

Assuming that the per capita volume of butter consumed is uniform across Canada, by what percentage has each province's production exceeded its consumption during each of the years 1959, 1960, and 1961?

Mr. Nesbitt:

Province	1959 %	1960 %	1961 %
Prince Edward Island	+234	+212	+251
Nova Scotia	— 64	— 69	— 66
New Brunswick	— 23	— 24	— 20
Quebec	+ 46	+ 48	+ 67
Ontario	— 16	— 14	— 3
Manitoba	+ 66	+ 68	+ 74
Saskatchewan	+ 82	+ 88	+ 95
Alberta	+ 58	+ 78	+ 95
British Columbia	— 84	— 81	— 77

EXECUTIONS OF TURPIN AND LUCAS, TORONTO

Question No. 1,199—Mr. Matheson:

1. Prior to the executions of Ronald Turpin and Arthur Lucas at Don jail, what percentage of persons sentenced to hang had received commutations to life imprisonment since this government took power?

2. How many days intervened between the time that Turpin was sentenced to death and finally informed that commutation had been refused, and how many hours then intervened until he was hanged?

3. How many days intervened between the time that Lucas was sentenced to death and finally informed that commutation had been refused, and how many hours then intervened until he was hanged?

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): 1. Prior to the executions of Ronald Turpin and Arthur Lucas, since this government took power, the death sentence has been commuted to life imprisonment in 49 of the 61 cases in which it was imposed or 80 per cent.

2. Turpin was sentenced on June 13, 1962. A telegram was sent from the Department of Justice to the sheriff on December 10, 1962 advising the sheriff there would be no interference with the sentence and the sheriff at 10 a.m. o'clock on the same day acknowledged such telegram. It is not known when the sheriff so advised Turpin. The sheriff has indicated that the death sentence was carried out on December 11, 1962 but did not indicate the exact time.

3. Lucas was sentenced on May 10, 1962. A telegram was sent from the Department of Justice to the sheriff on December 10, 1962 advising the sheriff there would be no interference with the sentence and the sheriff at 10 a.m. o'clock on the same day acknowledged such telegram. It is not known when the sheriff so advised Lucas. The sheriff has indicated that the death sentence was carried out on December 11, 1962 but did not indicate the exact time.

SUSTAINING WALL, ST. VALLIER, BELLECHASSE CONSTITUENCY

Question No. 1,200—Mr. Dumont:

Who was awarded the contract for the construction of the sustaining wall at St. Vallier, Bellechasse constituency, in 1961, and at what cost?

Mr. McCleave: Les Entreprises J. R. Denoncourt Enrg., de Nicolet (P.Q.); $8,547.

ARTIFICIAL CHRISTMAS TREES—IMPORTS FROM JAPAN

Question No. 1,202—Mr. Dumont:

1. What quantity of artificial Christmas trees has been imported from Japan for each year since 1959?

2. What is the present average retail price of these Christmas trees?

3. Have any complaints been received concerning the effect of these importations on the sale of Christmas trees in the province of Quebec?

Mr. Nesbitt: 1. Imports of artificial Christmas trees are classified by material in the following statistical classes:

6,015—Aluminum manufactures n.o.p.; 7,127—Manufactures of glass n.o.p.; 8,450—Manufactures of plastics n.o.p.; 9,255—Alabaster, spar, amber, terra cotta, or composition ornaments.

There are no separate figures available on artificial Christmas trees.

2. No information is available at the dominion bureau of statistics on the average retail price of artificial Christmas trees.

3. No.

*PREFABRICATED HOUSES, ST. SYLVESTRE, LOTBINIERE CONSTITUENCY

Question No. 1,203—Mr. Rondeau:

1. What was the cost of the prefabricated houses which were built at St. Sylvestre, Lotbiniere constituency, for the radar employees?

2. What was the total amount spent for these houses, the cost per unit, and the number of units?

3. Were there any defects found in the waterworks and sewer systems and, if so, what was the cost of re-doing such work?

4. What company was awarded the contract for these prefabricated housing units?

5. What was the cost of transportation of these prefabricated housing units?

6. What company was awarded the transportation contract?

Mr. O'Hurley: 1. $240,469.56.

2. (a) Paid to date, $228,446.09. (b) There were 25 homes and 2 storage units, unit cost including storage units—$9,618.78.

3. (a) Yes. (b) Not yet established.

4. Canadian Car division of Hawker Siddeley Canada Limited, for the supply, transportation, and erection of 25 homes and 2 storage units.

5. Transportation was part of the over-all contract and information as to cost of this item is not available.

6. Transportation was part of the Hawker Siddeley Canada Limited contract.

BAY DE VERDE, NFLD.—USE OF TRAWLS BY FISHERMEN

Question No. 1,213—Mr. Tucker:

Has the government received a petition from the fishermen of the Bay de Verde area, Newfoundland, asking that the use of trawls be abolished on the fishing grounds in that area and, if so, what action has been taken?

Mr. MacLean (Queens): Yes, by St. John's office. Petition is now in mail to Ottawa and when received representations it contains will be considered.

*ANNUAL GRANT TO UNITED NATIONS ASSOCIATION

Question No. 1,214—Mr. Martin (Essex East):

1. What is the amount of the annual grant made by the Department of External Affairs to the United Nations Association in Canada?

2. Has the total grant for the current fiscal year been paid?

3. If not, how much of it has been paid, and when will the balance be paid?

Mr. Green: 1. $12,000.

2. No.

3. $11,000. The balance will be paid as soon as parliament grants full supply.

UNITED NATIONS INFORMATION CENTRE IN CANADA

Question No. 1,220—Mr. Turner:

Is there an information centre office of the United Nations in Canada and, if not, has Canada ever applied to the United Nations to open such an office in Canada?

Mr. Green: There is no information centre office of the United Nations in Canada. The office of the Queen's printer under an understanding reached with the United Nations acts as exclusive agent for the distribution of United Nations publications in Canada. In view of this mutually satisfactory arrangement Canada has not asked the United Nations to open an information centre office in this country.

*HOSPITAL INSURANCE PLAN, B.C.

Question No. 1,223—Mr. McPhillips:

1. Has the government of the province of British Columbia sought to take greater advantage of the terms of the federal Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act in order that B.C. residents temporarily absent from the province for a period of longer than three months may continue to receive hospital benefits under the provincial plan in the event of emergency?

2. Under present arrangements, would a B.C. resident incurring hospital bills outside his home province after more than three months absence be personally responsible for all such bills?

3. What limitations are imposed by other provinces on out of province benefits?

Mrs. Casselman: 1. No. The British Columbia government has at no time sought to take greater advantage of the federal act so as to provide insurance benefits to residents temporarily absent from the province for a period in excess of three months. The hardships imposed on residents of British Columbia through this restriction have been brought to the attention of the British Columbia authorities on a number of occasions.

2. Yes. Unless the British Columbia resident enters the hospital during the first three months of temporary absence, he loses his entitlement and is himself responsible for the payment of hospital services.

3. Although there is a varied pattern of out of province benefits from province to province, all provinces with the exception of British Columbia provide insured services for residents temporarily absent from the province during a period of one year, subject to the payment of the premium or tax in premium provinces.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

UNIVERSITY STUDENTS EMPLOYED AS ASSISTANTS, CUSTOMS AND EXCISE

Question No. 1,150—Mr. Rinfret:

1. In 1961, how many university students at the bachelor degree level were employed during the summer as assistants in customs and excise offices?

2. How many came from the universities of Laval, Montreal, and Sherbrooke or other centres of learning in the province of Quebec?

HISTORICAL SITES APPROVED

Question No. 1,173—Mr. Badanai:

How many projects, designated as historical sites, have been approved by the federal government for development or assistance during the years 1959, 1960, 1961, and 1962, giving the locations and the amount spent or approved for each?

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE FUND

Question No. 1,222—Mr. Mather:

1. What was the total amount in the unemployment insurance fund at the end of each of the fiscal years 1956-57 to 1960-61 inclusive?

2. What were the total payments of unemployment insurance claims during each of these fiscal years?

3. What was the total administrative cost of operating the unemployment insurance service for each of these fiscal years?

4. What was the total income of the unemployment insurance fund during each of the fiscal years 1956-57 to 1960-61 inclusive?

PEAT AND SPRUCE BOG, OTTAWA DISTRICT

Question No. 1,224—Mr. Herridge:

1. Does the Mer Bleue peat and spruce bog, southeast of Ottawa, come under the jurisdiction of the national capital commission?

2. Is this bog considered a valuable wildlife sanctuary by spokesmen for the Canadian wildlife service and outstanding Canadian biologists, zoologists and naturalists?

3. Are the national capital commission and the city of Ottawa giving consideration to the use of this bog as a garbage disposal area?

4. What action is the government taking to prevent the destruction of this valuable wildlife sanctuary, which will provide a unique area for research and, in addition, recreational facilities?

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

DUTIES ON IMPORTED FISH FEED

Motion No. 50—Mr. Douglas:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence relative to duties imposed on imported fish feed exchanged between the ministers and/or Departments of Finance and National Revenue, and persons and/or organizations since January 1, 1960.

Mr. Nowlan: This is acceptable subject to the usual reservations about communications between departments and confidential letters, consent to whose publication will have to be received.

Mr. Speaker: Subject to the reservations expressed by the minister, does the house agree to the passing of this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

PENITENTIARIES REPORT BY STEVENSON AND KELLOGG LTD.

Motion No. 57—Mr. Matheson:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of the report of Stevenson and Kellogg Limited relating to the study conducted of Canadian penitentiaries.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No such report has been received. I suggest, therefore, that the hon. member withdraw his motion.

Mr. Speaker: In the light of what has been said by the minister, does the hon. member withdraw his motion?

Mr. Matheson: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

MANITOBA—CORRESPONDENCE RESPECTING PLIGHT OF INDIANS

Motion No. 58—Mr. Matheson:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of all correspondence to the government since December 31, 1961 relating to the plight of Indians from The Pas, Moose Lake, Norway House, Cross Lake, Island Lake, Red Sucker Lake, God's Lake, Oxford House, Shamattawa, Split Lake, Nelson House, South Indian Lake, Pukatawagan, and Brocket.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the generality of this motion would sweep in very many letters dealing with education, treaty rights and other matters with which I am sure the hon. gentleman has no immediate interest. If it is understood, as the hon. gentleman has indicated to me privately, that what he is seeking is correspondence relating to economic and social conditions and economic development generally in the areas designated, I have no objection to the motion, subject to the customary reservation dealing with intradepartmental and interdepartmental correspondence and the consent of the government of Manitoba.

Mr. Speaker: Subject to the reservation indicated by the minister, is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

[Mr. Douglas.]

CORRESPONDENCE RESPECTING RADIO TELECOMMUNICATIONS CONTRACT

Motion No. 59—Mr. Cowan:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of all correspondence dated August 15, 1962 to December 1, 1962, between the government of Canada or any minister, department or agency thereof and the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, the Canadian National Railways, the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Bell Telephone Company of Canada, respecting the contract for telecommunications for the approximately 195 radio stations, the previous ten year contract having been replaced by a new contract effective October 1, 1962.

Mr. Halpenny: Mr. Speaker, if this motion could stand for at least one week we would be agreeable.

Mr. Cowan: Stand.

Motion stands.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CORRESPONDENCE RESPECTING PORTABILITY OF PENSIONS

Motion No. 60—Mr. McNulty:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of any correspondence since September 27, 1962, between the federal government and any provincial government concerning the introduction of legislation dealing with the question of the portability of pensions.

Mr. Monteith: Yes, Mr. Speaker, subject to receiving consent from the province.

Mr. Speaker: Subject to the consent of the province concerned, is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

FINANCE

STEPS TO AVOID FINANCIAL AND EXCHANGE CRISIS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Walter L. Gordon (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Finance. In view of the very large deficit on current account in our international payments for the first nine months of this year, now running at the rate of about $1 billion for the full year, does the government propose to take any immediate action to avoid another financial and exchange crisis in Canada?

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the government has taken several steps in this direction. My hon. friend was good enough to send me a note a moment ago, or I only received it a moment ago, but the same statement to which he refers states that we have achieved an export surplus in commodities last month for the first time in many months, and the over-all deficit in international payments is substantially lower. Also, the financial papers are full of statements showing how much better our position is, and what this government has done to accomplish this.

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Speaker, if I might ask a supplementary question, am I to interpret the answer of the minister as meaning "No"?

(Translation):

TREASURY BOARD—INQUIRY AS TO PRESENCE OF QUEBEC MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gerard Legare (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that the treasury board deals with all finance matters and even looks after staff transfers in the public service, could the Prime Minister tell the house why no Quebec minister sits on that said treasury board, and that ever since he has been at the head of the government?

(Text):

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have been sitting on treasury board for the last three weeks and there has been a French minister on the board all that time.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INTERNATIONAL CO-OPERATION YEAR—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON DEVELOPMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gerard Chapdelaine (Sherbrooke): Could the minister inform the house of any developments concerning the international co-operation year that has been proposed by India at the United Nations?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for Sherbrooke for giving me notice of his question. I know of the great interest he has taken in United Nations affairs, having served with distinction a few weeks ago as a Canadian observer.

The house will be interested to know that the general assembly of the United Nations in plenary session this morning unanimously adopted by a vote of 86 in favour, none against and with no abstentions, a resolution co-sponsored by India, Canada and 18 other member states in pursuance of a proposal first advanced at the United Nations by Prime Minister Nehru for a year of international co-operation. The Canadian delegation played an active part in the drafting and sponsoring of this resolution, and extended its full co-operation to the delegation of India in seeking to muster the broadest possible support for it. As a matter of fact, by arrangement between the co-sponsors only Canada and India spoke to the resolution this morning.

The resolution requests the president of the general assembly to nominate a preparatory committee of up to 12 member states to consider the desirability of designating 1965, which is the 20th year of the United Nations, as international co-operation year. It is expected that the preparatory committee will be formed early in the new year to begin co-ordinating plans and projects. It is considered that the designation of a year of international co-operation would serve a most useful purpose in stimulating a marked increase in the existing level of international co-operation and in a number of projects in diverse fields jointly undertaken on an international basis.

Canada firmly subscribes to these aims, and it is therefore a cause of deep satisfaction that the proposal of the government of India to which this government has lent its full support has now been unanimously adopted by the general assembly of the United Nations.

PORTUGAL—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT OF CANADIAN POSITION ON RESOLUTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, notice of which has been given. In view of the minister's statement yesterday that Canada has been against the action taken by Portugal in Angola, is it correct that Canada voted against a United Nations resolution on this subject yesterday and, if so, would the minister outline the reasons for such vote by the Canadian delegation?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as I said yesterday, Canada has been and is against the actions taken by Portugal in Angola. However, this resolution was a very extreme one. It contained a provision calling on the security council to impose sanctions on Portugal. It also had an operative clause which threatened Portugal with expulsion from the United Nations, and it had another clause which would prohibit any country from supplying any arms to Portugal for its own defence, even as distinct from any arms that might have been used in Angola.

As I have explained, Canada has not been supplying arms to Portugal for approximately two years. Because of the extreme nature of the resolution, particularly with regard to sanctions and the threatened expulsion from the United Nations, Canada voted against the resolution.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): May I ask a supplementary question of the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Can he say if the government is now in a position to indicate whether it proposes to support sanctions against Katanga by the United Nations?

Mr. Green: Mr. Speaker, at the moment there is no question of sanctions against Katanga, and we will have to see what happens if action of that kind is proposed. As a matter of fact Katanga, as the hon. member knows, is a province or district of the Congo, which makes it an entirely different situation.

[Later:]

Mr. Robert W. Prittie (Burnaby-Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs supplementary to the question asked by the hon. member for York South. In view of the fact that the minister stated that the resolution on Portugal was too broad for the Canadian delegation to support, did the Canadian delegation give consideration to any other type of resolution on this subject which they could support, thus showing some condemnation of Portugal?

Mr. Green: Mr. Speaker, Canada's position with regard to the conduct of Portugal in Angola is very clearly known at the United Nations. We have been against it throughout.

HUNGARY—RESOLUTION RESPECTING SPECIAL REPRESENTATIVE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Haidasz (Parkdale): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs what stand the Canadian delegation will take at the United Nations regarding the United States resolution to abolish the post of United Nations special representative to Hungary.

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): That vote is coming up this afternoon, I think, and Canada will be supporting the United States resolution.

Mr. Haidasz: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a supplementary question. Does the minister not think that voting for this resolution will abandon the Hungarian people to further communist domination of their country?

Mr. Green: No, Mr. Speaker, I do not think any such thing. Jurisdiction to carry on will rest with the secretary general.

[Mr. Green.]

HEALTH AND WELFARE

TRIFLUOPERAZINE—POSSIBLE CONNECTION WITH CONGENITAL DEFORMITIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. E. Walker (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. As reported in the press, has the drug directorate asked other countries whether they have any evidence connecting trifluoperazine with congenital deformities?

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Yes, Mr. Speaker, we have been in touch with other countries trying to get firm information as to their experience in this respect.

Mr. Walker: A supplementary question. Is this urgent information sought by letter or by telephone?

Mr. Monteith: Most of it by cable, Mr. Speaker.

REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION INTO RADIOACTIVE FALL-OUT EFFECT IN NORTHERN CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Haidasz (Parkdale): I should like to ask a question of the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Is the minister aware of the resolution sent to his department by the technical committee for caribou preservation requesting a federal investigation into radioactive fall-out effects on humans and animals in northern Canada, where Alaskan Eskimos were found to have a level of strontium 90 four times higher than in average citizens south of the border?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think the hon. member will recognize that his question is one for the order paper.

POWER

COLUMBIA RIVER—MEETING TO DISCUSS DOWNSTREAM BENEFITS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the Prime Minister a question of which I have not given him notice. Have any arrangements been made for representatives of the federal government, the government of British Columbia and the government of the United States to meet at Bonneville in the near future to discuss the cost price or sale price of downstream benefits from the Columbia?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there is a meeting going on at the present time in Vancouver on the expert level.

(Translation):

TRANSPORT

REPORTED REFUSAL OF LOANS ON ST. LAWRENCE COASTING VESSELS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Bernard Dumont (Bellechasse): May I ask the Minister of Transport a question? Is it possible that loans up to $100,000 were refused to owners of coasters on the St. Lawrence river merely because those vessels were not registered in Canada?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member should put his question on the order paper.

(Text):

INQUIRY FOR RETURN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. My question relates to an order for the return of papers concerning the drug thalidomide, which was passed by the house on Wednesday, October 17, which is more than two months ago. A month ago today, on November 19, I asked if this return would soon be brought down, and the minister said the return was ready and he hoped to bring it down in a few days. Can he say when it will be brought down?

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I believe I was awaiting permission from another government before tabling the return. I will look into the matter immediately and let the hon. member know.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

ST. JOHN'S WEST, NEWFOUNDLAND—INQUIRY AS TO BY-ELECTION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether the government has yet reached the conclusion that the people of Newfoundland should be given an opportunity to have the representation to which they are legally entitled in this house.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I can understand the complete interest of the hon. gentleman in this matter, he not being a resident of that province, but I can only say that when a decision is made in that regard action will be taken.

Mr. Caron: The usual Diefenbaker tactics.

Mr. Diefenbaker: If he looks back a few years he will find out how long the government of which he was a member used to wait.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Pickersgill: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I asked the hon. gentleman, the right hon. gentleman, a perfectly proper question, and he has chosen in reply to make a rather cheap political speech. I suggest to Your Honour that he should be called to order.

Mr. Speaker: Order. There are occasions when some of the answers do slip across the bar, and I hope the hon. gentleman will recognize that fact. The same remarks apply to some questions.

Mr. Pickersgill: I rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: I have indicated my views on the matter.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am rising on a question of privilege concerning the right of the people of this country to be represented in this house. I suggest that the general election will not have been completed until an election is held in St. John's West, and this delay is inexcusable.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I do not believe this is a question of the privileges of the members of this house.

(Translation):

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

REQUEST THAT BANKS IMPROVE PROTECTION AGAINST HOLD-UPS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. P. Antoine Belanger (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. In view of the recent happening that claimed the lives of two policemen and in which two other persons were injured, in Ville St. Laurent, a suburb of Montreal, has the government given any thought, under the Bank Act, to the possibility of forcing the banks to secure better protection against hold-ups?

Mr. Speaker: I am sure the hon. member is aware that his question is out of order at this time.

(Text):

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

RALPH COCHRANE—REQUEST FOR RELEASE FROM SOLITARY CONFINEMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): I should like to address a question, if I may, to the Minister of Justice. Will the minister tell the house whether Ralph Cochrane is to remain in solitary confinement in the light of the circumstances revealed by the hon. member for Vancouver East in this house last night?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I was not in the house last evening to hear what was said by the hon. member for Vancouver East. I will examine what he has said. I have already furnished certain information concerning this case to the hon. member for Vancouver East. I thought I gave him rather full information on the subject, which indicated that the inmate in question has had the benefit of all privileges that are available to well-behaved inmates generally except that he has not been permitted to mingle with the other inmates. He has received full meals, library and canteen privileges, radio reception and exercise periods. No restrictions have been imposed in relation to visits or correspondence. He has been free, if he wished, to interview a lawyer.

Mr. Brewin: May I ask a supplementary question. Does the minister not believe it is part of his duty as Minister of Justice to see that the bill of rights is enforced?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is just advancing an argument.

SHIPPING

COASTAL TRADE—TRANSFER OF COMMONWEALTH SHIPS TO CANADIAN REGISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. P. V. Noble (Grey North): I have a question for the Minister of Transport. Some time ago the government announced that it proposed to amend the Canada Shipping Act to limit the Canadian coasting trade in the great lakes and St. Lawrence river areas to vessels of Canadian registry. Is it intended that ships of commonwealth registry principally engaged in this trade will be allowed to transfer to Canadian registry?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): It is the intention that ships of commonwealth registry which were engaged solely or principally in the Canadian coasting trade in the proposed limited area before the government announced its intention a year and a half ago will be permitted to transfer to Canadian registry.

However, I see no reason why ships which were not eligible for Canadian registry, and which have deliberately been brought under commonwealth registry since the date of the government announcement for the purpose of engaging in the great lakes or St. Lawrence coasting trade, should be allowed to come under Canadian registry. Ample warning was given by the government of its plans and I do not see that any case exists for ships in this latter category to be allowed on Canadian registry.

[Mr. Brewin.]

Mr. Speaker: Order. With respect I would earnestly point out that arguments should not be advanced within the body of a reply, any more than they should be within the body of a question.

TRADE

INQUIRY AS TO AMOUNT OF CURRENT DEFICIT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harry Bradley (Northumberland): I should like to ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce if it is true that Canada's current trade deficit stands at $791 million.

Mr. Speaker: Order. No; that cannot go as a question.

[Later:]

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege I would like to correct a completely misleading headline appearing in the front page of today's Globe and Mail which would mislead the business community.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am raising a point of order with respect to the question of privilege. My point of order is this, that it is a matter of privilege to make a correction about any of the proceedings in this house that may have been reported in the press, but articles in the press about activities of the government may not be corrected under the guise of a question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The extent of the minister's words in this regard were hardly heard by the Chair, but I would point out that it has been the practice, over some years, to rise in many cases to take issue with some report in the press, and I think we have got into rather bad habits so far as privilege is concerned.

Unless there is a statement by the minister that has been misinterpreted I do not know that he can rise on a question of privilege in this regard. If it arose out of a report he had made and which had been misreported, then he could rise on a question of privilege, but other than that I do not think it is possible for the minister to rise to refute or to argue with some newspaper conclusion.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, it is a misinterpreted, and badly misinterpreted, report of a bureau that comes under my jurisdiction, the dominion bureau of statistics.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): On a point of order—

Mr. Hees: Oh, nonsense.

Mr. Starr: Liberal closure as usual.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The point of privilege overrides a point of order. I would like to hear just a little more of what the minister is trying to get at.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair has control of the situation without too much extraneous comment. As I indicated to the minister, if there has been a misinterpretation of statistics or something like that, I think there is not a question of privilege at this time. As I indicated, privilege is limited to a distortion of something the minister may have said, and does not cover a publication which may come out under the jurisdiction of his department.

Mr. Hees: The headline, the erroneous headline, reads "Trade deficit $791 million for Canada." That is completely inaccurate because the trade deficit is not that at all. I would not like to say what—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think we have heard enough on this one. This is not a question of privilege.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I think that we have not heard enough, and I say this with great respect. I rose on a point of order. Your Honour correctly said that a question of privilege took precedence over a point of order. But the minister, notwithstanding the caution Your Honour gave, violated this direction, and what he could not do through the question put earlier by the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Bradley) he has now done. I suggest to Your Honour that the minister deserves censure at your hands for this obvious violation of your ruling.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think the minister's statement was stopped in time, and I think the hon. member knows, so far as censure of hon. members by the Chair is concerned, how far one can go with regard to that.

Mr. Walter L. Gordon (Davenport): I would like to ask a question of the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

Mr. Fulton: What is the right figure?

Mr. Gordon: Is our current account deficit in our international payments running at the rate of $1 billion a year?

Mr. Hees: I am very glad to give that answer, and I thank the hon. member for taking the place today of the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate as the No. 1. I want to say—

Mr. Pickersgill: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. My question of privilege is this, that a malicious attack has been made—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: —upon my conduct as a member of the house, and I think that the minister should be asked to apologize.

Mr. Speaker: Well, with respect to the attitude at the moment I do not know that the feelings of anyone in particular have been overly hurt. I would caution the minister to give a reply in keeping with standing order 39, and I hope hon. members will ask questions in the same light, so that we will observe standing order 39.

Mr. Hees: My reference to the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, which I will withdraw and for which I apologize, was that the hon. member for Davenport had taken his place as the No. 1, and that is all I said. Of course he obviously is not the No. 1; therefore I apologize.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Hees: Oh, you are the No. 1?

Mr. Pickersgill: I have a question of privilege. It is equally obvious that the hon. gentleman is not the No. 1.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I would also like to caution hon. members who wish to engage in repartee not to take the floor under the guise of a question of privilege.

Mr. Hees: Now, Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to answer the question of the hon. member for Davenport. Statistical information on Canada's international balance of payments released today by the dominion bureau of statistics shows an international payments deficit of $791 million on all current transactions for the first nine months of 1962. This deficit includes non-merchandise transactions such as interest and dividend payments and freight and shipping, as well as commodity trade. In October of this year a merchandise trade surplus of $47 million was realized, compared with a surplus of $5 million last October. The indication from available statistics—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Hees: —is that Canada's merchandise trade will be in a surplus position for the full year 1962. The realization—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Speaker: Order. I would crave the co-operation of the house in observing the rules.

Mr. McIlraith: On a point of order—

(Translation):

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Transport—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

(Text):

Are we on supplementary questions or points of order?

Mr. McIlraith: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I will recognize a point of order.

Mr. G. J. McIlraith (Ottawa West): The point of order is this. The question put was factual, accurate as to form and in accordance with the rules. The answer, after dealing with the question asked and giving the information in accordance with the rules, did provide rather lengthy, gratuitous references. Those gratuitous references were clearly out of order, as will be seen from page 153 of the fourth edition of Beauchesne, and should have been ruled out of order.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think we have had a sufficient exchange in this regard.

(Translation):

[Later:]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

Am I to understand from the answer the minister just gave us, that the deficit incurred during the first nine months is due mostly to the interest paid to foreign countries on account of the policy followed by the Liberals for 22 years?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The question is argumentative and controversial. Therefore, I rule it out of order.

(Text):

[Later:]

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Trade and Commerce has just given an answer which is not in fact correct.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Hees: I object to that, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I do not know whether I should call "seconds out" here, but the hon. member knows that he cannot comment on a reply.

An hon. Member: He doesn't know anything.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I hope we will now get on with the business of the house.

[Mr. Hees.]

(Translation):

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, I should like to put my question once more. Could the Minister of Trade and Commerce tell us if this year's deficit is chiefly due to interest payments on foreign investments?

(Text):

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, the figure is $791 million today, compared with the 1956 deficit of $1,366 million.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pearson: That was for the whole year.

Mr. Pickersgill: Nine months?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

TRANS-CANADA AIR LINES

MEETING ON TRANSFER OF MAINTENANCE STAFF FROM WINNIPEG TO MONTREAL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. Has the minister received from Mayor Stephen Juba of Winnipeg an invitation to attend a meeting of Winnipeg members of parliament during the Christmas recess to discuss the question of the transfer of T.C.A. maintenance and overhaul staff from Winnipeg to Montreal? If the rest of us endeavour to be there, will the minister be there and represent the government of Canada as well as the constituency of Winnipeg South Centre?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the problem is an important one not only for Winnipeg but for Manitoba. Prior consultations would have been acceptable on the part of Mayor Juba, but we have done a great deal of work on this problem already and well in advance of the activities of Mayor Juba himself.

[Later:]

Mr. Roger J. Teillet (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, following the question addressed a moment ago to the Minister of Veterans Affairs—this is the question of the telegram referred to a moment ago—I would hope that the minister—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Teillet: I ask now whether he will give the house and the people of Manitoba some practical answer and not the kind of thing he gave us a minute ago.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is not in a position to comment on the nature of a reply given to any other question.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

TRANSLATION OF REPORT OF GILL COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): May I ask the Minister of Labour, in view of the fact we are likely to adjourn tomorrow night, if he can now give the house assurance that he has been reading the English version of the Gill report, and can he now give the house any information as to whether he has received, or when he may receive, the French translation of this very important report?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I cannot give the assurance as to the first part of the question, because the hon. member has been intimating that I have been reading this report, probably under my desk. As to the other part of the question, when the report is received it will be not only in the French version but in both the English and French versions.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I wish to ask a supplementary question of the Secretary of State. Can he inform the house whether the French translation of the Gill report is yet in his hands and, if not, can he tell us what recent information he has been able to obtain regarding the production of the translation which he announced some two months ago?

Hon. G. E. Halpenny (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, about two weeks ago I made inquiries, as I promised I would, and at that time two thirds of the French galleys were being proof read. They should be back in Hull by this time, but I am not sure. I shall inquire.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

COMPLAINTS RESPECTING PROGRAM "FRONT PAGE CHALLENGE"

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I wish to address a question to the Secretary of State. I am so annoyed that I can hardly speak, but I will do my best. Has the minister received any complaints from prominent citizens of Kootenay West with respect to statements made on "Front Page Challenge" on December 11 by Mr. Gordon Sinclair, which were offensive to the people I have the honour to represent?

Hon. G. E. Halpenny (Secretary of State): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Herridge: I have a supplementary question. If the minister does receive complaints will he ask that they be investigated and secure a report?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Halpenny: I shall be glad to, Mr. Speaker. I shall get a copy of the tape or a copy of the script and look at it.

IMMIGRATION

APPARENT PREFERENCE OF BRITISH EMIGRANTS FOR AUSTRALIA

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): I would like to ask the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration whether he has any explanation of the reasons so many more British emigrants are now going to Australia than to Canada.

Hon. Richard A. Bell (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I will be able, during discussion on my estimates, to give very good reasons why we expect to have many more British immigrants coming to this country in the future.

Mr. Pickersgill: May I ask a supplementary question. Has the hon. gentleman read the account in yesterday's Globe and Mail, which no doubt is one of his favorite newspapers, and could the minister say whether any steps have been taken to counteract that situation?

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Speaker, obviously this is a matter in which I would get into debate with the hon. gentleman. I shall be very glad to have a full debate with him at the proper time.

Mr. Pickersgill: 1964?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

(Translation):

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

ST. BONIFACE, MAN.—REPRESENTATIONS RESPECTING POST OFFICE NAMES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. J. Teillet (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Postmaster General.

Could the minister tell the house if she received a resolution from the city of St. Boniface or what was the answer of the department to the representations made about the names of the post offices in that city, and if she has anything to say on that?

(Text):

Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I do not know about a resolution offhand, but there have been several letters and the matter is under consideration.

Interim Supply

PUBLIC SERVICE

RECOMMENDATIONS FOR SALARY INCREASES NOT ACTED UPON

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Finance in which I seek information that I am sure he must have. Are there any categories of civil servants for whom pay increases were recommended by the civil service commission who did not get pay increases a week ago Monday?

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of Finance): I have not that information at the moment, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, is it not going to be possible to get this question answered before the house adjourns?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Chown in the chair.

INTERIM SUPPLY

Resolved, that a sum not exceeding $330,089,511.93 being the aggregate of—

(a) one twelfth of the total of the amounts of the items set forth in the revised estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1963, laid before the House of Commons at the present session of parliament, except atomic energy item 5, Canadian Broadcasting Corporation item 5, finance items 45 and 50, forestry item 11, labour item 40, legislation items 30 and 35, mines and technical surveys items 30, 35, 40, 70, 80, 125 and 130, national defence item 70, national health and welfare item 25, northern affairs and national resources items 10, 45 and 90, public works items 5, 45, 70, 100, 105, 125, 145, 168, 170, 180, 190 and 200, Royal Canadian Mounted Police items 5, 15 and 25, transport items 35, 40, 60, 80, 85, 100, 125, 222 and 225, loans investments and advances item L20 $292,175,958;

(b) an additional one twelfth of the amounts of defence production item 25, external affairs item 5, northern affairs and national resources item 105, of the said revised estimates, $1,842,041.67;

(c) one twelfth of the total of the amounts of the items set forth in the supplementary estimates (A) for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1963, except external affairs item 112a, transport items 213a and 222a, $8,738,178.92;

(d) ten twelfths of the total of the amounts of the items set forth in the supplementary estimates (B) for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1963, $27,333,333.34, be granted to Her Majesty on account of the present fiscal year ending March 31, 1963.

Mr. Roxburgh: Mr. Chairman, last evening when talking on the physical fitness program I pointed out that politics had entered into this program. It is very, very difficult to understand why the governor in council was given the power to select the members of the national fitness board. My reason for raising this matter is that I feel it has put the ministers in a very, very ticklish position; I do not care who the minister is. Also there is no doubt that these men have been put in a ticklish position. When I was at the Canadian sports council I was talking with Dr. Willard, the deputy minister of welfare and I made a suggestion on behalf of the Canadian Amateur Hockey Association. He had received this suggestion from other associations and individual sportsmen. The suggestion was that the national athletic associations would send to the government one or two names of men of known executive ability from those associations, and then the government could make a selection from those names.

There is a definite feeling, no matter what is said on this question, that when a minister has to make a decision it is going to be controversial. But if they had accepted these names of men of outstanding executive ability in the field of sports, nobody could have said that politics was being played in any way, shape or form. I go further than that. I think one of the most flagrant episodes in this connection is this, and I am sorry the minister is not here because it was reported in this house. I refer to the time when the Minister of Public Works, the former minister of justice, toured western Canada. When he was there he gave a partial assurance to the Trail Smoke Eaters hockey club that he would assist them by means of a grant. Mr. Chairman, there is a definite procedure in national sports associations whereby any group, individual or team can make representations through their sports association, which submits it to the national sports fitness group.

That is the only way to do it. There is no doubt we are all put on the spot and it will become a regular schemozzle if every member in this house or the ministers in this house were going after the national sports council and asking them to do something for their constituencies. We certainly do not want that on either side of the house, I am sure. I hope we will have intestinal fortitude enough that when our constituents and people representing teams come to us we shall be able to say: "Look, this has nothing to do with politics. Go to the right source." This is a national project which is absolutely necessary in this country. I know both sides are working in sincerity in order to put this over in a big way, because we need this program.

I should like to make a comment with regard to the structural part. Some of the grants which have been given out to teams and organizations have been justified, but a great many have not been justified and could not in any circumstances come under a physical fitness program. I do not want to give a long list, but just think of the Canadian rugby team which went over and toured England, Scotland and Ireland. They were given a donation of some $10,000 and I should like to ask the minister: what did that $10,000 do toward improving national fitness in Canada? I know he will say that such a tour makes for good relations and that they have done a good job. I agree 100 per cent, but that is not the job of a national fitness program.

A national fitness program starts with the kids. We can look to Europe and see that this is true. One thing we lack is facilities. Facilities are the main part of any national program. When I was in Ottawa at a meeting of the Canadian Sports Advisory Council some time ago I suggested to them that before they went into this matter of physical fitness they should send a delegation to the countries in Europe which have successful programs. They said they had looked into this and had a satisfactory answer to it. All I will say is this: at that time they definitely had no program. When we think of facilities we think of indoor facilities and outdoor facilities. When we think of indoor facilities we think of rinks and swimming pools. When we think of swimming pools we think of little Mary Stewart in Vancouver, a girl who has made a real contribution and put Canada's name at the top of the list. Do you know how little Mary Stewart had to practice? She practised in pools that were not long enough. Any swimmer knows that when they make the turns they take their breath and after these short swimming pools she was unable to adjust herself when she got into the longer pool of Olympic standards. As far as I know there are something like three pools built to Olympic standard in Canada. I am not sure if there are any indoors for use during the winter. If we are to have outstanding athletes they must have a program for the full season.

Whether we like it or not, during peacetime our country is judged by the prestige of our athletes. I think of little Czechoslovakia, a country of twelve and a half million people where they have had a physical fitness program going for some hundred years. I think we might well go over there to give some study to this program, a program so successful that they have walked away with the gold medals, the silver medals and the bronze medals in Olympic competition. And where has Canada been? I know that many hon. members are thinking I am talking about countries behind the iron curtain. Last night I mentioned Russia. I should like to mention West Germany. West Germany is a democratic country like our own. West Germany was ravished during the war. When I was over there two years ago, do hon. members know what they had on their program for facilities. They had what they call their golden plan, their 15-year plan. Do hon. members know what that 15-year plan means? It means $1,500 million toward facilities. Yet this government gave $5 million and then took away $4 million—this in a country which the Minister of Finance tells us is a country of prosperity. Then they squelch out $4 million toward a physical fitness program. I have asked a number of questions, some starred questions and others just questions, which have been answered. This is one of the questions which was asked. I asked: if this was a nation-wide organization, what about the province of Quebec? Where did they come into the picture? So far as I have noticed, the province of Quebec does not belong to the national organization. We should like to know more about the reasons for that.

Talking about facilities, we asked the question what amount of money was spent on the facilities? The answer came: the winter works program. Thank goodness for the winter works program. I want to commend the winter works program for the part it is playing. Those responsible for it are doing a grand job but because of the circumstances they can only do so much. How does that program work? It works through the local municipalities who have the get up and go. The ones who have that are the ones who get the rinks, sports fields or whatever they may be. But what about those sections which are afraid or unable to put up that extra money? The kids in those sections probably need the facilities a great deal more than the kids in the sections where people are up and doing. Is the program doing anything for them? We need every cent of those $5 million to start this off.

Just as important as facilities is coaching. The Canadian hockey association under Mr. Gordon Jukes as secretary manager got in touch with the universities of Canada to try to form a summer school for coaching college courses. He really received co-operation. It was brought up before the council, and I am pleased to see that the council is backing it. I sincerely hope that when it passes the final word along the government will go along with it.

It is the lack of facilities and coaching which causes us to lose our youth of today to our neighbour across the line. Mr. Chairman, last year it was my privilege to be in Colorado Springs with our hockey club. There I met a lot of former young Canadians who were graduates from the universities of the United States. They had to go there because there were no facilities here in Canada. They did not have any coaching at all in Canada, and because they had ability in running, or in swimming, or in playing hockey, the universities of the United States took them and have kept them.

An hon. Member: And they can keep them too.

Mr. Ricard: What did your government do for them?

Mr. Roxburgh: Never mind that. It is not what has been done; it is what is to be done right now.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I think it is a rule of this committee that only one member can have the floor at one time, and at the present time the hon. member for Norfolk has the floor.

Mr. Cadieu (Meadow Lake): Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Roxburgh: There is another angle to this physical fitness question which perhaps many of us do not realize. The physical fitness program can serve a double purpose. It can go far beyond the question of fitness.

Mr. Cadieu (Meadow Lake): Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Roxburgh: If my hon. friend over there would listen, I think he would agree with me. We have records showing that in every community where there have been no minor sports organizations, and where minor sport organizations were organized; with every increase in registration in these minor sports organizations less delinquency has resulted. I do not know whether hon. members realize the alarming increase in our penitentiaries population. Dominion-wise, in 1957 it was 5,400; in 1962 it was 7,200. The federal government is building five new prisons costing $4 million each. What disturbs me, and it should disturb every member of this committee, is that three of these penitentiaries are for the youth of Canada. It costs us $21 million, and the province of Ontario alone $16 million. We cannot afford not to organize youth. Each department of government looks after its own dollars and cents, and has possibly overlooked the true value to our nation of a properly run physical fitness program. When you add to this the development of moral fibre through sports activities, the returns our young men and women will get from it in the future cannot be assessed in dollars and cents. It goes far beyond that.

[Mr. Roxburgh.]

Very few people outside of entertainment really realize what sports mean. In closing I should like to illustrate the very great importance of sport, what it means to this country and to the countries of the world. As we know, sport is one of the main by-products of any fitness program. I could give many illustrations of this but it would take too long. The greatest medium of all for breaking down barriers is sport. It is the common denominator of all creeds and religions. It does not make any difference whether we are Jews, Catholics or Protestants. It does not make any difference whether we are black, white or yellow. When young men and women go on to the sports field within their communities within our country, and also in international competition, they are as one.

I should like to leave this thought with the committee, and especially with our enlightening friend across the way. I should like, not on behalf of the Liberal opposition party or other opposition members on behalf of any members with common sense on that side of the house to ask the Prime Minister and his executive to think twice about taking away this sum of $5 million. Because the youth of Canada—and I am speaking for the youth of Canada—are the most important members of the Canadian family; I hope everyone will agree with that. We should give more serious consideration to retaining this sum of $5 million so that the national fitness program will go, not only a long way towards the program itself but also will go a long way towards strengthening the moral fibre of our nation.

Mr. Monteith: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member asked a question and I wonder whether I might have the chance to reply?

Mr. Cadieu (Meadow Lake): Would the hon. gentleman permit a question?

Mr. Monteith: I should like to point out that he suggested that $5 million be not taken away from this program. I should like to assure the hon. member that the $5 million is in the estimates for this program, as in the statute. We do not anticipate that it will be possible to spend this amount of money this year. We did not spend it last year. The program was just under way and had to be developed in conjunction with the provinces. As yet, as has been pointed out, there is no agreement with the province of Quebec. As these agreements are developed money will be available for the provinces.

I should also like to point out, Mr. Chairman, in answer to the hon. member's suggestion that certain teams should not be assisted, that the minister has acted only on the recommendation of the sports advisory council. It is this council which was set up. I should like to ask him this question. Does he think that the governor in council was playing politics when Mr. James Worrall was appointed to this council?

Mr. Roxburgh: Mr. Chairman, may I answer the first question first. You will remember that at the beginning of my remarks I said that the Prime Minister had made a statement at the opening of the hockey hall of fame about a $5 million grant. I also pointed out that only under the present government would such a thing happen. Because when any businessman, small or big, goes to borrow money, he takes a plan with him. The only reason why this money is not being spent, and the only reason why it cannot be spent, is because the government has no plan for spending the money. We can certainly show the government where to spend this money, and spend it in a big way.

As far as Mr. Worrall is concerned, I agree with the minister. I will not answer any questions except to say that you put your ministers in one dickens of a spot. But I do know this, that if you had had a program you would be able to spend your $5 million. Germany has spent $1.5 billion on facilities alone. Has the government an answer to that?

Mr. Ricard: What did you ever do?

Mr. Winkler: Ask your leader what his program was.

Mr. Ricard: You were sleeping for 22 years.

The Deputy Chairman: Order.

Mr. Hellyer: The German treasury is not empty.

Mr. Cadieu (Meadow Lake): Mr. Chairman—

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I am sorry, but if the hon. member does not receive the unanimous consent of the committee he cannot ask his question because the time of the hon. member is limited. Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Deputy Chairman: The hon. member for York South.

Mr. Roxburgh: He would not understand it anyway.

(Translation):

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, I readily endorse the remarks made yesterday by my leader, the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas), and those made by all hon. members who took part in this debate on national unity. As a matter of fact, I should like to repeat what I said in this house a few weeks ago:

> As everybody knows, Canada was founded to a great extent by two distinct nations, and our country will come to its fullest expression only if the equality of the French and English languages and cultures is recognized in fact as well as in law throughout the country.

Mr. Chairman, the leader of the New Democratic party did not hesitate to point out that fact and to remind the house of the recommendation he made last February when he advocated the establishment of a royal commission to look into this fundamental question. It gives us very great satisfaction to note that all parties represented in this house agree on the necessity of putting an end to the uneasiness affecting national unity and of casting aside demagogic and unpatriotic politics which threaten Canada's future.

Mr. Chairman, like all Canadian citizens, I hope that the spirit pervading this debate will survive the next election campaign. With all sincere Canadians, I hope that nobody will attempt to take political advantage of the present situation, but instead that all will strive to advocate firm unity throughout Canada.

Mr. Chairman, I urge the Prime Minister to introduce without delay the legislation tending to set up that royal commission which all those who took part in this debate seem to be asking for.

In my opinion, Mr. Chairman, this is the most suitable time to act along these lines. We must not wait until tension increases to the breaking point. We must not wait any more to make the historic move which will enable Canada, I am sure, to strengthen its ties so as to present to the whole world, when the confederation centennial will be celebrated in 1967, the best possible example of unity and understanding between two equal races, which are partners in the development and progress of one of the richest and most beautiful countries in the world.

I repeat that the time to act has come. At a time when all parties agree on that matter, it is up to the Prime Minister to make now the historic move that is requested by everybody.

(Text):

I should like, before going on to the major subject of my remarks, to say a few words in English on the subject, and deliberately in English, with respect to a gentleman in Hamilton and with respect to an organization recently set up in the province of Quebec. I refer to a man of the cloth in the city of Hamilton who had the bad grace and the lack of understanding of Canada to raise objections, expressed in violent language, against the teaching of French in the schools of the province of Ontario, and I say: Shame to him and to others like him in English speaking Canada.

I also draw the attention of the house to the few noisy separatists in the province of Quebec who have recently formed what they call a political organization for the purpose of tearing Quebec away from Canada and establishing what they call the republic of Quebec. It is these two extremes in our country, fortunately representing relatively few people in both sections of Canada, who cause so much trouble. It is against those people and their influence that a royal commission of inquiry could once and for all establish the kind of harmony to which everyone who has spoken in this chamber looks forward for our country.

I turn from this to a related world problem. I turn from the conception which has been underlined by the Leader of the Opposition in noble and appropriate words and underlined by my leader in equally appropriate words, the proposition of the equality of the two major nations in Canada—and all other groups as I am sure the Leader of the Opposition and my leader would agree—to the astounding attitude of our government. I refer to its policy with respect to the treatment which is now meted out on the continent of Africa by the government of the Union of South Africa, and by the government and forces of Portugal, to the African people under their rule and under their control.

I remind the house of the fact that, in answer to questions, the Prime Minister some days ago stated with respect to South Africa that this country was not going to honour a request by the United Nations resolution for an economic boycott of South Africa because, said he, we do some $40 million or $50 million worth of trade with South Africa and therefore we are not going to cut it off. I remind the committee also of the fact that in recent days Canada abstained from voting on a resolution condemning Portugal for its treatment of the African people in the west African territories under its administration, and that only yesterday, as the Secretary of State for External Affairs informed us earlier, Canada opposed a similar resolution of condemnation of Portugal because of its barbaric and inhuman behaviour toward the Africans in Angola. He said that the resolution was too extreme for Canada to swallow and digest.

I have a copy of the resolution in my hand, Mr. Chairman. The minister said the resolution suggested that Portugal was going to be thrown out of the United Nations. With great respect, I do not see that in the resolution, and may I make clear that neither my colleagues nor I favour the expulsion of any member of the United Nations. We favour the United Nations being all-inclusive. What this resolution does is to remind the government of Portugal that her continued non-implementation of the resolutions of the general assembly and the security council—these are resolutions relating to territories under Portuguese control—is inconsistent with her membership in the United Nations.

What can be more clear than that the kind of barbarism, the kind of racialism, the kind of oppression which the Portuguese government is now carrying on in Angola and other territories under its control is indeed inconsistent with membership in the United Nations, a membership which accepts the propositions in the charter of the United Nations and in the declaration on human rights?

The minister said that Canada could not swallow the suggestion of sanctions. May I put on the record, Mr. Chairman, what the resolution says on that score? The resolution requests the security council to take appropriate measures, including sanctions, to secure Portugal's compliance with this resolution. That is the Portuguese resolution of the general assembly and of the security council. I ask, what could be a more reasonable request on the part of the assembly than that the security council, the executive arm of the United Nations, take appropriate steps, including sanctions, to assure that Portugal will comply with her obligations under the United Nations charter.

What we have, Mr. Chairman, I suggest—and I do not for one moment apologize for using the rather strong language I am about to use—is a statement by the leaders in the government of our country that because of $40 million or $50 million worth of trade with South Africa, because of the fact Portugal is a member of NATO and we are a member of NATO, we are prepared to abandon the basic principles on which democracy is founded and upon which this country is founded, and throw to the wolves the concepts of human rights, human equality and human dignity. We are prepared to do this in order to hold $40 million or $50 million worth of trade with South Africa and in order to enable our fellow member in NATO, Portugal, to have arms. There cannot be any greater condemnation of the policies of NATO in the eyes of the uncommitted peoples of the world than the excuse that because Portugal is a member of NATO we are going to supply it with arms and other military equipment, so that country can continue its oppression of the African people in its territories.

Where is the moral leadership in the world today, Mr. Chairman? I have looked carefully into some of the reports coming out of South Africa. Everyone here has already read the reports coming out of Angola and other Portuguese territories. I want to put on the record, Mr. Chairman, certain words which I wish could be inscribed indelibly on the minds and hearts of all the leaders of the western nations. The following are the words of Nelson Mandela, lieutenant of chief Albert Lutuli in South Africa, a Nobel prize winner who has been virtually under detention by the government. Mr. Mandela was in court on various charges and was making a defence of his actions before the court. In the course of that defence he said this:

> Through bitter experience, we have learned to regard the white man as a harsh and merciless type of human being whose contempt for our rights, and whose utter indifference to the promotion of our welfare, makes his assurances to us absolutely meaningless and hypocritical.

I say to hon. members of this house, Mr. Chairman, and I plead with the government, that our attitude on South Africa, our attitude on Portugal, our attitude to these governments which deny and destroy the concept of human rights, of human dignity in the countries over which they rule, is wrong and unwise, especially in the light of the statement by Mr. Mandela that our assurances to them are absolutely meaningless and hypocritical. If the western nations of the world want to win the support and confidence of the African peoples and the Asian peoples, it is time we abandoned the ruthless mercantilism which is implied in the answer of the Prime Minister and the ruthless militarism which is implied in the answer of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, and acted in accordance with the principles set out in the preamble to the bill of rights of which the Prime Minister is so proud.

Let me remind hon. members what we said in this parliament:

> The parliament of Canada, affirming that the Canadian nation is founded upon principles that acknowledge the supremacy of God, the dignity and worth of the human person and the position of the family in a society of free men and free institutions;
>
> Affirming also that men and institutions remain free only when freedom is founded upon respect for moral and spiritual values and the rule of law;

I ask, Mr. Chairman, what moral and spiritual values is this government defending when it refuses to take action in concert with other nations of the United Nations to punish South Africa and Portugal for their oppression of human beings in their territories and to find some way of changing the policies in those lands.

What is happening in South Africa? Mr. Mandela, to whom I have referred, in his speech to the court described in these words the situation in which he found himself:

> I found myself trailed by officers of the security branch of the police force wherever I went. In short I found myself treated as a criminal, an unconvicted criminal. I was not allowed to pick my company, to frequent the company of men, to participate in their political activities, to join their organizations. I was not free from constant police surveillance any more than a convict in one of our jails is free from surveillance. I was made, by the law, a criminal, not because of what I had done, but what I stood for, because of what I thought, because of my conscience. Can it be any wonder to anybody that such conditions make a man an outlaw of society?

According to an article in the London Observer, Mr. Chairman, during the month of May 1962, prior to the proclamation of South Africa as a republic, almost 10,000 Africans were arrested in house raids throughout the country. The ostensible reason was to avoid republican day agitation. Also to the same end, ostensibly the government rushed through the house in less than one week the general law amendment act. This general law amendment act gave magistrates the right to refuse bail for 12 days; gave magistrates the right to refuse a trial by jury and shifted the onus on the accused to prove his innocence, contrary to the basic principles for which we stand.

An hon. Member: They do that in France.

Mr. Lewis: France is an entirely different story. The hon. gentleman says they do this in France, but he is wrong. What they do in France, and in other countries of Europe, is that they have an entirely different system of the enforcement of law; they have various investigations and inquiries that make their system whole. In South Africa they pretend to have our system of justice and under our system of justice it is considered an injustice, cruel and undemocratic, to place the onus upon the accused to prove his innocence.

In April, 1962, the tension in South Africa is reported to have increased to the extent that South Africa built up its defence apparatus, mainly its permanent force, security police, and armed services for the purpose of suppressing an armed revolt. Then, last May I believe it was, Mr. Chairman, or perhaps in June, they passed what is known as the sabotage bill. By all accounts, this is the most vicious piece of legislation of its kind since Hitler's Germany. This is the country with which we say we are going to continue to trade because of the $40 million or $50 million of trade that is involved.

The London Observer said in an editorial at the end of May that from now on the conflict will assume its true Hitlerian character.

Under this act sabotage has been defined as injury or damage to property, and even obstructing traffic. The penalties for these as well as more serious offences is the death sentence, or a minimum compulsory five years imprisonment. It applies to juveniles as well as to adults and, according to the act, there is no appeal.

I think it is important to set these matters on record because as I watch what is happening in Canada, the United States, the United Kingdom and other western nations today, with respect to South Africa and Portugal, I am reminded of what happened in the thirties. In 1935, I returned to this country after an absence of three years during which time I among many other people visited Germany, and met many Canadians who listened to our stories as to what was happening in Germany. Even though it might have penetrated their minds they did not let it penetrate their hearts because, like decent people everywhere, they found it impossible to believe that men could act in so inhuman a fashion as the nazis were acting in Germany. It was only after the war ended that they realized there indeed was a regime that was barbaric and inhuman, which took millions of people into the gas chamber, which did destroy human beings because of difference in colour or religion, and which did have all the vicious tendencies we who visited Germany had talked about in the thirties.

At that time people in Canada and elsewhere, people with good minds and good character, and who lived in free societies, found it difficult to believe those things were happening; but today in the same way the white world, the western nations, are making precisely the same mistake one would have thought they would once have learned to avoid. They are making the mistake of not believing that white people, such as the government of South Africa, could be guilty of such things and that Portugal could be guilty of them.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs is one of the finest and gentlest human beings I have had the pleasure of meeting; yet he says in all honesty, and I am sure in all integrity, that he sat beside the minister representing Portugal at the NATO council meeting and was impressed that there were two sides to the question. His words were "more than one side". Mr. Chairman, there cannot be two sides to cruelty; there cannot be two sides to barbarism; there cannot be two sides to inhumanity. There is only one side. It is evil; it ought to be punished, and every assembly in the civilized world ought to take action against it. I am ashamed that a minister of the government of my country should be able to see two sides in such a matter.

In my submission economic sanctions are now, as they have been throughout the years, one of the major weapons short of war in the hands of the agencies of collective security. I suggest there is really no other weapon of coercion; and I frankly admit it is a weapon of coercion, short of war, when all attempts at persuasion have failed to achieve the purposes sought.

The attitude of the government with respect to South Africa and Portugal reminds me, and I am sure all hon. members here will remember it as I recall the story, of the time in 1935 when Dr. Riddell, one of the representatives of Canada at the league of nations in Geneva, appointed by the Liberal government before 1930 and who served during the Bennett regime from 1930 to 1935, committed this country to oil sanctions against Italy because of its invasion of Ethiopia. Then the government which came in in October of that year repudiated Dr. Riddell through the mouths of gentlemen like the late Mr. Lapointe and Mr. Mackenzie King.

Now once again we are great collective securitists, great supporters of the United Nations and of the idea of the United Nations, but only until such time as we have to take an action which may jeopardize several million dollars worth of our trade, or until such time as we have to take an action which may hurt the military status of one of the members of NATO.

I say that the government in October, 1935, betrayed the league of nations and its purposes, and the government of this country today, together with the governments of other countries with which we are allied, are now betraying the purposes of the United Nations and the purposes of the charter of the United Nations by our attitude toward these things in South Africa, Angola and other African territories under the administration of Portugal.

You will recall, Mr. Chairman, that when the question of economic sanctions was discussed in the political commission of the United Nations, Mr. Duma Nokwe, former secretary general of the African national congress, now banned, replied to the position taken by Mr. Crowes, the United Kingdom delegate, who had said that sanctions would hurt the Africans more than it would hurt those supporting apartheid. Mr. Duma Nokwe said:

If Mr. Crowes views are accepted by the members of the U.N., this would be the surest way of reducing the chances of a peaceful solution of the problems of South Africa and of creating the atmosphere for bloodshed and chaos... The only way—

And I commend this to hon. members——of teaching the whites that racialist policies must be abandoned is by removing the economic benefits which they think they get from this system. It is fallacious to suggest that if economic sanctions were imposed on South Africa the non-whites would suffer most.

The Reverend Michael Scott, who was a South African and was banned by the South African government, writing in the Observer of recent issue said that the trend to violence woud unleash "a holocaust of hatred the like of which has not been seen anywhere in Africa or Asia."

I regret this kind of comment has to be made on interim supply instead of on a debate on external affairs, and I am sorry this has to be the case. I suggest that if western nations are not careful, the moral leadership of the world will be given to the new nations of Asia and Africa, and these people who have reason to suspect us and resent our behaviour in the past will be ripe for communist dogma and communist solutions of their problems. Part of our weaponry against communist expansion is steadfast support of the rights of nations to independence, and steadfast support for the equality of all men, white black or yellow and, no matter what the cost, we should not waver in our support of those basic principles.

Nelson Mandela, to whom I have already referred, said in his speech, and I commend his noble words to everyone in this chamber:

I hate the practice of race discrimination, and in doing so, in my hatred, I am sustained by the fact that the overwhelming majority of mankind hates it equally. I hate the systematic inculcation of children with colour prejudice and I am sustained in that hatred by the fact that the overwhelming majority of mankind, here and abroad, are with me in that. I hate the racial arrogance which decrees that the good things of life shall be retained as the exclusive right of a minority of the population, and which reduces the majority of the population to a subservience and inferiority, and maintains them as voteless chattels to work where they are told and behave as they are told by the ruling minority.

Nothing that this court can do to me will change in any way that hatred in me, which can only be removed by the removal of the injustice and the inhumanity which I have sought to remove from the political, social and economic life of this country.

Mr. Chairman, I say that when we have fought to uphold the ideas that Mr. Mandela—a lawyer trained, if I am correct in my memory, in Britain—took from us, it is our duty, we who have spread these ideas or at least helped to spread them, to give them a reality in the lives of the people of Africa. That means the people of South Africa, the people of Angola, the people of other west African territories under Portuguese administration. If we cannot make them a reality through persuading the South African government and the Portuguese government, we must make them a reality in the lives of these people through the coercion short of war which is represented by economic sanctions and by the refusal to supply these inhuman governments with arms and other military equipment.

I say, Mr. Chairman, of what value is it to belong to the United Nations, to proclaim the charter of the United Nations, to be a signatory to the declaration of human rights, to boast of our presence in that international body, to speak of its importance to the world—of what use is all that if, when the United Nations adopts a resolution requiring economic sanctions against a country, we ignore it because it may hurt our trade a little; and when the United Nations adopts a resolution requiring economic sanctions against another country, we ignore it because we happen to be in a military alliance with that country. That is equally as reprehensible and equally as destructive of the moral place of the United Nations in the world as is the reprehensible Soviet behaviour in refusing to pay its contribution to the United Nations action in the Congo, or the behaviour of France in refusing to pay the same thing. I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that every time—

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Chairman, this discussion on interim supply has roamed far and wide. Indeed, I have taken part in the roaming myself and I make no apology for that. If I speak again, it is to deal with a specific matter arising out of the request for interim supply. But I think it should be pointed out that, while the discussion of this matter has roamed far and wide, some very important matters have been brought before the house which could not have been brought before the house in any other way at this time.

Mr. Chairman, we met in late September instead of in early August, and since we met the business of this house has been arranged in such a way that many of the most urgent questions could not be debated in the way in which they should have been debated. This requires that these matters should be raised in the kind of discussion that we are having this week. Some of the matters brought forth in this discussion could well have been brought forth as parts of separate debates dealing with them if the house had been so organized and if we had had time to debate some of the important matters that have now been raised. For instance, the failure of the government to formulate policy in the field of transportation; the failure of the government to have trade policy discussed in the house in order to ascertain how long term solutions to the different problems of international trade could be achieved; the accusations or charges that are being made that the Royal Canadian Mounted Police are making unwarranted investigations into the political opinions of individual citizens; the failure of the government to bring forth for discussion in this house the Columbia river treaty; the failure of the government to develop and enunciate a defence policy; the failure of the government to make it possible for us to have a debate on foreign affairs so that we could discuss within the context of such a debate the important matters for instance, that have just been raised by my hon. friend who has just spoken; the failure of the government to deal constructively with the problems of eastern agriculture. These are matters that require separate debate in this house. Because we have not been able to organize our business so that could be done, and because we did not meet, as we should have met, earlier this summer, we have had to take advantage of this kind of motion in order to bring these matters to the attention of the house in the hope that government spokesmen would deal with them in replying to the points made by spokesmen from the opposition. I believe I am right in saying that none of the points I have mentioned—and there have been others—has been dealt with in any way by any spokesman on behalf of the government.

Now, Mr. Chairman, we find ourselves in a position—I think I am using the words of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre—where the government has got itself boxed in, in a parliamentary sense, in regard to the question of supply. The old parliament granted interim supply for seven months. Twice in this parliament further supply has been granted, each time for one month. I am right in saying that on each occasion interim supply was expedited by the opposition so we could get ahead with other important business which we assumed the government would bring forward. Our assumption and our hopes in that regard were denied by the event. There is, I believe, no precedent in our parliamentary history for a government asking for the tenth monthly instalment of the total expenditures for a year before one single item of annual expenditure has been voted by parliament—not one. This is something that has not happened before in our parliamentary history.

Mr. Aiken: Whose fault is it?

[Mr. Pearson.]

Mr. Pearson: We will soon find out whose fault it is.

Mr. Aiken: Yes, let us find out.

Mr. Pearson: It is a traditional and fundamental right of parliament to vote taxes before they are collected and to approve expenditures before they are made. When these rights are ignored, when they are violated, parliament itself is being violated and we are taking a step toward its destruction. No matter how wide a circulation we give and no matter in what form, to the bill of rights, and no matter how much we may talk about Magna Carta and the bill of rights, no matter how emotionally we may wrap ourselves up in parliamentary or national flags, both these rights I have mentioned are being deliberately and systematically violated by the present government. New rates of taxation recommended in the budget last April have been collected for over eight months without parliamentary approval. Taxes of an annual value of $200 million, imposed by order in council—an order in council of doubtful legal and constitutional validity and about which we cannot get the legal opinion on which it was based—have been collected for six months. Every effort we have made to bring these taxes before parliament for approval or for rejection has been frustrated and refused.

Now in this bill we are asked to give the government a cheque for another one-twelfth of our annual expenditure. That would make a total of some $5 billion in blank cheques to this government. Of course, this bill is totally unnecessary. We are considering it only because the government has failed to respect the constitutional rights of the elected representatives of the people. If the government had wished, the government could have secured approval of the annual expenditures and of the tax changes proposed in the last budget before holding a general election. The government chose instead, as was its right, to appeal to the people for a new mandate. They did not receive that mandate. But they exercised that right of appeal to the people before any single estimate had been passed and before there had been a budget debate.

After the election, as has been said before in this house, the government had a right to carry on as a caretaker administration, but only until the earliest date at which parliament could have been summoned. That date would have been the last week in July. Parliament, as we have said on this side, should have met then and the government should have asked at once for a vote of confidence. That question would have been settled under our rules after eight days of debate at the most. If the government had secured a vote of confidence after eight days it could then have placed the new taxation measures before parliament at once. That could have been done, of course, in a budget which would have contained those long term financial and economic proposals promised by the Prime Minister at that time with great solemnity and with great emphasis, as something which would be introduced at the earliest opportunity to take the place of the emergency proposals which were made at the time the austerity program was announced on June 24 and 25.

If the government had done that, the budget debate would have been limited under our rules to six days. The tax proposals resulting from such a budget would not have taken long to deal with. The revised estimates could have been tabled at once and priority could have been given to the consideration of those estimates in the latter part of August and September. The whole program of taxation and expenditure could have been disposed of by the beginning of October if such a program had been followed by this government and if the government had continued to maintain the confidence of the house. Then October, November and December would have been available to the government for legislation. If the budget and the long term program for dealing with our basic problems had been approved, the session could have been concluded before Christmas, instead of the House of Commons finding itself in the position in which it finds itself now, a position which has been graphically described in the Winnipeg Free Press—I know hon. gentlemen opposite will not like it, but this extract from that newspaper of the day before yesterday describes the situation very accurately. It reads:

> Parliament is about to adjourn for its Christmas holidays without coming to grips with any basic Canadian problem.

Then the writer goes on:

> Since September the government has blamed the opposition for blockading public business and argued that it could not get on with its major policies of financial and economic reform until the routine agenda was cleared away. It knows, however, that if any major policy were submitted, parliament would consider it without delay. None has been submitted. Parliament will just go home for Christmas with everything of importance postponed.

It is true, of course, that there has been nothing of real general economic importance placed on the order paper so far. The long range economic policies of the government about which the Prime Minister talked so much and so eloquently last June and July—where are they? There have been some important features of specific legislation put on the order paper. There is even one which is of some general economic importance, the setting up of a national development board; but that turns out to be less important than some of us had been led to believe. There is nothing on the order paper, and there has been nothing to give us the chance of implementing in any shape or form the long range economic policies of the government which the Prime Minister said were necessary at the time of the emergency and which would replace the emergency austerity program.

If the government had followed the course of calling parliament together at the end of July, if it had managed to organize in an efficient way the business of this house, we would have reached the point by now of having this legislation and these policies in action and we could have come back in the new year conscious, perhaps, that we had been able to do something—if we come back at all.

The Prime Minister and his supporters say we are responsible over here for any delay there has been. They say we have been holding things up. They used that argument last spring as an excuse for going to the country. They ask: why don't you speed up business? Why don't you get ahead? May I point out that we have made three specific and concrete proposals from this side to government spokesmen which would have had the effect of speeding up the progress of the business which is now on the order paper. We have said three things, none of which has been taken up as far as we know. We have agreed to the allocation of time to specific legislation. That would be done by agreement, and it is a very important concession for an opposition to make. We have agreed to a reduction, if it is a reduction to 30 minutes of the time spent on oral questions on orders of the day, and we have agreed to the prolongation of each day's sitting beyond ten o'clock if that should be necessary to complete the current business before the house or the committee of the whole. These are three specific proposals which have been made by this side as an indication of our willingness to get ahead even with the business which the government has on the order paper.

Mr. Churchill: Would the hon. gentleman permit a question?

Mr. Pearson: I only have ten minutes.

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Churchill: It is completely unfair.

Mr. Pearson: It is not completely unfair.

Mr. Churchill: Drag in your socialist friends.

Mr. Pearson: I am speaking for the Liberal party and we put forward these proposals.

Now, Mr. Chairman, a government which was standing on its responsibilities to parliament and to the people of this country, after the election results of last June would have proceeded as I have indicated. A government with any understanding of the fundamental rights of parliament would have proceeded in that way. Mr. Chairman, you know what has happened. You know the position in which we find ourselves now, after many weeks of sitting in this house, after many weeks of confusion, indecision and mismanagement of the business of this house by the government, with bills being brought in and withdrawn, with bills being talked out by supporters of the government themselves. You recall, Mr. Chairman, one evening when the bankruptcy of the management of this house was so apparent that we came to a point where we were about to complete the business before us; nothing else was before us so government members themselves had to filibuster their own order paper.

Now, Mr. Chairman, we are being asked to vote blind on another monthly instalment of the annual expenditures, bringing the amount of blank cheques now up to $5 billion. Then we are being asked to go home for a month and come back to issue another blank cheque making up eleven twelfths of $6 billion of taxpayers' money.

What a travesty of parliamentary government. Mr. Chairman, who would have thought that any government of Canada would dare go so far as even to attempt to spend so much without any parliamentary decision on a single item of estimates. As I have already stated, parliament's examination of, and control over, government spending is the very foundation of our democratic parliamentary system. But this year the estimates of only one department have been brought before parliament. Presumably we will be discussing the rest in February with eleven twelfths of the expenditure already spent. The government will not be explaining or defending its plans and its expenditure. It will be reporting to the house on old history, on what it has already spent. That is the situation in which we now find ourselves when we are asked to vote this further interim supply.

Mr. Chairman, as we have already indicated we on this side are prepared to vote this measure of interim supply in order to enable the business of the country to go on into the new year. But we feel that because of this situation in which parliament now is, owing to the inefficiency of the government and the mismanagement of its business, instead of parliament taking a month's holiday we should come back right after the new year in order to deal with the very real and urgent problems facing this country, if the government will bring forward measures to deal with them. So I repeat that while we will once again let this part of interim supply go through, we protest against the procedures of this government in the fundamental question of the control of parliament over taxation.

The way in which they have handled this matter is a shocking example of contempt of parliament. A government which shows this kind of contempt of parliament has no right to go on sitting on the benches opposite failing so lamentably to govern. And we have no right, Mr. Chairman, to keep this evasive, inactive and indecisive government sitting there. Mr. Chairman, the Canadian people are entitled to something better than perpetual interim supply.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman—

Some hon. Members: Five o'clock.

The Chairman: Order.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman—

Some hon. Members: No, five o'clock. Obey the rules.

The Chairman: Order, please. I am sure the Prime Minister realizes that it is five o'clock, but I feel that if he had a word or two—

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman—

An hon. Member: He has no regard for the rules.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, having just heard a lecture on parliament, I thought it right that—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Some hon. Members: Five o'clock.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, I do not mind them howling me down.

Some hon. Members: Five o'clock.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, I was going to ask—

An hon. Member: Breaking the rules.

Mr. Diefenbaker: —whether the Leader of the Opposition—

Some hon. Members: Order.

The Chairman: Order.

Mr. Diefenbaker: —whether the Leader of the Opposition—

The Chairman: Order.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, I have only a question to ask the Leader of the Opposition, and of course his supporters, for whom he says he speaks, will deny me this. Will he and the other members of the house, knowing that I have to leave tomorrow afternoon and will not have an opportunity to reply—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: —allow me, with consent, to speak for ten minutes? That is all I ask.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Chairman, on the point that the Prime Minister has made, from the only information which was available to me, the newspapers, I understood that he was not leaving until four o'clock tomorrow afternoon and I thought he would have ample opportunity to reply tomorrow afternoon before leaving the house at four o'clock. But if the Prime Minister says he has no opportunity to reply I do not see why he should not be given a few minutes at this time, though that is a courtesy which has not been extended to this side of the house.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

The Chairman: Order, please.

Mrs. Fairclough: The same old Grit closure.

The Chairman: Order. Is it agreed then that I shall not see the clock for a few minutes?

Some hon. Members: Ten minutes.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chairman: The right hon. the Prime Minister.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman—

An hon. Member: Time's up.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I have to have unanimous consent and all I want to do is to answer some of the fallacious statements that were made, but if that is the attitude and if there is going to be—

Mr. Argue: Even the Prime Minister cannot break the rules.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Did you mention breaking the rules? No, I will not carry on.

Some hon. Members: Closure.

An hon. Member: Just cheapskates.

Mr. Ricard: You are all a bunch of cheap Grits.

Mr. Churchill: The Liberal party will suffer for this.

An hon. Member: A bunch of jokers.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): A country without a government.

Mr. Ricard: A bunch of cheap Grits.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): A country without a government.

The Chairman: Order.

An hon. Member: Why don't you call an election?

Mr. O'Hurley: You do not want one.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): A country without a government.

Mr. Herridge: Let us have a little fair play in this chamber.

Some hon. Members: Closure.

The Chairman: Order. It being five o'clock I leave the chair in order that the house may proceed to the consideration of private members' business pursuant to section 3 of standing order 15.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

An hon. Member: Real fair play.

Another hon. Member: What about the rules?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The Chair is not lacking in patience. It being five o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely notices of motion and public bills.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, by party arrangement we have agreed to move from the ordinary business of notices of motion and public bills and discuss instead under government orders as the first item, No. 2 on today's order paper, which is Bill No. C-93, as the second item No. 21 on today's order paper, the resolution dealing with the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements Act, and as No. 3 item No. 29 on today's order paper dealing with an amendment to the National Housing Act with regard to sewage treatment projects throughout Canada. The general understanding was that these three measures would be passed in all stages between now and six o'clock.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, it should be possible to get these three measures through very quickly and I should like to suggest that if they are through by half past five or a quarter to six we revert to interim supply.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, in view of the sudden change of front and change of conscience that offer is no longer accepted.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, the statement made by the house leader is quite correct. There was all-party agreement that we would do what he has suggested. There is just one point that I think might be put on the record and that is that the private members' hour being given up today will be added at a later date. I am sure the Minister of Veterans Affairs is prepared to give that undertaking.

Mr. Churchill: Yes, I so do, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the arrangement suggested by the government house leader agreed to by all parties?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

CONSTRUCTION OF BRANCH LINE FROM NEPISIGUIT JUNCTION, N.B.

The house in committee on Bill No. C-93, respecting the construction of a line of railway in the province of New Brunswick by Canadian National Railway Company from Nepisiguit Junction on the Bathurst subdivision of the Canadian National Railways in a southerly and westerly direction for a distance of approximately 15 miles to the property of Brunswick Mining and Smelting Corporation Limited—Mr. Balcer—Mr. Chown in the chair.

Clauses 1 to 8 inclusive agreed to.

Title agreed to.

On the schedule.

Mr. McCleave: May I point out that the schedule was not called?

The Chairman: Shall the schedule carry?

Schedule agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL FISCAL ARRANGEMENTS ACT

AMENDMENTS TO CONFORM TO TAX-SHARING ACT AND INCREASE PAYMENT

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements Act to provide an arrangement with respect to fiscal years commencing on or after April 1, 1962 similar to that provided in the Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements Act with respect to previous fiscal years; to provide also in the said amendment for an increase of one third in the amount of the payment, from one dollar and fifty cents to two dollars per capita.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Chown in the chair.

Mr. Nowlan: Ordinarily, I would be making a statement of some length. However, in view of the agreement which has been arrived at between the various parties in order to facilitate progress on this other legislation, I will not do so. I should like to say, very briefly, that the purpose of this resolution is to increase the grants to universities from $1.50 to $2 per capita and also to legalize certain arrangements which have been made between the government of Canada and the government of the province of Quebec. Then, if the committee desires, Mr. Chairman, I have a table here showing the various payments which have been made under this provision since it came into effect. I should like to have that inserted in the record, if that is agreeable, and I shall dispense with saying anything more.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's note: The table above referred to is as follows:]

VALUE OF UNIVERSITY GRANTS AND TAX ABATEMENTS FOR THE BENEFIT OF UNIVERSITIES: 1951-52 TO 1962-63

	1951-52	1952-53	1953-54	1954-55	1955-56	1956-57	1957-58	1958-59	1959-60	1960-61	1961-62	1962-63 (estimated)	Total
	$	$	$	$	$	$	$	$	$	$	$	$	$
Grant per capita....	0.50	0.50	0.50	0.50	0.50	1.00	1.00	1.50	1.50	1.50	1.50	2.00
Newfoundland.....	180,700	187,000	191,500	199,000	206,000	415,074	426,000	657,000	673,500	688,500	672,225.00	940,000	5,436,499.00
Prince Edward Island.....	49,200	51,500	53,000	52,500	54,000	99,285	99,000	150,000	153,000	154,500	157,783.50	212,000	1,285,708.50
Nova Scotia.....	321,250	326,500	331,500	336,500	341,500	694,717	702,000	1,065,000	1,074,000	1,084,500	1,113,834.00	1,492,000	8,883,301.00
New Brunswick....	257,800	263,000	268,000	273,500	279,000	554,616	565,000	865,500	885,000	900,000	880,812.00	1,214,000	7,206,228.00
Quebec.....	2,027,800	—	—	—	—	4,628,378	4,758,000	7,326,000	7,198,500	7,700,000(1)	7,889,000.00(1)	10,732,000(1)	52,559,678.00
Ontario.....	2,298,750	2,383,000	2,448,500	2,523,000	2,591,500	5,404,933	5,622,000	8,704,500	8,928,000	9,133,500	9,325,428.00	12,684,000	72,047,111.00
Manitoba.....	388,250	399,000	404,500	414,000	424,500	850,040	860,000	1,305,000	1,327,500	1,348,500	1,395,064.50	1,870,000	10,986,354.50
Saskatchewan.....	415,850	421,500	430,500	439,000	444,500	880,665	879,000	1,332,000	1,353,000	1,365,000	1,397,188.50	1,860,000	11,218,203.50
Alberta.....	469,750	485,000	501,000	519,500	533,000	1,123,116	1,160,000	1,801,500	1,864,500	1,924,500	2,008,684.50	2,740,000	15,130,550.50
British Columbia...	582,600	599,000	615,000	633,000	652,500	1,398,464	1,487,000	2,316,000	2,355,000	2,409,000	2,409,060.00	3,381,000	18,774,624.00
Total.....	6,991,950	5,115,500	5,243,500	5,390,000	5,526,500	16,049,288	16,558,000	25,522,500	26,112,000	26,708,000	27,249,080	37,062,000	203,528,318

NOTE: (1) Denotes the value of a tax abatement for the benefit of universities.

13.11.62

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Nowlan thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-101, to amend the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements Act and the Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first and second times and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Chown in the chair.

On clause 1.

(Translation):

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, I do not believe that there has been an agreement between the leaders of the four parties as far as this bill is concerned, which deals with an important matter, the federal-provincial fiscal arrangements. They have not reached us yet.

(Text):

Clause agreed to.

On clause 2.

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps the minister could tell us, very briefly, to satisfy my hon. friend from Lapointe, why the date is 1962?

Mr. Nowlan: That was the date agreed upon between the two governments in connection with the implementation of this agreement.

Mr. Pickersgill: There is complete understanding between the two governments?

Mr. Nowlan: Of course, my hon. friend knows it was worked out before I happened to have responsibility for this department. However, I have been assured there was complete understanding and complete agreement and the details were worked out with the co-operation of both parties.

(Translation):

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, to come back to that, although the terms of this measure have been agreed upon by the federal and provincial governments, I do not have more confidence in the bill for all that. Why be in such a rush to pass this bill?

(Text):

Mr. Pickersgill: May I make a suggestion that may facilitate the business of the house? Perhaps the third reading of the bill could be put over until tomorrow at the opening of the session and that would give the hon. gentleman a chance to satisfy himself about these provisions and to say a few words at that time.

Mr. Nowlan: If that would be acceptable to hon. members, I would be prepared, if we could pass the bill through the committee stage now, to have third reading tomorrow after there has been a full opportunity to study the bill. The language is somewhat technical, but it is very brief.

(Translation):

Mr. Gregoire: In other words, we agree to it and then, we study it.

(Text):

Clause agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

NATIONAL HOUSING ACT

EXTENSION OF PERIOD FOR CONSTRUCTION OF SEWAGE TREATMENT PROJECTS

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Public Works) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the National Housing Act, 1954 to extend for an additional two years the period within which the construction of a sewage treatment project in respect of which a loan has been or is to be made must be completed if the municipality or municipal corporation is to be granted a reduction of indebtedness.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Chown in the chair.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, I understand that because of the speed with which we have moved in the last few minutes there will be some little delay in actually getting copies of the bill up here in order that they may be available to hon. members for study when we actually reach that stage. Perhaps I could make a brief statement to explain the purpose of the bill.

Mr. Pickersgill: May I ask the minister if this is his valedictory?

Mr. Fulton: No, I shall have even more important things to say in my valedictory.

The purpose of the bill which this legislation precedes is to extend the forgiveness date applicable to federal loans for construction of sewage treatment projects under Part VIB of the National Housing Act.

Hon. members will recall that this program was authorized under an amendment to the National Housing Act passed by parliament in December, 1960. Under this part of the act, Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation is authorized to make long term, low interest loans to municipalities for the construction and expansion of central treatment or disposal plants or the construction of trunk collector sewers. The loans may be for periods of up to 50 years and for amounts equal to two thirds of the cost of the projects.

The 1960 legislation provided for partial debt cancellation where projects were completed or were under construction by March 31, 1963. In these cases the corporation was authorized to forgive payment of 25 per cent of the amount of the loan advanced, and 25 per cent of the interest accrued on the amount outstanding. The purpose of these provisions was twofold: to provide an incentive to municipalities to make an early start on these works and to encourage additional employment in construction and allied fields.

In view of the national significance of the program, the government is now asking parliament to extend the effective date of this forgiveness clause by an additional two year period.

I think most of us recognize that one of the most pressing problems of the times is the steady and increasing pollution of our soil and water resources. This not only threatens conservation of the nation's wildlife, it interferes with the fullest possible use of the recreational potential of our streams and rivers and, indeed, in some instances, can and does pose serious health problems. Communities with a high degree of soil and water pollution in their area are concerned about the health hazards that can result from this type of contamination.

The government's intention in introducing the legislation in December, 1960, was to help municipalities strike at the root of the problem by assisting them in providing proper sewage treatment facilities. I need hardly add the failure to provide adequate and sufficient treatment facilities would also interfere with the proper growth and development of a community and might also seriously restrict the provision of adequate housing in many parts of the country.

The lending program has been extremely successful. The 1960 amendment to the act enabled Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation to make loans for sewage treatment purposes up to an aggregate amount of $100 million. Last December, because of the number of applications already received, the government asked and obtained authorization from parliament to raise this ceiling to $200 million. Since the inception of the program in December, 1960, Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation has made 360 loans for a total of more than $85 million. In addition, at the end of November, 1962, the corporation had on hand applications or inquiries for 146 loans with a loan potential of $52.5 million.

Loans have been made to municipalities in every part of Canada and to communities of every size, from large metropolitan centres to rural municipalities of less than 1,000 population. Nearly 200 municipalities of less than 5,000 population, have been assisted under this program. Loans have also been made to 62 communities with populations of between 5,000 and 25,000 and to 36 cities with populations in excess of 25,000.

It is true the response has not been uniform in all parts of the country. Although loans have been made to municipalities in every province, the bulk of the lending has occurred in two or three provinces, notably Ontario and Saskatchewan. However, applications now on hand show a much wider interest in the use of these facilities. Many other municipalities have indicated their desire to institute effective programs for control of pollution in their area. We have been asked to extend the effective forgiveness date so that municipalities now coming forward with proposals will not be placed at a disadvantage in financing these works.

The government feels that, although we have made considerable progress so far in dealing with the pollution problem, much still remains to be done. Many municipalities face grievous problems and are becoming increasingly aware of the need to take remedial action and of the assistance they can obtain from the federal government. Moreover, it must also be recognized that in some areas and along some waterways not all municipalities have yet taken advantage of the legislation. Thus, although some individual towns and cities have undertaken construction of treatment plants to alleviate the problem in their immediate environment, this alone is not sufficient to restore the purity of the river itself. To do this, all municipalities—both upstream and downstream—must take steps to treat their sewage adequately. For these reasons the government is recommending this further amendment to the act.

Under the terms of the bill to be founded on this resolution, the expiry date will be extended to March 31, 1965 and municipalities will be able to take advantage of the 25 per cent rebate on principal and accrued interest, provided their projects are completed by that date. The rebate, of course, will also apply to projects still in course of construction at that time but the amount of forgiveness will be calculated on the work performed prior to March 31, 1965.

Mr. Chairman, when I say the expiry date will extend to March 31, 1965, that refers to the rebate provision which was to expire on March 31, 1963. The program itself, the loan program to municipalities, as I have explained before, by virtue of the 1960 amendment is a continuing feature of the National Housing Act and will continue whether or not portions of the loan are rebated.

It is clear that many municipalities with work now in hand will be unable to complete their projects by next March. Moreover, several communities are in the process of drawing up plans and specifications and will find it difficult to proceed with operations this winter unless they have some certainty as to the effective forgiveness date. I know hon. members will wish to see this vital work expedited, particularly during the off-season months when construction projects can provide substantial additional employment, and that they will consider the bill with the same sense of urgency matching that with which it has been introduced.

I also hope that hon. members will assist not only the government but their municipalities or their regions by drawing to the attention of all municipal and district councils the fact that the rebate provision has now been extended, and thus encourage their municipalities to take advantage of the loan provision as well as the rebate provision.

Mr. Garland: Mr. Chairman, we on this side have been looking forward to the introduction of this legislation, because some of us were hoping to make contributions to the debate which would normally follow in connection with the National Housing Act and certain aspects of it which we feel could be improved and should be improved at this time. However, in order to co-operate with the government, and in the spirit we have seen during the last half hour in the house, we are willing to forgo that and say our position is exactly the same as I outlined it in the house on November 2 when the minister made the anouncement.

We are most anxious to do whatever we can to co-operate in facilitating the passage of this legislation through the house. Perhaps the minister himself recognizes one of the weaknesses of this particular legislation is the piecemeal aspect of it, covering a year or two at a time. The establishment of a municipal loan fund would enable municipalities which have projects urgently needing to be done to plan years in advance. The people are there to do these projects and we believe that the municipal loan fund, as suggested by my leader more than four years ago, is the answer to helping municipalities. However, I shall deal with that subject on another occasion. All I wish to say now is that we are pleased to co-operate in getting the legislation through the house this afternoon.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): Mr. Chairman, I would like to take just one moment also to applaud the extension that the minister has announced today. I believe this certainly shows a much more proper approach to this problem than we have seen in the past. I think the tremendous pressure for this extension that has been generated all across the country should prove to the minister and the government that you cannot deal with problems like this in the ad hoc way that has been used in the past. To do a proper job in this field it has to be done over a long period of time. You cannot expect a one-year program, with all the necessary planning and preparatory work required, to be as successful as it will be now this extension has been made.

The minister mentioned the successful way in which this fund has been used in the past. I think further successes will be demonstrated over the next two years which will again prove to this government, or whatever government there might happen to be at that time, that this particular program and the method of carrying it out should be broadened and lengthened. It is something that could well become a permanent feature in projects of this nature. Mr. Chairman, I will not take up any more time of the committee. I am also imbued with what seems to be the spirit prevalent in this house today, to get on with the business.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, we want to co-operate in expediting the passage of this bill. I wish to say to the committee, however, that this party has for years advocated a municipal development bank undertaken by the federal government through the Bank of Canada, and on an appropriate occasion we hope we can have an opportunity to explain our position fully in this regard.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I should like to say a few words in order to keep a promise made to some constituents of mine. I shall be very brief. I may say, Mr. Chairman, that little did I think when I listened to the minister's father, who was then a minister in the provincial government of British Columbia, talk about public works—mostly roads at that time—that in 1962 in this house I would listen to his son, who was not then born.

The members of this group support the principle of this resolution and its purpose. We will have a great deal more to say at the appropriate time with respect to further amendments required to the housing act. I was interested in the minister's emphasis on the need to prevent pollution of rivers and the conservation of natural resources. I am sure we are all behind everything the government does in this respect. This also applies to the prevention of destruction of wildlife. Also, I hope he applies that principle to a very large river in my constituency and saves a great deal of the wildlife that is in imminent danger of destruction, if certain things occur.

I rise particularly to mention the plight of a number of small villages in my constituency—some 20 of them—some incorporated, some unincorporated. I presume the same problem occurs in other constituencies. These small villages are on numerous occasions denied the opportunity to obtain loans from the corporation on the ground that they have not a sewage disposal system. I understand the minister is giving serious consideration to this problem. There are many such villages in Canada, no doubt, which suffer an injustice under this type of ruling. I am going to give one illustration of a small village some few miles from my home. I refer to the village of Nakusp, one of the historic villages of British Columbia. There the site is excellent; there is a depth of 100 feet of sand upon which the village is situated. The drainage is excellent. Everything is ideal for the installation of septic tanks, and generally speaking the home owners have septic tanks. But some people have applied for loans in a subdivision which is an extension of the village and have been denied loans by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation because there is no sewage disposal system.

Villages of this size will not for many years have the financial capacity to construct sewage systems, possibly for generations. I do urge reconsideration of these regulations so that where it can be proved that there is no hazard to water resources, to health and things of that sort, where the site, soil and drainage are satisfactory, these people living in the smaller places in Canada will have the same opportunity to obtain loans as those who live in the larger centres. That is all I have to say, Mr. Chairman.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Fulton thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-102, to amend the National Housing Act, 1954.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the said bill be read a second time? By leave, now?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Pickersgill: By leave.

Mr. Fulton moved the second reading of the bill.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Chown in the chair.

On clause 1—Reduction of indebtedness where project completed on or before March 31, 1965.

Mr. McMillan: Mr. Chairman, I would ask the minister whether there has been any change in the interest rate to the municipalities lately. What is the interest rate, and has there been any change?

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, there has been no change in the interest rate charged to the municipalities. My recollection is that the rate is 5¼ per cent and we have authority to continue that rate. I would just like to say one other thing, in view of what was said by the hon. member for Nipissing, I know in not a controversial sense, but it may be there is a misunderstanding elsewhere and therefore I would like to clear it up. The hon. member said the fact that we are introducing this amendment shows the necessity for having this on a continuing basis. May I emphasize again that the program is a permanent feature of the national housing legislation. There is now a provision, which will carry on on a permanent basis, for the making of loans to municipalities of two thirds of the capital costs of sewage treatment projects. The only temporary feature is the rebate provision, whereby certain portions of the loan are remitted. That is the only portion that is temporary and it is now extended to 1965 as an incentive to urge municipalities to get a good start on these undertakings.

Mr. Garland: Mr. Chairman, without in any way wishing to impede the progress we are making, I would say that it was not a misunderstanding in regard to the legislation. I was saying that the establishment of a municipal loan fund to provide assistance in connection with capital costs through long term, low interest rates, as suggested four years ago by this party, is a better answer to this problem of helping the municipalities, because not only are sewage projects required but there is a shelf of projects of all kinds that could be undertaken by the municipalities. People continue to be unemployed and many of them could be doing this kind of work.

Clause agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

The Deputy Speaker: When shall the bill be read the third time? By consent, now?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Fulton moved the third reading of the bill.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

CANADIAN WORLD EXHIBITION CORPORATION

MEASURE TO PROVIDE FOR THE APPOINTMENT OF DIRECTORS, GRANT OF FUNDS, ETC.

Mr. Churchill: At this stage when there are just a few minutes remaining to us there is an item of business to be dealt with which is of great interest to the house generally. It is the resolution in Votes and Proceedings dealing with the proposal concerning the Canadian World Exhibition Corporation looking forward to the world's fair. If the house will consider this resolution now and carry it to first reading, the bill could be distributed after the adjournment and would be available for consideration in the other stages tomorrow.

We have about 15 minutes left to us now and if the sponsor of the resolution could introduce it and leave a little time for one spokesman from each party to say a few words as we could perhaps have first reading by six o'clock.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am sorry but I do not think we can agree to that proposal by the leader of the house. We can, however, make an alternative suggestion which I think is very much better. That is the one which the four parties have discussed. I think we should proceed without any debate at all to the first reading of this bill right away so that the bill might be available overnight. Then the minister and anyone else who is interested could make speeches on second reading. It seems to me there is no quarrel on the principle of holding a world's fair and we would be very glad if all parties would agree to this suggestion. My hon. friend from Laurier was to have spoken on this matter, and there was no agreement that it would be debated today. But if the minister would like to get his bill distributed, and if everybody agrees to bring the bill to that stage, we would be happy to co-operate.

We would then be able to go back into committee of supply and it might be possible to complete supply by six o'clock. It would certainly give anyone who wished to speak for the government a chance to speak.

Mr. Sevigny: In view of the urgency of getting this magnificent project under way I certainly would be agreeable to the suggestion made by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate that first reading be given now without debate.

Mr. Knowles: Inasmuch as unanimous consent is required in order that this motion, which has not yet reached the order paper, may be moved, we are prepared to give that consent in order that the resolution may be put through, with or without debate. Then the bill could be read a first time and printed.

Mr. Patterson: As far as the Social Credit group is concerned, that would be satisfactory and we would go along with the suggestion.

Mr. Churchill: With regard to the other proposal put forward by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, there was no discussion or agreement about reverting to supply immediately the other matter has gone through. There was no consultation with regard to that. The suggestion that supply might be concluded in the next five or ten minutes lacks credibility, I am afraid. Of course, we would like to complete supply but hon. gentlemen opposite did not inform me of that possibility at two o'clock today.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): We want to get on with the job.

Mr. Churchill: If the house wishes to consider them I shall bring forward two small items which might be dealt with. There is, for example, the Coal Production Act—

Mr. Pickersgill: I think we ought to go back to supply. Of course, we do not want to tell the government what to do in these matters. If they do not want to go back into supply they can bring forward any measure they like. However, we, for our part, would like to go back to supply. We stand by our offer to put through this Montreal matter without debate, but not with debate, to the stage of first reading of the bill.

Mr. Churchill: I agree, then, to proceed with the world's fair proposition without debate and to get first reading. Then we would carry on with it tomorrow. But I would then ask the house to give consideration to the Coal Production Act as the next item.

Mr. Patterson: When I said we were prepared to go along with the suggestion made, I was speaking of this particular measure. I did not have it in mind that we would proceed with any other particular item.

Mr. Knowles: Let us get on with this resolution and then see where we are.

Hon. Pierre Sevigny (for the Prime Minister) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution which has been recommended to the house by His Excellency.

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to establish a Canadian World Exhibition Corporation and to provide for the appointment of its directors and staff; to provide that the Minister of Finance may, out of the consolidated revenue fund, pay to the corporation by way of grant such amounts not exceeding twenty million dollars as are required for the purposes of the corporation; to provide also that the governor in council may authorize the Minister of Finance on behalf of Her Majesty to enter into a joint guarantee with Her Majesty in right of the province of Quebec of the principal amount of any securities issued by the corporation and of the interest thereon in such form and subject to such terms and conditions as may be approved by the governor in council and the lieutenant governor in council of Quebec; to provide further for temporary loans to the corporation out of the consolidated revenue fund, the aggregate of which loans outstanding at any time shall not exceed one million dollars; and to provide further for other related and incidental matters.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Chown in the chair.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Sevigny thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-103 to establish the Canadian World Exhibition Corporation.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

Mr. Pickersgill: I should like to make another appeal to the leader of the house to go back into committee of supply.

Mr. Churchill: Item No. 5 on the order paper.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Don't you want to pass supply?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): You are very helpful.

COAL PRODUCTION ASSISTANCE ACT

ADJUSTMENT OF RATE AND TERMS OF REPAYMENT

The house in committee on Bill No. C-64, to amend the Coal Production Assistance Act —Mr. Martineau—Mr. Chown in the chair.

Clauses 1 to 3 inclusive agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

FREIGHT RATES REDUCTION ACT

AMENDMENTS EXTENDING APPLICATION AND INCREASING EXPENDITURES

The house in committee on Bill C-91, to amend the Freight Rates Reduction Act—Mr. Balcer—Mr. Chown in the chair.

On clause 1—Extension of time.

(Translation):

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, at the outset of my remarks on this bill, I wish to point out that in the committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines, they managed to rush the bill through Monday morning. In fact, the committee met at 9.30 a.m. and at 9.32 a.m. the bill had been rushed through although the members had not had time to get there. Things were rushed because it was realized that there was increasing objections to the government interfering with the trucking private enterprise.

Indeed, it was mentioned in the committee that the C.N.R. received each year quite substantial grants to reduce its freight rates while at the same time it entered into competition with private trucking companies.

That is a strange way of spending public funds. Money is taken from the Canadian taxpayer's pocket and handed over to a crown corporation which uses it to compete with private enterprise.

Mr. Chairman, we protest of course against that policy, all the more since the C.N.R. has entered that field, in the province of Quebec, without securing a permit from the Quebec transport board. And what does the C.N.R. say in reply to such facts? Here it is: We went into that field; proceedings were taken against us before the courts of the province of Qubec; let us wait and see what the courts will decide.

In my opinion, when the federal government allows the C.N.R. to do that, it sets a bad precedent.

Mr. Chairman, if all the citizens of Canada were to say: Let us disobey the law, let us try to get around it; if we do not get caught, we will continue. Or else, if they said: Let us try and disobey the law, whatever it is, and even if the courts rule that we are doing wrong, we will have benefited from it during two years.

That is exactly what the C.N.R. is doing now with its trucking business in the province of Quebec. It never obtained any permit from the transport board, but it operates that business none the less.

What would you think of a private firm which would start operating a television station without having obtained a licence from the board of broadcast governors and which would say: "If we do not get a licence, we shall stop operations", while keeping on with its broadcasts. It would be surprising to see how quickly the board of broadcast governors would put a stop to such proceedings.

Under this bill, we go further than that. The people's money is given to the C.N.R. to enable it to violate the law in the province of Quebec by entering into competition with private business.

I think that the members of parliament cannot, in all conscience, vote funds to that end. That is why we are opposed to the principle of voting money to help the C.N.R. compete with the very people from whom those funds are collected. After all, this money is taken in the form of taxes from the trucking companies in the province of Quebec and handed out to the C.N.R. so that it can compete with those same companies.

We have always claimed that this was socialism.

Mr. Chairman, socialist policy consists in imposing taxes on the people to enable the government to go into business, and once in business, it taxes the people in order to make up its own deficits. Such is socialism.

We are again asked today to vote money in order to help the government compete with private enterprise, whether such competition is illegal or not. Indeed, the C.N.R. is doing just that at present in the province of Quebec.

And we are expected to keep on voting money for the government and to take that money away from the taxpayers. We are entirely against it.

Mr. Chairman, we agreed to hasten adoption of the preceding bills, but as far as this one is concerned, we are definitely against it. If we think of what this has permitted in the past, more precisely a constant interference by the government in fields where private enterprise is doing very well, we are surely not to be expected now to help make things worse.

Mr. Chairman, legislation like this one is being passed, and we are told that they are just temporary measures for a period of only 12 months. After 12 months, we are asked again to extend their application. After a further period of 12 months, the same thing happens over again. As a matter of fact, the situation keeps repeating itself.

For how many years shall we have to vote public funds to make up the C.N.R. deficits, in addition to the $65 million this company is already getting, without mentioning the $50 million which were passed at full speed the other day?

Today we are asked to vote $25 million. Those amounts are all for the C.N.R. How long will this be kept up.

Mr. Chairman, first we must put some order in the administration of the C.N.R., otherwise, similar measures will keep coming before us.

Mr. Chairman, I believe it is six o'clock. Do you wish that I continue or should we call it six o'clock?

(Text):

The Chairman: Order. It being six o'clock—

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, if a few minutes would enable the hon. gentleman to complete his remarks and we could pass this bill, it might be worth while letting him continue.

(Translation):

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, I must say that this will take at least an hour and a half, two hours or even more.

(Text):

Mr. Pickersgill: Who is holding up the business now?

The Chairman: Shall I rise, report progress, and request leave to sit again at the next sitting of the house?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause 1 stands.

Progress reported.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: At five o'clock the chairman of the committee of supply rose without obtaining leave for the committee to sit again. In order to complete that procedural requirement, the house will now resume the business which was interrupted at five o'clock.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Chown in the chair.

INTERIM SUPPLY

Resolved, that a sum not exceeding $330,089,511.93 being the aggregate of—

(a) one twelfth of the total of the amounts of the items set forth in the revised estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1963, laid before the House of Commons at the present session of parliament, except atomic energy item 5, Canadian Broadcasting Corporation item 5, finance items 45 and 50, forestry item 11, labour item 40, legislation items 30 and 35, mines and technical surveys items 30, 35, 40, 70, 80, 125 and 130, national defence item 70, national health and welfare item 25, northern affairs and national resources items 10, 45 and 90, public works items 5, 45, 70, 100, 105, 125, 145, 168, 170, 180, 190 and 200, Royal Canadian Mounted Police items 5, 15 and 25, transport items 35, 40, 60, 80, 85, 100, 125, 222 and 225, loans investments and advances item L20 $292,175,958;

(b) an additional one twelfth of the amounts of defence production item 25, external affairs item 5, northern affairs and national resources item 105, of the said revised estimates, $1,842,041.67;

(c) one twelfth of the total of the amounts of the items set forth in the supplementary estimates (A) for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1963, except external affairs item 112a, transport items 213a and 222a, $8,738,178.92;

(d) ten twelfths of the total of the amounts of the items set forth in the supplementary estimates (B) for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1963, $27,333,333.34, be granted to Her Majesty on account of the present fiscal year ending March 31, 1963.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, in view of the harmony and co-operation that have been manifest this afternoon—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: —could the house leader indicate what the government hopes to accomplish tomorrow and the order in which it hopes to accomplish it?

Mr. Churchill: The most important piece of business tomorrow, after we take third reading of the bill based on the resolution which is No. 21 on today's order paper is, of course, interim supply, so that we can get the appropriation bill through and have the other house consider it. By long odds that is the most important. The second item to which we would like to give our attention is the bill based on the resolution pertaining to the world's fair. If time permits, other items of business will be called accordingly, but there will be a chance tomorrow to consult and see what progress we are making.

Mr. Pickersgill: I just want to make sure that I understand clearly and that the house does. I understand that third reading of the bill respecting the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements Act will be taken first; then we will go into committee of supply and take supply until that is completed, and then take the Montreal bill.

Mr. Churchill: That is correct—the world's fair bill.

It being five minutes after six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, December 20, 1962

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

BANKING AND COMMERCE

Fourth report of standing committee on banking and commerce—Mr. Aiken.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

CHRISTMAS ADJOURNMENT DECEMBER 20 TO JANUARY 21

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, on December 6, as recorded at page 2371 of Hansard, following consideration with the leaders of the several parties, I discussed the question as to when the Christmas adjournment should take place. At that time I stated that following that discussion the adjournment of the house would take place on December 20 and the house would reassemble on Monday, January 21. Now, sir, with the unanimous consent of the house I move:

That when this house adjourns on Thursday, December 20, at 10 o'clock p.m. it stand adjourned until 2.30 p.m. on Monday, January 21.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, it is quite true, as the Prime Minister has said, that on December 6 following consultation with the leaders of the parties the Prime Minister announced in the house that, and I quote his words, "on the basis of the progress being made," the house would reassemble on January 21.

It is also true, Mr. Speaker, that yesterday I suggested for consideration by the government, which alone has the responsibility in this matter, that on the basis of progress made as of December 19, if there were economic legislation ready to be brought forward so that we could face the problems of the country with that legislation, we should meet at an earlier date.

The Prime Minister has now made a motion, which is the original proposal, that we should reassemble on January 21. If the Prime Minister had moved that we should reassemble at an earlier date for the purpose I have mentioned, we on this side would have been glad to support that motion. But the motion has been made by the Prime Minister on behalf of the government, which alone has the responsibility of ordering the business of this house; therefore, as there is no other motion before the house, we will stand by the original agreement.

Mr. A. B. Patterson (Fraser Valley): Mr. Speaker, as far as this group are concerned we recognize the agreement that was entered into some days ago, and of course we fit in with the plan that has been announced. On behalf of our group I would just like to express to each and every hon. member, including yourself, Your Honour, the very best for the Christmas season.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Motion agreed to.

PUBLIC SERVICE

ROYAL COMMISSION REPORT—ANNOUNCEMENT OF STAFF TO CONSIDER RECOMMENDATIONS

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I should like to announce the arrangements that have been made to assemble a staff of senior officers of the public service to work directly with Senator McCutcheon, Minister without Portfolio, on measures to implement the recommendations of the royal commission on government organization, with particular reference to the views expressed in those recommendations by Mr. Therrien, one of the commissioners.

The group will be headed by Dr. G. F. Davidson, deputy minister of citizenship and immigration, who is to be seconded to the privy council and will work full time on this program. He will be assisted by Dr. Jacques Miquelon, under secretary of state, who will devote such portion of his time as is necessary to this program and will carry on his other duties as well, and Mr. John A. MacDonald, assistant secretary of treasury board, who is being seconded to the privy council for this purpose. Mr. Henry Hindley and Mr. Yeomans, who were on Mr. Glassco's central staff throughout the course of the inquiry, have been appointed in the privy council office to participate in this work. It is expected that other officers will be assigned to take part as well.

This group of senior officers will work closely with the cabinet committee that is dealing with this matter as well as with individual ministers, departments and agencies in order to ensure that the recommendations of the royal commission are thoroughly considered and, when approved, are put into effect. Hon. members will recall that on November 29 I announced that I expected that most of the recommendations will be carried out at the earliest possible date, and that Senator McCutcheon had been designated as the minister responsible for the appraisal and implementation of the reports. I should also add, as I said a moment ago, that in so far as the recommendations are concerned, to bring about to the largest degree possible the spirit of the constitution of this country, the recommendations of Mr. Therrien will receive the fullest consideration.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, in the light of the statement just made by the Prime Minister may I ask him whether he has given any consideration to the suggestion and the statement made by the Leader of the Opposition in the course of the debate on interim supply, concerning an inquiry into the public service with reference to biculturalism and consultation with the provinces?

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. J. McIlraith (Ottawa West): I should like to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister. In view of his announcement earlier this afternoon about the organization of administrative personnel under the direction of Senator McCutcheon as the minister to implement the Glassco commission report, will he advise the house what minister will be answerable in the House of Commons for questions relating to this subject?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister or any other minister will gladly answer questions.

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Will he inform the house who will assume the duties of the deputy minister of citizenship and immigration during the period when Dr. Davidson is engaged with other duties which the Prime Minister announced today?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, that announcement will be made at the appropriate time.

