"Well, if I had my way," I said, "I would go to the island of Sicily; there is a forty-mile road there, I understand, which goes around the base of Mount Aetna. I should like to be with some good fellow tramping along that road."

"I beg your pardon," said the man in the corner, breaking into the conversa-

"I beg your pardon," said the man in the corner, breaking into the conversation, which is a most unusual thing to halpen in England, "but the road you nention is sixty miles long instead of forty."

"Oh, is it?" I said with some surprise; "I was never there myself."

"Well, you may take my word for it, it is sixty miles long, and probably the most delightful road in the world. Starting from Tagrmina, was go, weet.

it is sixty miles long, and probably the most delightful road in the world. Starting from Taormins you go west, then southward around Aetna, and when you have done sixty miles you are back at Catania on the coast again. You have not been there?" he said; "well, take my advice, and when you go take plenty of provisions with you. The Corniche road, which this gentleman has just mentioned, is much better in the way of hotel accommodation. When you tramp that sixty-mile road you ought to do it very comfortably in three days, but you will find hotel accommodations exceedingly bad. The food will be unfit to eat, and the sleeping quarters"—here he shrugged his sinoulders—"well, you must put up with them as best you may. I suppose," he added, turning to my friend, "that when you walked from Nice to Mentone, "Yes, we did," admitted my friend. "They give you a very decent lunch there," continued the man in the corner, "but if you have a large party it is always better to order it by telegraph from Nice beforehand. I suppose you did not notice in this morning's weather reports—some papers publish the weather town that is not much known, although, unfortunately, it is rapidly coming to the knowledge of tourists. I mean Brisa, in Africa. You reach it from the Mediterranean coast by a wonderful railroad going through gorges in the mountains. It is just beyond the foothills itself, and is an oasis, almost, in the Saharra. There, the weather is always fine in winter, the air being invariably pure and clear. To the north you have the mountains, which makes fine scenery easily accessible; besides, they cut off all northerly winds. There is reasonably good hotel accommodation, and you can see much of Arab life."

We arrived at the London terminus almost before we thought we had started, the man in the corner had talked so charmingly of resorts both for summer and winter. After that day in the train I met him often, watching for him on the railway platform of my suburb. We sometimes journeyed home together, but he usually came by a later train than I did, so I mainly depended upon seeing him in going to town. He was the most marvelously-traveled man I had ever met. There seemed not to be a spot on this earth with which he was unfamiliar. He had the most minute information, and for a time I had expected that he would go upon some continental trip with me, but unfortunately CHATAHM, N. B.

He gave me hints on travel, how to get there at the least expense, and where there was a choice of two routes he indicated the better one to take. He frequently gave me letters of introduction to hotel-keepers, mentioning the correct charges for rooms and board, and I found these always exceedingly useful and much respected by hotel men, who vaguely remembered him. He was a man who thoroughly knew the ropes.

Cnrturning one summer I missed him for a week or more at the railway station. He was a most methodical man, always leaving by the same train in the morning and returning by the same train in the morning and returning by the same.

"Oh, dcar! no," she answered; "he has never been on the continent in his life."

"Never been on the continent?" I asked in surprise.

"Not that I know of, and he has lived with me for twenty years. He has the two rooms on my first floor, and is as regular as clockwork."

"Oh, in that case," I said; "he is not the man I am looking for. The man I want is the greatest traveler I ever met; he has been all over the world."

"Ah, then," said the landlady; "it is not my lodger, for he is a clerk in a lawyer's office, and has been all his life; he gets only two weeks in the summer, and then he runs down to a little place on the coast. He did not give you this address, did he?"

("No, he did not," I answered, "I looked it up in the local directory."

"Then you must be looking for someone else," said she.

This was so very evidently the case that I begged pardon for having troubled her and left. Two days efferward I

This was so very evidently the case that I begged pardon for having troubled her and left. Two days afterward I found my triend on the train as usual. I told him of the strange coincidence that in the same suburb there should live a man the same name as nimself who never traveled, but always went, during his vacation, to the same little place down by the sea.

My friend smiled somewhat warmly, and said: "If you think over our talks you will remember that I never claimed to have been in any of the places I have spoken of."

"Never claimed!" I cried in astonishspoken of."

