For Her Sake;

The Murder in Ferness Wood.

"I suppose," he continued, "that is how we pose for the benefit of our admirers—an air of patient resignation, pensive contemplation, no doubt is exceedingly attractive! The sooner you give up such nonsense the better."

There were times when she shrank in fear from his flashing eyes, his angry face and upraised hand. She shrank now and he saw it.

"Get up," he cried, "and behave like a rational, sensible woman!"

"I am going back to the house," said Diana, trying to speak calmly. "Will you let me pass, Lord Clanronald?"

"No, madam, I will not let you pass," he answered, furiously. "I can remember how often on this very terrace you slighted me, sneered at me, and gloried in your lofty assumption over me. It is my turn now. I shall speak my mind, and you shall listen!"

and he gave vent to such a shower of abuse, such a volley of oaths, such a violent display of anger, that Diana shuddered.

She had the good sense not to answer him until he was silent from sheer exhaustion.

"I wonder," said Diana, as she looked at her husband in the face, "what my father would say to you, Lord Clanronald, if he heard you using such language to me?"

He did not know and he did not care. She was his wife. The law of the land had made her his, and neither father nor any one else could interfere.

"I know that," she said, raising her lovely eyes to his face, "only too well. Sometimes I am sorry for you, as I am for myself. We can neither of us dissolve the tie that binds us. Nothing but death can give us relief."

"No," he assented, sullenly; "that is true—nothing but death. Still," he added, "I have no idea of dying to relieve or please you. On that point you may set your mind at rest."

"I will pass, if you please, Lord Clanronald," said Diana—for he stood before her so that she could not advance.

"Not until you have heard the last word," he declared.

And then the torrent of abuse recommenced. He knew how utterly repulsive such language was to Diana, for she had told him many a time that she would far rather he should lash her with a whip than distress her with such dreadful words. For this reason he took particular pleasure in it.

She shuddered, and her very soul revolted at his horrible language fell on her ear. Then, when he had exhausted his whole vocabulary, when his passion had abated and his anger cooled, he went away suddenly, leaving his wife standing half dazed. And it was thus that Sir Royal found her, white, shuddering, and despairing, her face colorless, her hands trembling. He went up to her.

"You are in trouble again, Diana?" he said.

There were no tears, no sobs this time. He saw nothing in her face but absolute despair.

"I am always in trouble," she answered. "Oh Royal, does Heaven never send death to the unhappy?"

"No," he replied. "But Heaven often sends an avenger where death is not sent, Diana, that pale, trouble face of yours is driving me mad!"

CHAPTER LIV.

The twentieth of May was Lady Cameron's birthday, and Peter Cameron had determined to have a family reunion and a grand ball in her honor. He mentioned the project to his wife, and she professed to be delighted with it.

"I should certainly like to see the girls and their husbands at Ferness," she said; "it would be a great pleasure to me."

"Then they shall come," he declared. "Lady Cameron's birthday ought to be a day of rejoicing."

As he grew older Peter Cameron certainly grew prouder of his money, of his position, of his wife—of everything, in fact, belonging to him. Lady Cameron, in his eyes, was a person of the greatest importance. He consulted Diana on this all-important subject—not that, after his wife's approval, Diana's objection would matter at all; but she was there, and it was natural for him to consult her. Would she like to see the girls again? No, she had no desire whatever to see them.

"But," cried her father, "you will surely be pleased to see Rich?"

"Ah, yes; that is quite another thing!"

The thought of seeing Richard was delightful to her, and the prospect helped to compensate for the presence of the girls who had done their best to render her life miserable by their petty meannesses and taunting words.

Lord Clanronald grumbled when he heard of the forthcoming gathering. He had not come prepared to meet a family party, he said; but in his heart he was not displeased at the thought of seeing Lady de Vere.

"I wish to Heaven I had married her!" he said to himself. "She is not so high and mighty as my wife; she has not such fantastic and absurd ideas and standards as Diana; and, besides, she was very fond of me."

