English Affairs,

Mr. Gladstone, recognizing that a large majority of the new British Parliament, has been returned, opposed to his Home Rule scheme, has placed his resignation in the Queen's hands, and Lord Salisbury, the Conservative leader, has been called upon to form a new ministry. After receiving the summons, Salisbury's first act was to consult Lord Hartington, the leader of the dissenting Liberals, and to endeavor to induce him to enter the Cabinet. "The hoat is trimmed with sail and oar And all prepared to quit the shore . Then off we go, with wind and tide, Across the sunny waves to glide Then row! row! row! Merrily over the waves we go

The words of the boating song floated lightly over the waters, and died in many echoes among the trees on the river bank. They brought a smile to the lips of Grant Clayton, artist and idler, as he lay under the shadow of those same trees. Lazily he lifted his handsome head, resting it on his hand, and looked for

The dark, glowing face went with him the whole night long; it haunted the reception rooms of Mr. Nettleby, whose guest he was, during the following day, which was one of constant rain, and kept him in doors.

He made half a dozen copies of his hasty sketch, but not one of them did justice to the face of his "lady of the lake," He tore them up in despair, and wondered what ailed him, as many wiser has flown from the bow of Cupid, and the little god laughs to see how certain was

When the sun came out, on the third day, a very handsome young artist might have been found in the very spot from which he had seen the small boat first; but, although he watched for it until he almost lost his dinner, it never came.

"I am a masculine Mariane," he told himself, in disgust. "She cometh not, forget? Did you not want me?" and I'm making a fool of myself."
