HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF FOREIGN MINISTER OF GABON

Mr. Speaker: Before commencing the proceedings of this afternoon I would wish to seek the indulgence of the house to draw to the attention of hon. members the presence in the gallery of a distinguished visitor in the person of Hon. Jean-Hilaire Aubame, the Foreign Minister for the Republic of Gabon. Our distinguished visitor is here today in the course of an informal visit to Ottawa. It is his first visit here. We know that Gabon has existed as an independent republic since August of 1960. However, he is in this country on business and has paid us the courtesy of a visit. I am sure that all hon. members will wish to express through me the hope that he will not long tarry before making a return and official visit to this country.

(Translation):

I wish to draw to the attention of hon. members the presence, in the Speaker's gallery, of His Excellency the Minister of Foreign Affairs for the Republic of Gabon, Mr. Jean Hilaire Aubame.

Mr. Aubame's visit here is quite informal. As a matter of fact, he is on a state visit in New York, but the president of the republic wanted him to come to Canada.

I am sure of speaking for all hon. members when I extend to him the most cordial welcome and most sincere good wishes, not only for himself but also for the people of his country.

I hope that we will see him again in Canada. He told me a few minutes ago that he was hoping to come back on an official visit before too long.

Once again we offer him our best wishes.

PRIVILEGE

MR. PEARSON—REFERENCE TO SPEECH BY MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): I rise on a question of privilege arising out of a statement made today in Calgary by the Minister of Agriculture. I regret doing this in the absence of the hon. gentleman, but I should make my statement at the first available opportunity, which is now, particularly in view of the fact that the minister's office saw fit to issue the text of his statement for release at 12 noon today.

My question of privilege arises out of the following sentence in his speech, and I quote from the text released. The minister said:

> I said it in Regina, and I repeat it here today, the members of the Liberal and New Democratic parties are opposed to the China wheat sales. As recently as Friday, November 23, we had the leaders of those two parties putting their official stands on the House of Commons records.

That statement, made by the Minister of Agriculture, is a false statement, and the evidence put forward by the minister to support it does exactly the opposite, because in the debate on November 14—and this was confirmed by me on November 23—I made the following statement about our attitude toward these agreements. I said at that time, as reported on page 1633—and I was repeating a statement I had made over a year ago:

> With this cautionary qualification regarding trade with communist countries like China—
> Trade in non-strategic goods.
> I repeat that we most certainly do need all the expansion of trade we can possibly get, and where we can get it.

I went on to express the approval of this party and myself of the China wheat agreement in those terms, and again on November 23. Therefore, the minister's statement is not only a false statement but it was made after evidence had been brought into this house which gave him information which proved exactly the contrary to his statement. For this reason, it must have also been made with deliberation.

MR. PETERS—REFERENCE TO SPEECH BY MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): I, too, intended to rise on a question of privilege similar to that raised by the leader of the official opposition. I think our position in this matter is even clearer than that of the other parties in the house. I believe the misrepresentation contained in the minister's statement must be the basis of an apology by the minister to the house and to the country for the inconvenience he has caused and the erroneous opinion he has expressed.

The date November 23 has been mentioned. If Your Honour would check the record you would find on page 1956 of Hansard a statement by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas) in which my hon. friend mentions some of the other countries which are involved and says we are not doing enough to further the China wheat agreement, that more could be done. Thus the statement which was made by the minister and repeated in the press release is completely erroneous, and I think an apology is due to the house and to the hon. members affected.

Mr. Speaker: Order. While I am satisfied that the leader of the official opposition in his quality as the leader of a party, and as one whose statements were taken in issue, is in a position to offer an explanation of his own attitude and to make a refutation of the minister's remarks, I would have preferred the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam, who was the one whose position might have been taken improperly, to have been here to make his own statement. I think it is not in order on a question of privilege merely to assert a contrary party position.

As to what the hon. member for Timiskaming has said with regard to the attitude taken by the minister, it is my understanding that there is continuing debate on the first item of the minister's estimates and hon. members can, if they wish, engage in a controversy or a dispute at that time. The matter certainly does not arise on a question of privilege, with the exception of the position taken by the Leader of the Opposition whose personal words are at issue.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I should like to draw this to your attention. The press statement from the minister's office says:

> The members of the Liberal and the New Democratic parties are opposed to the China wheat sales.

When the minister says that, he is involving all of us, not only the member for Burnaby-Coquitlam, and this is the attitude of this party. I think the malicious and erroneous statement should be apologized for.

Mr. Speaker: Order. We will not engage in any more controversy about it. I think my remarks in general stand. I have noted what the hon. member for Skeena has said, but I think it could also be said that anyone belonging to the New Democratic party in or out of the house could take the same attitude. The question of privilege is limited, as I indicated.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

O.E.C.D.—REPORT ON ANNUAL MEETING OF MINISTERIAL COUNCIL

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, if it is not considered an indiscretion for a member of the house to say that he has just returned from Paris, I should like to report to the house on the annual meeting of the organization for economic co-operation and development.

As hon. members are aware, the second annual meeting of ministers of the 20 member countries of the O.E.C.D. was held in Paris on November 27 and 28. I now wish to report to the house concerning the results of this very successful and interesting meeting. The agenda for the meeting contained items relating to the three main aims of the organization, namely the achievement of maximum economic growth and employment with due regard to financial stability, the promotion of economic expansion in the less developed countries, and the expansion of world trade on a multilateral, non-discriminatory basis.

In an exchange of views concerning economic policy, ministers reviewed the current situation in member countries and the progress made in the past year toward the collective growth target defined in November, 1961. Hon. members will recall that on that occasion the O.E.C.D. ministers agreed to set as a collective target the attainment during the decade 1960 to 1970 of a growth of 50 per cent in real gross national product of the 20 member countries in aggregate.

In examining the economic outlook at the present time the council noted that in the United States there is unemployed labour and unutilized capacity and a clear need for action to stimulate demand. European production continues to grow, although at a less rapid rate than before. It is intended to keep the situation under review, and ministers agreed that should any measures be required to stimulate expansion in member countries, it would be important to act quickly and in concert. A significant conclusion of the discussion was that the competitive positions of Canada, the United Kingdom and the United States have improved. This is expected to contribute to a better balance in international payments.

The council decided to publish two important although preliminary studies. One of these relates to the growth target adopted last year. It analyses growth experience of the various member countries over the past decade and looks ahead to the possible direction and structure of growth in some of the leading member countries. The second study reviews the experience and experiments of member countries in maintaining reasonable stability of costs and prices. In stating the views of the Canadian government during the discussion I emphasized the importance Canada attaches to the highly successful exchange of views on economic policy within the organization. I believe it is no exaggeration to say that these consultations on economic policy lie at the very heart of the organization. It is of real significance to Canada to be able to contact, through the O.E.C.D., the senior representatives of our major trading partners responsible for the formation of economic policy.

I also indicated the interest of the government in the work of the organization over the past year in examining the policies and problems of economic growth and in analysing the means of achieving stability of costs and prices. With respect to the latter subject I reminded the council that the Canadian government has laid strong emphasis on the improvement of productivity and economic efficiency, that it has established the national productivity council and that it has introduced recently in this house a measure to establish a national economic development board.

With respect to trade, ministers addressed themselves to the important question of co-ordinating trade and aid policies adopted by member countries in their relations with the less developed nations of the world. In a resolution approved last week members of the organization agreed to "seek to formulate concerted policies which are designed to further the economic development of the less developed countries and which take full account of the interdependence between trade and aid". It is clear that most countries would prefer to live by trade rather than aid, and that the industrialized nations can help the less developed areas by providing reasonable access to markets for their products as well as by means of international assistance.

The ministerial council also reviewed the activities of the organization during the past year in the field of development assistance, noting with satisfaction the conclusions of the first annual review of the aid policies of the members of the development assistance committee. Ministers recalled the decision taken recently to establish a development centre in the context of the O.E.C.D. and recognized the need for concerted action to increase both the quantity and the quality of aid to developing countries. For this part of the meeting, in view of Japan's membership in the development assistance committee, the Japanese minister of state, Hon. Kiichi Miyazawa, was in attendance.

Ministers discussed the role of the O.E.C.D. in the co-ordination of scientific programs in member countries. They agreed to convene a special meeting of ministers in 1963 to stimulate co-operation in this important area.

The ministers of agriculture of the 20 member countries met on November 19 and 20 in Paris. The ministerial council of the organization noted the results of the agriculture ministers' discussions and agreed that their work will strengthen co-operation through the O.E.C.D. in the fields of agricultural policy, international agricultural trade and food aid to the less developed countries.

The ministers were happy to welcome to the meeting senior representatives of a number of other international organizations whose work lies in fields related to that of the O.E.C.D. Statements were heard from Mr. Per Jacobsson, managing director of the international monetary fund; Mr. Rey, a member of the commission of the European economic community; Mr. Wyndham White, executive secretary of the general agreement on tariffs and trade, and Mr. Wehrer, a member of the high authority of the European coal and steel community.

A communique was issued at the conclusion of the two day session and, as chairman of the council, I also made a statement to representatives of the international press in Paris. With the permission of the house I would table for the information of hon. members copies of the communique and press statement in English and French.

Mr. Speaker: The minister seeks leave of the house to table the communique and statement. Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

3. Is a fast express train handling express, L.C.L. shipments and piggybacks going to take the place of trains 3 and 4, as reported in the Vancouver Sun on or about October 24, 1962?

The chamber was informed that it was the responsibility of the municipality initially to locate a possible site which was considered suitable; furthermore, the municipality should assume responsibility for any application for federal assistance. Nothing further was heard from the municipality.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS PENSIONS

Question No. 837—Mr. Knowles:

1. How many retired employees of the Canadian National Railways are in receipt of pensions of less than $25 per month?

2. How many are in receipt of a pension of $25 per month?

3. How many are in receipt of pensions of (a) $25.01 to $29.99 per month (b) $30 to $39.99 per month (c) $40 to $49.99 per month (d) $50 to $59.99 per month (e) $60 to $69.99 per month (f) $70 to $79.99 per month (g) $80 to $89.99 per month (h) $90 to $99.99 per month (i) $100 to $124.99 per month (j) $125 to $149.99 per month (k) $150 to $199.99 per month (l) $200 per month and over?

Mr. McBain: The management of Canadian National Railways advise as follows:

1. 401.

2. 2,637.

3.

Amount of pension	Number
$ 25.01 to $ 29.99	1,055
30.00 to 39.99	1,924
40.00 to 49.99	1,490
50.00 to 59.99	1,091
60.00 to 69.99	1,013
70.00 to 79.99	1,031
80.00 to 89.99	1,102
90.00 to 99.99	1,090
100.00 to 124.99	2,738
125.00 to 149.99	2,306
150.00 to 199.99	2,938
200.00 and over	2,737

In a number of cases the amounts of pensions paid by C.N.R. does not represent the total pensions payable to employees for railway service. Pensions payable by the C.N.R. to international employees (service in both Canada and the United States) relate to their service in Canada only. Such employees also receive annuities payable under the U.S. railroad retirement act or the social security act for service performed in the United States. For example, in the group receiving pensions of under $25 from the C.N.R., there are over 65 former international employees who also receive U.S. railroad retirement or social security annuities in respect of C.N.R. service rendered in the United States. The balance of this group consists of employees who elected early retirement (before age 65) with reduced basic ($25) pensions, and employees who had very short service and small contributions.

FERRY "WILLIAM CARSON"

Question No. 842—Mr. Stewart:

1. On how many occasions in each year since the William Carson went into service has she been unable to dock at North Sydney, N.S. because of ice in and near the harbour?

2. What losses have resulted because of (a) stress and damage to the ship (b) spoilage of goods and (c) other effects?

3. What alternate port has the William Carson used and have facilities there been found adequate and, if not, what are the inadequacies?

Mr. McBain: The management of Canadian National Railways advise as follows:

1. 1958, nil; 1959, 14; 1960, 1; 1961, 39; 1962, 28.

2. Losses cannot be stated in the terms phrased by the question. Estimated total damage is $70,000. There was damage to deck cargo on three occasions resulting from heavy weather. On one other occasion cargo on deck and below deck was damaged, as well as ship's furniture, due to a power failure which reduced speed in heavy weather. No spoilage or damage as a direct result of ice conditions.

3. The alternate port used has been Mulgrave and while the facilities there are not designed for a Carson type ship operation they have served their purpose on an emergency basis.

FEDERAL INCOME TAX REVENUE FROM OIL AND GAS

Question No. 874—Mr. Davis:

What was the total income tax revenue received by the federal government from the oil and natural gas producing industry in the last fiscal year?

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): Income tax revenues received are not analysed by industry but the annual analysis of corporation tax returns published in "Taxation Statistics" indicates taxes declared by corporations in various industrial classifications. Such figures relating to the oil and natural gas industry will be found on pages 111 and 112 of the 1962 edition of this publication. Companies classified in primary production of oil and natural gas declared, for the 1960 taxation year total taxes (including old age security tax) amounting to $4.5 million as shown here, of which about $4.2 million would represent income tax. In addition, some oil and natural gas production is carried on directly by companies classified as petroleum refineries, but the tax arising from production profits cannot be separated. Companies classified as petroleum refineries declared, for the 1960 taxation year, total tax (including old age security tax) amounting to $46.9 million, of which about $43.8 million would represent income tax.

COLUMBIA RIVER—CAPITAL COST OF STORAGE PROJECTS

Question No. 875—Mr. Davis:

1. Has there been any change in the estimated capital cost of the Mica creek, Duncan lake, and High Arrow storage projects?

2. What has been the extent of these changes, separately and in total, for the three treaty projects?

3. For what reasons have these changes been necessary?

Mr. Dinsdale: 1 and 2. See attached table.

3. Rising construction costs from 1956 through 1961, as well as minor design changes and increase in allowance for contingencies.

It is understood that agencies of the government of British Columbia have had further investigations and studies made but any revisions to the cost estimates given in the attached table, that may have resulted from these further studies, have not been released.

There have been seven conveyances of parcels of these lands by way of lease. Three of these leases, for a term during the pleasure of the Authority, have been to construction companies, Baillargeon & Fournier Inc., Construction Equipment Company Limited and Key Construction Company Limited, for temporary shelter or storage of contruction materials; the lease to Key Construction has been terminated recently. Two more of these leases were to construction companies, Rivermont Construction Company Limited and J. M. COMMUNITY ANTENNA TELEVISION SYSTEMS

Question No. 925—Mr. Dube:

Has a meeting taken place in recent weeks between representatives of the National Community Antenna Television Association of Canada, the Canadian Association of Broadcasters, the board of broadcast governors, and the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and, if so, what decisions were taken at that meeting with reference to community antenna television systems applying to relay by microwave-hops television signals originating from the United States to Canadians in an area where said signals are not otherwise available?

Mr. McBain: Yes. A meeting was held on June 25, 1962. No decisions were taken. A discussion only was intended following which each party was to provide the department with its views in writing. These comments have now been received and the whole question is under study by the government.

CAMPBELLTON, N.B.—MICROWAVE RELAY OF U.S. TELEVISION PROGRAMS

Question No. 926—Mr. Dube:

Has the board of broadcast governors and/or the Department of Transport received an application from North Shore Community Television Ltd. of Kedgwick, N.B., for permission to microwave from Kedgwick, N.B., to Campbellton, N.B., signals originating from an American television station and (a) if so, was said permission granted and (b) if not, what reasons for refusal were given to the applicant?

Mr. McBain: Yes, an application was received by the Department of Transport, (a) no, (b) the licensing policy applied in this case is that the department may give consideration to an application which is predicated on the use of a radio relay where the programs are to be received from a transmitting station located in the United States, provided that the area does not receive any Canadian television service either directly or by C.A.T.V.

Question No. 941—Mr. Laing:

1. Was a report presented to the government by the Fraser river basin board?

2. Did the report make recommendations for dike improvement, shore line protection and current direction to ensure safety under spring freshet conditions?

3. Since 1959 have representations been made to the government, accompanied by plans, toward implementing the recommendations of the board?

4. Have any consultations been held between the government and the province of British Columbia respecting division of costs under the plan and, if so, is the government prepared to proceed with these safety measures?

Mr. Dinsdale: 1. Yes.

2. For dike improvement, yes; for shore line protection and current direction, no.

3. No.

4. No. The two governments agreed to assign additional investigations to the board and these further studies are in progress.

EDUCATIONAL PROGRAM RESPECTING EFFECTS OF SMOKING

Question No. 946—Mr. Mather:

Has the government studied the steps taken by the British ministry of health concerning the effects of smoking on public health and, if so, does the government plan to take the lead in a similar nation-wide educational program?

Mrs. Casselman: The Department of National Health and Welfare has been advised of the steps taken by the British ministry of health concerning the effects of smoking on public health, and these are currently being studied.

This matter was discussed extensively at the recent meeting of the dominion council of health, which is composed in part of the deputy ministers of health of the provinces. As a result of this discussion a committee was established to study the subject of smoking and health and make appropriate recommendations for positive action.

C.N.R. TRAIN NO. 4 SCHEDULE CHANGES

Question No. 947—Mr. Peters:

1. Has the board of transport commissioners examined the changes in schedule in the C.N.R. continental No. 4 effective October 28, 1962, to determine the inconvenience the new schedule creates for passengers making connections with the Ontario Northland Railway?

2. Has the board of transport commissioners considered these particular changes in relation to their own regulations which provide that timetables be interrelated to serve the best interest of the travelling public?

3. Has the board of transport commissioners examined the adequacy of food and refreshment services at the C.N.R. North Bay station, particularly in view of delays in making train changes that have been caused by recent schedule changes?

Mr. McBain: The Board of Transport Commissioners for Canada advises as follows:

1 and 2. No. The Board of Transport Commissioners for Canada has received no complaint with respect to train connections between the Canadian National Railways and the Ontario Northland Railway at North Bay.

3. The Board of Transport Commissioners for Canada has no jurisdiction over facilities such as those referred to in this question.

CONTROL OF FOREST INSECTS AND DISEASES

Question No. 948—Mr. Crouse:

Is the Department of Forestry engaged in, or sponsoring, any research relating to the control, other than by chemical means, of forest insects and diseases and, if so, what is the nature of such research?

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): Intensive surveys and research programs are providing fundamental information on the causes of insect outbreaks and disease epidemics and factors influencing the susceptibility of the forest. This information is being used to develop cultural and biological control methods in those cases where damage and losses can be reduced to a tolerable level without the use of insecticides and fungicides. For example, it has been shown that decay losses in balsam fir forests can be substantially reduced by shorter crop rotations and the removal of mature trees. This practice also reduces the susceptibility of the stands to budworm attack. Sanitation programs can be applied to avoid losses due to stem and root diseases as in the case of Dutch elm disease and armillaria root rot. Damping off diseases in forest nurseries can be controlled by soil amendments and addition of fertilizers. Bark beetle and wood borer losses can be avoided by improved logging procedures.

Biological control programs are being applied to a number of important introduced pests. Imported parasites, predators, and diseases have been released against 16 insect species and with five of these some measure of control is already apparent.

IMMIGRANTS FROM ALGERIA

Question No. 949—Mr. Dube:

1. How many French-Algerian refugees have applied for admission to Canada?
2. How many applications were accepted?
3. How many applicants have already landed in Canada?

Mr. Bell (Carleton): 1, 2 and 3. As Algerian repatriates in France are French citizens separate statistics are not maintained on the number applying to immigrate to Canada. While Canadian immigration officials in France report many inquiries from Algerian repatriates few formal immigrant applications have been received. The admission to Canada of immigrants of French citizenship in recent years has been as follows:

1959, 1,933; 1960, 2,395; 1961, 1,987; 9 mos. 1962, 1,862.

USE OF METRIC SYSTEM IN CANADA

Question No. 950—Mr. Dube:

Has the government ever given any consideration to the advisability of changing our standards of weights and measures to the metric system now being used by most countries?

Mr. Nesbitt: By statute, metric is a legal system in Canada, and may be used by anyone who finds it beneficial so to do. At such time as it appears advisable that the adoption of metric as the sole system would be advantageous to Canada as a whole, appropriate consideration would be given to all aspects of such change.

FOREST ACCESS ROADS PROGRAM

Question No. 951—Mr. English:

What assistance has been offered to the provinces under the federal forestry aid program for improving the access to forests for fire protection and to permit expansion of forest industries?

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): Since 1958, financial assistance has been offered to all provinces for the construction of forest access roads. Nine provinces have taken advantage of this aid and several hundred projects have been undertaken. The new roads are located to improve the protection and permit the management of undeveloped forest areas. The need for the roads is determined from the information obtained by the federally assisted inventory surveys. The new roads have resulted in the establishment of primary forest industries in a number of localities, for example, three new sawmills in the Gaspe, and one at Matachewan in Ontario. It is obvious that roads are an essential prerequisite to the attainment of sustained yield management in a particular area.

MAIL SERVICE, C.N.R. TRAIN NO. 9, CHATHAM, ONT.

Question No. 952—Mr. Clunis:

1. How many mail trucks pick up mail from C.N.R. train No. 9, running between Toronto and Chatham, Ontario, for delivery to post offices outside the city of Chatham?
2. What post offices receive mail delivery from these trucks?
3. On how many days, other than Sunday, has mail from C.N.R. train No. 9 arrived on time at Chatham since November 1, 1962?
4. On how many days has mail from train No. 9 arrived late at Chatham one hour or more, since November 1, 1962?

Mrs. Fairclough: 1. 3: Chatham and Leamington, Chatham and Sarnia, Chatham and Wallaceburg.

2. Charing Cross, Tilbury, Merlin Fletcher, Port Alma, Comber Ruscom station, Coatsworth station, Staples, Wheatley, Blytheswood, Leamington Kingsville, Eberts, Dresden, Tupperville, Bear Line, Dover Centre, Wallaceburg.

3. Four times.

4. Once; on the remaining days, up to and including 28th November, train 9 arrived Chatham less than one hour behind schedule.

NATIONAL PARKS PROGRAM

Question No. 955—Mr. Roxburgh:

Has an overall national parks program, in co-operation with the provinces, been considered by the federal government and, if so (a) what is the nature of such a program (b) what steps, if any, have been taken to implement it?

Mr. Dinsdale: There have been extensive discussions on various aspects of parks and outdoor recreation by the federal government and the provinces and other interested agencies, since 1957. This was one of the seven main topics considered by the resources for tomorrow conference, for example. Because of the provincial jurisdiction over resources the conference recommended the establishment of a federal-provincial parks conference. As a result, the government of Canada convened the federal-provincial parks conference which was held in Ottawa on November 20 and 21, 1962.

(a) Because of their numbers, their location and their established purposes, Canada's national parks are limited in meeting the total demand for outdoor recreation that exists today. It is for this reason the federal government, within the scope of its jurisdiction, has been encouraging the development of other facilities under appropriate auspices to provide a balanced and adequate service for the people of Canada and visitors from other countries.

(b) The parks conference of 1962 discussed the relationship of public and private enterprise and of the three levels of government in Canada in providing outdoor recreational facilities. It agreed to reconvene in 1963 and every second year thereafter to consider these broad matters affecting parks policy and planning. In addition, annual meetings of parks administrations will be held to examine management techniques and exchange of information on them. Furthermore, the national parks branch will serve, for the time being, as a clearing house with the provinces on these matters.

In addition, the government of Canada has provided an over-all plan since 1958 for the development by the provinces (under federal financial aid) of camp grounds and picnic sites as part of the winter employment program. Furthermore, the governments of the ten provinces and of Canada share the cost of another recreational program to provide further facilities of this kind along the Trans-Canada highway. The municipal winter works program has been used extensively to provide adequate recreational facilities for urban cities. The Canada Water Conservation Act operating under the principle of multiple use of renewable resources is assisting in providing recreational areas in several major centres. In addition, the newly launched A.R.D.A. program will assist in developing land and water resources for outdoor recreational purposes.

TENDER REQUIREMENTS, PROJECTS UNDER $15,000

Question No. 956—Mr. McWilliam:

1. What is the minimum number of quotations required to be submitted before a contract is awarded, or a work order authorized, where private tenders are asked for on projects less than $15,000?
2. Do contract or work-order regulations for projects under $15,000, for which private tenders are invited, provide that the contract or work order be awarded to the lowest tenderer?

Mr. Grafftey: 1. Not specified.

2. No.

[Mr. Dinsdale.]

SUBSIDY ON CHEESE EXPORTED TO U. K.

Question No. 957—Mr. Ethier:

1. What is the amount of subsidy paid on each pound of cheese exported to England, and what is the amount paid on each pound of Cheddar cheese sold on the domestic market?
2. What is the amount of subsidy, if any, paid on skimmed milk?

Mr. Pigeon: 1. No direct subsidy is paid on cheese exported to England. However, when it is proven that first grade Cheddar cheese has been exported to the United Kingdom, the agricultural stabilization board reduces the sale price of that cheese by four cents a pound.

A subsidy of two cents a pound on cheese with a count of 94 or over and of one cent a pound on cheese with a count of 93, is paid to producers for any cheese meeting the standards of quality set up by the Cheese and Cheese Factory Improvement Act and its regulations.

2. No subsidy is paid on skimmed milk.

(Text):

DEFOLIATION OF DECIDUOUS TREES

Question No. 958—Mr. MacRae:

Has the Department of Forestry investigated the cause of the severe defoliation of deciduous trees during the early part of the summer in many parks, camp sites, and recreation areas in central and western Canada and, if so, (a) is the cause now known (b) are these conditions likely to continue (c) is the Department of Forestry able to do anything to remedy the situation?

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): Outbreaks of the forest tent caterpillar or army worm have developed in many regions during the past two years. These outbreaks occur at about ten to twelve year intervals. They seldom persist in any one area for more than three years and numbers are eventually reduced by natural control agents such as unfavourable weather and parasites. The principal host tree is trembling aspen, but larvae also feed on other hardwoods. Trees are able to withstand several years of defoliation without appreciable losses other than a reduction in growth. Nevertheless, the insect has a high nuisance value and during outbreak years tourists and cottage owners are bothered by migrating larvae and the unsightly appearance of denuded trees during the early summer.

The forest insect and disease survey carries out an annual assessment of this problem. Special reports are prepared for provincial forest and park authorities which explain the current outbreak conditions and give some forewarning of conditions which are likely to prevail the succeeding spring. Chemical control of this insect is recommended only in important tourist or recreation areas. The survey is prepared to take an active part in gathering data for the planning and subsequent assessment of these operations.

*CANNED RED TUNA CAT FOOD

Question No. 959—Mr. Haidasz:

1. Has the Minister of Fisheries received any complaints concerning imported canned red tuna catfood?
2. What is the reported incidence of steatitis in animal pets fed canned red tuna?
3. What are the present regulations concerning imported canned red tuna catfood?

Mr. MacLean (Queens): Yes, three complaints regarding this incident.

2. Only one case of steatitis, or fatty degeneration in pets has been reported to the department. I am informed this condition is caused by lack of vitamin E.

3. The Meat and Canned Foods Act, under which canned fish is inspected, contemplates food for man only. There are, therefore, no regulations dealing with the inspection of pet food. Canned red tuna, however, is an excellent source of protein, but is not in itself a balanced ration as it is deficient in vitamin E.

NORTH FRASER HARBOUR COMMISSION

Question No. 962—Mr. Laing:

1. In 1961, what was (a) total tonnage of freight (b) total board feet of saw logs (c) total value of all commodities (d) total revenue, administered by the North Fraser harbour commission?
2. Under the proposed revisions in the New Westminster harbour commission, will the government ensure the continuing independence of the North Fraser harbour commission?

Mr. McBain: 1. (a) 5,485,797 tons (including logs). (b) 1,237,079,973 FBM. (c) Not available. (d) $164,137.33.

2. Yes.

COST OF PUBLIC DEBT SERVICE

Question No. 964—Mr. Laing:

In each year since 1945, what percentage of total budgetary expenditure has been required for service of the public debt?

Mr. Grafftey: This information is published annually in the public accounts: For the years 1945 and 1946 in statement entitled "Percentage Distribution of Revenue and Expenditure;" for years 1947 on, in statement entitled "Summary of Budgetary Expenditures by Departments and Major Classifications."

RADIO STATION CFPR, PRINCE RUPERT, B.C.

Question No. 965—Mr. Howard:

What plans are in existence and what steps are being taken to increase the wattage output of radio station CFPR in Prince Rupert, B.C.?

Mr. Halpenny: I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation that preliminary site studies have been made for a transmitter location, which will accommodate a directional antenna for a proposed new 5000 watt station to broaden radio coverage, including service to the Queen Charlotte islands. This project is one of those on which planning has been suspended for the balance of this fiscal year, as announced by the C.B.C. in September, 1962 with the reduction in the budget for capital expenditures.

Questions

WELDON CHAN—DEPORTATION ORDER

Question No. 967—Mr. Howard:

1. Under what statutory provision and for what reason, was the order for the deportation of Mr. Weldon Chan issued; when was it issued, and is it still in effect?

2. If the said order has not been executed, what is the reason therefor?

Mr. Bell (Carleton): 1. Section 19 (1) (e) (vi) of the Immigration Act for violation of conditions of admission as a non-immigrant. The order for deportation was issued on May 13, 1959 and, under section 33 (2) of the Immigration Act, is still in effect.

2. Prior to the proposed execution of the order for deportation Mr. Weldon Chan disappeared.

SALMON SPAWNING, QUEEN CHARLOTTE ISLANDS

Question No. 969—Mr. Howard:

1. Over the past 20 years, has any survey or surveys been conducted on the Queen Charlotte islands to determine the number of salmon spawning streams and rivers which have been destroyed as a result of (a) logging, and (b) the taking of gravel therefrom and, if so, how many such creeks, streams or rivers, by name, have been destroyed?

2. With respect to each such creek, stream or river, what is the actual or estimated decline in the number of mature fish, by species?

Mr. MacLean (Queens): 1. Each year fishery officers, patrolmen and guardians survey the streams in their area of responsibility. Debris is removed and obstructions reported for action by specialized crews. The autumn survey is especially detailed since an estimate of spawning escapement is required.

In 1961 and 1962 teams of trained biologists and technicians made detailed surveys of all salmon spawning streams on the Queen Charlotte islands, with the objective of outlining all possible improvement measures toward more efficient spawning of chum salmon, the catches of which species have continued to decline. The voluminous data from these surveys are now being compiled and correlated with all those available from previous years.

To date no stream has been found to have been destroyed by logging or gravel removal, but certain sections of some may be in need of improvement.

2. Spawning escapements are estimated according to the best means available but it has been found by using counting fences as checks that even now these estimates may vary up to 30 per cent from the actual numbers. Because of this possible error added to the known variation in success of runs from year to year and cycle to cycle, such minute comparison would be valueless and has not been carried out.

MAINTENANCE OF RIGHTS OF WAY, HALTON CONSTITUENCY

Question No. 971—Mr. Harley:

1. Who is responsible for maintenance of railway cuts, abutments, embankments and subways on C.N.R. rights of way, and has the C.N.R. received any protests concerning their maintenance in Halton constituency?

2. If so, what were (a) the sites of such protested areas (b) the dates of protest (c) the steps taken by the C.N.R.?

Mr. McBain: The management of Canadian National Railways advise as follows:

1. The jurisdiction rests with the great lakes region of the railway at Toronto.

2. (a) As was pointed out in the answer given on October 24 to question No. 357 on the order paper, the existing main line through Burlington was constructed in 1855, and the planned set-off tracks are an essential part of the operations to serve the industrial complex between Burlington and Mimico and the connection with the line to the new hump yard. (b) Representations have been received and officers of the great lakes region have held meetings with the mayor and councillors in order to explain what is involved. (c) The railway officers have made an extensive examination of the situation as to the location of the set-off tracks and several sites were examined in the course of which many factors had to be taken into account such as operating conditions, and engineering limitations. Every effort has been made in the overall project in order that the minimum of disturbance would be caused to communities.

What is the amount of capital stock subscribed and paid up by Canada in the international monetary fund, and in what manner was such amount subscribed?

Mr. Grafftey: Mr. Speaker, I have to inform the hon. member who asked that question that, unfortunately, as the answer was handed to me only ten minutes ago, I did not have time to have it translated into French. With your permission, I am tabling it in English.

Canada's initial quota and subscription to the international monetary fund as determined by the United Nations monetary and financial conference in 1944 was the equivalent of U.S. $300 million. Of this amount, 25 per cent or U.S. $75 million was paid in gold and the balance in the form of Canadian dollar non-interest bearing, non-negotiable demand notes. In 1959, at the time of a general increase in quotas of I.M.F. members, Canada's quota was increased to the equivalent of U.S. $550 million. EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INDIA—INQUIRY AS TO MILITARY AID

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister—and I apologize for not giving him notice of this question, which has just come to my attention—whether he would care to comment on a report from India that the Indian government had asked Canada for winter clothing for her troops and also artillery and long range mortars, which latter request was refused on the ground that none were available.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in so far as the first part of the question is concerned, there was a request for certain clothing, the particulars of which I have not at the moment before me. It was clothing of various kinds and varieties. So far as the latter part of the question is concerned, I will have to look into that matter as I personally have had no notice in this regard.

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, a supplementary to the question just asked by the Leader of the Opposition. Is the Prime Minister in a position to say whether consideration has been given, in connection with the request for winter clothing, to making immediately available the thousand year stock of long underwear which we understand is now available?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, that has been on hand since 1952, and I do not know whether they would want it.

SPORTS

BRITISH EMPIRE GAMES—VICTORY OF CANADIAN BOXER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Bert Leboe (Cariboo): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Does the Prime Minister expect to be as successful in his next battle as was gold medallist Harold Mann, the boxer from Prince George, the centre city of British Columbia?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think hon. members from the city of Ottawa and perhaps a few others might wish to rise on similar questions; but I think we can all read our newspapers and rejoice in the success achieved by some of our Canadian athletes.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

PETITION REQUESTING APPOINTMENT OF FRENCH CANADIANS TO EXECUTIVE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Would the Prime Minister give the house his views on the petition which has been signed by members of his own, and of other parties, urging that some French Canadians be appointed to the executive of Canadian National Railways?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member realizes that he may not ask for comments on certain matters which have taken place outside this chamber, and for which the minister is not responsible.

WATER RESOURCES

STATEMENT ON STUDY OF GREAT LAKES POLLUTION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, on Friday last the hon. member for Fort William inquired if the government is giving consideration to additional financial assistance being granted to the great lakes institute. It is assumed the water pollution mentioned by the hon. member is not oil pollution, as it is understood the institute is not concerned with this, but rather with industrial waste.

The great lakes institute is a scientific body co-ordinated under the Canadian committee on oceanography. It is operated by the University of Toronto, and I believe the provincial government makes some contribution in respect of the fisheries aspect. The meteorological branch of my department provides certain staff and equipment, and our marine services branch also assists the institute in the operation of the C.G.S. Port Dauphine. There are other departments of the federal government which may have an interest in the work by the institute, such as northern affairs, water resources branch, national health and welfare, and mines and technical surveys. Perhaps my hon. friend would like to communicate with those departments in the matter.

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Personally, I have not yet received a report, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I would suggest to the hon. member to put this question on the order paper. By so doing, he may receive an answer sooner.

Inquiries of the Ministry

CANADIAN FLAGS

INQUIRY AS TO PROCLAMATION OF RED ENSIGN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): My question is directed to the Prime Minister.

Has the Prime Minister received in his mail today a circular letter saying that order in council No. 5888 of September 5, 1945, proclaimed that the flag commonly called a red ensign was the distinctive national flag?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think that the hon. member must admit that this is no time, on the orders of the day, to ask if such and such publications, pamphlets or letters, etc., have been received.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

LAKEHEAD—USE OF NON-VETERAN SOLICITORS IN LAND ACT TRANSACTIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hubert Badanai (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. In reply to my question No. 434 on the order paper, which asked the minister if he had received a communication from the Royal Canadian Legion, branch No. 6 of Fort William, protesting against the practice of the director of the Veterans Land Act in using non-veteran solicitors at the lakehead, on October 31 I received the reply that a communication had been received and the matter was being investigated. My question is, can the minister indicate to the house whether he has the result of the investigation?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Veterans Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker. This involves the Department of Justice as well as the Department of Veterans Affairs. I will supply the appropriate answer as soon as possible.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps it could be done directly and not on the orders of the day, I suggest to the hon. member.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

SUGGESTED CONFERENCE ON INDIAN AFFAIRS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day are called I should like to ask the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration whether he or the government has given any consideration to calling a federal-provincial conference to discuss Indian affairs, and the transfer of certain welfare services for Indians to the provinces.

Hon. Richard A. Bell (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, if the matter is decided in the affirmative the announcement will be made in the house.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder whether I could ask a supplementary question. Has the minister or the government received any representations from any of the provincial governments asking for such a conference?

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Not to my recollection, Mr. Speaker.

FREIGHT RATES REDUCTION ACT

AMENDMENTS EXTENDING APPLICATION AND INCREASING EXPENDITURES

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Freight Rates Reduction Act to extend for not more than twelve months the period during which the revised rates under the said act shall be applicable and to increase the authorized expenditure under the act by an additional twenty million dollars.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Chown in the chair.

Mr. Balcer: This resolution seeks the approval of the house to introduce a bill to amend the Freight Rates Reduction Act for a further period not exceeding 12 months from April 30, 1962, and to provide necessary money for that purpose.

The original Freight Rates Reduction Act was passed in 1959. Its purpose was to make provision for a reduction in certain freight rates that were taking the 17 per cent freight rate increase which had been authorized to November, 1958. The sum of $20,000,000 was provided to reimburse the companies for resulting reductions in their revenues during the 12 months' period that the original act covered. The act was extended in 1960 (chapter 42) for nine months, and an additional $15,000,000 was provided. It was extended again in 1961 (chapter 29) for 12 months, with an additional $20,000,000.

The first reduction was made on August 1, 1959, when the 17 per cent increase in the rates affected was reduced to 10 per cent. A second reduction was made in May, 1960, when the 10 per cent was reduced to 8 per cent.

The last extension of the statute expired on April 30, 1962. It was the intention of the government at the last session of parliament to extend the act for a further period not exceeding 12 months from April 30, 1962 and, pursuant thereto, a resolution dated March 29, 1962 was introduced in the house. However, due to the dissolution of parliament on April 18 it was not possible to take action on that resolution.

The government recognized that under existing statutes the railway companies could, after April 30, increase the reduced rates to the 17 per cent level that existed prior to the enactment of the Freight Rates Reduction Act, but the government was of the view that such an increase at that time, pending final consideration of the report of the royal commission on transportation, would be contrary to the public interest, and it therefore proposed to the railways that they continue the reduced rates. The government, on its part, undertook to ask parliament to enact legislation to compensate the companies to the extent that they would have been entitled had the Freight Rates Reduction Act been extended from April 30, 1962. The result was that the companies have continued the reduced rates since April 30.

The government considers that it would be in the public interest to continue the benefits of the Freight Rates Reduction Act for a further period pending such legislation as may flow from final consideration of the report of the royal commission on transportation. The proposed amendment is for that purpose.

Mr. Chevrier: The resolution introduced by the Minister of Transport has three points in mind. The first is to amend the Freight Rates Reduction Act. The next is to extend for a period of not more than 12 months the provisions of the act. The third is to increase the authorized expenditure under the act by an additional $20 million.

My submission to you, Mr. Chairman, is that this is not an extension of the act because, as the minister himself has said, the act has expired. This is, if anything, a revival of the act. The act expired on April 30, 1962 and was not brought before parliament again. I think it is important first of all that we should make the distinction, because the government has had the opportunity both before the expiry of the act and since this house has been in session—and the session began more than two months ago—to bring legislation of this character before us.

I am sorry to have to tell the minister that because of the inaction of the government and its failure to introduce this bill in March or April of 1962 to further extend the Freight Rates Reduction Act, which had previously been extended on several occasions, the right of the shippers to the 8 per cent reduction in freight rates, and the subsidy of $20 million per annum to pay the railways for making that reduction in their rates, both expired on April 30, 1962.

I rather feel that the minister is not personally responsible for this delay; I am not going to attribute the inaction to him. Nevertheless, as the minister has said, the railway companies from month to month since last April have issued supplements to their freight tariffs reducing the nominal increase in rates to 8 per cent. What is now sought is legislation to require, first, the reduction to continue in effect to April 30, 1963; next, to deem that reduction to have taken effect on April 30, 1962, and, third, to make payments to the railways back to May 1, 1962.

The question which comes to mind immediately is this. What authority did the railways have to receive these payments? My submission to the committee is that the railways had no authority, notwithstanding the agreement they had with the government to make these payments, and that if they are made, if they do continue, they are not only illegal but they are unconstitutional. Since the act expired on April 30, the payments made to the railways are contrary to the law. Payments made under an act which does not exist cannot be anything but illegal in the circumstances.

I should like to pause here for a moment and examine the facts surrounding this resolution. On November 17, 1958, an application made to the board of transport commissioners by the railways to increase their freight rates was granted to the extent of 17 per cent in class and commodity rates, and pursuant to the Railway Act the provincial governments and others made an appeal to the governor in council under section 53 of that act. That appeal was dismissed. On that occasion it was the acting prime minister who made the statement disallowing the appeal, and I should like to read a portion of that statement which is dated November 26, 1958. The acting prime minister, the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra, said:

> We consider that in future the railways and their employees must come to a definite agreement before a wage increase should be accepted by the board of transport commissioners as the basis for an increase in freight rates.

Then a little further on the minister said:

> The suggestion was made that these wage increases should be paid from the federal treasury.

I ask the committee to listen carefully to these words:

> We do not intend to embark upon a policy of subsidizing wage increases. There would be no end of demands on all governments if such a policy were adopted.

Well, that is exactly what is being done in this resolution which is now before the house. Notwithstanding the statement of the acting prime minister the government is entering upon a policy of subsidizing wage increases both indirectly and directly, as I intend to show with reference to an item we passed in the estimates a few days ago. Then the minister continued, according to this release:

> It is, however, recognized by the government that there are serious inequities in the present freight rates structure which have both contributed to, and been aggravated by, the system of horizontal rate increases. The government has already indicated its intention to move toward a solution of these problems.

Well, here we are, four years after this statement was made and so far the government has done absolutely nothing to move in the direction of removing the inequities caused in the freight rates structure. Although the report of the royal commission on transportation has been in the hands of the government, the first volume for a year and nine months and the second volume for over a year, no action has yet been taken by the government to remove these inequities about which we heard so much and for which the royal commission was established at the time.

Then the minister completed his statement with this sentence:

> The intention of the government is to provide both an immediate alleviation of discrimination where it exists, and a long term solution to the broader problem.

Thus far no alleviation whatsoever in that respect is in sight.

Then I compare that statement with the statement made on this whole question of freight rates by the Leader of the Opposition on November 27, 1958. I simply put on the record three points which he made at the time. He said:

> Three points should be emphasized at once. First, the wage increases for railway employees recommended by the conciliation board are reasonable. Second, we agree with the provinces' views that the board of transport commissioners ought not to be put in a position of ruling on wage problems which are not within the scope of its responsibility. Third, there are obvious objections to a permanent policy of federal subsidies specifically designed to finance wage increases.

Later on the Leader of the Opposition put on the record his view with reference to the matter.

I should now like, not to put it on the record because I have not the time, but to recall to the house the statements made by the Prime Minister during the campaigns of 1957 and 1958, wherein it was clearly stated by the Prime Minister that the government would move fast in order to do away with the injustices caused by freight rate discrimination. Just let me give the committee some idea of what the Prime Minister had in mind. At Saskatoon on February 13, 1958 the Prime Minister posed this question:

> "Did we act?" The government had "held up" a 3.8 per cent railway freight rate increase allowed by the board of transport commissioners earlier this year. "We said it could not at this time be justifiably brought into existence."

Then at Windsor the next day, February 14, 1958, the Prime Minister said:

> We said before we were in power that freight rates were unjustifiably high when raised horizontally. Did we act? When the board allowed an increase we held it up because it could not be justifiably brought into existence on the basis that the increase was provided.

Then again at Kelowna, B.C., on March 10, 1958, the Prime Minister said:

> The government has "more than asked" the board of transport commissioners to bring forward "at the earliest possible date" recommendations on equalization of freight rates to alleviate discrimination against British Columbia and the maritime provinces.

Mr. Balcer: May I ask the hon. member from what publication he is quoting?

Mr. Chevrier: I am quoting a report of the Canadian Press of a speech made by the Prime Minister at Kelowna, B.C., on March 10, 1958. That ought to satisfy the hon. member. Perhaps he prefers the colour of this one to the statements in 1958, but this is a Canadian Press report. The only reason I put it on Hansard is that the Prime Minister said in 1958 that something would be done immediately about this matter, and here four years later we are still at the same point as we were then.

Mr. Pickersgill: It is nearly five years.

Mr. Chevrier: My hon. friend corrects me very amicably by saying that it is nearly five years, and he is right in that respect. But I was going on to say that the Prime Minister was complaining that the board of transport commissioners should bring in recommendations on equalization, and this very thing which the Prime Minister was asking the board of transport commissioners to do will not be done if the recommendations of the royal commission on transportation are brought into effect; because the freight rate structure which is recommended in the report will do away with the equalization that the board of transport commissioners has entered upon over a number of years.

Now I should like to put on the record one or two statements made by the Prime Minister during the course of debate in this house on an earlier occasion. On Wednesday, November 30, 1960, when there was under discussion in the house a matter affecting a wage dispute between the railway and its employees, the Prime Minister made this statement, as reported in Hansard at page 359:

> The reason we say we are waiting for the report of the royal commission is this. It will make its report as to the means whereby these discriminatory rates may be avoided. Legislation will then be introduced in order to equalize opportunity across Canada. The freeze will then be taken off and the railway companies may then make an application to the board of transport commissioners to raise the freight rates and to take into consideration the agreements now in existence between the employers and the unions back to January 1, 1960.

At that time the Prime Minister had in mind that the report could be brought in immediately and immediate action taken thereon, but such has not been the case. Later on I intervened in the debate to ask the Prime Minister this question:

> Would the Prime Minister permit another question. Does the hon. gentleman think the provinces will sit by and not object to applications for increases by the railway association?

The Prime Minister replied:

> Inferentially, as a result of a question asked the other day by the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier), I concluded that that was the view of hon. gentlemen opposite then——namely, that subsidies should be paid in lieu of these wages. Then a little further on, on page 359, the Prime Minister said:

> There is a postponement because the action of the government to preserve the equality of all parts of Canada until equalization has been provided for as a result of the recommendations of the royal commission.

I repeat, in the light of that statement, that because of the recommendations of the royal commission it will not be possible to equalize the freight rates across this country, in the light of the work that had already been started by the board of transport commissioners at the time. Then on page 358 of Hansard the Prime Minister said:

> We have taken the stand that we shall not subsidize in this connection because to do so would simply mean that any time there is a dispute across this country with a national company involved which affected the public interest so greatly that a stoppage would paralyse Canada it would be known in advance that we would give a subsidy in order to prevent the Canadian economy being paralysed. We do not intend to follow that course.

I say that is exactly what is being done here. The Minister of Labour, on November 30, 1960, as reported on page 347 of Hansard, said:

> Some of those who have suggested implementation of the majority report have also suggested subsidies to the railways. The Prime Minister has clearly expressed the basic weakness of such action. Once such a course was embarked upon this might again provide an undesirable precedent. The dangers inherent in such a solution must surely be obvious. Such a course might well be an easy way out, but in time it would be the hard way of settling such disputes.
> In the case of the Canadian National Railways the taxpayers of this country are already being called upon to make up huge deficits. To require the Canadian taxpayer to subsidize the operating costs of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company would be setting a most dangerous and costly precedent.

This government, as the committee knows, compelled the men on the railways to go back to work without any settlement of this dispute, and notwithstanding the statement made by the Minister of Labour we find ourselves in a contradictory position so far as he and the Prime Minister, on the one hand, and this legislation on the other, are concerned.

The Minister of Transport himself is reported at page 5630 of Hansard on May 30, 1961, as follows:

> When the government brings forward legislation based on the MacPherson report it will then consider whether or not it will carry on with this program. The provision is for one year which actually ends on April 30, 1962.

This is the fourth extension to the present act, and it was clearly stated all along that there would be no subsidization for wages in this case. As I said earlier, in the passage which I have put on the record the Minister of Transport indicated what his views were. The first volume of the report has been in the hands of the government since March 1, 1961, and the second volume since December, 1961. The third volume has been released only fairly recently, but it contains a study of matters that are extraneous to those under discussion. I therefore repeat that notwithstanding the fact that this report has been in the hands of the government all this time, no legislation whatever has been brought before parliament to end the burden to the taxpayer. The taxpayer must continue paying this $20 million per year until such time as the government sees fit to implement the MacPherson report by legislation. This question is particularly pertinent as the royal commission on transportation recommends the repeal of this act. Why this act is being continued is difficult for one on this side of the chamber to understand.

The other day the Prime Minister rose in his place to speak with reference to the Glassco commission report, and he did not hesitate to state that certain parts of that report would be put into effect at once. Although he himself, in the debate in 1958, stated that immediately the report of the MacPherson royal commission on transportation was brought down this government would act upon it, that is almost five years ago and the government has not moved. The only answer he could give the other day when the question was put to him was well, the royal commission report has to be implemented by way of legislation and that procedure takes some time. Of course it takes a longer time to implement a report by way of legislation than otherwise. However, my point is that the government has had this recommendation in its hands for almost two years, in one case, and that it has taken no action whatsoever.

The minister shook his head a while ago when I indicated that this was subsidization of wages. I put this question to him. Is this payment of $20 million not a subsidization of wages? After all, these subsidies mean that the taxpayer is paying the shot. He is being taxed for the shipper. The C.N.R. president stated that there was an agreement among the government and himself and the president of the other railway to this effect. However, in my opinion the government has no right to commit parliament to this amount. The government has not the slightest right, either legally or constitutionally, to commit parliament to an amount like this or a similar amount. What is the sense of perpetuating this legislation when the royal commission recommends the repeal of this whole act?

I come now to the question of direct subsidization when I refer to vote 590 of the further supplementary estimates, which were passed last year, and schedule C of interim supply which was passed this year, both of which were for the same amount and in the same language. I quote this language. The title is "Board of transport commissioners". The item is 213a of interim supply and 590 of the further supplementary estimates, and the language is as follows:

> Interim payments, related to the recommendations of the royal commission on railway problems, to companies as defined in the Freight Rates Reduction Act of an aggregate amount in respect of the calendar year 1962 of $50 million, to be paid in instalments at such times and in accordance with such method of allocation as may be determined by the Board of Transport Commissioners for Canada, as compensation to such companies for the maintenance of their rates on freight traffic at the reduced levels provided for pursuant to the provisions of the said act.

There is no doubt that as to this $50 million which was voted last year, and as to this two twelfths of $50 million voted the other day and another two twelfths which will be voted next week or the week after, which will amount to nearly $100 million, a substantial proportion of which money is going in settlement of the conciliation board award which was made earlier. The minister shakes his head and says no.

Mr. Balcer: You have been saying that for three years.

Mr. Pickersgill: It is just as true now as it was the first time.

Mr. Chevrier: If I have been saying it for three years, let me say that I am going to continue saying it until the minister proves the contrary. The minister has not established, certainly to my satisfaction, that it is not for that purpose, as it is clearly set out here that it is for that purpose. I ask the minister these questions.

Mr. Balcer: May I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Chevrier: Yes. I hope this interruption is being taken into account in the time allotted to me, as I am entitled to only 30 minutes.

Mr. Balcer: Is it not a fact that Mr. Justice Munro has settled the labour dispute between the railways and the railway workers with an increase, which means a further expense to the railway; and there is absolutely nothing in the present act indicating any increase in the amount that we are asking. If any wage increases that the railways are giving to their employees were reflected in this Freight Rates Reduction Act, there would be an increase over the $20 million. However, there is no increase whatsoever.

Mr. Chevrier: Let me point two things out to the minister. In the first place, by giving the railways $20 million to keep the reduction at 8 per cent—

Mr. Pickersgill: You mean to keep the increase at 8 per cent.

Mr. Chevrier: Yes, to keep the increase at 8 per cent, thereby preventing the railways from making an application to the board of railway commissioners for higher rates with which to satisfy the conciliation board report, I submit with deference that is the answer to the question put to me by the minister.

Then the next point is this. There has been another settlement since this one of 1960 which has cost the railways $30 million. Where is the money coming from in that case? I think the minister owes it to this House of Commons to tell us that it is either coming from the $50 million, as I have suggested, or that it is contained in the deficit of the Canadian National Railways which this year amounts to some $67 million.

Mr. Balcer: It comes from the general revenues of the railways.

Mr. Chevrier: The president of the Canadian National Railways did not indicate that in the committee the other day when the question was put to him. Hence my contention is that the $50 million which is tied up with the Freight Rates Reduction Act raises a number of questions. The questions are the following. Is this $100 million, roughly speaking, when March 31, 1963 will have been passed, over and above the $20 million? Does this mean that the railways are going to obtain this $100 million plus the $20 million they get for a reduction in freight rates?

That is one question. Another question having to do with this $50 million is this. Is not some of it to reduce freight rates? Is not some of it to pay the cost of the conciliation board report which was made in 1961 but was also made retroactive to January 1, 1960? Is not a part of it to remove branch lines as to which the board of transport commissioners have been receiving applications from the railways already? Is not a part of it to carry on passenger services until such time as the railways can get approval of the board to reduce their passenger services?

I put this question to the minister. How are the railways going to be enabled to pay their employees the last settlement, which I am informed amounts to about $30 million? Where are they going to get the funds if they do not get them either from the $50 million which is in the further supplementaries or from this provision? Part of the C.N.R. deficit covers wages and part is to pay for the reduction in freight rates, that is the reduction in revenue due to reduced freight rates.

I think the minister has got to make his position clear on this matter once and for all. He has got to tell us whether or not there is a duplication between the $20 million provided under this legislation and the $50 million voted on a previous occasion in further supplementary estimates and the two twelfths of $50 million that was provided by way of interim supply. That is the first thing I think the minister should clear up in this debate.

The next thing is that he should tell us clearly what the position of the government is with reference to this legislation. Is it going to be repealed? Is the recommendation of the royal commission on transportation with regard to repeal of this legislation going to be implemented? When are we going to get these things? What is the government going to do with reference to the freight rate structure? For years members of this government attacked the previous government on account of the injustices, inequalities and discrimination caused by horizontal freight rate increases. They were going to do something about them. The Prime Minister said, "Did we act?" Of course he said "We acted at once". Five years ago he made the statement during the campaign, as well as four and a half years ago in the house, that as soon as the report was brought in legislation would follow immediately. No action has been taken by the minister or by the government or by parliament because of the fact that the government has not seen fit to act upon the recommendations of the royal commission.

There is a recommendation by the royal commission that the whole freight rate structure be scrapped. Is that the way in which the government is going to do away with discrimination? If it is, I think the house is entitled to know whether or not the whole freight rate structure is going to be scrapped and a new formula providing for a minimum rate plus a 150 per cent increase and a maximum rate is going to be brought into effect.

Those are some of the things which I believe the minister should clear up before this resolution is passed. On the principle of the resolution we take exactly the same position as we took on the earlier resolutions and bills, namely that we will support the legislation. But since this is the fourth time this legislation has been extended we on this side of the house were of the opinion that we could not support this measure without criticizing the government for its failure to do the things it promised to do four years ago, and which have not been put into effect thus far.

Mr. Leboe: Mr. Chairman, I only rise to say that it seems from the words of the hon. member for Laurier that the government has two speeds in connection with the MacPherson report, slow and stop. We are not going to take any time now because I understand that the bill is to be sent to the standing committee, and that will give us an opportunity to deal with it there. We just wish to say now that we are in favour of the principle of the legislation, but we would like to discuss the matter further when the bill goes to the standing committee.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, a business concern that goes bankrupt is not necessarily disgraced, because there are always factors that tend to explain why someone is not able to make a go of things in a business way. But bankruptcy is the only word I can use to describe the situation revealed by the bringing forward of this legislation. It sticks in my craw and in those of many of my colleagues that in this house we should lambaste a measure that is brought forward and then vote for it. This is one of the predicaments of opposition members. Yet both the temptation and almost a need to vote against a measure such as this are very strongly upon us at the present time.

When a minister brings any measure before the house there are a number of different techniques or ways that he can use. He can be completely honest and candid in revealing the details, history and purposes of the legislation. Within that mode he can use subterfuge or a pleasant manner or many other ways in order to get the agreement of the house to the passage of the particular piece of legislation. In a nutshell, Mr. Chairman, it is our feeling that this piece of legislation reflects the bankruptcy and disgraceful lack of policy of this government in connection with transportation as a whole and the railways in particular.

We feel that some of the points raised by the hon. member for Laurier are relevant, although I think perhaps he overdid the question; because in my view it is irrelevant whether the subsidies under this legislation go directly into wages. I think the answer there is that the wages come out of the total revenue position of the railways and that is that. There is no doubt in our minds that originally the Freight Rates Reduction Act was designed to meet a specific problem. The scale of the bankruptcy has been revealed repeatedly in the fact that the government has not come to grips with a single problem relating to railway transportation. The very enormity of their failure can be seen in the lobbying to which I think every member of the house is being subjected at the present time by the trucking industry in relation to the recommendations of the MacPherson report and in relation to legislation such as this.

The bankruptcy of government policy is revealed in the recently published volume three of the studies of the royal commission on transportation. When the government appointed the commission it was made very clear that no matter what part of railway problems the commission might delve into there was one area in which they should make no recommendations because the government was setting that aside, and that was the question of the statutory grain rates. The other area that the commission decided at its very first hearing that it was not going to touch and with regard to which it would make no recommendations had to do with the labour wage structure. Therefore right at the start the commission began with impediments to arriving at a really clear answer to the transportation needs of this country.

Nothing is more laughable, having regard to the kind of jackpot the government has got us into, than to look at some of the titles of the articles in the third volume of the report of the royal commission on transportation. I think every member is entitled to that volume. I should like to point out, for example, that there is an article by one of the chief advisers to the commission, Mr. D. H. Hay, on the problem of grain costing. There is another long section by E. P. Reid on statutory grain rates. We have a long article, from which I hope to read some quotations, by Mr. A. K. Eaton, a well known figure in Canada on tax questions, and not too long ago he was an adviser of the government. It is entitled "Comments on Proposals by Canadian Pacific and Canadian National Railways regarding statutory and related rates on grain and grain products in western Canada."

I know the experts on this commission sat down to settle some of the problems in relation to railways, but they could not get away from the statutory grain rates because so much of the evidence pouring forth from the railways and provincial groups from the west related to statutory grain rates. Where does this government stand in that respect? We have the statement by the Prime Minister at the time of the setting up of the MacPherson commission that these rates were to be outside their recommendations, but the consequences of those recommendations must be viewed in relation to the statutory grain rates.

The paradox is that even with the MacPherson royal commission report, for which we have waited so damnedly long, we have no true policy from that commission and we have no indication at all that the present government is going to implement an over-all policy. We have volume 1 of the report which contains the main recommendation, and the government has been a darned long time considering it. How else can one describe such a situation except in terms of bankruptcy of policy and ideas? I would almost go so far as to say bankruptcy in terms of ability to meet the problem and the incapacity to come forward with any kind of clear statement on transportation policy.

This is much more than just a question of freight rates in this specific case. It relates to inter-relationship of the Canadian Pacific and Canadian National Railways in air competition and competition with long haul trucks. The whole matter is tied in with passenger problems and this ties in with air competition between T.C.A. and C.P.A. lines.

It takes us right into the whole question of the responsibilities that railways should be asked to assume in relation to automation and its impact upon declining railway communities.

It takes us into the most difficult problem of wage policy, and there is not any more despicable situation than the kind of pressure that is developing, and has developed for the last decade, with regard to railway wage policy, where you have the management of the railways damning the unions and the unions damning the management, and all sides coming to Ottawa to pressure the government, with the result that we get these ad hoc, temporary measures to meet the situation. This is an example of it right here and no one gains from that kind of situation.

We just have the continuation of confusion, and I can illustrate that confusion very well in relation to my own community. We happen to be on the bridge between western and eastern Canada, and freight rates have always been a consuming interest to the business, industrial and union people in that area; because transportation was the basic reason for our existence, to start with, and is still a substantial part of our economy.

Quite frankly, the unions have committees and so has the chamber of commerce and the development association, all trying to understand the transportation policy and the freight rates policy of the government. We do not know whether we are coming or going. All I can say to the minister, much as I admire him personally, is that he has given us no lead to take us through this maze or labyrinth of confusion in the transport situation.

I remarked earlier, Mr. Chairman, that it sticks in the craw to challenge the government and then to vote for something it puts forward; but I can say we will be spending a considerable time when this bill reaches committee stage in order to find out more about the government's policy, not on this specific bill but in relation to the larger questions, some of which were raised by the hon. member for Laurier.

The last time this bill was before a committee and was considered in detail, Mr. Knowles was alive. He was the freight rates expert of the board of transport commissioners and we spent a long period questioning him. We had witnesses from the Canadian trucking association and many other interests. I would hope the board of transport commissioners would come up with someone as ready and willing to give evidence as Mr. Knowles was, and that we can question him in such detail.

I want to know if the minister plans to bring Mr. Scott of his own department before us, as I understand he is a railway transportation expert. I would like to have him examined because he may know something about the government's railway policy. I would hope we would have a chance to examine Mr. Scott in regard to the bill, and the relationship of the bill to the larger question of whether it is a duplication of the subsidy of $50 million that the government has awarded to the railways as a result of the recommendations of the MacPherson commission.

I would also like to see the question put to the newspaper editorial writers who are convinced that this parliament and previous parliaments have been incapable of acting. I would like those people to examine the question how they can really expect action from a government that has frittered and fooled with this particular topic since November 1958 right up to the present time, with a royal commission that sat for years and produced big fat volumes, with government promises of what it was going to do, and yet here at this late stage we are being asked to do something about a situation six or seven months after it occurred.

You can always have the excuse that the election intervened; but that is no real reason. The election was called in April and the bill seeks to bring up to date something that was going to die in April. It is a disgraceful example of putting in time, and of not coming forward with any constructive policy in the total transportation picture.

The hon. member for Laurier has raised the question as to whether the payments, which have apparently gone forward, are illegal or not. I do not know whether they are illegal or not, but it is quite apparent from the analysis that the minister gave us, back on May 30, 1961, that payments really have gone forward. I do not know whether they have gone on spec or not, but I would like to put this on the record in relation to them. This is what the minister said, as recorded at page 5628 of Hansard for that date:

> —the shippers will not lose anything because both railway presidents wrote a letter a few days before April 30 stating that they did not intend to file tariffs to bring this increase to 17 per cent back into force. Thus, the shippers carried on business and continued shipping at rates which were the same as the rates which had been reduced to 8 per cent by the previous bill amending the Freight Rates Reduction Act. The reason why the railways will be in a position to recover the amount which might be lost to them on account of the delay in the passage of the bill is because after the end of each month there is a time lag of two or three months before the companies are able to process and submit their bills for that month's traffic. Consequently, bills for March and April, for instance, have not yet been received.

The same applies to the month of May. Once the board receives the bills and issues an order, then they can be paid.

I would assume that the board has long ago received the bills for the months of May, June, July, August and September. And the question arises as to whether the railways have had payment or not, and I would assume they probably have had for at least two months of that period. The question as to whether they were illegal or not, is one for a Philadelphia lawyer to determine. I do not think it is a critical question but we shall have to look for some assurance in connection with it.

The question that is in our minds, because we are critical of the government for continuing this palliative instead of coming forward with a clear national transportation policy, can be put in its proper position by some points made by Mr. Eaton in his article for the royal commission on transportation, dealing with tax problems. He is talking about the western grain rates, and from there he leads into what I think is a criticism which can certainly be applied to the government.

He says:

The balance of argument is so strong today in favour of shifting the burden of this national policy commitment to western grain growers over onto taxpayers generally that probably only headings for the case need be presented here.

(a) The competitive position of the railways vis-à-vis other forms of transport becomes increasingly untenable. The basis upon which they can recoup losses forced on them by statutory limitations inevitably becomes narrower and the distortion of "normal" rates on this account becomes increasingly severe and intolerable.

(b) It is palpably unwise economically for Canada, with such a high stake in export markets, to add in any way to the transport costs of export industries generally by shifting to them a part of the cost of assisting the grain export trade. Likewise this is quite unfair.

(c) Even in the absence of a competitive problem, leaving aside also the important aspects of export trade generally and even assuming a strongly inelastic demand for railway services, it still would not make good sense in a country such as Canada, where geography so hampers national economic development, to distort normal forces determining the location of industry by giving such a high degree of relief to one section of the economy and charging it as an expense against all others. This exaggerates existing national problems. For example it must have the effect of blurring somewhat the vision of expanding northern development.

(d) Finally, as a matter of simple logic, if the public generally are to be called upon to support what is essentially a political policy of continued assistance to western grain growers—and it appears that they are—then the public generally, as taxpayers, should bear the cost of this policy. The mere fact that the policy of assistance in this direction happens to take the form of transporting grain products below cost should not mean that transport costs of others in the economic community should be correspondingly inflated in order to recoup losses.

The above four points, it is believed, build up to a pretty strong case for a rather drastic departure from the status quo. The proposed shift in burden is a quite striking corrective of a situation that through the years has had to get worse before it could get any better. It is understandable that in the relatively simple and uncomplicated days of decades ago the freezing of rates for the grain trade seemed a very sensible and satisfactory way of dealing with the problem. However many things have happened in Canada in the meantime, and a rather lusty flock of chickens has come home to roost. Not least of all the things that have happened is a very fundamental change in the basic philosophy of government. It has changed markedly from what it was even two short decades ago. Governments today take upon themselves full responsibility for the state of the economy. They presume to be responsible for all phases of the economic health of every industry. They take credit to themselves for full employment, prosperity and expanding capital investment when occasion permits them to do so and the opposition at the same time forever attempts to pin on them full blame for all the economic ills and deficiencies, including acts of God that we fall heir to.

That last sentence, of course, reflects the predicament that we have here. The government has accepted the responsibility and the duty of a national transportation policy and a national railway policy and we, as the opposition, are here trying to pin upon them their failure in this regard. Repeatedly this government has taken responsibility for working out such a transportation policy. We say that it has not got anywhere in doing so, and to bring this measure in at this time, a palliative six months late, is an insult to this House of Commons and to the country as a whole.

For that reason, Mr. Chairman, we are certainly reserving any commendation we are going to give this bill until we find out more in committee as to what the transportation policy of this government is going to be. I can only repeat the word I have used so often in these particular remarks; we have a bankruptcy of policy and ideas, and nowhere is it better revealed than in the measure before us. Later on in this discussion some of my colleagues will be making remarks particularly in relation to specific regional situations. We feel that this act, as one we have supported before, may merit our support again. After all, it provides something for the shippers who ship upon the railway. But the time at which it is introduced, the manner in which it is introduced, its relationship to the tremendous gaps in a general policy that this government should have are, we consider, a very deep disgrace.

(Translation):

Mr. Legare: Mr. Chairman, I have a few remarks to make about this resolution, because the matter of transport rates is, in my opinion, closely linked with the success of any undertaking.

Perhaps it might be a good thing to consider having the lower St. Lawrence area benefit from the preferential tariffs enjoyed by the maritime provinces.

One way of achieving that objective perhaps would be to decentralize the C.N.R. administration in establishing at Mont Joli a sub-office which might serve the whole eastern Quebec area, which is now managed by the Moncton or Campbellton office, that is to say all that part of the railway extending from Levis to the eastern tip of the Gaspe peninsula, as well as a railway line linking Rivière du Loup and Edmundston, and all that part of the C.N.R. which crosses the south of the province of Quebec.

The C.N.R. would thus be at the door of two new areas which might perhaps bring them an interesting business in the near future, if ever the C.N.R. decided to build a line from Matane to Ste. Anne des Monts. All that business ends up at Mont Joli. Furthermore, since there is a water transport service between Pointe au Pere and Baie Comeau, the whole north shore area—an immensely rich area—would be open to the C.N.R. railway line.

You would have there a whole category of patrons who might add their numbers to the usual C.N.R. patrons.

I consider Mont Joli as a railway centre which, for quite a long time—I cannot remember for how many years—has been administered by the neighbouring province. With a sub-office in the lower St. Lawrence area, and more precisely at Mont Joli, perhaps the patrons in a position to use that service might do business with employees speaking the language of the majority of them.

Regrettable instances often occur. I do not wish to mention them all but, not long ago, four company officers who were sent to Mont Joli in order to give instructions to a group of personnel and who did not speak French, had to communicate through an interpreter with the employees in that district of the province of Quebec, extending from Gaspe to Levis.

There are other similar instances that I could quote by the dozen. But I will simply insist, once again, that the Canadian National Railways decentralize their administration eventually and set up a sub-office in the lower St. Lawrence district, which would serve over 400 miles of railroad.

(Text):

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, my remarks with respect to this matter will be in somewhat the same vein as those expressed by the hon. member for Port Arthur. This particular problem involving the Freight Rates Reduction Act and what it has sought to accomplish is only one of many problems concerning railways which have been with us for a long time. It has been before us now for some three and a half or four years. In seeking to express his feelings about the government with respect to this matter, my hon. friend from Port Arthur was somewhat at a loss for words. Perhaps the phrase he was looking for was "lack of visceral content on the part of the government." They have been dilly-dallying with this matter year after year, hoping, like an ostrich, that the problem will go away if they wait long enough. We have already authorized $50 million, I understand, to be paid to the railway companies under the Freight Rates Reduction Act and the resolution before us asks that this amount be increased to $75 million which is, I think, a fair amount of the taxpayer's money to be tossed around.

This act was introduced originally, as I understand it, to subsidize a wage increase which took place in 1958 or 1959, and it was meant to reduce the increase in freight rates which was then authorized from 17 per cent to, it was hoped, 10 per cent, though subsequently it was lowered to 8 per cent. We were offered at that time the possibility of a long term study of the whole question of transportation. In 1960 or 1961 the act was further amended and extended. The reasons given then were that a royal commission was considering this question and the government wanted time for the commission to complete its studies. Presumably, this further request for an extension comes because the government wants time to consider the reports of the royal commission, perhaps attaching its desire for further delay to the fact that volume 3 of the report of the MacPherson royal commission was not made public until the summer of this year—I think it was July or August. In fact, however, the substance of the recommendations of that royal commission is contained in volumes 1 and 2. Volume 3 is merely a compilation of the studies upon which the recommendations in volume 2 were based. I do not have volume 3 before me, but the frontispiece says that the commission takes no responsibility for the material contained within it and hinges its entire case on volumes 1 and 2.

As has been pointed out, the government has had volume 1 of the recommendations in its hands for some 21 months, since March, 1961, and it has had volume 2 in its possession for almost a year. In fact, it is a year this month since volume 2 of the commission's report was made public, according to the date on the cover. Surely, if the government is capable of rushing to embrace the report of the Glassco royal commission within seconds of its being printed, as it did the other day, then a year or a year and a half is ample time for it to decide what it intends to do with regard to the first two volumes containing the recommendations of the royal commission on transportation. It is time we began to express some doubts—and I express them—as to whether we can continue blindly to support this concept of pouring millions of dollars into the coffers of railway companies because the government cannot make up its mind.

It is true the payment of these sums has a beneficial effect on the employees of the C.N.R., on shippers, and so on; but to ask parliament blindly to authorize this procrastination on the part of the government is asking too much and I doubt whether I want to support a policy of this sort. I think other members of this committee should have the same attitude. Possibly, by expressing such doubt we can push the government into reaching some definite conclusions instead of continuing its present weak-kneed and spineless attitude toward this question—pushing it aside into some dusty drawer, hoping people will forget about it while we continue to pour this money down the drain.

Half of this money goes to the Canadian National Railways—and I am not sure of the exact figure but I think it is about half. I doubt very much whether the minister should come before this parliament and ask us to authorize a payment of a subsidy of this sort to a crown corporation when the actions and attitudes of that railway are such, in many instances, as to promote the interests of the C.P.R. This has happened in Alberta where the Canadian National Railways have made decisions which are beneficial to the C.P.R. The C.N.R. has pulled out of certain fields of activity solely to promote the interests of a private corporation, and we are being asked to endorse that sort of sellout to a private company by a corporation headed by Donald Gordon, a man who is supposed to be working in the public interest. I refer to a circular dated March 7, 1961, which is a reissue of a circular dated December 1, 1960. The file number is DT-914. This is a circular of the Northern Alberta Railways Company and it says:

All Agents:

We have been advised by Canadian National and Canadian Pacific Railways—

As follows—I am about to quote one instance.

Cars of Canadian Pacific ownership must be loaded to competitive stations such as Vancouver, Lakehead, Calgary, etc. Specify C.P. cars on your daily yard report.

This is the decision of the Canadian National Railways, that when they are shipping over lines of the N.A.R., all freight being shipped to stations served competitively by C.N. and C.P. will be shipped in favour of Canadian Pacific, so that Canadian Pacific will get the cream of the shipping to competitive points. What sort of attitude is that for a crown corporation to take? When it comes to exclusive C.N.R. stations they have not got much choice. They spell that one out, however, in this way:

Cars of Canadian National ownership will be supplied for exclusive C.N.R. stations such as Prince Rupert and Transcona.

Then the circular deals with cars to be used for lumber, logs and plywood. Again, favouritism is shown to the Canadian Pacific by the C.N.R., by a crown-owned corporation headed by a belligerent and arrogant banker who should go back to banking. It states:

Canadian Pacific cars will be supplied for lumber loading unless otherwise specifically requested by the shipper.

Again, we see favouritism being shown to Canadian Pacific in shipments of lumber on long hauls which are more lucrative than short hauls, as far as plywood and similar materials are concerned. On the short hauls, Canadian National will haul this freight. On long hauls carrying pulpwood to the United States, Canadian Pacific cars are to be used, 52-foot gondolas to be supplied. This document is signed by W. G. Dunlevy, chief despatcher, and copies are sent to a number of people.

These are not isolated instances. We are being asked to pay public funds into the hands of the C.N.R. at a time when it is selling us out, and I think that is a little too much to ask of this particular party.

While we are on the subject of the C.N.R. and the amount of money it is to receive under this bill, perhaps we could concern ourselves about the management of that railway and, specifically, about its president. Words have been expressed on previous occasions about improvement, expressed not entirely from within this chamber; but certainly it is reasonable that if this discontent exists there is some reason for it, and I have just cited one example.

This is not the time or the place to go into the attitude of the C.N.R. or Mr. Gordon's attitude with respect to passenger traffic and the like, although we could validly argue that point. However, I understand a petition is being circulated by French-speaking members of this house asking for the appointment of more people of French background and culture to the management of the C.N.R. I am sure the Minister of Transport has not signed that particular petition, but it might give some push to it if he has, or has been asked to. But quite frankly, I think the promotion of a petition of this sort is a step in the wrong direction. I do not think it serves any great purpose at this time, not that I concern myself at this stage with whether or not the petition is justified. This sort of activity is taking place when we should be concentrating our efforts at this time on a better and more efficient management of the C.N.R., especially from the presidential point of view. We should concentrate upon that and not get involved in these other issues, important as they might well be. Burning Donald Gordon in effigy, as happened last week in Montreal and, as I understand it, also having burned the red ensign, is not in good taste or a decent sort of thing to do, and it tends to detract from the worthwhileness of the approach of those in this house and elsewhere who would like to see a change in management on the Canadian National Railways.

The hon. member for Port Arthur went extensively into the need for enunciation on the part of the government of some clear, sensible, fair, transportation policy, and I think this is where we should be directing our attentions. While the bill which will be founded on this resolution will be going to a committee, I think that committee should delay any action or report until we get a clear indication from the government as to what it intends to do about the report of the royal commission on transportation; what its policy is with respect to all the matters raised therein; what it intends to do about the question—a pretty large and broad one which has been posed on a number of occasions—of a merger of the C.N.R. and C.P.R. into one large trans-continental railway system in Canada; what it intends to do about what is undoubtedly going to occur as a result of this government action, namely both T.C.A. and C.P.A. running to the government asking for subsidies to help each of them; and what it will do about the question of coastal shipping and the like. They are such important questions that I think when the committee gets the bill founded on the resolution it should delay action and delay any report on it, and put it aside until we get the minister and other cabinet ministers before the committee to tell the committee what the government intends to do with respect to the whole transportation question in Canada.

Mr. Pickersgill: May I ask the hon. gentleman a question?

Mr. Howard: Certainly.

Mr. Pickersgill: Does the hon. gentleman think that it would be any easier to get a statement like that out of this government than it would be to put humpty-dumpty together again?

Mr. Howard: I am not involved in this field of glueing eggs together, but I am sure that we would have as much success in getting an enunciation of policy out of this government as we would have had in getting one out of the government which preceded it.

Mr. Pickersgill: Has the hon. gentleman a policy of his own?

The Deputy Chairman: Order.

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman, I have to thank you for inadvertently combining the ridings of Essex West and Skeena, because actually that is the theme of my brief remarks this afternoon. That is to say, I suggest that the bill based on this resolution should contain measures to bring the area of south western Ontario and British Columbia closer together economically. In other words, the bill should contain measures to remove existing inequities and unfair discrimination in freight rates which presently mitigate against the proper economic development of south western Ontario in general, and Windsor, Ontario, in particular.

May I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that this situation exists today in this way. Shipments, for example, from Windsor to Halifax are computed on a mileage basis. But when we come to the movement of goods to the west from Windsor,—Windsor's geographical location and its favourable mileage in moving to the west as compared to other parts of eastern Canada, we find, are unfortunately completely ignored. On a short line basis through the United States, Windsor is only 988 miles from Winnipeg, and yet shipments of freight moving from Windsor to Winnipeg are charged on a mileage rate basis from Toronto of 1,231 miles. In other words, in spite of the closer geographical location, Windsor shippers pay the same rates as shippers to the west from Toronto and Montreal. The effect of this is to discourage industry from locating and remaining in the Windsor area.

I suggest that measures to remove these inequities in freight rate charges should be contained in the bill which will be based on this resolution. Our freight rate policy should certainly be part of a policy of regional economic development to prevent certain areas, such as the Windsor area, from continuing to lag behind the rest of Canada, and from continuing to be areas of chronic unemployment. It might be suggested that this is something which the board of transport commissioners can deal with, as the Minister of Labour attempted to suggest to a delegation of mayors and reeves who put this point before him several days ago. Unfortunately, it has been discovered, as my colleague the hon. member for Essex East has pointed out, that the board of transport commissioners does not have the jurisdiction at the present time to make the adjustments to which I have referred. These adjustments can come only through laws passed in this parliament of Canada. Therefore, I urge most strongly that the bill which will come out of this resolution should contain specific measures to remove the inequity to which I have referred, so that southwestern Ontario and Windsor can once again begin to contribute in a constructive and positive way to the development of Canada.

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Chairman, I just want to say that on listening to the hon. member for Port Arthur I certainly agreed with what he said. He said that at the present time the railways in Canada are in a very difficult position, that they are in a sort of straitjacket and that we have to do something for them. He said that we have to come out with a national transportation policy and a national railway policy. I agree with him on this point. We have shown also that we are very conscious of this problem.

When we took office the railways were experiencing some very difficult times. Since then we have tried to help the railways. We have tried to come out with something that would not only be a stopgap; we want to come out with something which will settle railway questions for many years to come. That is why we have appointed the MacPherson commission. Of course, I am just as disappointed as are other hon. members that it took that length of time to make this exhaustive study, but I am quite sure that the results of this extensive study will prove that all this work and time it took was well worth it, and the matter will be settled for a long time.

As hon. members know, at the present time the government is very actively engaged in preparing this legislation as a result of the recommendations of this MacPherson commission. We have it so stated in the MacPherson report. As Minister of Transport I have the opportunity to repeat this pledge of the government to bring in legislation on this matter of the MacPherson report at this session. My hon. friend from Laurier and even the hon. member for Port Arthur, every time we bring in any legislation about transportation, always accuse us of dealing in a piecemeal fashion with transportation. Especially with regard to railway matters, we wish to bring forward all-embracing legislation that will settle this question for a long time. When the MacPherson reports came out, both of them were praised by the experts, by the railways themselves and by the railroaders in other countries. I am quite sure that we shall have something that will stand for a long time. However, I can assure the committee that this is no easy matter. It is one on which a great deal of expert advice is needed in order to prepare this legislation. However, I can assure the committee that it will be ready for this session in accordance with our pledge.

The present bill, of course, is simply an interim bill. It is a bill that was first moved as something in the nature of a stopgap measure or a roll back measure, as we called it at the time, in order to make sure that one part of the country or one group of shippers would not be hurt to the advantage of other shippers. At that time we had the system which was permitted to grow under the old regime, our predecessor, under which every once in a while there were new increases in freight rates, with the resulting anomaly that the real core of the problem was never touched. The freight rates were always growing and growing. When this government took office it decided to really go after the problem. That is why we called on the best brains in the country on this matter to get together and to come out with an all embracing policy.

The MacPherson commission report is an extremely interesting document. At the present time I am not in a position to say what our legislation will be. However, I can assure my hon. friends that it will be brought forward at this session of parliament. My hon. friend from Laurier asked a few questions which he has asked in other years on similar bills. As we all know, this $20 million was a roll back subsidy to make sure that the increase of 17 per cent allowed by the board of transport commissioners would not come into force. We compensated the railways with $20 million a year. This is the same thing as we have had in other years. He still comes forward with the same argument, that this is a wage subsidy. I still say in the name of the government that it is not a wage subsidy. Whatever wage increases have been given by the railways, since the first Freight Rates Reduction Act, were paid out of the general revenues of the railway. On the other hand, this subsidy was absorbed by the railways themselves. I think we can argue for years on the matter and never settle it. However, I can assure them that this was a subsidy that was well planned. It was to look after this increase of 17 per cent in freight rates and roll it back to 8 per cent so that it would not break the back of the shippers while the government were awaiting the report of the MacPherson commission.

We are going to have an all-embracing railways transportation policy. What is suggested by the commissioners is a very revolutionary solution and it creates tremendous changes in the industry itself. We must remember that in Canada we have 89,000 different freight rates. That figure gives you an idea of what the problem is. I am quite satisfied that this resolution and the following bill will help in the solution of this problem which we have inherited and which we definitely wish to settle.

Mr. Peters: We are very pleased to hear the minister say now that an over-all transportation policy is to be introduced at this session of parliament. I believe he is for the the first time being very optimistic in making the suggestion, particularly when he says that the bill is not ready for presentation because of several things that he assumes may or may not come to pass. The fact that he makes a suggestion and also that the throne speech this year made mention of some solution to the transport problem in general as it flows from the MacPherson report is certainly something worth while to look forward to.

Before we pass this legislation I believe we should have had some indication of what the solution is to be and I would think seriously, as an interim program, there should be a reassessment of this particular act. We were told in 1958 that this was an interim report. It was a report to help subsidize the wages where the railways were asking for an increase in their freight revenues to cover a wage increase. However, Mr. Chairman, I have not yet heard how much of an increase was necessary to put the conciliation report of that day into effect and how much the reduction in the staff of the railways in Canada has resulted in a decrease in the labour and the wage costs to the railway. I believe that this decrease has been very substantial.

I am always shocked when I talk to railroad people who have no interest whatsoever in the future of the railways because they are being completely disillusioned by the fact that they are working for an agency, whether it be the C.P.R. or the C.N.R., the continued existence of which is not certain. I have asked a large number of employees how long they have worked on the railroads, particularly those who told me they had just returned from a long period of unemployment. I find that many of them have seniority ratings of 8 years, 10 years, 11 years and 12 years. I suggest that people who have worked in an industry for that length of time and who are finding themselves subject to long and costly lay-offs will no doubt find that their morale, as far as their employer is concerned, is very limited and that their feeling towards that industry is much less sympathetic than it has been.

If the minister came before us and told us that there was some desire to integrate the services being provided by all the railways in Canada, that the elimination of some of these railways would be considered, that we should be able to give to the workers of Canada an assurance that those who were left in the railway industry would be assured of jobs for a considerable period of time so that some stability would be brought to those people then I would be agreeable to voting for this interim extension that is brought before us today. These are not small sums of money, Mr. Chairman. It seems to me that if we paid the workers who are going to be laid off anyway these large sums of money, we could have them on the government payroll whether they worked for the railways or not. This might prove to be a much more sensible way. It seems to me that any government that fails to realize the problem that has developed in this country because of the two lines duplicating services and as the hon. member for Skeena pointed out, in some cases not duplicating them but shifting them on to another railway, is only bringing us closer to the day when a decision of a very drastic nature is going to have to take place.

When I read the reports of the proceedings of the committee I am always surprised at the way in which the president of Canadian National Railways deals with the other aspects of railroading involving the truck companies the railway has bought, the contracts they let to private trucking concerns and the operations of the trucking agencies that they own, lock, stock and barrel. He always says that they have not been in this business long enough to find out how the rates for this type of service compare with their other methods of transportation and whether or not this trucking venture has been a success.

We have a responsibility to the Canadian people, Mr. Chairman. It is quite all right to say that we will provide this subsidy now on an interim basis and come to some solution later. But this has been going on for a long time now and I will tell the Canadian people that they are not going to gain anything in the transportation field by going back to the party that was in power in this country for many years. With a minority government it seems to me that there is a wonderful opportunity now for the government to sit down honestly with the other three parties in a committee, bring forward all the proposals that have been made and come to some conclusion.

As one who belongs to a party that over the years has felt that much good can come from the nationalization of some of our public services, I might find it wise to ask whether we should not try to sell the Canadian National to the Canadian Pacific. In fact, I wonder whether it might not be cheaper to give the C.N.R. away because with one railway in this country operating without subsidies we would at least be able to find out whether the railway transportation system of this nation was being operated in the interests of the people.

What we really want to provide is a reasonable transportation service that will meet the needs of the people and do so as effectively as possible. It is obvious, because of the needs of the railways, their repeated trips to Ottawa to make representations and the many subsidies we have to provide, that the railways today are not meeting the needs of the nation. I believe that many areas have been well served by our railway system. I believe we have to face the problem in western Canada brought about by the abandonment of lines in a haphazard way which has produced nothing but sorrow for the people who have been dependent on those lines. It is true that we should expect to be able to go to the board of transport commissioners, those holier than thou people who are supposed to represent the Canadian public, and get some assurance that they are going to act on behalf of the Canadian people and will come to reasonable and sensible decisions; but in that regard I come back to the example I used the other day. The management of Canadian National Railways has changed the schedules on the transcontinental line in such a way that they will have no travelling public on that line, and I suppose they have done so in order to bring an application before the board of transport commissioners in the near future for the abandonment of the service. I can tell hon. members and the board of transport commissioners that in two weeks the railway has already succeeded in accomplishing its aim, and they might as well make their application to the board now as wait for another two or three months.

We have a responsibility to the people of Canada, a responsibility not only to provide a freight service but also a passenger service. The one cannot be divorced from the other and consideration of the one has to take account of the advantages of the other. I think it is time that some people realized this. The Minister of Transport may not be aware of it but there is not a month goes by that Canadian National does not increase its staff at the top level. I can name quite a number of officials in the North Bay division who were never there before. During the war there was not one day when there were not many thousands of cars went through North Bay. At that time there was no stationmaster, no superintendent and nowhere the number of other officials they now have when there is hardly any traffic and nobody for these officials to look after.

It is the responsibility of the people of Canada, my responsibility and that of every member of the house to do something about this situation and see that we get value for our dollars. I suggest that we should stop making these payments to the railway until they become a little more honest with us and not simply make a hodgepodge of a presentation to the committee and suggest that the committee go into rates. It has been said that there is not a man in Canada who can sort out the tariff rates in the freight rate structure. It is a fact that officials have been brought from the United States to help the Canadian National and the Canadian Pacific make their freight rate presentations.

It seems to me that we should decide first what we want our railways to accomplish, and I think the suggestion made by the minister, the member for Port Arthur and the member for Skeena that we develop a national transportation authority to go into the whole problem is long overdue. Rather than bringing this piece of legislation forward the government should set up a committee. I would be quite happy if such a committee sat morning, noon and night working toward the goal of developing a unified transportation service for Canada. We need a transportation authority. We need the railways in this country. We have not progressed to the stage where we can do without our railways.

It is quite true that there is talk now of sending bulk packages through pipe lines. In the Western Producer of Thursday, November 22, I noticed that the Alberta research council had announced that they had made their first full scale test of the technique of sending solid objects through a pipe line. This may be one of the things we are going to do tomorrow and it may be something that should be considered by the committee and by an over-all transportation authority. It is quite possible that we will be shipping grain through a pipe line by compressed air in the near future and this may be a good method. Certainly I am not wedded to the idea of railways. I am not completely divorced from the idea that maybe we should never have introduced diesel locomotives because at least with the old steam engines we were employing people. Everybody knew how many cars were going to be attached to a train and they knew that at least a little of the coal to operate those engines was going to be produced in Canada by Canadians.

I am not suggesting that we should turn back the pages of time, but are we not doing just that every time we ask for a subsidy for Canadian National Railways in order to allow the Canadian Pacific Railway to maintain freight rates that will permit unfair competition and let them show a profit while you and I and the Canadian people have to carry the terrific deficit of the C.N.R.? I think that now is the time to look at this problem. The minister has suggested that he is going to consider it. All I am asking is that he speed up his timetable and that he look at it before he brings in the bill which this resolution precedes.

In a political sense I am not in a position and most people in Canada are not, I think, to say what is the over-all solution. However, I believe that if a committee were set up to work on the problem strenuously and if all those involved in the transportation field would come to Ottawa and co-operate with the committee, in a matter of a few months that committee would be able to arrive at a policy. In that regard we must consider the fact, as the minister pointed out, that such a committee would have the great advantage of having the benefit of the work of the MacPherson commission which in the last few years has looked into this problem from almost every aspect. They have made a limited number of recommendations, but I think they have assembled enough information to make it possible for us to develop a program that would provide us with an up to date, modern transportation authority capable of transporting the goods we are producing and the natural resources coming out of our mines, forests and farms. Such an authority would also assure people working on the railroads and on other forms of transportation of guaranteed jobs for a certain period of time.

This feeling of insecurity about jobs is a most serious problem. There are few people working on the railways, whether it be the C.N.R. or C.P.R., who really care about their jobs because of the fact that they are not sure whether they will still hold those jobs a day or a year from now. May I call it five o'clock?

The Deputy Chairman: It being five o'clock it is my duty to leave the chair in order that the house may proceed to consideration of private members' business pursuant to section 3 of standing order 15.

Progress reported.

Mr. Speaker: The house will now proceed to consideration of private members' business as listed at page 29 of today's order paper, namely notices of motion.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT

SUGGESTED PAYMENT OF BENEFITS TO FARM LABOUR

Mr. Reynold Rapp (Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale) moved:

That, in the opinion of this house, the government should consider the advisability of amending the Unemployment Insurance Act so that seasonal farm labourers would receive benefits similar to those paid at the present time to seasonal fishermen.

He said: Mr. Speaker, on rising to speak on my motion to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act so that seasonal farm labourers would receive benefits similar to those paid at the present time to seasonal fishermen, I would like to direct your attention to the word "seasonal." The reason I have used this word is because I think the labour force on the prairies is mostly seasonal, in contrast to the employed labour force in the central provinces. The fact that there are so many seasonally unemployed farm labourers has aroused the interest of farm people who wish to obtain some form of unemployment insurance coverage for farm workers, and this interest has developed largely as the result of social and economic advances.

When the present government assumed office in 1957 the Unemployment Insurance Act was amended in order to have its provisions include seasonal fishermen, but nothing was done to have the seasonal farm labourers included. As a result of that omission they still remain outside the benefits of the act. As a matter of fact they comprise the only section of our labour force which is not covered by unemployment insurance, and they are the only group of people in Canada today who are left to fight the hardships of unemployment on their own. They are the only ones who receive no assistance from the government whatsoever. Having talked to these people one gets the impression that they feel discriminated against and segregated from the rest of the labour force.

This is not the first time I have brought such a motion before the house. I believe I have introduced a similar motion every session and, due to that fact, the Minister of Labour has given consideration to my request and to the request of other hon. members who supported my previous motions. However difficulties were encountered by the government and by other people concerned in seeing to it that the Unemployment Insurance Act would cover the seasonal farm labourer.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw your attention to a submission presented to the standing committee on industrial relations by the executive council of the Canadian Chamber of Commerce in 1959 when the committee was dealing with Bill No. C-43, to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act. They said:

> We are of the view that before an increase in rates is imposed, a number of areas of drain should be examined; alternative methods of financing should be reviewed and the question of coverage be studied.

This is the chapter in the submission which deals with areas of drain, financing and coverage. It continues:

> The drain on the fund caused by the coverage of fishermen will, according to the unemployment insurance advisory committee, total in a full year $10 million.
> We note that the same committee submitted to the government that the loss to the fund—

They were discussing the unemployment insurance fund—

> —caused by extending benefits to fishermen should be paid from sources other than regular contributions. This is seeking to plug the hole after it has been made. It is the executive council's submission that this group should never have been covered and, indeed, it notes in the hearings of the standing committee on industrial relations in 1955 a memorandum, dated May 16, 1955 in which such statements as the following were incorporated:—
> "The conclusion still seems inescapable that unemployment insurance is no answer to the fishermen's problems . . . To bring the fishermen under the act on such a basis would be misleading and unfair."
> Despite this memorandum, the fishermen were covered under the act.

This is one reason why there were so many committees set up since 1952 to see whether it would be possible to bring seasonal farm labourers under the provisions of the Unemployment Insurance Act. As early as 1952 a committee was set up and, although it did not recommend that unemployed farm labourers should be covered, it came out with recommendations which were later implemented. For instance, farm labourers who worked on farms where they raise chickens or horses were included, but the rest of the seasonally employed people were not covered.

I also note with pleasure the remarks of the Minister of Labour to the effect that studies have been conducted by his department concerning the seasonal farm labourer. To reach some conclusion, in 1961 the department set up a committee known as the Gill committee. The Gill committee report is not available at the present time, but it is known that the matter was considered before that and it was said that consideration should be given to a voluntary scheme. In other words, this would be where the farmer and farm labourer were in agreement to pay into the Unemployment Insurance Act, and thus seasonal workers could receive coverage.

In 1959 an intergovernmental committee was established by the unemployment insurance commission to make a survey of the possible coverage of farm labourers. The committee included representatives of the Department of Agriculture, the Department of Finance, the department of insurance, the dominion bureau of statistics and the unemployment insurance commission. In February, 1960 this committee submitted its report, emphasized the fact that the problems were serious and suggested possible schemes which would to some extent meet these problems. The Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr) also obtained the views of the minister of agriculture of that time and the latter asked if consideration could be given to a voluntary scheme, as had been suggested in the report of the committee in 1952. It was there suggested that a farm operator could elect whether or not to cover his employees. The committee made further studies and surveys in 1960 and found great difficulty in arriving at even an approximate estimate of the cost of the scheme. This is where the situation stands at the present time.

There are certain difficulties, Mr. Speaker, in the way of this question of unemployment insurance for farm workers and the implementation of such a proposal, but the fact remains that this group of people is in a desperate position. This is the only group of labour not covered by unemployment insurance. Many of these seasonal farm labourers have established residence in the area where they work and have difficulty moving their families into areas where they could perhaps obtain work in industries. Also, at the present time it is sometimes very difficult for unskilled labourers to obtain employment in an industrial area.

I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the house give serious consideration to this problem. If it is not possible to have seasonal farm labourers brought under the Unemployment Insurance Act, consideration should at least be given to working out a regulation which would bring them under the act on a volunteer basis. Many farmers in the west are in desperate need of skilled workers, because at the present time their farms are highly mechanized and it takes a skilled operator to handle expensive combines and tractors. Then, due to the fact that they are only going to be employed during the season, many of these people are not interested in this type of employment. From personal experience I know that many losses have been incurred by farmers for the simple reason that they could not obtain workers. These workers have eventually drifted into the cities where they, although not always in a position to obtain permanent work, are at least in a position to obtain a few months work, are able to contribute under the Unemployment Insurance Act and thus receive unemployment insurance benefits when they are out of work.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to see this motion come to a vote. As I said at the outset, I have brought this matter to the attention of the house in many other sessions. Nevertheless, the time is now ripe for these people to be brought under the Unemployment Insurance Act. I will not make any further comments on my resolution because I know many hon. members from the western provinces and from the provinces of Quebec and Ontario are also very interested in seeing the implementation of the proposal contained in my motion, which is to bring seasonal farm labourers under the Unemployment Insurance Act.

Mr. H. E. Gray (Essex West): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to be able to rise and support the principle of the motion put before us by the hon. member who just spoke. The hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue) happens to be attending the convention of the farmers' union in Winnipeg. I know that if it had been possible for him to be here this afternoon he would have joined me in speaking out strongly in support of the principle of this motion. I would like to point out to this house that the agricultural policy of the Liberal party contains this statement:

> Unemployment insurance should be extended to as many farm workers as possible.

It would probably be correct to say that there is hardly an area in Canada today where farmers have not experienced a certain difficulty in getting and keeping good quality seasonal workers because they cannot offer these workers unemployment insurance coverage. They therefore are bound to lose out in competition with other employers who can offer such coverage. Mr. Speaker, let me give you an example from my own riding of Essex West.

(Translation):

My riding includes the areas of La Salle and River Canard where we find truck gardeners—most of them French speaking—who grow vegetables and early products such as the famous Petite Cote onions and radishes.

Most of the forefathers of those farmers settled on the shores of the Detroit river some 200 years ago. Many of them want their seasonal workers to benefit from unemployment insurance.

(Text):

They begin work as early as the middle of April. The market gardeners of La Salle and River Canard can keep seasonal workers busy almost up to the end of November, but they have great difficulty in getting and keeping good quality seasonal workers because they cannot obtain unemployment insurance for them. The result is that as soon as some work comes along that is covered by unemployment insurance—for example in the canning factories—the seasonal help they would like to keep leave and go into this other type of employment. I have been told by some market gardeners in my riding that their workers have actually come to them and asked for unemployment insurance coverage; they have asked whether the farmers themselves could get stamps to put in their books. It was with great regret that these farmers could not do what the seasonal workers asked them to do.

Mr. Speaker, it seems rather strange that today fishermen are covered, but not seasonal farm workers. I suggest it is time this anomaly was removed. It seems rather strange that men who harvest the products of the sea can get unemployment insurance benefits, but not men who harvest the products of the land. If we look at the regulations we find that certain employments in agriculture now qualify for unemployment insurance coverage. May I refer briefly, Mr. Speaker, to regulation 58, which states:

> A person's employment shall be insurable, though otherwise excepted as being in agriculture, if it is in connection with any of the following undertakings:
> (a) breeding or raising poultry,
> (b) chick hatching,
> (c) preparation and marketing of poultry,
> (d) egg grading, or
> (e) breeding or raising race horses, saddle horses or light harness horses, > unless the undertaking is carried on as an incidental part of farming operations.

I wonder why a horse jockey can get coverage but not a tractor jockey. Here is something which I believe should be changed. It may be that the way to deal with this matter is to cover only certain classes of seasonal farm workers such as those engaged in market gardening, or perhaps it should be done on a voluntary basis. But I think this could be worked out, once we sit down in committee. Therefore, since I strongly urge that this motion be allowed to go to a vote, I shall not take the time of the house further, except to urge that this motion be supported by all members this afternoon.

(Translation):

Mr. J. L. Frenette (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, I should like first of all to thank the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale (Mr. Rapp) for having introduced this motion of concern to all farming people, and especially to farm workers, which enables us at the same time to deal with the very important problem of unemployment insurance, a problem of general interest.

We endorse the principle and the essence of this motion, the purpose of which is to give a more effective protection to farm workers. We shall not take up too much of the time of the house so that the matter may come to a vote.

Mr. Speaker, our first argument is that farm workers are surely entitled to the same protection given to all other classes of workers, because their needs are the same.

It is acknowledged that those occasional or seasonal workers deserve a special attention since they find themselves in a situation that is quite particular. In my opinion, and as was stated earlier, lumbermen could very well be included in that category.

Very often, the land owner who wants to cut lumber on part of his woodlot hires lumbermen, but since these lumbermen under the act are considered as agricultural workers, they are not entitled to unemployment insurance benefits.

Now, since we are of the opinion that these workers deserve special attention, we must necessarily take special action.

The word insurance loses somewhat of its meaning for that class of casual or seasonal workers, because we know beforehand that the unemployment insurance benefits will be much higher than the contributions paid by these workers. The unemployment insurance fund is therefore handicapped by this situation, and I suggest that the benefits thus drawn from the general fund should be paid out of a special fund, to which the public treasury should be asked to contribute more than it does for the general unemployment insurance.

Mr. Speaker, we also suggest that regulations be made easier and more flexible so that those seasonal or casual workers may take advantage of unemployment insurance benefits.

Along the same line and since that notice of motion has been introduced, we call upon the government to consider the problem of the small contractor in the cities and towns of our constituencies. Actually, I am thinking of carpenters, plumbers or painters who very often do jobs on their own and then, not having any work, must rent their services as wage earners to contractors. Since they work mostly on their own account, they find it exceedingly difficult to get unemployment insurance benefits.

That is why we feel the government ought to consider that particular problem of some of our workers. Moreover, since it appears that unemployment has to be accepted as something permanent, the Unemployment Insurance Act should be completely reviewed and adapted to the needs of the present situation.

I have in mind the problems facing the unemployed because of the fact that unemployment benefit cheques do not mention the period of unemployment covered by the said cheques. As a matter of fact, I have been aware of several cases where unemployed people had problems with the unemployment insurance commission because they were charged with getting benefits—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I hope the hon. member does not intend to cover the whole field of unemployment insurance because we are at present discussing a motion merely pointing out the problems of seasonal farm labourers. I sincerely regret to interrupt the hon. member, but I must tell him that he cannot discuss all the provisions of the Unemployment Insurance Act. So, I hope the hon. member will come back to the subject matter.

Mr. Frenette: I thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I am sorry if my remarks were a little irrelevant.

I therefore come back to the subject matter, that is the problem of farm labourers. Since I do not want to talk this motion out, I shall conclude my remarks by saying that we completely agree with the mover of the motion and if there is a vote we shall certainly vote for the motion.

(Text):

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, as one who is proud to be a peasant farmer, I rise on behalf of this party to express our support for the spirit and purpose of this motion. So as to explain clearly what I wish to express, I will just quote the motion. It reads:

> That in the opinion of this house, the government should consider the advisability of amending the Unemployment Insurance Act so that seasonal farm labourers would receive benefits similar to those paid at the present time to seasonal fishermen.

I must say that the problem of the fishermen is different from that of the agricultural workers, but we support this motion on the basis that the hon. member is trying to get the government to consider amending the act so that seasonal employees of the farmer may be brought under the Unemployment Insurance Act.

I cannot help but mention to my friends in the Social Credit party opposite that I listen with interest to their remarks on agricultural matters because I know that a good many of the people they represent live close to the soil. I want to draw their attention to the fact that I am one of the few members of parliament who lives a habitant way of life in the backwoods, and we have a certain affinity in that respect. That is why I am interested in their speeches on agriculture.

I wish to make one or two comments on the remarks made by the hon. member who spoke on behalf of the Liberal party. I noticed that at times he was almost indignant because action has not been taken to amend the act so that agricultural employees were covered by its provisions. He said it was strange that fishermen should be treated differently from farm labourers. It is not strange at all. The very party he represents is the reason for that situation, at least up to 1957. Does the hon. member not know that this subject has been discussed in the house for over 14 years? Members of this group, when they sat on the other side and faced the Liberal government, pleaded year after year at the request of their constituents and of the farm organizations to amend the act on the lines suggested by the hon. member who introduced this resolution.

Then the hon. member for Essex West (Mr. Gray) said that he could not understand—

Mr. Gray: Might I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Speaker: If he will accept it, but you cannot force it.

Mr. Gray: I would like to ask the hon. member who has been speaking whether he knows that this is 1962.

Mr. Herridge: Yes, I know it is 1962, but I know that members of our group pleaded with the Liberal government from 1946 till 1957 to make the amendments proposed by this resolution this afternoon. Then the hon. gentleman said it is strange that the act gives preference to a jockey, rather than to a farm labourer. The reason for that is the attitude taken towards a farm labourer by the former Liberal government and the present Progressive Conservative government. I am sure the hon. member has not read the debates of past years on this question in the house; otherwise he would realize that it had been a topic of debate over a good number of years, but without any result to date.

Then again, farm organizations throughout the years have discussed this question. I have attended farm meetings. Resolutions have been presented to the government of Canada by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, to the government of British Columbia by the B.C. federation of agriculture, and to the government of Canada by the British Columbia fruit growers association. I can see as I sit here the paling face of the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate. I can see that this rests on his conscience, and I fully expect that he will rise and have something to say later on. He was a member of a government which refused to take action from 1946 to 1957.

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the hon. gentleman give me the Hansard references in 1946 and in subsequent years up to 1956 about which he was boasting a few moments ago?

Mr. Herridge: I have not got the Hansard references here, but I do remember attending a convention of the B.C. federation of agriculture—

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the hon. gentleman give them later?

Mr. Herridge: Possibly I will be able to look them up and give them to the hon. gentleman. Anyway this is a subject which has been of serious concern to farm organizations and farmers over a good period of years, because they felt they had suffered an injustice under the present terms of the Unemployment Insurance Act. The British Columbia fruit growers association has been particularly interested in this question, and I will tell the house why. They could never understand why there was a distinction between the worker who worked at packing fruit in the packing house and a worker who worked at the same time in the orchard picking the fruit. That is another illustration of the operation of the act. However, I have hopes that because the resolution has been introduced by the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale this government will be influenced to do something about it; and should the government be defeated in the spring, then because of the pangs of conscience suffered by hon. members opposite in the official opposition I hope that they will take some action if elected to office. However, the present circumstances have resulted in a lot of inconvenience to farmers. I can speak from my personal experience of conversations with a good many of them who wanted some seasonal labour for a month or so but who could not obtain it because the agricultural labourer is not covered by unemployment insurance. Naturally any man seeking employment is going to accept the employment under which he can receive the protection of the Unemployment Insurance Act. That is only natural. I can relate numerous personal experiences from my close associations with a great many fruit growers and farmers in my constituency, where they have been considerably inconvenienced at harvesting times and at other times because they were unable to obtain farm help, and the reason they could not obtain it was because such labour was not covered under the act.

This has been a subject of discussion throughout the years by farm organizations, who have made representations to the former government and to the present government. But still nothing is done. It is still a topic of serious discussion with farm organizations and many farmers. To indicate how up to date I am on that, as recently as February 7 of this year the Canadian Federation of Agriculture made a submission to the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Diefenbaker) and members of the cabinet, and in that submission, on page 12, will be found the following paragraph:

> Unemployment insurance for farm workers. While we appreciate that the unemployment insurance program is now under study by a royal commission, nevertheless we feel we must bring to your attention that the very real need for a selective, if not a voluntary, program of unemployment insurance for farm workers is still unmet—

Mind you, it is still unmet. That is an indication of how many times they have tried to persuade governments to amend the act.

> —a matter of considerable disappointment to those farmers who find that they are seriously disadvantaged by this situation.

I am not very struck by some of the grammar here, but I can see what is intended.

> If a voluntary program for agriculture cannot be brought in, we would recommend early extension of compulsory coverage to those areas and/or groups of producers who have clearly indicated their desire and willingness to participate in such a program.

Mr. Speaker, as we discuss this question some hon. members from urban ridings may feel that this seems a matter almost of academic interest and not of great importance. But it is of great importance to a farmer or a fruit grower when he is anxious to get help for a week, for two weeks, or for a month, in order to harvest his crop or to carry on some of his operations. Therefore, we are not anxious to delay the debate. We want to see a vote taken before six o'clock. We should all like to see this resolution adopted unanimously by the members of this house. But we do urge the government again, as we have in the past over a good number of years, to give consideration to the inconvenience suffered by many farmers at the present time owing to the failure of the government to act to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act. Should this discussion unfortunately continue until six o'clock and nothing is done in a constructive way to give consideration to this resolution, we hope that the matter will come to the attention of the committee on agriculture and that the representatives of the farm organizations representing various segments of agriculture be given a particular opportunity to deal with this problem and present their views.

(Translation):

Mr. Clement Vincent (Nicolet-Yamaska): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of several farmers in my riding and in my province, I would like to say that I support the motion presented by the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale (Mr. Rapp).

The seasonal worker is not the only one to suffer from the situation that has just been explained. In fact, several farmers in my area, as well as several farmers in my province, have asked me to be their spokesman on that subject and to press the government to study the possibility of allowing the farm workers to draw unemployment insurance benefits, just like other workers.

As other workers benefit from the Unemployment Insurance Act, as well as the fishermen since quite recently and a few other seasonal workers, it is more and more difficult, if not impossible, for several farmers to find good men to help them with their work.

Mr. Speaker, when a farmer wants a man to work on his farm, the first question he is asked by the eventual employee is the following: Do you contribute to the unemployment insurance fund? Since the farmer's answer is always or nearly always "no", the prospective helper, the person who is seeking employment unfailingly replies: "I am not interested; I would rather work where I can get unemployment insurance benefits".

That means that in the province of Quebec and in my riding, certain big farmers who employ helpers all year-round have to do without the services of highly competent workers because the latter cannot accept a job where they would be deprived of unemployment insurance benefits if they ever had to leave their job.

The same thing goes for seasonal workers. Many of our farmers need help when they are most busy, that is during six to eight weeks and very often for the whole summer season. They also need help for sowing time, hay harvesting and for the harvest season. They could employ workers for four to five months but since the answer is always the same "We cannot pay unemployment benefits", they have to employ men who are far from being helpful as competent farm hands. They have to entrust them with the operation of costly machinery. I am sure you know, Mr. Speaker, that the machinery farmers must use nowadays is getting to be more and more expensive. Farm workers have to be qualified when they operate machines worth $2,000, $3,000 and even $4,000.

It is true, Mr. Speaker, that it would be most difficult to extend the provisions of the Unemployment Insurance Act to all farmers, but with agriculture's continued evolution, as I said a moment ago, if it is difficult now to find skilled labour, it will become increasingly difficult in a few years. It is therefore most essential to find a solution to those problems because in addition to giving assistance to farm labourers who hold seasonal employment, we will have to give assistance to those farmers needing skilled labour.

Such solution will be found in an extension of the provision of the Unemployment Insurance Act allowing for optional eligibility of farm labourers to unemployment insurance benefits.

Mr. Speaker, we are aware that the Gill commission will submit a report reflecting the submissions brought forward at the hearing by farmers' organizations across the country. In the light of this report, I believe the government may consider assistance to seasonal employees and farmers in need of farm labour.

Take the case of the Canadian fisherman who is entitled to unemployment benefits. The extension of the act in his case brought assistance to him. This government therefore contributed some degree of assistance to this Canadian worker. Now, the farmer who needs qualified and skilled labourers would appreciate the passage of the bill before us, and that is why I am pleased to support the motion of the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale (Mr. Rapp).

Mr. Gerard Legare (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, I shall only take a few minutes because I would not wish to prevent the house from voting on the resolution now before us. On the other hand, I know that other members have expressed the wish to take part in this discussion, which makes me think that, even if I take only a few minutes, the house will not be called upon to vote on this resolution tonight.

I should like to congratulate the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale (Mr. Rapp) for the steadfastness he has shown by coming back again this year with this resolution.

I believe that the house unanimously agrees with him when he states that the Unemployment Insurance Act should be amended so that the farm workers could benefit from it.

I was astonished to hear the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge) say he was surprised to see a member of the Liberal party support such a measure. I would remind him—it is unfortunate that he has left his seat, but I see him smoking his pipe behind the curtain—that the Unemployment Insurance Act was adopted by a Liberal government and that it was amended by a Liberal government so that the fishermen could benefit from it. It is also a Liberal government that, in 1957, studied what steps should be taken so that the agricultural workers could benefit from that measure that has been so beneficial to the country.

My hon. friend from Kootenay West should remember that all special measures which benefit the country today were implemented by a Liberal government. They are all progressive measures that were also improved through the years.

(Text):

Mr. Herridge: Who brought in the Unemployment Insurance Act?

(Translation):

Mr. Legare: The Liberal government instituted that act and had it adopted by parliament. Again a Liberal government amended it so that it would benefit the fishermen.

I remember that in 1957 a committee of the house studied the possibilities of changing the act so that our farming class could benefit from it.

I am sure, Mr. Speaker, that if the Liberal party had remained in power in 1957 and 1958, the farm people and the farm labourers today would benefit from such a beneficial measure which has rendered more services than any other.

I strongly support the sponsor of this resolution. I know that he may have a greater chance to have it passed than if it came from this side of the house. Such a measure is a must today and the farm help must necessarily be covered, either by the Unemployment Insurance Act, or by another legislative measure that parliament will pass. If it is not possible to have the farm people, the farm labourers, benefit from this act, it might be advisable to pass another act which would allow the employers and the farm labourers to benefit from it.

As the hon. member for Nicolet-Yamaska (Mr. Vincent) stated in his speech, farmers are having a hard time finding workers who would help them during sowing time or during the harvest because they do not give unemployment stamps. Not only are farmers denied that privilege but under the present provisions of the Unemployment Insurance Act, they are denied benefits when they help a neighbour build a barn or improve his farm buildings.

But in 1957, farming conditions were not what they are today. And some people are aware of how hard it is in certain parts of the country to make both ends meet for those who are engaged in farming or breeding. This is the reason why it is more imperative than ever before to amend this act so that employees can benefit from that liberal ligislation.

An hon. Member: A liberal legislation adopted by a Liberal government.

Mr. Legare: I am not going to repeat it, even though I am inclined to do so, because our friends in the right hand corner opposite forget too easily the legislation which was introduced by the Liberal party which was so advantageous to the whole of Canada.

I will conclude my remarks because I am sure other hon. members will want to express their opinion. Indeed, I should not want to prevent the house from adopting this resolution which I fully endorse.

Mr. J. P. Cook (Montmagny-L'Islet): First of all, I should like to reassure hon. members and tell them that I do not intend to talk out the motion. Even if I did, it would not much matter, because it will die in one way or another at six o'clock, as it has become a custom here to bury every motion at six o'clock.

Before being called to order, Mr. Speaker, I would add that the first thing which should be amended would be standing orders so that a vote be mandatory for all motions, particularly when they are as logical as this one.

Mr. Speaker, if I attempt to say a few words on this motion, it is because I myself have one on the order paper, under No. 44, which is very similar to this one. Unfortunately, as I am not sure that this parliament will live long enough to let us discuss order No. 44, I might say a few words on order No. 13.

I must commend my hon. colleague from Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale (Mr. Rapp) as the promoter of this motion. When listening just now to the eloquent statements made by my colleagues from the Liberal party on the motion, I was quite surprised. I do think they are sincere, but I wonder whether they are really aware of their party's basic policy. Indeed, if this legislation now calls for so many adjustments, we must not forget, as my hon. Liberal colleague said a moment ago, that it was introduced by the Liberal party. Consequently, if we had had a better administration in this country during the 22 years that party was in power, there would have been no need to enact legislation with regard to unemployment insurance, because all classes of society would have had enough work not to have to resort to such insurance.

Mr. Speaker, it is unfortunate that this motion, which has already been introduced several times by the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale, has not been taken into consideration by the Liberal party when it was in power.

If the Liberal supporters believe today that this motion is sound, why did the Liberal party not consider it when it had the chance to pass it and to make the legislation more accessible to all?

There are in my riding—as elsewhere throughout the province and the country—small farms which yield enough, not to say barely enough, to make a living, or hardly enough to subsist. And, in order to survive on their farms, these farmers cannot afford to hire workers but must turn to their own sons for assistance. However, their sons—like those from all the other working classes in the country—would rather like to work for money and to receive unemployment insurance benefits when they are out of work, and that is impossible under the act as it now stands.

Therefore, in many cases farmers' sons are not interested any more in working for their fathers, because the latter cannot give them unemployment insurance stamps so that they may get benefits during the winter months. Hence, they go and work in cities. And, in many cases, this results in the sale of farms, very often by auction, at the door of the church, because the poor farmer cannot manage his farm by himself the way he should to look after his wife and young children properly. So, the farm is sold. And that is why so many farms are abandoned nowadays in a great number of provinces and all across the country.

Mr. Speaker, as time is getting on, I should like to permit, for once, that a motion of this kind be put to a vote.

In closing my remarks, I would add that we, from this side of the house, support all motions that are logical and sensible to assist not only the working and agricultural classes, but all classes of society in general.

(Text):

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, in the light of some of the discussion that has taken place I think it is perhaps just as well that the great Liberal party did not get around to attempting to bring agricultural workers under the coverage of the Unemployment Insurance Act. I bring this to the attention of the hon. member who no doubt with laudable intent introduced the resolution; but he was rather unwise, I think, when he linked it with the abortive plan of coverage for fishermen which was brought in by a Liberal government. In view of the time, I shall not extend my remarks further in that direction. However, in order to assist the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill) with regard to the research undertaken by the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge), I would refer the hon. member to Hansard for June 10, 1955, page 4641 where he will find that the hon. member for Kootenay West is reported as saying that he had made a plea for the consideration of the inclusion of agricultural workers. I think the hon. member might take that point of reference.

Mr. Pickersgill: I might point out that is nine years after 1946.

Mr. F. J. Bigg (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, it is no surprise that there is unanimity on this proposal—

Mr. Gray: Let us have the vote.

Mr. Bigg: —but I would ask the house to approach this subject with care. The Gill committee which is now sitting, and has sat since last July—

Mr. Pickersgill: Now sitting? It finished its work last August.

Mr. Bigg: —is bringing forward proposals which will deal with the subject. We expect that the Gill committee will recommend many other important amendments amongst which, no doubt, there will be amendments that will encourage people to remain at work. It is very difficult for farmers to get suitable farm labour these days because, as has been pointed out by nearly every speaker, the present act does not cover farm labourers and therefore workers will not leave other employment to go to the farms.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Gray: Talked out by the Tories.

Mr. Speaker: Order. So far as any question of talking out is concerned, I would respectfully point out to hon. members that if anyone has occupied any time in speaking on the motion other hon. members have an equal right to speak on the motion, whether it takes two hours, three hours or four hours, and therefore any gratuitous remarks of that nature are quite out of order.

The time for the consideration of private members' business having expired, the house will revert to the business that was interrupted at five o'clock.

FREIGHT RATES REDUCTION ACT

AMENDMENTS EXTENDING APPLICATION AND INCREASING EXPENDITURES

The house resumed consideration in committee of the following proposed resolution—Mr. Balcer—Mr. Paul in the chair:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Freight Rates Reduction Act to extend for not more than twelve months the period during which the revised rates under the said act shall be applicable and to increase the authorized expenditure under the act by an additional twenty million dollars.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

(Text):

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Peters: At five o'clock, Mr. Chairman, I was discussing the need for a national transportation authority rather than accepting such legislation as we have which, when it was introduced in 1958, was considered to be a stopgap piece of legislation. Through this amendment we are being asked to re-endorse the Freight Rates Reduction Act which lapsed several months ago. We are being asked to extend it for another 12 month period, with an additional $20 million to be used in the same manner as the original act.

While this proposal can be supported, it can only be supported in the knowledge that the government considers this to be a stop-gap piece of legislation and that it is willing to undertake an overhaul of the whole transport authority. The minister said this would be considered, but I am doubtful if that can be done in time for us to do anything about it in this session of parliament, or even during the lifetime of this parliament. However, I suggest that if the government is really sincere in wanting to do a complete overhaul job, integrating all various aspects of road transportation, rail transportation, piggy-back services, air lines and water transportation then there is no better time to do it than now, when the government would be able to ask the assistance of other parties which make up this minority parliament.

With regard to passenger services, it is interesting to note that the local people in Ottawa, particularly at a time when they are holding a civic election, are questioning whether to put apartment buildings, a theatre, or stores as an extension of the mall on the site of the Ottawa railway terminal in the centre of the city. It seems to me the travelling public could get a greater advantage out of commuter service if the train continues to come right into the centre of the city, instead of being disembarked many miles out of town in a new station which will probably be archaic in a few years time.

I believe the minister should give top priority to introducing positive proposals for the establishment of a new authority, and to setting up a committee to discuss the whole matter of developing that new authority in ways that will assist the three major groups involved, namely the people who form the passenger public, the shippers of freight who contribute to the bulk of railway revenues, and the employees of the railways.

If the minister could give that assurance then I believe this would be acceptable in the short term, but otherwise I see no reason to spend an extra $20 million to handle problems we have not been able to solve in the years since 1958 when this was considered to be only a temporary measure of an interim nature.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Balcer thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-91, to amend the Freight Rates Reduction Act.

[Mr. Peters.]

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the said bill be read a second time? Next sitting of the house?

Mr. Balcer: I have some indication, Mr. Speaker, that it might be possible to have second reading of the bill today because it will be sent to a committee. If it were agreeable to the house we might have second reading now and send the bill to the committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, as an indication of our desire to be co-operative, I think those of us who sit on this side of the house would be quite willing, subject of course to the approval of the other parties, to have this bill receive second reading now, on condition that it is sent for consideration to the committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines.

Mr. Speaker: By consent, is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Balcer moved the second reading of the bill.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines.

PUBLIC HARBOURS

APPROVAL OF AGREEMENT BETWEEN CANADA AND ONTARIO

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-59, to approve an agreement between the government of Canada and the government of the province of Ontario respecting public harbours.

He said: Section 108 of the British North America Act provides that the public works and property of each province enumerated in the third schedule to that act shall be the property of Canada, and included in the third schedule is "public harbours". This provision vested in the crown, in the right of Canada, ownership of the bed and foreshore of all public harbours in Canada that were actually being used as such at the time of confederation. However, the British North America Act did not list and describe those harbours and in some cases there are doubts as to whether a harbour became the property of Canada; and in many cases it is difficult or impossible to determine what were the precise limits of those harbours at the time of confederation.

It is recognized that what actually became the property of Canada under the heading "public harbours" were those areas which were actually being used at the time of confederation for the anchorage of vessels, the loading and unloading of goods and the embarking and disembarking of passengers. However, there are obvious reasons why at this time, nearly 100 years after confederation, the uncertainties inherent in this situation can be resolved only by way of agreement between Canada and the individual provinces directly concerned. In the case of Ontario, the earliest settlements were along the St. Lawrence river and the shores of the great lakes and, over a long period, the waterways were the only effective means of transportation. For many years prior to 1867 ships plying the river and the great lakes would make regular calls at each settlement to deliver or pick up passengers and cargo and each such port of call could properly be designated as a public harbour within the meaning of the British North America Act.

However, over the years other means of transportation have been developed and traffic patterns have changed, and now there are many small places in Ontario along the river St. Lawrence and on the great lakes which, doubtless, were used as public harbours at the time of confederation but which today and for many years past have had no significant commercial water traffic. The other, and perhaps more important, difficulty is in respect of the limits of those public harbours which are now recognized as such within the meaning of the British North America Act. In many cases traffic has increased considerably and the areas of particular locations used for harbour purposes have become increasingly larger. As there were no cadastral plans at most of these places in 1867 it is, at this late date, impossible in many cases to determine with any degree of certainty the original limits. This difficulty has resulted in claims and counterclaims in respect of ownership of harbour beds and has been the subject of discussions between Canada and Ontario extending over many years.

This problem was settled between Canada and British Columbia in 1924 by way of complementary orders in council; it still has to be dealt with in respect of Quebec and the other maritime provinces, including Newfoundland. In the province of Ontario there are 27 harbours which, on the basis of their importance in respect of water transportation, now qualify as public harbours within the meaning of the British North America Act. These harbours make a significant contribution to the economy of Ontario and, indeed, of the whole of Canada and it is highly desirable that the present uncertainties which confuse the administration of the foreshore and the land under the waters of these harbours be eliminated. These 27 harbours are as follows; I am giving the list in alphabetical order: Amherstburg, Belleville, Brockville, Chatham, Collingwood, Fort William, Gananoque, Goderich, Kincardine, Kingston, Kingsville, Leamington, Oshawa, Owen Sound, Penetanguishene, Port Arthur, Port Burwell, Port Hope, Port Stanley, Prescott, Rondeau Bay, Sarnia, Sault Ste. Marie, Southampton, Toronto, Whitby and Windsor.

The harbour of Hamilton is omitted from the list because, pursuant to a pre-confederation statute, the city of Hamilton has a good title to the bed and foreshore of the harbour. Following a long period of negotiations agreement has been concluded with the government of Ontario which determines the limits of these harbours and which confirms all grants and quit claims by Ontario and by Canada of the water lots listed in the agreement. The agreement further provides that all mines and minerals within the said limits are the property of Ontario. The only known mines and minerals are salt beds under Goderich and Windsor harbours, and iron under Kingston harbour. The agreement has been signed by the ministers of lands and forests and of mines on behalf of the Ontario government, and by myself on behalf of Canada. It is dated September 27, 1962. It has been determined by the law officers of the crown that the appropriate method of implementing this agreement would be by legislation and this bill, which includes the agreement as a schedule, would ratify it. The province of Ontario is taking complementary action, which when completed will give effect to the agreement.

(Translation):

Mr. Lucien Lamoureux (Stormont): Mr. Speaker, I want to deal only briefly with this bill which, I am sure, everybody in this house will wish to support.

The purpose of the bill is to ratify the agreement reached between the federal government and the province of Ontario to specify which Ontario harbours are public harbours under section 3 of the British North America Act.

In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, the matter is not one for purely academic discussion, but deals with a problem of a practical nature, especially when the question is to determine whether federal funds may legally and constitutionally be spent on harbour improvements.

Of course, there is also a question of an historical nature which many consider to be of the utmost importance.

It is to be noted, Mr. Speaker, that 27 harbours have been enumerated in this bill. There can be no doubt at all that each one of those harbours deserves to be included in the schedules to the agreement reached between the federal government and that of the province of Ontario, but it must be pointed out that the port of Cornwall, in which, naturally, I am particularly interested, is not included in the schedule annexed to the bill. I think that is most unfortunate, Mr. Speaker. Nevertheless, I still hope the minister will be in a position to give the assurance that the question of the possible inclusion of Cornwall harbour in an amended agreement between the federal government and the province of Ontario will be considered at the first opportunity.

(Text):

As pointed out in the explanatory note to the bill, section 108 of the British North America Act and schedule 3 thereto vested in the federal authority the bed and foreshore of all public harbours in Canada. The explanatory note adds that the B.N.A. Act vested in Canada public harbours "that were actually used as such at the time of confederation". There is no such limitation in the act, nor in the schedule. This limitation, if it exists, was not created by the act, but is the result of jurisprudence, and in particular it comes from the case of the Attorney General for the Dominion of Canada v. Ritchie Contracting & Supply Company, 1919 A.C. 999, where Lord Dunedin said as reported at page 1004:

> "Public Harbour" means not merely a place suited by its physical characteristics for use as a harbour, but a place to which on the relevant date the public had access as a harbour, and which they had actually used for that purpose. In this connection the actual user of the site both in its character and extent is material. The date at which the test must be applied is the date at which the British North America Act by becoming applicable, effected a division of the assets between the province and the dominion.

In this case the relevant year is 1867.

The case of Holman v. Green, reported in 6 Canada S.C.R. 707 is authority for the proposition that the public harbours referred to in the B.N.A. Act include not only artificial harbours constructed by the outlay of moneys, but also natural harbours.

On the other hand, the first fisheries case reported in 1898 A.C. 700 sets out that the transfer of public harbours operates on whatever is properly comprised in that term, having regard to the circumstances of each case, and it is not limited merely to those portions on which public works have been executed.

It is my submission that applying any of the tests sanctioned by jurisprudence, there existed a public harbour at Cornwall at the relevant time, that is, 1867, and that from a legal standpoint Cornwall should be included in the schedule to the agreement which is the subject of this bill.

[Mr. Lamoureux.]

There is no question whatever but that Cornwall was an important river front town long before confederation but it was a busy harbour at the time of confederation and it has continued to be an important port since then.

The first settlers came to Cornwall in 1776, nearly 200 years ago, followed by the important immigration of United Empire Loyalists in 1784. It appears obvious that what is now the city of Cornwall was selected as one of the sites for the settlement of the United Empire Loyalists because of its position on the St. Lawrence river, below the Long Sault rapids. In his book entitled Lunenburgh, published in 1890, Judge J. F. Pringle quotes Smith's Gazetteer of Upper Canada as containing, in 1799, the following words:

> In passing from Point au Bodet westward through Lake St. Francis and up the river St. Lawrence, the route is generally made on the north shore.

After mentioning the township of Charlottenburg, the Gazetteer writes:

> The township of Cornwall adjoins next. In the front is the town of a mile square, lying in a commodious bay of the river. The township of Oznabruck lies above Cornwall... The rapids called the Long Sault lie in front of this township. The boats in going up keep to the north shore in great measure because the south shore is not settled...

Further on in his narration, Smith says:

> Edwardsburg is the next township, in the front part of which is Johnstown of a mile square. This with the town of Cornwall has been most judiciously chosen, the one being immediately above, the other below the rapids of the upper St. Lawrence.

In her most interesting book entitled "Lights on the St. Lawrence", Jean L. Gogo at page 236 quotes from the Reminiscences of Captain T. G. Anderson as follows:

> My father and his children with the men of his company, got their allotment of lands in Cornwall... In those days, the only mode of conveyance from Montreal to Kingston was by bateau... On the 20th October 1795, my longing eyes observed a bateau rounding the point at Gray's Creek... On hailing it, the steersman made for the shore, and a bargain for my passage to Kingston for five shillings being concluded. I embarked with a light heart...

There is ample evidence that in the early nineteenth century the river front at Cornwall was used regularly as a harbour. As early as 1799, a ferry service was established between Cornwall and St. Regis. Around 1820, a horseboat began to run between Cornwall and Coteau du Lac; Judge Pringle, in his book entitled "Lunenburg" states at page 107:

> About 1824-25 a small steamboat was put on the same route. The next steamboat was the Neptune, which ran between Cornwall and the Coteau from 1828 or 1829 until 1840, when the Highlander which was launched at the Coteau in the summer of 1839 took her place.
> A steamboat began to run on Lake St. Louis, between Lachine, Beauharnois and the Cascades... Dickenson's line of stages ran between Montreal and Lachine, the Cascades and Coteau du Lac and Cornwall and Prescott in connection with the steamboats on Lakes St. Louis, St. Francis and Ontario.

This quotation confirms that traffic was brought up by water from Coteau to Cornwall, and then proceeded westward to Prescott by stages.

There is further reference to the use of Cornwall as a harbour even before 1867 in Charles Dickens' "American Notes", published in 1850 and referred to by Jean Gogo at page 174 of "Lights on the St. Lawrence". Dickens describes a trip he made in 1842 between Kingston and Montreal, proceeding by steamboat to Dickenson's Landing and from there by stage-coach to Cornwall. The author writes:

It was nearly ten o'clock when we reached the wharf where the next steamboat lay; and went on board, and to bed. She lay there all night, and started as soon as it was day.

The wharf to which Dickens refers was one which had been in existence for some years at the foot of Pitt street—

Mr. Speaker: Order. While the Chair does appreciate some of the claims which the hon. member may be making on behalf of the city of Cornwall, I am wondering if the argument of the hon. member would not be more apposite to the committee hearing on the particular clause which defines the harbours to which the agreement applies. On second reading we are discussing the general principle of this bill. While I am giving the hon. member some latitude—I realize the point he was trying to make—I think if he is directing his argument particularly to why a particular harbour should or should not have been included, this would be better directed at the time we reach the committee stage.

Mr. Lamoureux: With respect, I was coming to the conclusion of my historical venture, Mr. Speaker. I might refer to the request or suggestion which has been made to all Canadians by the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) that we should try to steep ourselves in Canadian history before 1967. I thought that very mild contribution would assist, but I will forget about Dickens and get back to Judge Pringle.

Mr. Speaker: With all that the hon. member has said, perhaps he will recognize the point I have made. I am not denying him the right to extol all the virtues of Cornwall, but perhaps he should not do so at this stage.

Mr. Lamoureux: It was not the virtues of Cornwall that I was extolling, Mr. Speaker; it was the history of one of the most historic parts of Canada that I was referring to. Finally I had reached the twentieth century, or just about, Mr. Speaker. I might say—and I suppose I will be out of order at this point—that I have some documents here which show what the harbour at Cornwall looked like in 1854.

Mr. Speaker: Well, I do not know which would be deeper, the harbour in Cornwall or the hole the hon. member is getting himself into with regard to the point of order I have raised. With all due deference I suggest to the hon. member that he get back to the principle of the bill.

Mr. Lamoureux: Mr. Speaker, to conclude my remarks, I think it should be pointed out that in my estimation the port facilities at Cornwall qualify the city for inclusion in the agreement between the federal government and the province of Ontario. I think I should point out—and I think this is an argument which is most relevant—that the harbour facilities as they now exist in Cornwall are situated exactly where the harbour facilities existed in our city back in 1857. This is extremely important because of the point which was raised by the minister, who said that in many instances it was not possible to declare the port as a public harbour under the terms of the British North America Act because it was difficult to delineate the boundaries of the harbour. In Cornwall this is easily done because we have exactly the same boundaries which existed back in 1857.

To sum up, I wish to reiterate my feeling that there is much historical authority to support the contention that Cornwall should have been included in the schedule to the agreement between the federal authorities and the provincial government, and I humbly suggest that this proposition should be given early, forceful and constructive consideration by the minister.

(Translation):

Mr. Guy Marcoux (Quebec-Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, before making a short comment on the principle of the bill, I should like to express what I think are the feelings of my party and congratulate the hon. member for Stormont (Mr. Lamoureux) for the fine historic account he has given us. Thanks to him, we have spent a few most interesting moments, all the more so as he was speaking of his riding and the historic facts he related were most interesting.

Since the bill deals with an agreement between the government of Ontario and the government of Canada which has already been approved by both parties concerned, I do not think there will be any opposition coming from this side of the house.

However, as a matter of principle, I should like to add that, in my riding, several cases have been reported where the main trouble stemmed precisely from the fact that harbour descriptions were not adequate or were not included in accurate legislation.

That is why I feel the principle of the bill is excellent. I fully support it and I hope that, one day, it will be possible to include a few important harbours in the province of Quebec.

(Text):

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I hope I can rise to the challenge of the national debate as presented by the hon. member for Stormont (Mr. Lamoureux). I am particularly excited too by the stirring, almost responsive reading the minister gave in his introduction to the bill. It certainly sets one up for a thrilling debate. I have also had my colleague next to me wanting to know why Moosonee is not on the list, in view of the grand promises which have been made in recent years by this government in former parliaments as to what it would do to open the north and, as Premier Frost has always called for, to give Ontario a port on the Atlantic at Moosonee. Then too the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) has been urging and reminding me, since I am speaking on this, that this is the opportunity to let everybody in the nation and this parliament know that Toronto harbour is not ordinarily fogbound, at least during the shipping season.

An hon. Member: Only during the football season.

Mr. Fisher: Somebody says "only the football season". I hate to bring up anything so relevant as that.

Mr. Speaker, we look forward to seeing this bill in the committee. I would just point out again in a national sense how interesting it is. Several years ago we passed an act setting up the lakehead harbour commissioners. They were given a boundary authority which included the cities of Fort William and Port Arthur. We have a definition here of the scope of, let us say, the physical properties within their grasp—that is chapter 34 of the statutes of Canada, 1958—and in trying to compare that with the boundaries of Fort William and Port Arthur set out in that act it seems to me that the commissioners have much less to deal with than the public harbour areas which are set out and delineated in the bill and in the schedule which follows.

The hon. member for Stormont went into history to quite an extent. You can see some of the history in the lakehead when you look at schedule C, where you find such names as "Donald A. Smith" as being one of the earliest people, along with "George Stephen", "Francis Stephen", "Thomas Reynolds", and all the rest of those entrepreneurs who got the Canadian Pacific going and who got one of the earliest parcels of land, 77 acres on May 30, 1883, from the provincial authorities.

This bill represents a tidying up process. One of the striking things is that you wonder why it took so long to tidy up, and you wonder what are the good consequences which are going to flow out of it. We are sure the minister will have all kinds of legal experts before the committee so that we can question them in detail. I suppose he should be warned that there will be representatives from Toronto, Port Arthur, and I presume Fort William, who will want to know more of the technical detail in relation to the harbour. I know the minister is likely to get up and say that the provision of this kind of information is not what he planned at all; but I think it is the sort of thing that we would like to review, particularly in light of what I said about the scope of the lakehead harbour commissioners compared with the scope of the commissioners in this bill. This house has been accused, even by some of the leading participants in it, of not getting much accomplished. I think this bill, from our party's point of view, has achieved all the recognition that perhaps it merits, so we can now hurry on to another of those scintillating items the minister has to offer on this particular day of our parliamentary sittings.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I should like to know why Moosonee is not included in this bill. I have been into the long background of how the Hudson's Bay Company and others settled in this area and used it as a port many years ago. This is one of the few ports in Ontario which will grow very rapidly when it does begin to grow, but it will only grow if the federal government continue to exercise some interest in the area. There is and has been some speculation as to when that will be, and I think it would be advantageous if it had been included so that there would be a setting out of how large the port authority would be and the area they would have under their jurisdiction. I wonder whether there are other areas that are going to be added or are intended to be added at a later date or whether this is a complete clean-up of the harbours that were in existence prior to confederation.

Mr. L. E. Cardiff (Huron): Mr. Speaker, I had not intended to speak on this bill. It came up for consideration without notice to me. However, I think I should have something to say on it because of the fact that we have on lake Huron one of the best harbours to be found anywhere in western Ontario. It is has been a great asset to the Dominion of Canada because of the fact that a great deal of money has been collected from that harbour. In the schedule I notice in the first paragraph under the heading, "Goderich", the following:

All and singular that certain parcel or tract of land and land lying under the waters of lake Huron and the Maitland river, being a water lot lying opposite part of block "A"—

And so on. Then it goes on to describe that land. We have a salt well lying under the waters of the harbour of Goderich. It is 1,700 feet below the surface of the water. I was wondering how that part of the schedule was going to affect the salt well which was started in there within the last three or four years, is now about three miles in length and is lying under the water. As I said, it is 1,700 feet below the surface. For anyone who has never been in Goderich and has never seen that rock salt mine, I think this would be a good trip for him to make in order to have a look at it. I do not know whether or not I am off the subject under discussion. However, I wondered whether that part of the schedule had any effect on this salt mine. I should like to ask that question of the minister.

Mr. Speaker: It is my view that perhaps these questions should be more limited to committee study when the individual items or the schedules are under discussion rather than be asked when the principle of the bill is under discussion. Is the house ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the standing committee on railways, canals, and telegraph lines.

AERONAUTICS ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING BOARDS OF INQUIRY, ETC.

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Aeronautics Act to authorize the Minister of Transport to establish boards of inquiry to investigate aircraft accidents, to give such boards the necessary power to carry out their functions and to provide for the expenses of witnesses appearing before these boards, and to provide further for certain changes in connection with the administration of the act.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Chown in the chair.

The Chairman: Shall the resolution carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall I report the resolution?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Pickersgill: What is the matter? It was carried.

The Chairman: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Pickersgill: It cannot be said that we are not co-operating.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Balcer thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-92, to amend the Aeronautics Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

CONSTRUCTION OF BRANCH LINE FROM NEPISIGUIT JUNCTION, N.B.

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to authorize and provide for the construction of a line of railway in the province of New Brunswick, by Canadian National Railway Company, from Nepisiguit Junction for a distance of 15 miles to the property of Brunswick Mining and Smelting Corporation Limited, at a total estimated expenditure of $1,450,000, not to be exceeded by more than fifteen per cent; to authorize the issue by the said Railway Company of securities that may be guaranteed by Her Majesty in right of Canada to finance the construction of the said line; and in order that the said railway company may forthwith proceed with the construction of the said line of railway, to authorize temporary loans to the said railway company out of the consolidated revenue fund upon terms and conditions prescribed by the governor in council and secured by securities of the said railway company.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Chown in the chair.

The Chairman: Shall the resolution carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Chairman, I must admit that I am a little bit hesitant to get to my feet and speak on this matter. I am almost afraid of talking myself out. May I say I was very thankful to the committee for the speed with which they carried the previous resolution standing in my name on the order paper. I must admit that I expected at least 27 speeches when we decided to include 27 harbours in the previous bill. I imagine they will come on another day.

The present resolution seeks approval to introduce legislation to authorize the Canadian National Railways Company to construct a branch line of railway in the province of New Brunswick, from Nepisiguit Junction, which is 3.7 miles south of Bathurst, in a westerly direction to the mining property of Brunswick Mining and Smelting Corporation Limited, lying approximately in the middle of the westerly half of the parish of Bathurst, Gloucester county, New Brunswick. The length of this branch will be approximately 15 miles and the estimated cost of construction $1,450,000, being $96,667 per mile.

Brunswick Mining and Smelting Corporation Limited has expended a substantial sum in establishing large deposits of zinc and lead ore, containing some copper and silver, in the area concerned and is currently preparing one of its properties, known as project No. 12, for production. The company has requested rail service to serve its mine and mill at this point of development by January, 1964. It is expected that it will take approximately a year to construct the line and it is planned to start clearing and preparing the right of way this winter, as soon as parliamentary authority has been obtained for the construction.

As in the case of construction of similar branch lines in the past to serve industry, Canadian National has entered into an agreement with the mining company, wherein a guarantee is given that the industry will ship a minimum volume of traffic over the line for at least ten years and that appropriate penalties will be paid if during any year of the term the shipments fall below the minimum volume agreed to.

As I have stated when similar bills have been before the house, the government supports and encourages capital projects submitted by the railway management which can be recognized as self-liquidating. The present project being in that category the government is pleased to commend it to the consideration of the house.

Railway revenues which will be received from the traffic guaranteed by the operations of the mining company will yield a reasonable surplus after meeting all expenses of operation and maintenance of the branch line, the cost of handling this traffic on the remainder of the system, interest on the cost of building the new line and interest and depreciation on the necessary equipment. The project is one which will assist in the further development of this part of the country. It is a sound one from an economic standpoint, and I am sure it will be favourably regarded by hon. members.

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Chairman, I wish to thank the minister for his explanation in introducing the resolution preceding the bill which will provide for the construction of 15 miles of railway in my constituency of Gloucester in the province of New Brunswick. This construction has been made possible by the action taken by the present government of New Brunswick, which has urged the Brunswick Mining and Smelting Corporation interests to proceed with the development of this ore body or lose their privilege. Following this action by the government of New Brunswick financial arrangements have been made, notwithstanding the difficulties in present market conditions for base metals, and actually over 200 men are employed in the construction of a concentrator.

I can assure the minister that we approve of this legislation and I hope it will receive the full co-operation of the house as, unlike some other similar bills which have been introduced in the house in recent months, I might almost say—I recall one before the dissolution of the last parliament—tenders have already been called in this case. In fact, public tenders were called on November 29 for the clearing, grubbing and grading of the right of way for this line. When tenders were called it was mentioned that the contract would not be awarded before parliamentary authority was granted to proceed with the construction of the line.

Therefore I ask for the co-operation of the house in supporting this measure so that construction can proceed without delay and provide employment in an area where employment is badly needed at this time. Such a development means a lot to the province of New Brunswick and particularly to the northeastern section of the province. It is a move in the right direction and we are looking forward within not too many years to the construction of a smelter to take care of the production of Brunswick Mining and Smelting Corporation and other companies operating in the area.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, the previous speaker was looking around the house when he referred to the difficulties in building branch lines and one wonders which one he was referring to. Is it the one into Gaspe? Is it the one up to Chibougamau? Is it the one to Esterhazy? Is it the one up to the Great Slave country? Branch lines are always interesting because of certain recent developments such as the MacPherson commission recommendations, which set out very clearly that branch lines should not be built unless they can be remunerative to the organization that is going to run them.

Our interest in this legislation was aroused, of course, since the government gave an indication that it really does not give a hoot about the remuneration but that the matter all depends on whether the branch line can have some political effect. Therefore I was pleased to hear from the minister that this is a remunerative venture and that it has been so decided by the management of Canadian National. We will look forward to hearing more about this line in the committee. I should like to tell the minister that one of the things that is very hard to come by is the low cost of this line as it is estimated here. It must be very easy construction if they can build a 15 mile stretch for this price.

The minister also gave no indication where the concentrate, which we assume will be produced, will be shipped. The hon. member for Gloucester also indicated that in time it is hoped there will be a smelter, but if there is going to be a smelter in time, I suppose in five or six years, we wonder what is the efficacy of building a branch line just for hauling goods in. In the case of most mining properties, particularly base metal operations, normally the hauling in is not too great unless there is some particular chemical coming in in great quantities. Therefore one might wonder why a railroad is needed.

These remarks are not to be taken as objections to the bill but just as an indication that, keeping the Gaspe development from Matane in mind and remembering Esterhazy, we will be quite vigilant when this bill goes before the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines. I hope that some of those members of the house, such as the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George, who were vigilant in committee quite recently on behalf of these wonderful private enterprise organizations will be there to take just as keen an interest in this effort that is going to be made by the publicly owned railway of Canada.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Balcer thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-93, respecting the construction of a line of railway in the province of New Brunswick by Canadian National Railway Company from Nepisiguit Junction on the Bathurst subdivision of the Canadian National Railway in a southerly and westerly direction for a distance of approximately 15 miles to the property of Brunswick Mining and Smelting Corporation Limited.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the said bill be read a second time?

Some hon. Members: Now.

Mr. Chevrier: Now.

Mr. Speaker: Agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Balcer moved the second reading of the bill.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, as evidence of further co-operation from this side of the house, if the minister will undertake to send the bill to the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines we will waive our right of discussion at this time subject, of course, to the approval of the other two parties, and when the bill comes back from the committee we will then discuss it in the usual manner.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines.

COAL PRODUCTION ASSISTANCE ACT

ADJUSTMENT OF RATE AND TERMS OF REPAYMENT

The house resumed from Wednesday, November 28, consideration of the motion of Mr. Martineau for the second reading of Bill No. C-64, to amend the Coal Production Assistance Act.

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Speaker, it is not my intention to speak at any great length on this bill. The history of the Coal Production Assistance Act has already been outlined by the minister and the hon. member for Inverness-Richmond (Mr. MacEachen). I should like simply to add that it has been a very useful act in so far as the coal mining industry in Nova Scotia, and indeed in New Brunswick, is concerned, but more particularly in Nova Scotia where the largest production of coal takes place.

As you are aware, Mr. Speaker, the coal mining industry in Nova Scotia, as in the United States and other parts of the world, has been going through a very difficult period over the past number of years, due to intense competition from other sources of energy. However, I do not doubt that the industry would have been in an even more difficult position if this act had not been in force, along with other widespread measures that have been taken by this government to assist during this rather serious period.

Let me give the house an example of what I mean. In my constituency there were two large coal mines operated by Old Sydney Collieries Limited of the Dominion Coal Company, one situated at Florence and the other at Sydney Mines. There are also smaller mines owned and operated by other companies.

The Dominion Coal Company obtained a large loan under the provisions of this act and completely modernized and mechanized their mine at Sydney Mines, which is known as Princess colliery. Many changes were made in their coal handling facilities on the surface and underground, among which was the erection of a modern coal washing and screening plant. As a result of this modernization, both below and above the surface, this mine was in a position to meet competition, as well as any mine could be, when traditional markets for coal began to be lost to oil, hydro power and natural gas.

It also had a further effect. In 1961 Florence colliery was closed and over 500 men found themselves without employment. However, since there was a market for coal from Princess colliery the work force at that mine was greatly increased. The result was that a large number of men from the Florence mine were employed immediately, and within a comparatively short period all the men put out of work by the closing of Florence were placed in Princess, which is only about three miles from their homes.

I might also add that the Bras d'Or Coal Company in my constituency, has also obtained loans under this act to enable it to develop and improve its coal mining operations. It would appear therefore that the coal mining industry in Nova Scotia has to some extent become stabilized. In 1961 the total production was just over 4,300,000 tons and the indications are that it will be about the same this year, and it should be remembered that a third mine was closed in August of this year.

So far as employment is concerned the closing of this last mine presented the most difficult problem of all. The employees displaced could not be absorbed into the working force of the other collieries, and the placing of what are known as permanent employees from this mine into other mines has caused some difficulty. In order to assist in the problem, the government of the province of Nova Scotia has instituted a pension plan for coal miners between 60 and 65 years of age in the New Waterford area, whereby those who have reached their sixtieth birthday can retire. Their places in the mines are then taken by men made idle by the closure of this last mine. I understand that close to 300 have taken advantage of this plan which is of considerable help in solving the problem, and the federal government has co-operated with the province in the financing of the plan.

I urge that the government, and I trust the minister is listening, through the dominion coal board and under the provisions of this bill would extend to the Dominion Coal Company every assistance and co-operation in the event that the company is desirous of erecting a wash plant, as it had planned a few years ago. This would provide the means whereby the coal could be made much more marketable.

Summed up in brief, if a better quality of coal is provided at the mine this would mean more sales, and more sales will naturally mean more employment for our coal miners.

The amendments contained in the bill will not, as far as I know, affect any companies in Nova Scotia so far as the minimum rate of repayment is concerned, but the bill can be, and will be, of assistance in so far as it deals with the question of repayment where a second loan is obtained before the first one is wholly repaid.

In conclusion let me say that the leaders of the united mine workers of district 26, particularly President William Marsh, Mr. Stephen Dolhanty, Mr. Michael Higgins and Mr. John Delaney, and also the provincial and federal governments and the Dominion Coal Company are to be highly commended for all their efforts towards alleviating a situation that could otherwise have been much more serious. Before I take my seat I should like to quote from a recent statement made by President Marsh, which appeared in the October 29 issue of the Cape Breton Post. This was a report of an address he made to the members of the Princess local of the United Mine Workers of America and I have no doubt Mr. Marsh had in mind the Coal Production Assistance Act and other measures when he spoke as he did. The report reads as follows:

> As part of the brighter picture presented by President Marsh, a statement was also made by him to the effect that, as far as Dosco is concerned, stability has been established in the Sydney Mines—Florence area. In one year following the closure of Florence colliery all the physically fit permanent and temporary employees of that mine have been placed in Princess, along with the temporary workers of the latter who were laid off at the time of the Florence closure.
> Referring to No. 16 closure in New Waterford, the union chief stated that the provincial government's pension plan is having a tremendous effect in cushioning harmful results that were expected to follow it. To date, he said, 290 applications have been made by miners in the category acceptable, making room for the same number of miners that would have been bumped . . .
> He said that the federal government's 30 cent subsidy in the eastern Canadian non-subvention area has had a very favourable effect and that it looks promising for the marketing of the coal produced.

I would hope that the minister would see fit, before this session is over, to bring in other measures that will definitely assist the coal industry.

Mr. H. J. Robichaud (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, in order to follow the trend which is obvious in the house tonight, my remarks will be very brief. First I wish to express the regret of the hon. member for Inverness-Richmond (Mr. MacEachen) who had intended to speak on second reading of this bill, but he is unable to be present tonight on account of illness. In introducing the resolution prior to the moving of this bill the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys explained the purpose of the bill, which is to amend the Coal Production Assistance Act.

The amendments contained in the bill are of a minor nature, being to reduce the minimum rate of repayment in respect of a loan made by a mine producing sub-bituminous or lignite coal, which brings a lower price on the market than bituminous or semi-anthracite coal, and furthermore the extension of the agreement made with the Avon Coal Company of New Brunswick.

It is evident, Mr. Speaker, that this bill will by no means solve the serious problems of the coal industry in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. Fortunately, in New Brunswick we now have a provincial government that is co-operating with the coal industry and at the present time we have under construction at Grand Lake a thermal generating plant which will use coal. It is estimated that approximately 100,000 additional tons of coal will be used annually when this plant is in operation. This policy is quite different from the policy which existed under the previous provincial government of New Brunswick, when they were building plants to use oil instead of coal.

Before this bill receives second reading I would hope the minister would expose to the house the position of the government on the recommendations contained in the report of the Rand commission. This report has been in the hands of the government for over two years. It was followed by a study by an interdepartmental committee appointed by the government to study the recommendations of that report. When I asked the minister just a few days ago what position the government had taken on the recommendations of the Rand commission, the only reply I could get was that, following the practice of the government such announcements would be made in due course. We feel that two years has been long enough for the government to arrive at a decision.

If this is the position this government intends to take on reports from royal commissions, we ask ourselves what is the use of appointing royal commissions. Is it only a delaying tactic? Is it only being done previous to an election in order to change the minds of the people or to distract them from the serious problems which are affecting a certain industry at a particular time? Therefore I hope that before this bill receives second reading the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys will agree to inform the house on the position of the government. After all, it has been promised to this house on three or four different occasions by his two immediate predecessors. I hope we now have a minister who will keep the promise made by his predecessors and will tell us the position of the government on the recommendations contained in the Rand report.

Mr. R. R. Southam (Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, on rising to speak on this occasion in support of the amendments to the Coal Production Assistance Act as set out in Bill No. C-64 which is at present before us, I first want to commend our Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys (Mr. Martineau) for the alacrity he has shown in getting this very necessary piece of legislation before the house. I would also like to congratulate the minister on his appointment to the portfolio of mines and technical surveys. I am sure he will enjoy every success in carrying out these new responsibilities.

Mr. Speaker, some of the members of this house, and particularly the new ones, may not appreciate my interest in this particular bill, but I would like to point out for the benefit of those members and for the sake of this discussion that approximately 20 per cent of Canada's total coal deposits lie within the boundaries of my great riding of Moose Mountain in southeastern Saskatchewan. This coal industry is situated close to and in the general area of Estevan, Bienfait and Roche Percée and is developed by several well known companies, including the Great West Coal Co. Ltd., the Manitoba and Saskatchewan Coal Co. Ltd., and the Dominion Briquettes and Chemicals Ltd. The former two companies employ 75 to 95 men and are capable of turning out, or have a capacity of 100 railroad cars of coal per day in peak periods. The Dominion Briquette plant turns out the only carbonized briquette manufactured in Canada and is well suited for home and industrial use. This plant has also recently become well known for its high quality Rodeo brand barbecue briquettes, which are finding a very important place in the new and expanding market in North America for this popular necessity.

This lignite industry, like a great many other industries has had to meet the competition that has become so prevalent in this modern world. In this case large sources of gas and oil have been developed in the same general area as the lignite coal deposits, and as a result have complemented or to a large extent have replaced the fuel supply in both the domestic and commercial fields. It is this situation which has not only affected the coal industry adversely in my area of Saskatchewan, but also the industry in other parts of Canada. It was because of this situation that it was found necessary to introduce the Maritime Coal Production Assistance Act in 1949. This act was later amended in 1959 to eliminate the word "maritime" from the title. The original intent of the act, and an intent that still remains basically the same, was to provide loans to the various coal companies throughout Canada to provide them with capital to modernize or provide more automation for their plants and thus cut down production overhead costs and help them maintain a more competitive position in both local and world markets.

The minister went into some considerable detail in this respect regarding the amendment to this act when he introduced it into the house, and I will not transgress on the time of the house by repeating these details. I would, however, like to say that in the old act brought in under the former government there was a serious discrepancy that prejudiced the position of the lignite industry when it required to make use of the benefits under this act. This discrepancy was in the repayment of loan terms of the act. Under the former act the repayment by coal companies borrowing for modernization was assessed on the basis of 30 cents per ton semi-anually for each ton of coal produced in each year. This formula appeared fair until it was applied to the lignite industry, when the discrepancy I have previously mentioned became apparent. The average wholesale value for bituminous or semi-anthracite coal is roughly $8 to $10 per ton at the pithead, whereas the average wholesale price of subbituminous and lignite coal ranges down in value to the lignite industry in my area, where the average value per ton ranges from $1.90 to $2 per ton at the minehead.

It immediately becomes apparent that percentagewise 30 cents per ton repayment on a wholesale value of $10 per ton is much smaller than 30 cents per ton on a $2 per ton value; or conversely, the 30 cents per ton repayment on the $2 per ton lignite is proportionately much too high. It was on this basis that I had the pleasure of making direct representation to the acting minister of mines and technical surveys, the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources, and to Senator Flynn, the former minister of mines and technical surveys.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member, but I think he knows the rule about reading speeches. I have not said anything about this in the past, and I do not want to pick on the hon. member particularly; but I think that now we have been in session for some two and a half months we could adhere more closely to this rule. While it is permissible to have notes for statistical information, and so forth, I think hon. members will all recognize that they were not so long ago very eloquent without any notes, otherwise they would not be here. I do not think the fact that they were elected to this house made them lose their natural eloquence. I would prefer that we come back to the idea of more spontaneous speeches. This applies throughout the house.

Mr. Southam: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will try to refer only occasionally to my notes. It was on the basis of the foregoing that I had the pleasure of making representation to the acting minister of mines and technical surveys, and then to the present Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys. Through those representations this important amendment to which I have been referring has been brought into being. And, as a consequence, our present Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys has introduced this bill into the house to amend the act to eliminate the present anomaly I have pointed out. This important amendment I have been referring to, in effect reduces the repayment of loans on a per ton basis to 30 cents, 24 cents and 18 cents respectively, according to the aforementioned qualities of coal.

Mr. Speaker, this action has received the approval of the lignite coal industry, and I must also say at this point that the appointment last May of Mr. John Malcolm Brodie, managing director of the Great West Coal Company to the vacancy on the dominion coal board found widespread approval in the lignite coal industry in my riding. Mr. Brodie's father, now retired and living in Victoria, had a long association with the coal industry, not only in Saskatchewan but throughout Canada, and was chiefly responsible through years of effort and research for bringing the lignite coal industry of Saskatchewan to its present high standard of development, and state of efficiency.

Mr. Brodie's appointment to this board places him in a position to give the lignite industry of Saskatchewan the representation it so sorely needed in the higher councils dealing with the coal economy of Canada.

Mr. Speaker, at this point I should like to express my personal thanks to the Prime Minister for taking cognizance of my representations on behalf of Mr. Brodie and for allowing me the privilege last May to make the press release announcing Mr. Brodie's appointment to this important position.

Mr. Speaker, these timely actions on the part of the Prime Minister and the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys once again demonstrate the positive action this government takes to assist any sector of our economy that may be encountering difficulties.

Mr. H. R. MacEwan (Pictou): Mr. Speaker—

An hon. Member: What's the matter? Don't you want it to go through?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think that any of those remarks by hon. members who have not got the floor in regard to hon. members rising from any part of the house are quite improper. I think we have got over the week end. We saw a fair amount of cheering and heckling one way or another and I believe we can now conduct our business without that.

Mr. MacEwan: I am sure my constituents in the county Pictou will appreciate the fact that certain hon. members opposite do not want to hear me make representations on their behalf. I listened with interest to the remarks of the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys. During the few years I have been in this house I have listened to some of the other ministers; I commend the present minister in this regard. He is minister of mines and also the minister responsible for technical surveys. I have had something to do with the hon. gentleman in that respect and I am sure he will show great sympathy for our problems in a field which is so important to the maritime provinces. We are now being asked to consider the amendment of the Coal Production Assistance Act. The history of this act was given by the hon. member for Inverness-Richmond (Mr. MacEachen). As we all know, amendments are necessary from time to time in connection with this important act so as to keep various measures flexible. Coal mining is still an important industry in Canada. It is a very tough industry. Acts such as the one we are considering are most necessary to provide needed funds to the various companies. I understand, having spoken to officials of the dominion coal board several years ago, that this act provides for assistance to mines presently in production. As far as I know it does not include within its ambit the lending of money for the mechanization of new mines. I am sure, of course, that if new mines were opened in a constituency such as my own, or in any part of Cape Breton island or, for that matter, in this country, the government would not hesitate to bring in an amendment to make the act apply to new mines as well.

The mechanization of mines is most important, as was emphasized by the hon. member for Inverness-Richmond. It is true that the mechanization of coal mines in Nova Scotia, particularly by the Dominion Coal Company, has not proved as successful as was hoped, but it was none the less absolutely necessary. This has been proved by the experience in the MacBean mine in my own area which has been turned, by mechanization, into an efficient operation. In the last number of years, as far as I can recall, there has been no lost time in that mine.

I listened to the remarks of the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Robichaud) when he spoke about the great provincial government in New Brunswick which was co-operating with the mining industry by setting up a thermal plant. May I point out that the government of the province of Nova Scotia operates a thermal plant at Trenton in my area and that this same government with the assistance of the Atlantic Provinces Power Development Act has provided for an extension to that plant costing several million dollars, and for transmission lines both within the province and between Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. This plant has been a godsend to us because it takes a great deal of the production of the MacBean mine, the Greenwood mine and the Drummond mine.

Finally, I noted that the hon. member for Cape Breton North and Victoria (Mr. Muir) put forward a submission that if a new wash plant was needed in his area this should be provided. And in the Montreal Gazette of November of this year, Mr. A. L. Fairley, president of the Dominion Coal Company is reported to have said—I will paraphrase his words—that there are new bright spots on the horizon for the coal industry which it was hoped would serve to make up any losses. There was already a halt in the sales decline.

Mr. Fairley went on to say:

> Now it is planned to spend more money on capital improvement and modernization in the immediate future. Capital expenditures over the next few years will be increased at a rate somewhat above that which has existed during the past three years.

Again, I commend the minister on the introduction of amendments to this important act. I know it applies to the province of New Brunswick among others and that it is important for the mines in that area. As I have already stated, the revision of acts such as this must constantly be kept in mind as must be measures such as the Atlantic Provinces Development Act which has helped to bring cheap power to the maritimes while at the same time helping our coal producers. Submissions will, I know, be made to the government from time to time to keep a watchful eye on these matters, to be flexible and ready to come forward with improvements to legislation which is most important to the maritime provinces as well as to other parts of this country, as was pointed out by the hon. member for Moose Mountain (Mr. Southam).