That was the real charm in Evadne; she had been fond of him.

The Marquis and Marchioness de Vere, Mr. and Mrs. Marchese, Sir Royal

West, Diana and Lord Clanronald, formed part of the house party. A few other guests were invited.

Diana, when she came to reflect upon the coming family gathering, did not like the idea of it. She was sure the girls would find out the unhappiness—may, the abject misery—of her married life, and she did not at all relish the idea. But she was growing inert in her misery, and had no courage to protest, even if it would have availed her; so she resigned herself to the inevitable.

Great preparations were made for the approaching entertainments. Mr. Cameron grew quite excited over them, and declared that they should rival those of royalty itself in their splendor and sumptuousness.

The first arrivals at Ferness were Richard and Thea, and there was nothing but rejoicing. Thea, marvelously changed and softened by her married happiness, was hardly to be recognized as the once stiff and cynical Miss Scarsdale; and she brought with her a beautiful baby boy, so like the Scarsdales that she had called him Lisle. Lady Cameron was very proud of the boy; but she did not like to be spoken of as "grandmamma." She was still a fine handsome woman, looking wonderfully young for her age, and did not wish to be thought older than she really appeared. As for Mr. Cameron, little Lisle being the first baby that had come under his notice since Diana's infancy, he absolutely worshipped him.

It was some comfort to Diana, in the midst of her misery, to see Richard's honest, gentle, kindly face. His quick eyes at once discerned the real state of things; but he said little. He knew that on such a subject the less said the better. But one afternoon, when Lord Clanronald had distinguished himself by getting intoxicated and then fighting with a groom who would not allow him to ride a valuable horse of Mr. Cameron's, there had been a great scandal and disturbance. Mr. Cameron was much annoyed; Lady Cameron was contemptuously angry.

"How glad I am, after all, that he did not marry Evadne!" she said to herself. "Diana has all the disgrace." It was the first exhibition of this kind that Richard had seen, and he was utterly disgusted with the conduct of Diana's husband. That she, the proud beauty, should be the wife of such a man seemed terrible to him. He knew it was useless to condole; yet he could not refrain from seeking her. He found her in the conservatory, whither she had gone to escape notice. She was ashamed to meet the eyes even of the servants, for the sounds of the disturbance had filled the whole house.

He went up to her in the old familiar manner.

"Heaven help you, Diana," he said. "I understand it all, Heaven help you, for no man can!"

"She is quite the grande dame," he said—"Marchioness de Vere, stately and patronizing. Thea has visited her; but she has never been to the Manor-house. I do not believe a marchioness could breathe there."

And Diana smiled as she remembered Richard's deep-rooted disdain for titles.

The expected visitors arrived. Lord Clanronald was awed into silence and sobriety by the stately presence of the Marquis de Vere, and for some hours Diana was free from the haunting fear that her husband might compromise himself and her.

Lady de Vere had improved in appearance. The glitter of her loveliness was greater, her eyes had a brighter light, her hair a more golden sheen; the rose-tints had deepened on her fair face. But she did not look like one who had much heart, or soul, or sentiment. She might have been a lovely tinted statue. She was desirous of making a favorable impression on her old lover, and she came down to dinner in a superb dress of blue velvet, with pearls round her shapely throat and in her hair.

Two more lovely women probably never met than Lady de Vere and Lady Clanronald, and yet no two could have been more different in style; the one was pretty and artificial, the other beautiful and artless, her loveliness being enhanced by her perfect freedom from affectation.

Lady Cameron watched with some anxiety the meeting between her daughter and Lord Clanronald. He paid Lady de Vere some very pronounced compliments, at which she did not seem too well pleased; he himself was rather excited.

The Marchioness and Lady Clanronald exchanged but very few words; nothing could ever remove the hatred for Diana that lived in the heart of Lady de Vere.

"Do not speak of it, Rich," she answered, gently. "No one can help me; and I deserve it all." The beautiful head drooped and the blue eyes filled with tears. "Never refer to the subject again, Rich. If you see me suffer, remember that I deserve it, and that I must bear it. I can bear anything but pity."

