In Reading.

It is The Correct Thing.

To remember that there are books and books and books. Good books, bad books, instructive books, false books, frivolous books, corrupting books, senseless books, amusing books, edifying books, learned books, shallow books, coarse books, insidious books, sensational books, prosaic books, immoral books, spiritual books; books devoted to every science, art, fad or fable under the sun.

That people read for pleasure, profit, or relaxation. To read none but good books. That as no one can read all the good books, even if life were a dozen times longer than it usually is, it would seem that sensible people would never be found not "passing the time," but wasting the time over books that are worthless or distinctly bad.

To have some system about one's reading if one would derive lasting profit from the books read. To consider money spent for good books as money well invested. For the average woman to examine her conscience well in regard to what she has read during her past life and to make a firm purpose of amendment.

To remember that a mind which is fed on newspapers, fashion magazines, sensational and trashy novels, to the exclusion of everything else, soon gets incapacitated for heavier and more wholesome food.

For a woman to make an inviolable rule never to read anything which she would be ashamed to acknowledge having read to the man whose good opinion she values most highly, never to lend a bad book, no matter how corrupted already the taste of the person soliciting it.

To bury any corrupting book which may happen to come into one's possession, either through ignorance of its nature when purchasing it, or in any other way. To remember that one's library is an index to one's character.

To know that a taste for good reading can be cultivated. To know that good novels may be both interesting and instructive. That the great Cardinal Newman himself did not disdain a good novel.

To remember that novels are like mushrooms: they should be partaken of sparingly and great care used in their selection. For each mind to select the food best suited to it, provided always that it is the best of its kind.

To remember that a few books well studied are more beneficial than a great many cursorily read. To keep a note-book in which is entered every book and important article read during the year, with a short summary of their contents.

To know that Cardinal Newman, Gladstone, and many other great scholars practised this rule. For cultivated Catholics to know the Catholic position in all the agitating questions of the day. For parents to permit no books in their house which might have a demoralizing effect on their children.

To be as inquisitive as a person who recommends a bad book as at one who would mislead you into a mud-hole.

To remember that a mud can not fall on a white gown without leaving a stain, so neither can the mud of bad books fall on the soul without leaving a mark.

For American girls of a certain kind to remember that some of the noted French novelists whose works they so eagerly devour would no more permit their own daughters to read one of their books than they would allow them to enter a plague-stricken hospital.

To remember that there is a good deal of fallacy in the much-quoted saying that "To the pure all things are pure," for practical demonstration has proven that mud is mud, disease is disease, no matter what angelic purity may characterize their victims. Of course some natures have an abnormal capacity for getting soiled,—just as some have constitutions for getting ill, but that fact does not lessen the muddiness of the mud, nor is a tendency to leave a spot wherever it touches.

Good Books.

Not all the reverses of life can take away the delight of a good book; nor is there a better way of "making ourselves" once we have left school, and of acquiring education and refinement, than by communing with the great minds who have written their thoughts for the good of those who live after them. A good book is the very best of friends. We may quarrel with it and be sure that our confidence will never be betrayed. We may have it near us whenever we wish—a trait in which a book is unlike our other friends who have all to be sought for and handled with care if we wish to retain their friendship. And besides in the matter of books we may choose our own companions whereas in every-day life we are forced to make friends of those whom we meet, whether or not they have similar tastes and characteristics as ourselves. The man or woman, therefore, who desires to have good friends, who aims at more than mere mediocrity, who loves to live in the past as well as the present, and to converse with the great minds who have enlightened the world, will secure and keep ever at hand those dearest of all friends—good books.—Home Journal and Messenger.

Items of Interest.

Says the Catholic Standard and Times: "A husband who gets drunk has no remedy against a wife who goes off to church without getting him his breakfast. So ruled Recorder Lazarus of Bayonne, N. J., last week. A woman has a right to attend her religious duties before her husband's breakfast, he decided. If such lazy fellows do not get up to attend to their, they have no right to prevent their (much) better halves for trying to do their duty."

"As a rule," says the Catholic Union and Times, "remarkable men have no remedy against a wife who goes off to church without getting him his breakfast. So ruled Recorder Lazarus of Bayonne, N. J., last week. A woman has a right to attend her religious duties before her husband's breakfast, he decided. If such lazy fellows do not get up to attend to their, they have no right to prevent their (much) better halves for trying to do their duty."