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Before I begin my few brief remarks, Mr. Speaker, I can assure you they are the result of spontaneous combustion. I always enjoy reading bills of this nature and realizing while I read them that they are an illustration of the great exponents of free enterprise enjoying certain advantages under the welfare state.

I am sure many of these gentlemen who are heads of these corporations will have been along to meetings of chambers of commerce of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association and would have spoken quite harshly last summer against the rapidly developing welfare state. But their criticism is always directed to the poor, the crippled person, the old age pensioner or someone of that kind who needs assistance because of ill health, while at the same time they unblushingly come before this parliament to receive assistance in the form of grants or loans.

An hon. Member: Order.

Mr. Herridge: Someone shouted "order". I am strictly in order, as usual.

I freely admit, and I think most members would admit, that this is a form of welfare under capitalism, under the exponents of free enterprise. It is our responsibility to see that if this is of benefit to certain sections of Canada, and to the coal industry in those sections, the money is used to the advantage of the Canadian people, to the advantage of the employees and to the advantage of the Canadian consumer.

I suggest that before this debate on second reading concludes the minister should inform the house what responsibility these companies accept toward their employees when they receive loans from the federal government. What responsibilities do they accept to the Canadian consumers? I have had complaints from constituents of mine that since these loans were granted—and in some cases these companies were primarily concerned at the present time with supplying overseas markets, such as the Japanese coal market—less attention has been paid to the needs of Canadian consumers with regard to quality and price. I am told by some of my constituents, who have complained to their local coal dealers, that those coal dealers told them the quality of coal which they have been receiving since these large exports of lignite coal were undertaken to Japan has been lower than it was previously, and the price has increased. I think the minister should inform the house what agreement the company has with the government with respect to the reports it makes to the coal board, with respect to the responsibility it accepts toward its employees, and with respect to the responsibility it accepts towards the Canadian consumer as to quality and as to price.

Mr. Speaker, in my opinion this legislation should be referred to the committee on mines, forests and waters so that the members on that committee can ask questions and seek information, because I am of the opinion that when we assist, and extend welfare to these companies they should accept the same sort of means tests that the individual in Canada accepts when he accepts welfare under certain circumstances from the province. The members of this group would like to see this bill sent to the committee so that the members of the committee could inquire into all these things and make certain that these loans are being used to the greatest possible advantage of the Canadian people as a whole, of the employees directly concerned, and of the consumers of coal.

Mr. Lawrence E. Kindt (Macleod): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure indeed to participate in the discussion on Bill No. C-64.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Kindt: I am very pleased to see the opposition give me that ovation. It is not very often that you find them very charitable. But let me say this, that this bill which has been drafted for the purpose of assisting the coal operators and miners in all parts of Canada is appreciated in the west, and while we have not made full use of the act, its objectives are clear. These objectives are to assist operators to lower their costs of production and to make them more competitive in the foreign and domestic coal markets.

Let me deal first with the province of Alberta. We have there approximately 7 per cent of the world's supply of coal. How many hon. members knew that before? What we have lacked most in the past has been markets. The market we did have for steam engines for the C.P.R. has now almost completely vanished. Therefore, in 1957 the miners and operators in the Crowsnest pass, which is part of the constituency I have the honour to represent, found themselves without coal markets, and may I say, in a dreadful position. I recommended to the government of Canada that we subsidize the shipment of coal to Japan. But we were up against a number of problems. The Japanese market had not been using any of our coal prior to that, and it was necessary to send trial shipments. This was accomplished and the Japanese, as well as ourselves through our research council, and the coal operators themselves, made tests to determine the metallurgical value of Canadian coal and coking and steel production. I should like to say that the coal in western Canada is not all of the same quality. Some of it is bituminous coal used for firing stoves and such like. I have in mind that which is mined at Drumheller. But in the Crowsnest pass you have high quality metallurgical coal of approximately 1,300 B.T.U.'s and it is used primarily for steam production and in the steel industries. It is shipped to Japan and there mixed with their domestic coal for steel production.

It took time to work out these arrangements, but the recommendation I made in 1957 was looked upon with favour by this government, and a few thousand tons were shipped during the first year for experimental purposes. Then gradually over the years it has been stepped up, until last year about 700,000 tons of coal were shipped to Japan. In the coming year it is expected that this figure will be increased to 750,000 tons. There is a small subsidy on this coal of about $3.15 per ton. May I say that those shipments of coal have gone a long way in preserving the coal industry of western Canada, and also providing the people there with good homes, with jobs, and with all those things you look for in a given area. It has been these shipments of coal to Japan which have helped to keep that area alive.

That is also true not only on the Alberta side of Crowsnest pass but at points west in British Columbia. The miners in the Crowsnest pass appreciate the efforts which have been made by this government to get those coal shipments rolling to Japan. The operators have co-operated 100 per cent. The coal board has made a searching investigation of the cost of mining coal. There is an attempt on the part of the coal board, the operators, the miners, and everyone else associated with the shipment of coal to Japan, to reduce costs so as to get this subvention down to a point where it will stand more upon its own feet. In other words, what we want are lower costs at the loading facilities in Vancouver. I may say that those loading facilities have reduced costs to some extent. We want lower costs of mining, and technological improvements in the mines have lowered costs. In the future we may expect a lot more by way of lower costs. By stepping up the volume of coal to 750,000 tons, the operators themselves have been able to lower their own profit margins and likewise the transportation costs of the C.P.R. Now that volume shipments are being made the C.P.R. is giving consideration to lower costs of freight. In other words, this movement of coal to Japan has made a place for itself and it should remain over the years as an export market for this high quality metallurgical coal mined in the Crowsnest pass.

As I have already said, some five years ago in the Crowsnest pass people were moving out; houses were vacant; little painting was being done and there was a downcast look in every nook and corner. Today, however, when you go into the Crowsnest pass you find it is a thriving, booming area and the people are optimistic. They have jobs. The economy is booming and there is very little unemployment. In other words, the point I wish to make is that this movement of coal to Japan has been a success and it will undoubtedly move in the direction of being more and more of a success.

We are looking forward to industrialization in the Crowsnest pass and the establishment of petrochemical industries. With this vast quantity of hydrocarbons it is possible to make not only a few of those commodities which are commonly known to people but also with the help of natural gas some 10,000 products which will be brought out to help and to assist mankind. You can name dozens and dozens of products which can be made from the hydrocarbons found in coal and also in petroleum.

In closing I wish to congratulate the new minister on his accession to the portfolio he now administers. I can assure him that, in so far as the west is concerned, we are looking forward to a continuation of this coal market in Japan. We are looking forward perhaps to some small expansion of it, if possible, if costs can be lowered. The people of the Crowsnest pass appreciate the efforts of this government—and they have said this to me time and again—since the starting and establishing of this market for coal in Japan.

Mr. R. G. L. Fairweather (Royal): Mr. Speaker, I would be neglectful of my duty to the Minto-Chipman coal area of the constituency I represent if I did not say a word or two about this bill which will enable one of the two most modern coal producers in the Minto-Chipman coal complex to retain a very substantial and important coal market in the United States. This bill will make this result possible. The second feature which will ensure the retention of this important market was taken early in May of this year when the government revalued the Canadian dollar. Both these things have been of great benefit to the exporters of coal in the United States.

Avon Coal Company is a modern company using the best of equipment. Their labour relations are good and their ideas are progressive. They are being substantially assisted by the government of Canada in this enlightened policy. I too should like to share with others the congratulations that have been extended to the minister and to thank him particularly for the third section of this bill.

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I recognize the hon. member for York South.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I will not take more than a minute of the time of the house in order to say merely this. I do not represent a coal mining district in Canada—

An hon. Member: Then why are you talking?

Mr. Lewis: I am talking because I believe the bill before the house concerns an industry which is and for many years has been of vital interest to the country as a whole. Since the Carroll commission report, from which the legislation which is being amended by this bill originally derived, there has been another commission and another report, namely the Rand report. Prior to the Carroll commission there were a number of other commissions inquiring into the coal industry of the country and, particularly of the Atlantic provinces.

Over the years those of us who have tried to understand the economy of Canada a little bit have read some of these commission reports. We have found that from time to time some legislation is passed patching up some immediate difficulty, making some improvement here, or providing some kind of financial assistance there. However, at no point in the history of the past decades has any government or parliament of this country done that which in my respectful submission is essential, namely to evolve for the coal industry of Canada a program which, as far as human beings can do so, will take care of the industry and of the people dependant on it in a long range way.

Despite all the legislation we have passed, one reads in the papers of continuing and increasing unemployment in the coal areas. One sees, as I did about a year ago when I visited Cape Breton island, that mines are still being closed, with the miners working about half the time during the year. They take turns at being employed and turns at being unemployed. We hear that the industry is still in an unhealthy state, and that we have to continue giving assistance from year to year. I rose merely to express the wish that I am sure is shared by many members in this House of Commons, namely that the time may come when the government of this country will sit down and work out a program for the industry; will seek new markets for the products, and new ways of dealing with coal; and will set up a program that would make the industry a viable one that would not require the kind of assistance that has been required in the past. In the meantime, it requires that help. We will, of course, support the bill before the house as it improves the situation a little bit more, just as legislation has done over the years.

When another matter comes before the house in the next day or two I hope that some more long range plans will be presented to deal not only with the whole of the Atlantic provinces but with the coal industry, which is the basis of the principle of this bill.

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Mr. Speaker: I must warn hon. members that if the minister speaks now he will close the debate.

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Hon. Paul Martineau (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): Mr. Speaker, I wish to be very brief at this time. First, may I thank all hon. members who have participated in this debate. Their contributions and suggestions have been most useful. I regret that the hon. member for Inverness-Richmond (Mr. MacEachen) is unavoidably absent tonight because I know he would have had certain points of view to put before the house on this matter.

With regard to remarks of the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Robichaud), the purpose of the present legislation, as he mentioned, is to implement minor amendments to the Coal Production Assistance Act. These amendments are designed specifically to help those companies which have already contracted loans under the terms of the act to meet their commitments with greater ease and to fulfil more adequately the purpose of the legislation, that of providing financial means for the operators to produce coal more efficiently. The hon. members for Cape Breton North and Victoria (Mr. Muir), Moose Mountain (Mr. Southam), Pictou (Mr. MacEwan), Macleod (Mr. Kindt) and Royal (Mr. Fairweather), who spoke on the bill, have shown by specific examples how this legislation has helped the coal industry in their respective constituencies, areas or provinces.

I should like to refer in a little more detail to the remarks made by the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge). Although under the present bill we are providing financial assistance to coal operators, he may be assured that we are still committed to the system of free enterprise. I can assure the hon. member that the bill, far from impairing that system or philosophy, tends on the contrary to reinforce it because it provides a means for private operators to produce more coal at cheaper rates and also to assist them in developing proper markets. The hon. member for Kootenay West was a bit worried whether the responsibilities of the companies that are being assisted under this act are being properly discharged with regard, first, to the employees of the mines and, second, with regard to the consuming public.

So far as the employees are concerned, the precise fact is that this assistance helps the coal mines to keep their employees at work and to provide better working conditions for the miners. With regard to the consuming public, I would point out that the coal exported under assistance on movements of coal to Japan is not at all the type that is used in the domestic market for home furnaces and other uses. As a matter of fact, before the market in Japan was developed no market at all existed for this type of coal. It is a bituminous coking coal that forms in slacks and is not suitable for furnace consumption. Therefore the hon. member may rest assured that such assistance as is being provided does not affect the availability of other types of coal for the people of his constituency or his province.

However, as I told him personally before, if he has any particulars or complaints I am sure the coal board will make a full investigation and assure itself that no one is lacking in supplies of coal because, as most of the hon. members who participated in the debate outlined, the main problem affecting the coal industry today is markets. The policy of the government has been to keep the coal industry as active as possible by providing assistance and by developing markets.

The hon. member for Gloucester asked if I would make a policy declaration at this time stemming from the report of the Rand commission which investigated the coal industry a few years ago. I am not prepared to make an extensive statement in that regard this evening but I hope to be able to delve into more detail when the estimates of the dominion coal board are before the committee of supply. The present policy, of which the legislation before the house is a mere extension and enabling modification, is the one that was evolved in the late 1920's for the purpose of providing assistance on the movement of Canadian coal from the producing areas in eastern and western Canada to the large consuming areas in central Canada. Over the intervening years this assistance has amounted to some $150 million and has provided for the movement of some 72 million tons of Canadian coal. In addition, as hon. members will realize, it has provided substantial employment to coal miners mostly in eastern Canada but more latterly in certain parts of western Canada and Alberta in particular.

In 1959 the Rand commission was appointed and its recommendations have been carefully reviewed, particularly in the light of various representations and objections received. The commissioner has set out in broad outline in the text of his report his findings and proposed remedies while the means for applying the proposals are set out in many specific recommendations. Under the present condition of change in the coal industry it has been our belief that the time is not yet ripe for the application of any radical, new and specific proposals or approach. However, at the same time, and I should like to emphasize this, the policy has been directed not only to maintaining the increased rate of assistance initiated in 1959 but to adopting many of the more general proposals set out in the body of the report.

Hon. members know that three mines have closed in Cape Breton; but as a result of action to spread out these closures and to provide alternative employment the impact on employees has been much less. Many of the men were taken on by the remaining mines and as a result employment has been kept at a rather stable level in the coal industry because of these measures. That is about all I have to say in closing the debate on second reading, and I wish to terminate by assuring hon. members that their remarks will be most carefully considered.

Motion agreed to and bill read the second time.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, before I ask for the business of the house I am sure you would have no objection if I were to tell the house leader that we have co-operated today to the fullest extent with our friends on the other side by putting through the Freight Rates Reduction Act, the harbours bill, the aeronautics resolution and the resolution and bill having to do with a railway line in the province of New Brunswick. This is a very strong indication of our desire to assist the government in getting legislation through before the Christmas recess. However, our recompense for having done so has been a filibuster from the other side of the house on the Coal Production Assistance Act. Undoubtedly those of us who sit on this side could come to no other conclusion but that there was a filibuster by members on the other side who not only spoke on matters that had nothing to do with the bill but also spent a great deal of time discussing matters which would be much better discussed in the debate on the speech from the throne.

Having said that, perhaps the house leader might give some indication of what we could do tomorrow and the rest of the week, so that we can consider again to what extent and in what measure we can assist the government in getting on with its legislation.

Mr. Churchill: I would like to thank all hon. members of the house for their co-operation today. It has been a good day in regard to getting business through. I regret that the hon. member for Laurier had to introduce some remarks with regard to filibustering, which I think is unfair to hon. members coming from areas where coal is produced and who are interested in this particular problem.

I would like to call for tomorrow third reading of Bill C-3, an act to amend the Food and Drugs Act in the hope that there will not be an extended debate on the bill at that stage because I make the promise, all being well, that the special committee to consider and report upon various matters pertaining to drugs and insecticides will be called on Friday at the latest this week, the understanding being that during the course of the studies of that committee, things that pertain to Bill C-3 would be taken up by it.

The second item would be the resolution standing in the name of the Minister of National Revenue dealing with the Atlantic development board. The third item will be the resolution in the name of the Minister of Trade and Commerce dealing with the National Productivity Council Act. The fourth item will be committee stage of the bill which we have just completed on second reading, relating to coal production.

If the house moves as quickly tomorrow as it did today then we would consider as No. 5 Bill C-83, an act respecting industrial change and manpower adjustment. No. 6 would be Bill C-70, to provide for the safety of persons employed in federal works. If those are all completed I would then call items standing in the name of the Minister of Justice which have been called before. That, I think, would consume the time of the house for Tuesday and Wednesday.

I have already given notice that we expect to get on with the national economic development board measure on Thursday.

Mr. Douglas: May I direct a question to the house leader. It might save some debate on the drug act if it were possible for us to have a copy of the terms of reference for the special committee.

Mr. Churchill: It was introduced today.

It being five minutes after ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, December 4, 1962

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS

CONCURRENCE IN FIRST REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Alan Macnaughton (Mount Royal) presented the first report of the standing committee on public accounts and moved that the report be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

(Translation):

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

AMENDMENT TO REDUCE SALARY OF PRESIDENT

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): In the absence of the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) and at his request, may I have the unanimous consent of the house to introduce his bill?

Mr. Speaker: Does the house consent unanimously to the hon. member for Lapointe introducing the bill in the name of the hon. member for Villeneuve?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Some hon. Members: No.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

NUCLEAR WEAPONS—REFERENCE TO STATEMENT BY TRADE MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in view of the answer reported to have been given by the Minister of Trade and Commerce to a question asked him yesterday, whether nuclear arms were in Canadian custody at the present time: "No, not as far as I know", may I ask the Prime Minister whether he will inform this house, including his colleagues in the cabinet, whether Canada does possess nuclear weapons at this time?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): I am sure the hon. gentleman never made the statement in question, because each and every one of my colleagues knows what the house already knows, namely that we have not.

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Perhaps I might answer the Leader of the Opposition. I mentioned the atomic capability of the weapons used by our forces overseas, and the reporter mistook this to mean atomic weapons.

Mr. Pearson: A supplementary question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Would he inform the house what he meant by his reported answer yesterday in Toronto that the departments of government, other than the Department of National Defence, are all too large to know the details, that is about atomic weapons?

Mr. Hees: I am delighted to reply to the Leader of the Opposition and let him know the answer to his question. I was asked by the reporter concerning some questions about details of the weapons used by our forces, and I said that to get detailed information about those weapons he should, of course, refer to my colleague the Minister of National Defence.

Mr. Pearson: You were misquoted, then.

Mr. Hees: No, not at all.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I trust that we will not get into a minor debate here on national defence. The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I was under the impression that the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate was rising to ask a supplementary question, but if he was not, then—

Mr. Pickersgill: You were quite correct, sir.

Mr. Speaker: Then I will recognize him.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister a supplementary question about his interesting peregrinations in the University of Toronto. Would the minister explain to the house his reported statement that a study of Canada's anti-combines legislation is underway in Ottawa to search for a safe means of allowing industrial concentration to take place?

Mr. Speaker: With the greatest deference, I hardly think that is a supplementary. We were on the subject of nuclear weapons. If the hon. member for Kootenay West is on that narrow field he may ask a supplementary.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I will broaden the field; it is a question now. I should like to ask a question of the Minister of National Defence. Is NATO a nuclear power?

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, two of the countries of NATO and a third partially are nuclear powers. In other words, as the hon. member and I think all hon. members know, the United States and the United Kingdom both have nuclear weapons, and France is in process of building them. The hon. member asks whether NATO is a nuclear power. NATO is an alliance of nations, three of which have nuclear capabilities.

Mr. Pearson: May I ask a supplementary question of the minister. Could he inform the house how many NATO members have bilateral agreements with the United States for the control of nuclear weapons?

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Speaker, I do not think I am in a position at the moment to give that information. The information would have to come originally from the United States, which is one party to all the bilateral agreements which exist.

[Later:]

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister if he will now agree to the setting up of a special parliamentary committee on defence, in order that all members of the house including, and perhaps more particularly, members of the ministry may have an opportunity to inform themselves.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it is a most desirable objective that the hon. gentleman should have information, but in so far as a committee is concerned there has been no change in the attitude of the government.

NATO—INQUIRY AS TO SUITABILITY OF F-104 PLANE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): May I direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. In view of the report from Bonn yesterday to the effect that the Starfighter is unsuitable for the role assigned to it, may I ask the minister whether this is the same aircraft as that known as the CF-104, which is being manufactured for the Canadian NATO air division?

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I have not seen the report referred to. Until I have seen what it is I should not like to comment on this particular matter. The Starfighter is a name which is applied to the F-104. However, I might point out that the F-104 comes in several configurations. Some of them are strike reconnaissance planes, others are fighter bombers and still others are straight fighter aircraft.

COMBINES

REPORTED INQUIRY INTO METHODS OF PERMITTING INDUSTRIAL CONCENTRATION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Perhaps the Minister of Trade and Commerce, who was so anxious to do so a moment ago, would now answer my question.

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Yes, I would be very glad to. Consistent with the policy of this government and my department continually to seek ways in which Canadian companies and individuals can become more productive, and thereby provide more jobs for their fellow Canadians to work at—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I suggest with deference to both the questioner and the minister that we are not now back in the University of Toronto. Let us get on with the business of this house.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, the hon. gentleman made a statement in Toronto on government policy, or what purported to be on government policy, to the effect that the combines act was going to be changed to allow industrial concentration to take place. I suggest, sir, that is not a subject for debate, that is a proper subject for inquiry in the house. If government policy is to be announced in the University of Toronto, we are surely entitled to know about it here.

Mr. Speaker: I am not denying that for one moment. I was cutting off what I was beginning to feel was becoming a political debate instead of an answer.

Mr. Pickersgill: The minister was making a speech.

Mr. Speaker: Let us also watch our questions, as well as the answers.

Mr. Hees: Consistent with the aims of this government, of which I spoke a few moments ago, I did not announce any government policy. I simply informed the press conference at which I was speaking yesterday that my department is searching into ways and means which it could suggest to the justice department of amending the act so as to allow this very desirable circumstance to take place, which would result in more productivity on the part of Canadian companies without infringing upon the interests of the individual Canadian in any way whatsoever.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

ST. JOHN'S WEST, NEWFOUNDLAND—INQUIRY AS TO BY-ELECTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. R. Tucker (Trinity-Conception): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. It arises out of a reply he gave me on November 20, as recorded at page 1808 of Hansard. Does the Prime Minister not think that the residents of St. John's West, Newfoundland, are entitled to a representative in the House of Commons as soon as one can be elected?

Mr. Speaker: Order. It may be that the hon. gentleman may desire some information about a by-election. However, when he indicates at the beginning of his question "Does he not think that" I am sure he is inviting an argumentative answer. Within those limitations I think I will allow the question, but with some doubt. If the Prime Minister wishes to reply he may do so.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not know what the limitations are. Under law the government is required within a certain period of time to call by-elections. This government has called by-elections within a reasonable time. That course will be followed.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister a supplementary question?

Mr. Diefenbaker: No.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

An hon. Member: Dictator.

Mr. Pickersgill: More bad temper.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Tucker: May I ask a supplementary question. Does the Prime Minister think that a Liberal seat for our worthy leader at this time would be an appropriate New Year's gift?

Mr. Speaker: I think I will not comment on the question. I recognize the hon. member for Coast-Capilano.

INQUIRY AS TO CHRISTMAS RECESS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Prime Minister. For the convenience of aging members of parliament who have got beyond sitting up in a day coach, can the Prime Minister inform the house when he expects we will adjourn for Christmas so we can make the necessary arrangements for sleeping accommodation?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, that is a most desirable objective. I want the hon. gentleman to sleep and sleep comfortably at all times. We will try to give an answer to this question at an early date, having regard to the progress made with the matters that are before the house.

POWER

COLUMBIA RIVER—REPORTED TALKS RESPECTING SALE OF DOWNSTREAM BENEFITS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Jack Davis (Coast-Capilano): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. The minister was good enough on Friday to tell the house that the Canadian government was currently participating in negotiations to sell downstream benefit power in the United States. Why is it doing so when, according to article VIII of the Columbia river treaty, the terms under which this sale can be made are to be established "as soon as possible after the ratification date"?

Mr. Speaker: Order. When an hon. member says "Why is it doing so because" he is inviting argument or is advancing argument, and that procedure is quite contrary to standing order 39.

[Later:]

Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I have reworded my question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. What is the point of the current negotiations on the Columbia, when the terms under which downstream power is to be sold in the United States—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member will recognize immediately that he was arguing the point when he said "What is the point", in doing certain things, "if". I think he will agree that he is quite out of order.

HOUSING

REQUEST FOR GUARANTEES UNDER ACT ON MORTGAGES ON EXISTING HOMES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. S. P. Ryan (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I have given the Minister of Public Works notice of this question and I should like to put it to him now. In order immediately to further the winter works program, will National Housing Act guarantees on maximum first mortgage loans by private lenders on existing homes be made available, provided that all necessary and stipulated interior renovations and mortgage advances are made in the winter months, save for any needed advance or hold-back for completion of exterior work in the fall or spring?

Mr. Speaker: Order. It may be that the minister may wish to answer the question. However, I suggest to the hon. member that his question is rather long and involved.

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Public Works): The answer is that as I have indicated earlier, the suggestion which has been advanced on a number of occasions, not only by the national house building association, that mortgage advances on existing houses be covered under the National Housing Act is under consideration. When a decision is reached it will be announced in the ordinary way.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

COLUMBIA RIVER—CONSIDERATION OF TREATY BY COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Kootenay East): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the obvious misunderstanding and certainly the disagreement of opinion among important sectors of the people of Canada, would the Prime Minister consider placing the draft Columbia river treaty before a committee of parliament before the Christmas recess?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not agree in any way with the expression used by the hon. member as to any misunderstanding. As far as the question in particular is concerned, the answer is no.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INDIA—STATEMENT AS TO MILITARY AID REQUESTED

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I now wish to answer a question which was asked yesterday by the Leader of the Opposition in regard to artillery and long range mortars requested by India. A review of the records reveals that India made a request to several countries, including Canada, for mountain artillery and long range howitzers which could reach up to 10,000 yards. They needed them urgently in order to deal with the Chinese onslaught. The matter was looked into and it was found that the mortars available in Canada were not of the type the Indian government needed and that in so far as mountain artillery was concerned, which they requested, we had none.

O.E.C.D.—ACTION TO ASSIST LESS DEVELOPED COUNTRIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. S. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice and arises out of the papers he tabled yesterday with regard to the council of ministers of the O.E.C.D. Can the minister indicate to the house at this time what steps the government is taking pursuant to the ministerial resolution to assist in formulating concerted policies designed to further the economic development of the less developed countries?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Justice): All appropriate steps, Mr. Speaker.

INDIA—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON PRESENT POSITION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Lewis (York South): I should like to address a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Has the minister any recent information about the withdrawal of Chinese troops from the Indian border and the general situation in that part of the world?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker, there is nothing I can add on that matter today.

NATO—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON AGENDA OF CONFERENCE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. If he is going to attend the NATO council meeting, does he not think he should give the house some indication of some of the matters which will be considered at that meeting, and particularly those matters which have been covered by some of the questions today concerning the possession of nuclear arms?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I expect to be leaving a week from today for the NATO ministers' meeting in Paris. As the hon. member knows very well, the agenda for these meetings is not made public and it would be inappropriate for me to make a statement such as he suggests before attending the conference.

CIVIL DEFENCE

INQUIRY AS TO STUDY OF UNITED STATES PLANS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. S. P. Ryan (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Did the recent dominion-provincial conference on civil defence study any civil defence plans of the United States of America?

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of National Defence): No, Mr. Speaker.

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Thomas R. Berger (Vancouver-Burrard): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Can the minister tell us when he will report to us on the dominion-provincial conference on civil defence held recently, and when he does so will he tell the house what the government policy is in respect of community shelters?

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of National Defence): I shall be glad to report on this matter when my estimates are up for consideration.

INQUIRY FOR RETURN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. N. Turner (St. Lawrence-St. George): I wonder whether the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance would undertake to use his influence with his minister to persuade him to table the documents relating to the forward commitments on foreign exchange entered into by the Bank of Canada, before the house rises for the Christmas holidays?

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance): I shall do this, Mr. Speaker.

(Translation):

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Can the Prime Minister tell the house whether he has been asked to set up a royal commission on bilingualism in Canada and whether he intends to accede to that request?

Inquiries of the Ministry

(Text):

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, that matter will receive appropriate consideration and when the government is in a position to advise, the house will be informed.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

TRANSLATION OF REPORT OF GILL COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. C. Munro (Hamilton East): I should like to ask the Minister of Labour approximately when the French translation of the Gill report will be ready.

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): As I said the other day, I was informed they were rushing it through and it would be ready as soon as possible.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): May I ask a supplementary question. In view of the repeated questions on this subject since the beginning of this session, can the minister tell the house whether the government will have this report before Christmas, and in that event will the minister tell us when the government proposes to act with regard to this matter, having promised to do so three years ago?

Mr. Starr: I am more anxious than the hon. member to receive this report, so we can peruse it and decide what course of action we might take in connection with its recommendations.

Mr. Munro: May I ask a supplementary question. On Wednesday last, as reported in the House of Commons debates, the minister said he would advise the house as to how many months had elapsed since—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order. No reference can be made to previous debates at this time.

AIR TRANSPORT

PRAIRIE PROVINCES—PROVISION OF SERVICE TO NORTH BATTLEFORD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lucien Lamoureux (Stormont): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Following the cancellation of the prairie air service formerly provided by Pacific Western Air Lines, is the government giving consideration to the urgent problem of providing alternate service to the North Battleford area?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Both matters are the subject of intense consideration by the government.

Inquiries of the Ministry

(Translation):

FINANCE

SIGNATURE ON CANADIAN DOLLAR BILLS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gerard Chapdelaine (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance or, in his absence, to his parliamentary secretary. I have in my hand a $1 bill, dated 1954, and signed by Mr. Louis Rasminsky, the present governor of the Bank of Canada—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I must tell the hon. member that during his absence, while he was a member of a parliamentary delegation, a similar question was answered at least twice.

(Text):

TRADE

TOBACCO—INQUIRY AS TO MARKETING OF SURPLUS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. F. Whelan (Essex South): I should like to address a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. What progress has been made in the marketing of surplus tobacco in Canada?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think the hon. member will recognize that his question should go on the order paper. It is not something that should be asked on orders of the day.

Mr. Whelan: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, this is a very urgent problem in our area, due to the unemployment of 1,000 people.

Mr. Speaker: I agree that the problem may be urgent in certain areas, but whether the information is urgently required at this moment is another question.

[Later:]

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. What has he done about the lay-offs of tobacco workers in Essex South?

Mr. Speaker: Order. What I said previously would apply if the question were asked in respect of various regions. I realize that these matters are important in certain constituencies. However, in so far as obtaining the information at this time is concerned, I think we can go on to something else.

TRANSPORT

LIFE JACKETS—REQUEST FOR REMOVAL OF UNSAFE PRODUCTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Haidasz (Parkdale): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Transport whether he has yet ordered the officials of his department to remove all unsafe life jackets from the Canadian market.

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): No, Mr. Speaker, because I do not think that proposal makes any sense. Of course we cannot police all life jackets in Canada; it would be just impossible to try to find them all. I think the policy we have at the present time is a sensible one, and we intend to carry it on.

Mr. Speaker: Order. We are now getting into argument. The answer was quite an argumentative one.

Mr. Haidasz: May I ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: Ask it and we will see.

Mr. Haidasz: I would like to ask the Minister of Transport whether he would instruct his officials to investigate the accusations brought forth by the jury during a coroner's inquest in Toronto last summer, that there are unsafe life jackets distributed in Toronto.

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Speaker, I think my hon. friend was not in the house the other day when I made a statement on this matter. With regard to the very sad case that occurred last summer, the life jacket involved was old; it had been torn and repaired, and it was left in a soggy condition and deteriorated. But, as I indicated the other day, our policy in these matters is to educate people and approve certain types of life jackets so we can protect the public and at the same time give a chance to industry.

FOOD AND DRUGS ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING CONTROL AND REGULATION OF CERTAIN DRUGS

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare) moved the third reading of Bill No. C-3, to amend the Food and Drugs Act.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Adopté; carried.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

ATLANTIC DEVELOPMENT BOARD

PROVISION FOR DEFINITION OF DUTIES, APPOINTMENT OF MEMBERS, ETC.

On the order: Government orders:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to establish an Atlantic development board and to define the duties thereof, to provide for the appointment of the chairman and other members of the board and for the payment of certain expenses of the members thereof, to provide for the appointment of an executive director of the board and for the payment of his remuneration, to provide further that the board may engage the services of such advisers and staff as may be necessary to enable it to carry out its duites and to provide further for other related and incidental matters.

The Clerk Assistant having proceeded to read the order:

Mr. Speaker: Order. It is of some importance that the house should hear the resolution that is before it by listening to the clerk.

Mr. Lewis: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: I would therefore ask hon. members if they would moderate their conversations at this time.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, because of the perhaps, unavoidable noise that there was in the house when Your Honour called the first item of business, before one realized it Your Honour declared it adopted. With the very greatest respect, that kind of procedure—and I beg Your Honour not to misunderstand this —makes it impossible for members of the house to do their work properly. The third reading of the food and drugs bill was passed within seconds while members were still getting arranged in their seats after questions were asked. I would respectfully object to that kind of haste; there is no need for it. I would respectfully request that we turn back to that item of business, because we—

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, this is an important bill. It is connected with another important matter on the order paper, namely the special committee, and I submit that there is no reason why this house should suddenly start rushing third reading of an important bill through in seconds. I would ask that the Chair consider reverting to that item of business, so the members of the house may have an opportunity to deal with it as it should properly be dealt with.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Speaker, on the point of order—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I will hear the hon. member on the point of order.

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member is raising a point on which there is little argument. I believe it has always been well established in the house that if an item is called and no one rises to object to it, the house and the Speaker assume that the item is agreed to. There was quite some time before the hon. member did rise to raise objection. The item was certainly called. It was the first order of business announced for this afternoon and, while I realize that it was passed quickly, nevertheless there was no objection made and I do not think we should now turn back to it, because another order is in the process of being read.

(Translation):

Mr. Speaker: I recognize the hon. member for Lapointe on the point of order.

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): On the point of order. Mr. Speaker, it is not so much that I want the house to come back to the bill that has been adopted, but I would like to support the remarks made a few minutes ago, by the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) to the effect that often measures are approved very quickly, without the members' knowledge, especially at the beginning of the evening sitting or after the question period. Since the beginning of this session, on two occasions, measures were adopted within a few seconds, without our having any knowledge of it or having the opportunity to state our views.

That is why I support the remarks made by the hon. member for York South and I would add that, when motions are presented and the house is asked to support a bill, you should do it both in French and in English.

(Text):

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member still on the point of order?

Mr. Lewis: Yes, before Your Honour makes a ruling. I understand the parliamentary secretary to have said that there was time to rise. Maybe there was, if I were a lot faster than I sometimes am, or if I were a jack in the box, or other hon. members were. But with very great respect, Your Honour called the order, it was read, and whether Your Honour looked to see whether any one was getting to his feet I do not know, because by the time I rose to my feet I heard the words "Carried; adopté". There is no intention on the part of our party to hold up this legislation, but we do have what we think is an important point to place before the house. The matter was passed far too quickly for any member to have an opportunity to rise to his feet without being in a race with Your Honour, and I do not propose to race with you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: For one thing, of course the Chair will not accept any suggestion that it is moving too rapidly. The Chair is following the well established practices of this house. In fact, if the hon. member will consult with me I can tell him of the practice of some of my predecessors as to at what stage they were when the words "Adopté; carried" were put; they were almost around the back of the chair. However, there is no question that this bill was called. Third reading was moved and seconded, and I called it. The Clerk gave it third reading and it was adopted and carried. The house cannot toss its business back and forth. I submit that hon. members have now reached the stage where they know what is the business of the house, and they must be prepared to stand and speak when the order is called.

On the point raised by the hon. member for Lapointe, if the bell rings and there is a quorum the Chair calls the business; we do not wait around until 8.15 at night. I am not suggesting that the hon. member is implying that we should wait until 8.15 at night or whatever might be the time of resuming after adjournment, but when the bell calling members has ceased to ring there is a quorum in the house, and the house is prepared to do its business, it is the usage of this house to get on with the business. If hon. members who wish to speak on a motion know that it is coming up and they wish to catch the eye of whoever is in the chair, whether it is the chairman or the Speaker, it is their business to be in their places when the business of the house commences.

I am not indicating anything new. This is the ordinary, customary practice of this house, and with all deference to hon. members—I do not know what are the wishes of the house here—it would have to be by unanimous consent that we revert, because the order was adopted. Therefore, as I say, we could only revert by unanimous consent. Now the second item of business has been called, and unless there is unanimous consent of the house we must continue with the second item of business. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: No.

Hon. H. J. Flemming (Minister of National Revenue) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to establish an Atlantic development board and to define the duties thereof, to provide for the appointment of the chairman and other members of the board and for the payment of certain expenses of the members thereof, to provide for the appointment of an executive director of the board and for the payment of his remuneration, to provide further that the board may engage the services of such advisers and staff as may be necessary to enable it to carry out its duties and to provide further for other related and incidental matters.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Martin (Timmins): On a point of order, may I point out that within five minutes we find ourselves in the same position again. It was utterly impossible to understand what the Clerk was saying.

An hon. Member: You have your order paper.

Mr. Speaker: In this regard I fully agree with the hon. member, but having once asked the co-operation of the house in this matter I do not think I am in the position of a teacher repeatedly addressing students. The house will kindly conform.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Chown in the chair.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, in the speech from the throne this year will be found a paragraph with reference to the proposed Atlantic development board. It consisted of the following words:

You will be asked to authorize the establishment of an Atlantic development board to advise on measures and projects that will promote the economic development of the Atlantic region of Canada.

It is the implementation of that paragraph which the resolution we are now considering will accomplish. It seems fitting and proper that I emphasize the importance of the establishment of the Atlantic development board. The fact that its formation was indicated in the speech from the throne, and that the resolution is before us, is assurance of that. I do not propose to go into past history in much detail as to the effort which has been made to have the federal government establish such a body. I can say, however, that it has been very much in the minds of many people in the Atlantic provinces for some time.

I recall very well that from time to time I felt strongly that such a board could play an important part in the development of the Atlantic provinces. On numerous occasions we urged the setting up of the type of machinery envisaged by the resolution under somewhat flexible terms of reference, and with duties and responsibilities of a very broad nature. It was hoped that an investigation and close study of the natural resources of the Atlantic provinces, and a recommendation regarding the part that the federal government could play in full development, might be undertaken.

Our government has now decided to make this hope a reality. The resolution before us indicates concrete action in this regard. I might mention that the commission on Canada's economic prospects, which reported in 1957, suggested the setting up of a capital projects commission. I would think that the hon. gentleman who represents Davenport in this house will be most pleased with this legislation. I am satisfied that he is. I am also very pleased with another aspect which this action indicates. It is the recognition of the general desirability of the Atlantic provinces of Canada working together. It has always been my opinion that the four provinces on the Atlantic seaboard can accomplish much for themselves by working together whenever possible.

I well recall the meeting of many interested citizens of the Atlantic provinces held in the city of Moncton in 1953, when the Atlantic provinces economic council was discussed and finally came into being. The late Angus L. Macdonald, then premier of Nova Scotia, was present at that meeting. Former premier Alex. Matheson of Prince Edward Island was there also. A representative of Premier Smallwood attended, and the New Brunswick government was present in a body. At long last a real co-operative effort was being made. The council has been very successful, and is an illustration how our four provinces can work together in an economic sense. Then we have the Atlantic premiers' conference which meets once a year, and at which all premiers and advisers meet together to discuss their various problems. This began in Fredericton in 1956 and has continued since. It likewise has served as a medium for the exchange in views and arriving at decisions for mutual co-operative action.

I would now remind the house of a question asked of the Prime Minister on April 18 last by my hon. friend from Cumberland. It was as follows:

> Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. In view of the recent article in the Atlantic Advocate referring to the possibility of a development fund for the Atlantic provinces and in view of the recommendation, among other things, of feasibility studies of public projects in the Atlantic provinces, does the Prime Minister have any comment to make?

And the Prime Minister's reply I shall also quote:

> Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman gave me notice of his question. The government is now studying this matter and is giving consideration to the establishment of a federal Atlantic development board which would be empowered to examine projects recommended by provincial governments or other parties, and to give assistance and recommend appropriate plans to the government.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it is as a result of that assurance given by the Prime Minister to the house in April last that we have the paragraph dealing with this matter in the speech from the throne and the resolution which is presently before us.

I should like here to make a point of special significance which I wish to bring to the attention of this committee. The contemplated legislation is another illustration of the attitude of this government which has held office since 1957. It recognizes these facts; that we have in the Atlantic provinces a special situation deserving special attention, deserving special consideration, and demanding special action. The vehicle for this special action is before us for attention this afternoon. The opportunity is offered to us all to heartily endorse the attempt to attack our disabilities and to secure the assistance of the central government in so doing. I would hope that we are all thankful for the chance to indicate our approval.

Since my hon. friend from Cumberland has referred to the Atlantic Advocate, presumably to the issue of March 1962, I have taken the trouble to look up that article on which his question appears to have been based. It is to be found on page 14 of the Atlantic Advocate for March 1962, under the heading "Plan of action". I should like, Mr. Chairman, to quote some of the statements contained in this article. First of all it quotes scripture as follows:

> Unto everyone that hath shall be given, and he shall have abundance; but from him that hath not shall be taken away even that which he hath.

Then it asks the question:

> Does familiarity with it breed acceptance? Should the maritimes be content with this philosophy?

Then the article goes on to say:

> A chain is as strong as its weakest link; and the economy of Canada is as strong as its weakest region.

So I submit that these assertions are definitely thought provoking. My opinion about them would be expressed in terms like these; that some parts of our great country may have national advantages of geography, of natural resources leading to industrial development, of somewhat less severe climate which might contribute to acceleration of population beyond the average. But the central government, with these situations in mind, should properly devote special attention to those areas which for some reason or other have lagged behind the rest of Canada. The Atlantic provinces are a region which comes under that general heading.

The contemplated action envisaged by the resolution which is presently before us is that we decide first of all:

> That it is expedient to introduce a measure to establish an Atlantic development board and to define the duties thereof—

It is the defining of the duties thereof that I should like to speak about at this moment, prior to which, however, I might just give a few of the reasons for the establishment of the board. There is a grave disparity between the average standards of the Atlantic region and those of the rest of Canada. This may be measured by average incomes, which are lower in the Atlantic provinces by more than a third; by capital investment per head, which is half that in the other provinces; or by the lack of opportunity which, measured by employment available, is much greater. Emigration from the maritimes has amounted to more than half a million since confederation, and continues. In the light of growing populations and the tendency toward mechanization, it would be rash to assume that the labour surplus from the Atlantic region could be absorbed in the rest of Canada in the years to come, even if it were considered justifiable as a national policy.

So I point out, Mr. Chairman, the need of addressing ourselves to the problem of creating job opportunities in our own region by developing our own natural resources, and then looking at the transportation problem and also paying some special attention to the possibilities of cultivating markets where we may have natural advantages compared with other parts of Canada by reason of our location on the Atlantic seaboard. The Atlantic development board will inquire into and report to the government suggesting measures with respect to projects which promise to accelerate the growth of the area's economy. It will consider and report after investigation on projects suggested by provincial governments and other parties. This is in accordance with the statement of the Prime Minister in April last.

The purpose of the Atlantic development board will be to suggest ways and means to improve conditions in the area so that it will be more attractive to industry. Many people believe that public investment to a more than average degree is necessary to create these conditions. I find myself in agreement with that concept. There are many policies, measures and projects which have been suggested as deserving urgent consideration by the board. A number of public works projects need immediate research. Among these are the Chignecto complex of canal, tidal power and industrial development; the causeway to link New Brunswick with Prince Edward Island, which has been accepted in principle and is in the planning stage. There is the development of the great manganese deposits in Carleton county, New Brunswick, and that of the immense deposit of ore containing a large percentage of tin in Charlotte county in that same province. Then marble comes to mind. In various parts of New Brunswick there are very impressive deposits of marble, some of which have been partially developed, but further expansion seems most desirable. Then I may mention that the base metal deposit near Bathurst is already under active development. The necessary steps are being taken and progress is being made. I do not suggest this as a project for the Atlantic development board; it is under way. I might remind the committee, however, that the quantity of proven mineral bearing deposits of lead and zinc is something in the order of 60 million to 100 million tons, one of the largest, if not the largest in the world.

A great deal of research has been carried out by the provinces themselves and by the Atlantic provinces economic council, which has been so strong an advocate of this board. Proposals have been made for assistance in the setting up of certain so-called cornerstone industries which, it is claimed, would be likely to create other industries. The board would have a responsibility for placing the many and varied proposals in their appropriate categories, forming judgments on them or obtaining judgment on them from government sources or from outside consultants. It would be responsible for presenting its recommendations to the government and co-ordinating the passage of projects approved through the federal departments which would be concerned with them.

In this connection, a few days ago there was a discussion in this chamber concerning the coal industry, and discussion regarding the development or further development of the existing steel industry in Cape Breton. Both these subjects might well be studied by the Atlantic development board. The expansion of existing industries is quite as attractive and desirable a source of investigation as the establishment of completely new employment creating industries.

I should like to think that the Atlantic development board can be an arm of the federal government to be consulted by the provincial governments and by industry in general with a view to rendering real assistance in every sector of the development of the region. We of the Atlantic provinces are all familiar with the success that has been achieved by the interconnecting grid system made possible by the action of the government of Prime Minister Diefenbaker since it assumed office, and concurred in by all members of the house in the passing of the legislation. There is at the moment a definite improvement in the supply and price of power for industrial purposes. Electrical energy from the upper Saint John river is available, in case of need, via the grid system to the Cape Breton area, a distance of approximately 700 miles from northern New Brunswick; and power based on coal generated in Cape Breton is available to that part of New Brunswick lying close to the Quebec border. I repeat, by means of the grid system, made possible by federal legislation presented to parliament by this government, we have this great improvement to the system. This all adds up to the idea of considering that the Atlantic provinces be connected as far as is possible as a unit. This, in my opinion, should be another aim of the Atlantic development board.

It has been suggested that the establishment of this board results from recognition of the fact that the Atlantic region is a captive market for the more highly industrialized central provinces. I agree to some extent, but I also point out that Atlantic province industry has an advantage in overseas markets. I should like to point out to the committee that at the present time a food processing plant in Carleton county, New Brunswick, is shipping frozen peas and french fried potatoes by refrigerated steamer to the United Kingdom and Europe. This reflects great credit on the young men, the McCain brothers, who are operating this plant. It also brings to our immediate notice the possibilities which exist for enterprising, alert and industrious Canadians carrying on business, capable of exploiting overseas markets.

Now I return to the functions of the board. It has been suggested that all projects should be considered on the basis of their direct and indirect impact on economic development. The board must advise only after careful consideration of all the facts and not on preconceived ideas or prejudices. It has likewise been suggested that the board shall advise on measures and projects in both the public and private sectors. It should assist and encourage new resource exploration and development; the location of cornerstone plants; the development, in primary resource industry areas, of secondary industry related industrially or economically to the primary industry; and other enterprises which can have an impact on the course of economic progress.

The board itself, playing both an active and passive role, should also be able to initiate and give advice on projects. It should consider proposals made to it. It should also have an active role in the sense of initiating studies and making recommendations. It should be flexible in its thinking. It should be prepared to consider in what way economic development in any region can be accelerated. It must realize that there is no substitute for initiative and subsequent action.

I consider that the proposed legislation to set up an Atlantic development board is the most forward step ever taken in my lifetime for the benefit of the Atlantic provinces, and that it has tremendous possibilities which should increase the level of income and ultimately contribute to greatly increased employment in the Atlantic provinces.

In the light of our present situation the role of the Atlantic development board, in a development program for the Atlantic provinces, might very properly be considered to be partly the development of the national economy with special relevance to the difficulties peculiar to the Atlantic region.

So, Mr. Chairman, because of my lifelong association with the Atlantic provinces, with their people and with their special problems, there are many aspects of this board and its activities that I might explore. However, let it suffice for me to say that I am proud to have this legislation come forward in my name, not only because of its importance to the Atlantic provinces and their people but because I know there are occasions when all members of this House of Commons are able and indeed I think are anxious to step beyond the bounds normally imposed on us by party affiliation. The proposals embodied in this resolution provide such an opportunity.

Mr. Chairman, I hope that in this instance we can act with one accord, and in so doing make it very clear that as members of this House of Commons our prime consideration is and always has been the needs of Canadians everywhere. I most earnestly commend this proposal to the favourable consideration of all hon. members; and at the same time may I express my belief—it is more than a hope; it is a belief—that this measure will indeed find acceptance in all corners of this House of Commons.

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Chairman, all members of this House of Commons, I am sure, have listened with interest to the statement of the Minister of National Revenue. The resolution which has just been introduced by the minister provides for the establishment of an Atlantic development board with, as he said, specific duties to advise on measures and projects which will promote the economic development of the Atlantic provinces. In introducing a similar measure, but one which we could call more nation wide in its scope, a week ago today in this house the Minister of Finance stated that the so-called national economic development board would be concerned with all parts of Canada as well as with Canada as a whole. Its scope, said the Minister of Finance on that occasion, will be the three million square miles of this nation.

I express the hope that the measure now before the committee, which is similar in aims in its field of operation and achievements although more limited by geographical boundaries, will at no time enter into conflict with the national economic board which, as was stated by the Minister of Finance in introducing that particular measure, is designed to provide the soundest, most productive and most prosperous use of Canadian economic resources. I would hope that later on in this debate the Minister of National Revenue will give us the assurance that the Atlantic development board will not enter into conflict with the national economic board.

The Minister of National Revenue, in moving this resolution this afternoon, stated the reasons for the formation of an Atlantic development board, and he defined its duties. At the outset I wish the minister to know that we of the official opposition will support this resolution, although we will reserve the right to comment on the bill itself after we are given the opportunity to study its content. I may add that I believe I shall be the only speaker on the Liberal side of the chamber at this resolution stage, although more members on this side from the Atlantic region will wish to participate when we have seen the bill and second reading is moved.

The minister in introducing his resolution quoted the reference in the speech from the throne to the Atlantic development board. I agree with the minister and say that in the past many attempts have been made in that regard. I agree that for some time it has been in the minds of the people of the Atlantic provinces. I may state further that it was part of the recommendation in the report of the Gordon commission which was made public in 1957. The minister also referred to the desirability of working together, and he gave as an example the Atlantic provinces economic council known as APEC which, since its inception in 1954, has made different recommendations to the provincial and federal governments. In the course of my remarks I will be referring further to the work which has been done by this organization from the Atlantic provinces.

The minister also stated that such a move has been in the mind of this government since 1957. I would ask the minister this question. In view of the circumstances and conditions of the Atlantic provinces, why has it waited five years before bringing this measure into effect? As the minister said in quoting an article from the Atlantic Advocate, the economy of Canada is only as strong as its weakest region. He referred to the income of the Atlantic provinces which is one third lower, and investment capital which is approximately only half of what it is in the rest of Canada. He also referred to special projects which have been brought to the attention of the government from time to time, such as the Chignecto canal and the Prince Edward Island causeway. Later he referred to the mining possibilities both in the northern and southwestern parts of the province of New Brunswick.

The minister also referred to the price of power in the Atlantic provinces, which is of major importance in the development of our economy. He seemed to take full credit for the grid system which is now in existence in the three maritime provinces. I should like to point out that this grid system was the idea of the minister of northern affairs and national resources under the previous administration, Mr. Lesage. This measure was proposed by Mr. Lesage and was included in the budget of Mr. Harris in March of 1957. In fact the provinces concerned had accepted the idea in principle long before this government ever took office. I must also add that the establishment of an Atlantic development board in part confirms and implements today what we of the official opposition have been suggesting in this house for the last four or five years, notwithstanding the fact that when we made proposals to that effect because of the urgent need we were branded as prophets of doom and gloom and were accused of trying to sell our country short.

Members from the Atlantic region sitting today on the government side, including the Minister of Finance, have not forgotten, I am sure, that on numerous occasions in this house they voted against proposed measures to strengthen the basic economy of the Atlantic provinces. I do not want to comment on votes that have been taken previously but I should like to refer, for example, to the vote taken in this house on June 8, 1959. I might also add that they are the same members who on May 24, 1960, voted against a measure asking for the establishment of a national board of economic development. Yet these same members are now suggesting the formation of a similar organization. Also on May 3, 1960, when a vote was called on a motion by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate to provide federal aid to the Atlantic provinces, every government member from the Atlantic region voted against the proposal. The present Minister of Finance and the now absent "so what" minister from St. John's West were among those who opposed the motion at that time. I have no doubt that this action explains why the Minister of National Revenue, who was not a member of the house at the time and was not called upon to vote against such a proposal, has been called upon today to introduce this resolution, which would have been quite embarrassing for the Minister of Finance.

As I said earlier, we will support the resolution now before us, but I reserve the right to direct to the Minister of National Revenue certain questions which I should like to have answered before the conclusion of this debate. I ask, Mr. Chairman, whether we are correct in assuming that this board will channel at least an extra $1 billion into the region in the next ten years?

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): May I ask my hon. friend a question? What was the amount again?

Mr. Robichaud: One billion dollars. I ask the minister now whether a commitment to that effect was made on a previous occasion by the Prime Minister. If such is the case, can the minister give the house some indication as to how this imposing sum may be distributed? Commenting on the announcement made by the Prime Minister during the last campaign to the effect that an Atlantic development board would be established, it was suggested by sources close to the Prime Minister that the first matters to be dealt with by this board would be the Chignecto canal and the Fundy tidal development. The minister made reference this afternoon to the Chignecto canal, but he did not refer to the Fundy development.

I should now like to ask the minister this question. After all the surveys on the physical feasibility of the project and its economic soundness, after all the statements made by members of the government to the effect that full and comprehensive studies had been carried out by officials of the departments concerned, must we now take it for granted that this new board will be much more effective in convincing the government that such projects must be proceeded without delay from the point of view of continuing to improve the standard of living in the Atlantic area?

I have a further question for the Minister of National Revenue. At the time of the appointment of the Gordon commission in 1944 Prime Minister St. Laurent invited the people of the Atlantic region to get together and submit proposals which would lead to the economic development of the area in order to assure a standard of living roughly equal to the national average. Such an invitation could not be left unanswered by the people of the Atlantic provinces.

The minister has referred in his remarks to the formation of the Atlantic provinces economic council. It is true that representatives of government, trade, industries, cultural institutions and financial groups lost no time in getting together and forming the Atlantic provinces economic council, commonly known as APEC. Since its inception in 1954 this organization has been largely a policy making and long range planning group of businessmen representing practically every line of business and industry in the Atlantic region. This group must have had a good knowledge of the problems and needs facing our area and from time to time must have offered new formulas in line with our special needs.

Atlantic Development Board

I recognize that the new president of APEC, chosen in September of this year, looks for big things from the proposed Atlantic provinces development board. Under his leadership APEC, with its board of 29 governors, has set out as its objective the selling of the region's needs to its own people and to the Canadian nation as a whole. It is hoped that the personnel of this new board will co-operate and spare no efforts to rouse our own people to further action and, at the same time, will go all out to have the rest of Canada realize that our systems of transportation, taxation, tariff charges and federal fiscal policies are detrimental to the interests and general welfare of the Atlantic region.

It has been said by members of the government that the Atlantic development board will be primarily a planning board. That statement was made by the Minister of Public Works in Halifax on November 16 of this year. The Prime Minister said during the last campaign:

> —the proposed board will be made up of people familiar with problems of the Atlantic provinces. Their jobs will be to study these problems and make recommendations to the government.

It may be true that APEC may not be considered entirely as a development council; nevertheless one must admit that it has acted as a co-ordinator and promoter of development work in the Atlantic region. Now after five and a half years in office this government must recognize that in the Atlantic region the average of unemployed has been one in every ten available for work, compared with a national average in the last five years of 5½ per cent to 6 per cent in the rest of Canada. In his report made public in February, 1961 Professor Cairncross, who had just completed a study of economic development in the Atlantic provinces, had this to say:

> The federal government must be the principal agent of policies to eliminate the lag in economic development of the Atlantic provinces.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in view of what I have said my next question of the Minister of National Revenue will be the following. Is the minister now prepared to admit that this government has failed in its five and a half years in office to act on the recommendations made by APEC to promote the development of the Atlantic region? Furthermore, what assurance can he now give the house—

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): Do you want me to answer that now?

Mr. Robichaud: No; my time is limited. I will be pleased to have the answer, but government members must know that my time is limited.

I have another question to ask of the minister. What assurance do we have now from the government that this government is prepared to adopt new policies which will tend to eliminate this lag in the economic development of the Atlantic region? The Atlantic development board should have not only a passive role but it should be empowered to act positively, to be free to initiate studies and make recommendations on its own. In order to be effective we must also have in Ottawa a government prepared to listen to the board's recommendations and act accordingly. Unless the government is prepared to help industries adapted to the region and having a reasonable prospect of success, such a board will be a waste of effort, time and energy.

The field of action of this new board is almost unlimited. In its report the Gordon commission recommended a policy of considerable expenditure of capital or the opening up of facilities designed to encourage the development of the resources of the Atlantic region, including such problems as adequate cheap power and transportation services, which have been mentioned by the minister in the course of his remarks. Thorough economic planning for the area is a must if the Atlantic region is to share equally in national economic development of our country.

I now ask, Mr. Chairman, how can such a board be effective unless it is associated with a capital assistance fund administered by special agencies of the federal government to be concerned with basic projects for promoting the over-all economic prosperity of the Atlantic region.

We all know that the federal government did not hesitate to proceed with the St. Lawrence seaway and with the trans-Canada pipe line. The present government was not unduly concerned with the economic soundness of the South Saskatchewan dam, and it did not hesitate to invest in this particular project hundreds of millions of dollars of the taxpayers' money. So I ask, why so much concern by the Prime Minister and by the ex-minister of public works over the economic soundness of the Chignecto canal? Why is the present government, after refusing openly and squarely to consider this major project, intending to use this Atlantic development board as, I could almost say, another scapegoat in order to distract attention from its delayed action?

[Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton).]

The government seems at times to be quite concerned, quite embarrassed and even uneasy about our unfavourable balance of trade with foreign countries, I ask, Mr. Chairman, how much thought is being directed toward the Atlantic region's balance of payments in respect of the rest of Canada. What about our unfavourable balance of trade with central Canada and with the prairie provinces? We have reason for complaint. We have reason to be concerned, and I intend to use this as an example. A car manufacturer in central Canada shipping his automobiles and trucks by rail to Saint John, New Brunswick, uses transportation companies from Ontario to transport his cars and trucks from Saint John to the respective distribution centres in the province of New Brunswick.

While the Atlantic region offers a golden opportunity for products from central Canada and the prairie provinces, we have to depend almost entirely on export for the disposal of our own primary and industrial products. While industries in central Canada are protected by tariff walls we, in the provinces near the ocean, have to pay and pay highly for such protection in addition to prohibitive transportation costs. We are not seeking handouts. We are only fighting for our rights, our rights and justice as promised and assured us when we joined confederation. Canada is one of the few countries in the free world where the retarded regions have not received special recognition, where special measures have not been enacted to take care of emergency local or regional conditions. The United Kingdom, Belgium, Norway and Germany all had to face similar situations; all had chronically depressed areas. These countries have seen fit to cope with the situation. They have taken the necessary steps to introduce powerful and dynamic programs which met in a bold manner the needs of such areas. The two basic remedies offered by these countries have been, first, the provision of capital on easy terms, which obviously does not exist in Canada, particularly in the Atlantic region; second, special tax concessions for new industries established in depressed areas.

In June of 1957, prior to the general election, every Progressive Conservative candidate in the maritimes endorsed in no uncertain terms what was called their Atlantic resolutions. They endorsed a resolution to the effect that a national resources development program should be instituted permitting federal assistance in the Atlantic provinces for the purpose of developing our resources for the maximum benefit of the Atlantic economy. They favoured the institution of a capital projects program to provide capital assistance for the basic economy of the area. They committed themselves to the decentralization of industry, and they assured the electors of larger defence contracts and the establishment of new crown corporations in the Atlantic provinces.

What have they done to meet these commitments and fulfil their obligations in the last five and a half years? Is this new Atlantic development board now being established to distract public attention from the mismanagement of public affairs by this government? I repeat what I said earlier. How can such a board be effective, how can it operate and play an active role in the economic development of the area, unless it provides the kind of leadership offered from a national government in all other industrialized nations to deal with our problems on a broader basis?

Most of the economic ills of the Atlantic region can be traced to a slower rate of investment than elsewhere in Canada. The Minister of National Revenue admitted this in his speech this afternoon. APEC, in its proposals to the royal commission on banking and finance, made two specific recommendations which deserve to be considered at this time. First, APEC recommended the establishment of a capital projects commission for the area. It would provide over a reasonably short period the facilities needed for further development and co-ordination of all capital spending and subsidies in the region, except those that are national in scope.

Second, it recommended the creation of a federal fund to make grants in the Atlantic provinces to help them set up cornerstone plants, those that have considerable future and a direct and indirect impact on an area's economy, as well as industrial estates or other establishments. The council recognizes that a development board will be almost useless unless it is assisted by a long run flow of funds into regional investment. The type of assistance that is now provided by the industrial development bank or other lending agencies is most inadequate, mainly on account of its short terms and excessive rates of interest.

This new board should lose no time in making a complete examination of our trade possibilities with the British Caribbean. Such islands as Jamaica, Trinidad, Tobago, the Bahamas and the Leeward and Windward islands are in the geographical proximity of year round maritime ports such as Halifax and Saint John, and the Canadian and Caribbean economies are complementary. The advantages of opportunities offered for trade exchanges with the Caribbean should be looked into by the Atlantic development board, and no effort should be spared to facilitate such possibilities. This government is well known for appointing boards and royal commissions.

I notice, Mr. Chairman, that my time has practically expired and in concluding my remarks I would urge the government to consider the immediate establishment of a capital assistance fund agency to work in cooperation and conjunction with this proposed Atlantic development board. It is said that Mrs. Marx observed at the end of a long and rather bleak life, "How much better it would have been if dear Karl had made some capital instead of writing and speaking about it". I wish to say to this government now, on the eve of its last days in office, how much better it would be for them if they were prepared to provide the Atlantic economy with proper capital instead of more boards, more commissions, more promises and more words.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether I could ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Robichaud: Certainly.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Will the hon. member tell the house why the Liberals did nothing for the maritimes during their 22 years of administration?

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Chairman, I think this is the type of question we may expect from the hon. member.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Well, answer it.

Mr. Robichaud: Any projects of major importance which have been completed in the Atlantic provinces have been completed by a Liberal government.

An hon. Member: Name one.

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member says, "Name one". I will name camp Gagetown, which I would say can be compared to any major industries in New Brunswick. I would mention the Canso causeway. Also, the few crown corporations which we now have in the Atlantic provinces were instituted by a Liberal administration, and nothing of the kind has been done since 1957.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, it a real privilege for me as a westerner to associate myself this afternoon with the people who live in the Atlantic area of our great country. As I have come to know many of them as my personal friends and to know that part of the country almost as well as I know the other parts of Canada, I have come to have a deep feeling of affection and appreciation for the maritime people from our four Atlantic provinces. One of the great heritages we have in Canada is the contribution which emigrants from that area have made to other parts of Canada. It has been said more than once that the greatest export from the Atlantic provinces has been their trained, professional and technical people. I am sure that each one of us, regardless of what part of Canada we come from, can readily recognize the truth of that statement as we recall friends and acquaintances who came originally from that area.

On behalf of all of us in our corner of the house, Mr. Chairman, I count it a pleasure to associate myself with the debate that is now beginning in connection with the announcement made this afternoon by the Minister of National Revenue. I trust, however, that the Atlantic development board will not be just another board. If boards were the answer to our economic ills, then I am sure Canada would today be well on the road to prosperity. We have many now and we are getting more week by week. Let us remember that the setting up of an agency, by whatever name it might be called or for whatever purposes may be defined, is not just the answer to our problems. We have learned through the eloquent words of the minister this afternoon, the purposes and objectives of this Atlantic development board. We all agree that the words he has spoken are well chosen, because they are true. But they will only be effective if they can be put into action. I am fearful of the multiplicity of boards as we try to deal with the problem of planning that our country needs in a way that will benefit the country according to its basic objectives and traditions.

We have heard described already this afternoon the work and function of the board known as APEC, the Atlantic provinces economic council. It has done good work. I am personally familiar with a number of people on the board and realize that they have covered a great deal of ground in surveying the needs of the Atlantic provinces. We have also discussed, and are still in the process of discussing, the national economic development board. We also have the national productivity council. One wonders just how effective are the operations of these different agencies as they relate to the results that are wanted without a serious overlapping and multiplicity of function and even of purpose.

I think this is one of the things about which we must be very careful, and I trust that the government has taken this question into careful consideration. I say this because what is expected at this time—I am sure that every person who lives in the Atlantic area will be thinking thus when he hears the announcement of this new board—is action, effective action that will lift the Atlantic area out of what has been termed a depressed area into what can be one of the strongest emerging areas in the country. As I have come to know the maritimes, I have come to almost abhor the word "welfare" as it has been applied, because the truth is—and I think all Canadians, if they were intimately familiar with this part of our country, would understand this—that the Atlantic provinces are potentially the richest and most prosperous in the whole of Canada. They are not entitled to and should not be given such descriptive terms such as "depressed".

If one looks, not at the problems of the Atlantic area but at its resources, he realizes they are truly amazing. Prince Edward Island is one of the richest farm areas in Canada. Nova Scotia has tremendous reserves of coal. It has excellent possibilities as far as communications and shipping are concerned. Certainly it has a tremendous fishing industry. New Brunswick is not only the centre of a new base metals mining industry, it is also a major source of lumber in the east. In addition, together with Nova Scotia, it is a site of some of our leading universities, an asset without price in an age when we should be moving forward into the greatest era of development and progress that the history of Canada has ever known. Newfoundland and Labrador have immense undeveloped sources of hydroelectric power. There are also vast lumber and mining potentials. This is all without mentioning the possibilities of developing this entire area for tourism, which is one of the great and for the most part undeveloped assets of this beautiful part of Canada.

The minister this afternoon went over a number of the things which he envisages the Atlantic development board as being concerned with. He mentioned the Chignecto canal, the Prince Edward Island causeway, the manganese deposits, the marble and base metals, in addition to existing resources such as coal. He mentioned the hydro potential on the upper Saint John river. Although he did not refer to it, I am sure he was thinking also of the Fundy hydro development potential. He spoke of a needed power grid. All this concerns only a portion of the rich resources of this part of the country. It is these things which, we have been told, will be the subject of the board's attention. Looking at what has been happening in the maritimes I sometimes smile at the jibing which takes place back and forth between the two larger parties in this house. I do not know whether this is a game of chess or a football game; maybe it is the Grey cup in the fog. But I do know that which has been done either by a former Liberal government or by past Conservative governments is not the answer. I am quoting from the January issue this year of the Atlantic Advocate:

> The Atlantic region has been a drag on the economy of Canada by being low in production and high in unemployment, twice as high as the rest of Canada in terms of unemployment as a percentage of the labour force.
> The region has been aided and subsidized by an ever-increasing amount by the government of Canada, to enable its people just to live, to keep from starving. The region has cost Canada something between $130 million and $200 million a year in aids and subsidies to enable its people to survive. All of every payment is gone by the end of every year. Nothing is left. In the next year the aids are continued, and so on, ad infinitum.

Unfortunately, this is all too true of what has been the background results of events in the Atlantic area. It need not be so; it should not be so. The minister has mentioned that the Atlantic development board is to be concerned both in an active and a passive way. He said also that it is to be concerned with both the private and the public sectors of the economy. I would remind him, and I would remind the government to which he belongs, that as he contemplates the work of the Atlantic development board much of what he has been speaking about has already been done by APEC and by other agencies in that region. As it is described to be an arm of government I can see in it a board which could produce action and produce it quickly if instead of going through the same pattern which has been followed in the past number of years it could take the findings of those various organizations which already exist, bring them together and then, devise machinery which would facilitate the action which is obviously needed. This board could produce action and it could produce action very quickly. As I envisage it I can see that it could be capable of making the Atlantic area the emerging part of Canada.

We are wrong when we consider that any part of Canada is an entity in itself. It is only as we can see Canada as the great nation it is, when no part is separated from another part, that true development is possible. We talk about the possibility of maintaining an ice free river as far as Montreal for 12 months of the year and immediately we are concerned about what effect this might have upon the shipping facilities in Saint John or Halifax. We hear criticism of the Chignecto canal because, it is said, it would hurt harbour commerce in other parts of that area. It is well that we remember always: you cannot separate one part of the country from another. What is good for one will be good for the other. What is good for the Atlantic provinces will be good for Upper Canada, and what is good for Upper Canada will be good for western Canada. It is on this basis that the board could produce the results we are thinking of, provided the government puts teeth into the thing. This is a matter on which we expect to have more to say as the debate goes on and about which we shall be in a position to say more when we are informed in greater detail, as I trust we shall be, about the functions of the board.

I say that the purpose of this board is not only one of correlation and bringing together. It must be a board capable of initiating action itself. The minister has told us there is no substitute for initiative and subsequent action. Referring briefly to the honourable gentleman's statement that the board is to be concerned with Atlantic development both with regard to public and private projects on this basis, I should like to draw the attention of the committee briefly to what I regard as the responsibility of government toward public and private projects. As far as I am concerned, both our older parties in Canada have been far too much concerned, through an urgency which can only be described as being expedient, with things which rightfully do not belong to the responsibility of government. The hon. member for Gloucester who spoke just before me mentioned that if we are to produce the action and the results which are expected, active participation in the supply of capital is necessary. Let us remember, however, that there are two basic kinds of capital as applied to what we are thinking of now. Private capital is the capital which industry and commerce need to build up the industry and commerce of the area where this capital is used. This capital should not come out of welfare handouts by governments but from the savings and investment of our own people.

I am positive that if we can operate universities and carry on as we have carried on in that area through the years the need of the Atlantic provinces at this time is not interference with private or commercial capital; what is needed is the setting of an atmosphere and a climate which would make the area fully receptive to commercial, productive capital. We hear a good deal of talk to the effect that only the United States or other countries outside Canada can supply the capital we need. That is simply not true. We have plenty of capital in Canada ready for use if only the climate and the conditions which would encourage Canadians to invest their capital were present. In this regard, if teeth are going to be put into this project, I believe it must be basically concerned not with the payment of more welfare nor with the supplying of private or productive capital which ought to come from the Canadian citizens themselves. I believe the government should be concerned with the public responsibility of the government.

If it could do this, then I could see some hope of the Atlantic area becoming the emerging area of Canada. As I have just quoted from the Atlantic Advocate, we find that for a number of years both the Liberal and the Conservative governments have spent something like $150 million to $200 million per year in welfare. At the end of each year that sum has disappeared and the following year the same amount of money has to be supplied again just to keep people living and the area alive. If this amount of money had been spent out of public capital to set the climate and conditions for private industry in that area, we would not have to be paying this amount of welfare subsidies today. The figure of $1 billion for the next 10 years has been mentioned. That is $100 million a year. If $200 million, which is not more than we are spending at the present time, could be supplied in the right way for the next five years, I am convinced that the Atlantic area would not need any more welfare or subsidizing, as it would be able to carry itself in a respectable way, as should any individual, group of individuals or any area of the country should. That is why I believe it is very important that we look at our true responsibilities, rather than to confuse the issue and think that we are helping by actually bringing about a policy which is just encouraging a continuation of that which we agree we do not want and is not correct.

I am convinced that one of the greatest needs in the area is the public aspect of the economy. I should like to quote again from the Atlantic Advocate of January, 1962. I believe these words are well taken, and I agree with them:

> Industry can be attracted to the region if certain prerequisites are provided. The Chignecto canal and the tidal power development of Chignecto bay are two public works projects that are essential prerequisites to industrial development. These projects could transform transportation through the development of coastal shipping and provide abundant electric power at a cost competitive with any now prevailing in any area of Canada. These assets, together with our winter ports, would make the region an ideal production area for processing not only our own plentiful resources but imported commodities also for re-export to world markets.
> The cost of the capital investment in these public works projects bears no relation to any need for retrenchment resulting from Canada's present foreign exchange difficulties. Investment in capital projects which will themselves be productive has no relation or likeness to spending for non-productive purposes. It is not inflationary. Anyway, there is no inflation in the maritimes; there is every evidence of deflation. What is required is a positive program of self-liquidating public works projects and a captal budget financed out of loans.

I could not have stated the needs of this area better if I had tried to do it myself. Here again is evidence that there has been tremendous thought and research put into the very thing which it has been stated is the function of this board.

I suggest to the government that if it really wants to do something for the maritimes and do it in a way which would permanently correct the problems that area faces, then instead of providing welfare capital they should set up a municipal development bank which could supply the public capital needed for public projects, remembering that these public projects are non-profit-making and self-liquidating. They are there to render a service, to set the stage for basic and secondary industries conducted on a private basis. Supposing that we did have a municipal development bank set up on such a basis, providing not $100 million a year but $200 million a year, which as I have said is no more than the subsidies now being paid to the area. Supposing it was to continue this program for five years. This capital would develop the Chignecto canal, if the Chignecto canal is scientifically and technically feasible, as I believe it is. A Montreal turnpike could be constructed so as to facilitate communications with upper Canada. Yes, power projects could be facilitated likewise in the area. I am thinking of the upper Saint John river and also the Fundy tidal system, which is also centred on the Chignecto canal. If research could also be financed in this way so as to conduct the necessary studies as to how the various resources which are there now could be used in a more efficient way, then our markets could be expanded.

For example, I often think of the coal industry about which we have heard so much these last few days in this chamber. The coal research board set up in the province of Alberta has done more to revive the coal industry in Alberta than anything else, so much so that the value of the coal industry in the province last year exceeded anything the industry had produced since immediately following the war. This is the kind of assistance which will help the coal industry. I am sure that when the minister speaks of the need for a power grid, he will realize the assistance required for making this possible, in order to encourage secondary industry is one of the legitimate ways that this kind of capital could positively contribute.

We have heard a great deal during the session about the trans-Canada highway, and we speak of it as though it were finished. In the maritimes it is not finished; a tremendous amount of work has yet to be done. Here is a project which needs to be finished immediately, and finished completely. Again that is legitimate expenditure of public capital, non-profit capital, there to render a service and to facilitate the development of the kind of industry that private and productive capital has as its responsibility to provide. This is the kind of help that the maritime provinces need.

In addition, I should like to say this to the minister. He has spoken about the program envisaged for the Atlantic development board. Unless the government backs up whatever is done by that board with a basic change in some of its policies which will give support to it, then the board will fail. I am thinking of the transportation problems which concern this area at the present time. As far as public capital is concerned, again I think there is a need for improving harbour facilities. What about some of our basic trade policies? In addition to the requirements for public capital in the Atlantic area, I believe one of the greatest needs is the development of markets. This part of Canada is closer to overseas markets than other parts of Canada, and certainly the maritimes area has a large internal market as well. Our trade policies must be brought into line with the conditions we face at the present time if we are to get out of the economic problems which face us. But days go by; days are followed by weeks, and in turn grow into months and then years. Yet we do not face the reality of conditions as they are. The tremendous markets which are available to the Atlantic area are right here in our own hemisphere, if we want to consider them as such.

I realize that a lot has been done in the Atlantic provinces for the potato industry by reaching out to South America for new markets. That is just an example of what can be done. If we are going to facilitate the freest possible exchange of goods between nations, then not only do our trade policies have to be gone over, but we must also meet the problem of international settlements. We cannot expect the problem which precipitated the crisis in June as far as balance of payments is concerned to be corrected unless we get down to some of the basic flaws which caused it in the first place. Here is where the government will have to back up action, such as that we have talked about today, with a change in some of its present policies, and certainly give greater leadership and more evidence that it is able to cope with these problems in an effective way.

Not only do we have a responsibility to back this particular project with a different look at trade, but also we must solve our tax problem. We are told blithely that we have another royal commission on taxes. Because we have a royal commission on taxes we think that all of our tax reform problems are being taken care of. I do not wish to be repetitious, but again hammering on this point may I say this. We cannot wait for one or two years for a royal commission on taxation before we initiate some of the tax reforms which the Atlantic area must have if industry is going to develop. It is the responsibility of the government to do this and to do it quickly.

We hear so much about royal commissions and about reports that it has been somewhat gratifying to observe that there is evidence of immediate action being taken on the Glassco report. However, we still have gathering dust in some pigeon hole many royal commission reports that have not been acted on. In spite of this we are in general agreement that many of the recommendations are good or that at least they contain some of the basic elements of action that it is necessary to take. I am thinking right now of the O'Leary commission report. Last spring Canadians were told that action was going to be taken. Nothing has happened. The throne speech again stated this was going to be done. Nothing has happened. Why cannot the government come out with these obvious things that our Canadian economy urgently needs?

The government must realize that, in regard to this particular development board, unless they do this very thing they are going to nullify any positive effects that could come from it.

I do not wish to prolong the debate today, as we are but discussing the resolution that will bring this legislation to pass. There will be an opportunity for this as the debate goes on. However, I would just remind the committee of this point. This is a house of minorities and that we have a corporate responsibility to the over-all picture to get behind a piece of legislation like this. I particularly urge on the government that unless they do share in this responsibility, they are failing their own responsibilities at the present time. To support the suggestion that we all agree to is good. Indeed it is basic, in order to facilitate some positive action that will bring about the reversal of conditions which we have today and which we recognize are not to the betterment of our country in order that we can begin to move forward as this country ought to be able to do and can do.

Just to recapitulate a little, I would say again that the greatest need of this Atlantic area if for public capital that will bring to pass those particular public development projects which are necessary and which will assist in laying the climate and clarifying a situation that will attract our own capital in order that this country can go forward and that this area will not remain the depressed area, not the area which is the recipient of charitable welfare from the rest of Canada but the area which can and will lead the economic recovery our nation needs as it goes forward to fulfil our obligations not only to ourselves but to the generations which are to come after us.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Chairman, it is not my intention to make a prolonged speech this afternoon. I have already been very fortunate in having the opportunity to speak on two other occasions with regard to the problems of the Atlantic provinces of Canada. It is very encouraging this afternoon to find from all corners of the chamber some very desirable and in my opinion very objective and worth-while suggestions being brought before the members of this committee.

There is no question at all about the desirability of such a move. As the minister indicated in his opening remarks, this is at least recognition of the problem that has existed in the Atlantic provinces over the years. It is a first step. We are all highly appreciative of the move. Nevertheless this is the first process in adopting legislation with regard to these problems and I feel that it is the responsibility of each of us who are vitally concerned with the matter to make some observations with regard to the resolution with a view to the bill which will be presented to us eventually. I think that this is good procedure. I expect that the minister and the other members of the government will be sufficiently broadminded and objective to perhaps bear in mind and keep in the forefront of their consideration certain of the proposals that will come out during this discussion.

I should like to point out first of all that it is very encouraging to hear the minister review the conditions which have existed in the Atlantic provinces over the years and to a more serious degree in recent years. It is not very long ago, just last June and last spring, when we had ministers of the crown, responsible members of the government of the day, coming to our area and telling us that really our problems were not too bad, that conditions were not as we were suggesting they were. I therefore think this is a good step, recognizing that we have a problem, and as opposed to the statements of the hon. member for Red Deer. I agree with him however that we do not like to talk in terms of a depressed area. I agree with him that we have resources in the Atlantic provinces. We have tremendous resources. None of us, in my opinion, would go so far as to suggest, as did the then minister of national revenue, now the Minister of Finance, that we are going to develop another Toronto in the area. I do not know that we want another Toronto. I say that with all due respect for certain members of my own group. We agree that we have these resources, but at the same time we are obliged to recognize the fact that it has been a depressed area. This becomes clear when you experience unemployment rates which are double the national average; when you experience thousands of people on relief and receiving welfare services; when you experience, without going into detail the trends in employment in particular industries in the manufacturing field where between 1952 and January 1962 our work force was reduced from 33,000 to 24,000; where employment in the coal industry has been reduced from 11,000 miners to 5,700 and in primary iron and steel from 5,300 to 2,800. If you examine unemployment trends in this area in relation to those in any other area in Canada or in all of Canada; if you examine the comparative wage and salary structure; if you examine the construction rates per hour in relation to those in other industrial areas; if you examine average hourly industrial earnings; if you examine net incomes of farm operators—and I could go on and on with taxation figures and what have you—the story is the same. This has been a depressed area. Conditions have been serious. The time has arrived for due attention and due action.

The hon. member for Gloucester during the course of his speech suggested, it seemed to me, that the field of activity for this board is unlimited. At least this is what I understood from his remarks. Again I think we must disagree with this particular view. It is true that there are many things that we would expect such a board and the federal government to accomplish in this area, but surely their field is not unlimited. We have many problems in the Atlantic provinces. The government of the day or the government of the previous day is not responsible for all of them and cannot be expected to solve all of them. I think where their greater responsibility lies is not in that they brought about the problems but in that they have refused to face the challenge that these problems have presented. In other words, what we might criticize them for is not so much the fact that the problems exist but rather the fact that they have failed to take effective action to deal with them.

So I suggest that the federal government, through the Atlantic development board or any other agency, cannot be expected to solve all our problems. Even if they could solve all of the problems that we face in this area, I suggest this would not be a desirable course of action. We in this region still have some pride. There are some things we want to do for ourselves, and despite most difficult conditions in recent years we have continued to attempt to pull ourselves up by the bootstraps. I do not have to give evidence of this fact. I do not have to refute the argument that our people have a defeatist attitude, that they are pessimists, that they are lazy and will not do anything for themselves, that they do not want to work and want to live off the federal government. All we have to do is to look at the history of these provinces, to look at the self-help efforts of these people in the field of co-operative activity, in the field of credit unions, in the field of marketing efforts on the part of our farmers and our fishermen. These are stories of courage, stories, in particular sections of the area, of people lifting themselves up by the bootstraps.

But the major consideration is that we cannot be expected to solve all of our problems by ourselves. This is an established scientific fact arrived at by various organizations and groups in our own region and in other parts of the country, and that is why we expect such types of assistance as we hope will be provided through the Atlantic development board.

One of our major concerns and fears with regard to this proposed board, and we will be looking at the legislation when it is placed before us, is that this is simply going to be another board to study, another royal commission. We have had quite a bit of experience in the Atlantic area and all across Canada with royal commissions and they have their role to play. Many of them have provided very valuable services to the country. But we are familiar with the Rowell-Sirois commission so far as some of our problems are concerned, and what has happened in recent years. This government which tells us that Nova Scotia has never had a friend like the Prime Minister—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. MacInnis: —this government which tells us that the Tories have done more for us than anybody else—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. MacInnis: It is very desirable that you applaud yourselves, because nobody else will. This government has refuted the recommendations of this particular royal commission and has recently changed the formula, for which we can give some credit to the former Liberal government, from equalization and rationalization in our tax rental and tax sharing agreements across the country. As a result the assistance that we are provided today in this area under the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements Act is no longer based on the yield of the two richest provinces but rather is on the basis of a national average.

I asked the Minister of Finance a question in this regard the other evening and he stood up and very quickly brushed it aside and told me it was very strange that, though I came from the province of Nova Scotia, I was not prepared to admit that the present basis is the best arrangement we have ever had. I prefer to accept what I would regard as a more objective analysis with regard to this problem. I should like to quote from an exhaustive study of federal-provincial fiscal relations prepared by Dr. John F. Graham of Dalhousie University. With regard to our new system of federal-provincial fiscal arrangements I quote the following:

> The new federal-provincial fiscal arrangements for the period 1962-67 are the outcome of a unilateral decision of the federal government rather than of mutual agreement between the federal government and the provinces. They alter the equalization and stabilization elements of the previous arrangements and they constitute an abrupt change with respect to the centralization of control and uniformity of rates of the three direct taxes. They introduced a marked departure from the trend toward greater rationalization of the Canadian fiscal system that had hitherto characterized the war and post-war agreements.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): How many more millions did they give Nova Scotia?

Mr. MacInnis: I will reach that in a moment, if the minister will hold on.

> The new policy is obviously intended to shift back to the provinces the responsibility for levying their own personal and corporate income taxes at a time of acute need of the provinces for larger revenues and of large federal deficits.

The minister asked me how much the federal government is providing under the new arrangements.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): More.

Mr. MacInnis: Once again I will not attempt to be politically partisan. I will read from an objective report, and again I quote Professor Graham:

> Even with its relatively large federal transfers, Nova Scotia had a combined provincial and municipal net general revenue per capita of only 79 per cent of that of all the provinces for the fiscal year 1960-61. Moreover, it was only 69 per cent of the average for Ontario and British Columbia, the two richest provinces.

I would particularly draw the remainder of this excerpt to the attention of the minister and other members of the government.

> It would require about $44 million of additional revenue to bring the amount for Nova Scotia up to the national average, and about $53 million to bring it up to the average for Ontario and British Columbia.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): That is not what I asked. Why do you not answer my question? Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the hon. member how many more millions of dollars Nova Scotia is getting. I submit the answer is about $5 million more.

Mr. MacInnis: I agree with the minister but, as I have indicated, when this particular agreement was reached there was an attempt to hide the fact that a change or variation had taken place in a very important trend, and as soon as the provisions of the present agreement reach their limit we will begin again gradually to drop behind. The fact remains that we require today an additional $44 million to bring us up to the national average.

Mr. Chairman, we are concerned that this board may do nothing for our area but provide additional study and additional research. Regardless of the tremendous success and the very concrete proposals of the Atlantic provinces economic council, the maritime transportation commission, St. Francis Xavier's extension department, which organization has been working in this field for many years, the many independent economists in our universities and the various conferences, assemblies and meetings of associations that we have had, we are fearful that responsibility on the part of the government is going to be placed with this particular board and that we are going to procrastinate and delay action, not in fields that require additional research—I agree with the minister there—but in fields where action can take place today.

So far as transportation is concerned, we have the MacPherson royal commission which has reached certain findings, and we have the presentations of the maritime transportation commission. We know what has to be done with regard to that problem. We know the history and the purposes of the Maritime Freight Rates Act. We do not need an Atlantic development board to tell us what to do in this field.

I suggest that we can take action in the general field of taxation. A few moments ago the hon. member for Red Deer, with some degree of confusion because I found many of his statements conflicting, suggested that we do not want to continue to pour out thousands and millions of dollars by way of welfare and special taxation assistance, and what have you. Well, Mr. Chairman, I would suggest that the only way we can stand on our own feet is by developing a viable, stable economic base and there is no hope of accomplishing this without temporary and intermediate programs of assistance from the federal government on a long range basis. If we can get this assistance today, and if this assistance is provided on the basis of a logical plan, then I suggest that there will come a day when we in the Atlantic provinces can once again make a real contribution to this nation, when we can stand on our own feet. This is what we want. This is the condition toward which we are working. It is in the interests not only of our people in the Atlantic provinces; it is in the interests of the nation.

There are fields of action, Mr. Chairman, in which we can expect action on the part of the federal government through the Atlantic development board today. They do not have to wait for additional research and study through the proposed Atlantic development board. We were hoping that this was simply not another royal commission by means of which the government would attempt to slough off its responsibility and postpone the evil day when they were finally forced, by public opinion, to make the changes needed. We are familiar with the Rowell-Sirois commission. More recently, we have become familiar with the Rand commission which was to study and inquire into the development of long range policies in respect of the coal industry. Where is the report? Where are the policies? Where is the long range program? How long are we going to have to wait for this one? We have had royal commission after royal commission; we have had study after study. We require additional studies, yes, but we require action today.

One of the areas for example, Mr. Chairman, in which the federal government, through the proposed Atlantic development board, might profit by some research would be the field of the implementation of freer trade policies in the Atlantic region of Canada. I think we would all have to admit that since 1867 all of our tariff negotiations have been conducted with a view to the development of a nation with a central core of strong industrial development. Well, I suggest that the time is ripe for giving special consideration to the Atlantic provinces of Canada in future tariff negotiations. One could call to mind such possibilities as exist in the steel industry in the Atlantic provinces. Under a system of freer trade, one could think with tremendous optimism of the potential that exists, for example, in the presently seriously depressed Trenton-Pictou area of Nova Scotia. If we could arrange, on a free trade basis with the United States, to transport some of our cars and axles into this part of the United States we could develop one of the biggest industries in this nation.

This is one of those fields in which the European economic community and the United States produce 80 per cent of the materials, and therefore would be eligible for a complete reduction of the tariff. Then, it would be possible for us to export some basic steel and some structural steel. These are the types of things that I feel are more related to a long range program than to additional research and study. There are things that could be attended to immediately, and I hope the government is not going to ignore them.

One of the fears that we have in respect of the proposed Atlantic development board is the question of finances. It has already been brought out by several of the speakers —I am not going to repeat it, I simply want to call attention to the fact—that we cannot solve the problems of this area in this or that particular section of the economy. It must be a co-ordinated plan of development with action taking place in both the public and private sectors of the economy. This means you must have funds to stimulate economic activity. This means you must have funds with which to generate enthusiasm and optimism on the part of certain investment segments of our country. This means the federal government is going to have to take the lead and provide some real and worth-while amounts of money and pump them into this part of Canada with a view to developing the resources of this area.

I want to say one word, Mr. Chairman, with regard to the attitude that was expressed by the hon. member for Red Deer. I do not have his exact words, but he said something about not preoccupying ourselves with more systems and suggestions of welfare, and particularly federal government handouts. I agree with him that this is not the objective, this is not a desirable thing so far as a program for the economic development of our area is concerned. However, I would ask him to study some of the other reports that have come out of the Atlantic provinces, to study all the statements that have been made by representatives of existing industries in the area, the steel industry and others. I think you will have to agree that it is an established fact that in order to attract new industry into an area you have to be able to provide the same level of essential services to the children of the people who are going to be brought in to run these companies, the management people and so on.

It is essential that we in Nova Scotia be able to provide our people with the same level of educational facilities as they have in Ontario or British Columbia. This applies as well to the field of hospital facilities, roads and other things. The hon. member for Red Deer is shaking his head, but this is the impression he gave. We cannot do this at the moment because we do not have the same tax base and this would mean we would have to have higher taxes. You are not going to attract any industry into your area if it is going to pay taxes that will not allow it to exist and sell its products on a competitive basis. There is only one answer, one way to circumvent that position and that is through a temporary plan of government assistance that will enable us, sooner or later, to stand on our own feet and to attract new industries that can compete.

The Deputy Chairman: Order; it being five o'clock it is my duty to leave the chair in order that the house may proceed to a consideration of private members' business, pursuant to section 3 of standing order 15.

Progress reported.

PRIVATE BILLS

MERIT INSURANCE COMPANY

Mr. Alan Macnaughton (Mount Royal) moved the second reading of Bill No. S-14, respecting Merit Insurance Company.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this is a bill which we have received, of course, from the Senate. The purpose is very simple. The sole purpose of the bill is to add a French version to the name of Merit Insurance Company so that the title in French would read Mérite, Compagnie d'Assurance.

(Translation):

Mr. David Ouellet (Drummond-Arthabaska): Mr. Speaker, the Merit Insurance Company, which operates mainly in the province of Quebec, is a very good and very important company. I feel that the house should give its immediate support to this measure so that this insurance company may have a French as well as an English name. I must congratulate the company for taking a French name, as unfortunately many companies forget to do so. I think it is a noble attitude on the part of the company.

In my name and on behalf of our group, I congratulate that firm for having thought of this change.

THE CHRISTIAN BROTHERS OF IRELAND IN CANADA

The house in committee on Bill No. S-7, to incorporate the Christian Brothers of Ireland in Canada—Mr. Legere (for Mr. Morris)—Mr. Paul in the chair.

On clause 1—Incorporation.

Mr. Mather: Mr. Chairman, I rise simply to say that we have no quarrel with this clause or indeed with the bill. We have examined it in committee and are convinced that it is simply standard procedure to have this type of clause in the bill in order to establish more power and efficiency for the church concerned and its officers. The church seeks to carry on its spiritual, educational and, as they say, temporal work in a better and more organized way. We are in agreement with that principle as it is expressed in this clause and in the bill itself. There happens to be one of the agencies of this organization near the area I represent, and I can tell the committee that its work does harm to none, and I think does benefit to those of its particular faith. Beyond that, the school in question has a very good football team. Therefore we are very much in favour of this legislation.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 1 carry?

(Translation):

Mr. Plourde: Mr. Chairman, it gives me pleasure to rise and urge the hon. members of this house to let this bill go through with no further discussion.

This concerns a new congregation dedicated to the training and the education of our young orphans and to the education of those who wish to improve their knowledge.

If we had more congregations of this kind to look after our youth, we would not be faced with all our present problems now.

There is a lack of leaders because the basis is missing. And this bill offers a way to assist that congregation by incorporating them.

ALETHEA SARAH IVY FOWLER

Mr. Nicholas Mandziuk (Marquette) moved the second reading of Bill No. SD-12, for the relief of Alethea Sarah Ivy Fowler.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, the bill before us—for which I have the printed copy of the evidence that was taken before the committee of the Senate which deals with these matters—seeks, as is indicated in the preamble, to dissolve a particular marriage, based upon certain facts as alleged in a petition and certain evidence as given before the committee to support the facts contained therein. I think that inasmuch as this bill seeks the dissolution of a marriage we should inquire as to whether there is a marriage to be dissolved, because this perhaps is not always felt to be necessary.

One of the paragraphs of the petition, as is indicated in the preamble, alleges a particular fact, namely that a marriage did take place between the two people concerned, that it was by licence duly obtained, and the marriage was celebrated by the Reverend J. R. Graham, at the manse of St. Andrew Presbyterian church in the city of Sherbrooke, in the district of St. Francis. In the hearing before the Senate committee the petitioner was placed under oath and asked certain questions with respect to the marriage. A document was filed. I do not have it in my possession, but it is undoubtedly in the possession of the holder of all the official information with respect to this case. That document was a marriage certificate. I doubt whether it is necessary for us to actually obtain that particular document to see whether in fact it is a certificate, because it was identified by the witness under oath and produced to the committee of the other place. When the petitioner was before the committee as a witness on her own behalf, the clerk of the committee asked her certain specific questions with respect to this allegation of marriage. He asked as follows—

Mr. Speaker: I wonder if the hon. member has fully considered the import of citations 482 and 483 which I drew to his attention the other day with regard to these matters? I am wondering whether what he is doing now is merely to call into question certain parts of the evidence, or certain facts which may be a little different from those he was discussing the other day, at which time I drew his attention to those particular citations.

I would again indicate to the hon. member that the house does not profess to decide on second reading as to the truth or otherwise of the questions of fact involved. If I may remind the hon. member of the words in citation 483 of Beauchesne's fourth edition—> —in conceding a second reading for a private bill, the house is regarded as merely giving its sanction to its general principle on the hypothesis that the committee to which it is afterwards referred finds those allegations proved. It is usual, therefore, to allow the second reading except where the bill enunciates some principle which the house is not prepared to affirm.

For that reason I do not feel it is proper to go into the question of whether the marriage was proved or whether adultery was proved, or those matters which are allegations of fact. In the same manner one might say different witnesses never appeared before the committee of the other house. I would respectfully suggest to the hon. member that we are discussing the principle of the bill, not the allegations on which it is founded and that those allegations are matters for the consideration of the special committee of this house to investigate and report back for further consideration.

Mr. Howard: Following your comments on a previous occasion, Mr. Speaker, I did look at the citations to which you referred. I also looked at what you allowed me to say on November 15 with respect to Bill No. SD-1 for the relief of Madeleine Francoise Hankowski. That was on second reading, incidentally the same stage which this particular bill has reached. I myself, with Your Honour in the chair, recited verbatim from the evidence adduced, the questions asked and the answers given, as will be found on pages 1671 and 1672 of Hansard. There are six questions and six answers in number, all of which revolve around the question of the marriage and the evidence given in the other place to prove there was a marriage. I made reference to this on other occasions, too, and I assumed therefore that it was permissible to proceed in that direction and in that direction only—to consider whether or not there was a marriage which we were being asked to dissolve.

I think perhaps at this stage a lengthy recitation or reference in detail to the evidence taken in the other place as to whether there was or was not adultery might have doubtful validity because of the citations to which Your Honour referred, and we therefore refrained from making such references in detail. I, myself, refrained from discussing that particular aspect of the question. We are being asked now, I think, to follow two different courses, one which applied on November 15, when you yourself were in the chair, and the other which apparently is to apply now. This makes it awkward for hon. members who are concerned with these particular bills to discuss them from the point of view we have in mind, if there are to be different attitudes taken by the Chair in relation to precisely the same thing. I hope this is not the case, but it does leave me and, I am sure, other hon. members, in a quandary as to what the rules mean. I would appreciate some guidance from you before we proceed as to just what is the principle of the bill, if that is all we are intended to discuss.

Mr. Speaker: In so far as the question of what may be discussed at this time is concerned, I think it is clear that there is before us a bill which proposes that the marriage on a certain date between certain parties should be dissolved, as indicated in the preamble. That is the principle of the bill. If the hon. member can show me the difference between going into considerable detail as to whether there ever was a marriage, by looking at the evidence, and whether there was any adultery, by going to the evidence, I should be glad to hear him, but I have some difficulty in distinguishing them. Certainly, the question of proof of either of these things is not, I submit, for the consideration of the house at this stage. They will be, ultimately, through the committee; but not on second reading. If the principle of this bill that this marriage be dissolved does not meet with the approval of the house, then the thing is to vote on that point so as to decide one way or another, in this particular instance without reference to the evidence behind it, but bearing in mind what is the difference between a private and a public bill on second reading.

Mr. Howard: Apparently, then, Mr. Speaker, both you and I were wrong on November 15 when I was permitted—in fact, I thought latterly or subsequently, invited—to look at the evidence to discover whether certain things were worth while mentioning. I do not want to enter into discussion with Your Honour. Of course, that is not the thing to do, nor is this the place to do it. But if the principle of the bill is the dissolution of a marriage and if, as Beauchesne says, the house finds that that principle is objectionable, refusing its consent to second reading, and so on, it seems a little odd that the house should be asked to assent or disagree with the principle of a bill without having before it any explanation at all.

With regard to other bills, such as the bill we have just passed respecting the Merit Insurance Company, the sponsor got up and explained what was the principle of the bill. There was no objection to his doing this. We have heard lengthy introductory remarks made in connection with other private bills—remarks indicating the effect the bill would have and what was going to happen if it passed and what was not going to happen, and so on. There has been lengthy argument and discussion on second reading. A notable example is the bill concerning the Allstate Life Insurance Company of Canada which we discussed at the last hour available for the consideration of private bills. A lengthy explanation was given by the sponsor of that measure as to its principles, the desires of the people behind it and so on. Yet when we get to these particular bills on divorce we are being asked to consider them without discussion and without reference to what may or not be the facts—that is, if Your Honour's earlier invitation to look at the evidence does not mean anything, to guess whether or not the principle is acceptable.

It seems extremely unfair to put the house in such a position, Mr. Speaker. I am sure that if we had to vote on each bill without a great deal of reference to it, then there would be no alternative but to ask hon. members to vote blindly yes or no. We would be asking them to do that without any indication of what the principle of the bill is, other than saying that the principle is to dissolve a marriage. I am not going to go into the other question whether or not the reasons for the dissolution are correct ones, but it does seem an extremely awkward position in which to place hon. members. Mr. Speaker, I cannot go any further, except once again to say that by following this course of adhering strictly to your reasoning and ruling places us in no other position than to vote blindly yes or no on each bill.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I was in the house on the November 15 when discussions took place about this matter. As I understood the proposition at that time, you attempted to indicate what the principle of the bill was, namely the relief to be provided to such-and-such a person, consisting of the dissolution of their marriage. I think the suggestion was made, or so I understood from the comments both of yourself and the hon. member, that one might look at the evidence taken in the other place in order to obtain information on the question whether or not there had been a marriage. If there had not been a marriage, of course there could be no relief granted; but I do not think it was ever suggested, and I certainly did not get this impression, that we should survey the sufficiency of the evidence and examine whether there was adequate evidence for the purpose. If the evidence taken in the other place was plainly and specifically directed to establishing that there was no marriage, then I think any hon. member could say that he objected and intended to vote against the principle of the bill, because there was no marriage and no relief to be given.

That is an altogether different position from suggesting, as does the hon. member for Skeena, that this gives him or any other hon. member the right carte blanche, to examine piece by piece and item by item the evidence taken before the committee of the other place so that in considering the principle of the bill on second reading, we could decide whether or not relief should be granted on the evidence taken before the divorce committee of the other place. If there was no evidence at all to establish the marriage, then I think that is adequate evidence on which to say that we are opposed to the bill; but we should not go into the sufficiency of the evidence, which is a different matter.

Mr. Crestohl: Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member who is opposing second reading of the bill, having based himself on some examples he gave to the house, is confusing two things. When we have before the house a bill to change the name of a company—Allstate or any other—that is one matter. But these bills have all been before another committee. That committee has heard all the evidence. It has gone into all the proof which is available to this House of Commons, and the bills are now before us with all that evidence accepted and approved.

Mr. Speaker, I think on the date that the hon. member referred to I raised this question on a point of order, and Your Honour ruled upon it. Because you were generous enough to allow the hon. member to proceed a certain distance and ask certain questions or read certain evidence, I do not think it sets a binding precedent. We raised an objection then and you ruled upon it. We respectfully submit that what the hon. member is trying to do now is something altogether different from the examples he gave in dealing with an insurance company. These bills are before the house complete in all detail, and you are right, Mr. Speaker, when you say that all we can do now is to deal with the principle whether there should be an annulment or a dissolution of the marriage or whether there should not. As you have cited quite properly, I do not think we are in a position to go into all the evidence, as the hon. member suggests. If he wants to go into all the evidence for the sake of giving this house a lot of information it really does not need, and which it already has anyway in print, then I think he is completely out of order.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I was very impressed, as I nearly always am, by what was said by the hon. member for Peace River. It seems to me that the point that the hon. gentleman made could very well be illustrated by this bill concerning the Merit Insurance Company. When we were discussing that matter I noticed that the hon. member for Skeena did not get up and ask whether there was a Merit Insurance Company, and ask for its marriage or its birth certificate. We all took it for granted that there was such a company.

If the hon. gentleman could bring irrefutable evidence—and I mean irrefutable evidence, not just conjecture or speculation and waffling around among documents—to indicate that one of these petitioners was silly enough to come here and spend his or her money in trying to get a divorce when there was no marriage at all, then I think he would have a real point and we would want to drop the bill then and there. But it does not seem to me that it is reasonable or right, when all we are considering is the principle of a bill, for any hon. member to seek to transgress the rules of the house, or to take up the time of the house which is supposed to be devoted exclusively to discussing the principle of this bill—and the only principle I can see is whether or not there should be a dissolution —by all sorts of irrelevancies which are obviously not pertinent to the main question.

If any hon. member does not want to have one of these marriages dissolved, he can ask for a division on the measure and have the question settled that way, so that all of us have an equal right to determine it. It seems to me that it is about time—

Mr. Benidickson: We want to avoid this whole impasse.

Mr. Pickersgill: Well, speaking for myself, I say that I want to see parliament do what parliament ought to do, as long as there is no other method of doing it, and that is to provide relief in these cases.

It does not seem to me, sir, that procedural devices which the Chair repeatedly questions, and which I hope Your Honour intends to rule against, in the sense that Your Honour appears to be ruling, will be allowed any longer to delay the proper determination of these matters.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that if the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate had his way and the principle of this bill was that which he mentioned, namely whether we should handle these bills in the house or not, then that question would be debatable and a lot of people would co-operate with him. But it seems to me that in this as in the case of all other private bills there must be some principle or else we would not be handling it at all.

I find, not from looking at the evidence but from looking at the bill itself, that certain allegations are made, and some of those allegations must have some relationship to the principle. I think the allegations are the adultery charges and the other charges involved, which I think Your Honour has ruled are not to be discussed at this stage—and I think that is perfectly clear and correct. However, if there was no marriage of the parties described in this bill, then I think there is no principle, and unless the bill were worded differently there would be no point in its being before us.

For this reason I think we should have the opportunity, as we would with any other bill, of discussing that principle. Some hon. members may never have read one of these bills, and in case they have not, I should like to read not the preamble but one of the clauses to the bill. It says:

> The said marriage is hereby dissolved and shall be henceforth null and void to all intents and purposes whatsoever.

Nothing can be amended or changed in any way if there is not a principle to change. It would seem to me that the principle must be the marriage itself. I would respectfully submit, as the lawyers say, that this is the principle of this bill and that hon. members on second reading should concern themselves at least to this degree with the principle of the bill.

Mr. Douglas: On two occasions in the last few minutes it has been said that we are limited to discussing the principle of the bill, that the principle of the bill is whether or not we wish to dissolve a marriage, that any member who wishes to object to the dissolution of a particular marriage can vote against the bill, and that those who wish to dissolve a marriage may vote for the bill. It seems to me that it is preposterous to ask me as a member of parliament to agree to the dissolution of a marriage or to vote against the dissolution of a marriage without being able to discuss and debate the alleged grounds for asking that the marriage be dissolved, without any opportunity to discuss whether or not proper and adequate provision has been made for the children of such a marriage, if there are any, and whether or not adequate provision has been made for the wife through alimony. How is any member of this House of Commons, intelligently and with a proper sense of responsibility, going to vote to dissolve a marriage unless the germane and relevant matters have been discussed and debated?

Mr. Benidickson: The hon. member referred to one marriage out of 500 that might come before parliament for investigation.

Mr. Douglas: Not only with regard to one out of 500 but with regard to every one of the 500 I say you have the right to have this kind of information. If members of parliament are going to exercise the power to dissolve marriages, they ought to exercise it with a sense of responsibility. If ever there was a demonstration of the travesty of the House of Commons having this power, this is it. This is exactly why it ought to be taken away from this parliament. However, if we are to be compelled to exercise this power, then let us exercise it with a proper sense of responsibility. I submit that we cannot exercise it with a proper sense of responsibility unless we can discuss the grounds upon which it is wise and appropriate to dissolve a marriage or the grounds upon which we should vote against dissolving that marriage. I submit that I do not know how it is possible to discuss the principle of dissolving a marriage unless we can discuss and debate all the relevant facts which make it either advisable or inadvisable to grant dissolution of a marriage.

Mr. Pickersgill: Since we are on an extremely important point of order, Mr. Chairman, I wonder if I might say a word in direct reply to what has been said by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam. It seems to me that his argument, which would otherwise be valid, is based on a totally false premise. It seems to me that the false premise is that the agreement to the second reading would dissolve the marriage. It would do nothing of the kind. It would send the bill to a committee where any and every hon. member who wishes to do so can satisfy himself to his heart's content, in a proper atmosphere, where it could be done, not by debate and the clash of opinion but by the examination of evidence, something which cannot possibly be done on second reading in the House of Commons. If this were the only opportunity to consider the matter, if second reading in the house were the only opportunity to consider the merits of these cases, I would agree wholeheartedly with the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam. However, it is not the only opportunity. All that second reading of this bill or of any other private bill is, is a device whereby this house gets it before a committee—as every private bill goes to a committee—where the evidence can be properly sifted. It is only on third reading that a decision is being made as to whether or not the bill shall pass and the relief be granted.

It therefore seems to me that the hon. gentleman's argument falls totally to the ground. All we are deciding really is whether there is a prima facie case for sending the bill on to the committee and nothing else. It seems to me that is the only thing that ought to be debated. To use the rules of the house as an indirect device, as some hon. members seem to wish to do, for seeking to impose the will of a minority upon the majority about a matter on which they cannot get the support of a majority, seems to me to be an abuse of the rules of the house.

Mr. Orlikow: I had not intended to speak on this bill, Mr. Speaker. However, as a member of the miscellaneous private bills committee, who has not yet attended a meeting of it, I wish to say that I have no more faith that the matter would be discussed logically and intelligently, that the committee would get any more of the facts or that the committee could bring to this house a sensible and reasonable recommendation than I have that we can do it here without discussing the actual cases. I understand that this morning, as it has done on other occasions, the committee passed a block of nine or ten of the bills without calling a single witness and without doing anything but get the report from the other committee.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is not in order at this time in discussing anything that transpired in a standing committee, whether based on actual knowledge or on reputed knowledge through a report in the press or otherwise. He can only deal with the subject matter of what has transpired in the committee when the committee report is made and the report is before us, but not otherwise.

Mr. Orlikow: I do not wish to argue with your ruling, Mr. Speaker. However, if we cannot discuss these cases here in the house on this debate on second reading, my contention is that there is no adequate opportunity to discuss the matter in the committee at any stage. If we cannot really discuss it on third reading when it comes here, what are we here for? I think the point which the leader of our party made is very germane, namely that this house cannot discuss this matter sensibly at any point and that therefore it ought not to be here. I think that is the main point we are trying to make.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Unless hon. members will make a new point in regard to this point of order, I am quite prepared to indicate what my views are. However, I will hear the hon. member for York South if he is going to add something new.

Mr. Lewis: I do not know whether or not it is new, Mr. Speaker, however, I wish to point out that the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate obviously exposed a lack of logic in his presentation, if I may say so, by his very argument in that towards the end of his proposition he said to the house that what we are doing on second reading is satisfying ourselves that there is—and these were his words—a prima facie case to send the bill to committee. I ask the hon. member and also Your Honour how it is conceivably possible to decide that there is a prima facie case or any other kind of case to send anything to the committee without being able to discuss some of the relevant bases on which the bill before the house is founded.

I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that to apply the term "principle" in the way in which it is sought to apply it on a discussion on second reading of this kind of bill is to divest the word of any relevant meaning at all and is to engage in merely circular reasoning. What in effect is suggested is that on second reading all we can discuss is whether or not this bill is, if you like, something that can go to committee; but are not allowed to discuss what that something is that is to go to committee. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that what in effect this kind of ruling means is that this House of Commons is to act as nothing more than a rubber-stamp on second reading.

Before us is the title of a bill. We are then to rubberstamp it and send it to some committee for whatever that committee may or may not do. If that is done I submit that this house, as the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam has said, is not doing its job and we cannot possibly vote either for or against the bill with any sense of satisfaction at all because we are not voting on the basis of any knowledge or understanding or appreciation of what the bill is really about. Surely that is not acting as responsible members of parliament.

I throw back at the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate the suggestion that a minority is seeking to impose something on the majority. He can interpret it as he pleases. I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that on this issue this group is presenting, if I may say so without offence, the only logical, the only consistent proposition, the only proposition that makes sense, namely that this house either act responsibly or not act at all.

Mr. Speaker: Order. If the hon. member for Greenwood has anything new to add I will hear him, but this point of order has been canvassed across and up and down.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Speaker, I have a point that I think is new. It is certainly new on the question of this ruling, and it is a question of principle. What is the principle of the bill? The bill before us merely provides for the dissolution of a certain marriage. It does not deal in any way with the question of whether the wife, whose marriage is being dissolved, is adequately provided for. On an examination of the evidence it does appear that she has inadequate means to provide for herself.

If the matter is to go to a committee of this house it should go with some understanding of the principle, and as far as I am concerned there is a basic principle which the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate may ignore if he will. That principle is, is it responsible for this house to direct this committee to inquire into a bill that totally fails in principle to deal with an important matter of this sort? I suggest that it is not responsible for the house to pass this bill without providing in it that there be some investigation of this crucial matter.

Mr. Berger: Mr. Speaker, may I respectfully—

Mr. Speaker: One moment. The hon. member for Portage-Neepawa.

Mr. Enns: Mr. Speaker, I feel there is another principle that we seem to be forgetting. I have the uncomfortable feeling that the debate, as it is progressing, is really putting parliament in the awkward position of being in violation of one of its own statutes, the bill of rights. Surely there are individuals who are entitled to the benefit of the law. Whether it is a perfect law or an imperfect law does not mean to say that we should circumvent the law. If we do not like income tax we still have to pay it, though we might want to amend that law. Here is a law under which marriages are dissolved and this is not being allowed. Therefore I suggest that the rights of those individuals who are not being given this right are being violated.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The question before me at the moment is a point of order with respect to whether certain evidence will be examined in detail or otherwise on second reading. That is the neat issue once and for all. If hon. members wish to address themselves to the point, that is the question, but otherwise the Chair is prepared to make its ruling.

Mr. Berger: Mr. Speaker, may I attempt to assist Your Honour in determining this question? Your Honour has suggested that the matter—

Mr. Benidickson: Is the hon. member speaking on the point of order?

An hon. Member: Would you kindly sit down until he makes it?

Mr. Speaker: Order. Hon. members will not address one another directly in this fashion. I would ask the hon. member to address himself to the point of order and continue with his remarks.

Mr. Berger: I was about to do so before the interruption. Your Honour suggested that all that the house may consider on second reading of this bill is the principle of the bill, and I think that all hon. members are entirely in agreement with Your Honour on that score.

The difficulty arises at the next stage. The hon. member for Skeena has suggested that in order to determine whether the principle of the bill is sound it is necessary to investigate the truth or falsity of certain matters that are found in the evidence. I suggest that upon reflection Your Honour will conclude that in fact it is essential for the house to consider the question whether there is a valid marriage and whether the other conditions which are necessary for the granting of relief have been satisfied in this case. Otherwise it seems to me, with great respect, that the house has really nothing at all to talk about when such a bill comes before it.

In other words, if the house is not at liberty to consider the truth or falsity of the allegations upon which the right to any relief rests in this case, the only thing the house can talk about is the general advisability of marriages being dissolved at all. The house has before it this bill, a single bill. It has before it this marriage and only this marriage. The question therefore is whether this bill should be read a second time and whether this marriage should be dissolved.

As a new member, Mr. Speaker, I hesitate to question any suggestions that come from the Chair but, with great respect, I suggest that in logic and in common sense the position taken by the hon. member for Skeena is sound. I came into the house this afternoon looking forward to hearing the remarks of the hon. member for Skeena with respect to this bill.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I do not think the hon. member is doing anything but traversing arguments that have already been put forward. In actual fact he is flying directly in the face of citations 482 and 483 in this regard. On this point I think I have heard quite sufficient from both sides of the house and on several sides of the question. It seems to me that there is a misapprehension as to the difference between second reading of a public bill and of a private bill.

I would also place this point before certain hon. members who have spoken—perhaps there are others—who may not have an appreciation of the functions involved and what is going to happen to this bill or bills of a similar type if they should receive second reading. There is a miscellaneous private bills committee in which this bill can be studied. If hon. members will either become members of that committee or attend the meetings of that committee, as others have done, they will learn what can be done at that committee. If its members are not satisfied they may request that the witnesses be called and examined, as has been done by that committee. That is the purpose of having the bill referred to the committee and why it is not discussed here in the house.

It is on that basis that I am of the opinion that on second reading it is improper to discuss any of the evidence. It is only proper to discuss the principle of the bill. Shall there be or shall there not be a divorce or relief as sought in the bill? Appreciating as I do the nature of the second reading of a private bill as indicated in citations 482 and 483 in Beauchesne, which furthermore has been the practice of this house for years and has been accepted by all, I would point out that it is acceptance in principle only, with the bill being referred to the committee for greater study.

That is what my ruling is. If hon. members find the principle of the bill repugnant they may seek to defeat the bill but only on the basis of principle and not by going into the evidence.

Reference was made a few moments ago to another private bill. It would have been equally meritorious, I would suggest, to seek to have the hon. member who presented the bill put before the house the certificate of incorporation of the company or other documentation of the company. This is not done on second reading in this house. It may be done in the committee. That is what I propose to rule, and I so rule.

Mr. Douglas: Could we be exact about the ruling? When you said what you were going to rule upon a few minutes ago, it was whether or not on second reading the evidence could be gone into in detail. Do I take if you are ruling now that the evidence may not be referred to at all or that it may not be gone into in detail?

Mr. Speaker: In the presentation of a bill, the hon. member presenting the bill could say, this is an act for the dissolution of the marriage between such and such parties on such and such a date; that is all. It is quite irrelevant to this particular point, I would submit to hon. members to talk about children or maintenance. There may be some lawyers who would reflect upon this question. Is this house empowered to deal with the question of children, is it empowered to supervise these matters and how could it enforce any such bill, particularly one relating to the custody of children? I think we could have a very serious argument on constitutional grounds. In the same way, does the house not have some difficulty in dealing with a property settlement, or with the awarding of maintenance or alimony? Surely, at the moment there is existing machinery with regard to these matters. I say that we are not going to go into the question of evidence on second reading.

Mr. Douglas: I think Your Honour has given a very convincing argument as to why parliament should not be handling divorce.

Mr. Howard: Since I had the floor debating a bill before the point of order arose, and with the greatest respect to your ruling and all the discussion about it, and since I have been invited by yourself, by the Liberal party and others to blindly vote yes or no for this particular bill, I see no other course available but to put the house in the position of dividing on each and every one of these bills.

Mr. Brewin: May I ask for a ruling in respect of your own ruling? You mentioned the problem of the jurisdiction of this house to deal with such matters as maintenance and custody. Did Your Honour make any ruling in that respect, because if you did I should like to discuss it with Your Honour?

Mr. Speaker: I have made no ruling in that regard. I said the point had been mentioned but I felt it was quite irrelevant to the point of order. I merely addressed those thoughts to hon. members for their cogitation on some occasion; it is not a ruling. In so far as this particular bill is concerned, if anyone wishes to speak on the principle of the bill along the lines indicated by the Chair, then we will go ahead. Otherwise, I will put the question.

The house divided on the motion (Mr. Mandziuk) which was agreed to on the following division:

ATLANTIC DEVELOPMENT BOARD

PROVISION FOR DEFINITION OF DUTIES, APPOINTMENT OF MEMBERS, ETC.

The house resumed consideration in committee of the following resolution—Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton)—Mr. Chown in the chair:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to establish an Atlantic development board and to define the duties thereof, to provide for the appointment of the chairman and other members of the board and for the payment of certain expenses of the members thereof, to provide for the appointment of an executive director of the board and for the payment of his remuneration, to provide further that the board may engage the services of such advisers and staff as may be necessary to enable it to carry out its duties and to provide further for other related and incidental matters.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Chairman, if I could continue to summarize some of the concerns or fears we have with regard to the proposed Atlantic development board, I would refer to one particular matter to which the minister, in introducing the resolution before us, referred—a matter he had also raised when he was premier of the province of New Brunswick—and that is that we hope that economic policies which would be adopted in relation to particular economic circumstances facing the nation as a whole would not be unilaterally applied to a particular region of the country such as the maritimes. This has, of course, particular significance in the situation such as that which faces Canada today. Because of the situation which exists, austerity is precisely that much more serious in our region. I was somewhat concerned at the reference the minister made, when he said something along these lines: that no preconceived suggestions or conclusions, would be acted upon. I can understand why he would want to refer to that, but once again I hope this is not a means of slowing down action which can be taken in certain fields by the government without further study.

We also hope that consideration will be given to the question of certain companies growing fat on government assistance. Because we are not demanding assistance for the sake of assistance. If there is a place for particular subsidies for a given industry, we would hope that these would be investigated and supervised in order that no particular section of our economy benefits as a result of the situation facing us in our area. Therefore I suggest that there are some major projects, such as the Chignecto canal, which I hope will not be proceeded with simply because some particular individual or some small group of individuals in the Atlantic provinces sees this type of project as something worth while. Perhaps it is; but I suggest that it is unlike those other conclusions we have reached in certain particular areas which we have been studying for a number of years, and on which there is agreement in the region and across the nation. This is a matter in relation to which we have to ask some questions, such as these: Who will benefit from a Chignecto canal project? Will it add in any considerable measure to the lives of our people in this region of Canada?

The minister, during the course of his introduction of this resolution, referred to the fact that for some reason or other we have lagged behind the rest of Canada. We understand what this reason is. In 1867 we decided to build and to found this nation of Canada. In order to do that we had to implement and act upon national development policies—the trans-continental railway system, our tariff barriers, the opening of the west, and what have you. As a result of these policies, which were not based on traditional economic principles, we defied economics in order to build this nation, and in so doing we in the eastern region of Canada have suffered economically. Therefore we have reached a point where it is time that regional policies made up for the difficulties which have been created in our area while certain benefits were provided to people in other parts of Canada.

One final point, Mr. Chairman, with regard to any program of development in any region of Canada. I suggest that there is no hope in an Atlantic development board, or in any body involving a similar principle, for accomplishing the objectives of such a program until we can find the answer to solve the economic problems which face the nation. You cannot talk about full employment, which is a desirable goal for the Atlantic provinces, until we can provide full employment across Canada. We know what the situation has been over the years in that part of the country. We have witnessed and experienced some degree of prosperity when conditions were good in other parts of Canada, and the extra trickled over the brim and ran down to our people. The only times we have ever had real prosperity were during the railway construction boom and during the two previous world wars. We suggest that these are not events which are to be expected again soon, so that it is essential that we use the economic development board to provide this country with an adequate rate of economic growth. Then using the Atlantic development board, we can truly develop a sound industrial economic base and provide our people with a standard of living and equality of opportunity in line with people in the rest of Canada.

Mr. Coates: Mr. Chairman, it gives me a great deal of pleasure to have an opportunity of speaking on this resolution, which is of such great value and significance to the Atlantic provinces. Before I move in to my main remarks, I think I should make some comments on the statements made in this debate by the hon. member for Gloucester. He posed some questions with regard to a number of specific problems which faced him, both in relation to this board and to the government's policy as it applies to the Atlantic provinces. One of the questions he asked was what we had done in the past five and a half years. The hon. member has been in this house during that period, and far be it from me to say what he has been doing.

He has certainly been criticizing almost everything that the government has brought before this house during that period.

However, I think I should say to him that the first thing we did was to adopt a different attitude on the part of the federal government in dealing with the Atlantic provinces. We did not tell the people of that area that they should have one way tickets to some other part of Canada. We did not tell the people of that area that we should leave the coal in the ground.

An hon. Member: What did you do?

Mr. Coates: What we did was to provide a means of boosting the economy of that area to a degree that it had never reached previously. There is every indication, in every manner, that this is the way in which the people feel in that part of the country. I say to hon. members opposite that they are the people who should know that better than anybody else because they are the ones who have suffered materially through their neglect of that area. An hon. member asks what we did. May I say that we gave the provinces $100 million in special grants for a period of four years and we are now going to give them $175 million over the next five years. That is one of the measures we took. We talk about a power grid. Somebody says that Mr. Lesage put it forward. May I point out that the Liberal party put forward hospital insurance in 1919 but it took us to put it into effect.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That statement, of course, is inaccurate.

Mr. Coates: We acted. They can talk as much as they wish about the power grid between the three maritime provinces. However, talk as they like we, the Conservative party in this country and the Conservative government in this country, put into effect the Atlantic Provinces Power Development Act.

Mr. Fisher: The Diefenbaker government.

Mr. Coates: It was the Diefenbaker government. He is still leader of the government and the leader of this country and I am proud of him.

I could spend hours in this house—and I do not think my hon. friends would enjoy it a bit—in talking about what we have done for the Atlantic provinces.

Mr. Robichaud: Why such a bill?

Mr. Coates: May I say to my hon. friend that if he will sit still and listen I will try and tell him why such a bill has been brought forward. We could fight here all day between these political parties about what they did and about what we did in the last 27½ years and in the end I think we would probably be no further ahead than we are now. What we have this resolution before this House of Commons for is in order to get some ideas on how we can improve the situation as it exists in the Atlantic provinces today. It is my hope that I shall be able to provide a few constructive ideas and that other hon. members who speak in this debate will be able to provide more of them. If we work together in this way it is my hope that we may be able tc create in our area the great industrial expansion which all our people desire.

Mr. Chairman, I think it would be right to say that Prime Minister John Diefenbaker has again kept faith with the Atlantic provinces. On April 18 of this year he stated in this chamber that serious consideration was being given to the establishment of an Atlantic development board. During the election campaign he confirmed this consideration in a positive way. Today we begin the debate that will see his promise become a reality.

With the establishment of this board we can accept the confident assurance that we have within our own grasp the tools that will allow us to keep pace with the giant strides presently being taken by the Canadian economy. There has been before this House of Commons since 1957 much legislation which has had a material effect on the lives of the citizens of the Atlantic provinces. However, no other single piece of legislation has had the inherent potential of the bill that will follow this resolution. With the establishment of the Atlantic development board maritimers will become the masters of their own destiny. This is a challenge which no member from the Atlantic provinces should take lightly. It is a challenge which no member should make light of. To do so will be to commit a disservice to our area, for all agree that we must have the benefit of this board in order to keep pace with the rest of Canada.

Recently the hon. member for Antigonish-Guysborough, when speaking to a group of high school students in Halifax, is reported to have warned them not to put too much faith in the Atlantic development board. What did he expect to gain from this type of statement, and to a group who in the near future will be the leaders in our area? Did he hope to perpetuate the gloom and doom philosophy that has been part of the Liberal party's program since I have been a member in this house? If so, what benefit are we in our area to derive from such a philosophy? How much better it would have been to indicate to these students how they might assist in making this board the success we must all hope and expect it will be. From the debate on this legislation and from the lips of members from the Atlantic provinces must come ideas, enthusiasm and leadership. The legislation demands this type of approach; the board it will create demands it; and the members of that board must anticipate it. They must look to us to provide the initial ideas that could transform our area to one of health and vigour.

I was very pleased to see the Minister of National Revenue and the Minister of Forestry introduce this measure. He is a man who has provided outstanding leadership to our area throughout his life. He gave leadership to the present self-help approach to our problems on his election as premier of New Brunswick in 1952. Since that date we have seen the Atlantic premiers conference become an annual event of great significance. We have seen the establishment of the Atlantic provinces economic council, with the resultant benefits that have accrued to our area through their leadership. Now we see the minister guiding this legislation through the house. It is legislation which carries with it the hopes and aspirations of all in our area.

In order to assure the success of this board we must see to it that the ablest men in our area, regardless of their political affiliations, are appointed to it. We must see that they are presented at an early date with evidence that specific projects will have a long term beneficial effect on the economy of our area. We must hope and expect that the board will act quickly on those projects which have already had exhaustive investigations into their merits and demerits carried out. The board must move quickly in making the government aware of their recommendations and at that time we must move swiftly in seeing that the proper action is taken.

From a personal view, there are two specific projects which I consider merit early consideration by this house and by the board. The first is the Chignecto complex on which the minister has already made some comment. The second is the re-establishment of the Minas basin ferry service. The Chignecto complex does not demand the extensive investigation that might once have been required. The Chignecto canal committee has already had a comprehensive investigation carried out into the potential of the bay of Fundy tides, from an energy point of view. It is a study that demands the most intensive consideration and at the earliest date possible. With the development of this tidal power, one might well see the transformation of our area through a tremendous industrial expansion. This project has an annual energy potential of 5½ billion kilowatt hours. Estimates of mill rates run from 2.87 mills per kilowatt hour to 5.13 mills per kilowatt hour, depending on the interest rate and amortization. With this project we see the means by which we can accomplish the task before us. I might add that an integral part of this tidal development would be the construction of large thermal power plants. This would provide a much needed shot in the arm for the coal industry of our area. It is my view that we should expect an early report from the board on the feasibility of harnessing the tides. Certainly if a positive decision were brought down construction of the dam to harness the tides and construction of the thermal power plants should begin immediately.

The second project I feel could come before the board at an early date is the Minas basin ferry service. This is an important transportation facility that was available to the maritime provinces until 1940. At that time the ferry was removed from the area as a war measure and never returned. At the present time a great deal of information is available on the potential of this transportation link. The Stanfield government had a very exhaustive investigation carried out, and the only hindrance to its re-establishment has been the high cost of wharfage facilities. This link would provide a saving in mileage of as much as 115 miles to areas in the Annapolis valley and southwestern Nova Scotia. It is not difficult to imagine the great boost it would provide to the tourist industry, to agriculture and to our fisheries. There has been discussion of late on the possibility of obtaining a hovercraft. This craft would eliminate the heavy wharfage costs necessary for the ordinary type of facility if a scheduled service were to be provided.

There is another possibility associated with this transportation link between the Annapolis valley and Cumberland. It is the recommendation associated with the Chignecto complex that a dam be constructed to harness the waters of the Minas basin. This dam would be constructed where the ferry would operate. If the dam were recommended and could be used as a causeway as well, the need for the ferry service would be eliminated.

There are many projects related to every area of our economy which deserve consideration and action. It is up to us to see that they are brought to the board's attention. It is up to the board to see that they are dealt with swiftly. If the recommendation is positive, then the government must transform its recommendation into reality. If it is negative, we must immediately move on to another. There will be many projects submitted and they will vary in their over-all effect. Certainly those with the greatest potential effect should be considered first. Let us work together to make this board what we feel it should be. Let us look forward to early results from our efforts.

Before resuming my seat, Mr. Chairman, I wish to pay tribute to Brigadier Michael Wardell. He has carried out a dedicated crusade to make the Atlantic development board a reality. His persistent guidance is exemplified by the fact that all four political parties during the last election campaign considered such a board essential as a cure for the ills of our area. He has been a visionary who, with the passage of this legislation, will see the initial step taken. Let us not fail in our quest to make the remainder of his dream as real as this initial step.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Chairman, I have noticed that members of the house sometimes open their remarks by saying that they do not intend to prolong the debate and then they proceed to prolong it at some length. As far as I am concerned, I intend to speak briefly to this resolution. I do so, not because of my connection with the maritimes but in spite of my connection with the maritimes. If I may be pardoned a brief personal reference, in 1896 my grandfather, who had been prime minister of a maritime province, came up to sit on the treasury benches in this house, but since that date I must confess that before I was born my connection with the maritimes was broken.

The reason I wish to raise my voice on this resolution is that so far I have noticed that not a single person has spoken on the resolution from any corner of this house who comes from the central provinces, and I want to emphasize by speaking on the resolution that to my way of thinking it is of some importance that those of us who come from the central provinces should concern ourselves with the problems that are raised by this particular resolution. It seems to me that we in the central provinces should welcome this resolution and the legislation to follow because any development of the maritimes, or indeed any other region of Canada, must have the moral and financial support of all the people of Canada even if that involves, as it well may, sacrifices on the part of some parts of this country. As far as I am concerned, speaking as I do for a Toronto constituency I wish to say that if it is necessary to contemplate some temporary sacrifices in order to do the things that are required to meet the objectives of this legislation, we wish to do so.

It is well known, I think, that all of the parties in this house support the general principle of the resolution and will probably support the legislation, which we have not yet seen but which presumably carries it out. At the founding convention of our party we passed a resolution to which I should like to refer briefly in which we said that we would plan the development of renewed economic strength in those areas of our country which have not shared in Canada's growth. I think what we are referring to is perfectly obvious to our friends in the Atlantic region. Indeed, we know it to be a fact that the Atlantic region has not shared in Canada's growth. We then went on to say:

> New Democratic transportation policy will take into account the special circumstances of those areas, and wherever possible, government purchases will be channelled to them. Special attention will be given to a location of industry policy, similar to successful programs in Britain, Sweden and other countries. This policy will include tax concessions and other assistance to private industry, as well as public investment.
> A program of long range, basic public works, supported by federal grants, will be undertaken in the Atlantic region ... A capital projects commission will be established to co-ordinate this program.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, although we have some reservations, as explained by the hon. member for Cape Breton South, we fully support the resolution. I should like to echo his words that we do not believe that further studies and research are what are necessary. We believe that any program that does not involve massive public works and public investment cannot deal with the problem.

I am reminded of the situation that existed in Great Britain between the two wars when there were depressed areas in south Wales, for example, and in the Yarrow region in the north of England, incidentally areas associated with coal mines, a supposedly declining industry. Those areas, where the ideas of private enterprise and planlessness governed, remained depressed, a constant source of unemployment and a source of personal tragedy for many years. After the war, when a new philosophy prevailed, through the location of industry and through other aggressive and active steps on the part of the government, those areas disappeared as distressed areas. Not only was it possible to put new industry and new life into them but it was even possible through active economic planning, substantial public investment and the location of industries to transform those areas and make them the part of the generally prosperous country which they are at the present time. I suggest that what is needed in the maritimes is the same sort of approach that solved this problem in the depressed areas of Great Britain.

When the Atlantic development board gets to work I hope its objective will be nothing less than to plan for full employment in that area, as well as in the rest of Canada. Any lesser objective than that will, in my judgment, be a complete failure.

Mr. Chairman, there is one other aspect of the matter which I should like to mention to the committee, and that is the feeling that the picture is bound to change in the maritimes because of the new trade patterns that will emerge from the European economic community and with the institution of President Kennedy's plans for freer trade. It seems to me that the existence of this board prepared to take advantage of new opportunities in trade cannot help but transform the economic situation of that area of Canada.

I shall conclude my remarks, Mr. Chairman, by saying that I do not believe the people from the Atlantic provinces, come to us, as the parliament of Canada, as mendicants seeking some special favours or benefits. I think they come to us saying, we have had a problem since confederation; we ask you to take it seriously. We ask you, if necessary, to make sacrifices to deal with it. So far as I am concerned, in this party we accept that responsibility and we will do all that we can to make sure this problem is dealt with. We welcome this legislation and look forward to its implementation and to all the other things the hon. member for Cape Breton South has pointed out as essential to a real solution.

Mr. McGrath: I am very pleased, Mr. Chairman, to lend a few words of support to this resolution, particularly after having sat here and listened to the political speech delivered by the hon. member for Gloucester. He prefaced his remarks by saying his party only intended to put up one speaker. In other words, he hoped the rest of us would be just as big about this and we would get the resolution through. What he forgot to say was: I am going to be big enough to speak on this resolution, politics notwithstanding. But he could not do that. He then went on to give us a half hour political speech.

Mr. Robichaud: What about the minister?

Mr. McGrath: If my hon. friend wishes to make a contribution to this debate we would be glad to hear him, if his turn comes.

This is just another step in a series of steps taken by this government since 1957 when we came into office to remedy, with tangible action, the years of neglect, the lean years of Liberal administration.

An hon. Member: No political speeches.

Mr. McGrath: I am speaking in the same vein as my hon. friend from Gloucester who took the time of this house for 30 minutes. The only difference is, Mr. Chairman, that my words are factual.

[Mr. Brewin.]

The hon. member in his speech referred at great length to what should be done, and indeed he referred to the number of times during the last several years that hon. members in the opposition had advocated such a board as this resolution envisages. Apparently to look back beyond six years, in the hon. gentleman's estimation, is to go back into ancient history. Indeed, it should be ancient history if it is to be to their advantage because they would have us forget, as the people of the Atlantic provinces have not forgotten, the years and years during which the pleas of the Atlantic provinces fell on deaf ears. I am sure the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate is aware of the fact that as late as the year 1955 the premier of Newfoundland actually threatened to lead his province out of confederation rather than continue to tolerate the second class treatment that was being handed out by the government in Ottawa, of which my hon. friend was a member. We did not hear any comments from the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate at that time, nor did we hear any comments from the hon. member for Gloucester because they knew when to keep quiet.

In order to correct some of the inaccuracies left on the record by my hon. friend, I should like to refer briefly to the tremendous record of this administration, a record which was referred to in the Atlantic Advocate as deserving of the support of the Atlantic provinces. I should like to refer to that record particularly as it applies to the province of Newfoundland. Mind you, Mr. Chairman, this is a province which is a little behind the three maritime provinces which, as my hon. friend mentioned, were lagging behind the other provinces.

When this government came into office in 1957, the grants to the province of Newfoundland, including conditional and unconditional grants, amounted to approximately $25 million a year. Five years later, Mr. Chairman, those same grants had been increased to almost $70 million a year. Indeed, the increases were so impressive that the premier of Newfoundland was forced to admit it was time for a change in Ottawa and he was glad the government had changed in 1957.

My hon. friend had very little to say when asked to point his finger to one single project the Liberals had implemented to improve the lot of the Atlantic provinces. All that he could refer to was camp Gagetown, a national defence project.

Mr. Pickersgill: And the Canso causeway, he mentioned that.

Mr. McGrath: Perhaps we are going to hear from my hon. friend later in the debate. He has had very little to say because the record of that government in respect of the Atlantic provinces is well known in the Atlantic provinces, as my hon. friend is well aware and as he found out when he foresook his own constituency last spring to campaign in Prince Edward Island. We know what happened in Prince Edward Island. We know what happened when he campaigned in Nova Scotia.

An hon. Member: What happened in Newfoundland?

Mr. McGrath: As a matter of fact, when the next election rolls around I hope my hon. friend will carry on the same activities in Prince Edward Island and Nova Scotia. Let us hope we have the same results, and I think we will.

Mr. Robichaud: You mean double our representation in Nova Scotia?

Mr. McGrath: It seems to me to be interesting, Mr. Chairman, that in an area which lags behind the rest of Canada so far as development is concerned and which, like other areas in Canada, suffers from seasonal unemployment and perhaps to a greater degree, nothing was done by my hon. friends opposite in the area of vocational training. Indeed, it was not until this government came into office and saw the great need in Canada, particularly in areas like the Atlantic provinces, for vocational training that anything was done. For example under the policy of the Liberals, if you could call it that, they did nothing to encourage vocational training. Indeed, they tried to discourage it. It was not until this government put some teeth in the legislation and made the federal contribution 75 per cent that it was possible for the province of Newfoundland and other Atlantic inces to implement a comprehensive program of vocational training.

The Chairman: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the parliamentary secretary. However, I should remind him that this is not a throne speech debate, but rather consideration of a resolution which has to do with the establishment of an Atlantic development board. I realize that the wording which follows tends to permit a rather wide scope for debate, but I do feel I would be straining the rule of relevancy if I allowed the parliamentary secretary to continue with the comments he has just made. I would ask him to try to come back more specifically to the point under discussion.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, on the point of order you have raised, the hon. gentleman has obviously spent hours and days and weeks preparing this speech. He does not take up the time of the house very often, and I think we should extend to him the widest possible tolerance, notwithstanding the fact that he does not seem to know what the resolution is about.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Chairman, I want to thank my hon. friend from Bonavista-Twillingate for his charitable remarks, but unlike some of his colleagues, what I do have to say is my own and it was not farmed out from Messrs. Kent and Lamontagne.

Mr. Robichaud: Who wrote your speech?

Mr. McGrath: As a matter of fact, Mr. Chairman, if the hon. gentleman who purports to be the senior spokesman for the Atlantic provinces would contain himself, I would remind him that from 1953 to 1957 when he was supposedly the next prime minister of Canada; he was the great man, the senior statesman for the Atlantic provinces, the great friend of Premier Smallwood. What did he do for the province that so kindly and charitably adopted him? He went across Canada making speeches about second class Canadians; that is all he could do, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the hon. gentleman like me to answer his question?

Mr. McGrath: In later years the best he has been able to do is fill the pages of Hansard with irresponsible remarks. I will conclude my remarks at second reading. There is one thing to which I should like to refer before I resume my seat, an editorial which appeared in the Atlantic Advocate of June, 1962.

Mr. Robichaud: Who wrote it?

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Chairman, this magazine is probably not greeted too favourably by hon. gentlemen opposite because it truly represents the thoughts and feelings of the Atlantic provinces. I quote from page 11:

> Prime Minister Diefenbaker has announced his new policy for the Atlantic provinces in words which have thrilled the region. He has announced his government's decision to establish, under federal authority, an Atlantic development board.

Then the article goes on to say:

> The Diefenbaker government has given to the Atlantic provinces more by far than has any government of any party at any time.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I am rising on a point of order. Is there not a rule in the house against reading speeches that have been written by someone sitting in the gallery?

Mr. Clancy: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, we have had so much interruption by the hon. member for Gloucester—

Mr. Robichaud: Name him.

The Chairman: Order. There was no point of order, as is apparent to the hon. member who raised it. The parliamentary secretary has the floor, and I would ask hon. members to co-operate, because I cannot hear.

Mr. McGrath: Obviously, Mr. Chairman,—

Mr. Robichaud: Give us the name of the person who wrote that.

Mr. McGrath: —hon. gentlemen opposite are just not prepared to listen to the facts. They did nothing for so long, that when something tangible is done, all they can do is laugh and ridicule. I submit to you, Mr. Chairman, that this resolution is the most important measure ever to be introduced in this house with respect to the Atlantic provinces, and it is just the culmination of the efforts of this government over the years to do for the Atlantic provinces what the Liberals failed to do during the 22 years of neglect when they were in office.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Chairman, I had not intended taking any part in the discussion of this resolution, but after listening to some of the government supporters speaking on it I thought I had better find out if they were talking about the same resolution that was being discussed by this committee. I listened to their eloquent exaggerations as to what this resolution will do, statements that this is the greatest piece of legislation ever passed in the interests of the maritimes, the statement that this is going to make the maritimers masters of their own destiny, and so on, and thought it might be a good thing if we just came back to the actual facts of this resolution before the debate is wound up.

Let me say, in the first place, that I think hon. members from all other parts of Canada will welcome the idea of having an Atlantic development board. I would like to compliment the minister who introduced the resolution. I know all hon. members of the house would want to say to him that neither he, the government nor anyone else need ever apologize for bringing in special legislation for this area of Canada. Because I think we agree with him when he says that this area deserves special consideration and demands special action. This is the case because the Atlantic provinces have had for many years a lower per capita income than the rest of Canada, a higher rate of unemployment than any other part of Canada—certainly higher than the national average—and they have had particular problems which have brought with them difficulties both social and economic.

I have been rather amused all day listening to the Liberal and Conservative members each trying to lay the blame on the other party for the conditions in the Atlantic provinces. I certainly do not intend to get into this game of trying to prove that it is the Conservatives' fault or the Liberals' fault that conditions are as they are in the Atlantic provinces. All I want to say is that the conditions are there, that they are appalling, that both the old line parties which have governed Canada since 1867 must accept responsibility for this state of affairs, that there is not much use spending time in attaching blame; the problem now is to get on with the job of trying to improve the situation. It has been more than a matter of a lack of government policy.

We have had in Canada since 1867 national policies which have deliberately developed a great industrial heartland in central Canada. That policy, by means of transportation, tariffs and investment, has used western Canada and the Atlantic provinces to supply raw materials and fuel, and on the other hand has made them the market place for the products of central Canada. There is a price you have to pay for such a policy, and certainly the Atlantic provinces, and at certain times western Canada, have paid the price. Therefore, no one need apologize for saying that in those circumstances in addition to a national economic development board we need an Atlantic development board to pay particular attention to the problems of the Atlantic provinces.

I rose simply for the purpose of saying that I think supporters of the government would have been much fairer to this committee and to this country as well as to the eastern provinces of Canada if, instead of those purple passages about this being the magna carta of the Atlantic provinces they had simply said what was the truth, namely that they were going to set up a development board for the Atlantic provinces which would be an advisory board whose function apparently, would be to collect data, to look into the possibility of certain economic projects and to make recommendations. In other words, it would be a regional version of the national economic development board.

This resolution and the bill which will follow can be for the Atlantic provinces either invaluable or valueless, and what is done will depend entirely on the extent to which the recommendations of this board are implemented. Actually, much of its work has already been done by the Atlantic provinces economic council. APEC has produced reports on economic projects for the Atlantic provinces which are broad in scope and excellent in concept. So in actual fact the board which it is now proposed to establish will not have to do very much work. Things like the Chignecto canal, the Fundy hydro power development and at least half a dozen cornerstone industries have been fully investigated by the Atlantic economic council. They have collected a wealth of data, and if all this board is going to do is mull over the same material its work will be a waste of time.

I personally would have preferred to see a department of government set up rather than an advisory board, because that is what this is. I would like to see a department charged for the present with the task of promoting economic development in the eastern provinces and raising the living standards there—a department with a minister, a deputy minister and staff. When the provinces had been brought up to the national standard, the department could be disbanded. Such a department which would have power and, above all, an allocation of funds and a clearly defined purpose in mind, might go far toward accomplishing this purpose. So let us not forget that this proposed board will be an advisory board and that if its recommendations do not receive any more attention than some of the recommendations of the various boards and commissions which have been set up during recent years, the resolution before us is not worth the paper it is printed on.

In the second place, the effectiveness of this board will depend on whether or not there is an Atlantic development fund set up from which the board can draw the funds necessary to implement its program. We do not need more economic surveys; we do not need more economic analyses; we do not need more paper plans. We have reached the point where money, and very large sums of money, are needed. The hon. member for Gloucester talked about a billion dollars over the next 10 years. A billion dollars over the next 10 years would not begin in my humble opinion to cope with the problem of economic development in the four Atlantic provinces.

Mr. Douglas: Much larger sums than that will be needed. As the hon. member for Red Deer pointed out, we are now spending $150 million a year on social welfare. I would say that a billion dollars over the next five years would be needed in the Atlantic provinces. If the expenditure of that money helps to provide full employment and takes people off the social welfare roll and off unemployment insurance, it will be the best investment the people of Canada ever made. So let us not begrudge the expenditure of money like this. When I hear members of the government side say "How much?" and "Where are you going to get it?" this makes me suspicious as to how much money will be behind this economic development board. If this is going to be just another board to cut out paper dolls and make coloured pictures and charts, I, for one, will be very disappointed. I want to tell the hon. member to my left that if, proportionately, the Atlantic provinces could get as much for industrial development as the province with which I was associated I think they would be very happy to see the government putting up that much money.

When the bill comes down, the sponsor of this resolution may be able to give us some information as to the machinery which will be set up for implementing the recommendations of this new board. He may be able to tell us what sums of money over what period of time will be available in an Atlantic economic development fund. I hope he will also be able to tell us whether or not the major economic groups in the Atlantic provinces will be represented on this board—whether business, labour, primary producers and consumers as well as the provincial governments will be represented, so that the board may be truly representative not only of the four provinces concerned but of the various economic outlooks involved.

We in our group will support this resolution but we will support it in the hope that all the good things which have been placed in the store window this afternoon will not prove to be just window dressing, but that when the bill comes down and when we go into the store there will be some goods on the shelf.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton) thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-94, for the establishment of an Atlantic development board.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

NATIONAL PRODUCTIVITY COUNCIL ACT

AMENDMENT TO INCREASE MEMBERSHIP, ETC.

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Trade and Commerce) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the National Productivity Council Act, to provide for the appointment of three additional members thereof and for the payment of certain expenses of such members, to provide further for the payment of all expenses of the council out of moneys appropriated by parliament for the purpose and to provide further for other related and incidental matters.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Paul in the chair.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Chairman, the amendments to the National Productivity Council Act proposed by this resolution provide for the following changes. The membership of the council will be increased by three members, who will be additional representatives of the fields of industry and commerce, organized labour, agriculture and other primary industries. This will give the council a total membership of 28 persons. Provision will be made for the appointment of a vice chairman of the council who will assist the chairman and act in his absence. The staff of the council will be brought under the Government Employees Compensation Act. The council's expenses will be paid from moneys appropriated by parliament in the light of the council's programs instead of through a fixed annual amount established in the act as is at present the case.

The purpose of these amendments is to assist the council in carrying out this greatly expanded program. These activities have been developed in consultation with leaders of business, organized labour, education and provincial bodies. The new provisions should greatly strengthen the ability of the council to implement its new program, which takes on added importance in view of the proposed legislation to establish a national economic development board. The council and the development board will complement each other's activities, each lending support to the endeavours of the other. The activities of the development board will, however, emphasize and underline the need for effective measures on a wide front to help Canadian industry to be as competitive as possible. The productivity council will be concerned in large measure with this very important task.

Now, Mr. Chairman, during the past year and a half the council has planned and undertaken a very comprehensive program. All of these activities are intended to help Canadian businessmen to compete more effectively both in the home and in world markets. I should like briefly to mention some of the key features of this program, because I believe that businessmen, labour leaders and the general public should know more about the useful work being carried out by the council. In collaboration with the universities, the council is sponsoring courses on work study. In addition seminars, conferences, lectures, and discussion groups have been systematically organized to promote work study in industrial centres across Canada. The council is playing an important role in encouraging the development of improved management techniques, and the use of training and retraining programs. Extensive work is being undertaken in the field of human relations in industry. An examination of the extent of industrial research in certain key industries is under way. Careful consideration is being given to ways of encouraging more research. Information on means of achieving greater productivity is being prepared by the council staff and made available to labour, management, educational institutions, and other groups interested in this vital task. In order to reach out to the grass roots of business, provincial and local productivity councils and committees have been organized across Canada.

The record, Mr. Chairman, I believe, is indeed impressive, and I would like to emphasize that I am mentioning only the highlights. The details are available for anyone who wishes to know them. I would encourage business and labour leaders to become familiar with them. Despite the tremendous job which the national productivity council is doing, the council cannot do it alone—it needs labour-management co-operation as well, and the help of Canadian universities is also most important. Labour and management are co-operating, and Canadian universities are also being very helpful.

The council has already forged some close links with our universities in its expanding program to foster and promote productivity. One of the strongest links is through its labour-management co-operation program. A series of national joint labour-management seminars is being sponsored by the council at Canadian universities. The first of these seminars was held last March, at Queen's university in Kingston. A second was held at Dalhousie University in Halifax in September. A third has already been planning at Saskatchewan university for next January, and plans are under way to hold a fourth in Quebec next spring. At these seminars, for the first time in Canada, top labour and management leaders are brought together to discuss their problems frankly with each other, away from the bargaining table, in a neutral university atmosphere. They talk together, eat together, and live together at the university. They learn to know each other better. Many of them, in fact, have been amazed to find that they are really not so far apart after all. This is a great contribution towards creating a better climate of labour-management relations by Canadian universities working with the national productivity council.

The success of these conferences can be attributed to the high calibre of the people attending and to the national stature and prominence of the speakers. The quality and usefulness of these conferences is typified by the program carried out at the Halifax meeting, and I think hon. members would be interested in hearing something about it. At the plenary sessions of this meeting, the speakers included Professor W. Y. Smith, head of the department of economics and political science at the University of New Brunswick, and past chairman of the Atlantic provinces economic council, who spoke on the economic facts and their implications. Mr. Herbert H. Lank, president of Du Pont of Canada Limited, and Mr. William J. Smith, president of the Canadian brotherhood of railway, transport and general workers, discussed the subject of the problems of economic growth and productivity from the viewpoint of management and labour. Mr. Walter E. Duffett, dominion statistician, and Dr. S. A. Goldberg, assistant dominion statistician, gave talks on measuring productivity. Judge A. H. McKinnon of the province of Nova Scotia, chairman of the fact finding body on labour legislation, spoke on seeking a formula for industrial peace and collaboration. Also, during the plenary sessions, Mr. D. W. Ambridge, president of the Abitibi Power and Paper Company Limited, and Mr. J. A. D'Aoust, vice president and regional director of united papermakers and paperworkers, discussed labour-management co-operation at the industry and plant level.

One very important session at the Halifax meeting was the panel discussion on the findings of the national productivity council's mission to Europe on labour-management-government co-operation in European countries. Taking part in this discussion were Mr. R. V. Yohe, president of B. F. Goodrich Canada Limited; Mr. Jean Marchand, president, confederation of national trade unions; and Dr. G. V. Haythorne, deputy minister of labour, who is also a member of the national productivity council.

The announcement in the throne speech that a national economic development board would be established followed on the successful completion of the mission to Europe sponsored by the national productivity council. The members of the mission were drawn from the ranks of labour, management, education, and government. Organized labour was represented by Mr. William Dodge, executive vice president of the confederation of national trade unions. Mr. John D. Carroll, international representative and assistant to the Canadian vice president, international brotherhood of boilermakers, iron shipbuilders, blacksmiths, forgers and helpers; and Mr. Larry Sefton, director, district No. 6, united steelworkers of America. Management was represented by Mr. J. Herbert Smith, president of the Canadian General Electric Company Limited; Mr. Robert B. Yohe, president of B. F. Goodrich Canada Limited; and Mr. J. Claude Hebert, president, Transparent Paper Products Ltd.; Dr. G. Edward Hall, president of the University of Western Ontario, represented educational institutions.

In each of the countries visited, the members of the mission held detailed discussions with leading representatives of national labour and management organizations; with government economic agencies; and with joint labour-management-government consultative bodies.

In sending this mission to Europe, the council believed that it was useful and desirable to have a better knowledge of the experience of other countries in undertaking economic activities intended to foster employment, and to achieve economic advancement. The mission visited Sweden, the Netherlands, West Germany, France, Belgium, and England, in investigating these matters. Following its return to Canada, its members prepared and published a very informative and useful report on European organizations, both governmental and private, which work toward economic expansion.

I regard the findings of this mission as being of the utmost importance. To a very large extent they confirm what this government has been attempting to do in fostering closer relations between labour, management and government. There is little doubt that labour, management and government co-operation in Europe has contributed greatly to the general prosperity in that area. It would be misleading, of course, to attribute the prosperity of Europe solely to this co-operation because many other factors have also contributed. Nevertheless, without close co-operation between the three key sectors of the economies of European countries, it is very doubtful that they would have achieved the amount of progress which has been possible.

While the policies and activities being implemented by the various countries visited by the mission showed differences, each had the same basic objective. In this regard the mission was impressed in each country with the spirit of co-operation which exists between labour, management and government, and the way in which they worked together in the national interest. There is little doubt that this co-operation has greatly contributed to the general prosperity of Europe. The determination of all key groups in each of these countries to achieve high levels of employment, economic growth, rising standards of living, and a healthy trading and balance of payments position, has made possible the recovery of Europe and the very impressive economic expansion in that area.

In view of the importance of having full labour participation in the productivity work, as evident by European experience, it is proposed to add to the council an additional person from organized labour. In this regard, we are very hopeful that the Canadian Labour Congress will soon see its way clear to participate in this important work. We would welcome having Mr. Claude Jodoin rejoin the council, or having other top calibre members of the congress sit upon the council. If Canada is to support a sustained rate of economic growth it is essential that we too achieve the spirit of co-operation which is so apparent in key countries of Europe. Labour, management and government must pull together, each making a contribution to common objectives which are in the interests of all Canadians.

There is a growing realization in Canada that Canadians must produce more in Canada, and must purchase more domestic goods. We could not continue indefinitely to have the deficit in our current balance of payments which has prevailed since the end of the last world war. If, however, we are to produce and sell more in Canada, Canadian products must be competitive with goods made in other countries. Canadian manufacturers must produce the types of goods which buyers find it is in their interest to purchase, those which are efficiently produced, and are of competitive quality, design and price. In achieving these objectives, the national productivity council has a major role to play. If the economy is to grow and expand, the council must initiate the types of activities and programs which will help Canadian producers to be competitive at home and in export markets. The council has made an excellent start in focusing the attention of labour and management on these activities, and in bringing them together to exert a co-operative effort. Now that the council's initial period of planning and organization is behind it, its activities are having beneficial effects on an increasing scale.

Realizing the vital role which it has to play in stimulating Canada's growth, the council has been preparing its program for the future. Additional labour-management seminars are being planned in co-operation with the universities. Steps are being taken to organize labour-management forums on a systematic basis. The program of training courses in work study will be expanded, so that this valuable instruction will be available at universities in various regions of Canada. More work is being initiated with a view to encouraging greater industrial research. As the provincial and area councils and committees become increasingly better organized, systematic programs of material will be fed out to them to be used as the basis for local productivity activities. Studies will be undertaken of important activities in the fields of economics and the humanities which have a direct bearing on productivity.

The program is both vital and ambitious, and I feel sure that every Canadian will support it. I hope that it will receive the wholehearted endorsement and support of this House of Commons, so that the excellent work which was started a year and a half ago may proceed for the benefit of the country as a whole.

Mr. Munro: Mr. Chairman, speaking for this party may I say it has been interesting to listen to some of the observations of the Minister of Trade and Commerce with regard to this resolution. In essence, as I read and understand the resolution it recommends the addition of three members to the national productivity council. The minister, perhaps in an endeavour to build this up into some sort of major piece of legislation, delivered a lengthy speech on the merits of the council as a whole. Actually the resolution involves only a minor legislative change to alter the constitution of the council numerically.

From listening to the minister's remarks it would seem that he and the government apparently do not wish to deal with the two most serious aspects of the council and the two that have been most severely criticized throughout the country. One concerns labour representation on the council. One prominent Canadian citizen has resigned because he objected to the manner of his appointment, and the minister is well aware of this. Yet he has advised the house of no measure that he plans to take under these amendments to cure this obvious defect. Therefore any hope the minister may have that Mr. Claude Jodoin may return would seem, in view of Mr. Jodoin's repeated statements, forlorn indeed. We can see that the minister has obviously taken no constructive step to cure this defect.

The second objection that Mr. Jodoin raised when he resigned, which is in fact an objection of the council as a whole, is that the base of the council is not broad enough. Mr. Jodoin stated so at the time he resigned. In that connection I should like to read the statement of the leader of this party at the time of Mr. Jodoin's resignation. This is what the Leader of the Opposition said with reference to Mr. Jodoin:

> I can understand the position he has taken because, when the national productivity council was set up, we in the Liberal opposition pointed out in parliament that it was too limited in scope and that its mandate did not go far enough. We argued that we should have not a productivity council but an economic advisory council which could do more for Canada than the productivity council would be able to do. Apparently Mr. Jodoin now believes that that is the case and he has resigned because the productivity council does not go far enough; because we have not got the kind of economic advisory council that we Liberals have been advocating now for a good many years.

In the minister's speech he did not deal with this second aspect of the problem, namely, the broadening of the scope of the national productivity council. I might indicate to the minister that from the first annual report of the national productivity council it would appear to be the feeling of the council itself that its scope is not wide enough. I refer to page 10 of the first annual report where I find the following:

> Although the council's terms of reference permit consideration of broader economic and social aspects of productivity improvement, the council decided that it would direct its work in the initial stages—

They qualify this and I would emphasize it.

> —of program development to those specific areas of work set forth in the National Productivity Act. These include the development of new activities to assist in the improvement of production and distribution methods, the expansion and application of research to industry, the development of better human and industrial relations, the wider application of progressive management practices, and the strengthening of the skills of the work force through training and retraining.

Then they go on on page 11 to indicate that they now intend to embark on a wider scope of activity. Under their terms of reference, there may be some question as to their powers to do this. The minister has not indicated to the house that he is prepared to cope with the problem. I read this paragraph from page 11 of their report:

> In the coming year the council plans to move ahead in the field of economic and social research. The council feels there is a need for more study of the social and economic factors related to productivity.

In the annual report the council goes on to indicate that it plans to engage in the study of programs designed to promote economic growth, which would lead one to think that they plan to conduct a study almost similar to that set out in the terms of reference of the economic development board announced in the house a few days ago. In my view this is a probable basis of serious conflict between the two boards, and those ministers of the government who have been speaking about the national economic development board and the national productivity council have not indicated in any of their introductory speeches that they have endeavoured to resolve this obvious and apparent conflict.

I should also like to deal with the report of the mission to Europe to which the minister referred. He indicated that as a result of the studies of this mission, their visit to Europe and their activities in the country as a whole there was an increasing indication of management-labour co-operation. I would point out to the minister that on page 9 of the report of the mission to Europe quite the opposite view is expressed. I refer to item 38 under the heading "Recommendation". It reads as follows:

> The members of the mission feel that the foregoing identifies certain serious gaps in government-management-labour consultation and co-operation on economic and social problems in Canada.

This is the statement of the mission itself and I would draw it to the minister's attention because it would appear to be quite the reverse of what he stated in his opening remarks in introducing this resolution.

I also wish to refer to other remarks of the minister in introducing the resolution. He dealt for a minute or two with the basis of the whole resolution, namely the increase in the number of members of the council and why this was needed without going into specific details other than perhaps to indicate, and I am even inferring this, that he intended to increase labour representation. That is all he dealt with before proceeding to talk about the mission and the activities of the national productivity council generally. Most of his speech was like a telephone directory. It set out various persons and their titles and the fact that they attended certain conferences and made certain speeches but he did not even go into the content of the more important speeches made. I do not think this is entirely satisfactory. I think the minister could have pointed out, especially as the representative of a party that seems to abhor the word "planning" so much, that throughout the whole report of the mission sponsored by the national productivity council there is talk about planning. I would refer to page 3 of their report where the second paragraph, under the heading "Foreword", reads as follows:

> The awareness of this interdependence in Canada has created a public opinion that expects the government systematically to take such actions as will support the economy. There is not a uniformity of public opinion, however, as regards the scope of such government activity. The least required is that timely measures be taken to support effectively natural tendencies to growth and to check recessions. In Europe, public opinion demands a genuine broad policy of economic and social development.

I would also refer to another paragraph of the report on page 3 in which they refer to the six countries they visited.

> Nevertheless, each of the six countries visited has undertaken planning, formal or otherwise, along the above lines. In all cases, the success of planning rests to an important extent on the voluntary support of labour and management and on their enthusiastic participation in the planning process.

I should like to quote one further paragraph because I think it is important. It is on page 4 under the heading "Purposes of the Mission". They refer to the provisions of the National Productivity Council Act and go on to say:

> The council has an important role to play in developing measures which will make a constructive contribution "... to provide expanding opportunities for increased employment and trade and rising standards of living ...".

On page 7 of that report there is a reference to the necessity for planning. Item 23 reads as follows:

> The degree to which the countries visited plan their economic development varies greatly. It ranges from the French program of planning in relatively great detail over an extended period of years to the German system which leaves the market forces as the main guide to development.
> All countries visited accept the necessity of some form of planning.

Now, I shall not go through all the other paragraphs in the report of this mission other than to point out that this council has indicated to the government in the report the need for planning. It has also recommended and advised the government that something must be done about the serious gap between management, labour and government consultation and co-operation in connection with providing Canada with the kind of plan which is necessary to bring us out of our economic doldrum. This government has not indicated that it intends to do anything about these recommendations under either the National Productivity Council Act or the economic development board.

I should like to point out a couple of other important subjects which I think should be dealt with, and the first is the question of overlapping. I believe that this is becoming increasingly serious, but I do not believe any spokesman for the government has indicated any constructive proposal which would clearly define the responsibilities of all these boards. The terms of reference of the national economic development board, as set out by the Minister of Finance, indicate that it plans to make proposals that cut across the whole range of financial and monetary policy and make constructive recommendations of a long range nature to the government. Almost identical terms of reference are set out for the national productivity council, at least the way the national productivity council itself interprets those terms of reference. This national productivity council has given notice to this government it intends to go into that very area during the forthcoming year. This afternoon we heard about the Atlantic development board which is presumably going into identical studies as the two other boards that have been set up, except that the work of this board will apply to a particular region. We have the national research council whose terms of reference closely approach the terms of reference of all three boards. We have two programs under the defence research board. We have the Vocational Training Assistance Act under the Minister of Labour and the terms of reference of that legislation come well within those of the national productivity council and of these boards.