"Never claimed!" I cried in astonishment. "Why you gave me the most minute particulars of all those places."
"Quite so," he said, "still I never said that I had been to any of them; that was merely your own inference. Will you come and see me in my rooms to-night?"

Going to London in the second-class compartment of a fast train one morning I met the greatest traveler in the world. It hanghened in this way. There was a friend with me whom I met on the railway platform, and we entered together a second-class compartment that contained one passenger, a middle aged man who sat in a corner. It was a wintry day of most disagreeable character. There was snow and sleet and a strong east wind. It rained occasionally, and the wind blew in gusts no matter what was coming down. The compartment was unheated, of course, and we shivered as we sat there. My friend said:

"What a fool any man is to spend the winter in England if he can scrape together enough money to live anywhere else, and even if he has no money he owes it to himself to tramp out of the country."

"You can't do that," I said, "for, if you remember, the country is surrounded by salt water."

"Oh, water!" cried my friend in disgust. "There is water, water every where, pouring down on us, surrounding us, and if it were not for the drop to drink I don't know what we would do. Now where would you rather be on a day like this? I'll tell you what I think yearningly about; it is the Cornicheroad, between Nice and Mentone, with the sun beating upon one and the Mediterranean blue and sparkling away down below on the right hand. What's your choice?"

"Well, if I had my way," I said, "I would go to the island of Sicily; there is a forty-mile road there, I understand," I would go to the island of Sicily; there is a forty-mile road there, I understand,

"Therefore," continued the man in the corner, "if you are wise you will choose for your winter sojourn a little cown that is not much know, although, nufortunately, it is rapidly coming to

THE HUMMING TOP

- The top it hummeth a sweet, sweet song
 To my dear little boy at play—
 Merrily singeth all day long,
 As it spinneth and spinneth away.
 And my doar little boy
 He laugheth with joy
 When he hearst the tuneful tone
 Of that busy thing
 That lovesh to sing
 The song that is all its own.
- Hold fast the string and wind it tight.
 That the song be loud and clear;
 Now burl the top with all your might
 Upon the banquette here;
 And straight from the string
 The joyous thing
 Boundeth and spinneth along,
 And it whires and it chires
 And it birrs and it pursa
 Ever its pretty song.

- Will ever my dear little boy grow old,
 As some have grown before?
 Will ever his heart feel faint and cold,
 When he heartet the songs of your?
 Will ever this toy
 Of my dear little boy,
 When the years lave worn away,
 Sing and and low
 Of the long ago,
 As it singest to me to-day?

A REPORTORIAL

For the fourth time the city editor of the Daily Chronicle stepped into the re-porters' room and looked anxiously at the three men who sat at their deeks: copy was needed, and upon this night of copy was needed, and upon this night of all others.

The sporting editor was at Jacksonville and his "stuff" would come to the night editor. The religious editor was attending a sensational debate, given for charity, between a well-known minister and a prominent and exceedingly clever society woman. The subject matter under discussion was: "The Rights of Woman Relative to Free Speech." The police reporter, upon whom the city editor usually depended for early copy, had gone out with the detectives for a raid on a gambling den in ward nine. The young gentleman who was supposed to edit a column of gossip dally hadn't come in as yet; he was probably attending some social function—a favorite pastime of his. Added to add this it was nine o'clock—not a line of local had been sent in, while the machines were devouring reprint as fast as it could be clipped—and only two of the three reporters in the room were writing. The third was leaning forward on a desk, a cigar in one hand and a pencil in the other; he was looking straight ahead, trying to teep from thinking about something that had a great deal to do with himself. He was a young man—a space-writer on the Chronicle, and who did bits of fic-He was a young man—a space-writer on the Chronicle, and who did bits of fic-tion to a momentary advantage upon cocasions.

To describe him aptly and in a few words, he was twenty-four years old in age, thirty-five in experience and sixty-five in disappointment. He was goodlooking, bright, and had just enough of egotism flavored into his sturdy character to make him thoroughly self-confident.

He walked to a window and stood looking at the night. The arc lamps winked their white electric light out into the wet air and the vivid, pulsating rays seemed to struggle with the damp wind and the drinning rain shaking and way. due to struggle with the damp wind and the dripping rain, shaking and wavering like white flags. As he gazed at this without seeing, Sumner langhed-not because it this without seeing, Sumner langhed-not because it was appropriate, in any sense of the word, but merely because it didn't require any effort of mind or thought; but it was a cynical langh. He was thinking about a woman—all naturally enough—he mentally argued.

