LIBERAL CANDIDATE!

Representation of Northumberland County, in the next House of Commons— J. B. SNOWBALL Esq.

Miramichi Advance, CHATHAM, N. B., DECEMBER 16, 1886.

Voters' Lists. We begin, this week, the publication of the voters' lists for the County, as prepared by the Revolving Office...

Government by Commission. Our rulers at Ottawa have within the last year developed a surprising power of delegating commissions to do work which should either be done by themselves, or can be of no possible utility when it is done.

There was first the railway commission. What was there to do that could not be done by the minister of railways? That functionary is little better than a fifth wheel to a coach.

THE WINTER SOLICITS.

During the winter months, the number of deaths in the Dominion is said to be one of the same length of the 25th, when there is an increase of one minute.

On the 14th the sun rises 6h. 41m. a. m. and sets at 4h. 22m. p. m. On the 31st the sun rises at 7h. 14m. a. m. and sets at 4h. 22m. p. m. making the day 9h. 9m. long.

On the 1st of the month the day is 12 minutes shorter than it was at the commencement. The days shorten slowly until the 17th, then remain without change for the eight following days, and then the programme commences.

THE KISS POLITICAL.

There is to be a familiar word in the incident and manner of recording it for us all remember the famous contest between the Bluffs and Bross of Edenwille in which Mr. Ficklin and Hon. Sam Stunkey were pitted against each other.

He had kissed one of 'em," exclaimed the delighted little man.

"He has kissed another," gasped the excited manager.

"He is kissing 'em all," screamed the enthusiastic gentleman, and he had by the defending statesman, the procession moved on.

It appears that Sir John Macdonald's candidate, just as his henchman Mr. M. C. O'Connell, the counterpart of the fellow of that historic journal, the Edenwille Gazette, will have to kiss a number of his constituents.

The Premier entered the hall during the progress of the speeches, and was greeted with prolonged applause. At the conclusion of Mr. Foster's address, Sir John Macdonald, on behalf of the members of the Coburg, welcomed the veteran Chieftain, and signified his appreciation of the gift by speaking to the young men, he remarked on the incident.

Some of them, he thought, were wishing they were a little older, as he saw the feeling of envy on their faces when, talking the privilege of age, he had snatched a pretty kiss from the young lady who had presented him with the bouquet. (Hours of laughter—and there might be reason for that envy, and the learned principal of a great national institution at the time, reminded him that the motto on the wall read, "One law for all.") (Great laughter.)

Now, Sir John, you are going to catch the gift, and also need not think that it is the going to escape. We trust that every body will stand well back so as to let the Gazette swing well the virtuous lass.

London "Times." Liverpool Spanish Market. Some six or seven weeks ago, about the beginning of October, the opinion became general that the bulk of Spanish goods for a remainder of the year would be very light, and consequently prices would be much firmer.

It was thought that comparatively few vessels were loading at the last ports, and that many more chartered, or could be taken up in time to load before the end of the season. This fact in the face of a stock considerably lighter than had been for five previous years, and with a better monthly consumption than in 1884 and 1885, made it appear that the prospects of an advance had a good and sound basis for their calculations. However, their expectations have scarcely been realized, although to some extent the market is stronger.

The arrivals have been numerous, over sixty vessels with deals having come to the coast since the 1st of October, and the cry is, "all they come." It is true that the quantity coming forward, and how unreliable statistics are in connection with wool. At the same time it must strike all engaged in the trade, what an astonishing market level is for this article, and how easily it bears any other part in the Kingdom. Many persons imagine, because their own particular trade is perhaps well supplied for the time being, that there must be accession for consumption; whereas it appears, that when one source fails, and another springs up, and in spite of dull trade and bad times, spruce always holds its own.