Presumably, if one listens to the comments coming from spokesmen for the government, all these bodies are to operate independently. Hon. members make general statements to the effect that it is hoped they will complement each other. However, they do not advise the Canadian public or the members of this house in a detailed way as to how all these various programs and boards plan to integrate their activities. There are so many boards now that I have even omitted one. As I look at the Minister of Labour, I recall he is recommending we establish a manpower adjustment board under the new legislation he plans to introduce. I believe the terms of reference of this body would fall within the terms of reference of not only the national economic development board but of this national productivity council.

I believe the government has an obligation to explain how they plan to avoid the collapse of this whole program for these boards in one hopeless mess of confusion which will bring further discredit to this country and which will probably mean our legislative program is again the laughing stock of the world, as has happened in connection with so many of the proposals of this government. When these various measures are discussed in the committee, the government should show in a detailed fashion how all the activities of these boards are to be integrated. This should be shown to the satisfaction of the personnel of the boards themselves and to the satisfaction of the Canadian people, so that the people will realize some constructive proposals will issue forth.

The Canadian public are not going to be satisfied with just a barebones explanation offered by this government for setting up a multiplicity of boards. The Canadian people and the members of this house want to know in a concrete way how the government plans these boards should operate so they will be co-operating. I think probably the most serious omission from the minister's speech when he introduced this amendment to the National Productivity Council Act was the omission of the word "planning". The productivity council dealt with this thoroughly, but the minister did not choose to mention it, did not choose to mention that he hoped the goals of this council would be the same as the goals of similar councils in western Europe and in other democratic nations that have adopted these councils in the past. There should be a detailed plan of the economic goals for Canada that would be worked out by this council.

Apparently the government does not want that. Apparently the government is staying clear of that. If that be the case, then any concrete advantages that the efforts of this council may render the Canadian people are almost negligible because that is the whole purpose of the activities of this productivity council. In conclusion, I would say that the minister's comments indicate that the government has not dealt with the two main serious flaws in this legislation. This is the thing that has bothered the national productivity council all along. I refer to the terms of reference. Mr. Claude Jodoin resigned over that and, as I pointed out, the members of the council are not satisfied, as is indicated in the annual report. They want the terms of reference broadened so they can go into the economic measures necessary to increase productivity in a more comprehensive fashion. The government has not dealt with Mr. Jodoin's objection relating to the manner of representation, the manner of appointment. Until the minister is prepared to deal with all these problems, all we can say is this is just another board this government has set up to indicate that they plan to do something for the Canadian economy in the cheapest way possible, without going to work and developing long range policies of a concrete nature which are so badly needed.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, one of the lessons I learned out of my African experience relates to a condition caused by an organism known as taenia solium. If one dose would not take care of it, take a half dozen. This evening, I could not help but think that is just what is happening here in this house. Certainly we have been witnessing a great proliferation of government boards. It was interesting, however, to hear the Minister of Trade and Commerce speak about what a board has accomplished rather than to hear reference to what it is hoped a board will do.

I believe one board which has been set up by the government which has amply justified its existence is the national productivity council. I believe that the outline of some of the activities which have been carried on with a very meagre budget further confirms this conviction. The problem comes back to mind again: If this is what the national productivity council has done and is going to do, what in the world is going to be left for the national economic development board to do? Obviously they are going to overlap in many, many places. However, it is a matter of some encouragement to note the remarks of the minister, that there is going to be an overlapping of the membership structure of these boards. I trust that if this is going to be the pattern of the government it will soon mean the complete integration of the two boards. Certainly this is the only way either of them is going to be able to function effectively without getting in the other's way. Perhaps the greatest danger of overlapping of responsibilities is the fact that too often one board nullifies the potential objectives of the other. However, Mr. Chairman, I trust that with the appointment of these three additional members the way is being laid for these objectives to be achieved.

I believe it is our responsibility to give complete support to this resolution. I note with some satisfaction that the three additional members represent three very important aspects of our economy. I think the key to proper planning is not simply the laying down of some master plan from on top, but making it possible for people—this includes industry, labour and all aspects of organized activity and society—to co-operate and work with each other. We very often hear hon. members speak about the advantages of planning in Sweden, the Netherlands, West Germany or some other European countries. I do not think this has been accomplished because they have some super, master plan; it is simply because they have been able to get management and labour to co-operate with each other and with government in such a way as to enable them to make the progress which they obviously have made. They have done this simply by working out these problems in the very way the minister indicated some of the activities of the national productivity council have been carried on during the past year; that is, legitimate, grass roots planning. That is a different thing, though, than planning by a few sitting up at the top.

I think another very commendable aspect that has been brought to our attention this evening is that the work of the national productivity council is not going to be dependant upon a fixed budget passed on to them as their operating financial base. Any money invested in an organization such as the national productivity council as it performs its legitimate function is certainly the best kind of investment the government can make, and I think the suggestion that has been made will remove that bottleneck from the program and activities of the N.P.C. I believe this is good. The minister briefly outlined this evening some of the key features of the national productivity council. Again, I see a very definite overlapping with the summarized terms of reference, at least, of the national economic development board. I think all these points the minister covered are good. I was particularly impressed with the report of the European work study group. However, none of these things is of any use unless it actually produces the action that will reach through to the objectives that are being talked about.

Thus, Mr. Chairman, just briefly stating our thinking in regard to this particular resolution, I would again draw to the attention of the committee the fact that we have several obvious problems as they relate to the objectives of the national productivity council and the national economic development board. We are the greatest importing nation on earth in that our per capita imports are nearly triple those of our nearest competitor in this respect. I think what we must do is this. The government must give responsible assistance in solving this problem. We must produce here in Canada many of those things which today we are importing from abroad. This will never be done in a period of austerity. If there is not capital, on one hand, available to do this—and this is a very critical problem this winter; it affects the question of unemployment and the desired growth rate which we want to see for our economy—then we cannot solve the problem. It is absolutely essential that easier credit be available. On the other hand there must be those incentives —this again comes back to our tax problems —that will encourage our people to produce those things which in too great quantities are imported today. Again, Mr. Chairman, I mention an illustration to which I think I referred a few weeks ago. A senior trade official from Japan who is in this country at the present time told me that he was not interested in importing textiles into this country; he was far more interested in importing heavy, modern equipment which would bring our own textile factories up to the standards they ought to have, in order that we can produce our own textiles.

Then, unless we can increase the effective demand of our home market, any increase in productivity will be nullified. Again, I would seriously say to the hon. members of the committee that unless we can make our own financial system work in such a way that it puts into the hands of our people the effective ability to use what they themselves produce, what is going to be the use of increasing our productivity at all? Herein lies one of the basic problems that we face. The government must give the help that is necessary in this regard, not through welfare but through a financial policy that will meet our needs today; not a financial policy that met our needs 50 or 100 years ago. We live in an age of potential plenty; this is an age of abundance. Unless we gear our policies, whether they refer to taxation, monetary reform or any other aspect of our economy, to this age of abundance we are simply going from one problem to another and any number of boards will not solve the problem.

There is another point, Mr. Chairman, and I think this comes within the terms of reference of the national productivity council. The productivity which is surplus to our economy and to the legitimate needs of our own country must find its way into the hands of those people elsewhere in the world who do not have the abundance that is ours. But this, again, is part of the function and purpose of the national productivity council and I am convinced that it is synonymous with the responsibilities which we would attach to the national economic development board. Thus I believe that the resolution which has been placed before us is commendable and is deserving of our support, provided it does work towards solving these aspects of our problems to which I have just referred.

Mr. Berger: I simply rise in order to ask a question of the hon. member for Red Deer. I was particularly interested in one aspect of his address. He used the expression "tax incentives". Can he tell us what taxes he had in mind using in order to reduce Canada's dependence on imports from abroad?

Mr. Thompson: Our problem which today and over the years has been concerned with the abnormal size of our imports, exists simply because we are not producing in Canada many of the articles which we now import from outside. Most of them could be produced here in Canada. Because we are not doing this we are experiencing the financial crisis which faces us at the present time with regard to our trade in balances. Surely the hon. member would agree with me that there is no problem as far as resources in this country are concerned, either material or human. We have in our possession most of the material resources and I think we have some of the finest human resources that exist in the world. Neither is there any problem about capital as far as productive capital is concerned, because we have somewhat over $8 billion of capital right now in the saving banks and trust companies which is there gathering—

An hon. Member: Dust.

Mr. Thompson: Dust. And it is earning only about half it could if it went to work producing and developing our own resources. One of the reasons this situation continues is simply because there is more profit investing in the deficits of our governments at guaranteed rates than there is going out and developing our own resources. That is what is wrong with our economy today. We are tied to a debt system of deficit financing.

I would say to the leader of the hon. member's party that if the future of this country depends on more deficits there is something wrong with the Canadian people and those in this house who talk that way. What we further need is some tax reform—the removal of those taxes which restrict our credit, so that we can go ahead and develop our own resources and the production of those commodities which we are today importing and which we could use in far greater amounts than we do now.

Mr. Berger: The hon. member mentioned tax incentives, and that was why I asked him the question I did. But when he answered my question he used the words "tax reform". I wanted to know whether he had any tax incentives in mind—any specific measures by way of tax reform which he thought would relieve the situation he so ably described. I gather from his answer he really had nothing specific in mind.

Mr. Thompson: If the hon. member will take the time to read the platform—

The Deputy Chairman: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but I think the question asked by the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard goes far beyond the terms of the resolution. That is the reason why I asked the hon. member for Red Deer to keep his answer for another occasion.

Mr. Thompson: I was only about to say that if the hon. member would read our election platform from the last election he would have the answer.

The Deputy Chairman: The hon. member for Port Arthur.

An hon. Member: Again.

Mr. Fisher: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It is nice to have that response. I was just trying to figure out where it came from.

It is apparent that the hon. member for Red Deer is bored with boards. I was going to suggest there was something else in the house which was almost revolutionary. I think the minister and others will want to join me in congratulating the hon. member for Essex East, the hon. member for Algoma East and the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate on the first indication that we have had in this house for a long time of the Liberal party's planning. They have finally put up one of their backbenchers as the first speaker on a resolution. I think that deserves a compliment and it is the first indication that planning has reached the Liberal caucus.

The minister's approach to this reminds me of a problem I encountered when I was trying to write a study a few years ago on football and its appeal to crowds. I sent to the United States and picked up a Ph.D thesis on the whole relationship of football and crowds. It was a long, carefully written thing, beautifully documented, and the summary came down to this—that in relation to football and crowds the football teams are not really important; it is the cheerleaders who really make things go.

In many ways there is quite an analogy for me in the approach of the Minister of Trade and Commerce. He certainly seems to be the cheerleader and to feel that the exertions of the cheerleader are much more important than teams themselves which seem, in this case, to be management and labour. I certainly hope he gives us something more substantial in the future than just cheerleading with regard to this problem.

I listened with interest to the hon. member for Hamilton East. Really, the whole point of his remarks seemed to centre around the fact that he would like to have Claude Jodoin back. However, Claude is a bit reluctant about it. I think I have a good idea why Claude does not think much of it. No matter how brilliant Mr. De Young may be, it was not too clever of the government to take a man who is president of an organization which has perhaps the brightest record in Canada of keeping out unions from its own organization—

The Deputy Chairman: Order. It being ten o'clock shall I rise and report progress?

Mr. Churchill: Is there a chance of passing the resolution tonight? We could then consider the bill.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Pickersgill: I presume the indication the minister gave last night of the business for Tuesday and Wednesday still stands but perhaps it would be convenient if he could indicate the order of the items.

Mr. Churchill: We will start with the bill based on the resolution dealing with the Atlantic development board, followed by the resolution on the productivity council which we have just been considering. The third item would be the committee stage of Bill No. C-64 relating to the Coal Production Assistance Act. Although Wednesday is a short day, if there is time we will take the item standing in the name of the Minister of Justice, No. 26 on today's order paper, the resolution dealing with two additional judges for the supreme court of Nova Scotia. Then there is item No. 21 in the name of the Minister of Justice dealing with an amendment to the Admiralty Act, and the resolution in the name of the Minister of Justice, No. 22, dealing with the revised statutes of Canada.

Mr. Pickersgill: I would like to point out to the minister that those last three items were not on the priority list he gave last Thursday evening of the matters the government specially wanted to get on with before Christmas. Would the minister also indicate whether it is still the intention of the government on Thursday, regardless of what progress is made, to go on with the national economic development council legislation?

Mr. Churchill: That is right.

At ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

QUEBEC—TABLING OF CORRESPONDENCE RESPECTING UNIVERSITY GRANTS

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Richelieu-Vercheres (Mr. Cardin) on November 30 asked whether all the correspondence between the government of Quebec and the federal government concerning university grants had been tabled. At that time I said that I would have the question looked into. I now ask leave to table the correspondence additional to that which was previously tabled.

Mr. Speaker: By leave, the Prime Minister asks to table certain documents as requested by the hon. member for Richelieu-Vercheres. Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

AMENDMENT TO REDUCE SALARY OF PRESIDENT

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette), may I have the unanimous consent of the house to introduce a bill intituled: "An Act to amend the Canadian National Railways Act (salary of president)".

Mr. Speaker: Does the house consent unanimously to the hon. member introducing the bill in the absence of the hon. member for Villeneuve?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry but there is no unanimity.

Mr. Gregoire: Are there any "nays"?

An hon. Member: Yes, there are.

TRANSPORTATION

PROVISION OF FREE RAILWAY TRANSPORTATION FOR SENIOR CITIZENS

Mr. Thomas R. Berger (Vancouver-Burrard) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-95, to provide for free transportation on the railways of Canada for senior citizens.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Berger: Mr. Speaker, this bill confers upon old age pensioners an advantage in the nature of a fringe benefit. This is a bill to extend to those receiving old age security and old age assistance the same right to free transportation on Canadian railways that members of parliament at present enjoy. Those persons would be eligible to apply for free transportation, and there would be no means test.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

CANADIAN BILL OF RIGHTS

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING BY-ELECTIONS AND NATURALIZED CANADIAN CITIZEN

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-96, to amend the Canadian Bill of Rights.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, there are two rather obvious omissions from the bill of rights. The first is that at the present time this house has not direct control over the election of its own members. The second is that naturalized Canadian citizens are not on a basis of complete equality with natural born Canadian citizens. The whole purpose of this bill is to make it clear that when a vacancy in the representation in this house has been notified to Your Honour the chief electoral officer, who is an officer of this house, and the chief electoral officer alone will have the power to determine when the election will be held, so that it will not be possible for the executive to delay these elections.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: The other is to make sure that no other statute of Canada will impose on a Canadian citizen who has been naturalized, who has been given Canadian citizenship, any kind of disability that is not borne by a native born citizen of our country.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

3. Yes, but his assistant is bilingual. Ten out of 14 members of the technical staff are bilingual.

4. Though there is always room for improvement, the present situation is considered satisfactory.

INVESTIGATIONS INTO ALLEGED HARMFUL DRUGS

Question No. 954—Mr. Harley:

1. What are the investigative procedures carried out by the food and drug directorate re drugs suspected of having harmful effects?
2. In the steps the directorate takes in these matters (a) who initiates the investigation (b) who carries it out (c) how is it assessed, and by whom?
3. Does the government maintain any liaison with similar food and drug directorates in other countries and, if not, would the government consider setting up liaison?

Mrs. Casselman: 1. The investigative procedures used by the food and drug directorate regarding drugs suspected of having harmful effects depend on the nature, extent and source of the report received on the harmful effects of the drugs. It is the practice to refer such reports first to a member of the professional staff of the directorate with knowledge and experience in the drug field on the harmful effects reported. This in turn may lead to a search of the scientific literature, inquiries from or consultation with scientists in the government, in other countries, in pharmaceutical firms, or in scientific organizations.

Where the reports indicate the necessity for inspecting the facilities of the pharmaceutical manufacturer, this is carried out by the inspection services of the directorate. Where laboratory studies are indicated the problem is referred to the laboratory services of the directorate for investigation.

2. The investigations are initiated under the authority of the director and are assigned to members of the professional staff of the food and drug directorate considered to have the necessary knowledge, skills and experience to study the problem. The results of the investigations are assessed by the professional staff in consultation with the director or referred to an advisory panel on drugs.

3. There are frequent conversations and interchange of information respecting problems in the drug field between the technical staff of the food and drug directorate and the food and drug administration in the United States, the ministry of health in the United Kingdom and in Australia, and similar government agencies in other countries.

Liaison is also maintained with the groups in the world health organization concerned with the international pharmacopoeia and the biological standardization of drugs, and the food and drug directorate is represented on panels and committees of organizations concerned with the establishment of official compendia on drugs in the United Kingdom and the United States.

In his statement to the House of Commons on October 26 the Minister of National Health and Welfare indicated that the Canadian delegation to the world health assembly held last May initiated and co-sponsored a special resolution designed to promote greater international co-operation in the drug field and particularly to secure regular exchange of information on the safety and efficacy of pharmaceutical preparations. The international type of liaison envisaged in the resolution is considered a very effective method of dealing with the subject.

UCLUELET INDIAN RESERVE, B.C.—WORKS CONTRACT

Question No. 961—Mr. Barnett:

1. Has a contract recently been awarded for the construction of certain works at the Ucluelet Indian reserve in Ucluelet, B.C., and, if so, what is the

2. What are the names of the bidders for this contract and the amounts of their respective tenders?

3. To whom was this contract awarded?

Mr. McCleave: 1. No, although tenders have been received.

2. Mr. I. Ossinger, Port Albion, B.C., $13,076.20; Thom Gibson Contracting, Tofino, B.C., $16,445; McLellan Contracting Co. Ltd., Alberni, B.C., $16,450.

SHIPMENTS OF WHEAT TO ONTARIO AND QUEBEC

Question No. 973—Mr. Ethier:

1. Has the Minister of Agriculture received representations concerning the limited shipments of wheat from western Canada to wholesalers and flour mills in eastern Ontario and western Quebec?

2. Have steps been taken to provide increased supplies?

Mr. Pigeon: 1. There have been no representations received concerning limited shipments from western Canada of the milling grades of wheat for consumption in eastern Canada. With regard to feeding grades of wheat there have been some representations received indicating concern as to the supply and availability in eastern Canada.

2. There is an adequate supply of the milling grades of wheat in eastern Canada. With regards to feeding grades, the Canadian wheat board has been giving priority to shipping the lower grades from the country elevators to the lakehead and throughout the fall season they have had on continuous offer ample supplies of feeding wheat, in the form of sample wheat lots, in the terminals. There have been no problems inasmuch as the board always had enough feeding grades at the lakehead when the boats presented. Eastern buyers have the responsibility of purchasing this wheat and moving it to eastern positions to meet the demands of their customers.

FRASERVIEW VETERANS HOUSING PROJECT, VANCOUVER

In respect of the sale of houses in the Fraserview veterans housing project in Vancouver, (a) was straight line depreciation of 2½ per cent per annum computed in fixing the price of these properties to the veterans (b) was C.M.H.C. instructed by the Minister of Public Works at any time that the sale prices to the veterans were to be based on actual cost and not on current market value and, if so, how is the price of $10,600 for a 5-room bungalow with basement computed (c) are identical houses being sold in the veterans project in the city of Vernon at prices as much as $2,500 less, and if so, on what computation (d) when did C.M.H.C. return to the government the 2 per cent money advanced for the construction of this project?

Mr. McCleave: (a) Straight line depreciation of 2½ per cent per annum was computed for the purpose of determining the corporation's book value of the properties. The sales prices for houses in the 1948-49 veterans program were established on a basis that nationally would recover the full outlay of the government in the over-all program of approximately 12,000 units. On establishing prices for the individual projects in each municipality, consideration was given to the original costs of construction, age of the houses, their present market value and their location.

(b) No. As indicated in (a) above, the sale prices took into consideration both the corporation's costs and the current market value.

(c) Yes. The same house types have been sold in the city of Vernon at prices less than the sales prices in the Fraserview project. The considerations influencing the sales prices in the Vernon project were the same as expressed in (a) above.

(d) The corporation repays debentures under section 37 of the National Housing Act over a 40 year period. In addition, where a house is sold principal repayments of the debenture debt are accelerated annually to the extent of the amount of principal received by C.M.H.C. as a result of sale.

SPRUCE BUDWORM CONTROL

Question No. 983—Mr. MacRae:

1. What contributions did the federal government make to initiate spruce budworm control operations in eastern Canada?
2. Have the control operations yielded substantial benefits?

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): During the entire period of the budworm outbreak, which started about 1949, officers of the Department of Forestry have carried out surveys to delineate areas of high hazard, where control operations would be needed to prevent serious timber mortality. They also carried out intensive biological studies and provided technical advisory services to the provincial governments of New Brunswick and Quebec, and to forest industrial associations in the two provinces.

The federal government paid one third of the cost of control operations in New Brunswick since 1953. Over the past ten years the federal government paid approximately $3.8 million to the cost of the control program.

The spraying operations prevented serious timber mortality throughout the huge infestation area. Without this direct intervention severe timber mortality would have occurred over an area of at least four or five million acres, and a fire hazard of extreme proportions would have been created.

COLUMBIA RIVER—SALE IN U.S. OF DOWNSTREAM ENERGY

Question No. 984—Mr. Davis:

Has the Canadian government or any of its agencies made inquiries about the sale of a portion or all of Canada's share of Columbia river treaty downstream benefit energy in the United States and, if so, what was the result of these inquiries in terms of the volume, the duration, and the price of the surplus downstream benefit power which Canada might sell to utilities in the United States?

Mr. Green: As indicated by the Secretary of State for External Affairs in his reply on November 27 last to a question by the hon. member for Kootenay East, representatives of the federal government have been participating in talks with representatives of British Columbia and the United States on a non-committal basis. Two such talks have been held and another meeting is scheduled for mid December.

*FEDERAL ASSISTANCE FOR INTER-PROVINCIAL ROADS

Question No. 986—Mr. Haidasz:

1. Has the Minister of Public Works received any request from the minister of highways of the province of Alberta for federal assistance in the building of interprovincial roads?
2. Was any federal assistance granted for interprovincial roads?
3. What is the federal government's national highway policy?

Mr. McCleave: 1. Yes.

2. Yes, for trans-Canada highway and under the roads to resources program a connecting road from Alberta to the Northwest Territories.

3. Present policy provides for federal assistance in the construction of the trans-Canada highway, roads to resources projects and approved interprovincial and international bridge projects.

Questions

NET FARM INCOME

Question No. 992—Mr. Matheson:

What is the net income in fixed dollars, for each year commencing 1956, (a) for all Canadian farms (b) for a grain farm (c) for a dairy farm?

Mr. Nesbitt: (a). There is not available any one index or composite of indexes which take into account all the purposes for which the net income is used and, therefore, a satisfactory estimate of farm net income in terms of "fixed" dollars cannot be calculated.

(b) and (c). Data concerning farm income and expenditures are collected on the basis of all farms and are not available by type of farm.

*PUBLIC WORKS EXPENDITURES, SKEENA CONSTITUENCY

Question No. 1,001—Mr. Howard:

For the electoral district of Skeena, how much money by the Department of Public Works (a) has been spent in each of the fiscal years 1957-58, 1958-59, 1959-60, 1960-61 and 1961-62 (b) was to have been spent pursuant to the estimates for the fiscal year ending on March 31, 1963 (c) is to be spent pursuant to the revised estimates and supplementaries thereto for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1963?

Mr. McCleave: (a) 1957-58, $284,166; 1958-59, $320,568; 1959-60, $794,161; 1960-61, $760,071; 1961-1962, $142,103.

(c) $1,290,000.

(The above figures do not include an average of from $20,000 to $30,000 spent each year on numerous minor repair and upkeep jobs for which the exact figures could not be obtained without devoting an unreasonable amount of time and effort to it.)

FEDERAL JURISDICTION OVER SALMON SPAWNING STREAMS

Question No. 1,002—Mr. Howard:

1. What authority does the Department of Fisheries have to deal with companies or persons whose logging operations result in salmon spawning streams being clogged with debris, and has this authority been exercised in the Queen Charlotte islands at any time during the past ten years and, if so, what action was taken, against whom, at what time, for what reason, and what resulted therefrom?

2. What authority does the Department of Fisheries have to deal with companies or persons who remove gravel from salmon spawning streams and has this authority been exercised on the Queen Charlotte islands at any time during the past ten years and, if so, what action has been taken against whom, at what time, for what reason, and what resulted therefrom?

Mr. MacLean (Queens): 1. Section 33, subsection 3, of the Fisheries Act, which reads as follows:

(3) No such person engaging in logging, lumbering, land clearing or other operations, shall put or knowingly permit to be put, any slash, stumps or other debris into any water frequented by fish or that flows into such water, or on the ice over either such water, or at a place from which it is likely to be carried into either such water.

Departmental policy is to advise offenders of this authority and the penalties provided, with a request for co-operation, which is normally forthcoming. In the past ten years no prosecutions have been necessary on Queen Charlotte islands, although numerous warnings were given, amongst which were removal of debris from Dana inlet creek in 1959, Copper river, Hannat creek and Terundle creek in 1962, all followed by observance of the provisions of the act.

2. Section 30 of the Fisheries Act provides that the eggs or fry of fish on the spawning grounds shall not at any time be destroyed.

The problem has been dealt with by asking companies or persons to limit operations to other areas or to times when eggs and fry are not present. The department is aware that in free periods gravel is stockpiled, as on the Mammon river. This has an undesirable effect and accordingly other means, such as use of dry backwaters, are suggested. In some areas adjustment is easy, for example on the Deena river the company involved was persuaded to use gravel from the intertidal zone.

In recognition of the possibility of serious effects on the Yakoun, one of the largest rivers, and now being considered for logging development, the co-operation of the company and the British Columbia forest service is being enlisted to avoid overremoval.

*COLUMBIA RIVER—B.C. CONFIRMATION OF TREATY

Question No. 1,004—Mr. Ryan:

Is there any confirmation or endorsement in writing of the Columbia river basin treaty by British Columbia or its representatives, by correspondence, initialling of documents or otherwise?

Mr. Green: Mr. Speaker, it is a long answer. Perhaps it could be printed in Hansard.

Mr. Speaker: How long is the answer?

Mr. Green: Two pages.

Mr. Speaker: In the light of the length of the answer, perhaps it might. I do not want to make suggestions, but there are two things that can be done. Either the answer can be taken as read and appear in Hansard if it is not too long, or it can be made an order for return tabled herewith.

Mr. Green: Possibly it could be taken as read.

Mr. Pickersgill: Have it appear in Hansard.

Mr. Speaker: Is it to be taken as read?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

1. The progress report of the Canadian and United States delegations, dated September 28, 1960, was signed by the negotiator appointed by the government of British Columbia, Mr. E. W. Bassett, deputy minister of lands and forests. This report was tabled in the House of Commons on November 18, 1960.

2. At a meeting of the Canada-British Columbia policy liaison committee on January 3 and 4, 1961, a statement was placed on the record confirming British Columbia's intention to proceed with the implementation of the treaty as negotiated, which was then in final draft form. This statement was agreed to by the British Columbia representatives, including Hon. Ray Williston, minister of lands and forests and water resources, Hon. R. W. Bonner, attorney general and minister of industrial development, trade and commerce, and Mr. Bassett.

3. Mr. Bassett also signed the final report to the governments of Canada and the United States, made at Ottawa on January 8, 1961, and tabled as an appendix to Hansard of January 19, 1961. This report recommends to the two governments that they sign the treaty as drawn by the negotiators.

4. As indicated by the Minister of Public Works on November 30 last, in reply to a question by the hon. member for Kootenay East, a letter dated January 9, 1961, was written formally to Mr. Williston, enclosing an official copy of the treaty recommended by the negotiators, advising him that such treaty would be signed in Washington, giving him the date, and stating that this would be done on the understanding that, unless word to the contrary was received, the treaty as drawn had the approval of the government of British Columbia. This letter was acknowledged by Mr. Williston by letter dated January 12, 1961, and no suggestion of objection was raised. This correspondence was tabled on September 7, 1961 (sessional paper No. 180F).

COLUMBIA RIVER—PREPARATION OF TREATY

Question No. 1,005—Mr. Ryan:

1. Did the federal government prepare the first draft of the Columbia river basin treaty and, if not, by whom was it prepared?
2. What are the names and positions of all negotiators of the said treaty?

Mr. Green: 1. Each of the negotiating teams started with its own draft. On the Canadian side the draft had been prepared jointly by the federal and British Columbia representatives. The final text of the treaty resulted from negotiations which took these and later drafts into account.

2. The negotiators who signed the report covering the treaty were: Hon. E. D. Fulton, Minister of Justice; R. G. Robertson, deputy minister, Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources; E. W. Bassett, deputy minister of lands and forests, British Columbia; A. E. Ritchie, assistant under secretary of state, Department of External Affairs.

In addition, at various stages of the treaty numerous other financial, engineering, electric power and legal experts from both federal and provincial governments participated in the negotiations.

STUDY OF DISEASE MALVARIA

Question No. 1,010—Mr. Mather:

Has the Department of National Health and Welfare information on the disease "malvaria" as identified by Doctors Hoffer and Osmond of Saskatchewan and of its relationship to alcoholism, schizophrenia and mental retardation and, if so, does the department intend to study treatment of the disease with a view to ascertaining whether beneficial results may accrue to the afflicted in those categories?

Mrs. Casselman: Yes, a letter was received from Dr. A. Hoffer enclosing a reprint from the Canadian Medical Association Journal of an article by Doctors Hoffer and Osmond entitled "The Association Between Schizophrenia and Two Objective Tests".

The authors "suggest that these procedures be further evaluated as diagnostic tests for psychiatric illnesses". Dr. Hoffer also stated in his letter that he will soon publish a very comprehensive report in the Canadian Public Health Journal. The department's decision regarding any study of this subject would therefore follow the further evaluation and the report.

COLUMBIA RIVER—FEDERAL REPRESENTATION AT TALKS BETWEEN U.S. AND B.C.

Question No. 1,011—Mr. Davis:

Was the Canadian government represented at the recent talks between the government of British Columbia and the authorities in the United States concerned with the implementation of the Columbia river treaty and, if so, by whom?

Mr. Green: The federal government has been represented by: R. G. Robertson, deputy minister, Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources; A. E. Ritchie, assistant under secretary of state, Department of External Affairs; J. F. Parkinson, economic adviser, Department of Finance; G. M. MacNabb, water resources branch, Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources.

GRANTS FOR REPLACEMENT OF MAPLE SAP PAILS

Question No. 1,012—Mr. Boutin:

1. In what year did the government adopt the policy of providing grants to farmers for the replacement of maple-sap pails?
2. How many farmers have taken advantage of the legislation?
3. What amount of money was spent for that purpose?
4. Was this policy abandoned and, if so, in what year, and does the government intend to reinstitute that policy in the near future?

Mr. Pigeon: 1. In 1940 the government commenced participation in a cost shared program with the province of Quebec to assist in the replacement of maple sap buckets. One-third of the cost of replacement was met by each of (a) the producer (b) the provincial government (c) the federal government. The record keeping and accounting was handled by the provincial government.

2. Not available.

3. The federal share of the assistance between 1940 and 1955 totalled $2,932,447.78.

4. Yes, in 1955. The reinstitution of the program is not being considered at this time.

FOREST INVENTORY SURVEYS

Question No. 1,014—Mr. Coates:

Has federal government assistance been available to the provinces for the carrying out of forest inventory surveys since 1951, and, if so, what benefits have resulted from such surveys?

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): The inventories have provided the provinces with the basic information necessary for sound forest administration and management. The provinces have utilized the information in establishing sustained yield areas on which a calculated annual production of cellulose can be maintained in perpetuity.

In many areas of Canada the inventory surveys have demonstrated a forest potential capable of sustaining major forest industries and an influx of industry has occurred into areas where, hitherto, forestry was of lesser importance, such as certain parts of the interior of British Columbia, Alberta, and Nova Scotia.

INCREASE IN FARM COSTS

Question No. 1,015—Mr. Clunis:

With 1952 as the base year, what was the percentage increase in cost to Ontario farmers each year since 1956 of (a) farm machinery (b) replacement parts for farm machinery and (c) commercial fertilizers, weed killers and pesticides, respectively?

Mr. Nesbitt: In answering this question, the dominion bureau of statistics has interpreted cost to mean farmers' total outlay arising out of quantity and the cost per unit of commodity purchased. The percentage changes in these estimated outlays for the items specified are as follows:

	Farm Machinery	Farm Machinery Replacement Parts	Commercial Fertilizers	Weed Killers & Pesticides
		1952=100
1956	83.4	103.2	125.6	113.7
1957	76.1	113.2	125.4	119.1
1958	83.7	113.6	137.5	123.2
1959	98.3	130.0	155.9	152.5
1960	96.0	142.3	149.2	162.1
1961	99.1	148.0	174.7	200.8

SPRUCE BUDWORM OUTBREAK, EASTERN CANADA

Question No. 1,016—Mr. Fairweather:

What is the present status of the spruce budworm outbreak in eastern Canada and, will chemical control operations be necessary in 1963?

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): The outbreak is no longer active in northern New Brunswick and the adjacent part of Quebec. Consequently no control operations will be necessary in these areas in 1963.

In central New Brunswick, budworm populations remain at hazardous levels in about one dozen localities, aggregating some 360,000 acres. This is the smallest acreage of hazardous infestation that has been experienced since 1952. Spraying operations should be carried out in 1963 to reduce the budworm population on these 360,000 acres. No other aerial spraying operations against the budworm are anticipated in eastern Canada.

MORTGAGE RESERVE FUND, C.M.H.C.

Question No. 1,021—Mr. Cote:

1. What is the amount of the reserve fund at Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation accumulated through premiums paid by borrowers?
2. Is this reserve invested in securities?

Mr. McCleave: 1. By October 31, 1962, the credit of the mortgage insurance fund amounted to $99,647,387.

2. An amount of around $14.5 million of this credit represents real properties purchased following the settling of claims. An amount of about $3.7 million represents mortgages resulting from the sale of mortgaged properties purchased. The rest is invested in Canada bonds or guaranteed by Canada, according to the requirements of the National Housing Act.

FOREST FIRE PROTECTION

Question No. 1,023—Mr. MacRae:

What assistance has been or is being provided the provinces under the federal-provincial forestry agreement respecting forest-fire protection?

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): The agreements have provided federal financial assistance to the provinces for the purchase of capital goods required for the prevention, detection and suppression of forest fires, including the charter of aircraft and vessels required for protection purposes.

As an example of the extent of this assistance, the provinces have since 1957 purchased with federal aid 57 fire towers, 1,453 radios, 867 motor vehicles, 24 bulldozers, 47 muskeg tractors, 799 power pumps, 4,732 hand pumps, and over 3 million feet of hose. In addition, 100 buildings have been erected and for the charter of fixed wing aircraft and helicopters, an amount of nearly $3,560,000 has been shared in. Many minor items of equipment have also been purchased.

DORVAL AIRPORT—TRANSPORTATION OF PASSENGERS

Question No. 1,027—Mr. Marcoux:

What companies are authorized to carry passengers from the Dorval airport to the city of Montreal and were these companies invited to submit public tenders?

Mr. McBain: Murray Hill Limousine Service Limited, in accordance with a franchise granted by the Quebec transportation board, the controlling provincial authority over services of this sort, and in accordance with an agreement entered into with the Department of Transport. Because of provincial jurisdiction over franchises, federal calling of public tenders would not be appropriate, but there is regular consultation with the airlines with a view to providing service in accordance with their requirements.

TRADE

OIL—REPORTED U.S. INTENTION TO RESTRICT IMPORTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce is he in a position to make a statement to the house on the effect on Canada's oil policy of the proclamation by the President of the United States, which I understand was made over the week end, bringing Canada within the limits of a new United States oil import control system?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, it would be impossible to make such a statement at the present time. We shall be meeting officials of the United States government here in Ottawa on next Thursday, the 13th, for discussions, and there should be something to report at the following meeting of parliament.

Mr. Pearson: As a supplementary question may I ask the minister whether the Canadian government was consulted before this step was taken in Washington?

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, we were not consulted. To my knowledge no definite action along this line has been taken yet. These matters will all be discussed with us when the United States officials come here to Ottawa, but it is my understanding that no action has as yet been taken.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Can the Minister of Trade and Commerce tell us whether the quotas which are proposed are in excess of the usual imports of Canadian oil into the United States?

Mr. Hees: It will not be until after the United States officials arrive here for these discussions that we shall know just what the proposals are or how they would affect Canada. Then the whole matter will be discussed between the representatives of the two governments.

WORLD FAIR, MONTREAL—ESTABLISHMENT OF CROWN CORPORATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Vincent Drouin (Argenteuil-Deux Montagnes): My question is directed to the Associate Minister of National Defence.

Can the minister tell us if an agreement has been reached by the federal, provincial and municipal governments with regard to the establishment of a corporation that would be responsible for the 1967 world fair, to be held in Montreal?

Hon. Pierre Sevigny (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the hon. member's question, I wish to say that the lawyers of the three governments in question are studying the bill that will be introduced in this house.

We hope that they will soon come to an agreement, because we wish to submit the bill to parliament as soon as possible in order to put into operation everything needed for the world fair.

(Text):

Mr. Alan Macnaughton (Mount Royal): This is a supplementary question. I had a similar question to address to the Associate Minister of National Defence. In his reply the hon. gentleman used the words "as soon as possible". May I ask him if by the use of those words he meant within the next few days or within the next few weeks, because according to the minister's own statement speed is essential.

Mr. Sevigny: In answer to that question, we hope to have everyone in agreement concerning the terms of this bill within the next few days, and in that case there should be no delay in getting on with this measure. I share the desire of the hon. member that this crown corporation should be formed at the earliest possible moment in order to get things moving.

FEDERAL EXHIBITS AT NEW YORK AND CANADIAN WORLD'S FAIRS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John H. Addison (York North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Is it the intention of this government to enter an exhibit at the New York world fair and at Canada's world fair?

An hon. Member: Paul Martin.

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I hear the suggestion that we exhibit the hon. member for Essex East, but I think that might be too startling for those who attend. Mr. Speaker, this matter is under consideration.

TOBACCO—INQUIRY AS TO MARKETING OF ONTARIO PRODUCTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. C. Honey (Durham): I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. Perhaps in his absence one of his colleagues or one of the parliamentary secretaries can answer. In view of the present critical situation resulting in the closing of markets for the sale of flue cured tobacco in Ontario, can the minister advise if the government will enter into an agreement under the provisions of the Agricultural Products Co-operative Marketing Act for the marketing of flue cured tobacco produced in the province of Ontario in 1962?

Mr. Speaker: Order. Perhaps the hon. member would be good enough to consult Hansard and see the ruling made with regard to a similar question yesterday asked by the hon. member for Essex South.

Mr. Honey: On a point of order, if I may—

Mr. Speaker: On this matter of the determination of the importance of the question, the ruling of the Chair is made.

[Later:]

Mr. Jack Roxburgh (Norfolk): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Agriculture may I ask his parliamentary secretary whether any changes are contemplated in the government's policy regarding tobacco marketing.

Mr. W. H. Jorgenson (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows, whenever a change of policy is made it is announced in the house in the usual manner.

[Later:]

Mr. Honey: Mr. Speaker, with your permission, I have rephrased the previous question and I should like to ask it of the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Agriculture. Has the request of the Ontario flue cured tobacco growers marketing board, dated October 24, 1962, for an agreement under the provisions of the Agricultural Products Marketing Act, been approved or rejected by this government?

Mr. Jorgenson: Mr. Speaker, the answer I gave to the question asked by the hon. member for Norfolk (Mr. Roxburgh) applies in this case as well.

LABOUR RELATIONS

NORRIS COMMISSION—ALLEGED REFUSAL OF EVIDENCE IN FRENCH

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Maurice Rinfret (St. James): My question is directed to the Prime Minister, who has been informed of my intention to ask it.

Is the Prime Minister aware that, during a hearing of the inquiry into the activities of the seafarers' international union before Judge Norris, a French speaking witness was accused of obstructing proceedings because he insisted on giving evidence in French?

Would the Prime Minister have any comments with regard to this matter, in view of the bill of rights?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am afraid that it would not be in order to comment on developments before a court of justice.

Mr. Rinfret: Mr. Speaker, my question—

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry, but the question is not in keeping with standing orders.

Mr. Rinfret: If I may, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Dupuis: On a point of order.

Mr. Rinfret: Mr. Speaker, the question does not deal with the inquiry commission as such, nor with its subject, but simply with this procedure.

Mr. Speaker: Neither procedure nor comments by judges or witnesses can be accepted as matter for questions on the orders of the day.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

REQUEST FOR GREATER FRENCH CANADIAN REPRESENTATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Does the Prime Minister have any comments to make following the visit, some time ago, of University of Ottawa students or could he tell us what he replied when they asked him for adequate French Canadian representation at the C.N.R.?

Mr. Speaker: It is not proper, on the orders of the day, to ask questions concerning events of that sort.

QUEBEC—POSSIBLE LAY-OFF OF EMPLOYEES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Beaule (Quebec East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Transport. Will the agreement between the Canadian National Railways and the truckers' association in the province of Quebec lead to the dismissal of C.N.R. employees, in the province of Quebec?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am convinced that this agreement was not signed for that purpose.

MR. ENGLISH—DEMONSTRATION IN FRONT OF PARLIAMENT BUILDINGS

Mr. Roland English (Gaspe): Mr. Speaker, following the demonstration which took place this afternoon—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. English: I rise on a question of privilege Mr. Speaker.

Inquiries of the Ministry

I must say that some time ago all political parties were called together in order to protest against the lack of French Canadian representation on the C.N.R. board of directors. I was among those who protested. That matter was to be discussed regardless of party affiliation. However, I note that certain members attended the demonstration and even addressed the demonstrators. Consequently, it is my duty to protest, because they acted as the standard bearers of that group.

Mr. Yvon Dupuis (St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville): Mr. Speaker, I must tell the hon. member that Conservative members also attended that manifestation.

Mr. English: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. English: Out of the six speakers, there was only one—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member will recognize that in addition to the rules, certain practices are in force in the house, and that they must be adhered to.

As to the point of order, the hon. member has explained that he did not take part in a certain manifestation, and the matter should rest there.

FINANCE

NEWFOUNDLAND—ELIMINATION OF LIVING ALLOWANCE TO ARMED FORCES AND R.C.M.P.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. R. Tucker (Trinity-Conception): I have a question to ask the Minister of Finance, a copy of which has been sent to him. In his absence, however, may I direct it to the parliamentary secretary. Would the hon. gentleman advise whether the government is contemplating revoking the living allowance paid to members of the R.C.M.P. and armed forces stationed in Newfoundland?

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance): My answer is that the question is based on straight conjecture and if—I underline the word "if" —any decision were made in this regard it would be announced in the normal way.

SECRETARY OF STATE

REPORTED VACANCIES IN BUREAU OF TRANSLATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): My question is directed to the Secretary of State.

[Mr. English.]

Is the minister aware that there are now some twenty vacant positions in the bureau for translations?

(Text):

Hon. G. E. Halpenny (Secretary of State): I shall make inquiries about this matter.

ALLEGED ERROR IN TRANSLATION OF FRENCH QUESTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege in connection with question 1,042 which was answered a few moments ago. I think I should have put the question in both languages, thus implementing true bilingualism myself for the question, as it was asked in French, was as follows:

Y a-t-il des Canadiens français au sein du conseil d'administration de la compagnie des chemins de fers Nationaux du Canada?

While in English, it reads as follows:

(Text):

Are there any French Canadians among the directors of Canadian National Railways?—

which is not the real translation.

(Translation):

The reply was given according to the English translation rather than the French original. Therefore, I ask that the question be put back on the order paper.

Mr. Speaker: I shall have to check if the translation of the question has to be corrected. I do hope that, within a few days, so that such incidents and, if any, such errors will not happen again, we shall be able to submit to the house a program showing in what language the questions have been asked, and those questions would be answered in the same language.

Meanwhile, I would tell the hon. member that a minister may give his answer in the language of his choice.

Mr. Prittie: Was the question asked in French or in English?

Mr. Gregoire: It was asked in French, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Balcer: The question was answered in French.

Mr. Gregoire: The answer was given according to the English version, which does not have the same meaning as the question asked in French.

Mr. Speaker: There is no use arguing. I take the question with reservation and we shall see to it that an amended answer be given if necessary.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

INQUIRY AS TO MEETING OF PRIVILEGES AND ELECTIONS COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I should like to direct a question to the hon. member for St. Mary in his capacity as chairman of the committee on privileges and elections, and ask him, in view of the importance of some of the matters which have been referred to it, when that committee will be meeting.

Mr. Georges Valade (St. Mary): I do not know whether I am in order in answering this question, but the subcommittee on the agenda has met and will inform the members of the committee when the sitting will be held. At that time we shall report on the procedure, at this first meeting.

MEETING OF PARTY LEADERS TO PREPARE AGENDA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I direct my question to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that on November 27 the right hon. gentleman stated that he intended to call the leaders of the different parties together to discuss an agenda and ways and means of speeding up the work of this house, and on November 29 he again gave the house his assurance that this would be done as soon as the leader of the Liberal party returned, would the Prime Minister inform the house when he intends to call such a meeting?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): There have been negotiations and discussions going on between the leader of the house and the representatives of the various parties. The results of these negotiations have been transmitted to me, and I am asking that the leaders gather together tomorrow morning at 9.30.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

NUCLEAR WEAPONS—REFERENCE TO STATEMENT BY EXTERNAL AFFAIRS MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): May I ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs a question based in part on the reply of the Prime Minister yesterday with regard to the possession by Canadian armed forces of nuclear weapons? Will the minister explain his reported statement to a Vancouver student audience that Canada may be forced to arm with nuclear weapons?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I made the same statement there that I made to the Voice of Women organization here in this building a few weeks ago; I am not sure whether or not the hon. member for Essex East was among those women. At that time I said that no guarantee could be given by any government of Canada to the effect that there would never be nuclear weapons in Canada. It would depend on world conditions.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): May I ask the hon. gentleman if, when he addressed the women who constitute this organization, the Minister of National Defence was present?

Mr. Green: No, I was doing the speaking to those people on that occasion.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Can the minister inform the house whether his statement to the Voice of Women and to the students in British Columbia represents a change in the policy of the government opposing nuclear weapons in Canadian hands?

Mr. Green: No, Mr. Speaker, there has been no change.

Mr. Thomas R. Berger (Vancouver-Burrard): Can the minister tell the house whether the government has decided in what circumstances it would require nuclear weapons?

Mr. Speaker: That is quite hypothetical.

Mr. Green: I think this is hardly the occasion for a debate on this question.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Raymond Rock (Jacques Cartier-Lasalle): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister having to do with an article appearing on the front page of this morning's Gazette headed "Incompetence of some M.P.'s Ottawa Shock". Is the defeated Conservative member John Pratt rewriting his own biography in order to become the new leader of the Conservative party?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Chair heard the question, but the Chair will tell the hon. member that according to the rules of the house his question was most improper.

INQUIRY FOR RETURN

TRANSPORT DEPARTMENT FLIGHTS

On the orders of the day:

Miss Judy V. LaMarsh (Niagara Falls): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Transport. Will the minister advise the house when he will be in a position to table the answer to question No. 403 standing in my name, which appeared on the order paper on October 22 and was passed as an order for return one month ago today?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am speaking from memory, but I think this has been answered, and the order for return was tabled quite a long time ago.

Miss LaMarsh: A supplementary question. I wish to advise the minister that as of two o'clock today it was not filed, and I would ask the minister to see that this question is at once answered.

Mr. Balcer: I will be very pleased to do so.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

INQUIRY AS TO BALANCE IN FUND

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. C. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Labour, notice of which I gave him this morning. Would the minister advise the house as to the credit balance, as of November 30 last, in the unemployment insurance fund account?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member will know that questions of a similar type have not been accepted on orders of the day. They are asking statistical information, which the hon. minister is not expected to have at hand.

(Translation):

PARLIAMENT HILL

REQUEST FOR BILINGUAL POLICE OFFICERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gerald Laniel (Beauharnois-Salaberry): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fleming). Does the minister think that all R.C.M.P. officers on duty on parliament hill should be bilingual?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I must point out that such a question cannot be asked on the orders of the day.

(Text):

CANADIAN CENTENNIAL

INQUIRY AS TO APPOINTMENT OF COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. C. M. Drury (St. Antoine-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister arising out of an answer he gave today which indicated that the commissioners of the national centennial administration had not yet been appointed. Since it has been some time since the legislation was passed—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Drury: —could we hope for an appointment before Christmas?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we hope to have these gentlemen on the payroll very shortly.

[Later:]

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a supplementary question to the Prime Minister. Does the Prime Minister, as head of the government of Canada, not think he owes a serious reply to the question put by the hon. member for St. Antoine-Westmount, instead of the insolent and irresponsible reply he made a few moments ago?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order. With the greatest deference to the hon. member for Essex East, I think with his experience he knows that the latter portion of his question was quite improper. There is no case for an hon. member to comment upon the nature of a reply given by any minister.

Some hon. Members: Withdraw.

Mr. Speaker: Under those circumstances the remarks of the hon. member in that regard were quite improper, and I think he knows it.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Hon. gentlemen may not like it, but I am going to speak in spite of this obstruction from the government benches.

Mr. Speaker: I trust the hon. member will speak on the point of order as to the propriety of commenting.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, you will permit me to make my own remarks on the point of order, and in my own way, and then Your Honour may comment upon them.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I have noted what Your Honour has said. The hon. member for St. Antoine-Westmount asked the Prime Minister a question with regard to an important event in the life of this nation, namely the occasion when we shall celebrate our centenary. That question having been addressed to the Prime Minister, the head of the government, it did not warrant from him the flippant answer which he gave. If words I used in description of this situation offend Your Honour's interpretation of the rules, I gladly withdraw them. However, I am sure Your Honour will understand the provocation.

Mr. Speaker: I am satisfied that the hon. member has withdrawn his words. While we all recognize that perhaps the nature of a question or a reply may be out of line, nevertheless it is quite the practice of this house that one cannot and does not express those feelings.

FISHERIES

REPORTED RECOMMENDATION RESPECTING JAPANESE FISHING IN NORTH PACIFIC

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether I might direct a question to the Minister of Fisheries. My question is based on one which I posed to the minister on November 29 with respect to certain recommendations of the north Pacific fisheries commission. At that time the minister indicated that he had not yet had the recommendations of the commission, and I am wondering whether he can indicate whether he has them now.

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, there is no change in the answer I gave on the previous occasion. I might add that these reports of the commission go to my colleague the Secretary of State for External Affairs in the first instance.

Mr. Howard: Then might I ask a supplementary question and address it to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. May I ask him whether he has on hand or has received the recommendations of the north Pacific fisheries commission?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I will have to take that question as notice.

HIGHWAYS

DISCUSSIONS RESPECTING SECOND TRANS-CANADA HIGHWAY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, somewhat as a cooling off interlude I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. I apologize for not having given him notice of it. Can the minister inform the house whether there have been any discussions whatever between officials of this government and officials of any provincial governments with respect to the possible location of a second trans-Canada highway?

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, that question takes in a great deal of territory. I have not searched the files. However, I think the answer to that question would be yes. I should not care to go further than that. There have been discussions.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INQUIRY AS TO SALE OF CANADA HOUSE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John R. Matheson (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Was the government consulted as to its future requirements in Canada House prior to its recent sale to Americans?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think that question should go on the order paper.

TRANSPORT

CORNWALL, ONT.—LEAK OF CHLORINE GAS FROM RAILWAY TANK CAR

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lucien Lamoureux (Stormont): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct to the Minister of Transport a question of which I have given him prior notice. It is further to the question which I asked of the minister on Monday and to which he then replied. Will the minister advise whether he has now received a report from the board of transport commissioners following the inquiry which has been conducted into the chlorine gas accident which occurred in Cornwall on Friday last?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, a preliminary inspection of the car was made at Cornwall by officers of the board and others. As a result of the disclosures during this inspection, the car is being removed to Montreal where the necessary facilities are available to enable a more thorough inspection to be made. The board is not in a position to indicate the result of the investigation at the moment.

COPYRIGHTS

INQUIRY AS TO INTRODUCTION OF NEW LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Miss Judy V. LaMarsh (Niagara Falls): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State. Now that he has had an opportunity to settle into the responsibilities of that office will he advise the house whether he is preparing for consideration by the house a new copyright act during the fiscal year which will conclude at the end of March next, in accordance with the promise given by his predecessor that one would be introduced for consideration at this session?

Hon. G. E. Halpenny (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, as I said before, this matter is under consideration.

ATLANTIC DEVELOPMENT BOARD

PROVISION FOR DEFINITION OF DUTIES APPOINTMENT OF MEMBERS, ETC.

Hon. H. J. Flemming (Minister of National Revenue) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-94, to provide for the establishment of an Atlantic development board.

Mr. Speaker: Will hon. members who are going to leave the chamber please do so in order that the Chair may recognize anyone who is going to speak.

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Mr. Pickersgill: Has the minister anything to say?

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, on the motion for second reading of the bill to provide for the establishment of an Atlantic development board I wish only to thank hon. members from all quarters in the house for the interest they have all taken in the bill and the comments that have been made, some of which were constructive in character.

I do not believe that any points have been raised to which I at this moment wish to make reference, although I believe some observations have been made which would lead to a somewhat detailed discussion of a somewhat political nature if I were inclined to do so. I do feel that the subject and the possibilities of this board are sufficiently important and sufficiently extensive that, without any particular loss to this house so far as information is concerned, I might just pass them by.

The principle of the bill now before us for second reading is well known. The comments that have been made in the house in connection with the special situation of the Atlantic provinces are likewise, I believe, of general acceptance. My opinion is that we are asked by the motion to approve the principle and I doubt that there is very much objection to such approval of the principle.

I do not think that we in the maritimes should emphasize the disabilities with regard to which we may be having some difficulty in an economic sense. It has always been my opinion that we who are fortunate enough to have been born and lived in those provinces down by the sea should emphasize the advantages we have rather than emphasizing to an undue degree the disabilities of living in a fringe area of a great nation. I think we can do much better for ourselves if we adopt such an attitude, always keeping in mind, however, that the special privileges and rights inherent in all agreements made previously with the central government should be brought to the attention of the central government from time to time.

Yesterday the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Robichaud) put on record certain specific questions which he asked me to answer. I am quite prepared to answer them but I venture the observation that this would lead to nothing except a discussion of a political nature in which he and his party would come off second best. That is my feeling. Therefore, with that in mind I do not propose to remind him of certain things. He has been a member of the house since 1953. He is a veteran of the house. I do not know how much pressure he brought to bear on the government of which he was a supporter when they were in office. I do know something of the results that were achieved, and those results were practically nil. I will give him full marks for his effort but I am sure he will have to acknowledge that the efforts of the government which he supported and which held office prior to the present administration were not productive of results to any great degree.

I know that some members will say: Oh, yes, but we had the equalization grants, and so on. I emphasize that the real principle which we are debating at the present time and in regard to which I am offering these comments is that there shall be a board established with certain duties devolving upon it. Those duties, I submit, and I am sure those who have read the bill will agree, are of a very broad and flexible nature, and so they should be. Some hon. members have suggested, and I believe that to a certain degree at least this was recommended by the commission on Canada's economic prospects, that a board or commission should be established and a certain fixed amount of public funds should be placed in their hands for disposal, but to me that is an abrogation of the principle of responsibility. I do not feel that any parliament should delegate powers of that nature.

But what are we doing under this legislation? We are providing the machinery by which an examination may be made of any promising situation existing in the Atlantic provinces. That is exactly what we have not had up until now. No one knows better than some members of this house the many trips to Ottawa made by representatives of each of the provinces in the eastern part of Canada for many years now for the specific purpose of bringing certain things to the attention of the authorities. In that regard I would say that generally speaking, regardless of the political complexion of the government which has brought these matters to the attention of the central government, they have all had a degree of merit and have deserved consideration.

But after you get through the maze of departmental activity in Ottawa and finally find the proper department, you possibly run into a situation that again presents a difficulty not easily to be surmounted. This all adds up to a tremendous loss of time and the greatest of difficulty. Then these representatives return to their respective provinces and become engrossed in their day to day duty. I am speaking of men in public life now.

Mr. Nicholson: Will the minister permit a question?

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): Yes, indeed.

Mr. Nicholson: Will the maze not be added to if we continue to have these economic development boards? We will have one for the Atlantic provinces, another nationally and in addition the extension of the national productivity council.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): My answer to the hon. member for Vancouver Centre is definitely in the negative, and I will try to explain to the satisfaction of my hon. friend and the house why I say this. In my view there are many promising situations, some of which I skipped over quite lightly yesterday. If a board is set up as envisaged by this legislation and if that board has certain fixed duties and responsibilities, even though they are flexible and even though they are broad, there will be some assurance that if proposals have been proven to be economically sound after investigation and are finally put before the central government, as I would hope some such proposals would be, they will have received a thorough examination and the department concerned or the government or cabinet, call it what you will, will be confident that they have had a certain degree of examination and will be prepared to deal with them in a minimum of time. That is the reason why I answered categorically and quickly to the question asked by my hon. friend, who I know is interested in the maritimes and has not asked the question to embarrass me or anyone else.

Now, Mr. Speaker, referring again to the matter of investigation, I may say it is envisaged that this body shall have authority to engage the services of experts in certain fields who may be available in Ottawa in the various departments, and there are many of them, or this body may employ consultants and engage anyone they think has specialized knowledge concerning the particular matter under investigation. I am very certain that the fact they have that kind of power delegated to them is going to place them in a position where they will be able to act quickly, and with a minimum loss of time investigate any promising situation which, after careful examination, they feel is deserving of consideration.

Within the last 24 hours, I have received quite a few telephone calls. May I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that they have come from every one of the Atlantic provinces. These people did not call for the purpose of saying what a great thing the Atlantic development board act would be. Generally speaking, they said, when do we get the board established and when will we be able to bring to the board's attention these promising situations? In my opinion, this was a very healthy sign signifying the ultimate success of this board.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the motion is that the bill receive second reading. I do not believe there is much more I can say at the moment that would be very illuminating. The principle of the bill is involved here and I believe all members of this house are in favour of the principle. I do not think there is any question about that. However, I would not say that there might not be the odd section that might not be capable of amendment because I think that it takes the combined knowledge of everyone to think of everything. I am rather of the opinion, therefore, that there may be some sections that we might properly consider amending slightly. As a matter of fact, I have one such amendment in mind at the moment.

Since we are talking about the principle, and since we are talking about the general idea that we want to do something, I wonder if it would not be a good idea to forget everything that has happened prior to 1962 or even prior to December 5, 1962. Let us go forward with this bill. Let us consider it in the light of the possibilities that may be embodied in the bill, the things that it may accomplish. If we devote our time to finding fault with the bill and finding fault with each other or engaging in a political hassle, which is not uncommon in the maritimes and other parts of Canada, then I have no doubt that we might consider the activities and results of this board may not amount to a great deal. If we make up our minds that we are not going to worry about who gets the credit for it but we are going to go ahead to ensure that this board will be able to investigate situations and finally come up with solutions which may be of benefit to our part of Canada, then that will be a good thing to do and will produce beneficial results.

So, Mr. Speaker, I think that is all I have to say on second reading. I would hope the house would agree unanimously on the principle. I think all hon. members do. Then, we can go into committee and discuss the various sections of the bill itself. It would be my hope that discussion might be expedited as much as possible, with due regard for the rights of every member to express his opinion, to express his interest and to suggest improvements, as long as those suggestions are based on the general idea of wanting to be helpful and not obstructive. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I should remind the house that, although hon. members were not cautioned previously the minister, in speaking on second reading, closes the debate. I am sorry, I take it he opened the debate on second reading. I apologize to hon. members.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I should like to open my remarks in a way that I did not intend to do. I do not believe that Your Honour, Mr. Deputy Speaker, ever needs to apologize to the house. We do appreciate the ready way in which you always acknowledge any slight slip that there may be. We also appreciate the tolerance and good spirit with which you conduct the proceedings whenever you occupy the chair, either in the house or in committee.

I listened with great interest to the debate in committee yesterday, and I listened with interest to the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Flemming) or the Minister of Forestry, I do not know which he prefers to be called. This afternoon, he was being his most seductive. He is always pretty good when he is seductive, but he is not always seductive. I have seen the minister in this house when he was rather combative and it may be that before this debate is over he will not be quite as seductive as he was at the beginning.

We do appreciate the spirit in which the minister, not some of his colleagues in the house, has proceeded so far this afternoon and I shall attempt to speak in as dispassionate and objective a way as I can. There is one thing I should like to point out at the very outset—

Mr. Martineau: The sugar-coated pill.

Mr. Pickersgill: If the minister of mines could just stay underground until his turn to speak comes, I think it might facilitate progress. I should perhaps remind the minister of mines that since I have unlimited time his interruptions will not interfere in any way with my freedom of speech.

Mr. McGrath: When it comes to digging holes he can take a few lessons from you.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. member for St. John's East seems to have been exceedingly uncomfortable during the last two days. Perhaps if he could just calm himself and possess his soul in patience he would have an opportunity, later in this debate, to deliver the second half of that eloquent speech of which we heard the first half last night.

As I was saying, sir, the evidence of our co-operation is that although the minister said the bill was well known the fact is that no member of the house had any opportunity to know anything about the bill, except the minister and members of the ministry, until one o'clock today. I sought to get it early this morning, knowing I was going to speak in this debate, but I was told it would not be available for distribution until one o'clock. My first impulse was to protest to the house leader and suggest that some other business be taken up; but then I thought, as it turned out rightly, that it would not be very hard to absorb all that was in the bill between one o'clock and the time the house sat at 2.30. Therefore I made no protest and I am not making any now; but I would like to remind hon. members that a few days ago, when discussing the business of the house, the Prime Minister said as reported at page 2009 of Hansard:

> The legislation is available. We are ready to present it. If hon. members do not think so just let them pass this supply and pass these bills one after the other, and they will get them fast.

This is one bill we did not get fast, and it is not the only one; and I think it would be a good thing if an effort could be made to arrange business in such a fashion that all hon. members who wish to participate in a debate would have the bill in time to read it and develop arguments based upon it.

The minister made one or two observations to which I would like to refer in reply, but only in reply, before I deal with the content of the bill itself. He made an appeal today, as he did yesterday, for non-partisan consideration of the bill. Well, sir, I make no apology for not responding to that appeal. However, I think I know what the minister really meant. He meant a temperate and reasonable discussion.

But the essence of parliamentary government is that we do have parties and the parties do stand for something and do differ. I must say personally I deprecate the suggestion that is so often made that, because there are political differences, which are the very essence of British freedom, that there is something wrong about that. I make no apology for differing with the government about certain things and I have never, that I can recall, taken any exception to anyone who differed with me. I may have felt sometimes those who differed were foolish but I never doubted they had a perfect right to differ.

The minister also made an appeal that we should forget everything that happened before December 5 and in view of the speeches that were made—I except the minister's own speech—by other hon. members on the opposite side of the house last night, I am not surprised that the minister would like us to forget what happened yesterday; and I think some of the hon. members who participated from the other side of the house might be happy also. I am not going into any detail about anything any of them said.

Mr. McGrath: Why not?

Mr. Pickersgill: Because I am responding to the appeal made by the minister, for whom I have more respect than I have for the honourable and excited member for St. John's East. The minister asked us not to go into these things and I agree with him that long and arid debates about what happened in 1935 or in 1953, 1957 or even in 1960, are not going to get us very far, but I do think the minister would not expect, as a reasonable man, that certain statements of alleged fact would be unnoticed, and there are one or two of them which I certainly intend to notice.

The minister referred to my hon. friend from Gloucester and to some of the things he said. He referred to the fact that my hon. friend came into the house in 1953. That is a rather sensitive point with me because so did I, and whatever my hon. friend from Gloucester may have done to try to bring the situation in the Atlantic provinces before the government, if he was not successful, I am more to blame than he is because he was just a member of parliament and I was a minister. Therefore anything the minister applied to the hon. member for Gloucester I take as applying to myself; and I am not ashamed at all of what happened.

In those years the minister was the premier of the province of New Brunswick, but in his present capacity as Minister of National Revenue he has said that the results achieved by my hon. friend from Gloucester, and other hon. members who at that time were supporting the government, were practically nil.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): May I make a correction?

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): I said the considerations of a special nature were practically nil.

Mr. Pickersgill: The minister is trying rather skilfully to get out of a situation the dangers of which I think he recognizes. Of course it can be argued that the whole principle of equalization was not a consideration of a special nature for the Atlantic provinces, because it was also of great importance to the province where I was brought up and spent half my life, the province of Manitoba. To no province was it of greater importance than to the province of New Brunswick because, as the minister well knows, there was no other province, not even Saskatchewan, except perhaps in its very worst days, that had a lower tax potential and therefore benefited more from the application of the principle of equalization than New Brunswick did.

The principle of equalization, which was applied for the first time in 1957 as a result of the legislation of 1956, resulted in the greatest single increase in tax transfers that ever took place in the whole history of these various transactions.

I was very pleased to hear the excellent observations made yesterday, and I thought made very well, by the hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. MacInnis) who I think all of us would agree, whether we agree with him politically or not, is one of the most promising of the new members of the house, and I do not use "promising" in any invidious sense. I say I am proud to have been a member of a government which introduced that principle of equalization, which we thought would remain in force unitl some better system could be devised, but I would hate to belong, as the minister does, to a government that scrapped it.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): We made an improvement.

Mr. Pickersgill: The minister says they made an improvement. Well, I am not going to enter into any debate, but the minister knows very well that the only way in which they covered up the fact that they had scrapped the principle of equalization was by making an increase in the Atlantic provinces grant which temporarily obscured the other point, but did not obscure it for Saskatchewan as the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas) well knows, and also did not obscure it for Manitoba. I have sometimes wondered, especially after reading Maclean's magazine today, whether perhaps it was not Manitoba they had really in mind and whether some hon. members on the treasury benches—and I am not accusing the minister—who devised the system for Manitoba might not have thought a little knife in the back of the premier of Manitoba would not do him any harm. That, I recognize at once, while of great interest to you and me, Mr. Speaker, is not very relevant to the bill and I can assure you that I do not intend to pursue this line.

Mr. McGrath: It is all so cheap.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder if we could arrange for the timing of the interruptions of old faithful so that I could pause in order that they might have their full effect on the house.

The minister said something else about which I want to say a word. He said that with the exception of the tax equalization there was nothing else he could think of. I believe that statement should not be allowed to go unchallenged. It was fairly well answered last night by the hon. member for Gloucester after the hon. member for Saint John-Albert, who is the most helpful member to us on the other side of the house, had asked one of those questions which gave an opportunity for an answer, and I will draw that answer to the attention of the minister.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): I do not mind helping the hon. gentleman because there is nobody around here who needs help more than he does.

Mr. Pickersgill: Not only do I agree with the hon. gentleman, but I owe him a tremendous debt of gratitude. Ever since we first sat in this house together he has been helping me along and I appreciate it.

An hon. Member: He is going to help you right out.

Mr. Pickersgill: Well, that could be, and thank God for being in a country where that is possible if the electors decide it. As to some of the decisions the electors made on June 18, some of the hon. members opposite are smarting under them to this day.

Mr. Martineau: May I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Pickersgill: If it is relevant to the bill, yes.

Mr. Martineau: It is relevant to the bill. In fact, I was about to ask the hon. member when he was going to begin discussing the bill.

Mr. Pickersgill: Just as soon as I have finished discussing the points raised by the minister. I said I would deal with the minister's observations first. I have practically concluded what I had to say about them. Then I will go on to the measure itself. I just want to say this—and this will deal, also, with the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) en passant. I would remind the minister that in the period from 1953 to 1957 a number of very great works were carried on in the Atlantic provinces. I do not think any better decision was ever made by the Department of National Defence than the decision to put camp Gagetown in New Brunswick. I know something about why that decision was made. There were many other places where, from a military standpoint, it might just as well have been put, but it was placed there because it was known it would help the economy of that province and it has, to a marked degree, as anybody who visits the city of Fredericton or the city of Saint John knows. During that period the Canso causeway was built and the effect of that causeway on the economy of the whole region, as the hon. member for Inverness-Richmond pointed out the other day, is only now beginning to show itself. I predict that in time it will be one of the great monuments to the wisdom of the Canadian people in developing all parts of their country.

I am going to say something now which, no doubt, will be surprising to hon. members opposite. I think it is unfortunate that the government to which I belonged, the former Liberal government, and Liberal governments before that did not, in the field of defence production, do the same as they did with respect to camp Gagetown, by developing production facilities in the Atlantic provinces. I think, looking back on it, we could have done better for our country than we did, had we done that. I do not hesitate to say that, because we on this side have never claimed perfection; we have never claimed we have accomplished everything.

There is one other thing I cannot forbear from mentioning, since my hon. friend from Gloucester and I are both associated in this indictment, and that is the establishment of unemployment insurance for fishermen. That is a measure which the hon. member for Gloucester and I probably had as much influence in persuading the government of that day to enact as any two members of the house. I do not say we had more influence than others, but I do say we had as much. It was acclaimed by all parties in this house when it was enacted. Some of us have apprehensions that there is in the minds of some hon. gentlemen opposite a notion that it should be scrapped, but anyone who knows anything about the difficulties we have had in the maintenance of income in the Atlantic provinces during these last five years knows what a welfare bill there would have been for all the provincial governments if it had not been for the unemployment insurance payments which had been made in the last five years.

Mr. McGrath: That is utter nonsense.

Mr. Pickersgill: Let the hon. member for St. John's East go from Cape Bonavista to Twillingate and tell the fishermen that unemployment insurance for fishermen is utter nonsense, and see what kind of reception he gets. I invite him to do that at any time. However, I must not pursue that any further. There are many other things I might say but I mention those because they are measures with which my hon. friend from Gloucester and I were closely associated.

Mr. Barnett: May I ask the hon. member a question? It has to do with unemployment insurance for fishermen. Does the hon. member not think it might have been better if the measure to which he has referred had been called by the government of that day a welfare measure rather than an insurance provision?

Mr. Pickersgill: No, I do not. I do not know any single subject about which I feel more strongly than I do about this. The fishermen do not want welfare; they want jobs, and they want to be on unemployment insurance so that when they stop fishing, if there are any jobs available, they can get those jobs and get more stamps. If there are jobs for them to go to they will not collect the unemployment insurance. The tragedy of these last five years has been that when the fishing season was over there were no jobs for them to take and they had to live on unemployment insurance. But when there were jobs available they took them.

Mr. Martineau: On a point of order, I think the hon. member is very far from the bill in question and I suggest he would be more in order if he returned to it.

Mr. Pickersgill: I could not agree more with the hon. gentleman. It was not I who strayed from the bill. It was the minister who did that by suggesting as part of his argument that nothing had been accomplished in those years and, I must say, I yielded to the temptation offered by the question of the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett) because it raised a subject about which I feel very keenly.

Mr. Rapp: The hon. member said there was a need for seasonal unemployment payments to be made to fishermen. Was there not the same need in respect to seasonal farm labour, and why was that not brought under the provisions of the same bill?

Mr. Pickersgill: If you would permit me to answer that question I would be glad to do so, Mr. Speaker. But in view of the point of order raised by the minister—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I should interrupt to observe that I am having some difficulty and that I appreciate the difficulty the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate is encountering because of certain interjections and questions which force him, to some extent, into a position where his observations cannot remain relevant to the bill. If hon. members would co-operate by making their comments apply directly to the principle of the bill, as is proper on second reading, it would be much more helpful in expediting its passage.

Mr. Pickersgill: I agree with you, Mr. Speaker, and I will answer the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale (Mr. Rapp), for whom I have always had the highest regard, privately on some other occasion, or perhaps I will be able to speak on his motion the next time it comes up.

Now, sir, I want to make one observation, and one only, about the debate on this bill. On behalf of the Liberal opposition I am authorized to say that we are prepared, in order to expedite the enactment of this legislation and also of a number of other measures which are on the order paper, to be satisfied with having two speakers from our party on second reading of this bill—and I make this offer specifically with respect to this bill—on the understanding that the excellent suggestion made by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas) the other day will be carried out by the government, and that this bill will be sent to a standing committee. I would suppose that the appropriate committee would be the banking and commerce committee, but it could be sent to whatever committee the government wishes. There it could be carefully examined and the officials could tell us what is going to happen after this board is set up.

I quite agree with the minister that that is really what is important. Merely enacting this measure and having a board is not going to get us very far. It is particularly important in relation to the other legislation, which has suggested in the minds of many hon. members that there may be a good deal of overlapping and duplication between these various agencies which the government is proposing and some of the agencies which have already been set up.

So, sir, I say that we are prepared to have only two speakers on second reading of this bill, on the understanding, of course, that the government supporters do not put up more than two speakers, and on the understanding that the bill is not brought here in committee of the whole until it has first had careful examination by a standing committee. Then, of course, it will come to the committee of the whole where any hon. member who wishes to deal with the clauses can do so. However, I feel that a measure as important as the minister has told us this one is going to be, certainly ought to have the kind of careful examination that really is not possible in committee of the whole in this house, particularly at a time when there seems to be a general disposition in the house to try and speed up legislation. It is with a view to assisting the minister and the government in getting this measure enacted expeditiously, and in getting the best possible measure enacted, that I make this suggestion. Perhaps the minister can indicate in due course what view the government takes of that suggestion.

Now I come to the bill itself, and I must say that I read it with the greatest disappointment. I think that all those in the Atlantic provinces who read this bill and who understand its purport will also be very much disappointed. I say that because this bill does not do what I think all of us had been led by the speech from the throne and the program of the government before June 18 to feel the government intended to do in this matter. To put it bluntly, sir, we expected an executive agency, and all this is is another advisory body. I say that is not good enough.

Before anyone asks me: "Are you going to oppose the bill?", I am going to say this. I am going to say that I was brought up on the principle that nothing in this world is perfect, that the perfectionist generally gets nothing, and that half a loaf is better than no bread. I do not think that this bill is even half the loaf which was promised: I think it is only a crust. But I think it would be foolish to reject even the crust, and for my part I would certainly not join in rejecting it on second reading. It might well be that when we get into committee and have a chance to consider the matter, it would be found, as the minister has said, that this bill is not regarded by the government as perfect and we could make some improvements in it. I do not think it would ever be acceptable, but it would make it more useful than it would now seem to me to be.

Now, sir, if one may judge from what one has read about it in advance in the press, it would seem that the bill is more or less the product of a mutual back scratching match between the publisher of the Atlantic Advocate and the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Diefenbaker), who lavish the most exaggerated amount of praise upon each other, which in most cases is rather empty of content. But there is another journal in the Atlantic provinces which calls itself an independent newspaper, and which I think is an independent newspaper. Although I do not think anybody would accuse it of being a supporter of the Liberal party, it is a newspaper for which I have very high regard indeed. That newspaper is the Halifax Chronicle-Herald, and on November 19 it had this to say about this very bill:

> If the promised Atlantic provinces development board is to be a federal advisory commission (as now appears to be the case), two conditions will have to be met before its effectiveness can be assured.
> 1. A policy of making public its recommendations, possibly at the same time that it forwards them to the government, will have to be followed not only to "prove" the board's independence of the governments of the day, but to establish in public opinion its credentials as an effective planning agency.

As I read the bill—the minister may say that I have misinterpreted it—the board is to report only to the minister; it is not to report in any public way at all. This editorial goes on:

> 2. To the same end, the policy of appointment to the board will have to be not merely barren of party considerations—

Apparently the Halifax Chronicle-Herald does not realize that the Atlantic provinces have completely run out of defeated government candidates without employment, because it seems to fear that some of them will be appointed to this board, and it is warning in advance, perhaps, that even the colleagues of ex-provincial premiers are people who might be appointed.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): We did all right in the by-elections this week.

Mr. Pickersgill: Well, I do not imagine the minister will appoint actual members of the legislature. I was suggesting that the Halifax Chronicle-Herald was worried about appointing not those who are members of the legislature but those who might once have been. I am just endorsing the prescription of the Halifax Chronicle-Herald in this matter. This article continues:

> 2. To the same end, the policy of appointment to the board will have to be not merely barren of party considerations, but sensitive to the fact that the Atlantic provinces is not a homogeneous region, economically and socially. Not a few varying interests will have to be represented on the board if balanced suggestions are to be expected from it.

Mr. Speaker, I would hope that the minister, who is perhaps in appearance less partisan than some of his colleagues, would, if this legislation is adopted consult the governments of the Atlantic provinces before this board is appointed about the kind of appointments which will be made. I do not say that the minister would have to give anybody a veto at all, but I do hope that he would consult the Atlantic premiers with a view to having the maximum possible amount of agreement that the best possible people will be appointed. It does not seem to me that that is an unreasonable suggestion.

This newspaper says that if certain conditions were met the board might be of some considerable use. However, this is the warning the Chronicle-Herald gives and this is the warning that I give. I think it will be echoed in the minds of many people in the Atlantic provinces:

Certainly, if these conditions are not met,—

Mr. McGrath: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Is there not a rule against reading editorials at length?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The hon. member is not reading at length.

Mr. McGrath: He is reading at length from an editorial which purports to be from the Halifax Chronicle-Herald.

Mr. Pickersgill: Speaking on the point of order, I would suggest that the hon. gentleman might use his leisure hours by reading Beauchesne, as the rule about reading editorials or any other comment is with regard to comment on a debate that is in progress. This editorial was written some days before this measure ever came before us. In fact, it was written on November 19. There is another rule, Mr. Speaker, to the effect that in reading an editorial one must indicate either his concurrence in those views or his dissent from them and make them part of his own speech. I have no hesitation whatsoever in indicating my approval of this editorial.

Mr. McGrath: Speaking on the point of order, Mr. Speaker, may I say this, if the hon. gentleman insists on reading. There is a rule of this house against reading speeches.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Members from the same province should support one another.

Mr. Pickersgill: As I did last night.

An hon. Member: What page is that?

Mr. Pickersgill: I continue with the reading of this editorial:

Certainly, if these conditions are not met, the board could become a useless thing, or worse, a deadening buffer between succeeding governments of the day and the legitimate aspirations of the people of the Atlantic provinces.

It is not unimaginable—

I would draw the attention of the minister particularly to this last paragraph.

—that, in the hands of undistinguished appointees and operating on the periphery of public attention, the board could even become a vehicle through which any government could explain successive failures to act on our behalf.

I must say that I am rather apprehensive about the emphasis that has been given by the minister in the house, and by certain commentators outside the house to the suggestion that the first big question to be submitted to this board is the Chignecto project.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the hon. gentleman does not wish to misquote me.

Mr. Pickersgill: No, I do not wish to misquote the minister.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): I did not say it was the first. It was the Prime Minister who, speaking on another occasion, had said that among the things to be considered was this project.

Mr. Pickersgill: Quite so. However, it was the only one that the Prime Minister singled out for attention.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): That is true.

Mr. Pickersgill: I admit that he was in Moncton or some place nearby at the time. I am also a politician. I would not blame the Prime Minister too much for not referring in Moncton to the South Saskatchewan dam. Of course, the difference is that the South Saskatchewan dam is being built and the Chignecto canal is going to be referred to still another board. After five years of Tory government, after three elections when they promised to do it, it is going to be referred to still another board as among the most pressing things. As far as the Chignecto canal is concerned it rather looks as though the Halifax Chronicle-Herald is right and that this is to be another high class and expensive funeral. I hope that is not the situation. Considering the way in which that project has been treated, one cannot help having the impression that may be what is intended.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): Would the hon. member like to add, "by various governments"?

Mr. Pickersgill: Certainly, by various governments. I agree. You know, Mr. Speaker, one of the things that amuses me most about the present government is this. I had hoped the minister, who has not been there as long as have some of his colleagues, would not have joined this club. There is only one reason the present government ever gives to justify anything it does and, above all, one reason is given for justifying anything it has not done. It says, "The Liberals did not do it either". I thought, as did the voters who voted in such large numbers in 1958 for the Tory candidates, that they were going to get something different from what they got from the Liberals. However, according to the hon. gentleman, all they are getting are excuses for failures to act. Always the same excuse is given, "Well, you didn't do it in 22 years, so why should we do it?"

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I think the hon. member is straying far from the principle of this bill which we are now studying.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am afraid, Mr. Speaker, that perhaps you did not hear the interjection.

Mr. Berger: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes.

Mr. Berger: Does the hon. member's reference to broken promises illustrate the fact that there is no essential difference between this government and the former government?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I think the question is out of order.

Mr. Pickersgill: The question may have been out of order, Mr. Speaker, but since the hon. gentleman put into my mouth words that I did not use at all, may I say this. I never said anything about promises, broken or otherwise. His question is quite irrelevant. However, with respect to the Chignecto canal, I say it is obvious that it has not been built by a Liberal government or by a Conservative government. It has not been built at all. It begins to look as though it is going, as I said earlier, to be given a high class funeral.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): Is that what the hon. member hopes?

Mr. Pickersgill: No. I will tell you what I hope. I hope that it is built. This is—

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Have you got to read it?

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not have to read it. However, I wish the words to be precise as they are not my words. I do not mind paraphrasing myself. However, unlike many hon. gentlemen opposite, when I am quoting somebody else I prefer to quote accurately. I commend that procedure to many hon. gentlemen opposite. This happens to be a leaflet that was distributed by my party in the last election. It refers specifically and precisely to this subject and here is what it says:

Build the Prince Edward Island causeway,—

Which apparently has now become, in the hands of this government, a pauseway.

—if the still uncompleted studies establish its feasibility.

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

Then next:

Press on with the detailed studies of the Chignecto project and, if they prove its feasibility, undertake construction.

I hope they do so.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): I wonder if I could ask the hon. member a question.

Mr. Pickersgill: Certainly.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): Is that the same way the hon. gentleman felt when his government was in office and when a committee in 1950 came before the government of the day asking for the Chignecto canal? Was that the influence he had at that time over that government? Was his opinion the same then as it is now? The results were entirely nil.

Mr. Pickersgill: I did not happen to be a member of the government in 1950, and I am going to follow the excellent example given by the minister and not go into a whole lot of ancient history. I have admitted that the Liberal government did not build it or that it did not get on with it. I admit that fact right away. I do not know what there needs to be any more argument about. But for five years there has been a government in office that promised to build it, which the Liberals never promised. This is the real point.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): When did the present government promise to build it?

Mr. Pickersgill: And they never even carried on the studies.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question. When did the present government promise to build it?

Mr. Pickersgill: I think the minister is right.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: The minister is quite right. He is making a very careful differentiation. The present government did not promise it after it became a government. It was just the leader of the present government who promised it in the election of 1957, while he was still in opposition. That, sir, is precisely the difference between the leader of one party and the leader of another. Mr. St. Laurent would never promise to do it. The present Prime Minister did promise, and now we are going to give it another funeral.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, the present Prime Minister did not promise to build the Chignecto canal.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): Don't quote from that document.

Mr. Pickersgill: All I suggest is that the hon. member look up the promises that were made in the election campaign of 1957 and he will find that the Prime Minister promised, if it was feasible, to build it, and for five years—

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): On a point of order, the hon. member has changed his phraseology now to "if it is feasible".

Mr. Pickersgill: Well, there was to be an investigation and for five years the investigation was delayed. We all remember the farce when the former minister of public works, who no longer is in this house, was here and he was asked about these studies. We remember that other farce when the minister of public works who is no longer here—

Mr. Lewis: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I do not want to be and I hope I am not taken as trying to be superior, but may I ask when the debate will come back to the subject of the Atlantic development board? This is a purely political exchange.

Mr. Pickersgill: If the hon. gentleman does not think there should be political exchanges in parliament, what kind of exchanges does he think there should be?

Mr. Lewis: Relevant ones, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. McGrath: On the point of order, surely the rules of the house apply equally to all hon. members, and the hon. member has been clearly out of order since he started. He is not speaking to the principle of the bill.

Mr. Chevrier: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker, the point has been raised by the hon. member on two occasions but Your Honour has not ruled on it. However, since Your Honour rose there have been a number of questions from the other side of the house from the minister and others which have put the hon. member who is now speaking in the position of having to reply to them. There is no doubt that when such questions are put the hon. member surely has an opportunity to reply. In any event, notwithstanding what has been said by the hon. member for York South, surely this house is the place where political discussions can go on even though they do go somewhat beyond the sphere of the motion before the house. I submit this to you with deference, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I think all members are anxious to contribute toward helping the government with this legislation. All members seem to be anxious this afternoon about the political programs of each party, but I am sure all hon. members will try to listen very quietly to the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate. I ask the hon. member for the second time to discuss only the principle of the bill before us.

Mr. Pickersgill: As I understand it, the principle of the bill is to set up a board for the development of the Atlantic provinces, and if the Chignecto canal, in the opinion of the hon. member for York South, is not one of those projects then, of course, I am out of order.

Mr. Lewis: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I said nothing of the sort. So long as the hon. member discusses that I think it is in order. May I also say while I have the floor—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for York South can have the floor later to answer remarks made by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, but at this time the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate has the floor.

Mr. Pickersgill: I hope the hon. member for York South will make his point and tear my speech to pieces in his own good time. I am sure, inasmuch as he is a very much more accomplished controversialist than I am, that he will do an excellent job in doing so. As I was saying before this diversion took place, the Chignecto project is one that I certainly do not object to having the board consider, if the investigations are not yet complete. I think it is too bad they are not yet complete, but if they are not yet complete the board should, of course, consider it.

But what I did express apprehension about, and I want to express it again so that my point will be clear, is that if too much time is taken with this project with a view to rolling it over until after another election, the board may not get on with other things about which there may be a good deal less controversy, and I hope that will not happen. That was the point I was seeking to make when other hon. gentlemen, not myself, raised a number of points about the matter.

In my view there is another very important reason why the people of the Atlantic provinces will be greatly disappointed with this bill. We all remember that beautiful spring day in 1957 when the whole Atlantic region was going to be transformed, not by the minister who is now presenting the bill but by many hon. members who are sitting over there and by some who are no longer sitting over there.

Atlantic Development Board

I refer to their famous Moncton meeting when they provided a charter for the Atlantic provinces and when they promised a national development program of federal assistance for developing the resources of the Atlantic provinces about which nothing whatever has been done and about which we are now told a beginning is going to be made after the board is established. This was their second promise:

Industrial decentralization by placing a more equitable share of defence contract expenditures within the Atlantic provinces—

Mr. McGrath: Which has been fulfilled.

Mr. Pickersgill: In response to repeated inquiries on the estimates of the Department of Defence Production every year it has been shown by the statistics that this has not been done.

Mr. McGrath: It has been done.

Mr. Pickersgill: I continue:

—by the establishment of crown corporations—

As my hon. friend pointed out last night, the only crown corporations there are in the Atlantic provinces were established before this promise was made.

—by encouraging private enterprise to locate in the area—

I presume that is what this board is calculated to do, but what has been done in the last five years and why was it not done after these promises were made and a mandate was secured to carry them out? That is the question I ask.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): A lot was done.

Mr. Pickersgill: But the real and fundamental disappointment will come because of another of these promises.

Capital projects program to provide federal capital assistance for provincial projects designed to enlarge the basic economy of the area.

That promise was made five years ago. It will be six years in a few months since that promise was made and nothing whatever has been done about it. When we read the speech from the throne in September we thought that at last this was going to be done, but then we got this bill and there is not a suggestion of anything to be spent except the princely salary of $3,000 for the chairman and a little money to be appropriated later by parliament to carry on certain of the board's research work.

Now, sir, that is why I say there will be real disappointment with this bill. I am going to make a few brief suggestions about what this board ought to undertake. I regret again that it cannot do anything except study these problems, but I am going to recommend two or three things it should study. First of all—

Mr. McGrath: It should study the hon. member.

Mr. Pickersgill: I doubt if that would be very profitable.

The first and most important subject of study—hon. members may think I am slightly biased in this matter—should be the modernization of the oldest of Canada's industries, the fishery. There is no industry that has any greater need of the same kind of program that the government is seeking to bring about for agriculture under ARDA—

Mr. McGrath: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes.

Mr. McGrath: Surely, he must realize the premier of Newfoundland has the solution of the problems of the fishing industry with his great fisheries manifesto that he announced before the last provincial election and which, incidentally fell flat on its face.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. member talks about the great fisheries manifesto which fell flat on its face, but apparently the hon. gentleman was not in Newfoundland paying attention during the election because the leader of his party in Newfoundland endorsed that whole program and put it forward as the program of his party as well. I think we can say that that program was unanimously approved.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paul): I think this is not the place to discuss provincial matters. I realize that the hon. member asked the question but his question was out of order and so was the answer. For this reason, I ask the hon. member to come back to the subject of debate.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. The hon. member has made a completely false and inaccurate statement.

Mr. Robichaud: Where is your privilege?

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. member has said that I have made a false statement. Anybody can examine the records. Mr. Greene made a speech about the fisheries development program during the election campaign which was almost precisely the same as the speech made by the premier of Newfoundland. I approve of both of them. They both involve a program which is partly federal in character.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paul): I know quite well I am not in good voice, and apparently the hon. member did not understand the remarks I made a few minutes ago relating to provincial matters.

Mr. Pickersgill: All I am saying is that this problem of the fisheries should be studied and it should be given a high priority because we are in very grave danger of losing this industry altogether as a result of the tremendous invasion of fishing vessels from across the Atlantic. There is nothing more important or more urgent at the present time than the modernization of the fishing industry so that Canadians can make their living from it. We should be very thankful that the provincial governments are willing to co-operate with the federal government in something which is primarily a federal matter.

Mr. Crouse: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Pickersgill: I think perhaps I should not permit any more questions. I have taken more time than I intended, largely because of these interruptions. I do not believe it is quite fair to other hon. members to do that, much as I would like to do so. I do hope that when the government of Newfoundland, or the government of any other province, comes here to Ottawa to discuss this problem, this board will have been set up and will undertake to study the modernization of the fishing industry at once.

Then, the problem of coal is certainly, I believe, a most urgent problem. I do not intend to go into the details of this matter. I do not intend to refer to the alleged quotation given by the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Coates) last night or to enter into any controversy with him. He said the Liberals said the coal would be left in the ground. This government has actually left it in the ground because the production of coal has diminished every year since 1957, and diminished drastically. I hope that we can arrest that diminution. I hope we can start production on the upgrade again. I have never concealed the fact that I would like to see far more power produced from this coal. I would like to see that power made available at very low cost, or even at no cost, for new secondary industries especially in the Cape Breton and Pictou county areas. It seems to me it would be a quite reasonable thing to do to try to get a more equitable distribution of industry, particularly in an area where we have the trained working force instead of trying, as the Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr) would do under his bill, to move the labour force somewhere else.

The next problem is that of transportation, the age-old problem of the Atlantic area. Here, sir, I commend to hon. gentlemen opposite and I commend to the board a program which we have been putting forward consistently since 1958. In order to overcome the special disabilities in transport of the Atlantic area, the federal government should pay 90 per cent of the cost of completing the trans-Canada highway in the Atlantic provinces and should also provide financial assistance for completing trunk highways in all four provinces to assist the movement of heavy traffic to and from central Canada and the United States.

Mr. McGrath: What was your policy prior to 1958 on this matter?

Mr. Pickersgill: Of course, we started the trans-Canada highway. We paid 50 per cent of the cost of most of it when it began. Later, we agreed to pay 90 per cent of the cost of 10 per cent of it, and when that did not accomplish the completion of the project we reached the conclusion that more help should be given. This is what I am suggesting now. I am suggesting it because it seems to me that this is precisely the kind of capital project that should have been in the program envisaged by the Conservative candidate at Moncton in 1957, and which we have not seen since that date.

We know the tourist industry in the Atlantic provinces is capable of vast expansion. It would expand a lot more rapidly if better roads were built. We could go on and talk, as the minister did, about mineral wealth, about waterpower, especially about the tremendous power development on the Hamilton river. This power is already being used in Labrador. We hope it can, with new technological developments in transmission, be transported cheaply all over the Atlantic area. When I refer to the "Atlantic area", I do not mean just the four Atlantic provinces but I include that part of Quebec from Riviere du Loup east, which is properly part of the Atlantic area and which is just as much in need of this kind of development as other parts of the Atlantic region.

Then, we know—the minister would know more about this than I do—that there has developed in recent years a good market in Europe for pulpwood. We know that, with certain harbour improvements and certain other capital works the federal government could undertake, we could harvest the wood that is otherwise going to be lost. Everyone, of course, would rather have the wood processed here if we could do that. But is there anyone who would not rather have it exported, as we export our wheat, so that it can be used instead of waiting for it to fall down and become a fire hazard and a spreader of disease, as it has been in the past? We did not have the market before but we have it now. I know the minister has this matter very much at heart himself and I feel sure this is one thing which he will push very strongly.

I would also like to join with the hon. member for Gloucester in his plea that we ask this board to make a special study of the whole British Caribbean area and its economic relationship with the Atlantic region. I believe there are tremendous opportunities there for us to seize at the present time. As everyone knows, they are experiencing a crisis in their affairs. They need a helping hand and surely now is the time to give it to them. If we did that I believe it would make a tremendous difference to the Atlantic region of Canada.

I wish to reiterate that my principal regret is that there is not a capital fund and that this will not be a constructive, executive board capable of doing something itself. Apparently it is not going to be that; apparently we must accept what we can get, but I say it is a terrible disappointment. That is the big defect in this measure, but even taking the measure as it is, I wish to make a suggestion to the minister in charge of the bill, to the Minister of Fisheries, who is really interested in this subject, and to the Prime Minister who happens to be in the chamber at the moment. Before we enact this legislation I suggest that the government give very careful consideration to changing the scope of the bill in order to provide that a minister will be chairman of the board.

This is a board that will report to the government. It is not going to report to the public, and I say it would be a lot closer to the government and a lot closer to parliament if we had a minister as chairman of the board. Once in a while we might even be allowed to ask him questions about it. At any rate there would be a more direct sense of responsibility. I would favour that very much and I have a lot of sympathy with the minister in what he described as the maze of departmental activity here in Ottawa. A lot of that is inevitable. I am not blaming anybody but it is very confusing to anyone not familiar with it; and what I would like to see, even if we cannot have any capital fund for this board, is to have a minister as chairman of it. I suggest he be one of the ministers from the Atlantic provinces and, as long as we are going to be afflicted with this government, I cannot think of any better minister than the minister presenting this legislation. I would also suggest that he be chairman of a cabinet committee which would act as a liaison between the board, the government and the provincial governments of the Atlantic provinces so that these matters would not get lost in the maze and so that some minister would have a direct responsibility.

I know there are some people who suggest that we should have a separate department of government for the Atlantic provinces. I do not care for that idea at all and I doubt if the minister does, because it would tend to be off in a corner somewhere. That is not what we want; but we do want a cabinet committee composed of ministers primarily concerned with these matters and closely associated with the board, with the Minister of National Revenue as chairman of that board. I do not think that would require a new message from the crown. I am not suggesting that the minister, as chairman, should get the extra $3,000. That might go to someone else.

I hope the minister will not consider that the adoption of the principle of this bill would prevent its being changed in committee to implement the recommendations I have made. I suggest that the minister talk these matters over with his colleagues. This measure will not be coming up for discussion tomorrow and he might be able in the interim to consider whether these suggestions—which he will concede I am not making in any partisan way, whatever may be said of my other observations—would further the purposes of the bill.

I am not questioning the intentions of the minister, or indeed of anyone else, but I have a very grave fear that even with the best intentions, contact between bodies such as this board, once they are set up, is not closely maintained with ministers. All ministers are busy. I know that. They all have much to do. The ones who are worth while have too much to do, and as the less pressing things press less they get less attention. We do not want this board to be some kind of new waste paper basket for the awkward problems from the Atlantic provinces. We want something dynamic that will be an agency of change. The board itself will not change anything. It is what the board will recommend and the way it can bring its proposals to bear on the government that will bring about change.

In closing I appeal very strongly to the minister to accept the suggestion we have made that the bill be sent to one of the standing committees so that those hon. members who are most particularly interested, and who can sit on a committee, will have an opportunity to go into it thoroughly and do what the minister asked us to do, to do our best within the limits of what the government will agree to. We have to operate within those limits, but we can do our best to make this bill as good a bill as we possibly can.

Mr. McGrath: Before the hon. gentleman concludes may I ask him a question?

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes, certainly.

Mr. McGrath: The hon. gentleman put forward many projects which he would like to see undertaken by this board. Is he not aware that on November 26, speaking of the proposed Atlantic development board, the president of the Atlantic provinces economic council said:

> The initiative for a development program should come primarily from the provincial governments.

Does he agree with that statement by the president of APEC?

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not think the hon. gentleman needs to worry about plenty of initiative coming from the premier of the province he and I represent.

Mr. McGrath: That does not answer the question.

Mr. Malcolm MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, there is an old saying that expectation is 80 per cent of realization. I am afraid today is a very sad day for the Atlantic provinces because we have to change the wording of that old formula and say in this particular case expectation has been 100 per cent of realization because we have tried to be constructive, we have tried to be non-political, we have tried to put forward constructive suggestions, but apparently all to no avail. Mr. Speaker, may I call it five o'clock?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paul): It being five o'clock the house will now proceed to consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely notices of motion for production of papers.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

SUGGESTED ESTABLISHMENT OF FEDERAL DEPARTMENT

Mr. Robert Thompson (Red Deer) moved:

> That, in the opinion of this house, the government should give immediate consideration to the setting up of a department of federal-provincial affairs under the direction of a full-time minister.

He said: In rising to speak on this resolution, I believe we have before us one of the most important items we could consider relating to the general efficiency of government and the observance of the spirit of confederation which originally brought the provinces together to form this great country of Canada.

One of the most disturbing elements on the Canadian scene is the developing or continuing lack of a national spirit—that spirit which brought Canada into confederation. At a time when we should be strengthening the bonds of confederation it would seem that our governments, through policies of indecision and through the insidious usurpation and infringement of provincial rights, are weakening the province's unity. As our way of life becomes more complicated and as the development of the country fosters programs which of necessity transcend provincial boundaries it is absolutely essential that the closer co-operative working relationships which are obviously required between the national government and the various provincial governments be as harmonious and correlated as possible.

An example of this is the Columbia river project. This involves the treaty whose negotiation the Liberal government blocked in 1955—a treaty which was formally signed in 1960, just prior to the retirement of President Eisenhower, and which has yet to be ratified. The negotiator and the spokesman for the government at that time was the present Minister of Public Works (Mr. Fulton) who was then the minister of justice. I believe the hon. gentleman was more successful as minister of justice than he was as a negotiator with the provincial government. Anyway, I could never quite reconcile how a minister of justice could be concerned in dealing with a hydro-electric development project. Perhaps a redeeming feature of this situation is that through his dabbling in provincial affairs the hon. gentleman has given himself some background for his new prospective role. In my opinion, however, the Columbia river project would have been much further advanced had these negotiations been directed by a government minister whose direct responsibility would be to deal with such matters. This same principle applies to many different types of projects. Among them could be included irrigation projects, a nationl power grid, the national highways program, international highways such as the Alaska highway and the proposed Maritime-Montreal turnpike as well as the question of standardized electoral techniques.

I think that in considering this subject we should revert to the principles that brought us to confederation. Basically, these were founded on an agreement between the provinces which resulted in the formation of our country, Canada. The trend today is to attempt to cure economic ills, not by the use of mechanisms of our constitution but by special and often ineffective federal action. I think one of the reasons we fail to achieve close co-operation and harmony in the working of our government at the provincial and federal levels is simply that we are getting away from the spirit of the British North America Act which specifically defines the responsibilities of the two levels of government. It is my opinion that we are less in need of amendments to the British North America Act than we are of a return to the basic principles which are expressed in it. I feel also with respect to the appointments of the many boards, royal commissions and special government agencies which now abound in this country and which are being added to by legislation already before this house, that unless we do have in the federal government a special department concerned with the overlapping of what could be conflicting areas of responsibility, we are not going to reach, through those boards and commissions, the objectives upon which we mutually agree.

We have been speaking in this house this afternoon about an Atlantic development board. This is to be a national board and obviously it will have very close relationships with the Atlantic provinces economic council. It will also overlap considerably with the area of responsibility of the national economic development board and of the national productivity council. To avoid confusion and to increase efficiency, a department of government specifically set up with the responsibility of dealing with such questions involving both the dominion and provincial governments would certainly appear to be most desirable.

There are any number of instances which could be quoted of occasions upon which the federal government has been at cross purposes with the provincial governments. We can recall what happened in connection with the Newfoundland loggers strike, the relations between the federal government and the province of Quebec over university grants and even in connection with co-operative programs of hospital finance and the fair allocation of federal government appointments to Quebec citizens. There is also the question of equalizing taxation on private utilities with that imposed on public utilities, a problem which so often relates to provincial governments but one whose correction rests entirely within the hands of the dominion government. I am reminded that just a few weeks ago this matter was discussed here in the house. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Nowlan) said he could not consider action at that time because he would not want to be interfering with a provincial election. Yet this question of the taxation of utilities which are continuing to operate through private enterprise is a real problem, and one which is not being handled in a satisfactory way by the federal government.

All this makes difficulties for provincial governments. I could go on to cite a number of other cases of this kind but it would simply bring us again to our main point, namely that there are many problems today arising between the two levels of government whose solution could be facilitated if only there were a single federal government department charged with specific responsibility for this field of activity.

[Mr. Thompson.]

There are other fields in which liaison between federal and provincial governments is far from perfect. There is, for example, the question of the allocation of tax fields. This is in itself a very important question and there is a great deal to be done before satisfactory arrangements can be completed. Then there is the question of the uniformity of certain types of legislation arising simply because our country, expanding as it has, faces problems which cut across provincial boundaries. With regard to this, I think the federal government has a certain amount of responsibility, at least to provide for the appropriate liaison and to see that the development of the country as a whole as well as in the provincial areas goes ahead as it should.

Another matter which might be mentioned is the question of electoral procedure in this country, which is far from uniform. This is not an appropriate subject for legislation by the federal government but, certainly, uniformity is something which the federal government could facilitate if there were a closer understanding between provincial and federal governments. There is the problem of social welfare standards. There is the problem of agricultural policies which are at variance with each other simply because we have not reached a stage of correlated integration of policies between the provinces.

I think that in all of these matters if there were a department of government, with a minister, a deputy minister and a proper administrative set-up, certainly many of these problems could be minimized and brought to pass much more efficiently. There is the question of policy relating to the development of our natural resources. We recall the "resources for tomorrow" conference, and I think that anybody who took part in that conference will agree that one of the difficulties which faced the conference was the lack of proper preparation, as well as the lack of proper follow-through on some of the decisions reached. Again, a specific department of government would be able to handle these problems much more effectively than they are handled at present. These are matters which we see, and there are other particular needs for co-operation which will be of more importance in the future. We need very urgently in Canada a definite highway development policy. In connection with that, we need certainly many changes in our transportation policy. These involve the provincial governments as well. These changes apply both to rail and to highway transport, and also to air transport. Here again a much closer co-operation and effective working together is very important at this time.

The trend in Canada today—we have seen this in the house during these past few days—is towards federally-appointed boards. Rather than to impose the will of the federal government upon the provinces, as is done very often through these boards, it would be much better and would pay much greater respect to our constitution to bring about a closer spirit of harmony in establishing the necessary machinery to make effective the recommendations of these boards. Our proposal in bringing forward this resolution at this time is that there should be a department of federal-provincial affairs under a full-time minister. His responsibility would be one of co-ordination, of regional orientation, so that we would not have the undignified spectacle we frequently see in Canada of two levels of government, and sometimes three, engaging in mutually contradictory policies, without the fruitful result which we expect through the action taken, while at the same time costing large amounts of taxpayers' money.

There are many examples I could cite to support this argument. In the United States the government, which is a federal government in many respects similar to our own, has its secretary of the interior. Coming to our provincial governments, several of them have already realized the need for this very thing, and both in Manitoba and Ontario—there may be others—there are portfolios of provincial-federal affairs. This leads up to the fact that this need is recognized at the provincial level, and they are looking toward something which will tie the ends together at the federal level.

It is worthy of note that we should look at the friction which often occurs between provincial and federal governments, bearing in mind that many of these problems can be ironed out without the name calling and the buck passing which is associated all too frequently with federal-provincial affairs at this time. I think in this regard of a number of statements which the present Minister of Public Works (Mr. Fulton) has made with regard to the development of the British Columbia power issue. Again, I wonder what is the responsibility of a former minister of justice in getting himself involved in this very matter anyway. It lowers his own status, which he should be maintaining as minister of justice, and it involves him in matters which are actually none of his business. In the United States, who is the man responsible for heading up these negotiations? He is the secretary of the interior, and rightfully so because that is his responsibility.

But again, behind all of this I would say that there is the basic issue of democratic government itself in Canada. More and more power assigned to boards means less and less power to elected representatives, who frequently have responsibilities under the constitution trenching in on the same field. One of the dangers which threatens democratic government in Canada today at any level is where the responsibilities of elected representatives, through the processes of democracy, are assigned to appointed boards and committees. This is not in accordance with my understanding of the basic principles of democracy. It develops the situation, which is becoming all too common in our midst, of bureaucracy at government level, and I think that the second phase of the Glassco commission reports brings this very clearly to our attention. Bureaucracy is the very negation of democracy. It frequently adopts lines of policy which even this house cannot completely keep under control from day to day. An example of this in recent days has been the dispute between the board of broadcast governors and the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. My proposal here tonight is a means of giving the provinces a chance to be heard on major policy decisions of the federal government, and even to get action on many matters which are neglected, of which resources and transport policy are two of the most conspicuous. We believe that government closest to the people is the best government, and this proposal is worth 10,000 boards in getting effective government action in accordance with the real wishes of the Canadian people on a hundred matters on which they are dissatisfied at the present time.

In a matter of five years we will be celebrating the centennial of our country. The preparations for this centennial are something which concerns everybody in Canada, as well as government at every level. The experiment which is Canada—the bringing together of people whose background represents two great nations, and adding on top of them many new Canadians of different ethnic backgrounds—is an experiment which, if it should fail, would rock the very foundations of our hopes for peace. If we cannot succeed and cannot bring this aim to a great climax at our one hundredth anniversary, then what hope is there in this world for peace? I am convinced that the experiment which is Canada can be a living proof of what can be done to bring peoples together so as to form a spirit of national unity, which in this case will provide the great strength which potentially is ours in Canada, but which will prove that democratic government is the answer to our governmental needs, even in an age such as we are part of. Therefore I commend to the members of this house that they give very careful consideration to the basic purpose and intent behind this resolution, in the hope that we could impress upon the government at this time that one of the most positive actions it could take would be to set up such a department of government for the purpose I have just briefly referred to.

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few brief words of approval and gratification for the proposal which the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson) has put before us. I say gratification because for the last nine years the members of our party have put forward in this house similar measures, and it is very encouraging to us, sir, to find that other parties are now thinking along similar lines.

We endorse the principle the bill establishes. Actually, it would have been surprising that we would not do so as I think the bill is almost non-political. The need for the action proposed is so apparent and the remedy put forward so logical that it would be strange if we found much opposition to the action either in this house or in the country. It is true that in the founding convention of my own party this clause appears in our program:

> Immediately following confederation a federal minister was given special responsibility for relations with the provinces. It is time to revive that post. The New Democratic party aims to create a federal-provincial relations department to maintain and extend co-operation with the provinces and to co-ordinate and act as a special secretariat for joint committees and councils.

It is true that appears in a political program. However, it is likely that similar ideas appear in other political programs. As I say, the matter is hardly political. Particularly in this house where we see every day measures which come before us and with which we are asked to deal, I do not think there could be much opposition to the step proposed by the hon. member for Red Deer. When we deal with matters of finance, industry, agriculture, labour or health, it is apparent that these matters go far beyond the constitutional authority which we have under the present arrangements in Canada. We deal here with the results of economics and those economics have no provincial boundaries. The economics of the farm, the factory or the home are at once interprovincial and federal. We cannot separate them and we cannot deal with them properly on a separate basis as we have been trying to do for so long.

It is true that we have in Canada three levels of government, namely federal, provincial and municipal. But actually we have one people. When I say we have three levels of government I should like to suggest to hon. members to consider what seems to me to be almost a fourth level of government which is coming about and I think being made apparent through the very needs of the constitutional situation. That fourth level of government is the interprovincial one. We now have every year meetings between the leaders of the provincial governments where they come together and discuss joint problems. The reason they do this is that there is no appropriate machinery at the provincial-federal level such as that which is proposed by the hon. member for Red Deer, and which would offer a basis for handling such consultations.

When my grandfather came to this continent, Mr. Speaker, in 1887 it took him two weeks to go across the continent. Today I think I can do it in four hours. In his day it would have taken two weeks for a picture to be taken and transported across the country. Today the same thing can be accomplished in a matter of minutes or seconds. Those two points may illustrate the great changes, economic and social, which have taken place in the country, and which we should also take steps to meet on a constitutional and administrative basis.

I think the proposal to create a federal-provincial ministry with a specific minister to deal with the class of matters in which the federal-provincial relationship is involved is necessary at this time. I hope the matter may be brought to a vote. In order that others may speak, I will not further take up the time of the house, except to urge that the matter be supported.

Mr. L. E. Kindt (Macleod): Mr. Speaker, the resolution before the house, has as its purpose the setting up of a department of federal-provincial affairs under the direction of a full time minister. Many provincial governments have made an approach, through the press and through direct representation to the federal government, to have representation and more say on certain matters emanating from the federal picture which affects them within the provinces. As to whether the setting up of a new department to handle this matter, even though it has only as its limitations the question of co-ordination, is one of the matters which I believe would need to be approached in a very careful manner.

I do not believe that the mover of this resolution had in mind the setting up of a department that would be a fifth wheel. However, in all probability it might grow into just that very thing. In other words, the only person or persons in the federal government who know anything about, for example, health problems are the people who deal with those problems in the health department. If someone else is co-ordinating these matters pertaining to health, they in turn would need to work through the health department if any intelligence were to be put into the negotiations between federal and provincial people. One could go on down the line and draw a parallel with a vast number of programs which are carried out between the provincial governments and the federal government. In setting up a department in order to bring federal and provincial governments closer together, you might be destroying the present relationship which exists between the department in the federal government taking care of those problems and the department in the provincial government where the similar problems from a provincial point of view are being taken care of. In other words, those two departments have a working relationship. They understand one another. They are in constant communication. Where there are matters that are to be handled by the two governments, it is the people who are concerned in these respective departments that get together and discuss those matters. If you were to set up a minister whose job it would be to look after federal-provincial relationships, unless his duties were thoroughly defined and unless he kept within those limitations there would be, before long, instances in which he would be in the hair of the existing departments handling those matters.

Let us go on to a second question. I wish to speak for a few minutes about the magnitude of the problem as between say the federal and the provincial levels. I should like to spend just a few moments in examining that magnitude as between the federal government and for example the province of Alberta. The federal government contributed to the province of Alberta 44.4 per cent of the money which it spent during the fiscal year 1959-60. Those are the last available figures from the financial statistics of the provincial governments issued by the dominion bureau of statistics.

To go back a step, I should like to point out that the gross revenue of the province of Alberta in 1959-60 was $332,755,000 which included conditional and unconditional grants from the federal government totalling $147,970,000. Unconditional grants amounted to $59,009,000 and conditional grants amounted to $88,961,000. The figure of $147,970,000, which is the sum of the amounts for conditional and unconditional grants, represented 44.4 per cent of the money spent by the government of Alberta during that particular year, and that money came from the federal treasury. To put it another way, well over $1 out of $3 came from the federal government.

It might be well to put figures on the record to show that there has been a tremendous increase in these grants over the past few years. The contribution of the federal treasury in 1956-57 was $89,685,000 while in 1959-60 it was $147,970,000. In other words, there has been an increase from 1956-57 to 1959-60 of $58,285,000 in the revenue which the province of Alberta has received from the federal government, and that took place since this government came into office.

We are often damned and criticized for deficit financing, but this deficit has come about as a result of the generous conditional and unconditional grants made to the province of Alberta and other provinces. But the figures I have given might well be analysed by all those who have a desire to criticize this government for its generous contributions to support programs administered by the provincial governments.

Mr. Caouette: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I think the speaker is completely out of order at this time. We are not trying to put a specific province on trial at this time, either the province of Alberta or the province of Quebec or the province of Ontario. I feel that the hon. member should keep in line with the motion which has to do with the setting up of a federal-provincial affairs ministry by this house. He has given us figures concerning Alberta and has said that Alberta was supplied with this money by the federal government, and so on. I do not think he is in order.

Mr. Speaker: Order. While the hon. member may have made certain references that had a slight political overtone I had the impression, and I think I am correct, that he was indicating the trend toward increase in the period of four years in respect of the moneys contributed by the federal government to his own province as an example in order to show the greater relationship between the federal government and the provinces. If I am correct in that, I think that is a point in favour of the resolution and I do not know that it is wildly out of order. As long as it is limited to that and we do not get into a sort of political record speech, I think the hon. member may continue his remarks.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, I feel that it is just a political discussion at this time.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Kindt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I thank the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) for having raised his point, although let me say to him that in checking me with regard to whether or not I am on the beam he had better keep on the beam when he is talking. Furthermore, I was right on the beam because I am talking about the money that this government has given to the province for provincial programs.

Mr. Caouette: On another point of order, in my view the money that the federal government has been spending—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Caouette: —is money coming from the provinces of Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member has his right to speak. There will be a rotation of speakers. He has full right to speak and to argue the points that are being put forward by the hon. member. I think the motion is a fairly narrow one and we should limit ourselves to dominion-provincial relations and the necessity of a ministry, but examples may be given as to any increase there has been in dominion-provincial relations.

Mr. Kindt: Mr. Speaker, when I am talking about the programs of this government and the money spent I am talking about federal-provincial relations, and that is what this resolution deals with. Therefore I cannot understand why the hon. member for Villeneuve would have the nerve to get up and interrupt me in the midst of my speech. May I say to him that the thing for him to do is to go out and pay his rent.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Kindt: I have a few points—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think the hon. member for Macleod will recognize that his remarks are quite out of order and quite uncalled for.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker,—

Mr. Speaker: I have dealt with the point. We will now come back to the motion and we will keep personal remarks off the record.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, on the point of order, I ask Your Honour to ask the hon. member to withdraw the words he used, that I have not been paying my rent.

Mr. Speaker: Order. This is not a place to backchat and we will observe the rules of the house. I have declared the remarks of the hon. member to be quite improper and we will leave it at that.

Mr. Kindt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Let me close with a few statements concerning the cost of setting up a new department of government. If such a department can contribute to good relations between the federal and provincial government and if it can accomplish something in addition to what is already being accomplished then perhaps you can build a case for it. On the other hand, if it is to be a fifth wheel and accomplish nothing, but get in the way of existing agencies of government, then I think probably you could build just as good a case against it.

Now, nothing has been done by the provincial governments about establishing a department of federal-provincial affairs, at least not in the province of Alberta. In so far as the federal government is concerned, if any particular problem arises it is always handled by the department concerned and, through the minister, by the cabinet. The same procedure is followed at the provincial level. With all due respect to the mover of this motion, all I can say is that he must have had something in the back of his mind that he wanted to get across to the people, in addition to what he said in respect of the resolution.

Mr. Thompson: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member rising on a point of order or a question of privilege?

Mr. Thompson: I am rising on a point of order. I do not believe the hon. member has the right to impute motives. Certainly, if he cannot stay on the topic before us he had better sit down.

Mr. Speaker: Order; I failed to recognize in any of the remarks the imputation of an improper motive. I do not know that anything in the back of one's mind is necessarily improper.

Mr. Kindt: I must say that the leader of the Social Credit party is very touchy. He must have had something in his mind that was detrimental, although I did not impute it to him. May I say that the establishment of a department such as is proposed in this resolution may have something to recommend it, but it needs to be given very close scrutiny.

(Translation):

Mr. Alexis Caron (Hull): Mr. Speaker, I shall strive to bring the debate back to the level where it was during the speech of the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson), that is a higher level than during the remarks of the hon. member who has just resumed his seat.

Since confederation, there have been great autonomists, particularly in the province of Quebec. To name only a few, there were Messrs. Honore Mercier, L. A. Taschereau and Duplessis and the present premier, the Hon. Jean Lesage. One can see therefore that only a few years after confederation, there was already some friction between the central government and the provinces. Without those difficulties, we would not have had the great men who fought against the federal government at that time. It would seem then that provincial rights have been threatened since confederation. On the other hand, confederation would not have been possible if the provinces had not received assurances that their rights would be respected. I remember that, barely two years ago, my chief, the leader of the Liberal party (Mr. Pearson), suggested that a department be set up to deal exclusively with federal-provincial affairs.

I recognize that, in some areas, that suggestion was very badly received, whereas it was much better received in others. Some claimed for example that when it came to interpreting the constitution, the Minister of Justice was the one to do so, and that the appointment of another minister would result in duplication of responsibilities. Others said: When we come to Ottawa to secure grants, we go to the Minister of Finance and not to a minister of federal-provincial affairs.

I am convinced that if we had a department of federal-provincial affairs, it could continually discuss the situation with the provincial ministers. Besides, Ontario and Manitoba already have such a ministry; the premier of the province of Quebec said that he was thinking of setting up such a department. In fact, the heads of those departments would report to their respective governments on the discussions they would have together.

Besides, some steps have already been taken to unify opinions in the various provinces. At the call of Premier Jean Lesage, all provincial premiers met three years ago in Quebec to consider their problems in regard to the federal government. Another meeting was held in Charlottetown last year and this year it was in Victoria. This shows that there are continuing problems, problems which have been getting worse particularly since 1931, when the Westminster statute was signed. We have seen the development of these problems since the war because of Canada's expansion and the responsibilities it had accepted toward the outside world. The federal government needed increased revenues, and so did the provinces because of their continued development. But now, both levels of government have seen that it is impossible for each level to tax individually because the population cannot accept further increased taxation. There had to be an agreement between the various provinces and the federal government in order to know definitely in what field one level of government could levy taxes and in what field the other level could do so.

I admit it is impossible to come to a solution overnight, because there are great difficulties standing in the way.

We know that the Liberal party has developed an equalization plan in order to allow the federal government to give more to the underdeveloped provinces, to those who are in greater need of assistance. In Quebec, Ontario, Alberta and British Columbia, which are immensely rich provinces, that problem does not exist, because their revenue is adequate and they do not seem to have any concern about the poorer provinces.

I think it was the desire of all federal governments to help more particularly those provinces who needed greater assistance. But, in some quarters, there was reluctance to welcome such an arrangement. Consequently, in order to correct the situation, we should set up an agency which would constantly study each problem in the light of its inherent difficulties, which would allow the government to be able to make wise decisions.

Let us take, for instance, the problem of highway transportation. The MacPherson commission suggested that the railways should not enter that field. Highway transportation originated because of a lack of foresight on the part of railway companies; it developed these come under provincial jurisdiction.

The MacPherson commission actually said to the railways: Go ahead and keep away from that. Those are problems that could be discussed between the provincial and federal governments, so that both parties may benefit from it.

There is the matter of the Columbia river that seemed to be settled a long time ago, but which is cropping up again today.

Relations are strained between the federal government and the British Columbia government, regardless of the party in power.

All those matters could be settled if we had a body which would look into those problems regularly and report its findings to the government. The cabinet might be able then to find a way of correcting the situation once and for all, after hearing both parties.

Besides, the government will soon propose the repatriation of the constitution. How are we going to repatriate the constitution if we have had no time to study it and put it in order?

The constitution is far from being perfect. It has to be repatriated, we admit it. But before this is done, it would be necessary that organizations co-operate in considering changes to be made to ensure protection for the minorities, the welfare of the poorest provinces in Canada as well as the settling of problems that will inevitably arise. Now, this cannot be accomplished if federal and provincial governments do not have representatives who work together to study this problem before our constitution can be repatriated. I think that the resolution is very simple that there is no reason for us not to pass it; there even is no reason for us to criticize it because all that the member for Red Deer is asking is that we study this matter immediately.

The government is asked to study this project. That is nothing unusual because it has been said that this government is the most studious we have had since confederation. It has been operating by boards since it took over. Therefore they could keep on studying as they have done and try to find some ground for understanding between the provinces in all federal-provincial matters.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that we should at once accept this resolution, but we should not ascribe its mover with any intentions he has never had.

Mr. Maurice Cote (Chicoutimi): Mr. Speaker, the motion presented by the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson), which proposes the setting up of a department of federal-provincial affairs, under the direction of a full-time minister, is of the utmost importance for the good administration of our country, because it aims at eliminating all the problems that arise from the fact that the federal government trespasses on provincial laws and privileges and at restoring justice within the limits set by the Confederation Act of 1867.

The centralization implemented in such a hateful way by the central government at the time of the Liberal administration was a source of continuous friction between the provincial states and the federal state, especially with regard to taxation.

Under the Conservative administration, the situation has remained almost unchanged.

On the other hand, since it was always quite difficult to settle the overlapping responsibilities between the federal and the provincial levels because of the lack of coordination, this project of establishing a department of federal-provincial affairs would provide a way to find the required solutions in the best interest of the federal and provincial governments.

As a Quebec representative in this house, I know how often our province and its people were unfairly treated by Liberal administrations during 22 years and afterwards by Conservative administrations because they said that Quebec was a province like the other provinces. Quebec is not a province like the other provinces. It is different from the others in many ways and particularly in its character, its French speaking population, its education system, its religious institutions, its social organization, the philosophy and habits of its people, etc., all of which is the heritage of 355 years of French Canadian history.

It is abnormal, for instance, for the federal government to impinge upon the rights of the provinces, and that is why the equalization system which was advocated by the Liberal party is not the answer to the fiscal problem of the provinces. If the provinces have the rights to which they are entitled, there is no need for them to have an equalization system.

The hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Kindt) said a few moments ago that if that department were established, it would in effect destroy any good relationship between the federal and provincial health departments. That is not the purpose of this proposal.

He also said that the federal government gave back to the province of Alberta 44 per cent of the levies. I would point out to the hon. member that that money had been first levied by the federal government whereas it belonged to the province.

Far from wanting to promote federal interference in provincial affairs, this motion has been introduced for the purpose of settling the matter.

(Text):

Mr. F. F. Stenson (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson) on his motion and his presentation of it. The hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Kindt) has put forward very convincing reasons why we should not have such a ministry set up, but I as a new member still feel a ministry of federal-provincial affairs could be co-ordinated within the cabinet.

Since the Conservative government came into power in 1957 we have seen increased federal grants made to provinces and municipalities. Let us take a look at a few of the things the government has done for provinces and municipalities. With the assistance of the Minister of Labour money has been granted to every province for the building of technical and vocational schools. The government has also taken a great interest in universities, and in this field is working with the provinces.

In almost every capital project undertaken by provinces, the federal government has been asked to contribute financially. National and provincial parks are tied together, and the trans-Canada highway involves the provinces and the federal government. Recently the government made large grants available to hospitals, matching grants from the provinces, and had it not been for these grants there would be a grave shortage of hospital beds.

Any hon. member who has sat on a municipal council recognizes that in the future municipalities must receive more aid from provincial governments and the federal government if they are to give the people the services they require. In my constituency of Peterborough—

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Chevrier: I take it that tomorrow we will go on with the business which was announced by the house leader on Tuesday evening and, I understand, again last night. Perhaps the house leader would indicate what else we will do on Thursday and Friday.

Mr. Churchill: I think for the orderly progression of business we should complete tomorrow debate on the Atlantic development board, which is very close to completion, and then carry on with the national economic development board. I doubt very much if there would be time for anything else. If there should be a last 15 minutes or so we would take items standing in the name of the Minister of Justice.

Mr. Chevrier: I am not objecting to this but I am simply asking for information. Was there not some statement last night that we would go on, as the first item of business tomorrow, with the national development board?

Mr. Churchill: No. On two occasions I said that on Thursday we would call the national economic development board but I did not say it would be the first item on Thursday. I am sure the house, which has not objected to the Atlantic development board, would like to complete that bill, which perhaps can be done in an hour or an hour and a half, and then we would go on with the economic development board.

Mr. Douglas: Will the national productivity council amendments come up?

Mr. Churchill: No.

Mr. Chevrier: I was not here last evening but I took it from my friend from Bonavista-Twillingate that what I said earlier was accurate. I find from what appears at page 2328 of Hansard that this is the case. This is what was said:

> Mr. Pickersgill: Would the minister also indicate whether it is still the intention of the government on Thursday, regardless of what progress is made, to go on with the national economic development council legislation?
> Mr. Churchill: That is right.

Mr. Churchill: There is no indication there that it would be the first item called, but it certainly will be on the program for tomorrow and my hope is that we shall get to it by four o'clock or 4.30.

It being three minutes after six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

CHRISTMAS ADJOURNMENT DECEMBER 20 TO JANUARY 21

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the question has been asked by members in all parts of the house what the idea of the government was with regard to the date of adjournment for the Christmas recess and the date of reassembly in the new year. It will be recalled that only on a small number of occasions has the house sat in the fall and divided the session into two parts. In 1957, as I recall it, the house adjourned on December 21 and reassembled on January 3rd. The same date of adjournment was followed in 1960-61. Following consultation with the leaders of the several parties I wish to announce that on the basis of the progress being made in the program as it appears on the order paper, with only one or two additional matters that may be added, the adjournment will take place on December 20 and the house will reassemble on Monday, January 21, 1963.

GRAIN

DURUM WHEAT—INTERIM PAYMENT ON 1961-62 POOL ACCOUNT

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Acting Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Agriculture I wish to inform the house of an interim payment to be made on Durum wheat in connection with the 1961-62 wheat pool account.

The Canadian Wheat Board Act does not make provision for separate final payments for Durum wheat and spring wheat. However, the act does provide for interim payments to be made when these can be made without loss. Since the Canadian wheat board has advised that all the Durum wheat delivered to the 1961-62 wheat pool account has been sold, the government has approved an interim payment on the 1961-62 pool account that will apply only to the Durum grades. There will, of course, not be any further payment with respect to the 1961-62 Durum wheat deliveries.

Producers delivered a total of 10,531,113.4 bushels to the Durum account. After deducting the Prairie Farm Assistance Act levy and interim payment costs on the 1961-62 Durum account, and after adding estimated additional interest earnings, the interim payment will be $6,941,397.96, or an average of 65.9 cents per bushel. The payments for the principal grades are as follows:

Grade	cents per bushel
No. 1 Canada western amber Durum	63.113
No. 2 Canada western amber Durum	66.083
No. 3 Canada western amber Durum	67.320
Extra No. 4 Canada western amber Durum	70.290
No. 4 Canada western amber Durum	68.434
No. 5 Canada western amber Durum	31.755
No. 6 Canada western amber Durum	36.705

I am not in a position to indicate when it will be possible for the board to close the 1961-62 wheat pool account and make the final payment on the other grades of wheat delivered to this pool.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS ACT

AMENDMENT TO REDUCE SALARY OF PRESIDENT

Mr. Real Caouette (Villeneuve) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-97, to amend the Canadian National Railways Act (salary of President).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the bill is simply to have the economic and financial situation of this country recognized. The explanation is quite clear. The measure provides for a substantial reduction in the expenditures of the Canadian National Railways, by setting the salary of the president at a level more in keeping with the financial conditions we find in this country and especially in the Canadian National Railways. Never, in any organization, would one tolerate—

Proposed Legislation

Mr. Speaker: Order. I feel that that remark is not in order. An hon. member may explain a bill to the house, but he cannot indicate the motive behind it.

Mr. Caouette: Without attributing any motives to anybody, here is what the bill amounts to; it is meant to set the president's salary at one dollar, because I think he is not worth more than that at the present time.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member will no doubt recognize that the last part of his sentence, concerning the explanation of this bill, is not in keeping with our standing orders.

Mr. Gregoire: But it is in keeping with the facts.

Motion agreed to.

PUBLIC SERVICE

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH OFFICE OF PARLIAMENTARY COMMISSIONER

Mr. Arthur Smith (Calgary South) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-98, to establish the office of parliamentary commissioner.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Smith (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, the bill provides authority for the appointment of a parliamentary commissioner whose duty it shall be to investigate any grievance protesting administrative decisions of government departments and/or crown companies which may be registered by a petitioner. The commissioner, however, shall not investigate any decision with respect to which there is a right of appeal to a court or tribunal, and at his discretion may refuse to investigate those grievances which are either trivial or which he considers have not been placed before him in good faith.

The bill also provides that if no action is taken by the administrative head of a department following the recommendations of the commissioner, the commissioner may then at his discretion send a copy of his report and recommendation to the Prime Minister and may thereafter make such reports to parliament as he sees fit, designed to curb any possible abuse of administrative power. This legislation is similar to legislation enacted in several other countries.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

[Mr. Caouette.]

CIVIL SERVICE ACT

AMENDMENT TO ESTABLISH REMEMBRANCE DAY AS PUBLIC SERVICE HOLIDAY

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-99, to amend the Civil Service Act (Remembrance day).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Speaker, this bill is in line with proposals made by the Royal Canadian Legion, other veterans organizations and a number of other organizations including labour organizations. The purpose of this bill is to restore, in so far as the parliament of Canada is legislatively able, Remembrance day to the position intended within the spirit and meaning of the Remembrance Day Act, revised statutes, chapter 237. This act provides as follows:

> Throughout Canada in each and every year, the 11th day of November, being the day in the year 1918 on which the great war was triumphantly concluded by an armistice, shall be a holiday, and shall be kept and observed as such under the name of Remembrance day.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

LABOUR RELATIONS

NORRIS COMMISSION—RIGHT OF WITNESS TO TESTIFY IN EITHER OFFICIAL LANGUAGE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): I desire to ask a question of the Prime Minister. Having regard to a statement made by Mr. Commissioner Norris during the inquiry into shipping on the great lakes and the St. Lawrence river system, as appears at page 8937 of the evidence, volume 59, December 4, 1962—I shall have to read this short sentence in order to bring it to the Prime Minister's attention—

> It is not a question of his right at all on this matter. He has the right to have matters translated to him if he wishes in French, that is his right, but I point out to you that if you insist on that I will consider that you are not assisting the work of this commission and I will govern myself accordingly. I think you should be reasonable and the witness should be reasonable. You all admitted he is thoroughly bilingual and Mr. Lalonde knows he is thoroughly bilingual. If he insists on his strict right, I will give it to him, and if you insist I will give it to him, but I will still remember and I remember today the obstruction which you are causing.

My question to the Prime Minister is this. Does the Prime Minister intend to draw to the attention of the commissioner the right of all Canadians to testify in either of the official languages, without conditions?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member will recognize that yesterday I adjudicated on a similar type of question in regard to precisely the same subject and declared that since this was a matter of a judicial body, a judicial inquiry made outside the house, it was not within the competence of any hon. member to ask any minister to comment on the views or statements of either a judicial officer conducting such a judicial inquiry or of any witness, and I so rule in this case.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, if you so rule then I would respectfully rise on a point of order and draw to your attention that the question I posed to the Prime Minister is not one which has anything to do with the internal aspects of this investigation which is before an honourable judge, but that it has to do with the British North America Act by which this parliament is governed, and section 133 of the British North America Act clearly states that it is a right of a witness to choose or select either of the official languages of this country, without any conditions.

That is a right every witness has in court or in any proceeding, and it seems to me I am not attempting in any way whatsoever to discuss what is going on before another commission or before another court of record, because the subject matter is not my concern. It is the procedure, which I say to you respectfully is a challenge to section 133 of the British North America Act, and it is one which I think cannot go unnoticed. I think, sir, you should allow me to put the question to the Prime Minister, and I am sure the Prime Minister would want at once to bring the point which I have tried to make to the attention of the commissioner.

Mr. Speaker: Notwithstanding the reasoning advanced by the hon. member I think he will recognize that if I allowed his question it would be open to any hon. member to rise in his place in respect to any court proceedings where any judge had indicated any views on the manner of giving testimony, whether those views dealt with language or otherwise. I am still of the opinion that this is not a question that can be asked on orders of the day, in addition to which such a matter dealing with a judicial inquiry or court proceeding also invites entry into controversy.

TRADE

WORLD FAIR—REPORTED REDUCTION IN FEDERAL CONTRIBUTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Georges Valade (St. Mary): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Associate Minister of National Defence, about which I gave him notice.

Mr. Speaker, I would pray for your indulgence and understanding to point out the presence, in the visitors' gallery, of more than 80 delegates of the junior chamber of commerce of the district of Montreal, as well as that of His Worship the Mayor of Montreal, and to wish them the most cordial welcome here.

My question is in regard to—

Mr. Speaker: I regret very much to interrupt the hon. member, and I have no doubt he wished to direct a question to the minister, but I feel that in spite of the fact that we have here today the visit of a certain delegation and of distinguished personalities, it is absolutely out of order to draw the attention of the house to the presence of anyone in the galleries, because the tradition of the House of Commons is that no one in the galleries should be mentioned.

The hon. member will perhaps object that, occasionally, the Speaker does point out the presence of distinguished visitors in the galleries, but he will also recognize that the Speaker does apologize for doing so, or does ask the permission of the house.

At all events, under the circumstances, notwithstanding the importance of the visitors who are now in the galleries, I feel we cannot adopt as a principle or as a policy to authorize a member to call the attention of the house to the presence of certain visitors.

Mr. Valade: I apologize, Mr. Speaker. I should have asked for your permission beforehand.

Could the Associate Minister of National Defence inform the house if the federal government intends to limit its contribution to the 1967 world fair, as was stated in a morning paper of the Canadian metropolis?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think the hon. member will recognize that if he had limited his question to the first part, without indicating that the matter had been raised in a daily newspaper, it would have been authorized. He is now asking the minister to comment on an article published in a daily newspaper, which is not in keeping with the rules. The hon. member will perhaps care to put his question in another form. In the meanwhile, I recognize the hon. member for Bellechasse.

[Later:]

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, after rephrasing my question, I should like to put it again to the Associate Minister of National Defence.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Could the minister tell us whether the government intends to restrict its contribution to the 1967 world fair?

Hon. Pierre Sevigny (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the hon. member for St. Mary, I must tell him that the government intends to make the same contribution to the 1967 world fair as has been clearly stated before.

Mr. Speaker, while I am on my feet, I should like, on a question of privilege, to object to certain items published in some newspapers and based on mere gossip and unfounded information tending to misinterpret the real facts, with regard to the world fair.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The answer to the question of the hon. member is in order, but I feel that the reason given by the minister to rise on a question of privilege is ill-founded, because there is no indication that the items in question refer to him personally. The minister disproves certain reports concerning the government's stand, and this is no question of privilege.

[Later:]

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question to ask following that of the hon. member for St. Mary.

In view of the fact that the Associate Minister of National Defence has stated in the house that a bill would be introduced in the first weeks of December for the establishment of a corporation which would look after the preparations for the world fair, and in view of the fact that the order paper which has been distributed makes no mention of such legislation, could the minister tell us whether he still intends to introduce a bill at that time, in spite of the order paper?

Hon. Pierre Sevigny (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the question of my good friend the hon. member for Laurier, I should like to say that the lawyers of the three governments concerned, that is the federal and provincial governments and the municipal administration, are presently working on the clauses of the bill. We hope that agreement will be reached as early as tomorrow; in that case, the bill my hon. friend is referring to would be introduced in the house before the adjournment announced by the Prime Minister.

I know that the hon. member for Laurier and, indeed, all members of the house are anxious for the launching of that fine project, the world fair.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The reply that the Associate Minister of National Defence has just given is sufficient.

POSSIBILITY OF EXPORTING CANADIAN IRON ORE TO EUROPE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hubert Badanai (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. My question is based on reliable reports that European steel makers are coming to rely increasingly upon African iron ore. Can the minister indicate to the house whether the government is doing anything to encourage Canadian iron ore producers to establish a Canadian owned steel industry in the British isles or in any other European country?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the hon. member for giving notice of his intention to ask this question. During May of this year a Canadian iron ore trade mission visited Europe to assess the competitive position of Canadian iron ore in the European market. On its return to Canada the mission reported that increasingly severe competition was being experienced from newly developed sources of high grade direct shipping ores in Africa. This competition affected factors of both grade and price. Consequently there is no indication that the establishment of a Canadian owned steel industry in Britain or in any other European country would provide an effective solution to Canada's long term problem of exporting iron ore to the European market. This possibility, therefore, is not presently under consideration.

OIL—REPORTED U.S. INTENTION TO RESTRICT IMPORTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in view of the reply of the Minister of Trade and Commerce to a question from me yesterday to the effect that his understanding was that no action had yet been taken by the United States administration regarding the importation into that country of oil, including oil from Canada, is the minister not now aware that a proclamation on this subject was in fact issued in Washington on November 30 by the President dealing with this matter in a way which will have an important effect on the Canadian oil industry?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I have been advised by the president of the national energy board, who has followed this matter closely, that such action as yet does not affect Canada, but these are matters which will be discussed here a week from today.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

FAMILY ALLOWANCES—INQUIRY AS TO INCREASE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Bernard Dumont (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Prime Minister. Does the government intend to raise the level of family allowances before the Christmas recess?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think the hon. member will recognize that his question concerns government policy and is not in order. I might suggest to the hon. member to comply with the provisions of Beauchesne's citation 171, which deals with the kind of questions that can be asked at this time.

Mr. Dumont: Mr. Speaker, would that be the French version of Beauchesne's work?

Mr. Speaker: I am sure the hon. member can understand that citation because it was quoted very often in this house and a translation can be found in Hansard.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON TALKS WITH POLISH DEPUTY FOREIGN MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Haidasz (Parkdale): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Prime Minister a question in the absence of the Secretary of State for External Affairs. My question is, in view of the impending NATO ministerial meeting in Paris and the recent talks in Ottawa of the Canadian Secretary of State for External Affairs with the deputy foreign minister of Poland, would the Prime Minister tell the house what is the Canadian government's policy concerning the Rapacki plan for a nuclear-free zone for central Europe, the Polish-German Oder-Neisse western boundary and the talked about—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Haidasz: —non-aggression pact between NATO and Warsaw pact countries?

Mr. Speaker: Order. In this regard I suggest to the hon. member that he look at citation 171, wherein I think he will see that questions may not ask for a detailed, elaborate reply on a number of matters. In effect the hon. member is asking for a rather detailed expose on a number of points of foreign policy, which is not appropriate for orders of the day.

Mr. Haidasz: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: That is my ruling with respect to the hon. member's question.

Mr. Haidasz: On a question of privilege—

Mr. Speaker: Privilege?

Mr. Haidasz: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that we have been denied during this session of parliament a debate on matters of external affairs—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Haidasz: —I think it is quite proper at this time to ask this question of the Prime Minister.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member has made certain allegations about the question of debate on certain subjects. I am still of the opinion that in the way the hon. member framed his question it is not acceptable. He may wish to look at the appropriate citation and consider what he wishes to ask; then he may rephrase his question.

Mr. Haidasz: May I rephrase my question at the present moment, Mr. Speaker. I would like to ask the Prime Minister whether he has any information to give to this house this afternoon following the talks of the Secretary of State for External Affairs with the deputy foreign minister of Poland yesterday?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker.

INDIA—REPRESENTATIONS RESPECTING CANADIAN TRADE WITH CHINA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I had intended to direct my question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. However, in his absence I will direct it to the Prime Minister instead. Has the government received any communication from the government of India expressing concern over the continuing volume of trade with communist China?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I can speak with regard to the situation only up to yesterday. However, no such message has been received. As a matter of fact Australia is dealing with China, as are the United Kingdom and France, and I have not heard any complaint.

Inquiries of the Ministry

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

CONSIDERATION OF PUBLIC ACCOUNTS BY COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a perfectly proper and correct question of the very active parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance. Could the parliamentary secretary inform the house whether the public accounts for 1961 are going to be given to the public accounts committee and, if so, when?

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the minister is in a position to answer that question and the answer is at the proper time and in the proper place.

REFERENCE TO ANSWER TO QUESTION ON ORDER PAPER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Arthur Laing (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, I think probably this matter comes under the heading of privilege. However, I do not wish to call it that. I am referring to the answer by the Minister of Trade and Commerce to my question No. 1,038, which was as follows:

Since November 1, 1962, what is the (a) description of export (b) name of exporter (c) value of export, of all approvals made by the Export Credits Insurance Corporation.

The answer to part (b) was as follows:

All discussions and correspondence in connection with policies are to be treated by both sides as confidential—

I wish to say that I made the inquiry only because I had read in the press the sums granted—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Regardless of what may have been the hon. member's impression or his source of information, it is a well established rule that one does not comment on the nature of a reply. As I indicated the other day, and I think hon. members will agree, if certain questions tend to mislead or are obviously erroneous, they may found the possibility of a grievance on certain occasions. However, they are certainly not questions of privilege and certainly they do not found any questions on the orders of the day.

INQUIRIES OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Maurice Rinfret (St. James): Mr. Speaker, this question is addressed to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that since 1958 some 15 royal commissions have been established by the government at a total cost of $4,293,000, is it the intention of the government to institute a royal commission to study the advisability of creating royal commissions?

Mr. Vincent Drouin (Argenteuil-Deux-Montagnes): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister a question?

Is the government considering the possibility of guaranteeing an advance to the hon. members belonging to the Social Credit party who are faced with law suits for non-payment of rent because of the election bets the member for Villeneuve has lost?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I would have thought that the hon. member for Argenteuil-Deux-Montagnes, kind as he is, would have looked up paragraphs 1 and 2 of citation 171.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

LACK OF BILINGUAL REPORTER IN RAILWAY COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J.-P. Cook (Montmagny-L'Islet): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport.

Could the minister tell us if he knows why a bilingual stenographer is not affected to the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, it is only as a witness that I appeared before the committee—

Mr. Speaker: Order. It is not in order to ask such a question. It is a matter—

Mr. Cook: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order—

Mr. Speaker: Order. It is a matter that comes under the committee's jurisdiction. I have already indicated that the rules governing the procedure of a committee are that committee's responsibility and not the minister's. The minister goes before the committee as a witness only; he does not head the committee.

Mr. Cook: Mr. Speaker, I asked the minister if he knew why. My question had nothing to do with the rules of the committee. The minister got up and I think you should have left him free to reply.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member's question cannot be asked on the orders of the day.

PUBLIC SERVICE

BOXING DAY—HOLIDAY PAY FOR PREVAILING RATES EMPLOYEES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Thomas R. Berger (Vancouver-Burrard): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. In view of the fact that the government has directed that Boxing day be a paid holiday for civil servants, does the government intend to direct that Boxing day be a paid holiday for prevailing rate employees as well?

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am not certain that the government has declared that it will be a holiday but in any event there has been no consideration given to the second part of the question which the hon. gentleman asks.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

ACTION TO PREVENT FURTHER INCREASE IN COST OF LIVING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. J. Robichaud (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister. Can the Prime Minister inform the house what steps are being taken by the government to prevent further increases in the cost of living, which according to the index announced today has increased substantially for the fifth consecutive month?

(Translation):

Mr. Speaker: Order. I wonder if the hon. member, has read paragraphs 1 and 2 of citation 171 of Beauchesne.

FINANCE

SALE OF $500 MILLION OF GOVERNMENT BONDS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Finance.

On many occasions already, we have seen advertised in newspapers an issue of bonds for $500 million on the part of the federal government. My question is this. I would like to know if it is always about the same bond issue and, if so, do these bonds sell well?

Mr. Speaker: Order. Since certain detailed explanations are requested, I believe that the hon. member had better put his question on the order paper.

(Text):

SURCHARGE ON FOREIGN EDITORIAL CONTENT OF MAGAZINES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Finance whether the government is considering either legislation or regulations which would place a surcharge or some similar tariff upon the foreign editorial content of magazines printed in Canada, such as Reader's Digest and Time magazine.

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the government has given consideration to the report of the O'Leary commission. A resolution was placed on the order paper last spring purporting to implement in part the recommendations of that commission, and the government will be proceeding with this matter in the relatively near future.

PENITENTIARIES

INQUIRY AS TO RECEIPT OF STEVENSON AND KELLOGG REPORT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John R. Matheson (Leeds): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. Has the government received the report prepared by Stevenson and Kellogg Limited on penitentiaries?

Mr. Speaker: Order. This is a matter of detail. The hon. member knows that he should put that question on the order paper. Certainly he should not ask it on the orders of the day.

AIR TRANSPORT

MONTREAL AND OTTAWA—BILINGUAL INSURANCE POLICIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Bernard Dumont (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport.

Could the minister tell the house whether it is possible to obtain, at the Montreal and Ottawa airports, French life insurance leaflets in order to know if people have the right to die in French?

Mr. Speaker: Order. That is just a question of detail and I trust the hon. member will be fair and obliging enough to recognize that the questions which are being asked at this time must be of national urgency.

(Text):

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

INQUIRY AS TO CONFERENCE TO CONSIDER NATIONAL SYMBOLS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might ask the Prime Minister what progress is being made toward the calling of a conference of the provincial governments for the purposes of consulting over a national flag and other national symbols, as was outlined in the speech from the throne.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, a number of electoral events have taken place. Early in the new year I hope those electoral events will have been completed, and that it will be possible to proceed as suggested on this matter.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

REPORTED INTENTION TO REDUCE NUMBER OF EMPLOYEES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Azellus Denis (St. Denis): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a question of the Postmaster General. Will the Postmaster General inform the house if it is the government's intention to reduce the number of postal employees, particularly in the Montreal area?

(Translation):

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member must realize that his question is not in keeping with standing orders as far as questions asked at this point of the sitting are concerned.

Mr. Denis: I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: There is no point of order.

Mr. Denis: I am advised that the staff is going to be reduced any day now. Therefore in a month it will be too late to ask my question.

Mr. Speaker: Staff reductions in post offices throughout Canada may be under consideration.

(Text):

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Postmaster General and ask her if it is the intention of her department to release any employees of the Post Office Department. If so, in what districts?

Mr. Speaker: Order. As I think the hon. member will recognize immediately, that question asked for particulars as to districts. That is a matter of statistical information which on numerous occasions I have ruled it is not within the expectation of the house that a minister shall have at hand. The hon. member was asking for particular details. I think he will recognize the fact that this question is out of order.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Speaking on the point of order which you have just raised, Mr. Speaker, may I say this. When there is a report in the press or otherwise that certain employees may be released, surely it is the right and indeed the duty of members of this house to ask the government if there is any truth to those reports, as it concerns a matter of the employment of government officials.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I appreciate what the Leader of the Opposition has said. However, I think he will agree that one could take from any newspaper in the country reports which might comment that in this particular sector or in that particular sector one or more, whether it be two, 500 or 1,000 government employees, may be released. I know the Leader of the Opposition is a very reasonable man in this regard, and in saying this I am not being disrespectful. I submit that matters of this kind are not for questions on the orders of the day. They may be put on the order paper. We could spend our time entirely on these matters. Hon. members on both sides of the house could take one minister after another and discuss whether or not there was the possibility of a reduction of staff in that particular department and in some particular locality. It is the same thing as asking where certain post offices are going to be built.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, I should like to rephrase the question.

Mr. Speaker: Very well. In the interval may I recognize the hon. member for Skeena.

Mr. Howard: It will give him more time in which to rephrase it.

[Later:]

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, in the light of the fact that it is the responsibility of ministers of the crown to deal with government policy, my question is rephrased as follows. Is it the policy of the Post Office Department to release a certain number of its employees during the Christmas recess?

Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, the answer is no.

COMBINES

DRUGS—INQUIRY AS TO REPORT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, on Friday last I asked a question of the Minister of Justice as follows:

Mr. Speaker, I wonder . . . whether there is any knowledge available as to when we might expect the completion of the report on the drug question by the restrictive trade practices commission, or the former members who are working on it.

At that time the acting minister replied that he would draw the question to the attention of his colleague, perhaps for an early reply. I wonder whether we are able to have an answer to that question at the moment.

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the question was brought to my attention by my colleague. There is nothing further that I can bring to the attention of the house on the subject. The indication that I gave several weeks ago was that it was expected that the report could be completed by approximately the end of this year. The information I now have does not depart to any degree from that indication.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

TRANSLATION OF REPORT OF GILL COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, may I ask my dear friend the Minister of Labour if he is now in a position to give us a progress report on the French translation of the Gill report dealing with so important a matter as unemployment insurance in this country?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, in reply to my dear friend from Essex East I wish to say to him that I have nothing further to report.

ATLANTIC DEVELOPMENT BOARD

PROVISION FOR DEFINITION OF DUTIES, APPOINTMENT OF MEMBERS, ETC.

The house resumed, from Wednesday, December 5, consideration of the motion of Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton) for the second reading of Bill No. C-94, to provide for establishment of an Atlantic development board.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Cape Breton South. In the interests of the accuracy of the record and for our own benefit, perhaps the hon. member might defer his remarks for 15 to 20 seconds in order to let those members leave who may wish to do so.

Mr. Malcolm MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, it is not my intention to take very much of the time of the house this afternoon on second reading of the bill. Rather, I am inclined to accept the suggestion made by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate yesterday when he called for a shortening of the debate on second reading in the hope that we can move this measure into a committee of the house, perhaps the committee on banking and commerce, and deal with it more fully at that particular stage.

I think it is quite apparent that we in this group have approached this measure on a non-partisan basis. We have suggested there was hope that this type of measure might make some substantial and concrete contribution to the curing of the economic ills of the Atlantic region of Canada. We tried to be objective. We pointed out that we were concerned about certain aspects of this legislation as it came forward. We indicated certain fears and certain reservations that we held. At the same time we attempted to fulfil our responsibility as members of the opposition, and we brought forward proposals that I think were to some extent constructive and objective, but apparently to no avail.

I suggest it is not an exaggeration to say, bearing in mind the statements that have been made in this house by members of the government and attempting to relate the legislation before us to the Atlantic provinces, that this bill represents nothing more than a straw in the wind, a leaf on the tidal waters, a measure that is going to be completely inadequate in attempting to cope with the situation in the Atlantic provinces. I suggest that this is a form of political subterfuge. It is a concession to expedience at its worst.

In this connection I should like to indicate that I am amazed at the public statements that have been made by some of the official representatives of the Atlantic provinces economic council now that the bill is before us in all its inadequacy and all its shortcomings. It seems to me it is quite regrettable that in the concern of this organization, APEC, to remain politically non-partisan and in their anxiety and keen desire to obtain at least some concrete reaction from this government to our proposals, they are prepared so passively and so meekly to accept this token recognition of our problems. I sincerely trust that in their later, more formal and more official pronouncements on the specific bill, which they can now study in all of its detail, they will be less concerned about offending the government and more concerned about pressing for a truly effective board capable of initiating decisive action.

There are many aspects of the bill regarding which we intend to introduce specific amendments at the appropriate time, and I hope the minister and the government will give them due consideration. In its present form and under the proposed terms of reference that are before us, I suggest that the bill is a miserable piece of legislation totally inadequate for the job it is supposed to handle, and certainly not worthy of being put on the statute books of this nation.

Mr. Russell MacEwan (Pictou): Mr. Speaker, like the hon. member for Cape Breton South, I will be very short in order that the bill may be given second reading. I listened to the hon. member speaking on the bill, and I have also listened to other speeches he has made in the house. He says he cannot understand why some of the officials of APEC, a well known body which was referred to by the hon. member for Gloucester as a commendable organization in the Atlantic provinces, are in favour of setting up such a board because in his view it is nothing but a subterfuge.

I have not been in this house long, and the hon. member has not been here as long as I have. May I simply say that he has said some things which are helpful, but he must realize that there are many wise men in APEC from all over the maritime provinces and that they are looking at this matter in an objective manner and giving their opinion on it. I should like to quote from the New Glasgow News of November 15 last in which there is a report on what the new president of APEC had to say about the setting up of the Atlantic development board:

> Gerald E. Martin, in his first public address since assuming presidency of the self-help regional organization last month, said creation of the board would mark the first entrance of the federal government into direct area development. He cautioned against thinking the board could do the entire job of encouraging regional development by itself.

The article goes on to indicate that Mr. Martin put forward various matters which have already been mentioned in this house by way of suggestions to be made to the new board by APEC.

The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate spoke yesterday, and the hon. member for Gloucester spoke on the resolution. The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate set himself up as the spokesman for the Atlantic provinces, the one who knows all about these matters. Let me just say there are those of us in the house who are natives of the Atlantic provinces and who feel we can speak as well for this area as the hon. member, who has moved to Newfoundland and has actually been adopted by that province.

During the last few years the hon. member for Gloucester has been the opposition coal critic in the house, but from the speech of the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate yesterday it would appear that he and the member for Gloucester are now the friends of the fishermen. Apparently the hon. member for Gloucester is no longer the coal critic but has now moved into another field. The hon. member made quite a lengthy speech, which I do not intend to go into because it was made at another stage of the legislation and was referred to by the hon. member for Cumberland.

I should like to refer to a few of the matters mentioned yesterday by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate. I remember as a young boy and probably in later years going to afternoon movie matinees. Yesterday afternoon we witnessed another matinee performance by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate. He put on quite a show. I listened attentively to all his speech. I think the only thing he said which would be of assistance and could be taken as a good suggestion for the Atlantic development board or to help the Atlantic provinces was when he put forward certain things that the board should study.

He admitted in his remarks that when he was a member of the former government when it was in power more should have been done in the field of defence production, in getting more work from that department for the Atlantic area. We also have been trying to do that and perhaps I could point out a few ways in which the Department of Defence Production, under the able minister, has been able to help out in my own constituency.

For instance, a variable depth sonar has been developed, one of the best known anti-submarine devices in the world. We have not only used this device in our Royal Canadian Navy, but we have sold it to the Royal Navy and the Royal Australian Navy, and I believe the Department of Defence Production is attempting to sell it to the United States. This variable depth sonar is manufactured by E.M.I. Cossor Limited at Dartmouth, and subcontracts have been let to companies in other communities including Fairey Aviation at Dartmouth and Trenton Industries Limited in my constituency.

As I understand it, since 1957 industries in my own area and undoubtedly in other parts of the Atlantic provinces have been listed with various government departments for material which can be supplied, and have been able to secure contracts. At Trenton Industries they are making mortar carriers for the Department of Defence Production as well as the towing gear for the variable depth sonar.

In my area, and this affects all areas in the Atlantic provinces and the shipyards, the following has been carried out by other government departments during the last five years. For instance, right now a coastguard cutter is being built at the Ferguson Industries

Limited yards, Pictou, Nova Scotia, in my constituency. Tenders were called and the three lowest bids included one from the great lakes yards, one from the St. Lawrence area and one from the maritimes area. I suggested to the Minister of Transport that since these vessels would be used in various parts of Canada the work should be allotted on a regional basis. The Ferguson yard at Pictou, being the lowest bidder in the maritimes, was awarded a contract for one of these craft. The other two contracts went to a great lakes yard and a St. Lawrence yard respectively. This was a big help.

I should like also to refer to the ferry constructed about two years ago to operate between Portugal Cove and Belle island, Newfoundland, in the constituency of the hon. member for St. John's East. The call for tenders was limited to the maritime yards, and this was the case with the new ferry which will be constructed during this coming year at the Ferguson Industries Limited yard at Pictou. This ferry will operate between Wood island and Cariboo. The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate made the suggestion that we should do more to encourage the tourist industry, and I believe the new ferry will help in that direction because there will no longer be a line-up for the ferry at either Wood island or Cariboo.

Then the hon. member pointed out that the board should study our fisheries. I agree with that suggestion. Subsidies were introduced by the Minister of Transport to pay 50 per cent of the cost of construction of steel trawlers. This will be of great assistance to the fishermen. May I point out, sir, that the fisheries school in the province of Nova Scotia is located at Pictou. During the last few months, in order to enlarge the school and make more facilities available for training young fishermen in the Atlantic provinces, the federal government gave approximately $150,000 to help the province of Nova Scotia with this work. I can therefore concur with the hon. member that our fisheries would be a most important subject of study.

The hon. member also pointed out that coal should be used to a greater extent in the production of power in the Atlantic provinces. May I point out to the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate that if he had travelled from Stellarton to Trenton while he was in my constituency he would have seen the thermal plant at Trenton. The enlargement of this plant was made possible by the Atlantic Provinces Power Development Act, and between $2 million and $3 million was spent by this government for that purpose. This power, which is generated from coal, was hooked up to the grid system connecting Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, which was also made possible by the Atlantic Provinces Power Development Act. Rates were established for industrial users which were comparable to those in parts of Ontario. Each year these industrial users are given a rebate, which means that at the end of the year they get a cheque for an amount which will reduce their rate to one which is comparable to that of industrial users in Ontario. The plant burns coal from our Pictou county mines.

I believe, therefore, that the board which this bill will establish will help various parts of the Atlantic provinces. Mine is a surplus labour area, but I am not going into the reasons for it being such an area. During the last years some coal mines have closed down, but I am not pointing the finger at anyone for that. Various reasons were behind it. We have a large plant there which makes railway cars. During the last ten years the railways embarked on a program of changes in their rolling stock, and there is not so much need for these railway cars now. However, the plant is going better now because certain branches of the Canada Car Company at Montreal have been moved and now the roofs and ends of these cars are made at Trenton. This plant of the Eastern Car Company gives employment to about 75 men.

I believe that this board, when established, will be able to bring together the various facts and suggestions and give them proper consideration. The provinces in the Atlantic area can get together and make their presentations to the board in the best way possible. It has been suggested that APEC has carried out research in various areas so why go into them again. There are always other things to learn. I feel this board could be a very potent factor in the Atlantic area.

I recall, for instance, that a study was carried out by an official from the Department of Trade and Commerce and an official from the Department of Labour, on my suggestion and the suggestion of the premier of Nova Scotia, in order to try to find employment for miners who have been laid off. A similar study was conducted in the Cape Breton area. I am speaking purely of local conditions at the moment, sir, but it is my hope this board will take the study which was made by these two learned gentlemen and give it proper consideration. I have a copy of that report, which is confidential, and it reveals that in a surplus labour area such as Pictou county there are some of the best workers available. Some of them are trained but others would need training and are capable of being trained.

The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate pointed out many things the former administration had accomplished, such as Camp Gagetown, the Canso causeway and so on. May I point out some of the things which have been accomplished by the present government. One was a measure to assist our working force through the establishment of a vocational training school in our area. It is now being constructed at Stellarton and will be ready around the first of the year, I am told. This was made possible through a grant of 75 per cent of the cost of construction from this government. It is true that we need other types of industry in an area like this which, as I say, is a surplus labour area. We have a heavy steel industry but we need secondary industry, and I think this board could look into the matter of enlarging this area of expansion. For instance, in the Trenton plants there is need for a certain type of hammer which will enable the steel works part of those plants to go into other lines of production.

We must keep the industry we have and we must also look for additional industry. We can do this by extra tax incentives and other measures. We have given some already, but more should be done to give further tax incentives and help secondary industry come into the area. This board could examine the work done by Industrial Estates, the crown company set up by the provincial government which has been able to attract two small industries into my area, and work along with it. One is an Italian knitting plant, which is doing very well. The other, the Canada Envelope Company, will be opening early in the new year. They are the type of plants we need, and this is the type of work which the board should tackle first in order to provide employment in labour surplus areas and elsewhere throughout the Atlantic provinces.

I have already referred to the Atlantic Provinces Power Development Act and the grants which this government has given to help provide educational services and roads in the province where I live. At the present time a trans-Canada highway project is being carried out in the New Glasgow-Stellarton area which will cost several millions of dollars and is providing employment. It should help to attract more industry to the industrial area of New Glasgow, and provide necessary roads.

There is not much more I can say before taking my seat, except that the government has not done everything it could for the Atlantic provinces. I frankly admit that, but I have pointed out certain things that have been done and we must continue to fight for other things. The establishment of this board will help us to do that.

[Mr. MacEwan.]

References have been made to the terms of the bill, and I think the terms are wide enough to do the necessary work. Let us forget about the wording. Let us forget about amending it. Let us get the board working. The time has come for action. We have carried out certain projects during the last five years; now let us keep matters rolling along. I commend the minister for introducing this legislation.

Mr. John B. Stewart (Antigonish-Guysborough): Mr. Speaker, this is not a debate on the merits of APEC, and accordingly I shall not deal with the remarks, or alleged reaction of that organization to the bill presently before us. I listened very attentively to the remarks of the hon. member for Pictou, who has just taken his seat. I found what he had to say very interesting, because what he said was much more specific than what the minister said when speaking on the resolution and on the motion for second reading. I only hope that the kind of projects which the hon. member for Pictou sees hidden in the vague language of this bill are indeed hidden there.

Yesterday the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate made a suggestion to the government through the Minister of National Revenue. He suggested that there was a general desire shared by all hon. members to get on with the business of the country in this house, and he recognized the general importance of trying to improve the economic position of the Atlantic area. In view of these two considerations the hon. member proposed that after second reading the bill be sent to one of the standing committees, where this legislation, which after all is the government's principal approach to one of the nation's greatest problems, would receive the careful scrutiny that it undoubtedly deserves. In a committee discussions would proceed easily and proposals would be made. I gather the hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. MacInnis) would like to move some amendments to the bill, and the virtues of those amendments could be examined in the committee. Indeed proposals, suggestions and amendments might come from all quarters of the house, and I should hope they would. The Minister of National Revenue must appreciate the merit of this invitation, and I invite him, when concluding this debate, to tell us his reaction to the suggestion made by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate.