HOUSING

C.M.H.C.—LENDING POLICY RESPECTING RENTAL PROJECTS

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, on two occasions recently I have made announcements covering amendments to or revisions of policy under the National Housing Act. Today I should like to make a further announcement concerning the lending policy of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation with respect to rental housing.

By way of background I should say that in recent years government policy on direct lending by the corporation under section 40 of the National Housing Act has been primarily concerned with the home ownership field. The results have been spectacular.

In August of 1957 the government extended direct lending by the corporation, under an agency arrangement with the approved lenders, to all centres of population for home owner applicants, for builders and, for a short time, to rental entrepreneurs. This move immediately injected some $150 million into housing at a time when it was beneficial to prospective home owners, to families desiring to rent accommodation, to builders, to manufacturers and to the economy in general.

I do not propose to review all the details of government policy concerning direct lending by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation at that time or in the years from 1957 to January, 1961. However, it will be remembered that the government's program was so successful that parliament was asked for an additional $150 million late in 1957, and even this amount was virtually exhausted by early April of 1958, necessitating a suspension of the arrangement until the government could seek the approval of more funds at the next session of parliament.

Additional funds were approved by parliament in May of 1958, when the statutory vote was increased to $750 million from $400 million, and on three additional occasions the government again asked parliament to vote increases to meet continuing demand for direct corporation loans. In March of 1959 the vote was increased to $1 billion, in March, 1960 to $1.5 billion and in September, 1961 to $2 billion.

At the same time the lending institutions have been extremely active and have injected massive amounts of money and consequent construction activities into the fields of both ownership and rental accommodation. The results of all these activities are reflected in the record numbers of housing starts and completions over the past four or five years. However, the activities of the lending institutions have been primarily, although not exclusively, confined to the major urban centres of population. As a result the requirements for both ownership and rental accommodation in these areas have been pretty well met. Indeed, some concern is now being expressed about the high number of units for rent or sale in our major population centres.

In the smaller communities, however, the activities of the lending institutions have been much more limited and in some cases non-existent. Their funds have, generally speaking, been fully committed to the larger centres where large scale demand exists and administrative costs are correspondingly low. The direct lending activities of C.M.H.C. have filled the gaps quite adequately for home ownership units in the smaller communities, but the confinement of the corporation's undertaking to this field has undoubtedly left appreciable needs to be filled in the area of rental accommodation in such communities.

The result has been that substandard housing is developing, especially in the fringe areas of smaller communities, more especially as industries move in or expand and people are compelled to get what accommodation they can find. Many hon. members will be aware of the problem of "shantytown" developments on the fringe areas which our municipalities find difficult or impossible to control.

After giving serious consideration to this problem and the representations received, the government has decided that a limited extension of the rental lending activities of C.M.H.C. under section 40 of the act would provide a substantial solution. Accordingly the corporation has been authorized to consider applications for direct loans for privately sponsored rental housing projects where the applicant can establish that he has been unable to proceed with an otherwise acceptable project because of inability to obtain a loan from the approved lenders.

Therefore, effective immediately, direct National Housing Act loans for rental projects will be made available in all Canadian communities where, in the opinion of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, a need for rental housing exists that is not being met by the approved lenders under the act. These direct loans will be made on the same terms and conditions, and subject to the same limitations, as those upon which a loan may be made under the provisions of part I of the National Housing Act.

I am confident that this authority for C.M.H.C. to make direct loans for rental projects will prove to be an important factor in meeting the present shortage of rental accommodation in many Canadian communities, and in improving general living conditions. It is estimated that the demand for funds for this purpose will be approximately $15 million each year.

Mr. J. R. Garland (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker, we have just seen an example of the way the government operates in making these announcements. Today the minister has made the speech which he might well have made yesterday. In so doing he has precluded the opposition from making any comment on, or dealing in any way with, the inadequacy of the government's housing program, and the inadequacy of the out-dated National Housing Act.

Without in any way commenting on the announcement today about rental lending we will have an opportunity, I suppose, at some distant time in the future of discussing this particular piece of legislation.

An hon. Member: We hope.

Mr. Garland: Yes, we hope. Perhaps it will be in charge of another minister at another time; it may be during another parliament; who is to know. However, I think we might well have expected some announcement today from the minister re existing units before branching off into another field, although in this sense I am not condemning the action proposed. But there are a great many fields not taken care of. I am thinking of all the rural communities across the country, the needs of which have not been met under the terms of the National Housing Act. I think of the fishermen and all the people across the country who are at the moment unable to take advantage of the National Housing Act.

Mr. Horace A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, we welcome this announcement because we in this party are keenly aware of the fact that there are some, in fact a great many, anomalies in the matter of assessments and valuations as between various communities which appear to us to warrant equal consideration so far as the percentage of loans required is concerned. Some small urban communities are assessed at lower levels in the determination of the maximum mortgage available. We welcome the announcement that Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation will now enter the field of direct lending in order to help some of these smaller communities, and we hope this will correct some of the problems I have outlined.

Mr. M. W. Martin (Timmins): Mr. Speaker, in welcoming both the announcement made by the minister and the short review he has given of the workings of this act over the past few years, I should like to say that I think it illustrates very well once again what happens when the government takes the lead in a certain field. That is something which could very well be extended to other departments of the gouvernement. This shows how, once the government takes the lead, it stimulates even private interests and generates benefit to the country as a whole.

I hope we can look forward to an announcement by the minister before too long that the benefits of this act will be made applicable to houses already built in order that they may be improved, instead, as is the case now, of having to go to another source for a short term bank loan. I think this is something which could very well attack one of the major problems of this country, that of slum housing. I think if this act were broadened and extended to this field it would be of great benefit to the country.

TRANSPORT

RAILWAY BRANCH LINES—STATEMENT ON POLICY RESPECTING ABANDONMENT

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, a number of questions have been raised regarding applications filed by the two major railways for branch line abandonments in the western provinces, particularly as they may affect elevator and grain interests. The suggestion has been advanced that all abandonment cases should be brought to a halt pending over-all examination of the situation.

The government in the speech from the throne made known its intent to present legislation arising out of recommendations of the recent royal commission on transportation. The recommendations of the commission have a major bearing upon the matter of branch line abandonment and procedures in relation thereto.

In view of this situation the Minister of Agriculture and I met with the presidents of Canadian Pacific and Canadian National Railways to consider how, in the interests of all parties, a series of precipitate and unorganized abandonment applications might be avoided. The railway presidents are sympathetic to the problem and have indicated their complete willingness to assist in trying to effect an appropriate solution.

Applications for branch line abandonments in western Canada presently filed with the board of transport commissioners and those which may be filed are designed to allow western interests to obtain an over-all picture. To this end my colleague the Minister of Agriculture has arranged that we and the two railway presidents meet on January 3 or January 4 with representatives of the western pool elevators and the elevator companies in order to discuss possible procedures. While a very few cases already well advanced may proceed, the great majority will not be dealt with in any precipitate fashion and will be handled in a manner which will permit a proper over-all review by the board with the interested parties at the appropriate time and in the appropriate manner.

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, we have listened with a good deal of interest to the statement which has been made by the Minister of Transport. The nub of the statement is that applications now before the board of transport commissioners for railway line abandonment may be proceeded with even though some discussions will be taking place later, after which a plan for abandonment in a more orderly fashion may or may not be formulated.

We wish to protest the failure of the government to act in providing a suspension of these proceedings. In our opinion it is most unjust and most unfair that applications now before the board should be proceeded with when an overall policy at some later date might make a much better provision for railway services than would be made if this piecemeal, hit and miss policy is continued. We express the hope that out of the meeting to which the minister has referred there may in fact come—although we are not sure that this will be the result—some policy or some plan of rationalization which, in addition to providing railway services on a continuing and adequate basis, will bear in mind the needs of Canadians for the maintenance of adequate services and for consideration of their economic position.

The recommendations of the royal commission with regard to branch line abandonments and all the recommendations associated with them add up, we feel, to something that should not be proceeded with holus bolus in the manner which has been recommended. We shall have further comments to make on these questions when the occasion arises.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I am not as familiar with policies of abandonment as is the hon. member for Assiniboia.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Argue: May I tell the hon. member—

An hon. Member: Sit down.

Mr. Argue: —that he is following on a line of no services.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think we understand the procedure at this time. It should be that of fair comment on the announcements which are made on motions. These are not debates.

Mr. Argue: Tell us about the Regina railway station.

Mr. Hellyer: Did not the hon. member abandon his home province of Saskatchewan?

Mr. Argue: Who abandoned Regina and Saskatchewan?

Mr. Douglas: I beg Your Honour's pardon if I have transgressed either the rules of the house or the spirit of Christmas. I should like to commend the minister for the statement he has made. I am glad that some steps are going to be taken to see that no precipitate action is going to be taken in respect of these applications that are now being considered by the board of transport commissioners.

However, I suggest to the minister and to the government that the mere attempt to prevent precipitate action will not assuage the fears that are prevalent in many communities, and I would hope the government could persuade both the railways and the board of transport commissioners to give definite assurance that they will not proceed with any of these applications which are now being discussed by the board of transport commissioners. I believe that today the premiers of the three prairie provinces and the representatives of farm organizations on the prairies are meeting in the city of Regina to discuss this very important matter.

I would remind the minister it is not only grain elevators which are adversely affected but many other places of business in many communities, the dwellings and the assets which those communities have. I would hope that at a very early date some over-all plan to carry out some of the recommendations of the royal commission on transportation will be brought before the house.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Horace A. Olson (Medicine Hat): I should like to address a question to the Minister of Transport, in view of the very important statement he made today in respect of railway lines in western Canada. I should like to ask him whether the federal government has representatives at the meeting which is being held today in Regina between the provincial governments and the wheat pools.

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): No, Mr. Speaker.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

TABLING OF REPORT OF GILL COMMITTEE

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I wish to table two copies, in English and in French, of the report of the committee of inquiry into the Unemployment Insurance Act.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): At last.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I should like at the same time to say how grateful the government is to the chairman, Ernest Gill, and to the commissioners, Etienne Crevier, John J. Deutsch and J. Richards Petrie; to the secretary, Richard Humphrys, as well as to counsel, for the presentations that have been made and the attention given by this commission to this very important matter.

Mr. Speaker: By leave of the house the right hon. gentleman is tabling the report of the committee on unemployment insurance. Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING BROADCASTING OF POLITICAL PROGRAMS

Mr. Harry C. Harley (Halton) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-104, to amend the Canada Elections Act (political programs).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Harley: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to clarify a clause in the Canada Elections Act in order to bring that act into line with the Broadcasting Act as it applies to political broadcasting.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

(Translation):

VOCATIONAL TRAINING

ASSISTANCE TO PROVINCES IN TECHNICAL SCHOOL CONSTRUCTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Maurice Rinfret (St. James): Mr. Speaker, my question is intended for the Minister of Labour and I sent him notice of it.

Could the Minister of Labour tell the house whether his department will maintain its assistance program to the provinces for the building of technical schools, on the basis of 75 per cent of proposed amounts, after March 31, 1963?

(Text):

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): This is a matter of government policy, Mr. Speaker, and a decision in that regard has not yet been made.

AIR TRANSPORT

APPLICATION BY CANADIAN PACIFIC AIR LINES TO SERVE U.S. WEST COAST

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John R. Nicholson (Vancouver Centre): I have a question I should like to ask the Minister of Transport. On December 7, in answer to a question I put to him, the minister stated that the government had no jurisdiction to interfere with the move of United Air Lines in closing their Vancouver office because it was a matter of internal management. I am advised that Canadian Pacific Air Lines have applied for a licence to permit them to serve the west coast of the United States. My question is, has the minister received any representations from the Vancouver board of trade or other bodies on the west coast supporting the application of Canadian Pacific Air Lines to operate in competition with United Air Lines in that area?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): I shall have to check that with my office, but I can assure my hon. friend right away that the government is making representations to the United States government to amend the bilateral agreement between our two countries to provide more routes for Canadian carriers from Canada to the United States and back.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

RALPH COCHRANE—EXAMINATION BY PRISON PSYCHIATRIST

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice, notice of which I gave him this morning. Has Mr. Cochrane, a prisoner in solitary confinement in Kingston penitentiary for the past 13 months, been examined by the prison psychiatrist? When was the last examination held?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think if we are going to have a series of questions of this nature it would be advantageous to have such questions on the order paper. If the hon. member has a single question I will permit it.

Mr. Orlikow: I would ask one question, then. Has the prison psychiatrist made a report to the warden or the Department of Justice on the possible effects on Mr. Cochrane of this long confinement?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, first I must caution the house against giving their normal meaning to such words as the hon. member has used "solitary confinement for 13 months". So far as this particular inmate is concerned, he has been examined by the psychiatrist and has been found to be in good mental and physical health.

[Mr. Nicholson.]

HEALTH AND WELFARE

SUGGESTED COMMITTEE ON RELATION OF DRUGS TO BIRTH ABNORMALITIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Is the minister giving consideration to the suggestion of a drug firm that a committee of experts be set up to study cases where drugs may be involved in congenital abnormalities?

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, while I was interested to read the suggestions of the drug company in this field, I think the establishment of a separate committee to evaluate reports of drug deformities would be duplication of effort at this stage. There are a number of professional groups conducting surveys most vigorously, particularly with regard to the thalidomide problem. The expert committee of the Royal College of Physicians and Surgeons, which has been looking into the operations of the food and drug directorate, is just preparing its final report, and I hope to have it shortly.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL FISCAL ARRANGEMENTS ACT

AMENDMENTS TO CONFORM TO TAX-SHARING ACT AND INCREASE PAYMENT

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of Finance) moved the third reading of Bill No. C-101, to amend the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements Act and the Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements Act.

(Translation):

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a few comments on the motion for the third reading of the bill concerning the federal-provincial fiscal arrangements.

First of all, I must say that the problem of federal-provincial fiscal arrangements is one which has a particular interest for us. It is an apparent fact that, for some time, new strides towards progress are being made in the province of Quebec. However, such in advance may be hampered by a lack of the income and financial means required.

We are discussing today fiscal arrangements related to the field of education. For some time, that is, for the past three or four weeks, there has been a lot of talk about the educational system of the province of Quebec. Some find it adequate; others say there is much room for improvement. On that point, Mr. Speaker, I should like to mention that the purpose of an educational system is not merely to train businessmen, scientists or engineers, but also to develop in the individual that sense of humanism and that culture which makes him a superior man and enables one to tell a cultured man from one who is not.

Mr. Speaker, a wide educational program is being developed in the province of Quebec. I think the provincial minister of youth deserves credit for the wonderful job being done. As a matter of fact, we support his efforts and wish that such action should continue. But we are afraid that education in our province will be hampered or even stopped because of the lack of funds necessary to develop and carry out that education program.

Mr. Speaker, it is imperative for the provinces to regain their sources of income if they are to develop their educational systems, their road programs, their health schemes and all other matters which come under their jurisdiction.

If we are to adopt a more realistic and efficient scale of values, the province of Quebec must start by demanding the restoration of the province's sources of income.

Those sources of income used to belong to the provinces. However, the federal government took them over during the second world war. We appreciate that the central government was, at the time, justified to ask the provinces to lend it, as it were, their sources of income in order to help it fight the common enemy. However, the war has been over for 17 years and Ottawa has not yet given back to the provinces the sources of income it was supposed to borrow for a few years only.

Mr. Speaker, the government of the day promised to return their sources of income to the provinces—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I would point out to the hon. member that the matter at hand is very limited in scope since it has to do solely with the principle of the measure under consideration. The bill deals with a single matter, that of grants for university education. Under the provisions of Bill C-101, we are not, at the present time, considering the whole problem of fiscal relations between the provinces and the federal government. I therefore ask the hon. gentleman to restrict his comments to the very principle of the bill.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, after having read this bill, one cannot help relating it directly to another one which was adopted earlier during this session, and under which there was granted to some provinces, and more particularly to the province of Quebec, the equivalent of a 50 cents per capita increase. In the bill previously adopted, corporation tax exemptions had been increased by 1 per cent, that amount being handed back to the provinces. In the case of the province of Quebec, in order to compensate for that 50 cents per capita which is now handed back to the universities, that 1 per cent is directly levied by the Quebec government. That is why the bill is entitled: Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements Act, in certain fields, especially education.

That is why, Mr. Speaker, I wanted to deal for a few moments only with those fiscal arrangements which concern us and about which I had been talking for some time: the transfer to the provinces of an additional source of income to help improve education.

Mr. Speaker, I respectfully submit that if we want to respect the spirit of confederation, we must not, as we are still doing today, increase 50 cents by 50 cents, drop by drop, the amount we give to universities, or increase by 1 per cent every two or three years corporation tax exemptions, to hand that percentage back to the provinces, but we must, in a single stroke, hand back to the provinces all sources of income belonging to them.

Mr. Speaker, that is one of the most important problems facing Canada at this time. Reference is made to the unemployment problem and to other problems, but let us not forget that all those problems will be solved by the smaller social cells, those social cells that are nearer to the individuals, and which cannot play their full role at this time on account of existing fiscal arrangements.

It is the federal government which levies all taxes, leaving almost nothing to the provinces and municipalities, so that they cannot face their obligations, as in the case of universities which we are now considering.

I should like to add, furthermore, that it is not because the Liberal party has robbed the provinces of their sources of income that this government should hand back those sources of income drop by drop, as it is now doing. It is that whole system of federal-provincial arrangements on fiscal rights which must be reconsidered. Those are all sources of income belonging to the provinces and which should be handed back to them.

Coming back to the bill, Mr. Speaker, I submit that what is proposed today, that is to say, hand back to the provinces a little part of their rights, is all very well, but we are asking the government to see to it as soon as possible that a commission be set up which will make sure that their sources of income are handed back—and not only considered, because this study has been made a long time ago—to the provinces.

(Text):

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Chown in the chair.

INTERIM SUPPLY

Resolved, that a sum not exceeding $330,089,511.93 being the aggregate of—

(a) one twelfth of the total of the amounts of the items set forth in the revised estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1963, laid before the House of Commons at the present session of parliament, except atomic energy item 5, Canadian Broadcasting Corporation item 5, finance items 45 and 50, forestry item 11, labour item 40, legislation items 30 and 35, mines and technical surveys items 30, 35, 40, 70, 80, 125 and 130, national defence item 70, national health and welfare item 25, northern affairs and national resources items 10, 45 and 90, public works items 5, 45, 70, 100, 105, 125, 145, 168, 170, 180, 190 and 200, Royal Canadian Mounted Police items 5, 15 and 25, transport items 35, 40, 60, 80, 85, 100, 125, 222 and 225, loans investments and advances item L20 $292,175,958;

(b) an additional one twelfth of the amounts of defence production item 25, external affairs item 5, northern affairs and national resources item 105, of the said revised estimates, $1,842,041.67;

(c) one twelfth of the total of the amounts of the items set forth in the supplementary estimates (A) for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1963, except external affairs item 112a, transport items 213a and 222a, $8,738,178.92;

(d) ten twelfths of the total of the amounts of the items set forth in the supplementary estimates (B) for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1963, $27,333,333.34, be granted to Her Majesty on account of the present fiscal year ending March 31, 1963.

(Translation):

Mr. Cote: Mr. Chairman, as a descendant of one of the oldest Canadian families established in this country in 1635, I have always been attached to freedom and I have always been told that nobility and dignity are appropriate in all circumstances. That is why I was astonished last evening to see the systematic obstruction practised by our colleagues sitting on our right against the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Diefenbaker). Even though I do not approve the policies of the Prime Minister and even though I feel that this government has brought forward no immediate cures for the hardship of Canadian families, these hon. members were not entitled to act the way they did, especially when it is a known fact that the Liberals themselves, since the beginning of the session, have delayed the passage of legislation under all sorts of idle pretexts.

An hon. Member: And what are you doing right now?

Mr. Dupuis: You talk like an irresponsible person.

Mr. Cote: On the other hand, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Dupuis: You talk like an irresponsible person.

Mr. Cote: I am generally courteous enough to listen to you, so please let me say what I want to say.

Mr. Dupuis: Be sensible and we shall listen to you.

Mr. Cote: On the other hand, Mr. Chairman, I have heard in this house, these last few days, words that were most pleasant to my French ears, and I want to offer my heartiest congratulations to those who said them, even to the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson).

As far as I am concerned, I have to convey today things that are more abstract. Being myself from the financial world, I want to deal with what I would call the poetry of figures and of money. Listening to the hon. members from the three old parties of social debit, Conservatives, Liberals and socialists—for the socialists are members of an old party which has been in existence for more than 40 years in the world—we Social Crediters can readily see that those hon. members, in spite of their good will, are unable to cope with the budgetary problems which we are now facing, for they are still holding to ancient economical concepts which have long been out-of-date. How can we get out of this social debit era? They do not know the answer, and they do not care to find out, for they would have to study the whole financial system governing the economic life of this country. Yet, the situation is constantly worsening and this is proved by the fact that social debit or general running into debt is increasing at a terrific speed. For example, the total increase in debts in Canada, from 1956 to 1961, has been around $20 billion, or 52 per cent, under both Liberal and Conservative administrations. Figures taken from the statistical supplement of the Bank of Canada show that the federal, provincial, municipal, school, mortgage and personal debts, as well as foreign debts, make up a total of $58,400 billion.

Where are we heading for, Mr. Chairman, with this social debit system, this fateful work of the old parties? Except for the Social Crediters, where are the members of this house who have made positive suggestions which could really put an end to this financial anarchy?

On the other hand, Mr. Chairman, is it possible, with this old financial system of social debit which is defended and protected by the three other parties facing us and on our right, to pay $58 billion in total debts and to see, someday, the end of what is a terrible nightmare for all Canadians, while our money supply is scarcely over $15 billion, divided between $2 billion in currency and approximately $13 billion in credit or bank money issued by commercial banks? No, such a thing is mathematically impossible, because the most important accounting service in this country, that of our Canadian monetary system, does not balance. We do not have enough capital to pay all those debts. Is there anything more ridiculous? It is the acme of aberration.

Does that mean that we have to print banknotes or issue enough credit to make up the difference? Those who believe that Social Credit would act in that way, as our critics seem to anticipate, have but a childish mind or they are totally ignorant of the scientific propositions of the Social Credit system or, again, in deliberately bad faith, which makes three kinds of rather unattractive people. To extricate ourselves from the system of bankruptcy, or social debit, in which we have sunk, the federal state, through the Bank of Canada, has to socialize credit as it socialized currency issues in 1935, by putting some order in the mess of banknote printing, which, at that time, was the exclusive privilege of the chartered banks.

Indeed, before 1934, that is at the time when the Bank of Canada was created, each commercial bank could print its own banknotes, which have been withdrawn from circulation, to the delight of collectors. From 1935 on, the chartered banks had to reduce gradually their banknote issues. In 1934, after the Bank Act was revised, that right was completely revoked, and all Canadians considered it quite normal. There was no revolution in our country, because it was just putting things in order where disorder had prevailed before. It is a remarkable fact that such evolution partly took place under a Liberal administration. Indeed, Mr. Chairman, the Liberals, like the Conservatives, therefore turned Social Crediters at that time, because they also abolished the gold standard in 1940, those two measures having been requested for a long time by the Social Credit party. And what other things does the Social Credit party advocate today? We should act just the same as in 1935 to 1945, this time by socializing credit through the Bank of Canada just as banknote issues were socialized then, for it cannot be accepted that bank and other credit be granted through the private sector of our economy. And, above all, it is not logical that "bank money" referred to by the economist Paul Samuelson should become a debt the moment it is created or issued. We cannot pay a debt claimed on top of the bank credit if a corresponding credit is not created or issued to fill the gap. That is the fundamental reason why debts amount to $58 billion in this country while there is only $15 billion in money supply to repay them.

Now, if we look back over the last 25 years, we note that the currency has increased from $250 million to $2 billion while the money supply was raised from $3 billion to $13 billion, which means that commercial banks created approximately $10 billion in bank money during that period to keep up in some measure with the economic growth of Canada. Well, in the future, under the financial system advocated by the Social Credit party, that creation of credit, of bank money, would be socialized by being handed over to the Bank of Canada, but any new issue would be debt free and done scientifically without having to increase materially—that is most important—the issue of credit or money, precisely because the circulation of money would be reversed so that consumption would be financing production.

Furthermore, through widespread public works which, in political economy, are called social capital expenditures, the government could provide employment for a very substantial labour force, thus enabling all Canadian family heads to obtain the daily bread and the decent livelihood they have a right to expect nowadays. It would not be a question, as our critics wrongly claim, of handing out money recklessly and of encouraging people to lie sunk in sloth. Quite the contrary, those measures would ease the burden of welfare expenditures and the like and would put us on the road to full employment, so that, in view of the many projects awaiting implementation in all parts of the country, we can be sure that under a Social Credit government we could even experience a serious labour shortage. What is obviously holding up the carrying out of those projects is the fantastic amount of interest paid annually on the debts—over $2 billion—which has discouraged any effort to that effect. At present, any new credit or bank money issue is done directly through the producers, with the result that there is an increasing concentration of capital in the hands of a smaller and smaller group, now, it is consumption that should be financed first, but not the way it is being done at present by finance companies at the rate of 24 per cent.

Mr. Chairman, those proposals are acceptable to all the parties in the house and, if I may, I should like to call on members of the three old parties of social debit who are sincerely interested in changing our national economy "to put on the new man" as St. Paul used to say. On the eve of Christmas, I urge them very specially to abandon the old parties of social debit which have led our country into bankruptcy and join the Social Credit party which will lead Canada into an era of prosperity thanks to the wonderful opportunities of modern technique.

(Text):

Mr. Argue: Earlier today the Minister of Transport placed a statement before this house with regard to rail line abandonment and in the course of the discussion the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam said something to the effect that I should know something about abandonment. I noticed the hon. member leave the chamber a moment ago. I wish he was in his seat, because I should like to remind him and his colleagues in the house that he and I both had the honour to represent an area in Saskatchewan, he in the provincial legislature and I in the federal parliament for a number of years. When he decided to leave the provincial field, it was he who abandoned the people of Assiniboia as a candidate for the New Democratic party, not I as a candidate for the Liberal party. I ran in my own constituency. I do not say he abandoned the constituency of Regina. Rather, the people of the constituency of Regina abandoned the hon. member, and he had to seek shelter elsewhere in order to get into this chamber.

[Mr. Cote.]

Now we are all on edge this afternoon wondering whether we are going to hear from the Prime Minister. Yesterday afternoon the Leader of the Opposition delivered a most constructive speech in which he put forward certain proposals which, if they had been accepted, would have helped to expedite the business before this house, proposals which would have helped us to get on with the legislation which the government claims is so important. The Prime Minister rose a few seconds before five o'clock. Your Honour took notice of the clock, but the Prime Minister wished to make a statement and insisted, as best he could in those difficult circumstances. An effort was made a few minutes afterwards—after the Prime Minister had endeavoured to speak—by the Leader of the Opposition, who said this as reported in Hansard at page 2837:

> Mr. Speaker, it should be possible to get these three measures through very quickly and I should like to suggest if they are through by half past five or a quarter to six we revert to interim supply.

To this the Prime Minister replied:

> Mr. Speaker, in view of the sudden change of front and change of conscience, that offer is no longer acceptable.

We concluded those items by a quarter to six. The Prime Minister did not accept that offer. One wonders whether the Prime Minister really wanted to speak yesterday afternoon, or whether he was more preoccupied in trying to play the role of martyr if he could pull it off. When the story got to the press this morning I suppose he came in this afternoon and said "Well, I have done the job. They are saying that I was stopped from speaking". The Prime Minister had the opportunity to speak yesterday afternoon, but he did not avail himself of that opportunity.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Argue: Then, of course, overnight something apparently happened to the Prime Minister's schedule. He was going to fly to Nassau, but Prime Minister Macmillan and President Kennedy had important discussions for which they needed additional time, and the Prime Minister's departure was very conveniently delayed for a number of hours. One would have thought that the Prime Minister, so anxious to speak yesterday afternoon and to answer the constructive speech of the Leader of the Opposition, would come into this house today and take the first opportunity of speaking. We are disappointed that he did not.

Mr. Churchill: You are just lucky.

Mr. Argue: The Minister of Veterans Affairs says we are lucky.

Mr. Churchill: I said that you are.

Mr. Argue: We would like to hear what the Prime Minister has to say. We challenge him to enter the debate this afternoon and tell us why the government has bogged down and has not been able to manage the affairs of this country in a more competent manner.

Mr. Rapp: You are the ones who prevented him from speaking.

Mr. Argue: If the Prime Minister would come in now I am sure that we would be delighted to hear him. He does not have to leave for a day. He has unlimited time and can speak for hours today. But the Prime Minister is sulking. He was not able to speak yesterday when he wanted to speak, and now he says that if he could not speak when we were to take up other matters, he is not going to speak at all. That is a rather childish performance, I suggest a rather juvenile performance, for the Prime Minister of this country. We are going away for a recess, but before we go we hope the Prime Minister will make some contribution to this debate.

We shall come back when the house reassembles to deal with important questions which we hope will be placed before this house. We have had a number of supply motions. We have had a number of want of confidence motions. I suggest that there is one question in the minds of the people of this country, and that is this. In the interests of good government and in the interests of democratic government we should have a government on the treasury benches that has a majority. The sooner the people of Canada are given the opportunity to deal with the situation which now prevails in this house, the better. We would welcome an appeal to the people at the earliest possible moment, as soon as the Prime Minister can gather the people around him who will encourage him to make this kind of decision.

We have had evidence in this house this session of the incompetence of the government, of the failure of the government to bring forward legislation in a regular manner which would deal with the pressing problems facing the country. The government has not acted in a way which would inspire confidence. The Canadian people have been told by cabinet ministers one thing one day and another thing another day. The Minister of Agriculture, who probably speaks more glibly than any other minister, has gone out and said there is a danger of credit losses on wheat sales. He has said "We want you to put up some money". He has said "I am having trouble with the cabinet. I cannot get these things through the cabinet. If you would help me by putting up some of the farmers' money, it would help me do a better job". Then he said "Oh, it is the opposition parties who are holding me up". He named two, and later said he had picked the wrong two, that it was another two.

The third reason for his difficulties, according to a report I have read, was that he said he was having trouble in the cities. The latest thing he came up with was when he said that there was a campaign against credit sales which was making it difficult, and that the campaign was coming from the island of Formosa.

I think the Minister of Agriculture has used every possible excuse or alibi for the proposals he has made, none of which has been accepted by any major farm organization as being workable. The chairman of the Canadian wheat board has turned down these proposals; he has said that he did not think they were workable in the international field. The Saskatchewan wheat pool has turned them down as not realistically workable. The stock of the Conservative party on the prairies in the last federal election was very high, but I suggest that the stock of the Conservative party on the prairies is not nearly as high today. Part of the reason that it is not nearly as high today is the confusion in the mind of the Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. McIntosh: Nonsense.

Mr. Argue: I would remind my friend from Swift Current-Maple Creek that the recent changes in the percentage of popular vote in the various constituencies of Manitoba as registered in a provincial election are definite proof that what I say is absolutely correct. I make the statement that if the Liberal party could come within six percentage points of the Conservative vote when the provincial party has been led by Premier Duff Roblin, the Liberal party will have far greater strength in the next federal election in Manitoba when the Conservative party is led by its present federal leader.

We have tried to get frank statements from the government about various policies. We think the government has very important decisions which should be made. We are not impressed by the competence of this administration. One of the matters which have been brought forward time after time in the present debate is the question of the Columbia river. It has been stated that the government bungled, that the government did not protect legitimate Canadian rights. There have been recent negotiations with regard to the export of Canadian oil to the United States. Certain negotiations were held the other day. The President of the United States some weeks ago issued a proclamation which the oil industry felt placed a severe limitation on the amount of Canadian oil going into the United States market; that it provided a very severe limitation which would prevent any substantial increase in exports of oil in 1963. So a discussion took place in the city of Ottawa, and on Friday, December 14 the Minister of Trade and Commerce made a report to this House of Commons. In this report he gave us, in my judgment, no information. He said that the discussions had been useful and informative and had provided an opportunity for the United States representatives to explain the recent proclamation. He went on to say, as reported on page 2671 of Hansard:

> The two delegations noted that no change has been made in the overland exemption for oil which permits sales of Canadian oil in United States markets without licensing.

Then the hon. member for Ottawa West and I tried to get from the Minister of Trade and Commerce some further elucidation as to whether the proclamation by the President of the United States adversely affected the opportunity to increase exports of Canadian oil in 1963.

The minister gave us little information last Monday when we were asking these questions. I asked him a supplementary question, as found at page 2718 of Hansard:

> I have a further supplementary question. I wonder would the minister be prepared to say to the house whether, in the opinion of the government, the U.S. president's recent proclamation affecting oil imports in the United States does in fact place a limit on increases in the exports of Canadian oil to the United States?

The minister replied as follows:

> I would like to repeat to the hon. member, in answer to that question, part of what I said in the house on Friday last. I said:
> "The two delegates noted that no change has been made in the overland exemption for oil which permits sales of Canadian oil in United States markets without licensing."

The Minister of Trade and Commerce was not frank, in my judgment, with the House of Commons, he was not frank with the Canadian people. There had been negotiations between the government of Canada and the government of the United States, and the Canadian government had failed to get from the United States any relaxation of this recent order. In my judgment the strength of the Canadian government in negotiations such as these comes from an informed public and an informed House of Commons. But this government is so interested in politics and in hiding the facts from the Canadian people that the Minister of Trade and Commerce did not give us a frank statement in the house, and there is now no opportunity for Canadians in a forthright way to register their dissatisfaction with a proclamation which so severely limits our sale of oil in the United States market in 1963 and prevents in the future anything like the increase which we have been able to register in recent years.

I think there is every indication that this government is more interested in party political warfare than in doing a good job for the Canadian people. On a former occasion this session I pointed out that in the administration of the Prairie Farm Assistance Act in this country it had been made clear to P.F.A.A. inspectors that they would be required to do political work on behalf of the Conservative party, and that to those who have been hired into that organization it has been made clear that they are to be supporters of the government in office. This is a political machine, and it has been made a political machine by the Minister of Agriculture in the administration of this act.

I have information to the effect that Conservative members of parliament have been invited to and have attended meetings of the prairie farm assistance inspectors and have spoken at those meetings at schools in which the P.F.A.A. inspectors were being instructed in how to take crops reports. I say to this government that the P.F.A.A. machinery is or should be different from the Tory campaign political machinery, and that members of parliament from any party have no business being at such conferences and speaking in a political fashion at them. For various administrative posts of the government in connection with agriculture new people have recently been hired. In almost every instance they have been prominent Conservatives, and this seems to be an essential qualification.

In order to show what this government thinks of the ordinary administration of government and how it can be used in a political sense, may I say this. When the Minister of Agriculture wished to go to Regina some time ago, early in November, in order to speak to the Saskatchewan wheat pool, the Department of Transport plane was used by the minister; and on that plane for this junket were six Conservative members of parliament with a couple of wives for good measure. I see no evidence of anybody from any other political party. I do not think this is the use that should be made of a Department of Transport plane. I do not think this is a plane which should be considered by hon. members opposite as though it belonged to Conservative party headquarters, and that when it goes some place it should be loaded up with Conservative members of parliament in order to go out to do their political work.

That is another indication of the attitude of the government in using the machinery of government in a political way. However, they go even further. They believe that information now coming from the government should not be available to the Canadian public generally and should not be available to the press generally, but should be available only to that section of the press which has shown that it supports the Conservative party. The Minister of Agriculture recently went out to Edmonton, and a reporter from the Edmonton Journal asked him to make a comment on negotiations with red China. The minister said it was pure speculation and declined to say more. However, in the Canadian Press dispatch we find the following:

> Later Roy Faibish, Mr. Hamilton's special assistant, said the minister might have spoken if the Journal had not criticized the government on the day Mr. Diefenbaker visited Edmonton during the federal election campaign.

We suggest that in a democratic country the government has no business to try to discriminate between newspaper media just because the editorial policy of one particular paper happens to support one party or another. That is a further indication that this government is interested not in fair play, not in a policy of disseminating information in a fair way, but says rather that if it is a Tory newspaper reporter who calls up, he gets information. Mr. Faibish went on to say this:

> But if someone from the Toronto Globe and Mail calls and the caller is known to be informed, he gets comment.

However, if it is from a paper that is not favourable to the government, it uses the iron curtain and brings it down over government or public information. I have in my hand a document which I think constitutes a serious indictment of the Conservative party. It comes from the headquarters of the Conservative party in the province of Saskatchewan. We know that the Minister of Agriculture is very close to the Conservative association in Saskatchewan. At their last executive meeting held in Regina he was in attendance and played a very prominent role. In order that this letter may be on record, Mr. Chairman, I should like to read it:

> Saskatchewan Progressive Conservative Party,
> Provincial Headquarters—McGowan Building,
> 122 - 2nd Avenue North, Saskatoon, Saskatchewan.
> Martin Pederson,
> Provincial Leader.
>
> J. D. Leishman, President,
> 802 Medical-Dental Bldg.,
> Regina, Sask.
>
> September 28th, 1962
>
> Dear Supporter:
>
> As you were selected to do the enumeration in your poll for the June 18th election, we would like to ask for your helpfulness again.
>
> Will you please check the enclosed voter's list, and indicate after each name, to the best of your knowledge, whether P.C., Lib., N.D.P., or S.C. The 1962 vote result is shown at the top of the list as a guide to select the various supporters. This is an arduous task, and even some names for each would be a great help.
>
> The voter's lists are going out to each poll in the province to ascertain these details, and your co-operation in returning the completed list as soon as possible would be greatly appreciated. An addressed envelope is enclosed for your use.
>
> Please indicate, where known, who the poll clerk was, also the scrutineers and workers in your poll.
>
> Thanking you very much for your assistance.
>
> Yours sincerely,
>
> Lawson W. Procter, > Provincial Organizer.

Mr. Ricard: What is wrong with that?

Mr. Argue: Conservative members are asking, what is wrong with that? This kind of question indicates the mentality of hon. gentlemen opposite who seem to take the attitude that enumerators should be part of the political machinery of the Conservative party when these officials are appointed under the elections act and paid out of the public purse. In order to illustrate their belief that these people should be part of the Conservative political machinery the letter says it is being sent to every poll in Saskatchewan and it is addressed to, "Dear Supporter".

Mr. McCleave: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Argue: I believe that this is something that should not be done; I think it is a mistake. I believe this is a misuse of our democratic processes. These people are paid with public money and they should not be asked to inform on their neighbours, to give political judgments or to indicate the political persuasion of the people whom they enumerate and place on the voters list.

Hon. gentlemen opposite seem to think this is a very fair and proper procedure. They are interrupting—

Some hon. Members: Order.

The Deputy Chairman: Order.

Mr. Argue: Hon. gentlemen say this is fair, and I suggest—

The Deputy Chairman: Order; the hon. member for Vegreville.

Mr. Argue: Mr. Chairman, I have the floor and I do not think it should be handed to somebody else.

The Deputy Chairman: I am sorry, I was under the impression the hon. member was raising a point of order. If the hon. member is just asking a question, the hon. member who has the floor can refuse.

Mr. Argue: The hon. gentleman can ask his question when I conclude, and I will be happy to answer it. I believe this attitude of the Conservative party in Saskatchewan, which has been condoned in this house, is a shameful thing and should not be supported by any party. It is a challenge to our democratic process. I can tell hon. members who are shaking their heads that some of the Conservatives in my riding, and in other places, have criticized this attitude.

In recent days hon. gentlemen opposite have shown that they feel the Conservatives should be using the machinery of government, not so much in the interests of the ordinary people of this country, but to manipulate things to further their own political ends. For this, and other reasons—

Mr. Valade: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Chairman. The hon. member who has the floor has imputed some dishonest motives to the members of this house. I think that is quite improper and he should correct his attitude.

Mr. Argue: Mr. Chairman, I said the government was endeavouring to use the machinery of government for its own political ends. I repeat that statement and I believe it is correct. My reasons for saying it has been placed on the record this afternoon. I refer to the use of P.F.A.A. inspectors who were told they must do political work in Saskatchewan; the use of an airplane of the Department of Transport for a junket for Conservative members; the assertion to the press, "We are going to give you a political blood test before we give you any public information", and now Conservative headquarters in Saskatchewan has the blessing of hon. members opposite in its endeavour to use its enumerators in the last election to inform on their neighbours. I suggest that is a condemnation of this government.

The Deputy Chairman: I think the hon. member for Vegreville has a question.

Mr. Fane: I should like the hon. member for Assiniboia to put on the record the name of the person to whom that letter was written, the letter from which he quoted.

Mr. Argue: I have no intention of informing on any particular person so that action may be taken against that person by the Conservative party. However, according to the terms of this letter itself, it went out to every single enumerator in the province of Saskatchewan. My hon. friend can obtain their names, because that is public information.

Mr. Nowlan: The hon. member knows the rules of this house and he knows that when he quotes from a letter or any document it should be tabled. My hon. friend has been putting on the record more political claptrap in the last half hour than we have heard in a week. Certainly, he should not be allowed to hide behind this anonymity.

Mr. Pickersgill: I want to say a word about this phony point of order raised by the minister.

The Deputy Chairman: Order.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am speaking to a point of order.

The Deputy Chairman: I believe the hon. gentleman is not obliged to put on the table a private document.

Mr. Nowlan: If he quotes from it he is.

Mr. Argue: I quoted it all; it is all on Hansard.

The Deputy Chairman: I think the hon. member is not obliged to put a private letter on the table. The hon. member for Fraser Valley.

Mr. Nasserden: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Assiniboia has made certain accusations, and amongst those accusations was one to the effect this letter went out to every enumerator in the province of Saskatchewan.

Mr. Argue: That is what it says.

Mr. Nasserden: I want to deny that. I want to say that not one of these letters went out in the Rosthern constituency which I represent. So far as I know, no such letter has been circulated in the province of Saskatchewan.

Mr. Argue: This letter is all over Saskatchewan. I have a copy of it in my hand and the letter itself says it went out to all enumerators, and that it is going out to each poll in the province of Saskatchewan. It is signed by Lawson W. Procter, provincial organizer.

The Deputy Chairman: Order; if all hon. members agree, we will recognize now the hon. member for Fraser Valley.

Mr. Patterson: Mr. Chairman, in the discussions that have taken place we gave the assurance that if the debate were to be concluded immediately we would not have any further speakers from this group. I should like to say we have a number who are very anxious to take part in this debate. As I have said, we were ready to forgo that privilege at the moment, but in view of the fact other members from other groups are proposing to carry on the debate, then we feel we ought to participate.

In rising to take part in the debate, Mr. Chairman, I should like the committee to consider for a few minutes a matter that has been under discussion on different occasions and which has to do with agriculture.

I have the privilege and honour of representing one of the major, if not the major agricultural area in the province of British Columbia and I would be remiss if, comparatively early in the session, I did not give some attention to this very important part of our community and economy. During previous debates we have had considerable discussion on various aspects of agriculture. We have thoroughly covered the credit facilities provided for this part of our economy, but while we recognize the importance of credit facilities to our farmers, these facilities in themselves are an indication of the fact that in the past the policies of governments in office were not such as to give the agricultural economy its fair share of the national income.

The farmers are finding it increasingly necessary to seek additional help, and perhaps more generous sources of capital, in order to carry on their operations. Sometimes we think that some of the problems have been resolved, and there are those who feel agriculture is moving into a position where it has little to complain about. Yet we still find that agriculture is caught in the squeeze between increasing costs on the one hand and decreasing returns on the other.

I have in my possession a copy of the brief presented by the Manitoba farmers union to candidates in the last federal election and it points out very clearly that the situation is far from resolved. The problems are still there and the farmers, instead of moving up to a better position, are finding that their net income is decreasing.

I well remember the Minister of Agriculture outlining on one occasion some of the objectives that must be realized by the farming community. He said the first objective for the farmer was to maintain his holdings, the second was to provide for the needs of himself and his family, and the third was to have adequate retirement provision. I think those objectives are not being realized. Recently I spoke to a farmer in the province of Manitoba who told me that for a number of years he had been living on the depreciation of his equipment and holdings, and I believe that is indicative of the position in which many farmers find themselves at the present time. This situation is an indictment of the present and past governments for failing to introduce policies that would bring to the farmers their fair share of the national income and thus enable them to solve their own problems.

The fact that there is a continuing decrease in the number of farms across the country indicates that many farmers have given up the struggle for survival and, even though there are those who have moved off the land voluntarily, and their farms have been incorporated into larger units, still a great many farmers are off the land because they found they were not able to survive economically.

Agriculture in British Columbia is widely diversified, and this is particularly true of my own area. We have practically every type of farm operation in it. With such a diversified agricultural economy our farmers are faced with all the problems involved in diversified farming, as well as endeavouring to continue the job of providing foodstuffs for this nation and other nations of the world. However, though sharing the struggle for survival, the figures would indicate that that particular province is faring perhaps a little better than the average across the country.

In the past I have criticized governments and administrations for legislation that only applies to certain areas and certain localities. For instance I remember several years ago, when I had the honour to represent Fraser Valley in this house, I pointed out that even though other parts of the country had been able to benefit under P.F.R.A., and the maritimes had been able to benefit under the Maritime Marshland Rehabilitation Act, there was nothing comparable to those acts covering the province of British Columbia. It is true there were isolated projects carried on under P.F.R.A. in British Columbia, but in general the benefits were not applicable.

Yet in spite of those representations about being denied such assistance, I am at present glad that at least we have some indication we will share in the benefits of legislation introduced more recently, and I speak especially of the ARDA program. The province of British Columbia is co-operating in that. It has already set up its committee. Particular projects are presently under consideration and we feel this is going to be of distinct benefit to us.

We also appreciate the fact that under the Farm Credit Act some of the producers in my area have been able to benefit. I am thinking mainly of poultry farmers and greenhouse operators, but I would point out there are still those engaged in various types of agriculture who are faced with an almost impossible position because of the fact that they have not access to adequate financing. For that reason I would urge that the government give continuing attention to the problems of agriculture in all its phases.

I should now like to refer to the disposal of agricultural products. I am proud of the fact that, down through the years, this group has advocated what we believe to be a very adequate system for the distribution of agricultural products as well as other types of production. We have supported and continue to support the principle of the two-price system. We believe it is absolutely necessary that our own people have adequate purchasing power so that they can buy the products of our farms, our waters and our forests, because there is a vast, untapped market right here in our own country.

We believe that if the consumers, the citizens of Canada, had the necessary purchasing power they would be buying agricultural products instead of some of the substitutes that have been presented and are being presented to them at present. We also believe it is necessary for us continually to seek export markets for the disposition of our agricultural products, and for this purpose we have advocated the acceptance of at least a certain amount of the currencies of other nations.

Hon. members will recall that on many occasions we raised the question of the Bretton Woods Agreements, which has interfered with the traditional markets we enjoyed for many years. In fact there is a strong suggestion that we should reconsider our position so far as the Bretton Woods Agreements is concerned. I have a clipping from The Producer of October 18, 1962, which is headed "Pakistan would buy more wheat."

> A Pakistan government official says his country would buy more wheat from Canada but for the fact that it can buy U.S. wheat with its own currency while purchases made in Canada require payment in Canadian dollars.
>
> S. M. Akhtar, deputy director of Pakistan's agriculture department, said in Edmonton that Pakistan bought about 50,000 tons of Canadian wheat a year, compared with some 1,500,000 tons from the U.S.
>
> Mr. Akhtar, on a North American tour, described Canada's grain handling system as one of the best in the world. He commended the Canadian wheat board for its wheat grading program.

Mr. Chairman, I would suggest that anything that has contributed to the development of situations such as this should be given a second look. If other nations can engage in this kind of activity and dispose of their agricultural products in this way, why should we have to sit still and see our traditional markets go, and see those who want to buy from us unable to do so because of the restrictions that have been imposed? Therefore, Mr. Chairman, we believe it is absolutely necessary that we give consideration to this particular situation.

As I have said, I have the honour of representing an agricultural area very diversified in its nature. We have many problems that we would like to bring to the attention of the committee, but we are not going to do so at the present time because it is our desire to get this item through. But on other occasions we will have an opportunity of dealing more specifically with some of these problems that are related to my own area and, of course, to other areas across the country.

Mr. Clunis: Mr. Chairman, the year-end recess seems a fitting time to examine the accomplishments which have resulted from three months of deliberation here. I think perhaps we might look at it on the basis of what history books some years from now might record, if in fact there is anything worth recording. Perhaps some slogans could be evolved. It might be remembered that while we were here Canada was committed to a plan of play now and pay later. Young Canadians of another day may recall that in 1962 the government, with the help of the conservative Conservatives, made Canada the first nation in the world to operate on the monthly payment plan. But I doubt if these would really be worth recording.

It is true, as has been said, that never in our 95-year history has our nation been taxed without a plan of taxation, and certainly never since confederation has a government operated in this country so long without a blueprint of financial policy. These are not minor accomplishments, but perhaps historians will honour us more for formulating and implementing a new national policy, a policy that for want of a better name might be called taxation without information. But I doubt if any of these will be the real test of our stature.

It seems to me that our record, which surpasses all others, will be remembered for the number of questions that have been left unanswered. I do not have in mind, sir, the question period of written questions. I think these are the outward manifestation of an inner dissatisfaction, the uncertainty and disquietude of Canadians generally. This problem is not really a general one, Mr. Chairman; it is not really a question of supply or no supply, of estimates or no estimates, or even of budget or no budget. To think or speak of it in such general terms obscures the multitude of questions which earnest Canadians are asking. Day after day our business leaders, our editorial pages and the financial pages of our newspapers have asked these vital questions. Perhaps they have not made very good reading for the government. Maybe they have not got the message, so once more before the Christmas recess let us ask them here.

We are faced with a continuing deficit in our national account. Let us ask, how does the government propose to deal with it? Does the ministry propose to cover the deficit by reducing expenditures? This was the solution promised on the night of June 24. If this is the solution, how is it to be done? What reductions are to be made? What reductions have been made? Are we to be denied the right to consider these proposals? Are they sound or unsound? Are they wise or unwise? Are they in fact in the national interest? Or another question is this, does the still secret cure lie in increased government income? Will the minister tell us that government income has increased? Has our economy regained its vigour over the past six months? Will existing tax sources produce sufficient income to balance our budget? If this is so, it would be pleasant to know now; it would be wonderful news at Christmas time and a gratifying Christmas message to take home. If this is not the minister's solution, does the government propose to raise taxes to pay for former financial folly? Will it be required to mention the unmentionable? Will it utter the suicidal phrase "increased taxes"?

If this be the solution, is the minister aware of the views of our business leaders, our economists and our tax experts? Does he recognize that our taxation system is totally unsuited to a growing nation in Canada's stage of development? Has the Prime Minister heard that our income tax levy is stifling initiative; that our corporation tax is rendering our industries less competitive, less able to capture a share of the export market? Has he been advised that the forced sale of Canadian-controlled industries is attributable to our succession duty law? Does he concede that family corporations are shopping for foreign buyers to avoid the forced sales which otherwise result when an owner dies? Does the Prime Minister really understand the sacrifice that a working Canadian makes when he pays his taxes?

Is the minister in agreement with our financial leaders, that tax and monetary reform cannot wait for a royal commission? Has he overlooked the two or three years required for investigation and the subsequent time necessary for implementation; a matter of three years, usually, at the very best? Or, as an alternative, does the minister propose nothing? Does he intend to sit and hope that somehow the deficit will correct itself; that somehow things will get better? Finally in this regard, Mr. Chairman, does the minister not know what the government is going to do about our deficit? Is there an insolvency of ideas? Has the oracle not spoken? If the minister has no information at this time about the budget deficit, and if these answers, like so many others, are to be announced at the proper time, then may I ask, what about our imbalance of foreign trade? What proposals has the government of Canada for the long term solution of this problem? We are advised that the import-export gap grows wider. Even as our exports edge forward, the cost in Canadian dollars of our imports grows even faster. This, of course, is the inevitable result of dollar devaluation on a nation of importers. The new price tags of devaluation and austerity have now been attached to the goods on the shelves. The proof, if proof is required, is that we now have the highest cost of living index in our history.

What medicine does the minister prescribe for these ailments? Are we to put off the evil day by relying on foreign loans? Each time the day of reckoning arrives are we to seek to borrow again and again? How long can we continue to interest these foreign investors? How long can the balance of payments account bear the burden of high interest rates on foreign borrowings? The minister recognizes, I am sure, that already one tenth of our income is contracted to pay the interest on this nation's debts.

If the minister does not propose loans as the answer, what other solution has he in mind? Is the government depending on provincial trade crusades whose real effectiveness no one can assess and, which, if successful, would take years to provide necessary relief? Or will the government ultimately recognize the hard facts of our economic life? Will fearless leadership come forward and tell us seriously and clearly what we believe we already know, namely that we Canadians enjoy a standard of living beyond the nation's present capacity to supply—that we in Canada are enjoying a standard of living made possible by foreign borrowings? Shall we be told that we who have become relative to our population, the largest importing nation in the world, must give up in this generation many of the imported luxuries and the foreign travel to which we have grown accustomed?

Devaluation was inevitable under this government. But it cannot be repeated. High tariffs and the violation of our government's agreements under GATT cannot recur. If this is so, should we not put it up squarely and courageously now? Should it not be made clear that over the immediate term, and until policies which create the proper atmosphere in which the efforts of government, labour and management may combine have been introduced and are in effect, we Canadians must make some personal sacrifices? Must not this message now go out: Buy Canadian? Must we not say: be selective; if you need goods not wholly Canadian, then select those which have the greatest Canadian content? The chief criticism directed against this government is not one based on its past shortcomings. It is, rather, that it lacks the very vision of which it boasted—that it lacks the courage to admit its mistakes; that it lacks the courage to call on our people to do what they must do.

These are some of the vital questions which remain unanswered. A thoughtful article in a recent issue of Maclean's allotted 40 months for the conception and implementation of saving legislation. Three months—three profitless months—have now gone by. It is procrastination, not the opposition, that steals our time. As we go home, one final question will echo in the minds of all of us who sit here. I suggest it will be the cry of Job—"How long, O Lord, how long?"

(Translation):

Mr. Rondeau: Mr. Chairman, there are many other things that could be said on that point. On behalf of my party, I wish to say that we are pleased to co-operate with the other groups this afternoon and to close the debate on interim supply so that the house may get on with the urgent business that should be concluded today, before the adjournment.

(Text):

Mr. Knowles: I have a couple of questions to put to the Minister of Finance and since he is in the chamber I think I might put them now.

Mr. Nowlan: Would it not be better for us to carry the resolution? Then the hon. member could put his questions on the schedule. I think we might make progress to that extent. I put this out simply as a suggestion.

Mr. Knowles: I was about to say that before I put my questions I had a word or two I wanted to say. So I will say what I have to say and save my questions until we are in committee after the bill has received second reading.

Even at the risk of being accused of offering an unnecessary lecture there is something I should like to say at this time. I speak as a Canadian who thinks that this institution of parliament is one of the finest ways which has been devised for conducting the affairs of a society such as ours. I found myself yesterday in almost complete agreement with the opinions expressed by the Leader of the Opposition in his speech between about 4.30 p.m. and five o'clock. It is natural I should agree with what he said, because there was a certain similarity between his remarks and those I had made a few days earlier. I think the government has to consider seriously this whole question of the extent to which it is running things by executive action and not according to parliament the rights that belong to it. When this year 1962-1963 is over, the number of things which were not allowed to go before parliament will make quite a story. This was the burden of my remarks last Monday. This view was also expressed by my leader, the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam, on Tuesday. It was expressed—and expressed well—yesterday afternoon by the Leader of the Opposition. But I must say I was equally horrified by what happened when the Leader of the Opposition sat down. Just as I have said to the members of the Conservative party that they should do some serious thinking about the effect of some their actions on the institution of parliament, so I say to the members of the Liberal party that when they act like an unruly mob and think they can come to power by shouting loudly, by denying freedom of speech after protesting that the rights of parliament have been curtailed, they, too, are doing irreparable damage to the institution of parliament.

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Knowles: Gladly.

Mr. Pickersgill: Does the hon. gentleman think that some members of this house should be allowed to disregard the rules which are imposed on others?

Mr. Knowles: I really think the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate would be well advised not to ask questions like that or to pursue what happened yesterday.

Mr. Pickersgill: I will be glad to pursue it.

Mr. Knowles: In the name of the Liberal party the Prime Minister was given unanimous consent by the Leader of the Opposition. He was given unanimous consent, and then he was heckled in ways, according to the record, which suggested that some members of the Liberal party, some of whom have been in that party for quite a while and some of whom have only recently joined it—which indicated that they did not want the Prime Minister to carry on.

I have on my desk the Hansard for June 1, 1956, and I have been looking at two or three pages, looking at the account of all the noise, all the rabble and the strange singing that went on that day. The reason I have been looking at that Hansard was because what happened yesterday reminded me of it. I am not taking the Conservatives off the hook. I think they are doing untold damage to parliament by taking under executive control too many of the functions which belong to the institution of parliament itself. But, Mr. Chairman, along with the rights of parliament in terms of control of the purse strings and the right of dealing with matters of policy also go free speech and fair play. The rule of law, not the rule of the mob which we had here last evening at five o'clock, should govern our proceedings. Yesterday afternoon I had the privilege of having a group of high school students as visitors in the gallery.

They were here during the early part of the afternoon. I spent a few minutes with them in a committee room answering their questions, and then they went home. I am glad they went home and did not see that performance.

Mr. Chairman, I know I run the risk of being accused of delivering a gratuitous lecture or an unnecessary sermon, but I submit that what I have expressed is, in our better moments, the view of all of us in this house. I would ask that we think about this carefully. It is the view of Canadians generally. This parliament is an important, sacred and valuable institution; let us not damage it, in the way it has been damaged this session, by not letting decisions be made by parliament, or by allowing to happen the things I talked about in my speech on Monday night, or by the kind of rowdy and unruly demonstrations which we had yesterday afternoon. The people of this country are looking to us to uphold the traditions of responsible, free, democratic government. An election is coming. It may be sooner or it may be later, but it will be pretty important when it does come that we go to our constituents, those of us who are here now, with the others who are nominated, as men and women who will uphold all the rights and privileges of parliament, particularly those which have been damaged in this session by both sides of the house, and uphold the traditions which are ours from across the years. Mr. Chairman, I plead that we think seriously about these things. I did not rise to deliver a blast at one side or the other. I rose rather to express what might be called a voice of conscience over what happened yesterday, and to suggest that we try to recognize our responsibility to maintain all of the traditions of parliament.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Chairman, I take it that everyone has spoken. I know that I am not expected, and that the committee would not expect me, to reply to all of the points which have been raised. We have had a wide-ranging discussion on matters such as the Columbia river and the rights of minorities, as was discussed yesterday afternoon. Reference is now made to the privileges of the House of Commons. This has been a rather lengthy debate—I am sure I will be forgiven for saying that—but I think on the whole it has been a very worth-while debate. I am sorry that parliament does not have more time to deal with these matters. A great deal of controversy has been injected into the debate, but that is only natural in the political arena in which we live. When the hon. member for Assiniboia suggested this afternoon that the government was guilty of politics throughout this debate, I only hope that the Canadian people will read Hansard, and particularly his speech, because then they will decide where the political emphasis has been during the debate.

We did have this unpleasant, unfortunate incident yesterday afternoon, Mr. Chairman, which I hope will not occur again. I am sure that it will not if leadership can prevent it. As the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre said, it was reminiscent of another day in 1956, the alleged "black Friday", when we saw incidents of the same nature. But we have not seen them since.

I am sorry that we have to deal with this matter on a 30-day supply motion; I would much rather have had a 60-day or 90-day motion. We discussed it earlier and thought this was a better way to deal with it. This debate has been longer than I expected, and there will be others in the future. I assure hon. members that after the Christmas recess we will be going into supply and opening up the departments, reviewing estimates, and also bringing forward legislation just as rapidly as possible. I do not want to take further time of the committee now, but I would hope that after the longest debate ever, I think, on a 30-day supply motion we might pass this resolution, get into the bill and dispose of it very quickly.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the resolution carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Motion agreed to.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

WAYS AND MEANS

INTERIM SUPPLY

The house in committee of ways and means, Mr. Chown in the chair.

The Chairman: Order, house again in committee of ways and means.

Mr. Nowlan moved:

Resolved, that towards making good the supply granted to Her Majesty on account of certain expenses of the public service for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1963, the sum of $330,089,511.93 be granted out of the consolidated revenue fund of Canada, as set forth in the resolution concurred in this day in the committee of supply.

Mr. Chairman: Shall the resolution carry?

Mr. Pickersgill: Not until I have put one question to the minister. My question is this: Does the minister know where the money is coming from?

Mr. Nowlan: I am fairly confident that I can find the money, Mr. Chairman.

Motion agreed to.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Ways and Means

Mr. Nowlan thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-105 for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1963.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the said bill be read the second time? By leave, now?

Some hon. Members: Now.

Mr. Nowlan moved the second reading of the bill.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Chown in the chair.

On clause 1—Short title.

Mr. Chevrier: There is one question I should like to ask, if I may. The interim supply document that was circulated at the outset contained a number of items of the estimates. However, as I look at page 3, schedule A, I see just three items and the bill seems to refer to more than one schedule. Is part of this bill missing?

Mr. Knowles: See clause 2.

Mr. Nowlan: There is nothing missing, Mr. Chairman. The resolution, paper or document to which my hon. friend referred exempted certain items which are not included in the bill, "save and except". That is what made the resolution look longer than what he was looking for. This was deliberately excluded from the bill as the moneys had already been voted. We therefore did not include them in the bill.

Mr. Knowles: By special invitation of the minister I am going to ask him a question at this stage.

Mr. Nowlan: An unwilling invitation.

Mr. Knowles: In tonight's Journal I notice there is a report which says that I tried yesterday to get certain information from the minister and that I was unsuccessful for the second time. The Journal is out by 300 per cent or 400 per cent. I was unsuccessful yesterday for about the sixth time. As the minister knows, a week ago last Monday he made certain announcements about increases in salary for the public service and there followed for the next few days certain questions. On Thursday in particular, a week ago today, I asked him if he could tell the house whether there were any categories of the civil service for whom the civil service commission had recommended pay increases but who were not given such increases by the government. He told me last Thursday that he did not happen to have the information but that he would get it later. I asked him again on Friday and he told me he would try to produce it early this week. I asked him on Monday but he did not have it. I asked him on Tuesday and he did not have it. I asked him on Wednesday and he still did not have it.

May I say, Mr. Chairman, that the present minister is not that kind of minister. He is really in command of his job. I am sure that he knows the answer to this question, and I do not know why he has kept putting me off. I could find other questions to ask on the orders of the day. I am not obliged to keep repeating the same one. I ask him now to answer this question, and to clear this matter up. The reason I do so is this. Not only do many civil servants feel that they were dealt with unjustly in that they were not given increases, but there is a strong feeling that the minister has tried to put the blame elsewhere than on the government when, in fact, that is where it should be placed. A week ago Tuesday, when the hon. member for Hull asked a question about certain groups which had not been given increases, the Minister of Finance blamed the pay research bureau. The next day, in response to my question he blamed the civil service commission. My understanding is that there are a number of categories of classified civil servants for whom recommendations were made by the civil service commission on the basis of reports to it by the pay research bureau, which the government on the advice of treasury board did not implement. I understand as well that there are some instances in which pay increases were recommended by the civil service commission, but that the government on the advice of the treasury board, which after all is the Minister of Finance, scaled down those recommendations.

As I say, there are two things here which I think constitute real grievances. On the one hand many civil servants did not get their increase. On the other hand, the minister has sought to leave the impression that the blame rested on the civil service commission or the pay research bureau. I therefore ask him now this question: Were there such categories of civil servants for whom recommendations for an increase were made but were denied by the government? If so, how many and what is he going to do about it?

Mr. Nowlan: Many changes were made, of course, in some of the recommendations which were brought forward. When I said, "the civil service commission" I was referring, of course, to the pay research bureau which operates for the civil service commission in making the survey. I may also tell my hon. friend that there were quite a few civil servants for whom the civil service commission, not the pay research bureau, recommended no increase, and for whom the treasury board recommended an increase. As my hon. friend and all hon. members know, this salary increase is not a matter of right. It is not a statutory increase like some of them every year. It is an evaluation of the rates of pay in industry or in private employment; and that is why you have this pay research investigation made.

It develops, of course, as it always would, I presume, in dealing with a huge number; and when I say, "huge number" what I mean is that there are about 60,000 in this one category to whom I think my hon. friend has reference. There are over 100,000 altogether, of course, as he well knows. It is a tremendous task to make comparisons of the rates of pay which will be equivalent in private industry and to which salaries should be compared, after making some allowance for the fringe benefits. The reason I have held this thing up is this: I appreciate the very flattering comments by hon. friend made with respect to myself. I hope they are deserved. I am not going to argue with him about the matter at any rate. He has referred to categories. I am not sure as to the different categories. Adjustments were made in various groups within a category. That is why I have not been able to produce the information in detail, as the hon. gentleman undoubtedly expected I would do and as I will do. However, particularly owing to the fact that I have been sitting here off and on for seven days or eight days and was sitting in treasury board for four weeks prior to that time, I have not been able to go over the voluminous mass of material which is involved in this pay review. There were undoubtedly several thousand who, it was found, were getting paid more than they would be getting paid if they were working in private industry or private employment. That number is not large in proportion but there were several thousand altogether; perhaps 3,000, 4,000 or 5,000. Undoubtedly, they were disappointed. Undoubtedly, these are usually the under ones, the ones who are moving up from grade 1, or grade 2 to the higher ranks.

The civil service today is a profession. It is not a lifelong job where you come in as a tenant for life and hold on to the same position throughout life. You are supposed to come in, write your competitions and advance. It is unfortunately true that in grade 1 and grade 2 the rates are obviously lower than in others where experience is necessary. There were classes or grades within the classes—as I said, that is one thing about which I am not sure—where the pay research bureau found and afterwards the review by treasury board found where adjustments were either substantiated or not. These grades should not be touched or the individuals within the grade should not be touched at the moment. I will have a detailed breakdown for the hon. member as soon as I have a chance to review this whole situation. However, I certainly have not had an opportunity to do it up until today.

Mr. Pickersgill: Five o'clock.

Mr. Chevrier: May I ask one question.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman—

The Chairman: Is the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre continuing on the same subject?

Mr. Knowles: I do not wish to get into the same trouble that we got into yesterday. What are we doing about the fact that it is five o'clock?

Mr. Pickersgill: Five o'clock.

Mr. Churchill: I would request that we carry on and complete interim supply and then that we adjust ourselves accordingly to what other business we might do. This procedure will be of great assistance to members of the other place. The other matter of business with which we would really like to deal relates to the world's exposition bill which would make a very fine wind-up to this part of the session.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, in so far as we are concerned, it is five o'clock and it is private members' hour. However, if we had the assurance that a full hour would be given to us at a later hour—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Today.

Mr. Chevrier: —today, we would have no objection to proceeding now to get interim supply through, and the bill which my hon. friend the Associate Minister of National Defence would like to get through, or any other business that might be disposed of.

Mr. Churchill: Supposing we do that, and over the supper hour I will confer with the genial member for Essex East—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I will tell you right now that it is understood we go on at nine o'clock with the motion for the production of the legal opinion, otherwise we do it now.

An hon. Member: What about the Christmas cheer?

Mr. Chevrier: If I may say so, Mr. Chairman, the suggestion made by the hon. member for Essex East is what I had in mind earlier, although he has put it more forcefully than I did.

I think the point the hon. member is raising is that if this discussion continues he might lose out on that hour during which the motion might be discussed. The suggestion now is to provide that hour and make sure it is not lost. I think we would be willing to co-operate on the distinct understanding, then, that he might go on not later than nine o'clock, so that he might have a full hour, from eight to nine or nine to ten.

Mr. Churchill: I feel in a very co-operative mood and I hoped the hon. member for Essex East would be in the same frame of mind. Despite the forcefulness of his suggestion, upon which I do not want to comment, we are content to proceed now as I have suggested and take the motion for the production of papers at nine o'clock.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Perhaps the Minister of Justice will give us the opinion and save all this time.

The Chairman: Is it agreed that the committee follow this procedure?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Knowles: I thank the minister for his offer to get all of the statistics and detailed information that are called for by my inquiries. I hope that he will have it by the time we come back on January 21. As a matter of fact, Mr. Chairman, although we usually like to have things produced in this house first rather than in the newspapers, if the hon. gentleman can give this kind of information to the civil service organizations even before we come back, this would be quite satisfactory to all of us. I believe that the civil service organizations are asking for even more, and are asking for the recommendations that the pay research bureau made. In fact, they are asking for some consistency in the matter of letting them have these reports.

In this general field, Mr. Chairman, there are two other things I want to say, and I might have another question after that. The first is that, no matter what explanation the minister gives, no matter what assurance there may be that matters will be dealt with at some future date, I think it is most unfortunate that a number of these groups in the lowest categories had to be missed. I think it is particularly unfortunate that postal employees, along with those of customs and immigration, were left out.

Mr. Nowlan: My hon. friend knows, I am sure, that they were not left out. They were not included in the review which had taken place, but they are being reviewed now in the next class. It is not the omission of them, but it is a matter of the review not being completed.

[Mr. Chevrier.]

Mr. Knowles: I think I appreciate the semantics, but being left out or not being included are really the same thing. Either way, they did not get the increase now when other public servants are getting the increase. I realize that it is going to be retroactive, but I say it is most unfortunate that some of these groups that needed it most have to wait so much longer. In view of the fact that this whole question of the pay freeze was put on on June 24, in view of the fact that there were representations made by various civil service organizations and the trade unions involved and representations on the floor of this house, it seems to me it would have been possible to have all the reviews made so that when the announcement finally was made on December 10 it would have covered all groups.

All I can plead now is that the minister do his best to speed up the completion of this job, the adjusting of the wages and salaries of all public servants. The other comment I wish to make, Mr. Chairman, is to remind the minister that the new machinery, the so-called consultation, really is not working very well. It is not helping the morale of civil servants. I would ask the government to give very serious consideration to the request made by civil service organizations all across the country for full collective bargaining rights for the organizations chosen by public service employees. I congratulate the organizations themselves on having come, even more now than they had some time ago, to the realization that this is necessary. I think they did right in accepting in good faith the proposals for consultations that were made when the last amendments to the Civil Service Act were made. They have found, through experience, that that arrangement is not good enough and they are now asking for the same right that many other employees in Canada have, in many other sectors of our economy, full collective bargaining. I urge this government to give serious consideration to this important request being made by the civil service organizations.

Mr. Chevrier: There is just one question I should like to ask the minister. It has to do with the $50 million item which was in group "A" of the supplementary estimates under vote 213A, the interim payment for the royal commission on railway matters. I cannot see it here, and I understand it has been taken out. Can the minister tell us why?

Mr. Nowlan: My hon. friend who prepared the original estimates says that when we revised the estimates it was taken into the main estimates.

Mr. Chevrier: The point is, it was voted upon last month and this bill should contain one twelfth of that item of $50 million contained in vote 213A. I do not see it in the bill or in the schedule, and I just wanted to know why it was not included.

Mr. Knowles: Is it not in clause 2(c) of the bill?

Mr. Chevrier: The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre points out that it is referred to in clause 2(c) of the bill, but it is clearly set out there that it is exempted and not contained.

Mr. Grafftey: Eleven twelfths have already been approved.

Mr. Chevrier: My question is then, why is the one twelfth not included in the bill?

Mr. Nowlan: Well, this is the eleven twelfths up to date. The hon. member will remember there were certain items in the paper I passed him last week when we started this rather long performance, which were "save and except," and there were various items on which exceptions were made.

Mr. Pickersgill: Why was it voted earlier?

Mr. Nowlan: It was a month ago.

Mr. Pickersgill: And I ask why, because $50 million is a lot of money and surely the minister knows why it was voted earlier?

Mr. Chevrier: Why was it voted earlier and not included in the bill now?

Mr. Pickersgill: Surely the minister can tell us why the $50 million is not in this?

Mr. Nowlan: Because the $50 million was voted.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I suspect the Minister of Justice has something to do with it.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 3, 4 and 5 agreed to.

Schedule agreed to.

On the preamble.

The Chairman: Shall the preamble carry?

Mr. Knowles: Before the preamble carries may I ask the minister when he plans to bring down his next interim supply bill?

Mr. Nowlan: After consultation with the house leader and after the Christmas recess.

Mr. Knowles: Then assuming the house does not come back until January 21, and since February will be just around the corner there will not be many days until the minister needs money for February. In other words he will be coming to the house for the eleventh twelfth. May I ask him whether he expects to move to go into supply shortly after we come back?

Mr. Nowlan: I am not the house leader, but I would expect I would be moving to go into supply shortly after we come back. We have already opened up a certain number of departments and I am sure the committee will want to co-operate and pass those estimates. Then we will have to bring in further supplementary votes to open all other departments, and I suppose that action would be taken fairly soon.

Mr. Chevrier: Will the minister do it per saltum?

Mr. Pickersgill: Because we have not had much time to scrutinize it I ask the minister to give us a categoric undertaking that this bill does not contain the total vote for any item whatever in the annual expenditures for 1962-63?

Mr. Nowlan: I gave that undertaking when I moved the resolution.

Mr. Pickersgill: Not with respect to the bill.

Mr. Nowlan: Then I am very glad to repeat that undertaking. It does not contain the final vote on any individual item nor does it preclude discussion on any matters when we are discussing the estimates.

Preamble agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported and read the third time and passed.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the house that I have received the following communication:

Government House,
Ottawa, December 20, 1962

Sir:

I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable Patrick Kerwin, Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Canada, acting as Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General, will proceed to the Senate chamber today, the 20th December, at 9.45 p.m., for the purpose of giving the royal assent to certain bills.

I have the honour to be,
sir,
Your obedient servant,
A. G. Cherrier,
Assistant Secretary to the Governor General.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, before you leave the chair—

Mr. Speaker: One moment. For the purposes of the Journals it should be agreed that it is now five o'clock and that the agreement entered into in committee be ratified by the house, because actually the committee of the whole has no right to consider the order of business of the house. I think now that the Speaker is back in the chair the arrangement that was agreed on at five o'clock in committee should be confirmed.

Mr. Chevrier: I have a point to make, Mr. Speaker. The agreement was that the motion of my hon. friend for Essex East would carry on for an hour between nine and ten o'clock, or eight and nine o'clock in accordance with where we had advanced our business. But now Your Honour has just read a message from the other place which indicates we are going to be called there at 9.45. On the understanding that we be given the full hour does the house leader have any objection to that hour running from 8.45 to 9.45?

Mr. Churchill: I have no objection.

Mr. Speaker: Then it is agreed instead of nine o'clock it will be 8.45.

Mr. Knowles: Could we down at this end of the chamber be told what is agreed to?

An hon. Member: 8.45 to 9.45.

CANADIAN WORLD EXHIBITION CORPORATION

MEASURE TO PROVIDE FOR THE APPOINTMENT OF DIRECTORS, GRANT OF FUNDS, ETC.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (for the Prime Minister) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-103, to establish the Canadian World Exhibition Corporation.

Motion agreed to and bill read the second time.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, I understand the minister wants to make a statement on this. I expect he will.

Mr. Speaker: We have given second reading. I do not know that—

Mr. Pickersgill: I think that was done inadvertently.

Mr. Speaker: We could revert to the discussion before second reading, or it could be done in committee. However, I do not wish to speak for the committee.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, the understanding was that the minister would carry on with the statement today, and I would hope we could get consent for that purpose.

Mr. Sevigny: Mr. Speaker, if it is agreeable to the hon. member I could make my statement on clause 1 of the bill in committee.

Mr. Chevrier: I think we would prefer to have it with Your Honour in the chair.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Speaker: Very well.

(Translation):

Hon. Pierre Sevigny (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I am most happy to have this opportunity of putting before the house a bill entitled: "An Act to establish the Canadian World Exhibition Corporation".

In view of the national character of this magnificent project, I intend to make my remarks in both official languages of the nation, French and English. And I also intend, because of the short time at our disposal, to keep my remarks at a minimum.

This world exhibition project may be the most extensive economic undertaking of Canada since confederation. This is a project of an extraordinary scope which will certainly contribute to the economic and cultural development of the Canadian nation.

(Text):

Mr. Speaker, we were privileged indeed last November 13 to receive, after many deliberations, authority from the bureau of international exhibitions to hold in Canada, on the occasion of our centenary, a world's exhibition of a No. 1 class. We had already in 1959 solicited from the bureau permission to hold this exhibition in Canada in 1967. However, at that time the Soviet union also wanted to hold an exhibition in Moscow in 1967 in order to commemorate the fiftieth anniversary of their revolution. For that reason a vote had to be taken and unfortunately Canada lost by one vote. However, those who were then connected with this project—and I was one of them—had the impression that there was still a chance for Canada to eventually secure that exhibition which we considered necessary in order to celebrate in proper fashion the hundredth anniversary of our confederation. We therefore never lost hope and we kept in contact with the bureau in the hope that something would happen which would permit us to have this exhibition.

The event for which we were hoping eventually came about, and in due course the U.S.S.R. announced that they were renouncing, for reasons of their own, the permission given them to hold this exhibition in Moscow in 1967. This permitted us to renew our application to the bureau of international exhibitions. We received the co-operation of the officials of the bureau and the various personnel of the Department of External Affairs, who actually succeeded in securing the concurrence of the 30 member nations of the bureau of international exhibitions. Thus on November 13 we managed to get a decision by acclamation that we could hold this exhibition in Montreal. This exhibition must of necessity be a national project and we hope that the provinces of our nation will co-operate so that each province will have a chance to show at this magnificent exhibition the nature or our projects and the evolution which has taken place in every part of Canada. With the co-operation of all provinces we shall be in a position to show to the world a picture of the greatness of our country.

In 1967 the eyes of the world will, without doubt, be fixed on Canada. We must of necessity unite and give to the world a true picture of what is beautiful and what is great in Canada, whether it be in the field of the arts, science or agriculture. We must show to the world the progress we have made in every possible activity. The fact that we expect at least 50 nations to come and build pavilions here and exhibit their wares will mean that all Canadians will get to know better the other nations of the world. It is true that with exhibitions of the type which will be held in Canada in 1967 the nations of the world will get to know each other better, appreciate each other better and thus may the foundation be created for a sure and lasting peace. There is no doubt that the best way to preserve peace and to secure peace is to talk, to get to know each other, to get to appreciate each other. By grouping the main nations of the world here in 1967 Canada will thus play another role in its constant quest for peace in our time.

(Translation):

Montreal is rightly considered as the Canadian city most suited for the kind of world exhibition we have in mind.

That is why the federal government decided that the exhibition would be held in the Canadian metropolis. It is obvious that the cosmopolitan and international character of Montreal, its bilingual feature, as well as the exceptional development that is taking place there, are all factors which contribute to make our city the ideal site for an exhibition of this kind. But we do not want the national exhibition to be considered as a provincial exhibition or the exhibition of one city. It is imperative that all Canadians see the 1967 world exhibition as a national venture to which all Canadians from coast to coast will have contributed through their individual or joint efforts, so as to realize that it is not only Montreal's or the province's exhibition but a truly national exhibition.

I should like to thank especially those who have co-operated with us in the carrying out of this tremendous project. I should mention in particular His Worship Mayor Drapeau who has always given us his support. Our joint efforts have resulted in this much hoped for outcome.

When the holding of this exhibition was finally decided, it was agreed that the best way to administer an exhibition of this type would be through a crown corporation. The purpose of the legislation now before us is precisely to set up such a corporation. It was not easy, of course, to agree on all matters pertaining to the establishment of this crown corporation, mostly because three governments were involved. First of all, the federal government is directly responsible for this exhibition to the Canadian people and to the international exhibition bureau; then, there are the provincial government, which has generously contributed the sum of $15 million to this magnificent project, and the municipal government of Montreal, with a contribution of $5 million to ensure the success of the exhibition. I think the time has come to reveal the amounts subscribed by the various governments: the federal government, $20 million; the province of Quebec, $15 million; the city of Montreal, $5 million.

It is obvious that, to ensure the success of such an undertaking, the corporation has to be set up in such a way that everything will be run jointly by the various governments to which the corporation is responsible.

I must say that the many and lengthy meetings which took place were always conducted in an atmosphere of co-operation and understanding, and with the firm intention of seeing that magnificent project achieve the desired success.

A while ago, I thanked Mayor Drapeau. I now wish to thank Mr. Andre Rousseau and the Hon. Gerard Levesque, the Quebec minister of trade and industry, for their co-operation in all our discussions.

It should be pointed out, while we are studying the bill, that the operation will be carried out in such a way that each interested party will share equally the responsibility of appointing commissioners. The commissioners, who will constitute the guiding body of the project, will be appointed by the governor in council, that is to say, by federal authorities, after discussion and agreement with the provincial authorities. Twelve directors will be appointed to the board of the corporation. Six will be selected by the federal authorities and six by the provincial and municipal authorities. They will work in an atmosphere of mutual co-operation.

It was necessary to do so because, of course, the minister responsible to the federal government for that exhibition will have to account to parliament for the operations of the corporation. The minister of commerce and industry for the province of Quebec, Mr. Gerard Levesque, will also have to explain to the legislature the uses to which the money will be put by the corporation.

The mayor of Montreal will have to account to the members of the city council for the expenses made by the city.

Therefore, it is truly a joint undertaking. I wish to say that we all intend to put it above political considerations that may arise. We want it to be a joint undertaking in which everyone will take part whatever the political party to which they belong.

Mr. Speaker, I must say that the people in general find it rather difficult to understand the gigantic scope of that undertaking. Therefore, in order to better illustrate my thoughts, allow me to say that we expect that 50 countries will have pavilions to show their exhibits and will take part in the activities of the exhibition in Montreal. We think that the construction of the buildings needed for all the foreign countries will cost approximately $200 million.

It will be necessary to build roads and even tracks for a monorail. It will be necessary also to build sewers and water works to the exhibition site that will cover 800 acres, according to the report submitted by experts on that matter. Those figures are based on surveys made by specialists in that field who have taken into account what happened in the case of other world exhibitions.

We expect to welcome about 40 million people during the six months of the exhibition. If each visitor spent an average of $50, it would mean that Canada would be getting an amount of $2 billion it would never have had without the Montreal world exhibition.

Mr. Speaker, we expect that we will have to build theatres and sport stadiums. We will also have to build pavilions for exhibits of scientific and artistic progress throughout the world. In fact, we have chosen the motto "Man and his World" for this exhibition because we would like those who come from every corner of the world to visit Canada, in 1967, to realize the accomplishments which have been made in this world of ours. It is also our wish that all phases of human activity be illustrated at the exhibition.

As I stated earlier, we would like the exhibition to further the cause of peace, to give new impetus to our economy, and to foster the advancement of culture in Canada.

As soon as the corporation is set up, we will make the necessary appointments in accordance with the standards I outlined a while ago. The appointees will get to work immediately and, obviously, hundreds of people will be called upon to fill positions of various importance in the organization.

The location of the exhibition will be chosen after consultation with experts because it is imperative to launch the whole project not later than the beginning of next year. Indeed, we must not forget that we have only four years left to carry out this extraordinary venture which will mean so much to Canada if we achieve the aims we have set for ourselves. Mr. Speaker, what is most important is that this exhibition be the outstanding feature of the celebration of our confederation's centennial. This exhibition must prove to the face of the world that Canada is a united country, a great country, a sovereign state, where live in harmony both great races of this nation. This exhibition must also serve the interest of the other ethnic groups that are the same as we are, really, a part of the large Canadian family. This world fair will serve to mark the extraordinary progress accomplished in the 100 years since 1867, and it will also have to be the starting of another era of progress and magnificent achievements.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, the object of the bill before the house is to incorporate a crown corporation to look after the administration of the world exhibition to be held in Canada, more precisely in Montreal, for six months in 1967.

This will be an extraordinary event for Canada, for the province of Quebec and the metropolitan area of Montreal. This world exhibition's theme shall be "Man and his World" and shall illustrate the interrelation of man and nature.

Since one of the great laws of the community of man is unity through diversity, co-operation through mutual respect, association through equality, Montreal was especially suited to hold the world fair.

I believe it is in order at this time to thank the bureau of international exhibitions for selecting Canada and the city of Montreal, for the site of the exhibition. The decision was reached after careful consideration of the claims of other world centres. It is an honour for Canada that Montreal was selected. On account of that decision, it is our duty, as the Associate Minister of National Defence (Mr. Sevigny) has already done, to congratulate warmly, the mayor of Montreal, Mr. Jean Drapeau, for his initiative and his determination. From the start, he was convinced that the city of Montreal deserved to be chosen on account of its tremendous advantages. He was right and I am sure that the House of Commons expresses its gratitude to him.

Mr. Speaker, we must also congratulate the three levels of government involved without giving more credit to one than to the others. I mean the federal government, the provincial government and the municipal government, because all three have encouraged the idea of holding a world exhibition and have collaborated and contributed to its realization not only by their valuable advice, but also by a large amount of money, without which the preparation of this project would have been impossible.

To all those who have contributed in some way to this wonderful initiative, the Liberal party offers its thanks.

The choice of Canada's metropolis must be not only a cause to rejoice but also an occasion to show what Canada can do and what Montreal can offer the whole world under the circumstances.

"Man and his World" is the theme of the exhibition which was approved by the bureau of international exhibitions and it does illustrate the new possibilities opened to man's activity and progress. Those four words contain all the creations of mankind. This theme aims at glorifying man without distinction of boundaries, in all the manifestations of his active life, for, after all, the starting point of all discoveries, of all undertakings and of all scientific and technical developments is man himself.

I feel that such a theme constitutes a kind of inspiration capable of creating unity among nations. In short, the world exhibition is a factor of peace, friendship and progress.

Mr. Speaker, "Man and his World" is a theme which will call to mind the peaceful part played by Canada in the world. With a population of 20 million, a vast territory stretching between two great powers, the U.S.S.R. and the United States, member of the British commonwealth of nations, bound to the western European countries by the Atlantic pact, having contributed considerable amounts of money to underdeveloped countries, on the eve of becoming a member of the organization of American states, with no territorial ambition but wishing peace, seeking from the first to obtain it through its foreign policy, Canada can, through that exhibition, set an example of peace and progress for all countries in the world.

"Man and his World" is also an appropriate theme for the centenary of confederation, when we should stop to consider in what measure the hopes, apprehensions, doubts and fears of the fathers of confederation were justified.

Some recent events have shown that we are going through another crisis of national unity where the very foundation of confederation is shaken. It is not the first time that we undergo such a crisis. We shall overcome it provided we can avoid both extremes. The exhibition will be a splendid occasion to preach and claim Canadian unity, to achieve it and above all to recall that confederation, while it was only a treaty between four states, to certain people, was also, to others, an agreement between two equal partners, its aim being political unity, but without cultural, racial or ethnic uniformity.

"Man and his World" is a theme that will preach respect for human rights. The respect of those new Canadians who, escaping the terror of dictatorships, left their original country to settle among us and look here for freedom, peace and quiet. It will be necessary that they feel perfectly at home in Canada and that they are never done any injustice.

"Man and his World" is a theme that could very well evoke the story of a people that was 65,000 strong two centuries ago and which now numbers 5 million, a people which is determined, to keep at all costs, its language, traditions and culture, which twice in its history pushed back American invaders and preserved Canada against them, and which is now claiming its rightful place in the sun, all over the country, from shore to shore.

"Man and his World" is a theme which will conjure up the ideas of peace, friendship and progress. In order that true peace may settle on earth, amongst all of the nations, it must derive its roots, first and foremost, within the individuals and nations; injustice, suffering and hunger will have to be eradicated from the surface of the earth in order to make way for social justice in a new world order.

Speaking about the Montreal world fair, recently, Mr. Valmore Gratton, director of the Montreal Economic Development Organization, had this to say:

> The first large fair inaugurated in 1851 under the reign of Queen Victoria, led to the construction of the Crystal palace in London. In France, the Eiffel tower has remained as a living witness of the world fair which was held there towards the end of the nineteenth century. Nearer our times, Brussels gave rise to the Atonium and Seattle to the Space needle.

What will come out of the Montreal exhibition? The works I just referred to should stimulate the imagination of our fellow Canadians.

On the other hand, Mr. Speaker, there will be things to avoid. There will be no need to copy blindly the great exhibitions of New York, Brussels and Seattle. We should rather try to benefit from their mistakes. But what we need in particular is a new outlook, worthy of our centennial and worthy of Canada.

It will be appropriate also to give the second largest French city in the world well defined French characteristics and architecture. People coming from all over the world will not expect to find here what they have already seen in New York, Brussels and Seattle. They will want something new. Montreal, a first rate cosmopolitan city, can give it to them.

In another area, when we consider that the Brussels exhibition has provided employment for 12,000 workers and more, the Montreal exhibition which will cover an area nearly twice as large, will be a source of prosperity for the metropolis and the whole province of Quebec.

One last word. We are convinced that this crown corporation will play a prominent part in this great and grand project. The success of this exhibition might very well depend on the selection of the officials to be appointed. For a project of such magnitude, the selection should not be made for political considerations but, above all, on the basis of the merit and qualifications. The government can boast of some good nominations. Others were not so good. All appointments to this new corporation must be fortunate as well as good. The corporation will thus be able to depend, from the very beginning, on the cooperation, not only of the Liberal members for the island of Montreal, but also of parliament and the Canadian nation as a whole.

May I pause here to point out and to recall to the government the long delay in making appointments on the centenary commission. It is high time the government made the appointments so that action can be started not later than January 1, 1963 on the world exhibition project.

May success crown the efforts of this new corporation, and may the 1967 world exhibition be worthy of Canada, the province of Quebec and the great city of Montreal.

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, in the name of this group, it gives me pleasure to join with the two previous speakers who chose to support Bill C-103, to establish the corporation of the future world exhibition to be held in Canada in 1967.

We, in this corner of the house, welcome the fact that Canada and especially the city of Montreal, were chosen as the site of the 1967 world fair.

The Associate Minister of National Defence (Mr. Sevigny) gave us details concerning the world exhibition and set forth the magnitude it will have.

Canada must get ready for that imposing exhibition; our country is worthy of it and, with the support of federal, provincial and municipal governments—we congratulate them for working together—the future exhibition will be the finest one ever held in any country in the world.

Mr. Speaker, that fair is a very important thing and that is why we, Social Crediters, are glad to see that it will be held in the province of Quebec.

We shall have the pleasure and honour to welcome in our province representatives of all countries in the world. More than 50 countries will delegate ambassadors and representatives in the cultural and artistic fields, as well as in the agricultural, industrial and economic fields.

Therefore, we are very glad, we citizens of Canada and particularly of the province of Quebec, that Montreal should have been chosen unanimously by the bureau of international exhibitions. And, in four years, when we celebrate the centenary of our magnificent and great country, we shall see that grand exhibition, whose main theme has been very judiciously and intelligently chosen: "Man and his World".

"Man and his World" will be the theme of the 1967 world fair, and because such a theme has been chosen it is important that the fair be well prepared. It is important also that it be a great success and that it constitute a source of wealth, from which we shall be able to benefit in the future, both from a financial and agricultural standpoint, and from a technical, industrial and social standpoint.

Mr. Speaker, may I call it six o'clock?

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

(Text):

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

(Translation):

Mr. Rondeau: Mr. Speaker, when the house took recess at six o'clock, we were on Bill C-103, to establish the Canadian World Exhibition Corporation.

There are only four more years to go before this world exhibition is held and the work to be carried out by that corporation is great on all counts.

It is up to the parliament of Canada to see to it that the title of the world exhibition: "Man and his World" be endowed with real meaning in 1967 for the people coming from all over the world who will visit us on the occasion of this exhibition. They should be able to see that Canada truly is the "Terre des hommes", that of Canadians. We have only four years left to take the giant step which will allow us to change the present system and say, "Canada, terre des hommes".

On that occasion we will receive a great number of visitors from all countries. They will come not only to derive knowledge from our culture, traditions and art, but to see if the theme we have chosen, "Man and his World", is consistent with the facts, and not "financiers and their world".

Today Canada, the world of financiers, is well known. The world of financiers, we know it. It is not man's world which prevails now in this country.

When this theme was chosen, in my opinion, it is because before 1967 we shall have time to give a Social Credit government to our country precisely to achieve that program, "Man and his World".

(Text):

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, after the eloquent words from the hon. members from the province of Quebec who have preceded me in this debate, it may not be inappropriate for a member from another part of Canada to say a few words in support of this bill. I think all Canadians should have interest in this bill to establish a Canadian World Exhibition Corporation which will be charged with the responsibility of the creation of a Canadian international fair in the city of Montreal in 1967. I suppose that the constituency I have the honour to represent in this house is at least as far away from the city of Montreal as any other constituency in Canada.

In rising to support this measure, I want to say, as one who has had too little opportunity to become acquainted with the colourful and historic metropolis of Montreal, I believe it will be a good thing for Canada and for Canadians if a great many of our people do find a worth-while occasion for visiting that city during our centennial year. Other hon. members have pointed out that the theme of this fair is to be the land of men. I may say that as I cross Canada, coming from my constituency to the capital city I realize that, while this is in a sense the land of men, we still have many great open spaces.

As some hon. members are aware, my constituency is bounded on the west by the great reaches of the open Pacific. I should like to draw the attention of the house to a particular spot in my constituency which has some significance for Canada as we approach our centennial year. I am referring to a little place which is relatively unpopulated and is known as Friendly Cove. It is significant, in my opinion, as we approach our centennial year because that is where the history of Canada began in so far as our western shore is concerned. It was at Friendly Cove on Nootka island in 1778 that Captain James Cook became the first European to set foot on the shores of what is now the western coast of Canada.

In a very few words, therefore, I wish to say I support this bill. I do so as one who, in a sense, represents the opposite extremity of Canada from the area in which this fair is going to be located. I felt I should like to participate in this debate to indicate to the members from Quebec who have taken part in this debate, and to the minister who introduced the bill, that there is a realization on the part of all members of this house, from wherever they may come, that the passage of this bill will launch something which we are all agreed will be a most significant and appropriate part of the celebration of our centennial year.

Canadian World Exhibition Corporation

The house in committee on Bill No. C-103, to establish the Canadian World Exhibition Corporation—Mr. Churchill (for the Prime Minister)—Mr. Paul in the chair.

On clause 1—Short title.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 1 carry?

Mr. Chevrier: I do not want to delay passage of the bill, but the minister should give some explanation as to why there was a change in the original bill as compared with this one. I think there are one or two changes and perhaps the minister might be good enough to explain what they are.

Mr. Sevigny: I will do so with great pleasure. Actually, the first bill just referred to an exhibition which was to be held on the island of Montreal, and we felt it would be preferable to mention that this exhibition was to be held in connection with the celebration of the centennial of confederation in a manner in keeping with the national and historical significance of this great event. Consequently we decided that since this was to be a national event it should be clearly mentioned in the bill that such was the case. Consequently clauses 1 and 3 were changed and also a reference to this change is made in clause 9, which I will refer to in a moment.

Mr. Rock: I would like to ask the minister what qualifications the commissioner general should have?

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I think the hon. member should wait a few minutes until we come to clause 3 when he can ask that question.

Mr. Chevrier: Clause 1 has to do with the corporation, and says the act is to be cited as the Canadian World Exhibition Corporation Act. In his earlier remarks the minister announced that there would be a number of directors, the commissioner general being one, and so I think the hon. member is in order in asking what his qualifications will be.

Mr. Sevigny: In answer to that, we are presently dealing with clause 1 and if we could dispose of it we can debate clause 2 where this question of the commissioner general is mentioned. I mention this for the sake of good order in debate, and at that stage I will give the necessary explanations required by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier-Lasalle.

(Translation):

Mr. Lachance: Mr. Chairman, I have a problem to put to the minister concerning section 1 of this bill and more particularly about the title.

[Mr. Barnett.]

The minister undoubtedly knows that a corporation is already set up under the name of Montreal international trade fair. Was it seen fit to do something about this, because there could be some misunderstanding since that corporation is called the Montreal international trade fair?

Mr. Sevigny: Mr. Chairman, I think a distinction should be made between the terms fair and exhibition.

The word fair applies to shows like the one existing at present in Montreal and that is called an international fair.

But the word exhibition applies more particularly to a show like the one to be held in Canada in 1967 and which is much larger.

In fact, it is precisely because we wished to avoid confusion between the various fairs held across the country that we selected a quite distinct name, that of the Canadian World Exhibition Corporation. I think that name explains quite well the important event which will take place in Canada in 1967.

(Text):

Clause agreed to.

On clause 2—Definitions.

Mr. Rock: Mr. Chairman, I would like to have answered the question I previously asked.

Mr. Sevigny: The commissioner general will be a man who will have immense powers in the corporation. He shall be responsible for his actions not only towards his directors in his own corporation, not only towards the people who will work within the framework of the corporation, but will also have to answer concerning the actions of the corporation to the minister of the federal government who will be responsible for the corporation, to the minister of the provincial government who will also be connected with it, and to the mayor of Montreal.

He must be a man who has all the abilities to administer a project of such magnitude, and a man who can actually deal with foreign powers and foreign corporations so as to attract them to come to Canada to take part in this project.

(Translation):

Mr. Loiselle: Mr. Chairman, could the minister tell us whether, as a result of his talks with the tripartite committee, including representatives from the city of Montreal, from the federal government and from the provincial government, a final decision has been taken concerning the site of the fair?

Mr. Sevigny: Mr. Chairman, the meetings which were held between the representatives of the federal government, the provincial government and the city of Montreal were characterized by the greatest cordiality, and it has been agreed that the selection of the site deserved a detailed study on the part of town planners and experts in the matter. Consequently, that study is being carried out at present and will be completed, I believe, within 30 days at the latest. Following the reports which will be submitted to us, we shall then be in a position to determine definitely the site of the fair.

For the time being, we have not yet decided on any particular site, except that it will definitely be located within the limits of the island of Montreal.

Mr. Loiselle: Mr. Chairman, the minister has just said that the site of the fair would be within the limits of the island of Montreal. May we expect that it will be in a neighbouring municipality? Will the site be finally selected by the members of the world fair corporation or by the members of the committee which has now been sitting for some time?

Mr. Sevigny: Mr. Chairman, the site will be definitely on the island of Montreal, which means that the fair will be held in the city of Montreal or in a neighbouring municipality.

As regards the selection of the site, it will be made by the general commissioner and the directors chosen by him, in co-operation with the members of the present committee.

Mr. Lessard (St. Henry): Mr. Chairman, could the minister tell us what are the dimensions of the area required by the commission at present? Furthermore, could he tell us what minister will be appointed to administer the fair?

Mr. Sevigny: Mr. Chairman, as regards the site, it is specified in the bill that it will require at least 500 acres, but actually this figure will be much nearer to 800 acres, and here is why.

In the light of what happened in countries where world fairs have been held, and following the advice given by our experts concerning what we should do to ensure the success of our fair, we have come to the conclusion that one of the main difficulties in the case of previous fairs was the congestion brought about by the great number of visitors. It was found very difficult to get to and from those fairs. Therefore, a lot of time was wasted owing to the lack of means of communication and of parking space. As we want the exhibition site to be easily accessible, we shall see to it that there are vast parking lots on the site which will be selected.

That is why I mentioned the fact that around 800 acres of land would be required to make this exhibition as successful as we are hoping it will be.

Mr. Chairman, the hon. member asked a second question, but I must admit that I have forgotten what it was.

Mr. Lessard (St. Henry): Mr. Chairman, I asked the minister to tell us which minister would be responsible for the administration?

Mr. Sevigny: Mr. Chairman, the exhibition shall be the immediate responsibility of the federal government, and here is the reason why: the bureau of international exhibitions wishes to deal with the central government of the country where the exhibition is being held—and I believe they are right in asking this. Moreover, as it was rather difficult to explain to them our confederative system and the reasons why we have three governments involved in this project, we therefore decided that the central government would be responsible for the exhibition with regard to the corporation, on the one hand, and to the bureau of the international exhibitions and to the provincial and municipal governments, on the other hand.

For the time being, your humble servant shall be the responsible minister as far as this exhibition is concerned.

Mr. Lessard (St. Henry): Mr. Chairman, since the city of Montreal is going to start clearing the slums in the Point St. Charles area, does the minister believe that this is an indication that this area might be favoured by the city as the site for this world exhibition?

Mr. Sevigny: Mr. Chairman, I must say that I have always been in favour of slum clearance.

However, a distinction should be made between slum clearance and the selection of a site for the world exhibition. The two problems should not be too closely united, if I may say so.

In any case, as I said a moment ago, the selection of a site is yet indefinite and shall only be made after a careful consideration of the reports submitted by the experts on the matter.

Mr. Loiselle: Mr. Chairman, the minister has just said that nothing is definite in this regard. However, after the meetings which were held, it seems to me that the minister must have quite definite information.

On the other hand, since the Point St. Charles area is situated in my riding, next to Montreal harbour, near the Dorval air terminal, I wonder whether the minister could not commit himself a little and give us an indication regarding the site?

Mr. Sevigny: Mr. Chairman, I can assure the hon. member that I would like to commit myself, if I could. I know the Point St. Charles area very well, and I appreciate the reasons which lead the hon. member to try and influence the committee's choice so that it would fall on Point St. Charles as exhibition site.

For the moment, I am unable to be more definite.

May I tell him that there are, on the island of Montreal, six or seven possible sites for the exhibition. Of course, we shall proceed by elimination and, eventually, make a final choice which, as I hope, will meet with general approval.

Mr. Lachance: Mr. Chairman, the minister mentioned a moment ago the committee which has been set up and has studied up to now the problem of the universal exhibition. He stated also that this committee would pursue its activity.

Do I understand that this committee will continue to function after the establishment of the world exhibition corporation, or will it immediately stop its activities so that the corporation will remain the only body entrusted with the task?

Mr. Sevigny: Mr. Chairman, once the Canadian World Exhibition Corporation is established, the activities of the committee will necessarily be limited. But, anyway, the company will be responsible to three governments, that is, the federal, provincial and municipal governments.

The present committee is composed of a representative of the federal committee and his colleagues, of a representative of the provincial committee, and a representative of the municipal committee and their assistant staff.

As we shall be always consulted with regard to this project, it is to be expected that the committee, in its actual or improved form, will continue to function.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the minister a question. Did he receive any questions from the town of Repentigny and any representations on behalf of some public bodies in Montreal, claiming that the exhibition should be located in the east of Montreal, where several hundred acres of land are available?

Mr. Sevigny: Yes, Mr. Chairman, we did receive some representations from businessmen in the east of the city, and from almost every single municipality in Montreal. Those representations and requests will be submitted to the committee where they will be studied with the greatest care, and the choice of the site will be made with due regard for the representations that have been made.

Mr. Boulanger: Mr. Chairman, in his statement, this afternoon, the minister mentioned the names of some people who had participated in the preliminary research work. Could he give us the names of those who took part in the initial organization work which included the preparation of the bill we will pass tonight?

Mr. Sevigny: Mr. Chairman, it is a pleasure for me to give that information.

The federal government was represented by the hon. member for Longueuil, who is known to everyone in the house, and his executive assistant, Mr. Gaston Levesque, the assistant deputy minister of trade and commerce, Mr. Leslie Brown, and the representative of that federal department, Mr. Glen Bannerman. There was also a representative from the federal Department of Justice.

The provincial delegates we had the pleasure of dealing with included the Hon. Andre Rousseau, a good friend of mine who, I hope, will remain as interested in the exhibition as before, in spite of what happened to him recently. There was also the minister of trade and industry, Mr. Gerard Levesque, and his deputy minister, Mr. Bernard Tremblay.

I wish also to emphasize the excellent cooperation we received in Paris from Mr. Charles Lussier who is the general delegate of the province of Quebec.

Of course everybody is aware of the wonderful job done by the mayor of Montreal, Mr. Jean Drapeau who was skilfully assisted by Mr. Valmore Gratton and Mr. Lucien Hetu.

Mr. Lessard (St. Henry): Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the minister could tell us how many locations are being considered at the present time?

The Deputy Chairman: Order. May I suggest to the hon. members who are particularly interested in this item, that they should reserve their remarks until we discuss clause 9 of the bill, regarding the site, the possible selection of the location, which would bring about a more orderly discussion of this bill?

Mr. Lessard (St. Henry): I do not believe my question had anything to do with your remarks, Mr. Chairman, because I was simply asking the minister how many sites the corporation was considering, as possible locations for the world exhibition.

The Deputy Chairman: I understood the meaning of the hon. member's question, that is why I wanted to suggest that he delay it, if possible, until clause 9 of the bill is called.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, I have just one question to ask the Associate Minister of National Defence. I believe that while giving the list of the acting directors he named Mr. Bannerman. But there is a rumour that Mr. Bannerman will be the next commissioner. Has the minister any comment to make on that?

Mr. Sevigny: Mr. Chairman, numerous rumours are circulated when a project of such importance is mentioned. The one concerning Mr. Bannerman is one of those rumours about a project like the world exhibition.

(Text):

Mr. Rock: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the minister whether the commissioner general will be bilingual.

Mr. Sevigny: Yes, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Pickersgill: I would like to ask the minister a question too. Could he say whether either the commissioner or the deputy commissioner will be a woman, because surely there should be at least one woman in the land of men.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is a serious question.

Mr. Sevigny: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member knows me well enough to know that I will not exclude women.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 3 to 7, inclusive, agreed to.

On clause 8—Employment of officers and servants.

(Translation):

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, clause 8 is of a rather urgent importance for a great number of us, because since mention was made of this corporation to be set up, many of us have received applications for jobs. So, I am wondering—

Mr. Gregoire: No patronage.

Mr. Chevrier: —I am wondering what senior official will look after those applications. Will they have to be directed to Mr. Bannerman, who has acquired a lot of experience in that field in connection with previous fairs, to the corporation secretary, or to the civil service commission.

Mr. Gregoire: No patronage.