Father Allan Macdonald, the famous priest and scholar, of Erikskay, the lonely island of the Hebrides group, is dead. At the interment great grief was shown by the entire population of Erikskay, which is Catholic, the ancient religion of the island never having been affected by the "Reformation" upheaval. The islanders were left undisturbed because they had no property to lose.

Father Massimo Massaroni, of Rome, who sold his famous art collection to Henry Walters, of Baltimore, Md., died Monday, October 23, at the age of eighty-eight. He lived inside the Vatican, where he was a characteristic figure. Father Massaroni helped Pope Pius IX. in his flight to Gaeta when Rome was proclaimed a republic under Mazzini and Garibaldi.

Rev. Father Hays, the great apostle of temperance, who is in Wellington, New Zealand, is recovering from an acute attack of pneumonia, says the New Zealand Times of September 13. He recently underwent an operation for catarrh. The doctors have forbidden his return to England until winter is over, as they fear the cold and damp might bring on consumption, to avoid which was the object of his visit to Australasia.

The money from the sale of religious houses in France is not likely to reach the fabulous sums predicted by Waldeck-Roussseau. One which was valued at 207,000 francs was sold for 20,000 francs. Out of this came the legal expenses. In one instance when the property brought 33,000 francs the lawyers charged 24,000 francs.

Of much importance to the whole Church is the news given by the Abbe Oletin to a representative of the "Gaulois" on his return to France from Rome, where he has been as a member of the "Workingmen's Pilgrimage." The abbe, who had a special audience with the Pope, states that as soon as the separation bill has been passed by the French Senate the Bishops will hold a general meeting, and with the approval of the Holy See, will adopt resolutions to meet the new situation. His Holiness, the abbe added, intends to convoke an Ecumenical Council as soon as circumstances will permit. It will sit at Rome, and will be a continuation of the Vatican Council which was interrupted in 1870. There is certainly an ample programme of work for a council to undertake. There are the social and educational questions and numerous administrative matters which might well receive attention. The retention of the obnoxious, a subject to which Leo XIII. devoted so much thought; the bearing of modern discoveries on Biblical criticism, and the position created for the religious orders will also, it may be assumed, receive consideration from the council.

Father B noon, the youngest son of the late Anglican Archbishop, is rapidly taking his place in the front rank of English novelists. His latest book, 'The King's Achievement,' has only just been published. It deals with one of the most dramatic epochs in English history, the time when Henry VIII. defied the power of the Papacy. It contains finished studies of Thomas Cromwell, Bishop Fisher and Sir Thomas More.

"Did you ever attend and follow carefully a Nuptial Mass?" asks the Pall Mall Calendar. "In the Missal there is a special Mass for the bride and groom, and everything is laid down in the Rubrics with as much detail as when the Mass is said for the ordination of a priest, or for the blessing of the holy oils. The Nuptial Mass is, indeed, beautiful and holy, and, whether there be a thousand present or only the conspiring parties, it is always the same—beautiful in its symbolism and its association with the Holy Sacrifice of the Mass, and in every detail the same for the prince and the poorest. This is the Church's ideal; it is the normal way for her children to enter upon their new state in life; and she rejoices whenever or wherever her children are thus united."

"The Catholic Church has favored and blessed the stage, whenever and wherever the stage was kept within the bounds of sound morality," says the Catholic Transcript. "She had no sympathy for the Puritanical rigor which proscribed every actor as the son of the devil. She had no part, on the other hand, in the depravity of the Restoration, when playwrights seemed to vie with one another in flinging filth into the faces of the groundlings. For the morally clean and wholesome stage, the Catholic Church, let it be repeated, has nothing but admiration and encouragement. Far from condemning the stage, the Church rightly claims to be the mother of the English drama. The miracle plays were of her begetting. So were the moralities. She would employ the stage to inculcate historical and moral truths, and she scorned not to make it her handmaid in the edification and education of her children. So long as the English stage remained true to its birthright, it was the much favored offspring of the Church."

At the interment great grief was shown by the entire population of Erikskay, which is Catholic, the ancient religion of the island never having been affected by the "Reformation" upheaval. Every Hour Delayed IN CURING A COLD IS DANGEROUS.

MISCELLANEOUS.