I do not think there is any doubt that hon. members from the Atlantic area propose to support this motion for second reading but, Mr. Speaker, I for one would be less than frank if I did not express the mixture of uncertainty and disappointment which I felt when I first studied the bill. In the first place the government does not seem to have appraised accurately the seriousness of the problems of the Atlantic area, or to have appraised accurately the scope of action that will be required to deal efficaciously with these problems. It provides for an unpaid board which is to meet once a year. It is true the chairman is to receive an honorarium of $3,000, and it is also true that the board can meet more frequently, but that is what is laid out in the bill itself, and to me this suggests that this board is not expected to accomplish very much.

In the second place, I do not think the board confronts the general problems of our area head on. We all know what those problems are. They are three in number. First there is the matter of our tariff policy. This is a national question; it is not simply a regional one. We all know that since 1879, no matter what government was in office, we have had a tariff policy that has been highly unfavourable to producers and consumers in the maritime provinces. As I say, this is a matter of national policy, so I do not see how this particular board, which is primarily regional in its focus, will be able to cope with all the national ramifications of a change in our tariff policy.

Mr. Speaker, in case you may think this matter is somewhat irrelevant to the motion for second reading of this bill, let me call to your attention a speech made at Kentville by the Minister of Finance last March. The newspaper report of that speech quoted the minister as saying that if Britain were to join the European common market then Sydney or Glace Bay could, within a lifetime, become as large as present day Toronto. This suggests the intimate connection between matters of trade and tariff policy and prosperity in the maritime and Atlantic area of Canada.

Then there is another general problem which is not confronted head on by this board. That is the matter of transportation. Here again we all know what the situation is. We all know that governments over the years have been concerned with this matter, and indeed went so far as to create a royal commission to look into it. The royal commission reported that by reason of the development of competition, particularly trucking competition, in central Canada the railways are having a tough time making ends meet in the extremities of the country. Consequently they apply for permission to raise their freight rates, but this permission they use to its full extent only in those extremities. Therefore the freight rates go up in the east and the west, and they are kept down in the centre of the country by reason of the competition there. Let me read what the royal commission says on this point at page 19 of its report:

> —the most serious regional outcome of the effects of competition upon the railway rate structure arises from the fact that the railways, because they can only be certain of applying their fully allowable increases to a constantly shrinking area where competition is weak or non-existent, are forced to ask for greater percentage increases than they would if the increased rates could be applied more broadly. As a consequence, the regions where pay a larger and larger share of the revenues required to cover railway costs.

A second matter to which the royal commission referred was the nature of the rate structure. The railways use the old value of service principle in determining freight rates. This, as hon. members know, is a principle which says that a valuable commodity when transported shall pay more than a crude and undeveloped commodity; in other words, raw materials are transported cheaper than refined products. This means it is easier to export from the maritime and Atlantic provinces undeveloped raw goods than the products of secondary industries. In other words our present freight rate structure discourages the development of secondary industries in the Atlantic provinces. The matter of transportation is a great problem. I do not see that this board directly confronts this problem at all.

Then, Mr. Speaker, there is a third great problem, the geenral problem of a shortage of investment capital. We all know what happens. People in the maritimes have a long tradition of saving. They are very good at buying bank stock, I am told. They put their money in the bank or they buy insurance policies; then that money is invested, perhaps in constructing a large business building in the city of Toronto or in developing some mineral deposit in some other part of the country. In other words there is a kind of magnetic pull which attracts capital out of the maritime area, and it is very seldom reversed to push investment capital into that area.

The problem of capital investment is not simply one of people from outside the Atlantic area not looking for investment possibilities in that area. The problem is one of people in those provinces themselves saving money which is then—I hesitate to say "drained off", because that sounds somewhat subversive or invidious—transferred to other places where there may be more profit to be gained. This is a situation which will have to be corercted by political methods. There are various ways of doing this, as we all know; by low inteerst rate loans, tax nicentives and so on. We have been unable to discover just how effective has been the present government's double depreciation allowance for certain labour surplus areas.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Absolutely ineffective.

Mr. Stewart: It may very well have been totally ineffective; we have no information.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I have.

Mr. Stewart: Therefore, Mr. Speaker, in so far as general problems which will set the scene for development in the Atlantic area are concerned, this board seems to miss the target almost entirely. It may touch the edge of the target as it whizzes by.

Then it does not confront head on the specific problems of specific localities. Mr. Speaker, I want to put before the house two or three illustrations. Prosperity is not simply a general thing; it is generally a local thing. It has to begin in localities; and I want to mention two or three specific localities, ones with which I am familiar, and ask the question, how does this Atlantic development board confront these specific problems in these specific localities?

First let us look at the little, old town of Canso. Canso used to be a booming place. It was from this town that the transatlantic cables made their departure from the mainland of the continent of North America. But we know that the transatlantic cables have been modernized, and indeed are likely to be rendered obsolete by more modern devices. There is now in that town only one major fish packing plant, operated by British Columbia Packers. This company owns an old factory, and they wanted to modernize it or to acquire a modern plant on the Atlantic seaboard. At this point there entered the picture no other person than that energetic man who presides over the destinies of Newfoundland, the premier of Newfoundland. What did he do? He lured the company away.

Well, we were fair sport for him. The town of Canso now needs another company to come in there. In addition, that company will need financial assistance to build a modern plant; it will need financial assistance to acquire deep sea draggers, which will be assisted by the subvention to which the hon. member for Pictou has already referred; it will need a study of the wharves, breakwaters, and channels in the harbour at Canso. We know that at least two companies are interested in going there. We know that the provincial government is aware of the prevailing problem, and I suppose the relevant federal departments are keenly interested. What is needed is some agency to draw together this interest and all these possibilities.

I had hoped that this agency, the existence of which we are now debating, might be able to provide that focal point which would bring these possibilities and interests together, but I fail to see how a board, meeting by statutory requirement only once a year, is likely to do this.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the hon. member would permit a question.

Mr. Stewart: Certainly.

Mr. McGrath: I am sure the hon. gentleman would want to be fair and accurate in the very excellent speech he is making. I think if he reads the bill he will see that the board is required to meet at least once a year in the city of Ottawa, which is not exactly what the hon. member has said.

Mr. Stewart: I know this is what the bill says. But am I to understand that the bill is so vague that it only implies that the board is required by law to meet at least once a year elsewhere than in the city of Ottawa?

Mr. McGrath: That is the implication I take from it.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): It is not the implication I take.

Mr. Stewart: If that is the implication, I think we will have to have an amendment.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. member a question. Has he read the full paragraph?

Mr. Stewart: I have indeed.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): Then I would ask the hon. member to read the full paragraph now for the benefit of the house.

Mr. Stewart: I am sure the minister will be happy to read his own prose himself, and give it the proper inflection necessary to discover what it conceals.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): I would be very glad to read it, Mr. Speaker, if you would permit me.

Mr. Stewart: The minister will have an opportunity. I did not intend to be unfair. I am merely suggesting that all that is required by the bill is that the board meet once a year.

An hon. Member: In Ottawa.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): It says it shall meet at such time and at such place as necessary.

Mr. Stewart: It does not say that it will meet any specific number of times elsewhere.

Mr. Speaker, let me give you another illustration. Let me give you as another specific illustration, the town of Mulgrave. Here the situation is less desperate than the situation prevailing in Canso. In the town of Mulgrave there are excellent opportunities for development; and I think these opportunities should be exploited. For example, there is a first-class harbour there. It is said by many citizens, and I have no reason to doubt their veracity, that this is the best harbour on the eastern seaboard of North America. It is deep, and it is ice-free. It is on the main line of the Canadian National Railways between Montreal and Sydney, and it is on the main trans-Canada highway. What is required for the development of this potentially great harbour midway between the United States seaboard ports and the St. Lawrence seaway is co-operation—co-operation by the government of Nova Scotia, the town of Mulgrave, and Department of Transport, the Department of Public Works, and the Canadian National Railways. I will not mention the number of times that this board is supposed to meet, which is apparently a matter of some uncertainty; but if the board is going to be able to pull together all these agencies, all of which I am sure are willing to co-operate, then I do not find anything in this bill which leads me to believe that that will be the case. The Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Flemming) is a well-meaning man, and perhaps within his personality I might find some reason to believe that the board would co-operate to this end if he were the minister involved. But we are not concerned with the personality of the minister; we are concerned with the text of this bill.

If I may trespass again on the territory of the hon. member for Pictou, here is an area which has a long and distinguished history of industrial production which, under one government or another—let us not encumber the question by party politics—has been declining, largely for the reasons I mentioned earlier: transportation problems, capital problems, and tariff problems. I would hope that this board would be able to move into that area, and to assist in a very active way the energetic labour groups and management groups in that place. On the face of the bill, which after all is all I can rely on, I can see nothing which suggests to me that the board will indeed do that. Consequently, I find the proposal to set up this board somewhat unsatisfactory.

As I studied the speech of the Minister of National Revenue on resolution stage and what he said on second reading, I was impressed by the prominence he gave, when he described the work of the board, to projects such as the Chignecto canal and the Prince Edward Island causeway. Mr. Speaker, let there be no misunderstanding: we are anxious that those projects shall be proceeded with, if they are feasible. In fact, sometimes I think we are more anxious about this than members on the opposite side of the house; but be that as it may.

What I am suggesting to you, sir, is that capital projects of this kind do not come to grips with the fundamental economic problems of our area. This board may be very useful in sorting out the numerous demands for public expenditure on capital projects, and in the ranking of them in some sort of priority, so that a government of any political stripe may not be embarrassed by one area saying to the government that other areas had received benefits while they received nothing. But I do not think that this kind of device is what was conceived by the people of the Atlantic provinces when they anticipated action from this government. Capital projects are but a minor part of what is needed for the development of the Atlantic provinces.

As I read this bill, I begin to think that the ministers have realized that they have not succeeded in devoting enough time and thought to the problems of our area. Like most of us sometimes do, they are setting up a device to do their work for them. If all this board is to be is an advisory board with a very small budget which is to act as a screen for the failure of ministers to find time and energy to do a job, then I am afraid the board will be a failure. I hope that the expectations of the hon. member for Pictou will be realized, but I believe, sir, that he is proceeding largely on his own good nature and on unfounded assumptions.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I should point out to the hon. member for Chicoutimi (Mr. Cote) that at the time I recognized the hon. member for Antigonish-Guysborough (Mr. Stewart) I did not realize that his group had not had the chance to speak at least once on second reading, and I apologize to him.

(Translation):

Mr. Maurice Cote (Chicoutimi): Mr. Speaker, a project for the establishment of another board is brought before us this afternoon.

It sure takes a lot of boards of all kinds to operate the economic machinery of this country, and that, merely because the financial gear is unsound. That is how the old Conservative, Liberal and socialist parties try to cure economic ills, not daring to get to the bottom of the problem. They prefer to come out with ready-made plans rather than go to the source of the economic plight brought about by an obsolete financial system which puts up blockades in every segment of the national economy and prevents the Canadian consumer from buying the goods that are produced.

However, the bill for the establishment of the Atlantic development board, as put forth by the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Flemming), commends itself to us because of the goal it seeks to achieve, that is, to promote to the fullest extent possible the industrial, commercial and agricultural development of the Atlantic regions and, consequently, to ensure the well-being of the people and families who live in those great regions, a great number of which are bound to the population of Quebec by their French origin, their French culture and their French civilization. I take this opportunity to pay special tribute to the whole French-speaking population of those provinces, to whom I send a fraternal greeting.

Last summer I had the privilege of coming into close contact with the best people of New Brunswick and, at the same time, to meet many officials of the APEC. This enabled me to grasp the full importance of the serious economic problems our compatriots in the maritimes have to face in the obsolete framework of liberalism where we are all choking as if we were in strait-jackets.

That situation compels us to adopt serious corrective measures in the Atlantic area, as well as in all the regions of Canada, in order to put a stop to unemployment, hardship and lack of security which are the lot of so many Canadians.

During the last 50 years, scientific and technical developments have completely transformed our means of production, thus upsetting our economic and social system, sowing trouble and confusion in the minds of our contemporaries who persist in believing that the capitalist system of debt money has been created by providence to last as long as the solar system and that any other economic system is inconceivable. Mr. Speaker, that is the great error of some official economists who have forgotten to change with the times.

I wish to advise the hon. members of the house that the economic development of the Atlantic region will never be adequately promoted as long as they believe that we need foreign capital to attain that objective, or that all social capital outlays will have to come from money borrowed at high interest rates or from credit created by commercial banks. Let us leave to the Bank of Canada, through a branch that would be called the "municipal development bank", or, in other words, the "social financing bank", the task of providing all the capital needed to meet the public needs of Canada, and at administrative cost, while respecting the autonomy of each province and provincial-municipal relations, always in relation to our means of production, in such a way that there will no longer be inflation or deflation of our money, as it happened constantly under the old parties, Liberal and Conservative. It will be possible for the Atlantic area to enjoy a tremendous economic development, and the same will apply to all other provinces in this country, when, through the means I have just advocated, we will allow the savings of our citizens and the capital accumulated in finance institutions to play their part to the full, in all security for those savings and that capital, through investment in the industrial and business fields. In that way, Canadians will regain control of their economy and the Atlantic area will no longer have to suffer economic depression in the midst of extremely rich natural resources.

Since the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas) advocated the establishment of a department of the Atlantic with a deputy minister and other officials, I suggest that the government should soon consider establishing such a department to look after the economic development of the socialist province of Saskatchewan.

We, of the Social Credit, would like the Gaspe peninsula and the Saguenay area to be considered as being part of the Atlantic area and we respectfully but strongly suggest that a Quebec representative be appointed on this Atlantic development board.

(Text):

Mr. L. R. Crouse (Queens-Lunenburg): Mr. Speaker, it is with pleasure that I rise to speak on this bill for it indicates the concern of the present Conservative government for the future well-being of the citizens in the Atlantic provinces. I am sure that all maritimers were pleased to hear the Governor General read in the speech from the throne the following:

> You will be asked to authorize the establishment of an Atlantic development board to advise on measures and projects that will promote the economic development of the Atlantic region of Canada.

This, Mr. Speaker, is a problem that has troubled maritimers and Canadians in general for many years. It is a problem that was recognized by the former Liberal administration during their 22 years in office but unfortunately they did very little about it. I cannot say that they did not do anything about it, as they appointed a royal commission to bring in a report on Canada's economic prospects. The chairman of this commission is now the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. Gordon). I believe his words should be required reading for every maritimer. I have placed some of them on the record previously. However, a few of them will bear repeating as they form the basis for an Atlantic development board. He states:

About one and three quarter million Canadians, or over 10 per cent of the total population live in the Atlantic region.

He continued by stating as follows:

It is a fact, however, that average incomes in this region continue to lag behind the averages for the rest of Canada. In 1926, for example, the average income per capita in the three maritime provinces was 38 per cent below the average for the other six provinces; in 1955, the average income for the Atlantic provinces, including Newfoundland, was 37 per cent below the average for the other six provinces.

These are interesting figures. I wish that the hon. member for Davenport had more than an academic interest in the problems of the maritimes and were in his seat today as I should like to ask him if it was not a fact that in the years 1939 to 1955 a Liberal government was in power when our income in the Atlantic provinces was 37 per cent below the national average. And what did the Liberal party do about this problem?

Mr. McGrath: Nothing.

Mr. Crouse: The answer is nothing, as my friend the hon. member for St. John's East interjects. Perhaps one of the reasons they did nothing is that the hon. member for Davenport was at that time economic adviser to the government. I continue the quotation:

—the fact remains that living standards are lower in the Atlantic provinces than they are in the rest of Canada, and that it is in everyone's interest to reduce this differential, if it is at all possible to do so. It is not suggested that this should be accomplished by ad hoc projects and handouts. Such measures are as unpalatable to the recipients as they are to those who must foot the bills—

If it should turn out that there is not the necessary combination of resources in sufficient quantities to permit a substantial rise in the living standards in the Atlantic region, generous assistance should be given to those people who might wish to move to other parts of Canada where there may be greater opportunities.

This is bold and imaginative Liberal policy. It is typical of the attitude of the Liberal party toward the Atlantic provinces during their 22 years in office. It was a negative, do nothing, move out policy, on a one-way Liberal ticket to nowhere. We in the Atlantic provinces did not take the advice of the hon. member for Davenport. We did not move out and we do not intend to do so, for under the present Conservative government in Nova Scotia and under the present Conservative government in Ottawa we have greater hope for our economic future than ever before in our history. Our policy is in violent disagreement with the policy of the Liberal party. We believe in ad hoc projects to stimulate the economy of an area that has been so long neglected by the Liberal party. One of the first acts of the present Conservative government was to approve the Atlantic provinces adjustment grants to pay $100 million over a four year period. This fact has never been mentioned by any Liberal speakers in this debate.

Mr. McGrath: And they have now been increased.

Mr. Crouse: These adjustment grants have now been increased to $175 million over the next five years. These grants could well be considered the forerunner of the Atlantic development board and they have enabled the provincial governments in the Atlantic provinces to establish industrial estates, to expand their fishermen's loan boards and to promote much needed industry for the benefit of our citizens.

This is one of the resolutions that was passed by that famous conference to which the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill) likes to refer, which was held in Moncton on May 18, 1957. As a matter of fact, the speech he made yesterday in the house was almost a rebroadcast of a speech he made when he was in Amherst on Friday, June 8 when he stated that "the P.C. pledges are empty". He noted then that our Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) was in Moncton, the Prime Minister who has done so much for the Atlantic provinces, and what did the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate say? He said that the Atlantic charter was not worth the paper it was written on. That is what he thinks about the Atlantic provinces adjustment grants. That was the first resolution we passed when we met in Moncton, and though these grants have been beneficial to the Atlantic provinces it would appear that they would be the first thing that would be abolished if, heaven forbid, a Liberal government were ever elected to office, because they do not believe in ad hoc projects.

It is evident that the people of the Atlantic provinces lost faith in the Liberal party after they were 22 years in office because they never brought in any measures such as the Atlantic development board.

Mr. Caron: They did not need it then.

Mr. Crouse: Perhaps the hon. gentleman would rise and make his comments rather than making them from his seat. Our party recognized low personal wages of maritimers as soon as we came into office, and although the hon. member for Davenport stated that if we stayed in the maritimes we would have to accept lower earnings we had other ideas and we implemented them. What has been the result? I hold in my hand statistics as to the average personal wage on a five year basis as produced by the bureau of statistics. For 1955, the last five-year period the Liberal party was in office, the average personal wage in Nova Scotia, for example, was $50.83 per week. By the month of August, 1962, this had risen to $66.34 per week. Nova Scotia today has an income 18 per cent less than the national average, which happens to be $80.85, and this is quite important having in mind the 37 per cent difference when the Liberal party was in office.

Despite these facts and the evident progress that has been made, what do we hear from our Liberal friends? The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson), as reported in the Halifax Chronicle-Herald of November 3, said that his party could give better government, more progressive government at this critical time. At that same time their new found disciple from Antigonish-Guysborough lamented the fact that Nova Scotia had sent nine Conservatives to the House of Commons. He said that Nova Scotia is traditionally Liberal and is now oppressed by Tory protectionism. What did he say today? He said that this board cannot be expected to accomplish very much. This type of attitude was Liberal party policy for 22 years. "We cannot do very much for the maritimes so we Liberals will do nothing."

I submit it is time to get rid of this pessimistic idea. It is time to look forward, to have a progressive twentieth century outlook for the Atlantic provinces. What do the economic indicators tell us? I do not know where the hon. member goes when he leaves here but it is certainly not back to Nova Scotia because if he did he would be aware of the progress that is being made. The improvement in economic activity in the Atlantic provinces since this government came into office in 1957 is almost astronomical. For years we were dependent upon transfer payments and upon social security and defence expenditures for a large part of our income. However, this type of dependency could not go on indefinitely, and immediately upon taking office we recognized these problems and set about doing something about them. Programs were instituted that were not merely a scratching of the surface but which would be beneficial over a long period of time.

As I said previously, the first thing we did was to bring in the adjustment grants. Armed with this additional capital, the provincial government of Nova Scotia established industrial estates which promoted new industry. Under our roads to resources program we encouraged the provinces to build new highways, and this has assisted in faster delivery of our fish to the markets in the United States. It has also brought in new tourists and last year we had a tourist season in Nova Scotia greater than we have ever had before in our history. This meant that we required more hotels and motels, and these are springing up all over the province. I ask any Liberal member in this house to stand up and deny that this is a fact.

We encouraged the construction of new technical schools. Unlike the Liberals, who gave no thought to the effects of automation upon our youth, we recognized that they cannot continue untrained and we are making every effort to provide facilities for their technical training so they will be in a position to make a contribution to industry in the future. We provided aid to the production and distribution of power. In fact, last year, for the first time in the history of Nova Scotia, we sold power to the United States where a shortage had developed. This was accomplished by transmission via the new interprovincial grid line through New Brunswick. Net generation of electrical power in the Atlantic provinces for the first seven months of 1962 was 3,267 million kilowatt hours, a rise of 9.6 per cent from the previous year. All four provinces participated in the increase.

We provided assistance to maritimers in the construction of new homes under Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. Some hon. members may say that was not just for the Atlantic provinces alone; but that is the reason why we are here today, because this government is not a regional government. It recognizes the needs of all Canadians.

Mr. MacInnis: And you are all alone.

Mr. Crouse: No, I am not all alone. I hear the hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. MacInnis) say that I am all alone. I am very much in good company.

An hon. Member: He is all alone.

Mr. Crouse: I think he is all alone. This assistance to the housing industry has assisted our construction industry and you can see the beneficial effects of this program throughout the entire length and breadth of the Atlantic provinces. In fact, in the past six months new housing starts in the region rose by 15.6 per cent compared with last year.

Without question one of the most outstanding programs we have initiated for the economic development of the Atlantic provinces is the implementation of subsidies to assist the fishermen in the construction of new draggers. At the present time there is a huge new fleet of groundfish and scallop draggers under construction in the 100 foot class and over. This fleet, it is estimated, will create more than 1,000 new jobs ashore and afloat within the next two years and it will also guarantee a continuing volume of work for the province's shipbuilding yards and the ship refitting industries.

Many of the more than 40 wooden shipbuilding yards are booked for a full year or more with orders for the fishing industry. In fact, during the first seven months of 1962 loans in Nova Scotia were approved for 15 new draggers 86 feet and over in length while loans were also approved for the construction of some 84 smaller fishing craft. This program has provided considerable stimulus to all allied industries. For example, gallows frames and trawl doors used by the large draggers, which were formerly imported from Chelsea, Massachusetts, and other American ports, are today being made in Lunenburg and Liverpool by firms like Lunenburg Foundry and Engineering Company, Limited, Atlantic Bridge Company Limited and the Steel and Engine Products plant in Liverpool. This is a new departure. In addition, they are building the scallop rakes. I submit that one of the things this board could study is the possibility of manufacturing more of the equipment used by these large trawlers and draggers that are being built for the fishing industry.

Now, these extra ships landing their increasing catches of fish have stimulated the production of bucket shops along the shore, wooden buckets and wooden boxes. I do not refer to the type of "bucket shop" we have in other sections of Canada. I refer to the construction of wooden boxes, wooden buckets, and wooden barrels in which certain species of fish are packed. At the present time we have under construction in Lunenburg a new plant covering five and a half acres under one roof which will provide a landing base for this new fleet. This plant will be able to produce 80,000 tons of processed fish per year. The plant will employ some 500 people once it gets into production in 1964 and this will add annually to the economy of Nova Scotia some $4 million. This is the type of thing that is happening under a Conservative government. We never had this sort of thing before under the Liberals.

Now, with the new ships being added to the fleet, the value of regional fish landings in the Atlantic provinces rose in the first six months of 1962 by over 14 per cent to $44 million from $38 million last year. In Newfoundland the returns were 16 per cent higher than in 1961 and in Nova Scotia the value of the catch was $15,357,000, up 16.6 per cent. This is not the only area in which improvements have been made. The Bowater's Paper Company at Brooklyn recently completed a large modernization program to the mill's electrical system which will take care of any future increase in the mill's equipment. They have also added a new chip handling system. Years ago, it was customary to throw away the slab waste in Nova Scotia. Today a number of sawmill operators in Nova Scotia now convert their slab waste to chips which Bowater's purchase as part of their wood supply. This brings new money into the province as Bowater's export newsprint as far away as India, Africa, Australia, New Zealand and the United States. At the present time newsprint production is being maintained at very satisfactory levels.

Now, briefly, I should say that our other industries are expanding. For example, pulpwood production in the Atlantic provinces for the first six months of 1962 was 1,136,000 rough cords, up 29 per cent over last year. New Brunswick had the largest increase, and I am pleased to be able to say this because the bill under debate is being introduced by the minister from New Brunswick for whom I have a very high regard. The province of New Brunswick developed 627,000 rough cords, representing an increase of 43 per cent. Solid gains in output over last year have been made in sawn lumber and production rose 16 per cent in the first six months of 1962 to 356 million board feet.

Even manufacturing in the Atlantic provinces is on the upgrade. During the first seven months of this year manufacturing shipments stood at $534 million, a rise of almost 3 per cent over the same period in 1961. In Nova Scotia, our factory shipments exceeded $200 million, up more than 5 per cent over last year.

You might say, what does all this prove? If those figures are true, why do you need an Atlantic development board? Well, this all proves that, in the first instance, today we have in Ottawa a government which in the short period between June 10, 1957 and the present day has taken action, has made decisions, that have been helpful in correcting the over-all problems of the Atlantic provinces. This is what is proven. Unlike the Liberal government which for 22 years was informed of the problem but took no action, this government has taken action and has shown it is a government of decision. I should perhaps be fair to the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. Gordon), although he is not here. He did have a solution for our problems. He said, move out.

Mr. Robichaud: He never said that; you know better.

Mr. Crouse: What a loss it would have been to Canada if we had taken his advice.

Mr. Robichaud: You know he never said that.

Mr. Crouse: The hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Robichaud)—and I listened to his words of wisdom—obviously, has not been back to the Atlantic provinces recently because no one could even fly over them without seeing the neon lights and the blossoming suburbs which indicate that we are forging ahead.

The goal of the Conservative party is to bring about employment opportunities in the Atlantic provinces so that our citizens have jobs at salaries close to the national average. We want to develop our area; we want to stop the drain on our manpower so prevalent for so many years under the Liberals. As I mentioned previously, the measures already enacted have been most helpful. However, I would not have you believe all our problems have been solved. There are still some areas of Nova Scotia that are underdeveloped, areas in the Atlantic provinces that are underdeveloped. This is the result of a lack of employment opportunities.

I would suggest that we might ask this board to give some consideration to the further development of our gypsum deposits, and the processing of them. We can mine two million tons of gypsum per year for 100 years and we would still have some reserves. We have whales going up and down the coast, and we could give some thought to the canning and processing of them. To the best of my knowledge, there is no canning of tuna in the Atlantic provinces anywhere. Now, some hon. member may correct my statement, but I do not believe there is a can of tuna put up in the provinces of New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island or Newfoundland today. This is one of the products of the sea that is gaining increasing favour with consumers not only in Canada but in the United States.

I would ask the board to start a search for minerals through the new oceanographic institute that has been located on the shores of Bedford basin. They could search for minerals on the shores of our continental shelf. We must carry out a greater search for oil, for gas and for other minerals and actively process them. There are a multitude of jobs the Atlantic development board, when established, could do. I do not go along with the hon. member for Gloucester or the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill) when they criticize this government for not setting the amount this board could spend. This, I submit, would put a limitation on the number of projects the board could develop for the assistance of the area. This government will back up the board, I am certain, when the projects it recommends to the treasury board are judged feasible. I am sure this government will back up this board because it has been the intention of our Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) and of the Conservative government since we were first elected to bring about a better economic standard in the Atlantic provinces. I am sure that we intend to continue bringing this area up to the level of the rest of Canada. However, it is costly to maintain underemployment in any part of Canada, including the Atlantic provinces. It will be the purpose of this board to correct this situation.

What we need are policies which are aimed at the creation of new production, employment and new income. In the long run, this will be beneficial not only to the people of the Atlantic provinces but to Canadians as a whole. Another project to which this board could give consideration would be the production of cranberries. In Cape Cod they have made this a major industry. Here in Ottawa, you buy cranberries packaged and processed in Cape Cod. Cranberries grow well in all areas of the Atlantic provinces. This is a project to which consideration might well be given by this board in an effort to stimulate our economy.

I am in agreement with one thing which the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate stated—I note he is not here today—namely his suggestion that we might take a closer look at our traditional markets in the West Indies. I believe the hon. member for Gloucester also mentioned this.

The volume of business between Canada and the British Caribbean is showing a steady growth and our commercial relations continue to be governed by the Canada West Indies trade agreement of 1926 which provides for the exchange of preferential tariff treatment. Our economies are complementary and there is a geographical proximity to the Atlantic provinces. With improved transportation and communications, plus the flow of Canadian tourists, trade missions and our Canadian assistance program there is no reason why we should not increase our long established trade with Trinidad, Tobago, Barbados, Jamaica and the Windward and Leeward Islands.

Last year we imported over $84 million worth of goods from the West Indies while we exported only $56 million worth, so there is quite a difference in our trade balance. Clearly it is up to us in the Atlantic provinces to stimulate further the sales of our fish, lumber, newsprint, tinned milk, potatoes, onions, apples and paper products, all of which are grown and processed in the Atlantic provinces and which would greatly improve our employment opportunities if we increased our sales.

I am certain the Atlantic development board will be beneficial to our area and, working together with the leaders of our provincial governments and established industries it will bring about a more stable economy and a higher standard of living for all our people. At this point I would like to pay a tribute to Mr. Michael Waddell of the Atlantic Advocate for the time and effort he has put into dealing with Atlantic region problems. I have read his editorials and comments and he has devoted space in his periodical to bring our needs not only to the attention of maritimers but to all of Canada.

Mr. Barnett: I wonder if the hon. member would permit a question?

Mr. Crouse: Certainly.

Mr. Barnett: I would like to ask the hon. member, in relation to some remarks he was making earlier in his speech in which he referred to the non-accomplishments of the Liberal administration—and I shall not quarrel with his assessment of those—how he reconciles some of the statements he was making in that portion of his speech with a statement which appeared in the July "APEC Newsletter" in which there was reference to the disparity between average personal income levels in the Atlantic provinces and the rest of Canada. That article states:

> Perhaps, however, the most disturbing feature of this situation is that there has been virtually no change in it since 1950.

The statistics they were referring to were those for 1960.

Mr. Crouse: Mr. Speaker, I am not entirely certain that I get the impact of the question. I quoted figures for Nova Scotia in my speech. They were figures I obtained from the dominion bureau of statistics, and I shall put them on the record again. In 1955 the average personal weekly wage in Nova Scotia was $50.83 and in the month of August, 1962, it was $66.34. While I am not really a good mathematician I compute that to be approximately 18 per cent below the national average, which is reputed to be $80.85.

Mr. Robichaud: What about the cost of living in the same period?

Mr. Crouse: The hon. member for Gloucester talks about the cost of living. Again we get this pessimistic Liberal attitude. Even though we have done these things they cannot stand up and agree that the progress made in Nova Scotia was on a non-partisan basis. Why not accept this progress? As the minister from New Brunswick stated when he introduced this bill, let us forget this partisanship and go on from here.

Mr. MacInnis: Would the hon. member permit one more question?

Mr. Crouse: Certainly.

Mr. MacInnis: I was just wondering with regard to some of the statements he made—and I agree many of them were true—how he relates them to the dominion bureau of statistics figures which indicate that the average level of unemployment in Canada since 1957 has been approximately 6 per cent or 7 per cent per year while in the Atlantic provinces it has run at about double that figure? How does the hon. member relate this situation to his previous statistics?

Mr. Crouse: I would just like—

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, are we having another joint debate on this? A question is one thing but a debate is another.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would like to ask, has the Minister of National Revenue any right to terminate this debate? That surely must lie with the Chair.

Mr. Crouse: I would like to answer the question, and for the edification of hon. members I am quoting from a Nova Scotia Newsletter dated November, 1962, that came to my desk this morning. I am not aware if the hon. member for Cape Breton South is on its mailing list.

An hon. Member: Who publishes this?

Mr. Crouse: It is published by the government of Nova Scotia.

Mr. Robichaud: Oh.

Mr. Crouse: And for the information of the hon. member for Gloucester the figures that they receive are from the dominion bureau of statistics. I quote:

> In June there was a 3.1 per cent increase in industrial average weekly wages and salaries. The average was $66.58 up from $64.56 a year earlier.
> Unemployment dropped slightly. As of June 29, there were 14,358 unplaced applicants in the province, representing about 6 per cent of the labour force.

Does that answer the hon. gentleman's question? I submit that is not double the national average.

Mr. Carter: Would the hon. gentleman permit another question?

Mr. Crouse: Be my guest.

Mr. Carter: Would he say the annual average income depends solely on the weekly wage or whether it depends on the weekly wage multiplied by the number of hours worked, and involves the number of people at work?

Mr. Crouse: I do not have the answer to the hon. member's question.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I have no wish to get into the family quarrel between the various members from the Atlantic provinces on both sides of the house. A long time ago I learned that when you get into a family quarrel you usually get into trouble. For three days I have listened to Liberal members claiming that the Conservatives did not do anything and are largely responsible for conditions in the maritimes, and I have listened to Conservative members blaming the Liberals for their long period of inactivity. I think it is easy for me to keep out of trouble by saying I agree that both are right. The problems of the maritimes, whether they are understated or overstated are due to the fact that both old-line parties, both provincially and federally, have had the responsibility of looking after the affairs of the Atlantic provinces ever since Canada became a nation.

I would like to commend the Minister of National Revenue for introducing legislation to set up an Atlantic economic development board. I do so for two reasons, the first being that I think we recognize today, somewhat belatedly, that economic planning is absolutely essential if our economy is going to get moving and if we are going to grapple with the problems of unemployment and a low standard of living, low compared to the potential which we might enjoy.

I am glad to have this legislation brought down for a second reason, and that is that it is particularly aimed at the problems of the Atlantic provinces and, as I said in the debate on the resolution, those provinces deserve special consideration and need special action. I think the house will generally agree with the minister in having legislation designed to do that; however I want to say to the minister that all the fears I expressed in the debate on the resolution have been more than justified after reading the terms of the bill. Having read the bill I cannot help but feel that the mountain has laboured and brought forth a mouse and that this legislation will not do the things that many of the hon. members have been talking about.

I have listened to the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. MacEwan) talking about the employment which this board will create, and the hon. member for Queens-Lunenburg (Mr. Crouse), who has just resumed his seat, talking about the new industrial development that could be brought about. But I cannot see anything in this bill that is either going to provide employment or bring into being new industries or a greater development of the resources of the Atlantic provinces. I say that for three reasons, Mr. Speaker. First of all I look at the board itself. Here is a board of five members, of which there is not to be a single full time member. Whether this board is going to meet once a year, quarterly or even monthly, surely no one in his right senses thinks a part time board meeting periodically is going to produce the kind of program that we need to make a massive assault on the social and economic problems of the Atlantic provinces. There is not even a full time chairman. I agree with the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill) who suggested, much along the same line as the suggestion I made with reference to the national economic development board, that if you are going to tie this board into the government the chairman ought to be a minister of the crown. If that is too much to ask, then at least he should be a parliamentary secretary.

I am really disturbed by this feeble bow we in this parliament are making to the idea of economic planning. We are now going to have four planning groups. We are going to have the national economic development board, the Atlantic development board, an enlarged national productivity council and an industrial manpower adjustment council, all four of them with terms of reference which are overlapping, all of them responsible to a different minister, and none of them tied in to the government so that their recommendations and programs have any assurance of being considered.

The other thing that worries me about this board is this. With only five members it cannot possibly be representative of (a) regions, and (b) major economic groups. I would like to see a board on which the provinces concerned will be represented by allowing them to nominate someone, and the major economic groups being allowed to nominate someone who will represent them. I do not mean by this, selecting someone from an economic group, but someone nominated by an economic group who will have the authority to confer with that group and, with their agreement, commit that group to certain lines of action. If we are really going to plan the economic development of the Atlantic provinces we will have to have this kind of representation, co-ordination and participation by the various groups concerned. That is certainly not possible with a board of five part time members.

I want to hurry along, Mr. Speaker, because I do not want to hold up this bill. The second thing that concerns me about this bill is the limited scope of the board. It has the power to make an assessment of the factors relevant to economic growth; it has the power to decide whether or not certain measures, projects and existing factors may inhibit industrial development; it has power—this is what worries me most—to study particular measures or projects if they are referred to it by the minister. We have heard a great deal about the projects they will discuss, but as I read this bill they cannot discuss or make a study of any projects unless they are projects which have been referred to them by the minister. If I am wrong, or if this requires some clarification, we can discuss it in the committee. But it seems to me that is a limitation which means this board could do virtually nothing, or it could do a considerable amount if projects are referred to it; although what five people meeting several times a year can do is beyond my understanding.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether my hon. friend has read clause 9(d).

Mr. Douglas: Yes.

—consider and report to the minister upon any other matters that in the opinion of the board may usefully be considered—

An hon. Member: That is out of order.

Mr. Douglas: I know it is out of order for me to be quoting the bill, but the minister asked if I had read it.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): It takes in everything.

Mr. Douglas: They can report to the minister on matters that may usefully be considered, but I take it that under pararaph (c) the actual feasibility and economic studies that are necessary for specific projects can only be undertaken by the board if they are referred to it by the minister. I want to try and finish by five o'clock, Mr. Speaker. May I say that the third thing that concerns me about this bill is that neither in the bill nor in the statement made by the minister in introducing the bill has anything been done about an industrial development fund for the Atlantic provinces. All the talk about creating jobs, stimulating oil exploration, bringing into being new industries, means nothing unless very substantial sums of money are going to be available for implementing the recommendations of this board. This board, as it now stands, without an industrial development fund for the Atlantic provinces will not put a single man to work, will not start a single industry unless the government is prepared to indicate that large sums of money will be available. This is what worries me about all four of the boards to which I referred, the national economic development board, the Atlantic development board, the productivity council, the manpower adjustment council. None of these will create jobs—unless it is exchanging members, jobs with each other—unless the government is prepared to indicate now or at an early date that very substantial sums of capital will be available either for loans to industries or for loans to the provinces for industrial development; or the government itself, on a partnership basis with the provinces, is prepared to invest considerable sums of money to start new industries and create jobs.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I want to say that we in this group, while we are glad to have set up a board of this nature, must point out that its very limited scope, its part time membership and the lack of any announcement of an industrial development fund to finance its proposals make this an extremely disappointing measure in so far as carrying out the very laudable objectives which have been enunciated by the minister.

An hon. Member: Five o'clock.

Mr. Laurent Maltais (Saguenay): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: I am very sorry, but it being five o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members business. Therefore we shall turn to page 20 of the order paper in order to resume consideration of the motion of Mr. Martin (Essex East).

(Text):

FINANCE

CORRESPONDENCE RESPECTING SURCHARGE ORDER IN COUNCIL

The house resumed from Thursday, November 22, consideration of the motion of Mr. Martin (Essex East):

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house copies of correspondence or any documents exchanged between the Prime Minister or the Minister of Finance or any other minister of the crown and officers of the Department of Justice or the privy council or any other government department or agency on the subject of surcharge and imports order, P.C. 1962-902, dated June 24, 1962, and the amendment to the surcharge and imports order, P.C. 1962-987, dated July 11, 1962, and the import control list as amended by P.C. 1962-903, dated June 24, 1962, with particular reference to the legality of such orders.

Mr. A. D. McPhillips (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, I did not realize for the moment that we had actually arrived at this order. I wish to say a few words about this rather extraordinary notice of motion.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Would the hon. member permit a question? Does he not think that if we were to have a vote on this matter now, in view of the protracted discussion which we have had, this would be desirable? We would be agreeable to going on with the government's request to continue with the discussion on the Atlantic development board measure. Let us have a vote now. We have had all the speeches we need. Let the house determine whether or not we should have this legal opinion.

Mr. Speaker: Notwithstanding what the hon. member has said with regard to his own motion, there are a lot of other items on the agenda for consideration under private members business. On the point that the hon. member raised, that we get back to the Atlantic development board, that is a matter for unanimous consent of the house, and there are a number of items on the order paper.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, the house must decide these things. We are all aware of what Your Honour pointed out. I ask simply that we dispose of this. Then I am sure that the house would give careful and sympathetic consideration to the proposal made privately by the government that we should go until six o'clock with the Atlantic development board legislation.

Mr. McPhillips: Mr. Speaker, I do not know what the hon. gentleman is speaking about. He mentions some private arrangement. If there is one, it has not been brought to my attention. I propose to say a few words on the motion, because as I said a moment ago, it is a most extraordinary motion. So that we can understand the remarks I propose to make, I should like to read this motion. The motion is:

> That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house copies of correspondence or any documents exchanged between the Prime Minister or the Minister of Finance or any other minister of the crown and officers of the Department of Justice or the privy council or any other government department or agency on the subject of surcharge and imports order, P.C. 1962-902, dated June 24, 1962, and the amendment to the surcharge and imports order, P.C. 1962-987, dated July 11, 1962 and the import control list as amended by P.C. 1962-903, dated June 24, 1962, with particular reference to the legality of such orders.

Now, traditionally on any matter of this kind there must be exceptional grounds shown, and certainly so far as this motion is concerned no grounds whatever are shown. My submission is simply this: that seven votes of no confidence have failed, and in essence the hon. member for Essex East is using this order as a political vehicle to renew his round of abuse upon the government and to bring up again an old debate which has been decided by seven previous votes. The economic position of Canada now as compared to what it was at the time in question here shows that the action taken by the government was abundantly justified.

I should now like to make reference to the statute dealing with the Department of Justice. It is chapter 71 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1952. Section 1, of course, merely provides that the act may be cited as the Department of Justice Act. Section 2 provides:

> (1) There shall be a department of the government of Canada called the Department of Justice over which the Minister of Justice of Canada appointed by commission under the great seal of Canada shall preside.
> (2) The Minister of Justice is ex officio Her Majesty's attorney general of Canada, holds office during pleasure, and has the management and direction of the Department of Justice.

Section 3 provides:

> (1) The governor in council may also appoint an officer called the deputy minister of justice to hold office during pleasure.
> (3) Such other officers, clerks and servants as are necessary for the proper conduct of the business of the department, shall be appointed in the manner authorized by law.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I am rising on a point of order. Your Honour earlier in the debate on this motion was very strict in your interpretation of the rules. Surely it is not competent for an hon. member to get up and begin to read a statute concerning the appointment of clerks, and so on, which—I have listened attentively to the hon. gentleman so far—seems to have no bearing whatsoever on the motion before us.

Mr. McPhillips: On the point of order; I very well remember what Your Honour said: that this was a neat, small point dealing with a legal opinion. That is why I am reading the statute, because the next section deals with something relating to that.

Mr. Speaker: I must confess that I was discussing another matter of business with an hon. member of the house and I am not fully aware of what the hon. member said. But I must point out to him, in all fairness to what I have said to the other hon. members in connection with this debate, that there is a narrow point at issue here as to whether or not these documents should be produced, for reasons advanced by either the one side or the other. There is no point as to what is behind the documents or as to what effect they should or should not have. While I am not prepared to say that what the hon. member was citing was out of order, I can assure the hon. member who has drawn this point of order to my attention that I will follow the remarks most attentively now that I have dispensed with the other matter, and I will ask the hon. member who has the floor to hew to the line very closely.

Mr. McPhillips: Mr. Speaker, I have just one other short reference to read, perhaps the most important one. Section 4 says:

The Minister of Justice shall
(a) be the official legal adviser of the Governor General and the legal member of Her Majesty's privy council for Canada;

It is to be noted that in this statute the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fleming) is one of three ministers who, besides being a minister, holds an office. Not only is he Minister of Justice, but he is Attorney General of Canada; just as the Minister of Finance (Mr. Nowlan) is also the Receiver General of Canada and has to lay matters before parliament; and as the Secretary of State (Mr. Halpenny) is Registrar General for Canada and has to lay matters before parliament. But there is nothing in the statute to require the Minister of Justice to lay anything before parliament in the matter of his position as legal adviser. Therefore the hon. member for Essex East is driven to this humble address to the crown in order to try to get a legal opinion.

Mr. Speaker, traditionally opinions of the law officers of the crown are not produced. They have been produced only in very few instances, and then on very sufficient grounds. Mr. Speaker, in my opinion the hon. member for Essex East has advanced not only insufficient grounds, but he has advanced no grounds at all. His whole argument has been one of renewed abuse on the government for a course of conduct. As far as I can see, nowhere has the hon. member produced any proper grounds.

Mr. Crestohl: Let parliament decide.

Mr. McPhillips: Parliament probably will decide.

Mr. Crestohl: Not by talking it out.

Mr. McPhillips: This point is very well set out in the sixteenth edition of Sir Erskine May's work on parliamentary practice at page 461. There is a paragraph there dealing with law officers' opinions, and we find this stated:

The opinions of the law officers of the crown, being confidential, are not usually laid before parliament or cited in debate; and their production has frequently been refused:

Then if we turn to page 270 we find this:

Parliament is invested with the power of ordering all documents to be laid before it, which are necessary for its information. Each house enjoys this authority separately, but not in all cases independently of the crown.

That is the sort of case we are dealing with now.

Accounts and papers relating to trade, finance, and general or local matters, are ordered directly, and are returned in obedience to the order of the house whence it was issued: but returns of matters connected with the exercise of the royal prerogative, are obtained by means of addresses to the crown.

The distinction between these two classes of returns should be borne in mind: as, on the one hand, it is irregular to order directly that which should be sought for by address; and, on the other, it is a compromise of the authority of parliament to resort to the crown for information which it can obtain by its own order. The application of the principle is not always clear: but, as a general rule, it may be stated that all public departments connected with the collection or management of the revenue, or which are under the control of the treasury, or are constituted or regulated by statute, may be reached by a direct order from either house of parliament: but that public officers and departments, subject to Her Majesty's secretaries of state or the privy council, are to receive their orders from the crown.

Then at page 273 we find this:

Returns may be moved for, either by order or address, relating to any public matter, in which the house or the crown has jurisdiction. They may be obtained from all public offices, and from corporations, bodies, or offices constituted for public purposes, by acts of parliament or otherwise: but not from private associations, such as Lloyd's, nor from individuals not exercising public functions. The papers and correspondence sought from government departments should be of a public and official character, and not private or confidential.

"On 3 July 1884, notice having been taken that the order for an address for a copy of Dr. Crichton Browne's treaties on education related to a private matter over which the house had no jurisdiction, and involved a question of copyright, the order was discharged."

The opinions of the law officers of the crown, given for the guidance of ministers, in any question of diplomacy or state policy, being included in the class of confidential documents, have generally been withheld from parliament.

"In 1858, this rule was, under peculiar and exceptional circumstances, departed from, and the opinions of the law officers of the crown upon the case of the Cagliari were laid before parliament."

I bring this matter to your attention, Mr. Speaker. This is one of the great authorities. This is the edition of 1957. Therefore, in 100 years there was only one instance of this kind.

However ample the power of each house to enforce the production of papers may be, a sufficient cause must be shown for the exercise of that power; and if considerations of public policy can be urged against a motion for papers, it is either withdrawn, or otherwise dealt with according to the judgment of the house.

In this instance, I would suggest to the hon. member for Essex East that this is or was a matter of state policy; and in this instance it would be in my opinion entirely proper if the hon. member would do as is suggested, namely withdraw the motion.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Is that a question?

Correspondence on Surcharges

(Translation):

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, it gives me pleasure to support the motion put forward by the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin).

It stands to reason that, if steps are taken to impose tariff surcharges in our country, the Canadian people should at least be informed. Even if, in the past, attempts have been made to keep voters in the dark about such questions and what was going on in parliament, I feel it is only normal to tell the public about the steps that have been taken and what has been done in the past.

It gives me all the more pleasure to support this motion that, since the beginning of this session, I have been in a position to admire the conduct of the hon. member for Essex East and to appreciate the fine speeches he has made. I have but one regret, and it is that the Liberals should not have seen fit to choose him as their leader, at their last convention, instead of the one they have now.

Mr. Habel: Tell us about Mr. Caouette and Mr. Thompson.

Mr. Gregoire: If the Liberals had seen fit to do so at that time, I think the Liberal party would have a better representation. All that, Mr. Speaker, to congratulate the hon. member for Essex East on his conduct in this house.

As far as I am concerned personally, and without mentioning other members of the group sitting in this corner of the house because each member of our party is free to do the same, I support the hon. member's proposal. But I must tell him that I intend to move an amendment to it because I think the motion for return does no go far enough. In fact, we should ask for the tabling, not only of the documents or legal opinions concerning tariff surcharges, but also of all documents necessary to set out the causes which brought about surcharges on imports. At the conclusion of my remarks, I intend to move an amendment to that effect.

Right after the election of last June 18, our country found itself in such a difficult position that the government was obliged to impose tariff surcharges on some imported goods. But that situation did not arise suddenly. On the contrary, it was due to causes that went back not only three or five years, but 10 or 15 years, to the end of the last war, that is 1945.

I would like to secure the production of all the documents that caused the flow of Canadian capital to foreign countries, that could explain steps taken since 1945, and more particularly in 1952.

[Mr. Martin (Essex East).]

Mr. Speaker, when faced with a situation similar to the one that arose suddenly before the Canadian people, last June 24, I cannot refrain from saying that the government was unable to solve the problem confronting it. I recognize also that it was too incompetent to solve it during the five years it has been in power. I recognize all that but, just the same, the underlying reasons for that situation date back to the period after the war, and particularly to the years 1945 to 1952. At that time, the Liberal party was in power and I am convinced and persuaded—because persuasion is stronger than conviction—that if documents were produced we would find that the flow of Canadian capital to foreign countries was due to action taken by the Liberal party between 1945 and 1952, in particular.

That is why, Mr. Speaker, I am asking that some light be thrown, not only on the present lack of efficiency of the government which is looking after this country's business, but also, and more particularly, on the lack of efficiency and action on the part of the Liberal government which preceded it, and which was the direct and immediate cause of the mess in which the Conservative government now finds itself.

Mr. Speaker, I think some light should be thrown on it all.

What is, after all, the cause of this flight of capital? It is that, for much too long a time, our rulers went outside this country to beg for funds at some time or other, and they now have to pay interest on this money. For much too long a time, also, our administrations, whether they were Grit or Tory —to me it is one and the same thing—acted in one and the same way. They did not carry out their responsibilities and they allowed foreign interests to settle in this country because they did not take the necessary steps to create Canadian capital. Today, when the measure is full, we see Canadian companies pay interest on foreign capital, and our governments, not only the federal government but the provincial governments as well, must, because of a lack of capital in Canada, issue bonds on foreign markets. The same thing applies to our municipal governments and school boards who went outside this country to sell their bonds. At the time, they were able to obtain funds, but come the day when they have to pay interest thereon, and reimburse that foreign capital, they find themselves in the same situation as the Conservative government was after the last election.

Mr. Speaker, we are asking that all those documents be produced, because we believe that those who are chiefly responsible, and who should have reacted before it was too late, because of a lack of efficiency and action—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Gregoire: —are again the members of the government which has—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Gregoire: —led us for 22 years.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

I must tell the hon. member that, in moving his motion, his remarks are limited to the tabling of papers, which has nothing to do with the reasons which have caused a government to act one way or another. I must admit that the hon. member's remarks are not in that line, because in moving an amendment, he deals at once with that matter which is out of order in the course of this debate. Then, if the hon. member can indicate that the government, for the same reasons, should produce the documents he requests, without however stating that some previous administrations have done something wrong or nothing of value—this is of little importance—but he must establish the reasons why the government should produce documents, I do not know what kind of documents—

Mr. Gregoire: I shall tell you what kind of documents, Mr. Speaker.

Now let me tell you, Mr. Speaker, that I find your remarks fair. As for me, in spite of all the respect I have for the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin)—and I trust you do believe me—I consider the production of simple legal documents as so much useless trouble. What is really needed is an assessment of the situation, to pinpoint its causes, so as to avoid its repetition in the future.

As I said at the outset, I am interested in the production of those legal opinions. We shall then see if the government was right or wrong in taking the steps it did take. I am interested in this but nevertheless, to my way of thinking, that is not the important point. The important point, Mr. Speaker, is to find out not only who is responsible but, above all, what caused the situation which arose after the election, in June 1962.

Now, as far as this production of documents is concerned, the documents which can establish the causes of the austerity program are those which indicate the principles at the basis of the program, or the actions which have brought it about. And it is important to us to bring those actions to light. They are two sets of actions: the borrowings on foreign markets, for want of capital in Canada, and the establishment of foreign companies in our country. Those were the two main causes of the flight of our capital to foreign countries.

Now, which documents are liable to show whether the two causes I have just referred to are really those which are responsible for the draining of Canadian currencies towards foreign countries.

These documents are the following: in the first place, the series of bonds issued by the federal government, various provincial governments, municipalities and school boards, which were sold on foreign markets and bought by foreigners in New York, in Paris, in Switzerland and elsewhere.

Second, what interest was paid to those foreigners on bonds issued by the different levels of government I have indicated earlier?

Third, it would be a good thing to see how much foreign capital has been entering Canada since, let us say, 1945 or even 1942, in the form of investments for the development of:

(a) our natural resources;

(b) our industries and manufactures; and

(c) our financial institutions, that is, insurance companies, finance corporations, loan companies, etc.

When we have all those documents, Mr. Speaker, and if you allow me two minutes, I shall prove my assertion.

Mr. Speaker: I would just like to ask the hon. member how he can connect his request for that information with the documents mentioned in this order for return.

The hon. member for Essex East is not asking for information but for the tabling of documents which, according to him, truly exist. The hon. member for Essex East claims that those documents truly exist.

Is it the contention of the hon. member for Lapointe that the documents and information he requests exist at the present time?

Mr. Gregoire: Naturally, they exist. I am sure of that, Mr. Speaker.

Correspondence on Surcharges

I say that if the federal and provincial governments have offered those bonds on foreign markets, there are documents in that connection. Furthermore, those documents must be in the records of the Department of National Revenue, in Ottawa.

Then, they exist there. Let them look in the files under the title "foreign capital invested in Canada" and if they do not find them there, the only solution will be to hire qualified personnel for the national revenue department.

But such documents must exist. I would even say that they do, because there is an awareness in that place of all capital entering Canada, as expenditures or as investments in our country.

That is why I say that those documents exist and they are the ones we want to see placed at the disposal of the hon. members of this house.

Now what are those documents? They are the documents in the national revenue department. Because it is mentioned here:

or of any other government department or agency—

be it the customs or the federal income tax department.

What are the amounts of money which have been paid out of Canada since 1942 in interests on bonds issued by: (a) the Canadian government; (b) the provincial governments; (c) school boards; (d) municipal corporations?

What are the interests on all those bonds which have been paid to foreign corporations because those securities have been sold on the foreign market?

That is the first series of documents which we want tabled, and those documents do exist.

The second series of documents which we want tabled in this house are those showing the interest paid to or the profits made by foreign companies established in Canada since 1942—let us forget about those which were established before, to concentrate on those companies established since 1942 in Canada—and the profits which left the country. Such documents exist because all profits on foreign capital are taxable before they are transferred to foreign countries.

When those documents are tabled in the house, Mr. Speaker, the conclusion can then be reached that when the Conservative government came into power, it found itself at grips with conditions which had been brought about by the previous government. Then, Mr. Speaker, the present government found out that it was in trouble because of the previous government, and it was not competent enough to cope with that situation.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Gregoire: That, Mr. Speaker, is what we are suggesting in our amendment.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I must point out to the hon. member that his remarks are completely out of order, since he is dealing with a matter which has nothing to do with the resolution introduced by the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin).

Furthermore, even if the hon. member had introduced an amendment, I would have had to tell him that it was absolutely out of order, since, according to standing order 41: "Forty eight hours' notice shall be given of a motion for leave to present a bill, resolution or address", and we are precisely dealing here with an address to Her Majesty for a return of certain documents.

Mr. Gregoire: You could not have said it earlier?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is now asking for the production of certain documents. I do not intend to go into the merits of that request, which I find somewhat strange, but even without considering the nature of such documents, he cannot introduce an amendment unless he himself gives a 48-hours' notice.

I would therefore point out to the hon. member that, under standing order 41, he may table his notice in the clerk's office before 6 o'clock p.m., after which his amendment may be considered.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: I very much regret, but the hon. member cannot discuss the motion any longer, his time being expired.

Mr. Gregoire: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I spoke for 15 minutes, and I think there remains several minutes unspent in the period which was allotted to me, and which you have been kind enough to take yourself.

Mr. Speaker: Not at all. An hon. member cannot require an additional period of time because he has infringed the rules; he certainly cannot be granted any indulgence.

(Text):

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I am led to say immediately, "nice try". There was not any doubt in my mind about the course of action which should be followed with regard to this particular motion. If there had been it was dispelled by listening to the hon. member for Victoria, B.C. (Mr. McPhillips), who spoke at the commencement of this hour. His eloquence, his fervour, the intimacy with which he approached this question, convinced me beyond the shadow of a doubt that the motion should be voted upon, and we should vote for it.

Mr. R. G. L. Fairweather (Royal): I am glad to contribute to the debate, Mr. Speaker, which I think is related to a fundamental principle. The hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Gregoire), who just preceded me—no, who preceded me save one: We had a hiccup from the hon. member for Skeena and from the hon. member for Lapointe we had something that reminded me of a child's cough. Once it is wound up it is difficult to get it to stop, the best thing to do is let it unwind.

An hon. Member: How are we going to get you to stop?

Mr. Fairweather: I will stop at the end of my time.

I think the hon. member for Lapointe has misinterpreted the reason for the stand taken by the government. This stand is not based upon keeping facts from the voters as he suggested. The voters have had since September 27 to listen to the facts leading up to the enactment of these orders in council. There is a very important principle involved. It seems to me that to compel the production of legal opinions furnished by the deputy attorney general or by the attorney general, as we have been advised, to his minister and to the privy council, would be a breach, as was suggested by my hon. friend for Victoria, B.C., of the traditions of this house and of Westminster.

The hon. member for Essex East, in proposing the motion was not under the slightest illusion that it would be rejected. Had the situation been reversed, had the hon. member for Essex East who is a master of the rules and a senior member of the house, been occupying the treasury benches, I can well imagine the excellent presentation he would have made, in refusing to make public the information that he now seeks. I was going to say "seeks" with some cynicism but I will not impute motives.

I should like to say a word or two on the related sample cited by the hon. member for Essex East concerning Mr. Guthrie, the minister of justice in the Bennett administration. I submit that the present Minister of Justice (Mr. Fleming) has given the house exactly the same information about the validity of the 1962 orders in council covered by the motion before us today as Mr. Guthrie gave in that earlier day. The only difference I suggest is that in 1935 it was felt necessary by the administration, presumably because of the somewhat radical and unorthodox statute, to go beyond the lawyers in the Department of Justice in order to seek legal opinions from two of the most eminent constitutional authorities in the country. I submit, with great deference, that was a proper thing for Mr. Guthrie to have done on that occasion because this was outside information or information from an authority outside the ambit of the department. It was quite right that this information become public.

However, in this instance there is an attempt to make public a communication between a public servant and his minister. This attempt is straining the precedent far beyond its fair and proper limits. I could say, with the greatest respect, that I feel the hon. member for Essex East failed to make a full disclosure when submitting examples and precedents to support his argument. I would have preferred a complete exposition of the Guthrie and St. Laurent incidents, rather than his presenting only those parts of the argument which were helpful to his case. After all, this court of parliament demands complete frankness by the advocate, just as it is demanded by the courts elsewhere.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Fairweather: Yes.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Is the hon. gentleman trying to suggest now that the St. Laurent case, which was proceeded with pursuant to an order of the house, is not on all fours with the demand now before the house?

Mr. Fairweather: I submit that in citing the St. Laurent and Guthrie incidents, the hon. member, who has tremendous experience, did not give a full account—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That is not my question. Does my hon. friend not think, if he appreciates the value of precedent, that the St. Laurent case is on all fours with the demand made in this motion?

Mr. Fairweather: My interpretation of the St. Laurent case is obviously different from that of the hon. member, and I would hope some day we would have an opportunity in another place for a philosophical discussion about it.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I never expect to go to the other place.

Mr. Fairweather: I continue now, Mr. Speaker, with my modest contribution to this important public issue. It seems to me there are some intriguing features of this debate because while hon. members opposite seek to throw doubt on the legality of the action of the privy council, that is, on the orders in council, nowhere in the country has any person or corporation affected sought a judicial interpretation of the statutes, or orders passed by virtue of these statutes.

In his November 22 contribution to the debate the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) said that the Prime Minister refuses to recognize that the courts even exist. I submit that it could be said, and with equal validity, that the importing concerns directly affected by the surcharges refuse to recognize the existence of the courts. If I could be permitted to venture a conjecture I would suggest there are a great number of legal opinions in the files of commercial firms right across the country recommending against challenging the validity of the orders in council. The statutes have not yet—

Mr. Pickersgill: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman is now embarking on a discussion as to whether or not this taxation was legally imposed. His Honour, the Speaker, declined to permit that kind of discussion in the debate up to now, and restricted those of us on this side of the house to the narrow point as to whether a legal opinion given by the deputy attorney general should be produced. I submit that the ex-attorney general from New Brunswick should be restricted in the same way as other hon. members in the house.

Mr. Fairweather: I thank the hon. member for his assistance to me. I anticipated, when I set down one or two notes about this aspect of my argument, that there might be a question of order raised. Therefore I re-read the debates of November 8 and November 22 and found, with the greatest respect, Mr. Speaker, quite an amount of latitude. However, I am prepared to come perhaps a little closer to the point.

I feel, as one who had some experience in another place—and I thank the hon. member for his reference—that it would be a very grave handicap to place on public servants, if it were known that various aspects of the advice they tendered would be subject to public scrutiny.

Mr. Robichaud: Would the hon. member permit a question, in view of what he has just said? He has referred to his past responsibility in another place. Will he inform the house was he once the attorney general of a provincial government where private members were not allowed to introduce private bills?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I cannot believe that.

Mr. Pickersgill: No wonder he does not want legal advice scrutinized.

Mr. Fairweather: Mr. Speaker, I am quite a patient elephant in spite of the interruption of the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr Robichaud), who has not had the type of responsibility that both his distinguished colleagues sitting in front of him have had. I think if the hon. member reflected he would be just as concerned as I am about the prospect of advice or opinions tendered by public servants, no matter whether they are at the provincial or federal level, being subject to the scrutiny of the country at large. Surely the hon. members opposite who have had treasury bench experience must know this. They have had opportunities of being presented with various types of advice setting out the different implications of a particular course of action, it then being up to them to make the final decision. That is why I think it is quite wrong for this type of motion to be cynically introduced. If this type of motion were allowed to pass it would be a serious hamstringing of the public servants.

The law officers' essential obligations are to give the ministry the benefit of all sides of an argument, and I would be appalled if that should be restricted by the possibility—and it would be more than a possibility, it would be inevitable were this motion to pass—that these opinions would be examined by anyone with an interest in them. There is no mystery behind this doctrine. It has been previously supported by distinguished parliamentarians, and it was very eloquently supported by the Minister of Justice on November 8. The yielding of this procedural principle would, I suggest, bring about results far more harmful to our country and its system of government than those who present this motion, so ominously shall I say, might believe possible. On this basis I oppose the motion.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I am sure now that—

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has already spoken in the debate.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Yes, and I am closing now. I have started my speech.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): You have not.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am closing—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I was momentarily tongue-tied trying to remember the constituency of the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Nugent), for which I am very sorry. I had to check the chart to refresh my memory. I saw that hon. member first and I shall give him the floor.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): The hon. member for Essex East cannot speak a second time.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to the hon. gentleman speaking, but I would point out to Your Honour that I had started to make an observation and under our practice I would close the debate. As I intended to speak for two or three minutes only we would have a vote on this important matter. I would hope that the Minister of Justice, anxious for orderly procedure, would indicate that we are going to be afforded the opportunity of voting on this matter tonight. The government is anxious to get the business of the house dispatched and proceeded with. I am sure he is not going to stand in the way of a decision in this matter. If he does, then I point out to him that he will be living evidence of the obstruction which hon. gentlemen have charged some other people in this house with having pursued during the past few days.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I would remind the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin) that had I indeed recognized him, which I did not, I would have first cautioned the house that if the hon. member for Essex East spoke he would close the debate. I only mention that point to ameliorate his sensitivity on it. I now recognize the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Nugent).

Mr. Terry Nugent (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the hon. member for Essex East knew exactly how much sympathy his eloquent plea was going to receive from this side of the house—I really am—looking at the way in which this notice of motion is drawn. I am not very optimistic that even when he first put it in he had very much hope, or any hope whatsoever, that it would be passed. In fact, following the course of action which he himself took when on the treasury benches, I am sure he put the objectionable features into this notice of motion to guard even more against that contingency.

On a topic such as this I am always a little disturbed. My immediate reaction to a notice of motion for production of papers is usually that they should be produced. Public business should be publicly done; that is an old maxim that we like to stick closely to. The first reaction to a request for production of papers is to say yes, because the more we can see of what is being done and the more information and background we can get of government action, the better position we are in to judge that action, to judge the course of conduct of the government and the particular consequences of any action at which we are looking. There is, of course, quite a conflict in this case because we do have—this has been recognized over the years—the necessity of seeing that certain parts of government opinions, etc., are not made public. It is not hard to find examples, such as in wartime when government plans on defence and certain other things must be kept secret or lose their value to some extent, or perhaps entirely, because they are revealed. This—

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the hon. gentleman would permit me to ask him a question? Would he include in the category of documents that he feels should be kept secret confidential economic forecasts for the guidance of ministers only?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That is irrelevant. Are you trying to delay this?

Mr. Nugent: I think the hon. member will see, Mr. Speaker, when I get to that point, that there is no similarity. We have seen over the years that each case is going to have to be judged on its merits, or that if there is a rule, the rule is varied perhaps a little bit when special cases are taken into consideration. I would think that when the case concerns the production of a legal opinion we are treading on very dangerous ground indeed. It is not the same thing as the publication of facts presented or gathered by a department. Any kind of an opinion would, I think, have to be treated in a very different manner than merely factual material.

The importance of the civil servant making sure that he can freely speak his mind, and will have to justify it only to his own department and his own minister, cannot be overrated. Certainly if a public servant is to give an opinion which is going to be broadcast to the nation and which may, in effect, be fought over in the house, where his judgment—not the judgment or the action of the government, but his judgment—is going to be the essence of a debate, then he is going to be very reluctant to give the advice or the opinion, or he is going to be much slower in formulating it. He is going to be very careful before he does anything of this kind and the immediate result would be a great slowing down, I would say, of the giving of opinions by departmental officials.

Mr. Matheson: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. member if he would consider that a course of conduct on the part of the government which was in direct conflict with sections 12 and 14 of magna carta of 1215, and section 4 of the bill of rights of 1689 would not constitute such an exception as to warrant a request for a legal opinion?

Mr. Nugent: Mr. Speaker, I am always glad to have the hon. member, under the guise of asking a question, put in a partisan speech. The principle we are discussing here is not the legality of the taxation question—if I understood the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill) correctly, the debate should be restricted to this—but we are here talking about the production of papers, and I am trying to keep on that point.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, since the hon. gentleman has drawn me into this, I wonder if I could ask him another question? Does the hon. gentleman think it is more apt to prejudice the public interest to bring down the decision given to the attorney general of Canada than to bring down the detailed statement of our reserves which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Nowlan), showing a regard for parliament that is not shown by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fleming), did quite recently, although it must be admitted, Mr. Speaker, that he has also subsequently allowed a motion to pass without—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Pickersgill: The minister is not going to shout me down.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. gentleman agreed to a question and I am asking the question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am not going to be shouted down by the Minister of Justice.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It is well known that it is an offence to the Chair if hon. members remain on their feet while the Speaker is on his feet. First of all, dealing with the question that it was not relevant to the point under discussion, the Minister of Justice had risen on that point of order, I believe.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I was rising, rather on a point of order in this connection. The hon. member rose to ask leave of the hon. member who had the floor to ask a question. Having that courtesy extended to him, he did not proceed to ask a question but he proceeded to make a speech in the plainest and most deliberate violation of the rules of the house. That was not the first time it was done today; it was done by the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Matheson) and by the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin). I urge, Mr. Speaker, that when that courtesy is extended to hon. members opposite by a member who has the floor, the courtesy should be recognized as one that extends to the asking of a question, and not to the smuggling of a speech into the record.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Let us have a vote.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, since the point of order has been raised I would suggest that Your Honour and the member who accords the privilege should be allowed to decide these matters, without the intervention of the self-appointed Speaker who has been somewhat unemployed since he has been Minister of Justice.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It being six o'clock I do now leave the chair. At eight o'clock the house will revert to the business that was interrupted at five o'clock.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

ATLANTIC DEVELOPMENT BOARD

PROVISION FOR DEFINITION OF DUTIES, APPOINTMENT OF MEMBERS, ETC.

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton) for the second reading of Bill No. C-94, to provide for the establishment of an Atlantic development board.

(Translation):

Mr. Laureat Maltais (Saguenay): Mr. Speaker, it was not my intention to speak about Bill C-94, to provide for the establishment of an Atlantic development board, but since several members who have already spoken on this matter mentioned the area I represent, namely the Saguenay district, I feel bound to make a few comments.

Mr. Speaker, the bill now under discussion provides for the establishment of another board to study the Atlantic area which includes, according to some hon. members, the maritime provinces, Newfoundland and the ridings of Saguenay and of the Gaspe peninsula.

I should like to point out, first of all, that there are already in the areas mentioned of the province of Quebec, two bodies concerned with regional economic studies, namely the lower St. Lawrence economic council and the gulf and lower St. Lawrence development organization, which perform at present the same duties as the board proposed in the bill now under consideration.

Mr. Speaker, I am not against the establishment of such a board to serve the district that I represent; I am all for it. But, although I agree with the principle of the bill, I cannot accept it in its present wording.

It is proposed to create a five member board, only the chairman of which will be paid $3,000 a year.

Mr. Speaker, if we consider the region that this council will serve, from an economic as well as a geographical standpoint, we realize that it will not be able to be effective, since its means are limited. In my opinion, what should be established is an economic council which would include those who already exist and which would have a budget enabling it to offer adequate salaries to its officials, its chairman, secretary and any other, in order to cover that territory. Because with $3,000, no one would succeed in covering even half of it.

Now, Mr. Speaker, while I am in favour of the principle of the bill, I do not agree with its substance, and, on third reading, I might have amendments to submit to make it more efficient.

If the Saguenay, lower St. Lawrence and Gaspe areas are incorporated in the bill, changes which have not been considered by the hon. members will have to be made to the work program of the board.

In the first place, there is the matter of a bridge across the Saguenay river. There lies the greatest obstacle to the development of the north shore. Everybody is of the opinion that such a bridge would cost $25 million. Then, there is the urgent need of a highway between the Saguenay area and Blanc Sablon. Such a road should go straight to Newfoundland by means of a causeway across the strait of Belle Isle.

At the present time, Mr. Speaker, the development of the north shore is hampered by the lack of communication between the areas. The highway does not go beyond Sept Iles and there is another 600 miles to Blanc Sablon, the point nearest to Newfoundland.

It is essential that this board be able to take effective steps to have a road built in co-operation with the Department of National Defence because such a road would be used for the defence of North America since it would serve the whole eastern part of the province of Quebec.

The causeway to link Blanc Sablon to Newfoundland, advocated by a professor at the agricultural school of St. Anne de la Pocatiere, would improve the climate in the province of Quebec, for as he said, experts have found that if that causeway were built, the temperature would gain a few degrees, which would be an asset for agriculture since the farming season could begin earlier and last longer, particularly in the Gaspe peninsula and on the north shore.

Another undertaking that should be added to the program of that board is the construction of a railway between La Malbaie and Sept Iles. At the present time, there is no railway linking that region to the rest of the province.

Mr. Speaker, it might be said in reply that water transportation is cheaper than rail transportation, but it has been proven that railways stimulate the development of underdeveloped regions.

In my opinion, the government must recognize the principle that communications must exist before economic development can be achieved, and that it is not the other way around. The government has to take the necessary action with regard to communications in that region of the province.

Some kind of planning is required within the government itself. I do not know if that is socialism, but as a start there should be planning of the government itself, planning of the activities of the various departments, in the same way as we are trying to plan the economic development of this country.

Governmental activities have always followed the economic development in a given area. The government is forced by companies to establish means of communications, once the industries themselves are established. Both provincial and federal governments are forced to establish communications, so that industries can remain in touch with the rest of the province.

That is the first kind of planning the government should establish. I must say here that we have before us now a government which is trying to set up what I would describe as mitigated planning. It wants to plan and, at the same time, it doesn't want to; it is in favour of the principles of planning without actually planning.

I should prefer a government which would say exactly what it has in mind. We could then mount a frontal attack against it.

As the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas) said this afternoon, there are four commissions whose functions are overlapping, while it would be much better to have only one which would direct its activities where they could be the most effective.

As I said at the beginning of my remarks, I had not prepared myself for a long speech. I do not want to delay the proceedings of the house, but I should like to say that I endorse the principle of the bill. However, I may take the liberty of introducing an amendment on third reading.

(Text):

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, it is very interesting to listen to the hon. member for Saguenay (Mr. Maltais) who just took his seat, and to observe how, with such great affection, he embraced a part of the socialist program. Perhaps he should communicate those ideas to his co-leaders on the front benches in order that they may get on the right track or the wrong track, as the case may be.

I wish generally to indicate our support for the bill itself at this stage. While I come from the other part of the country, namely the Pacific coast, none the less since I have been here not only during these last few days but in previous sessions, as have some other hon. members who are not immediately familiar with the situation in the Atlantic provinces, I have listened with a great deal of interest to the problems which have been related to parliament by members coming from those provinces. While only on three occasions have I had the opportunity to visit two of the Atlantic provinces, none the less I think that all hon. members, although we may not actually have been in contact with those provinces at all in a physical way, appreciate greatly the difficulties which have existed there for a long period of time. We have heard in this house many pleas by members from those areas with regard to the high levels of unemployment which have existed over the past many years, including not only those since June of 1957 but many prior to that time.

We have heard and read a great deal about the so-called runaway industries which leave the maritimes or the Atlantic area in order to relocate or to open plants in southern Ontario, and thus leave behind them a group of people who are unemployed. We have heard a great deal about industries being closed. I refer to the coal mines and the steel industry. We have heard about the difficulties encountered in the fishing industry and the like. We have an understanding of and a sympathy with those difficulties, if only in a vicarious way, having listened to members in years past and now notably to my colleague from Cape Breton South, explaining the problems which exist there.

Without being unkind in any way I think we could perhaps say that the Atlantic provinces, as a geographic area in Canada, are perhaps, as they have been for some time in the past, the most depressed area in Canada, or the one which has the greatest economic difficulties and the highest continuing levels of unemployment, without the possibility of those people who are unemployed finding gainful employment. Having regard to these conditions which have prevailed and worsened over the years, it is rather sad in one sense to listen to these two old blind parties, one in government and the other hopefully expectant of getting there, rail against each other as being the cause of these economic difficulties.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Peters: It sounds as though a lot of people are mourning.

Mr. Howard: Yes; it does sound like that. I cannot think of a party better qualified to be in mourning than the Liberal party. The sad part of it is that for as long as there have been governments in those provinces, they have been either of one or the other party. Unfortunately, also, for as long as there have been governments in Canada, they have been either of one or the other party. As the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam, who spoke before the supper hour, said in reference to each blaming the other, each finds itself in agreement with the other. There was recognition—speaking from memory I believe it was perhaps in 1953—when the present Minister of Forestry and Minister of National Revenue was premier of one of those provinces, when steps were taken, exploratory at first, but eventually to establish what is known as the Atlantic provinces economic council which consisted then, as it consists now, of people representing business and industry and with the sanction and blessing of the governments in those provinces. Undoubtedly this step was necessitated by the fact that those provinces and the people in them found themselves in increasingly greater and more difficult economic circumstances. As a result, as economic conditions became so bad, even the governments, reluctant as they might have been, were forced into a recognition of the necessity of dealing with this question of the economy of the Atlantic provinces by way of government intervention or government activity.

Ever since I heard of it or read of it the Atlantic provinces economic council has intrigued me. I have read something of the studies which it has undertaken and the things which it has proposed. If I may do so, I should like to make a brief reference to one of the publications issued in January of this year entitled, "Incentives for manufacturing industry". Perhaps in that way, using the words of this council itself, I can bring hon. members to appreciate why we endorse the concepts contained within this particular bill. Even though it has failures in it, even though at a subsequent stage we may make specific reference to parts of the bill which we think are a little bit weak, none the less, perhaps by referring to the Atlantic provinces economic council and its proposals we can come to understand why this is in fact a step in the direction of planning, the socialist concept which we in the New Democratic party and those previously in the C.C.F. have advocated for so many years, and which finally is coming to be accepted even by our friends in the Social Credit party who espouse just the opposite point of view. Let me read first from this booklet—and these are not my words, my ideas or the ideas of the New Democrats but the ideas of the Atlantic provinces economic council, the ideas of industry in these provinces, of free enterprise and of the political parties forming the governments in these provinces. They have this to say:

> A development program for Canada's four eastern provinces must be bold, massive and well co-ordinated. Governments must take the initiative—

This is a plea, if you will, on the part of the so-called free enterprisers and free enterprise parties for government control, government regulation, government initiative, government intervention. I continue the quotation:

> —and it is imperative that the federal government be active in formulating, financing and administering a regional development program.

It goes on to make reference to the necessity of the federal government establishing a capital fund to assist in making what they call basic improvements in the capital structure both in the public and the private sectors. They make reference to the necessity of having a system of loans and grants for the purchase and acquisition of industrial machinery and equipment. They go into the field of transportation assistance and refer also to adequate vocational and technical programs to equip labour with the necessary skills and the like. Throughout page after page of this booklet they make such recommendations and plead for government intervention, government regulation and government co-ordination of the activities there in order to provide circumstances as a result of which the economy of that part of the country will be raised again to a decent level.

They talk throughout of the necessity for federal participation and how essential it is for the federal government to participate in financing, research, regional development and so on. Some of the latter words of this booklet have to do with the assessment of situations. They talk about selecting industries for assistance. Let me read a word or two from this part:

> In all cases, however, an assessment will have to be made of each applicant industry's prospect for success. Assistance should be restricted to those industries, and those firms, which have reasonable prospects of operating successfully, without assistance, after a period of time.

That is a direct plea for government regulation, government co-ordination. They go on to say:

> In addition, assisted industries should be those that would form part of the economic base of the region and should not include service industries, such as retail establishments and financial institutions, and those industries whose growth proceeds automatically with increases in population.

They are advocating a selective program of government assistance and government regulation and intervention. I could read many other quotations from this particular document issued in January of this year, but I think those few should be sufficient to indicate that even the so-called free enterprisers in business themselves, even the political parties in the Atlantic provinces, as reluctant, right wing and reactionary as they may be, have come to the conclusion by reason of terrible economic circumstances that government must get into this particular field and offer assistance. This is precisely what we have been saying for many years, and in the face of the most violent opposition not too many years ago. This appears odd indeed to me; but while, as I said, the bill is weak in some cases and while we will attempt to draw these weaknesses to the attention of the committee when we reach the particular clauses, nevertheless it is a basic step in the direction of planning, co-ordinating and assisting from the government level in the economic development of a section of this country.

When I listened to the Liberals opposing this bill—we will know better whether they are opponents when it comes to a vote—condemning it upside down and this way and that, and condemning the government for bringing it in while at the same time saying that the government stole it from their own program, it makes me wonder how much lack of truth there can be in one political party. As I said earlier, as far as I am concerned the bill warrants our support and endorsation, and we hope we can correct the weaknesses at a later stage.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the house ready for the question? Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton) seconded by Mr. Dinsdale, moves that Bill C-94, an act to provide for the establishment of an Atlantic development board—

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Howard: Is the minister not going to speak in reply and close the debate?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Timiskaming.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I just want to say a few words on this bill because I am very interested in the subject not only because I have been to the maritimes and have seen some of their problems but because of the larger problems we face in Canada today, in that Canada is divided into two types of economy, that in which the people have too much and that in which they do not have enough. The maritime provinces are one of the oldest developed parts of Canada, a part of Canada that had a history long before most of our other areas were developed. I believe they can be classed as older have-nots, while on the other hand some of us represent areas that can be classed as newer have-nots, and I think I represent one of those areas.

One of our problems has always been the fact that economists have said that trade cannot be east and west from the Atlantic to the Pacific but must flow north and south, and that for some queer reason the economics and the geography of the country indicate that there has to be such a trend. It seems to me that all of a sudden the government has decided to do something about this. I was very interested in the booklet from which the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) quoted a few minutes ago, because I feel it could have been written by the former C.C.F. party. I was aware when I was in the maritimes that the people on this council represented business, the universities and the educational field generally as well as all other fields of activity. I was also aware that these people from different organizations were pledged to see how much good they could do with the amount of money available in that area. They have always said as we have said that Canada cannot be divided into parts and dealt with in that way. I really see no reason why the jurisdiction of the national economic development council could not be extended so that body could do for the maritimes what we hope it is going to do for the rest of Canada. I expect that the government decided the problem is more immediate in the maritimes than elsewhere. For this reason they have introduced a bill to establish a board which, if successful, will duplicate the work of the national economic development council.

I have been interested in the remarks made by the members of the Conservative party from the maritimes and the members of the Liberal party from that area. I do not disagree with the things that have been said by members of the Liberal party. One of the members of that party suggested a couple of days ago that if this board were going to be any good to the people of the maritimes it would need at least a billion dollars. I believe the people of the maritimes are right and the government has to give some indication that there is going to be this type of money available, perhaps not that much, to stimulate economic development in the maritimes.

When I was in the maritimes I had the opportunity of speaking to several representatives of the chamber of commerce in the town of Springhill. They took me to some of the plants that have been started by this Atlantic provinces economic council. I was surprised to ascertain how much money was involved in several of these plants.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. May I ask if we are considering divorce bills or are we talking about the problem of Atlantic development?

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, this is an example of the reason the maritimes have been that backward. Some, like the hon. member for Saint John-Albert actually do not understand the English language. He would not know whether he was coming or going, whether he was in Ottawa or in the maritimes. He does not know whether we are on private member's business, because he is not capable of making that kind of decision. Frankly, he and a lot of the other members who have represented this area in this house have never known where they are going—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order; perhaps under the stress of the interruption, the hon. member has strayed from the subject matter under debate. He might adhere to the rule of relevancy now.

Mr. Peters: I was just answering a question.

I was surprised to find out how much money was involved in putting a person to work in a plant which has been established by the Atlantic provinces economic council. I agree that under circumstances where you are not tying the industry into any basic national resource but are taking an industry to people who need employment, the amount of money needed might be quite large. I think this is the problem with which we are faced in the Atlantic provinces. For many, many years, actually for centuries, the Atlantic provinces have been known for their mines, their forest resources, their fruit and vegetable production and the production of fish. Most industries that have developed over the years have been connected with these natural resources. Now that these natural resources have been used up the people in communities dependant on these resources are now faced with the problem of continuing their existence and they cannot do this without government assistance, without the assistance provided by a measure such as we are talking about tonight. It seems to me this is a proper method of handling the problem.

I do believe if we are going to establish this board, then we should be prepared to put the necessary money into it to ensure its success. We have in Canada, and on the North American continent as a whole, developed our industries around two or three major areas. There has been, as a result, a rush to increase the concentration of these industries. This has proven to be detrimental to most of the outside areas of our country. Our country is still a very large, unpopulated nation and because of this it has been difficult to get the consumption of our goods in the areas of production. There has been a tendency, of course, to put our major manufacturing industries into three main centres, and that has been detrimental to the other areas.

I am very interested, Mr. Speaker, in seeing some success achieved in the maritimes. I am interested in this because only then will it be possible to develop the area that I represent. This area now faces a problem which the maritimes has had for many years. We hear a great deal about the displacement of labour in the maritime coal mines and in other industries, and that is what is taking place in many other areas of Canada. In my own riding, we are faced with a large number of lay-offs every year as a result of the closing of some mines. Many of our communities were built upon non-renewable resources, and they are faced with the problem of either becoming ghost towns or finding some form of government assistance that will provide the necessary capital to enable the necessary research to be conducted to develop other industries.

It seems to me that in the maritimes they have waited a long time for this type of development. The maritimes have developed a new breed of person. I suggest that the Minister of Forestry (Mr. Flemming), who is very interested in this problem, is one of that new breed. He has been very interested over the years in the Atlantic provinces economic council. Here, for the first time, we have an organization developed by the people themselves to help themselves. They are now coming to the federal government for assistance. I certainly hope we will give them whatever assistance is necessary.

Again, Mr. Speaker, I wonder why we have to have this piece of legislation on a regional basis. I am not sure that the national economic development board could not have provided on a national basis what we are trying to do through this board on a regional basis. We, in the New Democratic party, have always said we could supply the economic planning necessary to take care of all parts of Canada, as well as any other assistance that was necessary for the equal development of all parts of our country. I still believe that this can be done. I wonder why it has not been possible for the present Conservative government to do this, to introduce a measure, national in scope, such as we are demanding for the Atlantic region, so that this type of assistance could be extended to all the underdeveloped parts of our nation. We will build a nation, Mr. Speaker, despite the actions of some of the entrepreneurs in this country, despite some of our governments who are giving away our national resources. I suggest we can and will eventually do this. I further suggest that the establishment of the Atlantic development board will act as a guidepost for other areas, and in fact for all parts of Canada which are faced with problems similar to those found in the Atlantic region. We hope that this board will be a success and bring industries to the maritimes to enable them to establish a healthy economy.

I hope the government will not hesitate to provide the necessary money from the treasury to see that this is done. If it is done then we will build this country from coast to coast, and we will also do what the hon. member for Saguenay (Mr. Maltais) suggested, namely, increase our transportation and communication systems so that we will have a united nation from coast to coast. If the establishment of this board will in any way hasten the day when all Canada will find itself able to avail itself of the type of resources provided by national governments in most countries of the world, then the house can be assured of our support for this measure.

(Translation):

Mr. J.-E. Dube (Restigouche-Madawaska): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a few remarks on second reading of Bill C-94, an act to provide for the establishment of an Atlantic development board.

I did not think it proper for some hon. members, when discussing this bill to unearth old political quarrels, buried in the past, in order to blame such and such administration for the unfortunate conditions which are now prevailing in our maritime provinces.

An hon. Member: Hear, hear.

Mr. Dube: Our past should rather be a springboard to the future.

We remember that, at the time of confederation, the maritime provinces had to give up a great part of their sovereignty and of their foreign markets.

Confederation was at that time and perhaps is, even now, an historic structure defying every economic and geopolitical principle of the day. According to geography and economics at that time, a vertical, north-south trade was much more appropriate than a horizontal one from the Atlantic provinces to the west.

The Atlantic provinces therefore sacrificed part of their natural trade to form a great nation.

From the point of view of national pride, that sacrifice had marvellous results. The provinces of New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island, and more recently Newfoundland, are proud of having contributed to the formation and development of our Canadian heritage.

However, from an economic point of view, the maritimes made the greatest sacrifice, and a very costly sacrifice it was. The natural laws of trade gradually channelled prosperity towards the geographical centre of the nation, forsaking the Atlantic area.

Mr. Speaker, we all know that a large part of our population in the maritimes has to find its subsistence in those three marginal activities that are small scale farming, fishing and logging. This means that a great number of our people must be, at the same time, farmers, fishermen and lumberjacks.

In the commercial and industrial fields, lack of capital and distance, which means transportation costs, paralyse our development.

We are familiar with our own problems and the important thing is to find some solution for them.

Though it was ridiculous, yesterday and today, to claim in the house that certain political parties had done nothing for the maritime provinces since confederation, it would be no less ridiculous to maintain tonight that the bill before us will bring about a lasting, final, total and complete solution of all our problems.

This bill alone is not the key which will open the door to prosperity for us, but it may help us find the way. Therefore, it deserves our consideration. First of all, two principles should be established.

First, the establishment of the Atlantic development board should not be just an excuse to delay basic and urgent action concerning the immediate needs of the maritimes.

Second, this bill should not be just a smoke-screen to hide the activities of the government and get a few more votes at the next election, as seems to have been the case with the construction of the causeway, in Prince Edward Island, which was promised last spring.

A number of questions come to our mind and we should like to have answers from the minister in that connection.

In the first place, we should like to know exactly what authority the board will have. Its terms of reference seem rather vague. Will it be just another board like the others which have been set up from coast to coast, in Canada, to give to the government advice which is disregarded and which does not produce any results.

If this organization is simply going to do research work and give advice to the government, then, we already have one with similar functions, namely APEC.

There is also the matter of salary. It seems to me that in giving a $3,000 salary to the chairman of that board, we do not give a great importance to the said board particularly when we realize that the president of the C.N.R. is paid $75,000. We find it a little strange that a salary of only $3,000 be given to the man who must settle all the problems of the maritime provinces.

(Text):

Mr. Speaker, yesterday the minister himself referred to the maze of boards and commissions in which provincial representatives from the maritimes find themselves lost in Ottawa, and one wonders if the present administration has the competence to add yet another board to the present confused set-up. The board envisaged by the bill appears to be only an advisory board. We would have much preferred an executive agency with power to create, with power to suspend, and with power to act. But politics being the art of the possible, we must accept what is offered now, trusting that a new administration will shortly give teeth to the new-born baby.

Mr. Speaker, there are specific measures that should be given immediate consideration by the board with a view to boosting our industrial capacity and to reducing the tragic unemployment situation now prevailing in our provinces. The board should recommend that the federal government pay 90 per cent of the cost of completing the trans-Canada highway through our provinces and the construction of a second trunk of the trans-Canada to link the north shore of New Brunswick. The board should insist that government agencies and our railways decentralize their purchasing policies with a view to placing more orders in the maritime provinces. The board should recommend a reduction in taxes for new industries moving to the maritimes, and other tax incentives for industries already in the maritimes which are desirous of expanding their business.

Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the board should administer a capital assistance fund to deal with worthy projects and should induce and assist our businessmen to launch new and sound enterprises. The board should, in my humble opinion, insist that the government for the next few years direct a more substantial share of its capital expenditures in public works, harbours, parks and other major projects, to the maritime provinces, including the immediate construction of the Chignecto canal and the Prince Edward Island causeway. Eventually these projects may cost the government less than the heavy payments in unemployment insurance we now have to face.

These, I believe, are constructive proposals and I trust they will be received as such. Should they be carried out in the next four years, then the year 1967 might indeed turn out to be a cause for confederation celebrations in the maritime provinces.

(Translation):

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to deal at great length with the subject under consideration. I only want to say a word to suggest to the government, with regard to this Atlantic development board, to take steps which will really give positive results. Most of all, I should like to warn the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Flemming), who introduced the measure, that it must bring a practical solution adapted to our time.

In this regard, Mr. Speaker, I should like to refer, as an example, to a measure which could have been favourable to the people and which only turned out to be a set-back. This example concerns winter works and it will serve to illustrate the idea which I will then put forward.

When the Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr) brought in his winter works program, it was welcomed by everybody. But when we saw the program actually being carried out, the tune was altogether different. In short, Mr. Speaker, under the winter works program, the power shovels and other machinery are stored in some garage while our Canadian citizens are out in the cold digging ditches with pick and shovel. Then, to illustrate what is being done, the government has pictures taken of the machinery stored in the cosy garages. At the same time, pictures are taken of Canadian citizens at their pick and shovel jobs in the ditches in the middle of the winter. What would you say, Mr. Speaker—

(Text):

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I think the hon. member has wandered as far from the bill as he possibly could in his remarks up to the moment. I wonder if he would co-operate by coming back to the bill under discussion.

(Translation):

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, for several reasons, I do not believe I am out of order. First of all, we are in winter and there is some point in dealing with winter works. Second, I was only bringing up that point to show what has been done in the past, when all types of programs have been set up. Later on, I shall use that example in an attempt to make suggestions to the government.

As I said earlier, before giving my example, I feel that a member may refer to past experience to suggest to the government steps to be taken in the future. That is why I should like to go ahead with my example if I may.

On the posters about winter works projects, you see heavy machinery snugly put away in garages, while human beings—

Mr. Boulanger: Order. Mr. Speaker, are you going to allow the hon. member for Lapointe, I think, to keep on with this humorous, comedian talk? He should come back to the matter under discussion.

(Text):

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Sometimes an example or even an analogy may be carried too far. The hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Gregoire) is speaking, as he says, by way of an example, but he is speaking at considerable length. I have waited patiently for him to tie the example to this bill and up to now this has been completely impossible. I would ask him now to come to the point he is trying to make by way of example, then later he can come back and keep on illustrating his example if he wishes.

(Translation):

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, if I cannot refer to an example to illustrate what I have to say and if you ask me to come at once to a conclusion on what was done in the past in anticipation of the future, then I do not see how I can comply with the rules.

There have been proposed in the past programs that looked good on paper but were not so good when they were applied.

And when I hear the hon. member for Mercier (Mr. Boulanger) say that this is comedian talk, I think he should rather look at his own seat. He would see on it the greatest comedian in the House of Commons, because, in my opinion—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Gregoire: —among those who wear out the seat of their pants here, there are some of the greatest comedians.

But if you allow me, I shall illustrate a point.

At the beginning of a bill, proposals and principles are enumerated: that is fine. Attempts are made to improve the lot of a group of citizens or of a specified area; that is still fine. But when the time comes to put those principles in practice and to give real assistance, one finds that action is not always taken according to the principles involved. It can at least be said that, no matter how good the principles, their application is often a step backward.

I am thinking, as an example, of the winter works program. The purpose, there, is to help a certain class of people, to give assistance to a certain type of persons. But how do we go about it? In a way which puts progress in reverse.

Instead of following through the example I just gave, I shall choose another one and deal with its practical application.

What would you say, Mr. Speaker, if, in applying the principles stated in the act to provide for the establishment of an Atlantic development board, we were to adopt the attitude taken towards the winter works program and put the machinery in the garage and the men to dig ditches instead of power shovels?

What would you say, Mr. Speaker, if tomorrow morning, for instance, a member of this house or the minister who introduced the bill to set up this development board went home and said: "From now on, we act like the government. We shall follow the government's plans. The washing machine and the dryer are going out. Here is the washboard, the good old washboard women used to wash clothes on—"

(Text):

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. member really is making it very difficult for the Chair to co-operate with him, which is what it is endeavouring to do. He has been speaking now for some considerable time, and I have not heard the word "Atlantic" or "maritimes" mentioned more than once. May I point out to the hon. member that he has an opportunity when clause 1 of the bill is under consideration to broaden the scope of the debate quite substantially compared with what he is able to do now on second reading. when he should be dealing with the principle.

(Translation):

Mr. Gregoire: Very well, Mr. Speaker, I will deal only with the principle of the bill.

I wanted to give an example in order to establish the difference that can exist sometimes between the application of a principle and that principle itself. Here is what I was driving at. There is talk about a development board, but in an economy, according to the very definition of any political economy program or system, three problems must be dealt with, namely production, exchange and consumption.

I understand that the purpose of the bill under study is to make it possible for the economy of the Atlantic provinces to develop without help. To reach that objective, the production system itself must function. And my example would have shown that in order for the production system to function, there must be also a consumption system. Now, that consumption system can be either domestic or foreign, but it remains that a consumption system is needed next to the production system.

About this bill providing for the development of the maritime provinces, here is my suggestion to the Minister of National Revenue. It is possible to develop production systems in the maritime provinces, but only if a parallel consumption system is also established. There is no doubt that the necessary steps can be taken to develop a productive economy in the maritime provinces, and on a large scale, if you have the consumers.

It is also possible to develop a farm production system in the maritimes along with a consumption system.

Mr. Speaker, any economic system must have three correlated sectors—production, exchange and consumption.

Therefore, if the economy of the Atlantic provinces is to develop at the same rate as in the other provinces, it should also have not only a system of production but also a system of planned consumption as a production factor. And in order for the bill presented today by the Minister of National Revenue to be effective and to reach the intended objective, the board will have to take into consideration, first and foremost, the whole system of exchange of products in order to enable the consumers to get the production which will develop in the maritime provinces. The Atlantic development board will then reach its objective which is to develop the whole economy of the maritime provinces, the economy of production, exchange and consumption in these four provinces, which really need it.

Mr. Speaker, the major problem in the maritimes is consumption. As soon as the consumers in the Atlantic provinces receive help, the production system will become adequate in those provinces. In fact, if we seriously intend to bring about the economic development of the maritimes, and, at the same time, to give prosperity to the consumers, the whole economic system of those provinces will have to be taken into consideration.

(Text):

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I must inform the house that if the minister speaks now he will close the debate.

Hon. H. J. Flemming (Minister of Forestry and Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, the remarks which I have to make in connection with the second reading of this bill will be as brief as I can possibly make them, because I feel that there have been many and most varied opinions expressed about the bill and about the accomplishments which it is hoped the bill will achieve. I think on analysis, in spite of the misgivings which have been expressed by various speakers, we still might very well consider that the basic reason for this bill, which seeks to establish a board whose activities will be confined entirely to the Atlantic provinces, and the concept of the duties of that board, meet with the approval of all hon. gentlemen in the house, particularly those who have contributed to this debate.

I should like first to mention the fears of the application of this board, the fears of the results of its actions, and the fears which have been expressed in connection with the difficulties under which the board would operate. All of these things perhaps are deserving of consideration, and I find no fault with the fact that they have been pointed out. But it seems to me however, that we are losing sight of the fact that here is a forward step which has been taken, and for which the people of the Atlantic provinces have been asking for a long time. I acknowledge freely that there will possibly be features of the bill which will seem to lend themselves to some improvement; they might even lend themselves to some improvement when the bill is in the committee stage. But I do not think anybody should say that the object of the board will be to sit down and do nothing. It seems to me that is in the minds of some speakers here this evening. My hon. friend from Antigonish-Guysborough (Mr. Stewart) was worried about the fact that the board was going to sit in Ottawa only once during the year; but the bill provides that they shall sit at times and at places they deem necessary. You could not get any broader interpretation than that. I suggest to my hon. friend that this board will be anxious to accomplish something. It is going to be his neighbours from the Atlantic provinces who will compose this board. They are going to be every bit as anxious as he is to have something concrete to show for their activity. I therefore submit that his misgivings are not well founded. I submit that the board should be set up and should be put to work. A year hence if it is found that there are some features that might be improved, then we, or whoever happen to be here representing the people, will take steps to effect that improvement. However, let us at least go ahead with this machinery which has been provided and which for many years has been requested by the people of the Atlantic provinces.

I was greatly impressed by the speech this afternoon of the hon. member for Queens-Lunenburg (Mr. Crouse), because he was full of enthusiasm with regard to what this board might be able to accomplish and what he visualized they would accomplish. I like to see a man who is enthusiastic about anything. Even as to our friends across the floor, I find no particular fault with them for being enthusiastic about that philosophy of theirs, which is really outworn and rather old stuff. However, I find no fault with them because they are enthusiastic about it.

Mr. Pickersgill: Does the hon. gentleman mean those people over here?

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): Oh, yes, I quite agree; the people diagonally over there and our friends in the New Democratic party. I think it is a splendid thing to be enthusiastic. I particularly appeal now to members from the Atlantic provinces. I particularly appeal to them as I should like them to be enthusiastic about these possibilities. I fully appreciate, as I am sure we all do, that during our lifetime we are, generally speaking, subject to a degree of disappointment. Nevertheless we must have an aim. We must try to accomplish something. We must keep going. We must live in an atmosphere of expectation and hope if we are to be able to do anything in the future. That is the appeal that I make.

This board was never intended to represent a tremendously large bureaucracy located in the Atlantic provinces. That is not the concept I envisage for the board. I am one of those who feel that it is not necessary to spend a great deal of money in order to get satisfactory results. Very often it is small boards composed of dedicated men and women who are able to accomplish great things in communities even as large as the Atlantic provinces. I therefore suggest, Mr. Speaker, that we should not be worrying about whether or not they have at their disposal a billion dollars. I do not think we should be trying particularly to make headlines with dollar figures strung across the top. I suggest that what we need to do is to set up this machinery and then to let everyone give to that board the best possible advice of which he is capable.

For many years we have complained that our situation was not being examined, that the things which might be developed in our provinces were not being looked at and that were were being ignored. When we sent some good people up to Ottawa, it was possible to hand them a breakwater or wharf or something like that and satisfy them with it. That is what we are told down in the Atlantic provinces. The time has gone by when we are satisfied with a breakwater or a wharf. We wish the financing of a board consisting of some people set up for the express purpose of looking into the natural resources which exist in our part of Canada, provided that they are economically sound; and I suggest that they should not be put even through too careful an examination in that respect. If they are even borderline I suggest that they are deeserving of consideration.

I am not always in complete agreement with my friend from Bonavista-Twillingate. However, yesterday I was in complete agreement with him in connection with the exportation of pulpwood. It is all right for us to stand up in this house and speak, and it is a fine thing to shout to high heaven that we must process every bit of raw material we have to the ultimate degree. However, Mr. Speaker, there is such a thing as a buyer of products, and that buyer of products has people who must be employed also. I therefore think there is a middle ground here somewhere so far as processing is concerned. As I listened to my hon. friend last year, I found that he praised the government—and that is something he seldom does—however, he praised the government for building a wharf at a certain place. He said he went down there and saw ships loading pulpwood destined for a European destination and without the wharf it would not have been possible. He therefore praised the government. As far as I am concerned, that is a definite achievement as far as the government is concerned.

Mr. Pickersgill: I have never hesitated to do that, Mr. Speaker. Unfortunately, however, there have not been many occasions for it.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): With great respect to my friend, may I say that I do not think he looks very hard.

Mr. Dinsdale: He has one blind eye.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I made a great many notes while all hon. gentlemen were speaking. I could probably stand here for the next 15 minutes, 20 minutes or even half an hour and attempt to rebut what they said and could probably—and I say this with due modesty—make a fair job of it. However, where would we be after I got through? We would just be in the same place as we are right now.

I therefore suggest that what we do in connection with the bill is that we pass on to the committee stage. I have at least one amendment to offer. I understand there are quite a few amendments coming from certain sections. I can only say that I do not believe it would not be in the interests of the passage of the bill, neither do I think any great public interest would be impaired if we consider the bill in committee of the whole, and without any reference to any other standing committee. I believe that time is of the essence in connection with this bill. I am anxious to see the mechanics of the bill go through the house, be set up and allow the board to be constituted so that they can get to work.

Mr. Pickersgill: Will the minister permit me to ask a question at this point?

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): Yes.

Mr. Pickersgill: Does the minister not think that a great deal more time would be saved in the house and that the government could get on with another measure if we could have this measure go first to a standing committee? It would have to go through the committee of the whole in any case, but could it not go first to a standing committee where those of us who are particularly interested in going into the details and seeing that we get the best bill possible could, with the officials, have a real opportunity to go into it and then bring it back here? I am sure it would pass very quickly after that.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): My answer is no, much as I am very anxious to agree, and the reason it is no is that everything about this bill that we could find out in a committee would be a matter of someone's opinion. It would not be technical knowledge. It would not be a case of people who had served on a board wanting to come before such a committee and being able to give the committee the benefit of their experience, because we have never had a board of this sort in the Atlantic provinces before. We have had some boards, and some people are complaining we have too many boards.

If I wanted to be facetious I would say, being in the lumber business, that I do not mind boards. If it were a bill of a technical nature, obviously there would be an advantage in examining witnesses, but I submit that in this instance all we would get would be people's opinions. We have had a lot of opinions expressed in the house this afternoon and this evening and they were not always exactly the same, though I think that generally speaking they were. I am sure that some members who spoke today spoke so that their names and remarks would be recorded in the newspapers at home. I find no fault with them for this. I think it is a laudable thing. But if this bill goes to a committee I fail to see that any great advantage would be gained because all we would be doing would be getting people's opinions. We are going to get plenty of opinions here.

There is one point on which I want to express complete agreement with respect to what the hon. member for Queens-Lunenburg (Mr. Crouse) said this afternoon. That is in connection with the contribution which has been made to the Atlantic provinces in general by Brigadier Wardell, the publisher of the Atlantic Advocate. Brigadier Wardell has adopted the Atlantic provinces for a matter of more than 10 years. He has been the conveyor to the rest of Canada of the needs of the Atlantic provinces through the medium of a very fine magazine, one of the best in Canada. Therefore I want to express complete agreement with the hon. member for Queens-Lunenburg who today paid him a great compliment, and I should like to add my words to those that were so well said by my friend this afternoon in connection with the debt which I feel the Atlantic provinces owe to the publisher of the Atlantic Advocate.

There is one more point I should like to bring out before I conclude these remarks. I would hope that we might give second reading to the bill and go into the committee stage immediately, if we can have unanimous consent to do so. I would hope that we might make some progress in committee and perhaps even finish the bill. It is not long and I feel that in principle it is very acceptable to all hon. members.

That is all I have to say at the moment. I repeat what I said concerning the importance of the disposition of all members to consider that here we have something of a special nature which we have been trying to get for a long time. Regardless of what we may feel about some points, perhaps very minor and perhaps in the opinion of some quite important, let us go ahead and get the machinery set up and in operation so that the things envisaged by many speakers this afternoon and the fears and misgivings that were expressed by some will be met by actual experience. If as a result of that experience it is found that there are some features of the legislation which are not working out as well as we had all hoped, then the power that created the bill and put it in operation can amend it and improve it. That is the last word I have to say to the house on this occasion.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Paul in the chair.

On clause 1—Short title.

Mr. Carter: Mr. Chairman, we have just agreed with the motion to set up an advisory board for the Atlantic provinces and now we have the bill before us in committee where we can make a detailed study of it clause by clause. It is the usual practice on the first clause of the bill to have a general discussion and to raise questions which perhaps could not be raised on second reading of the bill. One question that the bill poses to me at least is the need for advice. Apparently the main purpose of the board we are setting up is to assess factors relevant to economic growth in the Atlantic region. It would seem to me that there is already a great deal of advice available to the government on this particular subject.

As I understand the situation, studies are in progress with respect to the feasibility of the Chignecto canal and the feasibility of the P.E.I. causeway. In addition, we have an organization known as the Atlantic provinces economic council which for several years now has been making a special study of the problems of the Atlantic provinces, with particular emphasis on what might be done to improve the economy of this region. Surely there should be a great wealth of advice available from all these bodies. One wonders, therefore, just how much more advice can be had from this special body. One of the things we would like the minister to tell us in this discussion is just what is going to be the relationship between this new board and the Atlantic provinces economic council, and what will be the relationship between this board and all the other advisory boards that have been set up in recent years. For example, what will the relationship be between this board and the national economic council, the productivity council, the manpower council and these other boards? Just how is this board going to fit in with all these other organizations?

I feel, Mr. Chairman, there is a danger that we might be expecting too much too soon from this particular board. It has no money with which to initiate projects. Its functions are limited purely to those of study and advice. I think it would be a mistake if it were interpreted by the people of the Atlantic region that the setting up of this board is going to bring about any substantial change in the economic forces that have been at work in the Atlantic region for so many years. As I see it, the economic problem of the Atlantic region is not an isolated problem. I think it would be a mistake if this board were to approach it in that manner. The problem of the Atlantic region is, in a sense, the problem of Canada. Certain economic forces have produced certain results, and if we are going to get different results, then we must in some way modify the economic forces that are at work.

Now, these forces have been referred to during the debate on second reading and specific examples have been given. One force has been the lack of development of our natural resources. This, of course, is related to the matter of capital investment. If we are going to do anything about this, it does not seem that the government requires any special advice because one of the things that has inhibited the growth of the Atlantic provinces has been the tax policies followed by federal governments over the years. Unless we are prepared to do something about that, then we cannot hope to make any substantial improvement in the capital investment picture so far as this particular region is concerned.

We all know that the problem of hydro power in Quebec was connected with the tax policy of the federal government, which required substantial payments of income taxes from the province to the federal government. Whatever profits were made, therefore, did not benefit the province at all but went to enrich the federal treasury. I think in cases like that, where we have in a province private companies operating power utilities then the federal government, as a general policy, should make the necessary changes to put these power companies on the same footing as the ones that are nationalized. Once these companies are nationalized they do not pay income taxes on profits as the private companies do. Until this situation is corrected, then it will be a handicap that will hinder the development of the provinces.

Another handicap is the lack of communications and the lower standard of public services. Now, these impediments are apparent to everybody. Certainly, it does not need any special board to bring them to the attention of the government. If we are in earnest about this, then the federal government need not wait—

The Deputy Chairman: Order; I hear a lot of murmuring in the house and I would ask hon. members to be quiet and give the hon. member who has the floor a chance to make his speech.

Mr. Carter: Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

It is not necessary to wait for a board to be set up for the federal government to take the necessary action to improve the system of communications and the public services in the Atlantic provinces, to put them on a level that will make it attractive for private enterprise to go in and develop industries.

Then, too, we can do more than has been done about encouraging the investment of private capital and discouraging the closing down of industries. A few days ago I had occasion to be in the maritime commission with one of my constituents who was interested in getting a subsidy for a coastal ship. The subject we were concerned with was the Canadian content of this vessel. There are very few companies in Canada today making a diesel engine of around 400 or 500 horsepower for marine installations. I made the remark that I recalled a very fine engine used to be built in British Columbia under the name of Vivian. The expert at the maritime commission said, "Oh, yes, I know all about that; that was a wonderful engine". I said, "Why don't we get one of them?" He said what had happened was that a certain company came in, bought this firm up and then closed it down. This has been the experience in the maritimes over and over again. Our people have managed to get small businesses going. They have built them up into profitable enterprises and as soon as they have become paying propositions, as soon as they became competitive with comparable enterprises in other parts of Canada, somebody buys them up and closes them down. We had a small tobacco factory in St. John's that used to manufacture tobacco and cigarettes. We were not in confederation three months before the plant was closed down. This is the sort of thing that goes on, and it must be stopped.

I do not envisage very many large scale enterprises in the maritime provinces. I think it is sounder economy if we can establish a number of small enterprises than if we have two or three very large ones. I would much rather have 100 enterprises employing 50 people each than have one enterprise employing 5,000 people.

The other problems we have is that of a domestic market. It is something we cannot do very much about. The government can do what it can by way of freight rate subsidies to equalize freight costs, but under present circumstances it is very difficult to work out a system that is very satisfactory. Somehow or another we must make up for that deficiency. This means that if we cannot have a domestic market in our own region, then the logical place to look for a market is overseas.

My colleague from Bonavista-Twillingate mentioned the Caribbean, which is a logical market for the maritimes; but there are other markets overseas in Europe and we should try to encourage European firms to establish branches in the maritimes from where they can service the American seaboard. If Volkswagen cars were being manufactured in the maritimes they could be distributed right up to central Canada much more cheaply than they are at present.

In my area we have a large market for small motors. We have a big fishing population and diesel motors are becoming very popular as they are economical to operate. We have trade connections with Japan, Norway, Sweden and Germany, countries which are experts in these fields and surely we could induce firms from those countries to establish branches somewhere in the Atlantic region. We must do something of that nature because the possibility of improving our economy solely by exporting our raw materials does not seem to be very effective.

Underlying the economic causes which we see on the surface there is a more basic and deeper cause which we must recognize if we are to understand the nature of the problem that faces the Atlantic area. As I said before, the problem of the maritimes is the problem of Canada. The problem of underdeveloped areas everywhere in Canada is practically the same. The reasons for underdevelopment are not greatly different from those that prevail in the Atlantic area, and the main reason is really the human factor. It boils down to the motives that make us do the things we do.

I am not against profits, and any firm in business must make profits. If it does not, it cannot have capital to reinvest and expand. That is imperative; but there is another factor which must come into play and that is the duty of a commercial enterprise to assume certain responsibility for the people of the region in which it is established. We cannot have a better example of that than Cuba. Millions and millions of dollars were invested in Cuba and to all intents and purposes they have now disappeared. The main reason was that enterprises established in Cuba spent so much of their energy in producing better and better balance sheets and paid so little attention to their responsibilities toward the people of that country.

This board must recognize that factor. While the economic factors are important, the human factor is equally important. A little jealousy between members of the board can easily disrupt it, or jealousy between this board and other boards can disrupt the relationships between them and nullify the best of plans.

There is one other point I would like to make and it is that while the economic factor cannot be ignored it should not always be the determining factor. All of us have experienced instances where projects that were not economically sound somehow prospered, and of other cases where enterprises had good economic bases and still did not work out. A few weeks ago I had the pleasure of paying a visit to Saskatchewan, through the courtesy of my hon. friend from Rosetown-Biggar, and the south Saskatchewan development association, and looking at the dam being built there. From an economic standpoint perhaps that dam should never have been built and perhaps it will never justify itself economically, but whether it does or not that is not the point I want to make.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. The hon. member has a right to speak about the economic problems of the maritimes but not about the problems of Saskatchewan.

Mr. Carter: I am not talking about Saskatchewan. I am only using that as an example of a project which perhaps was questionable from the economic standpoint but nevertheless was one that possibly should have been proceeded with long ago. The reason it was not was that we placed too much emphasis on economic factors and not enough emphasis on the actual needs of the people of the area. Therefore I would ask that we should not let ourselves always be guided completely by whatever economic factors may be involved.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Mr. Chairman, I am just a shy, poor old maritimer who has waited two or three days to put a thought on the record and I think it will come under this item, since it has no general application to any of the clauses. This thought comes to my mind. I do not have any amendment to suggest, but it seems important that we have some method of directing the various departments of the federal government to compile statistics and co-operate with the projects that may begin under clause 9 of this bill. I have a very concrete example of this. One of the projects that has been mentioned by others outside this house, and I feel it should have top priority, would be consideration in the future of the ports of Halifax and Saint John in the light of opening up navigation in the St. Lawrence in the winter time. I speak of Saint John from my own personal interest and I am sure the other hon. members from Halifax will agree with me when I say that we are very worried about the future of these maritime ports.

It has been brought to my attention that one of the main difficulties in assessing this problem is the need for co-operation of different departments of government in making available the statistics as to the origin and destination of all traffic in and out of the St. Lawrence system. This is to my mind the main requirement in order to assess the problem in so far as Saint John and Halifax are concerned. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I put that thought forward in connection with the first clause of this bill. I hope the minister will have an opportunity to think about it. As I say, I do not have a specific amendment to put forward. I cannot see how it could be mentioned particularly in the bill. But certainly there will be a necessity as these projects go forward to obtain, not only from the various departments of the federal government but from all other sources, statistics and information, technical and otherwise, that is now available. That is my thought on this matter, Mr. Chairman, and I have related it to a very concrete example.

This project should have top priority in considering the future of Halifax and Saint John in the light of winter navigation on the St. Lawrence and I would hope there would be some method by which those responsible could direct the Department of Transport and the Department of National Revenue to make available all information provided it was not of a confidential nature. I say that for the benefit of the hon. member for Essex East. I do suggest, Mr. Chairman, that this information would be of great assistance in assessing our problem.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, at this juncture I only desire to pose a question to the minister, a question which involves someone who I understand is an ally of the minister and of his party, someone who, though being a staunch Conservative may not know exactly what his role is within that party. I would ask the minister whether it is the intention, in view of the presence in Ottawa today of this gentleman, to appoint Brigadier Wardell as the chairman of this board.

Mr. Granger: Mr. Chairman, I would first like to say that I appreciate the opportunity of making a few remarks on clause 1 of this bill. Before calling the minister's attention to some of the problems which exist in the part of the Atlantic provinces from which I come I would like to make a brief remark concerning his comments on enthusiasm. If I have failed up till now to express great enthusiasm, it is not at all because I disagree with the principle of the bill, but because I began to visualize the government appointing commission after commission, board after board, until a whole host of subgovernments usurped the position of government, and instead of having members elected to the House of Commons computer machines would be installed here to assess the value of the information fed into them by boards. To me that is a horrible thought. Certainly the chamber would not be nearly as interesting as it is today, and apart from that I do not think the public would be too enthusiastic about voting for one or other make of computer machine.

An hon. Member: It would be an improvement in certain areas.

Mr. Granger: No doubt my hon. friend knows conditions in his own district. If I might comment on some of the things the board might consider, I would like the minister to think of the potential in wood in Labrador. I am sure that when I mention forestry I am talking to a minister who is not only knowledgeable but sympathetic to this industry. The huge potential of wood in Labrador is something which should be looked at very carefully, and the possibility of constructing roads through the woodlands of Labrador is one which could bear looking into. The minister mentioned earlier the development of forestry. Here is a huge area of virgin forests which await development. The same applies to the special needs of the forest industry in Newfoundland, where the forests are beginning to be infected by the woolly aphis insect. This scourge of the forests could very well have dire economic consequences on the woods industry in Newfoundland, and the possibility of the constructing of roads through the forests so as to fight this pest is one which could be considered by the development board.

The fisheries of the whole Atlantic coast certainly need attention, not so much because the fisheries are dwindling as the fact that our competitor nations have advanced much further than we have in the production of fish and have given us the kind of competition in historic markets which has been making it extremely difficult for the fishing industry to survive. That certainly applies to Newfoundland and Nova Scotia. Some of the problems of the fisheries are such that they can be met with the expenditure of modest sums of money. A board such as the Atlantic development board would naturally look into the possibility of direct financial assistance to fishermen who wish to improve their fishing equipment. They would consider, I would hope, the position of men who used to be fishermen, who have worked at other vocations for a number of years, whose fishing gear is not operable any more and who would consider being re-established in the fishing industry.

Mr. Chairman, may I call it ten o'clock.

Clause 1 stands.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, may I inquire what we will do tomorrow, and can we have some indication of the business for next week?

Business of the House

Mr. Churchill: Tomorrow, Mr. Speaker, as I outlined the other day, we will start with the setting up of the special committee concerning drugs and things of that nature, and if speeches are limited to one per party, we might finish that business by one o'clock. Then I think it would be wise to complete the committee study of this bill and finish it tomorrow, which seems likely. Then the third item will be Bill No. C-87 concerning the national economic development board, which we will discuss tomorrow, and carry on discussion of the bill on Monday.

With regard to the program for next week, all parties have been apprised of a proposed program, and it will depend on consultation tomorrow as to whether that is considered to be satisfactory.

Mr. Chevrier: May I inquire from the house leader how this proposal is going to be considered? Because I had understood from the Leader of the Opposition this morning that, following a discussion with the Prime Minister, the matter was now in the hands of the house leaders, who would be called together; but I am told that that procedure was not followed.

Mr. Churchill: I was quite prepared to do that, but my understanding of the meeting was that a proposed time table, with allocation of time, would be circulated to the whips, which was done; that they would meet together tonight at 8.15, and if there was any problem arising we would then carry it a step further.

Mr. Chevrier: I am prepared to meet the house leader at any time, and I understood that that was the proposal which we had made in the first instance.

It being three minutes after ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, December 7, 1962

The house met at 11 a.m.

POWER

COLUMBIA RIVER TREATY—MOTION FOR ADJOURNMENT UNDER STANDING ORDER 26

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to move the adjournment of the house under standing order 26 for the purpose of discussing a definite matter of urgent public importance, namely the deadlock that now exists in respect of the international treaty for Columbia river development.

Mr. Speaker: I have before me a motion by the Leader of the Opposition for the adjournment of the house under standing order 26. One has to consider in these matters whether they are of urgent national importance and also the question of urgency of debate at this particular time. It is on that particular point that I have some doubts, and I am quite prepared to hear the Leader of the Opposition in regard to urgency of debate at this particular time.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, you have, of course, very rightly called attention to the consideration of urgency in moving a motion of this kind, a consideration which, as you have already indicated on other occasions, cannot be entirely divorced from the consideration of national importance. I take it there is no division of opinion over the question of the national importance of this matter and the deadlock in respect of this treaty, the consequences of which are of such far reaching significance to our country. Also, Mr. Speaker, bearing on the questions of urgency and importance is the fact that in a series of answers in the house and statements made outside the house in my view, confusion has been created. Moreover the impasse that we find ourselves in with regard to this matter affects both national interests and those of our relations with the United States.

Now, Mr. Speaker, on the immediate question of urgency as related to these developments I have mentioned, the chief negotiator of the treaty on behalf of Canada, the present Minister of Public Works, has already discussed this matter outside the house. In the course of those discussions, and in a letter which he has written to the editor of a magazine entitled Engineering and Contract Record, the Minister of Public Works emphasizes that debate on this matter should be in parliament. In this letter of September 17, 1962 he said, and quite rightly:

> I feel that the proper forum for such detailed comment is the prospective hearing in parliament. I am sure that it will be desired to investigate every aspect of the treaty and obtain the views of all persons concerned with it. I should myself appear in such a case . .

We regret, of course, that the Minister of Public Works has decided to leave us, and if he is to participate in a discussion of this important matter that discussion must take place at once while he has an opportunity to do so. If the committee on external affairs, which is the committee to which this matter would be submitted, were set up; if the government could give us the assurance that the committee would be set up immediately so the matter could be referred to it, then of course I would be glad to withdraw this motion so that the discussion could take place at once with the Minister of Public Works, other ministers and other persons concerned present. However, unless there is some assurance that this can be done, then I very respectfully submit this motion to you for consideration. Since the Minister of Public Works will be leaving us so shortly, it is a matter of great urgency to have this matter discussed at once and in his presence.

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, if the remarks of the Leader of the Opposition establish anything it is that this is not a definite matter of urgent public importance. In the first place it is not, as described in the motion, a definite matter at all. The Leader of the Opposition talked about a deadlock that he says now exists in respect of an international treaty with regard to the Columbia river development. I have some familiarity with the situation in general in respect of the Columbia river, and I do not know what he is talking about. There is no deadlock.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Why discredit yourself?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I indicated I would like the discussion to be on the urgency of debate today. While there have been in the proposal by the Leader of the Opposition certain remarks which may have strayed from that point, I think it would be helpful to the Chair if we stayed on that point. We will continue.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): If the remarks of the Leader of the Opposition are to be stripped down to what he had to say as to the urgency of debate there will not be very much left in his remarks. What has he got? He talked about the subject in general, but negotiations and discussions are proceeding. There has been no finality reached on this at all and discussion has been proceeding for some time.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): On such motions, Mr. Speaker, my remarks relate to submissions to you and what I am saying is pitched to a level to meet the requirement that you have in mind and not just an appeal to the intelligence or lesser intelligence of some hon. members opposite who are stronger on noise than they are on understanding.

I repeat that when there is talk about a deadlock now existing in respect to this international treaty for the Columbia river development, I say there is no deadlock. There is today what has been going on continually, a series of discussions which are not complete. There is no urgency of debate in this respect today unless there was urgency of debate in respect to it a month ago, two months, three months or six months ago, because we are dealing with a continuing situation in which talks are continuing and plans exist for a continuance of talks at the governmental level. To talk about urgency of debate about this matter at the moment, where no definite matter of urgent public importance is concerned, is simply absurd.

Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether you heard the uproarious and most unintelligent remark of the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have not heard any remarks. I trust no remarks were made, or if remarks were made that they will not be recorded, because they are not part of the proceedings of this house. I am only concerned about argument which would support the question of urgency of debate at this moment. The Chair is prepared to hear brief argument in this regard, and I say "brief" because the Chair has already pretty well made up its mind on the representations which have been made on both sides in respect to this matter. I shall hear further argument if hon. members wish to put forward a point briefly as to the necessity of debate this morning.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Jack Davis (Coast-Capilano): Mr. Speaker, in answer to several questions which I have posed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, the house has learned that discussions are about to be resumed with respect to the sale of downstream benefits in the United States; that is respecting the duration, price and so on with regard to that sale. Article VIII of the treaty specifically states that the price and other terms and conditions of this sale are to be determined after ratification of the treaty and not beforehand. It would be most helpful to the house if the government could explain the purpose of the present negotiations and discussions between Canada and the United States; also if article VIII of the treaty is to be binding on both countries.

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, since the hon. member for Coast-Capilano has mentioned me in his remarks I think it should be made clear that on one or probably two occasions last week, or it may have been a few days earlier than that, I explained in answer to questions that there had been two informal meetings at which representatives of the Canadian government, the United States government and the government of British Columbia had been present. I said these were informal meetings and were certainly not for the purpose of negotiating price for downstream benefits, as the hon. member for Coast-Capilano has intimated today. He goes much further than the statement I made, and I also pointed out that there were to be further talks later this month on, I believe, December 19 and 20.

Since we are in the midst of these talks, in which a foreign government is concerned, how can there possibly be any basis for the charge that the Leader of the Opposition makes today, which is that there has been a deadlock? I submit it would be entirely contrary to the rules were the house to go on and spend a day discussing this matter about which there are to be talks in less than two weeks.

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Kootenay East): Mr. Speaker, the urgency of this matter was spelled out by the Leader of the Opposition. This must be faced. There is, should I say, a violent disagreement with respect to the terms of this agreement between the Minister of Public Works, who was the chief negotiator for the—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am concerned about the urgency of debate this morning. I do not want to go into the nature of the conflict or deadlock or anything of that kind. The precise point is why we should adjourn the business this morning.

Mr. Byrne: Mr. Speaker, this would appear to be the only opportunity this side of the house is going to be able to avail itself of to discuss this very urgent matter before the Minister of Public Works leaves this house. We have suggested an alternative, that is that this matter be referred to a committee of the house, which could very well be set up at this moment, and not necessarily for the purpose of ratifying the agreement.

When the Prime Minister returned from Washington on January 18, 1961 he was asked whether this matter should go before a committee of the house for discussion prior to final agreement with British Columbia. The Prime Minister implied that this was not necessary, that it could be discussed here. The terms of this agreement can and may be discussed here without necessarily meaning ratification.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Byrne: There is violent disagreement throughout the entire country—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member knows that he must put an end to his remarks when he is asked to do so by the Speaker rising, and should not continue to make his point.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): I submit to Your Honour that there is a clear case of urgency for discussing this Columbia river treaty and for discussing it at an early date. It is now almost two years since this treaty was signed. It is regrettable that prior to signing the treaty an agreement had not already been concluded with the province of British Columbia but these negotiations are continuing. It seems to me that the members of this house and the people of Canada generally are entitled to a full scale debate on the treaty and its implications. I suggest it is urgent, first of all because there have been contradictory statements both from ministers of the federal government and the government of British Columbia regarding the type of program that is envisaged, whether it is the High Arrow or the McNaughton plan. This causes a good deal of concern in many parts of British Columbia.

Mr. Churchill: Order.

Mr. Douglas: I suggest, second, that the whole matter of the sale of downstream benefits is something which needs to be discussed.

Mr. Speaker: Order. With the greatest respect to the hon. member, I am not concerned about the nature of the problem; I am concerned about the urgency of debate this morning and whether we should adjourn our proceedings. That is the sole, narrow point before us at the present time.

Mr. Douglas: I am submitting, Mr. Speaker, that a matter which has been in abeyance for almost two years is urgent and should be clarified; that some public discussion should be held so the country and this parliament can understand what is the government's intention and what project the government has in mind. If the government is not prepared to have this discussion this morning, then certainly before we adjourn for the Christmas recess such a debate should be held, or the treaty should be referred to the external affairs committee so that witnesses may be called and many of these matters clarified. I suggest that to have further delay is not in the best interests of the people of Canada generally, and certainly of the people of British Columbia in particular.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Vancouver South.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, I have just one thing to say. The hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam in what he has just now said has given away his case entirely.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I had recognized the hon. member for Vancouver South.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I am sorry, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Arthur Laing (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, I intend to relate my very short remarks to the matter of urgency only. A number of questions on this matter have been replied to in this house, one of them by the Minister of Public Works on November 30, when he stated:

> We have maintained in general the policy which we had and which we felt to be the correct one. Sincere efforts have been made, however, to see whether it is possible to find a meeting ground between the two positions which had thus come into conflict, in order that this great project might be commenced at the earliest possible date. It has been difficult, but those discussions are still going on.

I suggest to you, sir, that this indicates a matter of extreme difficulty and great conflict, and therefore urgency, and we should know what the differences are between the various positions.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am quite satisfied that this motion does not meet the requirements of standing order 26. If we refer to citation 100 in Beauchesne we see a number of reasons why this is so.

First of all, it must be a matter of recent occurrence, of immediate recent occurrence. If there has been a difference of opinion with regard to this particular question, as hon. members have indicated in their remarks, this may have existed for some considerable time. Certainly it existed at a time when this matter could have been raised in this house in weeks past. Certainly it was adverted to in the debate on the speech from the throne, when this formed the subject of remarks by a number of hon. members.

With regard to the other point that the Minister of Public Works allegedly was leaving this house, the Chair is not aware of that event happening next week, or the week after, or when it might happen. Therefore in the estimation of the Chair that does not found a ground for adjourning the business under standing order 26. For these reasons I find the motion unacceptable.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Kootenay East): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. Can the minister tell the house if under the act of 1955, having to do with the development of boundary waters, the provincial government concerned has applied for a licence to construct a dam or a weir in a tributary of the Kootenay river?

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): That matter comes under the jurisdiction of my colleague the Minister of Transport, and I would have to refer the question to him.

Mr. Byrne: Then could I direct it to the Minister of Transport. I thought this was a matter which came under the department of northern affairs.

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): I think the question should be placed on the order paper.

Mr. Byrne: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I am sorry to say that I quoted the wrong statute to the minister. It is the International River Improvements Act to which I had reference. This is the act to which I am referring and which would require the provincial government to obtain a licence before beginning any obstruction.

[Later:]

Mr. Byrne: I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. In the event that the Columbia river treaty ever comes before a committee of the house, will the minister assure the house that he will be prepared to come back and appear before a committee from his exalted position in British Columbia?

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, that would depend entirely upon whether the house or its committee issued an invitation. Whether I am a member of the house or not a member of the house, I would always hold myself as responsive to the wishes of the Canadian House of Commons.

[Later:]

Mr. S. P. Ryan (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. What do the current conferences and negotiations in respect of the Columbia river basin treaty deal with if they do not deal with article VIII of the treaty?

Mr. Green: Mr. Speaker, these are informal talks on the whole situation without any one of the three governments being committed.

Mr. Ryan: A supplementary question. Am I to take it that the treaty is now in effect being renegotiated.

Mr. Green: No. If the hon. member had understood my answer he would have realized that it was exactly to the opposite effect.

[Later:]

Mr. Arthur Laing (Vancouver South): May I address a question to the Minister of Justice. May I ask him the names of the persons at the moment representing the government of Canada in informal three way talks which are taking place concerning the Columbia river treaty?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Justice): That information has already been imparted to the house, Mr. Speaker.

AIR TRANSPORT

REPORTED MERGER OF T.C.A. AND C.P.A. ON INTERNATIONAL ROUTES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport.

Is there any plan under which international air routes now served by T.C.A. and C.P.A. would be amalgamated to form a single company, as reported in the Gazette this morning, and has the government reached a decision in this regard?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, this is a matter of great interest both to the government and to me personally. That is the only comment I have to make at the present time.

Mr. Chevrier: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Has the government come to a decision concerning regional air routes in this country and is it to be expected that it will soon make a statement of policy in this respect?

Mr. Speaker: That is not a supplementary question.

Mr. Balcer: As is the custom, whenever the government has a statement of policy to make, it does so in this house. I intend to follow this practice.

TRADE

OIL—REPORTED U.S. INTENTION TO RESTRICT IMPORTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Yesterday the Leader of the Opposition asked me a question regarding the proclamation issued by the President of the United States, which amends the mandatory oil import program. I would like to inform the house that the regulations to implement the changes which will flow from the proclamation have not been issued as yet. Until we have discussed with the United States authorities the effects of both the proclamation and the regulations, it is impossible to say just how Canada's position may be affected, if at all. We have been assured that the overland exemption as such remains in effect.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce a question arising out of his reply. Was the Canadian government consulted before this proclamation was issued in Washington under which the regulations are to be issued?

Mr. Hees: No, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs this question. Is it not a fact that there were consultations with members of his department with regard to this matter?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I shall have to take that question as notice.

TOBACCO—EFFORTS TO FIND EXPORT MARKETS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Jack Roxburgh (Norfolk): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Can the minister inform the house whether any negotiations have been successfully concluded for the sale of our tobacco?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Trade and Commerce): No, I am unable to say so, Mr. Speaker. My department is working closely with the tobacco industry and making every possible effort to help them sell the tobacco crop, but further than that I cannot say.

Mr. Roxburgh: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Has the government yet sent a trade mission abroad with respect to the sale of tobacco?

Mr. Hees: I answered that question some few days ago.

[Later:]

Mr. E. F. Whelan (Essex South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Is he aware that the $100 million tobacco industry is idle?

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member would speak a little more clearly and a little more slowly, perhaps we could understand him, if he would not mind asking the question again.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Verdun.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, the minister has just asked the hon. member for Essex South to restate his question, and I think the hon. member should be allowed to do so.

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, I will reword the question so the minister may aim at this problem a little more accurately. Is he aware that the $100 million tobacco industry is idle in Ontario?

Mr. Hees: I am aware of the difficulties that the tobacco industry is experiencing at the present time, and I can assure him that this government, unlike the government formed by the party of which he is a member—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think the minister should remember the remarks I have addressed to others, that when the Chair rises on these points of order hon. members should desist from their remarks, which in this case are quite out of order.

Inquiries of the Ministry

SHIPMENT OF DOUGLAS FIR LUMBER TO CHINA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Trade and Commerce. In the light of recent statements by the member for Red Deer, I am wondering whether the minister has received any protests from the minister of trade and industry of the province of British Columbia about the recent shipment of Douglas fir lumber to China?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Trade and Commerce): No, Mr. Speaker.

(Translation):

AGRICULTURE

HOGS—REQUEST FOR RESTORATION OF PREMIUM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Bernard Dumont (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture or, in his absence, to his parliamentary secretary.

When is the Department of Agriculture going to restore the premium on grade A hogs?

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture): I am pleased to inform the hon. member that this question is under consideration.

HOUSING

C.M.H.C.—REPORTED ESTABLISHMENT OF $100 MILLION LENDING FUND

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. R. Garland (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. Does he or any other minister intend to bother telling this house of the establishment of a $100 million short term lending fund by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation to assist in the development of a secondary market for N.H.A. mortgages, as announced yesterday by the minister to the press?

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the statement released to the press was with respect to details of the policy already announced in this house of placing C.M.H.C. mortgages up for sale so as to create an interest in the secondary mortgage market. As a means of further implementing that policy it has been decided that C.M.H.C. should be instructed to assume the position of residuary lender, as authorized by the legislation. It was with respect to that feature of the policy that the press announcement was made yesterday.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

VANCOUVER—PROSPECTIVE LAY-OFFS THROUGH CLOSING OF AIR LINE OFFICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John R. Nicholson (Vancouver Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. It is a matter of urgency because of the principle involved and the employment affected. I have given the minister notice. Has the minister been advised that United Air Lines propose to close their office in Vancouver? If so, has the air transport board or any other agency of government taken any steps to prevent the lay-off of the Canadian employees affected by the move?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, this is an internal managerial decision of United Air Lines Corporation. The government, the air transport board or no other government board has any jurisdiction over this dicision.

THE MINISTRY

REPORTED INTENTION OF PUBLIC WORKS MINISTER TO RESIGN

On the orders of the day:

Miss Judy V. LaMarsh (Niagara Falls): I have a question for the Minister of Public Works. Will the minister advise the house whether he has in fact declared his intention outside this chamber to resign from the ministry in the near future?

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Public Works): No, Mr. Speaker.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

NATO—ACQUISITION BY CANADA OF NUCLEAR WEAPONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. My question is prompted because of my concern as a result of qualified newspaper reports to the effect that the United States government is working behind the scenes to force the Canadian delegation to accept nuclear weapons at the coming NATO conference.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think the hon. member realizes that by prefacing his question as he does in this fashion, he puts his possible question in grave jeopardy.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Speaker, I was merely expressing my concern before asking the question.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Herridge: My question is this. In view of the minister's intention to attend the North Atlantic Treaty Organization ministerial conference in Paris next week, will the minister inform the house whether he expects a decision will be made with respect to the acquisition of nuclear weapons for Canadians or by Canadians?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I do not expect that any decision of that kind will be made.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): May I ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether Canada is participating in certain preliminary conversations which are taking place before the meeting of the NATO council and which, according to reports, will deal among other things with the question of a NATO nuclear force.

Mr. Green: Mr. Speaker, I have seen no suggestion about a preliminary conference dealing with the question of a NATO nuclear force. There may be a preliminary meeting of the foreign ministers of the United States, the United Kingdom, France and West Germany with regard to Berlin. However, any consideration of a NATO nuclear force would arise in the NATO meeting.

[Later:]

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question to that directed by the hon. member for Kootenay West to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the fact that the minister is planning to attend the NATO meeting next week, can we have his assurance that Canada will resist any efforts to make NATO a nuclear power?

Mr. Green: Mr. Speaker, I cannot answer a question of that kind on orders of the day.

NATO—REQUEST TO STOCKPILE SUPPLIES FOR CANADIAN FORCES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Has the Canadian government been requested to stockpile in Europe heavy equipment and supplies for our NATO reserve forces and, if so, has the government taken any decision in this regard?

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of any request in that regard.

Mr. Hellyer: You are certainly not up to date.

Inquiries of the Ministry

CANADIAN CENTENNIAL

INQUIRY AS TO APPOINTMENT OF COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. By way of explanation I should say that in October I asked the Prime Minister whether action was being taken to appoint a commissioner to get the centennial organization moving. In November he replied that action was expected shortly. My December question is this. Will the Prime Minister shortly be good enough to culminate action before 1963?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think the hon. member will recall that a day or two ago the Prime Minister replied to a question of a similar nature regarding this appointment.

UNITED NATIONS

DISARMAMENT—REFERENCE TO STATEMENT BY EXTERNAL AFFAIRS MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs a question. Because of the misgivings as to the success of the current disarmament discussions in Geneva expressed by the minister yesterday in Toronto, and as reported over the C.B.C. last night, will the minister give the house the reasons for the view that he now takes with regard to the present discussions in Geneva?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, during the course of a very interesting speech yesterday to the Empire club in Toronto I pointed out that—

Mr. Pearson: Interesting to whom?

Mr. Green: —progress in the eighteen nation disarmament committee meeting in Geneva had not been as great as I expected. That is as far as I went. I did not say that the negotiations were hopeless.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): May I ask a supplementary question. From what the minister has said now and from what he said yesterday would I be right in concluding that the minister was preparing the Canadian public for an announcement by the government of a decision to acquire nuclear weapons?

Mr. Green: No, Mr. Speaker. I am not as devious as is the hon. member for Essex East.

[Later:]

Mr. Stanley Haidasz (Parkdale): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of his statement yesterday to the combined meeting of the Empire and Canadian clubs in Toronto that the Canadian resolution at the United Nations against Soviet imperialism was mainly motivated by the attacks of the Soviet union on the United Kingdom, can the minister tell us whether and how soon he will instruct the Canadian delegation at the United Nations, out of genuine sympathy for the subjugated countries of central Europe, to bring forward a resolution demanding stronger action toward the liberation of the Soviet dominated countries of central Europe?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I rather feel that the hon. member was expressing a point of view leading to some form of controversy with the minister in this regard.

Mr. Haidasz: A supplementary question—

Mr. Green: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I pointed out in my speech that that was one of the motives for bringing up the question, but I think the speech which was made for Canada on the question of Soviet imperialism last week or the week before speaks for itself and shows very clearly that this government is extremely concerned about the interests of these nations.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I was quite satisfied that the nature of the question was going to bring forth an argument, and that has definitely been borne out. I must say, with due respect to the minister, that there was no question of privilege here. He was doing some arguing.

Mr. Haidasz: On a question of privilege—

Mr. Speaker: Make sure it is privilege.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question. May I ask—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member has stated that he wishes to speak on a question of privilege.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am sorry.

Mr. Haidasz: May I ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs to comment on his answer—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I indicated that the minister was out of order in the argument he was advancing in his reply under the guise of privilege, which I did not recognize.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PAYMENT OF SESSIONAL STAFF DURING HOLIDAY RECESS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the Prime Minister's statement yesterday announcing a recess of the House of Commons from the 20th of this month until January 21, is the Prime Minister in a position to advise the house whether consideration has been given or any decision has been made relative to the care of the sessional staff of the House of Commons, having regard to their position as breadwinners and in particular that of single persons, in their service to the House of Commons?

Mr. Speaker: Order. May I say that this is a matter for decision by the commissioners of internal economy of the house. A decision in this regard will be forthcoming very shortly.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

MONTREAL-CHICOUTIMI—USE OF ENGLISH SPEAKING EMPLOYEES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Maurice Cote (Chicoutimi): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport.

Does the minister know that some C.N.R. employees on the train from Montreal to Chicoutimi speak English only even though that area is 98 per cent French speaking?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I should like to remind the hon. member that no question can be asked on the orders of the day concerning the language spoken by railway and airline employees.

BRIDGES

CHAMPLAIN BRIDGE, MONTREAL—INQUIRY AS TO REMOVAL OF TOLLS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. B. S. Mackasey (Verdun): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Transport. In view of the expected influx of visiters to the island of Montreal for the world's fair, has the government in its long range plans contemplated the removal of tolls on the Champlain bridge?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, if and when a decision is taken in this matter it will be announced.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

DELIVERY OF HOLIDAY MAIL BY TEMPORARY EMPLOYEES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Azellus Denis (St. Denis): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Postmaster General. Is it the intention of the government to have Christmas and New Year's mail delivered by inexperienced workers while regular mailmen are doing indoor work?

Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I think I know what the hon. member is getting at, but it is too broad a question to answer in a few minutes. As he knows, every year the post offices take on large numbers of persons to assist in the delivery of the mail. How this is managed is largely the responsibility of the postmaster in each centre.

Mr. Denis: A supplementary question. May I ask the Postmaster General if she will consider the advisability of having these inexperienced persons accompanied by regular mailmen so there will be no delays in the delivery of the mail?

Mr. Speaker: Have someone holding someone's hand.

SECRETARY OF STATE

CANADA YEAR BOOK—SIMULTANEOUS ISSUE IN ENGLISH AND FRENCH

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Bernard Dumont (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I would have liked to do so at the beginning of the sitting, but since the translation comes always a bit late, I waited a few moments.

I want to congratulate and thank the government for having published simultaneously, in French and in English, the Canada Year Book. If one considers that some years the French version was published six months later—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I wish to point out to the hon. member that these publications appear in both languages, according to a custom established many years ago and according to certain regulations. Therefore, there is no need to rise on a question of privilege each time a document is published in both languages. If that matter was brought up every time it happens, members would be rising all day long on questions of privilege.

Mr. Dumont: On a point of order. It is just that delays of six months have occurred in the past and that, this time, justice prevailed.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON TALKS WITH POLISH DEPUTY FOREIGN MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Haidasz (Parkdale): May I ask a question of the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of his recent talks in Ottawa with the deputy minister for foreign affairs of Poland, I should like to ask the minister what stand he has taken on behalf of the Canadian government on the issues discussed during these conversations?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Well, Mr. Speaker, this is a new breed of question on orders of the day. My suggestion is that it is completely out of order.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

PRINTING AND BINDING OF GILL COMMITTEE REPORT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): I should like to ask the Secretary of State if the Queen's printer has completed the printing and binding of the Gill report, and if he has not yet done so will the minister find out and let us know on Monday when it will be ready?

Hon. G. E. Halpenny (Secretary of State): I understand that the printing is completed but we are held up on the binding. I will check.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): May I ask the Secretary of State if there is any objection, so far as he can see, to giving the Minister of Labour a copy of the report in English so there will be a minimum of delay in the government developing a policy regarding a matter that it promised the country three years ago? May I ask the Secretary of State, because thousands of people are very concerned—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): No reply from an arrogant government.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Talk from an arrogant member.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair is aware of the chit chat that is going on across the floor at this time, and I would suggest that the chit chat could be exchanged outside of the house.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

ESTABLISHMENT OF COMMITTEE ON DRUGS AND CHEMICAL FOOD CONTAMINATION

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare) moved:

That a special committee be appointed to consider and report upon (a) the law and practices relating to the control of the introduction, marketing and use of drugs; and (b) the dangers arising from contamination of food by the use of chemicals to kill weeds, insects and other pests;

Establishment of Committee on Drugs

That the committee consist of 15 members to be designated by the house;

That the committee be empowered to send for persons and papers and to report from time to time;

That the committee be empowered to sit during the sittings of the house;

That the committee have power to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be deemed advisable; and

That standing order 66 be suspended in relation thereto.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the house will recall that on November 30 I indicated the government's intention to recommend the establishment of a special committee to consider and report upon certain aspects of the food and drug responsibilities of my department. In consequence a government notice of motion appeared on Votes and Proceedings of Friday, November 30, and was transferred to government orders on December 3. This resolution is set out on today's order paper, Mr. Speaker.

I do not believe I need to read it into the record at this stage. I do not believe I need to dwell on the reasons for this motion which will, I am sure, be supported by all hon. members. Events over the past year, and indeed in recent months almost on a daily basis, have clearly indicated the uncertainties which we are facing in the drug field. While the matter of the contamination of food by the use of chemicals designed to kill weeds, insects and other pests has perhaps not yet gained as high a degree of public attention, it does represent a problem which is likely to become more and more prominent in the years ahead.

As the house is aware, our new drug procedures have been under intensive study by a special committee of the Royal College of Physicians and Surgeons. The report of its findings, together with recommendations, is nearing completion and should be available for consideration by the proposed parliamentary committee. There is also the matter of Bill No. C-3, which has initiated several fundamental changes in our food and drug legislation. In my opinion these changes represent a very real advance in providing some degree of control over the distribution of drug samples and in strengthening our authority in respect of the introduction and withdrawal of drugs.

However, I also felt that it would be well for hon. members to have an opportunity to consider not only the legislation itself but also the practices and procedures relating to control of the introduction, marketing and use of drugs. In the judgment of the government the most effective way of accomplishing this kind of broad and detailed study would be through the establishment of a special committee with such a composition and terms of reference as are set out in the motion now before the house.

[Mr. Monteith.]

I know that all hon. members will join with me, Mr. Speaker, in paying tribute to the effective job which has been done within the authority of the Food and Drugs Act. The fact that we are now giving thought to an investigation of the important parts of this structure is in no way a reflection on the record achieved over the years. However, we seem to be moving into a new era, not only of widening opportunity but also of great complexity in the food and drug field. I think we have a public responsibility to take every possible step to ensure that our legislation and procedures are geared, in so far as is humanly possible, to these new and changing circumstances. I might say that while the work of the committee is going on, the food and drug directorate and other research institutions as well as the drug companies themselves are pushing forward with their research on drug testing. Any information we obtain that would be helpful to the medical profession will be passed on to them promptly. Surely, Mr. Speaker, a lesson to be learned from the recent tragedy is that pregnant women should only take drugs on the advice of their physicians.

In presenting this resolution to the house I ask for the support of all hon. members in approving it so the matter may be carried out without further delay.

Mr. Stanley Haidasz (Parkdale): Mr. Speaker, on rising to participate in the debate on the resolution proposing the appointment of a special committee to study the drug laws and the dangers of chemical pesticides, may I say that on this side of the house, although we are happy to see the minister finally acquiesce in the pleas of the opposition to refer this whole matter of drugs and pesticides to a special committee, nevertheless we are disappointed that the minister took so long and delayed unnecessarily this decision, which no doubt will prevent patients, drug manufacturers and medical researchers from benefiting earlier from the recommendations which we hope the government will translate into law without further delay for the common good of all in this country.

We regret that the minister fell into the same irresponsible attitude of his cabinet colleagues, the pathological attitude, so characteristic of the present administration, to postpone decisions in important matters. It is quite apparent that this government is paralysed with fear of making important decisions, and most likely for the reason that it fears to face grim reality; afraid that it might make a mistake, as it so often does; afraid to be criticized; afraid of the tribunal of public scrutiny. In short it is afraid to govern.

Mr. Monteith: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, has this anything to do with the resolution before us?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): It certainly has.

Mr. Haidasz: When it does try to legislate it brings in half baked, incomplete, and incoherent legislation or proposals with which to patch up existing laws. These are often mere palliatives where radical surgery is most urgently needed, and it is no wonder, Mr. Speaker, that the people of Canada have rejected this government and are demanding a change. This resolution is another example of long overdue and incomplete proposals. We are faced in this committee with an assignment of a serious nature, in an area of supreme importance to the health and life of the Canadian people.

It has already been stated, both by the minister and others in this house and in the other place, that Canada's Food and Drugs Act of 1953 is second to none in the world and that it was regarded as a model by the world health organization and many countries which used it as the basis for their own drug and food legislation. I am happy to hear this praise, for it gives credit to the former minister of health, an illustrious member of this house, who has served and continues to serve this house, devoting all his years and all his talents to the common good of all in this country.

Mr. Speaker, in this period of rapidly advancing technological progress in the field of chemistry, the industrialized world is confronted with far reaching changes and progress in foods, drugs, cosmetics and pesticides. In order to keep up with this scientific progress, responsible governments must update their legislation and regulations, thus discharging their responsibility for scientific progress as well as for public safety. That is why we should regularly review vital legislation pertaining to health and life. It is unfortunate that the thalidomide tragedy, producing so many malformed infants and giving their parents untold grief, has forced this and other governments to pay more attention and to initiate a probe into the matter of drugs. I believe that public protection is the overriding motive in considering this probe and new legislation. While government, industry, the medical profession and the consumer have their responsibilities, all of us in this house have the grave responsibility to probe into this matter and enact the best possible legislation for the good of all concerned.

Much has been said and written about the thalidomide tragedy in Canada. Many Canadians have been asking why this misfortune happened in Canada but was avoided in the United States of America. Many Canadians are still asking for the complete explanation of why this government waited three months to request the withdrawal of thalidomide from the Canadian market when Germany did so on November 26, 1961, and Canada waited until March 2, 1962. Many Canadians are alarmed at the removal of many drugs from the market which were previously approved as safe and effective by the food and drug directorate. Many Canadians are increasingly succumbing to iatrogenic or drug-induced diseases and drug allergies. Many patients are revolting against the high cost of drugs. Pharmacists and doctors are complaining about the confusion of the multiplicity of drugs, many of which are ineffective and others dangerous. Responsible laymen and doctors are complaining about the deluge of flamboyant and even misleading advertising of drugs on television, radio, press and in mailed literature.

North Americans, Mr. Speaker, have been stunned by the revelations about chemical pesticides written by a scientist and marine biologist, Miss Rachel Carson, in a book entitled "Silent Spring". In this document we find an indictment of the indiscriminate use of new chemicals which are contaminating our food and our whole environment. This should warn us to be careful, and to prod governments to review their legislation to ensure the safety of the public and the survival of nature.

Besides this government's slowness in banning thalidomide, it has introduced both confusion and dismay in medical research centres by prohibiting the further distribution of lysergic acid diethylamide. Many of us have received complaints from researchers in psychiatry and alcoholism protesting the banning of L.S.D. This drug has been found to be very promising for use in "depth" psychotherapy. Apparently there is no evidence of serious danger if the drug is used by competent psychiatrists who employ full security precautions during the period of its effectiveness. These researchers ask that they should be permitted to work with it in their research projects both in psychiatry and alcoholism. Specialists at the Ontario alcoholism research foundation have recently embarked on a research study of L.S.D., believing that it may be a valuable treatment for alcoholics. Dr. F. S. Lawson, director of the Saskatchewan psychiatric services, claims that L.S.D. had given 50 per cent improvement rate in alcoholics when other treatments failed.

As yet the government has not decided to give these researchers a clear directive and immediate notice concerning the future availability of L.S.D. The world is filled with so many intensely dangerous chemicals that it seems utterly stupid to ban a few which happen to be suitable for use as drugs. It would be tragically unfair to restrict the availability of L.S.D. now that medical researchers have learned to use it properly. What could be done in this case is for the health department to decide to what research institutions L.S.D. should be made available, and to demand that a record be kept of each occasion on which the drug is used, with accounting of all stocks available for inspection at any time. I hope the government will quickly notify these researchers of its final decision.

There are other aspects of the Food and Drugs Act which neither the amendments nor the preliminary remarks of the minister have explained, aspects and problems which are important and today call for stronger legislation. The United Nations Food and Agriculture Organization last summer issued a warning against the use of additives in baby foods. Other problems consist of drug nomenclature, the proper testing of drugs for teratogenicity, the licensing of all drug manufacturers and distributors, ethical advertising both to the medical profession and to lay people, and closer scrutiny of food additives, cosmetics and chemical pesticides.

The public and the medical profession have become uneasy and deeply concerned with the abuses that exist today and keep on increasing in the fields of medical advertising, various food additives, potent pesticides, cosmetics and certain drugs. People are easy marks for ineffective medicine, and there is a danger there of self-medication. The Canadian people are also incensed and indignant at the very high cost of drugs today. I believe that part of this high cost is due to the expensive and, alas, flamboyant advertising both to doctors in their journals and to the public. Just the other day the director of the food and drug directorate expressed his fears about the way advertisers are finding ways to evade advertising regulations.

Another grave problem in this field is the multiplicity of drugs available today. The chief pharmacist of St. Joseph's hospital in Hamilton stressed only about three weeks ago at the Ontario hospital association convention the confusion which exists both in the pharmacies and on the floors of hospitals in view of the multiplicity of drugs. I believe, therefore, that a close examination of this matter is urgent.

Mr. Speaker, let me remind the minister at this point that Dr. Helen Taussig of Johns Hopkins University, who did a thorough study of phocomelia, was greatly impressed with photographs of unborn rats with defects of the extremities produced by the ingestion of thalidomide. That is why she suggested that all new drugs which circulate through the bloodstream should be screened for their effect on the offspring of several species of pregnant animals. There are already several drugs in medical use that are known today to be teratogenic in animals. A few drugs, aminopterin, estrogens, androgens, progestins and thalidomide are known to be teratogenic in man as well as in animals. There is need, therefore, for a program in which all drugs given to a population of pregnant women may be recorded and the offspring followed up for many years. But it would be most prudent, according to leading obstetricians in this country, that medication should not be given to pregnant women without very definite medical indications. I believe, Mr. Speaker, that the Minister of National Health and Welfare should instruct the members of the medical profession to follow this wise advice.

All these extensive tests and controls by qualified investigators mean more work and more expense. This means more highly qualified personnel and more adequate laboratories. It is disappointing that in an answer to a question I asked a few years ago it was stated that there are still about 30 positions in the food and drug directorate which have been vacant for many months. There are many problems in the marketing of safe and effective drugs. On October 4, 1962 the 87th congress of the United States of America unanimously passed many amendments to their food and drug act. These amendments were the result of an exhaustive two year study by a special congressional committee, which also probed the relationship of patent laws with regard to high drug prices.

We in this house welcome the opportunity to study this whole problem with the help of expert advice. But we should remember that all the recommendations and all the additional powers that may be granted to the food and drug directorate, much as they should do to prevent a repetition of the thalidomide tragedy, will not absolutely banish the hazards associated with the use of drugs. Should the future show inadequacies in the laws now being passed, let us hope the pattern of progress will not be repeated again through catastrophe.

Mr. Speaker, with regard to the specific points of reference of this resolution, let me point out to the Minister of National Health and Welfare that they are completely inadequate. There is no mention, for example, of any scrutiny of the problem of cosmetics yet this problem has been scrutinized by the special committee of the United States congress and it was proved that a great deal of danger has occurred to women by the use of cosmetic sprays. In the field of marketing we hope to examine the indiscriminate advertising and labelling of drugs, and also exorbitant drug prices, especially as they are affected by existing patent laws in Canada.

I am very grateful to my colleagues on this side of the house for having insisted that the Minister of Justice provide the restrictive trade practices commission with adequate help to finish their report by the end of this year. I hope this report will be studied by the committee which we are debating at the moment. As far as the use of drugs is concerned, I hope the Minister of National Health and Welfare, who I am sure will be present at the sittings of this special committee, will allow us to study not only prescription drugs but also drugs that are sold without prescription over the counter, and especially the whole field of patented drugs. Many of these drugs are used by people in the false hope that they will aid them in their maladies, and we know how much danger there is in delaying diagnosis and proper treatment. I believe that the use of many of these patented drugs sold freely over the counter contributes to this danger.

As far as the number of members on this committee is concerned, let me say that 15 is totally inadequate. I believe there are many hon. members on both sides of this house who would like to participate in the hearings of this committee. In order that they be given that advantage I would propose that the committee be increased by at least five more members.

(Translation):

Mr. Guy Marcoux (Quebec-Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, I take pleasure in joining with all the members in this house who have asked for the setting up of the committee on food and drugs. I will not take too much time, so that the committee can get to work as soon as possible.

However, it is unfortunate that the hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Haidasz) has taken this opportunity to make a somewhat partisan speech on such an important matter. There is nothing surprising in the fact that the Liberal party has succeeded in getting enacted certain measures of some importance. It would have been rather surprising if they had not, since they were in power during 22 years. It is easy to say that one could do better than another if one had the chance, but it is more difficult to prove it, especially when we consider what has been done in the past. In any case, I want to revert to the resolution now before us.

An hon. Member: It is about time.

Mr. Marcoux: I understand it is about time. But an hon. member took 20 minutes to discuss things which do not concern the resolution. Therefore, I can very well take 20 seconds of the time of the house to make my remarks.

I simply wish that it would be possible to name to this committee physicians who are directly concerned with the use of drugs and who want to be appointed to it.

There is always a great difference between practice and theory. It is a known fact that there are, in the various departments, very efficient officials who might not be absolutely up to date with certain applications for the very simple reason that they have not had the chance recently to practice their skill or their profession.

I therefore express the wish that physicians who are members of this house, can also be members of this committee.

As far as the question of increasing to 20 the membership of this committee is concerned, that would be possible. However, the question was discussed in the committee of the whole house. It is here, in the committee of the whole house, that a request was made for the setting up of another committee. Thus, it is useless to set up a special committee if what is wanted is a committee of all the members of the house. We should then revert to the committtee of the whole house. And since the committee of the whole house has asked to form a special committee I fail to see why its membership should be increased, whether by 5, 10 or 15 members.

Again, I join with all those who have welcomed the initiative taken by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Monteith) in setting up such a committee. I hope, as I said a moment ago, that the medical profession, more especially the active medical profession, shall enjoy an adequate representation.

(Text):

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I rise simply for the purpose of saying that the members of this group are heartily in support of this resolution and in favour of setting up a special committee to look into the whole subject of drugs, including their introduction, sale and use. This committee, whose establishment we have been urging ever since the house met and, indeed, before the house met—in fact ever since the tragedies were reported in connection with the use of thalidomide—could well serve a most useful purpose.

I can see no useful purpose in reviewing the thalidomide incident or in charging the department with negligence, oversight or indecisiveness. This was all debated when Bill No. C-3 was before the house, and I can see no advantage in reiterating the arguments which were put forward at that time. I think, however, it is unfortunate that the minister did not introduce this resolution at an early stage so that Bill No. C-3, the amendment to the Food and Drugs Act, could have been referred to the committee. There are many things in that bill which we found in need of clarification and about which we needed further information. We think this could have been procured had the bill been sent to this special committee. Although the bill has now been passed, I hope its contents and, indeed, those of the whole Food and Drugs Act will be open for discussion by the committee, and I hope the minister will give some undertaking that if in its wisdom the committee should decide to recommend to the house that there be changes to the Food and Drugs Act, or that some of the proposals contained in Bill C-3 ought to be further amended, legislation will be brought down during the session to give effect to those recommendations.

I have particularly in mind lysergic acid diethylamide or L.S.D., as it is often called. When Bill No. C-3 was before the house I understood the minister to say in committee that this drug would be available for clinical use under supervision, that while it was on schedule H it would not be unobtainable by clinics. I am told, however, that some clinics are experiencing difficulty in procuring it. It may be that the regulations which are to be passed in connection with the Food and Drugs Act will clarify this situation, and if that is so I hope the minister will give us such an assurance in closing the debate. Because I want to point out that the use of L.S.D. in mental hospitals and in the treatment of alcoholics has had some beneficial results. No one can yet claim that the results are definitive, because the use of this drug is still in an experimental stage but undoubtedly there is a good deal of evidence to show that correctly used under the supervision of competent psychiatrists it has had very beneficial results in both these cases. I trust, therefore, that the regulations will permit its use, or at least that this whole question will be discussed by the committee.

As a matter of fact, the whole Food and Drugs Act ought to be referred to this committee so that recommendations regarding amendments to it can be brought to the attention of the house. The Food and Drugs Act is a fairly old piece of legislation and the whole field of chemotherapy, the whole field of the production of wonder drugs, as they are called, has changed so radically in the last few years that new techniques for testing drugs, controlling their use and assessing their value are required.

One of the things that concerns me somewhat is that the terms of reference of this committee are fairly limited. The committee is limited in the first instance to an examination of the introduction, marketing and use of drugs. I hope those terms will be considered wide enough to enable the committee to deal with the cost of drugs. If the terms of reference are going to be interpreted on a narrow basis, then certainly, the cost of drugs could not be investigated by this committee. It might be wise to amend the resolution while it is still before the house so there may be no doubt about the committee's authority to look into costs.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Surely the government would not be opposed to that.

Mr. Douglas: There is nothing in the resolution to indicate that this question would be before the committee and I therefore hope the house will be prepared to amend the resolution so it would also include the investigation of the cost of drugs.