Mr. Sevigny: Mr. Chairman, in reply to that question, I must say that we have all received, of course, quite a number of requests from persons interested in the study of that question. For my part, I gave them all the same answer, that is, their applications and their names would be submitted to the members of this crown corporation which will be set up to administer the world fair.

And here is how the fair will more or less operate.

First, the general commissioner will be the big boss of the organization, skilfully assisted, no doubt, by the deputy general commissioner.

Twelve directors will be selected as provided by the bill.

Under that directing body, there will be an executive council headed by a general manager who, of course, will have all the qualifications required of a general manager, that is, those required to administer the operations of larger corporations.

The directing body will be divided into branches. For instance, there will be a legal branch. There will be town planning, architectural, external relations and internal relations branches. There will be also an arts and sports branch, because sports will play a very great part in that undertaking. There will be also scientific branches.

So the chiefs of all those branches, of all those sections, if you like, will report to the general manager, and will find a system which will permit the selection of the most competent people to serve on the corporation.

The Deputy Chairman: Is clause 8 agreed to?

Mr. Loiselle: Mr. Chairman, could the minister tell me in what part of Montreal the headquarters will be located?

Mr. Sevigny: I wish I knew it, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chairman: Is clause 8 agreed to?

An hon. Member: The member for St. Henry has a question.

Mr. Lessard (St. Henry): Mr. Chairman, I thank you for giving me the opportunity to ask my question a second time concerning the site for the universal exhibition. How many sites are under consideration at present?

Mr. Sevigny: Six, I would say, and possibly seven.

(Text):

Clause 8 agreed to.

On clause 9—Powers.

(Translation):

Mr. Lachance: Is the minister in a position to tell us whether of those six sites some are located in the eastern part of Montreal?

Mr. Sevigny: Yes.

Mr. Lachance: Could the minister tell us how many?

(Text):

Mr. Rock: I should like to find out from the minister whether he has considered the advantages of the county of Lasalle, which constitutes one third of the island of Montreal. There are thousands of acres of virgin land there and the cost of development would be less there than anywhere else. I understand that other hon. members would like this exhibition to be in their own county, as I would like to have it in mine, and I understand it will be up to the commissioners themselves to describe where it shall be situated.

Mr. Sevigny: Everyone knows the advantages of the beautiful riding of Jacques Cartier. I have many friends there among whom is the distinguished and competent mayor of Dorval. There is no doubt that the commissioners named will be pleased to consider the merits of Dorval, Lachine and similar areas and that they will be delighted to consider the requests coming from that charming region.

Mr. Rock: I did not mean to suggest I wanted it actually in Lachine or Dorval. I wanted it in the county somewhere. The minister mentioned Dorval and Lachine. I did not want an answer in that manner.

Mr. Sevigny: The hon. member's riding will be considered, but not exactly because of his representations.

[Mr. Sevigny.]

(Translation):

Mr. Boulanger: I would like to ask the Associate Minister of National Defence a question following the inquiry of my fellow member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon).

The minister received a brief on behalf of people in Repentigny, businessmen and companies of eastern Montreal and elsewhere. Is this brief actually to the effect that the site be what is called in the east, Maisonneuve centre, or was the request that reached the minister of a wider scope? By eastern Montreal do we mean Maisonneuve centre?

Mr. Sevigny: Mr. Chairman, I glanced through the brief I received from those gentlemen in Repentigny and elsewhere, but I must admit that at the moment I forget what exactly they asked for. I do not remember whether they asked that the site be the one specified by the hon. member, or another.

Mr. Boulanger: A supplementary question, Mr. Chairman. I understand very well that when the hon. minister says that he only glanced at the brief, there might be some misunderstanding, but we read some statements in the press—

Mr. Gregoire: He stayed up too late last night.

Mr. Boulanger: I shall wait until the hon. member for Lapointe stops talking, before finishing my remarks. Very well.

According to statements we read in the papers, the Maisonneuve sports centre was an ideal site, because its choice would prevent much speculation with regard to land or other projects.

I want to point out this fact to lend new support to the request made by the people of Repentigny, or by businessmen elsewhere.

Mr. Sevigny: Mr. Chairman, in answer to the hon. member's question, I wish to tell him this: representations from businessmen and politicians from Repentigny and the eastern sections will be considered with the greatest care by the committee to which they will be submitted.

You may rest assured, Mr. Chairman, that my hon. friend's representations will get all the attention they deserve.

Mr. Loiselle: Mr. Chairman, I only have one question to ask. I wonder why the minister is letting himself be tormented and goaded in this way. In my opinion, there is only the Point St. Charles district that is suitable. You should say so tonight.

Here is my question. What are the requirements and conditions for the selection of a site?

Mr. Sevigny: Mr. Chairman, when I hear my hon. friend pleading the cause of his constituents with such eloquence, I understand why they keep placing their confidence in him.

Mr. Chairman, in reply to my hon. friend, I wish to say that, first of all, the site must be easy of access, developable, not too expensive and, in addition, it must be attractive and impressive to all visitors. Because of the importance of our exhibition, the site will then have to offer certain advantages from an aesthetic point of view. It will have to be reasonably easy of access. Of course, there are other considerations to take into account, but I think I have underlined the main points.

(Text):

Clause agreed to.

Clause 10 agreed to.

On clause 11—Grants to corporation out of C.R.F.

(Translation):

Mr. Lachance: I only want to ask a short question. Section 11 refers to a sum of $20 million which shall be payable to the corporation. I wonder whether the wording is not ambiguous here. One would think that the corporation can only receive a maximum of $20 million.

Mr. Sevigny: Mr. Chairman, let me say this in reply to the question by the hon. member.

Hon. members know, as I have mentioned it, that the government has already granted a sum of $20 million. The province contributes $15 million and the city of Montreal, $5 million.

There is a section in the bill to that effect. I have forgotten which one it is, but it is there. This section gives the corporation a borrowing power, which will be in effect providing the federal and provincial governments agree to it. The borrowings will be negotiated by the corporation on a 50-50 basis.

Therefore, $40 million will be voted for the efficient administration and the progress of this corporation. Should the corporation need more money, it will use its borrowing power at the appropriate time.

(Text):

Clause 11 agreed to.

Clause 12 agreed to.

On clause 13—Bank accounts.

(Translation):

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, may we recommend that the corporation do not go and borrow from finance companies, at 30 per cent interest?

(Text):

Clause 13 agreed to.

Clauses 14 to 19 inclusive agreed to.

Title agreed to.

(Translation):

Mr. Sevigny: With your permission, Mr. Chairman, although there is only 30 seconds left, I should like to simply say this.

I attach a tremendous importance to this exhibition for which I have worked for so long now. I wish to thank the hon. members in this house for their wonderful co-operation. I am satisfied that all together we have accomplished something great and that the people of Canada, and especially those who live in Montreal, are delighted this evening.

(Text):

Bill reported and read the third time and passed.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Speaker: It being 8.45 o'clock p.m.—

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Unfortunately I am precluded by the clock from hearing the hon. member. I must call private members' hour.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, I think unanimous consent will be given to the request about to be made by the hon. member.

Mr. Speaker: If there is unanimous consent that I defer seeing the clock. Then I will recognize the hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Hellyer).

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Then I call on the hon. member for Trinity.

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, Bill No. S-16 was reported back to the house earlier this day without amendment, and would ordinarily appear on the order paper tomorrow. In view of the circumstances, I wonder whether the house would give its consent to considering the bill at this time?

Mr. Speaker: Unanimous consent of the house is sought by the hon. member for Trinity that Bill No. S-16 be considered later this day. Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: It being 8.45 o'clock p.m., in accordance with the order made earlier this day the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely notices of motion (papers), as appear on page 20 of the order paper.

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, it was my understanding that we should deal with this bill immediately, if that is agreeable to the house. It would take only a moment or two, if we could go into committee of the whole on the bill.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Trinity seeks leave to consider Bill No. S-16 in priority to the notice of motion for production of papers.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I think the agreement was that we would let the hon. gentleman go ahead, but in view of what you have just said, we will be taking the full hour on the motion. That is the agreement, and I think the understanding, as stated by the house leader, because it is conceivable that we might have a longer discussion.

Mr. Speaker: I wish to draw to the attention of hon. members that if a certain event transpires at 9.45 p.m. the Chair has no alternative but to interrupt the proceedings.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The house can give unanimous consent, but I think it was understood that the motion—

Mr. Speaker: That may be, but the hon. member is making a request which would be in derogation of the understanding. I do not think there could be any particular undertaking on the part of the government with regard to that matter. There is either unanimous consent or there is not. Now, is there unanimous consent for the hon. member for Trinity?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PRIVATE BILL

THE IMPERIAL LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY OF CANADA

The house in committee on Bill No. S-16, respecting The Imperial Life Assurance Company of Canada—Mr. Hellyer—Mr. Chown in the chair.

On clause 1—Change of name in French.

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Chairman, this bill was considered earlier today in the committee on banking and commerce, and the other members of the committee have agreed that perhaps I should make a few remarks about it this evening, both on behalf of their parties as well as my own. I should just like to compliment this company on moving part of its mortgage operations into the maritime provinces during this past year. We have had problems with other companies which had done substantial business in the maritimes investing their money in other parts of Canada. We are certainly glad to see that the company named in this bill is opening up operations in the maritimes.

Clause 1 agreed to.

Preamble agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported and read the third time and passed.

FINANCE

CORRESPONDENCE RESPECTING SURCHARGE ORDER IN COUNCIL

The house resumed from Thursday, December 6, consideration of the motion of Mr. Martin (Essex East):

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house copies of correspondence or any documents exchanged between the Prime Minister or the Minister of Finance or any other minister of the crown and officers of the Department of Justice or the privy council or any other government department or agency on the subject of surcharge and imports order, P.C. 1962-902, dated June 24, 1962, and the amendment to the surcharge and imports order, P.C. 1962-987, dated July 11, 1962, and the import control list as amended by P.C. 1962-903, dated June 24, 1962, with particular reference to the legality of such orders.

Mr. Terry Nugent (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, I started to talk on this subject two weeks ago. On looking at Hansard to see where I was, I was a little confused for a while; I thought that perhaps the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill) had been speaking instead of me. You may recall, Mr. Speaker, that I yielded the floor to a question from the hon. member, who I think forgot himself and started to deliver a very impassioned speech of his own which could be thought by some people to have some bearing on this topic. I do not want to discourage the hon. member, or any other hon. member of the house, because I am always happy to entertain questions, and I am even happier when they are pertinent or even intelligent. I hope, however, that these questions will not merely be an excuse to deprive me of the floor, as I have only a short time left this evening, no matter how long it may seem to some sufferers in this house.

I think I had made, or had started to make one point on this topic which deals with the production of papers. The motion of the hon. member for Essex East asks for papers, including all correspondence, in very broad terms between ministers of the crown and departments of government, especially with regard to legal opinions. I think I had made reference to the fact that it was the opinions which were asked for which disturbed me most in connection with this motion.

This motion is to be distinguished from those in which purely factual or statistical material is requested. As I read this motion, it asks for the most intimate details of everything that would go into the consideration the crown gave in arriving not only at the order in council but at what items might be affected by the surcharge. I wonder whether the hon. member would really seriously ask members of this House of Commons to require the government to produce the opinion of every civil servant who might have had a hand in arriving at the list of articles that should be subject to surcharge. I wonder whether he would really wish to have every written note of every discussion between various members in the department with regard to whether a certain item should or should not come within the list to be subject to this surcharge.

An hon. Member: We have heard that before.

Mr. Nugent: It would seem to me to be a little bit strange that a member having experience, especially cabinet experience which the hon. member for Essex East has had—

An hon. Member: What experience?

Mr. Nugent: Especially cabinet experience. It seems strange to me that he should have brought forward a motion such as this one, when he knows what pressures are brought to bear on government and indeed on private members of parilament and on various servants of the crown in connection with each and every item proposed. I know we all have been subject to letters and personal interviews and have heard complaints about this or that item on the tariff list. I know we are all aware of the fact that there are, day in and day out, countless requests for exemptions from tariff duties for various reasons with regard to various items. It seems strange to me that we should be asking the government to produce in this house every argument which was brought in on both sides of the question and which entered into the government's decision, so that those people who are primarily interested in a particular item, those private individuals who have the most at stake in trying to change the mind of the government, should be provided with the ammunition with which to attack the government right from the government's own files.

It seems to me that not only is this course going to subject the civil servant to the necessity of proving his opinion to his own superiors in his own department, but it is going to pit civil servant against civil servant within the department. If any value is to be gained from the advice of people who are charged with the duty of giving the minister responsible advice in connection with these problems, surely we must do what we can to make sure that his opinion is respected. We must make sure that the only thing with which he is obliged to concern himself is the strength of that opinion, the effect it is going to have on that particular item or product under consideration and whether or not it is a good idea to have a surcharge on that particular item. Surely this is the basis of the advice we ask the civil servants for, not the question of who has the most industrialists clamouring on his side or which civil servant, once the argument has become public, has the most newspapers backing up his side of the argument. I suggest that I am not going too far when I say that this is the logical outcome of the complete revelation of every item in the files going into this decision.

Mr. Chairman, this is the extent of the motion before us. Up to this time I have dealt only with the ordinary civil servant and the ordinary item of a tariff surcharge. But here we are especially interested in the legal opinion. I suggest that matter becomes even more delicate when it is a legal opinion which is to be attacked. Certainly the accountant or the statistician is able to compile enough facts and figures in order to be able to show a rather fair brand of proof on one side or the other of an argument as to the economic effect. You can reach a degree of certainty and be able to some extent at least to discount the opinion or the fallibility of the person who is interpreting those figures. However, when we come into the realm of the law, may I say that any lawyer in the house knows that legal opinion has always in it an element of doubt which does not exist to the same extent with regard to mathematical questions. There must therefore be perhaps more hesitation in giving it. There must be more care. There is also undoubtedly on the part of the legal officer giving the opinion a little bit more worry since, after all, it is not provable as such. It is only his own reputation, his own character and his own knowledge of the law which sustains it.

If then we are to ask these people to give their honest opinion, I suggest that the least we can do is to give them protection from argument in public. Certainly no legal officer wishes to be subjected in the newspapers of the country or in this House of Commons to a running critique of the effectiveness of his work from day to day, as to how many cases he has won and lost or how many times his opinion was not taken by the department. I suggest that we must do all we can to make sure that the legal officers are encouraged to use as much discretion and as much care as they can use and must do all we can to remove all thought of the effect on themselves of any question with which they are dealing. Certainly, it takes a long time to develop the judicial mind. It would have to be a very strong judicial mind in order to wipe out completely any thought of self, any thought of the possible effect of publicity in the newspapers, the possible effect on his colleagues and other departments if his opinions were to be broadcast to the public if he is proven to have chosen the wrong side; that the minister should have taken the advice of a junior member rather than the senior member.

I was much impressed by the speech of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). I am sure most of us will recall with what an impassioned voice he presented to the house the necessity for producing these papers. I am not sure he was exactly on the point before us, but I recall his speech dealt almost entirely with the subject of taxation and the rights of parliament. I have heard this same hon. member get up in this house on many, many occasions, but during the last two or three weeks he seemed to be trying to give us the impression he was the only one interested in the civil service in this country. I am surprised that the hon. member should have apparently overlooked completely the necessity for protecting civil servants from this sort of adverse publicity, from this sort of criticism, both in this house and in the press.

Mr. Speaker: Order; I must inform the hon. member that the time allotted to him has expired.

Mr. R. J. McCleave (Halifax): Did the hon. member ask me if I had already spoken in this debate? I have not, Mr. Speaker.

An hon. Member: It only seems like that.

Mr. McCleave: I would hate to appear in this debate this evening, with the spirit of Christmas upon the house, and have my hon. friend from Essex East liken me to Ebenezer Scrooge by denying to him the pleasures of all the legal opinions now in the government files concerning surcharges, et cetera. I am sorry I must do so. If the hon. member really wants legal interpretations by Mr. Dreidger, he should go to that gentleman's book on interpretation and he will find that, among other things, the author points out the distinction between the words "shall" and "may".

One of the advantages of taking part in a debate such as this where very fundamental issues are concerned is to hear the fine contributions from those in this house with legal backgrounds, starting with the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin), a leader at the bar; the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill) who but for heavy duties elsewhere would have continued on to the bar, and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) who has become a sort of latter day Philadelphia lawyer. All these gentlemen have looked at the surcharges and have said that in their opinion these are illegal. Nobody else in Canada seems to share their opinion, but these gentlemen say the surcharges are illegal.

Mr. Knowles: Nobody else?

Mr. McCleave: Nobody else has come around to that opinion, or perhaps if they have their voices are equally in the wilderness. The Canadian importers association has not tested this measure in the courts.

Mr. Speaker: I do not think we are discussing the legality or the illegality of the surcharges. We are discussing whether certain documents shall be produced. There is a very narrow point of debate. I would ask hon. members to observe the strict rules of relevance in this regard.

Mr. McCleave: With respect, Mr. Speaker, may I understand clearly the limits of the debate? I understood there were two points at issue. The first one was whether it was proper to produce these things in parliament. If I am correct in assuming that this is one of the questions then, I would suggest with all respect that it would be equally proper to argue whether it be in the public interest to produce these documents. This was one of the points I was trying to make.

Mr. Speaker: With greatest respect to the hon. member, they are identical points. They are different versions of the same thing. One cannot go into the illegality or otherwise of the surcharges; one can go only into the question of the production of papers.

Mr. McCleave: I thank Your Honour for pointing out that I am really on one track, although I thought I might be traversing two. One of the strong points made by the hon. member for Essex East in his argument is to be found in Hansard of November 9, page 1427. The hon. member is arguing that the Minister of Justice should produce the opinion because the hon. member said the minister has quoted from that opinion.

In other words, what the hon. member for Essex East is arguing analogically, Mr. Speaker, is that the exchanges between the Minister of Justice, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and the hon. member for Essex East—this reference is to even earlier questions and answers on orders of the day—put the minister in exactly the position envisaged by May, because the minister spoke of a legal opinion, and did identify the source of that legal opinion, the deputy attorney general. The hon. member contends that, having done so, he is obliged under the rules to produce the legal opinion, having already gone so far as he has in the identification I have just mentioned.

I suggest that the argument of the hon. member for Essex East would, on the face of it, have great merit, as indeed does everything he says in this House of Commons. As I say, he has made out something of a prima facie case, at which he is very skilful. So, I looked up Beauchesne's parliamentary rules and forms, the fourth edition, to find the citation to support the hon. member's argument. I find at page 134, citation 159, subsection (2), the following:

> A minister of the crown is not at liberty to read or quote from a dispatch or other paper not before the house, unless he be prepared to lay it upon the table. This restraint is similar to the rule of evidence in courts of law, which prevent counsel from citing documents which have not been produced in evidence. The principle is so reasonable that it has not been contested;—

Now, sir, I then refer to the exchanges which took place in this house between the minister, the hon. member for Essex East and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. I found that the hon. member for Essex East was guilty of a grave error, I am sure inadvertently but nevertheless a grave error. The Minister of Justice at no time quoted from the legal opinion of the deputy minister or anybody else. What he did do was give the result of that opinion, an opinion that said certain surcharges were lawful; but at no time did he cite from the opinion or go into the details of that opinion. In short he was saying what the result of the opinion was, rather than exposing any part of that opinion in parliament. Therefore I say this particular argument of the hon. member for Essex East falls to the ground, and it seems to be really the strongest part of his whole argument.

There was also the suggestion of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) that this whole matter be referred to the Supreme Court of Canada for opinion. That was the suggestion made in this debate. Perhaps I am out of order in referring to it, but if so I imagine he would be equally out of order making such a suggestion, which is to be found at page 1432 of Hansard for November 9, 1962; and I suggest that if he can make an argument such as that, then surely somebody should be allowed to answer it and say why this sort of step would not be proper. I do so say; because there has been no suggestion here from any responsible source that the opinion given with regard to the legality of the surcharges is in question, except from certain sources, motivated by political reasons, within the chamber itself.

I also share the views put forward so ably a few moments ago by the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Nugent), and I shall not cover that ground except to say I fully agree with his reasoning, that a civil servant should not be dragged into the political arena, which would be the effect of the motion of the hon. member for Essex East if it should be carried.

Finally, in paying tribute to the interesting speeches I have heard in this debate I would like to refer particularly to the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Smith). He brought a tremendous amount of scholarship into this field and he completely punctured the prima facie case that had been placed before us by the hon. member for Essex East and the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill).

The hon. member for Simcoe North showed that their arguments were extracts and quotations of contents from previous debates in the house, and that in short their arguments really dealt only cursorily with what had gone before and did not show the precedents which should guide a responsible House of Commons. I am glad to see the results of such burning of midnight oil, because surely the remarks of the hon. member for Simcoe North have helped to set this House of Commons on the straight path as to the circumstances under which documents such as this should be produced. For these reasons I would reject the notice of motion proposed by the hon. member for Essex East.

(Translation):

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, only a few words on this motion before the vote is taken. First, since this is the last day of the year, I want to take the opportunity of congratulating you on all the patience and firmness you showed for three months in this house.

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry, but perhaps the hon. member remembers that he has already spoken on this motion and since the Speaker is in the chair, the rules do not permit him to hear the hon. member again.

(Text):

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Mr. Speaker, I am sure there would be unanimous consent to hear the hon. member for Lapointe on this very happy, festive evening.

Some hon. Members: No, no.

Correspondence on Surcharges

(Translation):

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): May I ask all my hon. friends, to whom we were kind all day long by allowing them to pass special motions and bills without any filibustering, to give us their unanimous consent. And here, we shall see whether they are kind or not. I appeal to their kindness.

Mr. Speaker: Do we have unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Gregoire: The Leader of the Opposition did not say no.

Mr. Speaker: I sincerely regret, but some hon. members expressed their opposition.

(Text):

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I am sure that Your Honour was misunderstood. I am sure there is unanimous consent.

Mr. Speaker: That may be so in so far as the hon. member is concerned but I think if he had either rear-vision mirrors or sound detectors towards the rear he would have heard nays from behind him.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Mr. Speaker, I am sure there would be unanimous consent, if you wished to call for unanimous consent again.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, may I—

(Translation):

Mr. Speaker: Do we have unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Gregoire: I wish to thank all the hon. members of this house for the kindness they have just shown me.

Mr. Speaker, if I may say so, one must ask for a lot if one wants to obtain much. And I wish to ask for a little more. Would it be possible to obtain the unanimous consent of the house to give priority to the bill in the name of the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette), to amend the Canadian National Railway Act (salary of president).

Mr. Speaker: No.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, the last time I talked to this motion, I asked that all documents be tabled, at that time, I asked that all documents related to the crisis of June 24 last be tabled. I got the answer that there were too many of them.

There was even a newspaperman from Le Soleil who told me it would make a huge pile of paper. Now, I obtained those documents that we may add to those requested today and that we could enter under the category of those I have here, and that have been printed in Hansard today.

In my opinion, if the hon. members want to consult them, they will notice that the year's deficit in our balance of payments comes to exactly the same amount as the money paid out of this country, or $770 million, paid in interest on foreign investments.

Now, Mr. Speaker, to come back to the bill, I feel that the documents requested here should include a certain one which was before the privy council. According to information I have, it would have come before the council in 1947. We would like to see it included with the one we are interested in.

It was mentioned in 1947, 15 years ago, that if the government of Canada did not take proper care, we would experience a serious economic depression.

Mr. Speaker: I must point out to the hon. member that he is straying from the point like he did the first time.

This motion calls for the tabling of certain papers; it does not deal with an amendment nor is it a speech or a debate.

Could the hon. member address himself to the motion to which he is restricted. It states the nature the date and period of the document. An hon. member cannot ask for the tabling of a document going back to 1947 or, for that purpose, to Noah.

I would therefore ask the hon. member to limit his remarks to the motion.

Mr. Gregoire: The document I am interested in is a copy of any letter or paper which may have been exchanged between the Prime Minister—no mention is made of the year; it may be 1947—and an official of the Department of Finance. That document would be the prelude of all those which brought about the crisis of June 24, 1962.

The documents being asked for today have to do with the legality of the tariff surcharges which were preceded by a document announcing that those surcharges were forthcoming. That document would involve correspondence between the Prime Minister and a Department of Finance official.

That document, according to my source of information, would have mentioned that, if the government did not change its policy, exactly what is happening today was going to happen and that, in 1965, even more serious causes would appear which would result in our making concessions in our trade with the United States.

Mr. Speaker: It is quite apparent that the hon. member is building up to an argument with a certain subtlety, but I cannot accept his point. Therefore, I must ask him to come back to the motion.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, I regret having been out or order. That document is the one we would have liked to have on the subject.

In closing, I ask that all documents which could still throw some light on this matter be tabled.

(Text):

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Pickersgill: Hasn't the hon. member already spoken?

An hon. Member: If he has, he has unanimous consent.

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, there has been for some days now a very interesting debate on this motion of the hon. member for Essex East. I have done considerable research; but having—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): —sat here and seen most of my material used by previous speakers I do find it difficult to raise something new.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Then let us vote.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): However, it is very gratifying to take part in this debate because there are some serious thoughts that I wish to put forward. I had not realized that I might be one of the last speakers of this very interesting and productive pre-Christmas session of 1962; but none the less there is, even in these last minutes, some importance to the matter we are considering. In order to bring my thoughts back to the matter at hand I want to read the first part of the motion, which appears on the order paper today, which is the sixtieth day of this session.

Mr. Habel: Which page?

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): It is page 20.

An hon. Member: What paragraph?

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): These are the words of this motion:

> That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house copies of correspondence or any documents exchanged between the Prime Minister or the Minister of Finance or any other minister of the crown and officers of the Department of Justice—

Some hon. Members: Dispense.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): I continue:

> —or the privy council or any other government department or agency on the subject of surcharge and imports order—

Then it names the respective P.C. orders. It so happens, Mr. Speaker, that I do have the actual P.C. orders here. However, I am not going to take up the time of the house by reading them because I want to get down to the two basic issues that I feel have importance. I want to say very seriously that I think the hon. member for Essex East deserves credit for bringing this matter before the house. I think he has a very weak case and I think his argument when moving the motion proves that; but nevertheless it is an issue we should take time from our other busy work to consider, because it does have certain ramifications for the future.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, would my hon. friend permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Yes.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Since the hon. member has said he has no new argument to offer, does he not think it would be becoming of this parliament to decide this matter tonight by a vote, and does he not realize that if the government refuses a vote it is obviously afraid of being defeated tonight?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Rubbish.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Mr. Speaker, there is a temptation for me to break the happy festive spirit tonight and to answer old Scrooge from Essex East. However, I will not indulge in nasty remarks; I will simply say that I have one or two arguments that might be interjected here; and I add, in answer to the second part of his question—and surely this has been evident in the 60 days we have already sat—that this government is not afraid of anything.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Then let us have a vote.

Mr. Habel: What about Bill No. C-81?

Mr. Pearson: Yes, what about the customs bill?

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): There are, Mr. Speaker, two aspects—

Mr. McIlraith: There is no government.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): —of this motion that are significant. The first is the matter of the confidentiality of documents and the second, which is perhaps of greater importance and more concern, is the matter of legal opinions. Hon. members who have spoken previously have dealt with both these aspects, but I want to run through the thoughts that come to my mind. First, with respect to the confidentiality of documents that may be a consideration of this house, Bourinot in his Parliamentary Procedure, fourth edition, makes certain observations. I mention these references, Mr. Speaker, particularly because the hon. member from Essex East in his opening remarks on this motion quoted from them but did not complete the quotations, and I feel they have considerable significance with respect to these types of document, whether they be public or private.

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the hon. gentleman permit a question? Could he speak more slowly.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Fairweather: Read the Toronto Star editorial of today. That might be useful.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Mr. Speaker, I am always pleased to co-operate, particularly with regard to any matter the hon. member from Bonavista-Twillingate has difficulty understanding. I may say, judging by the list under his name in the Hansard index and his various interjections and points of order, that this includes nearly everything we have discussed this session. I refer to Bourinot's fourth edition, page 251:

> The practice of asking for reports from officers, addressed to particular departments of the executive government, is considered to be open to serious objection. As to "confidential documents" passing between officers of a department, Mr. Speaker Peel observes:—"They are not necessarily laid on the table of the house especially if the minister declares they are of a confidential character."

He continues:

> "If a minister stated in his place that a document was of that class, the house should take his word and he was not bound to lay it on the table."

I omit some of the references I have here in order to get all my thoughts on the record of Hansard this evening.

I will quote now from May at page 254:

> However ample the power of each house to enforce the production of papers, sufficient cause must be shown for the exercise of that power and if considerations of public policy can be urged the motion for papers is either withdrawn or otherwise dealt with according to the judgment of the house.

This follows my argument with respect to the confidentiality of documents. I refer now to the same issue of Beauchesne at page 179 where it is stated:

> A motion for a return may be opposed on the ground of public policy, such as that the disclosure of the information sought is not in the public interest or that its supply would involve unreasonable labour or expenses.

Then there is the part of the quotation from May which the hon. member for Essex East in his opening remarks neglected to make clear. I think it is a most significant argument with respect to the first part of this whole discussion concerning the confidential nature of all these documents. This is from May's sixteenth edition at page 273:

> Returns may be moved for, either by order or address relating to any public matter over which the house or the crown has jurisdiction. They may be obtained from all public offices, and from corporations, bodies, or offices constituted for public purposes, by acts of parliament or otherwise: but not from private associations, such as Lloyd's, nor from individuals not exercising public functions. The papers and correspondence sought from government departments should be of a public and official character, and not private or confidential.

In other words, the hon. member for Essex East quoted from this page in his opening remarks but did not distinguish between the type of information which is private and confidential and that which is not.

There are also a number of passages in Hansard which have relation to this matter of confidentiality. I refer particularly to the debates in the House of Commons, and there were many of them, in the 1955 session reported in volume 3, page 2434. This particular passage concerned the then minister of national defence, Mr. Campney. The motion was moved by the present Minister of Public Works (Mr. Fulton). I will quote Mr. Campney's words because they have some significance.

> As my hon. friend from Kamloops (Mr. Fulton) is, I am sure, well aware, the reports made by the chief auditor of the Department of National Defence are confidential documents dealing with investigations into the internal investigations of the department and are a means of checking the efficacy of the administrative practices of the department. They are prepared solely for the guidance of senior officers of the department. It has long been the custom in this house to regard such documents as privileged and I will therefore have to oppose this motion.

There are other instances. I recall the former minister of citizenship and immigration who is now, by the will of the Canadian people, merely the hon. member who sits for Bonavista-Twillingate making some remarks which bore out this contention.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I reluctantly rise on a point of order. I believe there is a rule in this house against tedious repetition and it seems to me that the hon. gentleman has so far transgressed the rule on both counts, particularly when for about the twentieth time in this debate I am quoted by the other side as an authority. Otherwise, perhaps I would not have raised the point. I suggest to the hon. member that he should let this matter be determined tonight—that the government should allow it to be determined tonight. Is the government afraid it will be beaten?

Mr. Speaker: While the hon. member may be free to raise a certain point of order, some of his remarks were not at all germane to the point of order. As far as the question of whether debate may be tedious or repetitious is concerned, the Chair is not going to be dragged into any comment on that subject, because if we were to line up all those who were guilty of that I am afraid this chamber would be somewhat empty.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): When this matter of tediousness was mentioned I was about to quote from the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, so there is no doubt about it; it would have been tedious and I probably was out of order.

Mr. Pickersgill: I recognized that myself.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): To continue my remarks. I merely wish to say that this question of confidentiality is important in order to get the frank opinions of civil servants in these various documents and reports which are made available interdepartmentally. I think that has been proved and, probably there is little disagreement about that among all members of the house.

However, I turn now to deal with the second matter which is of considerable interest to lawyers and all who take these questions seriously. I wish to refer to the subject of legal opinions. I have some quotations to put on record in this regard. I will begin by quoting from Bourinot. This is from page 253 of the fourth edition:

> A sound rule generally observed by the house is that proceedings before a court of justice are not given except for public purposes and still more is this the rule when a case is pending.

Another opinion which, possibly, is more germane, is from Campion, the third edition, at page 197. I am sorry the hon. member for Essex East, who is apparently so interested in this matter, did not have the time to look up these quotations.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): They have been put on the record ten times already in this debate.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): I am not certain that this one from Campion has been quoted. This is in respect of law officers' opinions:

> These opinions, being confidential, are usually not laid on the table or cited in debate, and their production cannot be demanded as of right but a minister is not debarred from citing them if he chooses.

This is very destructive, if I may say so, of the contentions of the hon. member for Essex East.

In the course of my research I came across an interesting debate which took place in 1947. I know this is not being referred to in any great detail in connection with this motion. This relates to some remarks which were made by the then hon. member for Broadview, the irrepressible Tommy Church. I mention this because not only does it have a very pertinent relation to the debate but it also shows the great clairvoyance which that hon. member possessed with regard to this question becoming a future issue. No doubt some hon. members will remember this debate. Perhaps the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, though he was not in this chamber, was in the back room and will recall the discussion which went on at that time. It was the famous debate on the emergency powers.

Mr. Pickersgill: What page is this?

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Page 1790 of 1947 Hansard, volume II. I am not prepared this evening to discuss in a very informed way this emergency powers debate, but I do want to quote from the speech made by the then member for Broadview, who as everyone knows was succeeded by the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Hees), who has done such a job in supporting Canada's interests. However, to get back to the former hon. member's criticism, he said, as reported on page 1790:

> I have great admiration for the minister in many ways. In 1924 I asked the Minister of Justice a question when he got up to give an opinion on a matter concerning the Toronto hydro electric commission which was before the privy council and with which I had something to do on this side of the water. The minister was asked by the head of what was then called the progressives to give an opinion, and he gave that opinion. After he had spoken I called his attention to the fact that the Minister of Justice should not do what was done last Friday night.

That was with reference to the emergency powers debate.

> It has been a rule since confederation that the Minister of Justice, who is the Attorney General of Canada, should not be asked to give a legal opinion. I raised this question in 1924 and his predecessor said that I was right.

Mr. Knowles: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Yes.

Mr. Knowles: If the hon. member and his colleagues are so sure of the decision, would it not be reasonable to let the house come to a decision tonight?

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): I think the house will still benefit by hearing my modest remarks. I want to say to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), who is undoubtedly some sort of expert on house procedure in constitutional matters, that I thought his argument in this debate was very weak. In fact, he did not deal at all with this problem of the confidentiality of documents and legal opinions, and I would be very interested at some later date—because obviously there is not time this evening—to hear him in a pointed way express himself as to whether he thinks legal opinions should be tabled in this house.

Mr. Knowles: Is the hon. member not aware that I have expressed my opinion on that matter already?

Mr. Speaker: Order. In accordance with the order made earlier in this sitting, the hour for consideration of private members' business has now expired.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, it was clearly understood that the five minutes taken by the hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Hellyer) would not be deducted from the hour, and that there would be one hour permitted for this measure. I am sure that that is the basis on which we facilitated the supply and the Montreal bill, and there is yet five more minutes.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): It was not five minutes.

Mr. Pickersgill: Well, if the government wants to close the debate and shut us off—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Churchill: Read tonight's Toronto Star.

Mr. Pickersgill: I have read it.

Mr. Speaker: As far as the Chair is concerned there was an order made earlier today, and the hon. member for Trinity asked for a certain right which was in derogation of the order. Of course, the house can continue if it so desires, but I am within the four corners of this room and the order made therein today. What is the desire of the house?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, may I suggest that in view of the fact that we are about to celebrate Christmas and that the government feels strong in its position in this house, the government ought to test that position and give the house an opportunity tonight, before the new year, to show how weak the government is by its refusal to have a vote.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I understood the hon. member rose on a point of order, but I fail to see what the point of order is.

[Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert).]

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I was a little impulsive.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate that there are certain agreements which have been made. I have one or two minutes more, if I could finish my remarks. I was quoting from the hon. member for Broadview in 1947—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I regret that the hon. member's time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, on the point of order raised by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, if I recall, when the house gave consent to the hon. member to move his bill five minutes was asked for, and in fact the hon. member only used two minutes of the time of this house. Consequently, I submit that the time has now expired.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The hour has expired.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, the arrangement has been completed. A full hour has been allowed for this purpose. Although it might have been interesting to draw the matter to a conclusion tonight, I myself have some remarks on this vital matter affecting the conduct of parliament, which will be helpful to an opposition which at one time might have hoped to get back into office—

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): But not after yesterday.

Mr. Churchill: —but not after yesterday. I think their chances now are slim.

If we may now revert to government business, I have a suggestion to make to the house which the house might find agreeable. As far as the government is concerned, we would be prepared at this stage to deal with the divorce bills and to pass those tonight in the few minutes which are remaining, if the house so desires. We would gladly give the time for that purpose.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I want to register a formal protest at what has just happened. This afternoon we gave our consent in good faith to allow the government to get through its supply after a motion has been passed, which if we had not so consented would have left this country without any supply until January 21. We did that, as I say, in good faith and on the clear understanding that there was to be one hour allowed for my hon. friend's motion. The hon. member for Trinity asked for five minutes for his bill outside of that hour.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): He did not take five minutes.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, the government has not carried out its undertaking which was given to this side of the house in a co-operative way.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Pickersgill: If the government will not allow me to speak when I am talking about the rights of parliament—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Trinity was allowed to proceed, not by the government but by the house. Therefore, there is no question. Unanimous consent was given by the house, not by anybody else.

Mr. Pickersgill: I suggest to Your Honour most respectfully that when the record is examined tomorrow it will be seen that my hon. friend from Laurier at the time—it may have been my hon. friend from Essex East, I am not sure which—made it very clear before consent was given that there was to be a clear understanding that there would be one hour allowed in addition for this measure.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I have here the actual transcript—

Mr. Speaker: I will hear the hon. member afterwards, and I will see the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fleming).

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I have taken very definite steps tonight to observe the time which was involved. The hon. member for Trinity did not take five minutes. He took three minutes; and a full hour, 60 minutes, from 12 minutes to 9 till 12 minutes to 10, was taken on this motion to produce papers.

Mr. Pickersgill: I looked at the clock and it was ten minutes to.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I looked at the clock and it was 12 minutes to nine when the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Nugent) rose to speak on the notice of motion for the production of papers.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, so that there is no doubt that the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill) will be proven correct by the record, you said at one point that the hon. member for Trinity sought leave to consider Bill No. S-16 in priority to the notice of motion for production of papers. Then I observed:

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order—

Mr. Speaker: Order. May I inquire what the hon. member is reading?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am correcting my blues and I have my words here.

Mr. Speaker: With great respect may I draw to the attention of the hon. member the fact that he may not quote from the blues. It is against the rules. I think he will recognize that fact.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I know that rule is supposed to exist, but I would be grateful if Your Honour would point out where in the rules it is stated that when the blues have been delivered and a member is in the process of correcting them, he is precluded, in a conflict like this one, from seeking to substantiate what the record is by reading from those blues. I should like to know what rule prevents my so doing.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The rules of the house.

Mr. Pickersgill: Where is it in the rule book?

Mr. Speaker: The blues may not be referred to.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): There is no such rule.

Mr. Pickersgill: Why are members opposite afraid of the record?

Mr. Speaker: In any event the hour provided for the consideration of private members' business has long since expired.

Mr. Churchill: Before calling a government order I again repeat my suggestion and hope that the house would deal with divorce bills which now number so many hundreds on the order paper. Is there consent to that procedure?

Mr. Speaker: There cannot be consent. The hour for private members' business has expired. We are back on orders of the day.

Mr. Churchill: I was suggesting that the house devote this time to private members' business. That is something that could be done by unanimous consent.

An hon. Member: No.

Mr. McCleave: I hope it is noted for the record that the hon. member for Cape Breton South is the one who objects to that humane procedure.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Speaker, may I point out that the hon. member for Cape Breton South is not here to object.

Mr. Churchill: I would ask that item No 25 be called.

Mr. Pickersgill: How about calling the customs tariff? It was urgent three months ago.

JUDGES ACT

AMENDMENTS PROVIDING ADDITIONAL JUDGES IN NOVA SCOTIA AND BRITISH COLUMBIA

The house resumed from Wednesday, November 21, consideration in committee of the following resolution—Mr. Fleming (Eglinton)—Mr. Fairweather in the chair:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Judges Act to provide for salaries for two additional judges of the supreme court of Nova Scotia, including one chief justice, and for one additional judge of the court of appeal for British Columbia.

Mr. McIlraith: I should like to point out, even at this late hour, that this is not one of the measures listed by the government as urgent. Those measures we were led to believe were urgent at the time parliament was convened this fall, for the first time after the general election, have not yet been brought forward for consideration.

Mr. Starr: They are all on the order paper.

Mr. McIlraith: Yes, they are on the order paper; but the government has failed to bring them forward for consideration. If the Minister of Labour is interested in this bill, I shall be interested in hearing him discuss it. If he is not interested in it, I suggest that he devote his mind to government business and give it some of the attention which it deserves, if the people of Canada are not to be adversely affected by the delinquency of the government in failing to consider public measures which affect the people of Canada.

Mr. Fulton: That is a fine contribution.

Mr. McIlraith: The hon. member's comment is interesting, if useless. However, the point I wish to make about this matter is that it provides an opportunity for a short discussion on a matter which I believe affects the judicial system in Canada in a real way; I refer to the matter of judicial salaries. A situation is now revealing itself whereby, owing to the inadequacy of judicial salaries, the Minister of Justice and the government in making these appointments find it difficult to get the kind of appointees that all hon. members of the House of Commons would wish were available for appointment.

While I am not one of those who assert or believe that judicial salaries need necessarily be in keeping with the current income that an able professional lawyer could earn in private practice, I believe they must be adequate to guarantee that a judge being appointed has complete independence and security of office, and is enabled to live in a way in which he will not be put in an inferior position in the community.

At the present time I am afraid that, with the rising cost of living in the last number of years, the judicial salaries in this country are such that judges are put into an inferior position in relation to the community at large. I should like to develop this subject at some length. I believe it is of the utmost importance in our governmental system that the position of the judiciary be maintained by every means possible, having regard to its independence and the respect in which it is held in the community, and so that we are enabled to get for appointment to these positions the best possible persons available.

An hon. Member: Ten o'clock.

Mr. McIlraith: I need not remind the Minister of Justice that he has just recently been obliged to appoint a superannuated civil servant, whole legal training comes from one province, to a judicial position in another province as a result of lack of willingness of qualified personnel he might have wished to appoint to that position. I think this is something—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I do not understand what the hon. member is referring to.

Mr. McIlraith: I do not wish to identify the position more clearly than that. What I said was this, and I will repeat it. The Minister of Justice has recommended to his government, and his government has appointed a retired civil servant to a judicial position in one province, although the training of that retired civil servant was in another province altogether. That procedure was made necessary—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The hon. member is quite wrong.

Mr. McIlraith: I am quite familiar with the situation. The minister's denial is not sufficient treatment of the subject.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Fairweather): Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but it is ten o'clock.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Speaker: As the house is aware, we are awaiting the call of the messenger from His Excellency the Governor General. They are still considering a certain matter in the other place. We can either suspend the sittings to the call of the Chair or we can wait here. I am open to suggestions.

Mr. Pickersgill: If I may make a suggestion, I would say that since the government has a great deal of urgent business and it is so anxious to get through, since the first item of government business is the Customs Tariff, which in early October we were told was a most urgent matter, we would be only too happy to proceed until Black Rod comes by debating the Customs Tariff measure. I am sure there would be unanimous consent from all opposition parties to this course to assist the government by getting on with the measure, and perhaps disposing of it.

Mr. Churchill: This is unfair to hon. members because several wanted to speak on this important subject and they are not here.

Mr. Pickersgill: Where are they?

Mr. Churchill: They are Liberal members, as I understand it, who wanted to speak on this subject. I feel, therefore, we should suspend to the call of the Chair. The bells will ring and we will come back.

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps I may take this opportunity to ask the minister what business we will be asked to undertake on January 21 when we come back to the house, so that hon. members will have an opportunity to be prepared to deal with the business expeditiously? Can he give the business for the whole week?

Mr. Churchill: No question could be easier to answer. The order paper contains many items of government business, some of which have already been called and have proceeded one or two stages. I think if hon. members prepared for all the matters appearing under the heading "Government Orders", during the recess, then they will be prepared to go ahead on January 21 with any of the bills or resolutions which are therein inscribed.

Mr. Pickersgill: This is more evidence of the fact the government does not know where it is going or what it is doing.

Mr. Knowles: May I ask the house leader whether we will not be presented with a motion to go into supply on the first Monday we come back, because there are many supply motions that have yet to be passed in order to get all the departments into the committee.

Mr. Churchill: The suggestion will be considered. We could also proceed with the divorce bill on the day we come back. Perhaps the hon. member in his party will negotiate with us and give us some understanding on that score.

Mr. Speaker: The sitting will be suspended to the call of the Chair, and the bells will be rung.

At 10.05 p.m. the sitting was suspended.

SITTING RESUMED

The house resumed at 10.30 p.m.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

A message was delivered by Major C. R. Lamoureux, Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, as follows:

Mr. Speaker, the Right Honourable the Deputy Governor General desires the immediate attendance of this honourable house in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker, with the house went up to the Senate chamber.

And being returned:

Mr. Speaker informed the house that the Deputy Governor General had been pleased to give, in Her Majesty's name, the royal assent to the following bills:

An act respecting the trustee board of the Presbyterian Church in Canada.

An act to incorporate the Christian Brothers of Ireland in Canada.

An act respecting Merit Insurance Company.

An act to amend the Department of National Health and Welfare Act.

An act to amend the Food and Drugs Act.

An act to provide for the establishment of an Atlantic development board.

An act to amend the Coal Production Assistance Act.

An act respecting the construction of a line of railway in the province of New Brunswick by Canadian National Railway Company from Nepisiguit Junction on the Bathurst subdivision of the Canadian National Railway in a southerly and westerly direction for a distance of approximately 15 miles to the property of Brunswick Mining and Smelting Corporation Limited.

An act to amend the National Housing Act, 1954.

An act to amend the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements Act and the Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements Act.

An act respecting the Imperial Life Assurance Company of Canada.

An act to establish the Canadian World Exhibition Corporation.

An act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1963.

Mr. Speaker: Before closing the business this evening I should like to extend to all hon. members present and, through you, to those who are not with us at this time, on behalf of the house officers and myself our most sincere wishes for a Merry Christmas and a happy and prosperous new year.

Mr. Pickersgill: Before Your Honour leaves the chair I should like to express to Your Honour, to the Deputy Speaker, to the deputy chairman of committees and to all the officers and servants of the house the same good wishes which Your Honour has expressed to us on their behalf. I would go on to wish every hon. member, even the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill), a Merry Christmas. However, I cannot bring myself to wish this parliament a happy new year.

Royal Assent

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, at the request of the house leader I should like to utter the same wishes that have been uttered by my good friend from Bonavista-Twillingate and yourself as to the officers of the house and all those who have worked so well and so hard in helping us to discharge our duties, and to all members of the house. Despite the jaundiced prejudices of the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate I can assure him that the government is going to have a very happy new year and that because of that this house is going to be a much better one.

(Translation):

Mr. Azellus Denis (St. Denis): Mr. Speaker, to close on a French note, may I offer to everybody my best wishes for a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year "et le paradis à la fin de vos jours".

(Text):

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, we of this party should also like to join in felicitations to all the members of the house, to the officers who have served us and finally in wishing a Merry Christmas and Happy New Year to yourself and Mrs. Lambert.

(Translation):

Mr. J. P. Cook (Montmagny-L'Islet): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Social Credit group, I would like to offer you our best wishes for a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year, hoping that you will come back on January 21 next, in as great a form as you have been since September 27. I also take this opportunity to offer, on behalf of all my Social Credit colleagues, to all the hon. members of this house our best wishes for a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year.

Mr. Theogene Ricard (St. Hyacinthe-Bagot): Mr. Speaker, allow me also, on behalf of the French speaking members of the province of Quebec, to express my best wishes for a Merry Christmas, a Happy New Year and the best of health, to you, your spouse and your family, and to all my colleagues in the House of Commons.

Mr. Speaker: I am most pleased to accept the good wishes expressed not only to me but also to my wife and my family. Needless to say that I do express the same wishes to all of you.

(Text):

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, until Monday, January 21, 1963, at 2.30 p.m., pursuant to the order of the house passed December 20, 1962.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, January 21, 1963

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

STATEMENT BY PRIME MINISTER ON ITEMS TO BE DEALT WITH

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, with the consent of the house I should like to make a statement on the business of the house. I should like to commence, of course, by wishing all hon. members of the house the very best during the new year, within the limitations that hon. members opposite fully understand.

With the resumption of the sittings it is natural that hon. members would like to have a general idea of the business to come before the house. At the time of adjournment on December 20 there were 24 items of business on the order paper. Several more are being added today and will appear in Votes and Proceedings. These will include a resolution to permit the introduction of an extensive bill to amend the provisions of the Railway Act, based on recommendations made by the MacPherson royal commission. Also there will be a resolution arising out of certain recommendations of the O'Leary royal commission on publications. In due course there will be some further measures, including one to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act following the report of the Gill committee. It is evident, therefore, that the house faces a heavy volume of work during the remainder of the present session.

The house might also wish to have the view of the government—and I hope this is shared by hon. members in all parts of the house—in relation to the sequence of business. Parliament has already voted approximately ten twelfths of the estimates of the current 1962-63 fiscal year. I hope all hon. members will concur with the government's desire to have these estimates passed in their entirety as soon as possible and thus avoid any necessity for further votes of interim supply. It is no more the wish of the government than it is that of hon. members in the opposition that further fractional amounts be voted in the absence of approval of the estimates in the ordinary manner in committee of supply and by the enactment of an appropriation bill.

To date in the present session there has been one supply motion and the estimates of the following departments have already been moved into committee of supply: external affairs, agriculture, labour, transport, post office and national revenue. I propose and suggest that representatives of the three parties, who have already met, should continue to meet with the leader of the house to discuss a method of expediting consideration of the estimates for the fiscal year 1962-63.

Some time ago I gave an assurance that it was the desire of the government to introduce the budget for the 1963-64 fiscal year earlier than has been the custom in the past. The early disposal of the estimates for 1962-63 will enable the Minister of Finance to bring a budget before the house accordingly.

There have been a number of requests for a debate on external affairs. Indeed, the house has been desirous of an opportunity to consider a number of matters comprised within that department. It was also, it appears, the general desire than an early opportunity should be given for a debate on questions pertaining to national defence. The government concurs in these wishes and proposes to call the estimates of the Department of External Affairs for consideration in committee of supply on Thursday and Friday of this week. In this way the fullest opportunity for the discussion of these questions will be provided. In other words, during the course of the discussion following the opening on the subject of external affairs the whole question of defence could be considered even though the estimates in that regard would not be by motion before the house. We are prepared to make available every opportunity in this regard to the end that this most important matter, which in the last two or three weeks has received considerable attention outside the house, may receive the consideration of hon. members.

This is a very heavy program of government business awaiting the attention of the house, and it is obvious that the co-operation of all parties—I emphasize "all parties"—will be necessary if this volume of business is to be transacted within a reasonable period of time. Without going into any matter which might cause division or diversion in the house at the moment, may I say that the government is prepared to propose an extension of the hours of sitting or any other measures which may be acceptable to the house so as to facilitate the transaction of this business. I express the hope that the discussions among the representatives of all parties in his chamber which commenced this morning at the invitation of the government will be fruitful in devising plans to give effect to the co-operation so generally, I think, desired both in this house and outside.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): I am sure all members of the house, and certainly we on this side, have listened with great interest to the Prime Minister's proposals some of which, if I understand him correctly, would represent a drastic alteration of the rules of the house. We shall, of course, take these proposals into immediate consideration from the opposition point of view, having regard to our responsibilities as an opposition both to the country and to parliament, and with a desire to co-operate with the government within the rules which protect the rights and the freedom of members of the House of Commons and the rights and freedom of the people.

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, we in this corner of the house are gratified that there is a prospect of getting down to the really serious business which is our responsibility in this house. However, in considering the remarks which the Prime Minister has just made I would remind him that this is not only a question of co-operation by all parties in the house; it is also a question of follow up and carry through as far as the government is concerned on what is done.

I trust that as we discuss this point amongst ourselves, as we have already heard about from our house leaders, we will have the assurance that we really are going to make progress in this outline of work which has been given to us. I assure the Prime Minister that for our part we are only too anxious to get down to the real business which is before us, and in so far as it relates to our own responsibilities I can assure him that we will co-operate in every reasonable manner. Certainly there is a great deal of business which needs to be done. We realize that before we can get down to the business of a new budget we have to clear the supply motions regarding the last budget. We must also clear the needed interim supply motion. As this relates to work that is our essential business, I hope we can really settle down to the prospects of work in the new year. We will give our wholehearted co-operation to it.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, the proposals which the Prime Minister has just made were, I understand, conveyed to the whips of the various groups at a meeting held this forenoon. No opportunity has been given to transmit those views, certainly to myself and I suspect also to the leaders of the other groups, and certainly no opportunity has been given to discuss them with the members of this house. I think that opportunity will have to be given for consideration before any decision can be made.

Mr. Speaker, I do want to point out, for this group that the proposals ask for a tremendous surrender by the members of this house of their rights and responsibilities. We still have five supply motions which have a place in our parliamentary system. Except for two or three departments which have been opened, we still have to bring in all the departments. The purpose of going through estimates is not only to pass sums of money but to provide members with an opportunity to question ministers regarding policies and programs, and to ascertain something about the working of each department. What we are being asked to do is to surrender all of this and to pass in a lump sum great quantities of money without any opportunity for a thorough investigation of the work of the departments. I point, for instance, to defence as a good example. It is now being suggested that we have a two day debate on defence and external affairs. Is this a substitute for a thorough opportunity in committee of supply to question the ministers concerned and get information regarding their departments? It is the kind of information we must have.

I wish to say that it seems to me to be almost completely unheard of that any members of parliament should be requested to undertake this vast surrender of their responsibilities without a much greater opportunity for discussion as between the groups than has been provided so far. We shall be glad to consider this suggestion and to discuss it with the leader of the house and on the floor of the house when this matter is before parliament itself.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I shall not reply to what the hon. gentleman has said, Mr. Speaker, except to say that there is no surrender. I am asking for the consent of the house.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

STATEMENT BY PRIME MINISTER ON NASSAU MEETINGS

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think I should now make a statement with regard to the meetings with President Kennedy and Prime Minister Macmillan. At Nassau before Christmas I had discussions with the President of the United States and Prime Minister Macmillan on the grave policy questions facing the western alliance in the political and defence fields. I also had extensive discussions with Mr. Macmillan on the various problems of mutual interest to our two countries, and had the benefit of his views on the United States-British talks which had taken place prior to and for a short time after my arrival there.

The agreement reached by Britain and the United States at Nassau represents the first firm commitment to certain ideas concerning military policy in the western alliance which has been evolving for some time. I refer to problems mainly affecting the control of the nuclear deterrent forces of the west. The British and United States leaders agreed that in order to develop new and closer arrangements for the organization and control of the NATO defence effort, a start could be made by subscribing to NATO some of the nuclear forces already in existence, and in particular allocations from United States strategic forces, British bomber command and from tactical nuclear forces now held in Europe. This latter suggestion has relevance for Canada and in the NATO council is now the subject of intensive discussion in which Canada is fully participating. For the longer term the British prime minister and the president agreed to the furnishing of Polaris missiles to Britain to be made available for inclusion in an eventual NATO multilateral nuclear force, with a similar offer to France.

At Nassau the whole question was raised of how political and military control would be exercised in the future within the western alliance. The discussions among the western allies are bound to continue for many months to come, and I would not expect any firm decisions in the near future. The Nassau agreement aims at preserving an objective long sought by this government, namely a limitation of the further enlargement of the nuclear family in the national sense.

It was also agreed at Nassau by the two leaders in question that in addition to having a nuclear shield it was important to have a non-nuclear sword and to increase the effectiveness of conventional forces available to the alliance. It has been the policy of the Canadian government to support the build-up of conventional forces in Europe. The house will recall that on the occasion of the Berlin crisis in the autumn of 1961, Canada increased the strength of its forces in Europe. The purpose of increasing the conventional strength is to ensure that if the western alliance is ever faced with aggression from its enemies it will have sufficient strength in non-nuclear forces to avoid the disastrous choice between surrender and all-out nuclear war.

These are the important questions of strategy which are now in the process of being exhaustively examined in the NATO council. Indeed, I believe that the whole future direction and shape of the military forces of NATO are now in process of review. The enormous costs of modern weapons systems and the speed with which they become obsolescent dictate the utmost care in reaching final decisions. It would be premature at this stage to say anything further about western defence policy until there is a clear indication as to whether or not some form of NATO multilateral nuclear force can be worked out.

I realize that the communiques in question have received full press coverage, but hon. members in the house might like to have these joint communiques tabled. If the house agrees, I therefore suggest that they be tabled.

Mr. Douglas: Printed in Hansard.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam suggests that they be placed on Hansard. If that is agreeable, I am within the desire of the house.

Mr. Speaker: By leave, the Prime Minister asks to have these statements printed in Hansard as part of the record. Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's note: For text of communiques above referred to, see appendix "A".]

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I am sure we on this side have listened with great interest to the Prime Minister's observations on the recent conference at Nassau, and have learned from him what indeed we had previously learned from the press, that the question of a NATO nuclear deterrent was given further consideration by the leaders of the three governments at Nassau; this matter, indeed, has been under consideration now for a good many years going back to the days when those members of NATO, including Canada, first accepted a commitment in NATO which cannot be discharged effectively without nuclear arms.

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, with regard to the remarks of the Prime Minister concerning the Nassau conference, I should only like to say that these and other statements which have been made since then have drawn to our attention and also to the attention of the public at large the need of a general debate on defence matters. I trust that if the work program that has been suggested can be agreed to we can then look forward in the very near future, this being no time for a debate on this subject, to a full discussion of this very vital matter.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, all I want to say is that we are developing the habit of dealing with very important matters on motions, when the Prime Minister or the Secretary of State for External Affairs makes a statement and each of the leaders makes some impromptu remarks. This all points up the need of an opportunity for a very full discussion of this question in the House of Commons.

As far as our group is concerned, I want to say that we view with increasing apprehension the suggestion of a multinational nuclear power being built up in NATO, and we will certainly welcome an opportunity for an early discussion of this matter on the floor of the house.

STATEMENT ON MEETING OF CANADIAN-JAPANESE MINISTERIAL COMMITTEE

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a brief report to the house on the first meeting of the Canada-Japan ministerial committee which was held in Tokyo on January 11 and 12.

Hon. members will recall that the Canada-Japan ministerial committee was established during the visit of Prime Minister Ikeda to Ottawa in June, 1961. Its terms of reference as set out in the joint communique issued by the two prime ministers are as follows:

> The two prime ministers agree that in view of the increasing importance of Canadian-Japanese relations, there should be established a Canadian-Japanese ministerial committee which would not be a negotiating body but would provide a valuable means of contact between ministers of the two countries. The activities of the committee would consist primarily of visits of ministers to each other's country from time to time to exchange views on matters of common interest, particularly in the economic field, and to familiarize themselves with the problems of the other country.

At this first meeting of the committee my colleague the Minister of Fisheries and I had the honour to represent Canada, together with the under secretary of state for external affairs, the deputy minister of trade and commerce, the deputy minister of national revenue (customs and excise), the Canadian ambassador to Japan, and other officials. The Japanese representatives were the minister for foreign affairs, the minister of finance, the minister for agriculture and forestry, the minister for international trade and industry, the minister of state and director-general of the economic planning agency, and the Japanese ambassador to Canada.

All those who participated regarded this meeting as an outstanding success. It demonstrated clearly the valuable contribution this committee can make toward closer relations between Canada and Japan, which are already very friendly, and toward developing a fuller understanding in each country of the problems and aspirations of the other.

As I shall be tabling copies of the communique I need not recount the outcome of this meeting in full detail. I should like, however, to mention some of the most important items.

The meeting began with a general review of economic conditions and prospects in both countries. This was followed by a comprehensive discussion of trade relations between Canada and Japan. This discussion was forthright and candid, yet completely friendly throughout. We reviewed the remarkable growth of trade in both directions since the conclusion of our trade agreement in 1954, and there was general agreement that there were excellent prospects for the continued expansion of mutually beneficial trade.

On the Canadian side we explained the difficulties that arose for certain Canadian industries when Japanese exports of highly competitive products were concentrated too heavily in particular lines, and we urged Japan to diversify its exports as much as possible. In this connection the Japanese representatives reiterated that Japan would adhere to the principle of orderly marketing of Japanese exports to Canada of products competitive with our own production. I should make it clear that we did not discuss the question of the levels of export restraint Japan will apply in relation to Canada in 1963. This committee is not a negotiating body, and the consultations in regard to Japan's export restraints are proceeding through the normal channels.

The committee had a particularly valuable discussion of recent developments in international economic relations. I quote from the communique:

> The committee took special note of the joint initiative taken by the Prime Minister of Canada and the President of the United States in calling for a meeting of ministers to set in train a broad program for the liberalization and expansion of trade. The committee welcomed the fact that this meeting would take place under the auspices of GATT in the early part of 1963. The committee stressed the importance of achieving the broadest participation in the tariff negotiations which would follow the meeting of ministers and emphasized that such negotiations must be based upon the unconditional most favoured nation principle. The committee recognized the need to make progress in all sectors of trade.

We also discussed the forthcoming United Nations conference on trade and development. We agreed that Canada and Japan should work closely together in the preparatory committee in order to ensure the success of the United Nations conference.

Since the inception of the organization for economic co-operation and development (O.E.C.D.), Japan has been an active member of the development assistance committee of that organization, but has not participated in its other activities. There is a growing recognition among members of the O.E.C.D. that Japan, as a leading industrial and trading country, could make a valuable contribution to the work of the organization and that fuller participation by Japan is therefore desirable. In our meeting in Tokyo we expressed the support of the Canadian government for full Japanese membership in the O.E.C.D.

Another important subject of discussion was our mutual interest in a number of fisheries matters. While this was not an occasion for negotiations or for seeking commitments on either side, the committee had a full and useful review of the issues involved.

It was also agreed that negotiations should be initiated between the two governments for the conclusion of an agreement for the avoidance of double taxation.

My report would not be complete without an expression of appreciation for the hospitality and friendship accorded to us on all sides during our visit to Tokyo. We received the warmest welcome by the prime minister and the other Japanese ministers, and indeed by all the Japanese we met. The arrangements made for the meeting were excellent in every respect. My colleagues and I in the Canadian government look forward to the opportunity of welcoming our Japanese friends to Ottawa when the next meeting of the committee takes place.

I am tabling copies of the joint communique. If the house so desires I would ask that the communique be printed as an appendix to Hansard.

Mr. Speaker: The minister proposes that the communique be printed as an appendix to Hansard. Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's note: For text of communique above referred to, see appendix "B".]

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I am sure hon. members will have listened with interest to the report of the Minister of Justice on his return from his trip to Japan where he took part in trade negotiations. I had the opportunity of following some of these discussions in the columns of the English language Japanese paper, in Tokyo which pays tribute to the work done by the minister at these meetings and which reports him as reminding, in the course of these trade negotiations, the Japanese ministers that Canada's unemployment rate is perhaps the highest in the free world. I hope the minister will not be accused of being a prophet of doom and gloom on his return.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I made no such statement. I saw that sentence appearing in the press and took steps to see it was corrected by information extended to the press. No such statement was made.

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, it having been my privilege to help prepare the way for the visit of our honourable delegation from Canada to Japan I can say that we in this party have listened with much interest to the report of the discussions which took place. Certainly they are the kind of thing of which Canada needs more. If we are going to have any solid trade pattern at all in the Canadian economy we must expect to buy if we want to sell, and it is discussions like these which help our trade relationships achieve a greater depth of understanding.

I would just remark that herein is the pattern that ought to be developing with many other nations, where our trade has not reached the proportions which it could and must reach if we are to go forward into the tremendous potential of the era which is ahead of us. I too would like to emphasize the interest which the Japanese have in Canada, but I believe there is a woeful lack in information exchanged between our countries, information which is necessary to develop a greater understanding on the part of the public.

One of the most common questions I was asked was "Could you send us some films dealing with your Eskimos and Indians?" This is just part of a pattern which is healthy and which I trust will be greatly extended in the future.

There is one other remark I should like to make, and I think it is relevant to what the minister said. In speaking about the preparations for this conference he referred not only to the Japanese officials but also to our representatives in that country. Certainly I found that our Canadian people are held in great regard and high esteem in countries like Japan, and this is another reason why we can make discussions such as these as successful as they have been.

Introduction of Bills

BANKRUPTCY ACT

AMENDMENTS WITH RESPECT TO PRIMARY PRODUCTS

Mr. Eugene F. Whelan (Essex South) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-106, to amend the Bankruptcy Act (crops under processing).

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING ADMINISTRATION OF SMALL ESTATES

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Justice) moved the first reading of Bill No. S-2, (from the Senate), to amend the Bankruptcy Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

HOSPITALIZATION OF B.C. INDIANS

Question No. 996—Mr. Howard:

For each month since November 1, 1961, how many Indians, by band, of which each was a member, in the (a) Fort St. John Indian agency and (b) that part of the Yukon Indian agency which is in B.C., have been hospitalized, in which hospital, and for what ailment?

Mrs. Casselman:

(a) FORT ST. JOHN INDIAN AGENCY

Band	No. Treated	Hospital	Diagnosis
November, 1961
Slave of Fort Nelson band....	1	Whitehorse general hospital....	Infectious hepatitis
	1	Charles Camsell hospital.....	Haemangioma
	3	Ft. Nelson general.....	Pneumonia
	1	"	Iritis
	1	"	Chronic bronchitis
	2	"	Coryza
	1	"	Nutritional deficiency
	1	"	Infectious hepatitis
	1	"	Burns
	1	"	Pneumonia
	1	"	Hepatitis
	3	"	Bronchitis
	1	"	Otitismedia
	1	"	Gastritis
	2	"	Cyesis
	1	"	Infected eye
	1	"	Gastroenteritis
	1	"	Asthma
	1	"	Abdominal pain
	1	"	Dehydration
	1	Miller Bay ind. hospital.....	Pulmonary T.B.
Hudson Hope band.....	2	St. Joseph's general, Dawson Creek.....	Cellulitis
	2	St. Joseph's general, Dawson Creek.....	Pregnancy
	1	Pouce Coupe community hospital.....	Meningitis
Salteau band.....	1	St. Joseph's general, Dawson Creek.....	Rheumatic fever
	2	St. Joseph's general.....	Pregnancy
	1	"	Pseudocyst of pancreas
	2	Pouce Coupe general.....	Bronchial pneumonia
	1	"	Chickenpox
	1	"	Pelvic Inflammatory disease
	1	"	Tonsillitis and chickenpox
Beaver band.....	1	Providence hospital, Ft. St. John.....	Upper respiratory infection
	2	Providence hospital, Ft. St. John.....	Diarrhea
	1	Miller Bay.....	Otitismedia

Questions

Band	No. Treated	Hospital	Diagnosis
December, 1961
Slave of Fort Nelson band....	1	Whitehorse general hospital.....	Infectious hepatitis
	1	Charles Camsell hospital.....	Haemangioma
	1	Ft. Smith gen., N.W.T.....	Glaucoma
	2	Ft. Nelson general	Pneumonia
	1	"	Iritis
	1	"	Bronchitis
	1	"	Duodenal ulcer
	1	"	Fracture thumb
	1	"	Cerebral palsy
	1	"	Pharyngeotracheo-bronchitis
	1	"	Tonsillitis
	1	"	Cyesis
	1	"	Burns
	1	"	Impetigo
	1	"	Heart disease
	1	"	Diarrhea
	1	"	Chronic Bronchitis
	1	"	Coryza
	1	"	Nutritional deficiency
	1	"	Infectious hepatitis
	1	"	Dehydration
	1	Miller Bay hospital.....	Pulmonary T.B.
Hudson Hope band.....	1	St. Joseph's general.....	Pneumonia
	1	Dawson Creek General.....	Pregnancy
	1	"	Croupe
	1	Providence hospital.....	Fracture tibia and fibula
	1	Ft. St. John hospital.....	Abscess—left leg
Salteau band.....	1	Pouce Coupe community.....	Pregnancy
	2	"	Diarrhea
	1	St. Joseph's general.....	Influenza
Beaver band.....	1	Providence hospital.....	Diarrhea
	1	Ft. St. John hospital.....	Otitismedia
	1	Miller Bay.....	Otitismedia
January, 1962
Slave of Ft. Nelson band.....	1	Charles Camsell hospital.....	Haemangioma
	1	Ft. Smith general.....	Glaucoma
	1	Ft. Nelson general.....	Low back pain
	1	"	Fracture tibia and fibula
	1	"	Pharangitis
	2	"	Upper respiratory infection
	1	"	Bronchitis
	1	"	Parturition
	1	"	New born
	1	"	Rheumatic fever
	1	"	Tonsillitis and bronchitis
	1	"	Otitismedia
	1	"	Burns
	1	"	Impetigo
	1	Miller Bay.....	Pulmonary T.B.
Hudson Hope band.....	2	St. Joseph's general.....	Pneumonia
	1	Dawson Creek.....	Pyelonephritis
	1	Providence hospital.....	Fracture tibia and fibula
		Ft. St. John
	1	"	Abscess—left leg
	1	"	Dermitis and diarrhea
	1	Miller Bay.....	Suspect pulmonary T.B.
	1	Prince George regional.....	Parturition
Salteau band.....	1	St. Joseph's general.....	Influenza
	1	Dawson Creek general.....	Burns
	2	Pouce Coupe community.....	Diarrhea
Beaver band.....	2	Providence, Ft. St. John.....	Burns
	1	"	Pregnancy
	1	"	New born
	1	Miller Bay.....	Otitismedia

Band	No. Treated	Hospital	Diagnosis
February, 1962
Slave of Fort Nelson band....	1	Charles Camsell.....	Haemangioma
	1	St. Paul's hospital, Van.....	Fracture—leg
	1	Providence hospital.....	Fracture left leg
	3	Ft. Nelson general.....	Otitismedia
	1	"	Sacroiliac strain
	1	"	Extraction teeth
	1	"	Impetigo
	1	"	Upper respiratory infection
	1	"	Abdominal pain
	1	"	Fracture tibia and fibula
	1	Miller Bay.....	Pulmonary T.B.
	1	"	Suspect heart disease
Hudson Hope band.....	1	Vancouver general.....	Meningitis
	1	Pouce Coupe community.....	Premenstrual pain
	1	Providence, Ft. St. John.....	Bronchitis
	1	"	Pneumonia
	1	"	Pregnancy
	1	"	New born
	1	Miller Bay.....	Suspect pulmonary T.B.
Salteau band.....	1	St. Joseph's general.....	Eczema
	1	Dawson Creek general.....	Diarrhea
Beaver band.....	1	Providence hospital.....	Contusions
	2	"	Pneumonia
	1	"	Upper respiratory infection
	1	"	Ovarian tumour
	1	"	Burns
	1	Miller Bay.....	Otitismedia
	1	"	Fracture tibia and fibula
March, 1962
Slave of Fort Nelson band....	1	St. Paul's hospital, Van.....	Fracture—leg
	1	Ft. Nelson general.....	Otitismedia
	1	"	Upper respiratory infection
	1	"	Abdominal pain
	1	Miller Bay.....	Pulmonary T.B.
Hudson Hope.....	1	St. Joseph's general, Dawson Creek.....	Diarrhea
	1	Providence, Ft. St. John.....	Postpartum haemorrhage
	2	"	Otitismedia
	1	"	Hernia
	1	"	Ulcers of mouth
	1	"	Constipation
	1	"	Fracture fibula
	1	Miller Bay.....	Pulmonary T.B.
	1	"	Suspect pulmonary T.B.
Salteau.....	1	St. Joseph's general.....	Diarrhea
	1	"	Hematemesis
Beaver band.....	1	Providence, Ft. St. John.....	Burns
	3	"	Pneumonia
	3	"	Upper respiratory infection
	1	"	Ovarian tumor
	1	"	Influenza
	1	"	Otitismedia
	1	"	Bronchitis
	1	"	Gastroenteritis
	1	Nanaimo hospital.....	Fracture tibia and fibula
	1	Miller Bay.....	Suspect pulmonary T.B.
April, 1962
Slave of Ft. Nelson band.....	1	Charles Camsell.....	Bronchopneumonia
	1	Miller Bay.....	Pulmonary T.B.
Hudson Hope band.....	1	Providence, Ft. St. John.....	Infectious hepatitis
	4	"	Pneumonia
	1	"	Bronchitis
	1	"	Gastroenteritis
	1	"	Schizophrenia—pneumonia
	1	"	Constipation
	1	Miller Bay.....	Pulmonary T.B.
	1	"	Pulmonary cyst
	1	"	Cyesis
	1	St. Joseph's general, Dawson Creek.....	Pneumonia

Questions

Band	No. Treated	Hospital	Diagnosis
Beaver band	2	Providence, Ft. St. John	Bronchitis
	1	"	Amputation—toe
	2	"	Pneumonia
	2	"	Upper respiratory infection
	1	Nanaimo hospital	Fracture tibia and fibula
	1	Miller Bay	Suspect pulmonary T.B.
May, 1962
Slave of Fort Nelson band	1	Miller Bay	Pulmonary T.B.
Hudson Hope band	1	St. Joseph's general, Dawson Creek	Pneumonia
	1	Providence, Ft. St. John	Pneumonia
	1	Miller Bay	Pulmonary T.B.
	1	"	Pulmonary cyst
	1	"	Cyesis
Salteau band	1	St. Joseph's general, Dawson Creek	Pregnancy
	1		Hernia
Beaver band	1	Providence, Ft. St. John	Tracheobronchitis
	2	"	Pneumonia
	1	"	New born
	3	"	Influenza
	2	"	Upper respiratory infection
	2	"	Bronchitis
	1	"	Abdominal pain
	1	Nanaimo	Fracture tibia and fibula
	1	Miller Bay	Suspect, pulmonary T.B.
June, 1962
Slave of Fort Nelson band	1	St. Paul's hospital, Van	Rheumatic heart disease
	1	Miller Bay	Pulmonary T.B.
	1	"	Fracture vertibrae
Hudson Hope band	1	Providence, Ft. St. John	Infected eye
	1	St. Joseph's general, Dawson Creek	Pneumonia
	1	" "	Osteoarthritis
	2	Miller Bay	Pulmonary T.B.
	1	"	Pulmonary cyst
Salteau band	2	St. Joseph's General, Dawson Creek	Pregnancy
	1	"	Incomplete abortion
Beaver band	1	Nanaimo	Fracture tibia and fibula
	1	Providence, Ft. St. John	Otitismedia and bronchitis
	1	"	Otitismedia
	1	"	Tracheobronchitis
	1	"	Pneumonitis
	3	"	Influenza
	1	"	Coronary thrombosis
	1	"	Upper respiratory infection
	1	"	Pneumonia
	1	"	Bronchitis
	1	"	Diarrhea
	1	"	Gastroenteritis
	1	"	Bronchopneumonia
July, 1962
Slave of Fort Nelson band	1	Athabaska municipal	Tonsillitis
	1	St. Paul's hospital, Van	Rheumatic heart disease
	1	Providence, Ft. St. John	Threatened miscarriage
	1	Vancouver general	Rheumatic heart disease
	1	"	Old fracture of spine
	1	Coqualeetza	Heart disease
	1	Miller Bay	Fracture—vertebrae
Hudson Hope band	2	Providence, Ft. St. John	Bronchitis
	1	"	Tracheobronchitis
	1	"	Pneumonia
	1	"	Influenza
	1	Pouce Coupe Community	Osteoarthritis
	1	Miller Bay	Pulmonary T.B.
	1	"	Pulmonary cyst

Band	No. Treated	Hospital	Diagnosis
Salteau band	1	St. Joseph's general, Dawson Creek	Fracture—left wrist
Beaver band	1	Providence, Ft. St. John	Pneumonia
	1	"	Lymphadinitis
	1	Coqualeetza	Suspect pulmonary T.B.
August, 1962
Slave of Fort Nelson band	1	Charles Camsell	Pulmonary T.B.
	1	Coqualeetza	Heart disease
	1	Miller Bay	Post cardiac surgery
	1	"	Foreign body in ear
	1	Providence, Ft. St. John	Foreign body in ear
Hudson Hope band	1	Pouce Coupe community	Osteoarthritis
	2	Miller Bay	Pulmonary T.B.
		"	Pulmonary cyst
Beaver band	1	Coqualeetza	Suspect, pulmonary T.B.
	1	Providence, Ft. St. John	Christison's disease
	1	"	Contusions
	1	"	Tracheobronchitis
	1	"	Pneumonia
	1	"	Pregnancy
	1	"	New born
September, 1962
Slave of Fort Nelson band	1	Charles Camsell	Pulmonary T.B.
	1	Miller Bay	Post cardiac surgery
Hudson Hope band	2	"	Pulmonary T.B.
	1	"	Pulmonary cyst
Beaver band	1	Providence, Ft. St. John	Pregnancy
	1	"	New born
October, 1962
Slave of Ft. Nelson band	1	Charles Camsell	Pulmonary T.B.
	1	"	Haemangioma of face
	1	Miller Bay	Cleft palate
	1	"	Heart disease
Hudson Hope band	1	"	Pulmonary T.B.
	1	"	Suspect pulmonary T.B.

(b) YUKON AGENCY

November, 1961
Tahltan band	1	Whitehorse general, Whitehorse	Prematurity
	1	"	Mitral insufficiency
		"	Placenta praevia-parturition
	1	"	Infectious hepatitis
	1	"	Acute tonsillitis
	1	"	Acute bronchitis
	1	"	Lobar pneumonia
	1	"	U.R.I.
	1	"	Congenital heart disease
	1	"	Newborn
	1	Charles Camsell—Edmonton	Bronchopneumonia
	1	Coqualeetza Indian—Sardis	Pulmonary tuberculosis
	1	Miller Bay Indian—Prince Rupert	Pulmonary tuberculosis
Atlin—Teslin band	1	Whitehorse general, Whitehorse	Obstructive Jaundice
	1	"	U.R.I.
	1	Nanaimo Indian—Nanaimo	Pulmonary tuberculosis
	1	Charles Camsell—Edmonton	Cholelithiasis
Liard River band	1	Whitehorse general, Whitehorse	Spastic hemiplegia
	1	"	Gunshot wounds
	1	"	Pulmonary tuberculosis
	1	Charles Camsell—Edmonton	T.B. investigation
	1	"	Hemiplegia
	1	Miller Bay Indian	Pulmonary tuberculosis
December, 1961
Tahltan band	3	Whitehorse general	Newborn
	1	"	Caesarian section
	1	"	Pyelonephritis
	1	"	Congenital heart disease
	1	"	Acute tonsillitis

Questions

Band	No. Treated	Hospital	Diagnosis
December, 1961 (cont.)
Tahltan band	1	Whitehorse general	Post partum haemorrhage
	1	Whitehorse "	Parturition
	1	"	Lobar pneumonia
	1	"	Lacerated perineum
	1	"	Laryngitis—U.R.I.
	1	"	U.R.I.
	1	"	Fracture femur
	1	Charles Camsell	Bronchopneumonia
	1	Coqualeetza Indian—Sardis	Pulmonary tuberculosis
Atlin-Teslin band	1	Whitehorse general hospital	U.R.I.
	1	"	Cystitis
	1	Charles Camsell	Cholelithiasis
	1	Nanaimo Indian—Nanaimo	Pulmonary tuberculosis
Liard River band	1	Whitehorse general	Gunshot wounds
	1	Charles Camsell	Pulmonary tuberculosis
	1	Miller Bay Indian	Pulmonary tuberculosis
January, 1962
Tahltan band	1	Whitehorse general	Bronchopneumonia
	1	"	Lacerated perineum—post partum
	1	"	Fracture femur
	1	"	Congenital heart disease
	1	"	P.I.D.
	1	"	Chronic tonsillitis
	1	Charles Camsell	Bronchopneumonia
	1	Coqualeetza Indian	Pulmonary tuberculosis
Atlin-Teslin band	1	Whitehorse general	Cystitis
	1	"	Lacerated wrist
	1	Charles Camsell	Cholelithiasis
	1	Nanaimo Indian	Pulmonary tuberculosis
Liard River band	1	Whitehorse general	Gunshot wounds Chronic tonsillitis
	1	Charles Camsell	Bronchopneumonia
	1	Miller Bay Indian	Pulmonary tuberculosis
February, 1962
Tahltan band	1	Whitehorse general	Fracture lower tibia
	1	"	P.I.D.
	1	"	Chronic tonsillitis
	1	"	Thyroiditis
	1	"	Prostatic hypertrophy
	1	"	Schizophrenia
	1	Coqualeetza Indian	Pulmonary tuberculosis
Atlin-Teslin, band	1	Whitehorse general	Hematuria
	1	"	Gastritis
	1	"	False Labour
	1	Charles Camsell	Cholelithiasis
	1	Coqualeetza Indian	Mental Deficiency
	1	Nanaimo Indian	Pulmonary tuberculosis
Liard River band	1	Whitehorse general	Gunshot wounds
	1	"	Chronic tonsillitis
	1	Charles Camsell	Bronchopneumonia
	1	Miller Bay Indian	Pulmonary tuberculosis
March, 1962
Tahltan band	1	Whitehorse general	Thyroiditis
	1	"	Prostate hypertrophy
	1	"	Grand mal epileptic
	1	"	Frostbite—feet
	1	Charles Camsell	Hypertrophy Prostate
	1	Coqualeetza Indian—Sardis	Pulmonary tuberculosis
	1	Miller Bay Indian—Sardis	Pulmonary tuberculosis
Atlin-Teslin band	1	Whitehorse general	Newborn
	1	"	Bronchopneumonia
	1	"	Grand mal epilepsy
	2	"	Cystitis
	1	"	Parturition
	1	Coqualeetza Indian—Sardis	Mental deficiency

Band	No. Treated	Hospital	Diagnosis
March, 1962 (cont.)
Atlin-Teslin band	1	Nanaimo Indian	Pulmonary tuberculosis
Liard River band	1	Whitehorse general	Gunshot wounds
	1	"	Infectious eczema
	1	Miller Bay Indian, Prince Rupert	Pulmonary tuberculosis
April, 1962
Tahltan band	1	Whitehorse general	Newborn
	1	"	Hypothyroidism
	1	"	Dentigenous cyst
	1	"	P.I.D.
	1	"	Enuresis
	1	"	Parturition
	2	"	Chronic tonsillitis
	1	"	Fracture mandible
	1	"	Foreign body in eye
Tahltan band	1	Charles Camsell hospital	T.B. investigation
	1	"	Hypertrophy prostate
	1	Miller Bay Indian	Pulmonary T.B.
	1	"	Bronchiactasis
	1	"	Congenital heart failure
Atlin-Teslin band	1	"	Grand mal epilepsy
	1	"	Cellulitis arm
	1	"	Cellulitis hand
	1	Coqualeetza	Mental deficiency
	1	Nanaimo	Pulmonary T.B.
Liard River band	1	Whitehorse general	Gunshot wounds
	1	"	Breast abscess
	1	"	Lymphadinitis—face
	1	"	Bursitis—knee joint
	1	Charles Camsell	T.B. investigation
	1	Miller Bay hospital	Pulmonary T.B.
May, 1962
Tahltan band	2	Whitehorse general	Chronic tonsillitis
	1	"	Fracture mandible
	1	"	Foreign body in eye
	1	"	P.I.D.
	1	"	T.B.
	1	St. Paul's hospital, Van.	Tonsillitis
	2	Miller Bay	Pulmonary T.B.
Atlin-Teslin band	1	Whitehorse general	Lobar pneumonia
	1	"	Cellulitis—hand
	1	"	Epilepsy
	1	"	Acute cervicites
	1	"	Parturition
	1	"	Acute cholecystites
	1	"	Bronchopneumonia
Liard River band	1	"	Gunshot wounds
	1	"	Bursitis
	1	Miller Bay	Pulmonary T.B.
	1	Charles Camsell	T.B. investigation
	1	"	Gunshot wound
	1	"	Fracture femur
	1	"	T.B. mastitis
June, 1962
Tahltan band	1	Whitehorse general	New born
	1	"	Fracture mandible
	1	"	Gastric ulcer
	1	"	Acute cholecystitis—parturition
	2	Miller Bay	Pulmonary T.B.
Atlin-Teslin band	1	Whitehorse general	Acute cholecystitis
	1	"	Bronchopneumonia

Questions

Band	No. Treated	Hospital	Diagnosis
June, 1962 (cont.)
Liard River band	1	Whitehorse General	Acute cystitis
	1	"	Bronchopneumonia
	1	Charles Camsell	T. B. investigation
	1	"	Gunshot wound
	1	"	Fracture femur
	1	"	T.B. mastitis
	1	Miller Bay	Pulmonary T.B.
July, 1962
Tahltan band	1	Whitehorse general	New born
	1	"	Parturition
	1	"	Incomplete abortion
	1	"	Cerv. abscess
	1	Nanaimo	Cerebral palsy
	1	Miller Bay	Pulmonary T.B.
Atlin–Teslin band	1	Whitehorse general	Bronchopneumonia
	1	"	Hematuria
	1	Miller Bay	Pulmonary T.B.
Liard River band	3	Whitehorse general	Newborn
	1	"	Bronchopneumonia
	1	"	Parturition—twins
	1	"	Parturition
	1	Charles Camsell hospital	Gunshot wound
	1	"	Fracture femur
	1	"	T.B. mastitis
	1	"	Cerebral aplasia
	1	"	T.B. kidney
	1	Miller Bay	Pulmonary T.B
August, 1962
Tahltan band	1	Whitehorse	Cerv. abscess
	1	Nanaimo	Cerebral palsy
	1	Miller Bay	Pulmonary T.B.
Atlin—Teslin band	1	Whitehorse general	Bronchopneumonia
	1	"	Acute bronchitis
	1	Miller Bay	Pulmonary T.B.
Liard River band	2	Whitehorse general	New born
	2	"	Parturition
	1	"	Third degree burns
	1	Charles Camsell	Gunshot wound
	1	"	Fracture femur
	1	"	T.B. Mastitis
	1	Miller Bay	Pulmonary T.B.
September, 1962
Tahltan band	1	Whitehorse general	P.I.D.
	1	"	Acute tonsillitis
	1	"	Fracture Pelvis
	1	"	Bronchopneumonia
	1	"	Pulmonary T.B.
	1	Nanaimo	Cerebral palsy
	1	Miller Bay	Pulmonary T.B.
	1	"	Suspect pulmonary T.B.
Atlin Teslin band	1	Whitehorse general	Bronchopneumonia
	1	Miller Bay	Epilepsy
	1	"	Pregnancy
Liard River band	1	Charles Camsell	Gunshot wound
	1	"	Fracture femur
	1	"	T.B. Mastitis
	1	Miller Bay	Pulmonary T.B.
October, 1962
Tahltan band	1	Whitehorse general	Fracture pelvis
	1	"	Bronchopneumonia
	1	"	Fracture—nose
	1	"	Tonsillitis
	1	"	Fracture pelvis

Band	No. Treated	Hospital	Diagnosis
October, 1962 (cont.)
Tahltan band	1	Whitehorse general	Hematuria
	1	"	Abscess—neck
	1	"	Rheumatic fever
	1	Nanaimo	Cerebral palsy
	1	Miller Bay	Suspect pulmonary T.B.
Atlin Teslin band	1	"	Epilepsy
Liard River band	1	Charles Camsell	Gunshot wound
	1	"	Fracture femur
	1	"	T.B. mastitis
	1	Miller Bay	Pulmonary T.B.

GRAIN SALES BY WHEAT BOARD AND AGENTS

Question No. 1,093—Mr. Korchinski:

1. What are the names of the companies or agencies which in the last 10 years have been selling to foreign countries, wheat and other grains, which are handled by the Canadian wheat board?
2. Which countries have bought wheat and other grains from these companies or agencies during the same period?
3. What are the amounts of wheat and other grains sold to each country by these companies or agencies during the same period?
4. In the last 10 years, what amount of wheat and other grains has been sold by the wheat board directly, and to which countries?
5. During the same period, what amount of wheat and other grains was sold to Canadian purchasers directly by the wheat board?
6. During this same period, what amount of wheat and other grains was sold in Canada by agents selling for the wheat board?

He said: Mr. Speaker, I would ask that I be allowed to withdraw this question in order to rephrase it. As the question now stands the answer would involve considerable research, which will take too long a time, and I think I can get the information I seek by redrafting the question and putting it another way.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed that the question be withdrawn?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Order discharged and question withdrawn.

ALLOTMENT OF FUNDS, RED BANK BAND, MIRAMICHI INDIAN AGENCY, N.B.

Question No. 1,113—Mr. McWilliam:

Was there any surrender or allotment of band funds of the Red Bank band, Miramichi Indian agency, New Brunswick, other than the amount of $2,766.44 toward the cost of the installation of water services on this reserve and, if so, in what amount or amounts?

Mr. McGee: Yes, $3,233.56 was spent in the fiscal year 1960-1961. This amount, together with the amount of $2,766.44 referred to in the question, was authorized by band council resolution dated June 9, 1960, to be expended, out of the capital funds of the band, for the installation of a water supply system in the reserve.

[Mrs. Casselman.]

ASSISTANT POSTAL CLERK—HOURS OF WORK AND SALARY

Question No. 1,119—Mr. Douglas:

1. What is the annual salary of an assistant postal clerk, and his daily hours of work?
2. How does this compare with the prevailing rates of pay and daily hours of work of a clerk 1 and a labourer?

Mr. Halpenny: 1. There is no such class under the civil service commission.

2. Not applicable.

MANUFACTURE OF HEAVY WATER IN CANADA

Question No. 1,126—Mr. Davis:

Has consideration been given to the recommendations of last year's House of Commons committee on research to the effect that the government should undertake economic and engineering studies concerning the feasibility of a plant for the manufacture in Canada of heavy water?

Mr. Churchill: Studies concerning the feasibility of the manufacture of heavy water in Canada have been undertaken independently by several Canadian companies. Proposals concerning the construction and operation of such a plant, and the sale of the product, have been submitted to the government.

"LEAD YARD" PRINCIPLE IN SHIPBUILDING CONTRACTS

Question No. 1,131—Mr. Laing:

1. What is the principle of "lead yard" in the awarding of shipyard building and repair contracts?
2. Does this principle require that the "lead yard" subsequently supervises and controls purchasing of components on jobs allotted to other yards wherever located?
3. Is there any record of a "lead yard" in eastern Canada purchasing plywood or other components for installation in job contracts let in British Columbia yards?

Mr. O'Hurley: 1. The "lead yard" principle occurs in naval ship construction only in those cases where there is under construction concurrently a number of ships of the same class. It does not apply to ship repairs or to the construction of one ship of a class.

The "lead yard" principle is based on the following considerations:

(a) The commencement and progression of one ship, i.e. the lead ship, in advance of the follow ships. By so doing, the experience gained in the construction of that lead ship can be translated to the benefit of the follow ships.

(b) Associated with lead yard production is the principle of central procurement. Most of the major equipment in warships, such as the propulsion system, electronic gear, armament, etc., is purchased directly by the Department of Defence Production and issued to the shipbuilders. A small percentage of material is procured by the shipyards themselves. However, that material which must be "worked into" the ship including items such as steel, structural sections, pipes, flanges, valves, hatches, doors, insulation material, etc., is procured centrally through the naval shipbuilding central procurement agency with delivery to the shipyards on the basis of schedules established by defence production. Almost without exception such materials are procured on competitive basis.

The naval shipbuilding central procurement agency, located in Canadian Vickers, the lead yard in the current destroyer escort program, operates under a management contract placed by the Department of Defence Production and is subject to the purchasing control and supervision of this department.

(c) Further associated with the lead principle is that of preparing the drawings centrally in a drawing office associated with the lead yard. The agency for this purpose is the naval central drawing office. It is operated under a contract from the Department of Defence Production and is subject to the joint controls of the departments of national defence and defence production.

In summary, the lead yard principle introduces reduction of effort, simplicity of administration, economy of procurement and speed of financing.

2. See 1 above.

3. No. Standard plywood is not bought centrally. It is one of the items for which the shipyards determine their own source of supply.

However, certain specialized types of fireproof impregnated plywood are procured centrally through the naval shipbuilding central procurement agency. In the current destroyer escort program such a specialized type of plywood was procured centrally, the portion required for two west coast ships being placed with a west coast supplier and the portion required for four eastern ships being supplied by an eastern company.

Recently in a conversion program, as distinct from new construction, a similar specialized plywood was procured centrally through an east coast firm and issued to ships under conversion on the west coast. However, this order was placed on a competitive basis and at a cost lower than western suppliers quoted. The order amounted to $2,276.50.

UNCLASSIFIED DEFENCE CONTRACTS

Question No. 1,132—Mr. Laing:

1. In the fiscal year ended March 31, 1961, what was the total value of unclassified defence contracts let?

2. Of this total, what percentage was let in each of the provinces?

3. Are quotations sought f.o.b. shipping point or delivered destination, or both ways?

4. During the above fiscal year, to how many, and where located, warehouses, were purchases shipped by suppliers?

5. During the above fiscal year, were there reshipments recorded either in straight or mixed carlots, of goods purchased in Ontario to defence installations in British Columbia?

Mr. O'Hurley: 1. In the fiscal year ended March 31, 1961, the net value of all contracts let by the Department of Defence Production was $615,011,419. This figure includes both classified and unclassified contracts as aggregate information on unclassified contracts only is not maintained. The net value includes the value of all new contracts plus increasing amendments minus decreasing amendments.

2. It is not practical to maintain precise statistics on the provincial distribution of contracts that would show the effect of the department's contracting on the various provinces. In the case of contracts issued by the head office sections of the department, the geographic identification would have to be based on the mailing address to which the contract is sent. This would not necessarily indicate the location at which the work would be performed. For example, contracts placed with head offices in centres such as Montreal, Toronto and Ottawa may be directed by the companies concerned to plants located in other parts of the country. Also, figures for the provinces would not take into account the extent of subcontracting inherent in defence production, and would not allow for the source of raw materials involved. In the case of contracts issued by the department's fourteen district offices across Canada, it is not practical to keep provincial statistics because of the very large number and small value of the contracts involved.

3. Quotations are normally sought f.o.b. destination. In some cases where the destination is not known at the time of tender, quotations are sought f.o.b. shipping point.

Questions

4. Information on the number and location of warehouses to which purchases are shipped by suppliers is not kept in the department. To obtain this information would involve an examination of approximately 140,000 contracts.

5. Information on possible reshipments of goods purchased in Ontario to defence installations in British Columbia is not available in the department.

(Translation):

TRAINING OF STUDENTS TO BECOME METEOROLOGISTS

Question No. 1148—Mr. Rinfret:

1. In 1961, how many university students or graduates took part in the Civil Service Commission project designed to train (a) meteorological officers (b) meteorologists?

2. How many among those who took part in the plan came from Laval, Montreal and Sherbrooke universities?

Mr. G. E. Halpenny:

1. (a) 33; (b) 15.

2. 1 meteorological officer; 2 meteorologists.

(Text):

UNIVERSITY STUDENTS GIVEN SUMMER EMPLOYMENT

Question No. 1,149—Mr. Rinfret:

1. In 1961, how many students studying for bachelor degrees obtained summer employment under the annual program of the civil service commission?

2. Among those who obtained employment, how many came from the Universities of Laval, Montreal, and Sherbrooke?

Mr. Halpenny: 1. Figures are not available for the years prior to 1962 as no statistics were then kept for summer employment.

2. See 1 above.

INMATES OF FEDERAL PENITENTIARIES RECEIVING PSYCHIATRIC TREATMENT

Question No. 1,152—Mr. Orlikow:

1. How many inmates of federal penitentiaries received psychiatric examination in the past year?

2. How many received psychiatric treatment in the past year?

3. Who decided which inmates required such examination or treatment?

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert):

1. Dorchester	212
St. Vincent de Paul	400
Kingston	1,067
Collin's Bay	113
Joyceville	90
Manitoba	610
Saskatchewan	155
British Columbia	161
TOTAL	2,808

2. Dorchester	212
St. Vincent de Paul	725
Kingston	961
Collin's Bay	214
Joyceville	64
Manitoba	83
Manitoba	610

All inmates during interviews given some form of treatment.

Saskatchewan	50
British Columbia	249
TOTAL	3,168

3. Warden
Deputy warden
Medical officer
Psychologist
Keepers
Officers
Classification department
Inmate
National parole service
Outside agencies Court
Administrative referrals

In case of emergency every member of the staff can refer to the psychiatric hospital.

N.B.—Saskatchewan figures based on 1961 figures. An approximate report from St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary as actual figures lost in the fire.

PITT MEADOWS AIRPORT, B.C.—LAND ACQUIRED

Question No. 1,161—Mr. Laing:

1. In respect of land acquired for an airport site at Pitt Meadows, British Columbia, what was (a) number of properties acquired (b) acreage involved in each property (c) price paid per acre (list value of improvements if purchased separately)?

2. Were all properties secured by negotiation and, if not, are certain expropriations before the courts and, if so (a) how many (b) what acreage is involved in each?

3. In the case of each property listed in No. 2 as an incomplete transaction, what was the highest offer per acre made to the former owners?

Mr. McBain: 1. (a) 39 owners were involved; 36 cases completed; 2 before the courts and 1 with the municipality of Pitt Meadows outstanding.

Questions

(b) and (c) The list hereunder shows cases where settlement completed:

Owner	Area	Cost of Land		Cost of Improvements	Total Cost
M. and S. Baron	2.30 a.	$ 1,500.00	(500/a)	$12,500.00	$14,000.00
M. Hamming	1.25 a.	750,00	(600/a)	12,250.00	13,000.00
V. McLennan	1.25 a.	625.00	(500/a)	8,875.00	9,500.00
M. Sadwick	0.84 a.	588.00	(700/a)	3,012.00	3,600.00
W. Van Norman	1.60 a.	700.00	(700/a)	1,300.00	2,000.00
J. Tatosky	10.00 a.	5,000.00	(500/a)	19,000.00	24,000.00
W. Ball	2.50 a.	1,250.00	(500/a)	6,500.00	7,750.00
J. Trach	4.22 a.	2,125.00	(500/a)	3,875.00	6,000.00
S. Korysma	10.00 a.	6,000.00	(600/a)	9,500.00	15,500.00
P. Vilac	9.57 a.	4,785.00	(500/a)	13,715.00	18,500.00
F. Frandsen	0.50 a.	500.00	*	5,500.00	6,000.00
J. McKenzie	1.00 a.	600.00	(600/a)	5,400.00	6,000.00
R. Bennett	11.31 a.	5,655.00	(500/a)	10,345.00	16,000.00
L. Hambleton	10.00 a.	5,000.00	(500/a)	17,600.00	22,600.00
D. Wilde	2.79 a.	1,255.50	(450/a)	4,594.50	5,850.00
W. Speigler	15.00 a.	6,750.00	(450/a)	10,750.00	17,500.00
P. Cunningham	2.79 a.	1,255.50	(450/a)	6,744.50	8,000.00
J. Thompson	9.38 a.	5,159.00	(550/a)	19,341.00	24,500.00
R. Lay	8.53 a.	3,838.50	(450/a)	31,661.50	35,500.00
F. Arkesteyn	10.00 a.	6,000.00	(600/a)	11,000.00	17,000.00
H. Linford	4.80 a.	2,850.00	(550/a)	nil	2,850.00
J. Stewart	28.30 a.	16,000.00	(550/a)	nil	16,000.00
R. Knull	5.00 a.	3,500.00	(700/a)	10,500.00	14,000.00
P. Knull	19.77 a.	11,862.00	(600/a)	25,138.00	37,000.00
D. Sharpe	70.12 a.	43,825.00	(625/a)	5,175.00	49,000.00
W. Mitchell	9.70 a.	6,062.50	(625/a)	1,437.50	7,500.00
W. Mitchell	20.00 a.	12,000.00	(600/a)	3,500.00	15,500.00
J. Robertson	95.38 a.	52,459.00	(550/a)	65,041.00	117,000.00
A. Wiens	18.80 a.	10,342.75	(550/a)	8,457.25	18,800.00
J. Herbert	26.32 a.	14,734.50	(550/a)	13,265.50	28,000.00
J. Klimavicius	29.35 a.	16,140.30	(550/a)	10,359.70	26,500.00
H. Sutton	118.50 a.	65,175.00	(550/a)	59,825.00	125,000.00
A. Kruusma	19.90 a.	10,945.00	(550/a)	15,555.00	26,500.00
J. Knull	20.20 a.	12,120.00	(600/a)	22,880.00	35,000.00
L. Cleave	20.00 a.	12,500.00	(625/a)	2,500.00	15,000.00
L. Saunders	4.16 a.	2,024.00	(500/a)	8,916.00	11,000.00

*$500 considered as minimum price for building lot.

2. All properties were expropriated on May 28, 1957.

(a) 2 settlements before the courts.

(b) Acreage involved in each case—23.83 acres (B. Schlick) and 15.83 acres (J. Robertson).

3. The department considers that information as to offers made to former owners in the cases before the courts should remain confidential pending judgment of the court. Negotiations with the municipality of Pitt Meadows have not yet been commenced.

(Translation):

CANADIAN PACIFIC—TRAINS 123, 124 BETWEEN MCADAM AND EDMUNDSTON, N.B.

Question No. 1,168—Mr. Dube:

1. Has the Canadian Pacific Railway Company recently made an application to the Board of Transport Commissioners for Canada with a view to the discontinuance of passenger and express service between McAdam and Edmundston (trains 123, 124) and, if so, what decision has been taken by the board in this matter?

2. Was a similar application made in 1961 and, if so, what decision was then taken by the board?

Mr. McBain: The Board of Transport Commissioners for Canada advises as follows:

1. Yes. The Board of Transport Commissioners for Canada has received an application dated October 2, 1962 for authority to discontinue trains 123 and 124 between McAdam and Edmundston, N.B. This matter is presently under investigation by the board's officers.

Questions

2. Yes. The Board of Transport Commissioners for Canada received an application dated June 8, 1961 for authority to discontinue passenger train service between Edmundston and McAdam, N.B., provided by trains 123 and 124, and to reduce the passenger train service between McAdam and Saint John, N.B., provided by trains 101 and 102. Following a public hearing in Woodstock, N.B. on November 8, 1961, the board dismissed the application to discontinue passenger train service between Edmundston and McAdam and authorized the discontinuance of passenger train service between Saint John and McAdam.

(Text):

R.C.M.P. TAILORING COSTS

Question No. 1,183—Mr. Matheson:

1. What does it cost per unit to produce the following articles of clothing in R.C.M.P. tailor shops (a) tunics (b) jackets (c) breeches, and (d) trousers?
2. What does it cost to outfit completely one R.C.M.P. constable?
3. Does the R.C.M.P. entertain any criticism of these tailor shops as to quality, cost, or service which would justify implementing the Glassco commission suggestion that commercial tailors be used?

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): 1. (a) tunics, scarlet serge, $36.53; (b) peajackets, $48.58; jackets, brown serge, $36.16; (c) breeches, $24.64; (d) trousers, blue serge, $19.77.

2. $527.50.

3. No.

*LAKE SIMCOE CANAL

Question No. 1,184—Mr. Ryan:

Has the government made any study of a lake Simcoe canal route to short circuit the St. Lawrence seaway, particularly in respect to a canal between Barrie and Collingwood and another between the vicinities of Pefferlaw and Oshawa?

Mr. McBain: There is no record of any study in respect of a canal between the vicinities of Pefferlaw and Oshawa, but a reconnaissance survey of a canal between Barrie and Nottawasaga Bay near Collingwood was made in January, 1906.

(Translation):

*QUEBEC—REMOVAL OF LEVEL CROSSINGS

Question No. 1,186—Mr. Beaule:

Has the government carried on negotiations concerning level crossings on the Canadian Pacific tracks situated within the city of Quebec and, if so, what are the results of such negotiations?

Mr. Balcer: The Board of Transport Commissioners for Canada advises as follows:

An application submitted by the city of Quebec for authority to eliminate the level crossing at St. Sacrament boulevard is presently being studied by the Board of Transport Commissioners for Canada. The board is awaiting a reply from the city of Quebec with a view to ascertaining if the city will agree to prepare the detailed plans of the project.

(Text):

PROSTHETIC APPLIANCES, VETERANS AFFAIRS DEPARTMENT—MANUFACTURE AND RESEARCH

Question No. 1,189—Mr. Matheson:

1. At what centres does the Department of Veterans Affairs repair, fit and manufacture, prosthetic and orthotic appliances and sensory devices?
2. What research, if any, is conducted in this field by the department?
3. How, if at all, do disabled people, who are not veterans, benefit from these facilities?
4. How, if at all, does private industry, engaged in the manufacture of prosthetic appliances, share in the research achievements of the department?

Mr. Churchill: 1. Prosthetic and orthotic appliances are repaired, fitted and manufactured by the Department of Veterans Affairs in Halifax, Saint John, Montreal, Ottawa, London, Toronto, Winnipeg, Regina, Calgary, Edmonton, Vancouver and Victoria. Sensory devices are supplied through departmental facilities but are obtained by purchase from commercial manufacturers.

2. The department operates a research and development section in the prosthetic centre at Sunnybrook hospital, Toronto.

3. Prosthetic service, as part of treatment, may be given under the authority of section 20, veterans treatment regulations, to a person at the request of a responsible body, politic or corporate, where facilities for such treatment are not otherwise available; provided that such body has assumed liability for the cost thereof. A certificate of nonavailability elsewhere is required.

4. Prosthetic technicians in private industry are invited to attend training courses and certain conferences arranged by the department for the information and education of its own employees. The department also arranges for special training on request.