A gentleman who had been at great expense to adorn his garden with statuary was much chagrined recently to hear an old man from the country say to his wife as they gazed upon the statues: "Jess see what a waste, Belinda! Here's no less than six scarecrows in this ten-foot patch, and any one of 'em would keep the crows from a five-acre field."

Mrs. Fred Laine, St. George, Ont., writes: "My little girl would cough so at night that neither she nor I could get any rest. I gave her Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup and am thankful to say it cured her cough quickly."

Minard's Liniment Cures Distemper.

A very loquacious lady, calling one day to consult her physician, talked on and on with such volubility that the latter could not get a word in edgewise.

Growing impatient, he at length told her to put out her tongue which she did. He then said:—"Now, please keep it there till you have heard what I have got to say to you."

The elections in the new Province of Alberta on Thursday last resulted in favor of the Liberals by a large majority. As far as appears from the information published the Government have twenty of the members elected and the Opposition five.

KING Edward the Seventh, our Gracious Sovereign, celebrated his sixty fourth birthday on Thursday last, the 9th, inst. He was born on the 9th, of November 1841, apart from the firing of a royal salute, the day was not particularly observed.

It is promised by the journals which supported Mayor McClellan in the New York election that he will not claim the mayoralty unless he has been honestly as well as legally elected. There is nothing in the mayor's public career to throw doubt on this undertaking.

Mr. Cumiskey has issued a card of some length to the electors of the third district of Queen's County. In this card Mr. Cumiskey makes a number of statements regarding himself, and the Government which he supports;

These are the very questions which the electors of that district should take into account before casting their votes on the 22nd inst. Do they think a man guilty of so many infractions of the election law worthy of further support?

A Boston Incident.

The endorsement of Mayor Weaver by the people of Philadelphia and of District Attorney Jerome in New York had their counterpart in a smaller way in the election of John B. Moran as district attorney of Suffolk county, Massachusetts.

The constituencies in which there will be elections on Wednesday, the 22nd inst., are: Antigonish—Rendered vacant by the appointment of Mr. McIsaac (Lib.) to the commission for the construction of the government end of the G. T. P.

Elections in the States.

The first reports of the elections in the United States on Tuesday of last week indicated that the Democrats had carried the State of Massachusetts and elected their Governor and Lieutenant-Governor. These reports were not strictly correct, as the Republican Governor and Lieutenant-Governor were elected; but only by narrow margins.

American Ships Join Salute to King Edward.

Thousands watched on the banks of the Hudson River, New York, at noon on Thursday last while six British warships in union with double that number American men-of-war fired a national salute of 21 guns in honor of King Edward, who celebrated that day his 64th birthday.

The Polish Situation.

An official communication issued at St. Petersburg Monday morning recalls the fact that the imperial ukase of Dec. 26 last established bases for the gradual renovation of the civil life of Russian subjects; and points out that the measures adopted in pursuance of that ukase afforded equally the Polish people the same rights as the Russians.

Dr. Nansen at the Court of St. James.

Nansen, the explorer, whose attempt to reach the North Pole, as told by himself, is one of the most fascinating narrations of daring and adventure ever published, has now fairly embarked on a diplomatic career. He is the first minister to Great Britain from the kingdom of Norway.

Spectacular Features of New York Election Contest.

The contest over the New York mayoralty election, inaugurated by William Randolph Hearst, the municipal ownership candidate, developed into strange and spectacular features. For 12 hours the nearly 800,000 ballots cast in last Tuesday's election choked the streets in the vicinity of the headquarters of the board of elections in 6th avenue between 41st and 42nd streets.

Rev. Father Ryan and Mr. McLeod, Homeopaths from Montreal, concluded a very successful mission in St. Paul's Church, Summerside on Sunday last. This week they are giving a mission at Miscouche.

Mr. Justice R. M. Meredith has been promoted from the High Court of Ontario to the Appeal Court in the place of Mr. Justice Macdougall who has been promoted to the Supreme Court of Canada.

In the Massachusetts elections on the 8th inst., an Islander, Fred J. McLeod, barrister-at-law, was elected Democratic State Senator for Cambridge. Mr. McLeod is a son of the late Hector McLeod of this city.

Thirteen hundred and seventy-four Russian prisoners, including 1352 blue jackets from Fort Arthur, and one Colonel, one Lieutenant Colonel, and eleven soldiers, captured at Kullenberg and Telian, have been released and turned over to the Russian representatives. The Japanese provided accommodation for those desiring it.