This is becoming an important factor in the expenses of the average family. An investigation was carried out in the United States by a congressional committee under the chairmanship of Senator Kefauver, and the evidence which was brought to light by that committee regarding drug costs shocked the entire nation. In the United States a little book has been published called "It is Cheaper to Die". In it the author, who has been working close to the medical association in the United States as a newspaperman for many years, did a detailed analysis of the sale of drugs. He points out that in many instances there is a markup of 7,000 per cent on drugs, and that the profits made by pharmaceutical houses are exorbitant; that the cost of sending out samples, of paying for patents, and of excessive advertising has raised drug prices to a point at which a severe burden is placed on people in lower income groups who are compelled to purchase these drugs in order to secure the kind of medication they need.

If the minister does not feel that the terms of reference as set out in this resolution will permit the committee to go into the matter of the cost of drugs, I hope he will be prepared to accept an amendment to widen the terms of reference so there may be no doubt of the committee having full authority.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Will my hon. friend permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. Douglas: Certainly.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I agree in the main with what he has said. I am just wondering if we should not assume in this discussion that the phrase in the resolution referring to the power to examine into the use of drugs must be interpreted, in the absence of a denial of this interpretation, to include the very matter which the hon. gentleman is urging the committee be empowered to deal with.

Mr. Douglas: I would certainly hope the committee would have that authority. I had hoped the minister would make some statement regarding it. However, on its face it simply says that they have the power to report upon (a) the law and practices relating to the control of the introduction, marketing and use of drugs. While the clause quoted by my hon. friend may give that authority, it seems to me that the terms of reference are contained in clauses (a) and (b). It seems to me doubtful that an investigation into the cost of drugs would be warranted under those two clauses. If it is not the opinion of the minister that the terms as set out would permit an investigation into cost, I hope he will be prepared to accept an amendment in order to clarify that matter beyond any doubt.

The second part of the terms of reference, clause (b), provides that the committee may report on the dangers arising from contamination of food by the use of chemicals to kill weeds, insects and other pests. I commend the minister for adding this clause. One of the anomalies of the battle which man wages against disease is the fact that while we are constantly finding cures and are successful in defeating the ills to to which man is subject, at the same time new menaces constantly come upon the horizon. One of them—and this has nothing to do with this debate—is the question of radiation fall-out, the danger of strontium 90 and the many other by-products of nuclear fission. This is something which we in this modern age must think about because of its harmful effects upon human beings, both those now living and those yet unborn. However, there are many other dangers. There are dangers from the pesticides and insecticides which are now widely used on this continent.

A short time ago a prominent United States scientist made a survey of the millions of tons of insecticides and pesticides used on this continent, which are washed into the soil and carried into the streams and rivers to find their way into the drinking water used by the people in the cities. As well as that, of course, they find their way into the vegetation and the meat supplies which constitute the food of the people of this continent. Hence a whole new menace has arisen by this widespread use of chemicals. I think we can look forward to an increased use of chemical weed sprays and the use of pesticides by farmers, fruit growers and forestry management personnel. I congratulate the minister on having included this item, as I think it is a very useful study which has been altogether too long delayed.

I should like to say on behalf of our group that we shall support the setting up of this committee. We shall be glad to be represented on the committee. If this committee is given a chance with fairly broad terms of reference I am convinced that it can render a real service to the people of Canada and can help to find some answer to what is a very perplexing problem, namely how we can control the use and manufacture of drugs; how we can see to it that they are as safe as human ingenuity can devise; and, I hope above all, how we can see to it that they are available at a price which the average citizen can afford to pay.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I rise to deal with one aspect of the resolution before the house. The hon. member for Parkdale, in the comprehensive speech he made on behalf of the Liberal opposition, has covered the points we would wish to emphasize at this time. I had assumed that there is no doubt about the power of the committee to examine into the cost of drugs. It may be desirable to indicate that, under my interpretation, the resolution as it is now drafted empowers the committee to examine into the cost of drugs. The operational part of the resolution before the house provides as follows:

> That a special committtee be appointed to consider and report upon (a) the law and practices relating to the control of the introduction, marketing and use of drugs;

I would interpret the phrase "use of drugs" in the resolution to be broad enough to permit the committee, without coming back to this house to seek an extension of its terms of reference, to be able to examine forthwith the important economic aspects involved in the cost of drugs. The minister has not indicated his view. He certainly did not indicate, when the hon. member who has just taken his seat was speaking, what his view was with regard to this matter. If he were to indicate by way of interjection that there is no doubt about how the government interprets this resolution—of course that would not necessarily finalize the matter—it would not be necessary to proceed with an amendment at this time. Will the minister indicate, by interjection or otherwise, whether he agrees with the interpretation I am now making and with the interpretation which the hon. gentleman who has just spoken hoped would be given to the resolution? Since the minister does not indicate any modicum of mobility at the moment one way or another—and I may say that is not an altogether uncharacteristic pose on some occasions—

Mr. Monteith: I thank the hon. member very much.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —I would move, seconded by the hon. member for Cochrane, that the resolution be amended in the following manner:

That after the word "use" in the second line of the resolution there be added the words "and cost of drugs".

Mr. Speaker: Is there any question as to the nature of the amendment and whether or not it is in order?

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Parliamentary Secretary to the Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I submit with deference that I think the hon. member for Essex East, by the nature of his comments before moving the amendment and the nature of the amendment itself, has ruled himself out of order. He posed a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. He said he would like to have the minister comment on whether the subject matters which can be discussed within the ambit of this resolution include the right to deal with certain economic aspects of the sale, manufacture and use of drugs. Having received no answer from the minister he then said, as I take it, that he was assuming that the resolution did not include this and was going to move what in his opinion was an adequate amendment to bring in this additional subject matter. Having done so, he has introduced a subject matter which, according to his own interpretation, is foreign to the resolution and consequently not relevant to the subject matter of the original resolution.

When you take a look at the resolution as originally proposed you will see that under the ejusdem generis rule, having in mind that this is a motion moved by the Minister of National Health and Welfare, and alleged by the opposition to be consequent upon their request for the establishment of such a committee made during the course of consideration of amendments to the Food and Drugs Act, the resolution is related to the various aspects of the Food and Drugs Act, which have nothing at all to do with the economic aspects involving the sale, manufacturing and marketing of drugs. The words "control of the introduction, marketing and use of drugs" are to be considered within the meaning, interpretation and operation of the Food and Drugs Act. This is an attempt to introduce into the resolution something completely alien to its concept, and I submit with deference that the amendment is completely out of order and should be so ruled.

Mr. Douglas: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker, if I may say a word, the parliamentary secretary has based his whole argument as to the relevancy of this amendment on the ground that the terms of reference really are that the committee should discuss the Food and Drugs Act. It seems to me if that were the import of the resolution that is what the resolution would have said, that all that is being referred to the committee is a study of the Food and Drugs Act.

I submit to Your Honour that the resolution says no such thing. It says two things; first, that the committee shall have power to look into the law and the practices—not just the law—relating to the control of the introduction, marketing and use of drugs; and second, that it shall have the power to look into the dangers—not the law arising from contamination of food by the use of chemicals to kill weeds, insects and other pests. Therefore I submit to Your Honour that the terms of reference of this special committee are much wider than merely a study of the Food and Drugs Act, and all that the amendment moved by the hon. member for Essex East suggests is that it be clarified that the term "use of drugs" means also the cost of drugs. Personally, if I were on the committee and this came up I would be arguing like the hon. member for Essex East, that the use of drugs certainly includes the cost of drugs.

He is seeking by an amendment to make it clear beyond shadow of doubt that the committee has the authority to look into the cost of drugs. I submit that this investigation is not limited to the study of one act. This is limited to a study of the law and practices with reference to the use of drugs and also with reference to the dangers of contamination from insecticides and pesticides. Therefore it seems to me that to clarify the terms of reference by inserting the word "cost" is perfectly relevant to the spirit of the resolution.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to speak on the point of order if Your Honour thinks it necessary. If Your Honour takes the view that the amendment is in order, then there is no need of my joining to support the interpretation given by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam. Do I take it that Your Honour agrees that the amendment is in order?

Mr. Speaker: At the moment I think the burden of proof is on the hon. member.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I was hoping that was not the case, but since Your Honour has imposed that burden I will endeavour to discharge it. I think the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam has dealt completely with the objections raised by the hon. member for Peace River. We are not discussing the Food and Drugs Act as such in this resolution. The resolution does not address itself to the amendments of the Food and Drugs Act which were introduced in the house a few weeks ago. It deals with a much wider aspect of the whole problem, a wider aspect introduced by the government itself.

While the government had considered establishing a parliamentary committee to go into the whole question, it did not act on the suggestion made by the opposition parties that the bill be referred to a committee. The government has not restricted itself to the narrow terms of reference which would have been involved, if the bill which was dealt with a few weeks ago had been referred to a committee.

The fact is that the government has initiated a wider discussion than that contemplated, into the whole question not only of the use of drugs but, as the hon. member who has just spoken pointed out, into the law and practices relating to the control of the introduction, marketing and use of drugs. That this amendment is clearly in order will be seen, I believe, in the literal meaning of the word "marketing". We would not have introduced this amendment but for the reluctance of the minister to indicate to the house that the government interpreted the resolution as empowering the committee to examine into such matters as the cost of drugs.

Now, the fact that the government has not given any indication that it desires this interpretation does not mean, of course, that the resolution as presently drawn does not include the right of a committee to go into the question of the cost of drugs; this is clear. I am assuming that this committee, when it does meet, even though there might be no change in the form and wording of the present resolution, will seek, as I think the language of the resolution warrants, to examine into the cost of drugs.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am not at all worried about the merit of what the hon. member is trying to achieve. What I am concerned with is the point of order, his right to make such an amendment.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Your Honour is quite right. I was driven into these irrelevancies because they were introduced by the hon. member for Peace River.

Although not the immediate point before the house, the argument of the hon. gentleman from Peace River was that the amendment which I proposed was foreign to the resolution now before the house. I would ask Your Honour to note that in the resolution the word "marketing" is included. The concise Oxford dictionary, which I have taken from the table, defines the word marketing in this way:

> Buy or sell in the market; sell goods in the market.

Well, now, this clearly establishes that the amendment is not in any way foreign to the implications or indeed the actual direction contained in the resolution itself. I submit, for this reason, that this amendment is in order. We should amend the resolution accordingly so as to empower the committee, without any doubt, to examine into the important question of the cost of drugs, as long as there is no violation of the division of powers between the two senior levels of government.

Mr. Speaker: It has been moved by the hon. member for Essex East and seconded by the hon. member for Cochrane that the motion be amended by inserting after the word "use" in the second line the words "cost of drugs". On the matter of whether this amendment can be received at all I would draw hon. members' attention to Beauchesne's fourth edition, citation 291, which reads as follows:

> When the house is considering a motion, of which notice has been given, for the appointment of a select committee, a member cannot move an amendment that the committee be given wider powers than those which were set down in the notice.

In addition there is this dilemma that the hon. member faces. If in the word "marketing" there is included the question of cost, then the amendment is redundant. On the other hand, if it is not included in "marketing" he is seeking to widen the powers of the committee and this is something the hon. member cannot do. He cannot seek to widen the powers of a committee. As a matter of fact the minister, in presenting this motion, could not put forward an amendment to broaden the powers of the committee without the unanimous consent of the house. If the house gave unanimous consent, then of course that could be done. The powers are very limited.

I could give the hon. member many more citations and rulings by Speakers. There is one by Mr. Speaker Macdonald which appears in Journals for April 4, 1951, page 243. He ruled that an amendment cannot be moved giving the committee wider powers than those which were set out in the notice of motion. Then there is another ruling by Mr. Speaker Macdonald on November 2, 1951 as contained in the Journals, page 67. He said:

I might say at this time that if the minister himself proposed an amendment which would widen the terms of the resolution I could not allow it to stand unless it was with the unanimous consent of the house.

There were other rulings in 1952 as published in the Journals at page 240, again by Mr. Speaker Macdonald; in 1959, April 29, appearing in the Journals at page 361, a ruling by Mr. Speaker Michener. I cannot, therefore, accept the amendment.

Mr. Douglas: May I ask the minister if he would accept the amendment and ask for the unanimous consent of the house?

Mr. Speaker: There is one difficulty. The hon. member has already spoken, so he cannot rise.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I had not finished my speech.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas), having spoken, cannot rise and ask a question. He is entitled to speak only once. Any hon. member may put this question to the minister, but if the minister rises to reply that will conclude the debate. The question may be put to him and he may ultimately answer it, but hon. members are in this dilemma, that if he answers the minister closes the debate.

The hon. member for Essex East had not yet completed his remarks, but had put his amendment and we had dealt with the point of order that was raised at that time. I shall therefore hear the hon. member if he desires to complete his remarks, but not on the point of order.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Your Honour is quite right. The point of order has already been disposed of and, I regret, against the view which I think should have prevailed. The hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam has made a valuable suggestion, and while under ordinary circumstances he would not deputize me to speak for him, I think in this particular situation he would. I now put to the Minister of National Health and Welfare the suggestion the hon. member has made. If the minister, when he speaks, will accept the amendment proposed it will receive the unanimous consent of the house. Then we will have an opportunity to perfect the resolution and remove any doubt as to the committee's powers.

I am not speaking to the point of order, but am continuing my remarks. There is no question now about the need for an amendment because this resolution, as presently drawn, does give us the power—this we must affirm—to examine into the cost of drugs because the word "marketing", as I indicated, according to the Oxford dictionary means buying or selling in the market, selling goods in the market. The committee, therefore, in dealing with this resolution is clearly faced with a resolution which will empower it to examine into the cost of drugs.

We now express the view that we hope the government is not going to put any obstacle in the way of the committee when established, to prevent the committee going into this important aspect of the resolution, namely the cost of drugs. The cost of drugs is a matter which has greatly agitated the Canadian people. While there are some problems involved in such an examination that come within the competence of the provincial governments, there is a wide area which would permit an examination into the cost of drugs by a parliamentary committee of this house, particularly in the light of the report which will shortly be made by the restrictive trade practices commission which enquired into certain areas of the problem.

This committee could serve a very useful purpose. I am sure I express the view of all hon. members when I say we recognize that the food and drug directorate of the department under Dr. Morrell is not the subject matter of inquiry. I can say, having had long experience with Dr. Morrell, that Canada has no finer public servant.

Mr. Churchill: Could we carry the resolution now? We have had five speeches on it.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion? The hon. member for Winnipeg North. Was it agreed that the parties would name their speakers, or was there no such agreement?

Mr. Pickersgill: I know of no such agreement, and the hon. member for Winnipeg North rose.

Mr. Churchill: The suggestion was made last night, and there was no objection to it, that there would be one speaker from each party. I am in the hands of the house.

Mr. Pickersgill: As a matter of fact no such suggestion was communicated to me nor, to the best of my knowledge, to the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier). I checked with him about the matter.

Mr. Churchill: It was stated in the house last night.

At one o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 2.30 p.m.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Winnipeg North.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder, Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) would permit me to raise a point of privilege very briefly, which I intended to do as Your Honour left the chair, about the remarks made by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill), and I regret he is not here. I have since confirmed my memory by looking up Hansard, and what the minister said last night was that if there was only one speaker from each party it would not take very much time. There was no indication whatsoever of an agreement, and I would not like the implication left that there was any.

Mr. Speaker: I think it is clearly understood.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I would like to begin by saying that even if there had been an agreement that there would be only one speaker from each group, in so far as the members of this party are concerned the refusal of the minister to permit the committee to discuss what we consider to be one of the most important questions this or any other committee of the house will have to discuss within the next year, namely, the tremendous cost of basic drugs—

Mr. Monteith: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I have never refused this.

Mr. Orlikow: I would have been more than happy, as I am sure the other hon. members who spoke this morning would have been, to have had the minister get on his feet and give the very clear statement he has now given in one sentence.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think the hon. member would of course appreciate that the hon. minister could not speak, as he would have closed the debate, and the hon. member who now has the floor would not have had his opportunity to speak.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, the minister could have nodded his head and we probably would have saved three or four hours of debate in the house before this matter is settled. It seems to me that the resolution moved by the minister is very clear. When you talk about marketing of drugs obviously you can only mean the production by drug companies of drugs for sale and the use of drugs which are to be used on prescription.

If the cost of drugs is put at a figure which makes it difficult, and indeed impossible for people of ordinary means, to purchase them on prescription then their use, to say the least, will be restricted.

Mr. Valade: The same old song.

Mr. Orlikow: The hon. member says it is the old song. I hope that during the next election he goes out to the people in his constituency and tells them that this is not important because I know, and I am sure every other hon. member in the house knows, that there are people in every constituency in the country who have bills for cortisone running at $1 or $2 a day, and people who have bills for tranquilizers running at $1 or $2 a day. I do not know what kind of people are represented by the hon. member who interjected that remark, but I can tell him that in my constituency there are thousands of people who cannot afford those kinds of prices.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think the hon. member will realize we are not going to argue this matter of the cost of drugs. This is a motion for the appointment of a special committee. It is not a motion upon which we will canvass the whole question of drugs and so forth. We must be relevant.

Mr. Douglas: On a point of order and with great respect, Mr. Speaker, we are discussing a motion to set up a special committee of the house and outlining the terms of reference of that committee. It is certainly within the rights of the hon. member to discuss the terms of reference, or anything which he thinks should be included in the terms of reference.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Or his understanding of what the terms are.

Mr. Speaker: There is no direction from the Chair that such could not be done, but not in great detail. There is a matter of relevancy which I think the hon. member will recognize.

Mr. Pickersgill: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman was talking about marketing and he was seeking to define a precise term in the resolution itself. It seems to me that we must try to maintain what is the most important thing in this house, and that is freedom of speech.

Mr. Orlikow: This is a question on which I spoke when the original motion came up and it was not my intention to spend more than five or ten minutes discussing it now because, in my opinion, the facts are so clear that they do not need to be gone into at any great length. But, if hon. members on this side of the house insist on interrupting I shall certainly have to take the time to go into more detail than would ordinarily be necessary. I wonder if the hon. member who interjected has had occasion or the interest to look at the report prepared by Mr. Henry, the director of investigation and research, Combines Investigation Act. If he looks at it and reads the conclusions he will understand what I mean. I want to read just a couple of paragraphs which I am sure will convince any member of this house who is open to reason that this is a question which not only could be, but must be discussed in the committee when it meets. I quote, Mr. Speaker, from page 257.

> The information obtained in this inquiry appears to indicate that, at the manufacturers level, prices of certain drugs are affected by the control over the manufacture, distribution and sale of such drugs exercised through patents. The provisions of the Patent Act relating to compulsory licences appear to have proved ineffectual to combat this situation and the clear intent of the act has been frustrated. This conclusion is not intended to imply any opinion about patents as such, it is intended simply to indicate that, in relation to the sale of drugs in Canada, patents have been and are being used to create monopolistic situations which the Canadian law appears to have been designed to prevent. The control exercised over the manufacture, distribution and sale of certain drugs through patents has virtually eliminated price competition in respect of such drugs and has encouraged other forms of competition which, while possibly bringing other benefits to the public, have resulted in prices being increased rather than decreased.

Further on Mr. Henry says:

> Prices of drugs in Canada are among the highest in the world. These prices tend to reflect current prices of the same or comparative drug products in the United States but, because of the sales tax applicable in Canada, prices to consumers in Canada are about 11 per cent higher.

Mr. Speaker, I suggest to hon. members that this is a clear indication of the importance of discussing the question. If hon. members are still in doubt, I would suggest that they look at the findings of the Kefauver committee in the United States. Let me quote just a couple of lines from Senator Kefauver's report. Hon. members will find this in report No. 448 at page 50:

> Using the average stockholders' equity at the beginning and end of 1959 as the denominator, and the profits for the year as the numerator, the rate of return for the drug industry...was 18.1 per cent. In contrast, the average rate for all manufacturing corporations was 10.5 per cent. In terms of profits as per cent of sales, the drug industry averaged 10.3 per cent whereas all manufacturing corporations averaged 4.8 per cent.

Then Senator Kefauver goes on to point out how on particular drugs, such as one of the most popular tranquilizers, one of the large companies was making over one and a half cents profit on every single tablet they sold to the American public in millions, if not billions, every year. When we see this situation it is not at all surprising that in the opinion of members of this group it is of the utmost importance that the problem of drug prices should be gone into thoroughly by the committee. I am sure that whichever of our members are on that committee they will make this one of the first proposals to the committee when it meets.

I would like to say just a few words about some of the other matters which have been dealt with up to now. I was amazed, I must say, by the speech we heard this morning from the hon. member from Parkdale, Mr. Haidasz, because most of the things of which he accused this government, their indecision, their failure to act, and so on, the difficulties he pointed out, the problems which have arisen in connection with the sale of cosmetics, the irritating chemicals which have been found in cosmetics, the problems he raised in connection with all the other drugs which he mentioned and the problems in connection with pesticides, have been with us for many years, and were problems which were with us even when the former government was in office. I do not say this is an excuse for this government not having acted, but why the hon. member for Parkdale got so excited, I find it difficult to understand. Surely the one thing that has come out of the evidence with regard to the difficulties which have arisen from the drug thalidomide is the fact that the law was not strong enough, not tight enough to give the department the authority to order the discontinuance of the use of the drug. The department had only advisory power; it had to work in co-operation with the drug companies, and so naturally the department was loath, I am sure, to act until it was 100 per cent certain it was correct.

It seems to me that one of the things the committee will have to do will be to make inquiries as to what procedures would be best, so that the department will have the flexibility and yet the right and authority to call for the discontinuance or the suspension of the use of a drug if and when it is found that the drug is harmful.

Having said that, Mr. Speaker, and having said on an earlier occasion that I thought the government moved much too slowly in the thalidomide case, from everything I can find out the department is moving much too fast in connection with the banning of the L.S.D. drug. The leader of this group mentioned this morning that a hospital in North Battleford was told that they could not get their usual supply of L.S.D. This matter was taken up with the minister and it is true that steps have been taken to correct the situation. I think this is the important point, however, which the committee will have to look into, not only because of the importance of L.S.D. but because the procedures go to the whole heart of how we should deal with drugs in this rapidly changing situation, when there are new drugs almost every day. The fact is that as far as I can find out the provision in the bill to prohibit the use of L.S.D. was made without consultation with the people who have been using it. As far as I can find out, the drug has been used in only a very few institutions and under the most rigid control, and yet in Saskatchewan, Manitoba and Quebec, the decision to ban the use of the drug was taken without consultation with the people concerned.

In an order for return which was tabled the other day, in the correspondence dealing with this subject there appears a letter dated October 18, 1962, to Dr. J. D. Murphy, chief medical officer of the food and drug directorate of the Department of National Health and Welfare in Ottawa. The letter is from Dr. Hoffer, the director of psychiatric research in the province of Saskatchewan and reads as follows:

Dear Dr. Murphy:

I have just seen a circular sent by Dr. Morrell, dated October 12, 1962, in which thalidomide and lysergic acid diethylamide are placed on the schedule H. Does this mean that L.S.D. will no longer be available for clinical use? As you know, we have now treated perhaps 500 alcoholics in this province, and we would be very annoyed indeed if we could no longer get access to it. Would you please let me know immediately.

That is signed by Dr. Hoffer. The fact that the people in Saskatchewan have now been informed that they can get it is, I think, good; but the fact that they were not consulted in the decision that was made indicates a very serious defect in the whole set-up. I have a letter dated November 11, 1962, from Dr. D. Ewen Cameron of the Allan Memorial Institute. Dr. Cameron is at present the president of the world psychiatric association. The letter is written to me in response to a letter on my part asking about this question. I would like to read into the record, Mr. Speaker, what Dr. Cameron says. Of course, the letter is available to the minister if he would like to see it. It says:

Frankly, many of us have been somewhat concerned over the reaction to the thalidomide tragedy. There has seemed to be a danger that in dealing with this particular matter we may set up such stringent regulations that the progress of medical research may be substantially slowed. It is a matter of common knowledge that when ether and chloroform were first introduced and, indeed, when the early drugs for the control of syphilis were produced, deaths occurred which were attributable to the therapeutic agents themselves. This was also true, at least in the early days, of insulin and yet, even in retrospect, would anyone willingly take the position that chloroform and ether should not have been introduced when they were, or that the use of insulin should have been deferred for another 30 years until we had the present, much safer, oral forms of administration?

It seems to me that there is little progress anywhere in human affairs without some price being paid. This is apparent in the progress we have made in transportation by the development of the automobile and yet I think no one anticipates that we will eventually travel to the planets without some men's lives being lost on the way.

In my own field, insulin coma treatment regularly killed a certain percentage of patients every year and so did the malarial treatment of general paresis. Yet so serious were the diseases that no one at any time urged that these should be abandoned until they had, as we do now, still better and safer methods. Indeed, if we stepped back from the matter, we must agree that the whole business of living is a calculated risk.

Turning, however, to the practical issues, I am sorry that L.S.D. has been picked out for special attention. We have used it for many years. It is quite a harmless preparation. It is useful for diagnostic purposes, particularly for the obtaining of information which can subsequently be applied in psychotherapy. Some people have found it of value psychotherapeutically, but our interest and use of it has been, as I say, chiefly diagnostic. However, apart from any particular drug, my great hope is that whatever regulations are set up, they will not be too burdensome and time-consuming, for if they slow down the processes of research we can be quite sure that many, many more will be harassed and crippled or even die, than will be protected.

This letter clearly indicates that we are in a difficult field. There are no easy answers. One cannot say in advance what drugs should be banned and what drugs should be permitted. It is my hope that the committee will call as witnesses not only representatives of the drug industry but representatives of the medical colleges, of the clinics, of the practising physicians and others who can testify as to the experiments they are making and the results they have found. Otherwise, we shall find it impossible to devise practical methods of control. Yet control there must be. I think it would have been much better if the provisions of the bill the government lately brought in had been sent to the committee for consideration along with the other matters. I hope that when this committee meets it will take the widest latitude to call all witnesses who might be in a position to give it expert advice.

I do not want to get into a debate about whether this is a good act now, or whether it was a good act ten years ago, but I might point out that there are thousands of preparations being put on the market every year not only in connection with medicine but with agriculture and forestry. In my opinion proper protection for the people of Canada will not be provided until the department is not only competently staffed—as it is at present—but until it is of a size to enable it, in co-operation with the medical colleges and the chemistry departments of the universities, to carry out an investigation on the broadest scale of all the drugs which are used by the Canadian people. I wish this committee had been set up on the first day, or in the first week of the session. It could have done a tremendous amount of work by now. If we look at the evidence which the Kefauver committee was able to take before reaching its decision we can realize the tremendous amount of work which this committee will have before it. I hope it will get on with the job as soon as possible.

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Trade and Commerce): There is one question I should like to put to the minister. Perhaps he would clarify the position when he closes the debate. The terms of reference of the committee fall under two headings (a) and (b), and I am wondering whether those substances which are fed or injected into animals for the purpose of tenderizing the meat or making them grow faster could be included in the matters into which this committee has power to inquire. There have been a great many rumors about these substances and I think this is a question which might be considered by the committee.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I want to nibble on this well known parliamentary bone for a few minutes because I am particularly interested in one aspect of this resolution. Like the rest of the members of this party, I support the resolution wholeheartedly and I consider that the work of this committee, if it is given sufficient scope, will be of greater importance to the Canadian people than the setting up of the economic development council.

I trust that when the committee deals with the question of the control, marketing and use of drugs it will call witnesses from the drug industry, the medical professions, from the trade and also from the department. I think the committee should be given ample time in which to make as full an investigation as possible of all aspects of this question. I think the word "marketing" in the terms of reference is an unfortunate one. In my opinion it would have been much better if the resolution has used the word "distribution" because then there would have been no doubt about the cost of drugs being within the field of inquiry. I hope the committee does have full power to obtain evidence as to the cost of drugs because this represents an important question to many Canadians.

I was talking to my hon. friend who has just resumed his seat and he has numerous cases where people for whom certain prescriptions had been written could not take advantage of those prescriptions because they could not afford to buy the drugs. One person in Ottawa some months ago gave me a pathetic illustration of that situation. I hope the committee will call before it representatives of the manufacturers, of the trade and of the retailers in connection with the cost of drugs. I understand that usually the retailers are blamed for the high cost of drugs because they come into direct contact with the consumer. However, their prices are largely determined by the prices charged by the manufacturers.

Then, under (b), the resolution gives the committee power to consider and report on the dangers arising from the contamination of food by the use of chemicals to kill weeds, insects and other pests. I have been interested in this aspect of the question for some years. I am, of course, very interested in agriculture and I see both sides of the question—the point of view of the agriculturist and also the approach of the person concerned with the preservation of human and wildlife. I am not sure whether this resolution covers an investigation of the damage done by these chemicals on the health of wildlife.

Considerable damage has been caused to the health of wildlife in this country as a result of the use of insecticides and pesticides. I am not sure whether I am in order in mentioning that matter, Mr. Speaker, I see you looking at me with some doubt. I therefore shall not go along that route any further except to say that I am one of those who, when it comes to a question of sacrificing certain land that could be drained in order to preserve a duck habitat or landing area, I will save the place for the ducks rather than bring into production the land in question.

Since you have indicated, Mr. Speaker, that you do not like me to trespass on the rules I am not going to quote from a document which I have here and which was written by an important person who is very much interested in this problem. However, when it comes to the question of the effect of the dangers arising from contamination of food by the use of chemicals to kill weeds, insects and other pests, I consider the committee has there a very heavy task and one that is not going to be completed in a few weeks.

I suggest that this is a problem of such great urgency and of such great importance that witnesses will have to be called, particularly persons who have conducted research into this type of thing. I should like to see called before the committee representatives of agriculture organizations; representatives of the trade, that is to say manufacturers and distributors of these products; and representatives of the consumers organizations of Canada. They have been quite interested in this problem for a number of years from a consumers point of view. I think that the Consumers Association of Canada and other similar organizations should have an opportunity to express their views before this committee. Then I should like to see officials of the Department of National Health and Welfare called before the committee in order to get their side of the story and also officials of the Department of Agriculture, particularly the gentlemen who recently, I thought rather hurriedly and rather caustically, criticized the book recently published by Rachel Carson, entitled "Silent Spring". I consider that an examination of this question will require the calling of witnesses from very wide fields.

In connection with this subject I wish to draw to the attention of the house this book, "Silent Spring" written by Rachel Carson. I suggest that any member of this committee and any member of parliament who is interested in the health of the nation and in the health of our wildlife should purchase this book. I purchased it recently and found it to be most informative and most enlightening, and I have followed this subject for many years. In support of my argument with regard to the necessity for full consideration of this aspect of the resolution—and I am rising to speak particularly because of this aspect of the resolution—I wish to quote briefly from this book in order to rouse hon. members' interest in the book itself and in the subject.

At page 15 of this book, commencing with chapter 3 entitled, "Elixirs of Death", the writer states as follows:

> For the first time in the history of the world, every human being is now subjected to contact with dangerous chemicals, from the moment of conception until death.

What an appalling thought that is, Mr. Speaker.

> In the less than two decades of their use, the synthetic pesticides have been so thoroughly distributed throughout the animate and inanimate world that they occur virtually everywhere. They have been recovered from most of the major river systems and even from streams of groundwater flowing unseen through the earth. Residues of these chemicals linger in soil to which they may have been applied a dozen years before. They have entered and lodged in the bodies of fish, birds, reptiles, and domestic and wild animals—

And so on. I can speak from personal experience, Mr. Speaker, of having had cattle die on the range because of eating grass which had been covered by some of these insecticides. This is a very serious problem indeed.

Furthermore, I wish to quote from another chapter of this book, at page 68, which deals with weed killers. This is one of the subjects mentioned in the resolution:

> The chemical weed killers are a bright new toy. They work in a spectacular way; they give a giddy sense of power over nature to those who wield them, and as for the long range and less obvious effects—these are easily brushed aside as the baseless imaginings of pessimists. The "agricultural engineers" speak blithely of "chemical plowing" in a world that is urged to beat its plowshares into spray guns.

Then with respect to insecticides, I quote from page 196:

> They succeeded so well that their spurious product responded to the appropriate chemical tests and deceived the government chemists.

They are referring to some investigations in the United States where even the officials of the counterpart of our food and drug division were deceived after long investigation as to the dangers of some of these insecticides and pesticides and their side effects, should I say. I continue:

> To give their false ginger the necessary tang they had introduced a chemical known as triorthocresyl phosphate. This chemical, like parathion and its relatives, destroys the protective enzyme cholinesterase.

And so on. Then further:

> About two decades later various other organic phosphates came into use as insecticides, as we have seen, and soon cases reminiscent of the ginger paralysis episode began to occur.

This was a case of paralysis being caused in human beings as the result of eating food that had been treated with insecticides and pesticides.

This illustrates the serious nature of this problem. It is very easy to destroy insects en masse and to stamp out disease. However, I am one of those who believe that we are interfering with the balance of nature. These things can be done and can be done quickly. We have not had enough investigation as to the effect of the free use of these products. I refer to these sprays and things of that sort. The same comment applies to the sprays used on fruits, vegetables and farm production that is sold for human consumption. I therefore urge that the committee will naturally follow and attach great importance to the first section of this resolution as it is of prime importance. I urge that they realize the great importance of this problem and the effect of insecticides and pesticides on the health of human beings. I hope the committee in its explorations will also secure some evidence as to the damage caused to wildlife in Canada. With those few remarks, Mr. Speaker, I resume my seat.

Mr. Speaker: I would direct the attention of hon. members to the fact that if the minister speaks now he will close the debate.

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, in closing this debate I should like to point out that I think it is probably up to the committee itself to determine the definition of the word "marketing" in the resolution. The resolution reads in part as follows:

> That a special committee be appointed to consider and report upon (a) the law and practices relating to the control of the introduction, marketing and use of drugs.

I would take it that means the control of the introduction, control of marketing and control of the use of drugs. I think the context in the resolution in which the word "marketing" is used relates to the whole process of getting drugs on the market with proper safeguards. I think it must be agreed that the problem which has brought about the proposal to establish this committee relates to drug safety and consequent implications. Let us not be sidetracked. The prime purpose of this committee is to study the quality of drugs and the consequent protection of Canadian citizens.

The report of the restrictive trade practices commission has not come down yet and when it does I believe that will be the time for the committee to decide what it might wish to do in this respect. I do implore the members of this committee not to forget the main purpose of their appointment. I would hope that the committee would get on with the objective, which involves concern for the safety of drugs.

I should like to refer to two or three things which were brought to the attention of the house by certain hon. members who have spoken. The hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency (Mr. Marcoux) made a very considered contribution to this debate. He showed a desire to help to achieve our main objective. I should like to assure the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas) the L.S.D. is available and its use will be permitted in research and clinical work. This was discussed at length when Bill No. C-3 was before the house. I know that we were quite cognizant of the desire of the house as a whole at that time and consideration has certainly been given to this matter. As was pointed out by the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow), while there may have been some misunderstanding on the part of a certain institution at one stage, this has been rectified. The drug has actually never been off the market and it has never ceased to be available for these purposes.

I should also like to assure the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam that Bill No. C-3 can certainly be examined in the committee and suggestions made at that time will be given every consideration. It is perfectly all right as far as I am concerned to discuss the act in the committee.

My prime objective, Mr. Speaker, in having this committee set up is to see if there is anything further that can be done for the protection of Canadians, because in the handling of drugs we want to ensure that Canadian citizens are given every protection possible. That is the prime consideration in the formation of this committee.

The hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Nesbitt) inquired about the use of substances fed to or injected into poultry and the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge) inquired as to the effects of insecticides on wild life. We read under (b), "the dangers arising from contamination of food by the use of chemicals to kill weeds, insects and other pests". It may be that this does not particularly cover the point raised by the hon. member for Oxford, but I think it does cover that raised by the hon. member for Kootenay West. If the committee should see fit to examine into these subjects I would be very happy to have it do so, and I would certainly have no objection if the members of the committee saw fit to inquire into the substances mentioned by the hon. member for Oxford. This would be perfectly in accord with the intent in setting up the committee.

I think it was obvious, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin) only entered the debate to try to get the hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Haidasz) off the hook in regard to his references to Dr. Morrell and the food and drug directorate. In his opening remarks the hon. member for Parkdale said something to the effect that he was pleased that the government had acquiesced. Let it not be said that the government acquiesced. In my opening statement when Bill No. C-3 was before the house I mentioned that I would consider a committee at the appropiate time. Again during the discussion of the bill in the house I mentioned several times that I would give proper consideration to the setting up of a committee. Last Friday I said in the house that a committee would be set up, and this was done only after proper consideration had been given to all the factors of the drug situation, which seem to be multiplying. We determined that such a committee would serve a useful purpose. It seemed to me, Mr. Speaker, that it was obvious that the hon. member for Parkdale wanted this committee set up for political purposes only and that—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): On a point of order—

Mr. Monteith: —he wanted to play politics.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think the minister will recognize that we cannot impute motives. We must be rather careful about that.

Mr. Monteith: If you say it is out of order, that is perfectly all right, but I claim it was no more out of order than the remarks of the hon. member for Parkdale.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman is not paying heed to your ruling. He is seeking to do indirectly what he cannot do directly. The hon. gentleman was clearly out of order in imputing motives to the hon. member for Parkdale and he should be told without any equivocation that he has violated your direction.

Mr. Speaker: I think the minister recognizes what I said and we will carry on from there.

Mr. Monteith: Mr. Speaker, may I put it this way? In my estimation the remarks of the hon. member for Parkdale were made to incite an argument and certainly—

Mr. Pickersgill: A debate.

Mr. Monteith: I do not mind an argument in debate, but certainly the tone of his remarks in his opening statement was to the effect that this committee would not be a harmonious committee to the extent that I would wish to see. I wish to see this committee do something for the benefit of Canadian citizens and not be a straight political committee. I had hoped, until the hon. member for Parkdale spoke, that this committee would be above this sort of thing and would make a serious study of this whole question for the benefit of all Canadian citizens. I still hope so, Mr. Speaker.

Motion agreed to.

ATLANTIC DEVELOPMENT BOARD

PROVISION FOR DEFINITION OF DUTIES, APPOINTMENT OF MEMBERS, ETC.

The house resumed, from Thursday, December 6, consideration in committee of Bill No. C-94, to provide for the establishment of an Atlantic development board—Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton)—Mr. Paul in the chair.

On clause 1—Short title.

Mr. Granger: Mr. Chairman, last night at ten o'clock I was seeking to make some suggestions with regard to matters which I thought the new board might consider. I was talking particularly about the fisheries of Newfoundland and Labrador and I was suggesting that one practical matter which the new board could look into was assistance for fishermen who had been away from their jobs for some time and needed to be re-established, men who had previously been employed at other jobs and wanted to become fishermen, or those fishermen whose gear and property had become run down to a point where it was adversely affecting their incomes. I would hope that financial assistance to fishermen in these basic problems would be considered by the new board.

There are other matters I should like to touch on briefly and I will deal with them in detail when the estimates of various departments are called. There is the matter of bringing unemployment insurance for fishermen who sell their fish fresh, up to the same level as prevails in the case of those who are engaged in the salt fish business. I should like also to mention the need for community stages, adequate bait and salt supplies for the fishermen. I might mention the need for the installation along the Labrador coast of community stages which would include cookhouses and bunkhouses for summer crews. These are just some of the matters in connection with the fisheries which I would hope the new board would look into.

I referred briefly to the need for roads in Labrador and specifically to the building of roads necessary for the development of the forests of Labrador. In that connection, I should like to point out the need for federal roads to resources in the interior of Labrador. As most hon. members are aware developments are taking place in western Labrador today, the magnitude of which has seldom been seen in Canada. One of the great industrial developments of all our history is taking place, and two new towns are growing. All these matters should be examined, and particularly the matter of road building in this vast new empire should be examined.

I should like to refer specifically to Gander airport, where a great new terminal and new townsite have been established. Gander airport represents an investment of millions of dollars by the federal government. I should like the new board to look into the possibility of making use of the unused potential there. Further use of the airport could perhaps be made by changing the patterns used by international air carriers. I do not know, specifically, what can be done in this respect but I do believe an attempt should be made towards the greater utilization of this airport. It might be used to a greater extent by the R.C.A.F. and this should be considered. The possibility of establishing secondary industries in the Gander area might also be considered.

In so far as the forest business in Newfoundland is concerned, may I again refer to the need for roads through these forests to aid in the protection of the forests from such pests as the woolly aphis which I mentioned last night. Thus far, I have been mentioning the spending of money but I should like it to be understood that I consider such expenditures, if recommended by the board would be in the nature of an investment rather than merely a handout to carry on under existing conditions. I do believe that the money invested in the fisheries, in the forests and in the development of our natural resources could pay rich dividends to Canada as a whole. I should like to try to establish this principle.

With the minister's permission, I should like to mention a phrase he used in connection with the Atlantic provinces being a captive market. He hastened to add, if I remember correctly that their position on the eastern seaboard also gave them some advantages in trading. I might mention my own province, and perhaps confine my remarks to my own riding with which I happen to be most familiar. It is true that people of the Atlantic provinces provide a captive market but at the same time the products of our forests, pulp, paper and wood are exported in great quantities; our minerals are exported in large quantities, as are frozen and salted fish. These products represent many millions of dollars and practically all that money comes back to Canada. These products are not consumed in Canada, they are consumed in other countries. The money received for them is funnelled through Newfoundland—I think this applies to all the Atlantic provinces—and is largely spent in central Canada in the manufacturing areas. I make no complaint about this because this is the pattern of trade. We all benefit from trading but by and large, speaking of my own riding the millions of dollars received for the products exported are returned to Canada through Newfoundland.

The point I wish to make is that, that being so, when we ask for assistance to develop our particular part of Canada we are really asking for some of our own back. We would like to get it back in a way which would enable us to earn more to improve and to increase our industrial capacity, so that not only will we benefit but Canada as a whole will benefit from this investment in the Atlantic provinces, the oldest and still one of the greatest parts of Canada.

Mr. MacRae: Mr. Chairman, I welcome the opportunity to enter this debate on a measure which is vitally important to all of those who come from those provinces by the sea and to add to the contribution which has been made by so many hon. members from the Atlantic provinces. I feel it is especially fitting that this resolution to establish an Atlantic development board should be in the name of the Minister of National Revenue, New Brunswick's representative in the government of Canada. As we all know, for eight years during which our province of New Brunswick forged steadily ahead, the minister was the premier of New Brunswick. He is now an able and persistent advocate for the maritimes in the government of Canada.

There is no question, Mr. Chairman, that for the past century maritime development has lagged behind the rest of Canada. Perhaps it is unfortunate we did not unite before confederation into one province and we would then have entered as one unit speaking with one strong voice, instead of the four which have so many times seemed to be speaking at cross purposes. Since we cannot change history, we must make the best of it. I believe that there have been certain beneficial effects of confederation and these can be seen when we look at the condition of our three maritime provinces of Prince Edward Island, New Brunswick and Nova Scotia as compared with the position of Newfoundland before 1949.

It seems to me that one of our troubles in the maritimes is that for so long we have stressed maritime weaknesses instead of stressing maritime possibilities. Certainly, we have weaknesses. We have had over the years the problem of the three terrible T's, as we call them, transportation, tariffs and taxes. But we have always had, and we will have, the lumber, fish and minerals and more important, we have the people, the greatest resource of all. In order to evaluate the ability of maritimers we need only look at the leaders in the professions, in industry, in banking and commerce, both in Canada and abroad. In every one of these, maritimers occupy prominent and often front rank positions. What we seem to lack is the necessary enterprise, the spirit of co-operation, the willingness to experiment. Not only have we lacked co-operation between the different provinces but even between different groups in the same province. And, of course, for far too many years there was little or no co-operation between the provincial and federal governments. This situation has been greatly improved in the last five years.

This resolution calls for the establishment of an Atlantic development board. This is something we promised in the last election campaign. Personally, Mr. Chairman, I am very proud, as I am sure other Conservatives are, to be a member of this house on this occasion as we see this first step being taken to fulfil that promise. In that connection, the composition of the board will be a very pertinent factor, one of the most important factors of all. I would urge upon the government the necessity for searching out the very best men that are available for appointment to this board.

I suggest to the government, and I suggest this as a Conservative member, that we should not just appoint men for political reasons, but let us have skilled men, engineers, economists and industrialists, men like Mr. Michael Wardell and men like Professor William Smith, former president of APEC and now head of the department of economics in the University of New Brunswick.

One might ask what there is to develop. Well there are a great many things and we have heard about them many times in this house. I suppose some hon. members would like us to stop talking about them, but there are so many things we want developed in the maritime provinces, projects such as the causeway, the Corridor road, the Chignecto canal both for transportation as a power complex and the Passamaquoddy power project. We also want further development on the Saint John river for hydro purposes and further development of industries at all levels.

In the past five years we have seen the erection of many public buildings in many of our constituencies in the east, including my own. I would like to agree with the remarks made yesterday by the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo when he discussed the principle of small industries in our Atlantic provinces. I would much rather see constructed one manufacturing plant in my constituency that would hire 500 men all the year round than all the public buildings that have been built in York-Sunbury since confederation.

One example of this possibility is the railway town of McAdam, which has been vitally affected by dieselization. It is on the Canadian Pacific main line and perhaps too many members do not know McAdam, as most passengers pass through there at six o'clock in the morning travelling east on the Canadian Pacific. For many years it had a very vital transportation industry, but because of dieselization the town has gone down. It is a town which has ample electric power and a good water supply, and it also has an excellent labour force. Today it has the necessary buildings available for new industry. What better site could we find for a new industry?

I suggest that the board, when it is established, should do its best to seek out small industries and bring them into towns such as McAdam. I would much rather see a portion of the hundreds of millions of dollars now being spent on unemployment insurance and welfare services being put into the creation of new industries and re-vitalizing of existing ones.

It is true that some measure of social assistance is necessary. There are always people who, through no fault of their own, need our help, but I am concerned with the fact that in this welfare state, into which we have drifted during the last 30 or 35 years, wherein everyone takes in everyone else's washing, that there are far too many people today who would rather collect unemployment insurance than do their share of the washing. Living off social welfare has become a way of life for some Canadians, even unto the second and third generations.

It is too bad that so many politicians do not have the moral courage to face this problem and take the necessary action. I know that in my constituency, as in all the Atlantic provinces, there are many fine citizens who would much rather work than draw unemployment insurance.

For the past ten years businessmen, economists and professional men in the maritimes have been attempting to lift themselves up by the bootstraps through the Atlantic provinces economic council, which is an independent, non-political organization formed some eight years ago with the aim of accelerating the economic development of the Atlantic provinces. APEC has often been mentioned in this house and I feel it has done a magnificent job. We all wish it well in the future.

Two years ago the premiers of the four Atlantic provinces concerned about the problem with which this bill deals today, brought Professor A. K. Cairncross from Great Britain to conduct a thorough survey of the Atlantic economy. I might add that today he is economic advisor to the government of Great Britain. He was invited over by premiers Stanfield, Flemming, Shaw and Premier Smallwood of Newfoundland. In his investigation he brought forward a number of conclusions which I would like to put on the record. He said in effect that (1) in various respects the Atlantic provinces are lagging behind the rest of Canada. The most important form taken by this lag is the absence of opportunities of employment particularly employment that is regular, full-time, and in well paid occupations. He said (2) the main cause of this lag lies in the rapid decline in employment in the resource-based industries of the region; then (3) this decline, which seems unlikely to be reversed, will give rise to a growing surplus of labour in view of the high natural increase of population in the region, unless migration takes place on a larger scale or new industries are established.

We do not want our people to go away; we want industries established where our people are. Professor Cairncross also said it would be desirable to review the implications of doubling manufacturing employment, that is, employment in non-primary industries, over the next 20 years, in order to establish what contribution this might make to total employment in the area and whether expansion on this scale would be practicable, viewed in relation to the simultaneous growth of new industry in Canada, and what incentives could usefully be offered in order to attract industry to the area.

Point No. 5 was that a review in similar terms might be undertaken for the island of Newfoundland, including Labrador. I am sure the hon. member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador would agree to the inclusion of Labrador in this connection.

Professor Cairncross further said that although there are a number of handicaps, arising chiefly from distance from markets, facing manufacturers in the Atlantic provinces, these handicaps would not be fatal to a number of industries in which transport costs are relatively low provided (a) these industries were assured of some initial help towards the cost of establishing new productive units and (b) that they could count on some further assistance for a longer period.

He also said that the most powerful immediate attractions to businesses contemplating production in the Atlantic provinces are likely to be modern factories ready for occupation, offered at less than an economic rent for a limited period of years; and a grant towards the cost of training labour, bringing in skilled workers, moving plant and machinery, and other settling-in expenses.

Then he says there are also many non-economic factors of almost equal importance in the framing of an initial decision by management—the amenities of the area, its educational facilities, the reputation of its workers, and the sense of purposefulness and aliveness that it is able to communicate. New businesses, especially those coming from elsewhere, will also want to satisfy themselves that their long term prospects in an Atlantic location compare favourably with their prospects elsewhere. They would be likely to have some advantage in labour costs but this would usually appear insufficient to offset the disadvantage of comparative remoteness from markets.

Therefore they would be likely to require further inducements outlasting the settling-in period, and these could include any of the following: (a) a subsidy to freight costs, especially outward freights; (b) various forms of tax incentive; (c) capital grants or guarantees and (d) a government undertaking to provide a market for part or all of the output of the business.

I may add that the last two are highly effective but are not always practical, and sometimes politics enter into them. The first introduces no new point of principle. It is a logical way of reducing the inconvenience of distance and was fully investigated by the MacPherson commission on transportation.

Point No. 12 is that tax incentives have been used by a number of countries with varying success. In some they have attracted industries from other countries, while in others where the main object was to attract businesses to one region from the rest of a country, their usefulness appears to have been limited. If tax incentives are used in Canada it would be best for the provincial governments to conclude a tax treaty with each applicant satisfying the statutory conditions, and then make reimbursement annually of whatever taxes were agreed upon in the treaty.

The fourteenth point is that it would also be desirable that the federal government should regulate the use of such incentives, if adopted, reimbursing provincial governments for their outlays, provided they complied with the common regulations governing tax concessions. Then he says that whatever is done to attract new industry to the region would be slow in taking effect and should not be postponed or abandoned because of any temporary slowing down of development elsewhere in Canada. I repeat that it should not be postponed or abandoned because of any temporary slowing down of development elsewhere in Canada.

He adds that nothing that is done to promote industrial development in the Atlantic provinces should override the prior need to increase the efficiency and expand the markets of the primary industries of the region. I said this before, Mr. Chairman, that there must be no second-class citizens in Canada, and there must be no second-class areas in Canada. Those of us who come from the Atlantic provinces will never be content to accept such things.

Before I sit down I would like personally to congratulate the hon. members from the Atlantic provinces who are supporting this measure today and I would ask them to continue to give the minister their full and unqualified support. Finally, in closing, I have mentioned that we should find the very best men we can for this Atlantic development board. That idea is exemplified in the following words in the foreword to "Creative Canadian Capital" published by Canadian Enterprise Development Corporation Limited.

I would like to close with these words:

> Seek out creative men with the vision of things to be done. Help breathe life into new ideas and processes and products with money—and with more than money—with sensitive appreciation for creative drive; with support in management and manpower, with loyalty to the idea and to its initiator, the creative man.

Mr. Rideout: Mr. Chairman, I will not take up too much time but I just want to say a few words on this bill because it affects the Atlantic provinces. First of all I should like to say that the minister who introduced this bill is certainly one of our most outstanding citizens in New Brunswick and has made a great contribution to that province. Nevertheless I do not think he is the proper man to introduce this bill and I regret that the Minister of Finance has not seen fit to take a more active part in this matter, because our problem is not revenue, it is the lack of revenue. We need financial assistance in the Atlantic provinces. We first realized that the government was in financial difficulties when it appointed a Minister of Finance from the Atlantic provinces. We have a very high regard for him. He is the fourth minister of finance since confederation, I believe, to come from the Atlantic provinces.

An hon. Member: The fourth since the turn of the century.

Mr. Rideout: Yes, the fourth since the turn of the century. When we think about the sincerity of the bill and just how far it is going to go to correct the situation we remember that it has been suggested by the minister that we should not look back. But it becomes necessary for us to look back. The government may have tried, but they have not shown good faith with us in the maritimes. I refer most particularly to what has happened in the last few years with regard to railway transportation, for instance, in which I am highly interested. In the Canadian National Railways shops at Moncton over 300 men have been laid off during the past five years. The passenger shop in Moncton has been transferred to Winnipeg. The men employed in the Moncton shop were told to go to Winnipeg or be without a job. That is the type of assistance we have been getting for the Atlantic provinces, and it has created unemployment in a great many ways. I think the hon. member for York-Sunbury was very realistic in his views, but yesterday when we listened to the hon. member for Queens-Lunenburg we must have all felt that when we die we do not want to go to heaven but to the maritime provinces because he really painted a wonderful picture. However, I might say that I have a very high regard for his country because my wife happens to come from there.

Mr. Chairman, I want to deal with the question of tax rental agreements for a moment; that is, what we receive in the province of New Brunswick and what it has amounted to in the past. I am talking about the good faith which the government assume they have shown. The amount we received was reduced because, I assume, our showing has not been very good in past elections. The result was that we suffered. I know that in my own city of Moncton we were cut back to the amount of $62,000, which amounted to eight cents on our municipal tax rates. This is the sort of concession we have been getting from the provincial government in view of the decisions of the federal government. The bill is probably a step in the right direction, but it does not contain those things in which we are interested in the maritimes.

I was quite amused not too long ago when going through Port Elgin to see a sign on a government wharf saying, "People using this wharf do so at their own risk". I think it was Lincoln who said 100 years ago that you cannot be for and against the same thing at the same time. Yet the government now tells us that we are going to be in a semi-utopia with this new board. We are told there are going to be all kinds of public works, and at the same time they have cut their program in the Atlantic provinces by many millions of dollars, due to the austerity program. Wharves, all kinds of public buildings and all kinds of employment have been affected because of the austerity program. That is another reason, Mr. Chairman, why I wish the Minister of Finance had taken a part in this debate.

The Atlantic provinces are certainly in need of a gigantic public works program. I have discussed this question with the Minister of Transport with the idea of getting our runways in Moncton lengthened so that we can take on the larger aircraft. I might say that in terms of arrivals and departures we are the eighth largest airport in Canada. However, this has not been done; the program has been cut. All these various avenues which the government could have pursued in order to bring about more employment and better conditions have been ignored. Therefore I say that the government has not shown good faith in this regard. If they had, we might have more faith in a bill of this type.

I feel that $3,000 for the chairman of a board is not going to draw the type of man that my hon. friend from York-Sunbury suggested. Although the maritimer is a dedicated person generally, I cannot see too many of them working on a part time basis for $3,000 a year, however much I would like to see this type of man on the board. But this will not happen, unless perhaps Lord Beaverbrook or another of our outstanding people would like to take on the job.

As I say, the Minister of Finance should have been in on this. The board has no money; there is nothing set up. They have no expenditures. The thing that concerns me very much and about which I hope the minister will say a few words for the record is this. Various delegations have come to Ottawa, as he well knows, and have tried to meet with some of the ministers and others in order to get a few things for the maritime provinces. I am somewhat disturbed that this board will be used as a sort of sifting out affair in so far as this type of approach to Ottawa is concerned. Last week the mayor of Windsor and some other municipal people from as far east as Sydney, came here to deal with these situations. I might say at this point that we did meet with two or three members of the cabinet and were told the brief had been submitted in September but they had not yet read it.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Would the hon. member permit me to ask this question? Is that the meeting at which the hon. member for Essex West, the hon. member for Essex South and I were present?

Mr. Rideout: That is right, and I appreciate the hon. member's assistance. We were told at that time that the ministers involved had not read the brief. The Minister of Finance was supposed to chair the meeting but he did not show up, as he has not shown up today or yesterday to take part in this debate. We have found that our problem in the maritimes is perhaps one whereby we should get a little closer to these people in upper Canada, to work more closely with them as we did last week with the mayor of Windsor. If we come as a group and approach the cabinet, I hope we shall not be referred to this board. That is what I am concerned about, and I hope the minister will say a word with regard to this point. It so often happens that one has to see the other committee. If this should be the case, then the board, which of course, has the power to make recommendations will be used as a means of blocking progress.

[Mr. Rideout.]

Again I point out that the government has cut its own public works program. The other day I called to the attention of the house the situation at Scoudouc where men had been laid off in the R.C.A.F. If the government really meant well it would not be cutting down on its own estimates and those of its agencies in the Atlantic provinces. I think the same thing applies to the railway where there have been tremendous cuts. This, too, is an agency of government. I suggest that the government, in setting up this board, should review the situation to which I have drawn attention, bearing in mind such cases as the No. 5 equipment depot in Moncton where the fire department has been abolished. These people came to the city and were looking for employment, and some were hired.

Again let me say I am sorry the Minister of Fisheries could not find time to take part in this debate. I say this because the fishing industry is one of our most important industries. I must say I am critical of those two ministers I have mentioned because this is a matter of such importance to us that they should have been here to take part in the debate. I say this of the Minister of Finance because, certainly, what we need in the Atlantic provinces is money.

I do not intend to prolong this. I want it understood that I shall be pleased to go along with the bill though, frankly, I cannot see too much in it. I hope the minister when he replies will endeavour to explain more precisely to us what this is going to mean —how we are going to be rewarded if we go along with this proposal. Then, again, I am concerned as to whether there is likely to be a conflict between the board whose formation we are now considering and the national board, although I must admit I am not familiar with just what powers the national board is to have. In any case it would appear that one must be subservient to the other.

In closing, if this board is to be the answer to the ills of the maritimes I urge those ministers concerned to take a closer look at the public works program which was cancelled in the Atlantic provinces within the last three or four months, and to examine the cuts made by the various government agencies in the provinces, such as the C.N.R. It is common knowledge that their operating budget was cut by over $3 million in the Atlantic provinces for the coming year. I repeat, you cannot be both for and against the same thing at the same time.

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not intend to make a speech, because I made one the other day, but there was one thing which troubled me very much about what the Minister of National Revenue said on December 4 on the resolution stage. I had expected this matter would have been raised by one of the members from Prince Edward Island, but it has not been dealt with and that is why I rise to say a few words on it. The minister was talking about the subjects this board might take up. He said that among these were——the Chignecto complex of canal, tidal power and industrial development; the causeway to link New Brunswick with Prince Edward Island, which has been accepted in principle and is in the planning stage.

I had understood from the announcement when it was made, and I think everyone in the old parliament understood it, together I am sure, with everyone in the Atlantic provinces, that this project was not one of those which was still being considered. I refer to the Prince Edward Island causeway. Construction of that causeway was accepted as something which was going to be done. I think the minister should try to reconcile his statements to the effect that this is still in the stage of study, still in the stage of conjecture—

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): Would the hon. gentleman mind reading again what I said?

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes.

There are many policies, measures and projects which have been suggested as deserving urgent consideration by the board. A number of public works projects need immediate research.

Remember that this is just an advisory board. This is not a board to execute anything and therefore it would seem odd that any project would be placed before it about which a decision to act had already been made, or which was supposed to be in the early stages of implementation. Indeed, the Prime Minister in Charlottetown on May 17 told an audience, which the right hon. gentleman claimed consisted of 4,000 people the first time he referred to it—I think he got it up to 6,000 or 7,000 people as he moved across the country, I know this has no relation to this bill but I also know, Mr. Chairman, you must be very proud of that huge gathering the Prime Minister addressed at that time—here is what the Prime Minister told that audience, however large it was:

Since investigations have shown that a causeway is feasible both from an economic and an engineering standpoint, we are proceeding with it.

The Prime Minister went on to say even more than that. He said the project would employ 1,100 men for six years and provide $30 million in wages. It would be eight miles in length. It would include one and a quarter miles of locks and bridges. The fill would cost $49 million; locks and bridges $36,500,000 and engineering work $20 million. He even went on to predict that it would be completed in time for the celebration of our centenary in 1967.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): May I interrupt the hon. member? The part I want him to repeat is what he read about what I said a couple of days ago.

Mr. Pickersgill: I shall be glad to do that. The last thing I want to do is to be unfair to the minister or to anyone else. I am merely trying to clear up a serious doubt which has arisen not merely in my mind but in the minds of other people—

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): I think we know what is in your mind, but go ahead and read what I said.

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not pretend to make such large claims as the minister has just made. The minister, we know, is a much more complex personality than I am, myself. If he knows what is in my mind perhaps he would consider standing up and making my speech for me.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): I said "I think I know".

Mr. Pickersgill: Now the minister is being his usual modest self again, and we like him better in those circumstances. The minister said—I think I had better read the two sentences together:

There are many policies, measures and projects which have been suggested as deserving urgent consideration by the board. A number of public works projects need immediate research.

I emphasize that last word, "research".

Among these are the Chignecto complex of canal, tidal power and industrial development; the causeway to link New Brunswick with Prince Edward Island, which has been accepted in principle and is in the planning stage.

"And needs research". I added that from the previous sentence. In other words, this project was placed not No. 1 but No. 2 among the things this board would be doing research into. Yet the Prime Minister told us in April—

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): Research and planning.

Mr. Pickersgill: Surely the planning is not going to be done by this Atlantic development board. Did not the government tell us not long ago that they had spent $800 on it.

An hon. Member: Or $8,000.

Mr. Pickersgill: Or $8,000. At any rate it was a long way from the $30 million in wages that were going to be paid. We and the public were led to believe last April that this Prince Edward Island causeway was being started. I do not wish to misrepresent the government. They did not say that the actual construction was being started but they said this, to quote again the Prime Minister's words in Charlottetown on May 17:

—since investigations have shown—

In other words, research was over then and now it is going to start.

—that a causeway is feasible both from an economic and an engineering standpoint, we are proceeding with it.

Surely this Atlantic development board is not going to build the causeway. The investigations were over last May when the Prime Minister addressed that cheering crowd. Hence I am puzzled, as are a great many other people. I did not wish to be called to order. I will now disclose the source of the quotation from the Prime Minister's speech. I owe it to the Charlottetown Guardian and to their editorial which appeared in yesterday's paper and which expressed disquietude about this very matter, and I think rightly so. However, the minister said this board when it is set up—and it has not even been set up yet—is going to start research into or carry on research. I should not say "start". The minister did not say "start". He says it is going to carry on research into the Prince Edward Island causeway.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): No, that is wrong. I am sure my hon. friend does not wish to misquote me.

Mr. Pickersgill: No, I do not wish to misquote the minister.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): Research into the planning to see how it is doing.

Mr. Pickersgill: Then what the minister means is this. I do not blame the minister. Nobody will ever forget the way in which the minister was humiliated by the way in which that colleague of his, who is no longer here—I refer to the honourable ex-member for Rosedale, Mr. David Walker—who went down to New Brunswick, without ever telling the minister anything about it and announced that the government had rejected the Chignecto project. We remember the minister arrived in Saint John, to find that his colleague had cut the ground completely from under his feet. I therefore do not wonder that the Minister of National Revenue, having no confidence in that department from which ministers seem to go more often than they come, wishes to set up a board to find out whether the Department of Public Works is really doing anything about this causeway which the Prime Minister said was being proceeded with last May.

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

The minister talked the other day about the maze of governmental agencies. You cannot blame the poor people in Prince Edward Island, even the very intelligent people who write the editorials for the Tory newspaper there, you cannot blame them for being confused. If the minister thinks this parliament has to set up a board to find out how the Department of Public Works is getting on with planning this causeway which was stated by the Prime Minister last April, which was going to be employing all these men—

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): The hon. member is not making a very good case. It is a very poor case. It is not as good a one as usual.

Mr. Pickersgill: The minister seems to be more disturbed by it than usual.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): The hon. member is labouring at it.

Mr. Pickersgill: The plain fact is, of course, that we have already had revealed clearly to us in the house, in response to questions, that there has been a slow-down, if there was ever anything to slow down in the first place. Judging from the amount of money that is being spent, there is nothing really serious being done about the causeway at all, and there has not been anything done about the causeway with the exception of the words uttered by the Prime Minister and supporters of the Prime Minister on this subject in the election campaign. One cannot help but suspect that the causeway is another of the victims of the Glassco-McCutcheon axe which is cutting a great deal deeper, as far as one can discover, in the Atlantic provinces, if one can judge from the way in which public works have been cut, than in any other part of Canada.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): The hon. member will eat those words within two years.

Mr. Pickersgill: Within two years I suggest that the hon. gentleman will be over here if he is lucky enough to get back into the house at all; and probably within two years, with a real government in power, something will have been done about the matter.

Mr. McGrath: Does the hon. member think he is going to influence any votes in Prince Edward Island on Monday by the very weak case he is putting up here and taking up the time of the house in doing so.

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not think that anything I may be saying here would influence nearly as many votes as would be influenced if the honourable and eloquent member for St. John's East would only go to Prince Edward Island in order to show them who represents Newfoundland in the present government of Canada, on the periphery of the government—an hon. member who is not considered good enough to go into the cabinet, but who is only there apparently for the purpose of interrupting others when they are attempting to speak constructively about the failure of the government to carry out its own programs.

Mr. McGrath: What about the hon. member when he was there last spring?

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. member for St. John's East can speak when I have concluded my speech. No doubt he will make one of those devastating and irrelevant speeches which entertain the house from time to time. However, I wish to get back to the bill, Mr. Chairman, and not to interject notes about who is going to vote where on what day. I never mentioned that subject at all—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: —except the influencing of votes last May and June by the Prime Minister, stating that this project was under way, this project that is now going to be the subject of research by a board not yet set up, with the chairman paid the princely salary of $3,000. That is what apparently is going to happen.

I say again, Mr. Chairman, that I do not blame the Minister of National Revenue if he cannot do it in any other way. However, perhaps the Minister of National Revenue could find a more direct route than to set up a board to investigate the Department of Public Works and to find out whether it is carrying on this great public work which the government said was started seven or eight months ago. I suggest that the portfolio of public works is going to be vacant very shortly. The minister has only two, and I suggest that he ask the Prime Minister to make him minister of public works and to let him go at the matter directly and build this causeway that was already being built, according to the Prime Minister, but which is only going to be investigated by a board not yet set up, a board that is being sponsored by the minister. As for myself, I think this matter needs a great deal of explaining. It throws a rather dubious light on this whole proposal. It rather confirms the suspicion that I entertain and expressed on Wednesday, namely that perhaps the main purpose of this board is to be a graveyard.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): That is what the hon. member hopes, maybe.

Mr. Pickersgill: I know the minister did not really mean that. The minister says that is what I hope. That is not what I hope, and I do not think the minister really believes that is what I hope. The minister believes that I hope this board will be as effective as it is allowed to be in producing things for the government to do, not in studying things which the government has either decided already not to do or has already said it is doing. There is no reason whatever why the Prince Edward Island causeway should engage one minute of the attention of this board. That project was announced as one that was going ahead. It was being done by a department of the government. The time of this board should not be wasted on it at all. If the Department of Public Works is not fit to do it, let us get some new people in the Department of Public Works and get on with the job. We wish this board to produce some new things, not to thresh over the researches of others into projects which are supposedly being built now. It is because this seemed to me to be such a really damning indictment of the proposal, that it seemed to me there was something here the minister ought to clear up and do so right away.

(Translation):

Mr. Lachance: Mr. Chairman, I regret not to say, as several others have said, that I do not have a long speech to deliver before the adoption of this measure. However, in spite of the urgency such a measure may present for the economy of the country, I must, before the adoption of the first section of the bill, express my astonishment that we should always be in the habit of translating the English word "board" by the French word "office". Without being an expert linguist, I wonder whether it would not be a good thing to point out that this word "office" is not the proper term for the French translation of the title of this bill. In fact, if we consider that the word "office" means much more a function or a group of functions than a body—although I know there are several expert linguists in the Department of National Revenue, as well as in the other divisions of the government—I submit it would perhaps be a good thing to substitute for the word "office" the word "conseil".

Now, if we refer to various dictionaries, and among the most important, we note that this word means much more a series of functions than a body. Now, I would not dare believe that the government would like this body to play the role described by the word "office" in Quillet, a well-known dictionary which gives the following definition of the word "office", used in an administrative sense:

The setting up of "offices" is to let certain industrial and commercial establishments escape from the rules of public accounting and to bring them as close as possible to private management procedures.

I do not think it is the aim of the government to have this body escape from the control of the government.

That is my suggestion, and after having consulted its expert linguists, the government may, if it is advisable, propose the appropriate amendment. If it does, I will have contributed a little to a better interpretation of this legislation and especially to its being more adequately titled.

(Text):

Mr. Fairweather: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate has sponsored my former leader and present colleague for the ministry of public works. May I say to him that I would be only too glad to second the nomination because I think that anyone who lived and worked in New Brunswick between the years 1952 and 1960 will quite understand the qualifications of the Minister of National Revenue for the ministry of public works, and New Brunswick and Canada, in fact, would be well served if it were to occur. This is about as relevant, as the electioneering tactic involving the Prince Edward Island causeway, which has been introduced into this debate by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate. Obviously a bold, imaginative and extremely expensive project of this sort needs engineering studies. I do not think these engineering studies are inconsistent with economic studies. Obviously when a project like this will link the island with the mainland of Canada there will be features which will have to be studied by the Atlantic development board. New industries will be started in Prince Edward Island and, in fact, there will be an entirely new economic outlook, and I would certainly hope that aspect would be considered by the board when it is set up.

I have listened to the debate in the past few days and I had hoped that it would progress a little more speedily than it has but it does not appear that that is going to be the case. I had also hoped that more members from other parts of the country would participate in the debate. The leader of the New Democratic party and a member from one of the Toronto ridings did participate, and in my opinion this is useful.

The proposal now before us is another phase of a long term attack on the material problems facing the Atlantic provinces, but the attack must be as well an attack on people's attitudes. I think most of those who represent constituencies in eastern Canada understand what I mean. In my view people's attitudes and people's approaches have to be discussed here. I noted a phrase in a book I read recently by Joseph Kraft entitled "The Grand Design". In it he was talking about the problems facing the underdeveloped countries of the world. He said that what these countries lack seemed to him to be somewhat of a litany of the damned. Sometimes the people of the Atlantic provinces tend to talk of their disabilities in somewhat the same manner. I hope there is not a litany of the damned in the Atlantic provinces and I am optimistic enough to think that this board, in co-operation with the national economic development board, the productivity council, governments, APEC and people of good will, can help to solve our economic problems.

I was very interested in the speech of the hon. member for Antigonish-Guysborough when he recalled again—I think it cannot be recalled too often—the three main problems facing those of us who live in the Atlantic provinces. I think it is well for members of all parties to recall the problems of transportation, the problems of lack of capital development and so on.

I do not see any magic formulae in this board. We live in an age when people expect members of parliament and governments to wave wands and bring about revolutionary solutions to problems. There is no panacea within the words of this legislation that can bring an end to all the problems facing us. Our economic problems will not suddenly disappear because this board is set up. The hon. member for Gloucester referred to the plans of the former Liberal government with respect to a power grid. I think they were reasonable plans but not as good as the plans of the present government, because the grid was to be operated by a federal government power company, the Northern Power Company, as I remember, whereas we have a very capable electric power commission in New Brunswick which is doing a much more intimate job, shall we say, on the site rather than the direction coming from Ottawa. The power grid is working out and I think it is a forerunner of the national power grid referred to in the speech from the throne. I hope that any power grid will take into account the need for the use of coal for thermal power production. In my view this is the helpful thing about the grid. The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate mentioned Hamilton falls. I agree that it must be developed, but I think it must be developed in tune with the coal aspect of power production.

I feel, too, that the recommendations of the royal commission on transportation will be helpful to the transportation problem facing the maritimes when they are implemented in statute form. I prefer government policies which will bring a return in human living conditions for the money spent. I think there is too much of this business of handing out large cheques or saying a solution of a problem can be arrived at by merely paying another grant or another subsidy. Subsidies and grants are part of the formula for a solution of our problem. I think some of the solutions have been based too much on the money aspect.

I am optimistic enough to believe that this board will be unorthodox in its acceptance of new proposals which will improve all the resources of this part of Canada, and that Canada will not just be enriched by the migration of people from the Atlantic provinces. I hope that the area itself will be built up to assist the people in that area. I had, too, a thought about the very name of this bill. We have had a sort of evolution of feeling in the Atlantic provinces. I am not going to say who started it or when it started. These jousting matches are so unrealistic that they are not listened to by the people of Canada. I do suggest this, that the founding of the Atlantic provinces economic council in 1952 was a highwater mark. I think the meeting of the premiers—I do not care who the premiers were, although I am proud that the sponsor of this bill was one of the important keystones of that meeting—was an important step. The very fact that APEC started and that the Atlantic premiers got together resulted in the fact that today we have a bill presented to this house containing the words "Atlantic provinces board". It is not the Prince Edward Island, Newfoundland, New Brunswick or Nova Scotia board. I suggest this denotes a change in thinking. It shows that the maritimes and Newfoundland are growing up and, I believe it shows we have come a long way.

Now, a great deal has been made about the capital projects aspect. Perhaps I am naïve about these things, but surely the board will study these capital projects and make recommendations to parliament. Then, parliament will vote the money. At least, I presume that is the way the board will operate. In so far as the problem referred to by the hon. member for Antigonish-Guysborough is concerned, the meetings of the board, I think he will find if he consults his legal colleagues that this is the usual device to provide the widest possible scope for meetings. The only provision tying down the meetings is that one meeting a year will be held here in Ottawa. Otherwise, the board can meet twice a week or even daily in accordance with the provisions of that section.

I have only one other suggestion, Mr. Chairman. During the course of this debate someone mentioned the migration from the maritimes. I think this is true. I like to add to that the fact that because of this migration we in the Atlantic part of Canada have not had the benefit of a transfusion of immigrants. A good many people have left the Atlantic provinces for other parts of Canada and of the world, but we have not shared in that transfusion that has made, if I may be so bold as to say it, Toronto an interesting city and made other parts of Canada much more cosmopolitan than would otherwise have been the case. I feel optimistic about this board because I think this is part of the pattern of the recognition of the special problems of Atlantic Canada by the rest of the country. Obviously, the former government made contributions to this change in attitude. Obviously, too, the present government has set an example of assistance to Atlantic Canada which bodes well for the helpfulness of this board we are considering today.

Mr. Robichaud: It was not my intention, Mr. Chairman, to speak on this first clause. However, in view of the statement made by the hon. member for Royal that the Minister of National Revenue built New Brunswick when he was in office, I think the record should be kept straight. Statistics will show that when the premier left office in 1960 there were 729 fewer industries in New Brunswick than when he took office in 1952.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): May I ask the hon. gentleman what his authority is for that statement?

Mr. Robichaud: These figures have been quoted time and time again and have not been denied.

An hon. Member: By the Liberal thinkers in New Brunswick.

Mr. Robichaud: They have been taken from statistics produced by the province of New Brunswick. The minister stated in his speech on second reading that it was better if a bill of this kind were not tagged with so many dollars. I think this is an expression that will not be too well received in the Atlantic provinces. It was evident, when we saw the bill, that there were very few dollars tagged to this board. The salary of the chairman is limited to $3,000 per year. This shows the kind of consideration this government is giving the Atlantic provinces. In so far as the national development board is concerned, for instance, it is evident from the bill that the chairman will be a permanent employee and will receive a salary fixed by the governor in council. In so far as the Atlantic provinces are concerned, the government is satisfied a part-time man who may give a week or two weeks of his time to the work called for by this board will be worth about $3,000.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I express the hope that this board will be more effective than a number of the boards and commissions that have been appointed by this government since it took office in 1957. We know from the figures that have been released these boards have cost us in the vicinity of $8 million. We know also that most of the recommendations made by these boards have been ignored by this government. I would refer to the Rand royal commission on coal. The report of that commission has been in the hands of the government for over two years and an interdepartmental committee was appointed to study the recommendations. As yet, nothing has been done in this field. I would refer to the MacPherson commission on transportation, and to the Borden commission on power, which was not even allowed to sit in the Atlantic provinces, and to the commission now studying banking and finance. I hope that when recommendations are made by this board the government will pay attention to them, and that the board will be more effective than what has been done by royal commissions so far.

I would also bring to the attention of the minister a short visit which was made to Ottawa last spring by the premiers of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. They presented the Prime Minister with a brief, which had been prepared after considerable study by the power authorities and research boards of the two provinces, but even two or three months after that the ministers of the departments concerned did not know about it. The brief was shelved and put away, and I question whether this board would have more effect on the government than the recommendations made by Premier Stanfield of Nova Scotia and Premier Robichaud of New Brunswick.

As it appears now, the only recommendations that have been implemented in part are those made by the Gordon commission on economic development, which reported to the government in 1957,—and I say in part only, because the Gordon commission recommended that capital public works projects be instigated at once in order to stimulate the development of the economy of the Atlantic provinces. To date very little has been done in this field.

The last question I wish to raise has to do with the scope of the board. We have a national development board which, according to the Minister of Finance, will cover three million square miles of the country, and it must be recognized that the Atlantic provinces are a part of Canada. The Minister of Finance, when he introduced the legislation providing for the establishment of that board, said it would be national in scope and we may now have to face a situation in which recommendations made by the Atlantic development board to the government will be eclipsed by recommendations made by the national development board.

I think it is important that the minister should clearly outline the power of the Atlantic development board, because projects recommended by it may be found by the national development board not to be economically sound. That is an expression which is often used by this government when major projects are being considered for the Atlantic provinces, and we want to know how far the power of this board may extend.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I have been very much interested in the debate this afternoon, and I must confess a great deal more interested in it since we got on to the subject of the Atlantic development board. Many observations have been made which it would appear are deserving of comment and, in some instances, of a reply, and I shall be very pleased to give replies in every instance where I possibly can. However, Mr. Chairman, I would again like to mention the fact, as I did last night, that we are dealing with something which did not exist previously. We are breaking new ground so far as the Atlantic provinces are concerned. We have never before had the subject submitted to parliament in legislation providing for the creation of a board that would have special responsibility solely in the Atlantic provinces.

I have no objection to the question put forward by my hon. friend from Gloucester and I shall try to give it some attention in a few minutes because I think it is quite a material question to ask. But, before going into it, I find I am almost forced to pay a little attention to the hon. gentleman for Bonavista-Twillingate who spoke a few minutes ago.

I am one of those who enjoys the speeches of the hon. gentleman for Bonavista-Twillingate. He is a skilful debater; he is a fluent debater, and he is a resourceful debater. If there is the least bit of vulnerability in an opponent's argument he seems to have the faculty of putting his finger on it; but today he laboured and he sweated and he stuttered, and had the hardest time I ever saw him have in trying to make even the semblance of a case. There hardly was any case at all and as I listened to him as he referred to these things—and he did not go back into ancient history as he usually does—I rather admired his convenient memory because he could forget all the things he wanted to forget. Finally he came along and picked upon the Prince Edward Island causeway and said this bill was really vulnerable on that subject.

He quoted my remarks made a few days ago in which I said that the project was already accepted in principle.

Mr. Pickersgill: More than in principle.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): Just a minute—was already accepted in principle and was in the planning stage. Then he professed to get terribly indignant and said it should be under construction.

Mr. Pickersgill: I did not say it was under construction; I did not say the government said it was under construction. I said the government said it had decided to go ahead with it and was getting on with the plans. That is what I said.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I still submit that he inferred that it should be under construction.

Mr. Pickersgill: No, no.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): Well I have the right, Mr. Chairman, to take any inference that I choose from his remarks. If he disagrees with my inference then it is a debatable subject.

Mr. Pickersgill: Quite, and I will debate it.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): I will take any inference I choose from his remarks. He professed to say something about the delay that was going to jeopardize this great project. Well, Mr. Chairman, a few days ago I attended a chamber of commerce dinner and in the course of conversation with various people prior to the dinner I met a gentleman who said to me, "I am a principal of one of the firms that is doing the survey, the engineering study of the Prince Edward Island causeway." I asked him how it was coming along and he said, "Pretty good. We have sort of definite plans." He also said "It is a tremendous project and it is obvious that it must receive a lot of study."

I think anyone who has ever gone across on the ferry from Cape Tormentine to Borden, a distance of nine miles, must certainly know that a lot of engineering study will have to go into it. It is a terrifically difficult engineering problem, but coming back to what this gentleman told me—

Mr. Stewart: If I understand the minister correctly he suggests that Northumberland Consultants Limited are going to make detailed research into the engineering feasibility of this project, and he enlarges on the difficulty of the project. Now I should like to ask him, if that is true, what did the $348,810 spent in 1958-59 achieve?

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): Well, Mr. Chairman, I cannot answer that question because I have not got the information with me here.

Mr. Stewart: Is the implication that the earlier research was unsuccessful?

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): I can tell the hon. gentleman this: It was $349,000 more than the old Liberal government ever spent on the causeway.

Mr. Stewart: Are you saying it achieved nothing?

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): And if it should be $1, Mr. Chairman, that would be $1 more than the Liberal government ever spent on the Prince Edward Island causeway.

Mr. Stewart: But you are saying it was wasted.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I do not mind being asked questions but I submit that hon. gentlemen over there, who do not seem to be able to take it very well, are interrupting and trying to cause a debate. I have the floor at the moment and they may have it when the opportunity comes in the regular course of debate. But I do not worry about the remarks of the hon. member, unless he is a great deal better than he was yesterday, because I thought he made a very poor speech then.

Mr. Chairman, I am coming back to my conversation with one of the engineers of the project. He said to me, "We have studied and are studying similar projects in different parts of the world. We find that, while it is difficult, it can be done. We believe it is going to be a wonderful engineering feat". That is my answer to the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate who asked how it was going. The decision to build the causeway was made quite some time ago, almost a year past.

Mr. Pickersgill: It was announced in April.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): The hon. gentleman referred to the announcement as contained in the newspapers as being 100 per cent accurate. You may be sure, Mr. Chairman, and this house may be sure that any commitment made on behalf of this government by the Prime Minister in connection with the Prince Edward Island causeway or any other project will be carried out to the letter. They talk about research. If my hon. friend from Bonavista-Twillingate were chairman of this board, one of the first things he would ask—I am satisfied in my own mind, because I have respect for his ability—would be, "How are we getting along with the Prince Edward Island causeway"? That is probably one of the first things this chairman will ask. If an inquiry into the plans which are being made constitutes research, undoubtedly that will be it. And why would it not be done? Why should it not be done? I am sure he would be the first to say that it should be done. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, to take care of that matter I quoted the conversation I had with the engineer and I have quoted the facts. It is probably completely out of order to concentrate on the Prince Edward Island causeway, but certainly there has been plenty of precedent for it this afternoon. However, I just wanted to clean up that particular matter here and now.

My hon. friend from Westmorland had a little something to say about municipal grants and complained a bit about the fact that his city was receiving a smaller amount since the inception of the new agreements than previously. That is what I understood him to say. May I remind him that I cannot answer his question because the matter of dealing with municipalities in any province is one which goes through provincial governments. I can tell him how much more money the province of New Brunswick is receiving in direct aid under this agreement than they were under the old agreement. It is something in the order of $4 million.

Mr. Rideout: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the minister a question?

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): Yes.

Mr. Rideout: Would the minister tell us how much we are getting in comparison with other provinces?

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I do not propose to get into a debate on the question. I am just telling the hon. member how much more money New Brunswick is getting under this agreement than they were under the old one. If he, like some other hon. members seem to want, would like to get into a debate on this subject, that will be very welcome as far as I am concerned. But I say to him that they are receiving $4 million more in direct grants under the new agreement than they were under the old, and I submit also that he should be asking how much more his city is going to get from the provincial government due to the fact that they are receiving this much more money. He should be asking why it is—I am given to understand this—that since 1960 they have not recognized the existing formula of something like 17 per cent of this money from federal sources being distributed to the municipalities. Let him ask the provincial government the reason for that.

Mr. Pugh: There is a close alliance there.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): Yes, there should be. He should be getting more, being the mayor of the city.

Mr. Pickersgill: Is that the principle the hon. gentleman followed when he was premier?

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): I would suggest that if he wants to know anything about the reputation the hon. gentleman enjoyed with the municipalities in New Brunswick, he should go down and ask the municipalities.

Mr. Pickersgill: I heard the mayor.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): He could ask the hon. member for Westmorland outside this chamber.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pearson: He will ask you outside the chamber too.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): I want to congratulate my hon. friend from Westmorland on having put his finger on something which I think deserves correcting. I refer to the figure put in the bill for the salary of the chairman. I agree with him, and when we come to clause 5 I propose to move an amendment that will delete the sum of $3,000 and leave the matter of the chairman's salary to the discretion of the governor in council. I agree with him 100 per cent that it is a ridiculous figure and should be changed or eliminated. In this case it will be eliminated and left to the discretion of the governor in council. What you pay a man for services depends upon a variety of things. It depends upon ability, time spent, results achieved, and so on. To pay the chairman the rather small amount you would pay a stenographer—and many of them are paid a good deal more, which I think is very fitting and proper—even though he is part time, is somewhat ridiculous and is going to be changed.

Mr. Chairman, there is one other point with which I should like to deal before I resume my seat. One of our hon. friends in this debate, I think it was the hon. member for York-Sunbury, mentioned the fact that we in the Atlantic provinces for many years had small family businesses. It is a matter of a great deal of regret to me that they seem to be disappearing. Whether that is due to the age in which we live I leave to hon. members to decide for themselves. I am afraid that is one of the contributing factors. We go to Nova Scotia and pick up Stanfield's underwear, and secure Moirs chocolates at Halifax, and then we go over to Sackville for Enterprise ranges, to Enamel Foundry for heating, and so on.

Mr. Pickersgill: Don't forget Black Harbour.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): Yes, and Black Harbour. There is a tremendous industry based on a family. I might say to my hon. friend that the gentlemen who operate that business are reasonably good friends of mine. I am pleased to be able to say that. They may be a little on the wrong side politically, but we are broadminded in that part of the country.

Mr. Robichaud: The sardines are good.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): Yes, the sardines are all right too. But I think the age-old family business—this may be something we all very much regret—is disappearing, as is the development of the family business based on the desire of someone to create something. I submit those family businesses were based upon the urge that someone had to do something, to make a product. As a consequence, they did not ask how many people were going to go by the door and they did not have any surveys made; they just had the urge to do something and they put that urge into operation. Undoubtedly it exists all over Canada to a great extent, and has existed. The fact that it seems to be disappearing is something we all regret.

Hon. members may say, "What has this to do with the Atlantic development board?" I think it has this to do with it. Here is a board which will be considered by all the citizens of the Atlantic provinces as being, in a sense, their board.

Now I am coming to the question asked by the hon. member for Gloucester. He asked whether there would not be a conflict between the national board and this board. I think the answer is in the negative. I have no reason to think it would not be in the negative. I think that the national board, if it had a reference or study to be made in the Atlantic provinces, would refer it to this board. I think it would not be difficult for them to decide, when any matters pertaining to the Atlantic provinces arose, to refer them to the Atlantic provinces board which would then undertake the duties of investigation and study, the consideration of markets and all those things which go to the determination of whether or not there should be established in the Atlantic provinces an industry based on certain assumptions of raw material and available markets. That is my own feeling about what they might do.

That would apply also to the development of the fisheries industry which was dealt with so ably in a well-thought out address by the hon. member from Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador this afternoon who, incidentally, made a moving appeal for the re-establishment of fishermen who happen to be separated from their usual means of earning a living.

Power development in Labrador is a large subject. I have heard the premier of Newfoundland speak on that. He could come here and talk for a couple of hours on it and never miss a beat. The development of the St. John river, the joining together of Hamilton falls power in a national grid—all those things come into it. That is private enterprise. I do not think it is fair to interfere with private enterprise; I think the work of this board should be complementary to it. There are many businesses which are not able to take part in research to any great extent, possibly for financial reasons. But here is a board which they may consult; here is something they may think of as belonging to them and something with which they can get in touch fairly easily. When they come to Ottawa they will not run around as much as the hon. gentleman used to tell me to do—I admit he did not, but he could have done. They would know where to go to get attention and service.

The hon. member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador also said that this should be a matter of investment rather than handouts. I could not agree more with that observation. The progress which has been made by the Atlantic provinces economic council is outstanding and I hope there will be a very close connection between that council and this board. I find myself unable to go further than that for reasons which, I know, everyone will understand. I hope there will be this close connection, because the council has a lot of research information and the main thing now is to go ahead and do the things that need to be done in order to make progress.

I said the other day that I felt the Atlantic economic development board had great possibilities. I repeat that. This is the most forward step which has been taken in my lifetime by the federal authority. This is a recognition of the special circumstances existing in the Atlantic provinces. I hope all of us will be prepared to pass the bill. If we were to find some weaknesses in it in the course of its operation in the coming year, then we could come back and ask for amendments to strengthen it. At this time I feel it is in the nature of an experiment. We shall have to go ahead and get our experience. Having got our experience we would seek to improve. Then we would go back and we really would improve. I feel that at this stage we might proceed to go through the bill. I appeal to hon. members not to consider that this measure will be perfect from the outset. There are very few perfect people in the world and, probably, very few perfect bills. But let us go ahead with this one to see how it works and then we will try to improve it.

Mr. Pickersgill: I have two brief observations to make about the remarks we have just heard. I must say I find it a lot easier to debate with the hon. gentleman of the same name spelled with only one "m" than I do with the hon. gentleman from New Brunswick who seems, in doubling the letter, to have doubled the milk of human kindness.

However, I cannot let pass the observation the minister made about the causeway, in an attempt to get out of the awkward situation in which he found himself, without drawing attention to some figures which were put on the record in Hansard by the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Public Works on October 31. These showed that in 1957-58 there was $10,338 spent on this project and as no new estimates by the present government were presented in that year, the minister is wrong in saying that nothing was done about the study of this matter by the previous government, though I admit it was only just begun. In 1958-59, $349,000 was spent; in 1959-60, $155,000; in 1960-61, $8,900, and in 1961-62 the amount spent was $9,820. But the real shocker was that between April 1, 1962 and September 30, 1962 the expenditure on studies and surveys was $828.75. That was after the project was started, and by "started" I do not mean, as the minister incorrectly said I did, that construction was started. The Prime Minister came into this house a few days before dissolution and said the government had decided to build this causeway. He did say, of course, and he said in Charlottetown, too, that it was still in the planning stage. But the decision had been made to build it, not to engage in research as to its advisability. However, I think that figure of $828 is more eloquent than any words I can use.

I think that when the minister was talking about family businesses he said something which would find an echo in many hearts in this house and, inadvertently, gave us the best reason yet for the establishment of this board. He said it was to be a protective measure against the national economic development board, which we understand, is to be under the direction of the Minister without Portfolio who is not exactly a fairy godmother of family businesses. He perhaps has done more than any man in this country to see that family businesses were gobbled up by the economic octopus. If the Atlantic board is to be a kind of shield and buckler against that type of concentration in the central provinces of which the Minister without Portfolio, the real head of the government today, is the epitome, I only hope the minister has a good strong arm to hold up that shield.

Mr. McCleave: In the few moments which remain before five o'clock perhaps I could refer to one of the observations just made by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate. Surely he knows, from his experience in government, that bills have a habit of accumulating over a period of time. Then they are presented and paid. The figures he quoted this afternoon are quite irrelevant to what is going to take place. They are no true reflection by a long shot of what is going to take place in the development of the Prince Edward Island causeway this year, and next year and a good number of years to come. We are the people who are going to put that causeway through. I personally will be glad to drive the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate across there. I will still be in a position to do it at that point.

Mr. McGrath: If in fact he is in the house.

Mr. McCleave: Whether he is in the house or not.

Mr. Robichaud: Not for $105 million; never.

The Chairman: Shall the resolution carry?

An hon. Member: Five o'clock.

The Chairman: In order that the house may proceed to the consideration of private members' business pursuant to section 3 of standing order 15, it is my duty to rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again later this day or at the next sitting of the house, as the case may be.

Progress reported.

Mr. Speaker: It being five o'clock, the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, the first item being public bills.

MERCHANT SEAMEN COMPENSATION ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING PAYMENTS FOR ORPHANS OF SEAMEN

Mr. C. W. Carter (Burin-Burgeo) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-25, to amend the Merchant Seamen Compensation Act.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this bill is the same as the one which was introduced last session and which was debated on March 23 last. I do not intend to repeat the argument I made on that occasion as the debate of last session is recorded at page 2145 of Hansard and is available to all hon. members. However, I should like to take a few minutes in order to reply briefly to some of the arguments made by hon. members who took part in this debate and also to clear up what appears to be some misunderstanding about the bill.

When I introduced this bill last session I referred to it as a very simple one as, in fact, it really is. Some hon. members took issue with that statement. However, I should like to refer in particular to the observations made by the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Morris) who at that time was parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. I single out this argument as it is typical of all the arguments that were made in that debate and it illustrates the misunderstanding on which those arguments were based. I am reading from page 2146 of Hansard of March 23, 1962, beginning at the second column. The then parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Trade and Commerce is speaking and this is what he said:

> Mr. Speaker, what would the amendment before us seek to do? The hon. member for Burin-Burgeo (Mr. Carter) would seek to amend section 30(2) of the present legislation in order to empower the merchant seamen compensation board to name as foster mother someone who would take care of a child or children of a deceased seaman in another home, not the existing household of the deceased seaman or of the deceased seaman's family. This amendment would have the effect of entitling the foster mother to the widow's pension of $75 a month as long as she was caring for the children up to the age of 18 years, or in the case of an invalid child, beyond that age. That would be the situation if the seaman died leaving no widow.

That quotation contains the main argument that was brought forward against adopting this legislation. It was contended that the purpose of the original bill was to keep the family together and that the amendment which I was introducing then, and am introducing again today, would break the family up or divide the family and therefore prevent the main object of the legislation from being implemented.

In this connection I wish to point out first and foremost that this bill does nothing of the kind. It does not compel the merchant seamen compensation board to do anything it is not compelled to do under the present legislation. All it does is to give the compensation board more discretion so that they can deal with various types of cases. We all realize that when a number of children are orphaned, it is desirable to keep the family together as much as possible. However, there are cases in which there is only one child. There are cases in which the family cannot be kept together. In those cases some other provision must be made for them. However, under the present legislation that provision cannot be made. If provisions are made which are in the best interests of the child, then the person or the foster parent is penalized as a result. That brings me to the second purpose of this bill which is really to enable the merchant seamen compensation board to make better provision for the welfare of the orphaned children or the orphaned child and to be able to do it without penalizing the person who undertakes this responsibility.

In the quotation I just read from Hansard there is just one point I wish to repeat:

> This amendment would have the effect of entitling the foster mother to the widow's pension of $75 a month as long as she was caring for the children up to the age of 18 years—

What the parliamentary secretary did not say—and this is the great omission in this case—is that for that mother or foster mother to get the full pension of $75 a month under the present act, that foster mother must move into the home which belongs to the deceased parent. In this connection, I wish to ask two questions. Who can expect to get a foster mother—or anybody else for that matter—to move into a home, undertake the care and the maintenance of the home, the care of the children, supply them with food and clothing and keep up a shelter for $75 a month? Certainly the day is gone when it is realistic to expect a person to be able to do that. I think that emphasizes the need for some change in this particular law. The real trouble is that the present law is not flexible enough to deal with the many different types of cases that must be dealt with. I know of some in my riding. That is why I am particularly interested in this bill.

During the election campaign last June I made a particular point of visiting one of these orphans. This was a single child and it was impossible to get anybody to move into the house which had belonged to the child's parents. As I said before, the remuneration of $75 a month is not enough to induce anybody to take that responsibility. So the only alternative was to move the child to somebody else's house. In this case that is the only thing that could be done; but because that was done, because the person looking after the child did not move with her children into the house of the orphan's deceased parents she could not get the full allowance. Do you know how much she has been getting on behalf of that child simply because it was impossible for her to move into the house occupied by the parents of the deceased? Instead of the $75 she could have got which, as I said, would have been inadequate, she could only get $20 a month because the child was moved into her house, which was a much better and more comfortable home than the child had ever had before. That is all that has been paid for that child throughout the years.

The child is now 14 or 15 years of age and there are school expenses, which means that $20 is not adequate. If this amendment were made the merchant seamen's compensation board in any case would have discretion to make the arrangements that have to be made and would be able to remunerate the person suitably and more equitably than is the case at the present time.

I do not want to take too much time because other members want to speak on this bill, but I wish to emphasize again that the bill does not compel the board to separate families. The board still has the discretion it has always had and if they feel that the best thing to do is to keep the family together under one roof, then the bill does not stop them from doing so. They could do so before and they can do so under this bill. In this day and age it is very unlikely you will get anyone to accept such a responsibility for $75 a month. The bill does not interfere with the board's judgment in any way. It is a very simple bill designed merely to give the board more freedom to act, more freedom to deal with different types of cases and to deal with them in a better way. Therefore I hope that the bill will receive the support of the house.

Mr. McCleave: Would the hon. member permit a question? I did not like to interrupt this thoughtful speech. Can he tell us approximately how many people would be involved as a result of his proposed amendment? Would the number be in the hundreds, or fewer than that?

Mr. Carter: I would think there would be hundreds along the Atlantic seaboard. There are several in my own riding and I would say there would be a hundred in my own province. Taking the maritime provinces of Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick as well, I would think that several hundred orphans would be affected.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Parliamentary Secretary to the Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I hope that a landlubber from the inland port of Peace River may be permitted to participate in the debate on this bill in respect to which I commend the hon. member for the humanitarian motives which appear to actuate him in bringing this matter to the attention of the house. I am not raising any formal objection but I should like to call the hon. member's attention to something to which he might well give some consideration before this matter reaches the stage when it is voted on, and I may say that what I have in mind is accentuated by the answer made by the hon. member to the question asked by the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Public Works.

I would point out that this is a bill which in its result may well have the effect of extending the terms of payment of a fund to a larger number of people than have been permitted to participate in its benefits up to now. Whether it is considered to be a fund which the crown is directly or indirectly distributing, or whether it is more on the basis of an insurance fund, as in the case of most compensation boards, may be an issue; but if it is in fact considered a fund which the crown is distributing then the hon. member is seeking as a private member, even with the most laudable objectives, to extend the number of people who may recover from the fund. I simply bring this matter to his attention. I am not raising it as a formal point of order but mentioning it now for consideration later.

I am inclined to the view that the hon. member may well have misconceived or misinterpreted the legislation. The act which he wishes to deal with, of course, is the Merchant Seamen Compensation Act and the particular section he is dealing with is section 30, subsection 2, which reads in part as follows:

> Where the seaman leaves no widow or the widow subsequently dies, and it seems desirable to continue the existing household—

I think he has given to the word "household" an interpretation which substantially strains the meaning. I think he connotes household with house, and I do not think this is the intention at all. As I read the act, and I went through it briefly today, this particular subsection is an attempt to retain intact the domestic family which survives the death of (a) the seaman or (b) the widow of the seaman. I do not think it matters at all where the household, and by that I mean the family, is maintained. Whether it be in the house where the seaman or widow died or whether it be in the house of the proposed foster parents, as long as the household or family is maintained intact as a unit under the normal provisions with regard to a family, then there is eligibility for the foster mother to receive this additional payment.

I have a dictionary here, a reasonably compact one which I can master in the house—Thorndike-Barnhart—and I refer to the meaning of the word "household" given in that dictionary:

> All the people living in a house; family; family and servants; a royal household.

And so on. I think that section 30 is quite plain and specific. It simply says that a person qualifies to receive this additional benefit provided the household, meaning the family, is retained intact. In the explanatory notes to the bill the hon. member also labours under this misapprehension because he says there:

> Under the present wording, the allowance is paid only if the person moves into the household of the deceased seaman or deceased seaman's widow.

Now, if you delete the word "household" and substitute for it the word "house", then I think my hon. friend would be correct. I suggest that in his amendment he has attempted to use the words "domestic establishment" and I imagine he has used those words in an attempt to distinguish between the word "household" and the sort of thing he has in mind. In looking at the same dictionary, I find that the word "establishment" has a number of meanings one of which is household. I think, and I submit this with some strength, that although I do not know what interpretation may have been placed upon this by the board—I am going to come to that in a minute—I would say that the act as it is now achieves the result which the hon. gentleman feels can only be achieved by his amendment.

I should like to refer to section 14 of the act itself. This is the type of section we see in all these compensation acts. I quote:

> The board has exclusive jurisdiction to examine into, hear and determine all matters and questions arising under this act and as to any matter or thing in respect of which any power, authority or discretion is conferred upon the board, and the action or decision of the board thereon is final and conclusive and is not open to question or review in any court—

This section has been the subject of a considerable number of judicial interpretations. As a matter of fact, I had the misfortune to run up against one of them myself. I think this question has even been taken to the Supreme Court of Canada, and it has been ruled this sort of section in a compensation act means exactly what it says. This is something we cannot say about all legislation. The boards constituted under compensation legislation have absolutely no impediment in interpreting an act. For example, they can decide who is eligible, decide the extent of injuries and who is entitled to the payment of benefits under the act.

My suggestion is that instead of bringing this forward as an issue to be debated in parliament, the proper authority to whom these representations should be made is the board. It may well be that I am labouring under a misapprehension. It may well be that a decision has been made by the board on this matter. I would say to the hon. member that if he can be as eloquent in taking his case before the board as he has been before this house, there is no reason why he cannot persuade the board, which is not bound by precedent and is able to amend or vary its decisions, to accept the validity of his argument and make the corresponding changes.

I mention that because I see this act was originally passed in 1946, was introduced into the revised statutes in 1952 as chapter 178, and has since been amended in 1952-53 and in 1957. I just had a moment to look through the 1957 debates. I observed that this particular section, not the subsection but section 30, was the subject of an amendment and of a considerable amount of discussion. At that time, of course, conditions were reversed and hon. members who are now in opposition were sitting on this side of the house. The hon. member who sponsored this bill spoke in connection with this particular amendment in 1957. I could be unkind, possibly, and suggest that certain legislation which in 1957, in the opinion of hon. members opposite, was scintillating, bright and needed no amendment, suddenly after 1957, upon mature reflection and consideration, appeared to be not quite as suitable. This may well be the case, but I am not suggesting it is.

In 1957, the hon. member made no reference to this particular aspect of the act. It may well be that from then until he introduced his bill cases may have been brought to his attention which did not exist before. If so, of course, that would be a good reason for introducing this measure at this time. I feel that when we attempt to vary, mould or amend laws to meet every case, even a few isolated cases, we frequently get ourselves into difficulty. Where you have an act which gives a board that broad jurisdiction which is given under section 14, it seems to me that board is the place where representations should be made. Possibly the hon. gentleman may have an opportunity of telling me later that the board has made firm decisions on this point. I feel that with a logical and reasonable interpretation of the section as it now stands, and with the cooperation of the board, everything which he asks in this bill can now be obtained.

(Translation):

Mr. Gerard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a few brief remarks on Bill C-25 now under discussion and entitled, an Act to amend the Merchant Seamen Compensation Act.

This bill provides a wider choice of residence for the persons who accept to care for children who have been prematurely deprived of their parents.

Under paragraph (2) of section 30 of the Merchant Seamen Compensation Act, it seems that a sister, an aunt or any other person called upon to care for the children of deceased seamen, is obliged to move into the former household. In my opinion, such a restriction should be abolished, and I feel that the mover of this bill has taken a right view of things, since he represents a maritime district and he may be better aware than many of us of the problems resulting from the provisions of the act, especially in paragraph (2) of section 30.

Mr. Speaker, not only am I not a seaman, but I do not represent a region where seamen live. The riding I have the honour of representing is located in the hinterland, but nevertheless I want to support the efforts of the mover of this bill and I also want to assure him of the support of the people in my riding.

Mr. Speaker, I hope that the proposed amendment to the Merchant Seamen Compensation Act will be adopted, because it will take a great load off our seamen's minds.

I support the bill because the Social Credit party, of which I am a member, is the defender of freedom and is in favour of everything that is conducive to that freedom. In fact, the Social Crediters have proved it many times since the beginning of the session and will certainly keep on proving it.

Mr. Speaker, Canadian merchant seamen have rendered great services to their country and since they have to work in extremely dangerous conditions at times, we should see to it that in case of sudden death, their families would be secure and could move somewhere else if they wish to do so.

I can understand that after the death of the head of the family, a widow or the person who is entrusted with the care of the children may want to change domicile. Those people should be free to choose where they want to live without any risk of losing the compensation under the act.

Thanks to this legislation, it may be easier to find kindhearted individuals to look after the education of those unfortunate children. In fact, as the mover of the bill stated, the law is so restrictive at present that it may easily scare anyone who might be willing to take on such a responsibility. That is why I am in favour of the bill and I hope that it will go through so that people will be encouraged to take care of those orphans.

(Text):

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, the members of this party are once again quite pleased to support the principle of this bill and I, as a member coming from British Columbia, which is a maritime province, am very pleased to support it because there must be similar circumstances on the Pacific coast to those on the Atlantic.

The purpose of the bill is to meet circumstances which time and experience in the administration of the act have proven cannot be met without amendment to the act. The hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) has a certain necessary function to perform with respect to a bill like this. I am not blaming him as an individual, but I thought he was using rather legalistic arguments. I could see he was experiencing heavy weather in giving a narrow legal argument in opposition to the principle of the bill; but hon. members in all parties who supported legislation in years gone past and thought the legislation was quite satisfactory have later, in the light of experience, found themselves proposing amendments to it. That is exactly the situation with respect to this bill.

The hon. member for Peace River, or to give him his due status in society, the parliamentary secretary, mentioned something to the effect that the hon. member who introduced the bill failed to introduce this amendment prior to 1957; but no doubt in the meantime the hon. member has gained much experience and knowledge as a result of representations made to him by the seamen or relatives of the seamen and saw the necessity for this amendment.

The hon. member for Burin-Burgeo (Mr. Carter) and I have sharply differed on a number of occasions in this house, but on this occasion I give the hon. member full credit for having a close personal knowledge of the circumstances that warrant this amendment to the act, the circumstances under which seamen are employed, and the circumstances surrounding the administration of the act. During the years in which he has been a member of the veterans affairs committee he has demonstrated that he has a very sound knowledge of sea-going affairs, because of the riding which he represents and the circumstances under which he lives.

So far as this group are concerned, we are convinced he has advanced sound arguments in support of the amendment to show that it will be fair to the employers and will be of no expense to the consolidated revenue fund. If the parliamentary secretary has any doubt as to the cost of this amendment to the employers, I suggest he would be well advised to support the bill and then move that it be sent to the industrial relations committee where it could be studied and witnesses called representing the seamen, the employers and any other groups who have personal knowledge of the circumstances which have prompted the hon. member to introduce the bill.

I cannot accept the narrow, legalistic argument of the parliamentary secretary, and his suggestion that the place for the hon. member to make his representations is before the board. The experience of hon. members of the house in making representations before boards has proven that to be a rather fruitless procedure. We have even had the premiers of provinces recently making representations to the board of transport commissioners with respect to the discontinuance of train and passenger services.

I suggest hon. members would be very well advised to ignore the suggestion of the parliamentary secretary and support the bill, so that the people it is intended to serve will benefit as quickly as possible.

Mr. Baldwin: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, and I have waited until the hon. member finished, I want to make it absolutely clear I made no reference to the question of additional cost to the employers. I based my view on the very broad ground that the power sought already exists in the act.

Mr. H. M. Batten (Humber-St. George's): Mr. Speaker, I wish to register my support for the amendment to the Merchant Seamen Compensation Act proposed by the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo. I do so for one particular reason and that is that I believe the amendment is necessary. I agree that sometimes laws are made and it is not necessary to amend them; but all hon. members in the house know that certain laws, in the light of experience, have to be amended, and this is just one case where an amendment is really necessary.

The important thing to bear in mind is the welfare of the child or children involved. It may be possible in some cases to find a woman to take care of one or more children in the home where the children were born, but it is not always possible to do that. Sometimes a man or woman can be found who will look after children in his or her own home but who would not move to the original home of the children. In such a case, and if the children are going to be better cared for in the home of the foster parent, then the board should have the right to say that the maximum compensation will be paid to the person looking after the children.

This amendment would give the board wider latitude in looking after such cases, and these cases really need attention.

Quite often when an explanation is demanded from the board, the reason which the board gives for not making the maximum allowance to a child is that the child is not living in its original home, and one can assume that if the child were living in its original home it would receive the maximum benefit permissible under the act.

The hon. member for Halifax (Mr. McCleave) wanted to know the number of children involved. I recognize that legislation should not be made to cater to individual cases; but if legislation can be amended to make it more applicable to individual cases, I think that should be done. I do not think the number of children involved is an important question here. I was very interested in the remarks made by the hon. member for Peace River and I must admit that his interpretation of the word "household" corresponds with mine. I believe that if the board were entitled to use that interpretation of the word "household" the full purpose of this amendment would be achieved. If "household" were to mean the home in which the child was born or the home in which the foster parent lived then the purpose of the amendment proposed by the hon. member would be achieved perfectly.

The hon. member for Peace River also made reference to the amount of money that might have to be spent in an increasing quantity if more of these cases were allowed under this act. I should point out to him that at the bottom of the explanatory notes this statement is made:

> The costs of the administration of the Merchant Seamen Compensation Act and the compensation payable thereunder are chargeable to the employers and not against the consolidated revenue fund.

I think there are cases where, because this section of the act is not interpreted generously enough, some children of merchant seamen are not receiving the allowance which they should receive. I think a change needs to be made in the legislation so that the board will be given the latitude which will allow them to decide that a child or children, if they are going to be more properly cared for in the home of the foster parent, may live in the home of the foster parent and receive the maximum allowance which they would receive if they were living in the original home.

Mr. R. J. McCleave (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I do not quarrel with the laudability of the amendment presented to us this afternoon or the most interesting speech by the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo (Mr. Carter). However, I should like to point out what I regard as the main principle of his bill and one to which the house should give consideration. I would ask the question whether in cases of this kind we should proceed on the basis of legislation comparable to workmen's compensation plans in the provinces or on the basis of legislation comparable to benefits given under the war pensions and allowances plans.

I believe the hon. member has adopted, by his argument, a course of proceeding by legislation comparable to military pensions; but I suggest, sir, that the Merchant Seamen Compensation Act in its original purpose, in its framework, in its philosophy, in the way it was set out, was analogous—parallel, if you like—to the workmen's compensation acts of the various provinces. I do not say this is fatal to his bill. I would not argue that at all. But I think it should be at least known to the house that the apparent original purpose of the Merchant Seamen Compensation Act when it was passed by this parliament was to set up legislation comparable to workmen's compensation. I suggest, sir, from my knowledge—and I admit it is imperfect—that the provincial workmen's compensation acts do not contain provisions similar to the one presented to us in Bill No. C-25. Perhaps I am wrong in that, but that is my understanding from information given to me.

May I suggest a way that this problem, if it can be treated as a problem, should be solved. I think we all recognize the need for some help for the orphan class mentioned in the bill of the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo. It seems to me that to make our legislation all of a piece this is the sort of thing where the federal Department of Labour and the provincial departments of labour could work out a common philosophy for both workmen's compensation and the Merchant Seamen Compensation Act.

I now come to another point, Mr. Speaker. What are the rights or privileges with respect to orphan children as they now exist under the present act? First, a payment of $35 per month may be made to them until they reach the age of 18. Second, where it seems desirable to continue the existing household a suitable person acts as foster mother in keeping up the household and maintaining and taking care of these orphans entitled to compensation. That duty must be carried out in a manner satisfactory to the board. Under these circumstances the foster mother I have mentioned would be entitled to receive the same monthly payment for herself to a total of $75 per month, and the children $25 a month, as if she were the widow of the deceased. Under the amendment presented to us by the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo the bill would widen the discretion of the merchant seamen compensation board and make an allowance to a person who undertakes the care and maintainance of orphans of merchant seamen who are entitled to compensation under this act.

The hon. member for Humber-St. George's (Mr. Batten) raised the question of the phrase "existing household". I understand there is no precise definition under the act we are considering as to the exact meaning of "existing household". However, apparently it means people living together as a unit under the same roof. As my hon. friend for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) points out to me, it does not mean the existing dwelling as a residence, but it is the family kept intact as a unit in the place where that is done. The hon. member by his amendment proposes that there be no requirement or prior condition that the existing household be continued, if I understand him correctly. He pointed out the example of an orphan in his riding who would, if the act were changed, receive a much greater benefit by being placed in a much better home and in the care of a person who would be able to do much more for him.

The amendment only requires that foster mothers maintain or care for such orphans or orphan. The keeping up of a domestic establishment is no longer a requirement. I asked the hon. member how many people would be involved if this amendment were to carry and I believe he gave the answer that 100 or more would be involved in his own province, and he projected that to hundreds in the maritime or Atlantic provinces of Canada. I am not sure if I understood him correctly as meaning this would be the total number of people who were now deprived of advantages under the act, advantages which they would otherwise receive. In any event, I find myself in sympathy with the bill more from the standpoint of heart or emotion than from reaching a conclusion on an intellectual basis because, as I pointed out earlier, the purpose of the act when originally set up was to parallel the function of the workmen's compensation boards in the various provinces and not, as the hon. member has said this afternoon, to parallel the provisions of the Pension Act. But whether that is a defect or not, I think the bill is worthy of our consideration and support.

Mr. J. C. MacRae (York-Sunbury): I should like to enter this debate briefly. I find myself in the rare position of agreeing completely with the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo and the hon. member for Humber-St. George's, and I find myself in almost complete disagreement with my colleagues on this side of the house, the hon. member for Peace River and some others who have spoken. I shall attempt to show the points of difference as I continue.

The point was well taken that the important thing to do in the case of orphan children is to try to keep the family together, if that is possible. However, we must realize that if there is only one child there is often no family left to keep together—there is only one child for whom the best possible future should be provided. At the other end of the scale, if there is a large number of children it might be impossible to keep a family of eight, ten or more children together. What could be more sensible than to keep children in a good home rather than grasp at the services of someone who might be completely unsatisfactory for the sake of $75—not a large amount these days, it is true, though it would be helpful in supplementing income from other sources. If it is possible to get two or three children into a good home, full payment should be made in such a case. I think that point was well taken. I do not think any penalty should be imposed because a child is taken under another roof. After all, we do want to provide the best possible home for the child.

I was interested in another phase of this debate in connection with the merchant seamen of this country. This is a maritime nation with a long coast line. We know that in two wars if it had not been for the gallant contribution of these men the tide of events might have turned out differently. Many lost their lives but, happily, many survived. I can think of one member of this house, the hon. member for Saint John-Albert (Mr. Bell) who served for six years and has a gallant record of service in the merchant navy. I think anything we can do to make service in the merchant navy more attractive should be done. I think that is a principle of this bill, too. I know the hon. member who introduced the measure is most sincere about this. If a man can go to sea knowing that, should he lose his life, his wife and children will get the best possible care, that is most important to him.

A few moments ago the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. McCleave)—the taller member for Halifax, we sometimes call him—said, if I understood him correctly, that we should not try to make this legislation parallel to the provisions of the Pension Act. Here again, I find myself in disagreement with a colleague on this side of the house because I think those of us who serve on the veterans affairs committee and, indeed, most people in Canada, agree that Canadian pension legislation is second to none. If we could pattern the rest of our legislation on the Pension Act and the War Veterans Allowance Act I think we should have a better country in which to live. A year ago the merchant seamen who served in wartime came under the War Veterans Allowance Act for the first time. Prior to that they had been provided for under certain parts of the veterans charter. It seems to me that this was a change which was long overdue.

Perhaps my hon. friend from Halifax did not read the sections of the Pension Act which are specially applicable. They are mentioned here in the explanatory notes on this bill where we are invited to compare subsections (9), (10) and (10a) of section 26 of the Pension Act as substituted by chapter 10 of the 1960-61 session. I should like to quote briefly from section 26:

> (9) On and after the death of the wife of a pensioner pensioned on account of disability, or the dissolution of her marriage, the additional pension for a married member of the forces may, in the discretion of the commission, be continued to him for so long as there is a minor child or there are minor children in respect of whom additional pension is being paid, if there exists a daughter or other person competent to assume and who does assume the household duties and care of the said child or children.

Then subsection 10 goes on to say:

> (10) On and after the death of a widow of a member of the forces who has been in receipt of a pension, the pension for the widow may, in the discretion of the commission, be continued for so long as there is a minor child or there are minor children to or in respect of whom a pension is being paid, to a daughter or other person competent to assume and who does assume the household duties and care of the other child or children; in such cases the pension payable for children shall continue.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hour appointed for the consideration of private members' business has expired.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder if the leader of the house could give us any information about what business the government proposes to bring before the house next week. In asking this I would draw the attention of the leader of the house to the fact that last night my hon. friend from Laurier pointed out that there was to have been a conference today—and I know he waited for it most of the day today—among the house leaders to effect co-operation with regard to business.

Mr. Churchill: The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate gets exercised over these matters. A meeting of the leaders of the various parties was held yesterday at which certain conclusions were reached. I was then instructed to draft a proposed timetable for the coming week and submit it to the whips to transmit to their respective leaders. The whips were asked to meet last night at 8.15 or 8.30 but none of them appeared, and until I get word from the whips as to whether there are modifications desired in this program there is not much purpose in attempting to have further consultations.

Mr. Habel: On a question of privilege, last night we were asked, as whips, to meet. I informed the government whip that this matter was to be dealt with by the house leaders of each party—that the whips had nothing to do with it. They were told immediately that it was to be taken up with the house leaders of each party, not with the whips. The minister is not going to get away with that.

Mr. Churchill: I am not trying to get away with anything. If there is a lack of communication between the parties, that is not my responsibility.

Mr. Pickersgill: On a question of privilege, it is a well known fact that when my hon. friend the hon. member for Laurier is not here I act on his behalf. The hon. member for Laurier was told by the leader of our party after the meeting with the Prime Minister yesterday that the house leaders had been instructed to meet at the call of the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre, and the hon. member for Laurier has been waiting since that time until about an hour ago to attend that meeting. To the best of my knowledge that meeting has not been called. My hon. friend has had to go away and he has instructed me to attend in his place if it is called. All this shows to me that the government does not want co-operation and that it does not want to get on with its business.

Mr. Churchill: I am not taking instructions from the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate or from any one other than the Prime Minister.

An hon. Member: Speak up.

Mr. Churchill: I said I am not taking instructions from anyone in this house with the exception of the Prime Minister, and I have told the house what my instructions were.

On Monday we shall continue with the discussion of the bill dealing with the Atlantic development board which we were on today, and we shall follow that with a discussion of the national economic development board bill which is now in second reading. I hope the leaders of the various parties will examine the proposed timetable which has been typed out and distributed. If there are suggestions to be made, on Monday we could consider the matter.

I would like, also, on Monday, to ask the house to give consideration at five o'clock as the first item during that period to the bill standing in the name of hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Mandziuk) dealing with a proposal concerning the handling of divorce in parliament.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder if I might ask the leader of the house whether any proposal has been made in an informal way about the last point which the hon. gentleman raised because, normally, motions, not bills are taken on Mondays. I am not offering any objection, but has any proposal been made to the leaders of the other parties about this?

Mr. Churchill: This matter was discussed at a meeting of the leaders in the Prime Minister's office and I asked the hon. member for Marquette to make an investigation himself to see if this would be agreeable to the various parties.

Mr. Douglas: May I make a suggestion with regard to the business of the house. The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre has suggested that the program which has been given to each of the political leaders be reviewed. I just wish to point out that as to the meeting which was held yesterday with the Prime Minister I think there has been some misunderstanding, and I think we ought not to discontinue the arrangements which were suggested the other day. There may be some misunderstanding as to what the terms were. Certainly my understanding was that the whips and the house leaders would meet. I would suggest that this idea be carried forward. I do not think we should be asked just to accept the list of legislation sent to us by a representative of the government. I think the whips and the house leaders should review the matter. Then the meeting which the Prime Minister said would be held with the leaders of the various parties could then be proceeded with.

Mr. Churchill: That throws some more light on the matter.

Mr. Speaker: Without creating a precedent, I think there is perhaps under the circumstances some justification for members from each of the parties speaking. However, this is not a rule of conduct, namely that on the discussion of business we get representatives of all the parties participating. It is usually the opposition house leader who asks the house leader what the business is to be. In the circumstances, however, if there is some point to be clarified, I will hear the hon. member for Red Deer.

Mr. Thompson: I should just like to verify what was said by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam. This was the arrangement that I understood was to be followed. I understood that when the whips and the house leaders got together, then the leaders would again meet to verify the procedure we would follow. I mention this only because we certainly wish to go ahead with legislation. This was the purpose of our meeting and this is what we ought to be doing. I would also mention that it was agreed the other day that we go ahead with this divorce question; and it was our plan that it come up as soon as possible, if there is agreement.

It being eight minutes after six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, December 10, 1962

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES, 1962-63

A message from His Excellency the Governor General transmitting supplementary estimates for the financial year ending March 31, 1963, was presented by Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of Finance), read by Mr. Speaker to the house, and referred to the committee of supply.

PUBLIC SERVICE

ANNOUNCEMENT OF IMMEDIATE IMPLEMENTATION OF SALARY REVISIONS

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, in further reference to the motion I have just made I should like to make a brief statement. After careful consideration the government has approved the recommendations of the treasury board that salary revisions be implemented at once for the employees comprising the second, third and fourth groups in the cyclical salary review program, and that wage adjustments for prevailing rate employees, consideration of which has been deferred for some months, be also put into effect as soon as the paying authorities can make the necessary arrangements.

In accordance with the principles underlying the cyclical salary review policy, the revisions will be effective from the dates as of which the pay research bureau collected the data on which they are based, that is to say:

(a) In the case of the clerical, administrative, accounting and professional support group, October 1, 1961;

(b) in the case of the hospital group, January 1, 1962;

(c) in the case of the penitentiary and police group, April 1, 1962. The prevailing rate wage adjustments will be effective from the dates recommended by the Department of Labour in each case.

Provision has not been made for the increased expenditure involved in the government's decision in the fiscal year 1962-63 in the estimates which have been tabled in the House of Commons and, consequently, a supplementary estimate in the amount of $30 million to augment the general salaries vote, from which funds will be allotted to departmental votes, has just been tabled. Some 60,000 employees will be receiving increases as a result of action on the three cyclical groups. The number of prevailing rate employees who will receive wage adjustments cannot readily be calculated accurately, but it is estimated at between 5,000 and 6,000.

Consistently with the cyclical salary review policy, statistics are presently being collected by the pay research bureau on which revisions for the fifth group in the cycle will be based. This group embraces the postal, customs and immigration classes, the crafts, building custodial and maintenance classes, and a large number of other classes which were not included in the first four groups. When the civil service commission has considered the data bearing on this fifth group, it will make recommendations for revisions to the government to be effective as of October 1, 1962.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I think members of the house will have been pleased to hear the minister's announcement regarding pay increases for the civil service although they will not be surprised, because this announcement apparently has already been made outside the house in the columns of the press, indeed before the civil service organization officers, according to reports, had been informed of it.

We on this side of the house, while welcoming the minister's announcement, cannot help but recall that the original pay freeze instituted by the government, which was imposed without following the procedure laid down under section 7 of the Civil Service Act, was in our view unjustified because at that time it forced civil servants to make a contribution to the government's austerity program, which no other occupations were being asked to undertake. The government, having taken that step, is now at this date making what I assume are amends for an action which should not have been taken in the first place.

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of members of our party I express satisfaction in the fact that the government has faced up to its responsibility before the end of the year, just prior to the Christmas season. Omitting any political overtones or trying to lay accusations for what should have been done before, we just express our satisfaction that it has been done now. We trust that in the consideration the government is making to correct this situation it will not forget the sessional staff during the Christmas season.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, this party welcomes the announcement that the Minister of Finance has made. We rejoice with all those who will benefit from the increases now to be put into effect and to be made retroactive, and I join with the hon. member for Red Deer in expressing the hope that early action will be taken to make provision for increases for members of the House of Commons staff, who I believe are not covered by the announcement made today by the Minister of Finance.

An hon. Member: How about the members?

Mr. Knowles: We are supposed to be able to look after ourselves.

Despite our welcoming this announcement, and despite the remark made by the hon. member for Red Deer, I think it is appropriate to urge that there be as little delay as possible so far as the fifth group of employees is concerned. In fact I am quite disappointed to learn that postal, customs and other employees are not included in the announcement made today.

Mr. Nowlan: They could not be.

Mr. Knowles: I hope that at some point very soon the minister will make it clear that they will be covered. I want also to say that we shall have to wait until we see the details to learn whether our approval is without qualification, because I noticed the minister said that the government is putting into effect the recommendation of treasury board. A great deal has been made by this government of its new Civil Service Act, about the consultation between civil servants and the civil service commission. My understanding is that the civil service commission made certain recommendations but that the recommendations of treasury board are not necessarily those of the civil service commission. If that is the case, if our employees are being given less than the civil service commission has recommended, I think this is most unfortunate. As a matter of fact this raises the whole question as to whether the kind of consultation to be had at the present time is sufficient.

Nevertheless we welcome this announcement; we are glad that it goes as far as it does. We hope that further improvements will be made in the position of the civil service both so far as their wages are concerned and in their relations with the government at the earliest possible date.

[Mr. Thompson.]

TRADE

AMENDMENT OF U.N. RESOLUTION FOR WORLD CONFERENCE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, on November 16 I answered a question in the house concerning a resolution adopted in the second, which is the economic, committee of the United Nations general assembly calling for a United Nations conference on trade and development. There were serious difficulties at that time over the timing of the conference, and hon. members will recall that in the committee Canada supported the majority vote in favour of that resolution but major trading nations, including the United States, Britain, Japan and some of the important European economic community countries, voted against it. Twenty three countries abstained. Since it was essential that the major trading nations participate in the United Nations conference if it was to be of practical benefit to developing countries, the Canadian delegation with other delegations has worked strenuously during the past three weeks in an endeavour to resolve the differences about the timing of the conference.

I am pleased to be able to inform the house that on Saturday last at a plenary meeting of the United Nations an amendment to the resolution sponsored by Canada and Peru was accepted and led to the virtually unanimous adoption of the revised resolution by the general assembly. The voting was 91 in favour, none against, and one abstention. The text as approved now commands the support of Britain, the United States, Japan, the common market countries and the 23 countries which abstained in committee.

The original resolution recommended to the economic and social council that it convene the conference not later than September, 1963. The resolution as now adopted recommends to the economic and social council that it convene, after consideration of preparatory work, a United Nations conference on trade and development as soon as possible after the 36th session of ECOSOC, which is July, 1963, but in no event later than early 1964, taking into account the view expressed by a large number of delegations that the conference should be convened not later than September, 1963 as well as the view of other delegations that the conference be held in July, 1964.

I emphasize that this United Nations conference on trade and development is fully consistent with the Prime Minister's proposal in London which has resulted in the calling of an early meeting of GATT ministers. The GATT ministerial meeting will have as its primary purpose the laying of a foundation for a new round of tariff negotiations and for the reduction of other barriers between the members of GATT. These negotiations would aim at expanding opportunities for world trade and would take advantage of new far-reaching tariff negotiating authority of the United States. The GATT efforts to find solutions to many of the same problems which would be considered in the wider forum of the United Nations will complement and support the broader effort. The importance and urgency of these problems, particularly as they relate to trading interests of developing countries, are such as to require their continued attention in the United Nations, GATT and in other international forums concerned with world trade. Far from there being any conflict between GATT initiatives and the United Nations conference, the Canadian government hopes the two approaches will reinforce each other and thereby increase the prospect for early solutions to the problems of world trade.

We are hopeful that this conference, after careful preparation, will be a working conference from which will emerge positive proposals for concrete solutions for the expansion of trade, particularly for the developing countries. It has not been easy to bring about this compromise in the United Nations and I should like to pay special tribute to Senator F. M. Blois and, of course, the other members of the Canadian delegation for their efforts which have resulted in the adoption of this resolution practically on a unanimous basis.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. S. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs arising out of his statement to the house at the commencement of today's session. Can the minister advise the house whether under the terms of the United Nations resolution the trade conference will concern itself with the negotiation of international commodity agreements as well as with the multilateral reduction of trade barriers?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, my understanding is that it covers the whole broad field of trade.

[Later:]

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of his statement made just a little while ago on the resolution adopted at the United Nations relative to a trade conference to be held in the spring of 1964, will the minister inform the house of his position and the stand taken by Canada with regard to the proposal that countries other than United Nations members should be invited to attend in order to work toward a world trade agreement?

Mr. Green: Mr. Speaker, I believe there was some amendment to this effect introduced by the Soviet union or one of the other communist countries, and it was defeated. Canada voted against it.

LIBRARY OF PARLIAMENT

CONCURRENCE IN REPORT OF JOINT COMMITTEE

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Veterans Affairs) moved:

That the report of the joint committee of both houses on the library of parliament, presented to this house on Thursday, December 6, 1962 be now concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

(Translation):

SENIOR C.N.R. OFFICIALS

Question No. 935—Mr. Legare:

1. What are the names, titles and duties of the twenty-seven officers of the Canadian National Railways who hold the most important positions following that of the president?

2. On what date were they first employed by the railway company and what successive positions have they held?

3. What is the salary, including the "pecuniary benefits" over and above the salary, each of them receives within the company?

Mr. McBain: The C.N.R. authorities have given us the following information:

The policy of the management concerning the questions raised was expressed on many occasions, especially in answer to question No. 344 of the session of the twenty fourth parliament, where it is said that it is not the policy of the management to supply information from the personal files of officers and employees, a position which met with the approval of the sessional committee on railways, airlines and shipping, and that appointments are made after careful consideration of the qualifications and experience of the persons concerned.

Questions

(Text):

*CHEMICAL TREATMENT OF GRAIN

Question No. 987—Mr. Haidasz:

1. Has the Department of Agriculture received any complaints about shipments of grain containing the presence of chemically treated kernels?

2. Is chemically treated grain, condemned for human use, allowed to be used for animal feed?

Mr. Jorgenson: 1. No.

2. Chemically treated grain, condemned for human use, is not allowed to be used for animal feed if the feed will contain a material in quantities (a) likely to be deleterious to livestock, or (b) which would leave in the tissues of an animal a residue of a poisonous or harmful substance contrary to the Food and Drug Act.

FRUIT, VEGETABLE AND POULTRY EXPORTS AND IMPORTS

Question No. 989—Mr. Douglas:

What were the volumes and estimated value of imports to Canada and exports from Canada via British Columbia points of entry during each of the past five years of the following products, processed or otherwise: strawberries, raspberries, eggs, dressed poultry, potatoes, onions, carrots, cabbages, lettuce, tomatoes?

Mr. Nesbitt: Available statistics on the volume and value of imports and exports of the specified products through customs ports in British Columbia during the years 1957-1961 are shown in the tables attached.

No trade through British Columbia customs ports was recorded for the following statistical classes in the period 1957-1961:

Export class 53-59—Eggs, whole, yolk or albumen, dried.

Export class 53-69—Eggs, whole, yolk or albumen, frozen or otherwise prepared n.e.s.

Import class 30—Raspberries, fresh.

Import class 2326—Eggs, whole, egg yolk or egg albumen, frozen or otherwise prepared n.o.p.

Import class 2255—Chicken and fowl, dead n.o.p.

Import class 2256—Poultry dead n.o.p.

COST OF ALASKA HIGHWAY IN B.C.

Question No. 994—Mr. Leboe:

1. What are the latest estimates as to the cost of reconstruction and paving of the Alaska highway within B.C.?
2. What is the annual cost of maintaining the B.C. portion of the Alaska highway?
3. What offer has the B.C. government made in respect to participating in or taking over this section of the Alaska highway in B.C.?

Mr. Harkness: 1. No accurate estimate for reconstruction and paving of the Alaska highway within British Columbia is available, as no detailed engineering studies have been made on the unpaved portion of the Alaska highway.

2. Based on expenditures during the fiscal year 1961-62—$3,281,571.

3. British Columbia accepted conditions of transfer and assumed control and maintenance for the paved sections between Mile 1.4 and Mile 83.6 on October 1, 1961. No further approach has been made by the province of British Columbia to take over the remaining portion of the Alaska highway within the provincial boundaries.

C.B.C., MONTREAL—STORAGE OF STOCKS ON HAND

Question No. 1,006—Mr. Marcoux:

Is stock valued at $2,500,000 stored in the C.B.C. building located on Dorchester street, Montreal, and, if so, for what purpose will it be used?

Mr. Halpenny: I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows:

Yes. Stocks stored represent inventories to be used by the corporation in the normal conduct of its business.

STUDY OF DUTCH ELM DISEASE

Question No. 1,013—Mr. Coates:

1. Has the Department of Forestry undertaken a study of the prevalence of Dutch elm disease in Canada and, if so, what is the result of such study?

[Mr. Nesbitt.]

2. What is the federal government doing to eradicate Dutch elm disease?

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): 1. The Department of Forestry has undertaken a comprehensive program of surveys and research on the Dutch elm disease and definite procedures are recommended to reduce the destructiveness of this serious disease.

It has been demonstrated that control measures involving the removal of diseased and dead trees and spraying of healthy trees with insecticides can keep losses to tolerable levels. Where these measures are not implemented, however, the disease is expected to continue to kill elms for many years in areas where it now occurs, namely, western New Brunswick and southern Quebec and Ontario, and to spread to other areas; but it is unlikely that it will eliminate elms from our landscape.

Intensive research is in progress to determine how the disease develops in infected trees and on chemotherapy to find improved measures of control. Co-operative studies with Department of Agriculture scientists have resulted in the development of elms apparently resistant to the disease. These trees are presently being critically tested to determine the degree of resistance.

2. It is unlikely that the Dutch elm disease can ever be completely eradicated. The disease is now well established over extensive areas of Canada and the United States and under these conditions it is impossible to remove all sources of infection. The present program in many cities and park regions is one of sanitation which calls for early detection and removal of infected trees. In cities where these programs have been rigidly applied losses have been reduced to tolerable levels (e.g., Fredericton, N.B.).

The federal government is assisting in control programs by providing technical assistance and guidance in methods and procedures of disease control. Extensive continuing surveys are carried out to define the limits and seriousness of the disease and to provide other information essential for timely control operations.

C.B.C.—REDUCTION IN SALARIES OF PERMANENT EMPLOYEES

Question No. 1,017—Mr. Marcoux:

Has provision been made in the revised estimates for a decrease in the salaries of the permanent members of the C.B.C. staff, and will this result in a decrease in the number of the performers for the different programs?

Mr. Halpenny: I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows:

The revised estimates reflect the progression of the corporation's regular staff through the salary scales in which they are placed as a result of commitments made in union negotiations or at the time of appointment to staff. The number of program performers is not directly related to variations in the amounts paid out in salaries to the regular staff.

VOCATIONAL TRAINING STATISTICS

Question No. 1,022—Mr. Pennell:

1. With respect to the Vocational Training Co-ordination Act: (a) how many persons enrolled for training under the terms of the said act (i) in 1961 (ii) in 1962 (b) have any of these trainees completed their courses and, if so, how many (c) how many of those who enrolled discontinued their training before completion (d) how many enrolled for courses conducted under (i) trades approved for apprenticeship under the Provincial Apprenticeship Act (ii) trades under a collective labour agreement (iii) trades under private apprenticeship plans (e) what were the reasons given by those who discontinued their training?

2. With respect to the Technical and Vocational Training Assistance Act: (a) how many persons enrolled for training under the terms of the said act (i) in 1961 (ii) in 1962 (b) how many completed their training under this act (c) how many discontinued training under this act before completing the course (d) what reasons were given for discontinuation of the course (e) were any trainees requested to discontinue and, if so, how many (f) how many of those who completed training are now employed (g) how many persons were deemed to be unemployed at the time they enlisted for training under provisions of this act (h) what has been the cost to the federal government for assistance under this act, exclusive of capital expenditures?

Mr. Starr: 1. The Vocational Training Co-ordination Act was repealed by section 15 of the Technical and Vocational Training Assistance Act effective 20 December, 1960 when the latter act became effective. Therefore there was no training under the Vocational Training Co-ordination Act in 1961 and 1962.

All training programs carried on under the Vocational Training Co-ordination Act at the time that the new act came into effect were continued under the terms of the new act.

2 (a), (b), (c), (d), (e), and (f). This information is not available.

(g) 1960-1961, 10,774; 1961-1962, 26,887.

GLASSCO REPORT—PURCHASE OF SURPLUS EQUIPMENT

Question No. 1,029—Mr. Smith (Calgary South):

In connection with the items of equipment indicated in the Glassco report as being held surplus to requirements, i.e., boots, small kit bags, underwear, socks, pneumatic tires, lamp G-bulbs, oil seal rings, radio oscillator (a) in each case when were these articles purchased (b) what was the total quantity purchased (c) what was the quantity on hand when stocks were examined by the Glassco commission (d) on what basis was the number of years' supply for each item computed?

Mr. Harkness: Boots—Records of total quantities purchased of this item prior to 1954 are no longer kept. The last purchase of this boot size was in 1954-55 when 80 pairs were bought. The stocks were for current issue and for mobilization purposes. There were 170 pairs on hand when stocks were examined by the Glassco commission.

Small kit bags—39,000 of this item were purchased between 1956 and 1960 and there were 24,485 on hand when the Glassco commission examined the stocks. These kit bags are issued to all non-commissioned personnel in the navy for stowage of blankets. A total of 4,000 were issued in the 12 month period ending October, 1962.

Underwear—33,000 were purchased in 1951-52. The stocks were for current issue and for mobilization purposes. In 1959 the previous issue of 3 suits per man was discontinued. Issues are now limited to men serving in northern locations. The number on hand at the time of the Glassco commission examination was 20,652. The issues in 1961 were 18 suits.

Socks—Records of total quantities purchased of this item prior to 1952 are no longer kept. 16,520 pairs of this item were purchased in 1952 for current issue and for mobilization purposes. There were 47,386 pairs on hand at the time of the Glassco commission examination.

Pneumatic tires—This particular tire is used on the nose-wheel of the C130B Hercules heavy transport aircraft, 4 of which were introduced into service in 1960. There were 24 in stock at the time of the Glassco commission examination. These aircraft are now in full operational service and the spare tires have been utilized when required. The supply inventory is now nil. Procurement action is being taken to obtain additional spares in order that C130B operations can continue without interruption.

Lamp G-Bulbs—The G-bulb is required for the Aldis lamp used by aircrew of Lancaster aircraft and were supplied from R.A.F. sources. There is no record of procurement of this bulb since the end of world war II. There were 4,053 of this item on hand when stocks were examined by the Glassco commission. When the Lancaster aircraft are withdrawn from service, there will no longer be a requirement for this bulb.

Oil seal rings—14,310 of this item, for vehicles of peculiar military and non-commercial design, were purchased during 1952 as part of a lifetime buy of spares based on possible wartime usage. The vehicles are expected to be in service for a further 10 or more years. There were 13,801 in stock at the time of the Glassco commission examination. The annual usage of oil seal rings increases in proportion to the age of the vehicles and, in fact, the annual consumption has nearly doubled since the time of the examination by the Glassco commission.

Radio oscillators—Approximately 35,000 of this item were purchased in 1952-53 and there were 25,640 on hand at the time of the Glassco commission examination. This item was bought as part of a lifetime buy in support of 5,000 portable radio sets, of which manufacture was being discontinued. The part is peculiar to this radio set which is expected to be in service at least until 1970. As with the oil seal rings, the annual usage increases in proportion to the age of the radio sets.

Also referred to in the report:

Flashlights—This item was purchased during world war II and records show a stock of 4,881 in 1953. 4,458 were held at the time of the Glassco commission examination. This is a signal light for traffic control and is held for mobilization purposes.

Coveralls—This item was purchased prior to 1954 but available records do not indicate exact numbers acquired. 27,200 were in stock at the time of the Glassco commission examination, of which over half are used. They are being retained for national survival requirements.

In each case, the Glassco commission computed the number of years' stock on hand by dividing the stock, whether for normal issue, mobilization purposes or lifetime spares, by the number of issues made in the year 1961.

*CANADIAN REPRESENTATIONS RESPECTING APPLICATION OF U.S. LABOUR LAWS TO SHIPS

Question No. 1,030—Mr. Herridge:

What representations were made by the Canadian government before the United States supreme court concerning the effort of the United States labour relations board to make United States labour laws applicable on foreign registered, United States owned ships?

Mr. Green: The jurisdiction of the United States national labour relations board is being made the subject of review by the United States supreme court when it considers later this month a series of cases known as the Empresa cases. These cases involve the general question to what extent may the jurisdiction of the national labour relations board be applied to vessels (1) in which United States citizens or business concerns have substantial control and/or beneficial interests; (2) which fly the flag of, and are registered by, a foreign nation; and (3) are engaged in the foreign commerce of the United States.

Canada seeks leave to state its position to the court in these cases because of the implications of the court's decision for international maritime commerce in general and Canadian trade and commerce in particular. On instructions from the Canadian government, the New York legal firm of Sullivan and Cromwell has delivered to the supreme court a brief as amicus curiae in the cases, together with a motion for leave to file the brief. In line with past practice, there is every indication that the leave requested will be granted. It is a customary practice of the supreme court not to confirm the granting of the application for leave to file until the actual day of the hearing.

I hope shortly to table in parliament a copy of the Canadian brief which contains our submission in detail. It was prepared by the firm of Sullivan and Cromwell in consultation with the Departments of Justice, External Affairs and Labour.

DAMAGE TO SEEDLINGS, B.C.

Question No. 1,033—Mr. Fleming (Okanagan-Revelstoke):

Has the Department of Forestry received reports of damage to seedlings in plantation and reforestation areas of coastal British Columbia and, if so, what is the department doing to remedy such conditions?

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): In recent years approximately 200,000 acres of plantations have been established in British Columbia and as a result insects and diseases attacking small seedlings have received a great deal of attention. Currently the most destructive insect pest is a weevil. This insect has always been present in the British Columbia forests but at low numbers under natural conditions. When areas are cut over or burned and then replanted the weevil shows a marked increase in numbers and causes extensive losses by feeding on planted seedlings. The solution to this problem appears to be one of management. Practical measures of control which will be tested are delayed slash burning and more timely planting to avoid weevil attack, and the use of nurse crops to divert the weevils from valuable planted seedlings. A severe outbreak of sweetfern blister rust has been discovered in Bishop and Monterey pine plantings on Vancouver island. This rust occurs on native pines in the region but has never been destructive. The discovery makes doubtful the success of exotic pines in this area and future plantings have been suspended until more is known about the disease. Precautionary measures have been taken to prevent introduction of the rust to regions of the world where Bishop and Monterey pines are native.

Damage to young Douglas fir plantations as a result of browsing by heavy deer populations has been reported to the Department of Forestry by industrial foresters. At the request of the British Columbia tree farm licence committee, the Department of Forestry has initiated a co-operative study, which showed that extreme damage occurs only in small local areas, such as watersheds, where hunting is not permitted. This damage can be found especially throughout tree farm licence areas in southern Vancouver island. Nevertheless, even in areas of heavy damage, the predicted losses in growth are not sufficient to warrant expensive control measures, since they indicate a reduction of only 3 per cent in volume production during an 80 year rotation. Long term studies of browsing damage are being maintained to permit assessment of any changes in trends.

Mortality in fall plantings of Douglas fir seedlings has recently been reported. The Department of Forestry has assigned a tree physiologist to the study of planting stock in an effort to provide basic information on plant-water relationships, root growth, and transpiration patterns of this species. This information will assist in developing improved planting methods and reduction in this mortality.

Blaiklock, general manager, real estate; S. S. Chambers, general manager, hotels; E. A. Springs, director of investigation; E. J. Denyar, treasurer of the Canadian National Railways?

Mr. McBain: The management of Canadian National Railways advises as follows:

The policy of the management on the questions which have been asked has been explained many times, and particularly in reply to question No. 344 of the session of the 24th parliament, when it was pointed out that it is not the management's policy to supply information from confidential files on officials or employees; this policy has met with the approval of the sessional committee on railways, airlines and shipping. Appointments are the result of judicious appraisal of the competence and experience of incumbents.

The mean length of service of the persons involved is 35 years.

*EFFECT OF ATOMIC TESTS ON STRONTIUM 90 LEVEL

Question No. 1,066—Mr. Rynard:

1. Does the world health organization or any other international agency make a continuing study of the effect of atomic tests on the level of strontium 90 in the atmosphere and, if so, what have been the results and are there areas in the world where the level of strontium 90 has increased to the extent where it is a menace to life and health?
2. Is Canada or any international agency investigating preventive measures that could be taken to minimize the effects of fall-out by such means as the lotion reported to have been developed in Finland and capable of absorbing radioactive material from the body surface?

Mrs. Casselman: 1. Various national and international agencies such as the world health organization and the international atomic energy agency are studying the effects of atomic tests. World wide data are compiled and studied by the United Nations scientific committee on the effects of atomic radiation which published its second report in September, 1962. So far as is known there are no areas in the world where the level of strontium 90 from atomic tests has increased to the extent where it is a menace to life and health.

2. Many groups in various countries are actively engaged in research programs designed to determine the suitability of various methods in minimizing the effects of radioactivity from fall-out or any other source. In the case of fall-out consideration is being given to methods of reducing the contamination of food supplies by modifying agricultural practices and treatment of food products, and also to methods of reducing the amount of contamination retained in the body. Work along these lines is being done in Canada.

NARCOTICS ADDICTS AMONG WOMEN PENITENTIARY PRISONERS

Question No. 1,069—Mr. Matheson:

1. What percentage of the women serving time in penitentiary during the year ended March 31, 1962, suffered a history of addiction to narcotics?
2. What facilities are now available to cure penitentiary inmates of addiction, what is the nature of treatment and the degree of success achieved?

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): 1. 64 per cent.

2. Both the psychiatrist and the psychologist at the institution have been giving psychotherapy to these drug addicts, to reinforce their resistance to the habit and to give them insight into the reasons for taking the drugs. Some tranquilizing drugs have been used to allay the anxiety of certain of the inmates. It is difficult to assess the degree of success as no follow up of inmates is made after they are released. However, in drug addiction, as in the case of alcoholism, relapse is frequent.

RESEARCH STUDIES ON CRAMBE PLANT

Question No. 1,071—Mr. Martin (Essex East):

1. Is the Department of Agriculture doing any research or carrying on any studies in connection with the European plant of the mustard family known as crambe, with a view to its growth and field testing in Canada and its possible use in the (a) extraction of oil for use in the manufacture of synthetic fibres, detergents and plastics, and (b) extraction of oil for use as an emergency fuel for illumination?
2. Has the department received any reports or other information on advance field testing of this crop by the department of agriculture in the United States to determine the areas best suited for production of this plant in that country?
3. Are any studies or tests of this sort under way in Canada to determine areas best suited for production and temperature and moisture best suited for it?
4. Will the minister undertake to have studies made to determine whether this plant could be used either as an irrigated or dry land crop?

[Mrs. Casselman.]

Mr. Jorgenson: 1. Yes. Experimental plantings of crambe have been carried by the research branch of the department since 1954. More extensive yield trials have been conducted in the prairie provinces since 1958. The oil and the meal of crambe have been studied and the chemical properties are known. The oil has a high percentage of erucic acid, a feature which makes it useful for industrial processes.

The research branch is presently increasing seed of two selections of crambe to obtain amounts sufficient for commercial tests on both the oil and the meal.

2. Yes. The data available in the United States are relatively limited and represent only exploratory experiments to date.

3. Yes. Tests have been conducted in both western and eastern Canada to determine the adaptability of crambe to Canadian conditions. This species appears to be adapted to the brown soil areas of the prairies and, under these conditions, it will yield more seed per acre than rapeseed.

4. Studies have been completed and others are in progress to determine the most suitable areas of production for this species. Tests are being conducted on both irrigated and dryland sites. The information presently available indicates that crambe is more tolerant to drought than rapeseed.

Mr. McGee: The national film board advises as follows:

1. The board deals with production companies in the following areas:

(a) Production of motion picture film,

(b) Purchase of motion picture prints,

(c) The provision of motion picture services.

An examination of the last two years' transactions reveals that the average period of time between the receipt by the board of accounts from production companies and the payment thereof is:

(a) Production of films—an average of 16 days (this leaves out those instances where the terms of the contract have not been met by the producer and further correspondence is necessary. In certain instances matters have to be referred to third parties, i.e. government department sponsors).

(b) Purchase of prints—the average time is 5 days to 2 weeks. The 2-week time period may be necessary when matters may be referred again to third parties, i.e. sponsors.

(c) Motion picture service—the average time is one month. Such services are subject to subjective judgment and must be approved by the production personnel involved before clerical routine can begin.

2. It is felt that the payment of accounts is effected within a reasonable amount of time in view of the nature of the business transacted.

The subcommittee on pesticide use is composed of representatives of the departments of national health and welfare, northern affairs and national resources, and agriculture; agricultural colleges, provincial departments of agriculture, and the Canadian chemical industry.

2. Recommendations of the committee reported to the national co-ordinating committee on agricultural services form a basis for a co-ordinated approach to pesticide use in Canada for the guidance of the federal and provincial departments of agriculture. To date these have pertained to:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): I should like to put a question to the Minister of Transport.

Has the minister received a brief from the chamber of commerce of the Montreal district with regard to the means of communication between the Dorval air terminal and the city of Montreal? Does the minister's department intend to put those recommendations in effect?

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Speaker, I have not received the brief in question, but I read in the Gazette an article in which some points were raised concerning the means of communication between the city of Montreal and the Dorval air terminal. I must assure my hon. friend that all the suggestions made by the Montreal chamber of commerce will be fully looked into.

Inquiries of the Ministry

(Text):

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

CHANGE IN SYSTEM OF PAYMENTS TO BIWEEKLY BASIS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John R. Nicholson (Vancouver Centre): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. In view of the change made by the unemployment insurance commission in its system of claims payments from a weekly to a biweekly basis, will claimants who appear this week at commission offices have to wait until after Christmas for their next unemployment benefits?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): I have received from the unemployment insurance commission the following report. Claimants who report this week and who would normally report on December 24 or 25 will report and be paid on December 21 and 22. Those who would report on December 26 will report on December 27.

PRINTING AND BINDING OF GILL COMMITTEE REPORT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, on Friday the Secretary of State was good enough to say he would find out when the Gill report would be printed, bound and ready for distribution. Can he now inform the house about it?

Hon. G. E. Halpenny (Secretary of State): Not now, Mr. Speaker. I shall inquire and make a report.

TRADE

TOBACCO—INQUIRY AS TO MARKETING OF SURPLUS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Trade and Commerce): I should like to direct a question to the Acting Minister of Agriculture. Has the government taken any steps to assist in alleviating the serious situation in the tobacco industry?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member will recognize that a whole series of questions have been directed to the ministry on this subject. None of them has been answered, and a number of them were not accepted.

LUMBER—REFERENCE TO STATEMENTS BY U.S. SENATOR

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Arthur Laing (Vancouver South): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Is the government proposing to make some sort of objection to the most recent outrageous actions of Senator Wayne Morse in respect to the use of Canadian lumber in the United States?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think the hon. member will recognize that he has expressed a considerable amount of opinion in his question. I do not know that any particular incident relating to a member of the legislature of some other country would call for a question at this time under those terms.

ELECTRICAL APPLIANCES—PETITION REQUESTING CERTIFICATION FOR SAFETY REQUIREMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. R. Tucker (Trinity-Conception): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Has the minister received a petition from the international association of electrical inspectors recommending in the interests of public safety that the federal and provincial authorities arrange to prevent the sale of electrical equipment and appliances not certified for safety requirements, and if so what action does he propose?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I have not to my knowledge received such a brief.

PUBLIC SERVICE

INQUIRY AS TO SALARY INCREASES FOR CERTAIN CLASSES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lucien Lamoureux (Stormont): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Following the statement he made a moment ago, could he tell us whether he will be in a position to announce a salary increase for postal, immigration and customs employees before the Christmas adjournment?

(Text):

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of Finance): As I said in my statement earlier this afternoon, the salaries of this class are being reviewed by the civil service commission. Under the act the government can take no action in respect of such increases until it has received the recommendations of the commission.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON PENDING EXECUTIONS IN TORONTO

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John R. Matheson (Leeds): May I direct a question to the Minister of Justice. Has the minister anything to report to this house in respect of two executions scheduled to take place tonight in Toronto's Don jail?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think if the hon. member will look at citation 160 in Beauchesne he will see that his question is out of order.

[Later:]

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. In view of the fact that the execution of two human beings is scheduled to take place in Toronto tomorrow, can the minister indicate to the house that an opportunity will be given to parliament to review the whole question of capital punishment at an early date?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I can give no such undertaking. Any hon. members who choose to introduce bills of course may do so subject to the rules of the house.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): As a supplementary question—

Mr. Brewin: I wish to put a supplementary question. Does the government—

Mr. Speaker: Order. One cannot just simply shoot out a supplementary question without being recognized, and the hon. member for Essex East was on his feet.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): In view of the reply given by the Minister of Justice can the minister say whether the government is giving consideration, as it indicated several years ago it would, to this question in a more final form than now appears to be the case?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I think the hon. member for Essex East has overlooked the fact that parliament legislated on this subject just last year. The Criminal Code was amended by a bill which became chapter 44 of the statutes of 1961, which received royal assent on July 13, 1961, so the whole question has had fairly recent consideration and review by parliament.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): May I ask the minister will he take into account what the present Minister of Public Works had to say with regard to future intentions?

INDUSTRY

BRITISH COLUMBIA—REPORTED INTENTION TO CLOSE PROCESSING PLANT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister of which I gave notice this morning, and along with which I sent an accompanying letter and a photostatic copy of a press article. After having done that, I should like to ask the Prime Minister if his attention has been drawn to the fact that the California Packing Corporation, having taken over a two thirds interest in Canadian Canners Limited, food processors known by the Aylmer brand, are now threatening to close their major operation in British Columbia to the detriment of British Columbia farmers and industrial workers. Will the Prime Minister interest himself in this most urgent situation?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): I would point out that the control of Canadian Canners was sold to the California Packing Corporation in October, 1956.

Mr. Winch: May I ask a supplementary question, sir. I pointed that out to the Prime Minister, but I ask will he do something about their control now and their action in closing this major operation in British Columbia in 1962?

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am sure the hon. gentleman is aware of the fact that there is no power in the government to control that type of thing in any way. However, after receiving the question I did communicate with those concerned, and I am advised that several plants have been closed, most of which were in Ontario. The production has been enlarged by a concentration of activities in other existing plants. A considerable program of expansion resulted in these centres.

Furthermore it is stated, and this is the information that is given to me, that there is actually more processing of Canadian products being done today in Canada under this amalgamation than heretofore. There are now 16 plants operating throughout the country.

UNITED NATIONS

CANADIAN RESOLUTION RESPECTING SELF DETERMINATION FOR CAPTIVE PEOPLES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister when he proposes to carry out the undertaking given by him on more than one occasion during the last 12 months to present personally a resolution to the current United Nations assembly asking for the right of self determination for the captive peoples in iron curtain countries.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in order to answer this fully it would require some time, and I will give an answer tomorrow in this connection.

SOUTH AFRICA—IMPLEMENTATION OF SANCTIONS IN RESPECT OF APARTHEID

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister. In view of the fact that today is human rights day, would the Prime Minister inform the house whether the government is prepared to implement the resolution adopted by the general assembly of the United Nations on November 16, 1962 in respect of the policy of apartheid in the republic of South Africa and more particularly the economic sanctions recommended therein?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I understand that resolution has to go to the security council first before it can be given such consideration.

CANADIAN POSITION ON SANCTIONS AGAINST PORTUGAL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. S. Macdonald (Rosedale): I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Can the minister advise the house on Canada's position with respect to a resolution before the United Nations general assembly requesting sanctions against Portugal because of the situation in Angola?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, that resolution is under consideration this afternoon, and I am not in a position to report on it.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INDIA—REPRESENTATIONS RESPECTING CANADIAN TRADE WITH CHINA

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs based on an exchange in this house on December 6, as reported at page 2375 of Hansard, between the hon. member for Red Deer and the Prime Minister. The former asked the Prime Minister:

> Has the government received any communication from the government of India expressing concern over the continuing volume of trade with communist China?

The Prime Minister replied:

> I can speak with regard to the situation only up to yesterday. However, no such message has been received.

My question is, is it not a fact that India has conveyed its concern, orally and otherwise, to the minister over our trade with communist China after India found itself under attack?

[Mr. Lewis.]

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have discussed this question personally with the high commissioner for India to Canada. There have been no formal representations made.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

USE OF CANADIAN MONEY BY OVERSEAS FORCES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Lake St. John): Since my question concerns several departments, I will direct it to the Prime Minister. Could the Prime Minister confirm or deny the fact that Canadian servicemen who are stationed in Europe with their families have to use American money instead of Canadian currency to pay for their purchases in the stores?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member will no doubt agree that his question should be put on the order paper.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

MANITOBA—ALLEGED EXPLOITATION OF INDIANS AND METIS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hubert Badanai (Fort William): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration of which I have given him notice. Has the minister received a communication from the united steel workers of Thompson, Manitoba, pointing out the difficulties facing the Indians and metis living in that province? If so, can the minister indicate to the house whether any action is under consideration by the government to initiate an investigation into alleged exploitation of Indians in Manitoba?

Hon. Richard A. Bell (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Like all other members of the house, Mr. Speaker, I received a copy of a press release distributed on this subject. This organization has not previously communicated with me directly in my capacity as superintendent general of Indian affairs. The matter was first raised with me by the government of Manitoba last September, acting with their usual efficiency and expedition. The action then taken was thought to be efficacious, and this press release in the midst of an election campaign is the first suggestion of any deterioration in the position.

POWER

COLUMBIA RIVER—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF NEWSPAPER ARTICLE BY PUBLIC WORKS MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I wish to address a question to the Minister of Public Works. In view of the continuing interest in developments with respect to the Columbia river treaty, and in view of the interest created by the mention last Friday of an article on the Columbia by James G. Ripley, with a reply by the honourable the minister, in the September issue of Engineering and Contract Record, would the minister table a copy of this article and his reply to the same?

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, this is not a public document and at the moment I do not have a separate copy of the article to table. I should think, however, that the publication in question is in the library or reading room of parliament where it would be available to hon. members. If it is not, then I imagine that if the matter were discussed with the joint committee on the library steps could be taken to make sure that the publication is available.

Mr. Herridge: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Unfortunately there are dozens of members wanting to read the article, all at once, and there is only one copy available.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I do not think the hon. member may comment under the guise of a supplementary question.

SPORTS

INQUIRY AS TO GRANT TO BELLECHASSE CONSTITUENCY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Bernard Dumont (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Has Dr. Lachance, director of the sport commission in St. Damien de Bellechasse, requested a grant to assist sport activities in the constituency of Bellechasse?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Dumont: Mr. Speaker, we have been told that Quebec did not ask for anything, and that is why I am asking that question.

Mr. Speaker: I do not believe it is necessary to indicate to the hon. member that his question is out of order. Indeed, such questions could be asked for all areas from the Atlantic to the Pacific, but that is not to be done on the orders of the day.

(Text):

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

INQUIRY AS TO REQUEST FOR INTERIM SUPPLY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Finance whether he will be asking for interim supply one day this week?

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, when I ask for it will largely depend upon the house leader, but I would expect I might be asking for interim supply this week. Certainly we shall have to obtain interim supply before the Christmas adjournment.

ATLANTIC DEVELOPMENT BOARD

PROVISION FOR DEFINITION OF DUTIES, APPOINTMENT OF MEMBERS, ETC.

The house resumed, from Friday, December 7, consideration in committee of Bill No. C-94, to provide for the establishment of an Atlantic development board—Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton)—Mr. Chown in the chair.

The Chairman: Shall clause 1 carry?

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Chairman, when the committee rose the other day I was speaking about one great project that is being developed in the Atlantic provinces, the Prince Edward Island causeway. Today I would like to deal with a second project, one that will undoubtedly prove to be the biggest tourist attraction that we have or will have in Canada. This is the restoration of the fortress built by the French government in the early eighteenth century at Louisburg on Cape Breton island.

To illustrate the magnitude of the undertaking that is being carried out I would ask hon. members to visualize a building three quarters as long as parliament building itself and three storeys high. That will be one of the buildings to be placed on the restored fortress site.

Mr. Winch: What has that got to do with the bill?

Mr. McCleave: If the hon. member will compose himself in patience he will probably have an answer. I mention the restoration of Louisburg as an example of the type of project that can be developed in the Atlantic provinces. Within a radius of 800 miles we have a natural market of 80 million people to attract to my native area, and I suggest that any project such as Louisburg, with the beneficial results it is bound to bring, should point the way to one of the functions of the Atlantic development board; that is to maintain liaison with those interested in tourist promotion in the Atlantic provinces and also with those interested in it here, namely the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources, from the standpoint of administration of attractive places, the people looking after national historic sites and parks, and the Department of Trade and Commerce.

The hon. member for Vancouver East may not have very much interest in Louisburg, but in 1745 and again in 1758 events occurred there which were a turn of the hinge of Canadian history, for this mammoth fortress was the key to effective control of both the St. Lawrence waterway and the eastern seaboard of Canada and the United States. Furthermore, it has had something to do with the establishment of the riding from which I come, for Halifax was founded in 1749 as the English-Yankee counterpoise to the threat from Louisburg. I hope hon. members will play up in this house the $12 million investment that is going to be made in that portion of Cape Breton island, for it will bring with it the concomitants of a hotel development, a resource development, a boating development and other recreational developments, and will be one of the great boons not only to the island of Cape Breton but to the whole economy of the Atlantic provinces.