INDUSTRIAL PRODUCTION IN PENITENTIARIES

Question No. 1,190—Mr. Matheson:

1. By institutions, what products are manufactured by the industrial division of our penitentiaries, and what was the total value of these manufactures during the year ended March 31, 1962?
2. What services are performed for Her Majesty or what other benefits are derived as a result of the employment of inmates?
3. Are the penitentiaries prepared to accept new and larger orders for manufactures from the public service?
4. What importance has the industrial shop program to the rehabilitation of prisoners?
5. What benefits, if any, do inmates derive from employment in penitentiary shops?

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): 1. (See attached statement).

Answer No. 1.

SCOPE OF MANUFACTURE BY INDUSTRIAL DIVISION SHOPS, FISCAL YEAR ENDED MARCH 31, 1962

	Automotive repairs and body work	Brush products	Canvas products	Clothing	Concrete products	Footwear	Metal products	Wood products	Printing
Springhill			X	X
Dorchester			X	X	X	X	X	X
St. Vincent de Paul		X	X	X		X	X	X
Leclerc	X		X	X			X	X
Valleyfield				X			X	X
Kingston			X	X		X	X	X	X
Collin's Bay				X	X
Joyceville				X			X	X
Manitoba			X	X	X	X	X	X
Saskatchewan			X	X		X	X	X	X
British Columbia			X	X	X	X	X	X

Total value of production ..... $ 1,318,674.40

2. Services performed by the industrial shops in addition to the above manufactures, are repair and upkeep of machinery and equipment of other penitentiary divisions; repairs to mail bags; repair to wooden office furniture and metal cabinets for public works; a minor amount of automotive repairs and body work on government vehicles; repairs to footwear and clothing; bookbinding.

3. Yes.

4. The objectives of penitentiary industry are to ensure that inmates, (a) will be fully, regularly and suitably employed at tasks that will train them to obtain and hold employment when they return to society, and (b) will, through their labour, assist in defraying the cost to the public of operating the penitentiary service.

5. Training in occupational skills, and industrious work habits; training in the ability to work in association with other employees.

EFFECTS OF DETERGENT ON SEWAGE

Question No. 1,192—Mr. Roxburgh:

Is the national research council carrying out any studies on the methods of counteracting the effects of detergent on sewage?

Mr. Churchill: No.

CAPITAL OFFENDERS SERVING LIFE SENTENCES

Question No. 1,198—Mr. Matheson:

1. How many prisoners convicted of capital offences are now serving life imprisonment?
2. What is the estimated average annual production of goods and services of these "lifers"?
3. What is the average annual cost of their maintenance?
4. What special problems, if any, do they present to the prison population and to the custodial staff?
5. How do these men and women adjust to permanent prison life, and are their lives tolerable and worth while?

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): 1. 121.

2. Impossible to estimate.

3. Approximately $2,500.

4. No special problems.

5. After the first year the great majority adjust very well to prison life and, by participating in the inmate training program and in the hope of being released on parole, find their lives tolerable and worth while.

VISITS TO PENITENTIARIES BY JUDGES OR MAGISTRATES

Question No. 1,201—Mr. Matheson:

1. How many judges or magistrates have visited the following penal institutions during the year 1962: Dorchester, St. Vincent de Paul, Kingston, and Stony Mountain?
2. Are invitations to the bench to visit penal institutions extended regularly?

Questions

3. How many annual conferences of after-care agencies and government services, with dates, have taken place since the Fauteux committee report of April 30, 1956?

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): 1. Dorchester, 17; St. Vincent de Paul, 91; Kingston, 2; Stony Mountain, 12.

2. Invitations were extended through the attorneys general of the maritime provinces, Quebec and Manitoba. In Ontario, invitations were not officially extended, but all requests to visit the penitentiary have been approved.

3. Two. One in 1957 and the other in 1958.

(Translation):

C.N.R. EMPLOYEES ENROLLED IN MANAGEMENT EDUCATION AT BISHOP'S UNIVERSITY

Question No. 1,204—Mr. Rinfret:

During the summer of 1961, how many C.N.R. employees enrolled in courses in management education at Bishop's University, Lennoxville, Quebec, and, of these, how many were French speaking?

Mr. McBain: The management of Canadian National Railways advise as follows:

In 1961 five individuals from the St. Lawrence region enrolled in the staff training course, of whom three were French Canadians.

C.N.R. EMPLOYEES AT THE SUPERVISORY LEVEL TAKING LEADERSHIP TRAINING COURSES

Question No. 1,206—Mr. Rinfret:

In 1961, how many C.N.R. employees in the province of Quebec at the supervisory level took leadership training courses and, of these, how many were French speaking?

Mr. McBain: The management of Canadian National Railways advise as follows:

In the St. Lawrence region which includes Quebec city, 44 took leadership courses in 1961, 33 of whom were French Canadians.

TRANSPORT SERVICES BETWEEN MAGDALEN ISLANDS AND EASTERN PORTS OF CANADA

Question No. 1,209—Mr. Sauve:

For each fiscal year, from April 1, 1950, to March 31, 1962 (a) what federal grants were given to the Clarke Steamship Company in the case of each of the ships of that company supplying service between the Magdalen islands and the eastern ports of Canada (b) how many tons of goods have been carried on each of the lines mentioned above (c) how many passengers have been carried on each of the lines mentioned above?

Mr. McBain:

	Clarke Steamship Co., Ltd. Montreal, Quebec and Gaspe ports and Magdalen Islands.		Magdalen Islands Transportation Co. Pictou, Souris, Charlottetown and Magdalen Islands.
(a)	1950-51	$156,500	$120,000
	1951-52	156,500	120,000
	1952-53	156,500	120,000
	1953-54	156,500	120,000
	1954-55	156,500	120,000
	1955-56	156,500	120,000
	1956-57	156,500	120,000
	1957-58	189,000	174,000
	1958-59	189,000	174,000
	1959-60	189,000	174,000
	1960-61	259,077	174,000
	This service was terminated in 1960-61.		1961-62 298,000
(b)	1950-51	9,040	5,564
	1951-52	9,684	6,437½
	1952-53	10,958	6,923
	1953-54	10,840	6,859
	1954-55	11,698	6,529¾
	1955-56	11,351	7,503
	1956-57	13,139	8,807
	1957-58	10,969	7,628
	1958-59	8,064	6,992¾

Clarke Steamship Co., Ltd. Montreal, Quebec and Gaspe ports and Magdalen Islands.

1959-60	8,158
1960-61	6,441

Of these tonnages, about 2,500 tons were carried between Magdalen Islands and the mainland.

Magdalen Islands Transportation Co. Pictou, Souris, Charlottetown and Magdalen Islands.

1959-60	7,262½
1960-61	7,674½
1961-62	7,825

(c) 1950-51	2,614	2,124
1951-52	2,895	2,598
1952-53	3,146	2,215
1953-54	2,578	2,207
1954-55	2,263	2,256
1955-56	2,362	2,038
1956-57	2,128	1,914
1957-58	2,078	1,775
1958-59	1,921	1,678
1959-60	2,004	1,379
1960-61	2,030	1,544
1961-62		2,449

Of these passengers, about 30% were between Magdalen Islands and the mainland.

(Text):

ALLOCATIONS FOR DEFENCE AND SOCIAL SECURITY, 1930-1962

Question No. 1,211—Mr. Sauve:

From April 1, 1930 to March 30, 1962, what amounts were allocated by the federal government for each fiscal year for (a) national defence and (b) social security?

Mr. Grafftey:

Fiscal year ended	National defence expenditures	Expenditures on health, welfare and social security: Family allowances	Other
	(in millions of dollars)
1931	23.4		18.1
1932	17.9		55.0
1933	13.5		54.0
1934	13.2		53.9
1935	13.9		81.6
1936	17.2		102.7
1937	22.9		105.7
1938	32.7		103.4
1939	34.8		79.1
1940	125.7		78.1
1941	730.1		60.4
1942	1,267.7		51.9
1943	2,563.3		67.9
1944	4,241.6		75.6
1945	3,999.9		90.5
1946	2,942.1	172.6	112.7
1947	387.6	245.1	140.6
1948	196.0	263.2	156.4
1949	268.8	270.9	153.4
1950	387.2	297.5	192.9
1951	787.3	309.5	225.0
1952	1,446.5	320.5	252.3
1953	1,972.9	334.2	151.7
1954	1,857.8	350.1	155.5
1955	1,687.9	366.5	207.2
1956	1,768.6	382.5	235.7
1957	1,783.8	397.5	252.4
1958	1,687.4	437.9	324.4
1959	1,442.4	474.8	512.2
1960	1,534.2	491.2	458.6
1961	1,537.9	506.2	538.6
1962	1,650.0	520.8	703.0

Expenditures, rather than allocations, are given on the understanding that Mr. Sauve has agreed to this change.

*ESTABLISHMENT OF WESTERN CANADA VETERINARY COLLEGE

Question No. 1,216—Mr. Ormiston:

Is the federal government presently negotiating with the four western provinces regarding financial assistance for the establishment of a western veterinary college?

Mr. Jorgenson: Discussions have been held with the western provinces concerning the veterinary college, but there have been no formal negotiations regarding financial assistance.

Questions

C.N.R.—USE OF MARGARINE IN DINING CARS

Question No. 1,217—Mr. Roxburgh:

Does the C.N.R. use margarine in any of its dining cars or restaurants and if so, how much was used from January 1, 1962, to date?

Mr. McBain: No.

IMMIGRATION DEPARTMENT PERSONNEL

Question No. 1,218—Mr. Roxburgh:

1. How many employees did the department of immigration have at home and abroad in 1961, and what was the overall cost to the government of these employees for 1961, including offices, wages, etc.?

2. How many employees did the department of immigration have in 1956, and what was the total cost of these employees for 1956 to the government including office rents, wages, etc.?

Mr. McGee: 1. As of December 31, 1961, the number of persons employed by the immigration branch of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration was 2,017, of whom 356 were stationed abroad. The cost to the government of these employees for 1961 was $9,941,637 for salaries, allowances, travel and removal expenses and rental and maintenance of office quarters.

2. As of December 31, 1956, the number of persons employed by the immigration branch was 1,897, of whom 351 were stationed abroad. The cost of these employees for 1956 was $7,698,273 for the same expenses shown in (1).

*JOHN FISHER, SPECIAL ASSISTANT TO PRIME MINISTER

Question No. 1,219—Mr. Matheson:

1. Was John Fisher, special assistant to the Prime Minister, interviewed on the C.T.V. network on June 11, 1962, and, if so, what was the subject of the interview?

2. Is John Fisher paid a salary as a full-time member of the public service of Canada?

3. Do the duties of special assistant to the Prime Minister include broadcasting during general election campaigns?

Mr. Baldwin: 1. Yes, his position.

2. Yes.

3. The duties of special assistant to the Prime Minister are similar to those of any executive officer attached to ministers or to the office of the Leader of the Opposition.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether I might address a question to the hon. member for Peace River in his capacity as parliamentary secretary to the Prime Minister and ask the hon. gentleman if it would be possible for him to complete the answer to part 1 of starred question No. 1,219, which asks what was the subject of the interview given by John Fisher, special assistant to the Prime Minister, on the C.T.V. network on June 11, 1962, during the election campaign?

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Parliamentary Secretary to the Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the question was answered.

Mr. Pickersgill: It was not answered.

IMPORTS OF ICE CREAM FROM ENGLAND

Question No. 1,221—Mr. Dumont:

1. What quantity of ice cream imported from England, came through the port of Montreal in the week of December 12, 1962?

2. What quantity was imported throughout the year?

3. Have these imports contributed to an increase in the surplus of dairy products in Canada and, if so, what is the amount of increase in the surplus of dairy products in Canada and, if so, what is the amount of increase in expenditure on subsidies for dairy products?

Mr. Halpenny: 1 and 2. There are no statistics on imports of ice cream, nor on imports in particular weeks of the year. If ice cream imports were cleared under tariff item 141, they would be included in import class 242 "Flavouring powders, custard powders, jelly powders, sweetened breads, cakes, pies, puddings, and all other confections containing sugar n.o.p." Documents relating to December imports will not be processed for several weeks.

3. Although specific information on imports of ice cream is not available, the Department of Agriculture made a chemical examination of 3,000 pounds of import product, erroneously invoiced as ice cream, which arrived at Montreal from England during the week of December 12, 1962. The examination revealed that there was no milk fat or other milk product in the commodity and therefore its importation did not contribute to an increase of dairy products in Canada nor to an increase in total subsidies paid on dairy products.

PROJECTS UNDER VOTE 12A OF SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES

Question No. 1,225—Mr. MacEachen:

1. What projects will be undertaken from vote 12A of the supplementary estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1963?

2. In what localities and counties of Cape Breton are these projects located, and what is the number of men employed on each project?

3. What are the rates of pay and the lodging arrangements for these workers?

4. Are unemployed miners from the Doucette mine in Inverness given preference in these forestry projects?

5. Of unemployed miners currently employed on any such projects, what number are (a) from the Doucette mine, Inverness, and (b) from Cape Breton county?

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): 1 and 2:

Location		Nature of Project	Miners Employed
Kellys Mountain,	Victoria county	Stand improvement	20
Oregan No. 1	" "	Access roads	20
Oregan No. 3	" "	Access roads	25
Crodis Mountain	" "	Stand improvement	12
Hunters Mountain	" "	Experimental wood cutting	17
Fielding rd. No. 1	" "	Access roads	22
Fielding rd. No. 2	" "	Access roads	17
Portree (Cranton section)		Stream improvement	12
	Inverness county	Stand improvement	5
Coxheath	Cape Breton county
		Total	150

3. Employees are paid at the rate of $10 per day plus 2 per cent holiday pay and are lodged in temporary camps provided by the provincial department of lands and forests. Board and lodging is charged to the men at the rate of $1 per day.

4. Employees from the Doucette mine are given preference on the Inverness county project.

5. 12 of the miners employed previously worked at the Doucette mine and 138 at the mines of Cape Breton county.

*C.B.C. TELEVISION OF U.S. AND CANADIAN SPORTS

Question No. 1,226—Mr. Dube:

1. How many hours has the C.B.C. devoted this year to televising or radio broadcasting of American sports?

2. How many hours has the C.B.C. devoted this year to televising or radio broadcasting of our national sport, hockey?

Mr. Halpenny: I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows:

1. In the 52 weeks October 15, 1961 to October 13, 1962 the total number of hours of sports broadcasts carried on the English and French radio and television networks of the C.B.C. was 814 hours and 19 minutes, of which 333 hours and 14 minutes were devoted to American sports and 481 hours and .05 minutes to Canadian sports events.

2. In the time period described in part 1, the total is 252 hours 13 minutes devoted to hockey on the C.B.C. French and English radio and television networks.

DUTY PAID COMMUNIST COUNTRIES ON GIFT PARCELS

Question No. 1,227—Mr. Thompson:

What sums have been paid annually, during the past five years, to the governments of Communist countries by Canadian residents as duty on parcels they are sending as gifts to residents in such countries?

Mrs. Fairclough: No information.

EARNINGS OF HOLDERS OF NAVIGATIONAL CERTIFICATES

Question No. 1,228—Mr. Coates:

1. What were the average earnings for the years 1960 and 1961 of holders, domiciled in Canada, of master of foreign-going navigational certificate (excluding pilots)?

2. What were the average earnings for the years 1960 and 1961 of holders, domiciled in Canada, of home-trade navigational certificate (excluding pilots)?

Mr. McBain: 1 and 2. The remuneration of the master of a ship is a matter of private arrangement between the shipowner and the master and is not reported to the Department of Transport.

NATO COUNCIL—NON-AGGRESSION TREATY WITH WARSAW PACT COUNTRIES

Question No. 1,230—Mr. Haidasz:

During the recent NATO ministerial conference held in Paris, was any consideration given to the possible negotiation of a non-aggression treaty between NATO and the Warsaw pact countries, and, if so, what was the stand taken by Canada's delegation to the conference?

Mr. Green: On December 17, 1962, I gave the house an account of the NATO December meeting. These NATO meetings are confidential and I do not think it appropriate to discuss what was said in Paris in greater detail.

LACOLLE, QUE.—IMMIGRATION FACILITIES

Question No. 1,231—Mr. Stewart:

Are immigration facilities available at Lacolle, Quebec and, if so, were and are these facilities provided by the government of Canada alone and, if not, who has co-operated or is co-operating with the government?

Mr. McGee: The immigration branch has offices in two locations in Lacolle, Quebec. The main office is on the second floor of the federal building. This accommodation is provided by the government of Canada alone. The other office is in the Delaware and Hudson Railway station and its facilities are used for the civil and medical examination of immigrants travelling to Canada by rail from New York. The building is the property of the railroad. Recently, certain alterations were made in this building so that the medical examination (including X-ray) of these immigrants could be carried out. The cost of these alterations was borne by American Export Lines, Inc. The X-ray equipment was provided by the government of Canada through the Department of National Health and Welfare.

HOLIDAY WORK BY TUG AND DREDGE OFFICERS, MARITIME REGION

Question No. 1,232—Mr. Stewart:

Do any or all officers on tugs and dredges under the district engineer, Saint John, receive pay for work done on Saturdays, Sundays, and holidays, in connection with the safety of their craft and, if not, does the same practice prevail in the Charlottetown and Halifax divisions?

Mr. McCleave: Yes, these officers do receive extra pay for work done on Saturdays, Sundays and holidays aboard these vessels. However if they undertake security watch only and no actual work is involved they do not receive pay over and above their normal remuneration.

ROADS TO RESOURCES, NOVA SCOTIA

Question No. 1,233—Mr. Stewart:

What was Canada's share of the cost of roads to resources built in Nova Scotia in (a) 1961-62, and (b) the period, April 1, 1962 to the present (c) on what projects was this money spent (d) how many miles of road was involved in each project and (e) what was the cost to Canada of each project?

Mr. Dinsdale: Information not available, since no claim has as yet been received from the province of Nova Scotia for work on roads to resources undertaken by the province since April 1, 1961.

R.C.M.P. INTERVIEWS WITH UNIVERSITY STUDENTS AND FACULTIES

Question No. 1,234—Mr. Berger:

1. Are members of the R.C.M.P. engaged in interviewing students and faculty members at Canadian universities about the political views and political activities of other students and faculty members and, if so, (a) for how long have such interviews been taking place (b) what ranks are employed in conducting these interviews (c) what qualifications do they possess?

2. What government departments and officials have access to the reports made by the R.C.M.P. in this connection?

3. Are private persons and corporations supplied with any of the information obtained by the R.C.M.P., or do they have access to any of the reports made by the R.C.M.P. in connection with these investigations and, if so, under what conditions?

[Mr. McGee.]

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): 1. Members of the R.C.M.P. are not engaged in interviewing students and faculty members at Canadian universities about the political views and political activities of other students and faculty members.

2. Answered by No. 1.

3. Answered by No. 1.

USE OF NUCLEAR ARMS ON MISSILES AND PLANES

Question No. 1,235—Mr. Matheson:

1. (a) When the government selected the Bomarc in September 1958, was the government aware that the maximum efficiency of this weapon depended upon the use of nuclear armament? (b) prior to acquiring the Bomarc in October 1961, did the government indicate to the U.S.A. or to NORAD that it was, or might be, unwilling to accept nuclear arms?

2. (a) When the government selected the CF-104 in July 1959, did the government know that its proposed role depended upon the use of nuclear weapons? (b) prior to acquiring the CF-104 in March 1961, did the government indicate to its NATO allies or NATO H.Q. that it was, or might be, unwilling to accept nuclear arms?

3. (a) When the government selected the "Honest John" in March 1960, did the government know that non-nuclear shells were impractical? (b) prior to acquiring the "Honest John" in August 1961, did the government indicate to its NATO allies or NATO H.Q. that it was, or might be, unwilling to accept nuclear arms?

4. (a) When the government selected the CF-101B in June 1961, did the government know that its proposed role depended upon the use of nuclear weapons? (b) prior to acquiring the CF-101B in July 1961, did the government indicate to its NATO allies or NATO H.Q. that it was, or might be, unwilling to accept nuclear arms?

Mr. Harkness: 1, 2, 3 and 4. (a) The government was aware that in each instance these weapon systems would reach their maximum effectiveness when armed with nuclear warheads or weapons.

(b) No.

RUSSIAN VESSELS IN BAY OF FUNDY

Question No. 1,236—Mr. Dumont:

1. Has the government made any appraisal of the reasons for the recent presence of Russian fishing vessels in the bay of Fundy and, if so, was the visit of any military significance?

2. Who first discovered the presence of the Russian vessels and to whom was it reported?

3. By what officer of the Canadian armed services was the news of the presence of the vessels first announced and on whose authority was the announcement made?

Mr. Harkness: 1. It is not the policy to make information of this nature public.

2. By the captain of a Canadian commercial ferry who gave this information to the fisheries protection officer of the Department of Fisheries in Digby, N.S.

3. The first announcement was not made by an officer of the Canadian armed forces.

APPEALS RESPECTING CIVIL SERVICE PROMOTIONAL COMPETITIONS

Question No. 1,237—Mr. Caron:

1. With respect to written or oral promotional competitions of the civil service commission, how many appeals were lodged (a) from April 1, 1959 to March 31, 1960 (b) from April 1, 1960 to March 31, 1961 and (c) since April 1, 1961?

2. In the case of the said appeals for each of the above mentioned years (a) in how many cases was the appeal granted and (b) in how many cases was the appeal rejected?

3. How many of the said appeals have been made by French-speaking Canadians, and in how many cases (a) was the appeal granted and (b) was the appeal rejected?

Mr. Halpenny: The civil service commission's records on appeals are maintained on a calendar year basis. These records indicate as follows:

1. (a) January 1, 1959 to December 31, 1959, 554; (b) January 1, 1960 to December 31, 1960, 626; (c) January 1, 1961 to December 31, 1961, 758; (d) January 1, 1962 to December 31, 1962, 631.

2.	Number of appeals
	Upheld	Not upheld
(a)	127	427
(b)	140	486
(c)	189	569
(d)	153	478

3. This information is not available from the records kept.

HAMILTON HARBOUR COMMISSION

Question No. 1,239—Mr. Munro:

1. Has the Hamilton harbour commission within the last three years entered into any agreement or agreements with Hamilton Terminal Operators Limited with respect to the handling of goods and commodities and/or with respect to the sale of assets previously owned by the Hamilton harbour commission; and, if so, what were the terms and conditions of such agreement or agreements?

2. Did the Hamilton Shipping Company Limited or its directors, shareholders or personnel, negotiate the terms and conditions of such agreement or agreements or otherwise deal with the Hamilton harbour commission prior to such negotiations or dealings being taken over by the Hamilton Terminal Operators Limited; and, if so, what person or persons represented the Hamilton Shipping Company Limited prior to the Hamilton Terminal Operators Limited taking over such negotiations or dealings; and, upon the Hamilton Terminal Operators Limited taking over such negotiations or dealings, what person or persons represented the said Hamilton Terminal Operators Limited?

3. Did any other person or persons enter negotiations or have dealings with the Hamilton harbour commission for and on behalf of the company later known as the Hamilton Terminal Operators Limited and, if so, who was that person or persons?

4. What person or persons during the three year period prior to September 30, 1962, appeared before the Hamilton harbour commission, negotiated with the Hamilton harbour commission, or made representations to the Hamilton harbour commission, or corresponded with the said commission on behalf of the Hamilton Shipping Company Limited and the Hamilton Terminal Operators Limited, and what were the particulars of the matters dealt with as a result of such appearances, negotiations, representations or correspondence?

5. Who were the directors, shareholders and executive personnel of the Hamilton Shipping Company Limited and the Hamilton Terminal Operators Limited during the time any agreement or agreements above referred to were entered into between the Hamilton harbour commission and the Hamilton Terminal Operators Limited?

6. Prior to the entering into of any agreement or agreements between the Hamilton harbour commission and the Hamilton Terminal Operators Limited, were the terms, conditions and stipulations as contained in such agreement or agreements, except any reference to moneys to accrue to the Hamilton harbour commission, let out to tender to any other person, persons, corporation or corporations, and, if so, who were such person, persons, corporation or corporations, and what were the tenders so submitted; what was the time and date upon which such tenders were required to be submitted to the Hamilton harbour commission?

7. Was any other person, persons, corporation or corporations advised as to the clauses of any agreement or agreements entered into between the Hamilton harbour commission and the Hamilton Terminal Operators Limited with the exception of any reference to moneys to accrue to the Hamilton harbour commission prior to the execution of any such agreement or agreements entered into between the Hamilton Terminal Operators Limited and the Hamilton harbour commission; and, if so, who were such person, persons, corporation or corporations, and when were such person, persons, corporation or corporations advised of such clauses?

8. Did any person, persons, corporation or corporations, other than the Hamilton Terminal Operators Limited, communicate with the Hamilton harbour commission that such person, persons, corporation or corporations desired to negotiate an agreement similar in nature to any agreement or agreements entered into between the Hamilton harbour commission and the Hamilton Terminal Operators Limited during the three year period prior to September 30, 1962; what were the dates and contents of such communications, and by whom were such communications made or on whose behalf were such communications made, and what were the dates and contents of the replies to such communications by the Hamilton harbour commission?

9. Has any agreement, entered into between the Hamilton harbour commission and the Hamilton Terminal Operators Limited at any time during the three year period prior to September 30, 1962, been altered, revised, renegotiated or renewed; what were the terms, conditions and clauses of any such agreement embodying any such revision, alteration, renegotiation or renewal respectively?

10. Was any other person, persons, corporation or corporations advised or informed of any terms, conditions, clauses of such alteration, revision, renegotiation or renewal of such agreement or agreements entered into between the Hamilton harbour commission and the Hamilton Terminal Operators Limited at any time during the three year period prior to September 30, 1962; what person, persons, corporation or corporations were so advised or informed and when; what was the content, or advice given or rendered to such person, persons, corporation or corporations by the Hamilton harbour commission, with respect to the terms of such revision, alteration, renegotiation or renewal of such agreement or agreements?

11. What person, persons, corporation or corporations appeared before the board at any time during the three year period prior to September 30, 1962, with respect to any revision, alteration, renegotiation or renewal of any such agreement or agreements entered into between the Hamilton harbour commission and the Hamilton Terminal Operators Limited?

12. What was the profit accruing to the Hamilton harbour commission from the operation of the Wellington street terminal for the year 1959, and what was the traffic by total tonnage in and out of the said terminal for the year 1959, and by whom was the said terminal operated during the year 1959?

13. What was the profit accruing to the Hamilton harbour commission from the operation of the Wellington street terminal for the year 1960, and what was the traffic by total tonnage in and out of the said terminal for the year 1960, and by whom was the said terminal operated during the year 1960?

14. What was the profit or loss accruing to the Hamilton harbour commission from the operation of the Wellington street terminal for the year 1961, and what was the traffic by total tonnage in and out of the said terminal during the year 1961, and by whom was the said terminal operated during the year 1961?

15. What was the name of each and every trucking or transport firm which carried tonnage out of the Wellington street terminal and the amount of tonnage carried by each during the years 1956, 1957, 1958, 1959, 1960, and 1961?

16. Has the Minister of Transport or any other member of the government or the federal cabinet received any communication, written or otherwise, from any trucking or transport firm with respect to the tonnage carried out of the Wellington street terminal during the years 1958, 1959, 1960, 1961, or 1962; from whom and when was such communication received, and what was the content of such communication; was there any reply or replies to such communication or communications; when was the reply or replies made, and what was the content of such replies?

17. Was any commissioner, member of the Hamilton harbour commission, either a director, shareholder, executive officer or employee of any transport firm or company during the years 1958, 1959, 1960, 1961 or 1962; what was the name of such transport firm of which the said commissioner was a director, shareholder, executive officer or employee; what was the percentage of the total tonnage carried out of the Wellington street terminal by such transport firm during the years 1956, 1957, 1958, 1959, 1960, 1961, and 1962?

18. What was the percentage of the total tonnage carried out of the Wellington street terminal by the following companies: Western Freight Lines Limited, Overland Express Limited, Husband Transport Limited, Inter-city Truck Lines Limited, Howell Forwarding Co. Ltd., Hanson Transport Limited, Smith Transport Limited, Armstrong Cartage and Consolidated Truck Lines Limited, during the years 1956, 1957, 1958, 1959, 1960 and 1961?

Mr. McBain: Parts 1 to 15 and parts 17 and 18 relate to the administration of the Hamilton harbour commissioners and the information is not available in the Department of Transport.

Part 16. No.

(Translation):

WATER AND SEWER SERVICES AT ST. SYLVESTRE RADAR BASE

Question No. 1,240—Mr. Dumont:

1. What is the name of the contractor who installed the sewage and water system for the employees at the radar base at St. Sylvestre?

[Mr. Munro.]

2. How many times has this work been recommenced?

3. What is the total cost of this work to the federal government?

4. Would it have been advantageous to have carried out this work in the summer?

5. When a contractor undertakes such work, is the efficient working of these sewers his responsibility for at least five years?

Mr. O'Hurley: 1. Nadeau & Frères Limitée, Saint-Patrice de Beaurivage, P.Q.

2. Corrective measures were taken with regard to part of this work.

3. The present amount of the contract is $155,660.41. The contractor has filed a claim for additional payment, and this is now being considered.

4. Under normal conditions, it would have been preferable that such work be carried out in the summertime. However, the contractor was required to go ahead during the winter months so that these services might be available for the installation of prefabricated houses scheduled for delivery in the spring.

5. Yes.

(Text):

FULL AND PART TIME PROFESSIONAL EMPLOYMENT IN PENITENTIARIES

Question No. 1,243—Mr. Orlikow:

How many of the psychologists, psychiatrists, physicians, and dentists, employed by the federal government work full time at the penitentiaries, and of those who work part time, how many hours per week does each work in the penitentiaries?

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): The psychologists, psychiatrists, physicians, and dentists are employed in the penitentiaries as follows: Psychologists: 19, full time, Psychiatrists: 8, part time, 15 hours per week. Physicians: 4, full time; 7, part time, 15 hours per week. Dentists: 8, part time, 15 hours per week.

VOCATIONAL AND INDUSTRIAL INSTRUCTORS IN PENITENTIARIES

Question No. 1,244—Mr. Orlikow:

What qualifications are required by the vocational training instructors and industrial instructors who are employed by the penitentiaries?

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Vocational training intructors (all trades). Qualifications: Technical school graduation, completion of apprenticeship type training with at least five years' experience at journeyman level. Experience as a foreman or a supervisor desirable. Training in modern teaching methods and ability to plan, organize and teach courses in the relevant trade.

Industrial instructor (all trades). Qualifications: Grade 10 education, technical school training preferred. Completed apprenticeship with at least four years' practical experience at journeyman level, preferably with some experience in a supervisory capacity.

ON THE JOB TRAINING OF GUARDS IN PENITENTIARIES

Question No. 1,245—Mr. Orlikow:

Who conducts the on the job training of guards hired to work in the penitentiaries?

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): The on the job training of guards hired to work in penitentiaries is conducted by the squad leaders (keepers) under the over-all guidance of the staff training and safety officer.

GRANTS FOR SOCIAL WELFARE TRAINING

Question No. 1,246—Mr. Orlikow:

1. How much money has been allocated under the welfare training grants to help pay for the education of people desiring to improve their qualifications in the field of social work?

2. How many people are now at recognized professional schools under the provisions of these grants?

3. What are the amounts of the bursaries provided?

4. Has any money been allocated for research projects in the field of social service?

5. Have any plans been developed for research into appropriate use of sub-professional staff in the field of social welfare?

Mrs. Casselman: 1. $225,000 will be available under the national welfare program in the current fiscal year for general welfare and professional training. It is proposed that this amount be increased to $450,000 for the fiscal year 1963-64.

These funds will be made available for general welfare projects, teaching and field instruction projects, as well as for bursaries, staff training grants, scholarships, fellowships and staff development projects.

2. Funds were not available to initiate this program until the supplementary estimates were passed by the house on December 12, 1962. Following approval of funds by parliament, order in council P.C. 1963-15/1 was passed on January 3, 1963, setting out the nature and scope of the program under which these funds are to be made available. This information has been transmitted to the provincial welfare departments and to the schools of social work and projects for educational training in professional schools are now being received.

3. The welfare grants program makes provision for a provincial-federal scheme of bursaries and assistance for staff training. The value of the bursaries will be determined by the provincial welfare authorities with the federal government sharing up to a maximum of $1,500 for a year plus $500 for dependants. The federal government will also share the cost with the provinces of staff training grants designed to increase the qualifications of welfare personnel now employed in welfare programs.

Twenty welfare scholarships are to be offered by the federal government in 1963-64, valued up to $2,000 for a year. These will be for graduate study in social work and will be offered to those persons who have completed their undergraduate studies with high academic standing and who have been accepted for a course of full time study by a school of social work. Ten welfare fellowships are also to be offered by the federal government in 1963-64, valued up to $4,000 for a year plus $500 for dependants. These will be for graduate study at Canadian and foreign universities and will be offered to persons who have demonstrated leadership qualities and ability of a high order in the fields of administration, teaching, and research in welfare in Canada. These fellowships will be available to persons holding a master's degree in social work.

4. $25,000 will be available in the current fiscal year for welfare research work. It is proposed that this amount be increased to $50,000 for the fiscal year 1963-64.

A research review committee and members for research review panels have been asked to serve in connection with the research grant program. It is anticipated that a considerable number of research projects will be available for consideration and evaluation within the next several weeks.

5. There is considerable interest across Canada in the question of the use of sub-professional staff in the field of social welfare. There is a national welfare organization, the commission on education and personnel, associated with the Canadian Welfare Council, which is preparing a research project relating to various aspects of the effective utilization of welfare personnel. The department is hopeful that this organization will include in its project this important matter of the utilization of sub-professional staff.

ADVANCES TO WORKERS IN INDIAN CRAFTS

Question No. 1,248—Mr. Brown:

Has the government made any provisions for advancing money to Indian-craft workers in wintertime for making objects to be sold to summer tourists?

Mr. McGee: Yes. The Indian affairs branch has in its appropriation funds to provide assistance to Indian handicrafts producers. The two major forms of assistance extended by the branch under its handicrafts development program are the provision of raw materials and supplies, and the purchase of finished craft products for resale during the primary selling season.

Questions

CANADIANS LEAVING TO TAKE UP U.S. RESIDENCE

Question No. 1,249—Mr. Brown:

How many Canadians left Canada during the past year to take up permanent residence in the United States?

Mr. Nesbitt: Total immigrant aliens admitted to the United States, whose country of last permanent residence was Canada, for the calendar year 1961: 45,209.

Source: United States Department of Justice; immigration and naturalization service.

DISAPPEARANCE OF CANADIAN NAVAL OFFICER

Question No. 1,250—Mr. Fisher:

1. Did a Royal Canadian Navy officer disappear last summer into the Mediterranean sea area?

2. Was he found and, if so, where?

3. What were the actions taken to recover such a lost officer, and what disciplinary action was taken?

4. Has the navy an explanation for the reasons that may have led to the disappearance?

Mr. Harkness: 1. In April, 1962, an officer of the Royal Canadian Navy was absent without authority from his ship when the latter sailed from Portsmouth, England, to Canada. His whereabouts were at the time unknown.

2. Yes, he appeared at the Canadian consulate in Hamburg, Germany, on 28 November, 1962, requesting papers for a visit to South Africa, and was then identified as the missing officer.

3. A warrant was issued for his arrest as a suspected deserter and suitable steps were taken to trace and apprehend him. He was arrested at Hamburg by the Canadian Army provost corps. He was tried at Halifax, Nova Scotia, by general court martial on 12 December, 1962, on a charge of desertion under section 79 of the National Defence Act. He was found guilty and sentenced to imprisonment for one year and is now undergoing this sentence in a civil prison in Nova Scotia.

4. It is understood that the reasons were personal and not connected with his service in the Royal Canadian Navy.

(Translation):

NAVIGATION AIDS TO MAGDALEN ISLANDS

Question No. 1,252—Mr. Sauve:

Is it the intention of the government to instal on the Magdalen islands, during the spring of 1963 (a) a light buoy at the entrance of Aubert harbour (b) a light buoy at the place known as "Southwest of Old Harry" (c) a lighthouse at Gros Cap (west point) (d) coloured lights at the entrance signals of Aubert harbour?

Mr. McBain: (a) Yes. (b) Yes. (c) No. (d) Yes.

(Text):

FEDERAL, PROVINCIAL AND MUNICIPAL REVENUES

Question No. 1,253—Mr. Sauve:

For each fiscal year from April 1, 1930 to March 31, 1962, what were the total amounts of the revenues of the federal government, of the provincial governments, and of the municipalities (a) in absolute figures (b) as a percentage of the annual total of all revenue for each level of government?

Mr. Nesbitt: I would refer the hon. member to the following statement:

NET GENERAL REVENUE—ALL CANADIAN GOVERNMENTS

AFTER ELIMINATION OF INTERGOVERNMENT TRANSFERS[1]

For the fiscal year ended nearest to December 31	Federal	Percentage of Total	Provincial	Percentage of Total	Municipal	Percentage of Total	Total
			(millions of dollars)
1960[2]	6,416	64.6	2,016	20.3	1,504	15.1	9,936
1959	5,736	62.8	1,947	21.3	1,455	15.9	9,138
1958	5,066	62.8	1,709	21.2	1,294	16.0	8,069
1957	5,396	65.6	1,641	19.9	1,180	14.5	8,217
1956	5,441	68.9	1,396	17.7	1,058	13.4	7,895
1955	4,668	67.9	1,262	18.4	943	13.7	6,873
1954	4,364	69.3	1,055	16.8	876	13.9	6,295
1953	4,650	72.0	993	15.3	811	12.7	6,454
1952	4,575	73.4	924	14.8	737	11.8	6,236
1951	3,936	71.0	949	17.1	660	11.9	5,545
1950	3,052	68.7	828	18.7	560	12.6	4,440
1949	2,545	67.2	733	19.3	512	13.5	3,790
1948	2,715	71.1	642	16.8	463	12.1	3,820
1947	2,840	74.9	540	14.2	413	10.9	3,793
1946	2,973	79.3	401	10.7	375	10.0	3,749
1945	2,957	81.6	322	8.9	345	9.5	3,624
1943	2,582	81.4	250	7.9	341	10.7	3,173
1941	1,440	69.5	302	14.6	331	15.9	2,073
1939	524	48.7	236	21.9	317	29.4	1,077
1937	502	48.9	221	21.5	304	29.6	1,027
1933	315	42.4	133	18.0	294	39.6	742

[1] The provincial and municipal government totals exclude both unconditional grants or subsidies and grants in aid and shared cost contributions, received from the senior levels of governments.

[2] Estimated.

NOTE: Data not available in comparative form for 1930, 1931, 1932, 1934, 1935, 1936, 1938, 1940, 1942, 1944 and 1961.

(Translation):

CANADIAN MARITIME COMMISSION GRANTS, MAGDALEN ISLANDS

Question No. 1,254—Mr. Sauve:

For each fiscal year from April 1, 1950 to March 31, 1962, what was the amount of each grant made by the Canadian maritime commission or any department of the federal government for the transportation of freight and/or passengers on any ship (indicating the name of the owners) in service between the Magdalen islands and any other port in Canada?

Mr. McBain: Part of the answer to this question will be found in the reply to question 1,209. In addition, a grant has been made to the following shipping company:

The Sea and Air Transport Co-operative, for the regular transportation of freight between the Magdalen islands and Halifax, as follows: in 1960-61, $6,667; in 1961-62, $30,000.

(Text):

NUCLEAR WEAPONS ON CANADIAN SOIL

Question No. 1,255—Mr. Sauve:

Are there any nuclear weapons on Canadian soil or on any territory north of the 49th parallel where American troops are stationed?

Mr. Harkness: There are no nuclear weapons on Canadian soil.

FISHERMEN'S INDEMNITY PLAN, MAGDALEN ISLANDS

Question No. 1,256—Mr. Sauve:

As of March 31, 1962, how many ships from Iles-de-la-Madeleine were insured under the provisions of the fishermen's indemnity plan, referred to on page 9 of the fifteenth report of the fisheries prices support board; and for the years 1960, 1961, and 1962, how many fishermen from Iles-de-la-Madeleine received an indemnity under this plan?

Mr. MacLean (Queens): As of March 31, 1962, 186 fishing vessels in Iles-de-la-Madeleine were insured under the fishermen's indemnity plan. The number of fishermen who received indemnity in respect of loss of or damage to fishing vessels during the calendar years 1960, 1961 and 1962, are:

Year	No. of fishermen receiving indemnity
1960	1
1961	Nil
1962	Nil

NET MESHING DIAMETER, GULF OF ST. LAWRENCE FISHERIES

Question No. 1,258—Mr. Sauve:

1. Does the government intend to propose, to those countries whose ships carry on fishing activities in the gulf of St. Lawrence, an international agreement designed to limit the diameter of the net meshing?

Questions

2. Does the government ensure that the gulf of St. Lawrence is patrolled in order that Canadian fishermen abide by the limits set on the diameter of net meshing and if so, how is this done?

Mr. MacLean (Queens): 1. Regulations are in effect for this purpose pursuant to the provisions of the international convention for the northwest Atlantic fisheries to which Canada is a contracting party.

2. Yes, by water patrol, but principally by checking of nets on board when fishing vessels are in port.

FORT CHURCHILL, MAN.—BAY BUS LINE

Question No. 1,259—Mr. Douglas:

Has an application been received from Mr. D. F. Purdy to operate the Bay bus line within Fort Churchill and, if so, what reply has been made?

Mr. Harkness: Yes, and Mr. Purdy has been advised the matter is under investigation.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT—TEMPORARY EMPLOYMENT TO HANDLE CHRISTMAS MAIL

Question No. 1,260—Mr. Peters:

1. How many persons were registered for unemployment insurance in categories suitable for temporary employment by the Post Office Department to handle Christmas mail in the current year (a) in Canada and (b) in Halifax, Montreal, Ottawa, Toronto, Winnipeg, Regina, Edmonton, Calgary, and Vancouver?

2. How many of these vacancies were filled upon request from the Post Office Department?

Mr. Hales: 1. It is not possible to segregate from data available, persons registered for unemployment insurance in categories suitable for temporary employment with the Post Office Department to handle Christmas mail.

2. During the current year a total of 43,074 persons registered for employment at local offices of NES were referred to the Post Office Department for employment to handle the Christmas mail. Of these 33,033 were accepted for this work by the department. It is understood, however, that a number of these did not report when actually called to work by the post office.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT—TEMPORARY EMPLOYMENT TO HANDLE CHRISTMAS MAIL

Question No. 1,261—Mr. Peters:

1. How many temporary employees are hired in Canada for the handling of the Christmas mail during the current year, and how many in each of the following cities: Halifax, Montreal, Ottawa, Toronto, Winnipeg, Regina, Edmonton, Calgary, and Vancouver?

2. How many of these temporary employees were requested from the national employment service?

3. How many were supplied from this source (a) in Canada (b) in the above named cities?

4. How many were recruited from other sources (a) in Canada (b) in each of the above named cities?

Mrs. Fairclough: 1. 50,241—Halifax, 770; Montreal, 9,550; Ottawa, 1,920; Toronto, 7,300; Winnipeg, 2,053; Regina, 510; Edmonton, 1,685 Calgary, 1,359; Vancouver, 3,878.

2. 33,147.

3. (a) 31,625. (b)—Halifax, 740; Montreal, 5,150; Ottawa, 1,624; Toronto, 1,900 Winnipeg, 2,053; Regina, 470; Edmonton, 1,685; Calgary, 1,304; Vancouver, 3,802.

4. (a) 18,616. (b)—Halifax, 30; Montreal, 4,400; Ottawa, 296; Toronto, 5,400; Winnipeg, nil; Regina, 40; Edmonton, nil; Calgary, 55; Vancouver, 76.

INDUSTRIAL RESEARCH ASSISTANCE GRANTS, DEFENCE RESEARCH BOARD

Question No. 1,263—Mr. Hellyer:

1. What is the total amount of money committed by the defence research board to industrial research assistance programs during the current fiscal year?

2. What is the name of the company and the amount and purpose of the grant in each case?

Mr. Harkness: 1. $5,030,140.

---

2. Name of Company	Amount	Purpose of Grant
Atlas Titanium Ltd.	$ 87,750	Metallic halide dissociation research.
Jarry Hydraulics Ltd.	51,072	Welding research on high strength steels.
The DeHavilland Aircraft of Canada Ltd.	456,075	STOL aircraft research.
RCA Victor Co., Ltd.	77,500	Microwave properties of plasmas.
National Semi-Conductors Ltd.	46,000	Research on photoconductive cells.
Northern Electric Co. Ltd.	422,833	Study of semi-conductor materials for solid state devices.
Hawker Siddeley Canada Ltd. (Avro Aircraft Division)	208,295	Powered lift system.
Aviation Electric Ltd.	43,652	Wear and friction.

Name of Company	Amount	Purpose of Grant
Consolidated Mining & Smelting Co. of Canada Ltd.	120,000	Research on intermetallic compounds.
Honeywell Controls Ltd.	122,700	Thin film circuit techniques.
Canadian Westinghouse Co., Ltd.	175,000	Research on electroluminescence for display systems.
Erie Resistor of Canada Ltd.	50,000	Radio frequency suppression filters.
Dominion Magnesium Ltd.	32,100	Improved magnesium die casting alloys.
Consolidated Mining & Smelting Co. of Canada Ltd.	47,820	Zinc die-casting alloys research.
Sherritt Gordon Mines Ltd.	303,000	Dispersion strengthening and flame spraying with powdered metals.
Geo-Met. Reactors Ltd.	47,600	Production methods of strategic ferroalloys.
Central Dynamics Ltd.	58,000	Research into coded data processing.
Ferranti - Packard Electric Ltd.	185,500	Microconnections for microminiature circuits.
Ferranti - Packard Electric Ltd.	55,500	Prevention of errors in data transmission systems.
Canadian Aviation Electronics Ltd.	25,500	Feasibility study on an electrolytic integrator.
RCA Victor Co., Ltd.	215,000	Solid state research in support of satellite telemetry systems.
Canada Iron Foundries Ltd.	72,450	Impact resistance of modular iron at low temperatures.
Canadian Pratt & Whitney Aircraft Co., Ltd.	25,000	Annular combustion chamber research.
CTS of Canada Ltd.	203,000	Research on non-linear active devices.
Canadair Ltd.	60,919	Crack propagation in panels and aircraft structures.
Atlas Steels Ltd.	42,500	Effects of uranium in aircraft quality steels.
Canadair Ltd.	33,374	Metals fabrication and processing research.
Canadian Aviation Electronics Ltd.	122,000	Magnetic anomaly detection research.
Canadian General Electric Ltd.	1,380,000	Research on signal processing.
Ferranti - Packard Electric Ltd.	260,000	Cryogenic research program.

CHANGES IN MAIL SERVICE, NOVA SCOTIA

Question No. 1,264—Mr. Stewart:

1. Has any change in mail service to North Brookfield, Pleasant River, and New Elm, Nova Scotia, been made since November 1, 1962, and, if so, what change?

2. Are any changes contemplated in that service?

Mrs. Fairclough: 1. Yes. (a) Effective, November 1, 1962, delivery of mail on South Brookfield rural route No. 1, which serves the North Brookfield, Pleasant River and New Elm area, was changed from afternoon to morning. (b) Effective December 1, 1962, service on this rural route was changed back to afternoon delivery.

2. The department is now looking into the possibility of providing an earlier afternoon delivery of mail to this area.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

DROWNING DEATHS—USE OF SNORKEL APPARATUS

Question No. 1,120—Mr. Brown:

1. How many deaths, in Canada, by drowning, were attributable to the use of snorkels in each of the years 1959, 1960, and 1961?

2. Is any consideration being given by the government to the prohibition of the sale of snorkels?

Mr. Halpenny: Return tabled.

Orders for Returns

ST. JOHN AMBULANCE CERTIFICATES

Question No. 1,133—Mr. Matheson:

How many St. John Ambulance certificates were issued during the year 1961 to the following categories of personnel (a) army, navy and air force (b) Royal Canadian Mounted Police (c) penitentiary staff (d) emergency measures organization (e) other civil servants (f) inmates of federal institutions?

Mr. Halpenny: Return tabled.

MINIMUM WAGES IN MUNICIPAL WORKS

Question No. 1,136—Mr. Perron:

Do the terms of agreements entered into by the federal government with respect to winter or other works carried out at a municipal level specify a minimum wage, and, if so, has the government investigated any complaints or irregularities relating to such agreements?

*UNIVERSITY STUDENTS APPLYING FOR ENGINEERING POSITIONS

Question No. 1,145—Mr. Rinfret:

1. In 1961, how many university students and graduates were candidates in the examinations held by the civil service commission for positions of civil engineer, electrical engineer, and mechanical engineer?
2. How many candidates were successful in the examinations?
3. How many candidates came from the universities of Laval, Montreal, and Sherbrooke and, of these, how many were successful?
4. How many candidates who were successful in the examinations were accepted for employment by the civil service commission?
5. How many, among those who accepted employment, came from the university of Laval, the University of Montreal, and the university of Sherbrooke?

Mr. Halpenny: Return tabled.

*UNIVERSITY STUDENTS APPLYING FOR BIOLOGICAL SCIENCES POSITIONS

Question No. 1,146—Mr. Rinfret:

1. In 1961, how many university students and graduates, were candidates in the examinations held by the civil service commission for graduate specialists in the biological sciences?
2. How many candidates were successful in the examinations?
3. How many candidates came from the universities of Laval, Montreal, and Sherbrooke and, of these, how many were successful?
4. How many candidates who were successful in examinations for these situations were accepted for employment by the civil service commission?
5. How many among those who were accepted for employment came from the universities of Laval, Montreal, and Sherbrooke?

Mr. Halpenny: Return tabled.

*UNIVERSITY STUDENTS APPLYING FOR PHYSICAL SCIENCES POSITIONS

Question No. 1,147—Mr. Rinfret:

1. In 1961, how many university students or graduates applied to the civil service commission with a view to obtaining employment requiring training in the field of physical sciences?

[Mr. Halpenny.]

2. How many candidates were successful in the examinations?
3. How many candidates come from the universities of Laval, Montreal, and Sherbrooke and, of these, how many were successful?
4. How many among those who succeeded in the examinations accepted employment with the civil service commission?
5. How many among those who accepted employment came from the university of Laval, the University of Montreal, and the university of Sherbrooke?

Mr. Halpenny: Return tabled.

*RADIOACTIVE FALL-OUT SHELTERS, CHAPLEAU CONSTITUENCY

Question No. 1,187—Mr. Laprise:

1. How many radioactive fall-out shelters were built in Chapleau constituency in 1961 and 1962?
2. What is the name of the one, or the several, contractors who built them?
3. How much did each of the shelters cost?

Mr. Halpenny: Return tabled.

PILOTAGE SERVICE, LES ESCOUMINS, QUE.

Question No. 1,215—Mr. Dumont:

1. Were the boilers in the vessel Citadel in good condition at the time of its sale?
2. What were the operating costs of the Citadel for the year 1961 on pilot service at Les Escoumins?
3. What accounts for the difference in construction costs between the sister pilot boats Nos. 9 and 10, and is boat No. 9 considered to be of better quality than boat No. 10?
4. Can the Department of Transport certify the use of pilot boats Nos. 9 and 10 for navigation during icing conditions prevalent in the winter season?
5. Was any consideration given to the construction of double hulled pilot boats instead of single hulled models?
6. How much does the Department of Transport charge shipping companies per vessel for the taking on and letting off, of pilots at Les Escoumins; what was the total amount collected during the year 1961, and who acquires this revenue?
7. Does this scale exist in other pilotage services and, if so, in which ones and under what circumstances?
8. How many qualified St. Lawrence pilots are employed in the Quebec and Montreal districts, and what is the mother tongue of each?
9. What are the respective salaries and duties of the following officials: F. S. Slocombe, Booths, D. R. Jones, A. Cumin, Catinus and J. Gendron?

Mr. McBain: Return tabled.

COMBINES ACT INVESTIGATIONS AND CONVICTIONS

Question No. 1,229—Mr. Douglas:

1. Since January 1, 1945, what investigations have been carried out under the terms of the Combines Investigation Act, R.S.C. 1952, c. 314, or the former combines investigation act or under any amendments thereto, up to the present time, and what are the names of the firms, corporations or individuals investigated?
2. What convictions have been registered since January 1, 1945, giving names of the firms, corporations or individuals concerned, under the statutes set out in part 1, or under the provisions of sections 498 and 498a of the Criminal Code, chapter

36, R.S.C. 1927, or under section 411 or 412 of the Criminal Code, 2 and 3 Elizabeth 2nd, c. 51, and amendments thereto, and what penalties were imposed in each case?

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Return tabled.

FEDERAL WORKS, LAKE ST. JOHN CONSTITUENCY

Question No. 1,241—Mr. Lessard (Lake St. John):

1. What is the nature, place and value of federal works under way or completed in the constituency of Lake St. John during 1962?
2. What is the nature, place and estimated value of federal works at present under study for the constituency of Lake St. John?
3. What amount did the Department of Public Works spend in each of the ten provinces of Canada during 1960-61, and to November 1, 1962?

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

INQUIRY AS TO SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON DEFENCE POLICY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether the government has come to any decision regarding the setting up of a special committee on defence policy.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): The view of the government, as was the view expressed by the hon. gentleman himself on more than one occasion, has always been that questions of policy are for the government to determine. We have no intention, therefore, to set up a committee on defence policy.

INQUIRY AS TO ACTION RESPECTING DIVORCE BILLS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Leon Crestohl (Cartier): I should like to address a question to the Prime Minister. Can the Prime Minister inform the house whether the government will introduce legislation or take other steps to solve the impasse which parliament and the country is facing as a result of the blockade of the divorce bills now before parliament?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think this question is receiving consideration among the representatives of the three parties.

TRANSPORT

RAILWAY BRANCH LINES—CONSIDERATION OF SUGGESTIONS OF PROVINCES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): I should like to ask the Prime Minister what action is being taken to meet the suggestions of the provinces and other interested parties with regard to railway abandonment in Canada and the recommendations of the MacPherson commission report.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): The premiers of the three western provinces asked for a meeting with the government of Canada for the purpose of placing before the government their views on the abandonment of railway facilities in western Canada. We received a message on the 10th of this month. On the 11th we advised that at that time we did not think a meeting would be beneficial. Since then a bill has been completed in its draft form. It will not be introduced until these provincial governments have an opportunity of presenting their views. An indication has been given that we are prepared to meet with the premiers of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta on January 28.

ARTS, LETTERS AND SCIENCES

SUGGESTED ROYAL COMMISSION TO STUDY CANADIAN CULTURAL SITUATION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): May I direct a question to the Prime Minister and ask him if the government has taken a decision with reference to the inquiry on bilingualism and biculturalism, as proposed in this house by my hon. friend the Leader of the Opposition.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): I think this is a question which should be dealt with at some length. I will make a statement tomorrow before the orders of the day, if the house will allow setting out the view of the government on this question and also on the alternative thereto which the government intends to support, namely, the bringing together in convocation of the representatives of the various provinces of Canada, believing, as this government does, that matters as important as this, which touch on the constitutional development of our country, must be considered in consultation on the basis of a spirit of unity.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NUCLEAR TESTING—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT RESPECTING ON-SITE INSPECTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I wish to address a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Has the hon. gentleman any information to give the house with respect to the most interesting announcement recently by Premier Khrushchev with regard to his giving favourable consideration to on-site inspection of nuclear tests by the use of what are termed black boxes?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Within the last day or two there has been made public an exchange of letters between President Kennedy and Chairman Khrushchev on this particular subject. They may turn out to be of great importance and, if the house so wishes, these letters could be printed as an appendix to Hansard.

Briefly, the present position is that an understanding seems to have been reached on the principle that a test ban covering underground tests should be verified by a control system including (i) national detection systems; (ii) automatic seismic stations in various areas, including the territory of the nuclear powers, which would be serviced by international personnel; and (iii) a certain number of on-site inspections. The main point remaining to be dealt with is the number of on-site inspections which would be permitted. The U.S.S.R. is suggesting two or three and the United States is suggesting eight or ten. Negotiations are continuing in Washington, however, and we hope that these matters can be settled without delay. I would point out that representatives of the United Kingdom are to be sitting in on the talks tomorrow.

An agreement on this vital subject may possibly be within sight. We have repeatedly emphasized the crucial importance of a test ban treaty both from the standpoint of human health and as a first step toward curbing the armaments race. The simple fact of east-west agreement in this field would also provide a significant psychological impetus toward wider agreement on disarmament and perhaps other issues. We are convinced that President Kennedy, Prime Minister Macmillan and Chairman Khrushchev recognize these facts, and that outstanding differences will be judged in the light of the immense gains which a treaty ending nuclear weapons tests would bring to all mankind.

[Later:]

Mr. Speaker: Order. I regret that following the reply given by the Secretary of State for External Affairs I omitted to ask leave of the house for the insertion in Hansard of certain communications to which the minister referred. He asked that they be printed as an appendix to Hansard. Does the hon. minister have that leave?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's note: For text of documents referred to above, see Appendix "C".]

[Mr. Herridge.]

COLOMBO PLAN—REPORTED CRITICISM OF REDUCTION IN CANADIAN CONTRIBUTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hubert Badanai (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the secretary for external affairs. A former Colombo plan administrator has criticized the Canadian government for reducing its contribution to the plan. Can the minister inform the house if it is the intention of the government to bring Canada's contribution up to the level of former years?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the hon. member—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think in view of the fact that the hon. member is asking the minister to comment in some form or other upon the statement of a person outside this house he will recognize that his question is out of order.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

DESIGNATION OF LAKEHEAD CITIES AS POSTAL AREA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hubert Badanai (Fort William): I should like to direct a question to the Postmaster General, notice of which has been given. Has the minister received from the cities of Fort William and Port Arthur a request for the designation of the united cities as one postal area and, if so, has the government given any consideration to this proposal?

Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Postmaster General): I have heard not only from these two municipalities but from the chambers of commerce connected with them, and the matter is under study.

TRANS-CANADA AIR LINES

WINNIPEG—REPORTED TRANSFER OF REPAIR WORK TO MONTREAL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. In view of the discussions which took place in Winnipeg during the Christmas recess concerning the proposed transfer of the T.C.A. overhaul base from Winnipeg, has the minister a statement to make as to whether or not the government is looking into this matter?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Yes, the matter is being looked into. We are anticipating the arrival of a delegation from the provincial government and interested residents of Manitoba to meet with us, I think next week, to discuss the matter.

FISHERIES

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON NORTH PACIFIC TREATY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Arthur Laing (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Fisheries, of which I have just now given him notice. I would ask if he would agree to undertake to make a statement to the house in the next few days regarding the position of the north Pacific international fisheries treaty and the amendments which are proposed thereto?

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, this will depend upon the sequence of future events. I will certainly be making a statement in this regard on the estimates of my department, but it is possible that I might make a statement before that depending on circumstances.

INQUIRY AS TO PROTECTION OF WEST COAST FISHERIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Jack Davis (Coast-Capilano): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Fisheries. During the recent discussions on Canadian-Japanese trade in Tokyo was any consideration given to the urgent need to protect the halibut and herring fisheries on the west coast of British Columbia?

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, a useful discussion was had between myself and my colleagues and our opposite numbers in the Japanese government in Tokyo, as has already been reported by the Minister of Justice. The herring and halibut fisheries of the Pacific coast of North America are under the north Pacific international fisheries convention, and that convention has been in existence now for almost ten years. There has been no change in that convention. Certain recommendations which were made recently by the international north Pacific fisheries commission are in conformity with the terms of the treaty.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

INQUIRY AS TO HEALTH PROTECTION IN NORTHERN AREAS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Thomas R. Berger (Vancouver-Burrard): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the minister of northern affairs. In view of recent disclosures that the level of strontium 90 and cesium 132 has reached dangerous proportions in parts of northern Canada, what steps has the government taken to protect the health of Canada's Eskimo population and of other citizens inhabiting the area?

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, the department has taken the problem under consideration. We have already had discussions with the Department of National Health and Welfare on this matter. There is no positive information available other than reports from newspapers, and I can assure the hon. member that we are trying to get the actual facts.

LIEFCORT—INQUIRY AS TO PROHIBITION OF MANUFACTURE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Haidasz (Parkdale): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare whether, in view of further reports of the serious side effects of the drug liefcort, the minister has requested Dr. Liefmann to stop manufacturing this drug.

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I have noticed one or two very recent reports about this matter, and we are looking into the subject.

INQUIRIES OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Real Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Would the Prime Minister be in a position to tell us whether it is true that General Norstad has been nominated the chief defence adviser of the Canadian Liberal party—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I do not think that one requires any comment.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister a question relating to the comments reported in the press to have been made by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate concerning the proceedings in this house immediately after 4.55 p.m. on December 19. I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he has under consideration any explanation or apology to those "inexperienced M.P.'s" whom the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate asserts he so cleverly tricked at that time.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think the hon. member is trying to fish in somewhat troubled waters. Since we have heard a great deal about fishing this afternoon, I think we will now put away the gear.

TRADE

GATT—CANADIAN REPRESENTATION AT MINISTERIAL MEETING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. S. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Can the minister inform the house who will be the Canadian representatives at the forthcoming ministerial meeting of the contracting parties to the general agreement on tariffs and trade?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I will report to the house as soon as possible on that matter.

(Translation):

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

REQUEST FOR MEETING OF INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. P. Deschatelets (Maisonneuve-Rosemont): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. In view of the considerable increase in the number of unemployed, does the government intend to convene the committee on industrial relations immediately?

(Text):

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the last dominion bureau of statistics figure the hon. member refers to shows a rise in unemployment mainly in those engaged in seasonal industry. This figure was taken one month later than the previous year. Those who are engaged in computing these figures and assessing the situation advise me that if this same survey had been taken at the same time as it was last year, then it would have shown a decrease in unemployment by some thirty to forty thousand from the year previous.

(Translation):

Mr. Deschatelets: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In addition to the winter works program, will the government introduce other immediate measures to help the unemployed?

(Text):

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, those who are now unemployed are those engaged in seasonal industry. They have been in that same category in years gone by, and I am sure that if their desire is to remain in seasonal industry they will be unemployed during this period of time when that industry is not functioning.

[Mr. Fisher.]

(Translation):

Mr. Dumont: May I ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker? Could the Minister of Labour tell us how many unemployed are not entitled to unemployment insurance benefits at the present time?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member will recognize that his question has to do with information which the minister would not have on hand. I would therefore advise him to put his question on the order paper.

FINANCE

REQUEST FOR INCREASE IN TAX EXEMPTIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Megantic): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister? Is it the government's intention to increase the tax exemptions in order to relieve the Canadian small wage earners?

Mr. Speaker: This is not only a matter of government policy but also a budget matter. The hon. member will agree, I think, that his question, at this time, is contrary to the rules of this house.

TRADE

INQUIRY AS TO APPOINTMENT OF DIRECTORS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): My question is directed to the Associate Minister of National Defence. Could the minister tell us when the directors of the Canadian World Exhibition Corporation will be appointed?

Mr. Sevigny: Within a few days.

(Text):

AGRICULTURE

INQUIRY AS TO PROVISION OF FEED GRAIN STORAGE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Horace A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Prime Minister and through him, because I think they are also involved, to the Minister of Transport or the Department of Transport, the Department of Agriculture, and perhaps even the Department of Public Works. I should like to ask him when he intends to introduce legislation to provide for additional feed grain storage in eastern Canada and in British Columbia, as was anticipated in the speech from the throne.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, what we indicated in the speech from the throne will be carried out. As the hon. member knows, the volume of business before the house now denies my allocating any time in the future for the consideration of this particular matter. It is important. We hope that we will get around to it very shortly, but I can say only that that depends on the co-operation of all hon. members in the implementation of the program which is before the house.

(Translation):

Mr. Bernard Dumont (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture or, in his absence, to one of his parliamentary secretaries.

Is the announced construction of grain elevators to serve 40 Quebec ridings at a cost of $3 million to be the only such project for eastern Canada and for the benefit of farmers?

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member will be informed of the extraordinary legislation which will be announced by the minister himself in due course.

Mr. Dumont: I hope it will not take ten years.

Mr. Pigeon: No. You now have a progressive government.

(Text):

REPORTED INTENTION TO CURTAIL RECORD OF PRODUCTION PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lucien Lamoureux (Stormont): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture or to his parliamentary secretary. In view of current reports that the government plans to curtail the record of production testing program for dairy cattle, can the minister tell the house whether he is planning to limit or abolish this very essential service?

Mr. W. H. Jorgenson (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I think the minister would wish to reply to that question. He will be back in the house tomorrow.

POWER

COLUMBIA RIVER—INQUIRY AS TO MEETINGS WITH B.C. PREMIER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, in order to satisfy our insatiable curiosity and to bring us up to date, I wish to ask a question of the Minister of Justice. Has he any further information to give the house with respect to meetings with Premier Bennett of British Columbia in connection with the Columbia development, or are any meetings proposed?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, there have been no meetings with Premier Bennett since this question was last asked in the house, and none has been arranged.

CIVIL DEFENCE

REPORTED CONVERSION OF PUBLIC BUILDINGS INTO FALL-OUT SHELTERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. E. Walker (York Centre): Thank you, Mr. Speaker; this is the most exercise I have had since before we adjourned. I have a question for the Minister of National Defence. I asked this question in December of the Prime Minister, and the suggestion was that we wait till the minister returned. Is the government pushing ahead with an estimated $1 billion program of converting over 4,000 public buildings into community fall-out shelters, as has been reported by the minister to the press?

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the minister never at any time reported any such thing to the press. I saw a press report mentioning some figure of $1 billion and so forth which I was very surprised to see. When the dominion-provincial conference on emergency measures was held here some few weeks before Christmas we had considerable discussion about the matter of providing fall-out shelters. We had particularly a discussion on the amount of work which had been done in surveying the capability of existing buildings as to their capability of providing fall-out protection. I refer particularly to government buildings including, dominion, provincial and in some cases municipal buildings. At that time I stated that as far as we were concerned this survey was fairly well completed, that I hoped the provinces and municipalities would complete their buildings, and that we were having estimates made as to what the cost would be of improving the fall-out capabilities of these buildings. That is as far as I went.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Walker: May I take it that the emphasis put in this news report is not in keeping with what the minister had in mind?

Mr. Harkness: No. This mention of the billion dollars was a great surprise to me. I had never heard any estimate of that amount in connection with this program if it is carried out.

Mr. Thomas R. Berger (Vancouver-Burrard): I wish to ask the minister a supplementary question. Can the minister tell the house whether any funds available to the government of Canada are being expended on new construction for fall-out shelter purposes?

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Speaker, I am not quite sure that I know what the hon. member means. Some of the buildings being constructed at the present time are being constructed in a way which gives a very good degree of fall-out protection in their basements and so on. The only buildings which are being built, however, and which are designed particularly for protection against fall-out are ones for emergency measures and military headquarters of various kinds.

(Translation):

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

REPORTED POLITICAL PATRONAGE IN CERTAIN CONSTITUENCIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Megantic): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Postmaster General. Does the minister approve of the high political patronage policy which is being carried out at present in certain ridings represented by members of the opposition?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member will undoubtedly agree that he is not seeking information but merely making a statement.

(Text):

ATLANTIC DEVELOPMENT BOARD

INQUIRY AS TO IMPLEMENTATION OF LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. J. MacEachen (Inverness-Richmond): I have a question for the Minister of National Revenue. Will the minister tell the house why action was not taken in the past month to set up the Atlantic provinces development board which in early December was regarded as an urgent matter?

Hon. H. J. Flemming (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the hon. gentleman understands that with so many matters of very urgent public importance, it was impossible to get everything done at once. However, if he will contain himself I am sure that in a day or two he will be satisfied.

(Translation):

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

MONTREAL-CHICOUTIMI—INQUIRY AS TO UNILINGUAL EMPLOYEES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Maurice Cote (Chicoutimi): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Is the minister aware of the fact that there are still on the trains between Montreal and Chicoutimi employees who speak only one language—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member must know that his question is out of order at this time.

INQUIRY AS TO INVESTIGATION INTO PERSONNEL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Transport whether he has received an interim report from Mr. Donald Gordon, pertaining to the proposed investigation on the C.N.R. personnel? May I point out that the minister announced that investigation about five weeks ago—

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the only thing I know so far is that the investigation is under way. Some sittings have been held, and the parties concerned are setting up the secretariat required in order to carry out this work.

(Text):

BRIDGES

CHAMPLAIN BRIDGE, MONTREAL—SUGGESTED ABOLITION OF TOLLS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Bryce S. Mackasey (Verdun): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Will the government consider the abolition of tolls on the Champlain bridge, should either Point St. Charles or LaSalle be chosen as the site of the world's fair and if recommended by the newly appointed commissioner general?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The matter of the location of the fair being hypothetical at the moment, I think the question becomes even more hypothetical.

OLD AGE PENSIONS

REQUEST FOR INCREASE DURING PRESENT SESSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the report that the premier of Quebec has indicated his non-concurrence in the proposed amendment of the British North America Act with regard to old age pensions, will the government at this session of parliament propose some other way of increasing old age pensions?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, part of that question is policy and part of it is impolitic.

Mr. Knowles: I have a supplementary question. May I ask the Prime Minister whether he will bring down and have placed on Hansard the further correspondence that appears to have taken place on this question during the Christmas recess.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Yes.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

SONS OF FREEDOM, B.C.—INQUIRY AS TO REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister a question. Has any recent request been received from either the government of British Columbia or the city of Vancouver for federal assistance or consultation with regard to the invasion of Vancouver by the Sons of Freedom?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

(Translation):

TRANSPORT

BILINGUAL PASSES FOR MEMBERS OF QUEBEC LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gerard Perron (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Does the minister think it normal that the passes issued by the railways last December 12 to the members of the Quebec legislature be unilingual and in English only?

Mr. Speaker: Order. Here again, I think the hon. member will admit that his question is out of order.

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I would like to repeat differently the question of the hon. member for Beauce (Mr. Perron):

Inquiries of the Ministry

Since federal members of parliament have received for the first time this year bilingual passes, could the Minister of Transport not do the same—

Mr. Speaker: This was not a question—

Mr. Dupuis: They have always been bilingual.

Mr. Speaker: I must inform the hon. member for Lapointe that such a question should not be asked on the orders of the day.

Mr. J. P. Deschatelets (Maisonneuve-Rosemont): Mr. Speaker, will the question of the hon. member for Lapointe be printed in Hansard? The premise of his question was false. Therefore I ask whether it is going to be printed in Hansard.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member must admit that the questions which are put forward, or at least a good portion of the questions—

Mr. Gregoire: I rise on a matter of privilege—

Mr. Speaker: Order. A matter of privilege cannot be raised when another one is already before the house.

The hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont must recognize that questions which are out of order are nevertheless printed in Hansard. They appear in Hansard and cannot be removed. Consequently, there is no matter of privilege.

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

Following the statement of the hon. member for Lapointe, who just asserted that the passes we received prior to this session were unilingual, I must state that this is false. In fact, the passes I have been receiving for years have always been printed in both languages. This is what I wanted to put on the record.

Mr. Speaker: I do not believe we should start a discussion, make trouble or show stubbornness about a minor point.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of privilege.

Since I have been charged with making a false statement concerning the delivery of passes, I should like to take up the issue as a matter of privilege.

The passes which we have received from T.C.A. this year are, for the first time, printed in both languages. Those we received last year were unilingual.

National Economic Development Board

Mr. Speaker: The point of the matter is that hon. members are talking about different things. I am of the opinion that if the two hon. members could agree on the means of transport concerned, whether it be by airplane or by railroad, these sort of discussions could be avoided.

(Text):

HOUSE OF COMMONS

INQUIRY AS TO SALARY INCREASES FOR STAFF

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Can the minister say whether the commissioners of internal economy of the House of Commons have yet dealt with the question of salary increases for employees of the House of Commons comparable to those given to classified civil servants before Christmas?

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of Finance): The commissioners have dealt generally with this matter. There are one or two details which have yet to be arranged, but the matter will be dealt with within the next day or two.

NATIONAL ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT BOARD

PROVISION FOR DEFINITION OF DUTIES, APPOINTMENT OF MEMBERS, ETC.

The house resumed, from Thursday, November 29, consideration of the motion of Mr. Nowlan for the second reading of Bill No. C-87, to provide for the establishment of a national economic development board.

(Translation):

Mr. Real Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, to add to the remarks I was making when this debate was adjourned, I now want to reiterate here that we approve the passing of a legislation to establish a national economic development board.

I am not going to delay the business of the house to a great extent, because several hon. members want to deal with the matter. And as we are just coming back from a well deserved holiday, during which I had the privilege of holding 42 meetings without the hon. member for St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville (Mr. Dupuis), it is not only necessary, but urgent that the Canadian parliament pass such legislation at the earliest possible date.

If we members of parliament are unable to see the almost unlimited opportunities for economic development which this country offers, I believe that there are, among our own voters, some people who can easily guess that there are such possibilities.

[Mr. Gregoire.]

As I just said, our opportunities are vast and indeed, unlimited. There is no member in this house nor any Canadian citizen who need fear to be unable to find some sort of production tomorrow, in Canada whether in the field of clothing, food or housing. As yet unsuspected resources are available to us which could be developed at the earliest opportunity. We realize that everything cannot be achieved within a month, or six months, or even a year, but we believe that the time has come to see that those natural resources of ours in Canada are developed, so that we may attain a maximum of employment—I do not say full employment, because I do not believe it possible, but a maximum of security and personal freedom which we crave, and that within the limits of this Canada of ours.

Mr. Speaker, these days, some groups try to convince our people that it is necessary for us to accept nuclear arms on our soil or to equip our forces overseas with those nuclear arms.

I believe that the act establishing a national economic development board would counteract those plans for building up nuclear stocks in Canada.

Instead of preparing this country with only 18 million people for a possible war and building up nuclear reserves, we should all get together and promote the production of butter and bread, and prepare our available potential so as to be able to distribute food to the underdeveloped people of the world who are starving at this time.

We would, then, be an example of peace and freedom for everybody. I believe that this would be the most important role for Canada to play on the international scene, that is to become an agent for peace and freedom for those people who are now in distress and poverty and are letting themselves be slowly submerged by international communism.

Mr. Speaker, we Social Crediters have been for a long time promoting these economic development measures. We believe in our country, we have confidence in our population and, as we have repeated many times, we are convinced that what is physically feasible should be made financially possible.

What is morally desirable, what we can achieve with our talents, our own forces, by means of our social organization, all that should be made financially possible.

I think that, even among those who have been fighting us for the last 25 years; that principle is accepted more and more; in any case, it is certainly accepted by the Canadian population.

There is no question here of playing politics when the very future of Canada is at stake; in fact, the future of coming generations, those of our children and grandchildren, is at stake.

It is pointless to pass a piece of legislation, if it is to remain inoperative. To adopt a piece of legislation is nothing; what counts is to adopt and apply it in such a way that Canada may grow and develop by means of the intelligence and talent of its people.

By so doing, Mr. Speaker, we shall efficiently fight unemployment and we shall guarantee some measure of security to each Canadian citizen. In addition, we shall ensure his personal freedom; in other words, we shall offer him security through freedom.

No one among us wants to become a slave. No one wants to be under the yoke of a government nor be dominated by some minister, government or party leader. We prize our freedom above all. Now, if we really prize our freedom, we of this august assembly, the House of Commons—the drawing room of the nation, as it is called throughout Canada—should make a stand for the development of our natural resources. Now, that bill, setting up an economic board which will guide and increase production, does not solve our problem, which is one of distribution. If it is a problem of distribution, it follows therefore that the bill setting up a national economic development board should see to it, first of all, that production reaches its objective, which is to provide for the needs of Canadian consumers.

At that time, we shall have done a service not only to our electors but also to the population of Canada as a whole, and we shall have proven to the world at large that Canada is able to manage its own affairs by itself. Canada can create something and give the world at large the example of peace, justice and security in freedom.

(Text):

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, everybody in the house, as outside the house, has latterly spoken in favour of some form of planning. It is true that the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) apparently prefers the word "orientation" to "planification", but even he emphasizes the need for some form of planning in this country.

In order to understand and discuss the principles of the bill before us I think one has to keep in mind some other agencies which the government has presented to this parliament. Those of us who have believed for a long time in social and economic planning were always confronted with the accusation that planning would mean a proliferation of boards and that it would mean many instruments of bureaucracy. Our opponents were wrong in that criticism of the kind of planning we have been advocating, but the same people have now implemented their erroneous understanding of planning for the purposes of this Canada of ours. Now we do have a proliferation of so-called planning agencies, unrelated one to the other in their set-up and without any kind of integration either of their work, their studies, their plans, or their conclusions.

Let me remind the house, Mr. Speaker, that we have the board proposed by the bill now before us, the national economic development board, to consist of from 14 to 24 members, with all but the chairman working in spare time. Then we have the Atlantic development board established just the other day by legislation. It is to be composed of five members, all of them spare time. Then we have the advisory council on industrial change and manpower adjustment, which is part of a bill presently before parliament. That bill does not tell us the number of members on the council, but only the chairman is to receive any remuneration. Finally, we have the national productivity council the membership of which it is proposed to increase from 25 to 28, and not one of the members of that council is full time. Each one of them is to do the work in his spare time.

Thus we have at least four agencies, and there are others as well, with only one person who will be full time of the entire group of members on all the agencies, namely the chairman of the board being created by the bill now before us. Mr. Speaker, we are to assign to these groups of men who are to give their spare time to the work, the task of planning our economy, the re-allocation of industry, the productivity of our economy and all the other tasks that have to be performed.

Mr. Speaker, I call that cocktail planning. A lot of busy industrial executives and leaders of labour and agriculture are to be brought together from time to time and, over cocktails and a leisurely meal, they are to try to plan the economy of Canada. This cannot be done. This indeed will not be done. This kind of proposal is characteristic of a government and a party which do not really believe in economic planning but which are paying lip service to that which has become popular the world over, and are attempting merely to patch up a little bit of the manifest inefficiency of which they have been guilty for the last five or more years.

The mix-up is much worse than that painted by the words I have just spoken. I ask hon. members to recall that the board we are now discussing, the national economic development board, is to be under the direction of the Minister of Finance. The Atlantic development board is to be under the direction of another minister not yet named, but most likely the Minister of National Revenue. The advisory council on industrial change and manpower adjustment is under the Minister of Labour and the national productivity council is under the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Each of these bodies has jobs that mesh together with the tasks of every other one. But each one of these four bodies is under the direction of a different minister, and is composed of different people, every one of whom is to do the work in his spare minutes away from a busy executive life in industry, labour or agriculture.

You have only to read the bills and acts to see the extent to which the jobs of these various bodies are almost exactly the same. The advisory council on industrial change and manpower adjustment has to be concerned with productivity, the same as the national productivity council; and the national economic development board will be talking nonsense unless it is concerned with the capital expenditures and the plans for economic development on the Atlantic seaboard. Yet, I repeat, every one of these boards is under a different minister, with different personnel, and all of them doing precisely the same job.

I submit it is an insult to the intelligence of the Canadian people, let alone the members of this parliament, to suggest they will be fooled by this kind of approach and that this is a serious way of tackling economic planning for Canada.

As I have said, everybody has been talking about planning and everybody is pointing his finger at the planning done in France. The Liberals even say it is their policy. But what is the planning program in France? It is about time this important subject be looked at with some knowledge as well as understanding of what is meant by the agencies that are required for the purpose.

What do the French do in the realm of planning? First, they have a commissariat général du plan, a general commissariat of planning, which has under it agencies such as the national productivity council, the regional Atlantic development board and the industrial change and manpower adjustment council, all of the agencies related to the total plan under the general commissariat.

The general commissariat has the duty of drawing up a plan, not merely of consulting, not merely of producing information, not merely of making surveys, but of drawing up a concrete plan for economic action in France and as they go along, according to the speeches and reports of M. Masse, who is the actual commissioner of planning in France, they consult the various councils and bodies that are related to the commissariat général du plan. They consult what they call the modernization commissions in order to see how each of the industries would fit in and what technological and automation changes must be made. They make that inquiry not only in general terms but in relation to the specific industries and the regional plans that may be needed. In other words, you have a central planning agency with power to consult other government agencies, with power to relate the work, to integrate the ideas and then come to the cabinet of France with an actual concrete plan of economic development and economic action.

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question? Will he tell the house whether this body has power of coercion over these various other bodies?

Mr. Lewis: No planning board that has ever been suggested in a democratic country has any power of coercion, and may I say, in all kindness to the minister, that the question shows his ignorance of the very subject which he introduced. In no western country has any one suggested that a board which is to propose plans to a government is itself to have any coercive powers. But the planning commission in France does have the—

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member misunderstood my question. I did not imply that there was coercion, but I wanted the hon. member's opinion on that matter.

Mr. Lewis: I thank the minister for his interest in my opinion. It is that no board which is to present plans to a cabinet can or should have coercive power. Indeed, it has never been suggested by my party, or the C.C.F. which preceded it, that any planning board would have the authority to implement its plans. The implementation of the plans is the job of government, subject to the authority of parliament. No one in our party has ever suggested anything else. So I say, Mr. Speaker, that the question shows an ignorance of the matter. But what you must have is genuine planning, and not playing at checkers, moving little pieces on a checkerboard. The body given the authority to plan must have the power to sit down and plan, and come to the cabinet with all the various elements of the economy having been taken into account, and not merely a survey and some kind of a report which is put in somebody's waste basket or on somebody's shelf.

Mr. Sevigny: Mr. Speaker, will the hon. member permit a question? Will the hon. member tell us whether he knows of one instance when a government appointed commission, or a body similar to the one which we are talking about and which is the object of the present debate, has ever instituted a law of its own. Can he tell the house whether he knows of one case when such a board has taken the law within its own hands?

Mr. Lewis: I must say, Mr. Speaker, that the question of the Associate Minister of National Defence, after the exchange between the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys and myself, baffles me somewhat. How a member of the government, who could not follow a simple exchange of the sort that the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys and I had, will be able to plan the economy of Canada, or take part in it, baffles me too. I have already said, and I say again, that no one in this party or in the C.C.F. ever suggested that a planning board would have the authority to make a law or a rule, or to implement the plans. No democratic socialist anywhere in the world has ever suggested that. We have always taken the position that the only way to maintain democracy is for planning boards to present their plans to government, which will be responsible for implementing them, subject to the authority of parliament. That is the way our kind of country functions, and we have a passionate belief in that democratic procedure and in representative and parliamentary government. Let no questioner here try to take me from that track, because he will not succeed.

I repeat that a board, if it is to do the job, must have the authority to plan and to come to the government with a blueprint of what is proposed, in which every section of the economy has been consulted and in which the affairs and interests of every part of the economy play a part.

In France—I come back to this, because so much reference has been made, by the Liberals especially, to that country—they have, as I am sure the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys has seen, and if he has not I would invite him to look at it, what they call—

Mr. Martineau: I have, as a matter of fact.

Mr. Lewis: —input and output tables. They actually attempt to present a three-year—

Mr. Martineau: Four.

Mr. Lewis: —or four-year forecast of how their plan would affect each industry and every section of each industry in the country. That plan is the one that goes to the cabinet.

In our submission, however, for effective, useful and productive economic planning, more than merely the right agency is needed. In order for those plans to have any meaning there has to be a much larger share of public investment in the total investment of a country. One of the reasons why French planning has been successful is that about a third of all gross investment in that country has been public investment, investment from government funds. If you add to that those parts of the economy and those parts of French investment which are controlled directly or indirectly, as well as owned, by the government, then more than one half of the gross investment of France is under public guidance either direct or indirect.

Beyond that, it is of no purpose to make a plan for government to approve if there is not some integration of private planning with public planning; if there is not some integration of private activities in the economy with public activities in the economy. In France, therefore, as part of their total planning mechanism there are not only fiscal incentives to private industry to mesh in with the public plan, but there are actually penalties to industry which does not fit in with the public plan. There are, in addition, selective credit controls for the same purpose. If the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys has studied the French plan he will recall that any medium term loan—that is, a loan for a period of no more than five years—is subject to control by the bank of France, which is publicly owned, through rediscounting of the notes, and they must consult with and get the permission of the commissariat général du plan for any loan over 1,000,000 francs, or roughly $200,000, for investment purposes.

When you deal with a long term loan for investment, involving a loan for a period of more than five years, then if it is for more than two million francs, I think it is—I am quoting this from memory; it is 2 or 2½ million francs, or about $500,000—they must consult with and get the direction of the general commission of planning in France. It is by these agencies of consultation, agencies of integration of private and public plans; it is by the penalties as well as incentives to private industry; it is by the guidance of private investment as well as public investment, and above all it is by the provision of public funds for investment purposes, that any planning can really have meaning in a country and be more than, as I have said, a game. In a country like Canada one of the major needs for planning effectively is the power over location and relocation of industry.

That is what is given the commissariat—the commission for general planning—in France, subject to approval by the government. An examination of the functions of this commission will allay once and for all this wrong impression that the people engaged in planning in France are engaged in the type of free enterprise planning which this government and the official opposition intend. It might have been the case had the present President of France set up the machinery but he is not the one who created these agencies. They were there when he came to power.

As a matter of fact they still have price controls in France. I am not advocating this for Canada because I do not think that at the moment we need price controls, though I shall have something to say in a minute or two about administrative prices. In France they still have price controls on steel, aluminum, power, chemicals, automobiles and various other products, in addition, as I say, to great power respecting the location of industry. Nothing of this kind is even contemplated by the legislation before this house.

The commission in France like the various bodies which work under it, consists of a number of men and women all of whom are employed full time, giving their nights, I am sure, as well as their days to the work which needs to be done. Under the proposal now before us a group of sparetime men is to be asked to do this kind of work, and it cannot be done.

I suggest that what this perfunctory bow to the idea of planning in Canada means is a recognition, at least, that the market place is man-made, not divinely constituted. Over the years, as I have studied economics and listened to politicians I have been told about the law of supply and demand as if it were a law which had been handed down from Mount Sinai together with the ten commandments—together with some tablets by a deity. In the event, manipulation has so deliberately twisted and distorted the law of supply and demand that it has now been made meaningless. It has been distorted and twisted by the corporations through the medium of administrative prices, and the wants of the consumer have almost nothing to do—I say "almost nothing" because they have some influence—with the actual prices which are charged.

[Mr. Lewis.]

In Canada, of course, we have in addition a huge and growing degree of foreign control of our industry so that much of what is now part of the Canadian economy is not even in Canadian private hands, let alone subject to any effective direction by public agencies. I am sure hon. members all know of the growth of foreign ownership in Canada. I place these facts before the house at a time when we are considering the planning of mechanism required to deal with a problem of this sort. In 1954, foreign ownership in Canada represented 51 per cent of the total in manufacturing, petroleum, natural gas and mining. By 1957, foreign ownership had grown to 54 per cent. I use those three years as an example of three years under Liberal government. Then from 1957 to 1959, the last year for which figures are available, it grew from 54 per cent to 56 per cent. Every year foreign ownership has grown, whether under a Liberal or a Conservative government and despite speeches from both sides about the desirability of repatriating Canadian industry. If one talks in terms of indirect control, foreign influence grew in the same industries from 55 per cent in 1954 to 61 per cent in 1957 and to 63 per cent in 1959. Obviously, if one adds industries such as transport and public utilities which are mainly in Canadian hands, the percentage of the total economy owned or controlled by foreign investors would be considerably reduced. However, in those basic and important industries, namely, petroleum, natural gas and mining, foreign control has grown to an alarming extent and it continues to grow.

I have referred to the extraction and processing industries. If one turns to those services in our economy which are concerned with acquiring the savings of the Canadian people, the same alarming trend is to be noted. In 1961, nine fire and casualty companies—Canadian companies—were acquired by foreign interests. Since 1955, seven life insurance companies went to foreign ownership. So, today, out of 36 life insurance companies in Canada, 11 are foreign owned. I asked hon. members to think for a moment about the difficulty a spare time agency such as the proposed national economic development board would encounter in attempting to deal with a situation which the Prime Minister in 1957 and 1958 proclaimed as being just about the major problem which faces this country. Hon. members might well ask themselves how a body such as this could deal with this trend toward foreign ownership and control of large segments of our economy. How could it do the job that needs to be done?

The second thing this perfunctory bow to planning shows is a recognition of a principle which we in this party have been stating in Canada for decades, namely that the multiple decisions by irresponsible private corporations will not necessarily produce socially desirable results. It is necessary for the public well-being that the government should be responsible for decisions in order that they meet the needs of the Canadian people. Finally, it is recognition also that intervention by government in public planning is essential to the welfare of Canada.

I say, for the reasons I have given, that the kind of cocktail planning now proposed cannot possibly do the job. This is a first, faltering step. The people of Canada will probably accept it, as members of this house are forced to accept it, as a first, faltering step. But the people of Canada will not be fooled and we in this house are not being fooled into believing that this constitutes constructive planning in any real sense of the word. A planning board, I submit, must have the power to set a plan for a definite period of time. That period could be three, four or five years. It might be a continuing period or a period which would end when a new period began. By this I mean we could have a plan for five years, or six years, or four years and then, at the end of it, have another plan for four, five or six years. Alternatively, we could do as the French have done, intelligently, it seems to me, and have a four-year plan, for instance, which would be a continuing plan; that is to say, every year would be the first year of a four-year plan; the plan would be revised at the beginning of each year but alwoys for a four-year term as progress was made in thinking about the country's economy.

The planning commission must be able to do that over a period of years, otherwise I predict that such an agency would be tempted to find ways and means of patching up errors which had been made in the previous month, or the previous year. Instead of considering the economy as a whole and planning for its progress on a long term basis, it would merely say: we have a foreign exchange calamity, so perhaps we can solve it this way, or, we have this shortage of such and such tomorrow, perhaps we can solve it that way. And, of course, there would not be any planning at all. Planning must be concerned, second, with all the phases of the economy. It must be concerned with production in its over-all aspect, and with the location of industry in order to meet the regional needs. Third, it must have the authority to establish a rate of growth for each year in order to have full employment without inflation. That is the primary objective of economic planning. Fourth, it must have the authority to relate the size of investment for social capital to production by private industry. It must have authority to try to relate the expenditures and the production of social capital as against expenditures for conspicuous consumption, or, in other words, expenditures on hospitals and homes as against expenditures to produce status symbols, as they are now called by the sociologists. It must also have the authority to make plans with regard to our external trade as part and parcel of the total sphere of economic planning. Because planning with regard to production has no meaning unless it is related to our exports and to our imports. Unless there is some effective, constructive and positive way in which external trade is integrated with the domestic economy, in which external demand is integrated with domestic demand, and our relationship to the balance of payments and balance of trade is likewise integrated with investment and production at home, economic planning would often be self-defeating.

Mr. Speaker, let me pause there to say that only with that kind of planning can you find the solution to the crippling increase of foreign control over the Canadian economy.

Mr. Martineau: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Lewis: Well, I do not know whether I should. I have not many minutes left.

Mr. Martineau: Would the hon. member tell the house whether the implementation of planning boards such as he has suggested can be made without the imposition of state controls and various other measures?

Mr. Lewis: The minister is using what teachers of language call evocative language. He thinks that if he says "state control" he will bring down some kind of frightening ghost which will put fear into the hearts not of his colleagues or of hon. members opposite, but of the people to whom he intends to appeal for votes.

Mr. Martineau: Just answer the question.

Mr. Lewis: Let me say to the minister that it is not possible to have any kind of law without the people of the country obeying that law. Every time the minister proposes any legislation he necessarily proposes sanctions to impose that legislation—except that he does it for bad legislation and I am suggesting that it be done for good legislation. But, Mr. Speaker, there is an element of some relevance in the minister's question and his question gives me the opportunity to deal with the point.

National Economic Development Board

You must find ways and means in a democratic nation to make the planning sequence and the planning activity as democratic as humanly possible. For that purpose we have proposed over and over again that the central planning board should have at its hand a consultative council representative of every element in the country—business, labour, agriculture, co-operatives, consumers, and all other segments of the people of Canada and every other economic interest. Furthermore, it should not merely be representative in the sense that the government appoints the people who it thinks should represent others, but representative in the sense that the organizations of labour, agriculture, consumers and co-operatives themselves nominate the people they want on the consultative council. In this way there will be genuine voices from the various segments of the Canadian people participating in the planning activity and in the final conclusions which the planning board will arrive at.

In addition to that, it has always been my concept of planning as we have proposed it, which concept I am sure is shared by my leader and every other colleague in my party, as well as every member of my party across the country, that the planning agency would in every day of its work be consulting with the various elements of the Canadian economy—industry, finance, labour and agriculture—not only at formal meetings of the consultative council, but as a necessary and integral part of its day-to-day activities. Because we who have studied history have learned that no law passed in a democratic country can possibly be successful and effective merely by coercion. It can only be an effective and good law if it has the consent of the people. That is why this consultative machinery is necessary. It is not in order to be able to answer supposedly needling questions such as the minister asked a moment ago, but is intended as a genuine contribution to the machinery of planning and to the democratic work of that machinery. May I add, as I have been reminded, that there is nothing in the legislation now before the house that suggests a consultative council of the kind I have described, where the organizations concerned will themselves nominate and appoint the people who will represent them on that council.

Mr. Speaker, I was saying that the only way to deal with the growing threat of foreign control of Canada's economy is by the kind of planning we are suggesting. Because only if you have a national development fund, a source for public investment, can you carry on the kind of activity which will generate Canadian capital for investment purposes, instead of our economic development requiring the capital of investors from outside the country, as has been the case in the past. It is my conviction that while there may always be need for foreign investment in Canada, while it is wrong ever to close the doors to foreign investment, Canada's economy has advanced sufficiently far and the Canadian people have reached a sufficient understanding of what economic matters mean, that we can generate in Canada the capital required for planned Canadian production, and therefore would have no need for the foreign investment which has taken place in the past and which has been such a drain on the foreign exchange of our country.

When the kind of planning which I am discussing is proposed, another thing which people often throw at us is that we would take away the choice of the consumer. Again that makes me chortle. What choice has the consumer in modern society, particularly in modern North American society? Production no longer takes place as a result of the choice of the consumer. Millions of dollars are spent to create demand for things which people do not need, not to produce things which people do need. For example, you sit in your car and listen to the radio. At one moment one company is advertising one kind of toothpaste, and then another kind of toothpaste is said to be better than the one just advertised, and you find that it is the same company advertising it. So that money is spent by that company in order to compete with itself.

Mr. Douglas: It may be the same toothpaste.

Mr. Lewis: Yes, it may be the same toothpaste, probably not more useful than the other. But all this money is being spent and is added to the price that the consumer must pay in response to the choice of the consumer? Fiddlesticks, Mr. Speaker. It is in response to the greedy grabbing for profits by the corporation which thinks it can make a little more out of toothpaste B than out of toothpaste A, even though it manufactures both, and which, as I have learned in my professional capacity, is produced very frequently on the same assembly line in the same plant.

No, Mr. Speaker, all these things are shibboleths which blind man's mind in our North American society, and which prevent the reasonable, the logical, the sensible and the practical measures to make our economy function in the interests of the Canadian people and in the interests of hungry and needy people the world over. We throw down the words "state control" and close our minds. We throw down the word "planning" and close our minds. We talk about consumers' choice and close our minds. We talk about state interference and close our minds. All the time our economy produces unemployment.

All the time our economy falls into the hands of foreign investors. All the time we lose more and more of our values. All the time our marketplace begins to control the Canadian mind, the Canadian spirit and the Canadian view. I appeal to hon. members to drop these shibboleths and these evocative words and to look at the modern economy with the analytical minds which I am sure they possess and in the scientific way required by modern society. Unless we do so, the challenge of totalitarians from the right or from the left will be difficult to meet and this country, like other countries, will face much more serious problems than those we face today.

Like other members of this house I may be forced to vote for second reading because a small faltering step may be better than nothing. I do it, I hope, as a responsible member representing a section of the Canadian people and I would not wish to stand in the way even of this kind of small step that may help the present government to make fewer mistakes. I am sure it will not help it to do better things but it may help it to make fewer mistakes. I wish to emphasize the fact that, as far as we are concerned, this is not planning in any sensible sense. As I think I have said twice already, this kind of cocktail planning is merely an indication that hon. members at last understand that something needs to be done, but there is not yet any indication that this government understands what it is that needs to be done.

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, whenever a piece of legislation of the importance and the significance of that now before the house comes to the attention of hon. members there is always a tendency to look at it in terms of its ability to solve all the problems besetting the Canadian economy at the present time. This is particularly true of parties or individuals with a doctrinaire approach to economic matters. While it is true that the government believes the national development board contemplated by this legislation is a far reaching and important step in ensuring the continuing progress of the Canadian economy, we do not regard it as the universal solvent of all our difficulties. Rather we regard it merely as a continuation of the program that has been under way ever since this government took office in 1957. This is not the beginning of a new era. This is the continuation of a program that has been gradually unfolding under the leadership of the Conservative government.

Having said that, Mr. Speaker, let me congratulate the Minister of Finance on bringing forward this legislation. Let me also remind the house that he is not a new convert to this kind of planning. As I listen to debates in the House of Commons I find that it is rather helpful to have a bit of historical perspective. I have been here since 1951 and sometimes I find there is a tendency for memories to be conveniently short. Without an historical perspective it is impossible to put the changing state of the nation into the right perspective. I recall that the Minister of Finance, when he was a member of the opposition, advocated just such a board as that which he is now proposing as a minister of the crown. I can recall back in those days members of the opposition at that time recommending that there should be a planning board to carry out a closer co-ordination and co-operation between the various sectors of the Canadian economy, and the government of the day turning down the suggestion because, as we used to hear so frequently, all was for the best in the best of all possible worlds.

Let me repeat that what has been going on is a continuation of the five year plan launched by the administration back in 1957. Change in that respect was long overdue since we had gotten into a rut in our attitude towards economic affairs in Canada as typified by the former administration in its attitude towards change in the agriculture industry, for example. I can remember the then minister of agriculture saying that while there was distress in the agriculture economy, it was just a passing phase and that eventually it would work itself out. As a matter of fact, I became a member of the House of Commons in 1951 as a result of the agriculture protest of that period. Then in the realm of industrial development there was almost absolute rigidity and indifference to problems. We were geared to a wartime economy. Industry was concentrated in a small area of Canada. It was outmoded and uncompetitive because it had its great period of expansion during the uneconomic circumstances of a wartime economy and we were failing to gear up to reality in that regard.

I came here from the field of education and I can remember trying to introduce in this house the subject of the crisis in education and being almost faced with a situation where the discussion was prevented because, under the constitution, education came under the jurisdiction of the provinces. It was not until 1957 we realized that we had a crisis in education when sputnik went into orbit. I do not mention 1957 for partisan or political reasons. It is just coincidental perhaps that the Conservative government came into power in 1957.

An hon. Member: And fortunate.

Mr. Dinsdale: Yes, and fortunate. It was not until sputnik went into orbit that we all acknowledged that we had a crisis in education. Since that time the new administration has been endeavouring to make up for lost time, for the years that the locusts had eaten. We have been advancing the program of technological training through the rapid expansion of technical schools. We have increased aid to education all along the line. I could spend some time in reviewing the inertia of the past. However, what I wish to do is to trace as briefly as possible the steps which have been taken to make up for lost time. I am going to concentrate on my own area of interest, namely the field of national resources and outline what has been done. The program should be clear to all members of the house; but as I have listened to comments and speeches I have come to the conclusion that even though the evidence is available there are a few blind eyes and a few deaf ears in this house, and there are none so blind as those who refuse to see and none so deaf as those who refuse to hear.

Planning has been under way on the part of the government in the resource base field in the areas of both non-renewable and renewable resources, and it is quite appropriate that planning should have begun in this sector of the Canadian economy because this is typical Conservative philosophy. National development has always had a resource base whenever a Conservative administration has been in power. I am free to admit that in this regard northern development has perhaps caught the imagination of the public more than other resource areas, largely because this is a field that was so sadly neglected by previous federal administrations.

I have noticed in recent days that the leader of the Social Credit group, the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson), has been telling us that we should launch a vigorous program of northern development. I am happy to assure him that such a program was launched back in the year 1957 and has been moving forward since that time. He points particularly to transportation needs and the possible usefulness of the hovercraft, this new transportation vehicle. Again I am glad to assure him that we shall be having a trial run of a hovercraft early this spring and, if possible, we will arrange to take him along on the first trip. I agree that this vehicle has a tremendous potential so far as the overcoming of the transportation problems of the north is concerned.

It was inevitable that we had to plan very carefully in the resource field because the resources belong to the provinces. The Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources has to work in a very sensitive area in devising national resource development policies. It can only be done by the closest possible co-operation and co-ordination with the provincial governments. I should like to suggest that we have been reasonably successful in this regard.

If I may speak about conferences and co-operation for a moment, I would point out that we called a conference on renewable resources which was held over a year ago in the city of Montreal. We did so because we realized the problems of getting the provinces and the federal government together. This is resource planning of a basic kind, and all the 700 Canadians who took part in that historic resources for tomorrow conference went home feeling that something significant had been accomplished there.

What has emerged in concrete terms from the conference? I am going to mention one example which in terms of planning and in terms of government organization is of fundamental importance. We now have a resource ministers council. This has been announced in the press but apparently it has not sunk deeply into the consciousness of members of the house. This resource ministers council is made up of a representative from each of the provincial governments and representatives from the federal government, all of whom occupy co-equal position on the council. At the present time the council is venturing into a new era of intergovernmental co-operation. It is organizing a secretariat that will be responsible to both the federal authority and the provincial authorities. This secretariat will be completely bilingual.

This is just one development. I could mention others that have emerged from planning in the renewable resource field launched by the government back in 1957 if there were time to do so this afternoon. One of the first matters we had to tackle was the question of the special problems in the different regions of Canada. In the resource area we have given close attention to the problems of the Atlantic provinces as well as those of the prairie region because in those areas economic difficulty in the resource field was most pronounced. This again, I say, is basic Conservative policy because we believe in providing equal opportunities for all parts of Canada and for all groups in Canada.

To mention one example of this kind of planning in the Atlantic provinces area, I would refer to the Atlantic Provinces Power Development Act which has had such a significant impact on that part of the Canadian economy. I would also refer to our national policy for agriculture. After all, agriculture is a basic renewable resource, and a most significant addition was made to our legislation a year ago when the house approved the Agricultural Rehabilitation and Development Act.

I am dealing only with my own department at the moment, but I would emphasize that there has been other planning over the past five years. What is contemplated now is a further step forward because we have arrived at the point in the Canadian economy where we must secure the co-operation of the private sector of the economy. In a day and age when society was less complex it was easier to have this sort of co-operation on an informal basis, but I fully anticipate that the national economic development board which will be organized when this legislation is approved by the house will make it possible to bring in representatives from the various private sectors of the economy who will work more closely with the government programs that have already been launched.

I submit that this is a further step forward in the sort of development that has been taking place in the past five years. It is not unlike the kind of planning that has been going on in Europe since the war. This fact was established by the members of the productivity council when they visited Europe recently to study the kinds of economic planning going on there. In Sweden and the other European countries they found, that planning is not rigid and authoritarian but rather provides for encouragement of the spirit of co-operation and co-ordination in the various sectors of their economies.

Mr. Speaker: In the spirit of co-operation I will now say that it is five o'clock, the time appointed for the consideration of private members' business, being notices of motions as they appear on page 24 of today's order paper.

INDUSTRY

REQUEST FOR COUNCIL TO LOCATE INDUSTRY ACCORDING TO REGIONAL SUITABILITY

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming) moved:

That, in the opinion of this house, it is expedient to establish a national location of industry council for the purpose of directing new industry into those regions of the country which are dependant on a narrow industrial base and those which are areas of surplus manpower; and

That the national location of industry council, in co-operation with the monetary and fiscal authorities, be empowered to offer incentives to attract new industry to such regions when requested by provincial and municipal governments.

He said: I am sure that hon. members will see a similarity between the purpose of this resolution and some of the speeches that have recently been made on a number of other items of government legislation. If the recommendations of hon. members of parliament were put into effect and carried with them the benefits that are sometimes outlined by speakers discussing legislation, then probably it would be possible for me to withdraw this resolution. However, Mr. Speaker, in moving this resolution I wish to say nothing has yet been accomplished that would indicate to me legislation is not necessary to assist industry move into areas which now have little or no industry.

One of the reasons I am interested in looking at legislation in European countries, and particularly that of Great Britain which we are apt to follow, is to try and find some solutions for problems that we ourselves have not been able to solve.

I come from northern Ontario where the problem of lack of industry is very acute. In that area we have dozens and dozens of towns built around two basic industries that were the backbone of the country's economy until the last few years, and now we see secondary industry in other areas rapidly approaching its sphere of supremacy and growth. Seeing secondary industry grow, and looking at the two basic industries which provided the initial spur to the economy of many parts of the country, we realize something must be done for the municipalities which grew out of those basic industries.

The two industries are not alike. The basic development occurred through the forest industry, which is a renewable industry. I believe that fifty or a hundred years ago, had we looked how people in Sweden, Norway and other countries in Europe utilized their natural resources in the forest industry, it would not be necessary for me to ask for assistance on behalf of the people in forest towns and people in the pulp and paper industry, in terms of locating secondary industry in their areas. However the fact is that very little has been done to renew the renewable resources of our country, particularly forestry, which is very nearly in the same position as the mining industry, which is based on a non-renewable resource.

When conducting negotiations a number of years ago with a company that had been in the lumber industry in one area for 45 years, I was surprised to find the company could not go back to the first cuts it had made 45 years ago and find itself in the position of getting timber off those limits in order to continue the cycle of its operations. I think the company manager was surprised I did not know this, but he informed me it would be 90 years before the company could cut any timber of commercial value off the limits it had been living on for 45 years. We have not done anything about this, and of course we have not been able to do anything about industries based on non-renewable resources, such as the mining industry.