The Emperor of Japan received in audience on Saturday Bishop Wm. H. O'Connell, of Portland Me., the Pope's special envoy. Bishop O'Connell was presented by Premier Katsura. Bishop O'Connell was sent by the Pope as special envoy to Japan to care for the interests of the Catholic Church in the Empire.

Another Japanese merchantman was blown up on Monday by a floating mine off the coast of China. News of the second disaster was brought to San Francisco by the Pacific mail liner China which arrived there Sunday from the Orient. The ship lost was the "Meiji." She struck a mine off Minohay, October 13—Only one seaman was drowned.

On Saturday night Frank Sharam, aged 22, of Gloucester, near Murray Harbour died from effects of injuries received on the previous day. While he was leading a horse from the field, a younger horse came up and kicked at the animal. The hoofs missed the latter but struck Sharam on the abdomen. Medical aid was summoned and the case at first did not look serious, but inflammation set in, with fatal results.

All attempts to float the Allan Line's Bavarian have been upset by the burning of the Davies wrecking schooner. This schooner, which was working at the Bavarian has on board four pumps and the entire wrecking plant. The Bavarian, it is learned, struck a snag on a reef and efforts are now being made to plank the engine room and make water tight, the idea being to float her by compressed air.

A project for a sweeping extension of the franchise in elections to the National Assembly, promised by the Emperor of Russia is published. Count Witte's new government appears to be getting fairly under way. The cabinet with which he will undertake the difficult task of guiding the nation on its new course of constitutionalism, and preventing the radical and agitatory events from driving it on the rocks of revolution, is now beginning to take form.

North Sydney advice of the 9th says: Passengers by the Bruce report heavy falls of snow during the past couple of days along the railway line in Newfoundland. The incoming express on the last trip went through an average fall of nine inches between Bay of Islands and Channel. Near Bay St. George a bank over two feet deep was ploughed through for some distance. The trials on her arrival at Channel presented a mild winter appearance, being completely snowed over.

A Halifax despatch of the 10th says: The German Admiralty Court, sitting at Hamburg, held an investigation into the collision between the steamships Albano and Parisian, which occurred off Halifax harbor last March. In summing up the Court commended the Albano from blame for its faulty management, and says that the whole question hinged on which ship should have given way. The court held that the accident was caused by the Parisian because she did not comply with the regulations (article 19) for the prevention of collisions of vessels at sea and give way to other steamers.

The Canadian Commercial Agent at Bristol writes to the Department of Trade and Commerce at Ottawa to say that the Welsh coal owners intend on account of the high prices for Anthracite in this country to enter into competition with Pennsylvania miscuwaners in the Canadian market. It is said that a higher grade of coal can be sold in Canada from Wales for less than the figure paid for the United States coal. The intention is to ship Welsh Anthracite to Quebec and have it broken up into the size required for use.

The Canadian Pacific Railway will forward 2,000,000 bushels of wheat from Fort William to St. John, N. B., by the all rail route, and operations on this project have already commenced. There are now being shipped 80 cars of wheat a day for the long haul. It is unusual at this season of the year to take wheat by the all rail route, but this is being now done by the Canadian Pacific to furnish ballast for the company's transatlantic boats on the first winter sailing from St. John. The company will forward the wheat over the line from Fort William at a low rate, and thus keep the business for Canadians.

King Edward's birthday honor list contains few features of general interest, and chiefly contains individuals who are rewarded for service to the Crown. Duchess of Fife, eldest daughter of His Majesty, is authorized to bear the title of "Princess Royal," and her daughters are to be designated as "Highness 2" and "Princesses." Baron Windsor, first Commissioner of Works, is created an Earl, and Baron Weymouth becomes a Viscount. Cecil Guinness is made a Knight and Professor George Howard Darwin President of the British Association is appointed a Knight Commander of the Bath. The Colonial list includes Hon. J. R. Chowan, a member of the Egyptian Senate, who is made a Knight Commander of the Order of St. Michael and St. George, and a similar order is bestowed on George Grenville, British Minister to Mexico.

They were greeted with salutes from the forts and warships and were accorded an enthusiastic reception by the crowds lining the sea front. The city was filled with visitors from all parts of India. It was decided that the Royal Garrison would go out on November 15. This was the last date agreed upon. But December 7th has now been fixed. Orders have been sent out from Ottawa to move one company of the Royal Canadian Regiment from London, Toronto, St. John's (Quebec) and Quebec, and two companies of Artillery to Halifax by a later date. These orders apply to militia men.