(Toronto Globe, 6th Dec.) Toronto Rights for All. Hon. Edward Blake, speaking at the evening meeting at Welland, said: While speaking at the meeting this morning I could not but remember the last time I addressed a meeting in Welland. It was nearly fifteen years ago, and we spoke from 12 at noon to 12 at night. (Laughter.) It was the anniversary of the first time in many years made a break in its Conservative record for the Dominion, and elected our lamented friend, W. A. Thomas, (laughing) that is a long time ago. Children of that day have become voters now; young men are middle-aged; and many of the older men have passed away. The changes have not been unimportant, and they are in the social world. I remember that on the side of the Conservative Government there appeared on that platform five public men: Mr. Blake, Mr. W. A. Thomas, Mr. Governor of Manitoba, Dr. Tupper, now High Commissioner for Canada; Mr. O'Connell, now a Judge, and Mr. William Macdonald, and Mr. Peter Mitchell. These five gentlemen, I was called that day to meet. (Applause.) Of the five, the first three are no longer in active political life. I have described their situation. But amongst the changes in political life are these—two of the remaining two are no longer in the ranks of the party on whose behalf they spoke that day.

Though perhaps not occupying the position of chief, they were nevertheless members of the Liberal party; they are of us, they are with us; they are against the Government of Sir John Macdonald, they are outspoken and pronounced in opposition to that Government, and they agree in the bulk of the positions taken by the Liberal party; they have their anxiety to see the Government defeated, and to see the Liberals return to power. (loud cheers) and what has happened in these cases has happened in many other cases also. I am glad to know that throughout the whole of Canada, and particularly throughout Ontario, there are to be found men of mark in their own localities, faithful, intelligent, independent men who have become alarmed at the condition, moral and material, of the country, who have become convinced that the Government has not redeemed its promise, that its conduct has not been to the public advantage, and that it ought to be replaced by another government acting up on other lines. Therefore, I take it as a good omen that, when I come here, at the close of a very long series of good meetings, to resume my relations with the people of Welland, I should be able to tell them that of the distinguished public men who appeared before the Tory Government, three are no longer in active political life. I have described their situation. But amongst the changes in political life are these—two of the remaining two are no longer in the ranks of the party on whose behalf they spoke that day.

MRS MULLEN'S ECONOMY.

I declare, Elizabeth, my grocery bill this month is outrageous; perfectly exorbitant, Mr. Mullen said, as he sat back from the table and looked over the bill his wife had just handed him.

"It seems to be all right, however," said Mrs. Mullen quietly. "I looked over the bill carefully; there is nothing charged to us we have not had."

"Then I must say that we have had an awful night of groceries, for a family no larger than ours. I don't see how you can possibly make away with so much; here is enough sugar charged in this month's bill to have done my mother, with her large family, half a year; we shall be confirmed dyspeptic, and in the poor-house besides, before we are forty years old, if you don't stop making so much rich cake, and so many pies and puddings. And I don't see why you will persist in trading at Millard's; he's the highest priced man in town, and I've told you time and again."

"I trade there because I get better articles, and you always want the best of everything."

"No, I don't want the best of everything; you are not willing to cook, unless you have the very finest of flour—although there's not half the flour in it—and other things accordingly; and then you cook such quantities, there was as much steak left yesterday as was eaten, and who cares for warmed-over steaks?"

"But we were expecting company yesterday, you remember, and I prepared dinner accordingly," said Mrs. Mullen.

"Yes, of course there's always some good reason for his cooking us more than his own one in town," Mr. Mullen said angrily, as he snatched his hat and started out of doors.

"Mr. Mullen was not an unkind husband, nor was he at all inclined to be rigidly. He was fond of good living, and not only appreciated his wife's excellent cooking, but knew that she was very saving and economical. But business had been very dull the past week, and when business was dull Mr. Mullen was apt to feel depressed in spirit; and when he felt depressed in spirit, he was very apt to be unreasonable and inclined to blame somebody for his lack of prosperity. He didn't dare to find fault with his partner in business; and it wasn't advisable to scold the clerk, without reason; so whom should he scold if not his wife?"

This was not the first time Mrs. Mullen had received a stinging rebuke for her alleged extravagance. Of course she knew her husband didn't mean it word for word, but that didn't prevent it from stinging. Two or three times she had wept bitterly over his unkind words, once or twice she had talked back with considerable vim, though she did neither; only after her husband had gone out she shut her lips together firmly, and went to work.