After more of this depressing mental discussion, pro and con, he arrived in variably at the same spot—in the parlor where he had been rejected by Mildred Nelson. He remembered how he had stood directly in front of her, as she sat in a big arm-chair, and told her of his love. Never before had he wanted to smoke half so bad, and after he had finished ahe locked half frightened and then had falso had, and after he had finished ake looked half frightened and then had said: "You're joking, surely." And then had falso bed, and after he had finished ake looked half frightened and then her yale, had given her refusal—a simple "no." The look on her face he could not forget, and somehow there rested in his breast the honest conviction, that sheloved him after all, though he could find no reason for such a thought. He was too worried at the time to sait was too late. Maybe it was because her; taker was president of, the Mechanic Banking association. His thoughts took a ludicrous turn and he wondered if he could get a note discounted there.

He gave the window pane a sharp rap as if to relieve himself of some of the bitterness he felt, three whis cigar saide, sat down and began to work furiously was the city editor looked anto the room for the fifth time.

"What shall we do? What shall we The young woman finally arose and left the room; when she returned she was dressed for going out. She went to a window and saw the rain beating down and then turned to her mother, who had not noticed her entrance. What are you going to do?" asked "What are you going to do?" asked the elder woman.

"The best I can," replied the daughter, and left the room the second time. The front door opened and closed.

"Not by yourself," screamed the mother, but the young woman had disappeared into the darkness. With no protection, save the gossamer, she bent her head low and hurried forward. It was only a short walk and she had reached the centre of the city. She heard the city clock striking, but did not stop to count the time; it was eleven o'clock. At a corner she hesitated and looked up at a row of large buildings. In one the lights were burning brightly and there were signs of life and industry. All the others looked dead and dark.

To the lighted building she went and entered and found herself in front of the elevator. She wanted to go to the reporters' rooms, she told the elevator man; and while the hydraulic vehicle was ascending to the sixth floor in its own peculiar and tantalizing gait the woman looked at herself in the mirror that adorned it. She laughed an almost hysterical laugh as she saw her own countenance, pale and frightened looking, staring back at her. She stepped out of the elevator and walked down a short passageway. She could hear the buzz and whirl and rattle and clatter of machinery, and turned into the first doorway. She was met by a stalwart young man, in considerable neglige, who was carrying proof. She started back, saying: "I only wanted neglige, who was carrying proof. She started back, saying: "I only wanted to see Mr. Robert Sumner." In the meantime two other men, costumed in the same manner, had come up and were watching her.

"Mr. Sumner?" repeated the young man, with a strange look on his face. "Oh, this is the way." The other men laughed. He opened the door for her. She stepped inside the front of a desk where a man was leaning over, a shade above his eyes, writing.
"Is this Mr. Sumner?" she asked, not being able to make out his features.

"Is this Mr. Sumner?" she asked, not being able to make out his features.

It was the city editor. He looked up at her, taking in her pale face and wet garments at a single glance. He was about to ask what her erraud was. but instead pointed with his pencil towards the door of the reportorial room. He watched her as she started in and noticed an air of hesitancy about her. He first thought he would call Sumner, but as he was reaching a decision in his mind she entered.

Eleven o'clock it was when Robert Sumner finished his last piece of copy and sent it in to the city a tree of the control of t THE DAIRYMAN.

"Mildred," he cried. "What are you doing here?"

"Oh, Robert," she half sobbed, "haven't you heard about it? Don't you know all about it? Won't you keep it out of the paper? It's all I sak of you. Please keep it out."

"What is it?" demanded Sumner, almost fiercely, hardly knowing what to suspect in her bewilderment, and despairing of what to say when he should know.

The woman, very white, but upright and dignified, said: "My father is an embezzler!"

and digitised, said: "My father is an embezzler!"

And she told him all she knew.
"Certainly; of course I'll keep it out. That's all right," said Sumner, horrified.
"But," he aided, as though it were merely an afterthought and did not enter into any very great consideration—though he knew better himself, and trusted to her ignorance—"we'll see the city editor."