Broadening the theme somewhat, Mr. Chairman, one of the interesting things about development in the past has been the special allocation of $300,000 in the last three or four years to promote tourism for the Atlantic area in the nearby United States market. This has paid off very handsomely. As I said before, history has been one of our great natural resources in the maritimes, and since 1957 the government has certainly seized upon this resource and developed it with both skill and vigour. I have in my hands figures issued recently by the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources showing the number of visitors to various national parks and major historic sites across Canada. There are such significant increases as 80,000 more visitors to the Cape Breton highlands this year, 233,000 to the Anne of Green Gables country, 33,000 to Signal Hill in St. John's, Newfoundland, and almost 12,000 to the Halifax Citadel. Therefore I say that in my opinion the Atlantic development board and its members should keep in close liaison with the departments in Ottawa which administer or promote the great national historic sites that we have in abundance in Atlantic Canada.

Turning to another point, Mr. Chairman, if I may, there have been various suggestions as to how the problems of Atlantic Canada could be most usefully tackled. There has been a school of thought which advocates that this be done by a department of government. The hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam mentioned this the other day, and I believe during the election campaign the hon. member for Davenport proffered this as the solution of the Liberal party. I was very pleased to see another Liberal, the hon. member for Inverness-Richmond, reject outright the notion of establishing a department of Atlantic affairs. If any more backward step could be imagined in the House of Commons I hardly know what it could be. It would almost set us apart from the rest of Canada as either a special institution or a plantation, and I am sure the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam and those other hon. members who advocate such a department will quickly switch their tune if they think of the pride of the people involved in my particular region, and come to appreciate that an advisory board is a much better approach to Atlantic problems.

I have already dealt with some of those things which I consider should be functions of the board. There is the development of those things which we have, for example our historical heritage, rather than following the will-o'-the-wisp things that we have not. There are at least two provinces in Canada which have tried the experiment of spending large amounts of taxpayers' money for the development of industry, with very little success. The trail of smoke from the bonfires of the taxpayers' money and the deficit operations of crown corporations in Newfoundland and Saskatchewan should surely indicate that government is not primarily at its best in the field of business. None the less, this does not prevent a board such as we are considering today from performing useful functions, particularly in its advice on measures and projects.

I have an interesting quotation from one of the spokesmen at the recent meeting of the Atlantic provinces economic council at Fredericton, Claude K. Howse, Newfoundland representative of the Iron Ore Company of Canada. Here is how he treats the problem:

> The board must be empowered to "advise on measures and projects" in both the public and private sectors. Certainly, provincial governments and their agencies should have access to the new federal agency to assist in the development of public facilities, such as transportation and power generation and transmission. A province should also be able to apply to the board for assistance in the establishment of industrial estates or similar projects designed to encourage industrialization directly. But just as important, it will be necessary for the board to be in a position to encourage and assist the private sector, either directly or through the provincial governments, in new resource exploration and development, and in the location of cornerstone plants, in the development, in primary resource industry areas, of secondary industry related industrially or economically to the primary industry, and other enterprises which can have an impact on the course of economic progress.

I thought his words so sensible, Mr. Chairman, that I have taken the liberty of putting them into the debate. Finally, sir, there is a point which I hope the new board will consider. Again I return to the theme that we should build up those things that we have, rather than follow will-o'-the-wisp endeavours that will simply represent a costly wasting of taxpayers' money.

One thing I would like to see is the enhancement of one of the great industries in the Atlantic provinces; that is, the diversification of the Sydney steel plant operations. This would not only be of great benefit to Cape Breton island but it would also be of special benefit to a large industry in my own riding, the Halifax shipyards, which would be able to use—if my hopes in this respect are realized—rolled steel from an expanded Sydney plant for the many excellent ships it builds for public and private enterprise.

These are some of the thoughts that pass through my mind. I certainly will support this imaginative proposal. I have great faith in the Minister of National Revenue and the Minister of Finance. I know they will choose personnel who will transform the words we are considering this afternoon into a magic which will bring new hope and happiness to my area.

Mr. Crossman: Mr. Chairman, it is a sad coincidence that on the very day we are discussing in this house a matter pertaining to the Atlantic region it should become my duty to pay homage to the memory of one who spent a lifetime of tireless effort for the improvement of the maritimes and of New Brunswick especially.

On Saturday, December 8 Mr. Allison Dysart passed from this life into eternity. The belief that we are to be rewarded in the next life in the same measure as we have served in this one will, no doubt, be of great consolation to his family and his myriad friends. His passing closes another era in the history of New Brunswick. He was a native son of Kent county, the county I am proud to represent in this house. He was premier of New Brunswick from 1935 to 1940, and will always be remembered in the province as the first to bring in legislation for the comfort of the aged. I know that hon. gentlemen on all sides will join me in extending to Mrs. Dysart and the family our sincere sympathy.

It is not my intention to retard in any way the progress of legislation which could be of assistance to the Atlantic region, for we all know that assistance of any kind has been long overdue. I am in accord with the suggestions of some of the hon. members who have spoken that we should let the past rest in peace and look to the future, but it is inevitable that we take a good look at the present, also, and what we see in the maritimes is not so encouraging. Thank God we have in the Atlantic provinces a people who are hardy and industrious and who have an inexhaustible reserve of initiative in surmounting the obstacles in the way of making what we call a bare living. I am referring to the farmers and fishermen who make up a big part of our population of the maritimes. These are the people who work from daylight to dark to bring up and educate their families, and they are doing a herculean job of it considering the disadvantages they encounter.

As one who knows, Mr. Chairman, I say that the fishermen have to expose thousands of dollars worth of equipment and gear to the elements, not to mention their own lives, in order to eke out a living from the sea. Not infrequently they leave orphans and widows behind. We know that an indemnity insurance exists, with respect to boats and lobster traps, but such provisions as these do not cover the loss suffered by widows and orphans or comfort them in their distress. Another thing we must realize is this. It is extremely hard to persuade a man to pay insurance premiums when he is hard pressed for money needed by his own family.

One could go on and on when speaking of matters which concern the fishing industry, the condition of some wharves, the necessity for dredging channels to improve the fishing and shipping industries in the maritimes, and so on. When we note that the value of the lobster fishing alone to the Atlantic region is in the vicinity of $15 million a year, hon. members can realize how important the fishing industry is to this whole area.

It is a well known fact that if the population of the maritimes were larger the individual burden of taxation would be lighter. The construction and maintenance of highways in the rural areas, of which the Atlantic region is mostly comprised, costs as much per mile as it does in a thickly populated area. The same applies to all other public services. We must face the fact that our people, anxious to equip their children for the future, must see that they get an education. The cost of schools and their staffing in rural areas puts a tremendous load on the municipalities which, in turn, must tax the farm properties to a point which makes it almost impossible for the farmers to survive. Some move away, and the additional burden falls on those who remain.

Until a few years ago the farmers were not too greatly affected by the situation, for they could always rely on income from pulpwood cut on their wood lots during the slack season. This furnished them with a ready source of cash, but unfortunately this market is no longer available. It is discouraging to reflect that something which is absolutely essential if our youth are to be prepared for the future is indirectly the cause of many of them having to migrate to the industrialized sections of upper Canada. The maritime provinces, the birthplace of confederation, made many sacrifices to make Canada a nation and are still contributing royally of their most cherished potential, their youth.

This is the situation which exists in most of the rural parts of the maritimes. What is needed to stimulate the economy and relieve unemployment is direct action on the part of this government by devoting a larger share of the capital expenditures to the construction of public works and harbours in the region, and by finding ways and means of lightening the tax load at the municipal level. If this were done the Atlantic development board would have time to develop long term measures toward a stable and prosperous economy in the region.

May I suggest that if this government had paid more attention to the requests and advice of our Atlantic premiers we would be well on our way. I think in all fairness we deserve more than a board which is to function in an advisory capacity only, based in importance on a maritime standard of remuneration.

Mr. Stewart: I want to say initially that I agree wholeheartedly with the comments of the hon. member for Halifax—the taller member for Halifax—in what he said about the development of the old fortress of Louisburg. My hope is that this will be a great and continuing tourist attraction. As the hon. member knows, we have many such sites in the Atlantic provinces to which tourists are coming in increasing numbers, and anything that this or any other government can do to make these sites more attractive is to be commended.

On Friday the Minister of National Revenue referred to the $3,000 proposed as an honorarium for the chairman of the Atlantic development board as a ridiculous figure, and announced his intention to move an amendment to change it. Mr. Chairman, this is an important point. The bill which is before us came to this house as a carefully considered piece of legislation. We may be sure that the minister weighed every provision and every phrase with the utmost care. In doing so he approved the figure of $3,000 as an appropriate honorarium for the chairman of this board.

I suggest that this figure is important to this committee, because it gives us a good idea of the government's opinion of the work to be done by the Atlantic development board. This board is not to be very active. It is presumably, to meet three or four times a year, and the government is fixing an honorarium commensurate with the activities of the board. Similarly, in fixing honoraria for the other members the government is giving due attention to its view of how active this board is to be, for it has assigned to those other members no remuneration whatsoever.

Now, sir, the minister has seen that this figure of $3,000 discloses the true nature of this board. Immediately he tries to becloud the fact with candour. He comes to this committee and says that this figure, of course, is "ridiculous." Moreover, by suggesting that the honorarium will be raised he now falls into inconsistency, for he has not yet proposed any honoraria whatsoever for the other members of the board. I do not know just how much the minister means to imply by his word "ridiculous", but if the chairman is to receive some such figure as $10,000 or $12,000, surely the other four members ought to receive payment also.

Last Thursday and Friday we were exhorted by the minister to be enthusiastic. I think only the hon. member for Queens-Lunenburg displayed what one might consider the proper degree of joy and thankfulness for this proposed legislation. Not even the hon. member for Halifax, in his balanced remarks just now concluded, came up to the level that the minister suggested.

We on this side, sir, believe that the minister is quite sincere in his zeal for this bill, yet I can assure you that in our expressions of disappointment we are equally sincere. This bill creates a part time board which is to study certain matters and advise an unspecified minister. Evidently the explanation of the misunderstanding is that our expectations were very different from the expectations of the minister. Our expectations were far higher than his. We expected more from this government than even he did.

As any member of this committee who has had any special reason to be interested in programs for surplus labour areas knows, in certain European countries such as Great Britain, West Germany, France, Belgium, Denmark, Sweden and Italy there are under way important programs dealing with the problem of surplus labour areas. Four different kinds of regional development tactics or devices have been employed; loans, grants, tax incentives and government assistance in site improvement and plant construction. Of these four the first two, loans and grants, have been used most frequently and are apparently by far the most successful. Loans and grants are often used to supplement each other. A company will be given a loan at a very low interest rate for part of its capital needs. For example, in Belgium the interest rate is geared to the acceleration or deceleration of the national economy, so that the interest rate in a period of depression might be as low as 1 per cent. The other two devices, tax incentives and site improvements, have not been used so extensively. Indeed, only Great Britain and Belgium have used site improvement and plant construction to any considerable extent.

Now, sir, knowing that these methods have been tried in other countries, and knowing that a great deal of thought has been given in the United States to this matter of surplus labour areas, we had hoped that this government would come to this house, and eventually to this committee, with an elaborated program for the Atlantic provinces. However, we have not had such a program put before us, and I wish to assure the minister through you, sir, that the disappointment which we express is entirely genuine.

A fifth device has been mooted. I almost hesitate to mention it; I do not wish to arouse some members opposite, because I have noticed that this is a very delicate point with them. I refer to labour migration assistance. Whenever one mentions labour migration assistance, or indeed whenever one mentions the name of the hon. member for Davenport, one can generally count on an eruption from certain seats on the other side of the house. Unfortunately no one will rise to that bait now.

You may recall, sir, that in the report of the Gordon commission there is a suggestion on pages 412 and 413 that if various methods for dealing with labour surplus are not effective, then the government is to intervene to assist people in moving to towns and places where they may obtain employment. After a great deal of exclamation from campaign orators and from the government benches in this house, the government has finally decided that Mr. Gordon may have been correct after all. So we now find a bill before this house, Bill No. C-83, respecting industrial change and manpower adjustment, which provides that the minister may make an agreement—> —to provide for the payment by Canada of a labour mobility incentive consisting of a contribution in respect of the cost incurred by such province, person or both, as the case may be, for the transportation of workers and their dependants to an area in Canada where employment is available.

The ultimate conversion of the government to the view expressed earlier by the hon. member for Davenport has been commented on in the press. I have in my hand an editorial from the Moncton Transcript which I think the committee will find entertaining. One paragraph says:

> The introduction of a "labour mobility" scheme to assist in the relocation of workers who become unemployed as a result of industrial changes is probably a worth while, but somewhat superficial attempt at tackling a problem which has particular application in the maritimes.
> But beyond this there is the fact that the Progressive Conservatives, who are introducing the new legislation, were the party who criticized most vigorously a similar suggestion in the report of the Gordon royal commission.

Then the editor goes on to divert himself with speculation concerning the joy that this particular bill must give to the heart of the hon. member for Davenport. So, sir, labour migration assistance is a fifth method that has at times been used. It has not yet been used extensively. The principal country using it has been Sweden, but soon we will be able to add Canada to Sweden in this regard.

The minister has assured us that we should be happy with this board. Perhaps we should take him seriously, sir, for after all he knows more about the thinking of this government than we do. He knows more about how slowly it progresses in dealing with serious problems. If he comes to this committee and says, as he has, that this bill represents a great step forward in the thinking of the government, then I suggest we should believe what he says.

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Chairman, I merely want to clarify a remark I made in my earlier contribution. I misunderstood something that the hon. member for Vancouver East said and I should not like myself to be on record as suggesting that he has no interest in the maritime provinces. I regret that I made that statement.

(Translation):

Mr. Dumont: Mr. Chairman, I shall only say a few words to mention that this morning, I came across a large headline in the Evangeline, the newspaper from Moncton:

> Is the Atlantic board serious?

Indeed, after having heard the bombastic words and the numerous speeches made on the setting up of commissions and boards, we may wonder if those agencies are created to organize something which will merely be a subject for discussion or something which will bring adequate revenues in the Atlantic provinces.

I suggest that the journalists are right in asking whether the board is serious.

The member who had the floor before me just referred to the dilatoriness of government agencies. Well, I have discovered in the Glassco report that not very long ago, under the Liberal government, works had been provided for at Port-aux-Basques. Here is an example of a completely abnormal situation:

> In accordance with the terms of union of Newfoundland and Canada, a freight and passenger steamship service is maintained between North Sydney, Nova Scotia, and Port-aux-Basques, Newfoundland. The program was initiated in 1951 and called for the construction of a ferry and docks and terminal facilities in each province. Three separate agencies of government and several firms of consulting engineers participated in this work which, as a result of a series of costly errors, was not completed until 1959. The ferry, when built, could not be docked at the newly constructed facilities at Port-aux-Basques. The final solution, reached after calling in an experienced adviser from the United Kingdom, required extensive dredging and channel rectification. The total costs exceeded $20 million.

At that time, we saw the tremendous importance of those commissions. And, of course, once again the companies were the ones to benefit from that situation whereas the individual has not been favoured. When we ask the government to increase family allowances, we are told there is not enough money. Nevertheless, the Atlantic development board will submit its recommendations, and if we have no money, if we have deficits of $700 million, how shall we be able to consider seriously in this house the recommendations of those agencies?

I am not against the development board, but I would like to see it bring about results. I am afraid that this board, which we are now allowed to discuss, will be like the various boards set up under the Liberals and that it will take eight years before it can be of any real benefit.

(Text):

Mr. Carter: Mr. Chairman, the one concrete thing about this bill we have before us is that it provides that a minister is to be designated to deal with the board and that the minister may refer to the board from time to time certain specific projects for study and recommendation. I should like to take a few minutes now to draw to the minister's attention two or three specific projects which would be of tremendous benefit to the economy of my own riding and also to that of the province of Newfoundland.

[Mr. Dumont.]

The first project I wish to bring to the minister's attention is the development of a free port or transshipment port at Mortier bay. This is a dream that is 50 years old. Recently a company has been formed and I understand that surveys have been made not only by the company but by a departmental committee and that already in the files of the Department of Public Works or some other department, probably the Department of Transport, there is information indicating that Mortier bay is a strategically situated focal point along the world's trade routes. I understand that the studies and surveys that have been carried out prove that the harbour is very satisfactory, and apparently all that is needed to bring this project into being is to bring together the commercial interests involved in such a way that they can get started on the project.

If this project came into being it would be a tremendous development that would benefit not only Newfoundland but all of Canada because it envisages goods being brought into Mortier bay, processed there and shipped out to other parts of the world. As I said earlier, the strategic position of Mortier bay makes this project feasible. I also understand that it has the blessing of our friends from the prairie provinces because the Hudson bay route association is most interested in having more wheat shipped through Churchill and stored at Mortier bay for transshipment. As soon as the new board comes into being I would ask the minister to refer this specific project to them for immediate study.

The second project I would ask the minister to refer to the board is the development of hydroelectric power at bay d'Espoir which is in my own riding. At bay d'Espoir we are fortunate in having a potential of half a million horsepower which can be developed at tidewater and the consumption of only 70,000 horsepower is required to make the project commercially feasible. A few years ago the project came within a hair's breadth of being realized but it was found impossible to get the companies having an option for this amount of power together at the right time. By the time the last person was brought into the agreement the first person who had wanted power withdrew from the project because of not being able to wait any longer, and that is why the development did not take place.

There is no doubt that the development of this power at bay d'Espoir would transform the whole economy of my riding and would be of tremendous assistance to the economy of the whole province. I hope the minister will refer this project to the board at once.

The hon. member for Halifax mentioned earlier the restoration of the old fort at Louisburg. I would suggest to the minister the board study a similar project, namely the restoration and development of Castle Hill at Placentia which is the old historic French capital of my province. I would recommend also the study of similar sites in the province. Such developments could be of great benefit to our tourist industry.

In this connection, I would ask the minister to have a study made of the feasibility of finding a more suitable terminal for Canadian National Railways. As the minister is probably aware, the eastern terminal is at Argentia, which is a military base leased to the United States authorities for a period of 90 years. We have been told that a new ferry is to be built which will ply between the east coast of Newfoundland and North Sydney in Nova Scotia. The Newfoundland terminal will be located at Argentia. There are many reasons why this is an unsatisfactory place for the terminal, not only for this particular ferry but for the whole coastal service operated by the railway along the south coast. I know that representations have been made to the government indicating that there are other sites which are much better suited to this proposal. Since our tourist industry is becoming of such importance, and since it ties in with the development of the fort at Castle Hill, I would suggest further consideration be given to this matter. Since the government actually owns the railway service in Newfoundland and the railway management would do what the government wanted in this respect, I would suggest that the minister have this board look into this matter of finding a more suitable terminal.

Before I resume my seat, I should like to support the representations made by my colleague the hon. member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador in respect of the fishing industry which is still of major importance in my province and about which there is a new enthusiasm and a new effort being made to try to put it back on a sound footing. I think one of the main problems in connection with the fishing industry in the promotion of sales in various markets on the mainland. This is probably one other thing that can be looked into. I would remind the minister, too, that in all the years the Conservative party sat in opposition they were very strong proponents of a Canadian merchant fleet. I am one of those who believes that there is a place in our economy for a Canadian owned merchant fleet. This, too, I think is a project worthy of study by the development board.

Mr. McWilliam: Mr. Chairman, I know that the committee is anxious to get on with a clause by clause study of this measure. However, there are a few remarks I should like to make in connection with this interesting matter that is before us. I can assure you I will only take a very few minutes. Hon. members are familiar with the terms of the resolution, but I would remind them that the throne speech contained this paragraph:

> You will be asked to authorize the establishment of an Atlantic development board to advise on measures and projects that will promote the economic development of the Atlantic region of Canada.

The presentation of the resolution preceding Bill No. C-94 has been received with great fanfare in the daily press of the Atlantic region. Large type headlines on the front pages lauding this measure lead the public in the provinces by the Atlantic to believe it is a quick cure-all and to believe that all the economic ills of the area will be resolved forthwith. In this connection, it is realistic and responsible that a somewhat sober note should be injected into the public's mind. They should be reminded that great things will not be accomplished overnight. However, if this legislation does accomplish anything it would be to hold out the hope that eventually the situation will be faced and that improvements will follow. I think this is something the people of the maritime provinces will receive with rightful anticipation after many, many years, and they will hope that finally something will be done about their problems.

This Bill No. C-94 seeks only to set up a board which will provide the government with suggested projects for the improvement of the economy of the area. One might well ask, is this board so vitally needed as the public is being led to believe? The projects that are generally felt to be necessary to bring about a stable economy in the Atlantic provinces do not need to be related to the government or to the people in the maritime provinces by a board established under this bill. The necessary action to bring about improvement in the Atlantic economy can be taken by the government now. There is an abundance of data available compiled by APEC and other groups that can be used to lay the foundation for government action. This data has been available since APEC first started to function. What will a board comprised of a $3,000 a year chairman and five non-indemnified members produce that has not already been produced?

I noted what the minister said on Friday, that the amount of $3,000 was ridiculous and would be bettered, but he did not say by what amount. However, I believe that when you establish a board with a chairman receiving an indemnity of $3,000 a year, it reveals the fact the government itself is not putting too much confidence in this board. Perhaps, however, the government feels someone who is not concerned about the remuneration will offer his services. The time required to set up this board and for the board to review the data already compiled will further delay government action on the Chignecto complex, the Northumberland strait causeway, the coal mining and fishing industries as well as other phases of the Atlantic economy. These areas require action now, action which only the government can take because of the expenditure of public funds required. What is needed is direct action to provide the public funds with which to commence some of these vital projects and improvements. Following that there can be a planned approach to the development of other projects in order to bring about improvements that are the inherent rights of the people of the Atlantic provinces.

We recognize that Bill C-94 will be approved and passed, but the people of the Atlantic provinces will have to wait to see what benefits will follow the setting up of this board. Personally I sincerely hope and trust that the benefits will accrue without undue delay.

As to the personnel of the board, it is suggested that it should be representative of all the Atlantic provinces and that its members will be fully qualified to advise in those fields in which our economy is lacking. Leadership by government is a most essential factor in achieving the desired results and this leadership should not be delegated to any board or commission. When suggestions or advice are sought by the government, then no delay should be tolerated in reaching decisions.

I am sure I express the hopes and desires of all people in the Atlantic provinces, and of other peoples in the confederation family, when I say there is a sound expectation that the basic economic problems of the area will at last be acted upon and their solution undertaken without further delay. No matter what the political aspects might be, it is not so important who solves these problems or how they are solved, but it is vitally important that their solutions be expedited in order to bring about equal partnership among all regions of Canada.

Hon. members who have already taken part in this debate have told of certain requirements which they feel are necessary in their individual constituencies. They have brought them to the attention of the minister, who in turn will bring them to the attention of the new board when it is constituted. In this regard I only want to mention one thing in particular with respect to the constituency of Northumberland-Miramichi.

I would ask the minister to bring to the attention of the board something that has been under study for some time past, and that is the deepening of the channel of the Miramichi river and the improvement of harbour facilities at the ports of Chatham and Newcastle. As a native maritimer I sincerely hope and trust that at long last we shall get something under way to bring about these things we need so vitally, and I am sure that the minister, who is also a native maritimer, will do his utmost to see that the desired end is achieved. I am one of those who believe that, irrespective of what a government does, it should be commended for those things that are beneficial.

In conclusion I wish to join with my colleague from Kent in expressing regret at the death of Judge Dysart, a former premier of the province of New Brunswick. I also join with him in extending condolences to the family of this great New Brunswicker who has passed on to his just reward after serving his province so well for so many years.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Chairman, I listened with great interest to my hon. friend from Burin-Burgeo, as I did likewise to the speech of the hon. member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Both excellent speeches.

Mr. McGrath: Both excellent speeches, as the hon. member for Essex East has interjected, and I would like to say a few words in support of the arguments advanced by my two colleagues from Newfoundland because I believe that in their own way, and in a very good and sensible way, they advanced very strong arguments in favour of the establishment of the Atlantic development board.

In his speech the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo mentioned two projects that he commended to the minister and asked that they be studied by the board, and I would like to refer to them briefly. He mentioned the establishment of a free port at Mortier bay. This is a project that has been under active promotion for the last several years. It has been studied by various agencies and its importance to the economy of Newfoundland and the Atlantic provinces generally cannot be underestimated. Here is where this new board could really do something worth while in undertaking a study of a project such as this and, at the same time, assimilating and co-ordinating the studies and promotions that have gone on before in connection with it. This project has been mentioned in the house on numerous occasions and I hope that the board, when it is set up, will give active study to the establishment of a free port in Newfoundland which is, as I say, of vital importance not only to that province but to all the Atlantic provinces.

The hon. member for Burin-Burgeo also referred to the development of hydro power at bay d'Espoir, on the south coast of Newfoundland, and I believe these two projects are related. One is almost dependant on the other. If a free port is established at Mortier bay I believe it will mean the influx of small industries, the establishment of substantial storage facilities, elevators and so on, which would create a demand for additional hydro power that could be supplied by the development of hydro at bay d'Espoir. Then too, with the new techniques for the transmission of hydro power, I believe the development of bay d'Espoir holds tremendous possibilities.

The hon. member also referred to tourism, to the present terminal for the C.N.R. at Argentia, and to the use of this terminal as a terminal for the proposed new ferry which will operate between eastern Newfoundland and the mainland of Nova Scotia. I support the hon. member in these remarks because I believe that, before it is finally decided that Argentia should be the terminal for this all important ferry, further studies should be undertaken, and I think reference should be made to the board to make sure that the Newfoundland terminal for the ferry will be a maximum benefit to the promotion of the tourist industry in our province. I think the hon. gentleman will forgive me for saying the board should certainly give consideration to the advisability of having the eastern terminal closer to the city of St. John's and the concentration of population.

Speaking of tourism I believe the board can provide a tremendous service in co-ordinating efforts of various agencies such as the governments of the provinces, municipal governments, boards of trade and chambers of commerce, in addition to APEC, towards the general promotion of tourism and the promotion of specific projects that would be incentives to tourism. I believe there is a tremendous job to be done here, especially in my own province, and the greatest need is the need of coordination. Everyone seems to be going off in different directions and somebody must coordinate the efforts of all because tourism is very important to the three maritime provinces and to the province of Newfoundland where it holds tremendous possibilities.

In relation to tourism the hon. member referred to historic sites and the development of Louisburg in Cape Breton, and he spoke of the need for similar undertakings in the province of Newfoundland where we have many major historic sites. Among the historic sites to which he referred was Castle Hill in Placentia, the historic French capital of Newfoundland. I hope the board will undertake an active consideration of the advisability of developing this site and will recommend to the government that this type of site be developed. Certainly, as I said, not the least of such sites is the one located in Placentia.

My hon. friend from Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador referred in his speech to the fishing industry and the service the board could provide in this particular area. This is a very important area. I am pleased to say the government of Newfoundland has of late been active in this regard. They called a convention of trades people, merchants, fishermen and like-minded people with a view to their coming up with recommendations to the government of the province toward the formation of a new policy on fisheries. The importance of the fisheries to the Atlantic coast of Canada is of course of tremendous significance. I feel that here is certainly an area where the board can really justify its existence by co-ordinating the efforts of various agencies, recommending projects to the government that would be of encouragement to the fishing industry, exploring markets for our fish produce, and of course looking for new markets, ways of improving those markets, and so on.

All these projects—and of course one could go on and name many others—are of tremendous importance to the general development of the Atlantic provinces. But I feel that what is of real importance is the fact that at long last we are about to set up a board which will give real meaning to the development of these various projects and will undertake to work with the very competent Minister of National Revenue, the minister from New Brunswick. I am sure that at long last some of these projects which have been talked about for many years now have a better chance of materializing because we are about to set up this Atlantic development board.

Mr. Batten: Mr. Chairman, I know there has been a good deal of debate on the first item of this bill and I will not delay the committee unduly, but I would like to indicate my support for this proposed board. I know that the board is going to be advisory in nature. In our part of Canada we have the Atlantic provinces economic council. This council has done a good deal of commendable research. It has been able to suggest topics that are important to the maritime and Atlantic provinces and I think at times they have indicated the methods which should be adopted if these ideas are to be brought to fruition.

Perhaps one of the difficulties of the Atlantic provinces economic council is that there has been no vehicle whereby the ideas the council may have can be transmitted to the inner circle of government. Perhaps this board we are proposing will be the vehicle that will be able to do that; perhaps it will be sufficient to do the job that is required to be done. Personally I would like to see this board composed of members who are more firmly committed to the task in hand and with a little bit more executive authority than its members are given in this bill. However, when a body of men such as will compose this board turn their attention to the task that has to be accomplished in the Atlantic provinces I hope they will remember that doing what needs to be done in this area is not always a matter of doing something new. It may indeed in large part amount to improving what is already being done. I think there are many things going on in the Atlantic provinces at the moment that are not being conducted in a way that gives the most to the economy of that part of Canada. I hope this board will be able to make suggestions to various divisions of the economy so that these things that are being done will be done more effectively, not only for the people who are directly concerned but also for the area as a whole.

In the constituency from which I come we have a problem to which I hope the board will give serious attention. In 1941-42, during the early years of the second world war, the Americans came to the west coast of Newfoundland and there set up a tremendous air force base. Over a period of 15 or 20 years there was a great deal of construction work carried out there. It was obvious that while this large amount of construction work was going ahead men were going to be drawn from the fishing industry, from the farming industry and other small industries and would go into the construction field where good wages were to be earned. This was the position for a considerable length of time. However, it must have been obvious to all concerned that the time would come when this construction had to cease and the United States base would settle down to normal operations. We have now, on the west coast of Newfoundland, reached that position.

It is very easy, if a fisherman decides he is going to move from the fishing industry into some other type of work, for him to haul his boat up on the beach, lock up his nets and gear in a shed and move on. As I say, it is very easy to do that; but when the time comes for him to move back into the fishing industry the transformation is not so easy. Here in this section of Newfoundland—and I am referring particularly to the Port-au-Port peninsula—we have hundreds of men who left the fishing industry 20 years ago and worked on the construction of the base at Harmon field. Now that construction has finished and they have to go back to the fishing industry. The going back is rather difficult. To begin with, they do not have the money to set themselves up as individual fishermen. Then, of course, due to the fact that for a number of years there has not been as large a number of fishermen as there might have been, we do not have the fish firms set up there as they have in other parts of Newfoundland or indeed in other parts of Nova Scotia. Here is one problem of labour movement to which I hope this board will pay very serious attention.

While I am referring to the fishing industry, Mr. Chairman, I hope too that this board will pay particular attention to the northern part of Newfoundland. This is a section of Newfoundland where there is almost no industry other than fishing. A few years ago there was considerable employment in forestry—in the logging industry. Employment opportunities in this area have decreased, however, and the result is that here we have one of the few areas in Canada where men make approximately 100 per cent of their total income from fishing. I hope this board will pay particular attention to the problems these men encounter; some of them are peculiar to this particular region.

I believe there is a good deal which could be done in agriculture. Newfoundland is not agricultural country and I suggest it will never be an agricultural province in the sense that other parts of Canada are. Nevertheless, I think it is possible for Newfoundland to provide for itself larger amounts of agricultural products than it is doing now—products of the kind which are normally brought in at the present time from other parts of Canada or other parts of the world. On the west coast of Newfoundland there is a good deal of agriculture carried on mostly in the domain of small vegetables. In the last year or two we have been faced with a difficult problem there in the control of insects. How we are going to overcome this seems beyond the farmer and there is a real need for some expert assistance. The minister is familiar with the difficulty we encounter in the control of insects and forestry. That, of course, affects many more people. Nevertheless, the control of insects in the Robinson's area and the Codroy valley will require a good deal of research.

I do not believe any province such as Newfoundland is going to get very far with economic development until proper means of transportation are provided. Of the approximately 600 miles of trans-Canada highway in Newfoundland, almost 200 are in my own constituency. When we talk about the tourist industry these days we are talking, I think, about people who want to travel from one part of Canada to another by car. People like to come into an area and drive by car over roads which provide comfortable travelling—roads which enable them, too, to go from one place to another in as short a time as possible. One of the real problems in Newfoundland is the inability to complete the trans-Canada highway at an early date. I am one of those who believe—I said this when I was on the other side of the house, I have said it here, and now I say it again —that when the federal government of Canada decided to build the trans-Canada highway they should have decided, by agreement with the provinces, to build that highway from the Atlantic to the Pacific, to pay for it and maintain it. I think that is what should have been done. I do not think we are too far from the point when we shall be facing a real problem in the maintenance of the trans-Canada highway. Anyway, had the course I advocated been followed I suppose we would not have the trouble we are encountering in Newfoundland at the present time.

It is all very well to talk about the tourist industry in Newfoundland. I believe we have the potential for a great tourist industry. But if people wish to travel by car we have, first of all, to get them on to the island. At the moment there is only one ferry taking cars to the island, though a few cars can come by other boats. And when they get there they have to travel over roads that are not paved. So I would say to the minister that one of the problems which this board should consider in all seriousness is the question of being able to provide for the province of Newfoundland the same road transport facilities as are provided in most of the other provinces. I drive my own car from Corner Brook to Ottawa, sometimes more than once a year, and I have the opportunity to use the trans-Canada highway in some of the other provinces. I do hope the time is not too far distant when I shall have the privilege of driving over roads in Newfoundland which are paved as well as they are in the minister's own province.

Power development is another necessity if we are to promote the establishment of industry and particularly of small industries which, I think, are important to a province such as ours. I do not think we need a very large number of giant sized industries right across Canada. I think the background of the economy is provided by a large number of smaller businesses employing a few men here, a few there, and so on. But one of the prerequisites to such a development is electric power readily available at a low price. I was glad to hear the comments of my hon. friend from Burin-Burgeo and also from the hon. member for St. John's East who mentioned the development of power on the south coast of Newfoundland. There is, indeed, considerable power potential there to be developed and I think this is a project to which the board might well give serious and early attention.

I should like to say a word on vocational training, as it relates to this subject, but since we shall have an opportunity to discuss this matter on another bill which is before the house I shall refrain from speaking at any length at the moment. However, I believe that if industries of various types are to be developed, or if we are to expand the industries which are already operating in the province, we shall have to provide the particular types of training which are so important. In Ontario and in western Canada generally a good deal of technical training has been provided, I believe, for those who work on farms. We, in Newfoundland, need training of this type. Our fishermen will need a special type of training if they are going to earn a living, not as their fathers did, but as fishermen who must operate in modern times. I do hope the board will take an interest in these vocational training programs when it is considering the economic problems of Newfoundland even though other government agencies may be dealing more directly with this particular subject. I have some ideas on vocational training, which is closely allied to my own profession. I do not intend to state them now but I will take advantage of the opportunity which will arise later to say what I think should be done; particularly in the eastern part of Canada.

Mr. Granger: I hope I shall be forgiven, Mr. Chairman, for taking a few more minutes, but I shall try to be brief. I should like to express appreciation of the remarks made by the hon. member for St. John's East, the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo and the hon. member for Humber-St. George's, all of whom referred to matters which are of great interest to the province from which I come.

Tourism is extremely important to us. I doubt very much if most of us can visualize the tremendous potential which it has. No doubt it would be difficult for any of us to speak objectively of the attractions of our own provinces, but suffice it to say that when we assert that Newfoundland offers delightful attractions we are only quoting what so many visitors have told us. But in order for tourism to be the industry which it can be, it is of overwhelming importance that the trans-Canada highway be completed in Newfoundland. The high cost of building this road is placing a very great strain on the government of Newfoundland, and I would stress the importance of the completion of the trans-Canada highway in the Atlantic provinces by the federal government. It is, as I say, of tremendous importance, and it is impossible to overstress this. I would hope that the new board will give serious attention to the matter.

I might also mention in connection with historic sites the interesting discoveries which have been made in L'Anse aux Meadows in northern Newfoundland. The ruins which have been excavated over the past two years seem to prove that there was a Viking settlement at L'Anse aux Meadows on the northern tip of the great northern peninsula a thousand years ago. I am no authority on this, but I am told that the authenticity of these ruins has been all but proven. I really do not know whether those who are competent to judge have handed down a final decision, but my latest information is that the ruins seem to be authentic. That area will soon be connected by road. There is a long road up the coast of Newfoundland to within a comparatively few miles of this area. I would hope that the board would pay particular attention to these ruins, where a thousand years ago there was a settlement of Vikings who had sailed across the Atlantic to discover this great nation of Canada which is ours today.

Then the question of trade was mentioned by the hon. member for St. John's East. I believe he referred to marketing. There again I would hope that the board would look carefully into the matter of properly exploiting the markets of the world for the fishery products of the Atlantic provinces, in order to give that proper emphasis to pushing our trade so that a really vigorous policy could be pursued and our fishery products sold in great quantity in the world's markets. May I conclude my few remarks, Mr. Chairman, by hoping that the Atlantic economic development board will provide an instrument of break-through for the hopes and the needs of the people of the Atlantic provinces.

Mr. Laing: Mr. Chairman, I am quite certain that the minister and a great many other members will be somewhat surprised that I should rise to say a few words on this bill, but I do so for a number of reasons. First of all, I think that a bill which is designed to improve the economic situation of a part of our great country deserves the support of all areas of the country. Second, no part of Canada has benefited more from the maritimes, or owes more to the maritimes, than my native province of British Columbia. It seems to me that a larger group of maritimers went to our province than from any other part of Canada. Certain it is that our merchandising families, our manufacturing plants, and a great proportion of the economic background of British Columbia we owe to the maritimes.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): What about the politicians?

Mr. Laing: I was going to deal with them in just a moment. I will deal first with the merchants and the manufacturers who went to British Columbia. Here I am reminded of the story of the five families who first went to Hawaii, of whom it was said that they went there to do good, and instead they did well. I can assure the members in this house that that is the situation with respect to the maritimers who have gone to the province of British Columbia. They have done well. As the minister pointed out, some of them have gone into politics. As a matter of fact, a great number of them have gone into politics. Of the last nine premiers of our province, no less than four were born in the maritimes. Of the present incumbent, I might say that some of us in the province of British Columbia would like to negotiate a trade, and I rather think that we would trade him for a sack of good New Brunswick potatoes. I think it is somewhat noteworthy that the government seems to be apprised of this situation in that, they have made a great sacrifice lately in order to see that something like that is brought about. However, I want to say in addition that out of the four members of my party who were returned in the June 18 election, one of them, or one quarter, was a maritimer.

So that we owe a tremendous debt of gratitude to the maritimes because of the flow of people from those provinces to ours. I would say to the minister that I rather think it is the loss of trained people from the historic universities and seats of learning in those great provinces to the United States, or to upper Canada, or to western Canada, that is one of the prime problems in the history of the maritimes. However, due to the development of our country, policies have had to be followed in the interests of most Canadians which have not been advantageous to the maritimes, and we realize that. If we go into the history of recent years and into the subsidies which have been granted, we find that the Maritime Freight Rates Act costs about $14 million per year. I think there are seven, eight or nine million dollars worth of subsidies with regard to transportation on the waterways.

I say to the minister that we contributors from the western part of Canada and from British Columbia are quite content to assume our portion of that responsibility in respect of the bill he has brought forward at this time. I know he will not think me unkind if I say of the bill that it is nothing more than a skeleton or a letter of intent upon which he and his government have to build in the future. I hope that those of us from other parts of Canada who have made a contribution by way of taxation to the revival, the redevelopment and the rejuvenation of the maritimes might be pardoned if we are among those who in the future will be more intent upon seeing how far the minister has gone in building a muscle and a body to this skeleton which he has presented today to this house. But certainly out of the debt we owe to the maritimes we wish him and this piece of legislation well; and we propose to him that if necessary he goes on and builds it into something far greater than would appear to the people who read the bill today.

Clause 1 agreed to.

Mr. Pickersgill: Five o'clock.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. It being five o'clock, it is my duty to leave the chair in order for the house to proceed with the consideration of private members' business, pursuant to section 3 of standing order 15.

Progress reported.

Mr. Speaker: It being five o'clock, the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely notices of motion as appear on page 28.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

PROVISION FOR SCIENTIFIC AND TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE ABROAD

Mr. Thomas R. Berger (Vancouver-Burrard) moved:

That, in the opinion of this house, the government should give consideration to the advisability of establishing a Canadian youth service to enable qualified young Canadians to go abroad to provide scientific, technical, humanitarian and cultural assistance to peoples requiring such assistance and in particular:

(1) To enroll volunteers in the said service qualified in scientific, professional and technical fields;

(2) To provide for the training of volunteers in the said service;

(3) To provide for the placement of volunteers in countries requesting such volunteers;

(4) To provide for living allowances for volunteers while abroad and for payment of gratuities upon termination of their service.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this resolution is to establish a Canadian youth service to enable young Canadians to go abroad to help people in the underdeveloped countries to help themselves. A Canadian youth service would give to young Canadians an opportunity to assist people in the underdeveloped countries to wipe out poverty, ignorance and disease. Teachers, doctors, nurses, engineers, agrologists—young Canadians with professional qualifications and technical qualifications, would be enabled to go abroad and participate in what I believe is the greatest task facing the people of the world in the second half of the twentieth century, the task of raising the standard of living of the have-not countries in those parts of the world that do not enjoy the standard of living that the western countries enjoy, countries whose people live on a bare subsistence or worse than that.

I believe that young Canadians are tired of the sterile invective of the cold war. I believe they want to undertake a job that may take years, even decades, but a job that I believe has to be done. I think most members of this house would agree that it has to be done because in my opinion the people of Canada recognize a responsibility that must be discharged, a responsibility for the welfare of people all over the world, a responsibility to do whatever lies in our power to bring the standard of living of people in the underdeveloped countries up to the standard of living that is enjoyed by the people of Canada and in the other countries of the western world. I should like to repeat what President Kennedy said on the occasion of his inaugural address because I think he expressed in much better language the aspiration I have tried to express. He said:

To those peoples in the huts and villages of half the globe struggling to break the bonds of mass misery, we pledge our best efforts to help them help themselves, for whatever period is required—not because the communists are doing it, not because we seek their votes, but because it is right. If the free society cannot help the many who are poor, it can never save the few who are rich.

We have to face the fact that in probably two thirds of the countries of the world people go to bed hungry every night. The people of these countries live without adequate shelter. They do not have the same opportunities that we in this country and in the other countries of the western world have. They can expect to die at a much earlier age than people in Canada. We have to do something about this situation.

The governments we have had have undertaken foreign aid programs, but in my view the government of this country in every case has undertaken only a stunted program of foreign aid. We have never had in Canada a government with the imagination or the will to undertake an adequate program of foreign aid, a program commensurate with the capabilities of the people of Canada—the capabilities that this country has in terms of resources and manpower. This is the record, and this sorry record culminated in the decision of the present government two months ago to curtail the Colombo plan program by $8,500,000.

The United States has recognized that qualified young people have a special opportunity and are in many ways perhaps best suited to help the people in underdeveloped countries to help themselves. President Kennedy introduced legislation to establish what has become known as the peace corps, but it is important for members of the house to understand that the United States is not the only country which has undertaken a program involving the sending of young people abroad to the underdeveloped countries. Such programs have been undertaken by the Netherlands, Norway, West Germany and Belgium. In fact, the Belgian program is almost half the size of the peace corps program of the United States.

It seems to me that there is a special role for Canada to play here because the peace corps program undertaken by the United States has been determined to some extent by the exigencies of the cold war and by the special relationship which the United States has with some countries of the world. For instance, more than one quarter of the peace corps volunteers sent abroad by the United States have gone to the Philippines. At the same time the United States has sent no volunteers at all to Indonesia. It seems to me that Canada has a special role to play here. After all, Canada is bicultural. Canada is equipped to send volunteers abroad who can speak English, volunteers who can speak French and volunteers who are bilingual, speaking both languages. Because Canada has not succumbed entirely to the cold war paranoia it seems to me that young Canadians going abroad would have a much greater opportunity to help the people in underdeveloped countries than the peace corps volunteers have perhaps had, because surely the people in these countries would realize that Canadians would have no ideological axe to grind and that they were there simply to help them and not to serve any ulterior purpose.

There is no question about the need in underdeveloped countries. A survey conducted by Mr. Lewis Perinbaum, who last year was executive secretary of the Canadian universities service overseas, found that teachers were required in practically every underdeveloped country of Africa and Asia. In fact, half of the volunteers sent abroad by the peace corps have been teachers. Doctors, nurses and engineers are needed everywhere. Agrologists are needed in most of the countries of Africa and Asia.

There is another important category of people required in these countries, that category of people described as middle level manpower. At a conference on middle level manpower held in Puerto Rico last month, at which the Canadian government was represented, 41 countries discussed the problem of middle level manpower. Their report shows that it is not only people with professional qualifications who are required in the underdeveloped countries but people with trade skills and people equipped to teach trade skills, the kind of people who can assist in the every day tasks that we take for granted in this country, people qualified in the vocational and technical fields who can teach the people of the underdeveloped countries in these fields.

I believe that we would have to train young Canadians who were sent overseas to the underdeveloped countries in the language and the customs of the countries where they were going to work, if that were necessary. In most cases it would not really be necessary to teach them the language because Canadians are peculiarly equipped by reason of the bicultural and bilingual character of this country to go to practically every nation which requires assistance. English and French are the languages of most of the underdeveloped countries of Africa and Asia.

Young Canadians going abroad under these circumstances ought to work under local conditions. They ought to work side by side with local people and they ought to be paid by the government of this country wages or salaries equivalent to those being earned by the people with whom they are working. It seems to me that the term of their service ought to be, on the average, two years. This is the average term of service of the peace corps volunteers.

This would give to Canadians an opportunity to go abroad to assist in a high endeavour. They would return to Canada having acquired a much broader background with which to enter business, the professions or any other field of endeavour that they chose in Canada. We ought to provide that gratuities be paid to young Canadians who go abroad under these circumstances, which they would receive upon completion of their service.

I realize, Mr. Speaker, that the government is sending experts abroad to some of the underdeveloped countries. I complain that the expenditure of this government on its foreign aid program is inadequate, but I realize they are sending some experts abroad. I do not propose that young Canadians going abroad as members of a Canadian youth service would attempt to duplicate the functions of these experts. Young Canadians going abroad as members of Canadian youth services would not be experts qualified to supervise the construction of a dam in Pakistan. They would be young Canadians going abroad to teach the people of the underdeveloped countries the way to perform everyday tasks that we take for granted here. For example, such things as how properly to till the fields of Africa and Asia; how to run small outpost hospitals; how to speak the English language or the French language properly; how to become acquainted with the many skills that are required in any country if the standard of living is to be raised.

I think it would be remiss to discuss a proposal such as this, to establish a Canadian youth service, without mentioning the work that has been done in this field by the Canadian universities service overseas. The universities of this country and people connected with the universities, have undertaken various programs in the last few years to send young Canadians overseas. These programs were unified with the establishment of an organization called Canadian universities service overseas about a year ago. CUSO, as it has become known, has sent volunteers overseas for the last two years. Last year they sent 16 volunteers abroad, and this year they sent 70. The fact that young Canadians are interested in this work can be established, I think, by pointing out that despite the fact CUSO had sufficient funds to send only 70 volunteers abroad, they had applications from more than 200.

If the government established a Canadian youth service, there would be no necessity to do away with CUSO or any of the other programs that have been undertaken by universities and people connected with them. I believe that a Canadian youth service could work side by side with CUSO and other programs that have been undertaken. I would go farther than that and I would suggest that the government of this country ought to supply financial assistance to CUSO and other programs that have been undertaken by the universities. In the United Kingdom, the universities have undertaken programs which entailed sending young people abroad from that country, and the government of the United Kingdom has given financial assistance for that purpose.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have already suggested that a Canadian youth service would provide a great opportunity for young Canadians, an opportunity that most young Canadians do not have today. It would give them an opportunity to see other countries, to learn the customs of other countries, to acquire a knowledge of the world that I think most of us lack today. They would have the opportunity of discovering, first hand, the job that has to be done and to assist in doing that job.

It seems to me that Canada ought not to undertake a program such as this to enhance her prestige or in the pursuit of national vainglory, but rather because this is the sensible, logical thing to do in order to discharge an obligation that I suggest we in Canada have to the underdeveloped countries of the world. In talking about the job that the western countries face in assisting the people of the underdeveloped countries, Adlai Stevenson had this to say:

> But it must also be done because of a much profounder reason; for it is wrong to leave children to starve who could eat with our help, wrong to let youngsters die when medical skill can save them, wrong to leave men and women without shelter, wrong to accept for others, in the midst of our own abundance, the iron pains of degrading want.

We in this country have come to recognize that we have a responsibility in respect of the people who are within the borders of this country. We recognize an obligation to make sure that our fellow Canadians do not starve, that they have adequate shelter. Surely, we ought to recognize the fact that that responsibility extends beyond our national boundaries. Surely, we ought to recognize the fact that this is a world wide responsibility, that the brotherhood of man does not end at Newfoundland or at the west coast of British Columbia. I suggest that the best way Canadians can discharge this responsibility for raising the living standards of people all over the world is to give young Canadians an opportunity to help these people. I believe this resolution would do just that. It would enable young Canadians to participate in the great task of eliminating poverty, ignorance and disease all over the world. I urge all hon. members, Mr. Speaker, to give their support to this resolution.

Mr. Arthur Smith (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make one or two observations concerning not only the purpose of the measure before us but also the objective set out in the resolution by the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard (Mr. Berger). At the outset, let me say to him that I am not in disagreement with his purpose, which is indeed worth while. It is an objective that I believe most of us, if not all of us, would support. I propose to ask, in the few minutes that I intend to take, whether or not the hon. member could accomplish his purpose by this measure or whether we have already the facilities which might, in some way, provide exactly the same opportunity for young people to take part in the attempt to close the gap between the have and have-not nations of the world.

This resolution is designed basically on the very successful peace corps introduced by President Kennedy. It has been acknowledged, and I think it is generally appreciated, that while the peace corps has enjoyed some measure of success it has had certain shortcomings. Some of these are that when the scheme was first introduced these young people who went out to underdeveloped countries found they had to meet extreme hardship and in some instances were not mature enough to meet the problems which confronted them. Second, it was found some of them did not possess the qualifications or the training that was necessary in order to be of any real assistance, but when they returned to the United States they supplemented their rather academic studies by having a better understanding of the areas or countries they were visiting. The third point was that some of them psychologically were not suited for the work. It was found they were not mature enough and they did not have an understanding of some of the political and psychological problems existing in the areas to which they were sent.

However we can agree basically that the plan was successful, with perhaps a few shortcomings almost all of which have been corrected. My hon. friend suggests that we follow the same course, and before going into the details of his argument let me say I certainly wholeheartedly agree that the need for trying to close this gap between the have and have-not countries is most necessary. I hold the contention that all countries of the world should try to shift the emphasis of their aid programs from one of providing purely food, products or cash to one of improving the technical assistance they can provide so that we can help these people, who are less fortunate than ourselves, to help themselves.

I have some specific examples in mind. Just about a year ago I had the opportunity of visiting Europe, Africa and the Middle East, and in a desert in the Middle East I saw a doctor trying to treat some 550 youngsters in a clinic. The thought occurred to me that it would be a great help if one medical practitioner from Canada, perhaps as part of his post-graduate duties, were to go there and reduce the work of that Arab doctor by half. There would be great prestige for our country, in addition to the humanitarian advantages.

[Mr. Smith (Calgary South).]

I saw much the same situation in the Congo after the Belgians had left. Many of the people there had no understanding of how to work the everyday utilities and it would have been of the greatest help had the United Nations accepted Canada's suggestion to establish a world bank of civil servants who would go into undeveloped countries after they had attained their independence to help them carry on until such time as they could employ their own technicians.

I saw much the same thing in China; but the point I wish to make is that these people require fairly highly trained technical assistance and I question whether it would be enough to send them relatively untrained youngsters, in other words, to send a boy to do a man's job.

The hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard did not indicate the age requirement, the level of experience or the type of training which members of a youth service would be required to have. I have dealt for some years with members of youth organizations and have a great appreciation of the intelligence and ability of young people to acquire information quickly, but I would like to make the point very clear that before we embark on any program to provide technical skills for undeveloped countries we must make sure we do not send untrained young people into areas demanding qualified personnel for it would only discourage any future value of more highly trained people going into these same areas.

I think there is an area of compromise between what the hon. member has suggested and what I am about to propose, and that is that there is nothing wrong in having a group of young people out of universities taking part in Canada's present external aid program. We have already appointed a director and his first responsibility, as I recall it, is to make a survey of the talents within Canada that are surplus to our own domestic requirements, and to employ them in exactly the same manner and for the same purposes as the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard now suggests. I think one of the first duties of the external affairs committee should be to make an assessment of how far this survey has been completed, because we can provide a great many of the skills required. We have a surplus of geophysicists and geologists who should be made available, under a government sponsored program, to assist many areas of the world in finding out the extent of their own natural resources.

We could ask Canadian educational institutions to provide us with trained teachers, people mature enough to go out and assist in educational programs in many of the large refugee camps and in other areas which require improvement of their educational programs. We could also use other people from the technical trades, and here I would specifically suggest we call on the Canadian trade labour congress to assist us in developing a nucleus of these people to assist the technical trade arm of a Canadian sponsored program.

The one criticism, if it can be described as such, which can be made of the motion before us is that the program it envisages really is not ambitious enough and that it will not help the people who need help, in that it will not help them to develop their own resources. It will not help them improve their educational standards. I think it was described in terms that it would help them in everyday activities through the understanding of another language. That is of course important, but the people in these countries need help urgently in a great many other fields.

Therefore I say to the hon. member that while I would support the principle of his motion it seems to me it would be more efficient to make a further division in the external aid program of the government so that the universities, the trade labour congress and the Canadian medical profession could be called into conference to work out a program which would place greater emphasis on technical skills and making those skills available to less developed countries. Not for a moment am I taking away anything from the attributes of the young people of this country. I am merely suggesting that the magnitude of the problem must be realized by them and that they be trained to meet it.

It has been said many times that Canada has not fulfilled its responsibility in terms of foreign trade. In fact one hears various figures respecting our gross national product, or in terms of cash that it is said should represent the total amounts that we should contribute in this field to alleviate human misery. We all agree on the necessity for maintaining an active external aid program and I suggest that in the very near future we should increase the amount of moneys that are available for this purpose; but I hope it will not be done purely in cash or goods because often cash and goods are suspect. I am not speaking of Canada's contributions but of the contributions of one or two other countries.

Sometimes when these moneys and products are sent to undeveloped areas we are inclined to be a little suspicious that they do not always reach the people for whom they are destined. On the other hand it is my belief that if we provide technicians and tradesmen they will help close the gap much faster between the haves and the have-nots. They will help these people help themselves; and in the long run, while it is recognized that food and cash must still form part of our program, skilled tradesmen can help these people much more efficiently.

To my hon. friend who has moved this motion I say his purpose is sound but I wish he had been more ambitious. I wish he had tried to deal with the problem as it exists, and with the magnitude of it as it exists. I would suggest to him the machinery is already set up in Canada's external aid program under its director, Mr. Moran. He is a man with considerable experience who could really undertake the purpose of this motion, expand on it, and thus shift the emphasis in Canada's external aid program towards providing more technicians.

Those are the only remarks I wish to make, Mr. Speaker, with one exception. I do not think any of us need for a moment be ashamed of the contributions which this country makes in terms of mutual or external aid. I think it is recognized that we spend some $70 million a year basically in our bilateral program and through the Colombo plan. I suggest to hon. members of this house that this is not the true measurement of our external aid. We should look at the many contributions we make to the various funds and organizations within the United Nations. We should also look at the recent amendment to the export credit act extending from $200 million to $400 million the funds which are now available. I suggest also that we should look at the contribution we made recently through the world food bank. I suggest we should look at the Canadian resolutions, to which I have already referred, in an attempt to provide help to those countries which have only just recently obtained their independence. I refer to the help we have given in establishing a bank of civil servants and technicians. I suggest we should look at the contributions in a great many other fields, because the sum total of these represents more than 1 per cent of Canada's gross national product.

I believe that if one refers to any number of House of Commons papers this will be seen. The paper I have in front of me, reference No. 93 shows, if one looks at the appendix on the last page, that of the six agencies of the United Nations to which there are contributions and pledges for the voluntary special programs carried out by them, Canada is third, behind the United States and Great Britain. Having made this point, Mr. Speaker, I should like to see this program still further increased. I have also indicated that I should like to see whether there has been a shift in emphasis and I hope that when the external affairs committee sits we can see whether this shift in emphasis has already taken place.

Mr. D. S. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I would like to present my views on this motion, express my support for the principle enunciated by the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard (Mr. Berger) and congratulate him upon bringing forward this motion at this time. The more particular aspect of this question to which I would like to make reference is the work of the private Canadian agencies which are now engaged in this field and to which the hon. member made some reference in introducing his motion.

The present service, as the hon. member has pointed out, is provided by the Canadian universities service overseas, known as CUSO, which is itself an amalgamation and continuation of two previously existing organizations, the Canadian overseas volunteers and the Canadian voluntary commonwealth service. Before proceeding to the discussion of the work of these two agencies and their relation to this particular motion I would like to pay tribute to the efforts of the member for York Centre in the last parliament both for his advocacy for this in this house and his very extensive efforts outside this house in advancing this very worth-while cause.

Reference has already been made to the United States peace corps. In fact, in our north American idiom the term "peace corps" has come to describe all efforts of this kind whereby young people can go and render volunteer service and make available their talents to less developed nations. It should be pointed out, however, that in addition to the nations referred to by the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard, the initial credit for the idea can be given to a private group in Australia which in 1952 first developed this notion of having young Australians working abroad in areas where their talents were needed. What is more, Mr. Speaker, Canadians can take some credit from the fact that, as I mentioned, due to the efforts of the former member for York Centre the Canadian overseas volunteers preceded by at least three months the foundation of President Kennedy's peace corps. These Canadian voluntary organizations now have 80 Canadian students either overseas performing functions of this kind or about to go overseas. Of this number 52 are now overseas under the auspices of CUSO, 15 under the auspices of the Canadian overseas volunteers, and five under the auspices of the Canadian voluntary commonwealth service. There are eight more to go. It is noteworthy that the 20 sent overseas by the two originating organizations have had their efforts and expenses financed by private fund raising services within this country. What is more, of the CUSO students two have been financed by private funds. The remainder have been financed by the governments of the foreign countries to which they have been sent. The cost that arises in these particular programs is that of transporting the Canadian student who has been transferred from this country to the foreign site. To give an illustration, a return ticket to Africa costs $1,300. In addition the student must be submitted to a considerable program of orientation on the language of the country to which he is going, on the customs and the nature of the duties he will have to perform there. This in turn raises the administrative overhead, so that the Canadian overseas volunteers have calculated that approximately $2,000 per student is necessary in order to get him on site.

This brings us to a problem which has arisen with these Canadian organizations. The foreign countries to which students have been sent, due largely to currency difficulties, have had difficulty in finding the exchange necessary to pay the transportation to the site. This was distressingly illustrated by the experience of CUSO in this past academic year. In May, 1962 at the close of the academic year CUSO had no less than 200 volunteers prepared to go to sites overseas and acceptable to the organization. However, due to the difficulty in finding the means for transporting them considerable delay elapsed before they could be sent abroad and by September, due to this delay and the further uncertainties of their situation, nearly 110 of these students had dropped out. In other words this was a serious and very distressing loss of talent which could have been made available abroad.

While I support the general principle of the resolution my specific recommendation would be that the federal government should give assistance to this program by way of grants to the existing organizations. Second, I think the federal government to the greatest degree within its power should through its own facilities publicize both the availability of these services and the nature of the work that is done. The qualification which I would have regarding creating an independent governmental authority to administer this program is that I feel the universities should continue to be autonomous within this field and should administer the program. The university faculties and students are in a better position to judge the applicants coming forward, and what is more, by having it in the hands of the universities you take away any suggestion of government interference and control which in this country might tend to discourage private contribution to the fund, and the student in the foreign country may possibly have cast upon him the stigma of being a representative of the government.

I would suggest, further, that the program should be concentrated in a number of very practical specialties wherein the immediate use of and demand for these services is very great. These are the fields of engineering, agriculture, medicine, nursing and education. We in Canada have perhaps some difficulty in appreciating just how serious is the lack of these very basic facilities in other countries. Perhaps I can illustrate this by making reference to a letter written by John Andrews, a Canadian overseas volunteer. It was written from the site on which he was working in Ceylon. Mr. Andrews writes:

> My job has been mainly concerned with the next step, that of planning and arranging the construction of all the bridges and drainage culverts required as well as advising the workers with regard to any problems that they encounter.

It might be pointed out that Mr. Andrews is by professional training an engineer. He continues:

> It was on a planning and inspection visit to Deriyaya—about 40 miles inland, in quite hilly country—that I was able to best see the great importance of this work. At present, the sole connecting link with the main road for two villages of 700 people each and three small tea estates, is a very rough footpath about two and a half miles long. There are two native built bridges each about 30 feet across. The walking surface consists of three bamboo poles and there is a wire slung between two high trees on to which one must hold while crossing. Of course, the sway on these structures is very great and crossing is quite hazardous. In the rainy season the river often floods and washes the bridge away. At present all the produce from the estates, all goods for the villages and even people requiring hospital care must be transported on the shoulders of bearers along this rather hazardous route.

They will build—and have already built —two reinforced concrete bridges and all the necessary drainage culverts. The project, when completed, will reduce the costs of the estate products and also of articles required by the villagers. It will open up the area and allow an easier flow of ideas and methods to a formerly isolated region, with all the benefits which this will bring to them.

I suggest there are three reasons in particular why it is to the advantage of all of us in Canada to enhance programs of this kind. First, as those who are articulate in their approach to international affairs have pointed out in recent years, Canadians are welcome in underdeveloped nations because the stigma of imperialism attaches to them less than it does to citizens of some other nations. In addition, they are not identified so readily with one side or another in the cold war. Canadians are therefore in a better position to mingle with the population and are less likely to be regarded as government agents. The second reason is this: by encouraging young Canadians to mix with the foreign population we can strike a strong blow toward removing the stigma which attaches to the white man, a remaining legacy of the colonial period and one which is most difficult to remove. Third, by building up a category of young Canadians who have spent time in countries abroad on such projects as these we shall have, eventually, a group of people better capable of understanding the way of life in countries other than our own.

For all these reasons I suggest that Canadian organizations should be supported not only by government but by private sources. Therefore, while accepting the principle of the motion by the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard I would suggest that federal government assistance should be given to these existing organizations rather than that a separate peace corps should be established.

(Translation):

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Speaker, I will take only a few minutes of the time of the house to endorse, on behalf of the group I represent, the motion introduced by the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard (Mr. Berger).

In my opinion, the principle of the motion is excellent and completes other projects which are presently being carried out.

Thus, I know that the government itself is providing assistance to underdeveloped countries under the Colombo plan. However, I feel that this assistance, which costs us several tens of millions of dollars every year, is far from giving the results we have a right to expect.

To give only one example, recently, I had the opportunity of meeting a person who lived in those countries. Having stayed with various tribes and in various villages, that person was in a position to see the results of the assistance provided by different countries under the Colombo plan.

And he stated that money donated by the various countries to contribute to the development of those underdeveloped countries did not do much good because, in many instances, that money had been handed to those countries' administrators who used it only to increase their hold and their domination on their own people. In fact, they used it, in many instances, to build themselves palaces and to live in unheard of luxury.

On the other hand, he told me that the alms given to the missionaries of various faiths who are still in those countries, in Africa as well as in South America, really bring help to those peoples.

He told me that with a dollar those missionaries could get three or even four times more than could be expected from a dollar donated through the Colombo plan.

So, it is easily understood that if we could, as Canadians, step up our assistance to church organizations of various denominations existing in those countries, our contributions out of public funds to assist the people of those underdeveloped countries would yield much better results.

In the suggestion put forward by the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard, I note this. He is asking the government to set up an organization to provide for the training in various trades or occupations of young people who could be needed in those countries to set up industries and schools, to assist in hospitals and at all levels of administration or social organization.

I think that our youth, in many cases, would have that vocation that would make them more or less missionaries. Because after all, it is a missionary calling, even if it is not in actual fact a religious vocation, and there are many young people whose dream has been to go to underdeveloped countries to dedicate themselves to the service of humanity, to the service of the needy who, in those countries, have been waiting for our help all those years.

I think that Canada, by stepping up its contribution through the training of young people who would, for a certain number of years, offer their services for the economic and social development of those countries, would be doing a truly humane action, an action for peace. It could even become known as a peacemaker.

We already enjoy such a reputation, but we could strengthen it, it seems to me, by sending to those countries ambassadors who would show them that our economic philosophy, far from being like that of our opponents, is based on religious and humanitarian principles that we wish to spread among all the countries of the world.

Ever since many of its countries have freed themselves from colonialism, Africa has been on the horns of a dilemma. Those countries want to improve their situation, but they lack that middle class which is the backbone of our civilized nations. They only have a poor working class, totally ignorant, plus a few intellectuals, trained in European countries which have helped them to study at their universities, and who come back to their own people to put in practice what they have learned and what they believe to be for the good of the nation.

But we know that, unfortunately, to be without a middle class like the one we have in our countries does create economic problems. They lack the people with the skills required to stabilize their country's economy; they lack the men capable of taking over their economy to establish industrial plants and social organizations.

That is why I say that if Canada were to take advantage of the ideas advocated by the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard, it would be taking a significant step towards helping underdeveloped countries.

In my opinion, Canada, which has never been a colonial power, must go and repair on the spot the damage caused or left behind by colonial powers after they had gone.

We may not have any official commitment toward those countries, but we have at least some moral obligation and we should accept our responsibilities.

That is why, Mr. Speaker, I feel that no member of this house would object to the government spending a greater amount of our money so that our young people may go in underdeveloped countries to help them carry out their economic recovery.

Therefore, we readily endorse the motion introduced by the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard.

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I would welcome the opportunity of speaking on this motion for one hour, but I will of course not do so because under no circumstances will I talk this motion out. Therefore I will speak for only five minutes. I should like to say that four of us in this House of Commons had the opportunity and the privilege of spending some five weeks in a west African country. I wish, sir, that every member of this house could have had the same opportunity. Because if they had seen what we saw in travelling round a country the same size as British Columbia populated by 42 million people, they would without hesitation unanimously adopt the resolution now before us which has been moved by the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard (Mr. Berger). Mr. Speaker, all of these newly developing countries need massive assistance. They need the assistance of engineers, technicians, doctors and scientists. They also need what we in Canada can supply, and that is volunteers among our young people who are not medical men, or scientists, or technicians.

I say, Mr. Speaker, that support of this resolution and following it through would mean a great deal.

Mr. Speaker, may I tell you of the city of Jos in northern Nigeria. In that city alone there are 70,000 people, and outside there are 200,000 in their tribal villages. There is one hospital in Jos. There is one doctor in that hospital. He looks after all the bed patients and does all the surgery. He also attends to between 600 and 800 out-patients a day from 8 o'clock in the morning until one o'clock in the afternoon. He cannot look after them all but if he had a couple of orderlies or a couple of our nurses in that hospital in Jos, would it not make a great deal of difference to the health of those people?

Let us take another city in eastern Nigeria which has perhaps one of the finest hospitals of all, and which is run by a Catholic mission. Years ago the major cause of death amongst children was lockjaw. Now they have very few deaths from lockjaw. And why? Because although two Catholic medical doctors cannot look after 500 out-patients, they can give anti-tetanus shots, and very few youngsters die now. If you go into western Nigeria, into Oyo, Ibadan and Ife, these shots are not given and lockjaw is one of the great causes of death. Some of our young Canadians who have been trained as orderlies, nurses or technicians could provide such a service, under medical supervision.

In that country of 42 million people there are 83 doctors. Midwifery is hardly known. Most times when children are born the umbilical cord is cut too long. So how is it closed? I wish the hon. member for Jasper-Edson (Mr. Horner) were here to back up what I say. It is closed with a dab of goat, camel or cow dung. And what happens? Infection. One child out of two dies. What could some of our young people do? With two or three years of the training we give in Canada they could help people under these circumstances.

Mr. Speaker, I have just given you a couple of dramatic illustrations showing why I should like to talk on this topic for an hour, and why I am so wholeheartedly in support of this motion; but I will call it quits now so that we can have a vote and it is not talked out.

Mr. J. R. Sams (Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to take up too much time on this particular motion, but I should like to give one or two opinions of my own. I think there are a great number of undergraduates in our Canadian universities who could and would be readily available to fulfil the obligations set out in the motion proposed by the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard (Mr. Berger). Modern communications and transportation today are such that to ignore the rising masses in India and Asia—

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Sams: Yes.

Mr. Deschatelets: Is the hon. member aware that if he speaks until six o'clock he will prevent a vote on this resolution?

Mr. Sams: I thank the hon. member for calling my attention to that, but I would remind him that he is taking up some of the time in which I should like to add to this debate. Trade missions, diplomatic missions and the like, all have their place in this question of the problems of other nations. The adoption of a program such as that outlined by the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard, coupled with a sincere and dedicated desire for a proper approach to the problems of mankind, will ensure our success in their understanding and of the peace of the world.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hour appointed for the consideration of private members' business having expired. We will now revert to the business which was interrupted at five o'clock.

ATLANTIC DEVELOPMENT BOARD

PROVISION FOR DEFINITION OF DUTIES, APPOINTMENT OF MEMBERS, ETC.

The Deputy Chairman: The house again in committee on the motion of Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton) for the second reading of Bill No. C-94, to provide for the establishment of an Atlantic development board.

On clause 2—Definitions.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

(Text):

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

On clause 2—Definitions.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, there is just one question I should like to ask the minister about clause 2. Clause 2 (c) reads as follows:

> "Minister" means such member of the Queen's privy council for Canada as may from time to time be designated by the governor in council to act as the minister for the purposes of this act.

I do not take any exception to that wording. I can understand why the government might want to be free from time to time to change the minister designate. But I would hope that the government has already made a decision as to who the first minister designate is and, if so, I would hope the minister could tell us. I expressed the hope on second reading that it would be the minister from New Brunswick, and notwithstanding the fact that this might seem to bring me into contradiction with my hon. friend from Westmorland I reiterate that hope.

I do not think we want the Minister of Finance to be the minister designate here because we want a minister who is going to be rapping on the door of the Minister of Finance all the time. We do not want a built-in veto. I do hope that a decision has been made on this matter and that the minister can tell us what that decision is.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I should like to be in a position to answer the question categorically, and I must say, with all due modesty, that I should like to answer it in accordance with the suggestion that the hon. member has made. I find it impossible to do that at the moment but I will convey his opinion in that regard to the cabinet, which I know will have a great deal of influence.

Mr. Pickersgill: I hope that my expressing a favourable opinion about the minister will not queer his chances.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): I was sincere in what I said.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am sure the minister was, but I do not think all his colleagues entertain the same feelings about me that the minister does, and perhaps there might be a certain reciprocity there as well. Although I am not going to go on with this point at all or press it in any way, I do have to point out, notwithstanding my regard for the minister, that this is just further evidence of the fact that this government can never seem to decide anything.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 3—Board established.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Chairman, first of all I want to say that we took the minister's words seriously the other evening when he asked for co-operation with respect to this bill in an attempt to move it forward as quickly as possible. Therefore we presented our general views on it and now we are moving into specific amendments. With regard to clause 3 we wish to acknowledge and congratulate the minister for his broadmindedness in making known to the house the fact that one of the provisions of this bill was ridiculous. I am not going to waste any time on this point because the hon. member for Antigonish-Guysborough has already dealt very fully with it.

The matter that we wish to draw to the attention of the minister and the committee at the moment is the fact that if one provision of the bill can be ridiculous then perhaps the minister will agree it is possible other clauses of the bill are equally ridiculous, and I say that without wishing to be facetious. We are concerned about clause 3. I do not think it is necessary for me to review for the benefit of anybody in this house the fact that it is utterly fantastic to expect that five individuals are going to be able to do this job properly. The minister has already said that the members of the board are not going to be some kind of superior or perfect human beings but are going to be ordinary men and women. Therefore it is going to be impossible for five people, certainly if they are going to operate on a part time basis, to do the job the minister is trying to tell us this board is going to be expected to do.

Is there any need for me to review the problems that every university in this country faces, with boards of directors ranging from 25 to 50 people, many of whom donate a considerable amount of their free time solely to giving attention to the problems of financing universities in this country? Is the minister going to stand here and tell us that five people on a part time basis are going to be able to do the job that a whole region of Canada is demanding? We suggest that this is simply impossible and that this is another of the ridiculous provisions of the bill. We will have something to say in a further amendment about full time employees for the board but for the moment we are considering the matter of five members, all of whom will be operating on a part time basis.

Second, we suggest that if the four provincial governments involved and the different important segments of the community, labour, business, management, agriculture, rural life in general, co-operatives, credit unions consumer groups and universities are going to be represented, it is again hopeless to attempt to set up a board consisting of five people who will be able to do the job. Without wasting any more time I should like to move:

That clause 3 be amended by deleting the word "five" in the third line thereof and substituting the word "fifteen" therefor, so that the clause as amended will read:

3. A corporation is hereby established to be known as the Atlantic development board, consisting of fifteen members to be appointed by the governor in council as provided in section 4.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I should like to make a slight correction in the remarks of the hon. member for Cape Breton South with reference to his use of the word "ridiculous". The statement I made two days ago was that the salary was ridiculous. I was not referring to the clause particularly, and I am still of the same view. I am sure that all hon. members, particularly those within my immediate range of vision, know that sometimes these things happen but because they happen is no particular reason for not correcting them. Therefore, as I said the other day, when we come to clause 5 I expect to present an amendment.

Now, Mr. Chairman, with reference to the remarks of the hon. gentleman from Cape Breton South, I am one of those who believe that it is always possible to obtain a good deal of benefit from the opinions of many people. I submit to this committee, however, there is no particular reason why we should consider that a board of five people would be any less effective than a board of 15 people. As a matter of fact, it is my opinion that a small board, set up to be representative of all the provinces, would have a better chance to do effective work, to do it more expeditiously than a large board. This does not take anything away from the merits of the remarks made by the hon. member in connection with representation on this board of various organizations and groups which he mentioned. I accept that. It is very wise to have these organizations represented.

Many people have risen to their feet during this debate and have advanced their ideas as to what they believe is good. They have mentioned the things which they believe the board should have in order to be successful. I acknowledge their desire that this board shall be successful. I believe, too, that if you have a representative from each province and a chairman, that will be a good board with which to start. As I said the other day, I think we have to consider that this board is, to a certain degree, experimental in nature. We have never before had a board of this type in the Atlantic provinces. We have never had a board charged with a specific responsibility. It is important to remember that this board will be dedicated to securing the accomplishment of something of a very constructive nature. I think this is of tremendous importance.

I submit again that the board has possibilities and it is a forward step. It has been recommended by the commission on Canada's economic prospects.

Mr. Gordon: Will the minister permit a question?

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): Yes.

Mr. Gordon: I was not quite sure about his reference to the commission on Canada's prospects. If the minister refers to the royal commission of which I had the honour to be chairman, I cannot remember recommending an advisory body of this kind. I wonder if the minister would be kind enough to clarify the matter.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): I shall be glad to clarify it to the extent I can. I did have reference to the commission headed by the distinguished member for Davenport. I acknowledge that he may have given this body another name, but I submit that, to all intents and purposes, it is a board of this nature that he had in mind.

Mr. Gordon: May I ask the minister another question? The council recommended by the royal commission on Canada's economic prospects for the development of the Atlantic region, if I recall correctly, was called—well, the main feature of it was that it would provide capital for that region. My question is, does the minister believe this particular advisory body can do the same job as was recommended by the royal commission, which was to introduce badly needed capital into the Atlantic area?

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): I shall be glad to answer that. In my opinion, the hon. member for Davenport is just splitting hairs. He recommended a board. When I say "he" I mean the commission. Then, he recommended that the board should have finances at its disposal, and that is the part of the recommendation with which I do not agree.

I do not know whether or not my hon. friend from Davenport was here the other day, but for his benefit I will repeat what I said on that occasion. He may choose to differ with me, but I am going to repeat it anyway. I expressed the opinion that no government should delegate to a board the responsibility which they, themselves, owe to the Canadian taxpayer. In my opinion it would be a wrong thing to give any board millions of dollars of the taxpayers' money and say, "Now, just go ahead and spend this in whatever way you believe is proper." I do not agree with that, not for a moment.

I do agree with the principle of examination. I agree with the principle of investigation. I agree with the principle of economic research into these various projects. Then, after that has been accomplished this board would make recommendations to the government in Ottawa for final decision. This is where my hon. friend and I do not agree, but that is quite all right. People have been known to disagree before. In the main, I suggest—

Mr. Gordon: May I ask the minister another question?

An hon. Member: Let him finish.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): At least let me finish a sentence. I submit that in his report the hon. member recommended a board and this is the first indication we have of the carrying out of that recommendation. I am one of those who feel that the size of the board is no criterion of the effectiveness of it. As I remember, the commission on Canada's economic prospects comprised seven members. They journeyed from one end of Canada to the other. They examined witnesses and I had the pleasure of appearing before them. I was treated with the greatest of courtesy, just as I would expect from a commission presided over by the hon. gentleman from Davenport. In this particular case, I believe a board of five will be a good size with which to start. While I do not like to disagree on such a small matter with the hon. gentleman from Cape Breton South, I submit that if he is really interested in the success of this Atlantic development board, he is doing it a disservice when he moves an amendment to enlarge the board to 15. I find that I cannot accept the amendment.

Mr. Gordon: I wonder if I might ask the minister a question now, Mr. Chairman, on the point that he was raising that there was not much difference between this particular advisory board and the board recommended by the royal commission on Canada's economic prospects. Perhaps I might read in two sentences from page 411 of the report of the commission.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Davenport will find that around here it is pretty poor etiquette to quote himself.

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Chairman, I am not so interested in the etiquette as in getting down to the fundamentals of what is being proposed. I would like to draw this to the attention of the committee, in view of the minister's remarks, and to ask him a question after reading this particular paragraph. It reads as follows:

> The proposed commission or other agency, and the staff which it would require, should first prepare an over-all co-ordinated plan, including a list of priorities in connection with the proposed expenditures. Once this was approved by the federal government, the commission or agency referred to should be responsible for the implementation of the proposals, including supervision of the expenditures involved.

I would like to ask the minister if he thinks that is the same as what is contemplated for this proposed advisory committee?

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, so far as the contemplation is concerned I presume the hon. member can speak with more authority and knowledge than I can. I am just trying to work out for my own satisfaction in a common sense fashion just what that commission did mean in that particular paragraph. I am quite satisfied that the board, that is presently under discussion so far as this committee is concerned, meets a good many of the ideas which the commission, in my opinion, had in mind. If I am wrong and it does not, we will not quarrel about it.

I still submit that a board of five will be a good board, at least to start with, and I do not need to reiterate what I said about financing. I still submit that the government should not delegate the spending of millions and millions of dollars without the government taking final responsibility for the spending of the money. That is my opinion and I am still convinced it is the right one. I have nothing to add to it. Neither do I think that the committee will be influenced by what the hon. member for Davenport read from the report of that commission because it is my opinion that this board pretty well meets what the commission had in mind.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder, Mr. Chairman, if I might raise a point in connection with this. The minister may say he does not want to accept the recommendation of the hon. member for Davenport in certain particulars, but what about the recommendation that was made by every Conservative candidate in the Atlantic provinces in May of 1957, in the charter on which the hon. gentleman's party got elected? I admit the hon. gentleman was not a candidate himself and I suspect that is why he was given the task of bringing in this bill, because the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Fisheries would not want to have to eat their own words.

Of course, there is no minister from Newfoundland, but every candidate who was elected in 1957 in the Atlantic provinces to support the Tory party was pledged to a capital projects commission, which was obviously based on the hon. member for Davenport's recommendation in his preliminary report, although not acknowledged. They all pledged themselves to that, including the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Fisheries, and I suggest we let the Minister of Fisheries get up and speak about it. He has not taken much part in this debate yet and he can tell us himself if he has now repudiated that election promise of his, and the distinguished and honourable member for Saint John-Albert might also get up and quote himself and his promise. We would be very glad for him to reiterate that promise and hear him say he had struggled vainly all these past five years to get it carried out. It has not been carried out, and now we get this lame duck.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): What about your plan for one way tickets now?

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. gentleman should not talk about one way tickets. For five years the hon. gentleman has been supporting a government that has been issuing one way tickets for the people of the Atlantic provinces, for people who could not get work there. Now he is supporting a bill to issue more for them. The hon. member for Davenport said we should do a lot in the Atlantic provinces, everything we could, to provide work for the people there; but if everything did not work, then and only as a last resort should anybody be sent out of the area. That, however, is the only thing hon. gentlemen opposite have been doing. They started it in 1958. They sent them up to Elliot Lake just before some of the mines there closed down and they have been doing it steadily since. Now, five and a half years later, the minister introduces this bill—and I exonerate him; he did not sign the Moncton declaration; he was not there; he was in another place. But he supported every one of those candidates. He roamed up and down the Atlantic provinces telling people to follow John to paradise. And where did they follow him? They followed him into this collection of broken promises and this mere advisory board that is the substitute of the capital projects commission that they all promised in those promising days of May, 1957.

Mr. Lewis: The purpose of the amendment before the committee is precisely to attempt to make the body which the bill proposes into a much more effective planning agency. I am sure the hon. member for Cape Breton South or any others of his colleagues in this party do not care really whether there are 15 members, or 13 or 12. We suggest 15 and we do so for two reasons.

First, we believe that the commission ought to be representative not only of the four governments of the Atlantic provinces but also of various organizations of the working people and the farm and co-operative people in those provinces, and you cannot possibly have that kind of representation in a board of five members.

Second, there should be a number of that board—we will suggest three in later consideration of another clause—who would be full-time members, instead of having a board all of whom would give their spare time to the work, because we are convinced the work cannot be done in that way. The purpose of a capital projects commission cannot be filled and a plan for the Atlantic provinces cannot be prepared, and still less can actual projects be executed and supervised, if you have a board of five members all of whom merely give whatever spare time they can to this tremendously important part of Canada and this tremendously important part of our economy.

We suggest that, in spite of the obvious good will of the Minister of National Revenue and in spite of his obvious good intentions for the provinces on the Atlantic seaboard, the fact is that the board which he now proposes is no more than a body which will advise a little and from time to time meet to consider some things. Adequate planning cannot be done in that manner. As I say, we believe it ought to be a board representative of organizations as well as of governments, and large enough to have among it members giving their full time to the job for the Atlantic provinces.

I have no doubt that promises were made in May, 1957, in the Atlantic provinces as they were made elsewhere. Likewise I have no doubt they were made by representatives and spokesmen of all parties in the house. That is an old tradition of political spokesmen, an old tradition of elections in this country, to make promises. I do not think only one party in this house makes them or has made them in the past. I have heard members in other parties make promises and I have read their promises and their election literature.

I am not concerned about that at all, Mr. Chairman. What we are concerned about is that this important step toward recognizing the regional problems of the Atlantic provinces as an essential part of Canada's economy be made an effective step instead of a faltering and useless step. This is merely the first item that the hon. member for Cape Breton South has moved in a series of amendments which we hope this committee will approve, which will put some teeth into the legislation and give the board the powers and capacities for doing the tremendous job that needs to be done.

I would appeal to the minister that he take seriously under consideration the amendment moved by the hon. member for Cape Breton South. If the minister thinks that 15 members are too many and that 12 will do the job, I am sure the hon. member for Cape Breton South is not wedded to a particular number so long as the board will be large enough to be representative of the people as well as of the governments of the Atlantic provinces, and so long as it will be large enough to provide for two or three full time members, so that two or three competent men or women can give full time attention to the problems about which he and other hon. members of this house have spoken.

I have had the pleasure of visiting the Atlantic provinces on many occasions over the last 25 years or so. When visiting them, as a person living in central Canada and knowing something about the industry in central Canada, I could not help being impressed by the way in which a good many of the advances in our country have bypassed that part of Canada. One cannot visit those provinces and study their problems without being impressed by the necessity for some serious action by this parliament with regard to that section of Canada. I underline what others have said, that the action proposed could be of value if it were made effective. That is the purpose of the amendment before you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I am naturally impressed—

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman—

(Text):

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Pickersgill: The minister was speaking.

The Chairman: The Minister of National Revenue.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I am naturally impressed by the eloquence of the hon. member for York South. I am not a bit impressed, however, with his argument that a 15-man board would be more effective than a 5-man board. I submit there is nothing a 15-man board could do that a 5-man board could not do as well, and perhaps more expeditiously, perhaps with a greater degree of effectiveness and a greater degree of dispatch. I do want to say a few words about the remarks of the loquacious member for Bonavista-Twillingate, because he advanced the idea that the Conservative party prior to the 1957 election had promised a capital projects commission.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is right, at Moncton.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): I submit, Mr. Chairman, that maybe he thinks it is right, but it is wrong.

Mr. Pickersgill: I have the text of it here.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): I have the resolutions before me. This is what the candidates in the Atlantic provinces promised.

5. A capital projects program.

This, I submit, is a capital projects program.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

[Mr. Lewis.]

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): This is what it is. It is a capital projects program; there is no question about it. Anyone who uses the intelligence with which he is possessed will be able to see that. It is the carrying out of a capital projects program; there is no question about that whatsoever. I would now like to read on a little bit further. It is to provide federal capital assistance for provincial projects designed to enlarge the basic economy of the area. That is No. 5. In my opinion this board carries out that commitment to the letter. I can understand the hon. gentleman not being familiar with carrying out promises, because so many were broken in the government of which he formed a part. He is not very familiar with this sort of thing. Therefore I forgive him in that respect because he is not used to having them carried out.

Here is a 5-man board. I submit to the committee that this will be a proper sized board to conduct the business with expedition. There is another point, to which the hon. member for York South referred, that this bill in another clause provides for an executive director and for full-time people to be associated with it. In my opinion, Mr. Chairman, that is exactly what is required, a board which will meet regularly but will have as a basis an executive director and a staff which will be examining and inquiring into situations day after day. Then the board will meet and consider those situations in the light of the information which has been secured in the meantime.

Mr. Chairman, I have nothing more to add at this time. In my opinion this pretty well takes care of the objections. I would ask my hon. friend from York South if he would consider that a 5-man board might do a good job to start off with, and if it is found that it needs more people to make it more effective I am sure he will be the first to vote for an amendment to the bill, if it were brought in a few months or a year hence, or whenever it may be.

(Translation):

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, we have listened with great interest to the proposals made by the socialist party and the Liberal party to increase to fifteen the number of the members of the board, rather than leave it at five as suggested by this bill.

As we take it for granted that the Liberal, socialist or Conservative parties are in favour of abolishing unemployment in this country, I wonder, like my good friend from York South (Mr. Lewis) for instance, why we should not propose that this board be comprised of 1,500 members.

Why does not the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill) propose that it comprise 1,500 members, all from his party, and why do not the Conservatives do the same thing?

The aim of that board is not to create jobs. I understand, of course, that if we appointed to that board people like the hon. members we have just heard, it might perhaps be wise to require 25 instead of 5, because it requires many not too intelligent people to replace a few intelligent ones.

In my opinion, for the efficient operation of this board, a total of five members is enough.

If five persons are enough to consider the problems of the Atlantic provinces and, closer to us, those of Ontario and Quebec—that is to say, problems of those provinces nearer to the Atlantic than to the Pacific—I suggest that we should appoint only five.

There is no need to drag on and kill time trying to find out whether it would be proper to increase the membership of that board. The bill proposes five intelligent members, and if they are, they will find the means of improving the present situation in the maritime provinces.

As I have just said, it is useless to talk about increasing the membership of this board. What is required is action.

Appointing commissioners, setting up a board made up of more or of fewer members does not solve anything. I suggest that five efficient, determined and well informed men can find the solution to the problem of the Atlantic provinces.

That is why we from the Social Credit party say that it is useless to increase the membership, as is advocated in the amendment. All the members need not be Conservatives; we might appoint a few Liberals because there are a few intelligent ones to be found here and there in Canada; there are not very many, but there are a few. We need not worry about the socialists; there is no need to look among them for they are not intelligent enough. The main thing is to appoint five efficient commissioners.

Let us find five intelligent persons to deal with the issues concerning the Atlantic provinces and we Social Crediters will wholeheartedly support the proposal.

(Text):

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps, since the hon. member for Villeneuve did take my name in vain I might say a few words at this point. While I thank the hon. member for Villeneuve for expressing the views of the Liberal party, may I say that unfortunately he did not express them correctly. I must say, though, that I am in complete agreement with the views he has expressed on the amendment. I do not think enlarging this board to 15 would add anything to it except 10 other persons. If the board is to be of any use at all—and I become increasingly doubtful about how useful it is going to be—I think it is more likely to be useful if there are only five people on it than if there are 15 and for that reason I do not think I can support the amendment, particularly as I do not have very much confidence in the kind of people who would be apt to be selected by the present government, if one might judge by the appointments they have made since June 18. So, speaking for myself, and a good many of those surrounding me, I shall not be able to vote for this amendment.

I do want to say, however, that I hope the best possible effort will be made to select those persons who are appointed to the board in such a fashion that they will represent not only the four provinces but a reasonable cross section of the main industries in the area.

Mr. Baldwin: I rose some time ago. I was about to raise a point of order on this amendment. I do not think it really matters, because the debate has been just as relevant to the original clause as to the amendment. I would point out, however, that there is some doubt as to the validity of this amendment which has been moved by a private member. I refer you, Mr. Chairman, to clauses 3, 5 and 10, which, taken together, say that this is to be a board composed of five persons. One member, the chairman, will be paid an honorarium the amount of which has been fixed. The remaining four will not receive remuneration but are entitled to reasonable living and travel expenses while absent from their ordinary places of residence. Later on in the bill it is provided that one meeting shall be held in Ottawa and the others at such places as the board itself may determine. It is therefore evident that unless every one of the members to be appointed resides in Ottawa, travelling and living expenses in respect of a board of 15 are going to be three times as much as those involved in connection with a board of five. It is clear that this would require the expenditure of money additional to that presently contemplated and I suggest, therefore, that you rule it out of order.

Mr. Lewis: I am not going to follow the last speaker and deal with the point of order he raised, because you have not said anything about it, Mr. Chairman.

I am not at all surprised that the hon. member for Villeneuve is opposed to any increase in the size of the board, despite the reasons we have given, because I have watched the hon. member both inside and outside this house and I am impressed by the fact that he has very little use for anything which is essentially democratic—for anything which genuinely represents the wishes of the Canadian people. The hon. member has not much use—

Mr. Caouette: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman—

The Chairman: First of all, let me point out to the hon. member for York South that his remarks, as far as they have gone, are not applicable to the amendment. I gather the hon. member for Villeneuve was rising on a point of order.

I might also advise the committee that the Chair was in some doubt about the admissibility of this amendment but did not intervene for the reason that clause 5(1) states that the members of the board shall serve without remuneration but are entitled to be paid reasonable travel and living expenses, which I interpret as a reimbursement, not as payment. I took it to mean that they would receive reimbursement for expenses they had incurred.

However, I would point out to hon. members one sentence which appears in May's sixteenth edition at page 706 under the heading "Disallowance of charging amendments moved in the house".

> No amendment offered to a bill or to a resolution reported from committee is in order if it either imposes a charge not contained in the bill or resolution reported from committee or increases the charge above that contained in the bill or resolution so reported.

As I indicated previously, I have given the mover of this amendment the benefit of the doubt in this case. I would have given the matter deeper consideration, perhaps, if one of the members of the committee had brought the point earlier to my attention. As things stand, I think I allow the amendment.

Mr. Winch: Did I gather, Mr. Chairman, that you propose to allow the amendment? I should like to point out that we are dealing with clause 3 which concerns the composition of the board and not with payment. That is dealt with in a later clause. If Your Honour has allowed the amendment, may I be permitted to say a few words on it? I shall not comment on the statements made by either the hon. member for Villeneuve or the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, other than to say it is obvious that they want membership of the board to be restricted to five.

Under no consideration can this give democratic representation to the provinces and to the economic interests of the Atlantic region. Take it one way or the other: if hon. members opposite do not want democratic representation, they stand for something that this party does not stand for. I am not concerned with the point whether there should be 15 or less, but I am concerned with there being a change in the present wording of clause 3, which says that the Atlantic development board shall be restricted to five members.

We in this group want to make it very clear that we support the principle of an Atlantic development board, but we support it on the basis that it shall be a development board representative of all governments concerned and also representative of those sections in each province which bear upon the economy. In clause 2 the provinces—New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland—are named. There is provincial government representation on this board to the extent of four members out of the five. The chairman of the board makes up the fifth. But where is any representation of business, of farmers, of labour, of co-operatives and of credit unions? The present wording of the clause means that there is no representation of those who produce the wealth of the maritime provinces; there is representation only of the governments concerned, and there is an appointed chairman.

I was most interested in the remarks of the Minister of National Revenue. I tried to follow him most closely, but the more closely I followed him the less I understood him. Because, sir, it is impossible to consider clause 3, which outlines the board and its membership, unless you consider the responsibilities of that board. Those responsibilities are outlined in clause 9, and I submit you cannot consider clause 3 without considering clause 9 as well, because clause 9 deals with the objects and powers of the board. If you look at the objects and the powers contained in the clause, you will find that they are of such a nature that they would require not only a board larger than five members, but a full-time board larger than five members; and unless that is so this bill, which in principle I support, will mean nothing more than window dressing, and will be a white elephant introduced by the present government. May I also point out that in addition to considering clause 9 with clause 3 you must also consider clause 14. Because clause 14 gives powers to other than those representatives elected by the provincial governments. It is the technical, the scientific, the practical and the economic part of this bill. This clause says:

The board may engage on a temporary basis or for any period of not more than two years the services of persons having technical or specialized knowledge of any matters relating to the work of the board...

I suggest that if this bill is to have the sort of consideration I hope it will have, we must put together not only clause 3 and clause 9, but also clause 14. If that is done, it means that a board of only five members is just a sham; that the bill is window dressing leading up to a white elephant for the purpose of a probable general election. As far as we are concerned we want something done for the Atlantic provinces. We want it done on a democratic basis. We want full representation of all governments. That is why we have moved an amendment to increase the membership from five to 15, so as to make the board something realistic and effective, and which will produce results, instead of having a bill which will be passed by this house for no particular reason and to accomplish nothing at all.

(Translation):

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, listening to the members in the far corner of the house, you would think they are the only democrats in Canada.

It is precisely the socialists, those who shout, like my hon. friend—

(Text):

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order I should like to suggest that the hon. member for Villeneuve is again practising what he is famous for both in this house and across the country.

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

The Chairman: Order. The committee has before it an amendment to increase the size of the Atlantic development board from five members to 15. That is what is under discussion. What we have heard so far from the hon. member from Villeneuve is not applicable in the narrow sense to the amendment under discussion. There may be some remarks he wishes to make which would be more appropriate at some other time.

(Translation):

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, at this stage, while keeping within the suggestion to increase from 5 to 15 the number of members of this board, we still retain the right to refute what was just said by the socialists in this house.

Listening to them, one would think that they are the only democrats in Canada, when the true socialists of the world are the communists in Russia who are the closest to those people.

(Text):

The Chairman: Order. I have to rule that the remarks of the hon. member on this amendment to a clause of the bill at this point of the debate are out of order. Is the house ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Chairman—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Chairman, I have been trying to get your eye to raise a point which I think the committee should consider before proceeding to vote on this particular amendment. A point was raised that the amendment was out of order because it was making a charge upon the treasury, but there is a more basic matter I should like to draw to Your Honour's attention.

The Chairman: The Chair has ruled affirmatively on the admissibility of this amendment, so there is no argument on that question, unless the hon. member has some different grounds.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Chairman, I should like to raise this matter as a point of order, but if when I have finished Your Honour thinks I am out of order, I still think it is basic to voting on this clause. Briefly, it is this. The bill provides for a small group, and if the members of the committee will examine the various clauses such as clause 3 which we are now considering, clause 4 which deals with alterations in the membership in the board, clause 6 which provides that three members shall constitute a quorum, and various other clauses, it can easily be seen that the basic principle of the bill is to set up a small committee of five members. It is on this basis that the bill was originally approved. My point is that to change the number of members of the board from five to 15, as the amendment proposes, is in effect to change the entire principle of the bill and for that reason the amendment should be ruled out of order.

Mr. Winch: I rise on a point of order.

The Chairman: Order. The hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka is speaking to a point of order. I will have to hear him out first.

Mr. Aiken: I was going to add that I think this is a basic point which was not considered by the committee previously, and if we do not consider it now we will have to consider it when we come to the other clauses, because as each one is reached we will be altering the bill further and creating a principle entirely different from the original one. If after hearing my remarks, Mr. Chairman, you think I am out of order, may I say that I still think this is a principle which should be considered before we vote on this amendment.

The Chairman: Unless some member of the committee wishes to add something, perhaps I may be allowed to dispose of this point right away, and I have no difficulty in doing so. My view is that the amendment offered now does not broaden the scope of the bill particularly or change the principle of the bill. I think that the other clauses referred to by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka would have to be amended by action on the part of the same members of the house as a direct consequence of their first amendment, and therefore I would assume that they would follow through with the additional amendments which I also anticipated in looking over the bill as a whole. That is my reasoning on that particular point, and that is the way I think it should be disposed of.

Mr. Winch: That is exactly the point I wanted to draw to your attention a few moments ago.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, I wish to ask the minister if he can tell the house—I do not believe he has done so—whether it is the intention to see to it that the four provincial areas will be represented on the board. In that event what does he propose to do about the various segments of opinion and groups which might be said to represent the economic avocations?

If the minister would give some explanation of his intention in this regard it might be helpful to some of us who are a little disturbed at the moment as to what should be the numerical composition of the board. I think the hon. member for York South suggested that he was not wedded to 15 as proposed in the amendment and it may be that some compromise can be reached. This will afford an opportunity for the minister to explain exactly how the government intends to appoint these members up to the number of five. If in the employment of the method the minister has in mind it is not possible to reach the main segments in the Atlantic area and take into account the four provincial regions perhaps a higher number than five may be desired, though not necessarily 15. The hon. member for York South has suggested a compromise which I think should cause the minister to explain more clearly than he has, and with greater precision, exactly what the government has in mind with regard to the basis on which it is going to appoint these people.

The Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question? Those in favour of the amendment please rise.

[Mr. Aiken.]

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Before the amendment is put, may I ask him if he has any views to give in answer to my question?

Mr. Jones: He has already answered it.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): I would be very glad to answer the question of the hon. member for Essex East to the extent of my limited knowledge of the future. I am sure he would be the first to admit that it is difficult to predetermine every detail of every bill that comes before the house, but the hon. member can be sure that there will be the greatest possible disposition to see that all economic segments as well as provincial areas are represented, if for no other reason than to avoid the criticism which he himself would level. I think he will be the first one to admit that it will be the desire of the government to have every segment of the population, economic, political and otherwise, represented in one capacity or another.

Mr. Winch: By five on the board?

Amendment (Mr. MacInnis) negatived: Yeas, 13; nays, 121.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 4—Appointment of members.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Chairman, having in mind what has happened to the last amendment, I hope that the Liberal members of the house will be a little more anxious to support us on this one. In view of the political appointments made by the government during the past couple of months, I think this amendment is most desirable. I therefore move—

The Chairman: Order. The hon. member for Mercier on a point of order.

(Translation):

Mr. Boulanger: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order. A few minutes ago, we heard an N.D.P. member complain that the French speaking members were speaking so fast that he could not understand them. For the information of the hon. member who has just resumed his seat, I must say that he, himself, speaks too quickly in his own language and that I find it hard to follow the interpretation of his remarks.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Chairman, I have no difficulty in understanding French.

(Text):

Mr. Chairman, dealing with clause 4, I should like to move that subclause 1 of clause 4 be deleted and the following substituted therefor:

> Each of the members of the board shall be appointed to hold office for a term of three years except that of those first appointed, one shall be appointed for a term of one year and two shall be appointed for a term of two years.

The reasoning behind this is, as I say, there is a tendency for certain political appointments to be made to boards of this kind. This is a very important board and we may be stuck with a dud for three years. This way, we can get rid of him. However, if they happen to do a good job, they can be reappointed very easily.

Some hon. Members: Question, question.

Amendment (Mr. MacInnis) negatived: Yeas, 56, nays, 74.

The Chairman: I declare the amendment lost. Shall clause 4 carry?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): No, Mr. Chairman. Will the minister explain why there is no provision in this clause for the appointment of a member during good behaviour. This provision is in the other bills, one of which has already been introduced in this house and two of which have yet to be introduced. This is the usual policy in respect of members appointed to bodies by parliament. Will the minister explain why the phrase "during good behaviour" has been left out of this bill?

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I can understand the hon. member for Essex East raising this point under ordinary circumstances, but what he is completely overlooking is the fact this board will be composed of members from the maritimes.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I must say that the minister has given a clever retort. He is to be congratulated on his retort, of course, but this does not take care of the gap in this bill. It is conceivable that the government might appoint a Liberal to this board.

Some hon. Members: No, no.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): This is doubtful, but in that event I am sure the minister would find occasion, or some reason for saying that there was a lack of good behaviour. In any event, this is bad draftsmanship. The minister does not want to introduce a measure which would stand unique in this particular. I suggest he ought to add those words in both 4(1) and 4(2). I would suggest that in 4(1), line 21, after the word "board" there should be added the words "during good behaviour".

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): With great respect, Mr. Chairman, I submit that the insertion of the words "during good behaviour", while they may be legally desirable, would not be practicable in relation to an advisory board which we hope would consist of outstanding men who would be giving their services without remuneration. I believe such men should not have a clause in the bill reflecting on their behaviour.

If this were a board, the members of which receive a large salary and there was grave danger of a disservice being done to the object of the board by an improper appointment, which I do not for a moment admit, then I could see some merit in the hon. member's suggestion. In this particular instance, for the reason which I gave first and then for the reason that I think the men are really donating their services, I could not accept such a suggestion. If this legislation were being introduced by the hon. member for Essex East, I believe the same thing would apply. Men who are donating their services should not be hamstrung with a phrase reflecting on their behaviour.

Mr. Pearson: The minister has given a very ingenious explanation for the omission of these words which are customary in clauses making provision for appointments of this kind. He has said that the gentlemen appointed to this board will be outstanding citizens and therefore their good behaviour could be taken for granted; it would be something almost invidious to put in words about good behaviour. The minister should be reminded that even in connection with such an important board as the national economic development board, the appointments to that board are to be made during good behaviour. Are we to draw the inference from the inclusion of these words in connection with one board that appointments to that board are not being considered on the same kind of high level of objectivity and unselfish behaviour that the members of the Atlantic board will be expected to observe?

Mr. Winch: In view of the statement just made by the Leader of the Opposition—I think I got it right—that it would be invidious to put in the words "good behaviour", in connection with appointments to this board, and in view of the fact there is an amendment by the hon. member for Essex East that these words be included, does he thereby infer that there is a difference in behaviour when Liberals are in opposition and when they are in government?

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I must say to the hon. member for Vancouver East that we have no amendment on the table.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, I will move, seconded by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate—

Mr. Pickersgill: You do not have a seconder in committee.

Atlantic Development Board

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —that in line 21, clause 4, after the word "board" there shall be added the words "during good behaviour". The rest of the clause continues as it is.

Mr. Winch: May I ask one question, Mr. Chairman? This is something which over the years, provincially and federally, has intrigued me. The hon. member for Essex East now sits in opposition but for many years he sat in government. Now, having moved this amendment will he please explain from either place, in government or in opposition, what is the interpretation in law of the term "during good behaviour"?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Well, Mr. Chairman, as my hon. friend knows it is not customary for the government to give any legal opinions to the House of Commons. That precedent has been well established by the Minister of Justice. But as I think the question is a proper one some kind of legal opinion should be forthcoming. The phrase "during good behaviour" is used in all statutes. It is part of the technique of good draftsmanship and it means precisely what it says, that a man shall hold office during good behaviour.

The courts on one occasion have said that a person appointed to serve as a member of a workmen's compensation board could not be said to have complied with the requirement of "good behaviour" when, outside of the office which he occupied, in a speech having to do with the administration of the workmen's compensation board he complained about the administration of the board of which he was a member. The courts held he acted contrary to the standard of "during good behaviour." This is a demonstration of the meaning. It is a symbolic definition which I am sure has touched the perceptive mind of the hon. gentleman.

Mr. Winch: May I just say, sir, that I thank the hon. member for Essex East for his explanation. Even now in opposition he shows that he learned the lessons of cabinet very well, to answer a question without giving any information.

The Deputy Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question? Those in favour of the amendment please rise.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I think the Minister of Justice has a few words to say.

Mr. Pickersgill: Not after the vote was called.

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

The Deputy Chairman: Order. All those in favour of the amendment please rise.

Amendment negatived: yeas, 61; nays, 71.

Clause 4 agreed to.

On clause 5—Travelling and living expenses.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I was going to ask my colleague, the Minister of Fisheries, to move an amendment.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): Mr. Chairman, I move:

That Bill C-94, an act to provide for the establishment of an Atlantic development board, be amended by striking out subclause (2) of clause 5 thereof and substituting therefor the following:

(2) Notwithstanding subsection (1), the chairman of the board may be paid such amount per annum as an honorarium as may be approved by the governor in council.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Argue: What about the rights of parliament here?

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I would like to raise a point of order. It would appear to me that the effect of this amendment would be to raise a charge against the exchequer, and it is a well known rule of the house that no charge may be imposed on the exchequer without a message from the crown. There has been no message from the crown to provide for this additional payment, which is over $3,000 as the minister has told us, and indeed according to the wording here could be quite unlimited. Indeed it could be almost anything that they consider this gentleman worthy of, whether he was of good behaviour or not.

It seems to me that the committee just cannot proceed under the rules with this amendment until the minister has brought in a resolution and indicated that this additional expenditure has been recommended to us by His Excellency, just as was done by the Minister of Finance this afternoon when he brought in the resolution for the increase in salaries of public servants.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, I have had very few opportunities this session to come to the defence of the government, but I cannot resist this opportunity to remind the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate that the resolution that preceded this bill did not state any maximum amount of money that might be spent under it. As a matter of fact that is why we felt earlier that amendments to this bill increasing the size of the board or providing for extra expenses could be made from this corner, because the resolution preceding the bill, which was passed on December 4, does not fix any maximum amount so far as salary, expenses or any other item is concerned. Beauchesne's fourth edition, citation 251, says:

> It may happen that the resolution sanctions some expenditure without fixing the maximum amount to be spent. If, for instance, the resolution recommends that adequate salaries be paid a newly constituted body and the amounts of the salaries are fixed in the bill based on that resolution, the committee on the bill has the right to increase those amounts, because, in doing so, it does not go beyond the scope of the royal recommendation.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I feel that the amendment is in order. But I want to make it clear that the reason I am so ready to protect the government's right to move an amendment of this kind is that I want to protect our right to do the same thing.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the minister whether it is the intention that the chairman be a full-time person? Is the present amendment designed to make him a full-time member of the board, or is it, as it now reads, still to be a spare time avocation, the honorarium of which may be higher than $3,000 a year?

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I think a few days ago when we were debating another part of the legislative passage of this bill I explained that I proposed to offer this amendment and gave as my reason the fact that there were various matters which entered into the setting of the salary. One would be the amount of time that a man gave; another would be the type of man who was engaged for the purpose; another might be even the results achieved. All these items, I submit, would be factors in the determination of the salary. I cannot answer categorically the question asked by the hon. member for York South because it is as yet undetermined who the chairman shall be.

Mr. Byrne: Mr. Chairman, on the point of order, while it may be quite true that under the rules the committee is permitted to change the amount of remuneration for any person appointed to a board, I should like to point out that the committee is not at this time setting the amount of remuneration; it is still leaving the amount open to be dictated by the members of the government. I should think it was not in accordance with the rules of the house to leave an open amount for the minister to pay at his pleasure. I am sure the minister must know at this time what he expects of the chairman of this board. It should not be determined on what we may expect the board to do, or be doing several years from now. The government should know precisely what they wish to have this chairman undertake. I am sure this committee should know the amount the chairman is going to be paid before it passes this bill.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Chairman, I cannot conceal my astonishment at the explanation given by the minister for this particular amendment in the form in which it is put. He has told the committee that one reason why it is impossible to be more specific on this matter than is the case is that the remuneration of the chairman or the payment to the chairman will have to be decided in the light of certain factors. Surely when we are setting up a board of this kind the government knows what it expects the chairman to do, and surely it must have in mind the compensation he should receive for the duty he is to perform.

The minister said there are certain factors which have to be taken into consideration before we can decide what we will pay him. One of these factors is the number of hours he will spend at work, how much time he will give to his duties; another is the kind of man he may be. If he is one kind of man he will get one salary, if he is another kind of man he will perhaps get a different salary. Even more surprising, the minister said that he will be compensated by the results achieved. How can the minister decide now, before the man is appointed, how much to give the chairman of the board on the basis of the results achieved? It seems to me to be an extraordinary way to proceed in respect of an appointment of this kind, which is so important for a board which the government has told us is going to be so important.

(Translation):

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, speaking for myself and not on behalf of my party. I want to say that I am opposed to this amendment for a number of reasons.

First, it is tantamount to writing out a blank cheque in favour of the government for a new post which is to be set up. No mention is made of any salary. All that is said is that the salary will be proportionate to the results obtained. But judging from the salaries paid to officials according to the results obtained, we see that the official with the highest salary, namely $75,000 per annum, is the head of an organization which shows the highest deficit: $70 million a year.

If that is the way salaries are determined, I believe that the incumbent will make sure that he comes up with the heaviest deficit in order to receive the highest salary.

I am also opposed because I have noticed that the higher the salary some officials get, the more arrogant they are. Evidence of that was given us recently. And I wonder also if it is not a post that is to be offered to the president of the Canadian National Railways, whose resignation everyone is asking for.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I am sorry but I have to point out to the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Gregoire) that he cannot link the amendment under discussion to the behaviour of an official, whoever he may be and whatever the crown corporation he is connected with.

I would ask the hon. member to limit his remarks to the subject matter of the amendment itself.

Mr. Gregoire: To continue, it is quite simple. I have given an example, and that is why I am against the proposed amendment. An amount should be set and if, later, there is need to change it, that could be done through an amendment to the act. That is done all the time; why should it be impossible in this case?

(Text):

Miss LaMarsh: Mr. Chairman, there is a question I would like to pose to the minister with respect to the amendment offered. It is apparent since this legislation was in the resolution stage and has been given considerable publicity that this is one of those emergency measures of which the government spoke so frequently, otherwise I presume it would not be before the house before Christmas. I wonder whether the government has in fact already inquired of suitable people as to whether they might find a chairman, and whether $3,000 a year would be sufficient for anyone who is qualified; or has the government, following its usual practice, decided that amongst those defeated Conservative members of the 1958 parliament there may be someone who wishes a greater honorarium and they have thus decided, without being able to say to whom they will give the job, that they require a blank cheque from parliament in order that they may pay it to the person who offers to come for the least amount of money? I have not been very long in the house. This is the first time I have been asked to give a blank cheque in order that a position might be filled. Surely the minister must have some idea of what will be required to pay any individual who undertakes this function. I suggest the committee should not be asked to give the government a blank cheque with respect to this amendment and, if asked, that it should never consent.

Mr. Deschatelets: This amendment was introduced by the Minister of Fisheries. Surely the committee is entitled to hear from him the real reasons or justification for this amendment.

[Mr. Gregoire.]

Mr. MacLean (Queens): During the course of the debate there has been some objection, I believe, to limiting the salary which is proposed for the chairman of this important board. There have been some remarks made in the committee tonight, some by the hon. member for Niagara Falls and by the hon. member for Cape Breton South which are, in my opinion, unworthy of the hon. members concerned. They implied, for example, that ladies and gentlemen of this country who have a deep sense of public service and who have often at great inconvenience to themselves, offered to stand for parliament are in some mysterious way thereby reduced in the public esteem to some category which would not allow them to serve on any public board. That sort of attitude is, in my humble opinion, contemptible, and it reflects very badly on the thinking of those who make such statements. We are Canadians, and there are many people in this country who were proud to serve this nation in various capacities. During the war, for example, there were hundreds of Canadians who served for a dollar a year.

Miss LaMarsh: I only got ninety cents a day.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): They should have made it 89 cents a day and made it look like a bargain.

Miss LaMarsh: I am sure the minister would wish to withdraw that last remark, because 90 cents a day was the amount paid to thousands of Canadian women who served in His late Majesty's uniform.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): I shall be glad to withdraw that remark if, by making it, I cast inadvertently any reflection on any woman who served during world war II. But I want to say this: during the war many Canadians served for a dollar a year. There are many citizens of the maritime provinces who are deeply concerned with serving their area in particular, and it is quite possible that someone might come forward who did not wish to receive any remuneration except a nominal one. On the other hand, it might be advisable to provide a fairly substantial salary. This is a matter to be left to the governor in council.

As far as the point raised by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate is concerned, the resolution already passed by this house does not limit in any way the amount which might be provided, as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has already pointed out. That, in a few words, is my understanding of why this amendment has been made. That is my reason for moving it —so that there may be flexibility in this regard; so that there may be some variation depending on circumstances.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I think those of us who have followed the debate in the resolution stage and on the bill itself thus far have been impressed by the way the minister has conducted himself as the spokesman for the government. But I think tonight he has not done himself justice, nor has he lived up to the high standard which he had set for himself in the period preceding tonight's discussion.

To say to this committee now, that the government has no idea what the salary of the chairman is to be, to suggest that the government is not clear about the amount of time the chairman will spend in the discharge of his duties, to remind us that the minister is not clear as to the kind of person he has in mind, is to establish without any doubt that we are justified in assuming that, notwithstanding what was desired, this bill is nothing more than a façade, that this bill does not represent the endeavour which the minister said was his in seeking to provide an instrument to deal with the serious economic problems which face the Atlantic provinces.

In clause 4 and all the subclauses thereof it is provided that not one member of the board, including the chairman, will be expected to spend his full time in the discharge of his duties. I hope it is not contrary to our rules to refer to bills which are not yet before us—no exception was taken when my hon. friend the Leader of the Opposition spoke a few moments ago. But it will be found that in the other bill which is shortly to be discussed in this house the chairman is expected to spend his full time in the prosecution of the assignment given him, for the simple reason that it is not possible to discharge such an obligation unless he does devote his full time to the assignment. The government claims this Atlantic development board is to serve a useful and substantial purpose. If the minister says to us, as he has indicated, that it is not yet determined how much the chairman will receive, that it is not yet determined how much time he will spend in the discharge of the duties assigned in clause 9, then it is clear that this bill is not intended to do the job which well meaning members of this house, notwithstanding their criticism, have assumed was the intention behind this measure.

The Atlantic provinces face some serious problems. They have the highest level of unemployment of any region in our country —a greater percentage of unemployment in the work force. Is it to be assumed that this problem is going to be corrected by a chairman whose salary is indeterminate, by a chairman who will not be expected to spend his full time in the discharge of his obligations? Surely the minister does not want us to persist in pointing out the absurd position into which he has been driven as a result of the uncertain policy which apparently, his colleagues have imposed on him in their unwillingness to state in this clause how much is to be paid to the chairman. Surely the minister now has in mind who is to be the chairman. Surely he knows how much that person is worth. Surely he knows that that person will be able to work X number of hours. I would contend that if this job is to be done properly he should devote his full time to it, and that he should be well remunerated for so doing.

The history of this clause is revealing. Hon. gentlemen, when confronted with this subsection, noted that the chairman was to receive only $3,000. They concluded, and I think quite properly, that if a man was going to be paid only $3,000 a year, he could not possibly be expected to spend his full time at the job, and that if he did not he was not the kind of person to whom should be entrusted the responsibility which is being provided for under this act. I say to the minister that he has handled this bill, in my judgment, as adroitly and efficiently as any member of this government has been able to demonstrate his or her capacity so to do, but he does not do himself justice when he allows himself to let rest the explanation which he gives. One might expect that kind of explanation from the Minister of Justice, but one would not expect that the present minister with his experience as head of a provincial government and with the sincerity which obviously he had when he introduced this measure, would give this sort of explanation. I appeal to him to take the house into his confidence. When the government formed this board, in concept at any rate, it must have had in mind the kind of chairman it wanted. It must have had in mind an outstanding person, I presume in the Atlantic provinces, one who knows the Atlantic provinces, who is aware of the problems facing the fishermen, the farmers, and those engaged in the factories and the universities, the kind of person who could represent the four different provincial regions. That kind of person obviously must be a man of considerable competence. We ask the minister to tell us whether or not this bill was drawn up simply because the government was hard put to demonstrate that it had a program to meet the problems, which are now of an emergent character, and that it was not resorting to this particular technique—as has been done by the government on other occasions—of introducing a measure which looks good but which lacks, on examination, any substance whatsoever. If the minister tells us tonight—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am glad I have given my hon. friends and particularly the Minister of Justice, some cause for merriment.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): You have given us some bad grammar.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I can assure hon. gentlemen that the explanation the Minister of Fisheries and the Minister of National Revenue have given tonight will not go down well with the Atlantic provinces. They expect something more from this government. If the government has in mind—

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Mr. Chairman, on a point of order, they got nothing from the Liberals for 22 years.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, I always appreciate the interventions of the hon. member for Saint John-Albert. They always consist of single sentences which are so incomprehensible that even on reflection and upon re-reading they are not understood by himself.

The Minister of Fisheries said that it may be that the analogy of the dollar-a-year man will apply, and that perhaps someone who does not need assistance or remuneration by the crown will take on this responsibility as a voluntary assignment. I am sure that there are many people in the Atlantic provinces who are capable of fitting in with this concept which the Minister of Fisheries has in mind. But in such an event there would be no difficulty in such person returning the salary which might be given under this bill to such a chairman.

The minister said that the bill is intended to represent a serious endeavour; that it is an attempt to provide the government with an advisory body to deal with the fundamental economic problems which face the Atlantic provinces. If that is the case I suggest that the minister take this subsection back to his colleagues and tell them he is embarrassed by the explanation they have caused him to make tonight. Then let him come back and tell us that he has in mind somebody who will spend his full time on the job, who will be paid a salary adequate to the demands which will be made upon him. No explanation less than this will satisfy this house. No explanation less than this will satisfy the Atlantic provinces. Anything less than this will be evidence of an intention on the part of the government to introduce in this bill something that looks good in form but which is not capable, in its very wording and provisions, of doing anything substantial to help the Atlantic area.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, the observations made by the hon. member for Essex East are not the observations that one would expect from someone who had read the bill through. If the hon. member would read the bill he would find that the executive director is the full time servant of the board. It was never necessarily intended that the chairman would be full time. If he has not taken the trouble to read the bill, then I am not responsible for his lack of perception. But he himself is responsible if he has not read the bill through and is not familiar with all its details. Therefore I suggest that he read the bill through, because he will find the answers to most of the points he has raised. I would say this to him, that I am not particularly worried about how the people of the Atlantic provinces will take this bill. They will consider that this bill is a forward step, and much more than they ever got from the government of which he was a member. Whenever the Atlantic provinces wanted something, no matter how much—

The Deputy Chairman: Order. It being ten o'clock shall I rise, report progress, and request leave to sit again?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause 5 stands.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I could inquire from the house leader if the government has decided what they are going to bring forward tomorrow?

Mr. Churchill: A continuation of this particular bill, Mr. Speaker, on the general understanding that, having started a bill, we will try to carry it through to completion. That having been finished, we will then go on with the national economic development board, and on Wednesday the Minister of Finance will be prepared for interim supply. Immediately after orders of the day tomorrow I should like to consult with the house leaders of the various parties, now that we have an idea of how much progress we can make this week.

It being three minutes after ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

AIR TRANSPORT

BAGOTVILLE, QUE.—REPORT ON ACCIDENT

Hon. Pierre Sevigny (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I have here the report of an accident involving an R.C.A.F. Voodoo aircraft and a T.C.A. Viscount, which occurred at Bagotville on October 10, 1962. This report is rather lengthy; it covers three pages. May I ask permission to put it on record?

Mr. Speaker: The minister would like to make a report on an air collision which occurred at Bagotville. Does the house agree to have that report put into Hansard?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Sevigny: On October 11, 1962, my colleague, the Minister of National Defence, reported to the house that, on the previous evening, an accident had occurred at Bagotville which involved a Voodoo R.C.A.F. aircraft and a T.C.A. Viscount.

At that time he stated that a complete report would be made when the official board of inquiry had been completed.

The board of inquiry has been completed on this accident and reveals that the crash occurred as a result of the aerodrome control officer issuing take-off clearance to the Voodoo aircraft before the Viscount was clear of the runway in use.

The circumstances which led to the accident are as follows. As the T.C.A. Viscount landed at 7.49 p.m., clearance was given to the R.C.A.F. Voodoo to line up on the runway and hold its position. After the Viscount had landed, the aerodrome controller cleared it to proceed to the terminal building via the first intersection. The Viscount was observed by the controller to commence a turn to the left at the first intersection. He then gave take-off clearance to the Voodoo but, at this point, his attention was momentarily diverted to other traffic on the airfield. When the controller next observed the Viscount, he saw that it had not, in fact, completed the turn off at the first intersection and had continued on down the runway to the next intersection.

After being given clearance to taxi onto the runway, the pilot of the Voodoo lined up at the take-off position and observed the Viscount commence a turn to the left before he received take-off clearance. He then applied take-off power and checked his instruments before releasing the brakes. After cutting in his afterburners during the take-off run he again checked his instruments and then as he looked up he saw the tail of the Viscount immediately in front of him. As he had just gained flying speed and was about to retract the undercarriage, he pulled back on the control column as hard as he could in an attempt to avoid a collision. The pilot then heard a loud crash and ripping sound and the Voodoo aircraft started to go out of control. He managed to gain sufficient altitude with his disabled aircraft to enable a successful ejection.

The investigation revealed that the Voodoo struck the tail section of the Viscount just as the Viscount was commencing its turn off runway. The entire roof of the Viscount was torn out by the Voodoo undercarriage but the wheel travelled through the cabin between the seats missing the majority of the passengers. The two exceptions were the stewardess who was killed instantly and a passenger who was seriously injured at the time and subsequently died.

To attempt to eliminate the possibility of further accidents of this nature, steps have been taken to ensure that all aircraft are well clear of the runway in use before a departing aircraft is cleared for take-off.

Claims by persons who suffered injury or loss in this unfortunate accident have been made and settlements are being negotiated at present—but until such time as the negotiations are brought to a successful conclusion or adjudicated upon by the proper court, it would not be in the interests of either the claimants or the crown to make a statement concerning legal responsibility for this accident.

PRIVILEGE

MR. GREGOIRE—REQUEST FOR RESTORATION OF QUESTION TO ORDER PAPER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, and I should like to state the facts immediately.

It would seem that some people want to impede members in the accomplishment of their duties, or at least to practice obstruction concerning the questions they ask. Thus, some time ago I inserted a question on the order paper in which I asked what was the length of service with the C.N.R., the qualifications and the experience of the 28 senior officers which I named one after the other. The reply was as follows:

> The policy of the management on the questions which have been asked has been explained many times—

It was pointed out that:

> —it is not the management's policy to supply information from confidential files on officials or employees; this policy has met with the approval of the sessional committee on railways, airlines and shipping. Appointments are the result of judicious appraisal of the competence and experience of incumbents.

The information I was seeking in connection with the 28 officers of the C.N.R. is not privileged information; it only deals with their length of service, qualifications and experience. Yet the answer was that it was not customary to give such information. That is why I am requesting the reinstatement of my question on the order paper so that the house may be given an informative answer.

Mr. Speaker: Order. If the hon. member looks up the rules, he will notice that his point of privilege is not actually what it purports to be. If he is not satisfied with the answer, as I said the other day, there may be grounds for grievance, and the hon. member will have an opportunity to submit such grievance to the house in due time. Furthermore, and this has been stated time after time, a member has no right to comment on the nature of the answer given him.

Therefore, his question of privilege was out of order—

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order. As for his request to put back his question on the order paper, I must ask him to study the rules of the house and most particularly Beauchesne's citation 171, I think, to the effect that questions cannot be repeated.

[Mr. Sevigny.]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. It is not only about that question; the same goes for all questions we ask about the Canadian National Railways company. We can never obtain an adequate answer.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Once again—

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, if you will kindly allow me to complete my remarks—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member cannot insist. He understands the rules as well as the others, and I would refer him to Beauchesne's citation 181, which can be found at the bottom of page 153, and which reads as follows: "A refusal to answer cannot be raised as a question of privilege, nor is it regular to comment upon such refusal." Therefore, the hon. member cannot rise on a question of privilege and, as I indicated to him a moment ago—and I hope that will be the end of the discussion—if he has any grievances to submit to the house, he will have the opportunity of doing so in due course, but he cannot do so now.

[Later:]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, I would like to raise a point of order concerning a ruling you made on one of my questions.

I had referred to section 3 of citation 181 of Beauchesne. According to Beauchesne, it is understood that a minister may decline to answer a question without stating the reason for his refusal.

Now, Mr. Speaker, because of the answer given by the Minister of Transport to a question appearing in my name on the order paper and which reads as follows:

> —the management of the Canadian National Railways informs us that the information concerning that question was given at the hearings of the sessional committee on railways, airlines and shipping.

I think paragraph 2 of citation 181 in Beauchesne would apply better in this case than paragraph 3—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Would the hon. member please refer to paragraph 3. I have given my ruling and he cannot question it.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: And I will indicate to him once and for all that the practice followed in this house is in keeping with paragraph 3 of citation 181 in Beauchesne. Now—

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, if you would allow me to state my point—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, I feel I should at least be permitted to state my views on the matter.

Mr. Speaker: No. I have indicated to the hon. member that a ruling had been made. He is free to resort to a certain procedure, but the rule is this: the refusal to answer cannot justify a question of privilege. The hon. member is asked to kindly resume his seat while the Chair states—

Mr. Gregoire: I object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I hope the hon. member is not trying to get a rise out of the Chair. I remind him that the rule is really as I indicated, and the matter is closed.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, I rose on a point of order to state my case. The minister did not refuse to reply to my question, he gave me an answer—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have been patient with the hon. member. I ask him to resume his seat and to let the house proceed to another matter.

TRADE

WHEAT—REPORTED DELAY IN NEGOTIATIONS FOR FURTHER SALES TO CHINA

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce, in the absence of the Minister of Agriculture, whether he can comment on the reports that the negotiations for further sales of wheat to communist China under the current agreement are being held up because of the Chinese demand for better credit terms.

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Yes, Mr. Speaker. As hon. members are aware, a delegation from the Canadian wheat board has been negotiating a further sales contract under the long term agreement. No information is available that those negotiations have been concluded. I wish to assure the house that it will be informed in the usual manner as soon as it is possible to do so.

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I wonder whether the Minister of Trade and Commerce could inform the house when his colleague the Minister of Agriculture will return, since the Minister of Agriculture is quoted as saying that he is awaiting an opportunity to make this announcement in the house.

Mr. Hees: Tomorrow, Mr. Speaker.

REPORTED EXPORT RESTRICTIONS ON CANADIAN SUBSIDIARIES OF U.S. COMPANIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. L. Gordon (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. In the light of the statement made in Chicago yesterday by the Ontario economics and development minister, Mr. Macaulay, as reported in the Globe and Mail, will the minister say whether United States branch plants or subsidiaries in Canada are in fact prevented by their parent companies from accepting export orders?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think the hon. member will recognize that he is, directly or indirectly, inviting the Minister of Trade and Commerce to comment upon the statements of a minister not of this ministry but from outside this house. Under those circumstances and in view of the way he has put his question, I am afraid it is not acceptable.

[Later:]

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Speaker, without reference to any comments or reports in any newspaper whatever, may I ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce whether United States branch plants or subsidiaries in Canada are in fact prevented by their parent companies from accepting export orders.

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is obviously referring to a statement made in Chicago yesterday by—

Mr. Speaker: Order. If the previous question was quite improper, the minister is now also embarking on an entirely improper course. The question which has now been put is in quite acceptable form. If the minister is prepared to answer it in the same manner I think we can hear his answer.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, I make a point of not commenting on observations made by provincial ministers, but I am always interested to hear any observations of Mr. Macaulay, because in representing his government he is doing the same kind of job for the producers of Ontario as this government is doing for the producers of Canada.

Inquiries of the Ministry

OIL—OTTAWA MEETINGS CONCERNING CANADIAN EXPORTS TO U.S.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Jack Davis (Coast-Capilano): I wish to address a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Are meetings being held this week in Ottawa to set a ceiling on the amount of crude oil to be exported to the United States in the next 12 months?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Trade and Commerce): If the hon. member had been in the house he would have heard me make a fairly full statement on the subject a few days ago.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think the correctness of the first part of the minister's reply is open to serious doubt. It may be that the hon. member was not here, but I do not think it was proper to comment.

LUMBER—REPRESENTATIONS RESPECTING IMPORTS INTO U.S.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Arthur Laing (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce a question. What representations are being made to the secretary of commerce of the United States in respect of the new restrictions imposed on the use of Canadian lumber, presumably under presidential direction?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the hearings by the United States tariff commission on the complaint lodged by the United States lumber industry have been completed, but so far no decision has been handed down and one is not expected until after the end of the year. At the hearings the Canadian point of view, namely that Canadian lumber should continue to be allowed to enter the United States market free of quota, was ably presented to the tariff commission and was well accepted.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

REQUEST FOR REFERENCE OF PUBLIC ACCOUNTS TO COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Alan Macnaughton (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have a question I should like to direct to the Minister of Finance. I have not been able to give him notice, but I am sure he does not need it. In order to enable the committee on public accounts to proceed on Thursday next, will the Minister of Finance arrange for the motion referring the public accounts to the committee to be made tomorrow, Wednesday?

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of Finance): Yes, subject to the approval of the house leader, Mr. Speaker.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON SECURITY INVESTIGATIONS IN UNIVERSITIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. In view of conflicting reports by students, professors at Canadian universities and the R.C.M.P. regarding security investigations carried on by the R.C.M.P., could the Minister of Justice make a statement either today or tomorrow regarding the policy followed by the R.C.M.P. in connection with such security investigations?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I find some difficulty in accepting a question asking for a policy statement. However, if it is deemed to be business of the house perhaps the minister could reply in that regard, if he is prepared to do so.

[Later:]

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Justice in the same field as the question asked by the hon. member for Winnipeg North. In view of the fact that many universities are now electing representatives to model parliaments, would he indicate whether participation in such electoral activities leaves students open to R.C.M.P. investigation?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I would think that activities with respect to some political parties might leave students open to question as to their wisdom.

[Later:]

Mr. Thomas R. Berger (Vancouver-Burrard): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. Will the minister tell the house whether the R.C.M.P. are interviewing university students and faculty members in Quebec to inform the R.C.M.P. regarding the political activities of other students and faculty members?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The minister answered a previous question in similar vein, and I am just wondering whether these matters are such that they should be asked on orders of the day. Is the information so urgently required? I am not indicating that the subject matter may not be important, but I would like to have hon. members recognize the fact that questions on orders of the day should be on important matters and that the information concerned is such that it should be sought immediately. I am just wondering whether this is one of those questions that would so qualify.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order may I suggest that these questions relate to a matter concerning which there are reports current at the present time, and surely if there is any point to asking questions on orders of the day it is to get statements regarding matters concerning which there is urgency before a situation develops. I submit that these questions in the light of news reports, conflicting as they are, call for a statement from the Minister of Justice.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, if you wish to weigh these observations on the question of urgency all I can say to you is that I have had no such complaint whatsoever. Apparently these questions stem from an editorial which appeared in a student publication.

Mr. Berger: Would the minister inform the house whether in fact the R.C.M.P. are interviewing students with a view to ascertaining information about the political activities of other students? I was not asking the minister whether he had received complaints.

Mr. Orlikow: Does the minister not remember that several days ago I took up a particular complaint with him personally?

Mr. Speaker: Order. That is not a supplementary; that is an assertion.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

ALLEGED PRESSURE TO WITHHOLD INFORMATION FROM MEMBERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Minister of Transport a question. Can the minister tell us whether undue pressure has been brought to bear upon him to prevent him from giving us information about the C.N.R.

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege—

Mr. Speaker: Order. There is no question of privilege here.

I would again suggest to the hon. member that he look up the citation concerning the nature of questions allowed in the house, and I might tell him that his inquiry was not at all in keeping with standing orders, apart from being contrary to the spirit which ought to prevail in the house.

Mr. Gregoire: In any case, it was in keeping with the facts.

Mr. Speaker: I want to point out to the hon. member that he is not entitled to rise and comment upon answers.

Mr. Balcer: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member for Lapointe asked several questions with regard to a crown corporation, and since I have been Minister of Transport, I have always followed the principle of dealing in one and the same way with all crown corporations for which I am the spokesman in the house. And the answers given to the hon. member were entirely in keeping with the tradition of the house, which is that report be made with regard to crown corporations according to certain rules and standards, which is what I have always done.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, as far as the question of privilege is concerned—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I heard the question and the minister could not rise on a question of privilege. All he did was answer a question which was not acceptable, and I hope that this will put a stop to gratuitous comments.

CIVIL DEFENCE

REPORTED CONVERSION OF PUBLIC BUILDINGS INTO FALL-OUT SHELTERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for York East—

Some hon. Members: York Centre.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will excuse itself. It has lost itself in a fog in Toronto on occasion.

Mr. James E. Walker (York Centre): Mr. Speaker was not the only one who had that happen to him.

I have a question for the Minister of National Defence. In his absence perhaps the Prime Minister might answer it. Is the government pushing ahead with an estimated one billion dollar program of converting over 4,000 public buildings into community fall-out shelters, as has been reported by the minister of defence to the press?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): I would have to see the report of what was said before I would comment on it.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Walker: Would it be information that the Prime Minister is seeking? If I might—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think we shall adopt the conventional methods of getting it across.

TELEVISION

HOCKEY—REQUEST FOR COMPLETE BROADCAST OF MAPLE LEAF GAMES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. R. Tucker (Trinity-Conception): I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State, and I apologize for not having given him notice of it. Will the minister use his good offices to have all periods of the Maple Leaf home hockey games televised on Wednesday and Saturday nights?

Hon. G. E. Halpenny (Secretary of State): I will take that question as notice.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

MEETING OF PRIME MINISTERS OF UNITED KINGDOM AND CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gerard Chapdelaine (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister.

The Prime Minister informed the house recently, to the great pleasure of all, that he had been invited to the Bahamas by the Prime Minister of Great Britain, Mr. Macmillan. A London newspaper, The People, stated yesterday that the English prime minister was displeased because our Prime Minister had invited himself.

Could the Prime Minister tell us if he invited himself or if he was invited by the Prime Minister of Great Britain, Mr. Macmillan?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member should know—and I think he does now—that it is not in order to ask the Prime Minister to comment on a news report, whatever it may be. That leads to controversy and, furthermore, by asking such a question it could be assumed that the hon. member endorses the principles or the remarks contained in that article.

(Text):

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege affecting all hon. members, I submit to Your Honour that there is no other way of finding out what this government is doing than reading the papers and then asking questions.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I do not think I need comment in extenso on the nature of the question of privilege which has been raised.

(Translation):

[Later:]

Mr. Chapdelaine: Mr. Speaker, I should like to redraft my question.

(Text):

I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he has invited himself, or has he been invited, to the Bahamas.

(Translation):

[Later:]

Mr. Chapdelaine: Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the Prime Minister a question.

(Text):

Does his refusal to answer my last question mean that he invited himself to the Bahamas?

(Translation):

Mr. Speaker: Order. Those were the hon. member's words.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

SONS OF FREEDOM, B.C.—VISIT OF DELEGATION TO OTTAWA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of Justice which is of urgent and national importance. Has the Minister of Justice received any information from the attorney general of British Columbia with respect to the visit to Ottawa of a delegation from the Sons of Freedom?

PUBLIC SERVICE

INQUIRY AS TO SALARY INCREASES FOR CLERKS AND TYPISTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Alexis Caron (Hull): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Could the minister explain why the clerks and typists grades 1 and 2 do not benefit under the salary increase announced yesterday by the minister?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I realize what the hon. member is getting at, but suggest to him that he is asking for an argumentative answer. When he asks whether the minister will explain why something is done, he is inviting an argumentative answer. Subject to that, the minister can reply to the question on an information basis, but not on an argumentative basis.

Mr. Caron: The only thing I want to get is information as to why they are not included. The minister can certainly say why they were not.

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, because the pay research bureau reported in that way.

EXTENSION OF CHECK-OFF TO GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEE ORGANIZATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Is the government giving consideration to the extension of the check-off to all government employee organizations, as requested once again this morning by the Canadian Labour Congress?

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of Finance): The government is giving no consideration to that at the moment, Mr. Speaker.

BREAD

INQUIRY AS TO ACTION RESPECTING PRICE INCREASE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Jack Roxburgh (Norfolk): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether the government has taken any action to prevent the present rise in the price of bread.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member knows, of course, that under the British North America Act the federal government has no power in that regard.

Mr. Pickersgill: What about Magog?

Mr. Diefenbaker: To the hon. gentleman who makes these observations from a sitting position I would say that his observation is as intelligent as those he usually makes.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, the right hon. gentleman has chosen to say that my question was as intelligent as usual. He did not hear my question. My question was this. What did his Magog speech mean?

Mr. Speaker: I recognize the hon. member for York South.

UNITED NATIONS

SOUTH AFRICA—IMPLEMENTATION OF SANCTIONS IN RESPECT OF APARTHEID

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether to intrude on the levity; however, I have a question for the Prime Minister. I may say that I gave him notice of it. It arises out of a question I asked him yesterday. You will forgive me if I take a moment in which to draw attention to it. I had asked the Prime Minister whether the government contemplated any action in accordance with the United Nations resolution with respect to South Africa. The right hon. gentleman replied—and I am not quoting the exact words—that it was necessary to take that resolution first to the security council before consideration could be given to it.

I can well appreciate the fact that the Prime Minister cannot carry every detail in his mind. However, in view of the fact that the statement made by the Prime Minister was in error, would he now inform the house whether the government is considering implementing paragraph 4 of the resolution passed by the general assembly of the United Nations on November 6 last requesting the member states of the United Nations, without reference to the security council, to undertake certain measures against South Africa, particularly to boycott South African goods and to refrain from exporting goods to South Africa?

Mr. Speaker: Order. There are one or two things I should like to say. First of all I think the hon. member is commenting on the nature of a reply given, and that his statement that the answer was in error is not in accordance with the practice of this house. Subject to the consideration that this procedure was not proper, if the Prime Minister wishes to reply he may do so.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in so far as the first part of the question is concerned, namely that my statement was in error, may I say this. What I stated represented the views of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Green) who is fully cognizant of these matters. It was following discussion with him that I made the statement in question.

As to the latter or effective part of the question may I say this. This government has taken the stand that sanctions have not been effective at any time. It is all very well to argue that we should indulge in sanctions against South Africa. This is one of the countries with which we have dealt on the friendliest terms throughout the years. Sanctions would have the effect of denying to Canadians business to the extent of perhaps $40 million or $50 million a year. As sanctions have been proven to be ineffective in the past, such action will not be taken by this government.

Inquiries of the Ministry

COMBINES

SUGGESTED TRANSFER OF LEGISLATION FROM CRIMINAL TO CIVIL FIELD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John R. Matheson (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Justice. Is the government now studying means of transferring anti-combine legislation from the criminal field to the civil field?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the answer to as broad a question as that must be no, but I have indicated on several occasions that any suggestions anyone wishes to put forward for improvement of our combines legislation or administration will be very carefully studied. The hon. member must know that the basis of federal jurisdiction in this field has been construed by the courts to be the authority of parliament in relation to criminal law.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. S. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Justice a supplementary or related question to the one just addressed by the hon. member for Leeds. Has the government had any communications with the provincial governments with respect to sharing jurisdiction over combines legislation for the purpose of broadening the base?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No, Mr. Speaker.

FINANCE

INQUIRY AS TO CHANGE IN PLANS FOR SURCHARGE REMOVAL

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Finance a question. In view of the Minister of Labour's comment before the Canadian Labour Congress delegation today that the C.L.C. criticism of the government's emergency surcharges is a reflection of the views of large United States industries, would the minister tell us if there has been any change in the government's announced plans to abolish these surcharges at the earliest possible moment?

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of Finance): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The Minister of Labour has been proved wrong again.

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

INQUIRY AS TO REVISION OF BANKRUPTCY ACT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Leon Crestohl (Cartier): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Justice. Can the minister inform the house whether his department or his officials are studying a revision of the Bankruptcy Act of Canada, or whether submissions have been sent to them requesting either amendments to or a revision of the Bankruptcy Act?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, there is before the Senate a short bill to amend the Bankruptcy Act. It may come forward to this house soon. Apart from that, a more general revision of the act has been under study for some time but it will not be ready to be introduced at the present session. However, it has been indicated to those who may be interested that the government will be pleased to receive any suggestions with respect to amendments to the act at any time, and these will be carefully studied.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

INQUIRY AS TO EXTENSION OF PAY INCREASES TO EMPLOYEES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Defence Production. Will employees of crown corporations that come under the jurisdiction of the minister receive pay increases comparable to those announced for classified civil servants, and will they be retroactive to the same dates?

Hon. Raymond O'Hurley (Minister of Defence Production): This depends on the arrangements of the crown corporations, and as far as I know the answer is no.

TRANSPORTATION

RAILWAY BRANCH LINES—REQUEST FOR POLICY STATEMENT RESPECTING ABANDONMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. I wonder whether the minister intends to report to the house following his conversation with the presidents of the two railway companies with regard to the vexatious matter of railway branch line abandonment.

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Argue: Can the minister say whether he has received requests from the provincial governments on the prairies to delay proceedings until after the Regina conference on December 20?

Mr. Balcer: Yes, Mr. Speaker, we have received some representations. We have answered those representations in writing, and we have emphasized the fact that these matters are being handled by the board of transport commissioners and that while it might appear that there were quite a number of them, the board of transport commissioners could not process more than a rather small number of those requests up to the time the legislation on the MacPherson commission report could be implemented by the House of Commons.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

BENEFITS TO CANADIANS WORKING IN THE UNITED STATES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Pierre-Andre Boutin (Dorchester): I have a question for the Minister of Labour.

A month ago I asked him a question about unemployment insurance coverage for Canadian loggers working in the state of Maine. In his reply he stated that Canada and the state of Maine were continually negotiating toward an agreement which would be forthcoming in a matter of a few months.

Could he tell us now whether any real progress has been made in the last month toward reaching such an agreement?

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member reads Hansard for yesterday or the day before, I believe he will find his answer.

(Text):

PRINTING AND BINDING OF GILL COMMITTEE REPORT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I just want to ask my daily question of the Secretary of State to find out whether he has yet discovered whether the Gill report has been completed by the printing bureau and is ready for distribution.

Hon. G. E. Halpenny (Secretary of State): Yes, Mr. Speaker. This morning I was advised that the Gill report will be available to hon. members in both French and English sometime before the end of this year.

Mr. Pickersgill: What a farce.

Mr. Halpenny: This will allow hon. members to consider fully the contents before they return on January 21.

POWER

KOOTENAY RIVER—APPLICATION FOR LICENCE TO CONSTRUCT DAM

On the orders of the day:

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, on Friday last the hon. member for Kootenay East asked if an application had been received from the province of British Columbia for a licence under the International River Improvements Act to construct a dam or a weir in a tributary of the Kootenay river. I am now in a position to advise the house that no such application has been received in my department.

ATLANTIC DEVELOPMENT BOARD

PROVISION FOR DEFINITION OF DUTIES, APPOINTMENT OF MEMBERS, ETC.

The house resumed, from Monday, December 10, consideration in committee of Bill No. C-94, to provide for the establishment of an Atlantic development board—Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton)—Mr. Chown in the chair.

On clause 5—Travelling and living expenses.

The Chairman: When the committee rose last evening an amendment to clause 5 was under consideration, and I want to address myself to that amendment before we proceed this afternoon. Last evening, when this bill was before the committee, the Minister of Fisheries moved the following amendment:

That Bill C-94, an act to provide for the establishment of an Atlantic development board, be amended by striking out subclause (2) of clause 5 thereof and substituting therefor the following:

(2) Notwithstanding subsection (1), the chairman of the board may be paid such amount per annum as an honorarium as may be approved by the governor in council.

Whereupon the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate raised a point of order on the ground that the effect of the amendment would be to raise a charge against the exchequer and that no such charge may be imposed without a message from the crown.

It would appear that the amendment does not in itself provide for an increased charge. It merely inserts a general provision for one of a specific nature. At any rate, authority for the acceptance of such amendments is to be found in section 3 of citation 246, Beauchesne's fourth edition, which in part reads as follows:

The guiding principle in determining the effect of an amendment upon the financial initiative of the crown is that the communication, to which the royal demand of recommendation is attached, must be treated as laying down once for all (unless withdrawn and replaced) not only the amount of a charge, but also its objects, purposes, conditions and qualifications.

In this case, the communication to which the royal demand or recommendation was attached is the resolution presented to the house on Monday, November 19 last. That resolution reads as follows:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to establish an Atlantic development board and to define the duties thereof, to provide for the appointment of the chairman and other members of the board and for the payment of certain expenses of the members thereof, to provide for the appointment of an executive director of the board and for the payment of his remuneration, to provide further that the board may engage the services of such advisers and staff as may be necessary to enable it to carry out its duties and to provide further for other related and incidental matters.

As the recommendation of the crown did not specify or place a limitation on the amount of the charge to be imposed by provisions of this bill, it is suggested that the amendment is in order.

I might point out at this stage that this ruling is consistent with the decision I made earlier last evening with respect to the amendment presented by the New Democratic party to increase the membership of the board from five to 15.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, last evening when the committee rose we had just listened to a dissertation from the hon. member for Essex East in connection with certain aspects of the Atlantic development bill. I wonder how it is that the hon. member for Essex East is delegated as the spokesman for the official opposition in connection with this matter.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): If my hon. friend will permit me—

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): I wonder who has the floor, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am sure the minister would not deny me the opportunity to explain that I am not the official spokesman. I am just following the leadership of the Liberal maritime members, and as a Canadian I am showing interest in the Atlantic provinces, as we all should.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): A very belated interest—about 30 years late.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): I quite agree with the observation that it is somewhat late. Anyway the hon. member had been expressing an opinion that this bill in its present form was a useless one so far as the Atlantic provinces were concerned, and was good for nothing. That is my understanding of what he said, and in the absence of any contradiction I shall assume that is what he said.

[The Chairman.]

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Of course I never said that at all.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): All right, Mr. Chairman. I have his words before me, so let us examine the record. He said, as reported in Hansard of yesterday's date at page 2524:

Then let him come back and tell us that he has in mind somebody who will spend his full time on the job, who will be paid a salary adequate to the demands which will be made upon him. No explanation less than this will satisfy this house. No explanation less than this will satisfy the Atlantic provinces. Anything less than this will be evidence of an intention on the part of the government to introduce in this bill something that looks good in form but which is not capable, in its very wording and provisions, or doing anything substantial to help the Atlantic area.

That is the basis upon which I say he says the bill is useless.

An hon. Member: No, he didn't.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): I submit, Mr. Chairman, that this is a proper interpretation of his remarks. It does not bother me at all to have these interruptions by maritime members who express lip service to this bill, but actually in practice, I am afraid, their actions in this house are capable of a very different interpretation.

The hon. member professed to speak for the Atlantic provinces last evening. He professed to see in this bill something which they would not appreciate, something which did not go as far as it should in providing a vehicle by which the various submissions that have been made over a long period of time to various governments might receive attention and subsequent action. He expressed, I am sure he would be the first to admit, a tremendous amount of doubt as to whether it was any good.

Well, Mr. Chairman, with respect to his speaking for the Atlantic provinces I would say this. I might also just mention at this time words that have been uttered in this house by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate in connection particularly with Prince Edward Island. I think if he listened to the results of the election in Prince Edward Island yesterday they were quite capable of giving the answer, and they gave it. I do not think the results gave a great deal of satisfaction to the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate or the hon. member for Essex East, or perhaps any of our hon. friends sitting within my particular range of vision at the moment. Now, coming back—

Mr. Robichaud: What clause of the bill is this?

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): We quite understand the hon. member for Gloucester's ignorance of it because he has paid no attention to it since he has been here, so why would he know anything about it now?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

The Chairman: Order.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I would like to bring to the attention of the committee simply this. I will leave politics aside for the moment.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, they chose to introduce the subject and they required an answer. I am sure the hon. member for Essex East received his answer and I hope he is satisfied. But I would like to refer hon. members to the editorials which appeared in the St. John Telegraph-Journal and the Fredericton daily Gleaner after this bill was introduced.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order—

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Pickersgill: —perhaps hon. gentlemen would allow me to make my point of order and then they can speak to it. My point of order is that we are supposed to debate measures in this house and not to import into such debate comments from editorials—this was raised the other day when I quoted one —that appear before or after a measure has been dealt with. We are not supposed to import them into our discussions. There are several I would like to read. I do not want to restrict the minister, but I hope the same liberty will be accorded to both sides of the house.

The Chairman: Could the minister advise the committee whether he was reading from an editorial?

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): No, Mr. Chairman, I was not reading.

Mr. Pickersgill: He was discussing it. I did not suggest that he was reading.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): I was simply quoting.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: From memory.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): From memory, that is right. I wonder whether the hon. gentleman from Bonavista-Twillingate has ever quoted from memory. I think he has, but very seldom accurately. Here is my point, Mr. Chairman, and it is a relatively important one. Who are we going to accept as the authority on the maritime provinces and on their problems? Are we going to accept the hon. member for Essex East, or are we going to accept even the hon. member, the transplanted member, from Bonavista-Twillingate, who I welcome as a fellow Atlantic province citizen?

Mr. Robichaud: Or do we accept the Gleaner?

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): Let us not get into that.

Mr. Robichaud: You started it.

Mr. Pickersgill: Let us come back to the bill.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): This is the point I am making, Mr. Chairman. Whom do we take our authority from? Whom do we take for guidance?

An hon. Member: We take the voters.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): You can take the voters of Prince Edward Island yesterday, if you like. They expressed their approval yesterday of the actions of this government and of this measure. There is no doubt about that. Undoubtedly it was mentioned. This is what I am trying to get up to if I can get a little bit of attention, Mr. Chairman. The editorial comment in those two newspapers indicated that the bill before the committee which we are considering at the moment clause by clause has tremendous possibility for the Atlantic provinces.

I do not think any hon. member opposite would say that one of those newspapers is particularly friendly to the administration. The other newspaper supports the administration because the administration have a definite policy with respect to the Atlantic provinces for the first time in about 50 years. We have paid special attention to the Atlantic provinces. It was requested from the government of which the hon. member for Essex East was a member, of which the Leader of the Opposition was a member, of which the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate was a member, but the words fell on deaf ears and no result was seen until this government came into office.

The Chairman: Order. I am sorry. I am sorry to interrupt the minister but I thought the general debate was over and that we were specifically addressing ourselves to a very much narrower amendment. I would ask the co-operation of the minister in this connection.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, I would like to recall, very respectfully, that last night when the hon. member for Essex East jumped into the debate it is impossible that he could have been discussing anything in this bill because he has not read it. It is impossible that he could have been discussing anything about the maritimes because he does not even know where the maritimes are. Therefore I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that we have been allowed to stray a little from the clauses of this bill; and to call the minister to order now when he is replying to some of the charges that were made last evening is pushing the rules of this house too far.

May I also mention, on a point of order, this matter to which the hon. member from Bonavista-Twillingate keeps referring; that is, the quoting of newspapers with respect to debate taking place in the house. This is the third time he has invoked this citation without referring to it and I think if he keeps it up he may be giving us a bad precedent. The citation in this connection is No. 157 of Beauchesne, and I quote from page 133:

> The rule is quite clear, that the quoting of a newspaper, an author or a book which reflects upon debate before the house, either directly or indirectly is entirely out of order, because members are here to give their own opinion and not to quote the opinion of others . . .

I submit, Mr. Chairman, that when the minister wants to quote from a newspaper editorial that compliments, as most of them do, this particular bill establishing an Atlantic development board, it is quite in order provided it does not reflect upon any of the remarks that hon. members themselves may have made about the bill in the debate.

The Chairman: I did not hear the hon. member for Essex East—

An hon. Member: You will.

The Chairman: —nor can I judge whether I was lucky or otherwise in not having done so. But this is an amendment narrow in its scope and, as the minister realizes, there will be other opportunities to debate the bill more generally, perhaps on third reading. At the moment we should try to address ourselves to the amendment which is before the committee.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I think I have mentioned that I felt, gathering from his remarks that the hon. member for Essex East had not read the bill. I repeat that. I do not think he has read the bill. He may have read it by now, of course; he has had overnight in which to do it. If he has done so he will have found that this measure provides for the very thing the absence of which he complained about last night. It provides for a full time executive director. If we could persuade the official opposition to go through this bill I am confident that when they got to the last clause they would feel satisfied that the various points they have raised have been well covered. That is my opinion.

Since we are talking on the question of salary, let me say, as I have said in this house on two or three occasions, that I think it is in the interests of the bill, in the interests of the progress which I hope will be made under the bill, and in the interests of the laudable results which we believe will be achieved by it, that we should go ahead and delete this provision for a $3,000 salary which is laid down in the bill as originally written. I think that to do so will strengthen this measure. I am sure all hon. members, many of whom have had more experience than I in administration and in the work of this house, will admit that there are many boards where remuneration to members is fixed by order in council. I am satisfied that if hon. gentlemen opposite would allow themselves the luxury of a fair and dispassionate approach to this question they would be the first to admit it.

While I am on my feet I should like to make one last appeal in connection with this bill. As everyone knows, I am anxious to see the bill pass through this house and go to the other place. I believe hon. members on all sides share this desire. I am going to ask hon. members in the other parties for their co-operation to this end, without wanting to restrict any general observations which they feel may result in improvement as far as the operation of the legislation is concerned. Undoubtedly the people who will be chosen to compose this board will read carefully the observations which are made in this chamber. Undoubtedly an effort will be made to meet the various views which are expressed here. With that qualification, I want to see us make some progress; I should like to have unanimous consent for third reading here this afternoon.

That is all I have to say at the moment. I believe I have covered the points raised by the hon. member for Essex East, though perhaps not to his satisfaction and only partially to my own. But I have said enough about this matter, and I have stated once again my view that the salary to be paid should be left flexible so that it may be dealt with by order in council. I believe that represents an improvement over the provision which was originally written.

Mr. Pearson: The minister has made an appeal for co-operation in expediting the progress of this bill, an appeal which probably would have aroused a little more sympathy on this side if he had not made his earlier remarks, which were certainly designed to provoke some counter comments from the opposition, and especially if the hon. member for Saint John-Albert had not seen fit to make reflections on some of my hon. friends.

If I do raise a small point I hope the minister will not accuse me of not having read the bill. He has been dealing with a matter of some importance, one in regard to which we thought we could improve this bill. It is, of course, our duty as the opposition to draw attention to improvements which we think could be made in a measure even where we have approved it in principle.

The hon. gentleman has said it was not reasonable that the chairman should be a full time member of this board. He said it was not reasonable to put into the bill the salary to be paid to him, and had we read the bill, we would have seen that there is to be an executive director appointed under clause 11, an executive director who of course would be subordinate to the chairman of the board. But though the minister may think this is the best way to proceed in regard to this board, I must call his attention, even at the risk of being out of order, to the provisions which are to govern another board which we shall be considering under which the chairman himself is to be the executive director. The government decided, in the case of that board, that this was the right way to proceed. He, the chairman, is a full time official of the board. We thought that was the best way to proceed in connection with the board we are now discussing, and that was the point of our remarks.

However, I can understand the minister's desire to get this bill through as quickly as possible, and we on this side have no wish to delay its passage subject to the proper discharge of our duty. Since we have had a good discussion on this matter we on this side, as far as we are concerned, are prepared to withdraw our opposition to the amendment the hon. gentleman has suggested.

Mr. MacInnis: Speaking on the amendment, Mr. Chairman, I should like to say to the minister that this is not the first time he has appealed for co-operation. He can appeal until he is blue in the face but the bill will not go through until we have made our remarks on it. He has already asked for co-operation and received it; whereupon he proceeded, along with his supporters, to take up more time than anyone else on this measure. The minister suggested on second reading that he would welcome objective, non-partisan proposals by hon. members for the improvement of this bill.

The Chairman: Order. The hon. member for Cape Breton South has not been relevant to the amendment in his remarks up to the moment, and I would ask him to come back to it.

Mr. MacInnis: I was just leading up to an amendment I was about to propose to the amendment which is before us. If the minister really meant what he said the other night when he told this house he would welcome proposals from members of the opposition, I ask him to consider this amendment. I move:

That the amendment to subclause (2) of clause 5 be amended by inserting after the word "chairman" in the second line thereof the words "who shall be a full time officer", and by deleting the words "amount per annum as an honorarium" and substituting therefor the words "salary and expenses", so that the amended subclause shall read as follows:

(2) Notwithstanding subsection (1), the chairman, who shall be a full time officer of the board, may be paid such salary and expenses as may be approved by the governor in council.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order, I would deal with this in the light of what you said on the point raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. I refer at once to the resolution on which this bill is founded. The resolution provides for the appointment of a chairman and other members of the board and for the payment of certain expenses of the members thereof. The resolution limits what can be paid to the members of the board in the nature of expenses. This amendment which has just been offered by the hon. member refers to the payment of a salary, which is quite outside the ambit of the resolution and is, I submit, definitely out of order.

The Chairman: Is there any other argument on this amendment?

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, on the point of order, all you need look at is the ruling which you gave at the commencement of the committee sitting this afternoon. If the point now made by the hon. member for Peace River were to be maintained it would not be possible under the terms of the resolution to accept the amendment moved by the Minister of Fisheries. It seems to me that the breadth of the resolution introduced on November 19 does permit not only the sort of amendment which was moved by the Minister of Fisheries, but also the sort of amendment which is now proposed to the Chair.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Mr. Chairman, it comes to my mind that the difference between the example that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has given and the point made by the parliamentary secretary to the Prime Minister is that the Minister of Fisheries is a minister of the crown and can move these money amendments, whereas the hon. member for Cape Breton South is an ordinary private member and cannot do so.

Mr. Knowles: On that point, Mr. Chairman, the question raised last night by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate was that the motion proposed by the Minister of Fisheries concerned a charge on the crown beyond what was approved, and therefore that the recommendation of the crown was called for. You, sir, from the chair today ruled that no further recommendation from the crown was called for because the recommendation of the crown with regard to the original resolution was broad enough.

Mr. Baldwin: In reply to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, this debate has proceeded all along on the basis that the word "honorarium" can be included within the word "expenses" in the resolution. I think it has been accepted by all members on both sides of the house that there is no exception to that. But there is a vast distinction between an honorarium as being attached as an expense, and a salary, which is of course a definite remuneration not in any sense of the word contemplated to be within the term "expense".

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Chairman. if that is the only problem that the parliamentary secretary has with this amendment, we would be glad to leave "salary" out of the wording and pay the chairman nothing but expenses. We do not care how he is paid or what wording is used, or whether he should be paid $10 an hour expenses. The main plank of the amendment is that there be a full time officer who can direct the activities of the board and see that something gets done. I would ask the minister who is introducing this bill what he has against having a full time chairman of the board.

The Chairman: The problem is the one already brought up. I was having difficulty in distinguishing between honorarium and salary. If the hon. member for Cape Breton South would remove the word "salary" from the proposed amendment I would be prepared to have another look at it.

Mr. MacInnis: Yes, Mr. Chairman, that will be fine. I will substitute the words "honorarium and expenses" for "salary and expenses".

[Mr. Knowles.]

The Chairman: The hon. member for Cape Breton South will have to withdraw his original amendment and reword it. Then he can present another one with the unanimous consent of the committee. Does the committee give unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, while some colleague of the hon. member, who would have a perfect right to move an amendment anyway, is drafting another amendment which could be moved, I am going to make an appeal to the minister, as I did on second reading. My appeal to the minister is that we solve this problem in another way entirely, in the way suggested at the time of second reading of the bill; that is, by having a minister as the chairman, and then there would not be any need for an honorarium, expenses or anything else. If that were the case we would have someone who was actually in the cabinet and who could see that the impact of this board was made directly upon the government. I think that would give this bill, even without a capital fund, a lot of value which it has not got now, because the chairman of the board would then be a member of this house who could be questioned by other hon. members as to how the board was progressing, what it was doing, what it was accomplishing. In that way we would not be insulated from it, as we will be with a part time chairman and a director, who has to go through the chairman to the minister and the minister then has to go to his colleagues.

I would ask the minister to take that matter up with his colleagues and to give consideration to it. I suggest that instead of proceeding with the amendment which the Minister of Fisheries has placed before us, the government ask the Minister of Fisheries to withdraw it and put forward another amendment which would make the chairman of the board a member of the government. I would certainly hold up both hands for that, and I would have a lot more complimentary things to say about the bill than I would with the bill in its present form. I ask the minister whether he will say something about that suggestion.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I do not mind saying something about it. I believe it would not only not help or improve the bill, but in my opinion it would be detrimental to the activities of the board, because there would be so many times when that minister would not be available for that duty. There are members opposite, of whom the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate is one, who have some idea, I think, of the many demands made on ministers. It is on that basis that on balance I think our original idea of having a chairman who would devote part of his time, and having a full time executive director, should stand.