Mr. Mullen came home to his dinner in excellent spirits. Things had gone well at the store, and dyspepsia, and the poor house were alike forgotten. He chatted pleasantly as he ate rather sparingly of the codfish and potatoes, reserving his appetite for the pie, dumplings and delicious sauce that was sure to supplement a fish dinner.

"Now for the dumplings," he said, as he pushed away his plate, and used his knife with a boyish flourish which charmed.

"I didn't make any to-day; I thought they didn't agree with you, and I wouldn't make them just for myself, if his wife said kindly."

Mr. Mullen looked disappointed, but spoke cheerfully. "Ah, yes, a better butter for us to do without than I perceive, if only one knew where to leave off; and having found a suitable place to leave off—the first-half of a very plain molasses cookie—Mr. Mullen went down town with an unsteady stomach, and a great fear tugging at his heart strings that the good seed sown in the morning had taken deeper root than was desirable.

As Mr. Mullen came home to the opening meal, he saw three tins of strawberries temptingly displayed in the store windows. He would have bought some, but supposed his wife had already done so. He was very fond of strawberries, and had often paid an extravagant price for them—"the season was so short, when one could enjoy such luxuries."

"I see strawberries are in the market," Mr. Mullen said, as he took his seat at the table, and dashed out the dried apple sauce.

"Yes, but they are so very high," said the economical Mrs. Mullen. "It would seem—"

"Lizzie, what all this bread?" interrupted Mr. Mullen, holding up a slice for inspection.

"Nothing, only I have been trying a different grade of flour; it is rather dark, but it seems light and sweet."

"And very nutritious, I dare say," Mr. Mullen remembered his own words, and resolved to stand by them. "But it looks a little odd, your bread was always so nice and white."

The next morning Mr. Mullen found fault with the butter.

"Why, isn't that butter good?" his wife asked, in indignation. "The man said it was perfectly splendid, and so cheap—only twenty cents a pound. I got it at the new store just started at First street."

Mr. Mullen at the rest of his bread here and in silence. His heart filled with grief, no doubt, at having learned that this fair earth contained "so foul a blot" as a man that would lie about that butter. The dinner was very good that day, but there was hardly enough of it. Mrs. Mullen didn't want anything left over, and of course couldn't tell exactly how much would be eaten.

The food for supper was well cooked, but not rich nor dainty enough to be at all objectionable.

The next morning Mr. Mullen arose with a terrible gongnos at his stomach. He held his wife he wasn't feeling well, and would like some soft boiled eggs for his breakfast. He liked boiled eggs, and usually ate three or four. His wife always got her eggs at Anderson's and would rely upon their being fresh. But his countenance fell as he sat down to the table and saw the eggs (there were only two) by his plate. Somehow, they didn't look natural.

"Where did you get these eggs?" he asked, eyeing them suspiciously.

"I got them at Dean's; and just think I only paid ten cents a dozen, and I've been paying Anderson twelve cents all summer. Why, there isn't one of them good," she added in a tone of deep regret, as she saw her husband start at the kitchen door, with a terrible grimace on his face, and the eggs in a saucer.

"No, thank you," was the stiff reply. "I should cook you some more!" she kindly asked on his return.

"No, thank you," was the stiff reply. "I should cook you some more!" she kindly asked on his return.

"Elizabeth," he said in a tone so calm that it startled her, "you have been scientifically tried; as an economist, you are a success. I have no fear for the future; should misfortune overtake us, I feel assured that you could readily obtain a position as the matron of some 'Home' or you could support the family by keeping a genteel boarding-house."

"But (pathetically) I should not long remain a burden upon your hands; I should soon die—the die of starvation—don't think I could possibly survive beyond the third day. And now (cheerfully) I propose that we celebrate your victory by having, this day noon, a regal feast, consisting of such dishes as your judgment and good taste shall dictate. And here take this: there may be some little luxury which your own appetite craves, that you cannot procure at those places," and giving his wife a hearty kiss, he was gone.

It is needless to say that the feast was prepared, and that ample justice was done to it by Mr. Mullen and the friend whom he brought to dinner—Selected.