Many towns grew up because of the discovery of minerals. People established municipalities throughout northern Canada and the people in those municipalities knew they were living off a non-renewable resource. But, Mr. Speaker, they had the right to expect that eventually the government of Canada would show interest in their particular problem in the same manner as governments in other parts of the world had faced up to it a long time previously and had solved it. I believe the present is the time for the federal government to give some leadership in this particular field, in which it has shown no interest and no particular aptitude, in order to develop the co-operation that is necessary if we are to solve the problem of the industrial growth of areas that were originally dependant on one basic industry.

It is true that in countries like Great Britain and the Scandinavian countries they have each one government that is responsible for the welfare of all the people, and their problem is not as complex as ours in Canada where we have the constitutional problem of federal and provincial jurisdiction. However, Mr. Speaker, surely that is not a problem that cannot be solved? Surely in the 100 years Canada has been a country we should have been able to come up with some of the solutions necessary to provide the initiative that would locate industry in the areas with which I am concerned.

The former speaker in the previous debate mentioned the fact that the federal government, provincial and municipal governments, industry and labour must all co-operate if anything worthwhile is to be accomplished, and I believe that is particularly true with regard to the location of secondary industry in those areas that are hard hit. I believe co-operation is more necessary than any other field of endeavour but it takes a strong and interested government to give the leadership that is necessary because private enterprise, which says the profit motive is the backbone of its system, is not going to develop industry in northern Ontario.

It might be a surprise for hon. members to visit a town like Matachewan, where at one time there were two major good producers, which had a population of 2,000 to 3,000, which had its own jail, its own hotels, its own schools, churches, sidewalks and water supply, and to find that as of the first of this year it has gone back to the state of being an unorganized township and was actually given the assistance of the provincial government of Ontario to get back into that position. I do not think we will get much co-operation from the province of Ontario when it believes all we should do is return these municipalities to an unorganized state where the province provides public welfare to take care of the people. The people of Matachewan do not want to be taken care of in that way. They want to take care of themselves. They have a pioneering spirit and all they want are jobs so that they can continue to build their town.

This problem has to be looked at in terms of Toronto because it seems to me that we in northern Ontario, and people in other parts of Canada, are being vastly penalized because we have allowed metropolitan industrial complexes to develop as they have been developing. In Toronto there are industries employing 300 or 400 people that are a liability to the city. They are taxing its water supply, its transportation facilities and housing facilities. The rest of the taxpayers of Canada are continually being asked for grants to help Toronto, and other cities like it, with their transportation systems and their National Housing Act schemes, their education and other things that are necessary in such terrifically expanding communities, but at the same time the people of Matachewan are being carried on welfare because they have not got jobs. A small factory employing 300 or 400 employees in Matachewan would elevate the town to its proper status and put it in the position of paying its own way and carrying its own burdens.

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that Canada will never be a great country until we are willing to help all the people in this country to equate themselves on the basis of a general and equal standard of living. It is not good enough to build up one part of the economy, because of the free enterprise system, not because of the people who live in those cities. I am quite sure they are unhappy with the fact that it takes them two or three hours to go downtown, the same as people in other cities; but it is up to us in the federal parliament to see that assistance and direction are given to those companies wishing to locate in Canada and we should assist them to locate in areas where the most good will accrue.

This has been done in Great Britain. There is the instance where Ford wanted to build an addition to a very large enterprise they had near Coventry. The British government said, "No, we will not give you a permit to build there. We want you to build in an area where there is a surplus of labour. We will give you certain assistance if you will do that." The free enterprise system works there too, I think, because Ford said they would not build the extension of their factory where it was wanted. But if hon. members will check they will find that Ford subsequently changed their mind and are now doing that. There has been persuasion on the part of the government to see that industry has located in those areas where there is a high concentration of consumers to take a large quantity of the production of a particular factory.

This can be done, with the assistance of the federal government, through the agencies that we now have. I am always shocked, Mr. Speaker, when I discuss this matter with people wishing to establish industries in northern Ontario, by the very limited assistance they have received from the industrial development bank, which is under the control of this house. Yet in Great Britain and other countries, when the location of industry acts were passed, they made available sums of money that could be loaned to industries wishing to establish in particular areas. This has been tried, not only in Europe but in the province of Nova Scotia with some success, where they have established an estates act and have built a number of factories. I believe that an extension of the industrial development bank, in conjunction with the location of industry, would allow this to take place in northern Ontario.

I think that if we considered those areas where a surplus of manpower has developed, through no fault of the people themselves, where there is a large concentration of housing already available without any further federal expenditure, where the business community exists and transportation and other facilities that are necessary for an expanding community, we would see that the only thing that is needed is the direction of the federal government in locating industry in those areas, and the government would be hard pressed to find a reason for not assisting these particular industries.

I know that other hon. members wish to speak on this matter. When other hon. members speak in connection with the establishment of a national location of industry council—or call it some other name, if you wish—the fact that we do wish to direct industry into those areas where through no fault of the community the basic industry has died, or where automation or urbanization have taken place and eliminated the basic employment industry of the people themselves, I will be very surprised if this resolution does not suffer the same fate as other resolutions and bills put before this house, which have been loved to death. If hon. members support this idea and this principle I hope it will receive some consideration now because, Mr. Speaker, the question is of prime importance to the people of northern Ontario. In Kirkland Lake this year another mine or two will close in the gold mining industry. This is true in all other mining communities, particularly the gold and silver mining communities, where mines are being depleted, with no assistance and no recourse to the development of secondary industry being available to the municipalities which are so desperately looking for assistance in this regard. While in the town of Kirkland Lake a new mine has been found, which will alleviate the serious problem that has been facing these people for many years, the problem is by no means solved because that mine also is a non-renewable resource. If hon. members wish to support the relocation of industry and the establishment of a national location of industry council, with government financial assistance, I hope they will make it possible for a vote to be held on this very important question so that this measure can be added to the government legislation that has already been advertised throughout the country as being aimed in the general direction that I believe the establishment of a national location of industry council is aimed.

Mr. A. J. MacEachen (Inverness-Richmond): Mr. Speaker, the resolution moved by the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) has brought once again to the attention of the house one of the major economic problems facing this country. Notwithstanding the action being taken in the current session in setting up various new agencies in the economic field, none of these agencies is equipped or designed to deal with the important problem that this resolution brings to our attention.

It is an obvious fact that there are certain areas in Canada which are suffering from chronic and persistent unemployment. The resolution refers to these areas as surplus manpower areas. These areas have their problems reduced in a period of prosperity because the employment level rises somewhat, but the problems are aggravated in a period of recession. The hon. member who has resumed his seat has referred to the disappearing communities, or disappearing employment opportunities in certain parts of Ontario because of technological changes, changes in consumer demand and other influences. It is a fact that certain communities in all parts of Canada are faced with this particular problem. I personally believe that there is a national responsibility and that a national agency should apply remedies to all areas of Canada, not only the Atlantic provinces but all areas which are facing this particular difficulty. While I welcomed the concept behind the Atlantic provinces development board, it would be my preference that economic problems be handled on a national basis with techniques and tools applied to localities no matter where they are located in Canada.

The hon. member has referred, of course—and correctly—to experience in the United Kingdom and the United States in dealing with problems of depressed areas or areas of chronic and persistent unemployment. One of the first things that President Kennedy did, something for which he fought very fiercely during his senate career, was to establish an area development agency to deal with the problem of depressed areas. One of the early reports defines the kind of area that we have in mind in this particular resolution; that is, a depressed area is typically a pocket of chronic unemployment which persists even during relatively prosperous times in the rest of the nation. It is especially hard hit in time of recession. When the current unemployment rate is over 6 per cent, the depressed area rate is over 10 per cent. It is a fact that one province in Canada in the period of highest unemployment in the winter months has an unemployment rate of between 16 and 20 per cent. There are various communities in the Atlantic provinces especially in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick which at certain periods of the year have between 10 and 20 per cent of their paid workers idle. This situation continues over a period of years, amounting to a permanent pool of unemployment.

Now we have to try, as a civilized community, to do something about putting new economic life into these depressed areas. We have taken the attitude as a party that we need a special agency within the federal government to deal with the problems of depressed areas. Whether such a body is called a national location of industry council or, as we have suggested, an area rehabilitation agency, is immaterial provided it is set up to do this job. The first thing such an agency has to do is designate the areas to which special assistance should be granted. That has not been done in this country. It has been done in the United States under their development plan and it is being done in the United Kingdom. Based on their unemployment experience, certain areas are known and designated as areas in need of special assistance.

We in this party believe there ought to be an agency set up which would first of all designate such areas and then be in a position to apply a variety of special aids in order to put new life and new economic activity into those communities. This is a problem which cannot be tackled or solved by private initiative. It cannot be solved by municipalities or by provinces. It requires the assistance of the federal authority.

Efforts in other countries have been much more than mere noble experiments. They have been highly successful. I have a report of the United Kingdom board of trade in which department the development programs there are administered. In reviewing the success of their policy, the following statement appears:

> There is no doubt that these powers taken together have had a considerable effect in creating employment in the areas needing it and in diverting industry from the areas which are short of labour. By the end of May, 1960, there were about 1,100 factories being administered by the managers of the corporations. These factories were built at a cost of £80 million (sterling) and are giving employment to just over 200,000 workers.

The Atlantic provinces economic council has made various forecasts as to the number of new jobs needed in the Atlantic provinces for the next ten years. A realistic estimate of jobs required in that region in the next ten years is about 200,000. If we could have 200,000 new jobs in that area in the next ten years we would reduce unemployment levels and solve the major problem facing that segment of our economy. It has been done in the United Kingdom. Maybe it is easier to do it there for various reasons, but by these means they have succeeded in producing the equivalent of the number of new jobs required to place the Atlantic economy in a balanced state.

My hon. friend the leader of the Liberal party set forth the policy on this subject for his followers in a speech made in the House of Commons in March of 1961. In calling for the establishment of an area rehabilitation agency and for the designation of depressed areas he referred to a number of techniques which ought to be followed in encouraging the location of new industries in such areas. One of these is a flexible fiscal policy adapted to the needs of such areas and designed either to develop primary resources or to establish new secondary manufacturing industries. In detailing the phases of this policy the leader of the Liberal party advocated, first of all, capital grants for development. These grants would be available not only to companies but also to municipalities which required services for new industries. We have advocated tax incentives such as temporary tax exemptions which would apply not only to new industries moving in to depressed areas but to established industries which decided to expand and modernize their plant.

We have also advocated special consideration in a public works program for depressed areas. We have advocated special consideration for such areas in the winter works program and in the field of monetary policy, a matter which is directly mentioned in the resolution, we have, as a party, suggested that the industrial development bank be separated from the Bank of Canada and operated vigorously as a development agency. We believe that, given this greater freedom the industrial development bank would be able to provide more credit at a more favourable rate of interest in the depressed areas.

A great deal of attention has been given to the effect of national monetary policy on such areas. It has been suggested by people such as the present Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Flemming) that the monetary policy of the Bank of Canada should be applied differently in such areas. We in this party find it difficult to understand how this could be done efficiently. But we do believe that the problem of providing additional credit for such areas could be met by means of a refashioned industrial development bank. We believe no problem is more important or requires earlier attention than the one raised in this resolution, namely, the need to do something about the many communities in various parts of Canada which have a persistent and chronic rate of unemployment. The way to overcome chronic unemployment is to put new industries into these areas through a program such as we have outlined; to create a special agency; designate the areas, and then to use a variety of tools, including fiscal policy, monetary policy, and other techniques such as public works and winter works programs. This has been tried successfully in Europe, the United Kingdom and the United States. It has not been tried in Canada. No systematic or co-ordinated effort has yet been attempted in this country to deal with this particular problem. This is one of the items high on the agenda of a new Liberal government.

Mr. F. J. Bigg (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, I rise to oppose this suggestion because, in the first place, I think it is redundant in view of the many planning boards we already have. I am also opposed to it as another indication of the trend towards rank socialism. We have a choice—at least, I hope we have—in this generation of ours in Canada as to whether or not we are going to preserve our democratic way of life. The democratic way of life demands self-expression and control of our own destinies. Planning I do believe in, but not interference. That sounds contradictory of course; but planning is only bad in the extreme. What I am worried about is national planning which gets to the point where private industry and private enterprise has no position.

When I listen to my hon. friends on my right I am worried about this trend. Because they are never satisfied with any of the things which private enterprise or democracy has produced. One would think, to hear them speak one after the other, that you have only to put in some form of socialism to end all our troubles, to bring us the millenium. They point to such countries as Sweden, Switzerland, and other places where they have some socialistic institutions. I would be the first to say that some of these socialistic institutions have produced favourable results, but that is not the only way. I for one believe in our North American way of life. I think we have produced with private enterprise and the minimum of state interference and control the highest standard of living on our planet, and with the greatest freedom. I for one am willing to give up a certain amount of standard of living even if it means part of my freedom. As an individual I am not myself ready to give over to the government either the power completely to control my life or the responsibility. I think it is time that Canadians young and old, rich and poor, employed and unemployed, took a really good look at the trends to see whether there is not something they can do, both as individuals and collectively, to move forward to fuller employment and to a higher standard of living without giving up control of their own destiny.

With a multiplicity of boards, particularly when they are duplicating the services provided by boards already existing and those suggested on our agenda, we can have too much government. It is not long ago that I found it necessary to approach the cabinet of the great province of Alberta. There I found that instead of seeking more national control they suggested that we were already deeply involved in running the affairs of the provinces and they wished that we would withdraw. On the other hand, I found this a somewhat one-sided argument because they never suggested at any time that we withdraw financial support, and it seems that when you ask for financial support for anything you are going to have some degree of control. Overseeing planning, some people call it.

We already have a national productivity council. I am sure that if the national productivity council does its work and what is planned for it, the location of industry would be high on its list. In fact, I do not know what other purpose the national productivity council would have but to give to indusry, to the provinces and to the necessary federal government departments the proper advice in regard to the location of our industries and the efficient distribution of our manpower. But I still think that the more we leave to private industry and private enterprise the better.

If immediately an area becomes low in employment the federal government steps in and injects into that district some uprooted industry, or creates some new industry, there will be a tendency for the people of that area to stay. Perhaps they may even be persuaded to pursue a way of life foreign to them. For instance, if a mine closes down, how are we to know that if a wool factory was established in the area the people would move from the mine into that wool factory? It seems to me that the main job of our productivity council is to look at the national product, to look at our international markets, and to see where we can encourage the industries which we have and the industries which are natural to any part of the country to improve their economic position; and I can see nothing wrong with attracting people who really want to work from one section of our country to another.

In northern Alberta today we are looking forward to one of the most spectacular developments in the production of oil from tar sand. If our productivity council takes a look at this great country, a country which I predict will one day be as rich as the Ruhr, and these entrepreneurs go in there and develop a new and tremendous industry, unemployed people, no matter where they are in Canada, will be encouraged to take their energies, their skills and faith into northern Alberta and help develop this tremendous industry. It cannot be exaggerated: 500 billion barrels of oil no longer locked in the sands but looking for markets and for production.

This is the sort of challenge which lies before us in Canada today. There is no running away from our problem. There is no seeking any government, national, provincial or municipal, to handle our affairs. We look to individual effort, faith and energy, and any planning board should do no more than to create the atmosphere in which private enterprise can thrive. I will not exaggerate my faith in private enterprise. It has brought us all that we have today, and I am sure that it will drive on to fresh and greater heights. It is not many months ago since we heard doom and gloom preached from one end of the country to the other. The opposition said that our finances were on the rocks. They said that we were no longer willing or able to lead this country to better times. Now they are going around the country apologizing for what they call a mild boom. Perhaps this is accidental. Perhaps they think this is due to planning boards. I do not. I do not think this boom is due to planning boards at all. I think it is due to the fact that we are an energetic nation as individuals—not as socialists, not even as left-wing Liberals. We in the Conservative party believe in free enterprise in the future of our country, and in co-operation between government departments. And even as one of our socialist speakers said this afternoon, we want no checkerboard and we want no duplication of planning. This group of ours here is the great planning board for Canada. It is up to us here to devise policies which suit everybody, and which look to individual effort. I think this planning board can do no more than to say what I have said in more specific terms and to lay out blueprints for that kind of development, so that it will come to you and say, "We want you to go to work on your own". However, I do not want any planning board in Canada to come to me and say, "Here, you will go to "A" and you will work at such and so". We must create an atmosphere in which I desire to go to "A" and to take my family, and to pioneer in the same way as did my grandfather and my parents. This opportunity I wish to pass on to my children and to their children's children. It may sound like old stuff but it is still good up in the country from which I come. Up there there is still a challenge for any young man or young woman or any group of young men or young women who wish to take a chance, as did my father and mother and my grandparents, to come up into the booming parts of our country and to develop there the free enterprise system which has made us the nation that we are today.

(Translation):

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Speaker, this motion of the member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) has to do with a matter of the highest importance for Canada, for the province of Quebec in particular, and for the Saguenay area, which I have the honour to represent here, together with three other members.

The setting up of a national location of industry council, which is proposed to us, would perhaps be necessary to decentralize our industry, and thus check the movement of our population towards the larger centres. That population movement causes serious problems in those cities whose population thus increases, and it causes also problems to parents who have to be separated from their children. That population movement causes disturbances both on the economic and social plans.

Of course, it is not as easy to decentralize industry as it may seem.

The responsibilities which this motion proposes to impart to board members could also be those of the economic development board which we discussed this afternoon. I do not think we can separate those matters at all.

We are discussing today Bill C-87, concerning the establishment of a national economic development board.

Well, I think that such a development board, together with the productivity council which has been in existence since last year, can undertake to consider those problems and bring about the necessary improvements.

I know, Mr. Speaker, that if we refer to the latest statistics concerning the employment situation, that is the December 15, 1962 report, we note that we have about 414,000 unemployed in Canada, 154,000 of whom are living in the province of Quebec, that is 37 per cent. The Saguenay area alone, Mr. Speaker, has about 15,000 unemployed at present, which is causing deep misgivings in our area.

The situation in the Saguenay area is the result of the fact that we have only two big industries, that of paper and that of aluminum, which are both affected by the situation prevailing on the international market.

Our area being somewhat remote from the larger centres, we find it difficult to attract industries which might hire the available labour.

Our region is rich in natural resources, namely hydraulic, mining and forest resources. It has tremendous possibilities.

We have waterways, very good roads and a railway, even though it is rather obsolete.

Of course, I am not the first one to rise in this house to ask for improved railway facilities between the larger centres and the Saguenay. This would surely make the Saguenay region more attractive to industrialists. But, in my opinion, as regards the motion now under discussion, one can see that the government could do its share so as to make an area even more attractive to industry.

I feel that the tax reductions which are being asked and suggested would prompt a company to set up in one place rather than in another. There is also the matter of accelerated depreciation for equipment.

There is another organization which should not be neglected. I refer to the industrial development bank, which, at the present time, provides loans to assist in the development of industry.

That bank could do much more than it is doing now. The government would have no great difficulty in finding borrowers who could go into those depressed areas to build plants, something which at the same time could improve the general situation.

But, at the present time, the industrial development bank is subject to exceedingly strict regulations.

Having met several industrialists in my area, I know it is not too easy to get help from that organization. The bank, whose loans bear a rather high rate of interest, requires guarantees to such an extent that an industrialist who is not already well established finds it practically impossible to obtain the funds needed for the development of his enterprise.

It is obvious that if the regulations of the industrial development bank were more flexible, more adapted to circumstances, many manufacturers in the various regions of the country could find there the source of capital their industries need, and thus help increase the local production and curtail unemployment.

The government would profit greatly by an improved situation, in view of the constant drain on its unemployment insurance and assistance funds.

I am sure that a reduction of the rate of the industrial development bank as well as a greater flexibility of its regulations, would be advantageous, because even if it would mean possible losses for the organization, these losses would be fully made up by the savings on disbursements for unemployment insurance or assistance or for any other project.

At all events, Mr. Speaker, I think that those projects would improve the situation. But that would surely take some time.

We are informed by the press that the Saguenay region and the Hamilton region which I think is represented by the Minister of Labour, were declared heavy manpower surplus areas during the month of December.

People wonder what this government can do and intends to do. As immediate measures, public works which the government can proceed with represent the only means to improve the situation, and that, as a palliative since they are temporary devices.

Several projects were suggested to the government by various hon. members in this house. If the government would listen to them and co-operate, a good measure of improvement could be obtained in a very short time.

Of course, I know those are but provisional measures and that industrial development only may compensate and bring about stability which not only will last, but will go on improving, thus ensuring to the different areas of the country and of the province a normal development and jobs which will make it possible for the population to get what it needs.

I know that in so doing, the government is once again asked to set up boards and to impinge upon a field which, normally, should be reserved to the provinces. But we have come to the point where it is to be wondered whether the present economic situation in Canada is not the result of a concerted action, of a comprehensive over-all plan to force the provinces, the municipalities, in other words the citizens themselves, to crawl to Ottawa on their knees to beg favours.

I know that other provinces of Canada do not have to face such a serious problem, from the standpoint of unemployment, because they have probably benefited from what we could call a better understanding on the part of the federal government. For instance, Ontario is in a privileged situation. In fact, I think that if we compare its situation with that of the other provinces, we note a centralization of industry.

I do not know whether I can take the liberty of making the following remarks, but the national productivity council, which is a body set up by the government to promote production in manufactures and other related enterprises, is now composed of 25 members, the majority of whom are citizens of Ontario.

I would not like, at this stage, to criticize the attitude of the members of that board, but I think it is normal, after all, for people living in the same province, to understand better the problems of that particular province and to understand less those of the country as a whole.

I feel that such a situation must be brought to the attention of the other representatives we see in this house, because the Quebec members are being accused of complaining about discrimination. In my opinion, the representatives of the other provinces should study closely the membership of the various crown corporations and agencies which are in majority composed of citizens from Ontario. Consequently, it is no wonder that all measures put forward by the government are made up to fit the needs of the province of Ontario. And those measures are far from taking into account the needs of the eastern provinces, the maritime provinces in particular, which also suffer from that situation.

[Mr. Lessard (Lake St. John).]

Mr. Speaker, if provincial governments had greater freedom of action in the field of taxation, if they had their own revenues, I think that a good number of the problems facing the federal government would be solved. In fact, the provincial authorities could take those problems in charge themselves and solve them. But since they do not have the necessary revenues, they must constantly address themselves to the central government, and I think we are rendering a disservice to confederation and to good understanding in this country in forcing them to come regularly on a pilgrimage to Ottawa in order to obtain, piecemeal, those things to which they are entitled and which belong to them, as a result of the prerogatives which have been conferred to them under the agreement.

Of course, all those boards may have some good effects. They will probably limit certain freedoms, which are dear to us but, unfortunately, I think that, considering the ill-will of some, we are sometimes obliged to sacrifice those parts of our freedom, always hoping that someday we will be able to recapture them, in justice and in peace.

We therefore support this measure for the good that it may bring about.

(Text):

Mr. W. H. A. Thomas (Middlesex West): Mr. Speaker, this is a very interesting and worthwhile resolution which has been placed before the house by the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters). If we did not have a great many other proposals before the house dealing with the subject of planning and the manner of spreading our productivity and the rewards of that productivity equitably across the country the resolution might be welcomed more by the house at this time.

Mr. Speaker: Order. It now being six o'clock, the time appointed for the consideration of private member's business has expired and the house will revert to the business that was interrupted at five o'clock.

NATIONAL ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT BOARD

PROVISION FOR DEFINITION OF DUTIES, APPOINTMENT OF MEMBERS, ETC.

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Nowlan for the second reading of Bill No. C-87, to provide for the establishment of a national economic development board.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Speaker, when the house adjourned at five o'clock I was pointing out to hon. members that the economic development board act will be continuing a policy that was launched by this government when we first came into office in 1957. I had mentioned some specific examples of planning within government departments, and also inter-governmental planning as between the federal government and the provincial governments that have resulted in concrete benefits for Canada. This is particularly noticeable in the Atlantic region as well as in the prairie region.

Just to give an example of the impact that government programs and activities in the Atlantic area have had on the thinking of the people in that part of Canada I had a most interesting contact early in September with a group of Nova Scotians led by the provincial minister of resources, the Hon. Mr. Manson, who had come to Toronto to promote the advantages for people coming from Upper Canada to Nova Scotia in order to seize the economic activities that are available there at the present time. This is a complete reversal of the pessimistic attitude that used to prevail in this House of Commons. I can remember hearing hon. members from the maritimes crying at great length that all was lost, that they had been the neglected part of confederation and were without hope, but here in the citadel of Upper Canada this group of ambassadors from Nova Scotia were telling the good folk of Ontario that Nova Scotia was the land of promise for the future.

It certainly is a reversal of the thinking that was expressed in the Gordon commission report where, for example, one of the solutions for the continuing problems of the Atlantic region was a migration of maritimers from that part of Canada to the central part of Canada.

I am not going to go into any great detail on the attitude of the prairie region of Canada other than to say it is significant that both these areas which since the thirties —yes, you could even go back to the twenties and the 1910's—have been the areas of political protest in this country. Now they are no longer protesting. They have felt the beneficial impact of these carefully planned programs of this administration. Now we come to the next stage in the development program where it becomes necessary to get closer co-operation, as I indicated earlier this afternoon, between the private sector of the economy, between labour and management and the farmer and all the groups which make up the Canadian body politic. This has been one of the great areas of deficiency so far as implementing a national development program is concerned.

We have had to contend with regionalism. We have had conflict between groups, even between classes in this country, and now the time has come when we must think in terms of national development. This can only come about as the result of a greater consciousness of national purpose and national unity. I fully believe this legislation will make a major contribution in achieving this desirable objective.

Mr. Speaker, before concluding I would like to point out that the government recognizes the role it has to play in planning matters. We do not see ourselves as planning in the authoritarian sense or in the sense of governments where there is monolithic power controlled from the top. The government does have a specific role to play and I think this role has been demonstrated in the programs that we have already launched. As I see it, and as the government sees it, the function of government is to provide an economic climate that is favourable for development in all areas of the Canadian economy. Certainly this is true in regard to resource development. It involves fiscal and trade matters as well. My colleagues responsible for those matters will be outlining the role that a board of this kind can play in the policy areas of trade and finance. In the resource field we have been providing such an economic climate. We have been working with private industry to make available better transportation facilities and to provide the necessary conditions under which private enterprise can thrive. We have built railroads and roads and undertaken power development projects of rather large proportions because we believe adequate power is basic to an adequate development program. We have provided roads to resources of some 4,500 miles representing a total contribution on the part of the federal government of $75 million. We have built development roads north of the 60th parallel. When the program is completed these will represent an additional 2,000 miles of access roads. We have built airfields and airports. We will co-operate with private enterprise in the northern areas in assisting in the building of airfields that will bring into production the mineral resources that we now know are present in abundance in the north. We have brought into being complete modern communications facilities through radio service, as well as through modern telephonic microwave communications, both into the Yukon and the Northwest Territories.

This has not been haphazard; this has been a carefully worked out plan. Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, I might give the details of just one concrete example which is an ideal illustration of this sort of co-operation. I refer to the Pine Point railway which is now under way, which represents a capital investment of $20 million and which will bring into production the rich lead zinc deposit at Pine Point on Great Slave lake. Also, an additional $2 million investment will be necessary in connection with the townsite development. This will result in the annual shipment of 215,000 tons—this is a minimum figure—of lead zinc concentrates to the smelter at Trail, British Columbia. This will involve an additional expansion program of $16 million at the Cominco smelter and refinery at Trail. This has all been worked out carefully in the closest co-operation with the private company involved, and it has all sorts of ancillary benefits. There will be a saving of between $14 and $21 million on foreign exchange, which continues to be such a critical problem in Canada. It brings into production six million acres of rich agricultural land in the Peace river country. All in all it indicates what has been accomplished and what can be accomplished by governments and private enterprise working closely together.

In the area where the federal government has greatest responsibility, the territorial areas, where we still have direct control over the resources, we have gone even further in this sort of planning. I was interested in the remarks of the hon. member for Hamilton East (Mr. Munro) who participated in this debate at an earlier stage; in the pre-Christmas period, as a matter of fact. He referred to this kind of development as the "vision of the north and all that sort of nonsense". Well, Mr. Speaker, a statement of that kind indicates that the hon. member is not at all aware of what has taken place north of the 60th parallel in the recent past. There is, unfortunately, a bias toward this program on the part of hon. members of the official opposition and the remarks have been critical almost without exception.

I remember reading a eulogy in connection with the passing of Stefansson, who was one of the pioneers in the development of the Canadian north. Forty years ago he was telling Canadians that there was tremendous potential in this million and a half square miles of Canada, to which we had hardly given any attention whatsoever. We occupied it in a state of absentmindedness. This article eulogizing Stefansson indicated that he incurred the wrath of the Liberal government of the day because he named some of the islands in the Canadian archipelago after the Conservative leaders, Sir Robert Borden and Mr. Meighen. This brought Mr. Stefansson into disfavour and brought about this prejudice that seems to have persisted down to the present time. We have named further islands in the Canadian archipelago and we have seen to it that all people in Canada, all groups in Canada, men who have made outstanding contributions, regardless of their partisan affiliations, have been recognized in this respect.

Let me emphasize, Mr. Speaker, that as a result of this northern development program 125 million acres of land are now under permit in the remote parts of the Canadian Arctic. Further, as a result the first oil well was drilled at Melville island just a year ago at a cost of over $1 million, and the company that carried on this extraordinary pioneering feat was an all-Canadian company. In fact, the principals were young Canadians typical of the men who have done much of the initial work of exploration in this part of Canada. In other parts of the Canadian north five oil wells are being drilled this year, and next year it is anticipated that there will be at least three wells spudded in on Bathurst island, which is in the extreme, remote area of the Canadian Arctic. These are just a few examples of what has been accomplished by careful planning and close co-operation.

Another development in the Arctic circle is the discovery of a deposit of high grade iron ore in tremendous quantity. It is now being investigated by the Bechtel Corporation, which is carrying out a feasibility study. This offers great potential in the future. We are extending our research activities. Up until a few years ago we were dependant on foreign sources of information concerning the economic potential of our north. At the present time an Arctic research development coordinating centre is under construction in the Mackenzie delta. We are launching a program of grants to the universities, with the approval of parliament when parliament has an opportunity to consider the estimates of my department. This will provide $60,000 to various universities across Canada to assist in their research on subjects pertaining to the north. My colleague the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys (Mr. Martineau), working in very close co-operation with my department, has launched a comprehensive survey and inventory mapping program to determine the resource potential of the north

Education has not been forgotten either. The educational program now stretches into the remote parts of Canada. This now offers an adequate educational program for all Canadian young people. There are educational facilities for at least 65 per cent of the Canadian young people in the north. By 1967 we hope to have educational facilities extended to every Canadian regardless of where he or she is resident. These are tangible results of the program, Mr. Speaker.

I had intended to go on to discuss our plans for power development. We launched the Atlantic Provinces Power Development Act in 1958 to encourage the expansion of power resources in the Atlantic provinces in the interests of industrial development. Up to the present time under this act it is estimated that there has been a saving of $26 million, made possible by the first power grid system ever to be established in Canada. Savings due to the sharing of reserves and postponement of construction in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick have been estimated by competent engineers to amount to $26 million. Over the next 20 years, the present facilities and proposed power developments in both provinces will tend to reduce power costs from an average of ten mills to something like seven mills at today's costs. Based on this experience, we are now moving forward to consider the feasibility of a national power grid which would make it possible to exploit the riches of our power resources, particularly in the northern parts of Canada.

To sum up, this act then is another step forward. This is not something which has suddenly been conceived as a solution to all our problems. The proposal to establish this board is part of a continuous and developing program which was launched by this government as soon as it was given a mandate by the people. It is the response of this government to the almost revolutionary changes which have been taking place in Canada as well as in other parts of the world since the end of the second world war. We rested on our laurels until the middle of the last decade—the decade of the fifties. There was very little attempt to bring in new policies to meet the changing situation.

In accordance with the traditional philosophy of the Conservative party we are bringing about changes on the basis of experience rather than expediency. The hon. member for York South criticizes the type of planning proposed as being inadequate. It was for that reason I mentioned in my opening remarks that we do not regard this as a solution to all the problems of this nation. Change is a continuing process. Governments and people must constantly adjust to the pressures of change. The only people who do not change are those who hold doctrinaire positions and who believe that once you have adopted a particular doctrine all your difficulties are solved. Once that policy has been adopted it has to be adhered to rigidly, whatever the consequences, because there is nowhere else to go. It is easy to simplify the problems which face Canada at the present time. The only simplicity which could resolve the problems which face Canada and the world today is the simplicity of monolithic unity and power and certainly we do not think in those terms in Canada.

My friends in the Liberal party advanced a slogan during the last campaign which they thought would appeal to the people of Canada. They said Canadians must take a stand for tomorrow. I should like to revise that slogan here tonight. I think the launching of this national economic development board justifies the alteration of that slogan. Tomorrow never comes. We believe we should be saying to the people of Canada: "Tomorrow must be faced today". That is just what we are doing in this legislation.

(Translation):

Mr. Gerard Legare (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, the bill that comes back before the house today was studied for a few hours during the month of December. It is dated November 28, 1962, but the speech from the throne referred to it two months before that date.

I wonder whether the bill that I now have here is useful and necessary or if it is not. If it is, the government does not seem to consider it as very important, since it has been delaying its passing for four months.

In my opinion, a general election in the present circumstances would have a much better influence on our economy than the establishment of a new board.

If the houses had been dissolved after the debate on the speech from the throne and if an election had been ordered, we would now have a new government to manage the country, a government which would even have been in power for two months.

If our honourable friends opposite are so confident to have popular support, the support of the voters, I wonder why they always delay to go to the country, as the official opposition asks. Unfortunately, it is not so. We are still merely marking time, while our economy is stagnant and the number of unemployed is increasing by 100,000 every month.

After beating about the bush and hesitating for three long months, that is since the opening of this session, the government now submits a plan mentioned in the speech from the throne, but in respect of which it hardly showed itself really willing to make any rapid progress—no more than for the other bills.

It is, indeed, the responsibility of the government to arrange legislation to be submitted to the house in such order that the more important bills are considered first.

As I read in Le Devoir last December, in an item signed Fernand Bourret:

> The government is chiefly responsible. It is up to the government to take action with regard to legislation. If no important legislation has as yet been submitted to the House of Commons, such as would, in time, remedy the economic and financial plight in which Canada finds itself, the fault does not lie with the opposition parties.

Now that we have been sitting for almost four months, this revolutionary formula which, according to the government, will bring about the recovery of our economy is at last submitted to the house.

In the remarks he made when the resolution preceding the bill was introduced, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Nowlan) made some disconcerting statements, several of which are even an admission of the government's inability. He stated, among other things, as may be seen on page 2073 of Hansard:

> The government is determined to stimulate the further expansion of our existing industries and to encourage even further the development in Canada of new and efficient industries.

And I repeat, he actually said:

> The government is determined—

It is easy to conclude that the Minister of Finance is fully aware that up to now the government has not done much in that field.

When the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Dinsdale) said this afternoon, at the beginning of his remarks, that the purpose of the bill now before the house was to continue implementing the government's policy formulated since 1957, I was wondering whether he had not dashed the hopes of the house and of all those who will read his remarks, because should the future be as black as the past years have been I do not know where the voters will be able to see any hope of seeing better day. May I quote the Minister of Finance who said in his speech:

> We shall attain that goal—that is, the expansion of our economy—

> —by farsighted measures such as the one introduced by my colleague the Minister of Labour in undertaking research into the impact of automation and technological change.

The thing is clear: the minister had in mind a farsighted program of research. At the present time Canadians must bow to the austerity program, but in a few years, after the national economic development board has been in operation for some time we might perhaps nurture the hope that the situation will improve.

The statement of the Minister of Finance contradicts the words of the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) who said in Ottawa, during the week end convention, that the next five years will be crucial for our economy. He was alluding to the bill now before us.

And now, the Minister of Finance tells us that this is a measure which will have long term effects, that is to say in several years.

On the other hand, we were told by the Prime Minister that the effect of the same measure will be to create jobs for a million persons and that it will improve the economy in the near future.

This is the most obvious contradiction as between two cabinet members I have ever heard.

But the statement by the Minister of Finance which astonished me most is the following:

> With the present set up of the house, we must show a new national conscience.

This means that, with the results of the last election, we must change our positions, listen more carefully to the official opposition, and accept the suggestions it put forward two or three years ago, that is to set up the board provided for in the bill now before us.

The Minister of Finance brought his remarks to a close with these words:

> We are not at all dissatisfied with the progress we are making.

He did not say: "We are satisfied, we are pleased, we have made some progress." He said:

> "We are not at all dissatisfied."

I have to admit I have never heard anything so negative as this sentence:

> "We are not at all dissatisfied."

I would be tempted to ask the Minister of Finance:—

Mr. Caouette: He is not here.

Mr. Legare: An hon. member says that the minister is not here. I know that the minister has had to attend some important business elsewhere and that is why he is not in the house right now.

Mr. Caouette: Is he gone to Rimouski county?

Mr. Legare: He says that he is not at all dissatisfied. I know that there are doubts in the mind of the minister. His remarks show that the government regrets it did not act sooner. It is now facing a fact and it must also realize that the situation has somewhat worsened. It is becoming aware of the fact, somewhat tardily that it has not been able to keep up with the impetus given to our economy by the Liberal government until 1957.

Hon. members who have been in this house for a number of years remember the efficient men who were then managing the business of the country, and especially under the leadership of the Right Hon. Mr. St. Laurent, when the present Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson), in his capacity as Secretary of State for External Affairs, built up for Canada a reputation which all the countries in the world looked upon with envy.

Thanks to the constructive and practical action taken by the Liberal government in 1957 Canada had acquired the reputation of being one of the greatest exporting powers in the world. But since this government has been in power, we have come down one step —and yet we can no longer retreat, retrograde—

Hon. Paul Martineau: (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member allow me to ask him a question? In view of what he has just said, could he tell us whether he has taken cognizance of the statement made by President Kennedy, today, to the effect that Canada was enjoying the greatest economic stability among all industrial nations in the world?

Mr. Legare: Mr. Speaker, I know the hon. minister does not wish me to report statements made by outstanding personalities on what the present government has achieved in the international field in the last few years.

I was then saying that on account of the present government's policy, our country had come down a step, from the standpoint of exportation, and that we can no longer step backward, and that the visions of a prime minister are not adequate to ensure the progress of our economy.

I would add that the statements made by the leader of the official opposition has done more for the improvement of our international prestige, last week, on atomic weapons, than all the statements put together, made by all the members of the present cabinet on the same matter, in the last five years.

Mr. Gregoire: That is not what they say in Rimouski. They are not wanted in Rimouski.

Some hon. Members: They are trying to make Hitler live again.

An hon. Member: If you want to know, they will make Hitler live again.

Mr. Gregoire: They will know in Rimouski.

Mr. Legare: Mr. Speaker, on behalf of his colleague, the Minister of Finance, the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys, who was asking me a question a moment ago, stated during the consideration of the bill, that the government wanted, by this legislation, "to obtain all possible information in order to step up our economic growth". If I understood well, he said "all possible information". But he never thought probably that his statement was in contradiction with the present policy of his government, which has much more prevented than promoted the statement of opinions coming from outside the house, and which even objected to evidence being given by certain persons.

I refer to the Coyne affair and to some legal advisers of the government who could not be heard before this house.

The minister added:

> This measure provides for the setting up of an advisory board whose main function will be to advise the government on projects and methods of expansion.

I would like to think the minister is sincere. If he is, indeed, sincere, he should see to it that this bill be amended so as to enable certain organizations to avail themselves of the services of experts, economists and specialists in the preparation of briefs or reports on certain areas.

When I am speaking of organizations, I mean, for instance, some chambers of commerce, or boards of trade, in less fortunate areas, and regional economic guidance councils, certain federations of the Catholic Farmers' Union, or some labour unions, or even some professional groups who have not the required means for making a survey in a given area, but, if given necessary assistance for obtaining expert services, might make some very worth-while suggestions to the government or to the proposed boards.

The government has already set up a board for the promotion of sport. It earmarked—at least it intended to earmark—an amount of $5 million to that end. Not even $2 million will be spent, but it had been announced all over the country, and more particularly during the last election, that $5 million would be spent for sport.

Well, if the government wants to spend $5 million for the promotion of sports, I trust it will agree to have a certain amount of money voted to promote the expression of various views through the channel of some organizations.

National Economic Development Board

While inviting experts to appear before it, that board should try to obtain the views of some groups on the means of improving the economy of such and such an area, of such and such a sector or field of activity.

The functions and responsibilities of that national economic development board are but vaguely described in the bill. This bill should, for instance, include a study of the present economic situation, some searching as to the causes for this slowing up in the last five years. The board should also consider whether we are making the best use of our resources, evaluate our efforts in the field of research, and determine whether industry and the various governments are spending enough money to that end.

The board should also decide whether our present taxation procedure could not be improved in order to make our export trade more competitive on world markets.

It should also check, if possible, the fiscal charges imposed on foreign industries by their respective governments, which industries are competing with us on world markets.

Under its terms of reference, the national economic development board should also be authorized to look into the possibility or the advantages of making available to our industries, especially the small and medium-sized industries, acknowledged experts in their own field.

The convertibility of certain industries to the manufacture of goods that are more in demand and actually saleable, should be suggested and promoted.

The board could also try to ascertain how many new dwellings should be built each year.

Is this to be 50,000, 100,000 or 150,000? I feel the government should have this information.

The board should also be authorized to study the fluctuations of our economy over the last 10 or 15 years, to assess the causes of those variations, to set the annual rate of growth of our domestic production and to suggest means of maintaining it.

Many other duties could be assigned to the board. It could advise the government on the means of improving our service to exporters, of providing our industries with better means of coping with international competition, of making better use of the information available at the dominion bureau of statistics, of promoting the decentralization of industry and of studying the effect of immigration on our economy.

I know that a large number of immigrants represent a new wealth, on the cultural level for instance, but I have never been able to ascertain what was the true influence of immigration on our economy, and it seems to me that there should be a way to get an approximate figure, to reach the conclusion that immigration is a source of wealth, in this or that area.

According to the bill, Mr. Speaker, the board will have to report to parliament once a year. I think that the relevant section should be amended so that the reports would be made more frequently. In fact, if the government is satisfied with an annual report, parliament will find itself in the position in which it is now with regard to other crown corporations, in particular the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, Trans-Canada Air Lines and the Canadian National Railways.

The government failed in its more or less well-advised efforts to create the climate necessary to the progress of our economy. That is the reason why we need a concerted effort today in order to get out of the situation where we find ourselves now.

Nobody can deny that it is possible to improve the present growth of our production. Nobody can deny that our standard of living can still be improved and nobody will deny either that the number of the unemployed is too high, but everyone will recognize surely that with more funds available we shall be in a better position to carry out our responsibilities in the world.

That is the reason why the official opposition supports this measure and hopes that the board will be established without delay so that we do not see a recurrence of what the government has done with ARDA and many of its other undertakings.

Mr. Speaker, I mentioned ARDA because it was discussed for two years before it was passed, and even if it has been in operation for several months, I know that the work in practical terms, has not progressed much.

In brief, to start the economy moving again while maintaining monetary stability, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Nowlan) must exert his influence on two different planes: on the one hand, he must develop investments and on the other, he must stimulate consumption and exports.

But our expansion and that fresh impetus to our economy must come about without the stability of prices being jeopardized.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, we do not have to worry too much about the impact of the legislation now before us on our economy, because I hope that a Liberal government will be in power even before the board is in operation and a Liberal government will heed the suggestions made by the people in the way it has always responded to their wishes during its many terms of office.

One wonders—

Mr. Caouette: You have every reason to wonder.

Mr. Legare: —if the government has truly sought, during the past five years, formulas to sustain the impulse given to our economy by a Liberal administration. I cannot find any such formula.

What are those great projects the government has devised and launched?

It continued the construction of the trans-Canada highway which was the work of a Liberal government.

Mr. Caouette: That is the tax system.

Mr. Legare: It completed the construction of the trans-Canada pipeline, another Liberal project.

Mr. Caouette: C. D. Howe.

Mr. Legare: It completed the St. Lawrence seaway, another Liberal project.

Mr. Caouette: Chevrier.

Mr. Legare: And if I go down to the level of regions, I still see that it refused to step in and that it let the situation worsen.

In fact, in my riding, it failed to make a better use of the Mont Joli airport, in which a Liberal government had invested several million dollars.

In Rimouski, it failed to build grain silos, which had been requested from the government long before the member for Bellechasse (Mr. Dumont) rode this subject to death.

Mr. Gregoire: When did you ask for it?

Mr. Legare: At Trois Pistoles, there was a splendid opportunity to revive the economy by building a wharf which would have served the local trade, the local manufacturers who seek after the north shore market, and also which would have been useful for pilotage purposes.

And about pilotage, I regret the backward move of the government when they relocated the pilotage station from Father Point to the north shore, more particularly Les Escoumins. I believe that such a step will one day have nefarious consequences and I am afraid that we will have to deplore loss of life, if not heavy damage, at the present location of the station. And I make this statement after having consulted with experts in the field.

As a matter of fact, the old seamen, the experts with many years of experience in the field of pilotage are recommending the establishment of the pilot base on the south shore and I urge the government to reconsider the matter and to think about relocating it in Trois Pistoles, building a wharf which would not only serve the local trade, but also the needs of the pilot system. That, Mr. Speaker, is in one riding only. I could speak of neighbouring counties where no more work was done.

For instance, I could speak of the riding of Matane where harbour improvements and the construction of a landing strip have been promised for the past five years.

I could take the case of the neighbouring county to the west, the riding of Temiscouata, where the government promised to build a deep water harbour five years ago.

I could also speak of the county of Gaspe where the present government is committed to build a railroad line.

But I notice that the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) would like me to speak about him. I will therefore say a word about the hon. member who has interrupted me on several occasions.

Actually, I was surprised to hear the hon. member speak on planning, and declare at least 20 times, on the radio, in the course of various lectures, or in this very house—

Mr. Caouette: When?

Mr. Legare: —that he is dead set against any type of planning, whether it comes from the top, the bottom, the right or the left. Did he realize that he was in direct contradiction with his leader who, during the debate on the measure, spoke for planning? I quote:

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

(Text):

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order; I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member for Villeneuve, but I think that this is a matter for debate. It is something upon which he can take the floor in due course.

Mr. Caouette: I rise on a question of privilege. You put on the translation and you will understand in French.

National Economic Development Board

(Translation):

Mr. Speaker, when the hon. member for Rimouski pretends that I have said the opposite of what the leader of our group, the hon. member for Red Deer has declared, to the effect that we are not in favour of planning—

(Text):

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There was no contradiction by the member who had the floor of anything said by the hon. member for Villeneuve and for that reason I rose to my feet. The hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson) could rise and contradict any allegation that might be made on a point of privilege in respect of any statement he made himself outside of this house. It was for this reason I said there was no point of privilege. I pointed out that it was a matter of debate and that the hon. member for Villeneuve, in due course, could take the floor and argue the point.

Mr. Caouette: On the same question of privilege—

Some hon. Members: Order, order.

Mr. Caouette: I submit I was personally attacked.

Some hon. Members: No, no.

Mr. Caouette: I was personally attacked. I am not going to accept this.

(Translation):

Mr. Habel: Put on your beret.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Habel and his beret. He is wearing one—if only there were something under it.

(Text):

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I think the Speaker has the floor. I ruled that there was no point of privilege. I am satisfied that the hon. member for Villeneuve is capable of responding to any allegation made in respect of his own leader during the course of debate. I am sure he will do so in due course. In so far as personal privilege is concerned, I do not believe there is any point. The hon. member for Rimouski.

(Translation):

Mr. Legare: Mr. Speaker, I understand, from the remarks that I heard, that he was in favour of planning; but here is what his leader said in this house, as is reported on page 2082 of Hansard:

> Planning is in itself an excellent thing.

Mr. Gregoire: Planning of things and not planning of men.

Mr. Legare: What we have to do—and I refer my hon. friend for Lapointe to page 2082 where the member for Red Deer told us:

> Planning that permits people collectively to work together.

And further—

> This is the kind of planning that such an economic development board must do if it is going to accomplish anything positive for the country.

If the hon. member for Villeneuve is still of the opinion that he is against planning, he will probably have the opportunity to discuss the matter in other circumstances.

Now, if the hon. member, on the other hand, does not like me to find him in contradiction on that point, I shall do it on another one. Thus, when he stated in this house that we must give more attention to producing domestic consumption goods and that trade and exports must come next, he was then contradicting his leader, the hon. member for Red Deer, who just came back from a tour to find outlets for the country.

Mr. Speaker, let me quote only a few sentences from an article I should like to put on the record. That article was published in the Quebec paper Le Soleil on December 3, 1962, under the signature of Mr. Antoine Turgeon. I quote:

> Planning means to set up a very comprehensive plan or rather a series of plans to serve as guides for action in the economic life of a country, of a province, of a region. Planning is the act itself that can include a very complex chain of social and economic measures.

And further, the article says:

> The main role of economic planning is to eliminate unemployment as much as possible, to promote full employment and, all in all, to give the best social security that can be found. To reach that goal, the situation must be studied locally, in all the regions, experts must be consulted, put to work at reasonable salaries, the domestic markets, local, regional, national, must be studied.

In fact, that is exactly what the Liberal party has been suggesting to the government for the last three years, that is since the economic situation began to deteriorate in our country.

And now, Mr. Speaker, I realize that my remarks have displeased my friends on the left, and I understand why. However, I would not like them to think that I will devote more time than I am allowed to correct the discrepancies and contradictions that may exist between the two leaders of that party, because I would need more than the 30 minutes I am allowed in this house.

(Text):

Hon. Pierre Sevigny (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, for the last 40 minutes or so we have been listening to a speech which has touched on almost every subject except one which normally should form the object of the present debate.

I think it is essential that we concentrate on the merits of the measure which is before the house because there is no doubt that the formation of this national economic development bureau will contribute as much to the prosperity of this nation as the various measures which have been adopted by this government since it took power in 1957 have contributed to the welfare of the Canadian nation. When we took office in 1957 the economy, far from being in a stable state, was menaced by the shadow of a serious recession which could have achieved the proportions of a depression if it had not been for the energetic action then adopted by those whose duty it was to plan the welfare of the economy of the Canadian people.

In those days members of the opposition would frequently tell us that the moneys we were spending would inevitably lead to an inflationary trend which would be disastrous for the wage earners of the nation. They would tell us that this money was spent in a futile fashion because it would not actually remedy the ills from which this nation was suffering, ills due to the maladministration of the previous government, and they would try through preachings of gloom and doom, of despair and distress, to create a climate of fear in the hearts and minds of the Canadian people, thus hoping through this fear to regain the power which they had lost because of their own inertia while they were in office.

A few moments ago we were listening to the hon. member for Rimouski (Mr. Legare) who, following the usual trend of his colleagues in his party, was saying that the economy has been at a standstill since 1957 and was stating that things could hardly be worse in Canada. He was referring to what he termed our declining exports and was even mentioning that at the present time nothing is being done and that therefore the Canadian people are worried because of the state of the economy. Where he got the information that could make him talk in that particular fashion is something which I do not know, but what I do know are the facts such as they are at present, and the facts are well described in tonight's paper, the Ottawa Citizen, which has never had a high reputation for having an undue love for the Conservative party. That newspaper states tonight on its front page that President Kennedy has said Canada's price stability is the best in the world. I quote the report as follows:

> President Kennedy estimated today Canada achieved the best record of price stability among all major industrial countries and that the United States is in second place in ability to crack an inflation psychosis.

This is the best answer to these prophets of gloom and doom who were stating in so many speeches all over the land that the policies of the government of which I have the honour to be a member would lead to inflation and would lead also to economic chaos in our industries. Now the hon. member for Rimouski, as well as other hon. members opposite, seem to take delight in trying to maintain that all that is being done by the government in the field of planning has led to negative results. Well, Mr. Speaker, it is because of the well planned actions of the Conservative government that today we can proudly say, together with John Meyer, the financial critic of the Gazette, that Canada has had its best business year since 1956. I now quote the article that Mr. John Meyer wrote as it appears in the annual review section of the Montreal Gazette of January 12, 1963:

> Canada has best business year since '56.
>
> Continuing expansion forecast through 1963 but sort of federal budget introduced is most pertinent economic question.
>
> The increase of 8 per cent in gross national production which took place during the year is the largest since 1956 and the fourth largest since the end of the second world war. It was accompanied by the first real improvement in productivity since the mid-fifties. There was, at the turn of the year, every indication that the economy would continue to expand although at a slower rate. A 5 per cent increase in gross national production was being projected with a continuing proportionate increase in productivity. It is possible, though, that the figure may be understated.
>
> Hardly more than three months ago, a turn-down of the business cycle through the first quarter was being freely forecast. It became apparent through the fourth quarter, however, that the economy was beginning to draw new impetus from the effects of devaluation and the import surcharges which followed, and from the series of fiscal measures which had been introduced earlier in the year by the federal government.

Mr. Speaker, this is the result of intelligent planning by intelligent men conscious of the necessity of serving the citizens of this country.

A moment ago we also heard the hon. member for Rimouski claiming that the export markets of Canada had been dwindling since the presence at the helm of this nation of the P.C. forces of Prime Minister Diefenbaker. Well, the facts are here to prove that, far from declining, our exports are up 30 per cent from the previous year, and a study of statistics will show that exports have increased by 16 per cent in the countries which are members of the common market, that they have increased by 36 per cent in Latin America, that they have increased by 38 per cent in the Far East and by even 90 per cent in countries behind the iron curtain. These are positive results which prove that hon. members opposite, when they claim the economy is going to the dogs are only, as always, trying to deceive the people into the belief that under the helm of this government things have gone from bad to worse when actually the facts are that things have improved and are still improving.

Once again, after the election, we were faced with a very serious crisis which required economic planning of the highest order. We then most reluctantly took drastic measures which were absolutely essential in order to restore the fiscal balance of the affairs of the nation. Again, concerning what we did, Mr. Meyer has written this:

> The recovery from the crisis has been much swifter than expected. All of the measures taken to supplement reserves of foreign exchange have now been put aside except for the $300 million borrowed from the international monetary fund. The swiftness of recovery, in fact, now threatens to undo the lessons learned by encouraging a false sense of security which, in its way, can be just as damaging as was the earlier indifference.

It is exactly because we do not want to fall into a false sense of security that we are today introducing a bill to provide for a national economic development bureau which will group together the forces of finance, labour, industry, farming and of our university trained people who together, in a climate of respect and mutual understanding, will work in order to promote the greatness of this country and the welfare of the Canadian people.

(Translation):

Mr. Speaker, it would surely be ridiculous to rest on our laurels. We have accomplished a great deal. Thanks to the dynamic, imaginative and constructive action taken by members of the government to which I belong, we have succeeded in giving a fresh impetus to the Canadian economy toward the achievement of new records. We have succeeded in changing the threat of a disastrous recession caused by the inaction of the previous government into a period of unequalled prosperity in the history of our country.

Figures are there to prove it. Never before in the history of Canada have so many men earned so much money or have managed to save more money than at present. But we realize that when a record is attained, there is some danger that the economic situation will suffer a set-back. It is precisely because we want to avoid such a set-back that we are proposing the establishment of the national economic development board which will look into the Canadian economy from all points of view and attempt, through its vigilant action, to maintain prosperity at its present level and even to increase it if it is still possible.

Of course, this economic board must be based on the rules of free enterprise. It must not become, as my friends sitting on the extreme right are hoping for, a socialist planning board for, above all, we must keep the Canadian nation clear of that form of premature senility which socialism would be. My friends sitting on the extreme right are at least honest with themselves. As for my hon. friends opposite, they may see in this political formula an opportunity to win back the lost paradise, the power which they lost through their slackness on June 10, 1957. On the contrary, this economic development board must not be a merely governmental agency which, instead of helping private enterprise to lead the economy towards new records, leans towards socialism.

This board must be made up of free men, working in an atmosphere of freedom, who will take decisions which can assist those involved with the government. And so, we shall see the continuation of the prosperity brought about by the members of the Conservative party since June 10, 1957.

Mr. Speaker, it is of the utmost importance that the financial forces, on the one hand, and the labour forces on the other hand, find, thanks to this proposed economic board, a formula making way for a solution to the present problem of salaries which are so high in some industries that they compel industrialists to sell their products at prices beyond all competition.

For Canada, which can produce four times more than the demand of its 18 million inhabitants, it becomes necessary to go abroad for the markets which we need if we want to guarantee a continued productivity to our manufacturers, our industrialists and our farmers. We must go out in foreign markets and offer them products which can compare with those of our competitors at competitive prices.

This shall not be possible unless the forces of labour and those of capital get together. These two essential sectors of our Canadian economy must get together in an atmosphere of respect and mutual understanding so as to find, around a conference table, an answer to the problems which may be dividing them.

The proposed economic development board will allow us to find a formula, to find a solution to the problem between labour on the one hand, and capital on the other hand. And if this board can fulfil that purpose, it will not have been set up in vain and all should be satisfied.

This economic development board must be made up of men from all sectors of Canadian activity, even of men from all the political parties of the Canadian nation, so that all these men, working together, can find the ways and means to really improve the lot of this or that particular area which might, for some reason or other, find itself in a state of economical recession or of temporary depression.

The relocation of our industries is necessary. First of all, we have to determine the possibilities of developing our natural resources wherever they are. In order to do so, it is essential to find markets abroad, precisely in order to have the required consumption for that immense wealth which represents the production of our soil.

Thanks to the national economic development board, we should be able to increase the number of our secondary industries, because there is one thing which is not normal here in this country, and it is the fact that we should have to import too many finished products from abroad, which are being made with primary resources of our soil.

We must find a means of developing our secondary industries, or if you prefer, Mr. Speaker, we must find a means of transforming our primary resources into secondary industry products, which will be sold on our markets and exported on all export markets that we are trying to develop at present and that we shall keep on developing at a continually accelerated rate.

We must also consider—and that will be a function of the board—the necessity perhaps of moving industries which, at certain places, do not meet the needs of the people, thus being in an unfavourable situation, but which, elsewhere, might be able to find the necessary markets to insure their full productivity.

In order to do so, Mr. Speaker, it is absolutely necessary to obtain the full cooperation of the leaders of private enterprise, on the one hand, be it in the field of finance, in the field of industry, in the field of trade, in the field of education, or in the field of labour and, on the other hand, of the leaders of the government, who will continue, as we have always done, to accept the advice of those who wish to ensure the welfare of our Canadian nation.

And, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that what I have just said sufficiently proves that it is essential to model our future actions on our past actions.

For the last five years, we have tried, thanks to our national productivity council, and to the continuous contacts we had with men from all spheres of Canadian activity, to find the formulas which would enable us to obtain the splendid success I mentioned earlier, which the Gazette of January 12 described in an article where it was pointed out that, from an economical point of view, Canada's best year since 1956 has been 1962.

We should also see that our Canadians earn and continue to earn more money thanks to an increased productivity, which will necessarily result from additional sales of our products abroad and thus justify, not only this year, but for the years to come, all those distinguished men, like the President of the United States, and others, saying that thanks to the action taken by this government, price stability in Canada has been, and still is, the best in the world.

Mr. Speaker, neither should, at any time, the truth be distorted, to satisfy political ambition. For almost five years, on the floor of the house or elsewhere, our friends opposite never stopped crying blue ruin and talking doom and gloom, thus constantly alarming the Canadian people by telling them that everything was going wrong and that they should bring back the old days, which, however, were rather sad days, as they, unfortunately, led this nation into that economic recession which threatened to become disastrous in the years 1956 and 1957.

This policy of trying to filch votes by wailing and speaking of doom and gloom is a fallacious policy, a policy misleading the Canadian people, a policy the sole aim of which is a political victory. But such victory, if it ever takes place, will certainly only have negative results, because it will not have been won by honourable means.

The necessary thing is that the opposition should play its part as such and try to enlighten the government and the people, rather than try to get votes by any means.

To say, as we heard earlier today, that since 1957, that is since the Conservative party came into power, things are going from bad to worse in this country, is simply a distortion of truth, a deliberate attempt to deceive the people.

Moreover, when anybody dares to tell in this house that Canadian exports have declined and not increased, it is another misrepresentation of facts, as they are. To say that the Conservative government did nothing, is another attempt to mislead the people.

Those men in the opposition should state facts as they are and ask the people to decide if they would be better able to improve Canada's position, rather than deny what has been done.

Their behaviour may hardly be considered as honorable political behaviour.

Mr. Speaker, I think we, who are responsible for the public weal, should unanimously join those who are trying to set up this national economic development board, for, in this way, we shall accomplish a necessary task in the best interests of the Canadian people.

In addition, I feel that the members of the national economic development board would be well advised to study closely what has been done in this field in foreign countries.

(Text):

I close my remarks by suggesting that the men who staff it, the men who will form part of this national development economic bureau, would do well to study what has been done by other nations which have adopted similar formulae and which have achieved success because of this formula. Recently I was reading from an interesting book written by the minister of economics in the West German government, Dr. Ludwig Erhard, in which the author explains the planning which was carried out and eventually realized in West Germany immediately after the disastrous days of world war II. Dr. Erhard explains in detail how the best brains of the German nation were grouped together to consider the question of rebuilding and eventual recovery, how a definite plan was established by these people and submitted to the German government for action. He explains that it was because of this planning which took place between the forces of free enterprise on the one hand and of government on the other that West Germany was privileged to know such a rapid reconstruction as took place in that nation.

When France found herself in a chaotic state prior to the advent, once again, of General de Gaulle to the helm of that state, bold remedies were necessary. Economic planning was instituted by this great man, whom I salute tonight. One of his first announcements after he took power was that he would recruit the best brains of France—this country which has produced so many magnificent brains—so that they might get together and immediately submit a plan which would lead to the economic reconstruction of the country. Those days were not so long ago. Now, in the short space of four years, we see France occupying a position of primary importance among the nations of the world. Those who have travelled to France recently will have seen with their own eyes a prosperity the like of which was not known in that country even prior to the second world war. They will have seen new industries being built and new markets being found for the products of those industries; they will have seen a new life, a new ambition among the French people. These magnificent results are the fruit of this planning which was carried on by the men of free enterprise on the one hand and the men of the French government, under the inspired leadership of General de Gaulle, on the other.

Consider Japan, in the Far East, a nation which was an enemy of ours until a few years ago and which today has become one of our friends. What do we see? We see a booming economy which, once again, is the result of intelligent planning between free enterprise and the forces of the state. This is the way in which planning must be performed. We must at all costs avoid the pitfall of allowing one group to dominate the other. The state must not be allowed to get the upper hand over forces of free enterprise, neither must the forces of free enterprise be allowed to dominate the state. It must be a partnership. It must be an effort on the part of all the free men of this nation who by uniting and working together in a climate of mutual understanding and respect, will succeed in continuing the magnificent progress which has been achieved because of the efforts of this Conservative government, efforts which have led to the statement that Canada has experienced its best business year since 1956. We must not rest on our laurels. We must march forward and serve the Canadian people as it is our duty to do, and this can best be done by unanimously approving this national economic development board which will mark a new step in the progress of our nation.

Mr. John R. Matheson (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, we have listened tonight to the Associate Minister of National Defence (Mr. Sevigny) telling us in very glowing and rhetorical terms of the great achievements of the present administration. The conclusion would appear to be that in 1962 we seem to have reached or very slightly exceeded the production of 1956. We on this side believe this is far short of an accomplishment. Earlier we heard the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Dinsdale) speak about the accomplishments of the first "five-year plan". If these accomplishments under the five-year plan are something which this government is proud of, we as an opposition are not. Because it was only a few weeks ago that this administration answered certain questions. One was a question with respect to the net income of farmers in Canada. The answer which was given by the ministry indicated very clearly that every year this administration has been in power the net income of farmers has declined. This record is on Hansard and can be referred to if necessary. On another question of the government as to the productivity per capita of the people in Canada, it was clear that the productivity for every year on record has shown decline. This is in such sharp and marked contrast with what we find in western Europe or Japan, for example, we can come to no other conclusion but that Canada, with a growing population, has actually been relatively declining.

We know very well that our position in trade has relatively declined. Reference was made a few minutes ago to the fact that pricewise the Canadian dollar was stable, and for this we rejoice. One of the reasons is obviously the high and continuing rate of unemployment. In my community there is more unemployment today than a year ago, and it was serious then.

The fact is that over this past year we have had an ever mounting rate of bankruptcy so that the bankruptcy of 1960, increasing in 1961, and increasing still further in 1962, has been one of the reasons we have had stable prices. After all, if resources are going to be as little used as they have in Canada in the last two or three years, it is clear that we are not going to end up with inflation; but there are other problems.

May I refer, because the minister recently referred to the comments of President Kennedy, to the O.E.C.D. economic survey. You remember, Mr. Speaker, that the O.E.C.D. was set up in 1960 with its headquarters in Paris. It includes Canada and the United States among its 20 members. This survey says:

> Concern over "deep-rooted problems" restricting Canada's economic growth is expressed in a report released Friday by the organization for economic co-operation and development. The lengthy survey of Canada shows that the balance of payments is likely to improve, but adds that it is unfortunate that the government chose stringent monetary measures which are almost bound to have an unfavourable effect on the course of domestic activity.

The report goes on to refer to Canada's slow rate of growth and says that persistent high unemployment and large deficits in the current external account were aggravated by a short-lived but sharp exchange crisis in the first half of 1962. "The demand for Canadian products has not kept pace with Canada's policy to produce," the report concludes. This is reported in the Ottawa Journal of December 29, 1962, and is headlined: "Canada's slow rate of growth". I would also refer to the Toronto Telegram of January 7, 1963 where the headline is: "Economy dipping". Then a graph is shown which indicates that the boom in 1962, such as it was, is not dribbling into 1963. The paper says:

> Our barometer records a drop taking place as we enter 1963... The recent gyrations of many indicators made many think that the slowdown predicted earlier for the end of 1962 had been called off. It has not...
>
> The good that was in 1962 came to a close with the year. We have now started on a downward swing.

Mr. Speaker, none of the members of the Liberal party are responsible for writing anything in the Toronto Telegram, except perhaps an irate letter, and we read this article with some concern and fear.

Mr. Caouette: The Telegram is a Conservative paper.

Mr. Matheson: My hon. friend from Villeneuve indicates that this is a Conservative paper. I would tell him that I do not think that it could ever be construed as otherwise.

Looking at the Financial Post for January 12, 1963 I observe this passage:

> By an easy majority the sensitive indicators of how the Canadian economy is doing suggests that the 1961-62 expanson is over and the recession is now on.

This is an article by Dalton Robertson. It goes on to say:

> Nothing in recent weeks contradicts the view that the economy probably lost most of its steam in the third quarter of last year.

As far as this legislation is concerned to provide for a national economic development board, we on this side endorse its principle. How could we do otherwise? You remember, Mr. Speaker, the motion of the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin) which came before this house in 1960. You remember the scorn with which he was met in this house by the then Conservative member for Vancouver-Kingsway, since departed, the then Conservative member for Iles-de-la-Madeleine, since departed, the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Aiken), and the Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr), who unfortunately has not found it possible to be here tonight. I think the reason for his absence is that he would have had to eat his words which he delivered in his speech of May 23, 1960.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

National Economic Development Board

Mr. Matheson: If any hon. members of this house would like to see what the Minister of Labour had to say—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I should like to caution hon. members that the Chair would like to hear what is being said by the speaker who has the floor. Some of the contributions which are now being made irregularly from a number of places are not helpful in that regard. I will hear the hon. member for Leeds.

Mr. Matheson: I think the only proper word to describe the speech of the Minister of Labour on May 23, 1960 is scornful. He used certain language which appears on page 4166 of Hansard regarding the establishment of a national economic development board which would certainly be pretty hard for him to explain today.

We felt the need for this measure for some considerable time. The royal commission on Canada's economic prospects published their report in November, 1957, and we are fortunate to have with us one of the authors, perhaps the most important author of this publication, the hon. member who now represents Davenport (Mr. Gordon). I would remind hon. members of the house that this chapter which is entitled: "The Role of Government", sets out the objectives of governmental policies as being encouragement and promotion of steady growth and development over the long term periods, and the ironing out of peaks and valleys in the level of cyclical economic activity during short term periods, indicating that these two policies, although sometimes they do not run together, are nevertheless complementary, if there is some kind of orderly planning, foresight and thought.

I would particularly ask hon. members of the house to look at page 436 of the royal commission report, the chapter entitled: "The Role of Government". The concluding part of that page reads as follows:

> We believe it might be helpful if a body of economic experts were established whose function it would be to inform the government of changes which might be thought desirable in economic policy in order to ensure a high level of employment without inflation. One responsibility of this body would be to publish annual or semi-annual reports for the general information of the public. The success or failure of such an innovation would depend of course very largely upon the good judgment of the men who might be chosen for the task and also upon their reputations for objectivity and hence the confidence which the public would be likely to have in their opinions.

I should like to take the time in which to read that whole part of the page; however, I have not that time at my disposal.

An hon. Member: Take the time.

[Mr. Matheson.]

Mr. Matheson: However, to those who are interested I would suggest the fact that the idea of this bill before us today is set out in this 1957 report resulting from the economic study conducted in 1956. Why, in 1956, the best year Canada has had since world war II, did the Liberal people at that time consider the need for economic development? Then the chairman was of course not in the true sense a Liberal but a person appointed by a Liberal government to study what had taken place and to see what could be done that would ensure greater growth. I point out that in 1956 the Liberals were not satisfied with what was even then the production of the high peak year in the post-war period.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Matheson: The fact is that they knew there were problems and they knew that to sustain growth and development there were certain things they were obliged to face that other countries in the rest of the western world had had to face. Prior to that time they had the example, of course, of the Marshall plan in Europe, and the tremendous impetus that came under the Schuman plan. We have had reference to the growth of France, the development of E.E.C. and so on. I am very much attracted to a series of articles which has been published, and to appreciate the force of them you must read them as a series, by Mr. Patrick Nicholson. His theme is the Atlantic community. You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that various proposals were put forward at the conclusion of world war II when we realized that there was an enemy to the free world both industrially and militarily. I refer to Russia. It was considered necessary that the west would conserve its forces and work together, that only out of a degree of interdependence could the western nations plan their way into economic growth and prosperity on terms that were compatible to people who love liberty and believe in enterprise. You will recall the various recommendations which came out at that time. Canada authored NATO. There is no question about that fact. We can refer for instance, to the speech of Right Hon. Louis St. Laurent in Berlin. The Minister of Veterans Affairs is smiling. He has made some very fine speeches to which I could refer. Mr. Nicholson writes: An increasing number of thinking people now agree with Hon. Gordon Churchill that "some form of political union between the members of the great NATO coalition seems essential."

This is thinking that has been echoed at some time in every political party in this house. The fact is that article 2 of NATO, the important article 2, was very much the creation of the Canadian delegation, and particularly authored by the prime minister's aide, Mr. Lester B. Pearson. Article 2 provided that NATO must not only be a defence organization but it had to go on beyond that, there had to be a degree of integrated planning between these great allies. The purpose was that we were going to develop these Atlantic nations as a community and the Atlantic community was going to embrace more than just Europe. It was Europe, the United States Britain and Canada. That is one of the reasons that, when Peter Thorneycroft in 1957 made a bold proposal for Canada to be integrated with the United Kingdom, we Liberals listened seriously because this seemed to us to be one of the means by which it was possible to work out a way or to plan our way into this integrated prosperous Atlantic community that would really become the cradle of new economic development. It did not work out for Canada. If we had had at that time this kind of economic advisory board which is envisaged in this act, I suspect that any government that had been in power in Canada in 1957 would have been obliged to take a much closer look at the Thorneycroft proposal.

I should be very much interested to conjecture if an economic advisory board had then existed what counter proposals to Mr. Thorneycroft might have resulted in the months or years following.

There would have been some alternative proposal to the United Kingdom, something which this government in five years has not been able to produce. What about now, when we are faced with a completely new change in the situation that is still not recognized by this government, that is the fact that Britain may be part of E.E.C.—demanding some change in our policy.

We had the reference earlier today by the now Minister of Justice but one time minister of finance, to his happy trip to Japan. I was interested to make certain comparisons. The Prime Minister of Japan, Hayato Ikeda of the Liberal democratic party on June 6, 1961, spoke of the various programs that his government had chosen and vigorously pursued in order to plan their way into economic growth. One of the things he said in that important speech to the forty first session of the Japanese diet was this, and I remind hon. members that this speech was delivered in June, 1961:

> The fact that the question of Britain's adherence to the European economic community has become a practical issue of the day and the fact that the United States government is moving toward collaboration with E.E.C. along the line of its trade expansion bill presage the reorganization of the world economy.

This is Japan. It will be recalled that in two years Japan had increased its gross national production by nearly five thousand billion yen and had managed to keep its prices at the same level or very nearly stable while its consumer spending increased to a staggering degree. Some people speak of Japan's productivity increasing over 40 per cent. I indicate that this was a speech to the Japanese diet by a responsible Liberal Japanese prime minister. Yet a few weeks after that speech we find that at Accra the Hon. George Hees, according to United Press International, said this:

> There is no substitute for the terms of access we are now accorded in the United Kingdom market... It is clear that damage, extensive damage, in some cases irreparable damage, would result from the loss of our present trading arrangements with the United Kingdom.

And the then minister of finance (Mr. Fleming), according to the Ottawa Journal of September 26, 1961, was reported as follows:

> To set the record straight, Mr. Fleming last week called in leading British correspondents covering the international monetary fund meeting in Vienna. With great emotion, he argued that commonwealth countries were unanimous in their condemnation of Britain's attempt to join the common market.

Why did we not see trends evident to the Japanese?

Why do we need this kind of a bill? Why do we need a planning group? I think it is clear that the Liberals felt that even with the peaks we had achieved in 1956 and the first two quarters of 1957, such an economic advisory board would be desirable. Why did they have this feeling? People so frequently in this house refer to the 22 years. I always deny that reference. There were not 22 years. There was a series of years when the Liberal administration was given a mandate for certain specific jobs because different challenges faced Canada at different times. In 1935 the challenge was to get out of a very severe depression. That was the problem. That was the comparatively short term problem to which they had to address themselves. I submit seriously that in economic terms there was not any long range plan involved with respect to that program. The situation was so critical and so severe that what had to be done was done in the way of an emergency.

Then in 1940 Canada had another general election and it will be recalled that again there was no possibility of the long term view or the long term plan. Again it was an emergency situation where the Liberal party had a mandate to try to save what they could of our part of the world and the free world. Therefore all the energies of this country were devoted to throwing ourselves into the defence effort with our allies, and we did that. However, it was limited in scope. The object was to win a war. While it is true that in those five years or those war years people like Right Hon. C. D. Howe, to whom there has been reference tonight, in fact were thinking in longer range terms, and were thinking of the future, nevertheless the real political purpose of those years, as the older members of this house will recall, was to address ourselves to the problems of the war.

Then following the war there was an election with a short term problem, the problem of converting from war to peace. This problem did not permit the long range view. This problem did not permit the kind of view that Europe has been able to take with respect to the Marshall plan where Europe and the E.E.C. and even the outer six countries have been able to plot, to think out and develop ideas that would take many years, perhaps decades, to fulfil.

Then, following that period, we went into a period which was creative in so far as social security in this country was concerned. We were trying to attain redistribution of income in a more equitable and favourable way for various classes of people, the old and the young. Much of our social security was given at a time—I am just illustrating this point—when we can honestly say the Liberals were not thinking in long terms during that 22-year period. They were thinking only about the problems that were foreseeable in the immediate years before them then. Now, this is the big difference—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Matheson: There is a bit of laughter in this house, particularly from the hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Nesbitt). I would suggest, however, that this government has come to the point in its thinking that they are thinking about five months or perhaps five weeks ahead. I am thinking of the things they have done in the field of economics. I cite, for example, this "snafu" they got themselves into in connection with the devaluation. It was not one of choice.

Mr. Nesbitt: You do not approve of it?

Mr. Matheson: Unless we were grossly deceived in this country.

An hon. Member: We were.

Mr. Matheson: Perhaps we were. On this side, we had the feeling that we were misled deliberately, misled by the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) and the then minister of finance (Mr. Fleming) in the matter of our exchange reserves.

Mr. Nesbitt: Tell us about Bob Winter's speech in Halifax.

[Mr. Matheson.]

Mr. Matheson: I am saying that the feeling is growing in this country, and we believe this, that this country has been governed in the last few months and years on a purely ad hoc basis. In other words, when a problem arises we face that particular problem but we are not prepared to think more broadly and deeply, in more substantive terms.

This is one of the reasons that the chairman of the Gordon commission, in 1956, came to the conclusion that the time had arrived when Canada had to do the sort of thing that was being done in western Europe, Germany, France, the Benelux countries and Italy. We had to start thinking in longer terms. For example, we have witnessed the great developments that have been occurring in Latin America and the resultant change in trade patterns. We are not foolish enough to suggest there have not been new problems for this administration. There have been startlingly new problems. However, this administration has acted as though there has been no change at all. There has been very little flexibility.

For instance, five or six years after the recommendations were made and earnestly put forward, we find Bill No. C-87 before us which, with its tenuous terms, seems to set up a national economic development board. We just wonder how serious this government really is about planning the growth and development of Canada. I recall a few months ago attending a meeting of the bureau of statistics, I think it was, at which the guest was an economist from Washington who had been of great assistance to the Kennedy administration. He was speaking about growth. It was interesting. This meeting was under the auspices of a committee, the chairman of which was John Deutsch. It was interesting. I sat there as an outsider and heard questions put forward by economists to this expert. The real problem was this: what happens in a country if the real problems are not faced at all, ever?

Now, they have got to be faced. I think we have to be worried to some extent about the danger of trying to pass over to a committee, a council or a board, the responsibilities of the cabinet. Under our constitutional system, we cannot create something new that is neither a cabinet nor a civil service and say, this new board is going to be responsible for our growth. It has been indicated that this government has established a plethora of boards and agencies having closely related functions. The danger is that some of them might attach to ministries, some of them may simply be a basis, for instance, for the Minister of Finance to shore himself up against his colleagues in the cabinet. He might say, "my board takes this view," or "the national economic development board supports my contention."

An earlier speaker today on this bill addressed himself to the problem of various advisory boards being set up and presided over by different ministers. It may well be that the time will come, if this board develops into something important, when it should be transferred to the office of the Prime Minister. Certainly, this can be a very important board. This board, through the integration of various key activities, has the duty to provide full production and has continuously to find more productive employment for the steadily increasing Canadian population. We believe that the Canadian gross national product, in terms of real value, has declined while that of all the free world countries has experienced an increase. The increase in western Europe and Japan has been startling. This has largely resulted from systematic and intelligent planning.

No longer is it a case of planning being evidence of a doctrinaire position. I find in the last submission of the Canadian Labour Congress to the government of Canada dated September 11, 1962, that they endorsed planning with great enthusiasm. They spoke of the importance of a national economic development board, particularly one which could function in a way that would bring together these various important factors of production, labour and management and also government. We find, too, that the day when there used to be opposition from management and capital is fast disappearing. If I had the time, and I do not have the time tonight, I could read from the Toronto Globe and Mail and from the Financial Times to indicate that there is on the part of capital a recognition that there cannot be any real, bold enterprise in this country unless capital is given the opportunity of knowing what the landmarks are for some foreseeable period ahead. They have got to be able to think and plan ahead, and labour has to be able to think this way as well. We should be able to work in a harmonious fashion, government, management, labour, agriculture and university people all contributing. I refer particularly to the universities because of their tendency to deal with some of these basic economic principles more objectively than management or labour or even the government can hope to do.

If we could have this kind of a body that would provide for some measure of continuity, would integrate the efforts of various ministries which are each trying to do the best thing in their own particular area but each needing some long range guidance, then we might be in a position where we could advance and develop. I do not have time to read them but there were recommendations presented by Neil J. McKinnon, president of the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce, in his bank letter dated December, 1962. He referred to the need for a new approach in assessing Canadian problems, and I think his article is worthy of our thoughtful consideration. He says:

> We cannot go on indefinitely using up large quantities of imported consumer goods paid for by capital borrowed from abroad.

This is a problem which has to be thought out in broad terms and not under the ad hoc system of exchange control adopted by this government. The letter says:

> We cannot continue to solve imbalances by future depreciation of the currency.

There is this continuing danger, and I believe mention was made of it by President Kennedy. I continue to quote:

> Import quotas, which might become necessary as emergency devices in the event of additional pressure on the dollar will not provide a permanent solution—

We do not believe they will. He says, in connection with our trade relation to the United States, that our favourable trade balance with other countries is not sufficient to cover the payment deficit with the United States. For the longer run, we shall not be able to realize the optimum of economic progress without gradually increasing the integration of the economies of the two countries which would in fact make us more competitive in all countries.

This, sir, is perhaps the most compelling problem that we have to face, the extent to which we must become more integrated with our neighbours, the United States, the United Kingdom, the new European community, and I hope we solve this problem in the direction suggested in the proposal for an Atlantic community.

May I call it ten o'clock?

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Chevrier: This afternoon the Prime Minister, on orders of the day, indicated certain business of the house for Thursday and Friday which was different from that submitted in the proposal by the house leader. The question I put to the house leader now is, what is the business for these two days, Thursday and Friday, as well as for tomorrow and Wednesday?

Business of the House

Mr. Churchill: Tomorrow, Mr. Speaker, there will be a continuation of this debate. On Wednesday, which is a short day, I would like very much if the house would consider item No. 2 on today's order paper, the Freight Rates Reduction Act which we almost finished with before the Christmas adjournment. It is a matter of some urgency for financing purposes, and also No. 15 on today's order paper, which we almost reached just before Christmas, the C.N.R. capital expenditures. The Prime Minister suggested today that on Thursday and Friday we would deal with the estimates of the Department of External Affairs.

It being two minutes after ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

APPENDIX "A"

TEXT OF JOINT COMMUNIQUE BY THE PRESIDENT AND PRIME MINISTER HAROLD MACMILLAN
FOLLOWING DISCUSSIONS HELD IN NASSAU, BAHAMAS
DECEMBER 18-21, 1962

The President and the Prime Minister met in Nassau from December 18 to December 21. They were accompanied by the Secretary of Defense, Mr. McNamara, and the under secretary of state, Mr. Ball, and by the Foreign Secretary, Lord Home, the Minister of Defence, Mr. Thorneycroft and the Secretary of State for Commonwealth Relations and Colonies, Mr. Sandys.

The President and the Prime Minister discussed a wide range of topics. They reviewed the state of east-west relations in the aftermath of the October crisis in Cuba, and joined in the hope that a satisfactory resolution of this crisis might open the way to the settlement of other problems outstanding between the west and the Soviet union.

In particular, they reviewed the present state of the negotiations for a treaty ending nuclear tests, and reaffirmed their intent to seek agreement on this issue with the U.S.S.R., in the hope that this agreement would lead on to successful negotiations on wider issues of disarmament.

As regards Berlin, they reaffirmed their interest in arriving at a solid and enduring settlement which would ensure that Berlin remains free and viable.

The Chinese communist attack on India was discussed with special consideration being given to the way in which the two governments might assist the government of India to counter this aggression. Defence problems of the subcontinent were reviewed. The Prime Minister and the President are hopeful that the common interests of Pakistan and India in the security of the subcontinent would lead to a reconciliation of Indian-Pakistan differences. To this end, they expressed their gratification at the statesmanship shown by President Ayub and Prime Minister Nehru in agreeing to renew their efforts to resolve their differences at this crucial moment.

The two leaders discussed the current state of affairs in the Congo, and agreed to continue their efforts for an equitable integration of this troubled country. They expressed support for Mr. Spaak's proposal for a fair division of revenues and noted with concern the dangers of further discord in the Congo.

The Prime Minister informed the President of the present state of negotiations for U.K. membership in the common market. The President reaffirmed the interest of the United States in an early and successful outcome.

The President and the Prime Minister also discussed in considerable detail policy on advanced nuclear weapons systems and considered a variety of approaches. The result of this discussion is set out in the attached statement.

Statement on Nuclear Defence Systems

December 21, 1962

(1) The President and the Prime Minister reviewed the development program for the Skybolt missile. The President explained that it was no longer expected that this very complex weapons system would be completed within the cost estimate or the time scale which were projected when the program was begun.

(2) The President informed the Prime Minister that for this reason and because of the availability to the United States of alternative weapons systems, he had decided to cancel plans for the production of Skybolt for use by the United States. Nevertheless, recognizing the importance of the Skybolt program for the United Kingdom, and recalling that the purpose of the offer of Skybolt to the United Kingdom in 1960 had been to assist in improving and extending the effective life of the British V-bombers, the President expressed his readiness to continue the development of the missile as a joint enterprise between the United States and the United Kingdom, with each country bearing equal shares of the future cost of completing development, after which the United Kingdom would be able to place a production order to meet its requirements.

(3) While recognizing the value of this offer, the Prime Minister decided, after full consideration, not to avail himself of it because of doubts that had been expressed about the prospects of success for this weapons system and because of uncertainty regarding date of completion and final cost of the program.

(4) As a possible alternative the President suggested that the Royal Air Force might use the Hound Dog missile. The Prime Minister responded that in the light of the technical difficulties he was unable to accept this suggestion.

(5) The Prime Minister then turned to the possibility of provision of the Polaris missile to the United Kingdom by the United States. After careful review, the President and the Prime Minister agreed that a decision on Polaris must be considered in the widest context both of the future defence of the Atlantic alliance and of the safety of the whole free world. They reached the conclusion that this issue created an opportunity for the development of new and closer arrangements for the organization and control of strategic western defence and that such arrangements in turn could make a major contribution to political cohesion among the nations of the alliance.

(6) The Prime Minister suggested and the President agreed that for the immediate future a start could be made by subscribing to NATO some part of the forces already in existence. This could include allocations from United States strategic forces, from United Kingdom bomber command, and from tactical nuclear forces now held in Europe. Such forces would be assigned as part of a NATO nuclear force and targeted in accordance with NATO plans.

(7) Returning to Polaris, the President and the Prime Minister agreed that the purpose of their two governments with respect to the provision of the Polaris missiles must be the development of a multilateral NATO nuclear force in the closest consultation with other NATO allies. They will use their best endeavors to this end.

(8) Accordingly, the President and the Prime Minister agreed that the U.S. will make available on a continuing basis Polaris missiles (less warheads) for British submarines. The U.S. will also study the feasibility of making available certain support facilities for such submarines. The U.K. government will construct the submarines in which these weapons will be placed and they will also provide the nuclear warheads for the Polaris missiles. British forces developed under this plan will be assigned and targeted in the same way as the forces described in paragraph 6.

These forces, and at least equal U.S. forces, would be made available for inclusion in a NATO multilateral nuclear force. The Prime Minister made it clear that except where H.M.G. may decide that supreme national interests are at stake, these British forces will be used for the purposes of international defence of the western alliance in all circumstances.

(9) The President and the Prime Minister are convinced that this new plan will strengthen the nuclear defence of western alliance. In strategic terms this defence is indivisible, and it is their conviction that in all ordinary circumstances of crisis or danger, it is this very unity which is the best protection of the west.

(10) The President and the Prime Minister agreed that in addition to having a nuclear shield it is important to have a non-nuclear sword. For this purpose they agreed on the importance of increasing the effectiveness of their conventional forces on a worldwide basis.

Following is text of joint communique agreed by Mr. Diefenbaker and Prime Minister Harold Macmillan.

Joint Communique

Following on their joint meeting with President Kennedy, the Prime Ministers of Canada and the United Kingdom had discussions in Nassau from Dec. 21-22.

The foreign secretary, Lord Home, took part in some of these.

The two prime ministers discussed a wide range of topics which had been on the agenda for Prime Minister Macmillan's talks with President Kennedy. In particular, Mr. Diefenbaker and Mr. Macmillan reviewed the state of east-west relations, including the problem of nuclear tests and disarmament, and expressed the hope that the present situation might offer opportunities for constructive moves in the problems outstanding in these fields.

They also reviewed the situation in the Indian subcontinent and Prime Minister Diefenbaker expressed his strong support for the declaration by President Kennedy and Mr. Macmillan about the desirability of a reconciliation of Indian and Pakistan differences.

The two prime ministers also discussed the situation in the Congo and agreed on the desirability of a peaceful solution which would promote the unity of that country and prevent further discord.

The two prime ministers exchanged views about the current negotiations for British membership of the common market and affirmed the importance of close consultation in this regard.

The two prime ministers expressed their strong conviction of the vital role which the commonwealth can play in the improvement of understanding between nations, in promoting the cause of freedom, and in the solution of world problems.

They also stated their satisfaction at the unique opportunity which the commonwealth provides for close, friendly and continuing consultations. Such consultations are in themselves an expression of the vitality of the commonwealth and of its increasing usefulness in the service of mankind.

Nassau, the Bahamas
December 22, 1962

APPENDIX "B"

JOINT COMMUNIQUE OF THE FIRST MEETING OF THE CANADA-JAPAN MINISTERIAL COMMITTEE

January 12, 1963.

I

The first meeting of the Canada-Japan ministerial committee was held at the ministry of foreign affairs, Tokyo, on January 11 and 12, 1963.

Canada was represented at the meeting by Hon. Donald M. Fleming, Minister of Justice and Attorney General, Hon. J. Angus MacLean, Minister of Fisheries, Mr. David Sim, deputy minister of national revenue, Mr. N. A. Robertson, under secretary of state for external affairs, Mr. J. A. Roberts, deputy minister of trade and commerce and Mr. W. F. Bull, Canadian ambassador to Japan.

Japan was represented by Hon. Masayoshi Ohira, Minister for Foreign Affairs, Hon, Kakuei Tanaka, Minister of Finance, Hon. Seishi Shigemasa, Minister for Agriculture and Forestry, Hon. Hajime Fukuda, Minister for International Trade and Industry and Hon. Kiichi Miyazawa, Minister of State and Director-General of Economic Planning Agency, and Mr. Nobuhiko Ushiba, Japanese ambassador to Canada.

The committee discussed the whole range of the trade and economic relations between Canada and Japan as well as their trade and economic relations with the rest of the world.

II

The Canadian ministers outlined the growth which has taken place in the Canadian economy. They explained that the rapidly growing labour force in Canada must largely find employment opportunities in secondary industry. The Japanese ministers reviewed the significant achievements in the development of the Japanese economy and stressed the importance to Japan of expanded foreign trade. The committee examined the balance of payments problems of both countries and noted the progress that was being made toward their solution.

There was an exchange of views about the trade relations between the two countries. The ministers of the two countries reviewed the growth of trade between Canada and Japan. The committee agreed that there existed good opportunities for further expansion of trade between Canada and Japan. In the course of the discussion, the annual consultations for Japan's export restraints were reviewed at some length. The committee agreed on the desirability of concluding the consultations as quickly as possible.

The committee did not enter into the details of the current consultations for 1963, but it had a full exchange of views on the fundamental principles governing such consultations. The committee believed that such frank exchange of views would make a significant contribution to increased understanding between the two countries of their mutual trade relations.

The Japanese ministers reaffirmed the principle of orderly marketing of Japanese exports to Canada of products competitive with Canadian production in order to avoid injury to Canadian industries. At the same time they emphasized the Japanese desire to see gradual expansion of exports of commodities subject to voluntary restriction and removal of such restraints as soon as the Canadian situation permits.

The committee reviewed recent progress made in the liberalization of imports into Japan. The Canadian ministers asked that as further progress became possible Japan should keep in mind Canada's interest in certain products. The Canadian ministers urged that quantitative restrictions should not be replaced by tariff increases or other restrictive devices.

The committee took note of the assurances of the Canadian government that the Canadian temporary import surcharges would be eliminated as quickly as Canada's balance of payments position permits.

The committee examined recent developments in international economic relations. The committee took special note of the joint initiative taken by the Prime Minister of Canada and the President of the United States in calling for a meeting of ministers to set in train a broad program for the liberalization and expansion of trade. The committee welcomed the fact that this meeting would take place under the auspices of GATT in the early part of 1963. The committee stressed the importance of achieving the broadest participation in the tariff negotiations which would follow the meeting of ministers and emphasized that such negotiations must be based upon the unconditional most favoured nation principle. The committee recognized the need to make progress in all sectors of trade.

The ministers reviewed the efforts being made by Canada and Japan to assist economic progress in the developing countries and noted that both countries were cooperating together in this field in various international bodies. They recognized that the economic progress of the developing countries required not only financial assistance but also expanding export opportunities for their products. The committee noted that this would be a major objective of the forthcoming U.N. conference on trade and development. They agreed that Canada and Japan should work closely together in the preparatory committee in order to ensure the achievement of meaningful and constructive results.

The Canadian delegation expressed the strong support of the Canadian government for increased participation by Japan in the organization for economic co-operation and development (OECD) and full Japanese membership therein.

The committee discussed a number of fisheries matters. There was an exchange of information and views on the present conditions of the respective domestic fishing industries as well as on the international aspect of fisheries. The importance of fisheries for the economies of the two countries and the significance of international co-operation for the sound promotion of fisheries were emphasized.

It was agreed that negotiations be initiated between the two governments for the conclusion of an agreement for the avoidance of double taxation in view of the need for further strengthening of economic relations between the two countries.

III

The ministers of the two countries were unanimously agreed that the Canada-Japan ministerial committee which was established by Prime Minister Ikeda and Prime Minister Diefenbaker in June 1961 was of great value for the development of better mutual understanding between the two countries. Accordingly this highly successful first meeting was of historic importance.

The committee accepted the invitation of the Canadian government to hold its next meeting in Ottawa.

APPENDIX "C"

EXCHANGE OF LETTERS BETWEEN CHAIRMAN KHRUSHCHOV AND PRESIDENT KENNEDY

Following is the text of a letter dated December 19, 1962 from Chairman Khrushchov to President Kennedy.

Dear Mr. President,

In our recent correspondence related to the events in the Caribbean area we have touched on the question of the cessation of nuclear weapon tests. Today I would like to come back again to that problem and to set forth my views concerning possible ways of its speediest solution which would be mutually acceptable to both our sides.

It seems to me, Mr. President, that the time has come now to put an end once and for all to nuclear tests, to draw a line through such tests. The moment for this is very very appropriate. Left behind is a period of utmost acuteness and tension in the Caribbean. Now we have untied our hands to engage closely in other urgent international matters and, in particular, in such a problem which has been ripe for so long as the cessation of nuclear tests. A certain relaxation of international tension which has emerged now should in my view facilitate this.

The U.S.S.R. does not need war. I think that war does not promise bright prospects for the U.S.A. either. If in the past after every war America used to increase its economic potential and to accumulate more and more wealth, now war with the use of modern rocket-nuclear weapons will stride across seas and oceans within minutes. Thermonuclear catastrophe will bring enormous losses and sufferings to the American people as well as to other peoples on earth. To prevent this we must on the basis of complete equality and with just regard for each other's interests develop between ourselves peaceful relations and solve all issues through negotiations and mutual concessions.

One of such questions with which the governments of our countries have been dealing for many years is the question of concluding a treaty banning all tests of nuclear weapons.

Both of us stand on the same position with regard to the fact that national means of detection are sufficient to control banning experimental nuclear explosions in outer space, in the atmosphere and under water. So far, however, we have not succeeded in finding a mutually acceptable solution to the problem of the cessation of underground tests. The main obstacle to an agreement is the demand by the American side of international control and inspection on the territories of nuclear powers over cessation of underground nuclear tests. I would like to believe that you yourself understand the rightness of our arguments that now national means are sufficient to control also this kind of tests and be sure that agreement is observed by any side. But so far you do not want to recognize openly this actual state of things and to accept it as a basis for concluding without delay an agreement on the cessation of tests.

Striving to find a mutually acceptable basis for agreement, the U.S.S.R. has made lately an important step toward the west and agreed to installing automatic seismic stations. This idea, as is known, was put forward not by us. It was introduced by British scientists during the recent meeting in London of the participants of the Pugwash movement. Moreover, it is well known to us that when this idea was proposed it was not alien to your scientists who were in London at that time.

We proposed to instal such stations both near the borders of nuclear powers and directly on their territories. We stated our agreement that three such stations be installed on the territory of the U.S.S.R. in the zones most frequently subjected to earthquakes. There are three such zones in the U.S.S.R. where these stations can be installed: central Asian, Altaian and Far Eastern.

In the opinion of soviet scientists, the most suitable places for locating automatic seismic stations in the U.S.S.R. are: the area of the city of Kokchetav for the central Asian zone of the U.S.S.R.; the area of the city of Bodaibo for the Altaian zone; and the area of the city of Yakutsk for the Far Eastern zone. However, should, as a result of the exchange of opinion between our representatives, other places be suggested for locating automatic seismic stations in these seismic zones, we will be ready to discuss this question and find a mutually acceptable solution.

Beside the above said zones there are two more seismic zones in the U.S.S.R.—the Caucasian and the Carpathian. However these zones are so densely populated that conducting nuclear tests there is practically excluded.

Of course, delivery to and from the international center of appropriate sealed equipment for its periodic replacement at automatic seismic stations in the U.S.S.R. could well be made by Soviet personnel and on Soviet planes. However, if for such delivery of equipment to and from automatic seismic stations participation of foreign personnel were needed, we would agree to this—also having taken, if necessary, precautionary measures against the use of such trips for reconnaissance. Thus our proposal on automatic seismic stations includes elements of international control. This is a major act of good will on the part of the U.S.S.R.

I will tell you straightforwardly that before making this proposal I have consulted thoroughly the specialists; and after such consultation my colleagues in the government and I came to the conclusion that, so far as the U.S.S.R. is concerned, the above said considerations on the measures on our part are well founded, and it seems to us they should not cause objections on the part of the American side.

You, Mr. President, and your representatives point out that without at least a minimum number of on-site inspections you will not manage to persuade the U.S.A. Senate to ratify an agreement on the cessation of tests. This circumstance, as we understand, ties you and does not allow you to sign a treaty which would enable all of us to abandon for good the grounds where nuclear weapons are tested. Well, if this is the only difficulty on the way to agreement, then for the noble and humane goal of ceasing nuclear weapon tests we are ready to meet you halfway in this question.

We noted that, on last October 30, in conversation with first deputy foreign minister of the U.S.S.R., V. V. Kuznetsov in New York, your representative, Ambassador Dean, stated that in the opinion of the United States government, it would be sufficient to carry out 2-4 on-site inspections each year on the territory of the U.S.S.R. According to Ambassador Dean's statement, the U.S.A. would also be prepared to work out measures which would rule out any possibility of carrying on espionage under cover of these inspection trips, including such measures as the use of Soviet planes piloted by Soviet crews for transportation of inspectors to the sites, screening of windows in the planes, prohibition to carry photo cameras, etc.

We took all this into account; and, in order to overcome the deadlock and to arrive at last at a mutually acceptable agreement, we would agree, in those cases when it would be considered necessary, to 2-3 inspections a year on the territory of each of the nuclear powers in the seismic areas where some suspicious earth tremors might occur. It goes without saying that the basis of control over an agreement on an underground nuclear test ban would be the national means of detection in combination with automatic seismic stations. On-site inspections could be carried out with the precautions mentioned by Ambassador Dean against any misuse of control for purposes of espionage.

We believe that now the road to agreement is straight and clear. Beginning from January 1, 1963, the world can be relieved of the roar of nuclear explosions. The peoples are waiting for this; this is what the United Nations general assembly has called for. With the elimination of the Cuban crisis we relieved mankind of the direct menace of the combat use of lethal nuclear weapons that impended over the world. Can't we solve a far simpler question—that of the cessation of experimental explosions of nuclear weapons—in peaceful conditions? I think that we can and must do it. Here lies now our duty before the peoples of not only our countries but of all other countries. Having solved promptly also this question—and there are all the preconditions for that—we shall be able to facilitate working out an agreement on disarmament and with even more confidence proceed with solving other urgent international problems which we and you unfortunately are not short of.

Sincerely,
N. Khrushchov.

Following is the text of a letter dated December 28, 1962 from President Kennedy to Chairman Khrushchov.

Dear Mr. Chairman,

I was very glad to receive your letter of December 19, 1962 setting forth your views on nuclear tests. There appear to be no differences between your views and mine regarding the need for eliminating war in this nuclear age. Perhaps only those who have the responsibility for controlling these weapons fully realize the awful devastation their use would bring.

Having these considerations in mind and with respect to the issue of a test ban, I therefore sincerely hope that the suggestions that you have made in your letter will prove to be helpful in starting us down the road to an agreement. I am encouraged that you are prepared to accept the principle of on-site inspections. These seem to me to be essential, not just because of the concern of our congress, but because they seem to us to go to the heart of a reliable agreement ending nuclear testing.

If we are to have peace between systems with far reaching ideological differences, we must find ways for reducing or removing the recurring waves of fear and suspicion which feed on ignorance, misunderstanding or what appears to one side or the other as broken agreements. To me the element of assurance is vital to the broader development of peaceful relationships.

With respect to the question of on-site inspections I would certainly agree that we could accept any reasonable provision which you had in mind to protect against your concern that the on-site inspectors might engage in "espionage" en route to the area of inspection. In a statement at the United Nations, Ambassador Stevenson suggested that the U.S.A. would accept any reasonable security provision while the inspectors were being taken to the site, so long as they had reasonable provision for satisfying themselves that they were actually at the intended location and had the freedom necessary to inspect the limited designated area.

With respect to the number of on-site inspections, there appears to have been some misunderstanding. Your impression seems to be that Ambassador Dean told Deputy Minister Kuznetsov that the U.S.A. might be prepared to accept an annual number of on-site inspections between two and four. Ambassador Dean advises me that the only number which he mentioned in his discussions with Deputy Minister Kuznetsov was a number between eight and ten. This represented a substantial decrease in the request of the U.S.A., as we had previously been insisting upon a number between twelve and twenty. I had hoped that the U.S.S.R. would match this motion on the part of the U.S.A. by an equivalent motion in the figure of two or three on-site inspections which it had some time ago indicated it might allow.

I am aware that this matter of on-site inspections has given you considerable difficulty, although I am not sure that I fully understand why this should be so. To me an effective nuclear test ban treaty is of such importance that I would not permit such international arrangements to become mixed up with our or any other national desire to seek other types of information about the U.S.S.R. I believe quite sincerely that arrangements could be worked out which would convince you and your colleagues that this is the case.

But in this connection your implication that on-site inspections should be limited to seismic areas also gives us some difficulty. It is true that in the ordinary course we would have concern about events taking place in the seismic areas. However an unidentified seismic event coming from an area in which there are not usually earthquakes would be a highly suspicious event. The U.S.A. would feel that in such a circumstance the U.S.S.R. would be entitled to an on-site inspection of such an event occurring in our area and feels that the U.S.A. should have the same rights within its annual quota of inspections.

Perhaps your comment would be that a seismic event in another area designated for inspection might coincide with a highly sensitive defense installation. I recognize this as a real problem but believe that some arrangement can be worked out which would prevent this unlikely contingency from erecting an insuperable obstacle.

Your suggestion as to the three locations in the U.S.S.R. in which there might be unmanned seismic stations is helpful, but it does not seem to me to go far enough. These stations are all outside the areas of highest seismicity and therefore do not record all of the phenomena within those areas. These stations would be helpful in increasing the detection capability of the system but I doubt that they would have the same value in reducing the number of suspicious seismic events by identifying some as earthquakes. For this purpose unmanned seismic stations should be in the areas of highest seismicity not outide them. To achieve this result there would be need for a number of stations in the vicinity of the Kamchatka area and a number in the Tashkent area. It might be possible, of course, to reduce somewhat the number actually in the U.S.S.R. by arranging stations in Hokkaido, Pakistan and Afghanistan. If the stations on Soviet territory were sited in locations free from local disturbances and could be monitored periodically by competent U.S.A. or international observers who took in portable seismometers and placed them on the pedestals it would be very helpful in reducing the problem of identification.

You have referred to the discussion of the "black box" proposal at the tenth Pugwash conference in London in September of this year as a U.K. proposal to which the U.S.A. has agreed. I do not believe that this was the situation. This proposal was reported to me as a Soviet proposal which was discussed with some U.S.A. scientists. Of the U.S.A. scientists who signed the statement, none represented the U.S.A. government or had discussed the matter with responsible officials. All were speaking as individuals and none were seismologists. Their agreement does not signify anything other than that this was an area which justified further study. The U.S.A. government has given it that study and the results have been the conclusions which I have indicated above.

Notwithstanding these problems I am encouraged by your letter. I do not believe that any of the problems which I have raised are insoluble, but they ought to be solved. I wonder how you think we might best proceed with these discussions which may require some technical development. It occurs to me that you might wish to have your representative meet with Mr. William C. Foster, the director of our arms control and disarmament agency, at a mutually convenient place such as New York or Geneva. I will be glad to have your suggestions. After talks have been held we will then be in a position to evaluate where we stand and continue our work together for an effective agreement ending all nuclear tests.

Following is the text of a letter dated January 7, 1963 from Chairman Khrushchov to President Kennedy.

Dear Mr. President,

I received your reply to my message of December 19, 1962. I am satisfied that you have appraised correctly the Soviet government's proposals set forth in that message, as directed to securing in the very near future a ban on all tests of nuclear weapons.

We understand your answer as meaning that you do not object that national means of detection together with automatic seismic stations should be the basis for control over an agreement banning underground nuclear tests. We note your agreement that installation of automatic seismic stations will prove useful from the point of view of increasing the effectiveness of control over the cessation of underground nuclear explosions. During the Geneva talks it was justly observed also by your representatives that installation of such seismic stations would serve as a good means of verifying the correctness of the functioning of national seismic stations. It is precisely by these considerations that the Soviet government was guided in proposing that the idea of installing automatic seismic stations put forward at the Pugwash meeting of scientists be utilized.

In my message of December 19, 1962, I indicated those three areas where, in the opinion of our scientists, automatic seismic stations should be set up on the territory of the U.S.S.R. Those areas were selected after a thorough study with comprehensive consideration being given to geological and seismic conditions in those places.