While I am on my feet I should like to make an observation about the remarks of the Leader of the Opposition, because in my opinion there is no particular connection between the framework under which the Atlantic development board will operate and the framework within which the national economic board might operate. Conditions might be altogether different; I think every hon. member would acknowledge that. It just so happens that the government suggests—and it is quite prepared to take full responsibility for this—that the chairman shall be part time and that the board shall be a part time board. But they will have as an executive director a most competent individual, the best man they can possibly get, with knowledge, with dedication, and with the various attributes which will lend itself to a fair prospect of progress and success.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Is my hon. friend not aware of the fact that in the United Kingdom, where ministers of the crown likewise have great preoccupations, the chancellor of the exchequer has taken on the chairmanship of a national body whose functions in principle are not dissimilar to those under the proposal now before the committee but whose actual accomplishments, I think, are greater than those presently indicated under this measure will be as far as the Atlantic provinces are concerned. Hence merely because the minister is busy, should not preclude the acceptance of a proposition put forward. To do so would be to ignore completely what is done in other countries such as the United Kingdom, France, Belgium and West Germany.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): Perhaps the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate has a point there. However, the Minister of Justice has brought this fact to my attention, and I am sure hon. members opposite would consider this point most desirable. It is considered desirable that this board be entirely divorced from governmental direction so far as examination of various situations presented to them is concerned. I think that is also a tremendously important point.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): With great respect, Mr. Chairman, may I say this bill does not provide for that. As clause 9 clearly provides, the objects which the board will inquire into must be dealt with by way of a report to the minister. This is not an independent body that is being set up. This is a body which is no different in character from a government department, and that is what we are complaining about.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): I suggest to the hon. gentleman that he read at paragraph (d).

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I have done so.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): The hon. gentleman will find that under paragraph (d) they may have projects or situations brought to their attention, anything that they may consider usefully. I believe that is the phraseology used. I submit that is a fairly broad word.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): And report to the minister.

Mr. MacInnis: The minister has proceeded to investigate other clauses of the act about which we shall have something to say as well a little later on, but to come back to the specific item before us at the moment, if it is in order to do so I should like to rephrase the amendment and move as follows:

That the amendment to subclause 2 of clause 5 be amended by inserting after the word "chairman" in the second line thereof the words "who shall be a full time officer", and by deleting the words "amount per annum as an honorarium", and substituting therefor the words "honorarium and expenses", so that the amended subclause shall read as follows:

"2. Notwithstanding subsection (1), the chairman, who shall be a full time officer of the board, may be paid such honorarium and expenses as may be approved by the governor in council."

The Chairman: I indicated to the hon. member for Cape Breton South that I would have another look at his amended subamendment. When I reflect on this subamendment in the light of the opening words of the resolution on which the bill is based, I have some difficulty in finding that it is within the scope of the clause under consideration by the committee at the present time. The opening words of the resolution are:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to establish an Atlantic development board and to define the duties thereof, to provide for the appointment of the chairman and other members of the board—

And so on. The clause on which the amendment and subamendment are based is clause 5(2), which reads as follows:

Notwithstanding subsection (1), the chairman of the board may be paid such honorarium not exceeding three thousand dollars a year as may be approved by the governor in council.

I cannot find either in the resolution or in clause 5(2) any contemplation of a full time chairman of the board. It is for this reason that I am obliged to say that this subamendment goes outside the scope of the clause under consideration and the bill itself.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, will you not hear argument before you rule on it?

The Chairman: Yes, I shall be glad to hear argument.

Mr. Knowles: As Your Honour realizes, we thought that the point raised with regard to the amendment as previously worded was cleared up when the word "salary" was changed to the word "honorarium". You now seem to be bothered by the question of whether the terms of the resolution are wide enough to contemplate a full time chairman.

I just heard you say a moment ago that you do not read in the resolution the contemplation of a full time chairman. I submit that you cannot read in the resolution any opposition to the chairman of the board being full time. The resolution which is the basis for the bill says that there is to be introduced a measure to establish an Atlantic development board and to define the duties thereof, to provide for the appointment of the chairman and other members of the board and for the payment of certain expenses, and so on. In that phrase providing for the appointment of a chairman and other members of the board there is nothing which says it is contemplated that they be part time, full time, spare time or what have you. The phraseology is "to provide for the appointment of the chairman and other members of the board". I submit that it is within the four corners of that very broad provision for the bill to provide that one of the members of that board shall be on a full time basis. I think you were right earlier, Mr. Chairman, when you suggested that all that was needed was to change the word "salary" to "honorarium".

The Chairman: I thank the hon. member for his contribution directed toward assisting the Chair. May I say that I am having as well some difficulty as to relevancy. When you look at the explanatory notes in the bill having to do with the clause under consideration you find opposite subsection 1 the words "travelling and living expenses" and opposite subclause 2 the words "honorarium to chairman". That is what led me to the point of view that this amendment which contemplates a full time chairman does extend the scope of the bill. I probably do not need to quote these authorities. However, I will put them on the record anyway. I refer to Beauchesne's fourth edition, page 285, citation 406 which states as follows:

> Amendments are out of order if they are (a) irrelevant to the bill, or beyond its scope,—

[The Chairman.]

That is the premise on which I rose to make a ruling on this particular subamendment. Then May, sixteenth edition, page 554, states at the beginning of the paragraph:

> An amendment which is out of order on any of the following grounds cannot be proposed from the Chair:
> 1. An amendment is out of order if it is irrelevant to the subject matter or beyond the scope of the bill, or if it is irrelevant to the subject matter or beyond the scope of the clause under consideration.

So I have to find, if not on the other basis certainly on the basis of relevancy, that this subamendment is out of order.

Amendment agreed to.

Clause as amended agreed to.

Clauses 6 to 8 inclusive agreed to.

On clause 9—Objects and powers.

Mr. McLean (Charlotte): Mr. Chairman, I must admit I am a little bit timid about rising in this house but I think the bill is very important to the maritimes. I have great sympathy for the minister. I came here as a businessman and after being in the house for two months I have quite a bit of sympathy with the government in that they have appointed their businessman to the other chamber. I have known the minister for a great many years. I know his heart is in the maritimes. I know we see eye to eye on tight money. I know we see eye to eye on the premium on the Canadian dollar.

Mr. McCleave: Come over here.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): No, just the opposite; the minister should come over here.

Mr. McLean (Charlotte): I should like to quote now from the Globe and Mail and I am not quoting this against the minister at all. The editorial quotes the minister as saying:

> I consider that the proposed legislation to set up an Atlantic development board is the most forward step ever taken in my lifetime for the benefit of the Atlantic provinces.

That was said by the minister, and the Globe and Mail goes on to say:

> It is difficult to share Mr. Flemming's enthusiasm.

I think the bill is a step in the right direction, although a small step. I have to support the minister in this move because I know his heart is in the maritimes. We have had a lot of commissions in the maritimes. The editorial goes on to say:

> All inquiries into the economic backwardness of the four provinces reached much the same conclusion. They all recognize that the area has immense unexploited natural wealth side by side with poverty and unemployment. They all recommend that the federal government should provide large sums of capital to give the maritimers a start in developing their resources.

I believe this is something that the bill lacks. We have had problems and we have had lots of advice, but in the maritimes we need money. If we cannot get cash on the barrelhead I think a fund should be set up and earmarked for the maritimes so that the government cannot spend the money on something else. Therefore I move:

That clause 9, subclause 1, be amended by adding a new paragraph after paragraph (b) as follows:

"(c) prepare a capital projects program providing for the expenditure over a five year period of two hundred and fifty million dollars as federal capital assistance for projects designed to enlarge the basic economy of the Atlantic region;"

and by relettering paragraph (c) as paragraph (d) and paragraph (d) as paragraph (e).

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I should like to say a word or two in support of the amendment moved by the hon. member for Charlotte.

The Chairman: Order. I should like to hear from hon. members on its admissibility first.

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Chairman, I should like to raise a point of order with respect to the amendment which has been put before the committee. I have not looked at the authorities but it seems to me that the amendment is contrary to the rules and also contrary to the resolution preceding the bill in that it is not proper for an hon. member to present such an amendment. Therefore I raise a point of order with regard to it.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, if I may be permitted to say a word or two on the point of order raised by the hon. member for Halifax, I would point out to Your Honour that the amendment does not prescribe any expenditure whatsoever. I was well aware of the fact that it would be improper to attempt to prescribe expenditures. All this proposal does is to authorize the board to prepare a capital projects program providing for the expenditure but the decision, as the minister properly pointed out last night when he was replying to me in another context, as to whether these expenditures would be recommended to parliament would have to be made by the governor in council and would have to appear in the estimates or in some other form.

All the amendment does is to set a target or goal for the board of a more precise nature than the targets or goals that are now there. It does not commit the government to spend one extra sou, except perhaps for a little expenditure on research which is provided for anyway. All it does is to focus the attention of the board on a capital projects program of a certain magnitude. Therefore it seems to me that the amendment does not in any way transgress the rule that a member who is without a message from the crown cannot propose any expenditure.

Mr. McCleave: If I may deal with the points raised by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, I would point out that the amendment means either one of two things. It either means that money is to be spent, in which case I submit my original point of order was well taken, or else it is a contrived trick by the hon. member who has moved the amendment; and I would not want to think that he had so done. If the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate is to be believed the amendment would give the appearance of expenditure to the public, but would really mean something else by reason of his placing the emphasis on the words "prepare a capital projects program" and forgetting the words "providing for the expenditure". He cannot have it both ways. I submit the amendment is clearly a money measure and therefore out of order.

The Chairman: I have listened to the very persuasive argument of the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate. In this amendment the words "providing for the expenditure" seem to be in conflict with section 61 of the standing orders, which reads as follows:

If any motion be made in the house for any public aid—

And I emphasize those words "any public aid".

—or charge upon the people, the consideration and debate thereof may not be presently entered upon, but shall be adjourned till such further day as the house thinks fit to appoint, and then it shall be referred to a committee of the whole house, before any resolution or vote of the house do pass thereupon.

Looking at the wording of the amendment, the implications in all directions seem to point to ultimate expenditure of public funds, and I hearken back to an authority I quoted earlier today when I referred to section 3 of citation 246 of Beauchesne's fourth edition which, in part, reads as follows:

The guiding principle in determining the effect of an amendment upon the financial initiative of the crown is that the communication, to which the royal demand of recommendation is attached, must be treated as laying down once for all (unless withdrawn and replaced) not only the amount of a charge, but also its objects, purposes, conditions and qualifications.

Therefore if we go right to the basis of the whole bill, the resolution itself, such a capital outlay as this should have been contemplated there. On that ground also I have to find the amendment of the hon. member for Charlotte out of order.

Mr. Pickersgill: Before we leave this clause, Mr. Chairman, I am going to make an appeal to the government to amend it in the way which the hon. member for Charlotte has suggested it be amended, but to leave out the phrase mentioning the sum of money. I may say respectfully, sir, and I am sure I can say it respectfully, that I do not agree with your ruling but I am not challenging it. I am going to appeal to the government, as everybody was led to believe that this death bed repentance after five years by the government, as represented by this bill, would contain an explicit carrying out of point No. 5 of the famous Moncton charter. It will be found that it is almost in exactly the same language as the amendment moved by the hon. member for Charlotte, who obviously was very familiar with the Moncton charter, as is everyone else in those provinces. It reads:

> Capital projects program to provide federal capital assistance for provincial projects designed to enlarge the basic economy of the area.

As an evidence of good faith, and if this board seriously intends to carry out that promise to bring about a capital projects program, I suggest that the minister amend the clause, that he put in a separate amendment in the precise language as suggested, as nearly as it can be done with the necessary legal draftsmanship. It does not require very much change to provide that the board prepare a capital projects program providing for federal capital assistance. He can just leave out the phrase dealing with expenditure over a five year period of $250 million, if that worries the government. The government is not committed to spend that; it is just a goal.

An hon. Member: It may not be enough.

Mr. Pickersgill: It may not be enough, but it would be nice to have something. I do not see what 22 years in the past, or even the past five years have to do with it. If the government is ready now to carry out the promise it made five years ago, we would like to help it.

Mr. Churchill: Do it by passing the bill.

Mr. Pickersgill: All right, I will assist the government by passing the bill. I will move:

> that clause 9, subclause (1) be amended by adding a new paragraph after paragraph (b) as follows:
> (c) prepare a capital projects program providing for federal capital assistance for projects designed to enlarge the basic economy of the Atlantic region; and by re-lettering paragraph (c) as paragraph (d) and paragraph (d) as paragraph (e).

That does not say anything about a sum of money. It does not commit the government to anything, but it does instruct the board to prepare a capital projects program as was promised in Moncton in 1957. I have done this just by striking out certain words in the other amendment, and I think it overcomes Your Honour's objections.

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Chairman, this again raises a point of order in that it seeks to do in a different way precisely what was ruled out of order a few moments ago. Even without setting forth a specific target of money it does suggest the expenditure of money, and for the reasons I gave before is clearly out of order.

I would also submit that there may be a point of redundancy here because subparagraph (c) contains a reference to "measures or projects", and as I understand it, the key word in this particular amendment is also "projects". For those two reasons I think that the hon. member should not be permitted to do by a back door method what his colleague was unable to do a few moments ago.

The Chairman: I am still having difficulty with this amendment. The previous amendment has been amended again by taking out certain words that were specifically pointing to encroachment on the financial initiative of the crown. For the reason I have already given and the authorities I have quoted I believe this amendment is covered again to some extent, or perhaps entirely, in the present subclause (c) of clause 9, and I find that the amendment is out of order.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I just want to make an observation concerning the amendment. I know it has been disposed of, but with unanimous consent I should like to refer back to it and say it is a bit unfortunate that in his maiden speech the hon. member for Charlotte was so restricted so far as time was concerned. I am sure I am expressing the hope of all hon. members when I say I trust the time will come in the not too distant future when we will be favoured with more extended remarks by the hon. member in connection with economic matters respecting which he has an excellent reputation in our part of the country.

The Chairman: Shall clause 9 carry?

Mr. Robichaud: Before this clause is carried I would like to say a few words and I shall try to be brief. I must say I am amazed at the insistance of the government in refusing to attach to the bill provision for a capital assistance fund, after all that has been said by the hon. member for Charlotte. Hon. members of the government party who represent the Atlantic provinces—

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): May I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Robichaud: When I am through I will accept any question. They have committed themselves to a capital projects program. They have said that they favour the immediate institution of an Atlantic capital projects program which will provide federal capital assistance for provincial projects designed to enlarge the basic economy of the area. Now that they are given the opportunity in a bill which concerns primarily the Atlantic provinces they insist that no such capital fund provision should be included in this bill. They want to limit the power of this bill almost to inquiring and reporting. As has been said before in this debate, we have had inquiries in the Atlantic provinces and reports have been made to the government in connection with the needs of those provinces.

In referring to those needs I want to come back to the remarks made earlier by the minister when he was accusing members on this side of the house of not reading the bill and of not having seen it. We notice today that clause 5 had to be amended. The minister will surely not tell this committee that he has studied this bill, that he read this bill before it was introduced and at the same time allowed clause 5 to be presented as it was with a $3,000 salary for the chairman of the board. This is typical of the importance given to this board by the government. The minister further accused me, as the member for Gloucester county, of never showing any interest in the Atlantic provinces. I believe that on reflection, if the minister wants to go further back—

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Chairman. I said, in supporting applications of a special nature. That was my complaint about the hon. member, that he had not supported submissions for special treatment for the maritimes.

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Chairman, I think that if the minister will go back to the records of this house since I have been a member, since I first sat in this house in November, 1953, he will realize that on many, many occasions when I was sitting on the government side, as well as since I have been sitting in the opposition, I have made remarks which were in the general interests of the Atlantic provinces and I have supported every attempt that has been made by governments, whether the previous or the present administration, having to do with the interests or the development of the Atlantic provinces.

I would further refer the minister to notice of motion No. 40 on the order paper in my name, which reads as follows:

That in the opinion of this house the government give urgent consideration to the advisability of establishing an Atlantic provinces capital investment fund for the purpose of financing large projects essential to further the economic development of primary industries in these provinces.

Today we have a chance to include such a provision in this bill and we are being turned down by the government.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Chairman, this is a very important and integral part of this bill, dealing with the objects and powers of the Atlantic development board. We are concerned about the autonomy of this board and its independent power to inquire into, investigate and consider. I know the minister has elaborated on the fact that they have all this authority in clause 9 (1) (d) in that they are instructed to consider and report to the minister upon any other matters that in the opinion of the board may usefully be considered.

Our question is this. If this clause is intended to indicate that they have there the same authority as when a matter is referred to them by the minister, why is not the same terminology used as we find in paragraph (c), which says:

—with respect to particular measures or projects—

Not "matters":

—that may be referred to it by the minister, inquire into, assess and report—

Not "consider and report". In order to clear up this matter—and I am sure this is along the lines of what the minister intends —I move:

That subclause (1) (c) of clause 9 be amended by inserting after the words "by the minister" in the second line thereof the words "or which the board may itself determine", so that the amended subsection shall read as follows:

"(c) with respect to particular measures or projects that may be referred to it by the minister or which the board may itself determine, inquire into, assess and report"—

And so on, as in the original clause.

The Deputy Chairman: The hon. member for Cape Breton South moves an amendment which reads as follows:

Amend subclause (1) (c) of clause 9 by inserting after the words "by the minister" in the second line thereof the words "or which the board may itself determine", so that the amended subsection shall read as follows:

"(c) with respect to particular measures or projects that may be referred to it by the minister or which the board may itself determine, inquire into, assess and report to the minister upon the feasibility of such measures or projects and the effect thereof in relation to the economy of the Atlantic region, and make recommendations to the minister with respect to any such measures or projects that in the opinion of the board would significantly contribute to the growth and development of the economy of the Atlantic region; and"

Mr. McCleave: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman—

The Deputy Chairman: The hon. member for Royal.

Mr. Fairweather: Mr. Chairman, surely this is nit-picking. You have to read the clause as a whole, and I think the amendment is barren of any suggestion that will improve it. Clause 9 is the heart of the bill. Of course the board can itself determine these things, if one reads the whole clause. I think that in construing statutes that is the way it is done: you read the whole thing without qualification. I hope the hon. member for Cape Breton South will have some more useful amendments than this nit-picking one.

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Chairman, I was going to raise pretty much the same point that has just been suggested by the hon. member for Royal, in that clause 9, subclause 1 commences:

> The objects of the board are to inquire into and report to the minister upon measures and projects for fostering the economic growth and development of the Atlantic region of Canada—

Then there is paragraph (c) in connection with which the hon. member has just moved an amendment. In effect, it is repeating the same thing twice in one sentence, that is, that the objects of the board are to inquire into measures and projects. Then, in another part, according to this amendment, is the phrase "which the board may determine". The board has always had that power and I submit that this clutters up the bill with words which have no bearing.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): On the point of order, I think the observations made by the senior member for Halifax are not without merit, but if they are to be given the consequence he urges, the committee would have to take the same attitude with regard to (a) and (b) and the whole of (c). If it is worth while to draw attention to the various projects as is done in (a), (b) and (c)—and I think it is—then surely it ought to be worth while to spell out the particular amendments which hon. members opposite say are already implied in the operational part of the bill.

Mr. MacInnis: I wish to call attention for a few moments to the attitude of the government with regard to these things. When an amendment is moved, it is either outside the scope of the bill or it is repeating what is already there. We are suggesting that something is needed to clarify this clause. If it is not needed then why was the same terminology not used? I suggest that the only way to clear this up is to indicate in the bill what is meant. We are not asking the government to spend any more money; we are simply asking them to adopt a more reasonable attitude.

[The Deputy Chairman.]

Mr. Churchill: On this particular amendment the mover is attempting to introduce into the bill a subclause or a phrase which would give the board power to determine certain projects or measures rather than that they should be determined by the minister. A similar circumstance arose when we were dealing with the bill to set up the national energy board and I well remember the argument which went on at that time on this point. In this bill, however, I notice that (d) in clause 9 gives the board power to do exactly what the hon. member suggests, namely to consider and recommend to the minister "any other matters which in the opinion of the board may usefully be considered by it". That is precisely what the hon. member is attempting to write into subparagraph (c) and it is obviously an unnecessary addition to the bill.

Mr. Ryan: The minister has just said what I was about to say, namely that subclause (d) seems to cover the amendment.

Mr. Nicholson: It had not been my intention to take any part in this debate—

The Deputy Chairman: I might point out that the hon. member has the floor to discuss only the amendment.

Mr. Nicholson: I have followed the discussion with great interest and I am inclined to agree with the view that the powers are sufficiently wide for the board to do what is being suggested by the hon. member for Cape Breton South. I do not see that anything would be gained by pursuing the point.

Amendment (Mr. MacInnis) negatived: yeas, 48, nays 65.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I should like to explain that if I had had the opportunity of voting I would have voted for the amendment. I did not vote because I was paired with the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 9 carry?

Mr. MacLean (Queens): Before the clause carries I should like to take the time of the committee for five minutes in order to make a few remarks because, as my colleague the hon. member for Victoria-Carleton said, this is the heart of the bill. We in the maritimes are very interested in this measure because we think it holds promise of being of very great value to the future of the Atlantic provinces. I think it has the possibility of being of more benefit to the maritime provinces than even the special grants which were passed by this government a few years ago.

Before I continue, however, I should like to digress for a moment in order to congratulate the hon. member for Charlotte on his remarks and on his sincere interest in the economic welfare of the maritime provinces. As a member of my clan I welcome him, although politically he may be a black sheep. I regret that his motion was ruled out of order as one unacceptable to the committee. But it seems to me that the measure of the benefit which this legislation will provide is not determined by the phraseology, as long as the general intention of the act is clear, as I believe it is. I think, rather, that the measure of its benefit will be determined by the calibre, industry and judgment of the board and by the ability of the nation, using this government and future governments, to convert the recommendations of the board into realities.

The Atlantic provinces are not underdeveloped areas in the sense in which that term is applied to some other areas of the world. The difficulty in the Atlantic provinces has been that for about 100 years they have been unable to compete in many industries with the larger economic concentration in central Canada. Many industries which were formerly established in the maritimes have gone out of existence because for one reason or another they were not viable. At the time of confederation, the Atlantic provinces were at least as highly developed as what was then Upper and Lower Canada. As time went by they were, apparently, not able to compete with the larger economic units which were developing to the west and one after another many of the industries of the maritimes passed away or were purchased and closed down by competitors in other parts of Canada because they were a nuisance.

This is not peculiar to the Atlantic provinces, because our whole country is in the same position relative to the much greater economic and industrial development of the United States. But as a country we can on occasion protect certain industries and allow them to continue to exist—perhaps our automobile industry is a case in point here—by means of special taxes, protective tariffs, and other measures which are not applicable to one part of the country, or which cannot readily be made applicable to one part of the country. It seems to me that the first and most important problem that the board will have to face is to determine what forces prevented the survival of the industries of the Atlantic provinces. The second problem will be to determine whether or not these forces still operate, and, if they do, whether they can be removed; or whether there are other industries which can be established in the maritimes which are immune to the forces I have just been speaking about.

I think there is a changed situation in the Atlantic provinces, and for a number of reasons. I think that the prospects are much brighter than they have been in recent years. There have been many discoveries of new and important natural resources there. Due to a better, more generous attitude on the part of the central government, there are more improved standards of education and other services in the maritimes than ever existed before. There are increasing demands for certain resources, and as time goes by these demands are bound to increase, with a consequent beneficial effect on many of the products of the maritimes, especially food products. I am happy to say—and this will apply to food produced either on the land or from the sea—that there is a continued and healthy development, although nothing very spectacular, in the fishing industry of the maritime provinces. There is a continuous and healthy growth there; and as time goes by I think there will be an increased growth in the agricultural segment of the maritime industries, because we in the maritimes, for some reason or another, do not produce our own needs in respect to a number of basic foods, such as meat and many other foods.

I do not think there is anything more I want to say at the present time. I should like to feel that the members of the opposition associate themselves with my view that we can be of the greatest benefit to the maritime provinces at this time by passing this legislation, rather than by talking about it for any great length of time. This is a new departure, a new venture. It may not be perfect. As my colleague has said, to a point it is experimental. It has to be tested to see what benefit will accrue from it. The bill can be amended at a future time if it is found to be ineffective in some way or other. My belief is that we should try to dispense with endless discussion which really does not do anything to improve—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): We should not try to make the bill better. That is what the minister is saying. It is puny and worthless.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): That may be a view held by some hon. members, but my view is that if that is the case it will be proven by time. But if we go on endlessly discussing this matter, both among members of the opposition and perhaps some hon. members in other parts of the house, like a bunch of medieval alchemists debating what is the best formula for the philosopher's stone, or something like that, then like they we shall talk for a long time and not make any progress. I suggest that we pass this measure and see if for once we can, without limiting anybody's right to debate, do something that is generally agreed will be beneficial to the Atlantic provinces.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Chairman, I have not taken part in the debate so far because I have been away at meetings with the treasury board, off and on, but I would not want this bill to go through without my expressing at least the fact that I am naturally very much in support of it. I believe it will do a great deal of good to help the economy of the Atlantic provinces. Whatever opinions might have been expressed—and of course, people are entitled to express their own opinions about it—the fact remains that those who live in the Atlantic provinces and are conversant with the problems there, as well as the newspapers, boards of trade and every organization which is close to the problems of that area, have welcomed the bill and supported the proposal. I suggest, as my colleagues from Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick have said, that we should get ahead and get this bill through. Then, if there are imperfections—and there is no question that there are; no bill is perfect—they can be attended to later. Its success will depend on personalities and upon personnel. But I do say that this is a bill which will help to further the economy of the Atlantic provinces, an economy which has been tremendously furthered, Mr. Chairman, during the past five years. I am intrigued by these people who sat back for 22½ years and did nothing for the Atlantic provinces, but who are now so anxious to to express their ideas about what should be done.

I am rather sick and tired of hearing the Atlantic provinces being referred to as a depressed area. The Atlantic provinces are no longer a depressed area. They may not have the same standard of prosperity as wealthy Ontario, or British Columbia, but there has been a mounting and a growing economy there, and the maritimes cannot be called a depressed area, whatever else it may be called. I believe that there is room for improvement. In the next five or ten years changes will take place—in trading relationships, the position on the east coast, the situation which may confront the United Kingdom should it join the common market, the situation with which we may be confronted in view of the Kennedy trade policy with relationship to the commonwealth. All these are matters which will have an impact on the economy of the maritimes, as it will on the economy of the country as a whole, and it is advisable to have such a board. I know that the board will be competent, will be able, and will draft to it the very best intelligent thinking which can be concentrated on these problems. I think that the result will be a further advancement of, and a greater dealing with, the very complicated problems with which a constantly shrinking world is confronting us these days, and which will become more perplexing during the days, months and years ahead.

Mr. Matheson: Mr. Chairman, may I contribute very briefly to this debate. I find it distasteful to be told by different members on the other side of this house that the only people who should comment on a bill dealing with a particular region are those people who reside in that region. Surely everybody in this committee has a right to speak on any bill which is to become a federal act, and I have a few observations to make with regard to this one. I should like to say that this bill on the whole represents an extension of an idea that has become very clear in the twenty fifth parliament even to an extent which was not as clear in the twenty fourth parliament, and that is that this government does not know how to govern.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Matheson: I do not want to make my remarks an extended address, but if necessary I will be quite happy to do so. I think it will be established by a whole series of bills which have come and will come before this committee that what this government is virtually saying is: "We do not know what to do. For goodness sakes let us appoint somebody—a committee, a commission, a group, a board, a group of experts—to tell us what to do". We are grateful for the fact that two of the ministers from the maritimes have so recently made their contributions to this debate.

What does impress us, even those of us from Upper Canada, is the fact that Bill No. C-94, which provides so little in the way of personnel under clause 3, and so little income under clause 5, asks under its objects and powers so much. Perhaps everybody in Canada does not know what these objects and powers are. Think of the broad requirements under subclause (a) of clause 9:

> —prepare on a systematic and comprehensive basis, and revise as required in the light of changing circumstances, an assessment of factors relevant to economic growth in the Atlantic region;

Subclause (b) is even more verbose in wording. We can summarize everything under subclause (a) and subclause (b) by a few words from the morning prayer of our Anglican brethren when they confess: We have left undone those things which we ought to have done and we have done those things which we ought not to have done and there is no health in us; so please help us out. They are asking five people, one of whom is the chairman, to sit down and to tell them how to do something about the maritime region. It was on June 3, 1957, that the present Prime Minister spoke about the average real personal income of Canadians and said it had increased by more than 5 per cent between 1946 and 1955. He was speaking at Liverpool and he is reported in the Halifax Chronicle-Herald. The national Conservative leader said that: The real personal income of maritime residents was dropping. Actually the only change effected in these last five years is that the real personal income of all Canadians is dropping very substantially and the real personal income of maritime residents has continued to drop.

An hon. Member: Oh, fiddle.

Mr. Matheson: Someone on the government side says "oh fiddle". If necessary we will put on the order paper questions which will indicate clearly in statistics the extent of the drop. The fact is that there has been a drop, not only in production in Canada in these last five years—

The Deputy Chairman: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but I think he is straying very far from the item we have under discussion, namely clause 9 of the bill. I think the hon. member might come back to the clause we are studying.

Mr. Pickersgill: On the point you have raised, Mr. Chairman, may I say this. I wonder where Your Honour was when the Minister of Fisheries and the Minister of Finance were speaking, at which time they did not even mention the clause at all. They talked about 22 years when other people were in office. The hon. gentleman is talking about the powers of this board. Surely that is what we are on in clause 9.

Mr. Churchill: On the point of order, Mr. Chairman may I say that I think the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate would wish to withdraw his initial sentence "I wonder where Your Honour was" when something was happening. This is criticism of the Chair, something which I think is unparliamentary.

Mr. Robichaud: He has that right.

The Deputy Chairman: If I made a mistake initially, I do not think I should make a second one. If the remarks of the ministers were not relevant to the clause under discussion, I do not think I should fall into error a second time.

Mr. Matheson: Mr. Chairman, I shall try not to wander from the clause under discussion. My comments are with respect to clause 9 which deals with the objects and powers of the board. I think that every member of this committee, and the chairman, will agree that this clause 9 admits of about as wide a range in debate as possible. But I do not wish to go wider than is necessary. However, I am pointing out the strange anomaly in this bill of a small committee, with virtually no teeth in it, no moneys behind it, asked virtually to do everything. We have really a situation of the knight—and I am thinking of the committee being the knight—who is asked to jump on his horse and ride off in all directions at the same time. That is exactly what the situation is here. If we look at subclause (a) of clause 9, we find the Atlantic development board is asked virtually to prepare an assessment of economic growth. Therefore, we are asking the committee to re-do what the member from Davenport did some years ago with a very complex and expensive staff of experts, namely to study growth.

An hon. Member: Oh, oh.

Mr. Matheson: I am not going to listen to the interruption. Actually it is no longer growth, it is decline. What we are asking for under subclause (a) is for the board to make a sophisticated and technically demanding assessment of growth with respect to the maritime areas. Then under subclause (b) this board is asked to tell the government what to do about it. I think this point must be made, as it is certainly clear to us, not from one bill alone but from the succession of bills that have come before us, that really what this government has been asking is for someone to tell them what to do about major problems.

I was happy to hear the observations a few moments ago of the Minister of Finance who unfortunately left the chamber after his short contribution. I think he and the Minister of Fisheries a few minutes ago really touched on the basis of this thing, namely that much of the problem of the maritimes since confederation has been poor planning from the standpoint of a national program. In essence, Bill No. C-94, purports to ask a small group of maritimers to meet together and to devise techniques and ways and means by which they can bail out a government from poor planning from the standpoint of the whole.

We in upper Canada feel that some of the things that have particularly hurt the maritimes, and I am thinking of the things that affect them tradewise, sometimes fiscal policy and sometimes monetary policy, but particularly trade and transportation have curiously been the things that have impeded and limited our growth as well, even those persons who live in central Canada. Sometimes too easily members from the west and from the maritimes assume that we in central Canada benefit by these obstructive techniques, so beloved by this particular administration as they were beloved by their predecessors. I think perhaps all I can say in conclusion is that we are asking a very small group of people with virtually no money and with no special powers, to do everything. This of course, is ridiculous and impossible. It is impossible to have a bill accomplish everything. Here we have a bill which is asking a board to do everything and when we ask them to do everything with no facilities, no resources, no special direction, no real objects and no real sense of purpose, we are really telling them to do nothing at all.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the clause carry?

Some hon. Members: Five o'clock.

The Deputy Chairman. Order. It being five o'clock it is my duty to leave the chair in order that the house may proceed to the consideration of private members' business, pursuant to section 3 of standing order 15.

Progress reported.

Mr. Speaker: It being five o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, the first item being private bills as found at page 19.

PRIVATE BILLS

THE TRUSTEE BOARD OF THE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH IN CANADA

The house in committee on Bill No. S-8, respecting the trustee board of the Presbyterian church in Canada—Mr. McIlraith—Mr. Paul in the chair.

On clause 1—Repeal.

Mr. Herridge: Who is the sponsor of this bill?

An hon. Member: The hon. member for Ottawa West.

[Mr. Matheson.]

Mr. Herridge: Would the hon. member proceed to give a general explanation of the purpose of this bill and the circumstances that caused its introduction?

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Chairman, I gave an explanation at an earlier stage of the bill and I did not expect to have to repeat it at the committee stage. However, I am very happy and pleased to do so if the committee wishes.

The purpose of the bill is to amend the act under which the trustee board of the Presbyterian church in Canada is incorporated and to do so with particular reference to certain powers of investment that are given in the act. Those powers of investment were found to be deficient in one particular respect. The trustee board has the responsibility of administering pension funds, among other funds, and in the course of seeking to administer these pension funds it has been found that the act as it now reads provides that the board itself administers the funds and that it was impossible for the board to purchase insurance contracts or enter into agreements with insurance companies to administer these pensions. Likewise it was impossible for them to enter into an agreement with a trust company to administer the pensions or, indeed, to enter into a contract with the annuities branch of the federal government to purchase annuities for ministers and their families. That is the main reason why they are seeking an amendment.

The bill itself does certain other things. Section 15 of the act, having to do with powers of investment, limited the trustee board to the right to invest in those securities in which Canadian insurance companies may invest. The definition was so worded that it was not clear what Canadian insurance companies were involved. Therefore the section is being amended by paragraph (a) of clause 1 in order to restate that provision in such language as to make it clear that the trustee board may only invest its funds in those securities authorized under the Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act. It makes it clear, in other words, what legislation is intended to govern. There was an obscurity in the section as it stood.

In addition, it is provided that the trustee board is not restricted as to the proportion of their total investments that they may invest in common stocks of companies that meet the requirements and provisions of the Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act.

A part of clause 1, which will be paragraph (e) of section 15 in the act, gives the board the power to retain certain assets given to them, even though those assets may not come within the requirements of the Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act. As the law stands without this provision, it is required of the board that it immediately sell such assets and invest the funds under the provisions set out for the investment of the rest of its trust funds. That power to retain assets given to them in the form in which they were when they were given is asked for in the clause I have mentioned.

What will be paragraph (f) of section 15 of the act, if the bill passes, deals with the point I first mentioned and is the more important point.

Section 23 of the act, which is dealt with in clause 2 of the bill, merely deals with administrative matters. The name of the administrative body of the church was changed by the general assembly of the Presbyterian church in Canada since the act was passed and this clause is required merely to make it clear that the new name is the one intended in the act as it now stands. It is merely a change of terminology with regard to the name of the administrative board. If there are any questions members wish to ask I will be glad to answer them.

Mr. Herridge: Is it correct to say, then, that these investments are largely made to provide pensions for the clergy and their dependants?

Mr. McIlraith: There are several trust funds held for other purposes. I cannot offhand give an inventory of the types of trust funds. However, in addition to pensions there would be funds for certain educational efforts within the church. They are general funds of the church as opposed to local funds of congregations in different areas.

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Chairman, I take it that the members of the board have powers as trustees with respect to more than the payment of pensions to retired clergymen. However, I am interested in the latter point. Has the hon. member for Ottawa West any information as to the minimum pension paid from these funds to a retired minister of the Presbyterian church? I know that we are called upon to look into similar matters in connection with Canadian National Railways and some other funds. I also believe that there may be some gratuity provided under these funds for the benefit of Indians throughout the country. Is that so?

Mr. McIlraith: Indians?

Mr. Benidickson: I am thinking in terms of the obligation of the Presbyterian church to administer Indian schools. Is this in any way related to these funds or is it the view that the government reimburses the Presbyterian church adequately for their custodial care of Indian pupils in residential schools?

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Chairman, to deal with the point raised as to other trust funds; there are several trust funds other than the pension fund. The board is charged with the responsibility of administering all the general trust funds of the church and the act is applicable to all such funds held in trust. I mentioned the pension fund first to indicate that it was because of the difficulty experienced in the administration of that fund that the board has come to parliament asking for an amendment. That is what caused the bill to be presented.

As to the second point raised by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River, I regret to say that I do not know whether any funds are held by the trustees for the benefit of Indians. I am not able to answer that question.

Mr. Benidickson: My point is that the churches have the administration of Indian residential schools and personally I have been concerned with respect to whether or not the government covers their operating costs.

I know the Presbyterian church has done a very noteworthy job with respect to the education of Indian children but I sometimes wonder whether the government carries the main burden or whether, through the contributions of their parishioners, the church does something for the education of Indian children in the residential schools administered by them. I rather doubt it. I rather think the government does the most part of that, and I just want to ask this question about it.

Mr. McIlraith: I am sorry, Mr. Chairman, I cannot give that information. I regret very much not being able to give it.

Mr. Barnett: I have been looking at the rather long and somewhat complicated paragraph (f) of clause 1, and I am interested in the part which commences about line 31. If I understand the situation correctly, power is being granted in respect of the establishment of pension funds, and reference is made authorizing arrangements to be entered into with one or more insurance or trust companies authorized under the laws of Canada and the laws of any province of Canada to transact business in Canada. Then it goes on to say:

> —or with Her Majesty in right of Canada, or with Her Majesty in right of any province of Canada, or otherwise;

It then goes on to indicate that any such plan may be varied or terminated under the jurisdiction of the various authorities within the church. I am wondering if that particular part of the paragraph has been drafted in such a way that it might fit into any national all inclusive pension plan which might be established at a later date. I am interested to know whether that might have been a consideration in the minds of the people in the church who were interested in seeing this bill brought before the house.

Mr. McIlraith: I think, to the extent I am able to answer that question, the answer is that the trustees found they were having to administer in detail each individual pension granted, and after examination into this subject the proposal arose that they enter into a contract with a life insurance company and let the life insurance company administer certain of these pensions.

When that was being done they also examined the activities of the government annuities branch where you can use lump sums and buy government annuities. That was the thinking behind this. This was not drafted by me. It was drafted by one of considerable experience in these matters and I have no doubt the possibility of government pension funds being created was considered, and that such a contract could be entered into with an agency like that as well as with the annuities branch.

Then in the other place the words "trust companies" were added. It was pointed out that the clause did not provide for the trustee board entering into a contract with a trust company to administer these pensions. That was not in the original draft as submitted to the Senate, and the words "trust companies" were added there.

Mr. Barnett: In relation to the remarks just made by the hon. member for Ottawa West I would like to say I am very glad to hear his explanation of this point, and I would like to compliment the people in charge of this trust fund for looking forward to the day when we shall have a comprehensive national pension plan and for making provision that their particular plan can be fitted into it when the time comes. I hope the time will not be too far distant when there will be pension plans to embrace all Canadians.

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Chairman, I was once an adherent of the Presbyterian church, of which I am proud. I am very pleased to see the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration in his seat in the chamber. I wish to ask what obligation there is on the part of the government of Canada for pensions relating to ordained ministers of this church, or any other church who, up to the time of their retirement, are devoted to education in Indian affairs and Eskimo affairs? Does the pension obligation go to the government of Canada or is it maintained by the various churches of Canada?

Mr. Scott: Mr. Chairman, I notice that the bill limits the investments to those in which life insurance companies invest. Is there any particular reason for the limitation, or was there a feeling that it might be advantageous to extend the scope of the investing powers to go beyond those to which life insurance companies are restricted?

Mr. McIlraith: No, Mr. Chairman. It was not intended to go beyond that scope. The legislation dealing with the power of life insurance companies to invest their funds was dealt with by this house some few years ago and is fairly well up to date. The current practice in parliament has been, in cases of incorporation of various types of religious bodies, to give them powers to invest in the investments authorized for funds covered by the Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act. That provision has been very carefully worked out by parliament, and this clause in that respect follows that practice in dealing with all these similar bills that have come before the House of Commons except, so far as I know, with one exception in recent years.

There is one change here in the limitation applicable to an insurance company, in that it can only invest 20 per cent of its funds in common stocks in the class of companies insurance companies are authorized to invest in. That is not made applicable in this clause. That limitation is taken out, the limitation as to the proportion that may be invested in common stock, but that is the only change.

Mr. Scott: I wonder if the sponsor of the bill could outline the investment policy to the house. Is it decided by the trustee board of the Presbyterian church or is it decided by the life insurance companies which the church retains to manage the fund?

Mr. McIlraith: The trustee board of the church is charged with that responsibility and it determines the investment policy exclusively. The life insurance company has nothing to do with determining the policy of investment of funds.

Mr. Berger: Could the hon. member tell us how the persons who act as trustees on the trustee board are elected or appointed? How are they chosen for the offices they hold on the trustee board?

Mr. McIlraith: The governing body of the Presbyterian church in Canada is, of course, the general assembly of the church, and incidentally the name given to the church is to be found curiously enough in the 1939 act respecting the United Church of Canada. But be that as it may, the trustee board is the incorporated body and in a moment I can give the hon. member the precise reference. In any event, it is appointed by the general assembly and is made a corporate body under the act. The act is chapter 64 of the 1939 statutes.

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Chairman, I did observe that the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration was otherwise occupied when I raised a question. I am sure he will answer me by letter. I simply want to reaffirm that my question relates to the pension duality, shall I say, of ordained people who might be entitled to certain privileges under a bill of this kind if they have perhaps devoted a certain part of their lives to teaching Indians or Eskimos. I am concerned about that. I would like to know the responsibility of the state and the responsibility of the church; not only this church, but any other church.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I apologize to my hon. friend from Kenora-Rainy River for not observing that he was asking me a question. I was endeavouring to concentrate on another matter. I will look at Hansard and if there is an appropriate reply I will certainly send it to him at the first opportunity.

Mr. Scott: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the sponsor of the bill could tell us a little bit about this investment fund, its size, scope and the nature of its investments. I think the committee would be very interested in hearing about the fund. If the hon. member has any information I would be very glad to receive it from him.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Chairman, I regret that I have not that information. We had a member of the trustee board and a member of the pension committee before the miscellaneous private bills committee which dealt with this bill at the standing committee stage. I am sorry that question was not asked there and I regret that I do not have this information.

THE SOVEREIGN LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY OF CANADA

Mr. Nicholas Mandziuk (Marquette): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the unanimous consent of the house to giving precedence to item No. 11, a bill standing in my name? I would ask that it be taken before we proceed with item No. 2. It is a relatively short bill and will not take up too much time of the committee.

Mr. Alan Macnaughton (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, could I associate myself with the hon. member who has just spoken and asked that item No. 12, which is a very short bill to the same effect, also be given precedence ahead of the other divorce bills.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member said "other divorce bills". I do not believe his bill is a divorce bill. I think he means "before the divorce bills".

Mr. Macnaughton: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

(Translation):

Mr. David Ouellet (Drummond-Arthabaska): Mr. Speaker, did I understand well? I am asking this merely because I did not hear very well. Is Bill S-12 the one to be put before the house?

Mr. Speaker: No. The house would be asked to consider Bills S-11 and S-14.

As requested by the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Mandziuk), we shall first consider Bill S-11.

(Text):

The hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Mandziuk) asks the unanimous consent of the house that Bill No. S-11 be considered in committee of the whole prior to items 2 to 10. Has the hon. member unanimous consent? Agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The house in committee on Bill No. S-11, respecting the Sovereign Life Assurance Company of Canada—Mr. Mandziuk—Mr. Paul in the chair.

On clause 1—Name in French.

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Chairman, I see that the hon. member for Marquette is the sponsor of this bill. Has this bill any relationship to the taking over of this company by the small loans finance company known I believe as I.A.C.?

Mr. Mandziuk: Mr. Chairman, in reply to the hon. member I think a short statement would clarify the matter, avoid too many questions and save the time of the committee. The only intention of this bill is to give the Sovereign Life Assurance Company of Canada a French name in accordance with the letters of incorporation. The French name would be La Souveraine, compagnie d'assurance-vie du Canada. It does not change the obligations of the company at all. The committee will notice these words under item 11 on the order paper:

Text of amendment printed in Votes and Proceedings of December 6 at pages 365-6.

There was an amendment after the bill passed the other place. When it was before the banking and commerce committee an amendment was suggested and passed, namely that the company could use either the English name or the French version of the name, and it could be sued in either name. That is the whole essence of this bill.

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Chairman, I thank the hon. member for his reply. Perhaps I am wrong about this, but is this the Winnipeg company that was recently bought out by one of the small loans finance companies, as I call them?

Mr. Mandziuk: I am not aware of this, Mr. Chairman. I know that the Sovereign Life Assurance Company's head office is in Winnipeg. I also have information that about one third of its business is done in the province of Quebec. It is a strong company financially. But I am not aware of any such transaction at all.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Chairman, in supporting this bill I am given an opportunity to raise a point I would like to put forward. The bill is quite clear in that it is simply providing that the company, which was incorporated with an English name, may use a French translation or a French version of its name. It is one of several bills to this effect that we have had with increasing frequency these last few years. There were earlier ones, but they are now becoming more and more frequent. What I would like to point out is a deficiency in the Companies Act, the legislation which deals with companies incorporated by letters patent. There is no provision in the Companies Act to permit companies incorporated under that act to use a translation of their names. If they take a name in French they cannot use the English translation of it; if they take a name in English they cannot use the French translation of it.

It seems to me that this presents a difficulty, and I say this on the basis of some experience of cases of companies doing business in all parts of Canada. They find that in the part of Canada which is larger geographically a name in English is sufficient, but it is inappropriate and unsatisfactory for use in those parts of the country where French is the language principally spoken. It is a practical problem of considerable concern to many of the companies which are incorporated by letters patent. I hope this point will receive attention by the government, and that the simple amending legislation necessary may be brought forward in order that these companies shall have the same right as is granted to those companies which are incorporated by special act.

[Mr. Mandziuk.]

Mr. Benidickson: I would simply address one question to the sponsor of this bill, the hon. member for Marquette. If I was right in my surmise that this company will be a subsidiary of one of the large small loans companies—I think it is I.A.C.—which lend at high rates of interest, could he inform the committee whether he knows of any precedent, any case of another company taking over a life insurance company and to what extent this would involve either those who are insured by such a company or the normal rights of parliament with respect to lending under the Small Businesses Loans Act?

Mr. Mandziuk: I can understand the anxiety of the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River. We would all be most anxious about a situation such as he describes. But as far I am instructed this is simply a life insurance company, and that is all I know. I have no other information on the subject. If I had, I would be only too glad to divulge it to the committee.

Mr. Scott: I wonder if the sponsor of this bill can tell us anything about this life insurance company. I understand that since this bill went into committee the Sovereign Life Insurance Company has been taken over by the I.A.C. which is owned by the Murchison brothers of Texas, a couple of American multi-millionaires. This is another example of the increasing tendency of Canadian assets to pass out of Canadian control. I say this because this life insurance company is now controlled from outside our borders.

I wonder if the hon. member for Marquette can tell us something about this company, for example its size, the nature of its assets, how much more of Canada has been taken from us by this take-over of a Canadian life insurance company.

Mr. Mandziuk: I am afraid I have not the information asked for.

Mr. Berger: May I say I am amazed that the sponsor of the bill is unable to inform the committee about the operations of this company. He is unable to throw light on events about which most members, I believe, have some knowledge, namely, that this life insurance company—

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I think the hon. member is asking the sponsor of the bill for information about the general activities of the company. We are now considering clause 1 of the bill which seeks to change the name of the company, and the discussion is limited by the terms of this clause. I think the hon. member cannot ask for any comments on the activities of the company in general.

Mr. Berger: I appreciate the cogency of the remarks which have just fallen from you, Mr. Chairman, with respect to the propriety of the observations I had been making.

Let me deal with clause 1, as I was about to do before you intervened. It is designed to enable this company to use a French version of its name. The name of the company is the Sovereign Life Assurance Company of Canada, and the company now seeks to adopt the name La Souveraine compagnie d'assurance-vie du Canada. I am anxious to know whether this envisages an extension of the company's operations in the province of Quebec and other parts of Canada where the French language is spoken. I think members of the committee are entitled to know whether such an extension is contemplated.

With this issue before the committee, the committee is again concerned with the question of the ownership of this company. Is this company, which is, apparently, seeking to extend its operations into those parts of Canada where French is spoken, in fact a company which is now wholly owned and controlled by United States interests? This parliament has already had in recent years one unfortunate experience with Texas millionaires and I think the committee is entitled to have this information. I believe that hon. members opposite, many of whom represent the province of Quebec, would also appreciate knowing a little more about this company before agreeing to give it an opportunity to use another name to obtain premiums from French speaking Canadians which, apparently, will soon find their way into the hands of the Industrial Acceptance Corporation and be lent out again, probably to the same French speaking Canadians, at exorbitant rates of interest.

This is the matter I was seeking to bring to your attention, Mr. Chairman, and to the attention of members of this committee. I believe we should have additional information on this subject from the sponsor of the bill. The take-over of this life insurance company by a United States organization is a comparatively recent development and I think the committee is entitled to some information about that development. I urge the hon. member for Marquette to seek leave of the committee to have this debate adjourned so that he may come back at a later date when he is in a position to provide the house with this information. I am sure hon. members who come from French speaking parts of Canada will agree with the suggestion.

The Deputy Chairman: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but I ask him to read the explanatory note in the bill. The sole purpose of this bill is to permit a French version of the name of the company and I think the hon. member is out of order when he discusses the policy of the company. I am sure the hon. member will agree that his remarks are out of order.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this bill is to give this company a French name. Does it not automatically follow that the purpose of this would be to enable them to practise in French-Canadian communities? I think that is perfectly in line with what the hon. member from Vancouver-Burrard said, that the very purpose of the bill is to make it more attractive to French-Canadian communities. I think the remarks of the hon. member are very applicable on this point.

Mr. Mandziuk: Mr. Chairman, I have already stated that according to the information I have this company is doing business in Quebec to the extent of about one third of its total business. As to the other questions which have been asked, I might say that I did not anticipate them because I did not think there was an issue on this bill, as the chairman has already intimated.

(Translation):

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Chairman, several insurance companies have also asked to be designated under a French name lately. It seems to be the fashion, and everybody knows why.

I am familiar with that insurance company. It is undoubtedly an excellent company which has been in business for quite a long while. In my opinion, it wants a French name to be able to sell its policies to French Canadians by leading them to believe that it is a French-Canadian company.

If, as the N.D.P. member stated a moment ago, it is true that insurance companies are trying to find a way to catch the French Canadians of the province of Quebec off their guard, I may well oppose myself to the giving of a French name to those companies before long, because I feel that this English insurance company is looking for an indirect way of doing just that.

I was not against the bill concerning the Merit Insurance Company which was before the house last week. In fact, that piece of legislation purported to do the same thing, that is to give a French name to the Merit Insurance Company, which is controlled by Industrial Acceptance Corporation.

In my opinion, the mover has not given the house sufficient information concerning this bill, because I know that the loans granted by Industrial Acceptance Corporation are insured by that company. In fact, the life of the borrower is insured so that, in case of death, the debt is paid and the family is free of any liability.

Industrial Acceptance Corporation got control of that company to provide insurance itself instead of depending upon someone else for that.

Since there was no opposition to the bills previously submitted, I do not intend to oppose this one, because I believe it would be unfair to the company which, by the way, is a rather good one. However, I take this opportunity to say to the house that should such practice continue, I shall voice opposition the next time, and give my reasons therefor.

(Text):

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Chairman, I simply want to rise to challenge, in a way, your suggestion as to the relevance of discussion. This bill does refer, of course, only to the question of adding a French version to the name of the Sovereign Life Assurance Company of Canada. I would suggest to you and to the committee, although I was not sure of my position until some friends told me I was right, that I.A.C. are the people who have made a successful bid to acquire this company. I care not about that, but I think our attitude as to the principle of adding a French name and of doing business in French-Canadian communities is very pertinent to the discussion before us.

With regard to the other questions which I raised, the sponsor of the bill is doing his best but he does not seem to be very well informed. I would ask him if he knows whether there is any precedent in Canada for a finance company having a good treasury taking over a life insurance company. I rather deplore the use of the liquid assets of one company to make it possible for another company to gobble up many others. I am serious about this because I think that is involved here. I think there is involved the sole purpose of the bill, as to whether or not their attitude to the French language and to the French version would be important. I understand that this company cannot exist—at least they cannot amend—without our approval. Our predecessors incorporated them.

I think a trend along a certain line should be of notice to this committee, and I would ask the sponsor if he knows whether any other company in Canada has bought out a life insurance company in Canada.

Mr. Berger: Mr. Chairman, lest anything I said earlier should be misunderstood by any hon. member, let me say at once that, in suggesting to the hon. member who is sponsoring this bill that it might be advisable that debate on this bill should be suspended and that he should report back to the house at a later date on some of the issues which have been raised, I did not intend to criticize, or to imply any criticism of the manner in which he has brought the bill before this committee. I think all hon. members know that the hon. member who is sponsoring this bill has won the admiration of the house for the way in which he has handled the bills which have been presented by him during this parliament. I should also make it clear that the members of this party do not oppose in principle the use by a corporation carrying on business in this country of a French version of its name. I think that all of us in this party feel that encouragement in the use of the French language by all English speaking Canadians, whether they be corporate or principal entities, is an excellent thing. I think all members of this party support the idea of encouraging bilingualism in this country so far as that can be done. But we were prompted to question the advisability of proceeding at once with this bill because of the fact that the use of a French version of the name of this company indicated that the company was extending its operations to other parts of Canada where French is spoken.

I understood from the sponsor of the bill that this company has in fact been operating in the province of Quebec for some years, and that one third of its business arises from that province. We can conclude from this only that the company has been operating in that province under the name of the Sovereign Life Assurance Company of Canada, a name which presumably has so far served it well, and one wonders whether the haste with which it has now come forward seeking to use a French version of its name is attributable to the recent development, of which hon. members have spoken, which indicates that the company in question has been taken over by United States investors. We are most concerned about this matter and we feel that all hon. members of the House of Commons should be concerned about it, including—and I say this with great respect to him—the hon. member who sponsored the bill.

Once again I urge the hon. member to ask leave of the house to have this debate stand so that he may obtain further information about the status of this company, the reasons why it is seeking to adopt this French version of its name and so that he can inform the house on the question of the ownership of this company, who is going to control the company and all of the other matters about which I am sure all hon. members are most anxious to hear.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Chairman, it seems to me—and I may say I am not referring to the latter remarks of the hon. member who has just spoken—that we are getting away from the bill altogether. The question of the ownership and the regulation of Canadian insurance companies is dealt with by legislation coming under the control of this parliament. It is that legislation which should be amended if any amendment is required. However, in an attempt to meet the points of view of hon. members who are speaking about the ownership of the company, I would say that the transfer of ownership, the creating of profits and the taking out of profits from this company is another matter and does not have to do with this bill. I have not looked at the act of incorporation of this particular company, Mr. Chairman; however, if one looks at the insurance company legislation he will find that the acts of incorporation of most companies are very short, as the control is provided through the general legislation—and it is quite rigid control as to investment policies, the supervision of investments, the actuarial soundness of rates and all that sort of thing. Hence that part of the debate today, it seems to me, is irrelevant to the point before the Chair.

Referring to what I consider to be the matter before the committee may I say that this company is one that has been operating extensively, as I understand it, for some 50 or 60 years in the province of Quebec, as it has in other parts of Canada. Surely this committee is not going to deny to that company, with a great number of policyholders in an area where only the French language is spoken, the right to use the French language or the French version of its name. I speak on this subject with some interest, as over the last number of years or for quite some time I have been concerned with the inadequacy of our provision for granting the two versions of the name to companies being incorporated. It can be done by special act, but that method is not satisfactory. Most companies start as relatively small organizations in one part of the country or the other. It cannot be done by letters patent as the Companies Act does not provide any method for doing it.

However, I hope that the committee here will not be diverted from the point at issue and will not refuse this right to a company which has extensive customers or policyholders in a section of the country where the residents speak only a language different from that used in the name of the company in the act of incorporation. I would hope that this committee would permit them to have that right.

It seems to me that three separate points are being mixed here. I believe the right being sought in the bill is something that should be granted, quite regardless of the view held on the other points raised. That view is dealt with in legislation by parliament and administered by the department of insurance under the superintendent of insurance.

(Translation):

Mr. Marcoux: Mr. Chairman, I was very happy to hear the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. McIlraith) praise bilingualism. I see his point perfectly. I simply regret that I did not have an opportunity to rise earlier because I am afraid the clock will put an end to my remarks.

We know—and we are the first to request it—that companies and other agencies, particularly government agencies, should use French in addition to English.

As a preamble to the explanation to the bill, it was assumed that the company did over one third of its annual business in the province of Quebec. The company has the right to do that in accordance with its charter.

However, I wonder if the federal government is not slightly trespassing on the privilege of a provincial government when it gives this company a French name.

As the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska (Mr. Ouellet) said a moment ago, he had himself agreed to a French name for a company which had an English name before.

But since there is now a tendency to apply for these changes more often—and the companies are to be commended for it—I wonder whether we should not leave it to the provincial government of Quebec to issue letters patent or a corporate name for the province, so that the province itself may set whatever requirements it feels appropriate for a company, since the province in question is obviously more aware of the situation than we are.

We have heard the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Mandziuk) say that he has no information on the operations of the company. Perhaps a provincial government would be informed and could set certain requirements before granting a French name to a company which only had an English name before.

Since these applications might become very numerous, for a very good purpose probably, I submit that, as the province of Quebec is the most concerned in this, the federal government should not decide on the advisability of granting a federal charter enabling this company to use the same name throughout Canada. As the hon. member for Marquette suggests, this company insists on having a French name because it does one third of its business in the province of Quebec.

Mr. Chairman, may I call it six o'clock?

ATLANTIC DEVELOPMENT BOARD

PROVISION FOR DEFINITION OF DUTIES, APPOINTMENT OF MEMBERS, ETC.

The house resumed consideration in committee of Bill No. C-94, to provide for the establishment of an Atlantic development board—Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton)—Mr. Paul in the chair.

On clause 9—Objects and purposes.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

(Text):

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

The Chairman: Shall clause 9 carry?

Mr. Pickersgill: No. There is just one observation I wish to make before the clause carries. I am prompted to make it by the observation of the Minister of Fisheries. I am sorry he is not in the chamber at the moment, but no doubt he will be here in a minute. He expressed regret that the speech of the hon. member for Charlotte should have been marred by the ruling out of order of his amendment. I hope Your Honour is not becoming apprehensive because I am not going to raise the question at all. All I am going to say is that the hon. member for Charlotte was trying to help this government to implement its promises of five years ago. It is extraordinary that the Minister of Fisheries should feel that any promise made by the government five years ago would be ruled out of order by the Chair.

Mr. MacInnis: Once again, it is not our intention to try and hold up the committee, but earlier today the minister indicated to us that it was most desirable this board be not shackled by government control or direction. He indicated that he hoped it would have a certain degree of autonomy and be able to act on its own. In so far as this clause is concerned, we are very anxious that the board be given the power to make sure the people of the Atlantic provinces and the people of Canada in general know what they are studying, what they have decided and what they have recommended.

I suggest that this situation is not completely covered by the usual type of annual report we get from these boards and to which reference is made in clause 19 of this bill. We should like to suggest, therefore, that every report and every conclusive recommendation of this board be made public so that the people will know what the board is doing, how quickly they are making progress and the type of thing they are presenting to the government. I therefore move that clause 9 be amended my adding thereto the following new subsection to be called subsection (3):

(3) The minister shall lay before parliament within fifteen days after the receipt thereof every report and recommendation submitted by the board to him or, in parliament is not then sitting, on any of the first fifteen days next thereafter that parliament is sitting.

The Chairman: At the outset, the hon. member for Cape Breton South referred to clause 19, and without ruling on the admissibility of this amendment I wonder if it would not have more application as an amendment to clause 19 rather than to this particular clause. Perhaps the hon. member would help the Chair by giving me his comments in that regard. We can then consider the admissibility of the amendment itself.

Mr. MacInnis: Very briefly, I may say clause 19 deals with the typical annual report that is made by any board or organization operating under the jurisdiction of the parliament of Canada. In this particular clause 9 we are dealing with the objects and powers of the board, and within the scope of those powers we are most concerned that the minister be given the opportunity he indicated he is anxious to obtain, that is a certain degree of independence, a certain degree of autonomy for this board. If the minister is as anxious for concrete action on the part of this board as he has indicated so far to the house, if he is in fact so desirous that they be independent, then surely he would have no objection to this board making public the recommendations that they want this government to act upon. I believe it is in the interests of the people of this area that the government be not permitted to put the responsibility for economic difficulties in the Atlantic provinces on some board. In other words, we are suggesting that this should not be another continuing permanent royal commission but rather an active board that has, in fact, some autonomy and that is prepared to report to the people on their findings. If this amendment were accepted, we would have a much more responsible board and perhaps a much more active government.

Mr. Fairweather: Obviously you are most perceptive, Mr. Chairman. I do not see what the few remarks made by the hon. member for Cape Breton South had to do with your question about relevancy. Surely clause 19 is the clause, if any amendment is to be accepted relating to reporting. It should come later in the bill. Personally, I think this amendment is quite inappropriate and out of order.

If we are discussing, however, the merits of the amendment, it seems to me that the hon. member for Cape Breton South is unduly suspicious. Clause 19 provides for a statement relating to the activities of the board for the fiscal year and how the statement is to be laid before parliament. It seems to me this provision is quite adequate and the public interest will be best served by sticking to the clause now before us.

Mr. Scott: Mr. Chairman, speaking to the issue you have raised as to the relevant portion of the bill where the amendment should be introduced, I would with respect suggest that if you read paragraphs (c) and (d) of clause 9 it is made quite clear under these provisions that there will be a continuing number of reports given to the minister by the board on particular measures and projects, and on any other matters that the board considers important, and that throughout the years there will be quite a number of reports submitted from time to time. These do not in any way envisage the annual report, which is covered by clause 19 of the bill.

Keeping all that in view, then surely this is the only place in the bill where the hon. member for Cape Breton South can move an amendment of this kind so that these reports that are submitted to the minister will be made available to the public and to the House of Commons, where they can be reviewed and discussed. If the amendment is not relevant here, then I do not know on what portion of the bill it could be relevant. We are not particularly interested in having the annual report made available, but we are interested in all the reports which will be made from time to time by the board, in order that parliament and the people of Canada can see them. It seems to me this is obviously the place for an amendment of this kind.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): I am not sure, Mr. Chairman, whether you have ruled the amendment in order or not on this clause, but I have a point I wish to make regarding the amendment, whether it is moved on clause 9 or not, and it concerns the simple rule of confidentiality. I feel that to a certain degree the recommendations of this board should be considered as confidential. If the recommendations are to be of any use they must be frank, and for them to be reported in a full manner, as suggested by the amendment, would destroy their full value. I suggest that this is a serious argument against the amendment, whether it be in order on this clause or on a later clause.

Mr. Pickersgill: Is Your Honour still troubled by whether the amendment is in order or not?

The Chairman: I am quite prepared to hear additional argument.

Mr. Pickersgill: It appears to me that what the hon. gentleman is seeking to do is entirely different from what is sought in clause 19, which is the normal type of clause put into these bills providing for an annual report to parliament. The hon. gentleman is seeking to do exactly what is done by "Neddy" in the United Kingdom, and in many other cases, to have the reports on these economic proposals made public. It is an entirely different thing; and unless the government takes the view that what it is seeking to do is to get a group of confidential advisors to itself, of whose work the public will have no knowledge, then there can be little objection to the amendment. But if the government says that is the principle of the bill, then that is not exactly what most of us thought it was.

It seems to me that, unless it can be shown that this is contrary to the principle of the bill, then there is no difficulty in saying these particular reports should be made public. However, I would make a suggestion, if I might, to the hon. member for Cape Breton South. I think that the government would have a pretty good case for objecting to making the reports public under paragraph (c). It seems to me that if this board is going to be a really useful board then the government ought to be able to ask the board for confidential advice and be able to keep that confidential when the minister himself initiates the query. It also seems to me that if the hon. member could modify his amendment so as to have the reports made public only under the provisions of paragraphs (a) and (b)—paragraph (a) is the one which states "prepare on a systematic and comprehensive basis," and that is a matter of public interest, while paragraph (b) is the one which states "keep under constant review appropriate methods of furthering the sound economic development of the Atlantic region"—then it would be a good thing to have public debate about reports made under those two paragraphs.

The same thing appears true about paragraph (d) which concerns something that is initiated by the board. But as one who has experience of government I do think that if the board is to be useful the minister should also be able to get confidential advice from it under the provisions of paragraph (c). If the hon. gentleman would be prepared to modify his amendment in that sense, it might be acceptable even to the government, because I am sure the government wants this board to be useful to the public as well as to the government. I can easily see why it would not want the reports made public under paragraph (c), where it is considering whether it should initiate a particular project and wanted confidential advice. I think it would be in the public interest for the government to have that confidential advice, and I respectfully offer this suggestion to the hon. member and to the minister.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): I am quite prepared to accept the general proposition in this particular instance that, in spite of the political tenor of his remarks, the hon. member for Cape Breton South was anxious to have this additional information and could see no particular reason why it should not be made general information and be of benefit to the board in its activities. However, I want to direct his attention to the fact that I have reason to believe that this matter was quite carefully discussed and the decision arrived at was that in this competitive day and age, and with the competition that exists today not only between industries but between countries, that if a company in a certain business was considering the establishment of a plant it would be somewhat restrained and would possibly make an adverse decision with respect to locating in a certain district if it were of the opinion that the board's reports and recommendations were going to be made public knowledge within 15 days. I think that is a very important point.

Many hon. members have risen to their feet to make comments from day to day on this bill, and they have expressed some misgivings that the board would be hampered in its activity. I agree there is always a danger in that, and I consider that this amendment would definitely be detrimental to the success which might accompany the efforts of the board to secure new industries for this region. It is on that basis, and on no other, that I tell the hon. member for Cape Breton South I have great hesitation in accepting his amendment in its present form.

There is also the question of the feasibility of industry. Whether it is feasible to establish an industry in a certain locality depends on a variety of factors, and if those factors are to be made public so that competitors can hear of them, that would bring about a degree of restraint and perhaps even a definite refusal to consider the establishment of industry in that particular locality. I offer that comment with the greatest amount of conviction possible on a broad basis, and having in mind the interests of the success of the board. I feel the amendment would not be helpful; in fact it would be quite the opposite.

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the minister permit me to ask him a question? Would he think that would apply to paragraph (a)? I am very much impressed by what the minister has just said with respect to paragraph (b), and I have already accepted his contention with respect to paragraph (c); but concerning paragraph (a) which deals with the "comprehensive basis" it seems to me it might be a very useful thing to have those assessments made public. So that it does not deal with the location; it is the general assessment of the area from time to time. It seems to me it would accomplish what the minister and I and the hon. member for Cape Breton South, and indeed every member of the house, would like to see; that is, more attention given by everyone to the broad factors relating to the development of the region. If that could be done, Mr. Chairman, it might perhaps be a compromise.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, before the minister replies on that question and while he is giving consideration to the problem may I say that I appreciate the suggestion of the hon. member from Bonavista-Twillingate that some of this information would be of great value to the general public. Of course it would. But surely it is within the competence of the board to determine that, and if it is doing the work which we expect of it, and I am sure it will, it will want to make public various factors concerning the projects, development or prospects in the Atlantic provinces.

This is my thought at this time. It is hardly necessary to write into an act that it shall be mandatory for a board to publish the assessment of the factors it may take into account during the course of its investigation. If this becomes a practice we would be asking all government boards, under compulsion, to make public a great number of matters which may not necessarily be required at the time. I would think it could better be left to the discretion of the board and then, if that is not satisfactory, there is the time honoured method in parliament of asking the minister of the department to give the information to parliament.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): We would be told it is a privileged document.

Mr. Churchill: There is opportunity to question the minister on these matters during the passage of estimates, and there is always the method of a motion for the production of papers.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Churchill: The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate gave the house the information a year or so ago as to how to get that dealt with by way of debate, and it was on his instruction that we wrote into the rules a method to deal with debate on a motion for the production of papers. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, all these methods are available without actually writing into an act instructions to a board to publish something other than what is normally published, an annual report to be laid before parliament and the financial statement. That to my way of thinking is satisfactory, without this addition.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Chairman, the minister's argument is that discretion should be left to the board as to whether to make public its reports. I take it that is his argument. Further, he argues that it would be unwise to compel a board to make public its reports and surveys. I am not a lawyer, but it seems to me that this particular clause removes from the board any discretion in respect of making public its reports, because the clause reads:

> The objects of the board are to inquire into and report to the minister—

The board is not authorized to report to anybody but the minister. If that is the case, Mr. Chairman, surely it has no discretion as to whether it can make public its reports, because it can only report to the minister and the only person who would have any discretion as to whether the reports should be made public would be the minister.

Amendment (Mr. MacInnis) negatived: Yeas, 6; nays, 108.

The Chairman: I declare the amendment lost. Shall clause 9 carry?

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman—

The Chairman: The hon. parliamentary secretary.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Mr. Chairman, during the discussion on the first clause of this bill I mentioned a project that I felt related the difficulties that I felt would occur with the compiling of statistics and figures. Under clause 9, dealing with the objects and powers of the board, I wish to mention in greater detail this project which I feel should have top priority. I proposed that priority should be given to a project to investigate fully the effect of winter navigation in the lower St. Lawrence on the ports of Saint John and Halifax. The exact figures—and this is the difficulty, Mr. Chairman—of destination and origin of traffic in the lower St. Lawrence would demonstrate the difference between legitimate St. Lawrence traffic and that business which would have come to our maritime ports originally but now flows through the St. Lawrence in winter.

There is serious misapprehension, as many have said, in the maritimes that all St. Lawrence winter shipping now appears to be business that would otherwise come to the ports of Saint John and Halifax. I will give an example. I suggest that European commodities arriving at, say, the port of Quebec by sea during the winter season and destined for a city such as Winnipeg would be business that might have landed at Saint John or Halifax. On the other hand, coastwise traffic in the lower St. Lawrence between the cities of Quebec and Seven Islands, or even overseas shipments in and out of these ports alone, that would not ordinarily be made until spring could not be expected to use maritime ports and would not be legitimate traffic for maritime ports under present circumstances. This would be the differentiation and it is the question that I feel is important to consider under this clause dealing with the powers given to this board. It is true that a study is now under way in the port of Saint John regarding traffic there, but while this will be of some assistance with regard to the transshipments that go through the port, it does not deal with the heart of the problem, which is so important to our maritime ports.

Other matters that might be considered in this top priority project would be water and insurance rates. They could be considered because there is a growing fear that rates, be they water or insurance, are being equalized over all eastern ports so that the costs of ice hazards are now spread over every one of the eastern Atlantic ports. This means, in effect, that Halifax and Saint John are paying, as it were, for protection against the dangers of ice floes in the St. Lawrence. There is also a need for an assessment of the charges which have been made with respect to the use of government icebreakers, paid for by the Canadian taxpayer, to open up the St. Lawrence in winter to our detriment. The danger of flooding is often given as an excuse and I think an advisory committee appointed by the board could declare which areas should have protection from flooding afforded by icebreakers in a legitimate way. If this were done, the criticism would be removed. After the statistics have been compiled, they would, together with existing information, be a logical source of material upon which an advisory committee appointed by this board might reach its conclusions.

I am putting forward this proposal seriously and I hope it has the attention of everyone in this committee. This is a serious matter. I know the hon. members for Halifax will agree with me when I say we are very worried about the future of our winter activities in these ports. This would be one of the important tasks which an advisory committee appointed by this board could undertake right away. I have heard other projects mentioned. I shall not elaborate on these. I only hope the proposal I have just made will be given every consideration and that the result will have an important bearing on a matter which concerns the lifeblood of the maritime provinces.

Mr. Pearson: That is a very interesting suggestion made by the hon. member and it is too bad that a report of this importance and of this character cannot be made public by the board.

The Chairman: The hon. member for Lapointe.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): I feel I should reply to the observation made by the Leader of the Opposition. I presume he is sincerely interested in this question.

[Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert).]

The Chairman: Order. I have recognized the hon. member for Lapointe.

(Translation):

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, I should like to say but one word to challenge the statement just made by the hon. member for Saint John-Albert (Mr. Bell) and to call the attention of the committee to the fact that you will never develop an area by preventing the development of another. Winter navigation on the St. Lawrence as far as Quebec city or even farther up will not cut winter navigation in the harbours of Halifax and Saint John, in the maritimes.

I feel that if such a survey is to be made, it should not be made to try and block up certain entrances but to open up all our eastern ports. Therefore, if such a survey is made, the fact should be borne in mind that all areas of the country must be developed.

(Text):

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): I appreciate the remarks made by the hon. member for Lapointe. There is no intention to interfere with natural progress. I merely called for an assessment of our problem so that we may know exactly where we stand with respect to the moneys of all the people of Canada.

With regard to the statement made by the Leader of the Opposition, I feel that the statistics of the Department of National Revenue and of the national harbours board which will give us the origin and destination of this traffic in the St. Lawrence have some degree of confidentiality attached to them, but they might be made available to this committee which could then make public its recommendations concerning this question.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): In the course of this discussion we have not heard from the minister about the extent of the co-operation which this proposed body would have with the other boards which are being set up this session and with other, similar agencies which the government has set up from time to time obviously, in the past, at any rate, with the object of postponing decisions on important problems confronting the country.

We cannot pass clause 9 without addressing ourselves to the implications of subclause (2). It is regrettable that in a session during which the government is bringing forward measures which have to do with the establishment of so many boards, we did not begin our discussion with consideration of the first body which should naturally have been presented to us, namely the national economic development board. But this government, apparently not anxious to plan nationally, is not prepared to plan its work in this house and, as a result, we are dealing in improper chronological order with these matters. I suggest it would have been proper to have dealt with the national economic development board first, then proceed to the amendments of the productivity council measure. We would then proceed with the Atlantic development board, not because the latter is not as important as the other boards in its proper context but because of the priority of the latter's functions. Had that order been observed, it would have fitted better into the over-all pattern.

Clause 9(2) calls upon the board to co-operate "to the greatest possible extent"—and I may say in passing that that is an unusual phrase to find in a statute. I complained last night about the imperfection in the draftsmanship of this bill. While I do not want to attribute that imperfection to the law officers of the crown, one of whom is present in this chamber, nevertheless it is, as I say, unusual to find this kind of language used in a statute. The bill does say that the board shall, to the greatest possible extent consistent with the performance of its duties under this act—whatever that may mean; I hope the minister is able to explain it—co-operate with the national development board, the national productivity council and all the departments, branches and other agencies of the government of Canada having duties relating to or having aims or objects related to those of the board. It would be interesting to know, first of all, what other agencies of the government of Canada, having duties or aims or objects related to those of this board, will provide an occasion for collaboration and co-operation under the terms of this subclause. The minister owes the committee an explanation, I think, in fairness to the statement made by the Minister of Finance when he introduced the measure dealing with the national economic development board—a statement to the effect that there was to be a form of integration between these various boards and the body which was the subject matter of the resolution the house was discussing at that time.

What is meant by saying that to the greatest possible extent there will be co-operation between this particular board and the national economic development board and the national productivity council? When the minister addresses himself to that question he will have to explain whether or not it is the intention to broaden the base of the productivity council itself, having in mind the complaints registered against that body by labour organizations and others which have criticized the narrowness of that particular council's approach. How is the Atlantic development board going to co-operate with the productivity council whose base is said by a wide section of public opinion in this country, including the chairman of that body, not to be broad enough? The minister must tell us that tonight because this clause imposes upon the board the duty of co-operation between it and the productivity council.

What is the relationship to be between this board and the national economic development board? Is the latter to be the dominant body? Is it to be the body which will take the initiative in bringing about this co-operation? How are these various bodies going to get together? I can very well visualize the reply that the minister is going to make. In that very generous, understanding, wholesome manner of his he is going to say: "Of course, the hon. gentleman, who has had experience on the ministerial benches, knows perfectly well how these things will work out", and he will say that if we will just have patience, not put too many embarrassing questions and will pass this bill readily, everything will work out well. That is the technique of my hon. friend, for whom, as he knows, I have the greatest personal esteem; but I am not going to allow that personal esteem to dominate my conviction as to the inadequacies of this measure.

Mr. Chairman, I am going to ask him now to tell us how this co-operation is going to take place. I suggest to him that this is the all important matter, now that the government has decided to set up this special board. We agree with it in principle. Personally I would have preferred to see the national board operate all over the country, with subdivisions which would have taken into account the special and serious economic problems of the Atlantic area. But now that the government has decided on this autonomous technique, giving to each of these boards a sovereignty of its own, it will be up to the minister to explain to us exactly how this kind of co-operation is going to be effected. Which minister is going to be in charge of the co-operation? Is it going to be the Minister of Finance, the Minister of National Revenue, the Minister of Labour, or the Minister of Trade and Commerce, who has to do with the productivity council? Or perhaps it is going to be the Minister without Portfolio in another house, in which event it would be most regrettable because we would be denied the opportunity in this house of examining him as to the success of the co-operation envisaged in clause 9(2). I hope my hon. friend will not regard this as a specious or luxurious argument, because it is not.

Mr. McGee: It is a filibuster.

Atlantic Development Board

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My hon. friend from Scarborough says "filibuster". The greatest contribution he has made so far this session is the use of three words. One of them has been "filibuster," another has been "nonsense", and the third has been "stupid". I would say that all three apply to him in equal measure. My hon. friend the Leader of the Opposition points out to me that only one of them is an adjective, but let me put the nouns adjectivally because they still apply.

I would say to the minister that this is a very important matter. Either the government means business or it does not. The minister has not used the word "planning" once. The Minister of Finance has used the word "planning" once. The Minister of Labour outside this house today, when speaking to those who like the word "planning"—the members of the Canadian Congress of Labour—interlarded his whole speech with the word "planning" in almost every sentence. Does the government really intend to effect a planning process in trying to meet these problems? Is that the kind of co-operation which is envisaged in subsection (2)? I hope the minister will not think that I have been unfair with him tonight in asking him to tell us precisely how this co-operation is going to take place. What type of integration is going to be developed, or are we going to allow these three bodies to function independently of each other? Are we going to say that the fact that 14 per cent of the work force of Canada is out of work in the maritime provinces is a problem not related to the rest of Canada?

Mr. Chairman, the other day I attended, with the mayor from Moncton, the hon. member for Essex West, the hon. member for Essex South, a delegation of mayors from southwestern Ontario, and Essex county in particular, and certain mayors from the maritime provinces—

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): Would the hon. gentleman permit a question?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Yes.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): May I ask the hon. gentleman where he gets his figure of 14 per cent?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My hon. friend asks me that. He ought to turn to his right and ask the Minister of Labour, because as a matter of fact he would find that last winter it was higher than 14 per cent.

Mr. Starr: Oh no.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): I understood you to say that it was 14 per cent at the present time.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Would my hon. friend tell me what the figure is right now?

[Mr. McGee.]

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): The hon. member said it was 14 per cent.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I would ask my hon. friend whether I am wrong in that statement.

Mr. Starr: You are.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The Minister of Labour says that I am. I will let him produce the figures. I do not think I am wrong. But when I heard the Minister of Labour talking to the Canadian Congress of Labour this morning, speaking of the figures of unemployment, I would say to him that the figures which he gave on this occasion were not accurate either.

I was dealing with the nature of the problem which affects this particular board in relation to the rest of the country, and I pointed out that about ten days ago the members of parliament from the constituencies to which I referred, together with three mayors from Sydney, Glace Bay and one other town in Nova Scotia, and mayors from the city of Windsor, Tecumseh and Ojibway, and other places in Essex county, met with the Minister of Trade and Commerce. The Minister of Labour was not present, nor was the Minister of Finance, but the Minister of National Health and Welfare was there as the presiding officer and we discussed a problem that is common to many areas in Canada, especially to the maritime provinces and the many industrial areas of the country. I refer to the problem of runaway industry. We wanted to know what measures the government was prepared to take to deal with this very difficult situation. We wanted to know what fiscal measures the government had in mind. Was the government giving consideration to such things as a town and country act such as they have in England, or to the unemployment act passed in 1960 in England, as a means of trying to relieve the unemployment which resulted from industries moving from one area of high employment to an area of less employment? That is a problem not only common to the maritime provinces, where it attends many constituencies, but it is also a problem which affects many other areas, including the area from which I come.

What is going to be done about that problem? That is what is involved in clause 9(2). If the minister wants us to pass this measure and have us understand it in the terms in which it is presented, then let him tell us how he is going to deal, and how this government is going to deal, with this particular problem. The minister says, let us pass this bill and give it a trial. Of course we want to pass this bill, but we want to pass it with an appreciation of what the government really intends to do about the implications and the provisions in this clause, which could mean, if properly resorted to, a great deal of relief in the matter of the relocation of industry to which I have just referred.

Mr. Chairman, these are not matters of ordinary concern. These are matters of great moment which affect thousands of people in our country. Surely we have the right tonight to ask the minister exactly what he means when he says that this board is going to work with the national economic development board, the national productivity council, all departments, branches, and other agencies of the government of Canada having duties, aims or objects relating to those of this board. Those are wonderful words. I now call upon the minister to give meaning to them.

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Chairman, at the outset of what I have to say I wish to associate myself with the point of view expressed this afternoon by the hon. member for Leeds. He took strong issue with the suggestion from the opposite side of the house that the debate on this very important item of legislation should be confined to the members of the Atlantic provinces.

An hon. Member: That was never suggested.

Mr. Nicholson: I heard it. It is in Hansard. I wish to identify myself very closely with what the hon. member for Leeds said, as I fully believe the position which he took is the only sound one. Simply because I do not represent a constituency in the Atlantic provinces does not mean that I and other members of this House of Commons have not followed this bill with just as keen interest as have hon. members from the maritime provinces during the course of the debate.

References were made—one by the hon. member for York-Sunbury, as I recall it—to the migration from the Atlantic provinces to other parts of Canada. Since I am one of the migrants it would be most surprising if my interest in the maritime provinces and the well-being of the Atlantic provinces is not just as keen as that of those hon. members who still live there. It was because of this special interest, not because I intended to take any part in the debate, that I carefully studied Bill No. C-94. I spent a great deal of time on it, especially on the clause now under review, namely clause 9. It was perhaps because of the diligence with which the hon. member for Spadina and I pursued this study that we two joined with the other members on this side of the house in opposing the amendment that was proposed. We felt that the power which the hon. member for Cape Breton South was trying to get already existed. However, it is one thing to be of the opinion that a board has the power sought by the hon. member for Cape Breton South, that it is already in existence, but it is a very different thing to agree with the government that this bill contains all the objects and powers that are needed to make it the success which the people of the maritimes and the people of the rest of Canada hope it will be.

When I heard the Minister of National Revenue introduce this bill I was hopeful that the government had some well conceived plan of action tied with the plan of action for the national economic development board. I was hopeful that the government contemplated the establishment of a board which could play an effective part in shaping a program that would restore the prosperity that existed in the maritime provinces when my four grandparents settled there well over one hundred years ago. However, a study of the objects and the powers will show that such is not the case. In the first place—and here I think the hon. member for Essex East put his finger on one of the weaknesses, one very important fact. We do not know how this national economic development council is going to function in conjunction with the economic development board for the Atlantic regions. It is quite true that in subclause 2 of clause 9 reference is made to the fact that there shall be co-operation between these boards. However, co-operation is not enough. The C.B.C. and the other great board in our field of telecommunications are supposed to co-operate, but we have seen what has happened there. More than that is needed. What is needed is some form of mechanism that will bring about an effective working arrangement between the boards. It could be in the form of interlocking directorates or common members of the different boards. However, that weakness certainly exists.

I might say that when I first discussed this bill—and I was disappointed when I saw the bill; not when I saw the resolution, but when I saw the bill—when I first discussed it with other members, not just those on this side of the chamber but from other parts of the house, considerable concern was expressed as to why there should be a separate board for only one part of Canada. I might say that I am not one who shares that view. I believe that if an economic development board for the Atlantic region, composed of well informed, courageous and dedicated people—and there are plenty of them in that part of Canada—had an assurance of adequate funds with which to do some of the work that is essential down there, and had the assurance that they would have capital at the right time to correct the economic ills they find, much could be done. My reasons for saying that there should be a special economic development in the Atlantic regions are very simple. It is a known fact that since confederation economic developments, not in all parts but unfortunately in too many parts, of the maritime provinces have lagged behind the rest of Canada. Prospects and economic conditions down there are certainly not nearly as bright as my friend the Minister of Finance this afternoon intimated they were. Whether the figure is 14 per cent as suggested by the hon. member for Essex East or some slightly lower figure, it is still the highest unemployment level in Canada; and something should be done to improve conditions down there.

It is not because of the people of the maritimes that this difficulty exists. Not only have some of our greatest educationists, industrialists, bankers and lawyers but, and by no means the least, some of our ablest politicians have certainly come from that part of the world. However, in spite of the acknowledged ability of these people from the maritimes, the economy has lagged behind that of the rest of Canada. I say that the reason is a simple one. Geographically and economically the Atlantic provinces have closer ties with the New England states than they have with central and western Canada. The Atlantic provinces, however, have very strong ties with the rest of Canada, including ties of sentiment and of blood. These are very strong ties. If these ties had not been as strong as they are, they might have snapped long before this. As I say, in spite of these economic difficulties, the maritimes are still a very important and vital part of this nation. However, they need more than an act such as the one within the framework of this bill.

All of the maritime provinces have untapped resources. Newfoundland has a richness of forest wealth and has an important forest industry that needs help. It has great mineral wealth. We are just beginning to realize the importance of the mineral wealth of this tenth province. New Brunswick has rich forest land. It has valuable fisheries. It also has mineral wealth and a great hydroelectric potential. Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island have great wealth. However, the mineral and the forest wealth of Newfoundland needs more than advice and encouragement. It needs more exploration. It needs more geological work and more research, and it certainly needs working capital. Then I might mention the huge salt deposits in Nova Scotia—many Canadians have never heard of them—and the natural gas wells down near the Tantramar marshes. With the scientific developments that have gone on in the last 20 years there are great possibilities in this part of Canada, not to mention the province of New Brunswick.

There is an industry there now, but what it needs is working capital. Many people would be astounded at the development that would be possible in the peat bogs of Northumberland county. So, I say that the difficulty under which the maritime provinces are working is this geographical barrier which ties them closer to the New England states than to central Canada. We have a special problem, and that problem needs a special board, an Atlantic regional board to handle it. I feel that this board should have the assurance of the necessary financing behind it. It is for this reason I was disappointed when the very constructive suggestion included in the amendment moved by the hon. member for Charlotte was turned down this afternoon on a technicality.

I do not believe that anyone could seriously quarrel with the reasoning of the chairman when this amendment was turned down. Nevertheless, there is so much merit in the suggestion put forward by the hon. member for Charlotte that I feel the minister who is sponsoring this bill should give it careful consideration. He should see that funds of the magnitude suggested by the hon. member are made available by the government. The fact that there is no provision of that kind in the bill, the fact that we had barely opened discussion of this bill when it was announced the provision for the $3,000 salary would be amended authorizing the government to fix the salary, illustrates the fact that this bill has not had the careful thought and consideration the economic plight of the martime provinces would warrant. This concrete suggestion by the hon. member for Charlotte should receive consideration, and I commend it to the minister. I say that if a private member cannot move such an amendment, there is no reason why the government cannot take it under advisement overnight and come back with an amendment that would cover the situation.

Before I sit down, Mr. Chairman, there is one other suggestion I should like to put forward, and which I also commend to the government for its consideration. I believe this suggestion would go a long way toward providing a satisfactory answer to the question that has been troubling the hon. member for Essex East as well as other members in this house. I refer to the question, what do we do with two economic development councils and a national productivity council, and how are they going to work together? I suggest this bill might be amended, or perhaps Bill No. C-87 providing for the national productivity council might be amended, to provide for an interlocking membership. At least the chairman of the Atlantic board should, ex officio, be a member of the national board. This is a constructive suggestion that should be implemented in one of these bills. I am putting this forward merely in the hope that it will be accepted and acted upon in the spirit in which it is made.

(Translation):

Mr. Maltais: Mr. Chairman, I have only a few remarks to make on clause 9 of Bill No. C-94.

I agree with the hon. members. As a matter of fact, I put the following question a few days ago: What are exactly the duties of all boards that are presently at the service of the government? But I feel that the Atlantic provinces form part of an area which has been overlooked in the past, in the political and economical history of Canada. Now, those provinces, as well as areas such as the one I represent, the lower St. Lawrence and the north shore districts, need a very special board to protect their interests.

On the other hand, Mr. Chairman, I do not agree with the hon. member who was wondering, a moment ago, about the usefulness of winter navigation on the St. Lawrence river.

Like the hon. member for Lapointe, I submit that one region should not be ruined to help another one. One region should not be deprived of what it succeeded in obtaining after years of difficulties and requests, to assist another region.

I wonder if the hon. member, when he asked if it was useful to spend so much money to open up the St. Lawrence in winter, thought of putting the question to the agricultural producers of the Atlantic regions as well as to the potato producers.

I would like an inquiry like that one be made to find out if the money used to ensure winter navigation on the St. Lawrence river really helps potato producers and other producers in the Atlantic area.

Mr. Chairman, those are the few words I wanted to add to the remarks of the hon. member.

(Text):

Mr. Macquarrie: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Pickersgill: Back from the wars.

Mr. Macquarrie: I wish that the rules of the house would permit me to comment on that remark by my hon. friend, so I could acquaint him with the results of that war. I should like to say a word about this important matter. I hope the member for Essex East was not suggesting that greater priority should attach to the other boards he mentioned.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I was suggesting the opposite.

Mr. Macquarrie: I was not exactly sure what he said, but recalling the record of the government of which he was a member I thought he had put forward the suggestions I have outlined. However, I will take his word for it. I recall quite well that the leader of his party in my province declared the government of which he was a member had not even given my province half a deal.

This forward step is something which we should all applaud. I very much appreciate the fact that members from other parts of the country have spoken on this important matter. As the hon. member for Vancouver Centre, who spoke this evening, said, we are still a vital part of the dominion and we have throughout the years suffered from some political and economic policies which were nationally developed. I feel, therefore, it is high time that a board of eminence and priority was assigned to look upon our region and to assist us to develop policies of self-help which will bring our region to a level comparable to the other parts of the dominion. This, I regard, as an essential second step to the kind of direct assistance through subsidies, as well as conditional and unconditional grants, which have come our way in the last five years. The improvement in the last five years is exemplified by the fact that in my own little province these have been increased from $5 million plus to $12.5 million.

I want to say that the suggestion made by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre commends itself to me. I refer to the suggestion that the chairman of this very important body, which I say takes second place to any mentioned by the hon. member for Essex East, might very well be ex officio a member of the national economic development board. This strikes me as being an extremely valuable suggestion. I do not know of any national board which could not profit by the presence of a maritimer, if immodesty may be pardoned.

I would like to commend to the minister under clause 9, when we consider the measures to deal with the problems connected with the fostering of economic growth and development, that our ancient industry of agriculture be not ignored. There is a narrow concept of the word "industry" as being something that is symbolized by a factory and belching smokestack. We of course want industries developed in our provinces by the sea, but we also want a greater rationalization of our ancient industry of agriculture.

I would impress upon the minister with all the sincerity at my command that when this board is set up, and I hope it will be set up soon, that an integration, a rationalization and advancement of the agricultural industry be given great consideration. There is much we can do. We are a deficiency area in agricultural products which we produce in the very highest and most acceptable degree.

I would like to say too, and say it very briefly, that naturally I consider that among those projects the feasibility of which need no further consideration is the causeway linking my province with New Brunswick, a project in which a certain hon. member across the way has developed a keen interest of late years. We regard this as a decision which has already been taken, and I rejoice in what the minister said the other day. However there may well be important economic considerations which might be looked at most carefully by this board. One sees an interesting social and economic pattern developing at either end of the Canso causeway, and I would think forward looking gentlemen of the board ought to give consideration to what will happen when other provinces in the maritimes are finally linked to the banner province of Prince Edward Island.

I rejoice in the scope of the bill. I think that clause 9 betokens the kind of co-operation which will be conducive to an improvement of maritime conditions and I am one who is not at all concerned, despite the eloquence of the hon. member for Essex East, about the feasibility of co-operation among various boards. I think a direct application of the finest minds we can gather together upon the problems of the Atlantic region will be conducive to a betterment of our whole national economy.

(Translation):

Mr. Dumont: Mr. Chairman, the member who spoke before me said a few words about agriculture. I would like to add my own comments, tonight, because I do not think it is necessary to have an Atlantic development board, when, statistics in hand, we know that, at the present time, in Prince Edward Island, out of 12,000 farmers, 2,460 have an income lower than $1,200 a year; that in New Brunswick, out of 22,000 farmers, 13,000 do not make $1,200 annually; that in Nova Scotia, out of 21,000, 13,000 have an income of less than $1,200; that in Newfoundland, out of 2,387, 1,857 do not get an income of $1,200.

To solve the agriculture problem in eastern Canada, as I suggested at the beginning of the twenty fifth parliament, we have only to build grain elevators, reduce the price of feed grain, to enable the eastern farmers to get products at a better price. It is not necessary to spend more in order to secure votes at the next election. Eastern farmers want lower priced feed grain. They want to sell the products they have on hand.

Let us give the Canadian consumers, those who have children, like our Quebec people, the power to purchase the commodities produced in their own province.

Let us double the family allowances. Let us vote a larger grant to the sports council in order to train young people who, in their spare time, will develop and become strong enough to come here and claim their rights. Let us stop establishing boards which will bring no benefit to the people of this country.

(Text):

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, the remarks that have been made by various speakers since the committee resumed at eight o'clock are deserving of a great deal of attention and should be treated with the greatest respect. I have been impressed with some of the speeches that have been made, and at this particular moment I would like to address myself to the points raised by the hon. gentleman from Essex East, because he asked some point blank questions and requested specific replies.

It is not always possible to give specific and categorical replies to all questions, and I would like to suggest to him that he should read subclause (1) of clause 9 and read the objectives of the board as set forth in that subclause. He will find that the objects of the board are:

> —to inquire into and report to the minister upon measures and projects for fostering economic growth and development of the Atlantic region of Canada, and, without further limiting the generality of the foregoing, the board may, in furtherance of its objects—

And then it goes on to be somewhat specific. I would like to direct the attention of the hon. member to subclause (1) in its context and by itself, and to consider that it points out the primary duty of the board.

The board has a variety of functions and will deal with a variety of geographical areas to which it must give attention. There will be a variety of questions coming before it, some of which have been mentioned by speakers both tonight and on previous occasions in this debate. These will all have a place in the functions of the board, but I put forward subsection (1) of this clause as being the part of the clause which should be emphasized. In that connection I suggest to the hon. gentleman that the points which he has raised are of secondary significance and not of primary significance so far as the bill is concerned.

The hon. gentleman has brought up the question of co-operation between other boards, and it would seem to me it is difficult to spell out in detail and in precise terms just what that co-operation will consist of in this case. It is difficult even to explain what one may have in mind because we may differ in our concepts of the detailed way in which this board will function. To the extent of my limited experience in the commercial world of this country, I found that the most important thing in the conduct of a business was management, proper management and management by people with ability. In that connection I found that you did not gain by trying to determine in advance how you should meet every situation. If you did, you might as well have a clerk as a manager. So I suggest to my hon. friend that co-operation with other boards should be the secondary function of this board. The primary function should be to do the very things set forth in clause 9, subclause 1. Perhaps I may read it again:

> The objects of the board are to inquire into and report to the minister upon measures and projects for fostering the economic growth and development of the Atlantic region of Canada—

That is the mast on which I would nail this particular flag, so far as the board's primary duty is concerned. I do not think we should allow this board to become impotent, because it might very well be rendered so by putting some kind of a rope around its neck and saying to it, "You must co-operate here. You must co-operate there. Here is another area in which you must co-operate". I think we have to give the board freedom of action with the idea in mind that this is for the good of the country in general. Mr. Chairman, I am sure we will all, as Canadians, face the fact, that a prosperous and favourable economic climate in Canada—and when I say Canada, I mean all of Canada—is just as important, and perhaps more important, to the Atlantic provinces as it is to any other part of this country. So I do not see any conflict here. In fact, quite the opposite; I think there will be definite co-operation. I think the emphasis must be on the Atlantic provinces. That will be the duty of the board. But I see no particular difficulty about co-operation with other boards which will be before this house for legislative enactment in the very near future.

Mr. Chairman, I would like at this stage to associate myself with the remarks made by my hon. friend for Queens in connection with a suggestion made by the hon. gentleman from Vancouver Centre. I see great merit in his suggestion. I see no reason why it should not be adopted. I have no reason to think that it will not be adopted. I think it is a constructive idea. Various other points have been raised, Mr. Chairman, and I made a note of them. I believe I have dealt with them, although I do not know that I have dealt with the points raised by the hon. gentleman from Essex East to his satisfaction. I have dealt with them to my own satisfaction inasmuch as my own conception of the board is concerned; that is, its primary duty, its secondary duty and the fact that under subclause (d) you find that they even consider matters, not projects but matters, that may be usefully considered. Perhaps I may refer to the subclause:

> —consider and report to the minister upon any other matters that in the opinion of the board may usefully be considered—

I consider that could be a variety of things. That can certainly cover the subject mentioned by my hon. friend from Saint John-Albert. It could almost cover the waterfront, so far as that is concerned. In connection with the development of the area with regard to which this board will have a good deal of responsibility, I am quite satisfied that they have the greatest degree of flexibility under this bill. I do not want to get into a discussion about what we started to do in this country 100 years ago, and the fact that we started to work against geography in our concept of building a nation. We were going to have the trade flow east and west instead of north and south because the final concept was that we were going to build a nation. In my opinion the fathers of confederation had no conception of how great this country was destined to be. I believe we have made tremendous progress as a country. The trade must flow east and west to the extent that we can work toward that end in a proper manner and without any great injustice to any part of this great country and the fringe areas. In particular the eastern fringe areas may perhaps be considered by some of us as operating under something of an economic handicap. But I still submit that the advantages we have seen from association with the rest of Canada have been tremendous, and I for one do not regret that almost 100 years ago in 1867 they decided to embark upon this great venture against geography, and build a great nation with the trade flowing east and west.

This is a measure the government have submitted to parliament as their idea of a concrete step that might be taken to contribute to the development of that portion of this great country known as the Atlantic provinces. Every speaker has admitted that the bill is not perfect, and very few bills are perfect. It would be too bad if it were perfect, because our hon. friends would not have anything to find fault with and they would not be able to carry out their function as the official opposition. In that event I do not know what would happen to the hon. member for Essex East. He would not be able to rise with that eloquence for which he is famous and really sweep us off our feet from time to time, as he does, unless there was something he thought lacking in the legislation before the house.

Mr. Chairman, that is all I have to say at this stage. I believe that all the objections and misgivings that have been raised have been dealt with. With regard to the points made by my hon. friend from Queens, the committee may be sure that since the constituency I have the honour to represent is probably the best agricultural constituency in Canada, those points will certainly not be ignored so far as any influence that I may have is concerned. The points raised by all hon. members who have spoken will receive the greatest degree of consideration, and the misgivings expressed, particularly by my hon. friend from Essex East, I am sure will not be serious to the operation of the statute.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to detain the committee for more than a moment, especially in view of the last statement of the minister and the spirit in which it was made. We all on this side agree about the objective of this bill within the context of not only regional but national development. But the minister will agree with us that there cannot be satisfactory regional development in Canada unless there is adequate national development. Therefore we are most anxious—and this is one of the sources of our worry about this bill—that a bill of this character setting up a regional development board will not be obstructed or limited in its operation in any way by a national development board which has the same kind of duty and the same kind of function on a national scale.

The minister says that each board must be given freedom of action, and of course that is correct up to a point. He also said it would be unwise, if I understood him correctly, to so restrict the operation of this particular board that it would have a rope around its neck, and of course that is correct. But when the minister says we do not have to worry about the danger of non co-operation between boards which have similar functions in different areas; when he says, I think these were his words, that co-operation of this kind is not of primary significance, I think he underestimates the importance of this question.

[Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton).]

I recall very well the occasion a few years ago when we were debating in this house the establishment of the board of broadcast governors as part of the reorganization of the broadcasting system in this country. Some of us at that time pointed out the danger of conflict between the two important bodies which had been established in this field. But we were told at that time there was no need to worry about it. It is true the arguments used, though very much along the lines the minister has used tonight, were probably not advanced with the same skill and dexterity; they did not have the soothing quality which belongs to the Minister of National Revenue. However, we said then that the board of broadcast governors would undoubtedly come into conflict with the C.B.C. if steps were not taken at that time to avoid the possibility of such a conflict. Of course, events have proved we were right.

We are worried now about the same thing happening in this field. Our fears are increased because the Minister of Finance, speaking on another subject, the setting up of the national development board, said—and I have his words here: "The national development board will investigate, analyse and report on the medium and long term prospects and possibilities of particular areas." The maritime provinces certainly constitute a particular area. Those are special terms of reference and special functions for this very important board, and therefore it is of first significance to do everything possible to avoid overlapping, to avoid one board getting in the way of another. Surely, this is something which cannot be left to a general feeling that the boards will work out their own processes of co-operation as they go along. It is, I think, regrettable that some provision has not been made to ensure that serious overlapping will not take place. A certain amount of overlapping is inevitable. A certain amount, perhaps, may even be good. But when overlapping results in confusion, confusion will probably result in conflict. Therefore I think it is of first importance that provision should be made in some way—I know it cannot now be made under the terms of the legislation itself—

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Tommyrot.

Mr. Pearson: That is an interesting comment from the hon. gentleman. It is the kind of observation we have been led to expect from him. But, as I was saying, it is of first importance—

An hon. Member: Let us get on with it.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I would ask members of the committee to give the Leader of the Opposition the opportunity to complete his remarks on clause 9 of the bill.

Mr. Pearson: So it is of first importance that the government should take all possible steps that can be taken to ensure, as far as government can ensure, that this overlapping, confusion and conflict do not take place.

We hope the minister is right in his optimistic feeling that this will not happen, but we think it is our duty to warn him that it might well happen within the terms of this legislation.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 10—Meetings.

Mr. Crestohl: Clause 10 speaks of the times and places at which meetings should be held. This, to me, is simply a matter of bylaws and routine regulations. I should like to ask the minister whether these provisions should not fall within clause 12. If the hon. gentleman will be good enough to look at clause 12 he will see it refers to bylaws. Why cannot what it now contained in clause 10 be dealt with in clause 12?

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): The justifications for this clause is that there are various reasons which make it most desirable that there should be at least one meeting held in Ottawa. It was felt that in the interest of the most efficient discharge of the board's duties there should be the one meeting here.

This point was raised some time ago by another hon. member in connection with meetings of the board to be held at various places and at various times. It was felt, of course, that the board should have freedom to meet at various places in the Atlantic provinces. It might, for example, wish to hold one meeting in Newfoundland, another in Nova Scotia, and so on. But one meeting must be held in Ottawa itself.

Mr. Crestohl: But why cannot the bylaws made under clause 12 provide precisely for what the minister has just set forth?

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): I think I would have to answer in this way. While this is an Atlantic development board, we are still justified, I am sure, in looking on it as a federal board. Its funds will come from the federal government and, we hope, its financial resources will also come from the federal government. It is a federal board in spite of the fact that it is an Atlantic development board. I see no inconsistency about that.

Mr. Crestohl: Clause 12 gives the board the power to make its bylaws. Can the minister say if it would be precluded from setting up time and places of meetings so as to include one meeting at least in Ottawa. Would the board have jurisdiction to do that under the bylaws?

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): I am sure that the hon. member has more knowledge of company law than I have. I see no reason why it could not be done in the way suggested, but it has not been done in that way. However, I see no reason why it should be condemned because we have not done it in that way.

Mr. Macquarrie: I am in support of clause 10 as it stands. History has been invoked tonight. I might point out to the minister that Charlottetown was the scene of an important conference at which maritime union was discussed. This led to an important and wonderful event, the confederation of the British North American colonies, and I should like to take the opportunity of suggesting that the first meeting of this board should take place in the historic city where it all began.

Mr. Pugh: With reference to the suggestion made by the hon. member for Cartier, that the provision in clause 10 might be contained in clause 12, dealing with bylaws, I should like to point out that bylaws may be changed from time to time—

The Deputy Chairman: Order. The hon. member cannot speak about clause 12 because clause 10 has not been carried.

Mr. Pugh: With respect to the suggestion that clause 10 was not necessary because its substance could be included in clause 12, I am only pointing out that this is a specific instruction which is put into the bill that at least one meeting of the board each year must be held in Ottawa. It is all right to put that in the bylaws, but I would point out that the bylaws are subject to change by the board as they see fit.

Clause agreed to.

Clause 11 agreed to.

On clause 12—Bylaws.

Mr. Crestohl: Mr. Chairman, under this clause the board is given the latitude to make bylaws for the regulation of its proceedings "and generally for the conduct of its activities". I think that the words "and generally" contained in that phrase in the clause could be confusing. We have had debates in this house in the past in which I think the Prime Minister, at one time, said that we ought to review our statutes to see to what extent authority is given to various boards to make their own bylaws. Frequently when making their own bylaws boards have allowed themselves rather unusual latitude. In some cases boards have been established and made bylaws which provided that there shall be no appeal from their decisions, that their decisions could not be taken before the courts, for example, by way of a writ of prohibition. Probably their bylaws carry them a little too far. I was wondering just how far this rather innocuous statement can take this board, when we give it power to make bylaws generally for the conduct of its activities. If it was intended that the board may make bylaws for the regulation of its proceedings, then that is sufficient and would be acceptable to me. But to go beyond giving it the authority to make bylaws for the regulation of its proceedings is, I think, going far beyond what parliament intends a board to do.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I ask the minister to give some explanation to this committee of what is intended by the words "and generally make bylaws for the conduct of its activities".

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, in answer to the hon. gentleman, I am sure he is familiar with the general process of making bylaws in companies. Bylaws can run to 25 or 30 in number, even from my limited knowledge of company law, so as to regulate the activities of a company, its staff, and other matters. I cannot see any other way of doing it except in a general way, as this language indicates, namely, to say "for the conduct of its activities, including the establishment of advisory and other committees—". I think that later on, when the duties are set forth in a little more detail, the need for specific bylaws will become even more apparent. I do not know how helpful I have been, but I have tried to be as helpful as possible.

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Mr. Crestohl: Mr. Chairman, I do not want to delay this matter—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Crestohl: Mr. Chairman, if hon. members think it is humorous, let them laugh. That is about the only thing they have done since parliament opened. May I point out that although amending this clause may delay matters somewhat, I would invite the minister's attention to the fact that if, after the word "proceedings," the clause had continued "including the establishment of advisory and other committees" established by the board, the clause would indicate very clearly that the board may establish bylaws for the regulation of its activities, just as the clause now reads, as well as for the regulation of committees of the board which may be established. But I would eliminate what I call an innocuous expression, namely "and generally for the conduct of its activities". All that the minister wants the clause to do is to give the board latitude to adopt bylaws for the regulation of its proceedings. That is what I think the committee would gladly grant, but not anything further than what is defined.

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Chairman, while we were not able to take down the amendment suggested by the hon. member, it seemed to us to have a defect in that it would not comprehend bylaws with regard to staff matters. That was one of the reasons, as the minister has explained, why this clause was phrased in just such a way. There will not only be a board and subcommittees, but there will also be the responsibility on the board and its executive director to hire staff, and to make pension arrangements, salary arrangements, and what-not with them. All these matters are covered under the provision relating to bylaws, but under the proposal of my hon. friend from Cartier they would not be covered. That is why we adopted this language in the bill.

Clause agreed to.

Clause 13 agreed to.

On clause 14—Technical and special advisors.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Chairman, this is the last clause of the bill with which we are going to deal, and I want to make a very few brief points with regard to it, and at least attempt to obtain some clarification from the minister. This is the key section of the bill. It provides that:

> The board may engage on a temporary basis or for any period of not more than two years—

And so on. At first glance it seems that this is another of those ridiculous provisions, similar to the $3,000 honorarium originally suggested for the chairman. The minister has already made it clear, as the other clauses of the bill indicate, that the primary responsibility and the principal activities of the board and its staff will be directed into the fields of study, research, investigation, and what-have-you. This would seem to indicate that it would be essential to obtain the services of technical experts, economists, statisticians and sociologists. The government has already made a great deal of the permanent staff which will be available in the form of the executive director and other employees of the board. We suggest that it would be very difficult, if not completely impossible, to attract, for example, an economist from a university, where he would have pension provision, summer holidays, and the like, and to ask him to take on an assignment which offers him no security whatsoever and no long term engagement.

Therefore we suggest an amendment which I think is not very controversial but which will provide for this problem. I therefore move:

That clause 14 be amended by adding after the words "on a temporary" in the first line thereof the words "or permanent" and deleting the words "or for any period of not more than two years" in the second line thereof, so that the clause as amended will read:

"14. The board may engage on a temporary or permanent basis the services of persons having technical or specialized knowledge of any matter relating to the work of the board, to advise and assist the board in the performance of its duties under this act, and with the approval of the treasury board may fix and pay the remuneration of such persons."

I suggest that the minister has been asking for objective suggestions. If this amendment does not fit into that category, then I do not know what type of suggestion he is looking for. I am sure all hon. members who are sincerely interested in this board's being able to do something useful would want to provide it with the opportunity to attract qualified people on a full time basis.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): In making some observations in reply to the hon. gentleman I might say that a good deal of discussion took place before this section was phrased and that what is contemplated here is the matter of consulting firms who might be employed on a temporary basis to make a report on certain things. For instance, I could make a report on the particular merit of, we will say, Cape Breton coal for a certain purpose. These consultants might have specialized knowledge and they might make a specialized examination. It is contemplated that clause 13 will cover the staff. Clause 14 covers the specialized examinations which it is envisaged might be necessary for the success of the board, and provides that for these examinations they might have authority to engage the services of consultants.

Mr. MacInnis: If this is what the minister and those who drafted the bill meant, why did they not say so? If they covered staff and persons in clause 13, why did they not say "services of organizations and consulting firms"? It seems to me that there is a loophole in the provision. I do not think the amendment is going to interfere in any way with the intent of the minister with regard to organizations or consulting firms. He does not mention anywhere in clause 13 technically qualified persons such as economists and so on.

The Deputy Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Amendment (Mr. MacInnis) negatived: Yeas, 53; nays, 65.

The Deputy Chairman: I declare the amendment lost. Shall clause 14 carry?

Mr. Churchill: In view of the consultations which will be going on in the various parties tomorrow and the discussions and the consultations following that among the various house leaders, I think I shall announce for tomorrow only the third reading of this bill, which I think will be satisfactory, followed by interim supply.

At ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

*MEETINGS ON CHINESE IMMIGRATION, LORD ELGIN HOTEL, OTTAWA

Question No. 953—Mr. Howard:

1. Were the "meetings" and "discussions" "of a general nature" which took place in the Lord Elgin hotel in February of 1960, in connection with the alleged illegal entry to Canada of people of Chinese origin to which some employees of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration were "invited", and at which Mr. J. K. Abbott was present, held and conducted with the approval of the then minister of citizenship and immigration and, if not, when did these "meetings" and "discussions" come to her attention, what action was taken as a result thereof, and by whom was this action taken?

2. With respect to the said "invitation" (a) who tendered it (b) how many employees of the department were so "invited" and, of these, how many were (i) male (ii) female (c) what are the names and positions of the employees so "invited" (d) what form did it take, was any element of authority attached to it and, if so, what degree (e) did any of the employees object to so attending the "meetings" and, if so, how many, and what form did the objections take?

Mr. Bell (Carleton): The answer to this question covers approximately a full page and perhaps it might be printed in Hansard without being read.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreeable that this be taken as read and that it should appear in Hansard in the ordinary course?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's note: The answer referred to above is as follows:]

1 and 2. Discussions held between departmental officers relating to the official business of the department do not require specific ministerial approval in advance, and in the meetings referred to, no specific ministerial approval was sought or obtained. Two senior employees of the department with special knowledge of the problems involved in handling Chinese applications for citizenship and immigration were invited to participate in the discussions with the director of inspection services and the R.C.M.P. The employees were selected and invited by the director of inspection services for the purpose of explaining the procedures followed and the problems encountered in processing Chinese applications for immigration through the Hong Kong office and Chinese applications for citizenship through citizenship courts and offices in Canada. The officers selected were (1) a former superintendent of Canadian immigration in Hong Kong who had recently returned to headquarters; (2) the then deputy registrar of Canadian citizenship. Arrangements made were entirely informal and by mutual consent and no objection of any kind was raised by any of the participants.

The decision to discontinue arrangements for further meetings was taken by mutual agreement after discussions between the then deputy minister and the director of inspection services, following reports which came to the minister's attention that such meetings were being held.

The foregoing reply is based on the recollection of the then minister, the then deputy minister, the director of inspection services, and the participants concerned, since the written records of the department contain no information bearing on the questions raised.

COLUMBIA RIVER POWER—SAFETY OF ARROW LAKES DAM

Question No. 1,068—Mr. Davis:

Has the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources recently received any engineering or other information which questions the safety of one of the Columbia river treaty projects, namely the high dam on the Arrow lakes in Canada?

Mr. Dinsdale: My attention has been drawn to a letter to the editor of the Nelson Daily News which appears in the October 24, 1962, issue of that paper, and which raises this question.

[Mr. Marcoux.]

Competent engineers have advised that a dam of the proposed height can be built quite safely at the suggested site; see, for example, the testimony of Dr. H. Q. Golder before the British Columbia comptroller of water rights at Castlegar, October 3, 1961, which reads in part:

Finally, I would just like to say that this dam is possible at this site because the head is not very large, only 78 feet; although we call it High Arrow dam, it is not really a high dam. Second, the loss by seepage is not important and we can control the amount of seepage. Third, very good materials are available for building the dam, and the materials in the foundation are excellent as foundation materials.

Therefore, Mr. Comptroller, I have no hesitation in saying that a dam of this height can be built quite safely at this site.

The more recent subsurface investigations at the site of the High Arrow dam have confirmed Dr. Golder's conclusions.

NET FARM INCOME

Question No. 1,094—Mr. Matheson:

What is the average net realized income of Canadian farm operators from farming operations, in constant dollars, for each year commencing 1956, using the index of prices of commodities and services used by farmers, including farm living costs, for converting the net income figures to constant dollars?

Questions

Mr. Jorgenson:

	Realized farm net income	Price index numbers of commodities & services used by farmers*		Realized net income adjusted by price index numbers of commodities to services used by farmers
	$000	1935-39 = 100	1956 = 100	$000
1956	1,238,093	230.3	100.0	1,238,093
1957	1,196,958	238.7	103.6	1,155,365
1958	1,402,218	242.7	105.4	1,330,378
1959	1,273,163	249.8	108.5	1,173,422
1960	1,303,065	254.8	110.6	1,178,178
1961	1,340,922	259.0	112.5	1,191,931

*Inclusive of farm living costs.

Note: Average income for farm operators has not been calculated because of the diversity in estimates of numbers of farmers and the fact that farmers receive considerable income from sources other than the farm.

*TRADE PROGRAM "OPERATION WORLD MARKETS"

Question No. 1,106—Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale):

In connection with the national Canadian samples show and other activities contemplated under the program described as "Operation World Markets", has the government made provision for any procedure to determine from participants the number and quantity of orders for Canadian products attributable to that program?

Mr. Jorgenson: Yes. Approximately six months following the conclusion of this event the department will ask participants to indicate the results. This is the normal procedure. Experience of the past indicates that about half of those asked for information will provide replies outlining in a general way the degree of success achieved. Approximately one quarter of those responding will tell us, on a confidential basis, exactly what business they have done.

3. Before a decision is taken in this connection, will public bodies, such as the businessmen's association and the municipal council of Ville de Repentigny, be consulted?

Mr. Sevigny: Mr. Speaker, the answers to this question are as follows:

3. Representations submitted by municipalities or by civil and civic organizations will receive the fullest consideration as far as the selection of a site for the world fair is concerned, but the final decision will be made by an independent body.

Question No. 1,122*—Mr. Lessard (St. Henry):

INCREASED PENALTIES FOR COMBINES OFFENCES

Question No. 1,124—Mr. Mather:

Has the government given consideration to initiating substantial increases in the penalties for persons or firms violating the combines laws to make these regulations more effective in the protection of consumers?

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Contraventions of the combination, merger and monopoly, discriminatory and predatory pricing, discriminatory promotional allowance and resale price maintenance provisions of the Combines Investigation Act (sections 32, 33, 33A, 33B and 34) are indictable offences and penalties on conviction provided either directly or indirectly by reference to the Criminal Code are imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years or to a fine in the discretion of the court or to both. There is, therefore, no limit to the fine which may be imposed upon individuals or corporations and the latter are not subject to imprisonment.

A contravention of section 33C which prohibits misrepresentations as to the ordinary price of an article is punishable upon summary conviction and the penalty is the general penalty provided in the Criminal Code for summary conviction offences.

Consideration is therefore not being given to initiating substantial increases in the penalties for violations of the Combines Investigation Act and if any decision were made in this regard, it would be announced in the normal way.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

CORRESPONDENCE RESPECTING OFFSHORE MINERAL RIGHTS, B.C.

Motion No. 56—Mr. Winch:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house copies of correspondence or any documents exchanged, between any federal cabinet minister or departmental head with any cabinet minister or departmental head of the province of British Columbia relative to matters relating to offshore mineral rights or the continental shelf of British Columbia, since January 1, 1958.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Speaker, I am prepared to accept this motion subject only to the usual reservation regarding privileged or confidential documents and the concurrence of the provincial government involved.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Speaker, may I add one word in view of the importance and urgency of this matter. Would it help the minister if I were to state that I am now prepared to file, if required, a letter from the minister of mines and petroleum resources of British Columbia in which he says that he certainly has no objection to my moving a motion in the House of Commons for the production of all papers, correspondence or telegrams relative to the question of offshore rights in British Columbia, and that this appears to be the most proper form of procedure in this instance.

Mr. Speaker: Under the circumstances and subject to the reservation expressed by the minister, perhaps the minister and the hon. member could get together with respect to the letter that is in the possession of the hon. member and come to some happy agreement in this regard. Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

UNITED NATIONS

CONGO—SUGGESTED APPLICATION OF SANCTIONS TO KATANGA

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question to the Prime Minister arises out of the answer he gave yesterday on the matter of the application of economic sanctions. Can the Prime Minister tell the house the policy of the government in respect of the proposal made by the United Nations secretary general to apply sanctions to Katanga, which I understand is being considered at the moment by the advisory committee on the Congo, of which Canada is a member?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in so far as the Congo situation is concerned I will answer to the extent of the information that is before me at the moment. The Leader of the Opposition did not let me know in advance, and I have not got a complete answer to the question as posed by him.

The government has indicated its support of the United Nations plan for reconciliation in the Congo. The plan provides among other things for a new federal constitution, an equitable division of Katanga's mining revenues, an amnesty for political leaders and the unification of all Congolese forces.

As the hon. gentleman has said, the secretary general is making new efforts to persuade those concerned to implement the plan, and a number of suggestions have been made to solve the question. This is one matter that is demanding, and properly so, the concentration of the United Nations with a view to finding a settlement in the Congo so that the heavy burden which the Congo operation has placed on the United Nations can be brought to an end.

So far as the particular question is concerned, I think until further discussions have taken place with the secretary general and member nations it would be better that I do not go further than I have gone at this time.

TRADE

REQUEST FOR IMPLEMENTATION OF RECOMMENDATIONS OF PRODUCTIVITY COUNCIL MISSION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. In view of the decline in employment by some 56,000 and the increase in unemployment by some 59,000 in the last reported period, which was shown in a release by the minister's office this morning, will the minister give the house an assurance that the suggestion made yesterday by the Canadian Labour Congress, to the effect that the unanimous recommendations of the special mission to Europe of the productivity council be implemented at once, will be adopted?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the increase in unemployment has been in the farm sector, which the Canadian Labour Congress described very aptly yesterday as being characteristic of our seasonal unemployment.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): In view of the fact that this is an important matter, will the minister not dodge the question and answer it?

Mr. Starr: We have been talking about co-operation between labour and management for the last four years. The hon. member woke up to it only four months ago.

Mr. Speaker: Order. We are moving into debate now.

AGRICULTURE

RECEPTION OF PROPOSALS BY WESTERN FARMERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture on his welcome return to the house. Would the minister care to comment on the reported cool reception his proposals received before farm organizations, and the further report that when he appeared before the Manitoba farmers' union he was booed?

Mr. Speaker: Order. This is asking the minister to embark on a contentious answer, and I do not think the question is quite proper in the manner in which it is phrased.

HOGS—REQUEST FOR RESTORATION OF PREMIUM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Bernard Dumont (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture.

Due to the fact that Christmas presents are coming from all sides at this time of the year, can the minister tell me whether the premium on grade A hogs will be restored between now and December 20?

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, this is a matter on which I have previously made known my opinions in the house, and when an announcement is ready it will be made in the house.

PUBLIC SERVICE

GLASSCO COMMISSION—IMPLEMENTATION OF THERIEN REPORT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): I wish to address a question to the Prime Minister of which I gave notice this morning. Since Senator McCutcheon has been appointed to effectuate the recommendations of the Glassco report, will he also be in charge of the recommendations of the Therien report of the same Glassco commission?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in so far as Senator McCutcheon is concerned he is chairman of the committee of ministers established to look into all matters in connection with the report which will, of course, include the recommendations and suggestions of Mr. Therien.

INQUIRY AS TO SALARY INCREASES FOR CERTAIN CLASSES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Will the minister see what he can do to extend the pay increases to those civil servants in the lower brackets who were missed the other day?

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure what the hon. member means by "missed." There are some who might be termed missed in the recommendations of the civil service commission, and under the act the government acts on the recommendations of the commission and can only act after those recommendations are received. In the lower categories there are some employees who have not been dealt with, but they will be dealt with as soon as recommendations about them are received from the commission.

ROYAL CANADIAN AIR FORCE

FAILURE TO SHOOT DOWN UNMANNED U.S. PLANE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John H. Addison (York North): I wished to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence, but in his absence I shall direct it to the Associate Minister of National Defence. My question concerns the unmanned United States tanker aircraft which was allowed to fly over the province of Quebec last Monday night, and which incidentally passed within 200 miles of the city of Quebec. Why did not the R.C.A.F. shoot this aircraft down into an unpopulated area, since it could have endangered lives when allowed to crash after its fuel was exhausted?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think the hon. member should put his question on the order paper.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PAYMENT OF SESSIONAL STAFF DURING HOLIDAY RECESS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, you have authorized me to give a reply to the hon. member for Vancouver East, who on Friday last asked a question concerning payment of the sessional staff during the holiday recess. The answer is that the employment and pay of the sessional staff will continue during that period.

Mr. Bernard Dumont (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence.

Mr. Speaker: That question should be put on the order paper.

ARTS, LETTERS AND SCIENCES

SUGGESTED ROYAL COMMISSION TO STUDY CANADIAN CULTURAL SITUATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): I would like to ask the Prime Minister a question arising from the strong statement made in the last 24 hours by Mr. Donald Gordon, president of Canadian National Railways, in favour of a royal commission to inquire into the relationship of the two cultures in Canada. I would like to ask the Prime Minister whether the government is any further along in its consideration of such a commission.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this matter has been brought up on a number of occasions. When the government is in a position to advise or inform the house, then that will be done.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

SONS OF FREEDOM, B.C.—SIZE OF DELEGATION TO OTTAWA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Can the Prime Minister give the house an estimate of the number of Sons of Freedom the premier of British Columbia is sending to Ottawa for Christmas?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it is a little too early yet to deal with presents for Christmas.

CIVIL DEFENCE

REPORTED CONVERSION OF PUBLIC BUILDINGS INTO FALL-OUT SHELTERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. James E. Walker (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I was wondering whether the Prime Minister has acquainted himself with the report of what was said by the minister of defence, which was the basis of my question yesterday, as follows:

> Is the government pushing ahead with an estimated one billion dollar program of converting over 4,000 public buildings into community fall-out shelters, as has been reported by the minister of defence to the press?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would have to say the report was delivered to me yesterday. When the minister returns from Paris the matter can receive consideration, and I am sure there is no excessive haste needed at this time.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): May I ask the Minister of Finance a supplementary question. Could he say whether he is aware of any billion dollar program of this character?

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, government programs are being studied at the moment, and they will be brought before the house at the proper time.

Mr. Walker: May I ask a supplementary question?

Mr. Speaker: Of whom?

Mr. Walker: I was going to put it to the Prime Minister, but as this has been referred to the Minister of Finance can the minister say whether budgetary approval of parliament will be sought before firm commitments are made regarding this program?

Mr. Nowlan: Budgetary approval is always sought, Mr. Speaker.

INQUIRY FOR RETURN

C.N.R. SERVICE, NEWFOUNDLAND

On the orders of the day:

Mr. C. W. Carter (Burin-Burgeo): I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State concerning question No. 642 which was placed on the order paper in my name on November 6 and made an order for return on December 3. Will the Secretary of State endeavour to have this return made available before the Christmas recess?

Hon. G. E. Halpenny (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I shall be glad to do that.

FINANCE

INQUIRY AS TO REMOVAL OF IMPORT SURCHARGES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. J. Benson (Kingston): Mr. Speaker, I was going to address a question to the Minister of Justice, but since he has left the house perhaps I can address it to the Minister of Finance. On October 4, 1962, as recorded on page 224 of Hansard, the Minister of Justice, in speaking of the so-called austerity program, stated:

> When the time comes when we can begin to reduce the program I can say that we shall first remove the import surcharges and then cancel the suspension of civil service salary increases.

Since the government has announced an end to the suspension of civil service salary increases, can we expect immediate removal of the import surcharges, or has the government once more reversed its policy?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think the hon. member was laying a little trap there for a controversial reply.

Mr. Pickersgill: Why not?

Mr. Speaker: It is not in keeping with order, at least not to have controversial replies anyway.

PENSIONS

INQUIRY AS TO COMMUNICATIONS FROM QUEBEC AND NEWFOUNDLAND

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. Now that the elections are over in the two provinces which have not previously agreed to the proposed amendment to the British North America Act regarding contributory old age pensions, can the Prime Minister say whether he has had any communications from Mr. Lesage and Mr. Smallwood regarding this matter?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): No, sir.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

RECRUITMENT OF PERSONNEL FOR MATANE-STE. ANNE DES MONTS LINE

Could the minister tell us if the management of the Canadian National Railways has completed the recruiting of the staff needed for the efficient administration of the railway line linking Matane to Ste. Anne des Monts, which should be finished soon?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, in this case as in all others, the C.N.R. will hire the staff needed when required.

ATLANTIC DEVELOPMENT BOARD

PROVISION FOR DEFINITION OF DUTIES, APPOINTMENT OF MEMBERS, ETC.

On the order:

Third reading of Bill No. C-94, to provide for the establishment of an Atlantic development board—the Minister of National Revenue.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I should like to raise a question of privilege in connection with proceeding with third reading of the bill that has just been called. It has been brought to my notice that there is someone in Ottawa who is purporting to be the secretary of the Atlantic development board, and it seems to me we should have this matter cleared up at once, sir. I would not say this if it were a mere matter of idle gossip, but perhaps I may, in the most uncontentious way possible, ask the minister about this; because I am sure he will want to clear it up.

Atlantic Development Board

Mr. Speaker: Order. May I raise one question. I have some doubt that the minister could reply on third reading, and I am just wondering how this is going to be accomplished.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is precisely why I raised it as a question of privilege, because it did not seem to me to be fair to the minister for me to intervene in the debate and raise this point. I can raise it very briefly now, and I do not intend to embellish it in any way, so the minister may clear up the point at once. The premier of Newfoundland telephoned me this morning—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Benidickson: The Prime Minister laughs.

Mr. Pickersgill: The Prime Minister seems to find this very amusing, but it is a serious matter dealing with the business of the house. As I was saying, the premier of Newfoundland telephoned me this morning to inquire if there was anyone in Ottawa who was authorized to act as secretary of the Atlantic development board. I said "Of course it is quite impossible, because the board has not been established. The legislation has not even been through one house, much less two". However, he said "This morning I received a telegram from the deputy minister of economic development, from Moncton, where he is attending a meeting of APEC". I intend to read only the first sentence of the telegram, which is as follows:

> Secretary of the Atlantic development board phoning from Ottawa asking APEC to have ready Monday a list of projects recommended by APEC branches of each province.

The telegram went on to suggest to the premier that such a list should be prepared. It seemed to me, Mr. Speaker that it could not possibly be that anybody had been designated to this post, and that the minister would want to clear up that matter before we proceed with the debate.

Mr. Speaker: I have some difficulty in deciding just what is the point of privilege in this particular instance. The hon. member might be able to assist me in that regard.

Mr. Pickersgill: It would seem to me, Mr. Speaker, that if anyone has been designated by the government to be the secretary of this board, before parliament has approved the setting up of that board, it would be a very serious contempt of parliament. That is the matter of privilege involved. I do not believe for a minute that this has happened and I would not have paid any attention to it if this message had not come to a respected organization like APEC, been passed on to the deputy minister of economic development of Newfoundland, and from him to the premier. I am sure the minister would want to assure us that the government is not anticipating any action by parliament in this regard.

Mr. Benidickson: Where does the pay come from?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): There must be an answer to this.

Mr. Speaker: I have some difficulty on the matter of privilege. If I let the minister reply I would be assuming that it is a question of privilege, and I think that would be somewhat irregular. There has been no motion for third reading. Under the circumstances, perhaps for clarification and seeing that the minister wishes to rise, I will permit him to deal with the question.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I have no knowledge as to where the information—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I was perhaps a little precipitate, in so far as my remarks regarding third reading were concerned. I shall put the motion so that the minister may reply.

Hon. H. J. Flemming (Minister of National Revenue) moved the third reading of Bill No. C-94, to provide for the establishment of an Atlantic development board.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the matter raised by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate is certainly completely unknown to me. I think I speak for the government as well. We have never heard of such a thing. It was never even contemplated. I am unable to understand this. Usually stories of this sort have a little basis in fact, but so far as I am concerned and so far as the government is concerned this has no basis whatsoever.

Mr. A. J. MacEachen (Inverness-Richmond): Mr. Speaker, it is not my intention to delay unduly the decision of the house by taking part in the debate on third reading of this bill. Unfortunately I did not have an opportunity to take part in the earlier consideration of this measure, but that in itself would not have encouraged me to take part in the debate on third reading were it not for a desire on the part of members of the official opposition to make another effort to remove what we regard as a fundamental deficiency in the terms of this legislation. For the first time the principle of the bill and all its clauses are before the house for a final look, and the House of Commons is now in a position to find out whether the committee of the whole did what it could have done to improve the bill. If we are of the opinion that the committee of the whole did not do that, then it is open to the house to refer the bill back for further consideration. That is what I would hope to do by moving an amendment at the close of my remarks.

The general purpose of this legislation is to promote the economic development of the Atlantic area of Canada. As we all know, Mr. Speaker, economic development even in the most underdeveloped countries of the world is associated with a supply of capital and capital formation. Capital and investment is the economic side of development in general. We had expected when this legislation was first heralded that provision would be made for the spending of capital in order to accelerate the development of the Atlantic provinces. As a matter of fact I think every authority ever investigating the economy of our area has come to the conclusion that large quantities of additional capital are required, not only in the public sector of the economy but also in the private sector.

The Minister of National Revenue, as premier of New Brunswick, took the occasion more than once to point out the difficulty that private business had in acquiring capital, not only working capital but investment capital, owing to the stringency of the Canadian banking system. The hon. member for Davenport headed a royal commission which investigated the economic prospects of Canada as a whole, and one of the studies in connection with the commission's work did nothing more than insist upon the necessity of additional quantities of capital not only to provide for improved transportation facilities and public facilities in general but also to provide for the improvement of the productive capacity of the primary industries of the Atlantic region. In the light of that analysis the royal commission proposed the establishment of a capital projects commission. It was not to be an advisory board. It was not to be a research agency. It was to be an agency with capital at its disposal in order to meet the fundamental requirements of the economy.

Indeed, that idea of a capital fund caught on widely. It was subscribed to by APEC and has been mentioned very often in this debate. It became one of the fundamental planks of the Conservative members' platform in the federal election in 1957. The creation of an Atlantic provinces capital projects commission was among the highlights of that successful election manifesto.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): You haven't read it.

Mr. MacEachen: Indeed I have. No action was taken in the last parliament to institute the capital projects commission which was heralded by the Conservative members at that time. There was never any difference of opinion on the necessity for this development, because the Liberal party at its 1958 convention asked for the establishment of such a capital fund and at our national rally, where I had the opportunity to serve as chairman of the policy committee on the Atlantic provinces, one of the main ambitions of the delegates from all parts of the Atlantic provinces was to give support to an agency which would have capital at its disposal in order to benefit that region.

So I say the concept of an agency has developed inseparably from an agency having capital at its disposal. As a matter of fact the Minister of National Revenue himself referred to a question addressed to the Prime Minister last April by the hon. member for Cumberland, and in asking that question the hon. member had in mind what we all had in mind, namely that any agency would be a fund; a development fund, a capital fund. I say this because he asked the Prime Minister whether it was the intention of the government to bring forward a measure to establish a development fund; not a board, not an advisory agency. The Prime Minister in his reply left out the crucial word, of course, and said it was the intention of the government at some future date to bring in a measure to establish a development board, not a fund.

So we want, on third reading, once again to bring to the attention of the government, to members of the House of Commons, and to the people of Canada generally the fundamental weakness of this legislation, because this is primarily a board to give advice and to make recommendations. There is nobody who is more aware than I am of the necessity for research and inquiry. But nobody who has followed the history of the Atlantic provinces in the last 30 years is unaware that the best economists and the best judges have been brought together in one royal commission after another to examine the situation and tell us what is wrong with our economy and what ought to be done about it. More recently the Atlantic provinces economic council, of which the minister was a charter founding member, has spent itself producing advice and recommendations to public authorities as to what ought to be done. Mr. Speaker, we have an abundance of advice and an abundance of recommendations. All we lack is the capital, and fiscal measures by the central government to put into effect those important recommendations.

It is not possible for a private member on this or any other side of the house to get up and move an amendment which would place upon this board an obligation to spend money. That is impossible because of the proscriptions surrounding this kind of legislation. But it is possible for a private member to call attention, by an amendment, to the necessity of developing a capital program for the Atlantic provinces. It is possible for a private member to move an amendment which would make it one of the functions of the Atlantic development board to draw up each year a capital program which would go before the minister for consideration. If that recommended program proved sound and satisfactory, then the minister could make the necessary recommendations and provide the necessary estimates for carrying out the proposals made therein.

I would hope that members in all parties, and certainly those in the opposition parties, would find it possible to support this amendment, which would at least tell the people of the Atlantic provinces that this board will seriously study the capital requirements of that area, and that it will present to the minister each year a program for possible implementation. We cannot go beyond that as private members, but if we do not go that far we are not doing anything to meet the expectations of the people of the Atlantic provinces.

I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Robichaud):

That Bill C-94 be not now read a third time, but that it be referred back to the committee of the whole for the purpose of considering an amendment to clause 9 as follows:

That the following be added as paragraph (e) to section (1) of clause 9:

(e) Prepare annually for the consideration of the minister a program of capital projects designed to enlarge the basic economy of the Atlantic provinces.

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member prepared to discuss the question whether his amendment is in order?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, yes. I am satisfied that the amendment is in order. I think the most usual objection which is taken to an amendment of this kind is that such a request places a burden or an additional charge upon the minister. If that is not an objection, the only other possible argument that might be put forward is that this amendment somehow goes beyond the scope of the bill. Clause 9 reads:

(1) The objects of the board are to inquire into and report to the minister upon measures and projects for fostering the economic growth and development of the Atlantic region of Canada—

That is the general authority granted to the board by this bill. Then in four paragraphs which follow there is an effort to delineate in some detail the particular functions which may be assigned to the board. The additional paragraph which I propose simply specifies that the objects of the board, namely to inquire into and report to the minister, be carried out in one particular by preparing an annual list of capital projects which the board would give to the minister for consideration. In that way it seems to me that the amendment is fully within the scope of the bill and within the principle adopted on second reading.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Parliamentary Secretary to the Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the point of order I wish to make is quite simply directed to the viewpoint which the hon. member has expressed with regard to relevancy. I would refer your honour to Beauchesne, the fourth edition, citation 418, which is found at page 288. That citation says:

—All amendments which may be moved on a second reading of a bill may be moved on the third reading with the restriction that they cannot deal with any matter which is not contained in the bill—

With all due respect to the hon. member, I submit that the effect of this particular idea formulated by him in this amendment is to add something to the bill which is definitely not contemplated. This point was debated extensively yesterday, and I think hon. members of the official opposition recognized this during an attempt yesterday to move an amendment in committee very much along the same lines. I think they recognize that this is an addition to what is proposed in the bill. I simply leave it at that, Your Honour. This is an attitude, a point of view, which is not contemplated by the bill in clause 9. This is an addition to it, and is consequently out of order.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, the citations one needs to look at in connection with this matter, so far as Beauchesne's fourth edition are concerned, are really only two in number, and perhaps they might be put on the record at this point. Citation 415 reads:

(1) When a bill comes up for third reading a member may move that it be not now read a third time but that it be referred back to the committee of the whole for the purpose of amending it in any particular—

That is, of course, what the hon. member for Inverness-Richmond (Mr. MacEachen) has sought to do. However, there is the restriction to which the parliamentary secretary to the Prime Minister (Mr. Baldwin) has referred, spelled out in citation 418, which says, in part:

—All amendments which may be moved on a second reading of a bill may be moved on the third reading with the restriction that they cannot deal with any matter which is not contained in the bill—

Mr. Speaker, that seems to boil the issue down to a very simple one. The hon. member has the right to move an amendment of this kind, but clearly it must deal with something that is contained in the bill. I suggest that the bill does contain, as one of its objects, that the board shall "inquire into and report to the minister upon measures and projects for fostering the economic growth and development of the Atlantic region of Canada". It shall also "keep under constant review appropriate methods of furthering the sound economic development of the Atlantic region". I submit, Mr. Speaker, that the amendment deals with that very aspect of the bill. The only suggestion the hon. member is making is that there be an annual report to the minister along the lines already contemplated by the bill.

At the risk of repetition, may I say that one of the powers in the bill is the authority of the board to report to the minister on projects for the improvement of conditions in the Atlantic region. All this amendment does is to require that these reports to the minister shall be made annually. As a matter of fact, this is the main object of the bill, which is set out in the first part of clause 9. That clause already has some details, some delineations of the specific and main object of the bill. All the hon. member for Inverness-Richmond is doing is adding one further area of delineation, namely that these reports shall be made annually. Therefore I submit that it is an amendment dealing with a matter contained in the bill, and should consequently be considered as in order.

Mr. Speaker: Is there any further argument on the question whether the amendment is out of order? Then I find, on reading subsection 1 of clause 9 of the bill, that there is a general direction given to the board that the objects are to inquire into certain matters. Then it says:

—without limiting the generality of the foregoing, the board may—

That is permissive; it is not a direction to the board.

The clause goes on:

—the board may, in furtherance of its objects—

This power given to the board is a permissive one. If it is held that what is proposed in this amendment is already within the objects of the board, then the amendment is redundant. In the alternative, if it is not included, then it is adding something to the bill, which is contrary to citation 418. I think the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) was aware of this particular point.

It is my view that the use of the words "and without limiting the generality of the foregoing, the board may" means that this is permissive. There is no obligation stemming from the use of the word "may". The bill does not say that "the board shall, in furtherance of its objects", and so forth; the bill says that "the board may". Therefore, I find either that the purpose of this amendment is included in the general objects and powers of the board and therefore this amendment is redundant or, in the alternative, if it is not within the objects of the board, it adds something which is not contained in the bill and that is contrary to what the hon. member has said under citation 418. That is my ruling. I cannot accept the amendment.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): With great respect, may I ask Your Honour to observe that Your Honour—and I say, with regret, that I am sure of this—made a mistake when you said that the word "may" is to be construed in its literal interpretation. The Interpretation Act is clear in stating that where the word "may" in a statute appears it shall be construed as meaning "shall". It is not permissive. Your Honour may express surprise, but if Your Honour will do me the honour of examining the Interpretation Act you will find that is the case. We have had this matter discussed on a number of occasions in this house. To take any other attitude would mean to negative completely the whole bill. Under the Interpretation Act the word "may" means "shall". That is what the Interpretation Act provides with regard to this particular word. This being the case, Your Honour's whole argument falls to the ground.

Mr. Jones: On this point of order, Mr. Speaker, may I say that it is my impression that you ruled on this question yesterday, as found at page 2542 of Hansard, when a similar proposal was made in committee.

Mr. Pickersgill: His Honour is not in committee.

Mr. Jones: As I understand the rules of this house, particularly those which have been referred to already today, may I say this. Citation 418 reads:

All amendments which may be moved on a second reading of a bill may be moved on the third reading—

The hon. member could not move on second reading an amendment which had already been ruled out of order. Therefore he could not move today an amendment which had been ruled out of order yesterday.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, the reason I interrupted with the word "no" at one point when you were speaking was that I feel that you are misinterpreting the key sentence of citation 418. A moment ago you said that either the amendment is redundant or that it proposes something which is not in the bill and therefore, I think Your Honour said, it could not be in order. The point I wish to make is that the key sentence in citation 418 does not say that you cannot move something that is not in the bill. It says you cannot move something that deals with any matter which is not contained in the bill. If the other interpretation were allowed there would be nothing at all that one could move. Everything would either be redundant or would not already be in the bill. Surely the wording of that sentence is quite clear that an amendment is in order if it deals with something that is there in the bill. This one does so. There are in the bill provisions for the making of reports to the minister. This amendment deals with the making of reports. It is adjectival in a sense, in that it proposes that these reports shall be made annually. I submit that the amendment comes within the provisions of that key sentence in citation 418.

Mr. Speaker: Notwithstanding the able additional arguments which hon. members have addressed to me and for which I thank them, I am still of the same opinion with regard to the use of the word "may" in the principal clause, and that if we wish to leave the meaning of the word "shall" we should use the word "shall". In any event the word "may" is permissive in my interpretation and does not add to the duties of the board. Anyway, if it is included in the first portion under clause 1, then the amendment is redundant. If in the alternative it is not included, and in particular having regard to what the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre said regarding reports, may I say that if there happens to be a report somewhere in the bill, this amendment concerns the drawing up of a program of capital projects. This is not just a report. This deals with a program of capital projects as I see it, by the wording of the proposed amendment; and that in my judgment cannot be a mere report or other report as designated in the bill. Therefore, the amendment does not meet the requirements of citation 418 and I would so rule.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, with respect I must, unless my hon. friend wishes to do so—

Mr. MacEachen: I intend with regret, Mr. Speaker, to appeal your ruling.

[Mr. Jones.]

Mr. Speaker: The house has heard the decision of the Chair from which the hon. member for Inverness-Richmond has appealed to the house. All those in favour of sustaining the decision of the Chair will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: Will those opposed please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: Call in the members.

Mr. Speaker put the question as follows:

The question is an appeal to the house from a ruling of the Chair which is as follows: To the motion for third reading of Bill No. C-94, an act to provide for the establishment of an Atlantic development board, the hon. member for Inverness-Richmond (Mr. MacEachen) moved an amendment as follows:

"that the following be added as paragraph (e) to section (1) of clause 9:

(e) Prepare annually for the consideration of the minister a program of capital projects designed to enlarge the basic economy of the Atlantic provinces."

The Chair ruled that the proposed amendment purported to deal with a matter not contained in the bill and was not in keeping with citation 418 in Beauchesne's fourth edition, whereupon the hon. member for Inverness-Richmond appealed to the house from the decision of the Chair.

The house divided on the question: Shall the Speaker's decision be sustained? And the decision of the Chair was sustained on the following division:

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Chown in the chair.

INTERIM SUPPLY

Mr. Nowlan moved:

Resolved, that a sum not exceeding $330,089,511.93 being the aggregate of—

(a) one twelfth of the total of the amounts of the items set forth in the revised estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1963, laid before the House of Commons at the present session of parliament, except atomic energy item 5, Canadian Broadcasting Corporation item 5, finance items 45 and 50, forestry item 11, labour item 40, legislation items 30 and 35, mines and technical surveys items 30, 35, 40, 70, 80, 125 and 130, national defence item 70, national health and welfare item 25, northern affairs and national resources items 10, 45 and 90, public works items 5, 45, 70, 100, 105, 125, 145, 168, 170, 180, 190 and 200, Royal Canadian Mounted Police items 5, 15 and 25, transport items 35, 40, 60, 80, 85, 100, 125, 222 and 225, loans investments and advances item L20, $292,175,958;

(b) an additional one twelfth of the amounts of defence production item 25, external affairs item 5, northern affairs and national resources item 105, of the said revised estimates, $1,842,041.67;

(c) one twelfth of the total of the amounts of the items set forth in the supplementary estimates (A) for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1963, except external affairs item 112a, transport items 213a and 222a, $8,738,178.92;

(d) ten twelfths of the total of the amounts of the items set forth in the supplementary estimates (B) for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1963, $27,333,333.34, be granted to Her Majesty on account of the present fiscal year ending March 31, 1963.

He said: Mr. Chairman, you have just concluded reading the various items which are set forth in this interim supply motion that I am proposing to the committee at this time. The proportions requested in this bill are intended to provide for all necessary expenditures up till January 31 next. In other words, we are asking for a further 30-day supply to carry us through the month of January. In no instance is the amount of any item being released by this bill. The form of the bill which will be submitted if the committee approves the resolution will be the usual form of interim supply bill which has been customarily adopted in this house for many many years.

Mr. Chairman, I can give the usual assurance which all ministers of finance give at this time, that the passing of this bill will not prejudice the rights and privileges of hon. members to criticize any item of the estimates when it comes up for consideration in committee of supply, and the usual undertaking that such rights and privileges will be respected and will not be curtailed or restricted in any way as a result of the passing of this measure. I should also point out that in the bill when it comes down—it is not before us at the moment—there will be a provision for further borrowing power. Mr. Chairman, I had one once before and I forgot to mention it, and I want to mention it at this time so the committee will be advised of that. That is all I propose to say at this time except to say that this resolution covers all the various items of the departments. The items are, with one exception—which is for ten twelfths—for one twelfth, and we are maintaining each item uncurtailed so that there will have to be further votes and an opportunity to discuss them at a later date.

Mr. Davis: Mr. Chairman, it is of course the historic right of the commons to discuss any matter of expenditure of moneys before granting supply. I propose in the time available to me today to talk about the Columbia river treaty, in that it involves over the current 12-month period an expenditure approximating $250,000. However, before doing so I would like to make a few general remarks.

On the two previous occasions my party has not engaged in an extensive debate when the government requested another 30-day interim supply of funds with which to carry out its commitments to the nation. But it should be pointed out that this house is now being asked for the tenth instalment of what in total will amount to an outlay in the current fiscal year in excess of $6 billion. This is indeed a unique situation. We are being asked to approve the tenth instalment of a total of 12 monthly instalments without a single item of the estimates having been passed after a full scale debate in this house. True, the first item in respect of agriculture has been introduced and some discussion has been held, but it has not been passed. The estimates in respect of this and indeed all other departments of government remain to be discussed. Opportunities early in the new year will also be limited. For this reason, Mr. Chairman, you should expect that some hon. members will want to discuss matters of general concern and of particular concern to various parts of the country.

I would like to stress that the Columbia river treaty in western Canada, and more particularly in British Columbia, is a subject of very considerable concern. It also involves very substantial expenditures in respect of the development of not only hydroelectric power but other resources as well. The Columbia river is a river after which British Columbia takes its name. It is important. It is the third largest river on this continent in terms of the volume of water flowing. It is the largest source of hydroelectric power in North America. It is eight times larger, in terms of its water power capability, than the St. Lawrence. This is a tremendous resource. It is also a resource which spans the international boundary. It rises in large part in Canada and it descends into the United States. It is important not only in respect of power but also in respect of flood control, navigation, irrigation and the consumptive uses of water. As hon. members know, the states to the south, notably California and the southern parts of Oregon, are arid or semi-arid. Water is vital to their development; consequently great sums of money are being invested in those states in order to bring water to those areas. These great schemes are reaching northward to Columbia and eventually, I have no doubt, they will be affecting Canada as well. We have a golden opportunity in this great nation of ours to develop our resources in conjunction with those of the United States. We can help to hold back the flood waters of the Columbia river as they descend into the United States.

At present, ten times as much water flows into the United States during the freshet period of the summer as in the winter, flooding over the dams, flooding real estate and diminishing land values in that country. The intent of man is to iron out that pattern and eventually, I have no doubt, the flow in the summer will be sufficiently reduced to make it less than in wintertime.

Canada has been pressed to enter into agreements to hold back the headwaters, and the terms of such agreements are important because those terms could reduce our resource potential. The works immediately to the south of Canada today, in the United States, total in value approximately $3 billion. There is more hydroelectric power developed on the Columbia in the United States than there is actually developed in the whole of the province of Quebec. There are investments running into hundreds of millions of dollars in irrigation schemes, flood control and navigation measures. Consequently, the United States is very interested in how we manage our resources to the north, and particularly interested in the expenditure we incur in developing those resources. They would like us to develop them in such a way as to maximize their development as well. I know, as do other hon. members, that through a co-operative development the increase in benefits which must follow will be to the advantage of both our countries.

In the early days, the United States approached us essentially with the view that these waters rising high in Canada and flowing into the United States would inevitably be available to the United States and that sooner or later, as we put works in the upper reaches to hold back the flow for our own purposes, they would be able to reap advantages. So, they thought, they need only wait. But beginning around 1944 and, to an increasing extent, more recently, they did press on us certain developments which they felt could be accelerated to their advantage. They argued at first that they should only buy the land—that they need only compensate the land owners for flooding occurring in Canada. This was resisted. They certainly were against giving us any part of the downstream benefits—the great improvements and savings resulting in their country. But it is to the eternal credit of that great Canadian, General McNaughton, that the idea that a sharing of these downstream benefits might take place and that Canada might gain some of these additional advantages in terms not only of more power produced but of flood control, began to take root. The argument advanced by the Americans in the most summary way was: The water may originate in your country but it has to flow down our hill. General McNaughton's answer to that was: Yes, it originates in our country but it does not necessarily have to flow down your hill.

We can, under the boundary waters treaty signed by our two countries in 1909, divert these waters in Canada so that they flow into other watersheds, perhaps into the Fraser, or perhaps, eventually be diverted through the Rocky mountains to irrigate the more arid areas of the prairies. These are great and imaginative schemes. We must have this flexibility—this freedom to develop the resources of our country which, under the boundary waters treaty, is ours. We have the sovereign right to develop those resources as we choose and, indeed, the United States has insisted that this be the case with respect to its own resources in the past.

But there are many problems connected with the development of the Columbia and, certainly, the negotiators of the existing Columbia river treaty have run into them. One of these problems is that it is we who have to put up the dams, and the dams are very expensive. The United States, on the other hand would be concerned on the other side of the international boundary with the construction of relatively inexpensive works to capture these effects. We find under the terms of the present draft treaty that the capital outlays to be made by Canada will be of the order of four times those to be made by the United States. To complicate matters further, the United States Pacific northwest —and I believe Alaska will share in this treatment—is most fortunate in that it is in a preferred position in the eyes of the United States government. It receives funds for the development of these great river resources at an interest rate of 2½ per cent. It has been doing so for several decades and there is no indication that the United States federal government will, in the immediate future at least, make money more expensive in this connection. They do not have to borrow at the current interest rates in the United States, of between 3 and 4 per cent. They receive this special subsidy. So not only are the projects in the United States cheaper to build, but the money itself is cheaper. Consequently, the rates for power, the annual charges and so on will be only a fraction of the cost on the Canadian side. We are putting up four times as much money for the works, and our money may cost 5 per cent as compared to 2½ per cent. The result is we have a more expensive product on our side of the line. There has to be more give and take in this so as to balance out the situation.

There is another difficulty. This project, when completed, would have immense consequences in terms of production. It would make available, all of a sudden, more power than is at present generated by all the utilities in British Columbia. Many Canadians would have us bring back as fast as we could absorb it the extra power produced in the United States as a result of our controlling these flows. Thus we have the problem of markets as well as capital costs.

Finally, in entering upon any arrangement of this kind we do lose some of our sovereignty. We must make sure in respect to treaties of this kind that we do not agree to conditions or set precedents which tie our hands with respect to the use of water in our own territory. As to whether the present treaty, signed nearly two years ago, is a good treaty or not, let me say this: I personally believe that the treaty must be renegotiated. I believe many hon. members hold the same view. It must be renegotiated for several reasons, reasons about which I shall be more explicit. One is the cost of the power we shall receive as a result of this treaty. The cost of power coming back from the United States, is approximately four mills per kilowatt hour. We have many other sources in British Columbia which can produce power at or about this price. The net advantage to this country is approximately zero, so we have no considerable incentive to go ahead with these works at the present time under the terms of the treaty. The United States, on the other hand, because they do not have to build great dams, reservoirs, and so on, but merely put in the occasional generating machine, get their energy for less than one mill per kilowatt hour, which is less than one quarter of the cost to Canada. Their alternatives are of the order of three or four mills. They have the great net advantage of a great saving with respect to power. They have a real incentive to pursue this treaty in its present form in terms of the cost of power. This is one of the reasons why the senate of the United States passed that treaty with a vote of 99 to 1, and in record time.

There is also the matter of what happens to the amount of power we get under this treaty as the years go by. Under the formula which is built into the treaty, this is bound to diminish and eventually be extinguished over the 60-year life, or at least be substantially reduced during that period, under any possible operating conditions. While this is strictly policed, under the treaty we are prepared, apparently, to make a lump sum, all-out and forever settlement with respect to flood control.

Flood control clearly grows more important as the population of the United States grows in the Pacific-northwest area due to the development of industries. So why make a flat, all-out, lump-sum settlement, even if it is $64 million when this great advantage increases with time? Why not do the same as is done with respect to power, and police that advantage year after year into the indefinite future? Because this is the way the treaty is drawn, and we are obliged to make this service available to the United States forever.

I heard one hon. member ask why not, when I mentioned $64 million. In the evidence given before the United States senate, it was claimed by one of the officials who helped negotiate the United States treaty on the American side that the cost of alternative works to provide flood control for the United States would be in the order of $500 million. Consequently one can see that $64 million, while it is a substantial sum in the eyes of people who look only a few years ahead, is a very low price for the United States to pay for this service in perpetuity; forever, holding back these billions of tons of water each year and letting it down in an orderly fashion so as to protect real estate in the United States and to generate more electrical energy, provide better navigation control, and so on.

In this treaty we are up against certain penalties. We have to complete three immense projects totalling $350 million at a minimum by definite points in time. On the other hand, the United States, with respect to one project of similar character, has no definite deadline to meet. It may or may not build this project; and if it does decide to build it, it may do so within a considerable time span and with considerable latitude. I contend that we should have similar latitude with respect to the completion of our much more expensive projects.

I should like to skim very briefly through the bill and list a few more points. One of them is with respect to the over-all operation. This is a tremendous investment and expense, yet the general orientation of the treaty is towards producing the greatest benefit for both countries. Throughout the treaty the criterion of maximization applies to both countries—not maximization of benefit for Canada, but on the greatest benefit for Canada and the United States. Consequently, I myself have reservations and I should like to hear many learned people, both from the engineering and legal fraternities, tell me how Canada can be sure in each instance of its own maximum advantage in this connection, while also sharing in the great gains made by the United States. With regard to these works which the Americans are putting in downstream, the term referring to them is "useful life". It is not the life of the treaty, but the useful life. The useful life means the life of a dam or any other works downstream of Canada providing there is adequate maintenance; and adequate maintenance can be such as would keep those particular works in being forever. This is the real reason why the United States will be forever able to take advantage of those routines which we are required to set up under the treaty. Admittedly the treaty runs for 60 years: our obligation, I fear, will run on forever.

Under the treaty we are called upon, with respect to flood control, to operate according to calls made by entities named by the United States. We must respond to these calls not only until the expiration of the life of the treaty, but beyond. I should like simply to quote from the treaty. It says:

For the purpose of flood control until the expiration of sixty years from the ratification date, Canada shall

(a) operate—

The named projects under the treaty. In addition it shall—

(b) operate any additional storage in the Columbia river basin in Canada, when called upon by an entity designated by the United States of America for that purpose—

Then beyond that:

(3) For the purpose of flood control after the expiration of sixty years from the ratification date, and for so long as the flows in the Columbia river in Canada continue to contribute to potential flood hazard in the United States of America, Canada shall, when called upon by an entity designated by the United States of America for that purpose, operate within the limits of existing facilities any storage in the Columbia river basin in Canada—

I think that is quite definite with respect to Canada's long term and continuing obligations.

A great deal has been made of the fifty-fifty sharing arrangement. I might mention in passing that Canada gets approximately 40 per cent of the additional firm, reliable power produced in the United States as a result of the treaty.

Finally—and on this point alone I certainly want to see the treaty renegotiated—there is the disposal of surplus power produced in the United States. I mentioned that there was an amount comparable to the present total utility production in Canada. We will have a surplus in the early years. Terms and conditions of sale in the United States must be established. The price and the time over which it is sold in the United States must be determined. Yet the treaty clearly says that while we are obliged to build these projects costing hundreds of millions of dollars, the price at which we can sell these surplus benefits can be determined only after the treaty is ratified. In other words, we have to sign the treaty and go through with a tremendous investment and then go back, cap in hand and say to the United States: "Please, what will you pay us for what is demonstrably surplus to our relatively small economy in the west? One day we need it, but we cannot absorb it at the moment. It is going over your dams; what will you give us for it?" They will give us next to nothing and we will have this tremendous investment with a high interest rate and carrying charges to contend with. I suggest that this is not a provident arrangement for a country like Canada to enter into, particularly in a period of austerity like this when our balance of payments is in need of a shot in the arm in the form of larger payments from the United States.

As to a solution which will enable us to turn around and take a more positive approach to this whole program, there are certain projects which are contentious. Certainly the Libby project, which captures part of the Canadian flow, I contend forever, should be postponed, if not eliminated entirely. Certain projects involving flooding in Canada are contentious. These should be postponed. Then we should get back to the principles which were agreed upon under the international joint commission when it advocated the principles for the negotiation of such a treaty. I believe that the treaty should be renegotiated in the matter of principles only, naming the entities responsible for the development on each side of the border, and naming the procedures, the sequences and the principles under which the results can be divided. But no more than that, and not naming projects, because we are getting into difficulties over the individual projects.

With a treaty expressed in terms of principles already laid down and agreed to between Canada and the United States, we would then be able to proceed in a more leisurely, certainly a more circumspect, way as far as Canada is concerned. I would advocate our immediate start, once such a treaty had been ratified, on the largest single project which is not contested by any principal interest in this country, the Mica creek project. This would provide all of the flood control which the United States wants at this time, and two thirds, perhaps three quarters, of all the additional power the United States wants at this time. For a much smaller investment than that to which we are obligated under the treaty, we can proceed with this project, yield the results the United States needs and fit into existing programs in the province of British Columbia. In other words, there would be less contention in Canada. The United States would get largely what it wants and certainly we would be spending less money to achieve the downstream results of the present treaty.

I would leave the Libby project out at the present time. I would want to name the amounts of water that we would send down to the United States over a period of years and would not want to be tied up specifically to any individual development in any particular place after the Mica creek project was advanced. I would certainly want our hands to be free at the end of the life of a 60 year treaty, so that we could bargain, as we would at that time and in the light of the circumstances in that day, in order to improve the situation in which we find ourselves then.

There are many advantages to this more flexible approach in terms of principle, and then the taking of one project at a time. We could in a matter of months renegotiate the treaty. Such a treaty permitting us to proceed with agreed projects would fit in much better with the requirements for power and other advantages in British Columbia. The Mica creek project, for example, would not in the early stages be a direct competitor with the Peace river project or any other power project in British Columbia. For that reason I would imagine the government of the province of British Columbia would be more amenable to that suggestion or that arrangement than it is to the present treaty which faces us with a great surplus of power within the province as well as outside. I would certainly want to see this come about.

Let me briefly run down several other advantages which I see to a general treaty expressed in terms of principles followed by step by step development. Another advantage is that the benefits to each country can be more accurately forecast if the major projects are undertaken one at a time. Certainly the alternatives open to us under those circumstances and at a later date would be much better known than they are today.

Second, most advantageous projects could be undertaken first. Rather than being obligated to build three big projects, as we are now obligated, we could put in the first one which attracts the greatest benefits under the calculation of benefits recognized by both countries. We would get the greatest yield on our investment, and this is to our greatest economic advantage.

Third, the construction of individual projects can be timed in such a way as to fit much more properly into our needs in western Canada and into the sequence of other projects which are also under there or which can be initiated in a proper integrated sequence with the development of the upper Columbia.

Fourth, it certainly permits the bargaining process to take place in stages. We need to learn a great deal about the United States side of the line, the power systems and the developing economy there, in order to bargain intelligently, to improve our position and to gain our share of a larger pie to be divided between our two countries.