Progress of the C. P. R.

The Canadian Pacific Railway Company is protesting vigorously against the Allan's request for a ten year Atlantic Mail Contract being granted. The Canadian Pacific Company have informed the government that the letting of such a contract will interfere with the transportation plans which the C. P. R., is perfecting. The C. P. R., declare that they are going to so improve the service on the Atlantic and across Canada, and the Pacific that they will divert the whole Oriental mail passenger business centering at Hong Kong to the Canadian route. They have planned to reduce the time from Hong Kong to Vancouver from 12 to 17 knots. The speed of the Pacific steamers from 12 to 17 knots. The time across the continent will also be cut down from six to four days, by increasing the average train speed from 30 to 45 miles per hour. CHAPTER V.

"Mon Dieu!" said the Prince, who was visibly excited by the long story his secretary had just been telling him,

Hood's Sarsaparilla

days ago for his home in Scotland.

Nothing would do but that the Prince must follow at once.

The Prince was determined, and they had taken the night mail for Scotland.

He had changed to the little station nearest Dalrymple's home.

He and now were bumping over a very uneven road in a very medieval hack.

The hangings of the conveyance smelled damp.

The Prince felt twinges of rheumatism, and he had had little sleep the night before.

He leaned back and closed his eyes, then opened them with a start.

"I think we have arrived, Monsieur le Prince," said Brabant.

"Look, there is Monsieur le Docteur's house." Even as he spoke the hack had rattled up to the door.

Brabant alighted and helped his master down.

The Prince leaned heavily on him while looking around with some signs of interest.

The house, well and solidly built, stood on an eminence that commanded a magnificent view of mountain and lake.

The air was glorious. An old-fashioned garden, bright with flowers, led down to the road.

Bliss came curled upward from the tall chimney and was lost in the bluer ether above.

Everywhere was an atmosphere of silence and peace.

The Prince sighed, then turned as the house door opened and a tall old man, dressed as a Highland gillie, stepped forward.

Yes, Dr. Dalrymple lived here; he was at home and would be pleased to see his guest.

The Prince entered a room that was just as Margaret Dalrymple had left it.

On a large open fireplace some logs were burning.

The ceiling, of heavy beams, was black with age.

The small diamond panes of the windows let in a view that was enchantment.

About the whole room, with its books and silver lamp, its old-fashioned furniture and pictures, was an air of refinement and solid comfort.

Jeanne had certainly fulfilled her part of keeping the place in good order.

The Prince sighed again. So it was here the boy had grown up instead of his own magnificent chateau.

Well, it might have been worse. The door opened and Armand Dalrymple passed on the threshold, overcome by astonishment.

The Prince had given no name, and here to the bewildered gaze of the young surgeon, still pale from illness and shock, stood a man whom he had supposed was still living a semi-invalid in France, some hundreds of miles away.

He advanced into the room, native courtesy and hospitality on his own health dominant.

"Monsieur le Prince," he said, "this is an honor; but I am concerned to see you at the end of such a journey; and surely you know—touching his empty sleeve with his left hand—surely you know I can do nothing for you professionally."

"But," asked Armand, "was it necessary to cast me off to the care of charity?"

The Prince shrugged his shoulders. Here was a man whose idea of right and wrong did not tally with the ways of his—the Prince's world.

Was it his Scotch bringing up, or was it the spirit, reproduced in her son, of his young English wife, whose heart he had broken? Perhaps it was both.

Heredity and environment had moulded Armand; and the only quality he had received from the Prince was a pride that made him revolt against acknowledging relationship to such a man.

Nevertheless, he must listen; and long the Prince talked, relating all the circumstances of his marriage—of his second wife's history, of Armand's birth, and of the fact that he had recognized him after the operation by his wonderful likeness to his mother.

"I owe you my life," said the Prince, "and when I found out through Brabant that you were my son, I swore I would acknowledge you, and leave you my entire fortune."

"Never," said Armand.

"What! almost scorned the Prince, starting from his chair, you refuse to let me acknowledge you, and make you my heir?"