In the areas of Kokchetav and Bodaibo, automatic seismic stations would be located according to our suggestion at the exposures of crystalline rocks, while in the Yakutsk area—in the zone of eternal congelation. As is known, on crystalline rocks and on grounds frozen deep down, always only minor seismic hindrances are noticed, which facilitates reliable detection of underground nuclear explosions. In combination with seismic stations abroad on territories adjacent to the seismic zones in the U.S.S.R., automatic stations located in the above mentioned points will be an adequate means, capable of removing possible doubts of the other side with regard to the correctness of the functioning of the national seismic station network.

You did not make any comments on the location of an automatic seismic station for the Altai zone in the region of the city of Bodaibo and thus we could consider this question as agreed upon.

However, you have doubts as to the location of automatic seismic stations for the other seismic zones in the U.S.S.R.—the Far Eastern and the central Asian ones. As far as those zones are concerned, in your opinion it would be expedient to place such stations in the Kamchatka area and in the area of Tashkent. In the opinion of Soviet scientists placing automatic seismic stations in the areas of Tashkent and Kamchatka would be a worse variant as compared to the one that we propose, because in those areas the functioning of automatic stations will be seriously handicapped by seismic hindrances. But if you believe it more expedient to relocate those stations we will not object to that. In my message to you I have already pointed out that the U.S.S.R. is prepared to seek a mutually acceptable solution also in the question of the location of automatic seismic stations. We would agree to relocate the automatic seismic station for the central Asian zone of the U.S.S.R. to the Lashkent area, placing it near the city of Samarkand; and for the Far Eastern zone—to place the automatic station at Seimchan which is part of the Kamchatka seismic area.

Location of an automatic seismic station on the Kamchatka peninsula itself seems in the opinion of Soviet scientists clearly unacceptable, in view of strong hindrances caused by the proximity of the ocean and strong volcanic activity in the peninsula itself which will inevitably hamper normal functioning of a station. It appears to us that thus we could consider as agreed upon also the question of the location of automatic seismic stations for the central Asian and Far Eastern zones of the U.S.S.R.

The Soviet government having consulted its specialists came to the conclusion that it is quite enough to install three automatic seismic stations on the territory of the U.S.S.R.—the more so since in your message, Mr. President, the possibility is envisaged of setting up automatic seismic stations on territories adjacent to the seismic zones in the U.S.S.R.: on the Hokkaido, in Pakistan and Afghanistan, naturally with the consent of the respective governments.

The Soviet government has named definite areas for the location of automatic seismic stations on the territory of the U.S.S.R. Moreover, Mr. President, taking into account your wishes, we agree to relocate two stations to new places. We are entitled to expect, therefore, that your side also will name definite areas where such stations should be set up on the territory of the U.S.A., and that in reaching an agreement on the sites where stations are to be placed the American side will take into account our wishes.

Mr. President, we are convinced that all the conditions exist now for reaching an agreement also on the question of inspection. It is known that all the time recently, we heard repeatedly from the western side—agree in principle to inspection and then the road to agreement will be open. We believed and we continue to believe now that in general inspection is not necessary; and if we give our consent to an annual quota of 2-3 inspections, this is done solely for the purpose of removing the remaining differences for the sake of reaching agreement.

As you see, we have made a serious step in your direction. The quota of inspections on the territory of each of the nuclear powers that we propose is sufficient. Indeed in the negotiations your representatives themselves recognized that there is no need to verify all or a greater part of the significant suspicious phenomena to restrain states from attempts to violate the treaty. And they gave figures of annual inspections practically equalling the quota proposed by us. Naturally it is most reasonable to carry out inspection in seismic areas where the biggest number of unidentified seismic phenomena may occur. However, if you consider it necessary, we have no objection to inspection being carried out also in non-seismic areas, provided such inspections are conducted within the annual quota indicated by us.

I noticed that in your reply you agree with the necessity of taking reasonable measures of precaution which would exclude the possibility of using inspection trips and visits to automatic seismic stations for the purpose of obtaining intelligence data. Of course, in carrying out on-site inspection there can be circumstances when in the area designated for inspection there will be some object of defence importance. Naturally in such a case it will be necessary to take appropriate measures which would exclude the possibility of causing damage to the interests of security of the state on the territory of which inspection is carried out. In this respect I fully agree with the considerations expressed in your message.

Mr. President, in your message you suggest that our representatives meet in New York or in Geneva for a brief preliminary consideration of some of the problems you touched upon. We have no objections to such a meeting of our representatives. The Soviet government for that purpose appointed N. T. Fedorenko, the U.S.S.R. permanent representative to the United Nations, and S. K. Tsarapkin, the U.S.S.R. representative to the eighteen nation disarmament committee, who could meet with your representative, Mr. William C. Foster, in New York on January 7-10. We proceed here from the assumption that meetings of our representatives should lead already in the very near future to agreement on questions still unsettled, so that upon the re-opening of the eighteen nation committee session, our representatives could inform it that the road to the conclusion of an agreement banning all nuclear weapons tests is open.

Sincerely,

N. Khrushchov.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, January 22, 1963

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

STATEMENT ON LATE DISTRIBUTION OF "HANSARD" FOR JANUARY 21

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members may have noted that they have not yet received their copies of Hansard which should have been delivered this morning. They will be delivered later this afternoon. However, I might point out that Hansard for yesterday is more than twice its normal length as a result of the accumulation of answers to questions and of certain statements which were printed as appendices.

In connection with answers appearing in Hansard, it has been drawn to our attention that yesterday there was one answer printed which covered almost 12 pages, set up in special type. I, of course, am not in a position to judge the length of answers at the time they are handed in, but I think it would be good if those persons who are charged with filing answers to questions would watch this situation, because a lengthy answer of the type to which I have referred could quite easily be put down as an order for return tabled immediately. I think it would help all concerned if answers to questions to appear in Hansard in the normal course of events were reasonably brief.

VACANCY

Mr. Harry C. Harley (Halton): Mr. Speaker, I hold in my hand two orders in council appointing Hon. William Earl Rowe to be lieutenant governor of Ontario. I hereby give notice, pursuant to section 10 of the House of Commons Act, that a vacancy has occurred in the representation in the House of Commons for the electoral district of Dufferin-Simcoe, by reason of the said appointment of the member therefor.

ARTS, LETTERS AND SCIENCES

SUGGESTED ROYAL COMMISSION TO STUDY CANADIAN CULTURAL SITUATION

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Yesterday in answer to the hon. member for Laurier I said I would be making a statement today regarding the convening of a dominion-provincial conference. I want to point out that I am not yet ready to make that statement, although I did say yesterday I would make it. As soon as I am ready I will make it, and the hon. gentleman and members of the house will be notified in advance.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): It will be awaited with interest.

INTERNATIONAL LABOUR CONFERENCE

TABLING OF TEXTS OF INSTRUMENTS ADOPTED

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): I wish to table the bilingual texts of the instruments adopted at the 46th session of the international labour conference held in Geneva, Switzerland, in June 1962.

The Canadian delegation, consisting of government, employer and worker representatives, was headed by the deputy minister of labour. The conference debated at some length the report of the director general of the I.L.C. which was centred on this occasion mainly on the subject of older people in work and retirement. Among numerous resolutions, one was proposed by Canada. This dealt with measures to strengthen research in the labour field both nationally and internationally, and was adopted unanimously by the conference.

The four instruments tabled herewith are convention 117 on basic aims and standards of social policy; convention 118 on equality of treatment of nationals and non-nationals in the field of social security; recommendation 116 on reduction of hours of work, and recommendation 117 on vocational training.

An attached letter of October 24, 1962, states that the Minister of Justice is of the opinion that the subject matter of each of these instruments is partially within federal legislative jurisdiction and partially within provincial legislative jurisdiction. According to the usual procedure I am asking my colleague the Secretary of State to send a set of these instruments, together with the justice opinion, to the lieutenant governor of each province, with the request that they be placed before the competent legislative authority in the province for consideration. At the federal level, the Department of Labour will study the subject matter of each instrument in consultation with other departments concerned and will consider what further steps are feasible in this connection.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Speaker: The Minister of Labour seeks leave to table the documents to which he referred in his statement. Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

DEBATE ON FOREIGN AFFAIRS AND DEFENCE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister a question arising out of his statement to the house yesterday regarding the order of business for the rest of the week. Having regard to that statement and also to certain statements we on this side have received from other government sources which do not seem to be completely in harmony with what the Prime Minister said yesterday, may I ask him whether he will confirm today that the external affairs estimates will be called on Thursday to permit of a debate on foreign affairs and defence on that and subsequent days?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there is no confirmation required. That is what I said.

INQUIRY AS TO REQUEST FOR INTERIM SUPPLY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Finance, in view of the fact that yesterday he gave us to understand that he would be asking for interim supply some time this week. In the light of the statement made by the Prime Minister yesterday, when now does he propose to ask for interim supply?

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am not able to give a definite date when I will be asking for interim supply. However, it will not be this week. I would suspect that it will be some time next week at a convenient date, after discussion with the house leaders and the government.

GRAIN

WHEAT—INQUIRY AS TO FINAL PAYMENT ON 1961-62 CROP

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. I wonder whether the minister could inform the house when farmers may expect an interim or final payment on the 1961-62 wheat crop.

[Mr. Starr.]

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I had conversations with the chief commissioner of the wheat board on this subject last week, and I expect that he will be writing a letter to the government in the next few days suggesting when the pool be closed and when the payments will be made.

PUBLIC SERVICE

PROVISION OF ADEQUATE STAFF FOR AUDITOR GENERAL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Walter L. Gordon (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Finance relating to the Auditor General's report for the year ending March 31, 1962. Has any action been taken to provide the Auditor General with the staff he requires in order to carry out his responsibilities to parliament?

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Auditor General spoke to me some time ago with respect to the necessity of augmenting his staff, and suggested that it was a matter with which the Minister of Finance should deal by virtue of a certain section of the act. After consultation with the civil service commission it was decided that the matter should be left with the commission for the time being. The civil service commission is, I believe, dealing with the matter; and, of course, this question comes under the aegis of my hon. friend the Secretary of State, and any questions on that score should be referred to him.

TRANSPORT

RAILWAY BRANCH LINES—DATE OF MEETING WITH PRAIRIE PROVINCES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. I understand that the proposed conference between the federal government and the governments of the three prairie provinces has been postponed. May I ask the Prime Minister whether any date has been set for a meeting with the prairie provinces on the question of railway abandonment?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, yesterday in the course of the statement I made I referred to the fact that the meeting would be held on the 28th; next Monday, in any event. The meeting will be convened in Ottawa with the premiers or representatives of the three western provinces in order to have presented to the government the views of the governments of those provinces in respect of the question of abandonment, and the like. So far I have had an acceptance from two of the premiers; the third has not as yet replied whether or not that date will be satisfactory.

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): A supplementary question. I wonder if I could ask the Prime Minister whether he has had a communication from certain organizations requesting that legislation which may be introduced in the house this session on this subject be deferred until after the scheduled February 5 meeting with the cabinet?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I read some observations of the hon. gentleman with regard to the dictatorial attitude of the government in this regard during his absence from the house. Yesterday, however, I referred to the fact that we had been in communication with the premiers of the provinces and had advised them that the legislation would not be introduced until they had had an opportunity of presenting their views.

Mr. Argue: Mr. Speaker, I have a further question. Can the Prime Minister say whether this statement also applies to the Saskatchewan farmers' union and the Saskatchewan Urban Municipalities Association in relation to their February 5 meeting with the cabinet?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to go any further than I have gone in this regard. The premiers of the provinces will be here. I have always found that they fairly well represent the views of their respective provinces.

FINANCE

INQUIRY AS TO REMOVAL OF IMPORT SURCHARGES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. In view of his recent statement that the surcharges on imported goods would be removed very soon, and in view of the financial hardship being inflicted on many retailers in Canada because of this uncertainty, can he explain to the house or define the meaning of the words "very soon"?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member well knows, the word "soon" is a relative term.

TRADE

WHEAT—INQUIRY AS TO PAYMENT BY CHINA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. C. O. Cooper (Rosetown-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. In view of conflicting reports regarding payment for our wheat under the Chinese wheat agreement, can he tell us whether the Chinese are still honouring their obligations up to the present time?

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar was good enough to send me a copy of his question. It just arrived after I came into the house.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Hamilton: I shall have to tell the hon. member that I will take this question as notice and will inquire from the wheat board.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I wish to explain to hon. members that I felt that this question did not have urgency of immediate reply but that it was on the same subject and about in the same vein as the question asked by the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue) and the two in a way balanced out.

POWER

COLUMBIA RIVER—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT BY MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Kootenay East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Public Works. Before he leaves his exalted position in the chamber would he be prepared to make a detailed statement on the Columbia river treaty, such as those he has been making on the hustings out in British Columbia?

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, at the appropriate time I should be very pleased to discuss the Columbia river treaty in the House of Commons.

Mr. Byrne: I have a supplementary question. Does the minister not believe that the appropriate time is now, before he leaves this chamber?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think the supplementary question is more a commentary on the answer that was given.

Inquiries of the Ministry

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

FORT ST. JOHN, B.C.—REPORTED FAILURE TO REINSTATE EMPLOYEES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Thomas R. Berger (Vancouver-Burrard): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Postmaster General. Has the Postmaster General received complaints recently with regard to the failure of the department to reinstate a number of post office employees at Fort St. John, British Columbia? If so, what action does the minister propose to take?

Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first part of the question is no.

[Later:]

Mrs. Fairclough: Mr. Speaker, on reflection I think I should correct the answer I gave the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard, because it now seems to me I did receive some representations, but they were so long ago I had forgotten about them and no action is contemplated.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

COLOMBO PLAN—SUGGESTED INCREASE IN CANADIAN CONTRIBUTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hubert Badanai (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Will the minister be good enough to indicate to the house whether the government has received any requests for an increase in Canada's contribution to the Colombo plan?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have had a very few letters on this point, but nothing of any great significance.

NUCLEAR TESTING—POSITION OF CANADIAN GOVERNMENT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): May I ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs if he has anything to add to what he has already said outside of the house with regard to the nuclear test discussions in Washington.

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member for Essex East had been here yesterday he would have known I made my statement not outside the house but right here in the Commons chamber.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am surprised that my hon. friend takes offence, particularly with me. May I ask him the question again, based not on what he said in the house but what he said last night over the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation television facilities. Has he anything to add to that statement?

Mr. Green: There is nothing to add to what I said in the house yesterday.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Do I understand, then, that the position of the Canadian government is that if the United States and the Soviet union cannot agree on conditions for the cessation of tests, the government of Canada feels that there should be no tests, whether or not such an agreement is arrived at?

Mr. Green: I am afraid the hon. member either did not hear or did not understand what he is supposed to have heard last night.

NATIONAL REVENUE

CAMPOBELLO, N.B.—REQUEST FOR 24 HOUR SERVICE ON BRIDGE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. S. H. Rideout (Westmorland): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Revenue. What action does the minister plan in order to have the customs office opened on a 24 hour basis on Roosevelt memorial bridge at Campobello?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think that question would be better on the order paper.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

REQUEST FOR MEETING RESPECTING SECURITY INVESTIGATIONS IN UNIVERSITIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. Has the minister refused to meet a delegation representing the Canadian association of university teachers to discuss certain activities of the R.C.M.P.?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Justice): No, sir.

Mr. Orlikow: A supplementary question. Could the minister indicate when he will meet the delegation?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No, sir.

VOCATIONAL TRAINING

INQUIRY AS TO REPRESENTATIONS FROM PROVINCES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Did the minister receive representations from the provinces concerning the federal-provincial technical and vocational training act and is the minister in a position to state his reply or that of the government to that brief?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): The answer to the first part of the question is yes; to the second part, no.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. S. P. Ryan (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Was the government's decision to purchase $700 million worth of nuclear vehicles from the United States "made in Canada"?

AGRICULTURE

REPORTED INTENTION TO CURTAIL RECORD OF PRODUCTION PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lucien Lamoureux (Stormont): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the Minister of Agriculture is now prepared to reply to the question I asked yesterday regarding maintenance of the records of production services branch.

Mr. W. H. Jorgenson (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I have made inquiries of the department, and I am assured there are no plans to curtail or abolish the record of performance program for dairy cattle. The ability to accept new herds under the program is always limited by the availability of staff at a given period.

TREE FARMING—ASSISTANCE UNDER REHABILITATION ACT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hubert Badanai (Fort William): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Revenue and Forestry, notice of which has been sent to him. Can the minister inform the house whether, under the new agricultural rehabilitation act, assistance is provided for tree farming?

Hon. H. J. Flemming (Minister of Forestry): I am very glad to give to the hon. gentleman all the information I can. The answer, in general terms, is yes. Of course the Agricultural Rehabilitation and Development Act contemplates that land use is subject to an examination of the land itself to determine the use to which it can best be put. However, on that basis the answer is yes.

OLD AGE PENSIONS

INQUIRY AS TO LEGISLATION UNDER PROPOSED B.N.A. ACT AMENDMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. Is the government considering making known to the provinces the nature of the legislation that it would propose under the suggested amendment to the British North America Act respecting old age pensions in order to get consent from the provinces for making that amendment?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the request to the provinces was for their consent to permit the introduction of an amendment which would assure that the type of pensions we have in mind, contributory pensions with survivor benefits, might be implemented by legislation in parliament. My reading in regard to those things that have taken place in the past has been that that has not been the custom. While I am on my feet may I say that the statements in the press today that we intend to disregard the constitution in any way in connecion with this amendment have no foundation whatsoever.

Mr. Knowles: May I ask a supplementary question. Can the Prime Minister indicate, in view of this impasse, what action will be taken at this session with regard to an increase in the amount of the old age pension?

Mr. Diefenbaker: I have already pointed out that the attitude of this government is at all times to strictly respect the constitution. Any suggestion that we do anything in the nature of a short-cut is not a course which will be followed. We have no power whatever to secure the consent of the provinces to the legislation that we have in mind based upon an amendment to the constitution. I only hope that good sense will prevail and the provinces will consent to such an amendment so as to ensure that legislation of the kind contemplated by this government, and asked for by the people of Canada, can be brought into being.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I am sure the Prime Minister either must have misunderstood my supplementary question or perhaps did not hear it. My supplementary question did not relate to what he would do about an amendment to the British North America Act. My question was, what would he do, in view of this impasse, about having an increase made at this session in the amount of the old age pension, a totally different question.

National Economic Development Board

Mr. Diefenbaker: In so far as increases in old age pensions and the like are concerned, that is a matter of government policy, and it is different from the question of contributory old age pensions.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

SUGGESTED REFERENCE TO COMMITTEE OF CRITICISM REGARDING STATISTICS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): May I direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Will the minister consider asking for a meeting of the industrial relations committee in order that it might investigate the serious charges concerning the statistics of the Department of Labour and the unemployment insurance commission contained in the current issue of Maclean's magazine?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I have read that article in the current issue of Maclean's magazine, but it was not my impression that it referred to the subject the hon. member is bringing to my attention.

Mr. Knowles: I suggest you read it again.

NATIONAL ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT BOARD

PROVISION FOR DEFINITION OF DUTIES, APPOINTMENT OF MEMBERS, ETC.

The house resumed, from Monday, January 21, consideration of the motion of Mr. Nowlan for the second reading of Bill No. C-87, to provide for the establishment of a national economic development board.

Mr. John R. Matheson (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, at the evening adjournment last night I had mentioned the importance—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think it would be helpful to the hon. member if those members who wish to leave the chamber would do so expeditiously and quietly so that he can complete his remarks.

Mr. Matheson: Mr. Speaker, last evening I was suggesting that one of the important services of the national economic development board would be to assist Canada to find its way into an integration with its Atlantic allies under the ideas suggested in the second clause of the NATO treaty. This was something very important to my leader. It is something that was very important to Jean Monnet, architect of the common market, who feels that there is nothing more important now than the movement toward an Atlantic community in which common institutions will be increasingly developed to meet any problems. Jean Monnet praises Britain joining the general movement toward a united Europe, something that even as we debate this matter today is in the shadow of doubt, perhaps, but nevertheless great things are happening in respect of Britain that we cannot fail to recognize.

Mr. Speaker, may I read one short paragraph from Jean Monnet's article published in The Rotarian of October, 1961. He says:

> That we have begun to co-operate on these affairs at the Atlantic level is a great step forward. It is evident that we must soon go a good deal further toward an Atlantic community.
>
> The creation of a united Europe brings this nearer by making it possible for America and Europe to act as partners on an equal footing.

The reason is not only to maximize the wealth of this Atlantic community itself. It is actually the preservation of the peace of all, and second to assure the generous contribution of this vitally important group of nations to the development of the underdeveloped countries. We find in Canada in this past year that an outstanding businessman such as William E. Williams, president of Procter & Gamble of Canada, recommends an economic union between Canada and the United States. Douglas W. Ambridge, president of Abitibi Power & Paper Co. Ltd., recommends a North American market involving Canada, the United States and Mexico, to serve as something of a magnet for the Latin American countries. Why? Because this is a clear step in the direction we must take toward forming some larger Atlantic integration.

We on this side of the house would have been very happy to have done this more directly with integration with Britain when the opportunity presented itself some years ago, but that opportunity was not seized and there must be other ways in which this great plan may still be realized.

We may ask is it possible to do such a thing with the United States. I will read to the house the words of President Kennedy in his July 4 message at Philadelphia. This time the president was not talking about George Washington or anything of that sort. He said:

> I will say, here and now, on this day of independence, that the United States will be ready for a declaration of interdependence—that we will be prepared to discuss with a united Europe the ways and means of forming a concrete Atlantic partnership.

It is not sufficient for the Prime Minister of Canada to nurse his wrath and prepare to gird his loins for a new campaign against the United States, against Britain or against anybody else. Surely our policy must be one of planning toward this larger world order which could prove so prosperous and so important to Canada. Planning is the key word here. Claude Jodoin, in his New Year's message to labour, said "planning, it seems, is no longer a bad word". Then he went on to say:

—but time is running out. While other countries have been moving ahead Canada has been standing still. We cannot afford to let another year go by without taking decisive action.

On the other side of the coin are these words to the Investment Dealers' Association of Canada. On June 18, 1962 Mr. Neil John McKinnon, speaking of the need for intelligent planning in a speech entitled "Planning and Performance", said this:

The free competitive system of individual enterprise cannot flourish without a nourishing environment which can only be created and maintained by intelligent planning of the business environment by government.

We must not be afraid of shibboleths and shiver at the word "planning". We accept that Bill No. C-87 is a planning bill. It is true that the word "planning" does not appear—as was mentioned—in it, but what is indicated, surely, is the need for indicative planning, planning that is going to get business, labour and agriculture working together toward new adjustments, greater harmony and greater growth. Surely what we in Canada are really striving for is a bold new economic consensus. We know that in the past we have had important royal commissions. We have had the Rowell-Sirois and the Gordon commissions with penetrating substantive studies of the Canadian economy which proved of great importance in solving some of the problems we have already faced. It is unfortunate that many of the recommendations of the Gordon commission were not implemented, and to some extent have been thwarted and frustrated in the past several years.

In any event we feel—and this was one of the many recommendations of the Gordon commission—that there must be a continuing study of economic problems based on long range considerations. We heard engaging speeches last evening from the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources, who took us on a tour of the north, and an address from the Associate Minister of National Defence on the glory of France and the glory of this administration. But there remain problems that cannot be solved unless they are faced, and faced frankly. Some of them are new. The first new problem is the fact that in the four years from 1958 to 1961 Canada averaged over 6½ per cent of unemployment. Actually according to a minister of the Ontario government, Hon. Robert Macaulay last year, it was over 6 per cent. So we have, according to that authority at least, five years of over 6 per cent unemployment in Canada. In 1960 we had the most shockingly large figure of unemployment of any industrial country in the world.

Another new problem that we have to face is the fact that production per person in Canada declined between 1957 and 1961. If this is any satisfaction to the administration it is no satisfaction to any of us on the Liberal side. We had the prognostications of the Gordon commission to study with regard to where we should have been this past year. We should have been far ahead. Instead of that we have accumulated large debt per capita; we have produced record bankruptcies, and we still have this staggering rate of unemployment.

The final important point, Mr. Speaker, is the question of balance of payments. I submit that the questions of unemployment, growth and productivity are new problems with which this administration has failed to deal, but they inherited in part a problem that we knew something about, the problem of balance of payments. This calls for the most earnest consideration of long term principles. In this matter of the balance of payments I want to tell the house that in the last six years our obligations in respect of the goods and services we have bought from foreigners have exceeded by $6 billion the obligations owing to us for the goods and services we have sold to foreigners. We have settled these deficits by selling off our Canadian resources and Canadian owned companies and going into debt. I am quoting the words of a distinguished author, the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. Gordon). Bruce Hutchison asserts that we are alienating our heritage to the point where we are in jeopardy in Canada of actually losing our economic and political independence.

We do not believe for one moment that with the establishment of a national economic development board a cabinet can sit down and simply be told what to do. There is something that goes with this. Policy has to be provided, and policy has to be provided very shortly, by an administration that is able to face facts, study situations and take action, courageous action, and not just look the other way when difficult problems present themselves. I think that with the combination of the establishment of this kind of integrating board and a bold and courageous administration, one that is looking ahead to the long run and not just to the next general election, Canada could have a glorious economic future.

(Translation):

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Megantic): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to speak at length on this bill which provides for the establishment of a national economic development board. In fact, members on both sides of the house have done nothing else but depict the present situation in Canada.

Our Liberal and Conservative friends boast about what each of them has done but they did not say a word about what they should or could have done or what remains to be done.

After taking stock of the situation, we see that there is a lot that remains to be done because the Conservatives do nothing but criticize the Liberals for the way they administered the country prior to 1957 while, on the other hand, our Liberal friends blame the Conservatives for doing nothing to remedy anything they may have done wrong or failed to correct before 1957. It follows from all this bickering that after 22 years of Liberal government and a few years of Conservative administration, Canada is no better off.

Mr. Speaker, allow me to try and mention all the present economic anomalies and to find solutions, by suggesting we should perhaps proceed.

In all the statements made during this debate, Mr. Speaker, we have not heard one solution likely to settle the problem, except that taxation and tax increases have been mentioned.

Let us start with our natural resources which are the very basis of our wealth, here in Canada. The national economic development board could further develop our mines, our waterways and our forests, and through the Bank of Canada or exclusive Canadian credit, endeavour to develop our natural resources. In fact, it is useless to develop these resources through foreign capital, as the resources are finally no longer ours but belong to foreigners; in brief, it becomes foreign production for the benefit of foreigners. We should therefore stop begging foreign investors to develop our resources, because we find in the end that we are the ones being exploited by foreigners who come to live in our country at our expense.

Mr. Speaker, we have almost everything we need here in Canada. In our country, there are mines with unlimited resources. For instance, we have gold, asbestos and coal mines, and oil wells. How many Canadians would contend that those mines are being developed at present for the benefit of Canadians and with Canadian capital?

How many can claim also that Canada has full control over its economy? Not a single one, because it is a known fact that almost 80 per cent of our economy depends on foreign investments.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am extremely sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but the hum of private conversations going on makes it very difficult for me to hear the hon. member who is speaking at the other end of the house. I would ask hon. members to lower their voices if they have to keep on talking among themselves.

Mr. Langlois: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is unfortunate that some members will not listen to the solutions offered them, because afterward they have to wrack their brains to find some.

How can we develop our forests, our mines and our tourist industry through the Bank of Canada?

There is nothing more strange than to hear foreign tourists ask us: "How do you like our new set up?" They gaze at Canadian undertakings and simply say to us: "How do you like our new building?" Please note that they say "our" building, because they themselves come to this country to build with their own funds, while we are inviting them to visit us. They do come, but they come to visit their own buildings.

Let us get the Bank of Canada to supply the credit required for the construction of the buildings we need and for the development of our natural resources.

Mr. Speaker, if we want to be logical in this country, let us start from this point: if our credit is based upon the wealth of our country, our natural resources, our production, let us also base our credit on our natural resources and our production. There is no difficulty there. The more we produce, the more we need the required credit. Let us stop taking that credit from the same pockets, the taxpayer's. Let us go where it should be taken, to the Bank of Canada, to balance the Canadian economy, instead of kneeling before foreign financiers.

That would amount to the same thing, it would still be credit, but it would be Canadian credit.

The national economic development board could do that, it could then control the situation and determine the amounts required for any economic development in Canada.

The Bank of Canada would be the body from which credit would come for any economic development that would take place in Canada, for instance.

We do not want any dictatorial control from the government.

Yesterday we heard about planning from one side of the house. We were even accused of being in favour of it since the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson) was said to advocate planning. Let me remind the hon. member for Rimouski (Mr. Legare) of the exact words uttered by the hon. member for Red Deer while talking about planning. He said that he supported the kind of planning which would allow us to work together and not the type which would force us to work together. These are two different things: one which allows and the other which forces us. The meaning is entirely different.

If our hon. friends opposite wish to talk about planning in terms of economic guidance, very well then, we are with them. But if they mean a control which would tell us, for instance, "You will not do that" or "You will not produce this commodity any more", it is not the same thing as to say "We advise you not to produce this commodity any more".

One can play around with the word planning. No one in this house would like to be dictated to, hobbled or controlled.

We want a maximum of freedom and security. Let us choose economic guidance and put aside the terms planning, plans and more plans or what have you. So let us set up something that would get us to work hand in hand.

I heard someone say on the government side yesterday that what was sought was a mutual agreement between the leaders and the people. Very well. But how could there be such an agreement when one person only controls the big end of the whip, for instance? In that case, there could be no such agreement. If "planning" is used in the sense of economic guidance, that is all right. But if it means government control, we were not elected to this house to come here and dictate, to control or impose anything on the Canadian people, in the economic or in the financial field.

We are the servants of the people. The first man who will go to a riding and say: I came here to impose this or that will be defeated at the next election and he will have only himself to impose upon, at home and in peace.

We are the servants of the people to work with them, to guide them and lead them. That is why we are for guided economic development and not for planning. We are not here to force planning on anybody.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Rimouski made quite a trip yesterday. He went around the Gaspe peninsula like nobody else ever did. He mentioned the Conservative party which has not yet succeeded in building its railroad in the Gaspe peninsula. He made a good effort. He has come to realize that there are needs. Very well. I congratulate him. However, he has not found one solution, he has not made any suggestions but—

An hon. Member: Taxes.

Mr. Langlois: Yes, he can levy taxes. That is a thing the present government can be blamed for. All you mention when you talk about Social Crediters is a machine that prints money over and over. We advocate an advancement machine, but you favour a backing machine, because you have a machine for taxation, the same one for 92 years, which continually empties the taxpayers' pockets. But the people have no more money. And if you go on like that, they will soon have no more pants left and no pockets for you to empty.

A national economic guidance and development board would enable our municipalities and school boards to take advantage of our country's wealth. Such a board would be helpful to industry in our communities.

I am thinking for instance of the Megantic area, where the world center of the asbestos industry is located. This natural wealth laboriously dug out of the earth by our own people is almost entirely shipped across the border to the U.S.A. to be manufactured into goods which later on find their way back to the shelves of our retail outlets and which cost three times the price of the raw material. We deplore the fact that this Canadian production must be manufactured abroad. Something is wrong with our administration. This is surely not the kind of administration advocated by the Social Credit party. The fact that our products have to be exported beyond our frontiers to be manufactured is most unfortunate. However, this has been going on for years. The same thing applies in western Canada as regards certain oil wells.

National Economic Development Board

What else could come out of a national economic development board? Such a board would enable us to increase our labour force in Canada.

It is rather disheartening to hear about full employment, about unemployment and hardships, but nothing about production. I do not believe in over-all full employment, but I do believe in maximum employment. With that, we could at least go much further than we can with what we have today. There is no justification, in a country like Canada, for unemployment as we have it today. There is no reason for all the hardships which are to be found today.

We need economical guidance to avoid such situations. Let us develop our own mines, and natural resources; we have the required labour force, and we would then be able to get more out of our exports. These products must be good, since foreigners come to get them before they are processed. If they are good for them, they will be good for us, and the profits earned will remain in Canada.

Then, we can talk about Canadian production, about goods produced by Canadians and consumed, first of all—since they are in great need of it—by Canadians; any surplus could be exported. But, Canadians will first benefit from their own production, they will be contented and happy to live in a country where unlimited natural resources allow them to live as honest and honourable citizens.

The present situation is tragic because there are strikes in several areas. Salary increases are being sought everywhere. Why? Because the House of Commons cannot manage to find a solution. Canada's capital is always the target, on account of parliament, and it is from the House of Commons that solutions to our problems must come, and not only measures to increase or multiply taxes.

We could take the path, as some are doing now or have done in 1940, towards war in preparing our defence. Yes, at that time, our economy was geared to war production, and today there is talk of stocking nuclear weapons. There is even talk of stocking them on our soil.

I wonder whether the wife of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) shares his opinion. Has she handed her resignation to the Voice of Women or to the Leader of the Opposition?

Mr. Speaker, once again the solution already put forward in 1940 and in 1942 is suggested to us: war. The same party, the Liberal party, the war party, so to speak, once again is proposing war. In the 40's: mobilization; in the 50's: the Nobel peace award; in the 60's: nuclear weapons; and perhaps the Leader of the Opposition expects to get the Nobel prize again in 1970.

If we develop our natural resources and gear our economy to peaceful rather than warlike objectives, we shall leave our children and future generations something of which they will have reason to be proud—

An hon. Member: He is one of your chums.

Mr. Langlois: —an income—you were here 22 years ago—guaranteed by a country which would show promise for the future. But what guarantee will stocking nuclear weapons and gearing the country to war, give us, except perhaps, the capacity to blow ourselves up at anytime?

If the Liberal party has no other proposal to make than to suggest war, it might as well remain in the opposition. At least, in that role, it can only talk and put its foot in it. Besides, we have seen the success it has achieved across Canada. I do not think that the national economic development board would gain anything in the hands of the Liberal party, because the latter would only use it with a view to stocking nuclear weapons.

As soon as a solution is sought, the Leader of the Opposition goes to Washington to get it. It might perhaps be preferable for his opposite number in Washington to come here, and for the leader of the Liberal opposition to take his place in Washington. Then at least we would get our solutions at once.

The Conservative party is somewhat uncertain perhaps. Could it be waiting to see what the Social Crediters will put forward? However, I would advise its members to work for peace and to guide our economy towards the development of our natural resources which are our most important source of wealth. It is not our population that makes us rich, there are only 18 million Canadians, and in that sense we are in fact one of the poorest peoples in the world.

But we have, in Canada, something which, per capita, is not to be found anywhere else in the world, our natural resources. But with the administration we have had for 22 years, those resources have only brought us taxes and debts.

I was listening yesterday to the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys (Mr. Martineau) who said that we were enjoying very great economic stability. I hope it is true and he was not referring to the stability we had been "enjoying" until June 18, since in that case we could very well awaken tomorrow morning to find that we have to walk in our stocking feet for quite a spell.

Let us hope he was sincere in saying that we were enjoying great economic stability—

Hon. Paul Martineau (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, in view of the fact that I was being quoted by the hon. member I should like him to bear in mind that I was quoting a statement by the President of the United States to the effect that of all countries in the world, Canada was enjoying the greatest economic stability at the present time.

Mr. Langlois: I trust the President of the United States is better aware than we are of the economic situation of Canada because the fact that you ascribe to him your assertions shows that you are not quite certain whether there is any economic stability in Canada. You would be better advised to get some information first and then tell us what our economic situation is.

If our economy is stable, let us keep it that way. Instead of bragging about your achievements, you would be well advised to look to the future and show us the way.

As for the Canadian people, if you provide them with jobs and open up new expansion vistas so that they may prosper on Canadian soil instead of crossing the border, they will be willing to help you in all matters which are beneficial to Canada.

If, however, your efforts serve the exclusive interests of the United States, Canadians will refuse to follow you.

An hon. Member: Give us white berets.

Mr. Langlois: No, no white berets. Before thinking of headgear, you should have a head on your shoulders.

Mr. Speaker, Canadian citizens who are aware of our development potential and of our achievements to date, surely feel rather surprised when they think of all our resources. As our expansion possibilities seem to be used exclusively for war purposes, Canadians may well wonder what kind of government is at the helm.

Instead of using our resources for warfare or for the storage of nuclear weapons on our own soil, let us try to produce for peaceful purposes. Let us produce bread and butter for the hungry people of Canada.

If unemployment figures supplied to us are accurate, the situation is intolerable in a country such as ours. We are justified in considering the establishment of an economic development board without delay. It should be set up so as to allow the production and use of our goods in the best interests of Canada.

There was no trouble finding the money required to manufacture weapons in wartime. Money was found to clothe our soldiers, to manufacture bombs and shells and even to stage an international slaughter. It is always found for that purpose. But now that the war is over, it is impossible to find money to feed those who are hungry.

What can our young people hope for today? The storage of nuclear weapons. But they never hear about an improved economic situation, or about new openings to enable them to earn a living or assistance to complete their studies.

A third of the population is wondering today whether they were born merely to starve or to pay taxes, and then to be deprived of work because of alleged overproduction.

Those people are denied work, they have no place in our country, they are even denied the right to live.

Mr. Speaker, can a young man who is turned down for a job three or four times in succession, after he has been out of school for over a year, have a good opinion of his country and of its leaders?

Mr. Speaker, I have been a school teacher and I know some of my pupils who, two years after having left school, had not yet set foot in a factory to work. When they apply for a job they are told there are no openings, that employees are being laid off rather than new ones hired. We then find ourselves in the presence of young people having neither work nor hope of finding any. What happens then? Some young people are put in jail for having robbed a bank, a store or a warehouse. How have they reached that point? Are they thieves, or are they lazy? Not at all. The fault is ours; we, the leaders of Canada deny them the right to earn a living honourably in a country which should allow everyone to live.

At present the economic situation of parents forbids them to keep five or six children at home in idleness. You say they are lazy. I know some of them are not. I could put up a poster advertising jobs, and 1,500 persons would turn up in one night—and I challenge anyone of you to undertake the task of answering the telephone. You would then realize they are not lazy, but that if such a situation exists, it is our own fault, since we are unable to correct it.

We refuse to provide jobs for young people coming out of school, yet we send them to school and tell them: "Study and your future will be assured." They come out of school with a fine diploma, but also with a $3,000 debt. When they come out of school, they are full of enthusiasm, but a year later that enthusiasm has abated after they have been denied the right to work, to find jobs which would permit them to live in Canada, like other Canadian citizens, as any citizen is entitled to. And this is why some of them are arrested for bank robbery. They were not born bad or robbers, but the present system drives them up that blind alley. They are brought before courts where they are sentenced to 10 or 12 years in jail. After having been denied the right to live, they are sentenced to 10 years behind bars with a pension. Let each hon. member think about his own riding and see whether this is not the case. And we call that juvenile delinquency. Now, middle-aged workers that we cannot afford to maintain behind bars, become part of what we call juvenile delinquents. There is also a group between 60 and 65 years of age: they are called the senior delinquents. The evil affects all classes of society. Is society itself delinquent? Are we going to say that all Canadian citizens are bandits? Come now. People want to work, they want to produce and earn their living honourably at home. The parents have certainly not raised their children to see them spend the rest of their days behind bars. Mr. Speaker, a sentence of 10 or 12 years in jail leaves marks on an individual, it brands him for the rest of his life. This man will be bitter towards society for the rest of his life because society has denied him the means to earn a living.

And that is called juvenile delinquency. If some youngsters rob banks, the father and mother are not to be blamed for it. I put the blame on our present system, on our economy which should have provided work for these young men, so that they might earn a decent living and have three meals a day. Those are essential rights and should not be forgotten.

Mr. Speaker, I hear laughter. I hope hon. members are cracking jokes with their neighbours, for the situation which is to be found today in Canada is most serious. Several of them know neither the young, nor the middle-aged nor the old people. Some who are sitting here do not know anybody except, perhaps, during the four weeks before an election. Then they know everybody. Whether they be thieves, robbers, old or young, everybody is their friend. They cultivate their good will during those last four weeks. Then, after having won the election, they forget them for four years, and do not see them any more.

Some of them are serious-minded, and some less so. Some are working for the people, and others for the financial interests. Some wear out the seat of their pants because they seldom rise to speak. There they sit and work for the financial interests or for their own interests.

We should never forget one thing: that financial interests which stifle the people today will stifle tomorrow those who serve them. The same can be said for any action we take today, because we will have to account for it tomorrow.

There are some bank directors and, indeed, there are all over the place people who are working for the financial interests and not for the people. If those financial interests would, at least, help society develop its natural resources and work in unison with the Bank of Canada for the benefit of the Canadian people, so that we could begin to consume our surplus production ourselves. Let us start by giving the world the means of obtaining food instead of giving bombs as was done during the last war. It is all very well to be independent, but if you want peace, do not prepare for war.

An hon. Member: That is not what Caesar said.

Mr. Langlois: I shall conclude my remarks by saying that if the national economic development board uses Canadian finance to develop our Canadian natural resources, which are the wealth of this country, so that we have a completely Canadian production, one could say then, in all sincerity, that Canada belongs to Canadians, and then Canadians might rightly say: "We are proud to live in Canada because we are working for ourselves and not for foreign countries that may some day let us starve".

(Text):

Mr. Jack Davis (Coast-Capilano): Mr. Speaker, during the time available to me today I want to make three points. The first is that planning on a national scale is a necessity. The second is that such planning should be carried out essentially in human and not in monetary terms. The third is that effective co-operation between management and labour in this country will only come about if we have inspired leadership from government. This is evident to all.

As far as planning is concerned, I believe we have no choice because the business of government has become far too cumbersome, far too all embracing. Fifteen per cent or one in seven at least of the people employed in this country are working in the civil service. Roughly one third of our income is taken away from us in taxes. Government, by taxing us and influencing us in this way, is undoubtedly having a great deal to say about how we work and whether or not we prosper.

Government obviously then must be interested in looking ahead and planning intelligently. But it must do more than plan intelligently. It must also inspire industry, management and labour in this country. It can inspire them in various ways but one of the most effective ways, I contend, is to prepare competent forecasts of what is likely to happen assuming no change in present policies. If the results compared with the forecasts do not measure up to our fond hopes, then new targets must be established and these targets must be broken down so that they are understandable to industry and so that our various industries can themselves plan more intelligently.

In other words, it is a problem of communication. The government should not only know where it is going but should indicate where it would prefer to go and let industry, management and labour, working together bring about the desired results.

I have used the word "planning" throughout my comments so far. I believe in planning. We all believe in planning. We all believe in looking ahead and attempting to correct trends which we do not like and avoid results which are undesirable to us. But planning in my view, and this is important, comes second to freedom, particularly freedom of the individual. Plans, particularly specific plans laid down by government, must give way where they impinge on the freedom of the individual, the freedom of groups of individuals to go their own way and make their own livelihood as they see fit.

This planning must certainly be adapted to Canadian institutions. In my view planning at the top government level should be carried out by ministers of the crown. So far as economic affairs are concerned, I believe there should always be a continuing committee of the cabinet on economic affairs. I also believe that this cabinet committee should not be dominated by, or consist solely of, the Minister of Finance. If there is anything in the Social Credit philosophy in which I concur it is that money is essentially a tool. Our monetary affairs must be managed so as to make effective our plans for a better life, greater production and more jobs.

To me the Minister of Finance personifies the man who has control of money. He is holding the reins, and often he is putting on the brake. Certainly he is not the man in the cabinet to put the case for growth. He is not the man in the cabinet to put the case for humanity in the sense of more jobs. In this respect I am more impressed by the arrangements in the United Kingdom. The national economic development board, or "Neddy" as they refer to it in the United Kingdom, has on it not simply the minister of finance but Mr. Industry, the secretary of the board of trade, and also the minister of labour.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Is the chancellor of the exchequer not the chairman?

Mr. Davis: Yes, the chairman is the equivalent of our Minister of Finance. Therefore you have at the highest level in the cabinet not only a representative of monetary affairs in the country but also representatives of industry and of labour. I believe that in effective planning at the highest level in government we must follow this course and must hear not only the voice of those who look at our problems in monetary terms but also the voices of those who look at our problems in terms of getting the economy rolling more effectively and putting people to work in jobs where they can improve their efficiency, their income and their welfare.

We had this situation in the late 1940's and the 1950's in this country. We had a minister of industry and a minister of labour as well as a minister of finance who took an interest in over-all economic growth and planning. As evidence of this planning we had such activities as the royal commission on Canada's economic prospects and its preparation of long term forecasts. We also had co-operation with industry. Evidence of that is to be found in the quarterly meetings of ministers, top level civil servants and business economists the latter representing the views of the various industries and of labour across the country. In other words there was machinery, admittedly voluntary, which resulted in an exchange of views and the transmittal to industry and labour of the ideas of government as to trends and desirable courses of action. This worked, and I think we must return to an effective liaison of this type between government, management and labour in this Canada of ours.

What has happened since? The individuals concerned in those matters have largely been dispersed from Ottawa. Their advice is no longer available, with the result that these channels have largely dried up. I believe we should revive some such arrangement. I also think that this legislation, although admittedly a first step toward a national economic development board, should help us bridge this gap.

I believe there should be a secretariat to this cabinet committee on economic affairs. I believe its chairman should in effect have similar duties to those of the chairman of the proposed national economic development board. He should have around him a board of advisers. He should have under him a substantial staff, and this staff should be preparing long term economic forecasts.

In addition to that, having received instructions from the elected representatives or from the cabinet in respect of desirable targets, courses of action should be taken in respect of improving employment opportunities, correcting our adverse balance of trade with the United States, and so on.

I believe that some of the members of this staff should be acting as rapporteurs. They should act as secretaries for industry committees, committees substantially set up by the industries concerned. These committees should be composed of representatives of both management and labour. These rapporteurs, together with the representatives of industry and labour, will have their eyes lifted from the continuation of the relatively mundane activities of business to improving our national production, also by focusing their eyes on a common objective, that of improving our economy, they will thus be less inclined to quarrel about their differences; less inclined to argue between themselves in respect to wages, profits and so on.

I believe we have had at least one example of this type of thing in recent years. We had, first of all, the royal commission on Canada's economic prospects. Then as a result of the Borden commission a good deal of information was made available to government and to industry in terms of forecasts, particularly in respect of oil. The purchase of oil from outside our border has been one of the major causes of our imbalance of payments. We need to purchase more oil at home for our own consumption, and export more. This royal commission provided this sort of information. It provided a background against which the oil industry was able to do more effective planning. The government of the day took this information seriously and indicated to the oil industry what targets were desirable with regard to our international trade.

These targets, as I understand it, are in large part being met. This is a practical example of "indicative" planning, as the French call it, indicating targets to industry. After the target is indicated the industry bends its efforts toward achieving the target which is substantially in the national interest. If the targets are not met, other methods might have to be instituted by the government to ensure that such problems as the balance of payments are overcome.

Then there are the area boards. We now have an Atlantic development board. The area boards would learn a great deal from the deliberations of these various industry committees. I would envisage two or three dozen such committees publishing reports from time to time as to the prospects of particular industries and as to the changes which might be expected. The area boards could read these reports and understand what, conceivably, could happen with regard to a particular region of the country, what the possibilities were of a decline, an increase and so on, and when they were likely to occur. This would assist in the selection of alternatives for depressed areas, particularly areas of high unemployment.

We have, of course, in this business of planning, particularly in the execution of an effective plan, some rather difficult decisions to make. We cannot simply make forecasts. We cannot rely entirely on the prosperous, growing industries to co-operate, and then go along subsidizing or otherwise supporting the industries and areas which are in difficulties. The field of energy in this country represents roughly 10 per cent of our economy. We have industries which are growing in this field and industries which are declining. The oil and gas industries are expanding, and so is the production of hydro power. All the forecasts, however, indicate that over the next five or ten years the production and consumption of coal is likely to decline. Our governments, both national and provincial, say nothing or do not indicate otherwise. Certainly the policies they follow do not face up to the fact that not only are the requirements for coal declining but that the coal industry is not likely to make its way in competition with other forms of energy and therefore the number of people employed will be diminishing in ten years' time to about half or 40 per cent of those now employed.

These are the probabilities, these are the trends which our national economic development board, supported by an able secretariat, would have to report. Certainly these are the trends which would be revealed by an effective board reporting publicly and effectively at least once a year.

In so far as energy is concerned at the present time, we have at least four separate departments concerned with that subject. We have the Department of Trade and Commerce concerned with oil and gas. We have the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys concerned with coal and the powers of the dominion coal board. We have the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources concerned with hydro. We have, believe it or not, the Department of Veterans Affairs concerned with atomic energy. In my opinion none of these departments is represented effectively in the deliberations of this proposed national economic development board.

I think we should focus not only on the declining industries such as coal but on the future prospects of industries such as atomic energy. We have been spending currently about $20 million a year on coal subsidies of one kind and another. We are spending roughly $30 million a year on atomic energy. We have already put enough money into atomic energy in this country to build an oil pipe line from Edmonton to Montreal. In other words Montreal, in terms of economics, could be right next to the oil fields of Alberta.

We have decided more or less willy-nilly to go on pumping these tens of millions of dollars into atomic energy. Atomic energy is, perhaps, good for some parts of the country, but is essentially competitive with the resources of Quebec, British Columbia and other parts of the country which still have large untapped reserves of hydroelectric power. A national economic development board would certainly indicate that other priorities might be established in respect of subsidies and assistance for the energy industries. They would urge that by some means of adjustment we arrange that the emphasis be upon industries which are in the economic interest of the country rather than upon the ones which are either outmoded or may not be needed for some considerable time.

There are many other decisions which are difficult and which have to be made by the government, a government learning from the projections and deliberations of the national economic development board. The declining industries would be making people available who would have to be retrained for other jobs. Certainly the recent legislation with regard to industrial change and manpower adjustment is desirable in this connection. It can provide some machinery, but we should know in advance where these people are likely to be in surplus supply, what new skills are needed and how the people should be retrained. Only by looking ahead, revising our targets and establishing new targets, can we properly provide the direction and encouragement for those who are unemployed and those likely to need training as a result of great improvements in efficiency and productivity.

We have, in another area, the perennial argument between management and labour in respect of annual increases in wages, and so on. Managers, particularly managers concerned with finding export markets, will say, "Our productivity is only improving at the rate of 2 or 3 per cent a year. We cannot afford to pay more or we will be pricing ourselves out of world markets". Labour is inclined to be suspicious of this claim. But if we had an effective national economic development board complete with a capable secretariat, it would be giving industry and labour an indication year by year of the over-all upward trend in productivity gains. It would provide an order of magnitude of wage increases as a result of these improvements in productivity in the whole economy. Labour could certainly be pitching its demands more realistically in terms of wage increases, and management would have a better idea of where it was going, not only in respect of its domestic business but also its competitive position overseas.

Again, Mr. Speaker, with regard to scientific and industrial research, we do not do enough in this country. We should do more. Even with an increase in this type of expenditure we need to know where the emphasis should lie. In this connection government is certainly making the major outlay in this country. It should be placing those moneys into what in the future will be the growth industries, and not running counter to the mainstream of economic development throughout the world. One thing that alarms me very much in this mixed economy of ours, in which much of our income is generated by private enterprise, is that we tax private enterprise. On the other hand we participate, in the form of crown agencies and other government devices, in industries which we, by definition, say that private enterprise is unwilling, perhaps incapable, of carrying out. As a result we often find the greater part of government outlays going into industries which are declining, or certainly less efficient, and tend to restrict the more economic activities, those carried out by private enterprise, through taxation. This is certainly a mixed up concept of how to progress and how to make our country more productive.

A national economic development board that was really doing its job would indicate where the real growth prospects are, where the great improvements in efficiency were possible. It would indicate to the government that while subsidies may be necessary in some industry or in some area for a period of time, these should be tapered off and eventually terminated. In this way we would not continually be getting deeper and deeper into the morass, making ourselves less efficient in ever widening areas of our economy.

There are various attitudes to planning. The attitude, generally speaking, of management is favourable. Most people would expect that the formation of a national economic development board would cause a good deal of opposition in business. But business at the management level is accustomed to planning. In our preponderantly free enterprise system we have a great deal of collaboration now in respect of planning. Through the industrial associations, for example, the results of forecasts and plans are published. Even cost data is now made available to competitors in substantial areas of competition. Industry, in the sense of management, is prepared to do this sort of planning and looks to government, and relies upon government and hopes that government will be more predictable on this front.

We see, in the case of France, for example, that management of industry largely took the initiative in the formulation of the national plan for industry in that country. Labour, on the other hand, at least through the voices of their more socialistic representatives, has tended to oppose plans through the management route. Labour in the United Kingdom, for example, has not been very enthusiastic about the establishment of the national economic development board in that country. It saw sinister implications; it saw management in some fashion directing, in perhaps collaboration with the government, more rather than less of the nation's economic affairs. Certainly the trade unions in the United Kingdom have been very suspicious of the formation more recently of yet another board, nicknamed "Nicky", the board which has to do with the establishment of a national incomes policy in the United Kingdom. The hope there is that by preparing general economic data a better measure of what labour and industry might reasonably expect, in terms of wage increases and profits, would be available. The unions have tended to be very cool to this particular board and its purposes.

I trust that in this country we can have better communication between government, management and labour in these respects and that labour will begin to look upon an effective national economic development board as its opportunity for a voice, not only in respect of direction, but accomplishment of the national targets which a far seeing board would set up for us.

Government, I believe, sets the stage. It needs a competent secretariat to give it a feel as to the current, long term trends. I believe our elected representatives should substantially say what is desirable and what is not desirable in the main, and in the broadest context should indicate what targets should be achieved. I believe that in this way government itself could be consistent in respect of its own investment policies; it could be more consistent in respect of tax policies in times of slump and in times of boom. I believe that industry, with management and labour working together and with this over-all information and instruction, can, industry by industry, plan more effectively its own future. Certainly it could be more productive.

Mr. Berger: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the hon. member would permit a question?

Mr. Davis: I would prefer to finish, as my time is limited. I may have a few minutes left, and I will be glad to answer questions then. I believe that in this way we could have greater output, greater productivity, and this in turn would make possible higher incomes in this country. The consequence of higher incomes certainly could be broader welfare provisions without an increase in taxes. This is very desirable. It is the type of thing for which certainly the Liberal party is striving. It faces head on the problem of providing greater and more extended services to the public, and at the same time not increasing taxation and blunting the initiative of our people. This is very desirable and I believe it is possible with the proper type of democratic planning.

I want to return to the main points which I outlined at the beginning, Mr. Speaker. I believe that we need in this country a sense of national purpose. I believe that every one should be participating, government, management and labour, in this great program. I believe that to operate effectively a national economic development board co-operating with industry and with individual industry's boards set up voluntarily, working to indicated targets, can bring this about. We must take this board seriously. It is not ideal, but I think that in time it could perform a valuable function. I believe it could make use of, and help to expand, our existing democratic institutions and I believe that by following this course of intelligent, democratic planning we can make Canada strong and free.

Mr. Berger: May I ask the hon. member a question? I believe he did not exhaust the time at his disposal. In the course of his address, one which I think all of us enjoyed, the hon. member referred to Liberal economic and monetary policies. He said the elected representatives of the people should advocate those policies which they deemed desirable. I was wondering if he could tell us what part in planning is played by that keystone of Liberal economic and monetary policy, debt free money?

Mr. J. H. Addison (York North): In any discussion of Canada's future economic development a number of Canadians will spend a great deal of time talking about how they pioneered this continent—and then they drop the discussion. I am not suggesting we should forget about those pioneer days, but what concerns us now is the present. I say "the present" because we can hardly think of the future until we have caught up with the present. The present represents the circumstances we have to face as far as our export products are concerned.

The first thing we have to do in this country is to acknowledge that we are now taking hesitant steps in a direction which has already been pioneered in Europe and in other countries. We have to consider economic development as the opportunity of this age. In other ages opportunities lay with war, exploration, scientific discoveries and inventions. But there is a different opportunity open to us in this country today and that is the opportunity of economic development. We must, therefore, get rid of the economic superstitions and illusions we have been cherishing and realize that we can no longer exist in this hard shell we have placed around our borders. We must realize that though we were prosperous once we now have to take drastic steps to find a place in this new economic era.

During the last war, Europe underwent almost total destruction. Today it has become the co-leader of the productive world. We in Canada have an opportunity of moving into this new age without suffering the type of disruption which Europe had to endure. We do not possess the advanced industrial development of some other countries and we are, therefore, in a position to change our course more easily. It is most important that we in this country should take this big jump—a leap which will shatter all the ideas of outworn economic theories. We do not have as many men with the skill and knowledge necessary for this development and accordingly we must train such people. This can be done as a result of assistance by our government. The western nations have shown us how, with economic assistance in investment and as a result, they have been able to rehabilitate their economies.

Under the terms of the bill we are now discussing the chairman of the proposed board can be appointed for a period of office of ten years. His responsibilities are set out, along with the duties of the board, in one of the subsections. This chairman could become the second most powerful man in our country. I would suggest to the government that he should report to a group of ministers in the cabinet, namely a new minister of industry, the Minister of Finance, the Minister of Labour, the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of Trade and Commerce. The chairman should become part of this committee. In my experience, and in the experience of others, it is more efficient to have a chairman of a board of this type report to a select group of people so that those people may take the action which is necessary.

The national economic development board, if it is not to be just a phrase, must become the centre of our whole economic theory for this country. This is what the Japanese did after the last war and, as a result, they have become extremely successful. In short, with this national economic development board we are embarking on a new way of life, and the Canadian people, if they endorse this idea, must put everything they have into it. I say we must have Canada moving into gear. Let us not waste any more time than we have already wasted. The day of gradual growth is over. There are acquisitions and amalgamations. I suggest it is one of the great responsibilities of this board to set a standard for the yearly increase of productivity in this country. I think our first prime minister, Sir John A. Macdonald, had an outstanding idea in his national policy for economic development. None of us here anticipate a long life for this government and, therefore, it would prove an advantage if, in these days of minority government, we could get together as a parliament and adopt a Canadian policy. The co-operation of management and workers of which I have spoken comes about only as a result of prodding by the government. The new responsibility of government, of management and of the workers is the responsibility to work together for the national good, which, in the final sense, is the good of the individual.

All hon. members have, I am sure, read the report to the national productivity council of the mission to Europe. This is, in my opinion, the most outstanding achievement of this council. The report made one important thing clear. While labour management and government co-operation was not the factor wholly responsible for Europe's economic resurgence, nevertheless co-operation was the core of this whole development. There were, of course, other important factors. We all know of the heavy investment of United States capital in those countries, of the new plants which were built and the new equipment which was installed. Moreover, in those countries wage scales were lower than in the United States. This was a vital factor because a wage incentive remained—there was always the possibility of more pay being given for more work. On the part of ownership and management there was appreciation of the fact that profits could not be unrestricted. Of course, no economic system can develop without profit because profit is needed for reinvestment. But no management or employer can operate a business at abnormal profits while asking labour to produce more for less or for the same reward. As I have already stated, we have to do this in order to compete in world markets, which means that we have to price our products on a world competitive basis. I am not suggesting that everything that Europe has done is right, but I am suggesting that we must compete with these people, and if we are to compete with them, we must compete with them on the same basis. In this country not only must we go into the second half of this century with a responsible and modern government-management-worker co-operation and with new export ideas; we also have to do other things. This means quite simply that we have to supply our own people with the tools to compete on world markets, and these tools are the languages, the customs and the real needs of our potential customers.

What have we really done along this line? The government's productivity council in my opinion was poorly conceived, and so poorly conceived that in its first year it lost its main managerial representative and its main organized labour representative. I do not think it is necessary to describe the work of the labour-management council because we are all familiar with it, but it is constructive to note how the British system works and how it could be applied to Canada. It is also interesting and important to understand the industry-wide bargaining between labour and management which is the case in Europe. What I should particularly like to point out is that in the European countries, or in a large bulk of them, management is organized much the same as labour is organized, thus creating a balance of power in which the government sits in the centre and acts as a referee. What we have to do in the national economic development board, and also what the government has to do in the national economic development board, is to get public opinion behind it. I think we all recognize and understand how very important this is.

Can we compare today the first 62 days of this session with the first 100 days of President Roosevelt's term of office in 1933? I have a note here which says:

> On Thursday, March 16, 1933, less than two weeks after his inauguration, Roosevelt asked the congress for a new federal concept for the American farmer—national planning for U.S. agriculture.

That was in 1933. This country and this government, if this idea is to work, have to do something dramatic, such as that which happened in Ontario with Sir Adam Beck and the hydro, or as Roosevelt did with TVA, or as the Egyptians have recently done with the Aswan dam, or as we Canadians did when the St. Lawrence seaway was conceived and placed into operation, when we decided that if the American people would not co-operate with us in this great project we would go it alone. I believe that we have to understand planning in its valuable, modern, capitalistic and free enterprise sense. The Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) said in the last election, as quoted in the Globe and Mail of October 25, 1961, that "the issue in the next election would be free enterprise versus socialism". I think we all realize now that this was not the issue in the last election and I doubt very much that it will be the issue in the next election.

It could be that a lack of any planning at the top is at the bottom of our economic troubles today. The essential factor in planning of this type is that it should not be put solely into administrative agencies, which are uncontrollable by their nature, but that the agencies work and be controlled within the framework of the parliamentary system. Governments can be put out of office, which is why any system of planning must be controlled by the elected representatives of government who can protect the national good. Economic planning boards or productivity councils appointed by the government should be presided over by a permanent secretary, but come within the jurisdiction of a national economic development council chaired by a minister of the crown, with other ministers as members and with representatives from industrial management, agriculture, trade unions and universities. What has to be done now in what eminent economists call the "break-through moment" is this. No longer can we look for gradual improvements. This is a "take-off crisis", and there must be a leap in getting off the ground, which is the most difficult phase of planning. The initial leap has to be pushed and pursued, and it will be quite a time before it can, as in the European common market countries feed on itself. There can be no new economic development until at least one tenth of the national income over and above the investment needed to maintain a growing population at the same standard of living is put into productive investment.

We should also remember and should understand that industrial productivity for export and international trade is not our only consideration. There is a great deal of work yet to be done in this country in community services, such as highways, transport, communications, distribution and credit. We can learn one very valuable lesson. During the building of our railways in this country there was provided a major economic impetus to the economy. We used our Canadian talents and materials to this end, and we have by no means yet completed our transportation and communications systems across the country. We are now also up against the growing problems of extra people moving into urban areas because of higher and greater efficiency in farming areas. This is going to mean that these people must be retrained for more productive jobs. As we are preparing for a major economic change in development, we are going to be caught for a long time in a dilemma between not spending enough on our foundation programs, starving our economic development and conjuring up inflation by putting investment into unproductive, though sometimes popular, channels.

What I am going to say now does not make for political popularity, but it must be said in the interests of genuine and stable permanent development. We need jobs in this country and we need them very badly; but there is the danger of confusing the creation of jobs with economic growth. Uneconomic investment made to create what can be only temporary jobs depletes the country's resources. Unemployment is a danger certainly, and it is a terrible problem; but stagnation is more dangerous since it produces more unemployment.

I would therefore suggest that our economic planning must consider the direction of investment as well as the finding of capital. I would also suggest that our N.H.A. loans available to people in order to build homes should also be available to people in order to build factories, and in cutting the rate of unemployment which is recommended by this board, for the producing of products that can be sold competitively outside our country. We need capital and we need external capital. Europe and the Marshall plan is an excellent example. We must remember that we must not sell off all of our natural assets in order to acquire this capital. Most rate impetus in an economy is based upon the influx of foreign capital but this must be controlled, and it certainly was controlled in the case of the United States.

I should now like to discuss some countries such as Holland and Belgium. These are useful examples, I believe. Even as the minister pointed out, in creating this national economic development board we must remember our own particular problems. It is interesting to note that a small country such as Holland exports 50 per cent of its products and the great emphasis that is placed in that country upon a lower wage scale. However, this is accompanied by full employment. Wages in that country are increased only on the basis of productivity. However, they are only increased with the proviso that by increasing wages and prices they do not place themselves outside the pricing of world competition. There is a strong sense of friendship between labour, management and government in that country.

There is also the interesting case of Poland with respect to the production of agricultural products. These people have the ability and the land with which to produce wheat but instead of producing wheat in sufficient volume to feed their country, they import it. Poland has found it can produce more productive products which can be sold and which are more valuable to them, than is the production of wheat for their own consumption. This is the kind of thing that I suggest we in Canada must do. What can we produce for ourselves and what is most profitable to the Canadian people?

I suggest that we must take this leap into modern economic development in Canada. We must provide the leadership for voluntary cooperation for mutual improvement. We must employ new concepts for labour management relations with the government as a partner—and I am sure that all of us have the government as a partner—and I suggest as a partner and not as a big brother. We in this chamber have the responsibility of guiding and controlling the total destinies of capital, management and labour. We must abandon any isolationist ideas and understand that today we are part of a large international community. Most of all, we must have in this country a government which will look upon Canada not regionally but as a great nation among nations of this world.

National Economic Development Board

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, there have been made in this debate some interesting speeches to which members of this group have been very pleased to listen. While we were listening to these speeches I was reminded of the change of climate in this chamber over the space of a few years. While the group of which I am a member for years has advocated the necessity for planning in freedom to provide a measure of basic security for all Canadians, members of other parties failed to agree with them. It is not so long ago that one of the members of the free enterprise parties in this house rose in his place and stated that any member of this house who suggests planning is suggesting reducing the Canadian people to slavery. I therefore think we must take some credit for creating a climate at least that is willing to consider this idea, if in some instances only in theory.

A perusal of the minister's speech and an examination of the bill very carefully in the time at my disposal causes me to say that in my opinion on this occasion the minister has blotted his McCutcheon.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Nowlan: That is corny.

Mr. Herridge: The minister is such a kindly person that when speaking on the resolution preceding the bill he reminded me of the country doctor giving his patient a dose of soothing syrup and saying, "This may not cure you but it will make you feel a lot better". Without a doubt he is one of the most congenial and humane members of this house to man the ramparts of capitalism on this occasion.

I speak as a democratic socialist who believes that economic planning under the control of the parliament of Canada is the only alternative to the political dictatorship of communism and the growing economic dictatorship of monopoly capitalism. This afternoon there has been some reference to the question of freedom. The members of this group take this point of view with respect to the development of this economy because we believe in freedom. We do not believe that it should be the freedom of any Canadian to remain unemployed over a long period of months because his services are unrequired. The type of planning in which we believe is planning that places the responsibility for major policy in the hands of the people's representatives and not in the hands of the directors of a few corporations in Canada and not as now, should I say, in the majority of cases so far as large scale industry is concerned, in directorships held in New York and other large United States cities.

[Mr. Addison.]

With all deference to the minister may I say that in my opinion this legislation is merely political window dressing. We will support it because it represents an idea. It shows we are making progress. They even accept the word "planning" now, even though they do not take action in that direction. I think it is a sop to the current interest in planning and the demand for planning in many quarters—a legislative wind, shall I say, to direct this current of thought into safe free enterprise planning.

When I criticize this legislation or any other legislation for members of our group, we do not do it with the thought that other people, because they believe other things are more appropriate, are unprincipled or immoral. We are simply placing on record our point of view in this house. Our points of view are largely determined as a result of our environment, our experience and our willingness to consider these problems as a result of reading, association, contacts with others and so on. In my few remarks which are always brief from my point of view, I will endeavour to prove my contentions by comments on the minister's speech, on the terms of the bill, on some of Senator McCutcheon's statements outside the house, and by reference given to this legislation by the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin) to the minister's remarks. I refer to his blessing on the principle of the bill. I am very glad he has returned to the chamber because I want to say a few complimentary things about him later.

I listened to the minister's speech very carefully and I thought it was very well put from his point of view. I also read it carefully. But I notice that this planning board will act in a very nebulous advisory capacity. There are no particular projects mentioned. There are no definitive suggestions as to the direction or approach that the board should take to our economic problems. There are no funds provided for any economic research in this direction or even research into projects rather than simply pure research into the mechanical aspects of economics. I do agree with the minister when he says that the aim is to provide a Canadian aspect to our development, rather than going in another direction; but after reading the terms of the bill I am afraid we will find that once again it is Canadian in name only, so far as major control of our economy is concerned.

I want to make a few comments on the bill and when the minister replies at the conclusion of the debate no doubt he will answer the questions I raise. We are very interested and have been for years in the proper development of our natural resources as the basis for the continued prosperity of this country and the maintenance of a reasonable and decent material standard of living. What we want to know is, does the bill anticipate planning with the provinces for the proper conservation and development of our natural resources? That is basic to the development of our whole economy. We realize that there are problems in this connection, but in our opinion it is the responsibility of both the federal and provincial governments to co-operate in planning the conservation, development and utilization of our natural resources. If we fail to do that in the near future, possibly we will have lost the opportunity for all time.

Does this bill provide for planning to return the ownership and control of foreign investment to Canadian governments and to Canadians generally? That is a question we want answered. Does the bill anticipate the establishment of a national development fund to promote public investment and does it anticipate the mobilization of private Canadian capital? In this connection I want to refer to the pipe line, not the debate in the house and the abuse of the rules of the house by the government of the day but the opportunity that was lost at that time because the government then did not believe in public ownership, in principle. The former Liberal government lent a large American corporation $86 million, I believe, to build a pipe line across Canada. That $86 million should have been public investment, and if it had been the investment would be paying a good return to the Canadian people at this time.

Does this bill anticipate legislation to correct the balance of payments problem? If we do not correct it within the next few years we will remain in financial servitude to the United States. The balance of payments problem arises primarily from foreign investments. Does the bill anticipate promotion by the government of Canadian participation in ownership and management of foreign owned industries? That is the first step that has to be taken by government. Does it anticipate the conversion of shares into bond issues so that we can look forward in the years to come to paying off this indebtedness, as was done in the United States, as was done in Sweden and as was also done in Norway years ago? Does this bill anticipate the type of planning that provides a system of taxation of dividends that will give the Canadian government control over the various aspects of the country's economic development?

Does this type of planning anticipate regulation to ensure operation of private enterprise to the advantage of Canadian consumers and workers generally? Does it anticipate regulation that will make foreign owned industries conform to Canadian national policies with respect to export markets? That is something on which any government should take action in the very near future.

Does this bill anticipate the implementation of regulations that will prevent the hobbling of secondary industry by foreign owners? In that connection I should like to quote from the Globe and Mail of Tuesday, December 4, 1962. This situation is recognized even by persons who believe in the free enterprise system. The article from which I wish to quote is a dispatch from Ottawa under the heading, "Ottawa Viewpoint, Canadian Growth Lag Laid To Hobbling By Foreign Ownership", and reads in part as follows:

> A professor of economics at Laval University, Roger Dehem, has looked back over the past five years of what he calls Canada's stunted growth—

One would not have thought that if one listened to the Associate Minister of National Defence (Mr. Sevigny) last evening, but we all have different points of view.

> —and offers an explanation for its cause—the hobbling of secondary industry by foreign owners.

The article continues, quoting the professor:

> "I suggest that a basic factor inhibiting the growth of secondary manufacturing in Canada is not the smallness of the home market but the satellitic nature of most of our important firms," Professor Dehem asserted.

Then he goes on to say:

> "The Canadian market has thus been glutted with high cost, high priced and often inferior American products. The inefficiency that is inherent in this structure seems to be a main cause of our stagnation in the past few years."
>
> Professor Dehem charged that Canadian subsidiaries of foreign corporations are deliberately restricted to the domestic market rather than spreading out into world markets, and that high protection made them too inefficient to compete abroad.

No doubt this gentleman did not make this statement off the cuff. He has studied the question, and this is a problem that has got to be considered by those responsible to the government for a measure of report, shall I say, recommendation and so on with respect to planning.

I wish to make a few comments now with regard to the Minister without Portfolio whose name is Senator Wallace McCutcheon. I do so because, whatever happens with respect to the bill and whoever is chairman of the new board, we know that the grey eminence in the background will be this senator because he has been conscripted, I would almost say, to rescue the government from the economic morass into which it has sunk. I wish to quote from an article in Maclean's magazine of October 6, 1962 by Ken Lefolli headed, "Can These Men Run Canada Better?" It reads in part as follows:

"Whether the Prime Minister has realized it yet or not, Wally McCutcheon's threat to resign is all he needs to win an argument with anybody in the cabinet, including the Prime Minister himself."

These are the words of a man close to the cabinet who has worked with both McCutcheon and Nowlan. His opinion is the same one held by many other men in the upper ranks of government and business.

"John Diefenbaker has to satisfy Wally McCutcheon or wreck the Conservative party with every businessman in Canada, once and for all" the same man says. "McCutcheon is smart enough to know he's got the lever, and tough enough to pull it."

The article goes on to quote a caption in the Toronto Star of September 30, 1957 which reads: "Praises Canada's Drift Toward Welfare State." The account of a speech McCutcheon had made to the Canadian Club follows. Relating to the vast expansion of government and voluntary health and welfare programs, McCutcheon said:

You might expect me as a businessman to denounce this whole movement... as a dangerous, if not to say, pernicious thing. On the contrary, I regard it not only as one of the greatest achievements of private enterprise—

You know, the achievement is to rescue the casualties of capitalism and keep them alive in the meantime.

—and a modern industrial society, I consider it necessary to the continued existence of both.

Now, there are two different conceptions of social welfare. The one is that it is based on promoting the continued existence of the free enterprise system that makes the welfare society necessary because it props up the free enterprise system. E. P. Taylor has suggested another explanation that takes into account not only McCutcheon's good will—I am not questioning the hon. gentleman's good will. I am sure if a neighbour met him on the way from the parliament buildings to Wellington street and he was starving, the hon. gentleman would give him two bits.

E. P. Taylor has suggested, as I have said, another explanation that takes into account not only McCutcheon's good will, but the more conventional economic motive of self-interest. Taylor is reported to have said, "What's good for Canada is good for Argus," when he was first asked to comment on McCutcheon's move, "and Wally McCutcheon is good for Canada". We cannot look into the future, and only the future can tell us whether or not that is true. Taylor's paraphrase of Charlie Wilson's statement, "What's good for General Motors is good for America", is less laughable than the original.

This afternoon one of our friends opposite in the Social Credit party made a very interesting speech. He showed the same concern as other members of this house with our economic and social problems. He was complaining of the system. I give the hon. gentlemen credit. I am sure their hearts are in the right place, but they see us through a glass darkly. I am sure the hon. member for Fraser Valley (Mr. Patterson) will like that scriptural allusion. He was also complaining about the system. He really wants a form of planning, but he will not use the word. He substitutes the word "orientation". I think that is a good exercise in semantics. He used the word "orientation" when he wanted planning and would not use that word.

However, I thought the hon. gentleman's speech and the approach by the sponsors of this bill clearly indicated that the planning they envisage will be very different from the planning we consider necessary to provide permanent economic stability for Canada. We do not overlook the difficulty. We are not suggesting there is some complete, overnight solution. We are suggesting a change of direction with regard to our approach to these questions.

Last evening, I listened to the Associate Minister of National Defence (Mr. Sevigny) with great interest. He talked about the prosperity that this government had brought to Canada. We find that in 1962 the profits of the major companies in Canada were considerably increased. I am not going to take the time of the house to deal with the figures. Possibly some other member of this group will. Profits were considerably increased. While Canada and Canadians generally are suffering certain economic disadvantages, and while small businessmen and workers are unemployed, including farmers and others, the profit ratio rose. At the same time we have something over 400,000 people unemployed at the present time.

At the same time, the minister said we have got to find ways and means of increasing production. They will not find a solution to this question until they accept their responsibilities as representatives of the people of Canada in this connection. I should like to make another reference to this question of planning and the approach of those who are now using the word. In the Gazette of December 11, 1962, there is a report of a speech by R. A. Emerson, vice president of the Canadian Pacific Railway. The article reads in part:

Master plan for economy is opposed.

C.P.R. Vice President R. A. Emerson of Montreal said Monday Canada needs to plan for the future but must avoid at all costs having its economic life ordered and predetermined according to a master plan.

He said:

I have interpreted the remarks of the Minister of Finance in the house to mean that the national economic development board is intended to provide an advisory service and, more particularly, to look ahead, to detect the trend of things to come and to recommend policies for government to assist in achieving economic development.

The article reads:

Mr. Emerson said a planned economy must interfere with the normal functions of the market place.

What he means is, interfere with the normal decisions of the large corporations of this country. I think these remarks by this gentleman indicate that their approach to planning and the approach of this government to planning is opposed to ours. It is the same attitude as we have had towards planning in every direction. They are willing to have a measure of planning, provided there is no interference with the vested interests in this country.

I want to refer for a moment or two to the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin) and to his support for the principle of the bill. I always listen with interest to the hon. member for Essex East when he speaks with his organ-like tone. He gave his blessing to the principle of the bill, singing seven-fold amens to the minister's statement on the principle. You know, he is an impressive speaker, the hon. member for Essex East. I remember a few sessions ago sitting in the house when the minister spoke for some 40 minutes. I walked out to the front entrance, and a gentleman from Texas went to the front door just as there was a clergyman coming in. The Texan went up to this clergyman and said, "Sir, can you tell me the name of this cathedral"? This illustrates that the hon. member for Essex East is such an impressive speaker he causes people to believe they are in a cathedral.

Why did this hon. member endorse the principle of the bill and then later on make some qualifying comments? The reason is that the party on the government side of the house and the party on the opposite side of the house, the Liberal party, both believe in the free enterprise system as practised to date. However, there are a lot of humane members amongst these parties and they are quite willing to spend a bit of money to rescue the casualties of this system. Now, those who feel that the progressive Liberals worship on the altar of free enterprise propped up by the welfare state—

Mr. Speaker: Order; I regret that the clock has imposed its sanction upon the hon. member and we must now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper.

PRIVATE BILLS

Mr. Nicholas Mandziuk (Marquette): May I ask the consent of the house to give precedence to item No. 373 on today's order paper, which stands in my name? This is Bill No. S-10.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Marquette seeks unanimous approval of the house to advance item 373, which is the second reading of Bill No. S-10, to incorporate the Ukrainian Canadian Foundation of Taras Shevchenko.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

SECOND READING—SENATE BILL

Bill No. S-10, to incorporate the Ukrainian Canadian Foundation of Taras Shevchenko.

MILDRED DAWSON MEAKINS

The house in committee on Bill SD-4, for the relief of Mildred Dawson Meakins—Mr. Mandziuk—Mr. Chown in the chair.

On Clause 1—Marriage dissolved.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I should like to say a few words this afternoon on this particular petition. I should like to again point out to the committee that people in the province of Quebec are faced with certain problems that do not normally arise in the province from which I come. I think these problems are worth some consideration by the committee. In looking over the evidence of this particular petition I find attached a number of documents. There is the marriage certificate and several other documents, including a settlement by the Superior Court of the province of Quebec as to the maintenance of the children. I think there is strong evidence here that this is one of the things the committee should look into. However, I should like to refer the committee to the fact that attached to this petition is an additional document that sometimes is attached to petitions, though not very often. In this particular case it is a document that was tabled originally in the Superior Court of the province of Quebec, and it is a contract between the plaintiff and the defendant.

The marriage certificate is here. The marriage was registered in the church of St. Andrew and St. Paul, in Montreal, on June 8, 1939. There is also attached a document which is a contract in a legal sense. I think this warrants some consideration. We are all well aware of the fact—and this is something that we have deplored on many occasions—that in the province of Quebec women have little right to property. In the first place, this contract contains a stipulation as to the ownership by the lady of property of her own, so that the property she brings into the marriage will remain her own. Therefore if something happens, this property will be under her administration and will be separate from the property of her husband. The second section of the contract, however, reads this way:

> The sum of $25,000 to be paid to the future wife by the future husband, his heirs and legal representatives within three months after the dissolution of the said marriage, with the right to him to make payments on account during the said marriage, either by investments in the name of the said future wife, by mortgage or hypothec upon or the purchase of immovable property, or in any other way.

It goes on to say:

> Should the said future husband during the said marriage become insolvent, the said future wife shall thereupon have the right to claim and demand payment of the said sum of $25,000 or any part thereof remaining unpaid—

The Chairman: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but the rule as to relevancy has come into play with respect to the quotation he is now making. I thought I should now caution him about the reference to marital settlements or to maintenance or disposition of any children of the marriage, because these are matters that are not within the jurisdiction of the federal government but are, rather, within the strict jurisdiction of the provincial government concerned, and are therefore not applicable or related to the bill which is under consideration.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I would humbly disagree that they are not under consideration. The point I wish to make involves collusion. I say that this bill is not in the public interest, and it is not in the public interest because of the inclusion of this section in the contract. In this particular case I think it will be shown quite clearly that the incompetence of the other place, the committees of the other place and this house to deal with this particular matter—

The Chairman: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member again, but there should be no reflection on the other place at any time in the course of debate, as he well realizes.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I would submit that I have not reflected on the other place, but just on our ability to handle legal matters, with regard to which we are not competent or equipped to handle. I intended no reflection upon the other place other than that.

The Chairman: Order. The word "incompetence" was used and that was the word upon which I rose.

[Mr. Peters.]

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, this contract also includes this section:

> But it is further agreed that in the event of the future wife predeceasing the future husband during the said marriage, the said sum of $25,000 or any investments or payments which may have been made on account thereof, and also all insurances on his life effected or which may hereafter be effected for her benefit or payable to her, shall return to and be the property of the future husband, without the heirs of the future wife having any right therein or claim thereto.

I say that we cannot grant this divorce if it is established that it is against the interests of the nation. If it is against the principles of justice and the crown, this divorce cannot be granted. I suggest that in these cases the petitioner must call the defendant and prove that collusion has not taken place, because in this instance, for that one evening of adultery this woman has been paid $25,000. That is probably an even more expensive piece of seduction than happened in the days of Cleopatra. I suggest that this is not in the interests of the public, and there are laws and regulations under laws which indicate that this is so. I suggest that the burden of proof is on the plaintiff to show that this did not happen. Because this was an uncontested case we can only assume that when the woman went out and committed the adultery which resulted in this divorce action, she was being paid the sum of $25,000 for that adultery. I also suggest that it may be even worse than that. If we read this contract we find that the payment can be started before the divorce action takes place. It may be that there is an added inducement to commit adultery in order to accomplish the end that would result in divorce.

I have no objection, and I expect that most hon. members have no objection, to the fact that the first part of the contract is written in this way. It is the right of the province to decide how the disposition of property should be arrived at between its citizens, having regard to civil rights. But I think we must consider the interests of the nation and the public good, and the fact that you cannot make arrangement for an offence to be committed before the offence takes place. This is something that is well recognized by lawyers, who understand these things much better than I do. It is unfortunate that I have not the legal training or the knowledge that would allow me to cite the cases in which this principle has been established—

Mr. Crestohl: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order—

Mr. Peters: —but it is a fact that there are cases where separation agreements—

The Chairman: Order. The hon. member for Cartier has risen on a point of order.

Mr. Crestohl: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order, perhaps to enlighten the hon. member, notwithstanding his agitation about the document which he read to the committee, unfortunately the committee cannot consider it. That is a premarital contract. Whether the hon. member likes it or not, this is a premarital contract passed before the proper authorities in the province of Quebec and the house cannot pronounce itself one way or another in any manner which could affect that contract. It is a contract which deals purely with rights and properties within the province and for this reason I submit the hon. member is entirely out of order. If the hon. member has no other matter to raise, I suggest this should be pointed out to him, since the house has no jurisdiction whatsoever over this aspect of the question. I do not wish to pronounce myself as to the conclusions he is drawing. They may be proper or improper. The point is that if we consider them we would be dealing with a matter which is entirely within the jurisdiction of a province and, therefore, this committee should not pronounce on it in any way.

Mr. Scott: On the point of order, I should like to disagree with the last speaker and urge you to allow my hon. friend from Timiskaming to continue. I may say that I disagree completely with him and wish to urge the committee to support the bill, when I get an opportunity to do so.

The agreement to which my hon. friend is referring is an actual part of the evidence upon which the other place reached its conclusion with regard to the granting of this divorce, so I do not see how we could be precluded from discussing the evidence which was considered in the other place as a basis for the decision reached in connection with this bill. If we are not to be allowed to discuss the evidence, I think we are precluded from discussing this matter at all. I am sure any solicitor would take the view that in discussing the merits of the bill we are entitled to look at the evidence upon which a decision to pass it is based, and for that reason and also because a serious charge against these people has been made—a charge I intend to repudiate—I think the hon. member should be allowed to continue.

The Chairman: The committee has before it clause 1 of Bill No. SD-4 which reads as follows:

> The said marriage is hereby dissolved and shall be henceforth null and void to all intents and purposes whatsoever.

When there is a question of the administration of justice within a province and of a contract made within the jurisdiction of that province, a civil contract made under a type of law which is different from that which has application from the viewpoint of the federal government, I have great difficulty in accepting that as relevant in a discussion of a simple clause such as I have quoted. This is where I am finding my difficulty.

Mr. Peters: I am basing my argument on the contention that this divorce, if allowed, would not be in the public interest, in the same light as collusion or other things which are definite bars to the granting of divorce petitions. These documents are not documents which are solely in my possession. They are documents which are in the possession of the house. They are not separate from this particular divorce application; they are attached to the official documents and are part of them. I suggest that though collusion may have taken place in the province of Quebec where the law of the province of Quebec as to collusion or domicile applies, when the plaintiff appears before parliament asking for the divorce he must abide by the regulations which apply to the granting of divorce in the dominion of Canada under the legislation setting up the House of Commons and the Senate as a divorce court.

While I am not making any comment on this evidence as it relates to the property settlement, I am drawing the attention of the committee to this because it relates to what I would consider as being an absolute bar to the granting of this divorce, specifically the existence of conditions which would lead one to speculate as to what might have happened in the field of collusion.

The Chairman: The chairman and the committee of the whole are not bound by any admission or rejection of evidence by the other place or by another committee. If I were hearing the case myself, my view of a civil contract would be that this is completely extraneous. This view is prompted by the fact that there is no jurisdiction here for us to look at it at all, being a matter within the sole jurisdiction of a province. For this reason it appears to me that any reference to it is completely out of order as the bill is before the Chair in its present state. I am willing to hear more argument on the point but I might say this, that in many instances exhibits are filed before a committee which are completely irrelevant to the cause which that committee is trying to determine, which is, in this instance, whether or not there is evidence to support a decree under clause 1 of the bill before us.

Mr. Scott: With great respect, Mr. Chairman, surely on reflection that line of reasoning cannot stand up. You have here before you a bill saying we should dissolve a marriage. Presumably the opinion has been advanced that it should be dissolved. In order for us to decide whether or not consent should be given to the passage of this bill, surely we are entitled to look at the evidence which was laid before the other place whose committee considered this bill in great particularity. Are you suggesting, Mr. Chairman, that we are not entitled to consider any of the evidence laid before the other place? I should be glad to hear just what you think we can and cannot discuss in measures of this kind.

As you well know, Mr. Chairman, even if there is evidence sufficient to support the passage of the bill, any member can raise what he considers to be a bar to the passage of the legislation, notwithstanding the existence of such evidence. Any court in the land will permit various issues to be raised in divorce matters which constitute a bar to a decree even if there is adequate evidence to support such a decree. That is what my hon. friend is attempting to do. He is saying that as part of the evidence properly admitted in the other place there is material which constitutes a bar to the passage of the bill, notwithstanding that there may be perfectly good grounds—and in this case I am satisfied the evidence is adequate. He wants to raise a serious matter in his mind which would normally bar the passage of this bill in an ordinary court if what he says is true. In these circumstances, Mr. Chairman, how can you preclude him from referring to the evidence upon which he must make his claim?

Mr. Peters: May I draw your attention, Mr. Chairman, to a passage appearing in Dominion Law Reports, Volume 3, 1957, page 321? This is the case of Woods v. Woods which was heard before the Ontario supreme court (Mr. Justice Rose, J.) on April 22, 1927. The heading is: "Divorce and Separation VIII—Separation agreement—Founded partly on illegal consideration—void."

A separation agreement founded partly on a legal and partly on an illegal consideration cannot be held valid as to such of it as is legal and invalid as to the rest, but must be held void in toto. (Eastview v. R.C.E.C. Ottawa (1918) 47 D.L.R. 47, 44 O.L.R. 284, applied)

What that means I do not know.

In this case if the marriage contract in effect at the time is shown to have something wrong with it, is shown to have an illegal section to it, then it is void. I believe this applies to the whole question of divorce. If part of a case is illegal, then so is the rest. I am sure that if we indicated that in this case the detectives had perjured themselves, and can prove to your satisfaction, Mr. Chairman, then that will be a bar to the granting of this divorce. If we can indicate there is some doubt about it, that the contract establishing this marriage is not legal, then the divorce action would be void.

I think that we should look at this in light of the over-all picture. I think it is an established fact that the institution of marriage is for the good of the nation. The institution of marriage is a very worthy part of our common law. For this reason, if this petitioner found that his wife had committed adultery and that he had a bar to this divorce, then the sum of $25,000 seems to be an unusual penalty for him to pay. I suggest that the common good is not going to be served if this petitioner is going to have to pay $25,000 to do what other people would do without paying $25,000 costs, and that this was put in in the beginning.

There is a case in English law which unfortunately I do not have before me, but it is similar to cases I do have before me where the circumstances are a little different. A man asked a woman to live with him under a common law arrangement, and he agreed that if he left her within ten years he would pay her $50,000. When this case was taken to court the court held that this was against the common interest, because the setting up of the contract was not in the national interest or for the public good. I note that the contract says that it will be paid in lieu of dissolution of the marriage. There are, of course, two ways of dissolving a marriage. One is by death, which is the normal way, and the second is by divorce. The contract says that should the husband predecease the wife the money will not have to be paid to the heirs of the wife. In other words, if death was the factor dissolving the marriage the $25,000 would not be paid to the woman's estate; it is only paid during her lifetime. Therefore, the conclusion is that the only reason for the $25,000 is that the marriage will be dissolved by divorce.

Mr. Chairman, I maintain that if this is so then it is open to many abuses. I am not prepared to state that this is the case because I think you would have to know something about the facts other than the contract alone. But I do believe that this case should be referred back to the committee and that the committee be asked to call the respondent before them so they can ascertain whether or not there was such an arrangement or collusion so as to obtain this divorce. I think this is part of the responsibility of the petitioner, because he has brought this case before us. If what I say turns out to be the fact, we cannot grant this divorce because there will be the absolute bar of collusion: there will be an arrangement. If we are to be honest at all in these divorce cases I think we are under an obligation to call before us the respondent, if necessary by subpoena, to ascertain on behalf of the good of Canada and the law we are representing whether or not this is the fact. This is one of the reasons why I said we appear to be in conflict here, because no question was raised by our own committee on this question, and as far as I can ascertain no question was raised in the other place. For these reasons, Mr. Chairman, I suggest that this case should be returned to the committee for further investigation, with the direction that the parties be recalled before the committee to discuss this question of divorce settlement.

Mr. Chairman, there are other cases on this, and I should like to read one contained in the Dominion Law Reports on page 323.

The Chairman: Order. I have allowed the hon. member some additional time because of interruptions as a result of points of order which were raised. The quoting of authorities of law, which has been allowed, and which are authorities on the common law, not on the French civil code which is applicable in the province of Quebec, tend to be an attempt on the part of the hon. member to construe this committee as a court, which it is not. I just refer to that before I call on the hon. member for Danforth.

Mr. Byrne: May I just ask the hon. member a question?

The Chairman: The time of the hon. member has expired. The committee would have to give unanimous consent. Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Byrne: I am wondering if the hon. member could tell the house just what federal statute this pre-marital contract appears to violate. I have never heard of any actual federal statute which provides for the dissolution of marriage.

Mr. Peters: The law which it stems from is to be found in volume 23 of the United Kingdom statutes, 1857 Victoria, which act was established to amend the law relating to divorce and matrimonial causes in England. This law applied to Canada through confederation under the British North America Act, under which act sole power was given to the federal government in matters of matrimony and divorce.

Mr. Scott: Mr. Chairman, I should like to take a position directly opposed to that of the hon. member for Timiskaming and to urge the committee to disregard almost everything he said, and as a consequence of that unanimously to pass the bill and grant the relief asked for. The difficulty of the hon. member for Timiskaming is that he has all the facts backwards. When you start out with all the facts backwards you are liable to reach the wrong conclusion. The hon. member for Timiskaming also has a limited knowledge of the law, as he has demonstrated this afternoon. This also makes it difficult for him to adjudicate upon judical matters. That is one of the reasons why we have complained about this procedure of handling divorce and have taken the position that none of us are really competent to consider matters of this kind. There is this serious aspect to what the hon. member for Timiskaming has said. He is making a serious charge against some very responsible people.

An hon. Member: Very rich people.

Mr. Scott: Well, they could still be responsible even though they are rich. I should like to dissociate myself completely from the allegations he has made against these people. After having reviewed the file I desire to say that I wish all divorces were as good as this one. The evidence is excellent. Adequate provision has been made for the wife. Adequate provision has been made for the children. There is no reason in the world why this divorce could not go through.

The hon. member for Timiskaming has stated that here there is an ante-nuptial contract under the terms of which the wife is to receive $25,000 in the event of dissolution of marriage. He has said that because the wife committed adultery she should not get the $25,000. The fact is that it was not the wife who committed adultery but that it was the husband who did so; and it is the wife who was bringing action against the husband because of his conduct, and not the reverse position. Hence any suggestion of collusion would be a grave slight on the woman's integrity and should not be regarded by the House of Commons at all.

However, in reviewing these ante-nuptial contracts, Mr. Chairman, one is impressed with the whole procedure. In a way I wish that this type of premarital agreement could be introduced in all of the provinces. I think it would have a beneficial effect. The people of Quebec are to be congratulated upon this very sensible provision, namely that before young couples enter marriage they should enter into an agreement setting out what their views are, what their property is and who is to own what. The whole procedure of young couples going into marriage sitting down and deciding what their attitude towards marriage is going to be is a very sensible one. Indeed, I think if it were followed everywhere it would be very beneficial.

The Chairman: With respect, I interrupt the hon. member in order to point out to him that, in his own remarks, he has supported the opinion of the Chair that to refer to contracts which are within the jurisdiction sole of a particular province and to urge that they become part of the body of the law in any other province is to deal with a matter that has no relation to the bill which is before the committee.

Mr. Scott: Quite the contrary, Mr. Chairman. I would not wish you so to construe my remarks. What I said initially still stands. If the charges made by the hon. member for Timiskaming were true and if this contract were one which is contrary to public policy or public good and would constitute a bar, he is perfectly entitled to bring it here as he has done, and to argue that it constitutes a bar to the granting of a decree and that we should refuse to pass the bill. My position is contrary to his. I still assert that it is perfectly valid to bring a document here and argue it. What I am saying is that he is wrong in his conclusions. Since they may wish to agree with him, I am attempting to convince hon. members that they should disregard his opinion and should accept the validity of the argument that this contract, while it is part of the evidence, is not the kind of contract which would constitute a bar to the marriage itself and that therefore we should proceed. I would not wish you to construe my remarks as in any way agreeing with the ruling which you were about to make, Mr. Chairman, at an earlier stage of the debate.

If I might just continue for a moment or two I should like to do so. The reason that I would suggest to the committee that we proceed with this divorce, notwithstanding the talk about the $25,000, is that obviously in a case of this kind the plaintiff, who is the wife, married the husband many years ago, lived with him for about 20 years, raised his children, and looked after his home. It seems to me that it is in consideration of that fact that she is to receive the $25,000. She has surrendered up any other chances of marriage, presumably; she has surrendered any right to acquire any additional property, perhaps; and for that reason the $25,000 is being paid. Actually, it is a very wise and sound provision. For this reason I would suggest to the committee that this particular bill be passed; that the allegations made by the hon. member for Timiskaming are without any foundation in fact or in law; that his conclusions are erroneous; that the bill is a perfectly good and proper one, with proper provision for the children and the wife; and that we should proceed to give the bill passage at the present time.

[Mr. Scott.]

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I listened attentively to the hon. member for Danforth. I certainly bow to his legal knowledge. I am inclined to agree with him that the fact that a contract is in existence may not be a bad thing. However, my original contention still holds. Although I do not wish to pursue it, I should like to point out that this question was asked in the other place by Mr. Wilson. I am referring to page 11 of the evidence:

Q. Before you were married did you enter into an ante-nuptial contract with your husband? A. Yes.

Mr. Wilson: May I file this document?

The Chairman: You may if you wish to prove it, certainly.

By Mr. Wilson:

Q. Would you take communication of this authentic notarial copy of an ante-nuptial contract? May it be filed as an exhibit?

The Chairman: This will not in any way adversely affect your case; it may possibly have some validity.

It was filed. Then we find the following questions:

By Mr. Wilson:

Q. In virtue of that contract, your contract agreed to pay you the amount of $25,000? A. Yes.

Q. Did you enter into an agreement with your husband since you instituted proceedings against him in the Quebec courts whereby he agreed to pay you this amount? A. Yes.

Q. Which he has not yet paid? A. No.

Q. Will you look at this agreement, dated March 22, 1961 and state whether it bears your signature and your husband's signature? A. Yes.

(Agreement filed, marked Exhibit No. 4)

Q. Has there been any collusion existing between you and your husband in connection with these proceedings? A. No, none.

Q. Have you connived in the commission of these proceedings? A. No.

Q. Have you condoned the misconduct alleged in your petition? A. No, I haven't.

Q. Since your husband committed the adultery? A. No.

Q. You have not lived with him or seen him or had anything to do with him since? A. No.

Incidentally Mr. Chairman, let me interject that I think Perry Mason would say that was a very leading question, and I would imagine most of his proceedings would say that question should be inadmissible. The answer still was no. To continue reading:

Q. And he has lived separate and apart from you since 1961? A. Yes.

Q. You personally have no knowledge of the adultery alleged in the petition? No personal knowledge? A. No.

Then he goes on to what led to the breakup. In reading this evidence, Mr. Chairman, you will note that while there does not seem to be the same concern in the other place that I have exercised, there is a certain amount of concern in admitting these contracts because of the terms of the contracts. I suggest that if the contract had been discussed and if the possible terms of it had been known, maybe more consideration would have been given than was given. However, that raises a particular point.

The point has also been made that the wife in this case is suing for divorce. That may only mean that the respondent in this case is at least a gentleman as well as being able to pay $25,000.

Mr. Byrne: Highly unlikely.

Mr. Peters: Well, that may or may not be, but it is quite normal to look at those cases where the wife files a petition even more closely than those cases where the husband files a petition because Canadian men as a whole are gentlemen and they quite often make the arrangements instead of leaving the wife in this very unenviable position. I continue:

By Senator Burchill:

Q. What led to the break-up?
A. His behavior was very odd, and the medical trips were very long and I asked him if this was the case, and he said yes, it was.

By the Chairman:

Q. If what was the case?
A. If he was interested in someone else.
Q. You asked him point blank if he was out with some other woman?
A. That is right.
Q. And he admitted the fact?
A. Yes.

By Senator Cameron:

Q. How long had this been going on?
A. Oh, quite a while.

By Senator Gershaw:

Q. Where was your husband born?
A. He was born in Montreal.
Q. Has he lived in Montreal all his life?
A. Yes. He was in New York for a couple of years interning and in Boston one year doing graduate work.
Q. As far as you know does he intend to continue to live in Montreal?
A. As far as I know, yes.

By the Chairman:

Q. Is there no hope of any foregiveness, or reconciliation between you?
A. No.
Q. Your children are nearly all grown up?
A. Yes. The boy is 21.
Q. With the exception of the youngest one they can all look after themselves now?
A. They can, and they are planning to get off about their own lives.

Mr. Crestohl: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, I think the Chair has ruled under similar circumstances that it is pointless to read all the evidence to the committee. Members of the committee received copies of the evidence and are presumed to have read it, and I do not think it helps the committee to any degree at all to have the evidence read at length now. Perhaps it does help to exhaust the very precious hour in which many people are hoping to have their cases dealt with. I am sure, however, that the hon. member does not mean to be unfair and that his motive simply cannot be to prevent other bills from being dealt with. As I say, I am sure that is not his motive and I am also sure he will realize, as the committee certainly does, that extensive reading of the evidence is prejudicial to the other bills on the order paper and holds up consideration of them unduly.

The Chairman: Order. The matter of holding up other business of the house is, of course, within the determination of the members of the committee themselves. However, the use of extensive quotations, as the hon. member realizes, from documents or from other records or minutes of parliament, especially such documents as are within the knowledge of the committee if they so desire, is not permitted. The other question, which is within his own determination, is whether or not it is in good taste to quote extensively from evidence of this nature with respect to a divorce, and I leave that to his own good judgment. But I do caution him against quoting extensively from such minutes because, as he realizes, the committee rules do not permit this.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I will not ask the hon. member to withdraw what I considered to be an unfair remark. However, if I were in a school and were the teacher I would ask for a show of hands of those that have studied this case and have read the evidence. I would imagine that the hon. member who has raised the point of order is one of those who would have to stand up and say that he knows absolutely nothing about this case except that these people come from the province of Quebec and probably from the area of Montreal.

I believe that in looking at this legislation just as any other we have to give some consideration to what we think are errors in it. I am interested in the way that this contract fits into this case and I hope to convince the committee that the contract as entered into constitutes a bar to the granting of this divorce because I believe that the terms of the contract are not in the public interest or for the public good.

I am not opposed to the remarks made by the hon. member for Danforth. I believe he is perfectly correct in saying that certain contracts are worth while. I am certainly very happy to find that one of the documents has to do with the maintenance of the children. This is a matter to which so many members of the house do not give any consideration at all and in fact raise points of order to the effect that we cannot even discuss it, although children are involved in the petitions that we handle and in my view are a very fundamental part of federal jurisdiction and responsibility with regard to divorce and marriage.

I believe that the committee of the other place gave some consideration to this point and that is why I am interested in studying the information that was brought out there. If members are going to come to a decision on this particular case without knowing anything about it and object to the information being brought forward, not with regard to divorce in general but this particular case, I suggest they are doing a disservice to the people they represent, and I do not think any member of the committee will stand up and say that he wants to do that. The chairman of the committee of the other place continued with these questions:

Q. Witness, did you at any time have any conversation with your husband about this whole affair?
A. Well, I did this time, yes.
Q. When?
A. I asked him.
Q. But when was this?
A. About a year and a half ago.
Q. You asked him what?
A. I asked him if there was another woman, and he said yes there was.

By Senator Gershaw:

Q. And you lived with him since then as man and wife?
A. We thought we would get over Christmas.

There are a number of members who are lawyers and the member who has raised the objection is one of them. I would ask him to consider this particular question.

Q. And you lived with him since then as man and wife?

This was after she had been told there was another woman involved.

A. We thought we would get over Christmas.

This in itself is a bar, Mr. Chairman. If an offence takes place and one of the parties knows about it and continues to live with the other party as man and wife then, as all lawyers well know, there is no basis for granting a divorce. If the relationship of man and wife is re-established the original offence is eliminated in law and this is an absolute bar to a divorce being obtained on that basis. Yet some say: Let us pass the bill. I wonder whether they would stand before the bar and say the same thing.

By the Chairman:

Q. How far did he go—did he just simply tell you there was another woman in the case—is that all he said?
A. Yes.
Q. He did not make any admissions as to any sexual relation or anything of that kind, did he?
A. Well, it was assumed.
Q. I am afraid it is the sort of thing we cannot assume, except where there is pretty substantial corroborative evidence?
A. There was.
Q. What was that corroborative circumstantial evidence?
A. I think when he spent week ends with her one could assume that.

[Mr. Peters.]

Q. How do you know that?
A. Because the medical meetings would end Thursday or Friday. He said he was spending week ends with her.
Q. He told you point blank that he has spent the week end with this woman?
A. Yes.

Some members say: Let us get on with it; you are only holding it up. What kind of respect have they for the law, in which they are trained and I am not? I wonder. I think each member has an obligation to the full extent of his ability to see that justice is done to every person in this country and I think that justice cannot be assumed in this case by looking the other way.

This is not a case of turning the other cheek. I refer again to the evidence:

Q. Well, of course, he could do that and still there would be no sexual relations between them?
A. I think it is quite unlikely.
Q. That may be but we want a little more than that. Did he admit to you he used to spend week-ends with her?
A. Oh, yes.
Q. Did he do that more than once?
A. Yes.
Q. Where were these medical meetings held that he went to?
A. At various places.
Q. In the United States?
A. Yes.
Q. In New York?
A. Yes.

By the Chairman:

Q. Did he tell you who the woman was?
A. Eventually, but not before he left the house.
Q. The position is that he admitted and told you he was spending his week ends with a woman?
A. Yes.
Q. Ultimately did he tell you her name?
A. Yes.
Q. And that name was?
A. Do I have to say her name?
Q. If he told you yes, of course.
A. Mrs. Lever.
Q. We have no allegation of any offence with Mrs. Lever. You do not know anything about this woman Margaret Bryant do you?
A. No.
Q. Nothing whatever?
A. No.

Now, Mr. Chairman, we come to the point in the evidence where it has been established by questioning in the other place that before the marriage broke up there had been a reference to a mysterious lady who spent week ends with the doctor after medical conventions in various places. Well, this divorce is obtained on evidence given by detectives. I have only the normal hesitation about accepting their evidence that every court in the country would have. All documents concerning divorce contain a warning that the evidence of a detective be given very close scrutiny, particularly when it is not documented by pictures or other forms of corroborative evidence. In this case the respondent and corespondent did not appear to give evidence.

It is surprising that in this particular case, where the marriage has ended and where the name of the woman is known after the wife has left bed and board, that then the detectives come into the picture and it is not the same woman at all.