Fifth, I believe this general approach which I have suggested improves the chances of immediate action by putting off until a subsequent stage decisions on such controversial projects as the High Arrow dam where there is considerable flooding in Canada and the Libby dam with its implications of the United States being able to hold on forever to the flows of the upper Kootenay orginating in Canada.

[Mr. Davis.]

Sixth, some loss of sovereignty is implicit in any international undertaking. However, by proceeding a step at a time this loss may be minimized. At least its consequences for Canada will be more easily understood both by the experts in the power industry and by others who are concerned with the general development of the western part of this country.

I realize that we have a great opportunity in that the United States is looking to us for a very valuable service. If we do not move reasonably quickly, and certainly if we do not move in a predictable way and do not honour our agreements, they will perhaps make unduly expensive arrangements in order to provide some of these services for themselves. We can provide them more cheaply. If we can provide them more cheaply, I suggest that we do so, but that we share in the savings which accrue to the United States. This is the intent of the present treaty and certainly I would not criticize in any way that aspect of the treaty. However, we must move quickly.

I also believe that we should bring this subject perhaps to a committee of the house. Certainly we should focus on it now in terms of removing numerous difficulties. Some I have mentioned. About some of them I am not entirely certain myself. However, I have heard other people whose opinions I respect express great concern about them, including General McNaughton, various engineers and economists in eastern Canada, and others in western Canada including members of the Vancouver board of trade, engineering consultants and so on. These people should be heard.

I believe that one of the problems or one of the great failures of recent years has been our inability to bring issues of this character before the Canadian public and to have full public disclosure of all the aspects of them. The pipe line debate was unfortunate in many ways. It should have been preceded by hearings before various boards, certainly by hearings before a national energy board of the character of the one we have today. In respect of the Columbia treaty may I say that I believe this matter should have been before one or several boards for the purpose of the production of evidence on alternative plans for carrying out an immense development which has tremendous long term consequences for the country. This has not happened. I therefore believe that all members of this house should join in an understanding whereby we could, through some committee, explore all these alternatives, possibilities or projects and produce an alternative for action. I believe we have an opportunity—

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but it is my duty to inform him that his time has expired.

An hon. Member: Continue.

The Deputy Chairman: Is it the pleasure of the committee to give unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Nowlan: Of course; let us give him time in which to wind up.

Mr. Davis: We should hear the views of the various utilities. The power companies in British Columbia were not consulted in respect of the Columbia river treaty and its evolution at any stage. I believe that people like that should be heard in advance of a great international commitment of this kind.

I believe we have here a great chance to set an example for other countries. About a year and a half ago I was at a gathering sponsored by the United Nations. It was sponsored and held by the United Nations in Vancouver and people from all over the world came to it. On the last day of a week long meeting with respect to the development of international river basins, the Columbia river treaty was featured. On the facts in respect of the Columbia a good paper was given by a prominent representative of the United States. However, before the meeting was over the Canadians and the Americans were arguing loudly the great disadvantages and obligations put on Canada under the treaty. I think this was a very poor performance before the United Nations. I believe that we have here an opportunity to produce a treaty which will be a great example for others to follow outside of this continent. I certainly believe in the old dictum that we should "make the sale clear and plain that none may afterwards complain". Certainly this is the great objective that I think we should all pursue, and I would argue that this treaty is not a matter of partisan advantage or approach but is something with which we should concern ourselves and try to expedite as rapidly as possible.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, as has been pointed out we are now asked to approve another interim supply motion that will involve altogether ten twelfths of the total budget for this fiscal year. I think this is an indication that something is wrong with parliament with regard to expediting the business that we ought to be doing. As I have said, we will have voted ten twelfths of the entire amount that is to be spent this year, but the situation is that we have not passed any of the estimates and have not passed a budget. Unless we speed up the operations of the house we will probably have passed twelve twelfths without approving a budget or passing the estimates of the various departments.

We in this party are becoming increasingly disturbed because of the lack of action on the part of the government, even respecting legislation that has already been passed by the house. I refer specifically to acts such as ARDA. Not long ago members of the government were going about the country holding forth that this legislation was an all-inclusive plan to rehabilitate the agricultural segment of our economy. Many of them suggested that the provinces, whose co-operation was being sought, were dragging their feet in implementing what is contemplated in ARDA. In December of 1962 we have now reached a point where several months have gone by since the provinces have actually undertaken extensive studies of suitable projects for this legislation. They have submitted these projects to the federal government and so far very few, if any, substantial projects have been approved.

For example, there is the matter of community pastures. I know this project has been submitted to the federal government but it has not yet been approved. Projects of this type should be approved now so that the planning and other necessary requirements can be completed in order to be able to undertake these projects early in the spring. I am told that suggestions have been made by responsible ministers in the federal cabinet that they would be willing to make some of their contributions retroactive, and the provinces therefore could go ahead with these matters. I think this is an unreasonable suggestion to make because certainly this kind of co-operative action in this area has no precedent, and the provinces simply have not had any guidance from the federal cabinet as to what they will approve and what they will reject. The problem facing the provinces is that if they undertook these projects they might find later that they had to carry the load.

Action under ARDA is not the only thing that is being held up. Earlier today and yesterday, for example, we spent a great deal of time discussing the Atlantic development board, and the bill has now been passed. I suggest that there was a board already in existence, the Atlantic provinces economic council, which has essentially all of the powers that this new board has. If the government is not willing and anxious to take positive steps with regard to the studies and recommendations that have already been made, then this new board is probably redundant.

As we went through the clause by clause study of the bill respecting the Atlantic development board certain amendments were suggested, some of which were perhaps good. At the same time, however, we feel that the usefulness of any such board is primarily determined by whether or not the government takes positive action on the findings and recommendations that are submitted to it. We suggest that this has not been the practice in the past. We are also going to have another new board, the national economic development board. I submit that the government already has the necessary information regarding the whole economic structure of business and industry in the Atlantic provinces and, so far as agriculture and ARDA are concerned, complete studies have been made and recommendations have been submitted to them. Therefore if the government is prepared to take any action it is not necessary to go on setting up one board after another.

We are also a little disturbed that no action has been taken on the O'Leary report, and no substantial action has been taken on the MacPherson report. I suggest that if positive action had been taken on these reports when they were submitted many of the problems now existing in the fields where these commissions made investigations simply would not be facing the country today.

There is another matter I want to bring up which falls into the same category. I refer to the inquiry into the air services in the prairie region. Over the past number of years we have been told by the government that they were prepared to take action to improve the airports along some of these routes as soon as there was a long term plan for the provision of air services to these areas.

For example, in 1958 there was an item in the estimates of $500,000 to improve the airport at Medicine Hat. This has never been done, and in the years since, the Minister of Transport has told us repeatedly, that the government would have to inquire into the application by Trans-Canada Air Lines to abandon this run or to be relieved of the responsibility for providing this service, and that they were going to hear applications from smaller air lines to take over the service. Over a year ago an inquiry was held in Regina. The government has had the report before it now for several weeks. They were completely aware of the problem that existed before the report came to them, and now that they have the recommendations contained in the report we would like to see them keep some of the promises they made about improving this service. We realize, of course, that many of the airports along this route simply cannot take the new, modern aircraft that Trans-Canada Air Lines is using.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. So that the house may proceed to the consideration of private member's business, pursuant to section 3 of standing order 15 it is my duty to rise, report progress and request leave to sit again later this day or at the next sitting of the house as the case may be.

Progress reported.

Mr. Speaker: It now being five o'clock the house will proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, notices of motions as they appear on page 23.

PENSIONS

SUGGESTED ENCOURAGEMENT TO PORTABILITY PROVISIONS

Mr. W. H. McMillan (Welland) moved:

That, in the opinion of this house, the government should consider the advisability of encouraging early vesting of pension rights of employees by disallowing in whole or in part the employer's claims for a reduction of the expenses of pensions for income tax purposes where reasonable vesting provisions are not adopted.

He said: Mr. Speaker, in moving this motion I wish to say I realize that pensions come under the jurisdiction of the provinces. I also realize that the ideal arrangement would be an agreement with the provinces so that we might have pensions on a national scale and that we might have vesting from the start of employment. This would provide for portability of pensions.

Portability of pensions was mentioned in the speech from the throne this year, and I believe last year also, and some reference was made to calling representatives of the provinces together to deal with the matter. Up until now we have not heard anything further about it, and I do not know whether the government has any disposition to do it; but in the meantime I feel we have to do whatever we can within our jurisdiction to remedy the situation.

I also know that in the speech from the throne at the opening of the Ontario legislature the question of early vesting and portability of pensions was mentioned; but even were this to become law in Ontario it would not help working people in the other provinces. Neither would it help working people moving from one province to another, even those who now live in the province of Ontario.

Industrial pensions come under two groups. First we have the group where the employer and the employee both contribute, and the second group is where the employer contributes the whole amount towards a pension plan. The matter of contributions and the amount of the contributions generally result from an agreement between management and labour, and form part of a contract. In a sense the employer's contributions are withheld wages, as they form part of the contract. Now, since most large employers are in the 50 per cent income bracket, it follows that the people of Canada have about a 50 per cent stake in these pension funds, and since they have a 50 per cent stake in them it is only right that we should have something to say concerning the administration of these funds.

Not long ago, when the income tax resolutions were before the house and amendments to the income tax bill were discussed, we made it possible for participants in a deferred profit sharing plan and for participants in retirement savings plans to transfer their funds to other similar plans exempt from income tax. The Minister of Finance said this was also possible for participants in industrial pension plans, but unfortunately it cannot take place until the participant in an industrial pension plan has some vesting in his pension plan, this vesting does not take place for a number of years.

At the present time under such plans an employee can usually get a return of his own contributions, but the contributions made to the fund on his behalf by the employer do not accrue to him until he has completed a certain number of years service or until he has reached a certain age, and generally the minimum number of years of service is around 20 years or more.

There are many reasons why an employee may not be able to work for 20 years or for some other number of years up to the time of the maturity of his pension. The employer, for instance, might discontinue operations. A mine might run out of ore or wood operations might discontinue. I have heard of this happening in the north country, and there are other reasons why an employee may have to discontinue his service before he can qualify for a pension.

Quite often there are medical reasons beyond his control. Skin and other allergies can be caused by certain chemicals in the plant where he works and may make life miserable for him. In other cases certain gases and poisons are present which affect him and make him unable to continue work. Such an employee is not sick in the sense that he is confined to bed, but in some plants he cannot qualify for a partial pension like others who are sick suffering from, say, a heart disease or arterial disease.

Further, I believe a workman should be allowed to change his job because of family reasons, and these embrace the education of his family. I do not think he should be wedded to one job in one location all his life unless he wants to be.

In my experience most plants in the Niagara district have been very fair with their workmen and have treated them fairly when, for some reason or other, they have had to discontinue work before the maturity of their pensions. I know of other cases in Canada which I could name, but I do not want to, where employees have not got very good consideration in this respect, and I even know of one or two employees who missed out on their pensions by just two or three months or so. In such a case an employee would stand to lose a lot of money. A man aged 65, with the life expectancy that he has at that age, would lose, on just missing out on a pension of $100 a month, around $11,000 or $12,000, I believe.

The purpose of this motion is not to make our working force a transient population. I think most of our people are satisfied with their work, and this would not make much difference to them. But I am proposing this resolution to help those who must move for one reason or another. I think the whole working force should have some vesting rights in their pension before they have to work for too many years. The earlier vesting would help the older worker. We all know that a man of 45 or over, or even younger, has difficulty getting work at different plants because of their pension plans. I think this would help these people to obtain work at certain plants because they would be bringing certain funds with them which would add to their new pension fund. I know that we have no power in this house to legislate in connection with pensions, but we do have the power to give exemptions in respect of income tax on contributions to pension plans. I think this could easily be worked under the Income Tax Act.

I have not attempted to define the words "reasonably early" because I think other hon. members will have different ideas as to what they mean. As I said earlier, Mr. Speaker, the ideal arrangement would be to have vesting from the first day of work, if it was on a national scale. But I realize that with the plans such as we have in Canada at the present time we must have a definite minimum length of time. I would say that five to ten years would be infinitely better than what we have at the moment because now, as I said before, a man has to serve right up to the date of maturity in most cases. A bill based on this resolution would not allow a workman to get his hands on his pension money early. At the present time he does get his hands on his pension money; that is to say, on his own contributions when he quits work at a plant. A bill based on this resolution would prevent that, and I think it would help all our working people to build up a reserve for their years of retirement.

(Translation):

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): First, I wish to point out that the question concerns not only the members of this house, but also the employers and employees.

It has surely been considered by Canadian unions for a number of years. I am satisfied that these discussions will be beneficial.

(Text):

Mr. Speaker, with other hon. members I feel I should thank the hon. member opposite for bringing to the attention of the house in this resolution a subject of great importance. If my memory serves me correctly, it is a subject which has very seriously occupied the attention of our union leaders in latter years and it is naturally a subject which deeply interests both employers and employees in our country. I think all members of the house, no matter what party they support, would have to see much merit in many of the points raised by the hon. member from Welland who has just spoken. It is obvious that the particular cases he has put before us deserve much consideration and attention. I would, sir, at this time, very briefly—because I do not think this subject can be discussed in a vacuum apart from considerations of portable pensions—like again to put on the record a portion of the speech from the throne. It contained this paragraph:

> As pensions plans have become ever more widely extended in Canadian business, it has been increasingly recognized that measures are essential to protect the interests of those affected and in particular to ensure that the benefits earned are portable when workers move from job to job. Provincial legislation would be required for this purpose in most cases, and several provinces are considering proposals of this nature.

In terminating, this paragraph goes on to say:

> My government will be prepared to place before you complementary legislation to deal with industries under federal jurisdiction when adequate progress has been made by provinces.

Mr. Speaker, I think those words should again be put on the record just to remind all hon. members, and in particular the hon. member who has just spoken that most certainly the government is well aware of this problem. I have already said that there is much merit in what the hon. member has said. Without discussing the actual merits of the substantive part of the subject on either side, I feel there are some facts that should be put on the record. Between 1942 and 1956, with regard to the various pension plans that had to be registered with the Department of National Revenue vesting rights were a requirement before the plans were duly and properly registered. In 1956 by administrative rule, the Department of National Revenue changed its attitude in relation to the necessity of vesting rights and I can only say that the present government by and large has carried on this trend. There is another consideration involved here. It is simply whether —and I am not entering into the merits of either side of this discussion—the government by taxation measures should actually enter into the pension field in this way. I personally am not saying whether they should at the present time, but I think all hon. members who are vitally interested in this extremely important subject have heard this point raised time and time again; that is—I repeat—whether the government by taxation means or methods should influence pension schemes in this manner.

Apart from this brief reference to the historical aspects of the subject, I feel I should at this time put on record some interesting facts which were made public after a dominion bureau of statistics survey in 1960. I must say I am not sure whether the employer plans I am about to mention were those registered with the Department of National Revenue or whether they include other plans. I want to qualify what I say to that extent. But out of 8,920 employer plans surveyed by the d.b.s., 330 of those plans had absolutely no vesting requirement. I should also mention the fact that though only 330 of the plans had no vesting requirements they covered 31 per cent of the employees involved. On the other hand, 2,612 had immediate vesting rights but only 4.7 per cent of the employees were involved in that figure.

Mr. Baldwin: Is that for Ontario or all Canada?

Mr. Grafftey: Canada. To continue, 2,925 of the plans covered 41 per cent of the employees. Herein rights are made dependant on the length of service. Half the requirements were ten years and over while the other half involved more than ten years.

I do not wish to take up the time of the house by giving too many statistics, but I hope that for the purpose of this important discussion these d.b.s. figures will be of use in the debate. Let me close simply by saying that the speech from the throne in the paragraph I have mentioned relating to portable pensions does demonstrate that the government is aware of this problem, a problem which, as I said before, affects both employers and employees. I might add that the hon. gentleman opposite, speaking from his vast experience, placed the human aspect of this matter particularly well before the house. I have put before hon. members the fact that while between 1946 and 1955, or 1956, vesting rights were required, this approach was changed in 1956 and the present government is more or less carrying on in the same way. I would once again stress the fact that this is an important debate from the viewpoint of employer-employee relations. I think there has been much discussion of this subject both in union circles, among the rank and file, and among union leaders, for obvious reasons, and I can only hope that the discussion in which the house is now engaged will produce many useful suggestions.

Mr. M. W. Martin (Timmins): It is not my intention to speak for very long on this subject, for two reasons. First, I imagine a number of hon. members would like to speak on this motion and, in the second place, I should like very much to see the resolution come to a vote today.

I should like to compliment the hon. member for Welland (Mr. McMillan) on proposing this resolution. I think it is a good step in the right direction. I do not think it is any solution to the problem, nor do I believe the hon. member really thinks it is a permanent solution. But, as he has mentioned, it is a step which can be taken now by the present government, not something which might be done at some time in the distant future. I approve of it, particularly because I think it puts the idea of pensions on a proper basis.

I do not think that has always been the case in this country. I think pensions have been used in a number of different ways until they are no longer what they were supposed to be, namely a means of providing an income for employees when they reach pensionable age. We have, for example, what we see offered by so many assurance companies. In order to sell these pension plans they combine them and make a glorified savings plan out of them. At one time or another an employee may want to withdraw his savings, or he may be rooked out of them, and then the pension he has supposedly been building up all his life no longer exists. We have seen pension plans used as an excuse not to hire people after they have reached the age of 40. We had a case of a distinguished member of my constituency who applied for a job. He got a nice letter back saying that he was qualified in every respect; in fact, he was the best qualified man who had applied for the position. But because he had reached the age of 40 he could not qualify for the pension plan of this company and, therefore, his application was turned down. We have seen pension plans used to keep employees tied to a job. That, I think, is not the proper function of a pension plan. We have even seen pension plans used as a recruiting device for trade union membership. With all due respect to these trade unions I maintain that this, too, is not the proper function of a pension plan.

The result of all these procedures in the past is that there are two groups who suffer. The first consists of the employees affected, those who, as I have said, run the risk of seeing the pensions they were supposed to be building up over the years frittered away. The other is, of course, John Q. Public who pays the taxes and has to pick up the tab for welfare in respect of people who could have been provided with good pensions if we had a real pension plan rather than the hodgepodge of plans which are in existence across the country today.

I am pleased to see that at least one province finally appears to be taking some real steps in this direction. For years we have seen the federal government and the provincial governments passing the ball back and forth, each waiting for the other to make the first move. I noticed in the Star, I believe it was, of last Saturday an article by Mr. Dick Snell who writes:

> When Ontario passes its portable pension act during the current session of the legislature it will be blazing a trail in Canada for this social security measure.
> In the speech from the throne which opened the session two weeks ago the government indicated it will go ahead with an Ontario plan—under study since 1960—which means it has given up hope Ottawa will bring in a national plan at this time.

The parliamentary secretary has referred to the speech from the throne in which, once again, this matter was mentioned. Unfortunately, as we know from past experience, a mention in the speech from the throne may not develop into action. I do not know whether the writer I have just quoted was giving an accurate report of what the Ontario government feels about the federal government. I would prefer to hope that this government really means what it says and intends to take constructive steps along this line. I notice that the Ontario government has passed, effective from the first of the year, a measure making pension plans portable as far as municipal employees in the province are concerned.

As the hon. member for Welland mentioned, while this is a welcome step, in fact the first real step in the right direction, it is no answer to the problem. If we have a portable pension plan within the confines of the province, it does not meet the need of Canadian citizens as a whole. Although there are other hon. members who want to make points on this question, I will be brief in the hope that this resolution will come to a vote and will be passed on to the government for its consideration. All I would say is that if the federal government will at this time take even this small measure, it will demonstrate to all and sundry that it means business as far as proceeding with the question of portable pensions. I think that in this regard this resolution can be recommended to the house, and I hope that action will be taken upon it.

Mr. J. C. McNulty (Lincoln): Mr. Speaker, the motion proposed by the hon. member for Welland suggests action which would be of benefit to all classes of workers. It would not be the be-all and end-all which we might expect from full legislation, but I think it would bring about the immediate remedial benefit which is needed at the present time. I realize that the parliamentary secretary has said that the government is aware of this problem; but as the hon. member for Timmins pointed out, if it is aware of the problem then possibly it will accept this motion and implement it so that some immediate action can be taken to help our workers in Canada. They are the ones who are most maligned in respect of the portability of pensions and the vesting rights of employees.

During this past year we have had some incidents of this problem in my riding. English Electric Company of Canada closed its St. Catharines plant and over 300 heads of families were left without employment. Many of these people are still unemployed, and the prime reason given by many industries in the area for not employing some of these people was that they were too old to fit into their pension plans. The companies could not take a chance with those who sought employment and felt that company pension plans could not be extended to them. The Foster-Wheeler plant closed their processing division, and the same thing happened with them. Many of these people were skilled employees who had put in anywhere from 15 to 18 years with the company. All they were able to get from the funds they had put in to provide for their security in retirement years was the exact amount of money they had contributed. In endeavouring to seek new employment they were at a loss, even though they were specialists in their type of work. Very few companies wished to hire them because of their age and their inability to fit in with company pension plans. The Canadian National Railways at St. Catharines terminated its bus transportation franchise in 1960 and all their employees endeavoured by all legal means to have the pension funds which they had built up transferred to the municipality of St. Catharines so that they could continue with some possibility of security in their retirement years. This was not possible and they had to become employees of the city of St. Catharines transit commission and start all over again. Despite the number of years these people had worked for the C.N.R., they will not be able to provide adequately for their retirement years. This means for example that their families will not be provided with proper educational benefits. As the hon. member for Timmins pointed out, this motion is not intended to cover all the factors, but it will provide the government with a chance to show that it really is aware of the problem facing workers today, and of the need for portability of pensions.

Mr. H. F. Jones (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, every one of the speakers in this debate has testified to the importance of this resolution, and I certainly agree with them. This is a most important resolution, and we must look carefully at it. I want to say how much I appreciate the interest in this question shown by the hon. member for Welland (Mr. McMillan). However, I point out that he stated explicitly during the course of his remarks that portable pensions are a matter for provincial governments. This is clearly set out in the British North America Act under section 92 which relates to property and civil rights. Old age pensions generally, so far as they might be affected by this matter, are provided for in section 94. I do not think I need refer further to it, except to point out that there is perhaps an analogy here. Section 94A says:

> It is hereby declared that the parliament of Canada may from time to time make laws in relation to old age pensions in Canada, but no law made by the parliament of Canada in relation to old age pensions shall affect the operation of any law present or future of a provincial legislature in relation to old age pensions.

I submit that those provisions were put into the B.N.A. Act because there was a clear recognition of the fact that matters such as pensions—all pensions—are within the field of provincial jurisdiction. They are a matter to be decided by the provinces. The recognition of this problem is clearly demonstrated in the speech from the throne presented by this government to this parliament. I refer to page 9 of Hansard, where the speech from the throne states:

> As pension plans have become ever more widely extended in Canadian business, it has been increasingly recognized that measures are essential to protect the interests of those affected and in particular to ensure that the benefits earned are portable when workers move from job to job.

Then I would underline this sentence.

> Provincial legislation would be required for this purpose in most cases—

That is in all cases except those which come specifically under federal jurisdiction.

Mr. Byrne: Would the hon. gentleman permit a question?

Mr. Jones: Would the hon. member mind if I finished my quotation? The speech from the throne continues:

—and several provinces are considering proposals of this nature. My government will be prepared to place before you complementary legislation to deal with industries under federal jurisdiction when adequate progress has been made by provinces.

The point has been stated, indeed admitted, by the hon. member for Welland—and it is clearly demonstrated by the citations I have given—that portable pensions are a matter for the provinces. They are a matter of provincial rights. The hon. member for Welland said that this resolution is to help bring about or force portability of pensions in the provinces. In other words, Mr. Speaker, it is an attempt to do indirectly what the parliament of Canada cannot do directly. It is an attempt to subvert the constitution.

Can you imagine the situation, Mr. Speaker, if we were to agree to a resolution such as this whereby the federal government could use taxing measures to force the people in the provinces to disobey provincial laws? If we were to use taxing measures in order to force the people in the provinces to act in conformity with federal thinking, whether those actions were matters relating to the provinces under the constitution or whether they were matters relating to the possibilities of the federal government, this would be a clear invasion of provincial rights. It is an insidious sort of invasion and I am sure the hon. member for Welland did not intend that. As the course of this debate develops, I am sure my friend the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Nugent) who is an expert on constitutional matters, and my friend the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), who is highly qualified in this regard, may develop further this particular point. However, I would draw it to the attention of the house that it would be most unfortunate if this business of portable pensions were to become muddied up and involved in a conflict between the provinces and the federal government. This is something which I think all hon. members would wish to avoid. It has been the course of the Conservative government to try to advance the cause of portable pensions.

References were made to this matter earlier, I think a year or so ago, in his budget by the then minister of finance, the present Minister of Justice. Again, it is referred to in the speech from the throne of this year. Always the emphasis has been on co-operation with the provinces in order to bring about the objective of portability which eventually will bring about so much good to the people of this country. The matter of portable pensions is something of which I think we can say all hon. members in all parts of the house are in favour. A few moments ago the hon. member for Vancouver East wished to ask a question. I must apologize to him for asking his permission to finish that portion of my remarks before accepting it. Perhaps he might ask the question now, if he so desires.

Mr. Byrne: I thank the hon. member for Saskatoon for his consideration, Mr. Chairman. I am wondering whether the hon. member has actually read the resolution. If so, would he not see that this resolution with respect to the Income Tax Act is asking for a regulation which was in effect up until 1957 or 1958, as I recall it.

Mr. Jones: No. The resolution here is quite a different thing from the one mentioned by the hon. member for Kootenay East. What the resolution says is this—and I will quote it right now so that he may have the advantage of studying it with us while we are discussing this particular point. The resolution states as follows:

That, in the opinion of this house, the government should consider the advisability of encouraging reasonable early vesting of pension rights of employees—

How?

—by disallowing in whole or in part the employer's claims for a reduction of the expenses of pensions for income tax purposes where reasonable vesting provisions are not adopted.

In others words, this is an invasion of the rights of the provinces by the federal government through the back door of the Income Tax Act. This is the point I am making. This is the thing we must avoid. We must avoid the invasion of provincial rights. I think all hon. members in this house will join with me when they come to realize the danger there is in this sort of resolution, particularly all those who are sincerely interested in advancing the cause of portable pensions.

It is not my intention, Mr. Chairman, to go much further into this particular matter. However, I wished to point out some of the problems which have been raised incidentally by the hon. member for Welland who, I am sure, enjoys the respect of all members of the House of Commons. However, he gets led into a situation and it is a rather dictatorial one. He said that a bill based on this resolution would not allow a workman to get his hands on his pension money. Although he said that, I am sure he could not possibly have meant it. I do not think this house or any other legislature should dictate to workmen what they shall do with their own money. That is their business. Any relationships they may be able to work out with their employers over pensions is a matter of business, too.

Mr. McMillan: Mr. Chairman, what I said was "get his hands on his pension money early", as he does now if he quits after two or three years. I did not mean that he would never get his hands on his pension money.

Mr. Jones: This is the point. I would think that one of the rights which all people assert is the right to do with their own what they wish to do, so long as it does not hurt somebody else. Therefore, if in their wisdom they decide they wish to get their hands on their pension money, that is their decision, unless they enter into some sort of arrangement with the employer which by agreement, either individually or through their unions, precludes them from doing this. Surely it is fundamental, Mr. Chairman, that we should not start legislating in order to force things down other people's throats if they themselves do not want them. To take such a course is the essence of the over protective socialist state. We have already had so many examples in so many parts of the world of the stultifying effect of this state paternalism that I am sure the hon. member for Welland, on reflection, would wish to avoid that course.

I know there are many others who wish to enter into this debate. I will therefore close my remarks at this stage, hoping that the hon. members who follow me will be able to deal further and more extensively than I have done with this particular problem of the invasion of provincial rights.

Mr. Benidickson: My point is only a question. The hon. member who has just taken his seat indicated that he did not wish to accept a question during his major remarks. However, I thought the important part of his remarks was that in which he suggested that responsibility for portability of pensions related to provincial jurisdiction. As he was the first speaker representing the government after the resolution was introduced by my friend the hon. member for Welland, may I ask him this question. What would his remarks be with respect to the portability of pensions either interprovincially or internationally?

Mr. Jones: May I say, Mr. Chairman, that there are a number of incidental and quite unimportant assumptions here. One was that I was the first government speaker following the mover of this resolution. Of course, that is not so. However, that has nothing to do with the point at issue. The question of whether pensions are portable internationally takes us no further at all on this question of unconstitutionality. Once you establish pensions on a basis of agreement with the provinces so that the constitution is not infringed, it can then become a question of relationship between the governments involved in passing enabling legislation to deal with international portability of pensions. This matter does not pose a major problem at all. The problem we face at the moment with regard to the question of the portability of pensions is that of getting rapport between the provinces and the federal government on the best means to follow in obtaining portability of pensions, by combining their legislative powers and by passing enabling legislation, as has been suggested in the speech from the throne and on other occasions by ministers of this government.

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Kootenay East): Mr. Speaker, I too wish to compliment the hon. member for Welland for his tenacity in bringing this matter forward again. I know that for quite a number of years, going back I think, as far as 1956, the hon. member together with myself and other members raised this question in the interests of those receiving pensions not on a contributory basis. The history of this matter goes back as far as 1953 when the international union of mine, mill and smelter workers first took it up in a serious way in an endeavour to make industrial pensions more portable. They were frustrated in their efforts to negotiate, particularly because the large industries maintained that with respect to non-contributory pension plans the employee had no claim on the pension until he reached retirement age.

That union went into the matter quite thoroughly and unearthed the government blue book containing regulations with respect to income tax. They found that there was a regulation in the blue book which, among other things, provided that in order for a pension plan to be accepted by the income tax authorities certain vesting rights should rest with the employee. I might say that this regulation was not enforced in the case of non-contributory pension plans.

The union pressed its case year after year with the assistance of the hon. member for Welland and other members in the house and some industries finally recognized the force of their argument. I know this is true in the case of the Consolidated Mining and Smelting Company. Up to that time they had refused adamantly even to discuss the matter of vesting any rights of employees in their pension plan which, as I have said, was non-contributory. Following a great deal of negotiation and pressure by the union officials, although they actually had no authority to discuss the matter, the company finally saw that this was a very justifiable request and in June of 1958 the bylaws of the pension plan were amended to provide that an employee who had served for 20 years and had reached the age of 50 would have his rights preserved in the plan. As I have said, this was a move that was made under pressure from people such as the hon. member for Welland and others.

An hon. Member: And the government.

Mr. Byrne: The hon. member says "and the government". I have not been informed of any great action on the part of the government. I inquired why this change came about so suddenly and I found that there was no action on the part of the government. As a matter of fact, the present government withdrew the blue book from circulation. The hon. member cannot take any credit for the government whatsoever. It was the pressure exerted by the union and by members in the opposition who brought this matter forward from time to time. While I agree with the hon. member for Saskatoon (Mr. Jones) that this is not the answer, it is something that the federal government can and did do for years and could have continued to do on the basis of their authority to make regulations under the Income Tax Act. This is not an invasion of provincial rights. Let us not have any of that small talk.

As was pointed out by the hon. member for Welland, people age, become ill and for various reasons need to leave their employment. Certainly it is only right that they should have a vesting interest in their pension plan. What has happened so far is the thin edge of the wedge and something has been accomplished. Let us give the hon. member for Welland full credit for what he has done in the past and let us vote on this motion now and pass it.

Mr. Terry Nugent (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, if we were going to vote on this motion I am afraid I would find myself unable to vote in favour of it. On reading the resolution the first thought that occurred to my mind was that the Income Tax Act can be used as a quite powerful weapon. The suggestion here is that the weapon of disallowing pension contributions in whole or in part as an expense item be used if there is not reasonably early vesting of the pension rights of employees. This sounds to me like pushing somebody pretty hard, and I wonder whether the hon. member who moved the motion has really considered what he is doing here. The resolution is broad enough to cover contributory pension plans where the union and the employer have come together and have made an agreement between them as to when the pension plan will vest. As a result there is vesting according to their agreemnt.

The resolution suggests that the federal government will have to set up a body which would be responsible for deciding when pensions should vest, and what schemes they thought were suitable and werer regarded by them as vesting early enough. The government point of view would then be imposed on those companies in substitution for the point of view agreed on by the employer and the employees.

I am afraid there is not time to go into many of the considerations that an employer has to take into account when he is setting up a plan to cover people who are going to be working for a long time. There are many good and pressing reasons why he wants to encourage the employee as much as possible to stay a long time with the company. Six o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: It being six o'clock, the hour appointed for the consideration of private members' business has expired.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Benidickson: I simply wish to ask the house leader, having regard to what he said at the conclusion of debate last night to the effect that certain consultations might take place today between leaders of the various parties, whether he could announce in a straightforward way the program of the house between now and the possible Christmas adjournment?

Mr. Churchill: We had certain consultations today and we will have another meeting tomorrow. The items we would like to consider tomorrow are interim supply and, if that is concluded, item No. 20 on today's order paper, the resolution in the name of the Minister of Finance dealing with the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements Act. That would be followed by the item dealing with the national economic development board, which is Bill No. C-87. I think it is likely that that amount of business would carry us through Thursday and Friday; but certainly it will do for tomorrow.

Mr. Speaker: It now being six o'clock this house stands adjourned until 2.30 o'clock tomorrow afternoon.

It being three minutes after six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, December 13, 1962

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

SIR WINSTON CHURCHILL

REPLY TO FELICITATIONS ON 88TH BIRTHDAY ANNIVERSARY

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, following the passage of the motion of this house congratulating Sir Winston Churchill on the occasion of his 88th birthday anniversary, I forwarded to him the motion which was passed by the house as well as a copy of the Hansard in question. I now have received from him the following letter:

My dear Prime Minister:

I am deeply obliged to you for your letter of December 1 which I received today. The honour which the Canadian House of Commons has accorded me means much to me and to my family. I should be glad if you would convey to the house my warm thanks and my profound and affectionate respect.

Yours very sincerely,

Winston S. Churchill

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

GRAIN

BARLEY—ANNOUNCEMENT OF FINAL PAYMENT ON 1961-62 POOL

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Agriculture): I have a statement to make to the house with regard to the 1961-62 barley pool.

The 1961-62 barley pool has now been closed and the government has authorized the distribution of the final surplus on producers' deliveries of 56,372,547.9 bushels. The final surplus is $17,037,035.43. After deducting the Prairie Farm Assistance Act levy and final payment costs, and after adding estimated additional interest earnings, the final payment on the 1961-62 barley account will average 30.2 cents per bushel. This compares with an average final payment of 8.4 cents per bushel in the case of the 1960-61 pool.

The final payments for the principal grades of barley delivered to the 1961-62 pool are as follows:

Grade	Cents per bushel
No. 2 Canada western six row	31.725
No. 3 Canada western six row	31.725
No. 2 Canada western two row	36.675
No. 3 Canada western two row	34.324
No. 1 feed	28.879
No. 2 feed	31.849
No. 3 feed	35.809

The first cheques with respect to this pool will be issued shortly following this announcement.

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, the announcement which has just been made by the Minister of Agriculture might well have been anticipated at about this time. The announcement that a payment on barley averaging 30.2 cents per bushel is about to be made by the Canadian wheat board indicates a payment considerably higher than the final payment that has been made in recent years. However, it is also a higher payment on a much smaller quantity of barley than is customary. This, of course, reflects the fact that the crop last year was very small, and with a small supply and a good demand the selling prices of the wheat board were higher than in recent years. The farmers of western Canada await with much greater anticipation the announcement of a final payment—interim and/or final; I would hope the whole works, because it belongs to the farmers—on the 1961-62 wheat crop.

Mr. Horace A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, all I wish to say is that we in this party welcome this announcement which has been made, and I am sure the barley producers of Canada will appreciate their cheques as soon as possible.

WHEAT—INQUIRY AS TO FINAL PAYMENT ON 1961 CROP

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether I could ask the Minister of Agriculture when the farmers of western Canada may expect an announcement on the final wheat payment for the 1961-62 crop year. I think they are expecting an announcement shortly.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I think I explained to the house once before that the usual time to make this payment is about the month of July. As this is the month of December and we have seven more months to wait, I would expect the announcement to be made some time between Christmas and next July.

Mr. Argue: A supplementary question. Since the announcement of the last payment was made in February of this year, not July, after selling the crop for a nine month period, I wonder whether we could have another nine month selling period in order that the farmers may be paid now?

Mr. Hamilton: Mr. Speaker, I am constantly being surprised and appalled by the ignorance of the hon. member for Assiniboia.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Both the supplementary and the answer I think are way off base.

POWER

COLUMBIA RIVER—REPORTED DEADLINE FOR AGREEMENT OF BRITISH COLUMBIA

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he is in a position to comment on a report that the government had set a deadline for the agreement of the province of British Columbia to the Columbia development treaty as now formulated.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am unaware of the item in question, but I can say that no deadline has been set.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

MEETING OF JAPANESE-CANADIAN MINISTERIAL COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. In the light of the agreement made between the Prime Minister and the premier of Japan last June for a Japanese-Canadian ministerial committee, can the Prime Minister tell the house what is holding up the first meeting of this committee?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, nothing is holding up the first meeting. Consideration has been given to this question, the determination of which depends on meeting and accommodating both sides. My hope is that it will be possible for such a meeting to be held in the month of January.

[Mr. Argue.]

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question. Is it not a fact that the government has advised the government of Japan that the reason for Canadian ministers not meeting their opposite numbers in Japan is that the government feels that its position in this house is very insecure?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, if I suffered from the same insecurity and frustration as does the hon. gentleman, I would agree with the question he asked.

TRADE

ATTENDANCE OF MINISTER AT INTERPROVINCIAL CONFERENCE IN TORONTO

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Walter L. Gordon (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Has the minister been invited to the interprovincial conference on trade which his friend Mr. Macaulay has called in Toronto for January 14?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

MILAN—INQUIRY AS TO OPENING OF COMMERCIAL OFFICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hubert Badanai (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Trade and Commerce, notice of which has been sent to him. Has the minister given up the intention of opening a commercial office in the important centre of Milan, Italy? If not, when does he intend to proceed with the establishment of such an office?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Yes, Mr. Speaker; we shall be opening a trade centre in the beautiful, attractive and important trade centre of Milan next year.

(Translation):

DESTINATION OF CANADIAN WHEAT SOLD TO RED CHINA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gerard Chapdelaine (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Prime Minister. I must say right away that even though I shall refer to a press report, I am not asking him to make any comments about it, but simply to answer the question arising from that report published in the Toronto Globe and Mail of November 16, 1962, and which reads as follows:

(Text):

The Danish ambassador said this:

Not a grain of Canadian wheat has ever reached the starving masses of China. If the average Canadian only knew what ruthless purposes Canada's wheat shipments to Peking were serving, I doubt if a single shipment would have been allowed to go through,—

(Translation):

A little further, the article goes on to say:

(Text):

All of us western ambassadors in Peking made nearly identical reports to our respective governments—

(Translation):

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member might put his question now.

Mr. Chapdelaine: Has the Canadian government been informed by countries of the western bloc—

(Text):

Has the Prime Minister been told by members of the western bloc that the wheat we sell to communist China does not serve the purposes that it should serve?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think that question has to do with a news item which appeared as far back as November 16. However, in view of the question asked me may I say this. My recollection is that the person in question who allegedly made the statement subsequently stated that he had in fact not made that statement. In so far as the direct question is concerned may I say that no such suggestion has come from any member among the western nations.

Mr. J. E. Walker (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question. I wonder whether the Prime Minister could tell us what percentage of the wheat that was sold to China reached mainland China.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think the hon. member will recognize the fact that this is information which it is quite impossible to have at hand.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

INQUIRY AS TO LEGISLATION RESPECTING REDISTRIBUTION COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Jack Roxburgh (Norfolk): I should like to direct my question to the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. When can we expect the government to introduce the bill on the redistribution of electoral districts, under a non-partisan commission, as promised on September 27 in the speech from the throne?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I can only say that with the rate of progress up to the present time it will not be at an early date.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in congratulating the Prime Minister on the gift of a pair of snowshoes made to him by his party yesterday—

An hon. Member: Igloo to igloo.

Mr. Pearson: —may I ask him if he does not think that a pair of running shoes would have been more appropriate?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, on every occasion that I have been in competition with the opposition I have been able to outrun them.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I recognize the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. While I appreciate the spirit in which certain questions have been offered and answered, perhaps we can come back to orders of the day.

OLD AGE PENSIONS

SUGGESTED INCREASES PENDING CONTRIBUTORY PENSION LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. Since it now seems unlikely, for reasons that are well known, that there will be any action at this session on the proposal to amend the British North America Act with respect to contributory old age pensions, will the government consider amending the Old Age Security Act and the Old Age Assistance Act to provide increases in the pensions given under those pieces of legislation?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I know the hon. gentleman does not expect an answer to that question. When government policy is available for announcement it will be placed before the house.

THE MINISTRY

INQUIRY AS TO RETURN OF EXTERNAL AFFAIRS AND PUBLIC WORKS MINISTERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Kootenay East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Can the Prime Minister tell the house when the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the Minister of Public Works will be back in the house so that those of us who wish to discuss the calamitous Columbia river treaty can do so in their presence?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member knows that the use of certain terms or the expression of opinions within questions is strictly against standing order 39.

[Later:]

Mr. Byrne: Mr. Speaker, I should like to withdraw the adjective which was found offensive, and redirect my question to the Prime Minister. Could he let us know when either one of the two ministers referred to will be back in the house?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): I can only say that so far as the Secretary of State for External Affairs is concerned, he is always absent from the house when attending a NATO ministerial meeting. This has been so throughout the years. He will be back upon the conclusion of the meeting. In so far as the Minister of Public Works is concerned, I am surprised that he is absent from his seat today, but no doubt he is on official business.

FISHERIES

DISCUSSION OF RECOMMENDATIONS RESPECTING JAPANESE FISHING IN NORTH PACIFIC

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Arthur Laing (Vancouver South): I should like to address a question to the Minister of Fisheries. Can he assure the house now that before approval is given the recommendations of the north Pacific fisheries commission in respect of permission for Japanese fishermen to fish in Canadian waters, this matter will be submitted to the house for debate?

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, there is no question of allowing Japanese fishermen to fish anywhere in Canadian waters. The recommendations of the north Pacific fisheries commission are now before the government for study, and at a future date a statement will be made.

CANADIAN CENTENNIAL

SUGGESTED PURCHASE OF "THE BOUNTY"

On the orders of the day:

Mr. B. S. Mackasey (Verdun): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Prime Minister. In view of reports that the New York world's fair authorities are contemplating the purchase of the Nova Scotia built vessel The Bounty, would the government recommend to the national centennial commission the immediate purchase of this vessel as an exhibit of shipbuilding craftsmanship representing part of Nova Scotia's contribution to Canada's history?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member has made his representations, and I think he will recognize that if he wants to put such a question it should appear on the order paper.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

WHITEHORSE—EMERGENCY SHELTER FOR FLOOD VICTIMS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, would the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources inform the house whether he is taking or has taken any measures to alleviate the hardship being caused to persons who have been forcibly evicted from their homes as a result of flood conditions in Whitehorse?

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, as soon as I noticed the account of this flooding in the press I got in touch with the territorial government, and I am assured that they have already taken action to provide emergency shelter for these unfortunate people.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON SECURITY INVESTIGATION IN UNIVERSITIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Thomas R. Berger (Vancouver-Burrard): Mr. Speaker, on Tuesday I asked the Minister of Justice whether the R.C.M.P. were interviewing students and faculty members of Canadian universities to obtain information regarding political activities by other students and faculty members. On Tuesday the minister did not really have an adequate opportunity to answer the question. I raise the matter today in order to accommodate the minister and ask him if he will give the house an answer.

Mr. Speaker: Order. With the greatest respect to the hon. member, I do not believe that is a proper question for orders of the day. It is not of the necessary importance that it be answered on orders of the day.

[Later:]

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker in connection with the question asked by the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard. Surely if there is any truth in the statement that

R.C.M.P. officers are questioning faculty members and students with regard to the political activities of others, that is a question which ought to be answered on orders of the day. There is no other opportunity to deal with the matter. If the Minister of Justice does not want to answer, that is his prerogative. It seems to me it is a proper question to be asked on orders of the day, since I submit it affects the rights and liberties of the citizens of this country.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. member will bear in mind that this question was raised following an editorial in a certain newspaper, and was an allegation made by a certain individual. According to the procedure of the house there is a certain item of business coming up when questioning can be advanced and the whole matter gone into if need be. I submit to the hon. member that orders of the day is not a time when every subject can be canvassed. Requests are made for information at this time when it is not possible to get that information through the regular channels within a reasonable time. That is the ruling I have made, and that is the prerogative of the Chair in this regard.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, I would point out that the question was asked last Monday, and the minister has had ample opportunity to ascertain whether the statement is correct.

Mr. Speaker: Order. That does not change the principle.

Mr. Berger: With great respect, Mr. Speaker, may I suggest that Your Honour is proceeding under a misapprehension. I did not ask the question on the basis of newspaper reports, but rather on the basis of confidential communications. I suggest with great respect that the urgency of the matter arises because the ministry is declining to give the house an answer to which it is entitled.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think if the hon. member will reflect upon it, if we proceed from orders of the day there is a certain item of business that may be called; and while I am not suggesting what he should do, I think he will understand the rules well enough to know that he can discuss the matter then.

[Later:]

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I was going to ask the Minister of Justice whether he could assure the house that all members of the R.C.M.P. had been furnished with copies of the bill of rights.

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I am sure this must impress the house as a very urgent question to be asked on the orders of the day. I am also sure the R.C.M.P. are better informed on that subject than the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate.

AGRICULTURE

DAIRY PRODUCTS—IMPORTATION OF ICE CREAM FROM ENGLAND

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Bernard Dumont (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture.

Will the 30 tons of ice cream which were imported from England and reached the port of Montreal last week help the government to remove the subsidies on dairy products?

Mr. Speaker: I feel sure the hon. member will admit that it would be more suitable for his question to be put on the order paper.

Mr. Robert Beaule (Quebec East): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order—

Mr. Speaker: On a point of order?

Mr. Beaule: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I rise on a point of order concerning the question asked by the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Dumont). Is it not just as important as the one asked by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) when he referred to snowshoes and skates?

Mr. Speaker: I do not believe the hon. member can question the Chair's ruling. I do not believe the hon. member can rise when the Chair has given a ruling on certain questions.

AIRPORTS

DOWNSVIEW, TORONTO—USE OF R.C.A.F. STATION BY COMMERCIAL PLANES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Haidasz (Parkdale): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Transport if he can inform the house why the short runways of the Downsview R.C.A.F. station are being used to land T.C.A. commercial jet liners, and for how long this practice will be continued.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think that question should go on the order paper.

PUBLIC SERVICE

RECOMMENDATIONS FOR SALARY INCREASES NOT ACTED UPON

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Are there any categories of civil servants for which the civil service commission recommended pay increases which were not given increases in the announcement made last Monday?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of Finance): I am not certain of the details of the recommendations, Mr. Speaker. I will have to check on that matter and advise the house later.

PRIVILEGE

MR. CAOUETTE—REFERENCE TO ARTICLE IN "LA PRESSE"

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Real Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

An article published in yesterday's newspaper La Presse under the title:

Mr. Gregoire: a failure as a martyr.

Reads as follows:

It seems obvious that Mr. Lambert, in that instance, merely bowed to the implicit or expressed will of the government to court the Socreds.

I should like to point out that Social Crediters enjoy no special privileges in this house and that reporter Jean Charpentier who makes that statement proves himself to be a first class scatterbrained newspaperman among all Canadian press people.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member has stated his point of privilege.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

INQUIRY AS TO COUNCIL OF HEALTH COMMITTEE ON SMOKING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. I wonder whether he can give the house any information relative to the organization of the dominion council of health's special committee on the relation of smoking and disease.

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Only that on the recommendation of the dominion council of health a committee to study this matter was formed and is now at work.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

INQUIRY AS TO FILLING OF VACANCY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Secretary of State whether he could draw to the attention of his colleagues the fact that today is the fifth week since a vacancy occurred in this house, and urge them to do something about it.

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Chown in the chair.

be granted to Her Majesty on account of the present fiscal year ending March 31, 1963.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, when the committee rose at five o'clock yesterday I was talking about some of the legislation, reports and so on that the government has had in its hands for weeks, in some cases for months and in some cases for years, that to date have received no positive action to deal with these problems. As I pointed out, we are becoming increasingly disturbed because of this lack of action.

Perhaps I may review some of the specific items that I mentioned, Mr. Chairman. There is the matter of ARDA. Of course, as we all know, this was supposed to be an act with very broad scope that would in fact give the government the authority and power to implement schemes and projects of all kinds to improve the lot of agriculture for the whole of Canada. We submit that there has not been any positive action on the part of the government in this connection in spite of the fact that several projects have been submitted to them. I am not saying there has been none, but there has not been anything of a substantial nature in keeping with the spirit that was expressed when this act was brought in.

The fact is that agriculture, in spite of the propaganda program of the Conservative party during the last election campaign, still has many problems, and farmers' income is going down. I have in my hand an Associated Press report from Rome which says:

> Canada fared the worst among countries where farmers' net incomes fell last year, the United Nations food and agriculture organization annual review reported Sunday.
> The fall was 24 per cent. It brought net farm incomes in Canada in 1961 to the lowest level since 1945. Farmers' cash incomes, however, rose because of sales from previous years' stocks, the report said.

The Chairman: Order. There is a great deal of competitive conversation in the committee that could be better carried on elsewhere. I think out of courtesy to the hon. member who has the floor hon. members who intend to remain in the committee should co-operate by keeping their conversations for another time.

Mr. Olson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. As I was saying, obviously the problem of farm income dropping and the cost-price squeeze is worse now than it was a year ago; it is worse now than it was two years ago, and so the plan to remedy this situation that was indicated when ARDA was brought out has not been of any effect. The problem is still with us, and we are insisting that some positive action be taken in this respect and taken soon.

The second thing I mentioned was the problem with respect to some Canadian publications. The royal commission set up to study this question has reported and made recommendations, and no action has been taken. We believe it will be too late to take action after the whole Canadian magazine industry has gone bankrupt or been forced out of business by unfair competition. In this respect we think it is time for the government to take action. They have authority now to do it; they do not need to wait for any further authority from parliament.

Then there is the matter of the royal commission on transportation, which submitted its report to the government several months ago. We are now faced with the problems of additional subsidies to the railways, and there is a large segment of the Canadian population which feels there is unjust competition to the trucking industry because of these subsidies. We believe that both the railways and the trucking industry have important parts to play in the area of transportation in this country and it is up to the government to take some action based upon those recommendations. If they had taken some action we would not be reeling from one temporary improvisation to another with respect to the over-all problem of transportation.

I mentioned also that there was an inquiry into air service requirements for the prairie provinces undertaken over a year ago. A report is now in the hands of the government and we should like to see some action taken with regard to it. The Atlantic provinces economic council has, I submit, sufficient power to make inquiries and forward recommendations to the government. All these other boards they are setting up are, in my opinion, redundant. They may have other purposes, but certainly insufficient action has been taken on those recommendations which are already in the government's hands.

Later this session we shall be discussing another board, the national economic development board. We submit that the national productivity council, which has already been established, has once again the necessary power to inquire into this field and make recommendations for positive action which the government might take. So there is no need for any of these new boards. I say this because the government has not taken any action on the recommendations which it already has.

Another thing we welcomed in the speech from the throne was the statement regarding action to be taken to provide additional grain storage in eastern Canada. Well, we have been here for several weeks, and no action has been taken to provide such storage. There were indications that the surcharges inhibiting Canada's international trade would be removed as soon as possible. We believe this should be done, because they constitute a great burden on some of the business people of Canada. But these surcharges are still being imposed.

There is one other thing about which we in this group are probably more disturbed than we are about any other matter. It is the difficulty which municipalities are facing in finding the capital they require for their social development programs. We believe there is an area here, in the provision of these finances, where the federal government through the Bank of Canada could make a most useful contribution to assist both provinces and municipalities to raise the capital they need and save them some money in the process because it could be done at a lower rate of interest. We submit that the Bank of Canada already has the necessary authority to do this, provided the present government would take some action.

In the few minutes I have left I want to say that up to this point in the session the party to which I belong has prevented the Liberals from dissolving this parliament. We have done this for two reasons. One is that we believe that on June 18, when the people of Canada had the opportunity to express themselves, they elected the composition of the parliament as we see it here today; in other words it was a true and accurate reflection of the wishes of the people, and as responsible members of parliament it was our duty to try to work together with all other members, regardless of which party they belong to, in the interests of the Canadian people. To this point we have done that.

The second reason is that ordinarily there is a slowing down of the economy during the winter months, and unemployment increases due to climatic conditions. Also we know that when an election campaign is in progress the economy goes into a dormant state while businessmen wait to see what is going to happen before they make major decisions. So we took the position that it would not be in the interests of Canada generally to face the problems both of winter, with the slowing down of the economy, and an election at the same time.

However, we are not happy with the progress that is being made. We believe no further legislation is needed with regard to many, in fact most, of the specific matters with respect to which I have urged that action should be taken. Thus the blame does not rest on parliament for this lack of action. It rests solely on the shoulders of the government. The government already has authority to do all these things for which I have asked, with one exception. We believe that the responsibility here in this parliament is not something to be played with. We believe that if we pass legislation, whether it is in this parliament or in past parliaments, it is up to the government to take the action which was anticipated on the basis of that legislation. In many cases this has not happened.

So in closing I want to say to you, Mr. Chairman, and through you to the government and in particular to the Prime Minister, that I am authorized on behalf of this party to indicate that unless some positive action is taken within the next few weeks we are going to reassess our position, our attitude toward keeping this government in office. I want to say, too, that we intend to support this interim supply motion without amendment but unless there is some positive action, some progress that we can see in those fields I have mentioned, it will probably be the last one that we shall support.

We want to make this perfectly clear. We want to serve notice on the government so they will have sufficient time to take some action. We do not want to take the irresponsible position of dissolving parliament, or being party to the action which dissolves parliament, in what might be termed a snap vote. We serve notice on them now, and they will have until the next supply motion which comes up in January to indicate when they are going to take some action on these things. But I repeat, if there is nothing by then to indicate that they are doing something, we shall not support any more supply motions.

We are asked here for another $330 million, which makes up ten twelfths of the total requirement for this fiscal year, without having passed any of the estimates and without having passed a budget. We are also disturbed because the government is, in addition, asking for authority to borrow an additional $500 million. This too, as is well known to all members of this house, is a matter which we in this party regard with great apprehension. This in itself indicates that there is something basically wrong with the economy and with the monetary and fiscal system under which we are operating in Canada. We would like the government to show us some policy or some action which they could take in order that this kind of borrowing will not be necessary in years to come.

Mr. Herridge: Members of this party are glad that this debate provides an opportunity to discuss a matter of great importance to the people of Canada. I refer to the Columbia river treaty. Since the treaty was signed on January 17, 1961 we have heard nothing but a series of contradictory statements from representatives of the government of Canada and representatives of the government of British Columbia. As a result members of this house, and, I believe, Canadians generally are simply more confused than they were when the Prime Minister made his announcement in the house with respect to the signing of this treaty. The members of this party believe it is the responsibility and duty of the government frankly and fully to inform the house of the developments since this treaty was signed, and to bring the house up to date on the situation.

I want to emphasize that this party views every question of this type on the basis of its national policy, which is to promote the development of Canadian natural resources by Canadians for Canadians. Therefore throughout the years we have consistently urged the development of the Columbia river and other developments of this type in accordance with this policy. However, we oppose the present terms of the Columbia river treaty because the treaty does not comply with the policy and the philosophy of this party, and it is not to the advantage of the Canadian people.

I wish also to emphasize that the New Democratic party is the only political party which, provincially and federally, has consistently supported what is known as the McNaughton plan, namely the full economic development of the Columbia to produce the maximum of power for Canadian use, with downstream benefits to be used in British Columbia or in the rest of Canada, and the surplus water of the Columbia to be used to irrigate Canadian soil, and to provide permanent jobs as a result of this policy. The decision on the part of the members of this party to oppose the present treaty was made only after the most careful analysis of the treaty by members of the party and by competent professional and technical advisers. Those advisers were sought in several provinces in Canada.

In order that there may be no doubt as to the position of the New Democratic party, the B.C. federation of labour and other unions in British Columbia, I am going to place their policy briefly on record. This is the policy of the New Democratic party as adopted unanimously at two provincial conventions in British Columbia:

Our cheapest source of power must be developed first. Available statistics suggest that this can be developed on the Columbia river. The New Democratic party favours the McNaughton plan, which would eliminate the High Arrow dam project and the flooding of thousands of acres of valuable B.C. land. This low cost power must be used in British Columbia to create new industries and the thousands of new jobs which are required to expand our industrial production rapidly and to end mass unemployment in our province.

No firm or long term contracts should be made for the export of power or sale of downstream benefits from British Columbia.

I think that is clear enough. That policy was unanimously adopted by the founding convention of the New Democratic party in 1961 and at a convention held in British Columbia just a few weeks ago.

Now I want to deal with the position of the B.C. federation of labour, and to pay a tribute to the men in the B.C. federation of labour who have given this question much study. They have employed competent research workers; they did not come to their decision off the bat, as it were. They discussed this policy in committee and came to their conclusions after a careful analysis of the treaty and of the surrounding circumstances. As a result of their conclusions they adopted a policy in 1961, which was endorsed this year, which deals with the question of power and politics. I will just read briefly from the pamphlet which contains their policy:

Power resources belong to the people.

Bennett still opposes the best interests of the public in B.C. industry.

Social Credit and Mr. Bennett have been forced to completely reverse their position on public ownership of power and admit their long term error.

But, as the C.C.F. warned the people of the province at the historic session of the legislature, "The Social Credit cabinet ministers are still babes in the woods when it comes to power development".

I am glad that they qualified that statement, because they are not babes in the woods in some respects.

For example, Premier Bennett has stated repeatedly that he wants to export cheap Columbia power to the United States.

Mr. Gregoire: Who said that?

Mr. Herridge: A member of our party in the B.C. federation of labour.

This is opposed by labour, by the federal government and by the C.C.F. If Mr. Bennett is allowed to do this it will mean:

1. Expensive power to industry and domestic consumers in B.C. 2. Cheap power to American industries. 3. More jobs for Americans—fewer jobs for Canadians. 4. Cheaper U.S. goods to compete with Canadian products.

That will include the agricultural production, which would be increased in the U.S. by the use of Canadian waters. It goes on to mention that exporting power means exporting jobs and deals with the question of their stand, which is identical to the stand indicated in the resolution passed at the New Democratic party convention.

I should like to deal briefly, Mr. Chairman, with the work of the "Columbia for Canada" committee and to congratulate the members of those unions who got together on this question. They also had a research committee established consisting of very competent engineers and people, some of whom I know quite well. The work of this committee has also been endorsed by the B.C. federation of labour. I should like to pay tribute to Mr. Orville Braaten, Mr. Jerry LeBourdais and Mr. John Hayward, staunch trade unionists who have accepted their responsibilities for dealing with the question of natural resources. Mr. Chairman, I have often criticized trade unionists for their concentration on, shall I say, wages and working conditions. I have often said to them that they have just as much right to deal with these larger issues as chambers of commerce or business organizations, and I am glad to say that the B.C. federation of labour—in fact all trade unions in British Columbia—are taking a much greater interest in the development of our natural resources than they did a few years ago. They have done some very excellent work indeed on this question. As a result of their work I have received nearly 5,000 cards addressed to me in Ottawa as member of parliament for Kootenay West. I have one here which says:

> General McNaughton, April 6, 1962 publicly denounced the draft Columbia river treaty.
> "It amounts to servitude in perpetuity of our vital rights and interests. Canada was sold down the river by the government, in fact, you can say by two governments".
> I support your stand against the Columbia give-away.
> Block the export of half a million Canadian jobs to the United States.
> Support General McNaughton's plan.

These cards have come from all over British Columbia. We have had a few from Alberta, very few indeed, but more from Saskatchewan and some from Ontario. But this is the result of trade unionists accepting some responsibility for the conservation and proper development of our natural resources, and I am very pleased indeed to see it.

In my own district members of the international union of mine, mill and smelter workers, of which I have been an honorary member since 1941, a fact of which I am very proud, have done a good job in this regard. They appointed a special committee composed of competent people to carry out research on the problem, and they have made excellent representations in co-operation with farmers' organizations in the district. There has been the closest co-operation between the representatives of the farmers in my constituency and the representatives of the trade unions on this very important issue, because together they realize that this is a matter concerning their bread and butter and the bread and butter of children to come.

We admit that this is a complicated problem and that it is very difficult for people to be fully informed through the daily press. However, at this point I must give credit to Mr. James G. Ripley, editor of Engineering and Contract Record, for his excellent article entitled "The Columbia river treaty" in the September issue of that magazine, which has been widely circulated and is most useful to persons seeking an understandable explanation of the terms of the treaty and information on this problem. I see the hon. member opposite is nodding his head in agreement. There is no question but that Mr. Ripley has done a great public service, because I have had dozens and dozens of letters from people who have received copies of this article. I myself distributed 1,100 reprints of this article in this magazine through the co-operation of trade unionists in Vancouver. I think this is the first breakthrough we have had with respect to the ordinary person understanding the terms of this treaty and what it means to Canadians. I must also congratulate Margaret "Ma" Murray for her November 15 supplement to her Bridge River-Lillooet News entitled "Eye Opener on the Columbia". I think it is a great credit to this lady of central British Columbia who, I understand, at the present time is over 75 years of age. I remember when this lady gave my wife slim and trim lessons 45 years ago. Anyway, she is just as alert as ever, and I am glad to see it.

Mr. Byrne: And still giving lessons in politics.

Mr. Herridge: Yes. Some people have considered in the past that this has simply been a local protest of people who are being flooded out. They looked upon me as a pleader for special interests. I have been criticized in a few quarters because of my wife's property. There are a few acres of my wife's property which would be flooded. I may explain that I live on my wife's ranch. We have an arrangement under which she allows me to live there most of the time.

An hon. Member: How many acres?

Mr. Herridge: I said a few acres. We are more fortunate than are most people. We have more land than most people, and we can move back from the water's edge. There has been an impression abroad that I was speaking for special interests in the Arrow lakes valley. May I say that it is natural for ranchers to be concerned when they see the work of 40 years, 50 years or possibly 60 years destroyed overnight.

However, the issue is larger than that. All these organizations have studied it from the national viewpoint, the provincial viewpoint, the district viewpoint and the local viewpoint. To give some idea of the widespread opposition to this treaty I wish to mention some of the organizations which have dealt with it and have adopted resolutions. They include the Arrow lakes water resources committee, which is a committee of farmers and others. Industrialists, merchants and trade unionists, including representatives of the city of Revelstoke, have expressed strong opposition to this treaty. I also must mention members of the British Columbia advisory board of the farmers institutes of British Columbia; local organizations of the farmers institutes; women's institutes, and all the chambers of commerce of southeastern British Columbia. They have expressed their opposition to the High Arrow aspect of this Columbia river treaty. If you do away with the High Arrow, then it is possible to adopt the McNaughton plan. They have done so, because they have realized the unnecessary destruction of great and valuable natural resources.

Then in addition, numerous other organizations and individuals have expressed their opposition. I wish to pay my tribute to the engineers, who included Mr. Bartholomew of Vancouver, the consulting engineer for the Arrow lakes water resources board; Mr. Affleck, consulting engineer for Kootenay West New Democratic party district council; Mr. Larrett Higgins of Ontario and Mr. Richard Dean of Rossland, a hydro engineer, and Mr. MacDonald of Rossland, another engineer. Numerous other people have volunteered their services and have looked at this matter objectively because they were not directly affected. It cannot be said that persons living in Ontario or Quebec are directly affected, but I may say we have letters from Quebec. We must credit them with looking at this matter in an objective way. Surely the opinions of these large and responsible organizations and thousands of people warrant consideration by the government of Canada and the government of British Columbia.

Furthermore, the contradictory statements from representatives of the government of Canada and representatives of the province of British Columbia have caused confusion in the public mind, and they are entitled to an explanation instead of the continuing silence on the part of this government.

Before proceeding I wish to congratulate the hon. member for Coast-Capilano on his speech. I listened to it attentively and enjoyed the greater part of it. There were in it one or two spots with which I could not agree. In any event I was glad to hear him urge that the government return to the principles proposed by the international joint commission for the development of the Columbia while General McNaughton was chairman of the Canadian section of the international joint commission. I was pleased to hear him say he opposed the construction of the Libby and High Arrow dams. I was delighted at his suggestion that we renegotiate the treaty and secure with the United States an agreement which will provide for a logical and measured development, commencing with the Mica dam first. I was also very much pleased to hear him suggest that General McNaughton and other qualified witnesses should be heard before the committee on external affairs so that the house will be informed.

I was pleased to hear him urge that public hearings should be held before any decision was made. Let me say this. Long before the treaty was signed General McNaughton told me that the international joint commission, Canadian section, considered it an obligation to hold hearings in the district before they made a final recommendation to the government on a treaty of this type. Mr. Williston, minister of lands and forests, assured us in Castlegar it would be done there in 1960. He said "I can assure you there will be public hearings held in this district before any treaty is signed on behalf of Canada".

There were no hearings held until after the treaty was signed. Even then, what were the hearings? They were held by the water controller, Mr. Paget, who made the decision as to the issuing of the licence to British Columbia hydro. This gentleman was one of the chief exponents of the present treaty on behalf of the government of British Columbia in Ottawa. This gentleman was actually judging his own actions. Dr. Keenleyside, chairman of B.C. hydro, made an application to him for this licence and it was granted by Mr. Paget. This is a wrong conception of justice altogether, namely that the person who promoted the idea should then sit in judgment as to whether or not a licence should be given with respect to it.

Before I pass on from the remarks of the hon. member for Coast-Capilano I might mention the fact that I had the honour of naming the riding some years ago, and I will explain that to him, as he may be interested. I know he is as interested in history as I am. However, I did not agree with his suggestion with respect to the sale of downstream benefits. I think he spoke in terms of selling them for a lump sum in cash. However, I was pleased to note the tenor of his whole speech, and I trust that he keeps moving in that direction until he finds a haven in this group over here. What about the history of this tragedy of errors? I may say that I am not dealing with technical matters, although I know the member for Coast-Capilano is familiar with them. First of all, I am not a technical man. I am just an ordinary hillbilly. However, I know the circumstances which I am discussing. I suppose I am the only member of parliament who has ridden down the Columbia river in an Indian canoe in the early years of this century. I know every foot of the Columbia, and as far as the local aspect is concerned I know what I am talking about and I speak with a certain, shall I say, sentimental interest in this question.

What of the history of development?

1. There was a reference by the House of Commons of Canada and the congress of the United States to the international joint commission in March, 1944, authorizing an investigation of the Columbia for development.

2. Between that date and up until recently the federal government expended approximately $5 million on investigations.

3. General McNaughton obtained recognition of United States authorities of Canada's rights as the upstream state under article 2 of the boundary waters treaty of 1909. When he first took that stand they were going to deny us those rights.

4. The international joint commission, while General McNaughton was chairman of the Canadian section, established principles that would apply to the development of the Columbia.

5. General McNaughton negotiated agreement for the acceptance of the principles for the division of downstream benefits. We were all happy when that matter was settled as far as the principle was concerned.

6. The government of Canada, in association with the government of British Columbia, proceeded to negotiate a treaty on the basis of the McNaughton plan. Those negotiations went on for two or three meetings.

7. Shortly after negotiations commenced the government of British Columbia reversed its stand and insisted on the present treaty plan.

8. The federal government surrendered abjectly to the government of British Columbia because, as the present Minister of Public Works said, I did not wish to tread on Mr. Bennett's toes.

9. Negotiations continued after this surrender and a treaty was drafted, the terms of which were acceptable to the government of British Columbia. There is no question about that, I must say in fairness to the federal government.

10. The treaty was signed on January 17, 1961 with great fanfare. I remember the day the Prime Minister rose, announced this treaty and read extracts from the speech made in Washington. This treaty was signed when Washington was preparing for a coming election. It was signed with great fanfare and announced in this house by the Prime Minister as a great development. Actually I am quite confident that the Prime Minister did not really understand what the terms of the treaty meant.

11. After the signing the treaty was hailed as a great advantage to the United States and documents were published to this effect in the United States, copies of which I have, by the Republican party and were used in the subsequent United States election to prove what a good deal they had made.

12. Premier Bennett's about-face. He strongly criticized the treaty, demanded the right to sell the downstream benefits in the United States after his representative had agreed to the terms of the treaty in Ottawa, and said there is a market in the northwestern states for this power at five mills.

13. Then we got an interesting interjection from the United States in the form of a statement by Mr. Stewart L. Udall, secretary of the interior of the United States of America and the member of President Kennedy's cabinet who has the direct responsibility of seeing that the Columbia river treaty is carried out by the United States. He said:

> To provide flood control and power benefits equivalent to those provided by the Canadian storage as of 1970 entirely from projects in the United States would require an investment in the United States of about $710 million over the next nine years. To realize these benefits through Canadian storage, on the other hand, the costs in the United States over that period are estimated at not over $150 million.

They were using this in the United States election, and I do not blame them one bit.

14. The Minister of Public Works, chairman of the negotiating committee, admitted the treaty is second best and stated that "Canada would have been better off with a Columbia treaty drawn according to General McNaughton's wishes". But, he said, "B.C. opposed the move because it conflicted with provincial interests".

15. The Secretary of State for External Affairs, a gentleman for whom I and all members of the house have great respect, enlarging on the speech of the Minister of Public Works, said in the house on April 13, 1962 that the United States had agreed to accept the McNaughton plan but then the treaty had to be changed because the B.C. government refused to go along with this plan.

16. Now we come to a dynamic political development. Mr. Bennett criticized the treaty in his famous speech at Prince George on September 16, 1961. I think a number of members have copies of the manuscript in which he roundly condemned the treaty and said that it was a poor treaty for Canada but that it could be made to work on his terms.

17. The Minister of Public Works replied to Premier Bennett's speech on November 28, 1961 and said when referring to the export of power proposed by Mr. Bennett that this would be "the greatest betrayal of Canadian interests that it would be possible to contemplate". One can now understand why the Minister of Public Works is not here today, when the government has repudiated his stand and position with respect to the export of power and the export of downstream benefits.

18. On reading the throne speech this session members of parliament realized that the government of Canada had surrendered to Premier Bennett for the second time by making provision for the long term firm export of power.

Mr. McCleave: Would the hon. member permit a question? I know he wants to be fair. Knowing the Minister of Public Works as he does, would the hon. member not agree that the minister would not be absent from the house unless he had made plans beforehand?

Mr. Herridge: I want to be fair to the minister, yes. I am sure that the Minister of Public Works would not deliberately avoid his duty, but I think he must feel somewhat gratified that he has other business to keep him away from the house this afternoon.

Mr. McCleave: He will be back today.

Mr. Herridge: 19. Since that time we have read of Mr. Bennett's visit to Washington and of his attempts to sell his power at five mills, which he said could be sold quite easily. There is no question but that Dr. Keenleyside also said that; but let me tell you that though Dr. Keenleyside is a most impressive figure in a village hall, he did not win the hearts of my constituents.

20. Premier Bennett's latest move suggesting that a United States negotiator be appointed to carry on negotiations between the government of Canada and the government of British Columbia. Did you ever before hear of anything like that in Canadian history, a premier suggesting that we go to the United States to get a negotiator to carry on negotiations between the government of Canada and the government of British Columbia?

21. This whole sorry mess is, I say, proof that the government entered into this treaty without planning and without the facts, and listened to the boys who make decisions based on computer machines without any relation to the conservation of Canada's natural resources or the sociological aspects of this very important problem.

22. General McNaughton approached this problem as a Canadian development. The treaty reverses this position, because while the Americans are physically downstream the treaty gives them all the rights of an upstream state by reason of their obtaining Canada's consent to the building of the Libby dam.

What in brief are the major defects of this treaty from our point of view?

1. This treaty is the result of a complete lack of planning and lack of knowledge of the facts. It is the result of political rather than co-operative and effective planning. This government entered into the treaty before it knew it could build the High Arrow dam. There are doubts yet about the safety of the foundation. Drillers have gone down hundreds of feet and have not been able to find rock. The government entered into the treaty without knowing the cost of moving huge quantities of timber to the pulp mill below the dam. The government entered into the treaty, and the government of British Columbia is to blame as well, without any estimate of the damage to public and private investment, wharves, docks, roads, highways, farms, villages, 18 communities wiped out almost completely and others partially. The government signed the treaty without any assessment of the damage to agricultural land, timber and so on.

2. The treaty for the first time in Canadian history gives control of Canadian waters to United States authorities. For the first time in Canada's history this treaty hands over to another state sovereign rights that belong to Canada.

3. It diminishes the value of the Columbia river for power development in Canada and also provides for power at a higher cost than would be possible under the McNaughton plan. That can be proved.

4. It means the loss of permanent jobs for Canadians forever.

5. It unnecessarily destroys land and living space and millions in public and private investment. Under this treaty we destroy 57,000 acres of agricultural land and forest by the flooding of the Arrow lakes region and of a portion of East Kootenay, whereas under General McNaughton's plan we can bring into production in the future hundreds of thousands of acres of some of the most fertile land in Canada and lay the foundation for a great cattle industry in that area.

6. It destroys recreational resources, fish and wildlife. The fish and wildlife people of British Columbia made a report on this matter. It destroys fishing in the Arrow lakes. The rise and fall of 78 feet annually makes it impossible for the fish to spawn and prevents a proper supply of food for them.

7. It destroys miles of beautiful sandy beaches. People go to Florida, but let me tell hon. members that the Arrow lakes district is the most beautiful inland park in Canada, with many miles of sandy beaches.

The Chairman: Order. I regret to advise the hon. member that his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Continue.

The Chairman: Will the committee give unanimous consent to extend the hon. gentleman's time?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Herridge: I appreciate this courtesy, as I have just about completed my remarks. The members of this group believe that Canadian power resources should be developed for Canadians; that Canadian surplus water should be used to irrigate Canadian soil; that the Columbia river should be developed so as to provide permanent jobs for Canadians of this and future generations. We believe our surplus water should be used to irrigate the Okanagan and, in the future, prairie lands that are available. We believe our surplus power should be put through a national power grid. These developments will not come in the immediate future, but I believe they will come with national unity and if federal and provincial governments do some co-operative planning. We believe we must provide permanent employment to all Canadians by protecting and using to the best advantage these great national resources. For these reasons the members of this party support the McNaughton plan for the development of the Columbia river.

Mr. Foy: Mr. Speaker, the importance of transportation to Canada is well understood by all members of this house. Western Canada and the maritimes have the problem of the long haul to the central Canadian market. After world war II a series of applications by the railroads for horizontal freight rate increases accentuated this problem, and this was alleviated to some extent by the east-west freight subsidies instituted in 1950 and by the increase in the maritime freight rates subventions on hauls by rail from the maritime provinces to central Canada.

The equalization of rates, also instituted in the early 1950's, was a gigantic task and had not been completed before the rise of a new transportation industry. I refer, Mr. Chairman, to the trucking industry. The trucking industry began to nullify the equalized freight rate structure on the long hauls from the west and from the maritimes to central Canada. The trucking industry began to create a situation that had long existed in central Canada, and to a lesser extent regionally within the western provinces and the maritimes. This was the competition for freight business. In short, the railways on these long hauls made drastic rate reductions in an attempt to hold their business and the truckers, in reply, reduced their rates even lower in an attempt to hold their new found business.

The truckers complained about the subsidized rate competition with their industry. If we are to believe the report of the MacPherson royal commission there is no doubt about the substance of their complaint. These are matters to be considered anew. The truckers must realize that the rate reducing subsidies to which they refer, and which are cited critically in the royal commission report, were not given exclusively to the railways for the purpose of putting the truckers out of business. They came into effect when the trucking industry was not an important factor or a much less important factor in the field of transportation than it is today.

As I have said, these are matters to be considered anew. The government, if it is going to implement the MacPherson report, will have to, one, accept the royal commission recommendation as to the position of the trucking industry and, two, reject the commission's recommendation that rate reduction subsidies should be available to all shippers and not just to shippers by rail. The announcement by the government that it will implement the report of the MacPherson royal commission is of prime importance to the railways. The railways remain as the backbone of Canada's transportation system, and will continue to occupy this position in the foreseeable future.

The government's announcement is of undoubted importance to other forms of transportation, water, air and truck, all of which are affected. The truckers are perhaps particularly affected because they are the vital arteries of our transportation system. Certainly, Mr. Chairman, there is a case, and the royal commission puts it very well, for the modernization of the regulatory set-up under which the railways operate. This regulatory modernization would apply to the meeting of competition by the railways and the stripping away of services which the royal commission says are uneconomic and little used by the public, if used at all. That there is a necessity for action along these lines, I think we can all agree.

The question is, Mr. Speaker, how do we go about easing the railways into the intense competitive climate of today without a major disruption or dislocation? For example, shippers who still use railway services, either as passengers or as shippers on branch lines who have no alternative facilities, must be protected. No one expects the railways to act as fairy godmothers for anyone. On the other hand, these Canadian citizens have, in good faith, adopted a way of life in which they are dependent on the railways. If necessary, even hard measures will have to be taken by the government to straighten out the railway situation. We must find some way to compensate or help those who suffer. This can be done by forcing the continuance of railway service, even though it is uneconomic.

If this has to be done, the question certainly arises as to the removal of the uneconomic burden from the railways and the assumption of the burden by the public. Then if a service is to be withdrawn either the persons along the line should be given some transitional payment to enable them to adjust, or some authoritative public body should determine beyond doubt that adequate alternative transportation facilities exist or will be instituted as soon as the railway service is withdrawn.

A good deal of partisan muck can be thrown backward and forward on the transportation issues that confront Canada. However, the central fact which is not capable of partisan interpretation is that the fundamental problem of the railways is the growth of competition from alternative forms of transportation. In our free society we do not decry this growth. On the contrary, it has brought great benefits to Canada, one example being the growth of refrigerated truck transportation from western to eastern Canada, which has opened up new markets in the east for western producers. It has also compelled a tremendous improvement in the speed of railway freight service. This service in the early stages of truck competition was not competitive with the trucks, but the railway service is now approaching the standard of the truck service.

As I said earlier, leaving aside the question of rates, the railways not only had to improve their service but had to reduce their rates on the long hauls. At the root of almost every problem confronting the railways we find competition. For instance, the private automobile, the bus and later the airplane stripped local passenger runs of their business and later ate into the long distance passenger runs as well. The truck, steamship, pipe line and airplane in that order have all made tremendous inroads into railway freight traffic. In a free society the consumers do not switch their preference unless they get something better, a better service, a lower price or a combination of both. Even on the question of horizontal freight rate increases, ignoring the issue of passenger services and branch lines that do not pay their way, competition is again the factor.

The reason for the Turgeon royal commission on transportation in 1949 and the MacPherson royal commission in 1960 was the continuing problem of horizontal freight rate increases and the loading of more and more of the railway freight rate increases on a smaller and smaller section of the so-called captive traffic. Shippers with alternate forms of transport could escape the impact of the horizontal freight rate increase, as the MacPherson commission points out. Those who have no recourse to alternate forms of transport, or recourse to a smaller degree than shippers elsewhere, took the full impact of the maximum rate increase permitted by the board of transport commissioners. It follows that if competition is at the root of the passenger and the branch line problem, and if it is a major factor in the question of horizontal freight rate increases, we cannot ignore the existence of competitive forms of transport in anything we do to solve the problem.

No party in this house has a mandate from the Canadian people to settle this problem by destroying the competitors of the railways. We want all the benefits that new technology in transport can bring, and that will only come with the spur of competition. As one form of transport improves its service or through technology finds it possible to offer a service at a lower rate, it spurs other forms of transport to do likewise. We all know that the railway system of today and the railway services of today bear no resemblance to the railway system and the railway services that were available on the eve of the competitive era. The change for the better, which has been of benefit to the great mass of shippers, has been compelled by competition.

The government has announced its intention of implementing the MacPherson report and I contend, Mr. Chairman, that it must do so in a way that looks at the transportation system as a whole; in a way that no longer contemplates unilateral measures directed to the railways alone, without apparent regard to the interests of other forms of transport, without consideration of the disruption of their activities. We are all aware that the trucking industry is very seriously concerned about the tremendous impact that will be felt by it by handing the railways new subsidies in the amount of $100 million, which is the amount the royal commission recommended for the first year. I should like to quote from the London Free Press how really disturbed is the trucking industry. One excerpt from this article says about the subsidy:

> —"you will wreck the industry our people have built with toil, sweat and ingenuity over the last 30 years".

Another part of this article says:

> The act provides a $20 million annual subsidy which is designed to "roll back" to 8 per cent a 17 per cent freight rate increase authorized in 1959... Since then the act has been extended three times—

Mr. Chairman, I will not read the whole of the article, but toward the end it says:

> Members of parliament who support railway subsidies were telling customers of the transportation industry that "if you ship by rail—but only if you ship by rail—the Canadian taxpayers will provide you with a special reduced freight rate".
> He said the trucking industry believes in genuine competition between truckers and the railways.
> "But when we find that parliament interposes itself on the side of the railways and on the side of railway shippers, we look to you for prompt, equitable correction of the situation"—

That is the feeling of the trucking industry. Truckers have been wooed by those who speak of the issue of free enterprise versus socialism. The truckers obviously expect consideration from the government in what it proposes to do about the MacPherson report, and they are obviously going to fight to get it. The truckers have sought no special favours and know they are entitled to none. On the other hand, Mr. Chairman, I am disturbed that the only reference in the throne speech to the justification for implementing the MacPherson report was that of eliminating horizontal freight rate increases. That is one of the major problems, and I say that without expressing any opinion on the solution recommended by the royal commission. It is a very complicated solution; I understand that even the experts are still shaking their heads over it.

Here is a politically attractive issue, the removal of horizontal freight rate increases. But we must remember that the section of Canada's population affected by that type of freight rate increase, while it is a most important section and is deserving of the concern and consideration of every member of this house, must be looked after by a solution of the transportation problem that is fair to all of the interests that are affected. Let us get the railway problems straightened out, but let us remember also that in dealing with this very important problem of transportation we are dealing with a vital and dynamic element in the Canadian economy. The trucking industry is responsible, I might say, for employing 100,000 people in Canada. No government can make a move on transport legislation today without running head on into issues that affect every form of transport. Therefore I urge the government in what it is planning to do about the MacPherson report to keep in mind that it is dealing with the transportation system, not only a railway system but a transportation system made up of independent competitive elements which all have their place and which are all entitled to fair treatment. The time when our Canadian transport thinkers were able to march with the minds of Beatty and Thornton, or even with Crump and Gordon, is gone. A new era in transportation is upon us. We have to live in that era. We have to deal fairly with transportation industries that actually constitute it, and we have to deal fairly with all of them.

(Translation):

Mr. Caron: Mr. Chairman, I rise first of all to protest against the method used by the government to put interim supply before us.

Since April of last year, we have been asked for proportions of one twelfth at the end of each month. Yes, come the last days of each month, we are told: "We need that to pay the civil servants". Today, we have reached the tenth twelfth, and we still have not been given an opportunity for close examination.

It is becoming more and more evident that it is time we should revise our procedure in this house.

Formerly, governments tried to follow as closely as possible the parliamentary practices which had always prevailed. Today, it is the opposite; no attention is paid to any of the parliamentary customs. That is why I say that perhaps the time has come to amend our standing orders so that the Minister of Finance would have to introduce the budget before February 15, and so that the government could not introduce any legislation until the estimates of every department are passed by parliament.

In a case of extreme urgency, the unanimous consent of the house could always be asked so that some special bill might be discussed and passed. But it seems to me that the procedure used by this government ignores the members of the house and particularly of the opposition.

This time, however, we can take a little more time because it could not be said that the civil servants will not be paid if we take two or three days to discuss interim supply. We have an opportunity to go over certain happenings.

For instance, I should like to raise the matter of the recent salary increases. I think they were given against all common sense. Those who were in greatest need of them have been overlooked. I readily admit that those who earn $6,000, $7,000, $8,000, $10,000, $12,000 or even $18,000 per year, are also entitled to a salary increase because of the increase in the cost of living. But they could always wait a few months. But when those who earn less than $3,500 per year are deprived of an increase merely because the pay research bureau did not recommend an increase in their case, such an excuse does not seem valid to me, and I suggest that this is utter nonsense on the part of the civil service administration.

The previous minister of finance claimed that when the pay research bureau would not recommend a salary increase, its report could be made public, but that when the bureau submitted a report recommending an increase, that report became a confidential document and could not be divulged to anyone, not even to members of parliament, except in parts, from month to month, as increases were being granted. If my memory serves me right, the increases started in a certain year and since then, every month of April, May, June, July, August, September and October, increases are being granted to certain groups of civil servants, but never do the October, September or July groups get retroactive pay to April 1, whereas the first group got it.

That is a flagrant case of injustice to civil servants. But that is the way the former minister of finance wanted it. I trust the new minister will not follow the same procedure in future.

This year, the research bureau has recommended increases. About 5,000 employees are getting increases, but they are the most highly paid civil servants. To be sure, the professional classes needed a raise, but this need was not so pressing as it was for the others, to whom the high cost of living has brought hardship seldom to be equalled.

Well, they were denied an increase, although a few days before Christmas 50,000 civil servants received one. On the eve of a snow-bound election—the Prime Minister is all set since yesterday—salary increases are now granted to groups earning $3,500 or over. I admit that they needed one, but I fail to understand how a government, aware of its responsibilities, can behave in such a manner and refuse any increase to the employees whose earnings are under $3,500 in spite of the fact, as expressed by the Minister of Finance, that no other increase is in sight before the month of April 1963.

If there is a group of employees who are in need, surely it is that one because those people generally have families, they have the same obligations as others on their houses, they experience financial difficulties which accumulate as the cost of living rises. In fact, those people find it almost impossible to make both ends meet.

Nothing in the act could prevent the minister from overriding the pay research bureau's recommendations, but this is the excuse he gave, the one he gave me when I asked him a question.

(Text):

Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Can the minister explain why the clerks and typists in grades 1 and 2 do not benefit from the salary increases announced yesterday?

(Translation):

This is the excuse given by the minister:

(Text):

Mr. Speaker, because the pay research bureau reported in that way.

(Translation):

Well, Mr. Speaker, I think it is a shame to try and blame officials who are subject to the instructions of a ministry and especially of the Minister of Finance. Besides, as I said earlier, neither the Minister of Finance nor the government has to bow to the pay research bureau's recommendations. They can override them, they have a right to make their own decisions. When they believe a situation is unfair or inconsistent, they have the power to change this decision or this recommendation.

Nothing was done in the circumstances. So, 33 per cent of the federal civil servants, 33 per cent of those who receive the lowest salaries, do not get a raise. Among them, 1 per cent receive less than $2,000 yearly, 6 per cent earn less than $2,500, 10 per cent less than $3,000, and 16 per cent less than $3,500.

Mr. Chairman, while I was studying the question, I found in today's Gazette two short items reading as follows:

(Text):

"Pay boosts for others wait year".

Finance Minister Nowlan said yesterday that the pay of a large group of government clerks and typists who were passed over in the new round of pay increases won't be reviewed again until next October.

He told reporters that the government is not considering the case of the employees ranked as grade 1 and 2.

(Translation):

That is the Minister of Finance's way of doing things.

(Text):

He will not be considering.

(Translation):

They do not want to review the situation.

On the other hand, as can be found on the front page of the newspaper, we note a situation which seems much more logical.

(Text):

Lesage reveals civil service salary boosts.

Premier Lesage yesterday announced pay raises for 3,668 civil servants totalling $978,999 a year.

The raises are retroactive to November 1, he announced following a cabinet meeting. They affect government employees whose salary is under $6,800 a year, he said.

(Translation):

As you can see, Mr. Chairman, the government of the province of Quebec starts by paying more adequate salaries to those who need them most; increases are being granted to those who earn less than $6,800 a year. In other words, pay increases are given to those who need them most.

The article goes on to say that in mid-January the provincial government will give a pay increase to those who have a higher salary.

That is how this government should have proceeded in the case of the civil servants but it failed to do so.

If one tries to get information, he is told that those government employees get salaries which are about the equivalent of those paid by certain concerns, in private industry.

I wonder where they got those figures. Perhaps they come from certain concerns where business is not too good or from employers who are quite content to employ people who are less qualified in order to pay smaller salaries.

Yet, when we speak of good insurance brokers' firms, of good lawyers' or notaries' offices, we find that the salaries paid there are even higher than those of federal civil servants. I know that at the Metropolitan Life Insurance, in Ottawa, working conditions are better and salaries higher than those paid by the federal government. Moreover, with regard to security the company offers its employees more than what the federal government gives to its civil servants.

Even if it were true that salaries paid by private enterprise are inferior or equal to those paid by the federal government, would it not be up to the government of Canada to show others the way and to make them realize that they are not paying appropriate salaries?

Is it not up to the government to set an example? Indeed, even if we may not pass legislation here which would call for salary increases—as the matter is under provincial jurisdiction—we may, nevertheless, grant a needed raise in salaries, thus showing people in industry and business how they should deal with their employees.

Unfortunately, this government's gesture simply indicated to business and industry in what shameful manner it treats its employees as if they were second rate citizens, and more particularly the low salaried classes.

It seems that the government want to save at the expense of the civil servants. They seem to think that those who might find work in another office will leave, and that they can be replaced by stenographers grade 1 or 2 with lower salaries. This action will mean a saving for the government at the expense of the low-salaried classes, and I think such proceedings entirely shameful.

Sir, the Minister of Finance gave an interview to the Canadian Press. I hope he will amend his ways—he is old enough to do so—and that he will not share the attitude of some hon. members. I wish he would revise his position and go ahead, even without consulting the pay research bureau, in the knowledge that some civil servants are in greater need than others.

He has the right to do so. He has the right to make such a recommendation to the cabinet and to the treasury board. That is what he should do, and if he does not, I feel that he fails in his duty, since the Minister of Finance is the one responsible for salaries.

I heard earlier a Social Crediter sternly criticizing the government. He took objection to everything the government has done since the beginning. He condemned the government as harshly as the Liberals or the New Democratic party would condemn it. And yet, in spite of everything, in spite of all those criticisms, and of the warnings given by the Social Credit party to the government since the beginning of the session—"If you do not mend your ways, we shall be forced to drop you"—they have not yet abandoned it, and when it is time to vote, they hide or vote for the government.

I feel, Mr. Chairman, that they should take a more consistent position. I do not know whether that is the Hitler way of doing things, because I made no special study of Hitler's career, but I do know that this method is not consistent with ordinary parliamentary procedure.

Mr. Ricard: You might perhaps come back to the matter under discussion.

Mr. Caron: I beg your pardon?

Mr. Ricard: Stick to the matter under discussion.

Mr. Caron: My remarks are in order, and when I speak in this house, it is up to the Chair to rule me out of order if I am, and not to the whip of the Conservative party.

What offends me most of all, is when I hear those Social Crediters put the Liberal party—supreme insult—on the same footing as the Conservative party and suggest that during 22 years, the Liberal party, like the Conservative party, did nothing.

If they can make such a statement, it is because they refuse to face and look into the real situation.

The Liberal party, during those 22 years, gave the country a positive administration which rendered invaluable services to the Canadian nation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Caron: The Liberal party, for 22 years, conducted the country's business so that ordinary crises would not be so hard to suffer, that unemployment would not increase disproportionately.

I know that we did not print paper like they did under Hitler when, with 100,000 marks, only a small loaf of bread could be bought; but we saw to it that the administration would allow us to give the Canadian people what they needed.

Let us take for instance social legislation—

Mr. Gauthier: By taking away the rights of the provinces.

Mr. Caron: I hear someone speaking.

Mr. Gauthier: By selling the provinces.

Mr. Caron: I could not catch a thing. If you want to speak, at least open your mouth.

Mr. Gauthier: It is nothing new, you never catch anything.

Mr. Caron: Mr. Chairman, I am not against answering questions, but I hope that they will stop whispering and will speak in an understandable way.

An hon. Member: Do not ask too much of Social Crediters.

Mr. Caron: No. I know that I am somewhat exacting.

But during the 22 years that we were in power and perhaps a little before, our social legislation was written in our statutes by the Liberal party, our whole social legislation with no exception. The Conservative party did not initiate a single piece of social legislation.

If today, in spite of the crisis that we undergo, the people suffer in a somewhat lesser degree than during the last crisis, it is because the Liberal party had established the Unemployment Insurance Act, which makes it possible to correct the situation to a certain degree. Without such legislation on the part of the Liberals of the day, conditions would be worse than in 1930-35. It is thanks to the Liberal party that hardship has been somewhat alleviated.

Mr. Dumont: Would the hon. member allow me to ask a question?

Mr. Caron: Yes, certainly.

Mr. Dumont: What could you answer to this, which is reported in Hansard of April 4, 1957? It is a question directed to the minister of labour of that day:

> Does the minister know that a good number of the employees of his department in British Columbia are in arrears for periods of up to seven months in respect of overtime pay, involving sums amounting in certain cases to over $500;

Is that the same as with the Conservatives?

Mr. Caron: That is a question which I have not had the opportunity of considering, but if it was in 1957, it might as well have been under the Conservative government as under the Liberal administration.

Mr. Dumont: The date is April 4, 1957.

Mr. Caron: In any case, I do not pretend that the Liberal party has been absolute perfection. Perfection is not of this world. Man is a finite being who must bear something of the original sin and carry it about with him, as you all have to carry the load of your own faults and even those of your leader, Mr. Caouette.

The Deputy Chairman: I have been listening with great interest to the remarks of the hon. member for Hull (Mr. Caron), but I am certain that because of his parliamentary experience he will recall that we are now discussing particular items, and I know that, as the rule of relevancy applies in this case, the present remarks of the hon. member are not those we may expect in this house except when we are, for instance, discussing the speech from the throne.

Mr. Caron: Mr. Chairman, during the debate on the first item of the interim supply or on the main estimates, it has been the custom in this house to let us edge away a little bit from the item before the house. Such was the opinion expressed by your immediate predecessor in the chair. He allowed discussion of the Columbia river question—

The Deputy Chairman: Order.

Mr. Caron: Mr. Chairman, allow me to continue with my remarks before you give your ruling.

The Deputy Chairman: When the hon. member states it is permissible to wander away a little bit from the subject under discussion, I agree with him. But a practical meaning must be given to the expression "a little bit".

Mr. Caron: Mr. Chairman, when I refer to those matters, I am dealing with questions which relate to the financial administration of this country. I am entitled to mention what was accomplished in the past, in order to determine what has not been done recently and what is not being done now under the present regime. That is why I was enumerating all the social security acts passed by the Liberal party.

In 1927, the Old Age Pensions Act, which provided for a means test, for persons 70 years of age and over; in 1940, the Unemployment Insurance Act; in 1942, the Provincial Assistance Act, to promote the building of technical schools, thus enabling thousands of young people to learn a trade; in 1944, the Family Allowances Act, which was so beneficial to this country; in 1948, the national health program, by means of which grants were to be paid for the enlargement of hospitals, in anticipation of the Hospital Insurance Act now in force; in 1951, the Old Age Security Act, without a means test, for every person of 70 years of age and over; in 1951—

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I cannot allow the hon. member to criticize the present government's administration by making a review of the political activities of one or the other of the previous governments. I respectfully submit that those remarks are not in order.

Mr. Caron: Mr. Speaker, I find your ruling a little strict. I was making comparisons between what was done and what was not done or is not being done. I am not supposed to merely observe that I do not approve the budget because I do not like it for if that was the case, my observations would be rather limited.

I think I am entitled to prove by way of what was done in the past what this government is not doing in respect of social security legislation as well as in other fields.

Those who wished to do so were allowed to discuss the Columbia river project. A discussion on transportation was allowed, but when I try to recall what was accomplished by the Liberal party, I am immediately attacked by Conservatives and Creditists. I submit it is unfair to prevent me to recall what was done by the Liberal party compared to what the present administration has done since 1959. Besides, my recital is short and I was almost through because I had reached 1951 when was adopted the Blind Persons Act; in 1954, the Disabled Persons Act; in 1956—

The Deputy Chairman: Order. Once more, I must point out to the hon. member who has the floor that he is commenting on certain discussions which took place in this house. He mentioned, for instance, the matter of the Columbia river. He will agree that that is a problem of the present administration.

[Mr. Caron.]

Once again, I am asking the hon. member to limit his criticism to the present administration, provided he does not refer to past administrations of a decade or so ago.

Mr. Habel: I rise on a point of order. I find it strange that the chairman is so, I will not say unfair because I know you are trying to be fair in your rulings, but I will say so strict when this government is asking the house every month to vote one twelfth of the annual supply required to manage the business of a nation such as Canada. Name a business firm which would ask a bank every month for a $10,000 or $100,000 loan without submitting a financial statement.

The Deputy Chairman: I believe the hon. member's remarks do not constitute a point of order.

Mr. Dumont: On a point of order; one word only. When the four war horses of the Liberal party are absent, let the colts talk.

The Deputy Chairman: In my opinion, the member for Bellechasse has no reason for raising a point of order.

Mr. Caron: Mr. Chairman, as the member for Villeneuve is away, the member for Bellechasse is free to talk.

I shall not go back to ten years ago, but only as far as 1954. Disability pensions; in 1956, legislation promoting equal salaries for women—

Mr. Ricard: On a point of order.

The Deputy Chairman: The hon. member is an experienced parliamentarian and he should follow the Chair's instructions. If they do not suit him, the rules provide certain procedures to refuse them.

However, I trust to his vast experience and I am sure that he will get back to the subject before us: this government's administration.

Mr. Caron: Mr. Chairman, I stuck to what you said. You asked me not to go back more than ten years. That is the reason why I concentrated on the last ten years. However, if you do not agree, I can go back only two or three years because, since then, we have been under a Conservative administration.

What is the Conservative government doing to improve the situation? Absolutely nothing.

The Conservative government is only marking time as a frisky horse, but it does not run.

That is the reason why I wanted to demonstrate that under the Liberal administration we had done something, that we had not been satisfied to go blindly on as does this government.

I wanted to point out that a Liberal government acted in a more responsible way than a Conservative government which behaves, at present, like a parliament of school boys at play.

Moreover, we have proven that this government is the worst Canada has ever known since confederation.

Never has the business of the country been in the hands of such unqualified people. Never have ministers been so undecided in their actions. Never has a prime minister administered the country as the present leader of this government is doing, taking into consideration only his own pride, trying to become famous with some little insignificant measures. The Prime Minister is never up to par when the time comes to be firm in the best interest of the country. The Conservatives have the impression that they have succeeded in condensing in one single piece of legislation many laws, most of which were already in our statute books as is the case for the Canadian Bill of Rights. At a meeting held in Hamilton, lawyers—some colleagues of yours, Mr. Chairman—were heard to say that the bill of rights changes nothing in the present situation since it is already covered by the statutes of Canada.

That is the legislation which has been enacted by the Conservative government. That is their way of governing the country. It is a government of visions and commissions.

They have set up about 19 royal commissions. Every time they are stuck with a problem, they postpone the issue by setting up a royal commission.

When a royal commission like the MacPherson commission presents a report, they do not even have the courage of taking decisions. Nothing is done and the country is in a mess.

There is at present a dispute between the railroads and the trucking industry. That is due to the government's procrastination and to its failure to foresee and remedy the situation.

Every time a royal commission submits a report, they shelve it and forget about it.

Consideration has been given to the first two parts of the report presented by the commission which was set up to look into the public service. Action has already been taken without referring the question to the house. The report is being put into effect without consideration for parliament and its members.

Yet, when the party in power was sitting on this side of the house, only five years ago—they will soon be back here—they claimed that the government of the time had no respect for the principles of democracy.

Do they pay any heed to those principles? Far from it, they laugh about the matter as one parliamentary secretary is doing at present instead of contributing something worthwhile to the debate.

The present government is incompetent and that is what I set out to prove. It should have the courage of giving the civil servants who are inadequately paid the salary increase to which they are entitled.

Mr. Dumont: May I just ask a question, Mr. Chairman?

The Deputy Chairman: I must point out to the hon. member for Bellechasse that two conditions must be met before he can ask a question. First, the member who is speaking must agree to it, and second, he must have some time left. In this case, that time had expired. Therefore, unless he can obtain the unanimous consent of the house, it will be impossible for him to ask his question.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Dumont: I want to ask the hon. member if he would have agreed to the adjournment of the house in order to discuss the Grey cup, as his leader did?

Mr. Caron: In asking that question the hon. member shows his ignorance or his intellectual dishonesty.

When the adjournment was suggested, it was to discuss a matter of principle more important than the Grey cup itself, namely the freedom of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation in the fields of radio and television and the problem that arises through the interference of the board of broadcast governors in those fields.

That is what my leader wanted to do; when matters of principle are involved, we never give an inch.

Mr. Dumont: May I ask a supplementary question?

The Deputy Chairman: I do not believe that in committee supplementary questions are in order.

Mr. Laprise: Mr. Chairman, in my turn, I would like to take this opportunity to express my views to the house. I have the honour of representing one of the two largest ridings in the province of Quebec, one of the 22 largest in Canada.

It is an immense riding which, in spite of a most rigorous winter and a very poor summer, would not be in such a serious situation if it had not been so neglected in the past. Located at the watershed, its subsoil is rich in minerals of all kinds, in almost infinite quantity, a large part of which is still undeveloped and untapped.

Mr. Chairman, we virtually walk on gold, on copper, on zinc and on metals of all kinds. Still, our people are reduced to extreme poverty. Unemployment is prevailing there more than anywhere else in this country, in spite of this great wealth. A few mines are being operated, but we have to export this ore in order to have it processed. We must cope with this situation as soon as possible. Moreover, the soil can be adapted to all kinds of crops. In the past, we have used it only for dairying.

In the Abitibi district, the butter dairies had to be closed because there are not enough outlets and because there are butter surpluses practically everywhere. The farmers have to buy part of their own production. That is why they lose interest in that industry. The best organized of our parishes are being deserted by farmers. Their farming revenues being too small to ensure them a decent living, they come to town where they increase the number of unemployed.

Our vast forests contain the essential products for pulpwood and timber. Here again, we must export that pulpwood, waste and bark. Yet we have waterways and waterfalls from which power could be produced to develop our own natural resources. Nobody had thought about that.

Mr. Chairman, if we directed the farm production towards beef breeding in that vast county, we could produce enough cattle for the consumption of all the population of the province of Quebec. To achieve that, the government should establish in that part of the province of Quebec an experimental farm where the climate and the nature of the soil could be studied on the spot to give better advice to cattle-breeders.

In that region which offers such possibilities, a problem has arisen which comes from that continuous concern caused by a system which allows unemployment to exist. Every part of the country suffers from that situation.

Mr. Chairman, for a long time, great men who are considered the elite of the country, have been trying to find a solution to or the causes of unemployment for which the two traditional parties are to blame.

Unemployment is a social evil which we cannot tolerate any longer. We must stop it. We must find a means to solve that problem as soon as possible. In my opinion, the best way to achieve that is to find a better market for consumer goods. As a matter of fact, if the consumer's purchasing power is not at the same level as production, we shall never be able to solve the problem.

Mr. Chairman, unfortunately, there will be thousands of families in my constituency this winter who, as a result of unemployment, will find themselves in most difficult circumstances, who will lack food, clothing, heating and medical care. And all that, in the midst of abundance.

Most of them will not be eligible for unemployment benefits, because they have remained unemployed for so long that they do not have enough stamps to be entitled to them.

Mr. Chairman, statistics show that at one time, there were 150,000 unemployed in the country, and later they show there were 350,000 and later still, 500,000. We are inclined to believe that that is the largest number of unemployed workers. The fact remains that at one period or other of the year, there may be 250,000 unemployed persons, and the number increases later on. But some of the first group, at least, have found employment, which means that by the end of the year probably one million workers might be considered as having been unemployed at some time or other during the year. So the problem of the person who has been unemployed for three, four, five or even six months in the year is not settled the day he finds employment. This class of worker must be considered as being in need, because we see that those who are lucky enough to hold permanent jobs barely manage to make both ends meet with their regular pay. Therefore, the workless, those who have to do without any income for part of the year, know the worries which can be caused by such a problem.

Mr. Chairman, there is another problem in my constituency. In my district, there are unincorporated parishes, apart from the municipal corporations. Now, the winter works program which was set up by this government a few years ago allows municipalities to develop projects and take advantage of that program. Let us see. May I quote the first paragraph of a small folder on the winter works program which I was given. It reads as follows:

> The purpose of the municipal winter works program is to give an incentive to municipalities and communities to multiply the employment opportunities during winter—

It seems to me this means that the parishes not incorporated in municipalities can also take advantage of this winter works promotion program. However, after having checked on the matter, I have been told that the communities, in order to take advantage of this program, must apply to the county council or corporation. Then, I wondered why the corporation of the county of Abitibi was not helping out its localities. I have investigated, and here is the answer which I received from the corporation of the Abitibi county. I quote:

> When you came to my office, I told you what the situation was, and the reeve has asked me to give you a written confirmation of the decision taken by the county council.

It goes without saying that this reply is from the secretary of the corporation. I continue:

> This decision is to the effect that the corporation of Abitibi county, as a corporation, flatly refuses to take in charge the winter works program in the unorganized territories.

Mr. Chairman, this does not bring any solution to the problem of the communities.

I fully appreciate that the corporation of Abitibi county must be facing the same financial problem as nearly all the other municipalities. It has not enough money in its treasury to assist the non-incorporated parishes.

The county corporation must provide for at least 10 per cent of the salary and cost of building materials.

But the corporation does not have sufficient funds to help so many communities. That is why it cannot accomplish this task alone.

I, therefore, asked on various occasions, in this house, what the Minister of Labour intended to do in this matter, and I was told each time that I was out of order. Nobody wanted to answer those questions.

In this case, I believe it would be a good thing if the Minister of Labour, and perhaps even other members of the government came down to the level of the working classes. I even invite them to visit the Abitibi district, the county of Chapleau which I represent, to see for themselves what problems exist in that district. They would in future be in a better position to evaluate our claims.

Mr. Chairman, I do not want to dwell too much upon the subject under discussion this afternoon, but I would like to point out to the house that, in order to remedy as soon as possible the problems which our working people have to face, as well as our farmers, who have only a very small income—and some of them have practically none—and even our labourers, our workers who are unable to find any employment in their field, the government should immediately provide for a raise in family allowances to help those people right now, without increasing taxes, of course, because this always spoils the effect.

The government should also increase the so-called old age pensions and lower the retirement age. We should also increase pensions to disabled persons, to the blind and to all those in need, in order to enable them to live decently in a Canada as wealthy as it is, without having to beg elsewhere for the basic requirements of life.

Now, Mr. Chairman, such is not the case. Such measures are needed in the shortest possible time to give satisfaction to that population which would only be too happy to benefit from all the advantages Canada has to offer with all its national wealth.

Now, Mr. Chairman, we are requesting—I request it for my riding as well as for all other parts of Canada—a basic tax exemption on personal income tax raised to $5,000 per year for married people and to $3,000 for single taxpayers. In addition, it would be wise for the government to give exemptions from municipal and school taxes, in the form of a refund of municipal and school taxes, to any property owner receiving some kind of government pension.

Among about a hundred letters which I recently received, one referred to a rather pitiable case. A government pensioner who lives with his wife and who only gets $89 a month owes a $500 tax bill. When you figure the cost of electricity, water and insurance premiums, etc., you realize that they must spend $56 per month for those items alone. Now, under such circumstances, needless to say those people would prefer to lead a normal life and it is up to us to enable them to do so.

That is why we are asking for all that. If the government does not take steps to remedy the situation pretty soon, you can be sure that I will be ready to help throw it out of office.

(Text):

Mr. Berger: Mr. Chairman, I want to talk about the Columbia river treaty. The members of the New Democratic party believe that this treaty is an improvident one. It assigns to Canada the job of storing vast quantities of water, while effectively depriving Canada of the right to use the waters of the Columbia river not only for the purpose of generating electricity but also for agricultural and industrial purposes.

This treaty, if it is proceeded with, will stunt the agricultural and industrial development of British Columbia, and indeed of the prairie provinces, not just for years to come but for generations to come. This country has for years been a country of hewers of wood and drawers of water. Successive governments have been guilty of exporting Canadian resources on a wholesale basis to the United States—our oil, our minerals and our lumber. We have simply, for many, many years, been doing nothing more than that, and this is true not only of this government but of all its predecessors going back over the years. We have been giving up our resources and depriving Canadians of the opportunity to build the kind of industry we will need in this country if we are going to provide the standard of living Canadians have a right to enjoy.

The Deputy Chairman: Order; it being five o'clock it is my duty to leave the chair so that the house may proceed to the consideration of private members' business, pursuant to section 3 of standing order 15.

PRIVATE BILLS

Mr. Alan Macnaughton (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, by leave of the house may I request the unanimous consent of the house to giving precedence to item No. 10 appearing on page 21 of the orders of the day, a bill standing in my name?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Mount Royal (Mr. Macnaughton) requests the unanimous consent of the house to giving his bill, standing as item No. 10, precedence over items 1 to 9.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, if this procedure is agreeable to the house there may be other hon. members who would wish to have the same privilege. I would like to bring forward the bill standing in my name, but perhaps we could deal with them one at a time and leave them until the first order of business has been dealt with.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is referring to item No. 407, I take it?

Mr. Hellyer: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that we follow the procedure of asking that precedence be given to these bills on the next day they come up for discussion. Some of these items are quite a long way down the order paper and there may be hon. members who wish to speak on them who would otherwise be denied the right. This right would be guaranteed them if we agreed to give them precedence on the next occasion these bills come up for discussion.

Mr. Speaker: May I indicate to the hon. member that the hon. member for Mount Royal made a similar request on Tuesday. The house did not deal with it as an order. The house moved to consider a certain item in the name of the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Mandziuk). I do not know whether that is deemed to be sufficient notice; that is entirely up to the house. The house, naturally, must give its unanimous consent to this being done. Does the house give unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member would care to make his request for precedence apply to the next sitting, I have no objection. But I think there is a responsibility to see that those who are concerned with these matters are aware of any changes. If we do not do it in the way of giving precedence at the next sitting, then there may be some hon. members who are unaware that this is the way we are proceeding.

Mr. Speaker: I take it the hon. member for Timiskaming objects? He withholds unanimous consent?

Mr. Peters: Yes.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member withholds unanimous consent to this item having precedence?

Mr. Peters: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I would like to make it very clear that if the hon. member now asks for unanimous consent to his bill being given precedence the next time these matters are up for discussion, we would be quite happy to agree to it.

Mr. Macnaughton: Mr. Speaker, I do so now.

Mr. Speaker: Therefore it is agreed that the hon. member for Mount Royal is seeking precedence for next Tuesday for his bill, item No. 10. Is the hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Hellyer) making a similar request?

Mr. Hellyer: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I would request the same privilege.

Mr. Lewis: What is the item number?

Mr. Speaker: It is item No. 407, an act respecting the Imperial Life Assurance Company of Canada. Are there any similar requests at this time? Very well, those two items, with the consent of the house, will be given precedence on Tuesday next.

MADELEINE-FRANCOISE HANKOWSKI

Mr. Nicholas Mandziuk (Marquette): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the consent of the house to deal with the first nine items on the order paper en bloc. They are all bills for consideration in committee which have been passed by the other place and have been considered in our miscellaneous private bills committee. To save the time of the committee I would beg leave of the house to having them treated en bloc because the list of divorce bills from the Senate is growing and growing. We have over 400 items on the order paper right now. That is the only reason for asking that they be treated en bloc.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member's proposal is that items 1 to 9 be referred to the committee of the whole as one group and considered by the committee in that way. Is that agreeable to the house?

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, I would object to that procedure. I have some remarks to make on the first one and I would certainly hope that the hon. member is not suggesting they are all as bad as the first one may be.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is suggesting that items 1 to 9 be referred to the committee of the whole. When the Speaker has left the chair and the chairman has assumed the chair he will recognize any hon. member who may wish to speak.

Mr. Peters: No, there is not unanimous consent.

Mr. Speaker: In other words, the hon. member objects to this course being followed. Then item No. 1 only will be dealt with.

The house in committee on Bill No. SD-1, for the relief of Madeleine-Francoise Hankowski—Mr. Mandziuk—Mr. Paul in the chair.

On clause 1—Marriage dissolved.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, this is one of the first bills to pass both courts of this parliament, and it is of interest because in this case we have the right of a double examination, which the house is being asked to consider in another bill that is now before it, and to eliminate part of the protection that is now given. I think this should be borne in mind when we are discussing this particular case. It should also be borne in mind that the Senate has heard this case and the miscellaneous private bills committee has heard it. These bills were not given any consideration in the miscellaneous private bills committee, as far as I know; they were taken en bloc. Therefore I think a discussion on this bill will indicate that this is not an acceptable practice, and also that the other place is not sufficiently capable or trained to handle these particular bills.

In this case Madeleine-Francoise Hankowski is asking for a divorce from her husband Jan Paul Hankowski. There are several things involved here that are a disgrace to Canada, certainly a disgrace to this type of procedure and certainly a disgrace to at least one of the lawyers in it. After you hear the evidence, Mr. Chairman, we will ask that this lawyer be disbarred. The people who heard this case were not unaware of points of law. They were Senators Bradley, Q.C.—if it means anything, and in this case it does not —Burchill, Cameron and Gershaw. These gentlemen heard this case in the other place.

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order—

Mr. Peters: This was a contested case—

The Deputy Chairman: Order. The hon. member has risen on a point of order.

Mr. McCleave: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, I think it is a well understood practice that reference should not be made, particularly derogatory reference, to people from the other place. I submit that the hon. member is clearly out of order in launching a tirade of that nature. If he wants to talk about a disgrace he should hold up a mirror and see it personified fully.

Mr. Peters: On the point of order, Mr. Chairman, this is the same old argument that the hon. gentleman is involved in, and he is not completely uninvolved in this particular case because I suggest he had a responsibility. In dealing with this case let me point out some of the evidence to establish the character of Jan Paul Hankowski himself. I would refer the committee to the Senate hearing in which the lawyer for the petitioner was involved:

Q. Mrs. Hankowski, you were living with your husband where?
A. In Montreal.
Q. How long before you were married did you know him?
A. About a year.

Q. What is his occupation?
A. Freelance photographer.
Q. As such, does he have steady employment with an employer?
A. No, he works for many different people.
Q. Since you married him what have been his actions towards you, has he been a steady person?
A. No, he has been very unstable, and drinking most of the time, and certainly didn't contribute towards my support.
Q. Who is supporting you?
A. I am supporting myself.
Q. And you supported him?
A. I supported him mostly.
Q. Did he ever take money from you against your will?
A. Yes, I have seen him take money from my purse.
Q. I note you served at one time this petition on him in New York city. Why did you have to do that?
A. Because he was there at the time.
Q. Was this after the incident at the hotel—

Mr. Mandziuk: Mr. Chairman, I should like to know just what part of the evidence which the hon. member has read out so far he considers misleading, as far as the Senate divorce committee is concerned.

Mr. Peters: If the hon. gentleman will contain himself—

Mr. McCleave: On the point of order I raised a few moments ago concerning a derogatory remark about a person in the other place, I suggest to you, Mr. Chairman, that this matter should be disposed of and that you should request or order the hon. member to withdraw the remark he made.

Mr. Mandziuk: I wish to associate myself with the request of the hon. member for Halifax, because this house has a great deal of respect for those people who take it upon themselves to hear evidence in the other place. They have considerable experience—more experience than the hon. member for Timiskaming has—and they are learned in the law, or at least the chairman of the divorce committee is. They are trying to do a good job. Witnesses appear before them and I think these smears and insults are unjustified. Even our courts have experienced perjured evidence, and if the hon. member wishes to point out an instance where the Senate divorce committee was misled, we should be pleased to hear him. But I do not think it is a function of members of this committee just to read from the evidence to fill in time.

Mr. Peters: I hope the timekeeper is keeping track of the amount of time spent on these interruptions. I thank the hon. member for helping me build my case. All the evidence from which I have been reading—

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, I think it is essential that we should clear this matter up. Never in its history has the House of Commons cast reflections on people in the other chamber. Having been requested to withdraw his remarks with regard to Senator Bradley, I think the hon. member should be asked to do so by the Chair.

The Deputy Chairman: I should like to remind the hon. member for Timiskaming that standing order 35 reads as follows:

No member shall speak disrespectfully of Her Majesty, nor of any of the royal family, nor of His Excellency or the person administering the government of Canada; nor use offensive words against either house, or against any member thereof.

Mr. Peters: For my own information, would those who have raised the point of order kindly state what remark of mine they object to?

Mr. Mandziuk: I shall be glad to. I have jotted down what the hon. member said. He said that the divorce committee of the other place is not sufficiently capable, or not capable of hearing such cases. That is an accusation of incompetence.

Mr. Peters: That is a really ridiculous charge. I intend to prove what I say. At least, I hope to have the opportunity to do so.

Mr. Nasserden: On the point of order; the reference which I think the committee should take objectively was the hon. member's reference to the Q.C., and the derogatory remark he made in that regard.

The Deputy Chairman: We are not discussing here the competence of the committee. We are discussing the bill, and I am sure the hon. member will withdraw the reference he made to the committee of the other house. I ask the hon. member to withdraw the expression he used about the hon. senator.

Mr. Peters: I bow to your wishes, though I really do not know what I am withdrawing. But if there was any reflection detrimental to any person I withdraw it.

The gentleman in question in this case, as is indicated in the evidence before the Senate committee, is a person of an artistic type. That, of course, does not mean anything bad. But the evidence also says he drank too much, that he did not hold a job, that he did not make any money, that he seldom worked and that when he did he supplemented the little he earned by money he got from his wife and other women. Every lawyer knows that consideration is given to the character and moral standing of people who appear in these cases. Being in possession of this information, the committee, both in this house and in the other place, was faced with an affidavit from this gentleman, a contestation. It is signed by a well-known lawyer in Ottawa and it says:

> Take notice that the respondent Jan Paul Hankowski desires to oppose the granting of the divorce prayed for by the petitioner herein. The respondent resides at 144 East-40th Street, Room 201, New York City, State of New York, one of the United States of America.

The statement goes on to give the addresses at which the respondent can be reached in Ottawa and through his barrister. Then it continues:

> The respondent Jan Paul Hankowski states that he has never been domiciled in Canada and that moreover the petitioner is not domiciled in Canada. The respondent further denies the allegations contained in paragraph 7 of the petition.

What evidence do we have to show that this may have been a fact?

Mr. Mandziuk: May I ask the hon. member a question? I do not know from what document the hon. member has been reading, hence the reason for my question. I have the evidence here and it says that the respondent and the corespondent were called but did not appear. I should like to know whether this affidavit which the hon. member has read was filed subsequently with the Senate divorce committee?

I have a further question to ask. If the hon. member was aware of this why did he not himself or through a colleague in his party submit this for consideration by the committee on miscellaneous and private bills when it met?

Mr. Peters: That is exactly the problem. The committee on private and miscellaneous bills met without ever looking at the evidence in this particular case. The hon. member for Marquette is not aware of what is contained in the official documents. He asks why I did not raise this before. I only asked for this evidence on Thursday of last week and I now have before me a factual record giving all the details.

Mr. Mandziuk: If the hon. member—

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I wish to continue my argument.

Mr. Mandziuk: On a point of order.

Mr. Peters: I trust this will be deducted from my time.

Mr. Mandziuk: I will agree to that. Mr. Chairman, what the hon. member just said is a reflection on the members of the miscellaneous private bills committee, that they do not look into matters carefully enough. The members of the miscellaneous private bills committee get a transcript of evidence and that is all they get. There is nothing in the transcript of evidence to give us any indication—

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, may I respectfully suggest that the hon. member is not making a point of order, and he should not, under the guise of a point of order, be making a speech in the middle of another hon. member's speech. I respectfully ask him, if he has a defence to make, to make it after the hon. member for Timiskaming has finished.

Mr. Mandziuk: I suggest that I am trying to set the record straight.

Mr. Brewin: On the point of order, he is trying to defend the incompetence of the miscellaneous private bills committee.

Mr. Mandziuk: One of your colleagues was present on the committee which considered this bill.

The Deputy Chairman: I think the hon. member for York South is right, and that the hon. member for Marquette is trying to argue the remarks made by the hon. member for Timiskaming. When the hon. member who has the floor has finished his remarks, the hon. member for Marquette can have the floor if the Chair recognizes him. I should like to ask the hon. member for Timiskaming to address his remarks to the Chair.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, on page 11 of the evidence—

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order directed to the remarks of the hon. member for Timiskaming when he suggested that hon. members of this house are incompetent. That clearly offends standing order 35, and the long established practice that we come here and discuss our affairs as gentlemen.

Mr. Peters: On the point of order, I do not say that about the members: I say it about the committee.

Mr. Mandziuk: You said they were incompetent.

Mr. Matheson: "Incompetent gentlemen".

The Deputy Chairman: I think the remarks of the hon. member for Timiskaming were directed to the efficiency of the committee, not of the members of the committee.

Mr. Peters: I do not even know who the members of the committee are, Mr. Chairman. If you will check the evidence, you will find that this gentleman was born in Warsaw, Poland; that he came to Canada when he was three years of age. If you check any competent authority on domicile, you will find that the domicile of origin is the domicile in which you are born, and can be changed only by doing certain things to change it. It is also true—the hon. member laughs. He is responsible for the committee, but obviously he has not read this bill. The law on this question says:

> To everyone at birth the law ascribes a domicil of origin. This domicil clings to one through life and cannot be cast off. It may be submerged by the acquisition of a domicil of choice but it will revive upon the relinquishment of such domicil if a new domicil of choice is not immediately acquired.

Even if he had taken Canadian domicile, when he went to the United States in 1956 he would have had to take either American domicile in the state of New York or revert to his Polish domicile of birth.

Now, Mr. Chairman, knowing this, and having before them this statement presented by the solicitor for Hankowski, the Senate admitted another statement which was presented on June 13, 1961, signed by Mr. Hankowski, which is as follows:

> The respondent declares that he withdraws his opposition herein and gives notice thereof to Mr. John M. Schlesinger, attorney for petitioner. The respondent moreover agrees that the domicile of the parties is in the city and district of Montreal.

Mr. Chairman, does it take much intelligence to wonder why in one month he changed his mind? He was a man who had no money and no job. He was a man considered by his wife to be a shiftless character. Why should he come back to Canada? Why should he go to his wife's lawyer's office—not his own, but his wife's—and sign a document saying that he withdrew his objection to the divorce and declared himself to have his domicile in Canada so that his wife might also have a domicile in Canada? Mr. Chairman, this could not happen in any competent court in Canada. No judge would allow it. And to make things worse, let me tell you that when the original petition was presented by the petitioner, and the secretary of the attorney for the petitioner signed this second document in Montreal on May 2, 1961, she happened to sign it "Shirley R. Taviss, commissioner of the superior court for the district of Montreal." It is a fundamental fact that no employee of one lawyer can sign a document that his employer is in all conscience interested in. Why I said that the senators should know better is that three of the four senators have had some legal training. One of them is a Q.C., which is an honour to uphold. I suggest that it is a fundamental matter when a secretary, who might have the right to commission oaths, signs a document submitted by the respondent in this case, without the lawyer for the petitioner notifying the respondent's lawyer that there is some change in instructions which was given to the secretary who administered the oath. Any court would make this invalid. I think that every lawyer knows that, and I would ask the hon. member for Halifax and the hon. member for Marquette, who are both lawyers, whether they disagree with this principle. They have the training which I have not had, but I would suggest that here is a flagrant case in which I can do nothing but assume from the evidence that there has been a pay-off.

I suggest that the miscellaneous private bills committee of this house have the responsibility upon them of calling this back into committee, calling in the officials and all the people connected with it, and that charges should be laid by this house in this case. Mr. Chairman, I phoned the lawyer handling the case for the respondent today, and asked him what arrangement had been made when he dropped the case. He told me that today was the first time he knew that the case had not been dropped. He said that he knew that this question of domicile was definite, and he pointed out that the Senate obviously would not handle it, and he was shocked when he found that the case had been presented to that house, had passed the Senate, and that no questions had been asked about domicile or this intervention. He did not know and was not notified that this case was coming up before the Senate.

Mr. Chairman, we are asked in another bill which is before this house to give the Senate the full responsibility for divorce. I say that not only has the Senate not the ability to handle divorce, but that this house and the Senate together have not the ability to do so. In this case—

Mr. McCleave: On a point of order—

Mr. Peters: —it is our responsibility and privilege—

The Deputy Chairman: Order.

Mr. Peters: —to do something about this question.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I would ask the hon. member, when the Chair rises to its feet, please to sit down. I would ask the hon. member for Timiskaming to withdraw the last part of his remarks about the members of the Senate. I think that those remarks are out of order, and I am sure that if he refers to standing order 35 he will agree to withdraw them.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I withdraw any reflection on them as individuals, but I think you would have to adjudicate upon the charges I have made in this case if you were to ask me to withdraw anything more than that. If it is only as to disrespect implied to individuals, then I am quite happy to withdraw that.

Mr. McCleave: Speaking on the point of order, Mr. Chairman, may I say that rule 35 clearly states as follows:

—nor use offensive words against either house, or against any member thereof.

Hence the partial retraction is not complete enough. The retraction must be of the offensive words used against the Senate as well. That point is clearly spelled out in this rule.

An hon. Member: This is getting ridiculous.

Mr. Barnett: I am sure these remarks were never intended to mean that members of this house could not assess the worth or otherwise of the work that is done by this house from time to time or for that matter by the other place. I feel that the hon. member is really stretching that matter to ridiculous extremes if he is trying to imply that the hon. member for Timiskaming has cast a reflection upon other members of this house or of the other place as individuals.

An hon. Member: Did you hear him talking?

Mr. Barnett: Yes, I heard him.

Mr. Aiken: May I ask the hon. member a question for the purpose of clarification of my own mind? He read an affidavit which I understood him to say was not anywhere in the evidence which has previously appeared. Is this correct? Is the affidavit he read today something new or was it in the original evidence?

Mr. Peters: No. Unfortunately the part of the evidence we have before us usually is only the printed report of the committee of the other place. This is the complete file or the complete document. This was dated May 4, 1961. This was before the other place. The second document from which I read, and which I think certainly has been open to question, because of the commissioner who signed it being the secretary of the lawyer concerned for the plaintiff, was before the other place and it was signed on June 13, 1961. No new evidence has been adduced, no evidence that was not already presented in the original hearing.

Mr. Aiken: If I may, presuming that the hon. member has finished, I should like to say a few words on this subject as a member of the private bills committee. Some criticism of the committee has been expressed. I am a member of that committee and I attended the sittings in which this particular divorce matter was considered. The reason I am saying this is that at that time there was present a member of the party to which the hon. member for Timiskaming belongs. At that time I particularly asked if any of the cases before us had attached to them any question of credibility. From time to time there have been raised cases such as those raised today, in which there has been some question about the reliability of evidence and the propriety of the proceedings. This question was particularly asked at that time and I was assured—and no one said otherwise—that with regard to none of the group of cases that were considered that day had any question ever been raised. Therefore the group of bills was put through.

While I am inclined to agree that, if the circumstances which have been stated are correct, perhaps there should have been second consideration of this bill, I feel that it is extremely unfortunate that the matter was not raised then, before the private bills committee. This evidence which the hon. member has produced was not before the private bills committee. It was the file that was before the Senate. I feel that it is now rather late. I do not know just what action we should take. If these statements are true, then perhaps the matter should be reconsidered.

In connection with the question of domicile, may I say that the hon. member for Timiskaming has made the matter sound terribly simple. As all of those trained in the law know very well, questions of domicile are not simple, particularly when a person has been born in Poland, resides for some time in Canada and then moves to the United States. I say that the matter is not as simple as he has stated it to be. It is an extremely complicated matter when a person has moved about and has stayed for some time in one place and another. I say that the question of domicile is one which certainly is not as simple as black and white or yes and no. If the hon. senators in the other place had all these facts before them, I believe they must have come to the conclusion that the question of domicile has been satisfactorily answered, and perhaps even without the second affidavit they would have been satisfied with the evidence that this person was actually domiciled in Canada. At this particular point in the proceedings I do not feel that we should go back, as it is not an open and shut case. It is something that has happened. Unfortunately, it was not considered in the private bills committee for the simple reason that it was never raised.

Mr. Matheson: May I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Aiken: May I first finish my remarks?

Mr. Matheson: Yes.

Mr. Aiken: Even if the matter had been raised there, I doubt very much that the committee would go back and reconsider the question of domicile, unless there was a fairly definite indication that something was wrong. Here was a case in which the domicile could very well have been in Canada and probably was in Canada. However, without going into a complete retrial of the matter I think we should accept the decision which was made in the other place.

Mr. Matheson: May I ask my hon. friend whether he would agree that if, in fact, there is no domicile in the province of Quebec in this particular instance, then the bill has no legal validity; that is to say, it is not entitled to international recognition and, in the event of these people subsequently marrying, any issue of these marriages would be deemed, by the rules of private international law, illegitimate? Am I not correct?

Mr. Aiken: This is a complicated hypothetical question, Mr. Chairman. What I say is this. If this parliament grants a divorce bill in Canada, it is completely effective in Canada; and I think we cannot consider too much about what will happen in other countries. That is the affair of the parties to the divorce. I answer the hon. member in that way.

Mr. Mandziuk: I wish to be fair to the hon. member for Timiskaming as well as to the other hon. members of this House of Commons. If the evidence is such that the matter should be referred back to the miscellaneous private bills committee I, who have the honour to be the chairman of that committee, would consent to a transfer of it there. However, I wish to state this. There are 901 divorce cases. Most of them have gone through the other place. Some must be heard. If anyone in this house or in this country expects the members of the miscellaneous private bills committee to read every file of evidence from the other place, then I will be the first one to resign and get off that committee, as it is an impossibility. We carried on the practice which has been carried on for years. There are cases in which the committee, this house and the other place have been misled. These things have happened in our courts. We had a recent case in Toronto where a decree absolute was granted and yet application was made for annulment, it was proved that the divorce was granted on perjured evidence, and the divorce was annulled.

We wish to do the right and the fair thing. I have a great deal of respect for the Senate divorce committee. Those people put in a great deal of time. I have sat in on several of their hearings and I can assure you, Mr. Chairman, that the chairman and the members of the committee spend more time in trying to dig into evidence and in examining witnesses than do some of our judges in our superior courts to whom a petition is made for divorce. I have a lot of respect for their judgment, and if the odd case slips through in which there is some irregularity I do not think it is the fault of the other place or the fault of the miscellaneous private bills committee of this house. As a matter of fact, there are three members of the party to which the hon. member for Timiskaming belongs who are members of the miscellaneous private bills committee. One of them was present, and I only regret that he did not bring up this matter, if it had been drawn to his attention. I would agree to have this bill sent back to the miscellaneous private bills committee for further study if we can proceed with others and not waste any more time.

Mr. Mather: Mr. Chairman, as one of the representatives of our party on the miscellaneous private bills committee I want to say that in my opinion what we have heard in the last hour simply underlines the long held contention of certain members of our party, which is basically that the members of the private bills committees of the other place and of this house lack the energy, the technical ability and the time to deal with these cases properly. The reason that members of this party on that committee did not raise this issue in the committee is that we lacked the energy and ability at the time, and we have no confidence in that committee or in the other place with respect to dealing with these bills. I think what has just been drawn to our attention ably illustrates the correctness of our position.

Mr. Nesbitt: Mr. Chairman, there is one thing that I think some hon. members have perhaps forgotten, or to which they have perhaps not paid full attention. Under the British North America Act this parliament has the power to pass any act it wishes for which authority is given under that act. The fact of the matter is that the committees of the other place and this house have normally followed certain rules regarding divorce, namely that the ground must be adultery, but I would point out that this is only a matter of custom. They have the power to grant a divorce for any reason whatsoever.

The second point has to do with the question of domicile raised by the hon. member for Timiskaming. This is not a question of fact or law alone but a question of mixed law and fact. It is not the duty of this house or, indeed, of the other place, to start deciding questions of law but rather to decide questions of fact, and domicile is always a mixture of the two. In any event, parliament can grant divorce for any reason it likes. Because of the normal custom of granting divorce for one reason only I think the point I have made may have been overlooked.

Mr. Scott: Mr. Chairman, I should like to make a few comments on the bill and in so doing I should like to preface them by saying that I hope anything I say will not be construed as being disrespectful to members of the house or the committee, or members of the other place. But, Mr. Chairman, when as a member of the bar of Ontario I take a look at this bill it is really shocking to see how these matters are handled.

I agree completely with the hon. member who just spoke, that once we get into the question of divorce it does not really matter what grounds are used. He is quite correct. Within our legislative jurisdiction we can grant a divorce on any ground we like to anybody in Canada. But the hon. member had better not publicize this fact too widely or we will have thousands of these cases from every part of Canada in the next session. Many more people from all over the country will be coming to us for divorces, and if hon. members think we are tied up now, just wait a year or two and we will be dealing with nothing but divorce.

I should like to comment also on the remarks of the chairman of the committee, with which I wholly concur, when he says it is an absolute impossibility for his committee, no matter how hard working its members are, no matter how sincere they are, no matter how desirous they are of doing a good job, to deal with these bills adequately. I could not agree more. Indeed, Mr. Chairman, that is the whole point we are trying to make, and what has happened in the house this afternoon points up the absurdity of us as members of the House of Commons trying to go into matters of this kind. This is the whole purpose of our party raising this issue in the way we have. We have no desire at all to prevent people getting divorces. As far as I am concerned, I will vote for all of them as they go through. But what we are trying to point out to the house and to the country at large is the absolutely ridiculous position in which we as members of the House of Commons are placed.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I think the hon. member is now discussing the procedure with respect to divorce bills generally and I would ask him to come back to the bill we are at present studying in committee.

Mr. Scott: I will be very glad to do so. I have made the point I wanted to make, I will be glad to come back to the bill. When the brief that was before the other place was first shown to me this afternoon by the hon. member for Timiskaming and he told me of his objections, I did not really think that the things he said could possibly be true. So prior to this hour arriving I had occasion to take the brief that was before the other place and to study it. I understand that this was not done in the miscellaneous private bills committee, but the hon. member for Timiskaming has raised a very grave charge to which any member of the bar in any jurisdiction would have to listen.

Let us consider what happened here, Mr. Chairman, because with all the interjections the committee may have lost sight of it. The plaintiff commenced the divorce action and her husband was served with the papers. He then went to a solicitor in Ottawa and filed a notice that he wished to contest the divorce. This was done on the 4th of May, 1961. This was then a contested divorce action. Just a month later a document is prepared and is signed by the defendant husband in which he withdraws his objection, changes his mind and says that he is now domiciled in Montreal whereas he had previously said that he had never been previously domiciled in Canada at all.

The really serious part of this matter, Mr. Chairman, is that the second document is a sworn document sworn by the secretary of the lawyer acting for the wife. There is no court anywhere in Canada that would permit this matter to go through. If in a normal court of law a contested divorce action suddenly becomes an uncontested divorce action, the judge immediately requires the plaintiff, the defendant and the lawyers to come and explain to him why all of a sudden a defended action has become an undefended action. This is just normal court procedure. But, Mr. Chairman, if a judge in any court in Canada saw that the notice withdrawing objection was sworn by the secretary of the lawyer acting for the plaintiff the matter woud likely be referred to the discipline committee of the local bar association.

There is no possibility of any court in Canada permitting a divorce of this kind to go through without a very serious investigation as to how these circumstances arose. Yet this bill was before members of the other place and was passed by them. It then went to a committee of our own house and was passed. I cast no reflection on the members of that committee because obviously they did not have the facts before them. The bill has now come back to the house. Had it not been for the industrious methods adopted by the hon. member for Timiskaming in looking into these divorce actions, taking his duty seriously and going into the evidence as we are all supposed to do, if we are going to legislate on these matters, this very serious matter would never have come to our attention.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the other matter raised by the hon. member for Timiskaming was that of domicile. Of course, he is quite right. There is no domicile here in the province of Quebec. The man was born in Warsaw, came to Canada for a little while and wandered around from place to place. Eventually, he ended up in Miami and from Miami he went to New York. He was served with the papers in New York, but not at the address at which he was supposed to be living, an address 17 blocks away. This may be a minor discrepancy in the papers, however. Certainly, Mr. Chairman, there is no domicile here at all. Perhaps we should not concern ourselves because, as the hon. member has said, we do not really have to care about domicile.

However, we are trying to point out that this bill before us has never really received the proper study and consideration to which it is entitled. The committee of the other place and the committee of this house, perhaps through no fault of their own, are just not in a position to give these matters the study they properly deserve. My hon. friend says we should not concern ourselves with points of law. However, we are forced to do so. We are put in the position of being judges when these matters come before us, and we must consider them in that capacity.

Before I sit down, I should like to inquire of the chairman of the committee on miscellaneous private bills if he is prepared to move a motion that this bill be referred back to that committee for further study. I would be glad if he would do so, otherwise I would do so.

Mr. Mandziuk: I am sorry, Mr. Chairman, I did not hear the hon. member.

Mr. Scott: I was saying that the chairman of the house committee was good enough to indicate earlier that, in view of the issues we have raised, he would be prepared to move that this bill be referred back to the miscellaneous private bills committee. I wanted to extend him the courtesy of doing that, rather than moving it myself.

Mr. Mandziuk: I shall so move, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chairman: I believe that this committee should carry the bill and then before the bill is read a third time it will be in order to move an amendment to the effect that the bill be referred back to the miscellaneous private bills committee. I think it is the desire of the committee to follow this procedure.

Clause 1 agreed to.

Preamble agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the bill be read a third time, now?

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Obviously, Mr. Speaker, you cannot know what went on in committee of the whole. There was an undertaking that if this bill were proceeded with to third reading today, there would be a motion that it be not now read a third time but that it be referred back to the standing committee on miscellaneous private bills. I assume the hon. member for Marquette is going to make that motion.

Mr. Nicholas Mandziuk (Marquette): That is quite right; I move that the bill be referred to the miscellaneous private bills committee, before receiving third reading.

Mr. Speaker: I think the proper procedure would be for the hon. member for Marquette to move the third reading and then an amendment could be put by someone that the bill be referred back to the committee, pursuant to citation 416, I think it is.

Mr. Mandziuk thereupon moved the third reading of the bill.

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): I move:

That the bill be not now read the third time but that the said bill be referred to the standing committee on miscellaneous private bills for reconsideration.

Mr. Speaker: I find some difficulty with the wording of the hon. member's amendment. I think the amendment should be that after the word "be" in the motion the following words be deleted and there be substituted therefor, "referred back to the miscellaneous private bills committee".

The hon. member for Danforth (Mr. Scott) moves, seconded by the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) in amendment:

That the bill be referred back to the miscellaneous private bills committee.

The question is on the amendment. Is it agreed?

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: Therefore, the main motion is now that the bill be referred back to the committee. Is it agreed?

Motion as amended agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: In view of the fact that it is now one minute to six, I will call it six o'clock. The hour appointed for consideration of private members' business having expired, the house will revert to the business that was interrupted at five o'clock.

(Text):

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Berger: Mr. Chairman, when the committee rose I had been talking about the Columbia river treaty. I said that it was an improvident treaty. I said that it assigned to Canada the job of storing vast quantities of water while effectively depriving us of the right to use the waters of the Columbia, not only for the purpose of generating electric power but also for industrial and agricultural purposes. I said the treaty would stunt the agricultural and industrial development of British Columbia, and indeed of the prairie provinces, not just for years to come but for generations to come. I pointed out that under successive governments Canadians have given up control over their resources, over their minerals, over their oil, over their manufacturing industries, over their savings; and now this government proposes that Canadians should give up control over their water resources in an area, the Columbia river basin, occupying 40,000 square miles.

The government has already signed this treaty. It has not yet brought it before the House of Commons for ratification. We in the New Democratic party can assure the government that when it is brought before the House of Commons, unless the government makes out a case, which so far is lacking, to justify this treaty, a case which no member of the ministry so far during this parliament has made any attempt to adumbrate to the house, the members of this party will resist the treaty. There is no question about that.

Under the old Liberal government Canadians were simply hewers of wood and drawers of water. The old Liberal government was the government in power when Canadians gave up control over their key industries and key resources to United States interests. No one can say that things have not changed under the Conservative government. Our function under the Columbia river treaty is one of storage. We are going to store the water of the Columbia river basin, water which will be used for agricultural and industrial development in the United States. Under the Conservative government we have become hewers of wood and storers of water.

For too many years we in Canada have been giving up control over Canada itself. There is really no necessity, I suppose, to recapitulate to members of the committee what has happened. We no longer control our own oil; the United States does. We no longer control our own mineral resources; the United States does. We do not control any longer our automobile manufacturing industry; the United States does. We do not control our appliance industry; the United States does. We do not even control our own savings any more: the great financial institutions of this country, the mortgage companies, the insurance companies, the investment companies are under control of United States interests.

To a great extent this has happened by default. The old Liberal government, and the same is true of the present government, did nothing to encourage the generation of Canadian capital. They did nothing to expand Canadian ownership. They did nothing to discourage the acquisition of Canadian resources by United States interests.

It is true that these developments took place in the private sector of the economy.

But in the case of the Columbia river treaty—which we contend is nothing more or less than a gigantic give-away of the control over the water of a whole river basin—there can be no excuse. The government is not dealing here with a development that has taken place in the private sector of the economy; the government is dealing here with a public resource. For the government to retain control over the water resources of the Columbia river basin would not entail any encroachment on private enterprise; it would not impair the right of businessmen, leaders of industry and the like, to carry on their operations as they saw fit. In this case it is a situation where the government has complete control and, in my submission, complete responsibility for what happens to the water resources of the Columbia river.

In this case this is what the government is doing: In the past Canadians, through the failure of previous governments to act, have given up control over their oil, their mineral resources, their agricultural resources, over resources of every type and variety. But this is the first time that we are actually giving up control over a whole river basin. This, I suggest, constitutes some kind of a record, a record of which this government should not be proud.

Let me tell the members of the committee what this treaty does. Let me inform the members of the committee why the members of the New Democratic party oppose this treaty. Let us take a look at the treaty. I have said that Canada's only function under this treaty is to build storage dams. That is mandatory under article II of the treaty. I notice that the Minister of Public Works has joined us this evening, and he may deal with this subject if he decides to defend the treaty, if he can. It is true that the treaty provides for the development of power at Mica creek. This is the one dam where there will be generating capacity developed in Canada. But because the treaty prevents us from diverting the waters of the Kootenay river into the Columbia river the potential generating capacity of the Mica creek dam is markedly reduced. I suggest it is unlikely that if this treaty is proceeded with the Mica creek dam will ever be built. Under the treaty, if there is any delay in building these storage dams and, I repeat it is mandatory that we build these dams—

Mr. Fulton: Has the hon. member read the treaty? If he has, does he not admit that the treaty specifically gives us the right to divert the waters of the Kootenay river into the Columbia river in stages, should we wish to do so?

[Mr. Berger.]

Mr. Berger: I have read the treaty. The minister will admit, I think, that we cannot achieve any substantial diversion until 60 years have passed.

Mr. Fulton: In 20 years we can divert 1,500,000 acre-feet per annum. After 60 and 80 years respectively we can divert practically the whole river.

Mr. Berger: I wonder, Mr. Chairman, if you would protect me from this attempt of the minister to invade the time at my disposal?

Mr. Fulton: Then tell the truth about the treaty.

Mr. Berger: I am telling the truth about the treaty if the minister will contain himself.

Mr. Douglas: Surely there will be ample opportunity for members to speak in this debate. We have been trying to get this minister on his feet for a long time. I suggest the minister ought to obey the rules of this house as much as any private member.

Mr. Berger: I was about to tell the minister that the only dam where we can generate hydroelectric power in Canada under this treaty is the Mica creek dam and because we are prevented for all practical purposes from diverting the waters of the Kootenay to the Columbia the capacity for generating hydroelectric power at Mica creek is markedly reduced. I suggest that if this treaty is proceeded with, the Mica creek dam will never be built. I was about to put this consideration before the minister—that in this treaty the only thing that is mandatory is the construction of the three storage dams in Canada. It is not mandatory to build dams which will create generating capacity in Canada. If we are behind schedule in the construction of these dams we are to be penalized and deprived of the downstream benefits, the right to share the additional capacity which would result in the United States from storage in Canada.

Under this treaty we have tied our hands regarding the future development not only of the Columbia river but of two other rivers of this country, the Kootenay river and the Fraser river.

Hon. members who were here this afternoon heard a speech by one of my hon. friends who is more familiar with the problems of the Columbia river basin than any other member of the house. I refer to the hon. member for Kootenay West. The house will recall his reference to the boundary waters treaty of 1909. Article II of that treaty, which is most significant for Canadians to consider when they are contemplating the use of their water resources, provides that Canada and the United States shall have exclusive use and control over all waters that each country has on its own side of the border.

So Canada has the exclusive right to use and to divert the waters of the Columbia river. As Mr. James Ripley, an engineer who is probably proved better qualified to speak on the Columbia river treaty than anyone else, except, perhaps, General McNaughton, has said, the key to the development of the Columbia is diversion. And we have deprived ourselves of the right to divert the waters of three rivers under this treaty.

Under the McNaughton plan, which the government abandoned at the behest of the government of British Columbia, the door would have been left open for the future development of the power of the Columbia river at Mica creek as well as for the development in the perhaps not too distant future of the hydroelectric potential of the Fraser river and the development of the prairie provinces through the utilization of the waters of the Columbia river.

The McNaughton plan kept the door open to all of these things. It provided for the diversion of the waters of the Kootenay to the Columbia. This would have enabled Canada to generate enormous hydroelectric power at Mica creek. The McNaughton plan left the door open for the diversion of the waters of the Kootenay and the Columbia to the prairie provinces for industrial and agricultural purposes, and it left the door open to the diversion of the waters of the Columbia into the Fraser. This is not a practical question at the moment because the Fraser river must be left free of dams to enable salmon to get up river and down river. But it might not be very many years before we achieve a break through and find a way of enabling fish to get round hydroelectric dams. When that day comes, when it is possible for us to develop the hydroelectric potential of the Fraser by diverting the waters of the Columbia river, we shall find we cannot go ahead with it because we are prevented under the terms of this treaty.

Mr. Fulton: We shall be able to do so.

Mr. Berger: The minister will have an opportunity later in the evening to reply to what has been said.

Let us consider these downstream benefits. I am still not sure what the position of the government is—whether they think these downstream benefits should be returned to us in the form of power or whether we should accept a cash payment for them. For that matter I am not sure what position the province of British Columbia has taken. But in any case under the terms of the present treaty these benefits will disappear as the years go by. Under the present treaty, Canada is to share the additional power which will be generated downstream in the United States as the result of the additional storage created in Canada. But as the United States brings in additional sources of power, as atomic power is generated—and there is an important development in the field of atomic power taking place today in the northwestern United States —Canada's share of the downstream benefits will decline. This is the opinion expressed by Mr. Ripley and other experts. As the years go by, the downstream benefits will diminish until they no longer exist. This is something which the committee should consider very seriously.

When I indicated that the prospects are that the requirements of the United States for hydroelectric power will diminish, I was thinking of the world's largest atomic plant already under construction at Hanford, Washington, where atomic power will be produced as early as 1964. Yet this government tells us we have a long term prospect of getting downstream benefits. I say these benefits are going to diminish. They are not downstream benefits, they are dubious benefits.

Why is the government now ready to proceed with the sale of the downstream benefits in accordance with the wishes of the government of British Columbia? The government was adamant before June 18 on this particular subject. After that we had austerity, a dollar crisis, and the government needed United States dollars badly. Then the government changed its position and was ready to agree to the sale of downstream benefits of the Columbia to the United States.

Mr. Chairman, the only conclusion we can come to is that this government, so badly in need of American dollars, simply decided to change its policy and decided to sell the downstream benefits to the United States in order to get the dollars to pay off the mortgage Canada owes to United States interests. In 1961 the sum of $700 million in profits and dividends went from Canada to the United States. This is the reason for the dollar crisis. This is the reason for the balance of payments crisis. And this has happened because United States interests have a mortgage on Canadian resources. How did this government propose to pay that mortgage off? They chose what I suggest is the wrong way, the worst way, to pay it off: they decided to pay off this mortgage against Canadian resources by giving up control over the waters of a 40,000 square mile river basin, waters which would enable us to develop the agricultural and industrial potential of that area, which in turn might eventually enable us to pay off this mortgage. The government is simply paying off this mortgage by taking out another mortgage.

Mr. Chairman, I know that the members of this party are pleased to see the Minister of Public Works here this evening to defend the treaty, if it is defensible, which I doubt. As a matter of fact, when the Minister of Public Works recently decided to undertake a new venture into a new field of political activity in my home province of British Columbia—and I am sure hon. members from British Columbia are to some extent unhappy that his distinguished parliamentary career is coming to an end—some people said that he was leaving a sinking ship. His presence here tonight means, I take it, that he has decided to stay aboard long enough to man the pumps with his colleagues, at least for a decent interval.

I said that what the government was proposing to do under this treaty was to give away a river. Mr. Ripley has said that if we proceed with this treaty we would lose control of the waters of the Columbia river forever. This is the statement not of a member of the New Democratic party, not of a controversial military man, but of a man who took the trouble to find out what was going on in the Columbia river basin, and who took the trouble to find out what the treaty was all about. He discovered that if the Columbia river treaty were proceeded with it would deprive Canadians of control of the waters of the Columbia river basin forever. These are the waters on which the people of the Columbia river basin depend for their livelihood. Keep in mind, Mr. Chairman, that water is an increasingly valuable commodity today. The demand for water for domestic, agricultural and industrial purposes is increasing more rapidly than demand for any other commodity. Yet our government proposes to give up control over the waters of the Columbia river basin.

Let me demonstrate, if I can, to the members of this committee what it is the government is trying to do. Suppose that the government signed a treaty with a foreign country which gave to that foreign country control over the waters of the province of Newfoundland. I would remind hon. members that the province of Newfoundland is 40,000 square miles in area, equivalent to the area of the Columbia river basin. Suppose the government signed a treaty giving up control over the waters of Newfoundland.

Mr. McGrath: Would the hon. gentleman permit me to interrupt him at this point?

Mr. Berger: I would rather he waited till I had finished.

[Mr. Berger.]

Mr. McGrath: I just wanted to correct the record. The area of Newfoundland covers 155,000 square miles, not 40,000.

Mr. Berger: I think the hon. member has a point there. I meant the island of Newfoundland is 40,000 square miles in area. I pointed out that this is equivalent to the area of the Columbia river basin, and if this government proposed to sign a treaty giving up control over the waters of Newfoundland, I think there would be great resistance to this, not only from members of all parties from that province, but even perhaps the premier of Newfoundland himself would object to it. If that happened surely everybody would be made to see the foolishness, the recklessness and the improvidence of taking such a step, a step which could only have the worst possible consequences for the people of that province. And in the case of the Columbia river basin, this treaty would be the worst possible step to take for the people in that basin, in British Columbia, and in all Canada for that matter.

But that is what is happening. That is precisely what the government is proposing to do. I do not know whether hon. members from Newfoundland would oppose such a step if the government proposed to take it, but I can assure the Minister of Public Works that the members of the New Democratic party from British Columbia are going to oppose this treaty, because it is just as extravagant a mistake as it would be to give up control over the waters of the province of Newfoundland.

I suggest that when the minister tells us why the government is proceeding with this treaty, when he tells us when the government is going to bring the treaty before the external affairs committee of this house, when he tells us when we will get a chance to debate it as a matter of government business, we will look forward to hearing him.

The members of this party do not take a negative attitude towards this problem. We believe that the government ought to renegotiate the treaty and ought to adopt the McNaughton plan. The McNaughton plan was at one stage agreed to by the members of the international joint commission, both Canadian members and United States members. If the government had stood up to the government of the province of British Columbia at that time, we could have had a treaty based on the McNaughton plan which would enable Canadians to develop the full hydroelectric potential of the Columbia river basin, and enable us to retain control over the waters of the Columbia river basin. It would also have been a treaty which would have been fair to the United States, because they agreed to it before this government gave in to the demands of the premier of British Columbia and abandoned it in favour of the reckless and improvident treaty which the government have already signed with the government of the United States.

We suggest to the government that there is still time to rectify this mistake. There is still time to renegotiate the treaty on the basis of the McNaughton plan. The members of this party urge the government to take the necessary steps before it is too late to renegotiate this treaty. We can assure the government that if it will undertake to renegotiate it and to adopt the McNaughton plan, and persuade the Americans, who I believe can be persuaded, to go back to the McNaughton plan, it can be assured that in that endeavour it will have the support of the members of the New Democratic party in the House of Commons.

Mr. Byrne: Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to note that the Minister of Public Works is in his seat this evening. We of the Liberal party have taken note that he is shortly leaving for greener fields—greener in the sense that he is leaving for the land of the evergreen forests. We wish him well. We wish him health and happiness but, of course, nothing more.

In the meantime, Mr. Chairman, we think there are a few questions that the minister should be required to answer with respect to the draft Columbia river treaty which he signed in Washington on January 17, 1961.

Feeling as strongly as we did, the leader of the official opposition on Friday last moved to adjourn the house in order to discuss this very urgent matter. Through the press, the radio and television we had determined that the minister was accepting another position and that he expected to wind up his affairs in the department in a few weeks. Through questions in the house over the past several weeks we had determined that there was no real reason why this treaty should not be before the House of Commons or a committee of the House of Commons in order that inquiries may be made, so that we may determine the actual facts of the treaty, and that witnesses may be called. I refer to witnesses who have had experience with this matter of anywhere from six months to 12 years. We noted that the minister had written a letter to the editor of the Engineering and Contract Record in which he answered or purported to answer a number of charges which were made by General A. G. L. McNaughton who for many years had been chairman of the Canadian section of the international joint commission. In that letter the minister had this to say:

> I am sure that it will be desired to investigate every aspect of the treaty and obtain the views of all persons concerned with it. I should myself appear in such a case—

He is speaking, of course, of a committee of the House of Commons or in parliament. He stated further:

> A debate about his contentions could be particularly regarded as being within the special purview of parliament and the government's responsibility to parliament.

The minister as the chief negotiator for the government of Canada, the minister responsible to Canada for the treaty is leaving the house. We believe this is an urgent matter. Certainly the urgency of the entire settlement of the treaty is not to be taken lightly.

I had the experience of sitting on the other side of the house in 1955 when the government of the day undertook to block what we considered to be a sell-out of the Columbia river basin to United States private interests. The minister supported the government of the day when the government brought in the International River Improvements Act. Since the signing of this agreement I have stated publicly that it is my opinion that the Columbia river treaty is less acceptable than was the Kaiser deal. This I believe to be a fact. I am not going into the details of the treaty. My friend the hon. member for Coast-Capilano has gone into the details. Some of the members of the New Democratic party have gone into many of the details.

Mr. McGee: The hon. member does not know the details.

Mr. Byrne: If the hon. member would speak up a little bit more loudly, I would perhaps be able to hear him.

Mr. McGee: I am suggesting that the hon. member does not know the details.

Mr. Byrne: If the hon. member wishes to find out whether I know something about the details, I suggest that he ask his minister to put this matter before a committee where we shall have plenty of time to discuss it. Then there will be no question about whether or not we have any knowledge. My time is limited and I have other things to discuss.

Mr. McGee: The hon. member does not know what he is talking about.

Mr. Byrne: In our series of questions over the past several weeks the minister finally came up with this statement, as found at page 2178 of Hansard:

> All I can say is that at the time the treaty was signed there was no disagreement that was apparent; that every step had been taken to ensure unanimity including the writing of a letter formally to Mr. Williston enclosing the text of the treaty, advising him that the treaty was to be signed and that it would be signed in Washington,—

Then he goes on to say this:

So it was presumed, and I think it was a justifiable presumption that it was signed with the knowledge and approval of the government of British Columbia.

We certainly hope that was the case. For that matter the actual details of the building of the dam, the sale of the downstream benefits, the actual financing of the various construction projects were not necessary. It was not necessary to have these details worked out before the agreement is ratified. The very agreement itself in article 8 states that this may be done or shall be done soon after the ratification of the agreement by both governments. Hence in our opinion there is no reason why this matter should not at this moment be before a committee of the House of Commons. However, was there full agreement between the minister or the federal government and the provincial government? In a letter written December 14, 1960, to Mr. Fleming, Mr. Bennett, the premier of British Columbia, had this to say:

The financial proposals put forward by the government of Canada for hydroelectric development of the Columbia river are, regrettably, unacceptable to British Columbia. In order that there will be no delay in carrying out the development, however, British Columbia is prepared to guarantee Canada that this government will fulfil the terms of the treaty which is negotiated with the government of the United States.

Of a further letter from the Minister of Public Works on January 9, written to the premier of British Columbia, in speaking to the House of Commons on the treaty he had this to say, as found at page 4657 of Hansard of May 11, 1961:

I advised him on January 9 that the government of Canada in considering the treaty would act on the assumption that British Columbia was in accord with its terms. I also advised him that, if approved, we would sign it on January 16—

Hence there was really no measure of agreement with respect to the financing of the treaty any more than there is at this stage. It is my belief and the belief of many others that there was a measure of very great haste in the last few months of the negotiations. It will be remembered that the Canadian team consisted first of the minister himself, who has been described by some of the Conservative papers as a brilliant young man. With that I am prepared to agree in that he is a Rhodes scholar; but he is not a hydroelectric engineer and I am sure he has had very little training in engineering. Then there was Mr. Robertson, deputy minister of northern affairs and national resources. I question whether he has any training in electrical engineering or hydro development. Another member of the team was Mr. Ritchie of the Department of External Affairs, a man with very little knowledge of hydroelectric development. Finally, there was Mr. Bassett, the deputy minister of lands and forests of the province of British Columbia.

On the negotiating team for the United States there was Mr. Bennett, assistant secretary of the department of the interior of the United States. In this capacity he has been working on power system administration for many years. He heads the branch that deals with and sells all federally generated power in the United States including such projects as the Tennessee valley authority, the Bonneville power administration and so forth. General Istchner has been concerned with the Columbia river since early 1950. He is chief of the army engineers and head of the Pacific northwest division of the corps of army engineers, in which region the Columbia river is situated. In addition to being chief of the corps of army engineers he held the position of head of the United States section of the international Columbia engineering board, and he entered into the negotiations with complete and comprehensive knowledge of the subject. At present he is in India for the international bank supervising construction of the multimillion dollar Indus project.

These are the teams that came face to face in a highly technical discussion. Soon after the teams got to work it would appear, as I think the minister will agree, that they had come almost to the point of signing an agreement based on the original international joint commission principles which in effect comprise the present McNaughton plan. They were about to sign what is now considered the McNaughton plan when Premier Bennett of British Columbia or one of his negotiators walked into the negotiations, pulled the rug out from under their feet and said that there would be no flooding of the Kootenays. This was the first doublecross.

After having established that the McNaughton plan could not be accepted by the provincial government and after reaching a point where they were again about to sign an agreement, the correspondence began regarding the financing of the project.

Mr. Clancy: What do you suggest? Get to the point.

Mr. Byrne: I maintain that this was something contrived in haste.

Mr. Clancy: Get to the point.

Mr. Byrne: Perhaps the hon. member would contain himself and look after the St. Mary's project in his constituency. If he wants to hear more about this matter he should endeavour to have the treaty placed before a committee so that we can hear all sides of the question.

Mr. Mather: I rise on a point of order. In fairness to the speaker I think it should be said that we on this side of the house have difficulty in hearing him because of the noise that is going on. I should like a little more quiet so that we can understand better what he is saying.

Mr. Byrne: This is the first time I have heard any complaints about not being heard in the house. I think there may be reasons for the noise in the house this evening, although I do not know. The noise may be more excessive than usual but I am sure I am speaking in good voice.

The minister will admit that the rug was pulled out from under the feet of the negotiators. There was a doublecross. They had reached the point of signing on the new terms when something else broke loose in Victoria, shall I say, and a new obstacle was put forward. Some of us believe that the obstacle was put forward to prevent a real economic development of the Columbia in order to make the Peace river project more acceptable. This is a side issue, but there are many who believe this is the actual reason for the second doublecross.

Despite all this disagreement the minister said in one of his letters that he felt it was imperative that there should be agreement between British Columbia and Canada. However, the time was drawing near when the then president of the United States was about to retire and apparently it was thought that it would be a very great mark in the history and development of Canadian-American relations if the Prime Minister of Canada were to go to the United States and sign this agreement before President Eisenhower withdrew from public life. In fact, I might go so far as to say that the situation was almost as mixed up as a dog's breakfast. Nevertheless it was decided to rush down to Washington and sign the agreement at all costs.

I was not a member of the house at the time the Prime Minister returned here on January 18, 1961, after signing the agreement but I can almost hear his sepulchral tones as he described the signing of this momentous agreement on the eve of the departure of President Eisenhower from public life. He went on to speak of the invitation to a reception at the White House and said in part, as found on page 1159 of Hansard:

> That fact gives it emphasis. During the course of our stay there the Minister of Justice—

Now Minister of Public Works.

> —myself and several representatives from the two countries were entertained at luncheon at the White House, the last function of the kind that will take place during the presidency of Dwight D. Eisenhower.