"Monsieur le Prince," said the doctor, quietly, "I am indebted to you for the cash—for letting me know my mother was above reproach; my birth without a stain. Beyond that I owe you nothing. My real existence—all that I know of a mother's tenderness, of a father's protection, of love, honor, life—have been here; therefore my choice is to remain here, to be known by the name of my foster parents, a name I am more proud to bear than I would be of any title you could give me."

The Prince was near to choking.

Excitement, fatigue, the pathetic sight of the dark pale face and empty sleeves were all telling on him; but he had had his will, and pulled himself together with a mighty effort.

"With your leave, Monsieur," he said, "I will send my secretary outside. I have come this long journey to see you on a matter of vital importance, and I would prefer to see you alone."

"Certainly," said Dalrymple. Then with his habitual kindness and courtesy he turned to the secretary and asked him if he would like to go over the glebe with Robert.

Brabant murmured an indistinct assent, and presently the tall old Scotsman appeared and the two departed together. As they disappeared Dalrymple turned to his guest after closing the door.

"With your leave," said the Prince, "we will converse in French, although this place seems lonely, walls have ears."

"By all means," answered Dalrymple. What would the old man have to say?

The Prince moved in his chair uneasily.

"You are not comfortable," said the younger man; and he placed a cushion behind the Prince, and brought a bench for his feet.

"Listen, Mon Ami," he said; "I should have some wine, Sir—or is there anything else I can give you?"

But the Prince waved his hand, so Armand sat down. "I am ready," he said, "and you?"

"Where shall I begin?" Then he straightened up in his chair, his keen blue eyes fixed on Armand's dark ones, his fine aquiline features against their background of dark mahogany looking like delicate carved ivory; his handsome head held erect and proud, as if to defy the moment of weakness just past.

So he sat for several seconds motionless. The silence was unbroken until the clock struck three. This, the hour of Peter's denial, was the hour of the Prince's acknowledgment.

"Armand Dalrymple," he said, "you wonder to see me here. I have journeyed from France to Scotland to make reparation—to tell you—the Prince's pale face grew paler, and he spoke slowly—"to tell you—that you—are—my son."

Every trace of color left Armand's face, but he did not speak.

"Listen," said the Prince. "You are the heir to my name and estates. Your mother was my second wife, though never openly acknowledged. Then, too, she died when you were born."

"Who was she?" asked Armand, hoarsely—"my mother?"

"She was an English girl," answered the Prince, "living in Britain as governess in a noble family. I met her there soon after my first wife died. Mon Dieu! she was beautiful, and so pious. You are like her," he added, "in looks, and, if I mistake not, in piety." There was a note that sounded not unlike sarcasm in the old man's voice.

"Great God!" said Armand, "and you left me in a foundling asylum! How was that, Monsieur le Prince, if I was your legitimate son?"

The Prince shifted uneasily in his chair.

"At that time," he said—and there was a note of pride in his voice—"my two sons by my first wife were living. To have acknowledged another marriage which would have been unknown to my sovereign would have brought about disastrous complications at the time."

"But," asked Armand, "was it necessary to cast me off to the care of charity?"

The Prince shrugged his shoulders. Here was a man whose idea of right and wrong did not tally with the ways of his—the Prince's world.

Was it his Scotch bringing up, or was it the spirit, reproduced in her son, of his young English wife, whose heart he had broken? Perhaps it was both.

Heredity and environment had moulded Armand; and the only quality he had received from the Prince was a pride that made him revolt against acknowledging relationship to such a man.

Nevertheless, he must listen; and long the Prince talked, relating all the circumstances of his marriage—of his second wife's history, of Armand's birth, and of the fact that he had recognized him after the operation by his wonderful likeness to his mother.

"I owe you my life," said the Prince, "and when I found out through Brabant that you were my son, I swore I would acknowledge you, and leave you my entire fortune."

"Never," said Armand.

"What! almost scorned the Prince, starting from his chair, you refuse to let me acknowledge you, and make you my heir?"

"Monsieur le Prince," said the doctor, quietly, "I am indebted to you for the cash—for letting me know my mother was above reproach; my birth without a stain. Beyond that I owe you nothing. My real existence—all that I know of a mother's tenderness, of a father's protection, of love, honor, life—have been here; therefore my choice is to remain here, to be known by the name of my foster parents, a name I am more proud to bear than I would be of any title you could give me."

"Mon Dieu!" said the Prince.

are you mad? Do you know that as my son you are related to half the reigning families of Europe; and you dare refuse my name for a paltry Scotch one!"