Another bar to divorce, Mr. Chairman, may be the fact that the person obtaining the divorce is of such an unsavory character that he could be classed as being promiscuous. In the case of a woman, if she is engaged in prostitution, this may be a bar to the granting of a divorce. Well, now, we see a complete change from the situation which obtained at the time of the separation. Now, we come to the evidence of the detectives and it is completely separated from the evidence we have had before and involves a different party. I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that this would make one wonder if over a period of time this doctor, whom I am sure is highly qualified and is an outstanding citizen, would change to another woman after apparently liking this one first mentioned for such a period of time.

Now, there is a stage where we come into the same type of set-up that is involved in the ordinary divorce mill. I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that this takes us back to the contract again and whether or not there were inducements for this type of action. The divorce is established by having private investigators. They both gave evidence, and both live in Montreal. They classify themselves as investigators, but no questions were asked as to whether or not they were licensed in the province in which they operate or in Montreal. The investigator is shown a picture of the doctor and then this question is asked:

> Q. Would you tell the committee of the investigation you made and what you discovered?
> A. We were first requested to proceed with the investigation in the latter part of April or beginning of May, 1961 and we were given certain information as to his residence and so on.

Well, Mr. Chairman, I would presume this might involve the fact that many week ends were spent with a particular lady. I would think he would just have to find out when the next medical convention was going to be held, go along and find out for himself if the statements being made by the wife were true. This is not the way it was done.

The Chairman: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired.

Mr. Scott: I would not want the case to be left in this condition. The hon. member for Timiskaming has referred to this business of the ante-nuptial contract. As most members know, in the province of Quebec this is a most necessary thing because of the problem of community property. If a husband and wife marry and no contract is entered into, then they have what is called community property. Under those circumstances, if the husband got into financial difficulty, all the property would be available in settlement of his debts. If the wife gets into trouble financially, all the husband's assets are available. It is largely for this reason that these contracts are used.

The Chairman: Order; the hon. member is breaking the rule of relevancy, I am afraid, in giving a discourse on the law of Quebec. However, it is now six o'clock so I will leave the chair and report progress.

Progress reported.

Mr. Speaker: It being six o'clock, this house will resume the business which was interrupted at five o'clock, and I do now leave the chair.

NATIONAL ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT BOARD

PROVISION FOR DEFINITION OF DUTIES, APPOINTMENT OF MEMBERS, ETC.

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Nowlan for the second reading of Bill No. C-87, to provide for the establishment of a national economic development board.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Speaker, when the debate was adjourned owing to the onset of private members hour I had just completed making some complimentary remarks about the ability of the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin) to distil the elixir of the English language in euphonic tones. I was also dealing with the question of the similarity of the point of view of the Liberal and Conservative parties with respect to planning, as against our proposals; their insistence that planning could be undertaken without any interference with the vested interests. I say this because in principle both the Progressive Conservatives and the Liberals worship at the altar of free enterprise propped up by the welfare state, as they understand it; that is, as a premium paid by capitalism on an insurance policy, by the government, against abnormal discontent. There is no question about it, Mr. Speaker, a capitalist society historically has depended upon armaments to consume surplus production and overcome economic depression. That is proven by the statements of a great number of leading manufacturers in the United States regarding the effect the sudden, if it were possible—and we wish it were—onslaught of peace would have on the American economy. In our opinion, freedom and security can only be obtained by new concepts of society, by a new purpose, new objectives, and a new sense of values.

I know my time is expiring, Mr. Speaker, and I am trying to push my speech together. There are three types of planning as we see it. First of all there is opportunistic planning, which is carried on for a temporary effect or for a particular purpose, as evidenced by the planning of the Sons of Freedom in my constituency quite recently. When not long ago the Prime Minister visited Kootenay West, some of the Sons of Freedom ladies undressed in his presence. I was talking to a friend of one of them afterwards and saying that we objected to that sort of thing because there should be respect paid to our Prime Minister, regardless of our party politics. One of them explained, "You know, Mr. Herridge, this was different. They undress to protest, historically, against materialistic civilization. This time, Mr. Herridge, they said they undressed to also show the Canadian people what they will be like in four years' time if he is elected again."

Then there is operose planning, which is a form of reluctant or irksome planning undertaken to create a short term political effect. That is what we believe the planning in this bill provides for, a very short term political effect. It creates an illusion in response to a public demand for a public necessity and need. As against that we have co-operative, or effective planning, the type to which this group subscribes.

With all the high sounding language in the minister's speech and in the bill, after its passage we must remember that the Iron Ore Company of Canada will continue to export $500 million worth of Canadian iron ore annually to the United States and Europe, and Canada will continue to import $2,500 million worth of steel products. That is the situation we want to overcome with our type of planning. At the same time, the federal government of Canada is proposing to permit the export of vast quantities of power from the Columbia river—I cannot help referring to this—and with it vast quantities of water that will be required by future generations in Canada. As another illustration of what the orthodox planners mean, I notice in the Nelson daily News of Wednesday, November 28, 1962 a headline, "Shrum sees hydro power top export". This is one of the great planners in British Columbia, according to some points of view. What does this news item say? It says:

Gordon M. Shrum, chairman of the British Columbia hydro and power authority, said Tuesday British Columbia's greatest export in the future will be hydroelectric power.

We aim at the type of planning that will keep that power in Canada to provide jobs for Canadians, instead of providing jobs outside our country. Although we listen to all this twaddle about planning, after the passage of this bill, without a doubt, we will continue to export profits, interest, dividends, power, water and jobs in vast quantities. This party believes in the type of planning which will, first of all, conserve, develop and utilize the natural resources of Canada so that they will meet the needs of present and future generations—planning with respect for people, natural resources, wild life and so on.

An hon. Member: Tell us about medical planning.

Mr. Herridge: You will be told all about that later.

We believe in the type of planning which will provide a basic economic security for all who are willing to contribute their labour or their services according to their abilities. I have had some experience with paper planners. I realize there is ground for criticism in some cases. But we believe in a type of planning under which there is consultation with the people concerned. Consent, consultation and participation are essential for effective planning in a democratic society.

Previous speakers have outlined some proposals and means for reaching this end and I do not intend to take the time of the house by repeating them. This is an important question for members of this group, and there are others who wish to speak. We aim to utilize this planning of material things to lay the foundation for a spiritual and cultural life in the broadest sense of the word presently denied to multitudes. We do not believe that material security or prosperity are the end of all things. They are merely a foundation upon which can be built a real spiritual and cultural life based on a reverence for all creation. In a totalitarian state there can be security without freedom. In a democratic society there cannot be freedom without security. If there is no freedom from want there can be no freedom from fear, no freedom of worship and no freedom of speech. When a democratic society provides economic freedom it not only provides freedom from fear of the future but freedom, also, from the follies of the past and the present with their disabilities and dangers. When we plan to raise the economic level—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

Mr. Herridge: I am sorry, also, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. H. E. Gray (Essex West): It is always a pleasure to listen to the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge), probably the only great landed proprietor left in the house today. I believe the people in his area often refer to him as the baron of the Kootenays. It is very interesting to hear him when he comes down from his mountain estate to deliver polemics against the economic system which permitted his father, and he in his turn, to win and hold thousands of acres as private property.

Mr. Herridge: Would the hon. member permit an explanation? I am purely a trustee for the nation pending the revolution.

Some hon. Members: Oh.

Mr. Gray: I will say this: if the day ever comes—and I hope it does not—when some government board says it wants to take away the hon. member's land for the good of the nation I believe the hon. member for Kootenay East would be the first to take a shotgun and warn away any government man from approaching at his peril. I mention this because it is always interesting to contrast the views of the hon. member for Kootenay West with the views of the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Cameron), the views expressed by their party leader and also by their deputy leader on economic matters, particularly where they apply to a possible role for free enterprise for the private sector of our economy. Listening to their remarks and to the contradictory views which they express I sometimes feel there are two separate parties seated in that corner of the house.

In any event, it appears to me that the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Dinsdale) made an interesting revelation in his remarks yesterday, namely, that everything which the government has been doing since 1957 has been part of a plan, and a five-year plan at that. The hon. gentleman said as reported at page 2943 of Hansard:

> We regard it merely as a continuation of the program which has been under way ever since this government took office in 1957. This is not the beginning of a new era. This is the continuation of a program that has been gradually unfolding under the leadership of the Conservative government.

The hon. gentleman made this interesting point about a five-year plan in talking about the national economic development board. I think the Canadian people will be amazed to learn that the unemployment in this country averaging 6 and 7 per cent a year, a decline in production per person by 3½ per cent, did not come about by chance, by failure to make decisions or even by wrong decisions but, instead, was part of a deliberate Conservative plan of which this national economic development board is just one part. Well, if the economic situation between 1957 and 1962 was an example of Conservative planning I know the Canadian people will want to be spared any more of it. Apparently the Conservative government kept this plan a secret even from their own members.

Mr. Ricard: You have to read every word of it.

Mr. Gray: At least I know how to read, which is more than the government whip can say. If they had not been keeping this supposed five-year plan a secret from their own members it is most unlikely that the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Aiken) who today, I believe, is a parliamentary secretary would have made the remarks he did as quoted by my hon. friend from Essex East (Mr. Martin) in his comments on the subject some weeks ago. This hon. member was quoted in Hansard of May 24, 1960, at page 4179 as saying:

> Setting up a national board to develop economic policies would be, in my opinion, setting up a new giant in the field of semi-governmental bodies which is quite unnecessary.

I think it would have been much more convenient if the cabinet had told their supporters about this five-year plan in order to avoid embarrassment of this type in years to come. Even the Associate Minister of National Defence did not know about this plan, it would appear, from his remarks yesterday. Looking at page 13 of the translation of his remarks I find he said:

> For the last five years we have tried, thanks to our national productivity council and to the continuous contacts we have had with men from all spheres of Canadian activity, to find the formulas which would enable us to obtain the splendid success I mentioned earlier.

Just before those remarks, he said:

> The proposed economic development board will allow us to find a formula, to find a solution to the problem between labour on the one hand and capital on the other hand. And if this board can fulfil their purpose, it will not have been set up in vain and all should be satisfied.

In other words, the minister appears to have admitted the failure of what they were trying to have this productivity council do—an admission in saying they had been using this council to search for formulas; an admission that any success they may have had in economic matters, no matter how small, was purely by chance.

He suggests that this board, working with people in all segments of the economy, as it should and must, can find means to deal with these various problems—these other things that we are talking about, which previously they had not been able to find means to have worked out, by chance, by formula or otherwise. There is, certainly, an important task before this national economic development board and that is to formulate, at long last, a definite policy of area redevelopment—a policy to deal with the depressed areas of our country, the areas which suffer, unfortunately, from chronic unemployment and which have experienced a movement of industry from them to two or three metropolitan areas, a concentration which has created problems not only for those areas but for the communities which the industries have left behind them. So far we have seen no real program of this type from the present government though they have had every opportunity to formulate, put forward and carry out such a program. Instead, we have had nothing more than what Maurice Jefferies of the Windsor Star has called a "balkanized economic aid program." We have had the Atlantic development board, which is a most useful forward step, but for the rest of the country no similar needed program. In fact, the only policy we know of so far is something which the Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr) has put into a bill which we have not as yet had an opportunity of discussing as fully as we should. I refer to "manpower mobility incentives." I can only infer that since we have the Atlantic development board for the maritimes, and manpower mobility incentives for some of the other depressed areas of the country, their only policy, and a mighty poor one at that, is to move people away from areas in which they have spent their lives and have their homes rather than carry out a plan for bringing industry into these areas.

Mr. Ricard: Who is going to pay for moving them out?

Mr. Gray: You said you are going to pay for moving them out.

Mr. Howe: Is that not what Gordon said?

Mr. Gray: No, he did not say that. In any event, we must certainly develop such a program. The government does not really need to wait for a board, although a board can be a most useful vehicle for this type of program.

Mr. Speaker, these measures are not something which need to be divined by some mystic process; they are already known. I think of programs developed by committees such as that in Windsor, which was put forward by a delegation of mayors a few weeks before Christmas. Unfortunately, the present government does not seem inclined to respond to these carefully thought out programs of a type such as that proposed not only by this committee of mayors from Windsor, and from maritime communities, and also by groups such as the plant movement council of the united automobile workers.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Gray: Hon. members opposite may laugh at my reference to the plant movement council of the united automobile workers, but the Minister of Labour put on a great show of pretence in being most interested in the problems which they put forward. These automobile workers in Windsor will be most interested to find by this laughter the true feeling hon. members opposite display about the problems of plant movement.

Mr. Speaker, this true feeling was exhibited in another most unfortunate way when this group of mayors both from the Windsor area and from the maritimes came to present the report of a civic committee in Windsor to a group of members of the cabinet. Present was the Minister of Labour, the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Hees), and although we were supposed to have the Minister of Finance (Mr. Nowlan) in attendance as well, for some reason not yet explained to me we had instead the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Monteith), an affable gentleman, but not the one it seems to me that the delegation expected to have a chance to talk with on problems of this type. The only answer I can see is that the present government must have recognized that their current policies are pretty sick and so they had the minister of health there to attend to this particular group.

The most unfortunate part of this particular meeting was that when the time came to read the operative portions of the brief in question the spokesman for the group, wishing to save what he thought was the time of some very busy men, indicated that he did not feel it necessary to read this operative portion because he knew that the city clerk of Windsor had apparently sent this brief to them weeks and weeks before the meeting. But to the great shock, amazement and surprise of the delegation they found that these honourable gentlemen from the cabinet who had met with them quite freely admitted that they had not even bothered to take the trouble to read this very brief with its important recommendations. It is not a very good indication of the attitude of the present government toward the question of redevelopment of distressed and depressed areas.

Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the people of the maritimes, pleased as they are with the steps which have been taken and which should be taken to develop their own area, would not hesitate one instant to join the programs for their area into one great national program of area redevelopment so that we would have a national policy to deal with questions of this type. This is something, as I say, Mr. Speaker, that we hope the national economic development board will be able to get to work on just as soon as it is set up; and I hope that once this bill is passed we will not have a lapse of two years, as we had with the productivity council, before we have something productive from it.

It is not only necessary to have a definite program put forward with a whole arsenal of measures to deal with the problems of depressed areas. We must also have a government which is ready and willing to put these measures into effect; a government which is willing to set up a definite agency of government to institute these measures equipped with the funds necessary to carry them out. If this is done, then at long last we will begin really to tackle this problem of depressed areas which is holding back our country. If there is a need for national planning at this time, Mr. Speaker, then this planning must be for the purpose of seeing that certain areas of our country do not create a drag on the rest of it; that they have a chance to contribute everything they can to the development of our great nation. If the board does this and if the government carries out its solutions and proposals, we will see something very constructive coming from its work.

(Translation):

Mr. Gerard Lamy (St. Maurice-Lafleche): Mr. Speaker, I am not against the setting up of an economic development board, but if we had had competent governments since confederation, we would not need an economic development board. In fact there was no need for such an organization when the country was at war.

In wartime this country was in full prosperity, but in peacetime people are starving in a country as rich as Canada. What kind of a phenomenon is that? In wartime we were living very well and in peacetime we are starving. It is because money came at the rate of industrial production in wartime, and because people had purchasing power and bought our products, which created jobs, and as a result we had prosperity.

Mr. Speaker, allow me to show to what extent the economy is now paralysing any initiative. I have in my possession two loans to build houses, two C.M.H.C. loans which represent $12,000. These loans are to be repaid at the rate of $108.00 a month, that is $81.00 in capital and interest, and $27.00 in taxes. Our monetary system is nefarious, in that it paralyses economy. With such loans people are starving, Mr. Speaker. How can you expect a small wage-earner to manage to make both ends meet, when he must make such payments? You know that home building would help us increase the number of jobs, because in such construction, labour represents about 65 per cent.

That is why I would have a suggestion to make to the Canadian government, the effect of which would be to eliminate part of our unemployment problem, to carry out slum-clearance and so forth. Here it is. Last fall, when the economic situation was in a lamentable state, the Diefenbaker government could have allowed construction of family units for small wage-earners by granting them loans from the Bank of Canada without interest, the repayment of which would have been based on their salaries. The lender could have asked a repayment at the rate of 75 per cent of a week's salary a month.

If, for instance, the government had realized that 100,000 houses had to be built during the year, and that the payments thus calculated would have been amortized in 12 or 15 years, I think it would have been advantageous to proceed in such a way. Here is what it would have cost the government, Mr. Speaker. It would have set up a billion dollar fund for the construction of 100,000 housing units, and that sum would have been returned to the government, after having served the population, in allowing them to build 100,000 units, because the payments would have returned to Ottawa. We would then realize that after having created a billion dollars, money alone has been destroyed but not the houses. This is an extraordinary phenomenon. We build 100,000 houses, and we do not destroy them in destroying money, but we are bringing a solution to unemployment, to inadequate housing, and we clear slums. But the older parties, the Grits and the Tories never talk about social legislation because they never give any thought to workers' families. That is why, Mr. Speaker, the Liberal party was swept out of office in Ottawa, and that is why Mr. Diefenbaker, after having put his talents at the service of the people, lost 60 seats in the last election, and that, in the next one, he will not have 50 left, because Social Credit will then be put in office. If there were 200 Socred administrators, there would be no need of an economic development board, because out of those 200, there are some who are intelligent enough that we would not need the service of an economic development board to get the country into prosperity again, as was done in wartime.

Mr. Speaker, in order to promote a greater economic activity in our country, we shall have to provide our families with increased purchasing power and, to that end, it will be necessary to adjust family allowances according to the cost of living instead of granting starvation allowances in a rich and prosperous country such as ours.

Every time the purchasing power is increased, jobs are being created. That is how everybody is given a job in the end. If we ask that old age pensions be granted at the age of 60 instead of 65, it is because people of 60 and 65 years would then be able to rest before they died and at the same time young people in their twenties could start a family.

For young people from 18 to 25 years of age, there is nothing worse than unemployment. They loiter around in taverns, and grills and just about everywhere because there is nothing else for them to do. And as we know idleness is the root of all evil.

If our older citizens were getting a pension before the age of 70, they could live more decently and their money would contribute to create employment. In fact, it should not be forgotten that each time money is spent, employment is generated.

And this also goes for our people.

Mr. Speaker, this plan will have to be completed by the government by credit facilities through the Bank of Canada.

The government will also have to realize that it will be responsible for financing school boards, municipal, provincial and federal budgets without interest, or at least at cost, so as to relieve the family man from taxes.

Mr. Speaker, if you build a convent at a cost of $1 million with interest based on cost only, it should be quite easy to pay back $1 million plus a few hundred dollars, but if interest at 5 per cent is charged during 20 years, the same convent will cost $2 million, and thus a sum of $2 million has to be paid out while at the outset those responsible for the project had doubts as to whether they could afford $1 million. Such a situation would not exist under a Social Credit government, for we could use credit from the Bank of Canada and pay interest based on overhead only.

The Canadian people have had more than enough of the older parties and their lack of concern.

Mr. Speaker, the evil afflicting our country today boils down to maintaining the unemployed and his family in idleness. This is a terribly expensive calamity. Why does the government not put these people to work instead of paying them $36 a week for doing nothing? I know some hon. members are going to say: "There is no place for them to work, we have no jobs to give them". But houses, schools, roads and tunnels could be built throughout Canada. And should we not promote the establishment of heavy industry in this country? We should then even have a shortage of labour.

(Text):

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, when the Minister of Finance spoke on this bill on November 27 last he expressed its purpose as follows, as reported at page 2073 of Hansard:

> The government is determined that this country will continue to prosper and to grow. It is determined to stimulate the further expansion of our existing industries and to encourage even further the development in Canada of new and efficient industries.

Surely if these admirable objectives, with which all of the hon. members of this house can agree, were attained, we would, although the minister did not quite say so, have a country blessed by full employment. But what we must ask ourselves here and what the people of Canada have a right to know is whether the passage of this bill and its implementation will achieve this admirable aim. The debate to date, I submit, has not been too hopeful. It has concerned itself almost exclusively with the hope that the planning proposed will help to develop new industry. The development of new industry is important but it is only one side of the coin. The rapid relocation of existing manufacturing and servicing industries from old established centres towards a concentration in a few major areas in Canada is having a growing and disastrous effect on the Canadian people. Decisions by management as to plant location have, to the detriment of Canada, been regarded by private industry and by governments, both Liberal and Conservative, as the concern of business alone, despite the fact that the welfare of entire communities and the lives of thousands of our citizens are affected by the movement of plants and factories. Surely it is time that the desire for profit and competitive advantage which industry hopes to gain when it moves to new locations should be considered and balanced against the responsibility of those same industries to the communities in which they were for so long established.

Unfortunately, if we look at corporation examples or at the view of either the present government or the official opposition when they were in power, and when we see how they discuss this bill, it is obvious that to them profit is still the overriding if not the only motive for every act carried out by the corporations of Canada. This government has no intention of even trying to blunt this unconscionable drive for profit at any cost by Canadian business.

Corporate decisions on plant location have had for the people of Canada and our economy consequences many times greater than any decision of democratically elected governments, whether federal, provincial or municipal. In this bill or in the speeches which have been made in this house by representatives of the government or of the official opposition explaining their position, there is nothing to indicate that the situation will be better in the near future if they have their way.

Governments have looked with indifference at the haphazard growth and development of our economy because of the unregulated concentration of industry and population. Without real planning and the desire to meet specific problems there will be and there is no end in sight to the decline of employment in many of our major towns and cities. Canada will increasingly become the scene of many depressed and underdeveloped areas surrounding two islands of concentrated prosperity, namely Montreal in one province and Toronto-Hamilton in Ontario.

The government has made it clear that this bill is proposing another advisory board like the productivity council, the Atlantic development board and a host of others that are being established. This board will have no more power to get action than those already working have had. The productivity council sent a mission to western Europe. It was made up of representatives of labour, management and government. It made an excellent report, which members of this house have had an opportunity to read, on western Europe's prosperity and how it has been accomplished. What minister or what government department has the responsibility to see that we apply to Canada those lessons which they learned, so that we can do for the people of Canada the kind of job which the western European countries have been able to do for the last 15 years. This is completely unlike the European experience. We can only assume from these differences between what is being done in Europe and what is proposed in this bill that the bill is really nothing but window dressing and will accomplish nothing to bring us to the state of full employment which they are enjoying in Europe.

In most European countries they have dealt directly with the problem of plant location through area development programs. In Great Britain positive controls and financial inducements are used to direct the location of new plants. A company wishing to build a new plant may be refused permission to locate in an area where there is a labour shortage. At the same time, loans, grants and other inducements are offered to encourage the location of plants in areas of higher than average unemployment. Thousands of new jobs have been created in formerly depressed areas by these policies. The president of the British board of trade used his power of persuasion in not permitting the Ford Motor Company of Great Britain to expand its own original location in London, which is already congested, and persuaded the company to erect its new facilities on the Mersey side, an area suffering from chronic and high unemployment. Twenty thousand new jobs were created in this area. Is it too much to suggest that we could use some of the same type of persuasion and direction in Canada?

What has happened in Canada, of course, is the exact reverse. Beginning in 1957 when the former government was still in power and continuing until the present day we have had a steady erosion of jobs in the Windsor area as the automobile industry has moved its facilities to the Toronto-Hamilton area. But you can study this bill or the speeches of the minister with a microscope and find no evidence that this government proposes to do anything like the British have accomplished.

In France recently the French minister of industry threatened, under the power vested in him by French law, to examine with the greatest care new foreign investment in France because two American firms had laid off 1,000 workers as a result of changed business conditions. The Toronto Globe and Mail in its issue of Friday, December 14, 1962, quoted the minister as follows:

> I will not permit that certain isolated enterprises practice in French industry an irresponsible policy that does not respect the social contract linking a financially powerful enterprise to the labour it employs.

That is a far cry from anything we have heard from any minister in this house. The French government, on the advice of the commissariat du plan, prohibits new installations in the Paris area, and there are grants and fiscal exemptions to encourage development in certain other regions. If it were not so tragic in its consequences it would be laughable that a United States foreign subsidiary 3,000 miles across the Atlantic ocean from its parent head office is subject to this kind of social restraint when in Canada in the Windsor area, only a few miles away from its parent company, another huge subsidiary company in the same industry is absolutely free and unchecked by any such moral or legal restraint in this country. Yet we have this happening with no protest on the part of the government and no protest at the time it began by the former government which is now the official opposition.

There is not a single industrialized society in free enterprise western Europe which does not, in some form or another curb the power of huge corporations to disregard their social and moral responsibilities not only to the individual worker in their employ but to the national interest as a whole. How different it is in Canada in the year 1963. We continue to propose more incentives to industry when the problem is not only to attract new industries but rather to retain established industries in the communities in which they have been established for many years and to which, I suggest, they have a real responsibility.

Our programs, existing and proposed, are programs which can only be described as piecemeal and which will have little effect on the people of this country. In Europe they realize that particular areas require special attention in order that they can contribute fully to the over-all economic growth of the country as a whole. The European programs concern themselves with much more than the elimination of pockets of high unemployment and the rehabilitation of distressed areas. They make plans for the country as a whole.

One of the best examples of the lack of planning and the callousness of Canadian industry can be seen if one looks at the city of Windsor. The exodus of industry there has means the loss of thousands of jobs. Many of the unemployed have never found new employment. Since 1956, when the Liberal party was still the government of Canada, there has been a drastic contraction of employment in Windsor. There has been a drop of $20 million a year in wages and salaries alone. As income from wages and salaries fell so has income earned by business, professional and commercial interests in that area. New residential construction has fallen off sharply in the past five years. In 1961 house building was one third of that of 1956. Per capita spending on retail goods and services declined by $20 between 1959 and 1961.

Greater Windsor's population increased by only 18 per cent from 1951 to 1961, while the average increase for 17 metropolitan areas surveyed for the same period was 45 per cent. From 1956 to 1961 the increase in population in Windsor was only 4 per cent.

The major cause for this stagnation in Windsor is the program of relocation of Windsor's single major industry, the motor vehicle and parts industry. There has been no compensating growth in other lines of manufacturing so Windsor is plagued by large scale chronic unemployment. In 1951 the Ford Motor Company of Canada had 12,000 production workers in Windsor. Today there are less than 4,000, and more departments are to be transferred to the Toronto area in the next few years.

This fantastic cut-back was part of a deliberate policy on the part of the company to diversify and make more competitive the domestic manufacturing plants of Ford of Canada. The company has withdrawn from Windsor with little, if any, consideration for its displaced workers. Supply and feeder plants which sell to Ford have been forced to follow Ford to the Toronto-Oakville area. There are now more of these plants in the Toronto area than are left in the greater Windsor area. Thousands of these workers laid off by Ford and the parts plants have never been re-employed and are now drawing unemployment insurance benefits or, in many cases, welfare from the municipalities concerned because they have exhausted their benefits.

Many attempts were made to get the company to consider the effects of these moves or even to help the workers move to the new location so that they could start over with a new job in a new area, but these attempts were met with cold, hard, ruthless, callous disregard by the companies concerned and especially by the Ford company. This is not a case of a company being forced to take drastic action by adversity. For the first six months of 1962 the Ford Motor Company showed a consolidated net income of over $20 million, an increase of 145 per cent over the same period in 1961. The net profit for the first six months of 1962 was almost $5 million higher than its previous record. From 1951 to 1961 the earnings retained by Ford for use in the business rose from $178 million to $226 million. In the ten year period ended in 1960 the net profit of Ford represented an average annual return of over 11 per cent on the company's average net worth for that period. Certainly this was a generous rate of return. Yet despite this generous rate of return the Ford workers and the community of Windsor have been ignored and their welfare disregarded by this corporate giant, a giant without a heart. Ford can reap record profits, but it cannot or will not find the means to provide employment for workers who have worked for that company for 20 or more years. This company is one of the wealthiest in Canada. The people of Canada, I suggest, have a right to ask how profitable a company has to be before it realizes that it has a responsibility to its workers, to the people of Canada as well as to its shareholders.

If this bill has any answer for the workers of Windsor, I for one have failed to find it. The private corporations, however, are not the only ones who are guilty of a callous disregard of their own workers. In my own city of Winnipeg, we have seen the gradual movement of the T.C.A. operations to Montreal. Trans-Canada Air Lines head office was originally in Winnipeg. In recent years a large number of departments of T.C.A. have been moved east. Included amongst these are the headquarters and staff, engineering, communications laboratory, radio shop, instrument shop, materials and processing laboratory and the engine overhaul shop.

In 1948, Mr. C. D. Howe, then Minister of Trade and Commerce, said that there was no intention to move T.C.A.'s main department from Winnipeg. He said that 95 per cent of the activities at Winnipeg would remain there. In December, 1948, Mr. Gordon McGregor, then president of T.C.A., replying to rumours that T.C.A. contemplated moving its overhaul base to Montreal, said that some of the executive staff might be moved to Montreal but that the company had no intention of transferring the overhaul base. In February, 1949, Mr. McGregor announced that administrative offices of the operations department of T.C.A. would move to Montreal the next fall. He said:

> There is no conceivable reason nor any grounds for suspicion that this move marks the beginning of a mass transfer of T.C.A. activities to Montreal.

In November, 1949, Mr. Howe said that T.C.A. did not contemplate making further transfer of personnel from Winnipeg to other centres. In October, 1951, a T.C.A. official said that the Winnipeg overhaul base has been, is and will continue to be the system's only complete repair base. In November 1951, Mr. McGregor said Winnipeg would share in the steady development of T.C.A. all across the country. In February, 1956, T.C.A. officials announced that T.C.A. was dropping major overhaul work in aircraft radio equipment in Winnipeg.

In September, 1957, T.C.A. officials emphatically denied rumours that the overhaul and maintenance base was being moved from Winnipeg. In 1957, November, Mr. George Hees, then minister of transport, said T.C.A. employees in Winnipeg had no need to fear for their future employment because T.C.A. did not expect in any way to diminish repair and maintenance operations in Winnipeg. In January, 1959, Mr. McGregor said that T.C.A. had no plans to decimate its shop staff in Winnipeg. In January, 1961, it was reported that a letter from Mr. Hees to the Manitoba government said that T.C.A.'s overhaul base in Winnipeg might be closed in 1965 or shortly thereafter.

In 1961, May, the present Minister of Transport (Mr. Balcer) told the St. James chamber of commerce that T.C.A. was reducing the volume of its overhaul work in Winnipeg but that the overhaul of Viscounts would continue in Winnipeg at least through 1965. Most of the groups which I have listed have since increased greatly in scope and numbers of personnel. The total staff of T.C.A. has increased sharply, all the increases of course being in eastern Canada. Now, plans are being completed to consolidate all overhaul facilities in Montreal. The transport minister has suggested that this can be done, and I quote, "Without major disruption to the lives of employees or the economic welfare of Winnipeg."

What nonsense this is, to imply that over 1,500 employees with a payroll of almost a million dollars a month can be uprooted from their homes and families in Winnipeg without major disruption to their lives or to the city of Winnipeg. This is, at best, a dream of the minister's which will be a nightmare for the people of Winnipeg. Hundreds of employees will not or could not move. They have homes, they have families, they have responsibilities in Winnipeg. There is little, if any, alternative employment for this highly skilled group in Winnipeg. By one decision of T.C.A. management, more jobs will be lost in Winnipeg by 1966 than the whole aggressive industry searching program of the Manitoba government, for which they recently received an international award, could possibly find.

Not only will this decision mean a payroll loss to Winnipeg of almost $1 million a month, with consequent loss of purchasing power for goods and services of about $14 million a year, but it will mean the loss of a valuable place of employment for the skilled workers now being trained in our technical and vocational schools. It will depress the housing market when close to 1200 homeowners have to move, and it will certainly disrupt homes and families. Why is this move being promoted? It is supposedly being promoted because of economic necessity, but the report has never been made public. It has been rumoured that the savings to be made are in the nature of $1 million a year. Even if this is true, this is a relatively small amount when compared to the social and economic loss of the whole prairie region. It is a pretty poor choice that is being made.

T.C.A.'s behaviour is puzzling because it is supposed to be a publicly owned company whose main purpose is service, not profit. But this government, and the Liberal government that preceded it, have harangued T.C.A. and other crown corporations into acting like private concerns in order to show a good balance sheet, regardless of the social consequences involved. Yet the government, which promises planning every time it introduces this type of legislation which we are now discussing, permits this callous disregard of human need while preaching the virtues of planning. The type of planning envisioned by this government may prove to be worth less than nothing but it will raise the hopes of the Canadian people without really accomplishing anything.

Surely, Mr. Speaker, it is time for Canada to stop treating unemployment as if it were an incurable disease. It is time we realized that some parts of Canada, the maritimes, the prairies, parts of Quebec and parts of Ontario, like Windsor, are being underdeveloped and are falling into decline, while other parts of Canada are being overdeveloped. Every day we hear of plants moving to these favourite areas. We see housing and community facilities in other areas abandoned, while they are duplicated in the select few cities which are growing. This represents a tremendous waste of resources.

We need a new approach in this country if we are to improve our dismal record of inadequate economic growth and the resultant huge and persistent unemployment. This new approach calls for the adoption of real economic planning at both the federal and provincial levels. Only such planning can achieve the goal we should all be striving for, full employment and full production. Unfortunately, nothing which has been said by either the government representatives or the opposition to date would indicate that they have really learned anything from the difficulties in Canada or the successes in other countries, so that we can hope or expect to achieve the goals of full production or full employment from the measures which they have or are likely to propose.

[Mr. Orlikow.]

(Translation):

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I take pleasure in associating myself with other hon. members in this house in discussing the bill to establish a national economic development board for Canada.

After having listened to the remarks from various parts of the house on Canada's future economic development, I think it would be well to recall that we, in this corner of the house, are in favour of every kind of economic expansion. We want the development of all social classes, the expansion of all sections of our economy in the agricultural and industrial field, and we want, through the economic expansion of this country, to promote the solution of all problems which seem to be insoluble at this time in the world at large, and, more particularly, in Canada.

We agree that our country is to be developed. But, in some speeches, made earlier today in this house, development was favoured whereas others advocated a limited production.

We are told that our farms produce too much, so that our farmers are even threatened with a loss of subsidies if they do not decrease their production.

Well, Mr. Speaker, in order to develop our economy, we must have money. It is impossible for an industrialist, a municipality, or whoever it may be, to expand, if they lack the necessary funds, if they have no financial backing.

The daily paper Le Soleil, in its January 5th issue, reports the result of a survey made by Ward, Dundee and Company, which revealed that last year $839,437,738 were borrowed from the United States, in comparison with $133 million the year before.

This means that last year Canada had to go to the American market for an amount of over three quarter billion dollars to develop our Canadian economy. Yet, there is again talk of developing our economy in 1963. But how shall we proceed? Are we again to look for capital all over the world markets?

The president of the Banque Canadienne Nationale, when submitting his balance sheet for 1962, stated:

A well-informed Banque Canadienne Nationale banker emphasizes the need for Canadian capital and reducing taxes.

"The need for Canadian capital", that is the point I want to stress tonight, because, in view of our colossal debt and the interest we have to pay every year and the present state of our economy, it is impossible to proceed with a further development of our economy without going down on our knees to obtain from foreigners the required dollars for our expansion.

Mr. Speaker, last year we were unable to develop Canada according to its needs, because our industries lacked the capital needed to finance their own development and because their production was difficult to sell.

Moreover, our university graduates are looking in vain for employment in our Canadian economy. Some 5,500 university graduates had to settle elsewhere because our Canadian economy could not absorb them.

The result of our borrowing abroad last year was that we had to pay the United States a sum of $750 million in interest or dividends. This means an average of $40 per capita, which we had to pay in interest or dividends to the Americans or other people.

Why are we unable in Canada to pay those dividends to our own people? Why does the central government in Ottawa not have its own bank to finance its operations? Why must we go to the New York and Boston markets or to the world bond market to obtain the capital required for the development of the Canadian economy?

It is useless and meaningless to talk about economic development if we cannot count on the financial institutions of our country to carry it out.

That is why I readily referred to the statement made by the president of the Banque Canadienne Nationale when he introduced his last budget.

Since the resumption of the session and this afternoon, we have heard the same word cropping up constantly in the speeches of Liberal and New Democratic party members, namely planning.

Planning is merely a word. It is not bad in itself, but it is often misinterpreted.

Planning somewhat reminds me of a fellow who has an old car with a flat tire and who would take that flat tire from the rear to put it in front. That rather reminds me of the Liberal party, which removed taxes from a certain area to put them somewhere else; a few years later, it took away the taxes from where it had put them and placed them somewhere else. And the Conservative party does the same. After a few years, it takes the same tire and puts it on the other side of the car. That does not solve the problem.

The New Democratic party, on the other hand, wants to take air from the tires where there is some left and put it in the one which is flat. That is certainly not the way to solve the problem.

But the Social Credit party really wants to solve the problem. It wants to put air back into the flat tire. What is needed in the Canadian economy and for economic development is not taxes, programs or civil servants. What we lack now is purchasing power, Canadian financing power that would be capable of boosting Canada's economic development, that would allow people belonging to all classes of society to meet their obligations and to live decently in this country of only 18 million inhabitants but with resources for a population of a hundred million.

We must also develop our cities and our municipalities. That is also part of the economic development of Canada. We have municipalities that need to be developed in the province of Quebec, particularly in my own district, the eastern townships.

It is being said that a road will be built between the cities of Sherbrooke and Montreal. Very well, we agree to that. We want this road to be built, for it should have been built a long time ago. We are being told that the estimated cost of this road for the province of Quebec would be $100 million. One hundred million dollars. That isn't so much for a road as big and as beautiful as we have been told it would be. But the silly aspect of the matter is that when we have finished paying for that road, it will have cost us $400 million. Four hundred million dollars for a road that is built today and is hardly worth a hundred million dollars. That is the silly side of the matter.

That is why Social Crediters say that it is stupid to build roads and bridges if we do not have enough money in Canada to enjoy them without having to pay for them three, four or even five times over.

Mr. Speaker, Social Crediters have been advocating for a long time the setting up of a municipal development bank that would carry out important, necessary and urgent programs.

But to think that at the end of 40 years a school costs us, in taxes and in interest especially, four times the amount it cost to build, that the construction cost of a road must be paid four times over, because Canada has not put public funds at the disposal of the municipalities and the school boards, that is very discouraging. Municipalities, school boards and public bodies should be able to get funds from the Bank of Canada so that they can pay $100 million and not $400 million, for what is worth $100 million.

Mr. Speaker, it is not Social Credit which is inflationary but rather the present system where Canada obliges Canadians to pay $400 million for what is worth $100 million only.

We feel that this is robbery. We feel that it is a form of exploitation. In our opinion, this is bad management. Therefore we want to rectify this situation by establishing a municipal development bank.

There are projects to be carried out in all our towns and all our municipalities. But we lack public funds to implement them.

When shall we do that? Only when the Bank of Canada is at the service of the Canadian people.

Why should the federal government not have its own bank to finance its own projects to promote the economic development of our country?

Economic development is a fine thing. We all agree that it is advisable to set up a national economic development board but how are we going to do it? We will use foreign capital and, in that case, Canada's development will be for the benefit of foreigners.

The planning of the money supply to equate production, Mr. Speaker, is one aspect of planning that appeals to us. We do not want to plan production in terms of capital. Money is nothing but a tool, a means of exchange. It is a mere facility. However, we must have in Canada as many means of exchange as we have commodities to exchange. That is why we say that there is nothing to be obtained from submitting individuals, industry and social classes to planning. The role of our social classes is to develop Canada and look after production while the function of the government is to set up a system of finances to enable the social classes to exchange commodities between themselves.

We have spoken of finances, Mr. Speaker, as indeed that subject always seems to creep up in our debates. Why? Because we are in favour of economic development in Canada. We are in favour of the social legislation which is submitted to our scrutiny. We fully support the various expansion projects that are introduced because we feel that the Canadian people need them and are entitled to them. Our municipalities and school boards are in dire need but we have no public funds to implement those projects.

Instead of trying to tackle the financial problem, we are attacking individuals who are victims of it.

Mr. Speaker, those various problems concerning municipal, provincial and federal financing will only be dealt with the day we have a government who will adopt as an approach, as a policy and as a program the principle that money must not be a master, that money must not be a king, but that it must be a servant. Money will become a servant in Canada the day the Canadian parliament decides once and for all to take over the control of money and credit and to put the Bank of Canada at the service of the federal parliament, of the cities, of the municipalities and of the school boards.

Thank you.

(Text):

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Chown in the chair.

On clause 1—Short title.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I do not know whether it is the intention of the minister to be in the house while the bill is in committee stage. It seems most unusual in respect of a measure to which the Minister of Finance has referred as being the most revolutionary proposal brought forward for a long time that the parliamentary secretary, at least, should not be here.

Mr. Ricard: He is unavoidably absent.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): The minister himself will be here in a few moments.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am grateful for that explanation because I did hear from the minister that he had to go to a meeting at 8.30, but he hoped not to be long, and that possibly, before we reached the clause by clause discussion, the hon. gentleman would have something to say.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): The hon. member is fully aware of the circumstances.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The hon. member for Carleton knows my mind, apparently, better than I do myself.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): That would be a simple task.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I expected that obvious retort. I will tell the junior minister of citizenship and immigration that in this particular case his knowledge is not as complete as he suggests.

Now, Mr. Chairman, having in mind the announcement made by the Minister of Finance on the resolution stage, every member of this committee had a right to assume we were going to receive from the government a proposal of the most fundamental character. I do not think I understate the feelings of members on the government side or in the opposition, nor do I think I misrepresent the feeling in the country generally, when I say there is great disappointment that this much touted measure should be as weak as a perusal of the bill clearly confirms it to be.

We were told by the minister that at long last the government, because of the existence of certain serious problems facing this nation, including our balance of payments problem, our trading relations problems and others, had decided there had to be a new technique in the Canadian pattern of administration to make the ordering of our affairs more efficient to meet the difficulties which face us at this time. We were reminded by the minister of the work which has been undertaken in France and in some other European countries. We were told by some hon. members of the recommendations which had been made by the special mission of the productivity council to Europe, and, because of those initial observations by the Minister of Finance, we all thought we were going to be presented with a new instrument in the government of our country, an instrument which would make the administration of our affairs more efficient to deal with the serious economic problems which face us. Thus, there is great disappointment, on examination of this bill, to find that it lacks even some of the stronger provisions which were to be found in the Atlantic development board measure.

What have we got? We have now a series of boards in being and others are being brought into being by this government. We have the Atlantic development board, and we all know the deficiencies of that particular instrument. We are going to have the advisory council on industrial change and manpower adjustment to be introduced later by the Minister of Labour. We have the national productivity council and now we have this economic development board. This is the board of which the Prime Minister spoke at the Chateau Laurier at the end of last week, indicating that this was the heart and the core of the long term program of this government which, he said, is prepared to face dynamically and with vigour the problems which confront the country at the present time.

Let us now examine the consequences of this proliferation of boards, referred to by the hon. member for York South the other day in his speech, when he discussed this particular proposal. As he said, when hon. members opposite dealt with the suggestion which we made in 1959, hon. gentlemen said that we would have too many boards. And now they themselves, as a result of the Atlantic development board, the national productivity council, the advisory council on industrial change and manpower adjustment, and now this economic development board, are guilty of the very proliferation which they themselves accused us of promoting when we suggested the establishment of a national economic advisory council in 1959.

There is, moreover, no co-ordination whatsoever between the various bodies. We have problems, which the Prime Minister recognized a week after the election as being of an emergent character, now to be tackled by four distinct boards, all having in fact the same purpose, all four operating under a different minister. Is it any wonder then that we recognize in the measure now before the house one that is incapable of meeting the current national situation, as a new instrument of government to supplement the activities of the government itself in seeking to cope with the various problems which face the country?

It is significant that the Minister of Finance, when he proposed this measure, not once used the word "planning". We have a right to ask the minister, as we shall when we come to discuss the clauses of the bill, whether this was an intentional omission. It is true that the minister for northern affairs used the word planning. It is true that several individual private members sitting behind the Minister of Finance used the word planning. But not the Minister of Finance. We have a right to ask the Minister of Finance, was this done by design? Because if this is the case, then we must observe that the minister does not agree with the unanimous recommendations which were made to the productivity council by the special mission to Europe of that council, recommendations which I think represent one of the most important and significant contributions made by any Canadian body appointed by the federal government for a very long time. If the minister does not want to use the word "planning" because he does not believe in it, then let him say so. If he does take that position, then we will have to recognize that this bill does nothing more than add another instrument to the Department of Finance, giving to the Department of Finance and its minister another official or series of officials to assist him in the operation and administration of that particular department.

That is not what the minister said this bill was going to do. This was a bill which was going to enable the government as a whole—not only the Department of Finance but the government as a whole—to give greater preparatory consideration to problems such as unemployment, the relocation of industry—a corollary of that problem—our balance of payments position, our trading relation problems, our fiscal and tax problems, and the proper equation of the responsibilities between the two senior levels of government. In other words, we were going to have a bill which would do for Canada what was being done by a similar measure in France and by a similar measure in the United Kingdom.

That is not what is now before us in Bill No. C-87. There is nothing in this bill that compares with the kind of organization, for instance, that they have in France. The hon. member for York South yesterday said that we on this side of the house had talked about the system of planning in France and about the kind of national development board which had been set up in that country, but that no one but he himself really seemed to have any understanding about what they were doing in France. Well, there will be ample opportunity during the course of our discussions to ascertain precisely what we understand to be the role of the national economic development board in France, although that is not the title of that body. We will want to know whether or not the government believes in the principle underlying that particular operation in France; whether the government has in mind anything like "Neddy", the national economic development organization in the United Kingdom, the chairman of which, incidentally, happens to be the chancellor of the exchequer. We will want to know whether or not the government believes in any kind of planning. We have not advocated in this Liberal opposition planned economy, but we have said that in the light of the character of problems of the modern day economic society in Canada there has to be some kind of planning. It is not the kind of planning suggested by the socialists. It is the kind of planning which the major countries in western Europe have embarked upon with great success, to meet their economic problems. Is the government in favour of indicative planning as they have in France? Or is it in favour of the kind of planning technique of Western Germany? Are they in favour of the kind of planning which they have in Sweden? Are we entitled to have answers from the minister to these precise questions? Otherwise we will conclude that this bill is nothing but a façade, nothing but an attempt to deceive the Canadian people once again into believing that this government has taken strong action to meet these problems which face the country.

This will not be the first time that we have had bills presented by this government to the house which look good in form, which make a great public appeal, but which on analysis have been shown to be absolutely worthless and ineffective to do the job for which allegedly they are designed. How is this bill going to help, for instance, in the problem of relocating industry? A few moments ago the hon. member for Winnipeg North spoke of economic conditions in the city from which I come, of the decision of certain corporations in that community to locate elsewhere with the consequence that there have been large numbers of men and women placed in the category of unemployed persons. What is this bill going to do about this kind of problem? It will be no answer to say that this is largely a provincial problem. It will be no answer to say that this is a problem which resides with another jurisdiction. It is true that under the property and civil rights clause of our constitution the provinces alone can take action along certain lines not open to this government. But if this national economic development board is going to mean anything, it must mean that the government in this instrument is setting up a body that will be capable of working out with the provinces arrangements to meet the particular problem of unemployment which exists in certain areas such as the one from which I come and, in certain areas in the Atlantic provinces, referred to a few moments ago by the hon. member for Essex West.

What is this bill going to do about the problem of unemployment? The Minister of Finance cannot say to us, "This is not the problem of the Department of Finance; address your question to the Minister of Labour". If this bill does not set up the facility by which the government will have some supplementary assistance in providing an answer to unemployment, then it is practically worthless.

We now have a serious problem of unemployment in our country with 73,000 more people unemployed in the last reported month than in the previous one. We have close to 500,000 people out of work. It is the job of this government to find ways and means, in co-operation with labour and management to provide an answer to this problem. It is the job of a board like this one to assist in resolving the kind of situation which has resulted from our balance of payments problem. Yet, if we look at the objects and the powers of the board we shall find that no effort is going to be made by this board to deal with problems of this character. Hence we are warranted to say that, while this bill is good in principle in that it creates the necessary framework for doing something worth while, we must say that, as it is at present, particularly in sections 9, 12 and 22, it is not capable of justifying the assertions made by the Minister of Finance with regard to its merits.

We are not told anything by the minister in this bill about what the relations between the Atlantic development board will be; what the relations between the Atlantic development board and the advisory council will be; what the relations between this economic development board and the national productivity council will be. Oh, I know we are told in the bill that there will be co-operation between this particular national economic development board and the other boards. However, we are not told how that co-operation will be effected. This board is treated as an equal of the national productivity council and of the Atlantic development board.

No one denies that the Atlantic development board is designed to meet an important area problem. We all recognize that fact and we said so when that bill was discussed, although we thought the bill was not capable of meeting the objectives which the Minister of National Revenue projected for that measure when he presented it to this House of Commons shortly before Christmas. But surely the problems facing the people in the Atlantic provinces, apart from their special severity and intensity, are not unlike the problems which face most areas of Canada at the present time. The basic problems of the Atlantic provinces are the basic problems of Canada. This national economic development board bill ought to take into account this elementary fact but this is something which it does not do.

Surely the minister cannot be allowed to pass over the extremely important report to which I have already referred, namely the report of the labour-management-government mission to Europe to the national productivity council. This is a monumental document. It represents the considered opinion of important segments of our country. I refer to management, labour, capital, government, agriculture, the universities and other important segments of Canadian thinking. On this special mission there were important men representing large corporations. They included men such as the president of the Goodrich Rubber Company, and important officials of the Canadian Labour Congress. The members of this commission were unanimous in the recommendations they made to the government.

On examination of this report hon. members will find that these men have made a careful analysis of what is done through national development boards in Sweden, the Netherlands, West Germany, France, Belgium and England, where they have resorted in varying measure to the principle of economic planning to meet the problem of unemployment and other problems, many of which we have in even greater intensity in this country at the present time. This report has concluded that the gap between labour-government-management co-operation in Canada as compared with the situation in Europe is so serious as as to warrant the conclusion that many of our problems in this country at this time arise from the fact that we have not established between labour and management under government sponsorship the confidence necessary to increase productivity so as to put us in a competitive position with other countries, with the consequence of having a salutary effect on the level of employment in our country.

Can we fully discuss this bill without having from the Minister of Finance a careful assessment of how the government looks upon this measure? Are we not entitled to ask the Minister of Finance whether or not, as the result of the passing of the national economic development board bill, the government is going to take vigorous steps at once to implement the recommendations of this particular special mission of able and representative people in our country who have come to these unanimous conclusions?

It will be no answer for the Minister of Finance to say that this is a report made to the productivity council and not a report made to the national economic development board, and that consequently we must await a discussion of the amendment to the National Productivity Council Act before receiving from the government its final appreciation of the recommendations contained in this report of this special mission to Europe of the labour-management committee of the national productivity council. If that is the reply of the minister, then we shall have had a clear indication of the meaningless intentions which the government really has in mind with regard to the implementation of Bill No. C-87, an act to provide for the establishment of a national economic development board.

The real fact is that the purposes of the national productivity council and of the Atlantic development board and of the advisory council on industrial change and manpower adjustment are the same as the reasons which warrant our giving consideration to the setting up of a national economic development board, such as that which in principle is proposed in this bill. Is it a fact that, as a result of the co-operation between labour and management in France, it has been possible to place corporate enterprise in that country in a competitive position with other countries in Europe and elsewhere in the world? Is it true that as a result of the relationship between the farming community and government and other segments of opinion that it has been possible for West Germany to enjoy the improved economic standards which have come to that portion of divided Germany? Is it because of the establishment of "Neddy" in the United Kingdom that many of the problems of that country have been in large measure, if not fully, resolved and settled in a manner that has enabled that country to be picked out as an example of what we might do, for instance, in the matter of the relocation of industry?

Is it going to be possible under this bill for recommendations to be made to the Minister of Finance, for blueprints to be given, which will clearly establish the procedure by which it will be possible for the national government in co-operation with the provinces to take cognizance of the considerations that are now encompassed, for instance, by the town and country act in the United Kingdom and the unemployment act of the United Kingdom of 1960?

These are questions with regard to which we have a right at this stage of the proceedings on this bill to ask the minister for definite responses in order to assess the value of this measure. We believed, as we stated in this house shortly after the present government came into office, when we were confronted with high levels of unemployment and when there was every indication from all the indices that we were going to have unemployment over a period of years, that the best way to tackle this problem was to establish a national economic development body, made up of representatives of the various occupational sections of our country to enable the government to have a comprehensive view of the situation and to formulate plans by which the government could apply itself vigorously to problems which cried for solution then, and which have gone unresolved since that time. That is not what we have here today. I say to the Minister of Finance, that from the statement he made in the house before adjournment I cannot conceive that he has given any evidence that the government proposes to use this bill to resort to extraordinary action to meet an extraordinary situation in our country. I say to him that anything short of such action will not satisfy the Canadian people and will not satisfy this house.

We have discussed unemployment in this house for a number of years, since the government came into office. This is the first time that the government has come forward with a measure which in principle is capable of providing the machinery to cope with unemployment. If given the necessary power, if given the necessary consensus, if given the necessary sponsorship, this bill could do something to meet the serious problems facing us, some of which I have mentioned in a general way. But I say to the minister that there is nothing in the bill to warrant the conclusion that this is the intention and purpose that the government has in mind in the bill it has brought forward.

We shall offer amendments to the bill. We will deal with it clause by clause and we will offer our comments and our amendments which, if adopted, we believe will give the bill the character it should have and which we thought it was going to have, when the minister referred to the bill as a revolutionary measure. If this represents the minister's understanding of the word "revolutionary", I can only say that we never need fear that there will be any kind of ordinary change in this country as long as the minister is in a position to influence the character of the Canadian revolution.

A careful reading of the bill reveals clearly that it is merely a gesture. It is a façade. It is a concession to modern times begrudgingly given rather than an attempt to forge a new instrument of national development, which is what we thought the bill was going to be. That is what the Prime Minister said the bill was going to be when he spoke to the Conservative convention last week. I am sure that the Prime Minister, occupied as he is now with many questions, has not had time to read the bill or he would never have made the statement he made last Friday when speaking to the members of his party.

Today we recognize the interdependence of all sectors of our economy. We know that the farmer cannot prosper while the automobile worker goes without wages. Dislocation of one sector is rapidly transmitted with serious repercussions to another. It is no longer feasible to plan in isolation.

What then should be the aim of this legislation? I say in reply, the creation of an institutional framework for a new economic consensus, a joint seeking of ways of attaining agreed levels of national development. Nothing less than this will satisfy the Canadian people.

(Translation):

The Deputy Chairman: I am sorry, but it is my duty to inform the hon. member that his time has expired.

(Text):

Mr. Nowlan: I am prepared to have the hon. gentleman continue.

The Deputy Chairman: Does the committee give unanimous consent?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I will have a chance later, Mr. Chairman.

(Translation):

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, if we consider the events of the last five years, we realize that for the Conservative party, economic development has meant deficit after deficit and also the growing problem of unemployment, which has increased steadily.

On the other hand, if we consider the last 22 years of Liberal administration, we realize that to them economic development meant an increase in taxes, with a view to developing high finance and chartered banks, as it can be seen today.

That is why, after 22 years of taxes under a Liberal government, I was not too much impressed by the very eloquent speech of the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin) who preceded me; it was a forceful speech, that is all. But unfortunately, he only plays second fiddle in his party. If he had been selected as leader, then I would have believed that the Liberal party would have done what he stated earlier.

But since he plays only second fiddle and the first violin changes tune quite often, Mr. Chairman, I refuse to rely in any way on what those tail-riding individuals have to say, because the leader and the fellow sitting on his left, representing the chartered banks have always been the ones who called the tune in that party.

Mr. Chairman, I have been listening to Liberal speeches for many years in the province of Quebec, and I have always thought that they were great talkers, but were actually accomplishing very little. In a word, little action is the motto of the Liberal party.

I sometimes hear that the bill should attempt to balance our international payments. Now, we realize that the imbalance started following the war and gradually developed until it reached its present situation.

This year, we are facing a balance of payments deficit of about $770 million arising mostly from the payment to foreigners, of interest and dividends out of our industries and our Canadian capital.

Mr. Chairman, I should like, in the light of the bill now before us, to develop especially this principle. It is very easy to expand our economy should we want to do so. Our natural resources are looked upon with envy by all the other countries. But, to my way of thinking, the great difficulty in the past was that we have not developed our economy by Canadians and for Canadians.

This is the purpose which must be achieved. I believe, and I am quite satisfied that hon. members in this house will want to agree with us that there might be reasons why we, French Canadians, realize more than English speaking Canadians that our economy is controlled by foreigners and that the profits are also going abroad.

If a French Canadian, wandering on one of the main streets of the metropolis of Toronto, sees an English Canadian name on the door of a firm, he is inclined to wonder who is really the owner of that company. The English Canadian, noticing the same name, automatically believes that this industry is controlled by Canadians.

When we see the name Aluminum Company of Canada on the walls of a building, we wonder who are the owners of this company. But when the English Canadian sees the same name on the same building, it is reasonable to expect that he will not have the same doubts as to the ownership of this company. It should be stated that the Aluminum Company of Canada is owned by the Mellon Bank in the United States.

When I see an English name on a building, I make inquiries about it, but an English speaking person is inclined to believe that the company is managed by Canadians because the name is English.

Mr. Chairman, my point is that foreigners, unfortunately, have too much control over our economy at the present time. As much as 75 and even 80 per cent of our economy is believed to be under foreign control.

Hence, we, citizens of a free country, who want to be free citizens, realize that, after all, we are but an economic colony of a foreign country.

Mr. Chairman, two great races make up the population of our country, Canada. They have always been proud of their freedom, of owning their country and of developing it for their own benefit.

In fact, I have never heard it said—and history has never proved it—that Englishmen, in England, would not have shed their last drop of blood to protect the natural resources and the industry of their country. They own their country, just as the French do in France.

They make it a point of honour to develop their industry, to control their trade and their factories.

Should we believe that when those two races crossed the ocean to settle in Canada, that their blood became so much thinner that we, the descendants of those two great English and French races, should accept today, without moving, without protesting in any way, to be dominated as we are by foreign industrialists, no matter to what country they belong? Are we going to allow our natural resources, our industries and our manufactures to be in the hands, not of Canadian citizens, but of foreign companies, whatever country they may come from?

Mr. Chairman, I think it is time to bring this situation to the attention of Canadian citizens, to my fellow English speaking as well as French speaking citizens.

Some English speaking citizens criticized our educational system. They stated facts. But I think it is time that in this house, we should state some facts to our English speaking Canadian citizens so that they will realize that just like us, they must free themselves from foreign control or domination of our industries, our natural resources, our trade and in short, our country's economy.

English speaking citizens must face the situation. That situation should raise reactions among them, it should be a spur that will make them work with us so that we may become masters of our own economy, and so that when we produce and make profits every year, those profits do not always go to foreign countries like they did this year, for instance, when the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Hees) complained of a deficit of $770 million.

Speaking of that deficit, the minister said it was not a deficit resulting from the sale of goods, but a deficit caused by the fact that we must pay interest and profits to foreign countries on the development of our industry.

Canada is losing $770 million a year simply because citizens of other countries have been granted the right to come and develop our natural resources.

Mr. Chairman, I think we have there a situation which should be seriously considered by every Canadian citizen. We should try to find the means to free ourselves from this foreign control over our economy, in order to develop our country to our own advantage.

Mr. Chairman, when we realize that not only our money but also our natural resources are going to foreign countries, we cannot but come to the conclusion that there is something abnormal in this case.

The hon. member for Shefford (Mr. Rondeau) said a few moments ago that 5,500 university graduates had left Canada for want of employment. Why? Because industries are controlled, as in the case of steel plants and other fields—

The Deputy Chairman: Order. It being ten o'clock, shall I rise, report progress, and request leave to sit again at the next sitting of the house?

(Text):

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Chevrier: I presume that we will go on with the matters which were announced last night for tomorrow and for Thursday and Friday. However, perhaps for the sake of clarity, the house leader might repeat what they are.

Mr. Churchill: There is no suggested change in the program announced last night. I said we would like to take on Wednesday item No. 2 on today's order paper, the freight rates reduction bill and item No. 16 dealing with the capital expenditures of the C.N.R. Thursday and Friday, we would take the estimates of external affairs.

Mr. Chevrier: Can the house leader give any indication when we will come back to this measure again?

Mr. Churchill: I live in the hope we will get to it very quickly.

At ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, January 23, 1963

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

PENSIONS

TABLING OF ADDITIONAL CORRESPONDENCE WITH QUEBEC AND NEWFOUNDLAND

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) asked for the tabling of recent correspondence between the premiers of Quebec, Newfoundland and myself in connection with the amendment to the British North America Act relative to pensions. I now table the same, and if the house is agreeable it could be appended to Hansard, in keeping with what has been done previously.

Mr. Speaker: The right hon. Prime Minister seeks the leave of the house to have appended to Hansard copies of the correspondence referred to in his statement. Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's note: For correspondence referred to above see Appendix "A".]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INDIA—CANADIAN PARTICIPATION IN AIR DEFENCE MISSION

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I wish to inform the house that as part of the continuing effort to give help and support to India in her present difficulties, Canada is to participate in a joint commonwealth-United States air defence mission which will leave London for India on January 29 at the invitation of the Indian government. The United Kingdom and Australia will also be represented in the commonwealth component of the mission. It will examine with the Indian air force the problems it faces and the technical requirements involved in organizing an effective air defence against the possibility of any further Chinese aggression. The team includes Air Commodore Mount of the Royal Air Force, Brigadier General Tipton of the United States air force, Group Captain Murray of the Royal Canadian Air Force, and officers of the Royal Australian Air Force.

I think I should point out that the mission is of a technical nature, and that its purpose is purely exploratory. Furthermore, no decisions will be taken by the mission, which is empowered only to report to the four sending governments. It will be up to each government to decide whether it will render assistance in improving the air defence of India and, if so, what type of assistance might be feasible. Furthermore, the sending of this mission does not imply any judgment concerning the prospects of success in the talks which may take place shortly between India and China. Whether such talks are going to take place at all is a subject which is today being debated in the Indian parliament.

EXPORT AND IMPORT PERMITS ACT

AMENDMENT TO CONTINUE LEGISLATION FOR FURTHER THREE YEARS

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (for the Minister of Trade and Commerce) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-107, to amend the Export and Import Permits Act.

Mr. Pickersgill: Explain.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to extend the duration of the Export and Import Permits Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

INDUSTRIAL DEVELOPMENT BANK ACT

AMENDMENTS TO PROVIDE FOR FULL TIME PRESIDENT, ETC.

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of Finance) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-108, to amend the Industrial Development Bank Act.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Explain briefly.

Mr. Nowlan: The purpose of this bill is to make some minor changes in the technical wording of the act and also to provide for a chief executive officer who will be directly responsible for the administration of the act, and to provide for even greater efficiency than now pertains.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

Questions

PAROLE ACT

CLARIFICATION OF PROVISIONS WITH REGARD TO SENTENCE AND PAROLE

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Justice) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-109, to amend the Parole Act.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Explain very briefly.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this measure is to clarify certain provisions of the act with regard to the relationship between sentence and parole.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

*C.N.R. PURCHASES OF FOREIGN BUILT MOTOR VEHICLES

Question No. 1,212—Mr. Martin (Essex East):

1. How many foreign built motor vehicles has the Canadian National Railways purchased in the past year?
2. How many such vehicles does the C.N.R. now own?

Mr. McBain: The management of Canadian National Railways advise as follows:

1. Foreign, exclusive of United States: 15.
2. Approximately 50.

(Translation):

*GOLD PAYMENTS ABROAD

Question No. 1,242—Mr. Cote:

1. How many foreign payments have been made in the last five years in gold and how many in gold certificates?
2. What was the annual average cost of transportation of gold payments shipped abroad?
3. In what form is Canada reimbursed for its gold exports to foreign central banks, and is it with our imports?
4. Does the Canadian exchange fund buy gold from the Royal Canadian Mint with money borrowed from chartered banks?
5. What is the proportion of our payments abroad in gold as compared to our payments in paper money (bills, vouchers)?

Mr. Grafftey: 1. Nil.

2. Average cost of shipping gold to New York over the last five years was 1.66 cents per fine ounce.

3. Gold sold abroad by the exchange fund is paid for in U.S. dollars.

4. No.

5. Nil.

(Text):

CREATION OF "INDIAN DAY" IN CANADA

Question No. 1,247—Mr. Brown:

Would the government give consideration to the creating of "Indian day" as a day for national recognition of the Indians of Canada, and for the development of a better public image of the Indian in our national life?

Mr. McGee: The government is deeply conscious of the vital contribution of Indians to the national life of Canada.

Whether the establishment of a special day would prove to be a satisfactory manner to extend recognition to such contribution is a matter to which final consideration has not been given.

*TELEVISION APPEARANCE OF ADRIEN ARCAND

Question No. 1,251—Mr. Fisher:

1. Did the C.B.C. bring Adrien Arcand from Quebec to Toronto for a television appearance within the last six weeks and, if so, was this appearance put on videotape, and has it been shown or is it to be shown to the public?
2. If such a videotape exists and has not been shown, what were the factors that led the C.B.C. to kill such a viewing?
3. Has Mr. Arcand been remunerated for his expenses and services?

Mr. Halpenny: 1. Yes, the C.B.C. invited Mr. Adrien Arcand to go to Toronto, where a television interview was recorded. The interview has not been broadcast, and there are no plans for broadcasting it at present.

2. The interview as recorded was not considered appropriate in relation to the program for which it was intended. It can possibly be used in some future program, and with this in view the recording is being retained on file.

3. Yes.

INDUSTRIAL RESEARCH ASSISTANCE GRANTS, NATIONAL RESEARCH COUNCIL

Question No. 1,262—Mr. Hellyer:

1. What is the total amount of money committed by the national research council to industrial research assistance programs during the current fiscal year?
2. What is the name of the company, and the amount and purpose of the grant in each case?

Mr. Churchill: 1. $837,222.

2. The names of the companies and the amounts in each case are shown in the attached list.

Grants Awarded Under the Industrial Research Assistance Program as of 14 January 1963

Company	Amount
Union Carbide of Canada Ltd.	$25,600
Sherrit Gordon Mines Ltd.	30,000
John Inglis Co. Ltd.	56,250
Canadian Chemical Co. Ltd.	32,000
Canada Packers Ltd.	38,400
Anglo Paper Products Ltd.	12,500
Dominion Rubber Co. Ltd.	49,000
Industrial Cellulose Research Ltd.	19,000

Company	Amount
Maple Leaf Mills Ltd.	$10,000
Merck, Sharp & Dohme of Canada Ltd.	14,832
Dominion Engineering Works Ltd.	28,500
Ogilvie Flour Mills Co. Ltd.	12,000
Canada Carbon & Ribbon Ltd.	9,000
Canadian Aviation Electronics Ltd.	34,000
Shawinigan Chemicals Ltd.	80,000
Canadian Westinghouse Co. Ltd.	35,394
Duplate Canada Ltd.	12,233
Abitibi Power & Paper Co. Ltd.	5,700
Glidden Co. Ltd.	12,000
Dominion Tar & Chemical Co. Ltd.	19,195
The Griffith Laboratories Ltd.	4,000
Bathurst Power & Paper Co. Ltd.	7,430
Ferranti-Packard Electric Ltd.	28,750
Brewing & Malting Barley Research Institute	9,050
Northern Electric Co. Ltd.	8,000
Dow Chemical of Canada Ltd.	10,288
Canadian General Electric Co. Ltd.	35,642
Abbott Laboratories Ltd.	20,875
Canadian Refractories Ltd.	30,865
John Labatt Ltd.	17,600
Ayerst, McKenna & Harrison Ltd.	33,000
Johnson & Johnson Ltd.	8,400
Delmar Chemicals Ltd.	8,500
Automatic Electric (Canada) Ltd.	23,400
Nuclear Enterprises Ltd.	5,000
Frank W. Horner Ltd.	8,000
Imperial Oil Ltd.	7,680
Turbo Engineering Ltd.	13,600
Canadian Technical Tape Ltd.	5,000
Hunting Survey Corp. Ltd.	2,778
Rio Tinto Dow Ltd.	10,000
Dominion Briquettes & Chemicals Ltd.	3,760
Total	$ 837,222

GRADE A HOG PREMIUM

Question No. 1,273—Mr. Pennell:

Will there be a restoration of the premium on grade A hogs in the near future and, if so, what is the anticipated date?

Mr. Jorgenson: No decision has yet been made on the restoration of the premium on grade A hogs. However, this is a matter of continuing review and consideration.

*MILITARY AID TO INDIA

Question No. 1,275—Mr. Martin (Essex East):

1. On what date between the Prime Minister's statement in the house on November 20 that India's requirements had not been finally determined and his announcement to the press in Nassau on December 21, was agreement actually reached among certain commonwealth countries including Canada and the United States regarding the amount of military aid to be given to India?

2. Was any date agreed upon by the participating countries for the announcement of the amount of military aid to be given to India?

3. What is Canada's share of this military aid?

4. What items are to be supplied by Canada?

Mr. Diefenbaker: 1. During the past three months there have been consultations among the United States, Britain, Canada and other commonwealth countries which have been providing India with military assistance. In the discussions at Nassau it was felt that it would be desirable to bring together in one program all the assistance that had been provided and which might be provided in response to Indian requests. Britain and the United States, therefore, took the lead in proposing a systematic program. There is no formal agreement. The situation is rather that proposals have been made by Britain and the United States as to the size and shape of a program the United States and the commonwealth might undertake on a joint coordinated basis.

2. As will be evident from the reply to the first question the matter of an agreed date did not arise.

3. Discussions are continuing between certain commonwealth countries regarding their contributions to a joint program.

4. What further items Canada might supply depends primarily on India's requirements and the nature of the requests received from India.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

CUSTOMS AND IMMIGRATION OFFICERS, ARMSTRONG, QUE.—TELEPHONE SERVICE

Question No. 1,238—Mr. Legare:

Has the Department of National Revenue or of Citizenship and Immigration instituted negotiations with the St-Côme-de-Beauce Telephone Company concerning installation of a telephone system in the customs and immigration offices at Armstrong, Beauce county and, if so, what decision was reached?

Mr. Halpenny: Return tabled.

QUEBEC—FEDERAL TAXES COLLECTED AND ESTIMATES APPORTIONED

Question No. 1,257—Mr. Sauve:

For each fiscal year from April 1, 1950 to March 31, 1962 (a) what was the total amount levied through direct and indirect taxation in the province of Quebec by the federal government (b) what was the total amount of the estimates of the federal government which were apportioned to the province of Quebec?

Mr. Halpenny: Return tabled.

LETTERS FROM PERSONS REQUESTING EMPLOYMENT

Question No. 1,269—Mr. Knowles:

1. Is it the practice of the Prime Minister's office, the office of the Minister of Labour and other cabinet ministers to have letters concerning employment referred to officials of the unemployment insurance commission?

2. Are the officials of the unemployment insurance commission requested to give preference in finding employment to persons writing cabinet ministers, or to persons whose letters are referred thereto by cabinet ministers?

3. Does the Minister of Labour request from officials of the unemployment insurance commission reports from time to time concerning the finding of employment for persons referred to in part 2 above?

4. Does the office of the Minister of Labour maintain a file of persons writing him, other cabinet ministers, and of persons whose letters are referred to his office until the unemployment insurance commission finds work for them?

5. Does the chief commissioner of the unemployment insurance commission or any of his officials, retain a file on what is done in response to letters received as noted in part 2 above?

6. How many letters have been handled by the office of the Minister of Labour from persons seeking employment during 1959, 1960, 1961 and 1962?

7. How many letters have been received by the unemployment insurance commission through the office of the Minister of Labour and other cabinet ministers, or referred through such offices, with respect to people seeking employment during 1959, 1960, 1961 and 1962?

8. Is preference given by the Minister of Labour and the unemployment insurance commission to persons writing to government supporters seeking employment?

9. What is the policy of the government and the unemployment insurance commission, with respect to referring to employment, workers registered with the unemployment insurance commission offices, and are they referred on (a) the recommendation of the Minister of Labour and government supporters (b) their qualifications, or (c) the length of time of their registration with the unemployment insurance commission offices?

THE AUDITOR GENERAL

DENIAL OF ACCESS TO GOVERNMENT FILES—MOTION FOR ADJOURNMENT UNDER STANDING ORDER 26

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I ask leave, seconded by the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis), to move the adjournment of the house under standing order 26 for the purpose of discussing a definite matter of urgent public importance, namely the report made to this house by the Auditor General to the effect that he was denied access to certain files, despite the provisions of the Financial Administration Act that notwithstanding any act he is entitled to free access to all files of every department and to all the information he may deem necessary to the proper performance of his duties.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that according to standing order 26 this is the proper time on a Wednesday to raise such a motion. I am sure the house will realize that what we are discussing here, or will be if Your Honour allows the motion, is a matter which is of concern to the House of Commons. My argument that this is urgent is that an officer of the House of Commons, responsible to us, has reported to us that he has been denied a certain right to which, by statute, he is legally entitled. I feel that at the earliest possible opportunity this matter should be discussed by the House of Commons itself.

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, may I say a word about the question of urgency of debate, which is the aspect that is in order at this moment. The house is well aware that as standard practice, a practice of long standing, with regard to either the observations or the recommendations of the Auditor General in his annual report to this house, there has been a motion introduced in this house to refer the report to the standing committee on public accounts. Then in that committee there is a detailed study with the assistance of the Auditor General, his staff and other competent witnesses, examining into the contents of the report.

It is the intention of the government to follow that normal procedure, Mr. Speaker, and to do so at the earliest possible opportunity. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, there will be afforded to the house, as well as to the public accounts committee, all the necessary or desirable freedom of discussion in relation to anything the Auditor General may have chosen to say, rightly or wrongly, on this or any other subject. I suggest, therefore, that there is no urgency of debate in relation to this matter at this time.

Important business has been announced for the house this afternoon, announced last night. This business is urgently awaiting the attention of the house and I submit, therefore, there is no justification on the ground of urgency of debate to set aside the business that has been announced for today and turn to something for which there will be ample opportunity for discussion at the earliest possible date.

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of Finance): I have nothing to say, except that since my name is mentioned in the report I want to concur in what my colleague the Minister of Justice has said about this matter. I should like to have it fully investigated, and I hope it will be, by the public accounts committee at the earliest possible moment. It cannot be dealt with satisfactorily by a debate here, since all the records are not available. I would hope that within the next few days the officers concerned including the Auditor General, the former minister of national revenue and anyone else, will have an opportunity of appearing before that committee and dealing satisfactorily and completely with the statement which appeared in the Auditor General's report.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Justice and the Minister of Finance would be quite correct if the matter being raised had to do with expenditures, which could more properly be discussed in the public accounts committee. But what the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has raised is the fact that an officer of this house, responsible to this house, has been debarred from carrying out responsibilities which by public statute he is authorized and empowered to carry out. Therefore the matter now being raised is not a matter of dealing with expenditures but with a denial of the right of an officer of this House of Commons to discharge his properly allocated responsibilities. We suggest this is a matter which ought to be discussed by the house at the earliest opportunity, and that should be today.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, as a matter of privilege I would like to say there has been no denial. That is why I want this matter to go before a committee where evidence can be introduced and not allegations which have no foundation of fact.

Mr. Horace A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, we in this group feel that this is a rather serious matter which has been raised, in that the Auditor General was denied access to certain files that he felt he needed to see in order to properly discharge his duties. However, we believe the proper procedure would be to refer this report to the public accounts committee at once, so that committee could call the Auditor General and other witnesses. Then when that committee reported back to the House of Commons we would know specifically what it is he thought he ought to have access to and the files to which he was denied access.

Our position is that we should have this report referred to the public accounts committee, and we urge that they take this matter up at once and call the Auditor General so that we shall know what we are talking about when we debate the matter in the house.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, there is one other aspect of the matter to which I ought to have referred when addressing you earlier, and that is this. The observations of the Auditor General are contained in a report in which he reviews the public accounts for the year ended March 31, 1962. His observations do not have anything whatever to do with anything of recent occurrence or anything that is current at this moment. He is drawing attention to something which occurred during the fiscal year 1961-62, and this is another reason why this matter can be just as properly discussed tomorrow, the next day, or at any early date as the house decides. It is not going to change its nature, its position or its condition by following the usual course.

I might say also that if the house were prepared to give unanimous consent the government would be prepared to ask the house right now to pass the motion that is annually introduced to refer the public accounts, and the report of the Auditor General thereon, to the public accounts committee for study.

Mr. Speaker: Examining the proposed motion I feel that it refers to a situation which has existed for some considerable time. Further, first in view of the fact that there may be a difference of opinion as to the legal effect of the two acts and second that I also would draw attention to the point that the question that is raised must be so pressing that public interest will suffer if this matter is not given immediate attention. With the greatest respect to the hon. member I feel that, whether certain files in the hands of a ministry have or have not been examined by the Auditor General does not raise in my mind such a matter of vital interest that public interest will suffer if it is not given immediate attention.

We know that in due course the report of the Auditor General will be referred to the public accounts committee, where witnesses may be summoned and questioned, which cannot be done at this time in this house, and that opinions of legal officers may be obtained, which also cannot be done at this time in this house. Further I would urge upon hon. members the fact that this is a most extraordinary remedy, to put aside the whole business of the house to discuss a matter of this nature, in other words to suggest that there is such great urgency of debate that the rest of the business of the house must wait.

I think on both these counts this motion does not meet the requirements of section 26; therefore I cannot accept it.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

TELECOMMUNICATIONS CONTRACT FOR RADIO STATIONS

Motion No. 59—Mr. Cowan:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of all correspondence dated August 15, 1962 to December 1, 1962, between the government of Canada or any minister, department or agency thereof and the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, the Canadian National Railways, the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Bell Telephone Company of Canada, respecting the contract for telecommunications for the approximately 195 radio stations, the previous ten-year contract having been replaced by a new contract effective October 1, 1962.

Mr. Halpenny: Unfortunately I have not had an opportunity to discuss this matter with the hon. member for York-Humber. We have as yet not ascertained what correspondence relates to this subject, and I would therefore ask that the motion be allowed to stand until we know exactly what is involved.

Mr. Cowan: When this motion was made I was assured they would be produced in one week's time. That was just before the Christmas recess.

Mr. Halpenny: That is true and I must say "mea maxima culpa". I am to blame that this material is not here. However, I can assure the hon. member that he will have them very shortly.

Motion stands.

EDUCATION OF INDIAN POPULATION, TIMISKAMING CONSTITUENCY

Motion No. 61—Mr. Peters:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of all correspondence between the government of Canada, its officials and agents thereof and the government of Ontario, or its agents and other interested persons and organizations regarding the education of the Indian population in the riding of Timiskaming.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): The hon. member has kindly agreed to specify the period in which he is interested and to add to the motion the words "since January 1, 1960". Subject to this amendment, and the reservation with respect to privileged communications and the consent of the government of Ontario, there would be no objection to the motion.

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member prepared to add those words?

Mr. Peters: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion as amended, subject to the reservations indicated by the minister?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

REMOVAL FROM WINNIPEG TO MONTREAL OF T.C.A. OVERHAUL BASE

Motion No. 62—Mr. Knowles:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of any reports concerning the moving of the maintenance and overhaul base of Trans-Canada Air Lines from Winnipeg to Montreal obtained by T.C.A. from Wallace Clark or any other firms of consultants.

Mr. Balcer: I have explained to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre that the management of the crown company concerned considers this to be an internal document. However, there would be no objection to the production of a résumé of the document if that is agreeable to the hon. member.

Mr. Knowles: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Subject to the limitation indicated by the minister and accepted by the hon. member, is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Motion agreed to.

CORRESPONDENCE WITH GOVERNMENT SEEKING EMPLOYMENT

Motion No. 63—Mr. Knowles:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence received by the Minister of Labour directly, or referred to him by other cabinet ministers and members supporting the government, from persons seeking employment, and the replies thereto from the Minister of Labour or his office, dated since January 1, 1959.

Mr. Starr: All files dealt with and completed for 1959 have been destroyed with the exception of those on which there has been recurrent correspondence. Available files on this subject number some 15,000, and in each of these files there are approximately from five to 20 letters, including replies from the minister.

This, we estimate, would involve some 150,000 copies of letters. If four copies were made of each letter, as required by this motion, the number of copies would be brought to over half a million. In view of this I suggest to the hon. member that in order to save the expense of this return he is welcome to come to my office and look through these files of letters if he wishes to do so.

Mr. Knowles: Apparently there is a great deal more correspondence concerning the subject of unemployment than we have been led to believe. As to the minister's offer, I will consider it and withdraw the motion until I have done so.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

WINNIPEG—HEALTH OF SCHOOL CHILDREN IN RELATION TO SMOKING

Motion No. 64—Mr. Knowles:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of all correspondence, dated since July 1, 1962, exchanged between the Minister of National Health and Welfare and the Winnipeg school board concerning the subject of smoking in relation to the health of school children.

Mr. Monteith: I do not believe there is actually any such correspondence, but I am having this looked into. I wonder if, in the meantime, the motion might stand.

Mr. Knowles: I will let the motion stand, and I will show the minister a copy of a letter he has received.

Motion stands.

REGULATIONS RESPECTING EXECUTION OF DEATH SENTENCES

Motion No. 65—Mr. Matheson:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of all regulations made by the governor in council pursuant to section 653 of the Criminal Code of Canada with respect to the execution of sentences of death.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Might I ask the hon. member to allow this motion to stand?

Mr. Matheson: Agreed.

Motion stands.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

SEQUENCE OF SPEECHES IN EXTERNAL AFFAIRS DEBATE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): I wish to address a question to the Prime Minister. Having regard to the fact that tomorrow we shall be discussing defence policy on the estimates of the Department of External Affairs, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether the normal sequence of speeches could perhaps be changed so that immediately after the Secretary of State for External Affairs has introduced his estimates a statement could be made by the Minister of National Defence on defence policy. This would facilitate discussion by the house of this vitally important matter.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): It is not for the Prime Minister to direct the sequence of the discussion tomorrow. It will be the regular sequence which has always been followed. The hon. gentleman will therefore have an early opportunity of placing before the house the views he has expressed outside the house.

Mr. Pearson: A supplementary question. In view of the fact that this is the first time within my knowledge that the affairs of two departments are to be discussed under the estimates of one department—a proposal made by the Prime Minister himself—does the right hon. gentleman not agree that the proposal I have made, if the opposition groups agree to it, is a reasonable one so that we might have a statement from the Minister of National Defence on defence policy?

Mr. Diefenbaker: It was in answer, I think, to a general request that an opportunity be given to hear the views of the house on the question of defence that I suggested that when the estimates of the Department of External Affairs were up for consideration, interrelated as, naturally, foreign affairs are with defence, there would be an opportunity for the opposition to give the house the benefit of its views.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): May I direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. In view of the fact that we have not had from the government for almost a full year, any statement with regard to national defence policy, will the minister say if it is his intention to make a statement in the external affairs debate tomorrow at the earliest opportunity so the country may know what position the government takes with regard to so vital a matter?

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I did not realize that hon. gentlemen opposite were so anxious to hear me speak. I should like to thank them for that interest. I think they can be assured that there will be a statement in connection with defence before the debate is ended, but why they should try to insist on when it should be made I do not know.

REFERENCE TO COMMITTEE OF AUDITOR GENERAL'S REPORT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Justice said earlier this afternoon that the government would be prepared, if they can get unanimous consent, to refer the Auditor General's report to the public accounts committee. May I ask whether the government is prepared to make such a motion? I would indicate that as far as this group is concerned we would be prepared to give our consent.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): I am glad the hon. gentleman has brought that up. I intended, in view of the discussion earlier, so to move, and with the consent of the house I would so move. I realize that this is not the proper time, and I will have to revert to motions, but I will move that the report of the Auditor General be transmitted to the public accounts committee. After questions are finished, if the house will agree, Mr. Speaker, that we revert to motions I shall so move.

(Translation):

ARTS, LETTERS AND SCIENCES

SUGGESTED ROYAL COMMISSION TO STUDY CANADIAN CULTURAL SITUATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Would the Prime Minister tell us when he intends to make his statement on the appointment of a royal commission on biculturalism?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the hon. member that I shall personally discuss that matter in the near future.

Mr. Gregoire: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. What do the words "in the near future" mean in the Prime Minister's mind?

Mr. Diefenbaker: In the near future.

Mr. Gregoire: Another supplementary question, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: I wonder what else can be asked to explain the answer: "in the near future".

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question. Do the words "in the near future" mean more or less than a month?

[Later:]

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Could the Prime Minister tell us whether the inquiry on biculturalism will take place in the ten provinces of Canada?

(Text):

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, when a complete announcement is made covering that situation the information will be made available. However, I would point out this fact; that the idea of the government is, in the spirit of confederation, to convene a meeting of the various provinces and representatives of the provinces to the end that these provinces, representing as they do all four political parties, will be able to arrive at a conclusion mutually acceptable and consonant with the unity of our country.

(Translation):

[Later:]

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. At that time, will the various groups concerned throughout the country be able to make representations during this conference between the ten provinces and the federal government?

(Text):

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, that is a matter for determination by the conference when it meets. I would not want to endeavour in the slightest degree to determine the course of such a conference. It will be one rather unusual in its nature and one that, for any decision to be made, will have to be representative of the views generally of the premiers of the provinces and of the government of Canada at the conference.

Mr. Langlois: Will that conference meet before the next election, so that we can have the Conservative party on that side?

(Translation):

[Later:]

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct another question to the Prime Minister to ask him whether the premiers of the ten provinces have accepted to participate in the national conference on bilingualism?

(Text):

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, the invitations are now being prepared. There has been no suggestion yet on the part of the provinces as to what their reaction will be. However, having regard to the general feeling as evidenced in several previous dominion-provincial conferences, and also the conference that was called at the instance of the Minister of Justice with regard to the terms upon which we could repatriate our constitution, I am sure there will be general acceptance of the invitation. Indeed, the need for action along this line has been generally agreed for some time.

(Translation):

[Later:]

Mr. Bernard Dumont (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question. In the reply he gave earlier, the Prime Minister said that this will be done in the near future. Does this mean it will be tomorrow come never?

(Text):

PUBLIC SERVICE

PROVISION OF ADEQUATE STAFF FOR AUDITOR GENERAL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Walter L. Gordon (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask this question of the Prime Minister, referring to the report of the Auditor General for the year ended March 31, 1962, and his need for additional staff. Will the Prime Minister request the unanimous consent of the house to permit the Auditor General, with the approval of the treasury board but without reference to the civil service commission, to recruit the small professional staff he requires to carry out his responsibilities to parliament?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, even if the house gave unanimous consent I am sure the hon.

gentleman would agree that such consent would be inoperative unless the Civil Service Act and probably the Financial Administration Act were amended. Certainly it has never been my experience that statutes had ever been changed in this house by the action of consent of the House of Commons, without reference to the other place.

SHIPPING

COASTAL TRADE—INQUIRY AS TO DISCUSSION WITH U.K. PRIME MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister and ask whether in his discussions with the Prime Minister of Great Britain at Nassau there was discussed the question of the restriction of coastal trade from the lower St. Lawrence to the head of the great lakes?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it is difficult to answer that off the cuff, but I have no recollection of that discussion having taken place.

Mr. Chevrier: Then could I ask a supplementary question. What is holding up the implementation of government policy as announced by the Minister of Transport on May 12, 1961, that the government had decided to limit the coastal trade from the lower St. Lawrence to the head of the great lakes?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, legislation in regard to this matter, and not necessarily directly concerned with this matter, is under consideration by the government.

TRANS-CANADA AIR LINES

MEETING WITH GOVERNMENT RESPECTING TRANSFER OF FACILITIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. J. Teillet (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether I should place this question before the Prime Minister, the Minister of Transport, or perhaps the Minister of Veterans Affairs. I wonder whether we might be informed as to when the Manitoba delegation concerning the Trans-Canada Air Lines move will be met by the government.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Veterans Affairs): The information I have is that the delegation will be here next Tuesday.

SPORTS

HOCKEY—INQUIRY AS TO GRANT TO TRAIL SMOKE EATERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address an almost embarrassing question of urgent national importance to the Prime Minister. Has the Prime Minister received a request from the interservice council of the city of Trail for financial assistance to the world champion Trail Smoke Eaters to go to Sweden early in March this year and, if so, is he giving favourable consideration to this request? These will be the representatives of Canada.

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I think there have been suggestions by the Minister of Public Works to the effect that some consideration should be given in this regard. Certainly the advisory council under the Fitness and Amateur Sport Act has advised that we contribute to the Canadian amateur hockey association, and this has been done, with a view to some further consideration possibly being given to the Trail Smoke Eaters.

POWER

COLUMBIA RIVER—REFERENCE OF TREATY TO HOUSE COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Arthur Laing (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I wonder whether he could tell the house what is now standing in the way of an immediate reference to the committee on external affairs of the contents of the Columbia treaty.

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the position of the government has been made perfectly clear on this question on various occasions. We have said that before we seek ratification of the treaty it will be referred to the standing committee.

[Later:]

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Kootenay East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. It is related to the question asked by the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Laing). Will the Prime Minister refuse to accept the resignation of the Minister of Public Works until he has had an opportunity to appear before the external affairs committee in order to explain his position with respect to the Columbia river treaty?

Mr. Speaker: Order. In so far as the resignation of any minister is concerned, I think the question is quite hypothetical. I therefore do not think the question should be allowed.

Inquiries of the Ministry

TRANSPORT

RAILWAY BRANCH LINES—ATTENDANCE OF MARITIME PREMIERS AT MEETING WITH GOVERNMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Sherwood H. Rideout (Westmorland): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Has an invitation been extended to the maritime premiers to attend the meeting which is being held with the prairie premiers to discuss branch line abandonment?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): No, Mr. Speaker, no such request has been received.

(Translation):

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CUBA—CONSULTATION BETWEEN U.S. AND CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gerard Chapdelaine (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister.

Is the Prime Minister aware that Canada would have been consulted during the Cuban crisis if it had been a member of the Organization of American States?

Mr. Speaker: That is a matter of opinion.

(Text):

CUBA—INQUIRY AS TO REPORTED ARMS BUILD-UP

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I wonder whether the minister is in a position to give the house any information with respect to the alleged arms build-up in Cuba.

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

INQUIRY AS TO HEALTH PROTECTION IN NORTHERN AREAS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Thomas R. Berger (Vancouver-Burrard): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. On Monday I asked the minister what steps his department was taking to protect Eskimos and other Canadians in northern Canada in view of the disclosure that fall-out had reached dangerous levels in that area. The minister was good enough to say he was moving as rapidly as possible to ascertain the facts. Has he anything to advise the house today with regard to that situation?

[Mr. Speaker.]

Hon. G. E. Halpenny (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources, may I take the question as notice.

OLD AGE PENSIONS

INQUIRY AS TO INTRODUCTION OF CONTRIBUTORY SCHEME

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Will the minister say if the government is prepared to introduce a contributory scheme of old age security modelled on the United States pattern, to the extent at least that such a plan is not precluded under section 94a of the British North America Act?

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, as is well known by the hon. member for Essex East, the government has been considering this matter. As soon as a decision is reached the house will be informed in the usual manner.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That is just the opposite of what the Prime Minister told the house.

COMBINES

DRUGS—INQUIRY AS TO REPORT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Haidasz (Parkdale): I should like to ask the Minister of Justice a question in view of the promise he made on December 6, 1962, that the report of the restrictive trade practices commission would be ready by the end of December, 1962. Is that report now ready for distribution. If not, what is holding it up?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the report is not yet completed. However, I am informed that I may expect to receive it any day now. It will, of course, be some time after that in the usual course before the report can be made ready for publication. I refer the hon. member to the terms of the statute in that regard.

Mr. Haidasz: I have a supplementary question. In view of the fact that the select committee on food and drugs will be meeting tomorrow in order to draw up its agenda, and as one of the problems to be discussed is the price of drugs, could the Minister of Justice offer the preliminary report to the members of the committee as soon as he has it?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No, Mr. Speaker, that is not possible. If the hon. member will look at the statute I think he will understand why.

IMMIGRATION

JOINT PROVISION OF FACILITIES AT LACOLLE, QUE.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John B. Stewart (Antigonish-Guysborough): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. When the government arranged to co-operate with the Delaware and Hudson railway company and American Export Lines for the joint provision of immigration facilities at Lacolle, Quebec, as announced in this house on January 21, was it realized by the government that this arrangement almost certainly would be harmful to the ports of Halifax and Saint John, and what consideration led the government to proceed with these arrangements, nevertheless?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think the hon. member will recognize the fact that not only is an opinion being expressed in the form of the question, but that he is also inviting argument. As a third count, I do not think the question is of that urgency that the information is required at the present time. If the hon. member will recast his question and put it on the order paper I think he will get a proper reply.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The hon. gentleman was asking a supplementary question about an answer which was given by the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration in this house on Monday, which revealed that the department was getting financial assistance from a United States company in order to facilitate immigration through the port of New York, something which the hon. member suggests is to the detriment of Halifax and Saint John. It seems to me that is an urgent matter which the minister should be allowed to answer.

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry that I cannot share the opinion of the hon. member in this regard, that it should be answered at the present time.

Hon. Richard A. Bell (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): In view of the inference that has been drawn, Mr. Speaker, I should like to say that there is no possibility of the ports of Halifax and Saint John suffering thereby.

Mr. Speaker: We are now getting right into the argument that I anticipated.

(Translation):

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

TELEVISION COMMENTS BY GEORGES LANGLOIS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Marcel Bourbonnais (Vaudreuil-Soulanges): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State. Could the minister inquire from the C.B.C. why they have decided to hide from the public the fact that Mr. Georges Langlois, a reporter who is not known to be affiliated to any newspaper and who is an employee of the national Liberal federation, when he made comments on television last Monday—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is expressing a controversial opinion.

Mr. Bourbonnais: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. I feel that is inadmissible on the part of a crown corporation and I would ask the minister—

Mr. Speaker: Order. There is no point of privilege here. Perhaps the hon. member could have his question placed on the order paper as long as it is properly phrased.

TRANSPORT

RICHELIEU WATERWAY—INQUIRY AS TO REPORT OF SUBCOMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lucien Cardin (Richelieu-Vercheres): Mr. Speaker, may I put a question to the Minister of Transport? Could the minister tell the house whether the sub-committee of the boundary waters commission, established a few months ago to consider the dredging of the Richelieu river has begun its sittings and when it expects to be in a position to submit its report?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend should know that the boundary waters commission comes under the jurisdiction of my colleague the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

(Text):

Mr. Cardin: Mr. Speaker, may I redirect my question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Can the minister inform the house whether the subcommittee of the international joint commission which was organized a couple of months ago to study the Champlain waterway has commenced its studies on the project, and is any first report to be expected?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I shall have to make inquiries about this matter.

However, the report of a subcommittee like that would not be made to the house. I think the report would be made to the commission.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): May I ask the minister a supplementary question. Has the government given any consideration to amending the terms of the Boundary Waters Act in order to include in it certain economic and other matters, as suggested by the chairman thereof in a speech in Montreal recently?

Mr. Green: No, Mr. Speaker, there is no such intention at the present time.

(Translation):

[Later:]

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, may I direct to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Balcer) a question arising from the one I asked the Prime Minister about coastal trade?

Has he or has the government put an end to the discussions on coastal trade with the commonwealth countries?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): The answer is yes, Mr. Speaker. Besides, I made reference to that matter in the house a few months ago.

(Text):

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Guy Crossman (Kent, N.B.): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Revenue. Could the minister advise the house if the offer made by the hon. member for Charlotte to take over the expenses of having a customs office at Campobello is being considered?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think this is very definitely not a question for orders of the day.

FISHERIES

REFERENCE TO COMMITTEE OF REPORT OF NORTH PACIFIC COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Fisheries. Is the minister prepared to make arrangements to have the report of the recent meeting of the international north Pacific fisheries commission referred to the marine and fisheries committee for its consideration at an early date?

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, I will take this question under advisement.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

FORT ST. JOHN, B.C.—REPORTED FAILURE TO REINSTATE EMPLOYEES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Postmaster General. In the light of the answer the minister gave yesterday to the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard, to the effect that she had not had any recent representations concerning the situation in the post office at Fort St. John, will she take another look at this matter if I send her a petition signed by 1,137 persons protesting the failure to reinstate certain employees.

Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I received a copy of the petition in the mail this morning.

Mr. Knowles: May I ask the hon. lady a supplementary question. Will she give consideration to the request set out in this petition?

Mrs. Fairclough: Mr. Speaker, I draw to the attention of the hon. member that this is a matter which was considered by the civil service commission and not by the Post Office Department.

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS

REFERENCE TO COMMITTEE OF PUBLIC ACCOUNTS AND REPORT OF AUDITOR GENERAL

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, with leave of the house I would ask you to revert to motions now.

Mr. Speaker: The Prime Minister seeks unanimous consent of the house to revert to motions. Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Nowlan)—

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, could I make a request of the Prime Minister before he moves his motion? I wonder whether in his motion, in addition to referring the report of the Auditor General to the public accounts committee, he would include also the public accounts for the year ended March 31, 1962.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I took the earlier recommendation. I move, seconded by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Nowlan):

That the public accounts, volumes 1, 2 and 3, and the report of the Auditor General for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1962, be referred to the standing committee on public accounts.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, normally, of course, this motion requires 48 hours' notice for the very good reason that this gives members of the house an opportunity to consider the matter and take part in any discussion which is required because a motion of this kind is debatable under standing order 32. Even if unanimous consent is given, and we are not refusing to give unanimous consent, this motion immediately becomes debatable. Therefore, if the hon. member who introduced a motion to adjourn the house earlier today sees fit and so desires he can, of course, discuss the matter on this motion. I call this to the attention of members of the house because we are now giving unanimous consent at the request of the government to a motion which now becomes debatable and we can do now what we were not able to do a few moments ago.

Mr. Starr: That was a stroke of genius.

Mr. Walter L. Gordon (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, in rising to say a word or two on this motion I should first like to thank the taller hon. member for Halifax (Mr. McCleave) for his suggestion that I might be preaching for a call. I can assure him that I have no interest in this particular position of Auditor General and I doubt very much that the members of his party would appoint me to that position.

Mr. McCleave: I meant office boy, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Gordon: I do wish to say how important the position of the Auditor General is. It is a position to which the incumbent is appointed by the members of parliament and he is responsible to parliament. The audit that he carries out is one of the vital checks on the way public funds are expended. Another vital check, of course, is the review by this house of the departmental estimates.

Mr. Speaker: Order. It may be that certain members are not interested in hearing what the hon. member has to say but at least the Chair is and the Chair would appreciate it if the hum of conversation could be moderated so that we can hear what the hon. member has to say.

Mr. Gordon: If the Auditor General is hindered in any way at all, or for that matter if there should be any impediment placed on members of this house in their examination of departmental estimates, then parliament would be at the mercy of any government that might wish to take the law into its own hands.

Mr. Baldwin: Like the last government.

Mr. Gordon: The Auditor General has been saying for some time that he needs more staff. If this request is not granted, and it has not been granted over quite some period of time, then the Auditor General cannot do his job properly. He cannot audit the books of the government properly. This is something that I am sure all members of parliament would take as a very serious impairment on their rights as members of this house.

I suggest that the establishment of the Auditor General should be reviewed regularly every year. Because if he has to make the kind of statements that he made in his annual report for the year ended March 31, 1962, if he has to say he is unable to get the kind of staff and a sufficiency of staff to do his job properly, then not unnaturally this creates suspicion as to whether public moneys are being spent properly and in accordance with the approval given by parliament. I understand that the Auditor General has made the request on more than one occasion to the public accounts committee that he should be permitted as an officer of parliament and with the approval of treasury board to recruit his own staff, which is a very small professional staff.

I asked the Minister of Finance (Mr. Nowlan) about this yesterday and he referred me to the Secretary of State (Mr. Halpenny), through whom it might be possible, at some time, to get some information from the civil service commission on this subject. Other hon. members have, during this session, asked for information from the Secretary of State about a number of things, and they have found that that information was not always forthcoming very quickly. It takes some time and some prodding. We have had an example today of the fact it takes a great deal of prodding to get this kind of information.

In the meantime, the Auditor General is not in a position to get on with his job. It has been suggested that the Auditor General has not found the civil service commission too co-operative in so far as his requests are concerned. I understand that the civil service commission is now advertising for staff for the Auditor General, but the salary scales proposed are not likely to attract very many qualified members of the profession to which some of us belong. If this situation continues, we will find the Auditor General is simply not in a position to do the work we rely on him to do.

I have had some experience in this matter of auditing. I can say from my experience that it is not possible for a man, with the kind of responsibility we expect this servant of parliament to accept, to do his job unless he has not only sufficient staff but a well qualified staff. I thought, therefore, it would not be considered an unusual request on my part to suggest to the Prime Minister that he should facilitate the Auditor General's request to obtain this staff.

The Prime Minister did not see fit to comply with my request. Perhaps, therefore, in speaking on this motion I may put it in a slightly different form. I suggest that the Prime Minister should use his best influence to see that the necessary qualified staff is provided to the Auditor General and without delay. If the Prime Minister wishes to pass this request along to the Minister of Finance, and the Minister of Finance takes it seriously as I think he should, something would be done and done quickly. It is because I feel so strongly on this particular point, Mr. Speaker, that I decided to speak on this motion. I am sorry the Prime Minister is not in the house. I hope he will read Hansard, and I hope he will do something about this matter.

Mr. Horace A. Olson (Medicine Hat): I should like to make a few comments on this motion that has been brought before the house, Mr. Speaker. We in this party agree with what the Auditor General had to say in his report concerning the withholding of files containing information relating to the indebtedness of some people to the crown. We do feel, as the Auditor General has pointed out, that all moneys must be fully accounted for, and that the rules and procedures followed should be efficient in procuring an effective check on the expenditures and receipts of the Receiver General of Canada.

We do not, however, believe that we can effectively investigate this matter during this debate. It would be better, in our opinion, if we were to have this matter discussed in the committee stage or in the committee on public accounts. Then, we could call the Auditor General and ascertain from him exactly what the total amounts were that were involved and the reasons he felt these files were required in order to enable him to make a complete statement of all public moneys. Then, perhaps, in this committee we could call the members of the treasury board who approved the withholding of these files. We feel all this would be necessary so that we would know why they deemed it necessary to give permission to withhold the files from the Auditor General when he was making his report.

In closing, I just want to say we feel this matter can be more effectively investigated if we go to the committee first, then take the committee report back to the house and debate it. May I say a word or two about the matter of staff? We in this group realize, too, that it is necessary to have sufficient competent staff to audit the books of the federal government. If the Auditor General can indicate to our satisfaction that he does not have a sufficient number of competent people, then we should take whatever remedial action is necessary to ensure that this staff is provided for him.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, it is not often that I get an invitation from some other corner of the house to make a speech. Although it has happened before, I appreciate it very much, coming as it did today from the Leader of the Opposition. In return for his generosity in pointing out that I now have the right to make the remarks I sought to make earlier, I should point out to other members of the house that on the Prime Minister's motion much more is in order by way of debate than would have been in order on the motion I sought to make. I sought to raise for discussion simply one question, one which to me is the most serious point raised in the Auditor General's report; but under the terms of the Prime Minister's motion hon. members can debate anything that is brought before us in the Auditor General's report that we now have, and in the public accounts for the year ended March 31, 1962.

However, Mr. Speaker, I wish to take only a few minutes to emphasize the seriousness of the point that the Auditor General has made in paragraph 95, on page 42 of his report to the House of Commons for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1962. As a matter of fact I think this paragraph of the Auditor General's report should be on the record. It reads as follows:

> Access to taxation collection files refused. In December 1961 the treasury board approved the withholding of amounts payable to three taxpayers to be applied towards reduction of their indebtedness to the crown with respect to income tax for the years 1954 to 1960. As such a step indicated a failure of normal collection procedure, we requested the relative head office collection files for audit examination. On the instructions of the Minister of National Revenue—

The minister of national revenue at that time was the hon. gentleman who is now the Minister of Finance.

> —these files were not made available to us by the taxation division and we were informed that the minister intended seeking the opinion of the Department of Justice with respect to our right of access to such files. Up to the date of this report we have not been advised regarding any such opinion although we directed inquiries to the taxation division on two subsequent occasions.

The issue here, and this is the reason I raised it, relates not just to three particular files which, as Your Honour pointed out, go back a number of years. The issue before us here is whether or not an officer responsible to the House of Commons is being impeded in the exercise of his duties by a member of the executive, the present Minister of Finance, the former minister of national revenue.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have some question in my mind about the exact relevancy of discussing in detail any and all features of the Auditor General's report on a motion to refer to a committee. I feel that it does not make too much logic, and I would draw attention to hon. members that it has been said many times to the house that the whole contents of a subject cannot be canvassed on a motion to refer to a committee, nor can those things in detail which might be raised regarding it.

I think we have had many precedents in that regard and I feel that it would be illogical to discuss and debate beforehand, before the hearing of evidence, and engage in any conclusive debate on the subject matter of it. The matter before us is the advisability of referring a certain report to a certain committee, and if hon. members will limit themselves to that we shall make better progress.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, I will not take any time to argue with your ruling because what I want to say can be said within the four corners of what you have ruled. It is in order under standing order 32 to debate a motion "for reference to a committee of a report or any return laid on the table of the house." That is what I am now doing, and I am arguing that one of the reasons why this report of the Auditor General should be referred to the committee on public accounts for immediate examination is that the report brings to our attention what, in my view, is a serious interference with the rights and privileges of an officer responsible to this House of Commons.

It is not necessary for me to make any further reference to the report of the Auditor General for the purpose of making my argument, but I feel that this is the place, here on the floor of the House of Commons, where it should be drawn to the attention of the committee that we as members of the House of Commons regard this matter as very serious.