Together they went and Sumnerspoke to him. He told the city editor the story as he had it from the woman, and the city editor thranghout it J was mentally mapping out the space he could give it and where he should put it. Sunner read his thoughts, for he concluded quickly, sharply, and said immediately:

"But you are not going to use it; it is not to be printed! It's only known among the directors of the bank."

"Not go int" he said, in a surprised tone. "Why, that's the best story we've got to night. We'll use it, of course. I want a column. You're my best man handy. Go work it; it means ten dollars on space."

"It is not to be used," said Sumner, doggedly. "It is not to be used," said Sumner, doggedly.
"Why don't you want it to go in, Sumner," asked the editor, finally.
"Can't you give me some reason?"
"No." said Sumner, "but it's not go-

"Can't you give me some reason?"

"No," said Sumner, "but it's not going in."

"Is it," asked the city editor, ignoring Sumner's mandatory tone, "on any personal ground? If it is, why"—and the city editor made a gesture of unconditional surrender. Sumner looked sideways at Miss Nelson. She laid a hand on his arm and stood, all expectant. A happy light came into the young man's eyes.

"Well, sir," began Sumner, stammeringly, "you see, sir, that is, you understand"—he could feel Miss Nelson vatching him—'he, the gentleman under discussion and consideration, is to be my father-in-law!"

"Oh, Robert!" exclaimed Miss Nelson, but she did not remove her hand; the city editor stood up and congratulated both. Confused and embarrassed, Sumner led the young lady to the elevator, and, while that affair was slowly hoisting itself, explained himself.

"I had to, you see," said he, "and, of

"I had to, you see," said he, "and, of course"—he became more confused still!

—"why, of course"—

"This was the reason," she said, stopping him with a kiss, modest and

THE GREAT SOUTH AMERICAN

Stomach Liver Cure

The Most Astonishing Medical Discovery of the Last One Hundred Years. It is Pleasant to the Taste as the Sweetest Nectar. It is Safe and Harmless as the Purest Milk. This wonderful Nervine Tonic has only recently been introduced into this country by the proprietors and manufacturers of the Great South American Nervine Tonic, and yet its great value as a curative agent has long been known by a few of the most learned physicians, who have not brought its merits and value to the knowledge of the This medicine has completely solved the problem of the cure of indigestion, dyspepsia, and diseases of the general nervous system. It is also of the greatest value in the cure of all forms of failing health from whatever cause. It performs this by the great nervine tonic qualities, which it possesses, and by its great curative powers upon the digestiveorgans, the stomach, the liver and the bowels. No remedy compares: with this wonderfully valuable Nervine Tonic as a builder and strengthener of the life forces of the human body, and as a great renewer of a broken-down constitution. It is also of more real permanent value in the treatment and cure of diseases of the lungs than any consumptions remedy ever used on this continent. It is a marvelous cure for nervyousness of females of all ages. Ladies who are approaching the critical period known as change in life, should not fail to use this great Nervine Tonic, almost constantly, for the space of two or three years. It will carry them safely over the danger. This great strengthener and curative is of inestimable value to the aged and infirm, because its great energizing properties will give them a new hold on life. It will add the energizing properties will give them a new hold on life. It will add ten or fifteen years to the lives of many of those who will use a half dozen bottles of the remedy each year.

As the nervous system must supply all the power by which the vital forces of the body are carried on, it is the first to suffer for want of perfect nutrition. Ordinary food does not contain a sufficient quantity of the kind of nutriment necessary to repair the wear our present mode of living and labor imposes upon the nerves. For this reason it becomes necessary that a nerve food be supplied. This South American Nervine has been found by analysis to contain the essential elements out of which nerve tissue is formed. This accounts for its universal adaptability to the cure of all forms of nervous derangement.

A SWORN CURE FOR ST. VITAS' DANCE OR CHOREA. CRAWFORDSVILLE, IND., June 22, 1887.

My daughter, eleven years old, was severely a dicted with St. Vitus' Dance or Chorea. We gave her three and one-half bottles of South American Nervine and she is completely restored. I believe it will cure every case of St. Vitus' Dance. I have kept it in my family for two years, and am sure it is the greatest remedy in the world for Indigestion and Dyspepsia, and for all, forms of Nervous Disorders and Failing Health, from whatever cause.