"Yes," said Armand, "I must refuse, and from the fullest conviction that my choice is the right one; the one in which my heart and spirit will be free."

The Prince was leaning back breathing hard. Here was an element undreamed of in his cynical and worldly life. The desire to acknowledge Armand as his heir had first been born of a wish to outwit and disappoint his cousin, E. Aile. But Armand's personality, his dark, handsome face; the spirit that bade him refuse the splendid future offered him, were combining to awaken in the old Prince's selfish heart some hitherto unknown gnawings of remorse and pain.

Here, indeed, was a son to lean on and be proud of. Why had he been such a fool as to abandon him in his babyhood? In the depths of his disappointment the Prince groaned. Could he not make one last appeal? He turned to the young man, whose face showed plainly that he, too, was suffering, and involuntarily laid a hand on the left arm that happened to be nearest him.

"Listen, Mon Ami," he said; "I think twice before you reject me finally. I am an old man. I shall not live long. When I am gone my wealth will open to you splendid opportunities. You think your career is over; but, man, it is just begun. Your opinion, your scientific gifts, can make you the greatest medical authority in Europe. You can no longer operate, 'tis true, but you can do more. My wealth will open to you whole avenues that now are closed. You can found hospitals, and easily become the greatest consulting surgeon in Europe with my money to back you up. The name of the Prince Doctor will godown to the ages."

"I have thought of all this," said Armand, "and my decision is unchanged. And now, Monsieur le Prince, I think there is nothing more for us to say. Had I not better ring for your secretary?"

"Do," said the Prince, falling back in his chair.

"You must not leave without rest and refreshment," said Armand, courteously. "I will ring for my housekeeper." But the old Prince arose. Now that his mission had failed, he was in a hurry to be gone. There was just time to make connections with the night mail for London.

His leave-taking of Armand was brief; this strange new feeling of intolerable remorse was growing within him. Let him get away from those sad brown eyes which had haunted him for a time thirty years ago; once back at Fontainebleau, it would be easier to forget!

"Brabant," he said, as they drove rapidly toward the station—"Brabant, that man is a fool or a knave, or perhaps neither. Yes, Monsieur le Prince," answered Brabant, obediently.

"The world would have called it a sacrifice, Virginia."

The young wife turned her lovely face to the speaker.

"I understand," she said. "But it was not so, Armand; your choice left you spirit free; for the rest, all honor, and involuntarily Armand and Virginia took up his song. The bird winged its way higher and higher in the morning sun.

"Glory to God in the highest," it seemed to sing: "Glory to God—to God in the highest."

Onward and upward it flew, till bird and song were lost in the blue eternal space.

The Tablet's Roman correspondent gives an interesting account of the extent to which the scholars of Europe are availing themselves of Leo XIII's permission, renewed by Pius X, to examine the Vatican Archives. The Prussian delegation has already published seven octavo volumes of 500 pages each; the French delegation has issued fourteen quarto volumes of the "Act of the Popes"; the British society was not formed till 1901, but it has published one volume on the relations between England and the Holy See, Belgium, Holland, Sweden, Russia, Hungary, Turkey and Japan, all have representatives in Rome for the purpose of clearing up obscure questions in the history of their respective countries.

A WOMAN'S BACK IS THE MAINSPRING OF HER PHYSICAL SYSTEM.

The Slightest Back-ache, if Neglected, is Liable to Cause Years of Terrible Suffering. No woman can be strong and healthy unless the kidneys are well, and regular in their action. When the kidneys are ill, the whole body is ill, for the poisons which the kidneys ought to have filtered out of the blood are left in the system. The female constitution is naturally more subject to kidney disease than a man's, and what is more, a woman's work is never done—her whole life is one continuous strain.

DOAN'S KIDNEY PILLS

They act directly on the kidneys, and make them strong and healthy. Mrs. Mary Galley, Auburn, N.S., writes: "For over four months I was troubled with a lame back and was unable to turn in bed without help. I was induced by a friend to try Doan's Kidney Pills. After using two-thirds of a box my back was as well as ever. These symptoms if not taken in time and cured at once, will cause years of terrible kidney suffering. All these symptoms, and in fact, these diseases may be cured by the use of DOAN'S KIDNEY PILLS. Price 50 cents per box or three boxes for $1.25 at all dealers, or sent direct on receipt of price.