The Financial Administration Act was passed by the House of Commons, as well as by the other place, and it is on our statute books. Under the Financial Administration Act, section 65 and the sections following, the position of Auditor General is created, and one of the sections in this part of the Financial Administration Act sets out his rights in very clear language. It is section 66 (1) which says:

> Nothwithstanding any act—
>
> Please note that there are no exclusions.
>
> —the Auditor General is entitled to free access at all convenient times to all files, documents and other records relating to the accounts of every department, and he is also entitled to require and receive from members of the public service such information, reports and explanations as he may deem necessary for the proper performance of his duties.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that that right of an officer of this house is very clear, that he has the right to have free access to all files of any department at any time, and that he has the right to require and receive whatever explanations he needs in order to pursue his duties. According to press reports the objection of the former minister of national revenue, the present Minister of Finance, to this request was based on a provision in the Income Tax Act. That provision is also quite clear. It is section 133 of the Income Tax Act which reads as follows:

> Every person who, while employed in the service of Her Majesty, has communicated or allowed to be communicated to a person not legally entitled thereto any information obtained under this act or has allowed any such person to inspect or have access to any written statements furnished under this act is guilty of an offence and liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding $200.

I submit that you do not have to have a course in law to put those two sections of those two acts together to see what they mean. The section in the Income Tax Act is the well known section regarding secrecy of information obtained by the income tax department, and it is very clear that the limitation is against giving information to anyone not legally entitled thereto. But the Auditor General is not one of the persons not entitled to such information. On the contrary, by statute passed by the House of Commons, the Financial Administration Act, he is legally entitled "notwithstanding any act" to get any information he needs to pursue his duties.

I submit therefore that what has happened is that a privilege of the House of Commons—because after all it is to the House of Commons that the Auditor General reports—has been transgressed in that an officer responsible to the house has been denied, by a member of the cabinet, a right provided in a statute which we have passed.

As a matter of fact this denial of that right to the Auditor General has been compounded by the fact he was told, according to what he tells us, that the matter was being referred to the Department of Justice for a ruling, but despite the lapse of considerable time he had not been advised what the ruling of the Department of Justice was. I submit that here again—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think for the edification of hon. members I should read a ruling in this regard made by my predecessor on this particular point towards which I sense the debate is now drifting. This will be found in volume III of the 1960 Hansard, the report of the proceedings for March 29, 1960, at page 2558, where Mr. Speaker Michener is reported as saying:

> I ask the hon. member whether he is not debating the issue as though it were being decided here. All we are deciding in this motion is whether the matter should be referred to a committee which will be able to hear evidence and report back. I do not want to narrow the debate too much, because one must understand the purpose and what problem is to be referred to the committee. I hope the hon. member will not attempt to settle here the problem which the house is referring to a committee.

Within this limitation I think the hon. member will recognize how far he can go.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, with all respect I feel my arguments thus far, and the arguments I should like to advance for another moment or two, are within the four corners of the ruling you have cited. I am supporting the Prime Minister's resolution. I am endeavouring to show cause why that resolution should be supported unanimously, and why this report should be referred to the public accounts committee. I am not taking time to go through the whole report to bring up all the interesting items that are in it and which have made the headlines. Rather I have seized on the point in connection with which the privileges of the entire House of Commons have, in my belief, been abridged by an action of the former minister of national revenue.

As I was saying when you interrupted me, I feel this has been compounded by the statement that this was referred to the Department of Justice for a ruling. In other words one cabinet minister is getting an opinion from another cabinet minister as to whether or not he has a right to deny to an officer responsible to the House of Commons something that is provided in an act passed by the House of Commons. That is really all I wanted to say when I tried to bring this subject before the house earlier under standing order 26. I was anxious that the house itself, through at least one of its members might have a chance to express the view that our rights as members have been overridden by this action. I contend that this matter should be thoroughly investigated by the public accounts committee and I support wholeheartedly the Prime Minister's motion that the public accounts and the report of the Auditor General be referred to that committee.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): May I say a few words? I rise because I have had an unusual length of experience on committees dealing with public accounts. It was my privilege as a member of the provincial legislature to be a member of the public accounts committee for 20 years and in my ten years in this House of Commons I have been a member of the public accounts committee ever since there was one. In addition, I have always been a member of the steering committee.

I think the public accounts committee of this house, a committee made up of members of all parties, is a committee of which all hon. members can be proud. It is a committee which accepts fully the responsibilities assigned to it by the House of Commons. That is my sincere belief, and I am very proud of the work of the public accounts committee, particularly in the past four years. We now have to consider matters of major importance not only to the public but to members of this house. I believe we should not discuss technical or legal interpretations, or deal in platitudes and generalities. A motion is before us which places on the public accounts committee the responsibility for going over the public accounts and the report of the Auditor General. If my experience in the future as a member of the public accounts committee turns out to be the same as in the past, I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that the public accounts committee will accept this responsibility in its entirety and will make a report to this house in all honesty and decency.

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of Finance): Perhaps I should say a word in view of the remarks made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). I do not want to sit here and, by my silence, have anyone think for one second that I agree in any way that the hon. member was correct at all in the inferences he drew from the report.

I do agree with the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch) that the proper thing to do is to refer this matter to a committee where the facts can be brought out. The matter can be reasonably discussed thereafter in the house.

Mr. W. M. Benidickson (Kenora-Rainy River): I simply want to make this point, that as far as I can recollect—and I am relying on newspaper reports; I do not have the Auditor General's report here dealing specifically with what might be involved in these tax claims and tax files—it was the minister himself who was responsible for casting a cloud on all members of parliament because it was he, not the Auditor General, who said that some of the files involved referred to members of parliament.

There are people all across Canada who are sometimes in difficulties over paying their income taxes and great damage will be done to the whole country I feel, if there is any possible suggestion that any special concession in connection with payment of income tax is rendered to members of parliament. Certainly, that has not been my experience. But I want to point out it is the minister himself who has put us all under a cloud in this respect.

Motion agreed to.

FREIGHT RATES REDUCTION ACT

AMENDMENTS EXTENDING APPLICATION AND INCREASING EXPENDITURES

The house resumed, from Wednesday, December 19, 1962, consideration in committee of Bill C-91, to amend the Freight Rates Reduction Act—Mr. Balcer—Mr. Paul in the chair.

On clause 1—Extension of time.

Mr. Balcer: I do not intend to make a formal presentation at the present time. I just want to remind hon. members that the house had an opportunity to debate the subject matter of this bill at the time the resolution was considered and that the measure had been studied clause by clause by the committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines. At that time the representatives of the various interests concerned appeared before the committee as well as officers of the crown, of the board of transport commissioners and of my department, and expressed their views. They were questioned at length and a great deal of documentation was produced. I think the whole matter has been gone into thoroughly and I hope, therefore, that hon. members will give their assent and support to this bill which is only an interim measure pending legislation on the MacPherson committee report which will be brought before the house in a very short time.

Mr. Turner: On behalf of this side of the house I should like to address a few words to the committee explaining our attitude on this side in general and, if I am given the time, my own attitude in particular in connection with this amendment to the Freight Rates Reduction Act.

The purpose of the original act in 1959 was set forth by the minister in his initial statement on this matter when he told us it was to compensate shippers in western Canada and the maritimes for the 17 per cent freight rate increase which was authorized by the board of transport commissioners in 1958. As a result of that act, a subsidy of a maximum of $20 million was authorized to allow the board to roll back the 17 per cent increase in favour of shippers, and on August 1, 1959, the board authorized a rollback from 17 per cent to 10 per cent. Later, on May 6, 1960, a rollback was made from 10 to 8 per cent. As a result, this legislation achieved a reduction for shippers in non-competitive rates of 9 per cent, that is, from 17 per cent to 8 per cent. Subsidies were paid under this act amounting to $20 million in 1959 and a further $15 million under the amendment of 1960. In 1961 there was a further $20 million; and the minister is now coming before this committee to ask for a further subsidy or third extension of $20 million, for a maximum of $75 million paid as subsidy to shippers moving traffic under commodity rates.

I should like to stress to the committee at this stage, Mr. Chairman, in order that we might analyse the effect of this extension and the effect of this act with respect to the competition between trucking and rail, that the subsidies are limited to what are known as non-competitive rates; that is to say, they are limited to commodity and class rates. The committee ought not to be confused, if I may say so with respect, over competition arising between trucking and rail, because in the main this act does not apply to rates which are made competitive by the railways in order to meet truck or water competition. A railway rate becomes competitive when the railway lowers the rate or makes a co-charge with the shipper to meet truck competition or to meet water competition. When that rate becomes competitive under the act, this subsidy does not apply. In other words, where the railways have made competitive rates in order to meet truck competition, the subsidies under this act do not go to the shippers and are not refunded to the railways.

The purpose of the amendment was outlined by the minister in his opening statement to this committee some time ago. The original act expired on April 30, 1962; and the amendment is to extend the provisions of the act to April 30, 1963. A secondary purpose is to authorize, as I have said, further subsidies of $20 million, and to authorize payment to the railways for the lower rate they have been giving shippers since April, 1962. The minister characterized this as temporary legislation which would have to do until more formal reforming legislation flowing from the MacPherson report was brought before the house. Our view of this legislation was very ably set forth by my learned friend the hon. member for Laurier when he made his initial statement on behalf of our party at the outset of the debate before this committee. We take issue, of course, with the terminology that this is an extension of an existing act. This is a revival of an act which has already expired. In other words, at the moment, there is no legislation justifying these lower rates which shippers in western Canada and the maritimes are receiving from the railways, because the act, as I said, expired on April 30, 1962.

The railways, in accordance with an understanding with the government, have been granting the lower rates to shippers in the hope that this house will pass the amendment to the act. This is a bit of retroactive legislation to justify something which should have been done almost a year ago, and to bail the government out of a position where they will have to relieve the railways of somewhere between $15 million and $20 million paid in anticipation of legislation which at the time did not exist, nor does it now exist.

I suggest to the committee that this is just another instance, another example, of what has been happening in this house, where we are being called upon by the government to pass payments of money when it is really too late for us to do anything about it. It is seeking to bar the door when the horse has already escaped. We have had to pass interim supply which we have not seen, as well as estimates; and we are now being asked to justify payments of $20 million when most of that money has already been spent. A further extension will be needed on April 30, 1963; so that if this amendment is passed by this house in the next few days, the minister will again be obliged to come before us in about three months to ask for a further extension.

The minister said that this was temporary legislation; but it is legislation which has been renewed piecemeal year by year since 1959. He said it is temporary legislation until the MacPherson report can be implemented. But, Mr. Chairman, the MacPherson report recommended the abolition of the present equalization policy and the abolition of the very type of subsidy which is symbolized by this statute. In other words, the minister says: "Wait until the MacPherson report"; and the MacPherson report has recommended the abolition of this subsidy. I fail, with the greatest respect, to understand the logic behind what he says.

As my hon. friend for Laurier pointed out, this act continues to subsidize a wage increase because the motive behind it was to allow the railways the revenue with which to meet the railway employee wage increase in 1958, without similar benefit to the shippers. In other words, the government has been put into the position where it is subsidizing a wage increase on behalf of the two railway systems of this country.

Finally, the purpose of this act should have been to benefit solely the maritimes and western shippers. But as the Canadian trucking association pointed out very conclusively, the benefits of this act are indiscriminate. Nowhere does it say which shippers are to benefit; it is limited merely to shippers moving goods under non-commodity and non-class rates. In other words, some benefits have accrued to the central provinces when I feel sure that that was not the original purpose of the statute. Nor is there any attempt in the act to give a definition to "competitive rate" in order to clarify the problem which the truckers brought before the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines, whereby they contended that the subsidies really affect competitive rates to their detriment, as well as the non-competitive rates.

(Translation):

My friends sitting on my left have claimed, before the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines, that they had serious objection to this legislation. They offered some reasons, but I respectfully submit that they were unfounded. Allow me to recall the objections raised by my Social Credit friends, which were the following:

First, the subsidies granted to both railways were harmful to private enterprise.

Second, those subsidies have favoured both Quebec railways at the expense of truckers.

If I may be allowed to deal briefly with those two objections, I must say, first of all, that there are now serious problems, affecting the trucking industry in the province of Quebec, which are the result of the exploitation of subsidiary trucking companies by the railways. But this bill in particular does not touch upon that problem. Actually, the subsidies are granted to shippers. Second, truckers of the central provinces are not affected in the same way as those of the maritime provinces or of the western provinces, because the rates charged by most railways in the province of Quebec are competitive.

Therefore, they do not come under this legislation.

The hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency (Mr. Marcoux) has admitted himself that the grants were beneficial to the shippers and that the truckers were not directly involved.

(Text):

Chief Commissioner Kerr, who testified before the standing committee, said that so far as piggy back shipments were concerned, the subsidy only went to that part of the shipment which went by rail and was not paid on the part which went by truck. Looking at the problem particularly from the point of view of the truckers in the province of Quebec, first of all the subsidy is paid to the shipper, Second, the truckers in that province are mostly competing against the railway in the competitive rate range, so that the act in question is not the act which my hon. friends want to attack if they are objecting to the railways moving in on the trucking industry in the province of Quebec.

(Translation):

Mr. Gregoire: Would the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Turner) allow me a question?

I am trying to find out, in the event that this tariff reduction is granted to the shipper, if he has the right or privilege to choose the means of transportation? Can he choose between the railways and a trucking company?

Mr. Turner: In reply to the question asked by the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Gregoire), I can say that he is right and that at the present time, under the act, the shipper can only use the railways. But later I will propose an amendment recommending that the subsidies be paid to the shipper, in all cases, whether he is shipping by truck or rail. That could bring up administrative problems but, personally, I am of the opinion that we must study the matter and try to give the shipper that alternative, under the provisions of the same act.

(Text):

If I may, Mr. Chairman, I should like to get down to the very important opposition taken to the extension of this act by the Canadian trucking association. It is an opposition which concerned every member sitting on the standing committee and gave us pause as to whether this legislation ought again to be extended. The testimony of Mr. John Magee, executive secretary of the Canadian trucking association was for me very persuasive, and from comments made to me by other members of the committee I gathered that they as well were very much impressed. The principal argument of the Canadian trucking association was that the non-competitive rates set by the railways which profit from this subsidy are really no longer non-competitive rates but would be competitive if thrown open to active competition without the benefit of a subsidy. In other words, what they said was that the present height or standard of the rate is such that it already competes with the trucking industry, and that the trucking industry is therefore impeded in free competition because the railway is allowed to maintain an artificially low rate as a result of the subsidy.

The Canadian trucking association argues that if the present subsidy were withdrawn, many of the present so-called non-competitive rates benefiting from the subsidy would be in effect competitive rates and the railways would be forced to and would be able to reduce them. This was indicated, said Mr. Magee, by the fact that in the past three or four years the area of non-competitive rates has been steadily lowered until the non-competitive rate has become what he termed "a vanishing breed." His argument is that if this legislation were withdrawn the vanishing breed would be close to suicide and that the non-competitive rate would disappear from the traffic.

In answer to his arguments, and while admitting that there is great merit in them, I would say that if the non-competitive rate is a vanishing breed or if the non-competitive rate is disappearing, then the trucking industry has less to fear from this legislation than it had three years ago in the sense that if more and more of the rates are becoming competitive, then fewer and fewer of the rates are being subsidized and more of the rates are being opened to free competition between trucking and rail unsupported by any subsidy.

Furthermore, Mr. Chief Commissioner Kerr estimated that the trucking industry was currently carrying only 5 per cent of the goods moving under commodity and class rates. In other words, only 5 per cent of the traffic carried by the railways under the subsidized rates is being competed for by the trucks. Mr. Montague, the economic adviser to the Canadian trucking association, was unable to produce any concrete evidence to rebut that estimate, although he would put the figure closer to 10 per cent or 15 per cent. If this is so, it means that the handicaps complained of by the trucking industry in so far as this particular legislation is concerned—and I am not talking about the no-strings-attached general subsidy but only about this particular legislation—are not as great as they would have us believe. If only 5 per cent of 10 per cent of the traffic open to trucks is affected, their complaint is not as severe as they would have us believe. On the other hand, if only 5 per cent or 10 per cent of the traffic is being affected, if this House of Commons were not to pass this legislation it would mean that 90 per cent of the traffic would move from a 9 per cent rate to a 17 per cent rate because there would be no competitive trucking able to force the rate down. In other words, shippers in western Canada or shippers in the maritimes would be forced immediately for about 90 per cent of the traffic to pay the higher 9 per cent differential.

The second argument of the trucking association was that this subsidy prolongs the railways' monopoly, and is a subsidy paid to one mode of transport to the detriment of other modes of transport, or, in other words, the subsidy is only open to shippers who use the railways; and that was the point raised by my hon. friend from Lapointe. In other words, the subsidy allows the railways, so the truckers say, to lower their rates in other areas. They say the money the railways get from the subsidies under this legislation allows them, for instance, to meet competition with trucks under agreed charges by giving them more revenue to divert into other cost factors of their operation. I suppose the answer to that might be that much of the Canadian trucking association's brief relating to this railway monopoly problem went to the general subsidy question, or to the no-strings-attached $50 million subsidy.

It would be my respectful opinion that the argument raised by the trucking association had less pertinence or less immediate application to this particular legislation. But if this subsidy is to be continued further; if the MacPherson report is perpetually to evade us in this House of Commons; if the legislation incorporating a new freight rate policy for this country is not to be brought down by the government; if the house is to be faced with a further extension of this act in three months, then the suggestion made by the trucking association last year is one which I personally find very attractive and which obviously my hon. friend from Lapointe finds attractive; namely, that the Department of Transport should investigate the possibility of transferring the application of the subsidy to the shipper, so that the shipper could choose between railway or trucking, and so that the shipper would be allowed to use the low cost mode of transport and receive the subsidy. In other words, if the purpose of the legislation is to aid the shipper and not to subsidize the railways, then to my mind it is conceivable that the shipper ought to be able to choose the mode of transport.

There is a second general comment I should like to make personally—and I stress the fact that the comment I have made about the subsidy going to the shipper rather than to the railway is my own personal comment—and that is that interprovincial and international trucking should be regulated by the same board by which railways are regulated. If, as is unquestioned, the federal government has jurisdiction over extraprovincial or interprovincial and international trucking under the Winner case of 1954 which went to the privy council, and if at the moment the provincial transport boards are only handling this jurisdiction over interprovincial trucking because of the federal Motor Vehicle Transport Act, 1954, whereby the federal government gave jurisdiction to provincial boards to handle this matter; if that is so, there would be no legal bar to the federal government again enacting legislation to assume jurisdiction over federal trucking. If the MacPherson report is to be implemented, if competition in transport is to be freed as between rail and trucking, it would seem logical that the same board ought to administer both sets of rates and both modes of transport. At the moment we have no unity and no consistency in the regulation of rail rates as opposed to the regulation of trucking. If the board of transport commissioners were to be given jurisdiction not only over rail and water transportation, as it has today, but over trucks as well, we would have a central regulatory body controlling all means of ground and water transportation.

I put this suggestion to Mr. Magee when he was before the standing committee, and his objection to it was that the trucking industry did not think that the board of transport commissioners had among its membership anybody familiar with the trucking industry. I know that many trucking people, when they do get before the board, feel that the board is weighted in favour of railways as against trucks. My suggestion to him then and to the committee now is that this would be quite simple to remedy. If the board were to be given the wider jurisdiction I suggest, it would be quite easy to appoint additional members to it who were familiar with the trucking industry. It would be a procedural point only, and I think the interests of rail, truck and water transportation could be dealt with quite fairly within the same forum. Goodness knows, we have had a proliferation of boards introduced at the present session, and if the minister were to undertake to reverse this trend of boards forever, if the minister were to institute a measure whereby federal trucking would be brought under one single board and the same board that regulates its competition, I think he would be doing a service to the country.

Our position then is that we will not oppose this legislation and the extension of the act, because if we did the dislocation to western shippers and maritime shippers would be immediately so severe as to impose serious pressure on people moving goods in those parts of the country. Second, we have a situation where the railways have already disbursed between $15 million and $20 million to shippers under commodity and class rates covered by the subsidy in anticipation of this legislation. We have been put in the position where we are almost forced to pass it in fairness to a mode of transportation that has relied upon the government to back it up. Third, the non-competitive rates subsidized by this legislation are disappearing. As a result, the area where the subsidy operates to the detriment of the trucker is diminishing. Therefore, with a clear conscience and in the hope that more general legislation will eventually be forthcoming, we are prepared to accede to the minister's request to adopt the bill.

(Translation):

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Chairman, I cannot help voicing once more the objections I put forward every time this Bill C-91 was discussed in the railways, air lines and shipping committee. In fact we, of the Social Credit party had intended, during the sittings of the sessional committee, to move certain amendments which could have saved much of the time of the house if there had been time to discuss them. At the first sitting of the committee, the discussion was quite free. At the second sitting, it was more restricted. At that time, both sides seemed to be more on the defensive. But at the third sitting, on Monday, December 17, 1962, we saw the two old parties and the socialists take advantage of their experience in camouflage and of our first steps in committee work to pull a fast one.

I was present at that sitting of the committee. The question was raised as to whether we would have a quorum or not. The hon. member for Charlevoix (Mr. Belanger), for whom I was waiting to direct the discussion, had just walked into the room when the chairman announced the opening of the sitting. The whole thing had been arranged by the masters of the three groups which, in the usual manner, had decided that this amount of $75 million granted to the C.N.R. would be passed and, without consideration for the citizens who pay taxes, with a view to making up for the extravagant deficits of a crown corporation run by the most inefficient and arrogant persons I have ever seen in my life.

And after that, you, the members of the old line parties and the socialists, you will cry out to the people, who are finding out about you today, that you are the defenders of private enterprise. You will tell the builders of private enterprise, the champions of free enterprise, that you protected them. You Conservative gentlemen, you are entitled to all of Donald Gordon's gratitude. You Liberal gentlemen hasten to demand an election, so that the people may expose your cheating. Administration for you is simply a joke. As far as you are concerned to administer is to hoodwink the people, to hide everything from them and then to accuse them of ignorance when they vote intelligently.

Mr. Chairman, at that memorable sitting which lasted only two and a half minutes, because everything was passed in two minutes, whereas it would have been advisable to extend the discussion, we adjourned proud of having once more served the financial community. It was another victory over the people represented by the Social Credit party. All that led to the approval of Bill C-91 included only two clauses: namely an extension of the rate reduction, and an increase of $20 million in the expenditures authorized by the legislation.

That increase of $20 million is not much, Mr. Chairman, but it will help to destroy private enterprise.

I should like first to mention casually that I do not believe in the "temporary" legislation which is extended every year. In my opinion, it is merely a smokescreen to hide the real causes of the C.N.R.'s deficits. This government is so used to taxing Canadian workers that whenever an agency takes it upon itself to help overtaxed people, the speediest means are taken to get rid of it.

To extricate themselves from this muddle, they will go from town to town, and from village to village, singing loudly the praise of private enterprise.

Mr. Chairman, by supporting unconditionally Bill C-91 which was then being studied by the sessional committee, the representatives of the three parties proved in the most glaring fashion their incompetence and their thoughtlessness.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. The hon. member is not allowed to impute motives to his colleagues in a parliamentary committee, nor to pass remarks upon their attitude or their behaviour. He cannot formulate any criticism about their position on the problems studied in the house or in a committee. I hope therefore that the hon. member will be kind enough to express his views without making any disparaging remarks about his colleagues who sat on the sessional committee on railways.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Chairman, if I have a few bitter remarks to make here, it is because we feel that there has been an encroachment upon our rights and, in my opinion, the house is the only place for us to voice our protests when we cannot do it elsewhere.

Translation was not even provided at the sittings of the committee. In fact, after every sentence, we had to ask for a translation into French in order to understand, and parliament takes no account of that. That is why I was entirely dissatisfied with the committee's proceedings.

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. The debate must be somewhat orderly.

The hon. member for Roberval claims that the sessional committee on railroads to which this bill was referred, did not act democratically, had no regard for French Canada, etc. And what are the facts? The witnesses appeared before the committee, and each time any member of the committee who wished to speak in French could do so in all freedom and without any limitation.

In fact, when a reply was given in English we had interpreters to translate it.

The hon. member was perhaps frustrated because of having arrived too late to make certain representations, but, in my opinion, he cannot blame anyone but himself.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Chairman, on the point of order, I remember that a question was asked in French, and the minister replied there was no translator at the time. In fact, it is only after that incident that one was provided.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. When the committee of the whole house is considering a bill, the subject matter of the bill must be adhered to, and no comments may be made on the behaviour of members nor an analysis made of the events which went on during the proceedings of another committee.

We are now considering the principle of Bill C-91, whose purpose is to extend for a period of one year the revised freight rates. Now, hon. members may express their opinion on the principle of the bill, but I think it is contrary to standing orders to make comments or discuss the way in which the debates proceeded in another committee, or the treatment given certain members during the consideration of the bill in committee. Consequently, I would invite the hon. member for Roberval to remain within the scope of the discussion.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, on the point of order and since you have allowed the Minister of Transport to complete his remarks, I feel it would have been quite in order to allow the hon. member for Roberval to do the same.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. The remarks I made were addressed both to the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier) and to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Balcer).

Mr. Gregoire: However, Mr. Chairman, you have allowed the Minister of Transport to finish his remarks, while you have not allowed the hon. member for Roberval the same privilege.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Chairman, to follow up your point of order, I was saying that at the first meeting of the committee, the minister stated that there was no translator, and it is only after that that we succeeded in obtaining the services of one.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. It is out of order here to deal with the way the proceedings developed in the sessional committee on railways.

The house is now considering the principle of a section of a bill and the discussion must be related and relevant to this question.

Once again, I ask the hon. members who take part in this debate to restrict their remarks to the bill under discussion.

Mr. Gauthier: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I only wanted to say a few words, because I was subjected to a personal attack, whereas we were told that we had the right to speak French in committee.

But what I wanted to point out to the minister is that in order to get a word in French from the English speaking members, we had to ask for the translation at every single line.

Mr. Chairman, since we are dealing with the reduction of freight rates with regard to the shippers, I should like to prove to the house that it is the Canadian National which will eventually benefit from the subsidies that are voted. On the other hand, if such an amount of money is passed, it is absolutely necessary to know why, because, once again, I am convinced that that amount of money is not granted so much for the benefit of the shippers as to make up the deficit of the Canadian National Railways. In fact, I have come to wonder if an inquiry should not be made into the management of the C.N.R. because it can even be asked if those high officials are at least aware of the meaning of good service in transportation.

Mr. Gordon and his associates, protected by the various governments, could even be asked if they know that the main requisite in transportation is to give the customers good service, in order to avoid deficits.

Mr. Gordon could also be asked if he really tries to ensure, by every possible means and in all departments, the service required in the transportation of goods and passengers.

In fact, Mr. Chairman, I doubt it so much and I have so much evidence that I am obliged to say no. Take for instance the case of the western shippers who, last fall, complained that the C.N.R. was slow in supplying them with the cars needed to ship potash to the consumers, which was resulting in serious losses for the industry.

As such a service was lacking, these same shippers requested the services of a private transport company which would guarantee them a better service: the C.P.R.

I could give thousands of examples showing that the C.N.R. lost its customers on account of its inadequate service. Allow me to refer to the passenger trains in my own area, the county of Roberval.

During the holidays, the heating system in one of the cars of the train linking Montreal to Chicoutimi-Dolbeau failed during the whole night. Needless to say that all the passengers had to sleep wrapped up in their winter coats; we do not know how many of them caught a cold during this trip.

The personnel on duty did everything they could to cope with the situation.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Gregoire: Do these remarks embarrass you?

The Chairman: Order. May I remind the hon. member that he cannot discuss the administration of the C.N.R. or of any other railway system as far as the passenger or freight services are concerned. I once more ask the hon. member to restrict his remarks to the subject matter of the bill now before us.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Chairman, do we have to submit ourselves to this sort of thing without saying a word?

Mr. Chairman, I said a moment ago that I do not believe that Bill C-91 is giving assistance to shippers. In fact, a large sum is being voted to make up the C.N.R.'s deficit. And where does this deficit come from? I believe the inadequate service of the C.N.R. is the main reason. This is another proof of the poor service given by the C.N.R.

I do not know whether it is better to bring home to the government the grievances of the people. The best place to do it, as I see it, is right here in this house, by expressing the dissatisfaction of the whole population for the service given by the C.N.R. into which we are pouring countless millions of dollars.

It is in the light of this principle that I have given instances as regards freight and passenger service, for we are granting the C.N.R. $75 million and nobody knows how this money is going to be used. Everybody is asking us: "Where is this money going"? And we do not know ourselves where it is going.

When we want to deal with these issues in this house, we are said to be out of order. The C.N.R.—

The Chairman: Order. I should like to point out to the hon. member that he must abide by the rules of this house. Like all the other members who might take part in the discussion, he must follow as closely as possible the rules which have been established in order that the work of the house may proceed smoothly. When the chairman of the committee gets up to call a member to order, he is only doing his duty so that the discussion can really contribute to the subject matter before us.

Mr. Gauthier: Thank you again, Mr. Chairman.

If through their trucking business, the Canadian National Railways manage to reduce freight rates as provided under section I of Bill C-91, and if this reduction is to be extended for another year, I can only commend that project.

In view of the hundreds of millions of dollars which the federal government has spent in order to refloat the Canadian National, that would only be normal.

He who calls others incompetent might then prove himself right.

But if such a reduction means that all our fellow Canadians, all our workers, and heads of families will have to pay those additional $20 million directly to the C.N.R., then I cannot go along with that. That is why Bill C-91 will not pass in this house without an amendment.

Do you really believe that, as representatives of the people, we are authorized to concede another $75 million to the C.N.R. without knowing for what purpose it will be used?

I say to the management of the C.N.R., and also to the president, Mr. Donald Gordon, who is so well paid: "If you are incapable of managing such an important corporation as successfully as the management of the truckers association, you should let that association accomplish what you were never able to achieve yourselves."

There is no difficulty for the C.N.R., with its wonderful president, to grant reduced rates to the shippers, when those $20 million are paid by our workers and farmers.

Mr. Chairman, we have no right to penalize the whole population under the pretence of helping those few hundred producers who would act in a quite different way if they could freely organize themselves.

Our doubts with regard to the use of that money to the sole advantage of the so-called beneficiaries are getting stronger every day. The issues have been so much confused that we are unable to discern what concerns trucking and what concerns the railroads.

If the government seriously wants to help the shippers, why not do so directly?

Why not give those millions directly to the needy shippers, in proportion to their shipments? Why go through a third person to let someone have the assistance he so urgently needs?

Do you not know that every day we have proof that the go-between often reaps much greater profit than the shipper?

Shall we, once again Mr. Chairman, let ourselves be misled by an administration with no common sense? I say "no common sense", because for those people the main principle of a good administration consists in having deficits.

They accumulate deficits and boast about it. They go as far as saying that those who have no deficits are incompetent.

Indeed, they go on with their fallacious arguments in favour of our economic system of debts. Money should be allowed to circulate, and the only manner to do so today is to create deficits.

As you see, Mr. Chairman, with our mistaken monetary theories, we come to the conclusion that tomorrow—and the C.N.R. is a striking example of it—a deficit will mean a saving.

Consequently, the thrifty person will be forced to pay off tomorrow the deficits which will have become the most stable form of wealth of our new democracy.

[Mr. Gauthier.]

To avoid all those mistakes, Mr. Chairman, and there are some significant ones—

(Text):

The Deputy Chairman: Order. So that the house may proceed to consideration of private members' business pursuant to section 3 of standing order 15, it is my duty to rise, report progress and request leave to sit later this day or the next sitting of the house as the case may be.

Progress reported.

Mr. Speaker: It now being five o'clock the house will turn to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, notices of motion which appear on page 18 of today's order paper.

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

SUGGESTED AMENDMENT TO REQUIRE LIMITATION AND ACCOUNTING OF EXPENDITURES

Mr. J. E. Brown (Brantford) moved:

That the standing committee on privileges and elections be empowered to consider the advisability of amending the Canada Elections Act to limit the election expenditures of all candidates to an effective ceiling, and to provide for a strict accountability of all such expenditures of each candidate, and at the same time to provide for the payment of the legally permitted election expenses of all candidates, who in the election secure a reasonable proportion of the total votes cast in each constituency; and to report to the house such proposals or suggested amendments relating to the said act as the committee may deem to be advisable.

He said: Mr. Speaker, might I be permitted to direct special attention to the motion that has been read to the house, and to offer the observation that a motion somewhat similar to this has already been before the house moved by the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis). My motion goes a little further. Unlike the other motion it provides that the standing committee on privileges and elections be empowered to consider the advisability of these proposed amendments to the Canada Elections Act. In other words, if this motion is not talked out tonight and if it happens to be approved by the house, that does not mean the house approves of the suggested amendments. It simply means that the amendments referred to are to be considered by the committee on privileges and elections after which that committee would make such report back to this house as it deemed advisable. This would make provision for a wider discussion and a much more thorough study on the part of hon. members than is available to them under the pressure of the one hour discussion which is permitted us at this time.

Two of the proposed amendments in the elections act have been in effect in Great Britain for a considerable period of time, namely the provisions to limit the election expenses of candidates and to ensure a strict accountability of all such expenditures by candidates.

Over many years in Canada there has been a cry for needed reform along these lines. The present law relating to election expenses of candidates has been in effect in Canada since 1874. It was brought into being by a Liberal government at that time—one of the most puritanical governments in Canadian history, if I may say so. I refer to the administration headed by the Hon. Alexander Mackenzie.

An hon. Member: It has gone to the dogs since.

Mr. Brown: An hon. member says it has gone to the dogs since, and that is what I should like to bring to the attention of this house. The Canadian people first became exercised over the problem of election expenses and campaign contributions at the time of the Pacific scandal in 1873. So the new government which was elected following that scandal introduced the present legislation which has been in effect ever since. My submission is that the statute is now sadly in need of reform. I will not go into detail here but I doubt if there is a responsible group, or even if there is a responsible person, in public life in Canada opposed to the first two proposals which I suggest should be submitted to the standing committee on privileges and elections. Certainly, there is no responsible newspaper in Canada objecting to these two needed reforms. The Brantford Expositor, the Toronto Globe and Mail and the Toronto Star among many newspapers have been pressing for electoral reform along these lines. In addition, well known newspaper columnists such as Mr. Blair Fraser and others have been pointing out the inadequacy of the present law for a number of years. Canadian political leaders of various parties have been crying for reform. The Hon. C. G. Power, now a member of the Senate, has been a leader in this regard. He introduced a bill which reached this house—a bill known as the political expenditures bill—in 1939, containing sweeping provisions for reform—provisions which required the publication both of the income and expenditure of political parties and limiting the amount of expenditure of candidates to 20 cents per voter plus $1,000 for the personal expenses of candidates.

Mr. Power described this measure at the time as a businesslike piece of legislation which would bring about open disclosure to the public, a disclosure such as would be made in the operation of private business.

In 1948, Mr. Power admitted that his bill was laughed at at the time it was introduced, and that its objectives were ridiculed as being academic and unrealistic. But he brought the same measure before this house in 1949 and it passed second reading without one single voice of dissent. It did not proceed further because parliament was dissolved and a general election called. Thus, today we have the same law as we have had since 1874, the law which has been complained about so much. The same situation exists and nothing has been done about it since.

It is now 1963 and I am asking this house of minorities at least to permit the standing committee to discuss this much needed reform. I notice that at Christmas time Mr. Power had completed 45 years of public life in Canada. I think it would be a nice thing if this house could at least consent to consideration being given to these matters by the committee as some recognition of a long life devoted to the public service of Canada.

Now I come to the third suggested amendment—that provision be made for the payment out of general revenue of the legally permitted election expenditures of those candidates who receive a reasonable percentage of the total votes cast in each constituency.

As I stated in my speech on the motion of the hon. member for York South, this third proposal is a little more controversial, but I maintain it is sound.

There was a debate in this house in the year 1920 on electoral reform. In that debate that much-revered Canadian statesman, the Hon. W. S. Fielding, stated that the only real solution to excessive and improper election expenditures was to make all such expenditures of sums a charge on the federal treasury. He predicted in that debate that the day would come when this House of Commons would pass such legislation. I know that on this third proposal there will be a cry of: "Oh, election expenses in Canada will rise to an unprecedented figure". But I maintain that the Canadian people are paying the bills for election expenditures at the present time in many ways: by their own private contributions, and by the rise in the cost of goods as a result of companies giving large sums of money, donating large sums to the election campaigns and expenditures of the various political parties.

I think it is true to say that today the contributions to election campaign expenditures are largely from big contributors, and the sum contributed in small contributions amounts to very little. In the United States, President John Fitzgerald Kennedy, two weeks after he was elected, stated that work should be started at once on legislation to provide for payment out of the United States treasury of the presidential election campaign expenditures so that, to quote him, "We can discontinue having candidates going around with their hats in their hands". In Canada, the Brantford Expositor took exception to this third reform which I have mentioned in a leading article; but the Toronto Globe and Mail did not take that view, and the Toronto daily Star complimented me upon bringing to the house a proposal for a much-needed and long-overdue reform. I stated a few moments ago that the percentage of contributions from small contributors amounted to very little. The overwhelming amount of contributions comes from big companies and big labour unions, and I say to this house that this situation is not of the best and could be dangerous. In the province of Quebec legislation has already been passed, which did not come into effect before the last provincial election, covering all of these items which I have asked this House of Commons to refer to its standing committee.

Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to talk at length or to prolong my remarks, because others will want to speak and I should like to hear their views upon the question. But before taking my seat I should like to say that I know all members of this House of Commons are jealous of the sovereign rights and independence of the parliament of Canada, because each year a mass of legislation is passed through this house which affects the life of every Canadian. I should like to state that at the present time many Canadian companies have huge lumps of capital invested on the part of foreign investors, and when large contributions are made to political parties they can also be accompanied by sponsorship of a type of legislation that is not in the best interests of the sovereignty of Canada or of the independence of parliament. Keeping this in mind—and it is a very important point—I believe that this house could do well to pass these suggestions on for consideration and more prolonged discussion, at this point of time in this year 1963, to the standing committee on privileges and elections. I believe that they will be for the betterment of Canada, for the preservation of democratic principles, and for the continuance of the sovereignty of this house and of our country.

(Translation):

Mr. David Ouellet (Drummond-Arthabaska): Mr. Speaker, I must congratulate the hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Brown) who introduced this motion to amend the act respecting election expenditures.

In the province where I come from, we know something about that. I do not know how an election is run in the other provinces across Canada, I have never seen one. Nor do I wish to unduly disparage my own province, but in Quebec, people are beginning to think that an election is the occasion of a huge treat. That should have been corrected long before 1963.

I was told that the present Quebec government was preparing an amendment to the act in order to grant to each party an amount proportionate to the number of votes obtained. Frankly, when you look at the report on election expenditures, after seeing some members at work during an election—and I would not wish to charge anyone with committing perjury—you would think they have very rickety adding machines.

When one sees the tremendous electoral machine at work in some ridings, one wonders if that is not tantamount to a lack of civilization. The electoral machine has an extraordinary influence on public opinion. In fact, it is even used to attack public men in their private lives. Another thing, candidates promise things they know they will never give. That is the harm that representatives do to Canadian politics.

I went through an election for the first time. The member for Brantford said that he is not ready to pass the hat. Well unfortunately I am one of those who had to pass the hat. But there is one good side to that: I showed in my return the correct amount of money I spent for election purposes, as I did not have to lie to arrive at a reasonable figure.

As the hon. member for Brantford stated, parties should report the sources of their income because foreigners are trying to influence our country's politics by contributing to the campaign funds of our political parties. People wonder why foreigners have so much power. It is because certain political parties have their hands tied by power-happy individuals. This is something that should have been discussed long before 1963 but since we are now dealing with this matter, we must take every means at our disposal to correct this situation which has done so much harm to this country.

If, as the hon. member for Brantford who sponsored the motion claims, this state of things is, as I presume, a danger to Canada, I gladly support the motion because this situation has to be corrected. In my opinion, the whole house is duty bound to do so, because it is the first step toward the great political clean-up which must be made in order to have basically honest politics. I do not tax politics with complete dishonesty; but, to say the contrary, I should be obliged to stretch the truth a little. If political parties could balance their electoral budgets, I think they would be less reluctant to declare their sources of income.

In any case, I am talking on behalf of my own party. We were considered as beggars, but we do not owe anything to anyone. We only promised to give the best of ourselves. We have entered politics in full freedom and have acted accordingly. This is true of every single member of our party. It has been said that the situation was worse in provincial elections than in federal elections. But there is one thing we are beginning to realize in the province of Quebec, and it is that federal elections also are expensive. Federal political parties are taking the lead from provincial ones. Bad example does strange things.

Yet, it is the Canadian government who should set the example. That is why, it should be its duty to have some piece of legislation adopted, including provision to the effect, for instance, that elections should be held honestly, so that those who take part in them may remain honest. In other words, the example must come from Ottawa.

There would be much more to say on the matter, but other members probably wish to take the floor.

I have no doubt that the motion introduced by the hon. member will be carried. Therefore, may I close my remarks by saying that before rejecting this motion, we should consider it dispassionately in the interests of all Canadian citizens.

Mr. Azellus Denis (St. Denis): Would the hon. member allow a question? Could he tell me how much he received for his party from Jerry Martineau?

Mr. Ouellet: The hon. member's question is not even worth answering. However, I can tell him that we did not receive anything from Jerry Martineau, or from Mr. Pearson either. But we received funds from those who wanted a reform.

(Text):

Mr. J. H. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak on this motion one immediately realizes that what is being asked here has been asked on a number of different occasions down through the years. The question of elections and election expenses has come up for consideration in this house once already in this session and perhaps in a number of other sessions. Here we are being asked to refer certain conditions to a standing committee for the purpose of studying them and perhaps coming up with the solution suggested by the mover of this motion or perhaps disagreeing with it.

In the first place, the mover of the motion is asking us to limit expenditures in all Canada to an effective ceiling, whatever that effective ceiling may be. Whether he is trying to control or to limit people or whether he is trying to make it broad enough to include all the big spenders in his party and perhaps ours, I do not really know. However, I would suggest that the words "effective ceiling" could be debated for some hours before any figure could be arrived at.

He also would like to bring about a strict system of accounting for expenditures. I suggest this would be a very difficult thing to do as one never knows when one is making an expenditure on behalf of another in politics. For example, I as a candidate may have a flat tire and may have some farmer drive me to a campaign meeting. He may do this free of charge. He may be contributing to my election expenses. I do not know whether or not this item would have to be put in this strict accounting. Again, if some big company thought that my views or his views were right and came into the constituency and spent a great deal of money on that campaign without the person even asking for it, I do not know whether this money would be included as an expenditure in the campaign. It would be something which would be very hard to determine. In my opinion, it would be nearly impossible.

Last of all, his suggestion is to provide for the payment of all election expenses of candidates who secure a reasonable portion of the votes in a constituency. That is another matter which I think it would be very difficult for any deciding judge or any ruling body to determine. Certainly if we had a system such as that to which he referred in the United States or which was referred to in President Kennedy's remarks with regard to election expenses, or a system something similar to theirs where they have nearly got down to a two party system—while it is not statutory, that is in a sense what is operating there—then I might see the feasibility and the possibility of the government standing some or all of the expenditures of the candidate. However, in our country, anybody in a constituency, if he meets the conditions set out in the elections act with regard to being a Canadian citizen and has residence of the required time before the election is called, can become a candidate in that constituency. He does not have to belong to any given political party. He may even found his own party and run, as a particular candidate did in my constituency in the 1962 election. Perhaps he felt he received a reasonable share of the vote. In his thinking maybe this was all he expected in the first year of founding his political party. I do not know about that. I never asked him. However, that may have been what he thought was a reasonable start.

Certainly the idea of a reasonable amount of anything could be subject to a great deal of question. The only other reference I know of with regard to "reasonable" is in the grain act under the grading of grain. If I am right and if I may refer to it for a moment, may I say that as to the definition of reasonable I think the grain act states that No. 2 wheat is to be reasonably free of weed seeds and immature kernels; and I am told by the board of grain commissioners that this deals with a figure of 5 per cent. No. 1 wheat, according to the terms of the grain act is to be practically free of immature kernels and weed seeds and No. 2 wheat shall be reasonably free of immature kernels; and they consider that 5 per cent or something near that figure of 5 per cent meets the requirement. Would 5 per cent be a reasonable percentage of the votes of a constituency? I do not know what the hon. member is referring to here. I point out this consideration. The matter could be subject to a great deal of controversy with regard to paying election expenses. With regard to limiting expenditures certainly one would have to take into consideration many things such as the locality of the constituency; the number of miles one is obliged to cover; whether it is all populated or whether it is partially populated; whether it covers a rough terrain as it would if a portion of it were in the Rocky mountains; and I can think of several in Alberta which are in the Rocky mountains; or whether it be in the Northwest Territories or the Yukon. Certainly those constituencies are much more difficult to campaign in. As years go on and as improvements in transportation take place and as those areas become more settled candidates will be obliged to spend more and more money in those areas. Perhaps private aeroplanes and the hiring of them will become more common. However, I suggest that they will be still very expensive and that many areas must be covered in that way.

I can certainly understand the situation with regard to a city riding which includes so many blocks west of Main street and so many blocks east of Main street and is a neat little parcel with many people living in it who are easy to get in touch with over one radio station perhaps, and in one daily newspaper. I can understand the feasibility of limiting expenses in a riding of that type. However, ridings of that type while perhaps not in the minority I am sure are not in the majority in this vast country of ours today.

I was in some ways interested in the remarks of the hon. member from the Social Credit party. From the way in which he started out I thought for a while he was against this particular measure. However, he corrected my wrong impression by stating that he would second the motion and strongly wished it to carry. This is an interesting viewpoint to be expressed by that particular party, because as one who comes from Alberta I know that the people there have seen numerous parties in that province rise and fall. I can think of the ginger group as it was commonly called which was elected in the twenties, the old U.F.A. government that operated there in the twenties and part of the thirties, and the present Social Credit government in that province.

If there were a system whereby the government paid part of the expenses of all candidates who received a reasonable share of the votes and if the number of candidates allowed to enter any campaign were in any way limited, one can readily see that various parties would never come out of the eggshell, shall I say. Even the Social Credit party might never have come into being in 1935 if such a system had been in existence because the government then might very well not have paid part of their election expenses and might very well have not even recognized them as having a possible chance. Certainly in the early founding days of that party they themselves must have wondered about this. I suppose they are no longer wondering, of course, because they have become established. However, they are trying desperately now to bring about a resurgence after having fallen on evil days.

I use this as an example. Certainly we cannot limit the number of candidates who may want to run in any given election. The hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Brown) referred to basic democratic principles and if we accept this as one of our basic democratic principles how can we as a government say that we will pay part or all of the election expenses of candidates as long as they receive a reasonable share of the votes? There might very well be a large number of candidates wishing to run in any given constituency and this could involve the expenditure of a great deal of money.

If there were a sufficiently large number of candidates this would eventually put a limit on the amount any one candidate could spend because there is only so much money to go around under today's conditions. Maybe if we started to print money, as some would like us to do, there might be more. The hon. member for Brantford said in his closing remarks that we must guard our democratic principles; however I cannot support this motion because it leaves too many things undecided.

To sum up briefly, this effective ceiling about which he talks is a very mythical figure. I would hesitate to guess what it might be. In the last campaign I think I spent an average amount. Possibly that average would be taken as the ceiling in order to place a limit on expenditures in some of the constituencies where vast amounts were spent. I do not know. Maybe you would take the constituency where the most money was spent and use that figure as the limit. I do not know what is meant by an effective ceiling and I suggest there could be a good deal of debate on that point. I suggest that at no time would we all agree on what an effective ceiling should be. I think this is an elusive amount which would grow and grow as the years went by.

We can only refer to election costs in past years. For example, in the 1949 election total election expenditures by the various parties were a little over $2 million. In 1958 total election expenditures were substantially over $3 million and I suppose that at the present time such expenditures might well approach $4 million. The figure is going up all the time. The effective ceiling would have to be increased, I suggest, having in mind the urge that politicians have to get in touch with everybody in their riding and leave no hand unshaken and no door on which they have not knocked. As communications improve politicians will have an increasing urge to knock on every door and shake every hand. Therefore I suggest that election expenses will continue to rise and if an effective ceiling could be arrived at today it would not be suitable four years from now or eight years from now or at any other time.

The other point has to do with a strict accounting of such expenditures. I firmly believe that in an election a strict accounting is practically impossible. Let us be practical. Let us consider what is being suggested here and whether a committee of this house or the house itself should pass upon it or spend time debating it. A strict accounting of election expenses would be a very difficult thing to achieve because it would have to take into account everything that my neighbours or my good friends spent on my behalf. Every time they even talked to their neighbours or knocked on a few doors on my behalf any expense involved would have to be included.

I do not really know just what would have to be included, but there are many ways of getting around the carrying out of a strict accounting. I can remember a provincial election a few years ago in which I took a great deal of interest although I was not a candidate. I thought to myself that the sitting member was spending a terrific amount of money in that campaign and that there was a great deal of fanfare. His name was on the radio all the time and there was a great deal of fanfare in the local and weekly papers, including full page advertisements. I thought to myself that I would like to see his expense account when he published it after the election but, much to my surprise, when it came out the figure was very low. In fact, I think he had only spent a thousand dollars or so, according to the report in the paper.

I met him after the election and as I was on reasonably friendly terms with him I said, "How is it that your expenses were so low? I thought you were really burning up the money during that campaign?" He said, "That was not I; that was the party headquarters. That money was not spent by me at all."

These are questions that arise in my mind when I consider whether a strict accounting is possible. I think it would be practically impossible. I have dealt with the question of a reasonable proportion of the votes cast and the question of paying a part of the election expenses. I feel it would be very difficult to arrive at a reasonable proportion. If one wanted to, he could arrive at a reasonable proportion but it would definitely limit the number of candidates in a particular riding. It is all well and good to quote what President Kennedy said two days after he was elected, but I think it is more pertinent to inquire what he has said about the matter since. I have not seen that he has said anything about election expenses since. One can say a great many things two days after being elected or two days before but it does not take very long after being elected to become burdened with the cares of office, and perhaps this tends to make one's thinking a bit more reasonable and practical.

In this country where we have no limit on political parties or on the number of candidates who run in a particular constituency, I feel that the government in governing the country cannot accept the idea that the government should pay part or all of the election expenses, no matter what proportion of the votes we arrive at as being reasonable. If we wish to guard our democratic principles then I think we must not carry out any of the ideas suggested in this motion. I see no reason why it cannot be debated in this hour and perhaps dropped then, because I see little worth-while, practical good coming from it.

Mr. Thomas R. Berger (Vancouver-Burrard): Mr. Speaker, I rise to express the views of the New Democratic party on the resolution that the hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Brown) has put before the house. We look upon this resolution as one which has a twofold purpose. It provides for the payment of election expenditures out of public funds and it imposes a ceiling upon election expenditures by candidates. In our view these things are important but, Mr. Speaker, we will not have an effective electoral law and we will not adequately reform our electoral system until we provide for complete disclosure of the sources of campaign funds. I agree, and I think all the members in all parties agree, that the present system badly needs to be changed.

I recall reading a few months ago an article in Maclean's magazine by James Scott, once a federal organizer for the Liberal party, who candidly revealed what went on in the Liberal and Conservative parties in connection with fund raising. He pointed out that when one of these parties was in office the people who received government contracts, corporations which received favours from the government, would allocate a certain amount of money for electoral purposes and would distribute 60 per cent of it to whichever of the old-line parties was in office and 40 per cent to whichever party was out of office. They met their campaign budgets rather effectively in those days, and no doubt they are still doing so.

The hon. member for Brantford believes, I take it, that if his party were to get into office again, which seems rather unlikely, they would change our electoral system to conform with the worth-while objectives found in his resolution. I am not aware of the policy of the Liberal party and whether it conforms to his resolution, but perhaps the leader of the Liberal party will change it overnight, as he has done with other policies espoused by the Liberal party. At the moment, however, Liberal policy remains in the same state of confusion, remains shrouded in the mist that surrounds not only Liberal party policy but apparently the leader of that party as well.

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the hon. gentleman permit my asking him a question?

Mr. Berger: Yes.

Mr. Pickersgill: Has the hon. gentleman ever taken the trouble to read the Liberal program which was presented at the last election? If he does, he will find that this resolution is in exact conformity with the policy we put before the country at the last election, and which we intend to carry out.

Mr. Berger: I gave up long ago reading Liberal propaganda because if the platform that is in the pamphlet the hon. member has waved on high is going to be carried out in the same way his party carried out its promise to introduce a national health insurance scheme back in 1919, then I think the point in reading his propaganda is lost—at least, that is the way it looks to me.

Let me deal with two matters that were raised by the resolution of the hon. member. He said that a payment should be made out of public funds to candidates securing a reasonable proportion of the total votes cast. This would discriminate against third parties in some of the provinces of Canada. The hon. member who just spoke pinpointed this difficulty I thought rather well. If the decision as to the reasonable proportion were to be left in the hands of some agency, some political group or some government which fixed it at such a high level third parties could not gain any advantage from the measure, this would present a serious difficulty.

In British Columbia, the Liberal party might be discriminated against because it is a third party there. In Newfoundland the Conservative party might be discriminated against because I understand that in that province every party except the party in power is a third party. In Ontario, the Social Credit party must be regarded as a third, fourth or fifth party, and perhaps it would be discriminated against. Let me point out that legislation which in principle was sound, put forward some time ago by the premier of Quebec, to reform the electoral system in his province, was legislation which discriminated against third parties. I think all of us were pleased to hear that apparently that legislation is going to receive further consideration before it is put before the legislature of that province.

Now, the hon. member also suggests in his resolution that there should be strict accountability for all expenditures of each candidate. This is important, that candidates should be accountable. However, we should keep in mind that under our present electoral system they are accountable. But it is not enough to make candidates accountable. Parties that contest federal elections are organized on a federal basis, and the federal organization of each party must be accountable. I gather, from what Mr. Scott has said, it is the federal organization which gets the funds which enable some parties to charter jetliners for their leaders to travel around the country. It is the federal party which pays for the slick supplements in Sunday supplements and other newspapers which are used in federal election campaigns. It is the federal party which makes use of the Madison avenue techniques which inundate the population of this country with tons of political claptrap at election time.

Some of us wondered, as a matter of fact, when parliament opened, why the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson), even before parliament had opened, said that he wanted an election right away. He felt that the idea of an election was not to elect a parliament, but that you elected a parliament in order to have an election. At any rate, we wondered why he did not even wish to come into this house to hear what the government was going to put forward. The members of this party, like the members of the Liberal party, were disappointed when we heard what the government put before us. But we wondered why the Liberal leader did not wish even to come to parliament to hear it. We wondered why he did not wish to test the mettle of his colleagues in this house where, after all, we are all equal. We do not have to depend on chartered jetliners, the slick Sunday supplements; we do not have to rely on editorialists to whip themselves up into a frenzy of support.

My point is that the federal organization of each party must be made strictly accountable, not just the candidates themselves. If the candidate's funds are raised at the local level by small donations from various individuals in the local community, from local trade unions or local businessmen, then certainly the candidate's expenses will be disclosed under our elections act. But only that portion of the party's expenses which is raised at the local level will under those circumstances be disclosed, and the enormous amounts of money that, as James Scott has told us, are provided to the old-line parties at the federal level will not be accounted for. It is for this reason that the necessity for the full disclosure of election campaign expenses is, to some extent, not taken into account by this measure.

One of the members of this party put forward a resolution during the fall sitting of parliament proposing that certain of the expenses of candidates be paid for out of public funds. The hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) proposed that certain use of public news media be made available to candidates, that transportation expenses should be taken care of by the federal government, and that the expense of producing at least one piece of election literature be paid for out of public funds.

I think all of us would agree this is perhaps a better way to approach the problem than simply to provide a lump sum payment out of public funds, because this at least ensures that the public would not be put to the expense of providing political claptrap. The public will only be put to the expense of providing a useful, sensible and rational means of propagating the ideas espoused by each of the political parties.

I myself believe it is time in this country for parliament to consider establishing the equivalent of the C.B.C. in the newspaper field. The C.B.C. has worked in the field of broadcasting and television, and there is no reason why that concept cannot work in the field of the dissemination of news and public information by the press. Such an institution could be made available in the same way as free time broadcasts are made available at present to candidates, in order to enable them to put their platforms and policies before the public.

Politics is the public's business. I ask what good are democratic rights if only the wealthy can exercise them? What freedom of choice has the voter when it is only those candidates in those political parties with large resources available to them who can reach him with their messages? What freedom of choice can he have under those circumstances? How can the Canadian government be above suspicion, how can any party serve its country to the utmost, when the source of its funds is shrouded in a cloak of secrecy?

The hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Brown) has brought forward a motion proposing that public funds be made available to candidates for public office, and which would establish a ceiling on the amount of expenditures which could be made by any candidate for public office. Subject to the important reservations I have made that third parties should be not discriminated against, and that there should be an accounting at all levels, including the federal level, of election campaign expenses, I think the motion is sound and the members of this party will support it when the vote is called, as I am confident it will be during the next few minutes.

It is estimated that during the last election campaign more than $12 million was spent on election expenses, both at the federal level and by individual candidates, by the four parties sitting in this house. If the public were to undertake the expense involved in election campaigns and thereby obtain honesty in government and honesty in public administration, and achieve a situation where public administration could be removed from any taint of suspicion, it would be a small price to pay to bring honesty into the conduct of election campaigns in Canada and into the administration of public business.

Mr. D. S. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, unfortunately the shortness of time prevents me from dealing first with the largely irrelevant innuendoes just offered by the last speaker, but I would like to address a few remarks to certain statements made by the hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Horner).

I rise to speak in favour of the motion and would like to elaborate to some degree the attitude of this party to the proposal, and particularly to some of the questions raised by the hon. member for Acadia. His first and major objection was to the question of an effective ceiling on election expenses. He suggested in some way it would not be humanly possible to arrive at a proper effective ceiling for that purpose.

I would like to draw the attention of hon. members to the experience of other countries in the western world, and France in particular, where this kind of calculation has been found possible and the system has been satisfactory for many years. I recognize, however, there are problems in calculating such an effective ceiling caused not only by the topography of a particular riding, which was the kind of thing the hon. member referred to, but also problems caused by areas with which he may not be so familiar; and I speak of running an election campaign in large metropolitan centres. One of the problems is the hiring of space and media, and in the case of Toronto a candidate may pay full price for only one eighteenth of the coverage of a particular media.

These are the kinds of problems which could most effectively be dealt with by a committee, and it is for this reason that the hon. member for Brantford has suggested that the matter be referred to a committee where it can be fully studied. The committee can consider statements by those most experienced in this field and can also call on the services of experts in the field of political science.

The hon. member for Acadia raised problems with regard to the strict accountability of expenses. While I acknowledge the example he cited of a neighbour assisting him with a flat tire, and agree it may be difficult to account for that in election expenses, it is no different from the problem we have encountered with income tax in determining small contributions and donations which should come into income but which are difficult to account for. But, the difficulty of accounting for such particular sums has not prevented us from levying income tax.

With respect to the suggestion that the motion should refer only to those candidates who obtain a reasonable proportion of the total votes cast, I would make the suggestion that instead of having such a vague requirement, an arbitrary measure be put into the elections act providing that every candidate who gets 20 per cent of the votes cast will have his expenses met in this way. We already have a precedent in that act, in an equally arbitrary measure with regard to deposits.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): No, I will not. There is little time remaining. All hon. members, of course, will want to support this bill if for no other reason than it relates to their personal solvency. Therefore in order to give hon. members an opportunity to cast their votes I shall sit down.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): You talked out your own motion. It is now six o'clock.

Mr. Speaker: The hour appointed for consideration of private members' business having expired the house will revert to the business that was interrupted at five o'clock. I was advised that the house leader was in the neighbourhood.

Mr. O'Hurley: He will not be here.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Chevrier: I was going to inquire from whoever is leading the house, and I take it it is the Minister of Defence Production, if he could indicate to the house what the business will be for Thursday and Friday?

Mr. O'Hurley: There is no change in the program. We will deal with external affairs estimates tomorrow, and Friday with national defence.

Mr. Chevrier: Could the acting house leader give any indication what the business would be for next week?

Mr. O'Hurley: I was told by the house leader just a moment ago that he will announce it tomorrow night.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

APPENDIX "A"

FURTHER CORRESPONDENCE RESPECTING AMENDMENT OF B.N.A. ACT

(Translation):

Ottawa, January 3rd 1963.

My dear Premier,

In your letter of September 19th, in reply to mine of August 27th regarding the proposed amendment to section 94A of the British North America Act, you stated that, since the Quebec legislature had been dissolved, you felt it preferable to wait until it met again before going further into the matter.

You will be interested to know that I have now received a letter, dated December 11th, in which the premier of Newfoundland agrees to the proposed amendment to section 94A. Thus all provinces, save Quebec, have now signified concurrence in this amendment.

May I now take the liberty of expressing the hope that Quebec will join her nine sister provinces in support of the proposed amendment. It seems to me that the measure has become even more urgent since your last letter.

Yours sincerely,
John G. Diefenbaker.

The hon. Jean Lesage,
Premier of the Province of Quebec,
Quebec, P.Q.

OFFICE OF THE PREMIER

Province of Quebec

January 8th, 1963.

My dear Prime Minister,

In reply to your letter of January 3rd, I must say that I see no reason to change the position I took in my letters to you of January 24th and February 8th, 1962 with regard to Section 94A of the British North America Act.

At the time the provinces were asked their assent to the constitutional amendment of 1951 regarding Old Age pensions, the federal government had given them definite information on the nature of the legislation it was planning to enact. Now, on the contrary, we are given only the vaguest of indications which do not allow us to determine the implications of the unexplicit text we are asked to accept.

I must therefore repeat that I find it impossible to introduce a proposed constitutional amendment in the legislature unless I have on hand the particulars of your project.

I intend to table in the house a copy of your last letter, together with this reply, as soon as the next session opens on Tuesday the 15th.

Yours sincerely,
Jean Lesage.

The Right Hon. John G. Diefenbaker,
Prime Minister of Canada,
Parliament Buildings,
Ottawa.

(Text):

Ottawa, December 24th, 1962.

The Honourable J. R. Smallwood, M.H.A., Premier of Newfoundland,
St. John's, Newfoundland.

My dear Premier,

I acknowledge and thank you for your letter of December 11 in which you advise that the government of Newfoundland have no objection to the proposed amendment to section 94A of the British North America Act, which would allow parliament to legislate in relation not only to old age pensions, but also in relation to pensions and other benefits incidental to, and conducive to the better operation and administration of, a scheme of old age pensions.

You ask that your administration be advised of the nature of the legislation which the government of Canada proposes to introduce and you suggest that this was done in 1951 when the present clause 94A was added to the British North America Act. According to my information, although there was consultation between the federal and provincial governments at that time it did not result in any effort to provide or request detailed information on the legislative measures that were to follow the adoption of the constitutional amendment.

With respect to your request that you be advised as to how soon, after the concurrence of the governments of all the provinces is secured, it is proposed to introduce the legislation into parliament, I would say that after the address has been passed by the Canadian parliament and the British North America Act amendment has been passed at Westminster then we will be in a position to introduce legislation.

Yours sincerely,

"Original signed by John G. Diefenbaker".

The government of the province of Newfoundland

THE PREMIER

St. John's

11 December, 1962

Right Hon. John G. Diefenbaker, M.P.,
Prime Minister of Canada,
Ottawa.

My dear Prime Minister:

My colleagues and I have now had an opportunity to give consideration to the proposal made originally in your letter of January 27, 1962 and renewed in a letter of August 25 for the concurrence of the governments of the provinces in a proposed amendment to section 94A of the British North America Act to provide explicitly that the parliament of Canada should be authorized to legislate not merely with respect to old age pensions but also with respect to pensions and other benefits incidental to, or conducive to the better operation and administration of a scheme of old age pensions.

We are wholly sympathetic to the idea of incorporating in any contributory old age security legislation provisions for the payment of benefits to widows and children of contributors and to contributors who become permanently disabled. While our government is inclined to review that the present section 94A might provide sufficient legislative authority for such legislation we see no objection to an explicit reference in the constitution which would remove all doubt on this score.

We recall that when the original amendment was made in 1951 to include section 94A the provincial governments were advised of the nature of the legislation the government of Canada proposed to introduce in parliament and we would hope that a similar courtesy would be extended by your administration in the present circumstance. We would also appreciate being advised as to how soon after the concurrence of the governments of all the provinces is secured it is proposed to introduce the legislation into parliament.

Meanwhile this letter is to advise you that the government of Newfoundland have no objection to the proposed amendment.

Sincerely yours,

Joseph R. Smallwood.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, January 24, 1963

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

VACANCY

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the house that I have received a communication notifying me that a vacancy has occurred in the representation, namely of Hon. William Earl Rowe, member for the electoral district of Dufferin-Simcoe, by resignation.

Accordingly I have issued my warrant to the chief electoral officer for the issue of a new writ of election for the said electoral district.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

TABLING OF REPORT ON PROCEDURES RESPECTING NEW DRUGS

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I have now received the report of the special committee on new drugs appointed at my request by the Royal College of Physicians and Surgeons of Canada to examine the present departmental procedures for dealing with new drugs, the requirements of the regulations under the Food and Drugs Act, and any other matters felt to be relevant to the issue. With the permission of the house I should like to table this report and offer a few introductory comments on it.

At the outset I should like to express my deepest thanks to the royal college for having established such an effective and hard working committee. Possibly the best way to express my thanks to the committee is to say that I find myself in complete agreement with the conclusions it has drawn and the recommendations it has made, and I am anxious to move forward as quickly as possible to achieve the objectives described in the report.

As the house will see, this document should prove to be of great value in the government's current study to find the best means of ensuring that the Canadian public continues to receive the utmost protection in this age of scientific and medical advancement. Under the chairmanship of Dr. F. S. Brien the committee has gone into the subject in a wealth of detail, receiving a considerable number of submissions from Canadian sources and much assistance from U.S. authorities. Dr. Brien, and his associates Dr. Dufresne and Dr. Sellers, must be congratulated on the manner in which they have come to the heart of the problem, and on the forthright way in which they suggest the steps that should now be taken.

The committee has clearly stated that the underlying purpose of the Food and Drugs Act is not the impossible objective of eliminating risks associated with the use of drugs, but the more practical one of keeping such risks to a minimum. It also recognizes that it would be quite impractical to suggest that all drug testing be assigned to a government agency. Its principal recommendations involve increases in the directorate's professional staff and the provision of further discretionary powers to the minister, permitting the immediate withdrawal of a drug from sale or other changes in its status when it is felt that the need for such action has arisen.

We have already made certain moves toward remedying the staff situation and are making progress in other respects. I would hope that the special committee of the house on food and drugs will turn its attention to this report, and I shall be pleased to go into further detail at that time.

With its formal report the royal college committee sent to me a considerable number of appendices containing documents and reports it had referred to in the course of its deliberations. In view of the bulk of this material it has not yet been possible to take copies from the originals, and with the permission of the house I should like to table copies of the report now and undertake to deposit copies of the appendices with the Clerk as soon as these are available.

Mr. Speaker: The minister seeks leave of the house to table the documents referred to in his statement. Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS AND NATIONAL RESOURCES

PROVISION FOR ASSISTANCE IN DEVELOPMENT OF NATIONAL MUSEUM

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution, which has been recommended to the house by His Excellency:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to assist and facilitate the development of the national museum of Canada and to establish a Canadian historical museum, a Canadian museum of natural history, a Canadian museum of science and to authorize such other museums as may be established by the governor in council, as the integral parts of the national museum; to provide for the appointment of the director general of the national museum who shall be paid such salary as may be fixed by the governor in council; and to provide also for the establishment of a national museum advisory committee and for the payment of the travelling expenses and per diem allowances of the members thereof.

Motion agreed to.

PUBLIC SERVICE

EXTENSION OF SALARY INCREASES TO RECENTLY RETIRED CIVIL SERVANTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Can the minister say whether the government has considered finding a way to provide the salary increases that were awarded civil servants to those civil servants who had retired before December 10 but had worked during the period covered by retroactivity?

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, this matter is receiving the attention of the government. We are faced, of course, with the statutory requirements and regulations, but we are giving careful consideration to what steps might be taken.

NATIONAL REVENUE

CAMPOBELLO, N.B.—REQUEST FOR 24 HOUR SERVICE ON BRIDGE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. J. Robichaud (Gloucester): May I direct a question to the Minister of National Revenue in view of the absence because of illness of the hon. member for Charlotte, inasmuch as this question is of keen interest to the residents of Charlotte county. Can the minister advise the house whether a decision has been reached to restore 24 hour service on the Roosevelt memorial bridge between Campobello island and Lubec, Maine, where customs services have been withdrawn during night hours for eight months of the year due to—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think I indicated yesterday and perhaps also on a previous occasion that this matter should be more properly put on the order paper.

[Later:]

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Forestry. As Minister of Forestry and as the representative of New Brunswick in the government, is the minister prepared to give favourable consideration to representations he has received from various sources on behalf of the 1,400 residents of Campobello island for the restoration of full time service on the Roosevelt memorial bridge in order to ensure the continuous movement of both fish and pulpwood from Campobello to the mainland?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The question is the same as the previous one, in a different version, and I still think it should go on the order paper.

Mr. Robichaud: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, this is a question which affects the immediate livelihood of citizens of this country. They reside on an island, and this bridge is the one connection they have with the mainland.

Mr. Nowlan: Who built it?

Mr. Speaker: I fully realize there may be some importance to the subject, but I am questioning the fact whether the information is urgently required at this particular time, and in the form in which the question was put forward.

Mr. Robichaud: On a point of order—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

(Translation):

PRIVILEGE

MR. GREGOIRE—REFERENCE TO STATEMENTS BY MEMBER FOR LAURIER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday, the hon. member for Laurier stated on television that he had found a way to force us to vote with the Liberals. In spite of his dictatorial intentions, I rise in protest and I submit that we are free to vote in the house as we see fit.

Mr. Speaker: I do not think there are sufficient grounds here for any question of privilege. I should like to draw the attention of hon. members to the fact that, before rising on a question of privilege, they should examine the circumstances to determine whether the situation warrants such a question of privilege. At any rate, the hon. member has made his explanation.

MR. DUMONT—REFERENCE TO STATEMENT BY PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Bernard Dumont (Bellechasse): I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. Since the translation always reaches us a little late, I was unable to put this question earlier.

As reported on page 1 of the appendix to Hansard of November 13, I asked the Prime Minister whether the people of Algeria could not be assisted with supplies of our surplus foodstuffs.

The Prime Minister immediately answered as follows:

—there has been no request in this regard, no suggestion that this would be appropriate, and nothing to indicate that the government of Algeria would be interested in such a measure.

I received the following reply today from the president of French Algeria, Mr. Ben Bella:

Our newly independent country, which has gone through more than seven years of war, strives to provide living conditions worthy of a sorely tried population; but in the meantime,—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am wondering what question of privilege the hon. member wishes to raise. Until now, he has merely been giving certain information. I fail to see any grounds for a question of privilege.

Mr. Dumont: I am getting there, Mr. Speaker. It is because at that time I had been told that Mr. Ben Bella had not asked for anything. However, he informs me that Canada's contribution would be greatly appreciated—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member has raised the question of privilege. What is it about? He cannot raise a question of privilege by just giving information or saying he has now received a reply. On what does he base his question of privilege—

Mr. Dumont: I would simply ask the Prime Minister that, in giving wheat to Algeria, he proceed as swiftly as he did for the gift of furniture to the headquarters of the international telecommunications union, in Geneva.

Mr. Speaker: That is not a question of privilege. I would suggest to the hon. member that he study what a question of privilege is before raising it. That should enable him to raise a proper one.

Mr. Dumont: I merely wanted to ask the Prime Minister once again to send food to Algeria for the thousands of children who are starving there.

(Text):

FISHERIES

NORTH PACIFIC FISHERIES COMMISSION—INQUIRY AS TO RECOMMENDATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Jack Davis (Coast-Capilano): I should like to address a question to the Minister of Fisheries. Has the Canadian government officially endorsed the recommendations of the international north Pacific fisheries commission, thus permitting the Japanese to fish for herring off the west coast of British Columbia?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Minister of Fisheries): No, Mr. Speaker.

HOUSING

PIERREFONDS, QUE.—REPORTED COMPLAINTS RESPECTING CLOVERDALE PARK PROJECT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Raymond Rock (Jacques Cartier-Lasalle): I should like to address a question to the Minister of Public Works or, in his absence, to his parliamentary secretary. Is any investigation being made by the national housing corporation at the Cloverdale Park project at Pierrefonds, Quebec, as a result of complaints made by the maintenance staff, a copy of which I believe the minister has received?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think the hon. member will recognize that his question would be better placed on the order paper.

Mr. Rock: With the greatest respect, Mr. Speaker, I believe that this—

Mr. Speaker: There is no question here of the information being urgently required at this time. I think the hon. member will recognize that as a fact.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR DISTINCTION BETWEEN COLOMBO PLAN AND COLOMBO CONFERENCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I wish to address a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the references in the press to the Colombo conference and its peace proposals placed before the governments of India and China, and in view of some confusion in the public mind between this Colombo conference and the Colombo plan in which Canada participates, would the minister briefly explain to the house the composition of the Colombo conference as distinct from that of the Colombo plan?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have no doubt there is some misinformation about this particular title. As hon. members are aware Canada has, from the start, participated in the co-operative enterprise to provide economic and technical assistance to the countries of southeast Asia, which is known as the Colombo plan. There is absolutely no connection between the Colombo plan and the recent Colombo conference. At this conference, which Canada was not invited to attend, and which met in Colombo last December 10, Ceylon, Cambodia, Indonesia, Burma, Ghana and the United Arab Republic were represented. Their purpose was to consider ways by which some settlement of the border dispute between India and China might be found. They arrived at certain proposals, and these were conveyed to the governments of communist China and India.

POWER

COLUMBIA RIVER—REFERENCE OF TREATY TO HOUSE COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Arthur Laing (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, this question is for the Prime Minister. I would like to ask what is now standing in the way of the immediate referral of the terms of the Columbia river treaty to the committee on external affairs.

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I answered this question yesterday.

Mr. Laing: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I asked this question yesterday and the Secretary of State for External Affairs did not answer it.

Mr. Speaker: I would draw to the attention of the hon. member the fact that he is not in a position to raise a point of order. It is not a point of order he is raising, he is trying to comment on an answer, which is not allowed.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert W. Prittie (Burnaby-Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the minister of northern affairs. Does the minister propose to inform the government of the United Kingdom how Canadians manage to survive through the long cold winters?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

(Translation):

SPORTS

INQUIRY AS TO DISTRIBUTION OF FUNDS PROVIDED

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Megantic): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. In view of the great importance given to physical training by the government, does it intend to distribute the balance of the $5 million provided for sport in the last budget?

(Text):

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry. I presume the question was addressed to me, and I was a little late getting my earphone up.

(Translation):

Mr. Langlois: In view of the importance—

Mr. Speaker: Order. An answer has been given. Is this a supplementary question?

Mr. Langlois: The minister did not understand my question, as he did not have his earphones on.

In view of the great importance given to physical training by the government, does it intend to distribute the balance of the $5 million provided for sport in the last budget?

(Text):

Mr. Monteith: The statutory amount provided by the act is $5 million. As explained earlier it was felt that this amount could not be spent in the early stages of the program, but certainly it is intended to be available.

(Translation):

Mr. Langlois: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is it due to the grants already made that the government was able to get Miss Claude Robitaille to give such a wonderful performance at the last Conservative convention?

(Text):

FINANCE

CONTINUATION OF SALE OF 1962 SERIES BONDS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. H. McMillan (Welland): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. How long does the government propose to keep the 1962 series of Canada savings bonds on sale?

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I cannot give any definite date. As is always the case, the advertisement said the sale might be terminated on the order of the Minister of Finance. So far they have not been on sale for a period of time comparable to other issues, and I shall give consideration to terminating them at the proper time.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

INQUIRY AS TO LEGISLATION RESPECTING TRANSPORTATION AND PUBLICATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. My question relates to his announcement of last Monday that notices of legislation arising out of the MacPherson royal commission and the O'Leary royal commission would appear in that day's Votes and Proceedings. Since these notices have not yet appeared, can the Prime Minister say when they will be placed on the order paper?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will have to look into that. We were in a position to place those matters on the order paper, and I will see what is the reason for it not being done.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

INQUIRY AS TO HEALTH PROTECTION IN NORTHERN AREAS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, yesterday in my absence the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard (Mr. Berger) asked whether there was any more recent information concerning nuclear fall-out in northern Canada. I wish to state that I have nothing to add to the reply I made on Monday, other than to emphasize that my department is working closely with the Department of National Health and Welfare to determine the actual facts.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS

NEWFOUNDLAND AND PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND—REQUEST FOR CONSTRUCTION OF POST OFFICES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Public Works I wonder if I could ask the parliamentary secretary whether the department is carrying on a winter works program of building small post offices, as was done last year, and if so whether they would consider building some in Newfoundland and Prince Edward Island this year.

Mr. R. J. McCleave (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the answer is that the department is carrying out the programs which have been carried out in previous years, and communities which qualify for such post offices will receive them.

Mr. Pickersgill: Could I ask a supplementary question, sir? Is the parliamentary secretary aware that none were built in either of those two provinces last year?

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Speaker, the department spreads its good works in all provinces of Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think we are now getting into a discussion.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

INQUIRY AS TO ABOLITION OF CLOSURE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. Is it still the intention of the government, as announced in the speech from the throne, to ask the House of Commons at this session to abolish closure? Meantime, will the government assure us that closure will not be applied this session in any way?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Fairweather: That is the Liberals.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there was a change of government in 1957, and there will be no closure under this government.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): There will soon be another change of government.

(Translation):

TRADE

WORLD FAIR—APPOINTMENT OF MR. JEAN DRAPEAU AS DIRECTOR

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Prosper Boulanger (Mercier): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Associate Minister of National Defence. Since the government, for reasons unknown to us, did not see fit to appoint Mr. Jean Drapeau commissioner general of the world exhibition, could the minister tell us at least if Mr. Drapeau will be appointed commissioner or director of that commission?

Hon. Pierre Sevigny (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, within a few days the names of the commissioners of the world exhibition will be announced and I hope that my hon. friend's curiosity will be satisfied.

(Text):

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Chown in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

1. Departmental administration, $7,305,200.

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Chairman, this afternoon I intend to go over the broad outlines of various questions in the sphere of internationl affairs in which Canada is directly interested. As hon. members will realize, it will not be possible to go into great detail on any of these particular subjects.

Before I proceed with that review, may I express the belief that we have now moved into a new era in the world, largely because of certain developments which have taken place within the last few months or which will take place within the next few months, each one of which has very far reaching implications. For example, there is the movement of Great Britain into the European community. We all know it is not yet certain whether that move will be made; but no matter whether it is or is not, what has happened in connection with that proposal as between Great Britain and the six countries of continental Europe is bound to have very far reaching effects. In the last day or two we have seen France and West Germany signing a treaty of friendship covering political questions, economic questions and defence questions. There is a great shifting going on in Europe, and no one can tell at this time what the end result will be.

That brings up another far reaching development. I believe that in the commonwealth at the present time we are in a state of flux. I had the privilege of attending the prime ministers' conference in September of last year, and naturally every one of the delegates there was very much interested in the question whether Great Britain would go into the European community, and what the future of the commonwealth was to be. Whether one thought that Great Britain should or should not go in, a great deal of thought was given to the future of the commonwealth. I think the value of the commonwealth was impressed upon the mind of everyone there, and I have no doubt on the minds of millions of people in the various nations of the commonwealth.

Again in the field of trade, we are now in a period when very far reaching changes may take place in the trade carried on in various parts of the world. That question, of course, was of great importance in connection with the British and European community negotiations, but it is also important in many other spheres. I recall to hon. members at this point the statement which was made by our own Prime Minister at the prime ministers' conference with regard to this question, when he made a proposal which I think can roughly be described from the following notes of his comments:

> I propose that this conference should declare its intention to extend an invitation to all member nations of the commonwealth, of the E.E.C., E.F.T.A., the U.S.A. and Japan and other like minded nations, indicating a desire to participate, to meet at the earliest practicable date to give consideration as to how to deal with the trading problems before us in a way which will be to the mutual advantage of all.

That idea or something very much like it may very well be the course that is followed eventually. However, hon. members will recall that in the next month, in October of last year, the United States congress approved important new trade legislation under which the United States was to participate in forthcoming international tariff negotiations. At that time, in an exchange of letters between our Prime Minister and President Kennedy, it was agreed that Canada and the United States should take the initiative in proposing a meeting of the ministers of the GATT contracting parties to discuss important trade developments and to make plans for the GATT tariffs and trade conference. That has now been carried out. A joint Canada-United States proposal for such a ministerial meeting was accepted in November of 1962 and the GATT council, which is not, of course, a ministerial council, is to meet on February 18. It will set a date for this ministerial meeting, and it is expected that the ministerial meeting of GATT will be held about the middle of May.

Then at about roughly the same time in the United Nations the underdeveloped countries were pressing for a United Nations world conference. There was a good deal of discussion about that in the second committee, and finally it was decided that there would be a United Nations world trade conference, which will be concerned primarily with the broad range of trade and development problems of the less developed countries; and this conference is to be held early in 1964. Canada, by the way, took a very prominent part in bringing about agreement on the terms of that resolution in the United Nations. There was a dispute between the less developed countries and the large trading countries as to the time at which the conference was to be held, but we were able to bring about a settlement of that difficulty. All these movements are going on, or are about to go on, in the field of trade. I suggest that this will be an extremely significant trade year for all parts of the world, and particularly for Canada, because we are as vitally interested in world trade as any other country.

Another development of far reaching implication has been the successful settlement by President de Gaulle of the trouble in Algeria. This had the whole Arab world in a turmoil and was causing trouble with all the African countries. It was a great bleeding wound for France herself, and was a problem which appeared almost impossible of solution. Yet that problem is at least well on the way to settlement, and I think the fact there has been such a settlement will be of great importance in the months ahead.

Then, of course, there was the Cuban episode. There the Americans, acting with firmness and I think with moderation—I suggest with moderation—achieved great success. The Cuban episode has made perfectly clear that in the world today the preponderance of power is with the United States. No longer is it a question of two great equal nuclear powers. I suggest that at the present time the United States is beyond any shadow of doubt preponderant in power. That, Mr. Chairman, may constitute quite a temptation. When you are the biggest fellow in the school yard it is quite a temptation to shove everybody else around. Now, I am confident that there will be no such development in United States policy. I am confident that they will not adopt a policy of getting tough with their allies. For Canada, of course, it is particularly important whether anything of that kind develops.

Another outstanding development has been the success of the United Nations in the Congo within the last few days. That was the most difficult operation this great world organization had ever undertaken. I have no doubt that every member in this chamber has wondered many times how on earth the United Nations would ever get out of the Congo and also how they would ever be able to bring about any order in that unhappy country. Yet they are well on the way now. The premier of Katanga met the United Nations troops when they drove into Kolwezi and welcomed them there, and took the stand that his state would be part of the nation of the Congo. This means a great deal in building up the prestige of the United Nations and a great deal in bringing about world order.

The United Nations also had another big lift or a great impetus from the fact that in the Cuban crisis the United States and the Soviet union rushed right into the U.N. in an effort to get some agreement worked out. They did not stand outside. They did not just ignore the United Nations and go about working things out themselves or anything like that. They went to the United Nations and Secretary General U Thant did a statesmanlike job in helping to work out an agreement on Cuba.

Another development which I think is very far reaching has been the steady reduction in the number of colonies. This colonialism question has been a difficult and nasty one in the United Nations and all over the world. Most of the former dependent countries now have their independence. There are a few more to come, and I am confident that they will gain independence in due course. However, quite a large segment of that problem has been settled. There is one which remains to be dealt with and in which our own nation of Canada took the lead, namely the question of Soviet imperialism or what happens inside the present Soviet union. These Soviet representatives have been very quick and very bold about attacking Great Britain, and France in the United Nations for what they have been doing about colonies. However, there has not been in the Soviet union one little move to give the people within their boundaries any right at all to decide whether or not they wish to have their independence back again. Hence this issue is one which will still have to be dealt with.

Another far reaching development has been the attack by red China on India. That was an amazing action which it is hard for any Canadian to understand. Here was India, one of the leaders of the unaligned countries, which was certainly giving no offence to the red Chinese and doing nothing to justify aggression of that kind, yet red China struck. It does not require much imagination to realize that this action will have a far reaching effect in all the unaligned countries. I am confident that they are watching that action and that they will have made some decisions which certainly will not be against the interests of western nations such as Canada.

Then there has been the disagreement between the Soviet union and red China. For many months now we have heard rumours about arguments going on in the communist camp. I do not think it is ever wise to put too much credence in reports of that type, for should anything develop leading to really serious trouble I have no doubt they would get together again very quickly. However, the argument has gone on, it has grown louder and it has come out into the open, until when they were meeting in East Germany last week they were observed to be really going at it just in the way we sometimes go at each other in the House of Commons. Wonders will never cease. As I say, this development may have very far reaching effects.

Then another development with far reaching implications has been the recognition by every leader in every nation of the world of impending doom—and I repeat the words "of impending doom"—if there is a nuclear war or if no method of living together can be devised. Across this world today there is a will for peace such as there never has been previously. One needed only to go to the United Nations at the last session and be there while the Cuban crisis was under way in order to realize that mankind, as represented there by the delegates from 110 countries, was determined that something had to be done, and quickly, in order to bring about world peace for hundreds of millions of people who otherwise would perish from this earth.

As I see it, these are the main developments which have taken place or are in the process of taking place and which have much wider implications than has been the case at any other time since I have had the privilege of being Secretary of State for External Affairs.

The question may be asked, where does Canada fit into this picture? May I say that Canada is involved and is helping in an idealistic way all over the world. I mention first the field of disarmament. I deal with that first because this is the main way in which world peace can eventually be achieved. This is where effort is most worth while.

By disarmament I do not mean simply stopping the development of more deadly weapons or reducing existing weapons, although such results would be of the utmost importance; I define it in the wider sense as including the stopping of nuclear weapons tests, stopping the pollution of the air that we, our children and our grandchildren will have to breathe, reducing tensions, reducing distrust. It is very hard to bring about any settlement as long as nations distrust each other so that every word one says the other disbelieves instantaneously. I include all activities of that kind under disarmament.

Canada is involved in this question for good reason. We just happen to lie between the two great nuclear powers. If there is a nuclear war we are in for it. Our cities will be destroyed. On the Saturday night after the Cuban crisis arose I believed, and I have no doubt many other people did, that before morning Ottawa might be demolished, as well as Montreal, Toronto and my home city of Vancouver. Canada has another good reason to be interested in questions having to do with disarmament, for we are in a heavy fall-out area. This nation is in one of the worst fall-out areas in the world, the temperate zone. It is admitted that Canada is in one of the worst areas. Fall-out may affect not only us but the very food we grow, and no one knows yet what the end result will be of the nuclear tests which have already taken place, because a lot of the fall-out is not yet down. Questions were asked just today about strontium 90 in the food Eskimos in northern Canada are eating.

The government believes that Canada can do something worth while on the question of disarmament. One reason is because we were chosen by our western colleagues in NATO as one of the NATO negotiators on the ten-nation committee set up in September of 1959, and I would point out that this does not look as though we were quite as low in the esteem of NATO as some of our friends opposite would have the Canadian people believe. Five NATO countries, Great Britain, the United States, France, Italy and Canada, and five communist countries, the Soviet union, Poland, Czechoslovakia, Bulgaria and Rumania, formed the committee.

Then there is the question of our position vis-à-vis Great Britain and the United States. Our relationships with these two countries are such that we can talk to them on this or any other issue on a more intimate basis than any other country in the world. Another reason we believe that Canada can do something worth while is that we happen to have the confidence of practically all the unaligned countries in the world. I do not believe there is a country of the NATO group or of the Warsaw pact group that has nearly as many friends among the unaligned countries as Canada has, and that is because these nations have confidence in us.

Another reason we believe that Canada can do something on this question is that we have as our chief disarmament negotiator Lieutenant General E. L. M. Burns, a distinguished Canadian with a splendid record in both wars, a record as head of the United Nations emergency force, a splendid record in the civil service, a man who in my judgment is the best qualified man in the world today on the question of disarmament. He certainly has the respect of the delegates of every one of the 16 nations participating in the present disarmament negotiations, including the communist countries.

The ten-nation committee was set up in September of 1959 by the four western foreign ministers, not by the United Nations. The committee tried to work out some agreement but on June 27, 1960, all the communist delegates got up and walked out. The chairman at the time happened to be from one of the communist countries and he refused to hear any western delegates. He heard the delegates from the other four communist countries; then the delegates from the five countries picked up their brief cases and out they went. That was not a very promising development from the point of view of anyone interested in the field of disarmament.

However, the Americans worked with us on this issue in a spirit of splendid co-operation and we managed to get a meeting of the United Nations disarmament commission. The communists said they were not going to attend and were going to boycott the meeting, and they boycotted it right up to the time we were about to meet in New York. But when India and all the other unaligned countries made it perfectly clear that they were going to be there anyway, in came the communist delegates at the last minute, and we had a pretty good meeting of the United Nations disarmament commission. This was not a meeting of the United Nations, although the nations were the same, but a meeting of the commission and, by the way, it has not met since.

A resolution was approved unanimously urging the resumption of disarmament negotiations at once. The Russians voted for it too. But then nothing happened. However, it was an expression of world opinion. At the meeting of this commission we demanded that negotiations be resumed, and we urged that representatives of the unaligned countries be added to the negotiators. There was no use sending back the five Warsaw pact countries and the five NATO countries, because they would clash in the first 15 minutes and that would be it. So Canada urged that representatives of the unaligned countries be added.

The general assembly of the United Nations met a few weeks after that, in the fall of 1960. At that time the hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Nesbitt) was my parliamentary secretary and he took a magnificent part in the deliberations at the United Nations. He really carried the ball for Canada. We stressed the need to resume negotiations from the start to the finish of that session. We insisted that the disarmament negotiations had to be resumed. I remember he telephoned me once at Goose Bay where I had just landed for half an hour in returning from Europe. He happened to get me and he said, "Things are getting pretty tough down here. I am afraid we are going to get a good licking if we go ahead and force a vote on this particular resolution." We talked for a few minutes and then we decided we would go ahead and force a vote anyway. We took a good licking just to show that we meant business on this question of resuming the disarmament negotiations.

At the same time, starting really in 1959, we had been bringing in resolutions about radiation with the idea of focusing world opinion on the menace of these nuclear weapons tests. We have been getting these resolutions carried with more support every year. This year we did not have nearly as much trouble, I will tell you, as we did in 1959. In 1961 the Soviet union, if you please, resumed tests. They had been negotiating the question with the United States and Britain for nearly three years. During all that time there had been a voluntary moratorium. Then in September, 1961, out they come and start tests. Obviously they had been making preparations for several months.

When the United States general assembly met in 1961 the Soviet union was in the middle of these tests. Perhaps you will recall that they were going to set off a 100 megaton bomb and Canada and the Scandinavian countries—Canada nearly always works with them in the United Nations—took the lead in bringing in a resolution urging Premier Khrushchev not to set off that bomb. There again we had a lot of trouble, because some nations said what is the use? In the meantime he set off a bomb, and everybody thought it was a 100 megaton bomb. Then, fortunately, we discovered it was only 50 megatons, so our resolution still made sense the way it was worded against the 100 megaton bomb. In the final analysis, that resolution carried with the support of all the nations except the communist countries.

By this time opinion had been aroused about this testing, and in December of 1961 the United States and Russia reached agreement that there would be an 18-nation disarmament committee, and they named the committee.

The Chairman: Order. May I interrupt the minister to advise him his time has expired.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am sure the committee will want the minister to continue.

The Chairman: Will the committee give its unanimous consent to allow the minister to continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Green: I am very grateful to hon. members for allowing me to continue. Agreement was reached by all the members of the United Nations to set up this 18-nation disarmament committee including the same five countries from the west and the same five from the east, plus eight unaligned countries as we had been urging. Those countries were India, Burma, Sweden, United Arab Republic, Ethiopia, Nigeria, Brazil and Mexico. They met at Geneva in March of last year. Mind you, only 17 countries met, because for some reason or other France declined to participate. The western countries are now only four, namely, Great Britain, the United States, Italy and Canada.

At the meeting in Geneva we took the lead in urging that the United States and the Soviet union be joint chairmen of that committee. This had worked very well in the conference on Laos, and we thought it would help to have them as co-chairmen of the disarmament committee. This was agreed to. I feel it is a good idea because, in reality, if these two countries do not reach agreement there is not going to be any agreement, and it is wise to have the responsibility directly on them. It has some disadvantages. I think that having nuclear weapons, they do not have the same sense of urgency about getting some agreement worked out that the rest of us do. I know the disarmament committee was to meet on January 15, of this year, but these two nations got together and decided it should not meet until February 12. However, in the meantime they are carrying on what could be very useful. By the way, we did not agree to the delay. We thought it was a mistake to postpone the meeting.

In the disarmament committee negotiations the eight unaligned countries have played an excellent part. I never hesitate to pay tribute to them for their objectivity and for their sincerity, for the way in which they are trying to help bring about agreement. There is a subcommittee on nuclear test ban problems. We tried to have that subcommittee comprised of the three nuclear powers plus some of the others, but they would not agree. There are only three nations on that subcommittee.

Then there is a committee of the whole on collateral measures. This was a Canadian idea. We thought there were some issues which did not come directly within the terms of the disarmament treaty which could be dealt with collaterally and dealt with quickly, that if agreement could be reached on some of these collateral measures, it might help open the door for agreement of a more extensive kind. The first collateral measure considered was war propaganda, a declaration against any of the countries using war propaganda. Agreement was reached on that in the committee of the whole. The Russians agreed to that. They had much to say about changing the words, putting in "these" and "its" and so on, but agreement was finally reached.

Just the day before the agreement was to be approved in plenary session, word came from Moscow that there had to be four or five additional conditions attached to it, all of which were obviously cold war conditions and which made agreement impossible. It was a very good example of Moscow pulling the rug out from underneath their own negotiator. The person involved here was Mr. Zorin, who had the rug pulled out from under him just a few weeks ago in New York.

In so far as this question of collateral measures is concerned, there are three which are in line for consideration. One is a measure to prohibit the launching of weapons of mass destruction from outer space. This was a Canadian idea. Last March, nearly a year ago, when this collateral measures committee was first set up, we walked in with a declaration to the effect that weapons of mass destruction were not to be used in outer space, that they could not be launched from outer space. Well, that threw everybody into a tizzy. I mean there was a good deal of discussion, and it was not accepted with any degree of enthusiasm by some of the bigger countries. The Russians finally said "We do not want to talk about that; we will leave that for negotiation in connection with the treaty." In any event, this is one question we hope will be considered by this collateral measures committee.

Another suggestion was a measure to reduce the risk of war by accident, miscalculation or failure of communication. Proposals have been made to reduce the risk of accidental war through improved communication between governments, advance notification of military manoeuvres, the establishment of observation posts and the exchange of military missions between east and west.

Another subject which is to be considered in that committee is measures to prevent the wider dissemination of nuclear weapons. In the main negotiations on a disarmament treaty the Americans have put in a draft treaty and so have the Russians, and a lot of time has been spent trying to piece them together. Canada has aimed at picking out points where there was almost agreement and in stressing those points, trying to bring about agreement on those things in the belief that once the two sides agreed on a paragraph of that kind, it would be easier to go on and agree on something a little more difficult.

We went back to the general assembly last fall, and one thing that everyone was agreed on in New York was that the disarmament committee should carry on its work negotiating a treaty. There was no difference of opinion about that.

There was trouble about nuclear test banning. The Soviet side wanted one resolution; the Americans wanted another resolution. In fact there was a lot of difficulty in working out a resolution dealing with the question of a nuclear test ban. Canada moved in on that, and in my judgment this was our main accomplishment in the last session. We were able to bring about agreement on a resolution on the question of negotiating for a nuclear test ban. We based our offensive on the letters which had been exchanged between President Kennedy and Premier Khrushchev at the time of the Cuban crisis. They each wrote saying "We must now get together and settle the rest of the problems. Why could we not do this about a test ban?" We picked that up, and with the impetus of those letters behind us we were able to help bring about a resolution which became known as the Canadian resolution, although we had only submitted amendments, and this resolution was endorsed by everybody except the communists, who abstained.

The disarmament committee resumed on November 26 and worked until December 20, when it adjourned until January 15 and, as I explained a few minutes earlier, that date has been put back until February 12. In the meantime developments have taken place which may be, and I hope will be, of great significance. There has been this exchange of letters between President Kennedy and Premier Khrushchev which were printed as an appendix to Hansard some two days ago, and the Americans, the Russians and the British are now meeting in Washington trying to bring about an agreement on the terms of a test ban. They have made considerable progress. The main difference between them at the moment is as to the number of automatic seismic stations which there will be in Russia and on the number of times an international team can be sent in to inspect those stations. The Russians have agreed to three inspections annually, although until a few days ago they were saying they would not agree to any inspections of any kind; the Americans have asked for eight to ten inspections.

It is of the utmost importance that agreement be reached on this question. If they could reach agreement on a test ban then it would stop radiation, and would lead to the possibility of making settlements on other disarmament problems. In any event, Canada will continue her efforts to bring about a reasonable settlement, and I think today Canada is generally recognized as the leader in the field of working out some disarmament agreement between the east and the west.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Green: So much for Canada's activities in the field of disarmament. Then there is a related activity, and that is the field of peace keeping. Mind you, Mr. Speaker, if we are able to bring about a measure of disarmament there will be more and more peace keeping work to be done. The two go together, and in my judgment peace keeping in the world under U.N. auspices is going to become steadily more important. Canada is ideally situated for this role and, with India, Canada is today the most experienced nation in the world in the peace keeping field.

Take, for example, the Congo. We have been in the Congo from the start. The house authorized the sending of up to 500 personnel, and Canada has been running the communications system for the United Nations in the Congo, taking a very active part in the air services, and also in the staff work for the whole United Nations force. A lot of this work is done by bilingual Canadians, French speaking Canadians, and all over the world there is a job now to be done by Canadians who are French speaking. In the Congo they are the leaders in Canadian activities.

Canada is also represented on the secretary general's Congo advisory committee at the United Nations. There are only three western countries on it, Sweden, Ireland and Canada, with 17 African and Asian countries. We are able to consult with the secretary general on Congo questions at any time, and are able to advise him and the other members of that committee. I think those members of the house who have been at the United Nations will agree that Canada's actions in connection with the Congo have been of great benefit. We have tried to keep tempers cool. We have tried to urge moderation, and I think we have been able to do quite a lot in that regard.

Our policy in regard to the Congo has been throughout, and is today, to support the United Nations. Some of the western countries have not taken that stand. The French have been against the Congo operation and pay nothing toward its expenses. The British have been very worried about it and have not been as energetic in support of the United Nations as Canada has been. But I repeat that our policy is to support the United Nations in the Congo.

We have also taken action to help in the financing of the Congo operation. Providing the money has been a tremendous problem. It is costing about $10 million a month for that operation, and the United Nations has almost gone bankrupt paying for it. In passing I may say I thought the Globe and Mail of January 23, 1963 summed up our accomplishments in the Congo very well when it said in an editorial headed "The U.N. and International Co-operation":

> Many nations took a constructive part, and will continue to do so, in the Congo operation, but perhaps special mention should be given to India, Nigeria, Malaya, Ethiopia, Ireland, Sweden, Tunisia —and Canada.

Mr. Chairman, I do not want to get a reputation for croaking or whispering.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): But the minister's voice should be better now.

Mr. Green: I think perhaps I had better stop, Mr. Chairman, and I shall finish later on.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, I am sure that I express the view of all hon. members of this house in saying that this failure in the minister's electric power system is regrettable. We will agree that he should have an opportunity later to complete his statement. The minister should not conclude from the loud applause he has just received that the measure of that applause indicates the complete wisdom of his statement. I think the length of the applause was intended in part to afford the minister an opportunity to recover his lost voice.

It is to be recalled that this debate began as the result of a question put to the Prime Minister by the Leader of the Opposition on Monday last. The Leader of the Opposition had asked if an opportunity would be given at an early date to discuss matters involving the defence policy of Canada—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No; the Prime Minister offered it.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —and the Prime Minister replied that that opportunity would be given when the estimates of the Department of External Affairs were presented on Thursday and Friday of this week.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): You were not here, and you have not read Hansard. You are all wrong.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): It is, I am sure, accepted by all of us that there is a need not only for the discussion of problems involving national defence, but also foreign policy. However, it is significant that while the minister was speaking neither the Minister of National Defence, who has just come in—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No; he was here before.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —nor the Associate Minister of National Defence was present.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, on a question of privilege, I was here until half past three, for the first half hour the minister spoke. At that time—as he would tell you if his voice were good enough at the moment—I went to meet the ambassador for Korea on an appointment that had been made some considerable time ago. Hon. members will perhaps recall that the ambassador for Korea saw the Governor General yesterday and presented his credentials. I have just come down from seeing the ambassador for Korea, and that is the reason I was absent for some 20 minutes.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, one would have thought that a matter of this importance, in this new era which the minister has mentioned, would be one in which the defence policy would run consistently with foreign policy. It is inconceivable that our foreign policy would be determined by the character and nature of defence policy. Clearly foreign policy must determine not only defence but international commercial policy. At a time when defence does play such an important part in our national considerations I offer no excuse for the statement I make, which involves a sincere and strong belief on my part that there must be the closest consistency between the formulation and declaration of foreign policy and the implementation of defence policy.

Mr. Chairman, in his statement the minister gave us, as is his practice—and about this I make no complaint—a tour d'horizon of the situation in the world as he sees it since he last spoke to us. It will be recalled that that was some time ago. This is the first time since this parliament was convened that we have had any statement from the Secretary of State for External Affairs which could be characterized as a general survey of Canada's foreign policy.

In his statement today the minister reviewed some of the important events of the past year. He reviewed the settlement in Algeria. He mentioned the Chinese aggression against India; and I may say, by way of parenthesis, that what he said in this connection will be widely supported in this house and in this country. Our sympathies are with this commonwealth country, India, with whom we have had, and I am sure will continue to have, the closest and understandable ties. All the assistance that we can give to India, together with other countries such as the United Kingdom and the United States, will be given. Any policy in this regard put forward by the government of Canada will receive the widest measure of support in this house.

The minister said we were entering a new era. I hope he will not misunderstand me if I say that if this is the case, there has been nothing in his statement thus far which indicates any orientation in the foreign policy of our country that seemingly takes into account the opening of this new era. What the minister said was important. His report about disarmament, the nuclear test talks, the resurgence of the strength of the United Nations, these are important events; but they do not represent in themselves any developments which could be regarded as outside the character and the context of the kind of problems of the so-called other era which we have dealt with from time to time in this house. It is true that developments in the world today do cause great concern. There have been some developments which warrant a conviction that in the year 1962 some progress was made in international affairs on a world scale. We have seen, as the minister pointed out, increasing evidence of a fragmentation in the communist bloc, with a seemingly ever widening gulf between Moscow and Peking. Of course, we must make sure that this widening gulf does not cause us to be overly optimistic or ill prepared for contrary eventualities which might well ensue in the relation between these two important powers.

We have been through the crisis over Cuba, serving clearly to emphasize how completely interdependent the free world has become and how much we rely on the concept of the deterrent possessed by the United States. We came through the Cuban crisis, Mr. Chairman, as a result of this deterrent and the strong, forceful and courageous diplomacy of the President of the United States.

This matter is one of such importance that we have the duty to ask ourselves what is the position which our country took in respect of a matter that not only involved the peace of the world but the preservation of the North American communities, including Canada. While there was displayed by the chief executive in the United States the kind of firmness which in the situation was necessary, I do not believe the same can be said for the government of Canada in that same situation. The government properly has insisted upon fullness of consultation between the various members of the western alliance. This is an insistence which all of us in this house will support. No nation can remain free and no alliance of free nations can remain a free alliance if this principle is not in all practical and possible situations observed.

I suggest that the record of the week of the Cuban crisis will demonstrate that there was justification for concern on the part of the people of Canada over the direction given to this country by the government in that critical situation. I well remember questions being put to the ministry by members of the opposition groups with regard to the Cuban crisis. The Prime Minister cautioned us as to the desirability of there being a minimum of interrogation and that there be no question put which did not bear the stamp of full responsibility. With that characterization I do not quarrel. But I remember that that same evening the foreign minister of this country went on the television and was interrogated by newspapermen, who put questions to him not unlike some of the questions which had been put by hon. members of this house to members of the government. I must say to my hon. friend the Secretary of State for External Affairs that the positions which he took that night over the television—not in this house—were such as to contribute considerably to the lack of confidence which the people of Canada had at that time in the conduct of the foreign policy of the government.

Mr. Chairman, it seems to me the Cuban crisis highlighted once again the need for Canada to take part in the organization of American states. This was emphasized well over a year and a half ago by the visit of the secretary of state for external affairs to several Latin American countries and by the visit of the Prime Minister to Mexico. Since that time, during which there was a further suggestion made in this very chamber by the President of the United States, we have had from the government no indication as to what is the policy of the government or its view in that regard. This matter is not unrelated to the Cuban crisis. It will be recalled that it was a salutary experience to have ministers of the council of the organization of American states meeting on the eve of the greatest crisis since the second world war to discuss the possibility, indeed that evening the likelihood, of nuclear weapons being fired upon North America, and Canada not even being present at the meeting. Of course, Canada had no right to go there as a member, but I well recall the suggestion made by the Leader of the Opposition, that perhaps some way could be found by which Canada as an interested party—and this cannot be denied—might have had an opportunity of sitting at the table. In the light of events currently in Cuba, in the light of events in other Latin America countries, involving as they do fundamental economic readjustments which will have their implications in the relations which will prevail between that particular area and the rest of the world, it seems to me that the time was never more urgent for us to accept the long-standing invitation of every member of the organization of American states and to join this organization.