"Then you shall never have it from me," said Richard. "Oh, Diana, I am so happy myself I cannot—"

She checked him with a gesture of the hand.

"Not another word, Rich, about me!" she cried. "I am glad that you are happy. There was always something frank about Thea. She was a fair foe; Evadne was not."

"And what do you think of our little Lisle?" asked Richard, all a father's love and pride shining in his face.

Hers grew pale at the mention of the name.

"He is a beautiful boy," she said gently. "I envy a child of yours, Rich, the tenderness it will receive from you."

She asked him some few questions about Lady de Vere, who was expected that evening, and Rich answered them laughingly.

"She is quite the grande dame," he said—"Marchioness de Vere, stately and patronizing. Thea has visited her; but she has never been to the Manor-house. I do not believe a marchioness could breathe there."

And Diana smiled as she remembered Richard's deep-rooted disdain for titles.

The expected visitors arrived. Lord Clanronald was awed into silence and sobriety by the stately presence of the Marquis de Vere, and for some hours Diana was free from the haunting fear that her husband might compromise himself and her.

Lady de Vere had improved in appearance. The glitter of her loveliness was greater, her eyes had a brighter light, her hair a more golden sheen; the rose-tints had deepened on her fair face. But she did not look like one who had much heart, or soul, or sentiment. She might have been a lovely tinted statue. She was desirous of making a favorable impression on her old lover, and she came down to dinner in a superb dress of blue velvet, with pearls round her shapely throat and in her hair.

Two more lovely women probably never met than Lady de Vere and Lady Clanronald, and yet no two could have been more different in style; the one was pretty and artificial, the other beautiful and artless, her loveliness being enhanced by her perfect freedom from affectation.

Lady Cameron watched with some anxiety the meeting between her daughter and Lord Clanronald. He paid Lady de Vere some very pronounced compliments, at which she did not seem too well pleased; he himself was rather excited.

The Marchioness and Lady Clanronald exchanged but very few words; nothing could ever remove the hatred for Diana that lived in the heart of Lady de Vere.

Many visitors to London walk down Whitehall and never see a building under the shade of the War Office which contains some of the most interesting relics of British history. The building is the Royal United Service Institution, founded in 1829, and placed originally in Vanburgh House. Various models were then given to the institution, which now is housed in the banquet hall of the old Whitehall Palace.

Recently there have been interesting additions to these exhibits. For example, there is a model of the German warship Scharhorst. This was being taken out by the Germans to German East Africa to be shown in a great exhibition to impress the natives with the size of the mighty German Fleet. The ship was sunk, and our divers eventually salvaged the model, which was found to be covered with barnacles. Another model is that of one of our own latest battleships, accurate in every detail.

The V.C. pigeon is also in the exhibition. This bird was hit by a bullet, which drove the receptacle containing the message in its body. After lying wounded all night it struggled home to the pigeon-loft the following morning and delivered the message.

Musical Wooing.

Wooing as done among the Burmese-Tartar tribes is as simple as it is idyllic. On the first day of winter the tribes hold a great feast, at which all marriageable girls gather and listen to the music made by the bachelors, who sit under the "desire trees" and play their favorite instruments. As the maiden he loves passes him a youth will play louder and more feelingly. If she ignores him and passes on he knows she will have none of him. If she steps up to him and lays a flower upon his instrument he jumps up and takes her by the hand, taking care not to drop the flower.

PREMIER SAYS REPORTS OF CRISIS ABSURD.

ROME, Nov. 24. The people of Europe will not have another war, and because the Socialists form a party which always has opposed war, the people of Italy voted for them, said Francesco Nititi, Premier, in explaining to a correspondent to-day the present Italian situation and the true meaning of the last general elections when the number of Socialist members of the Chamber of Deputies more than tripled. He characterized those reports in circulation abroad that Italy was on the verge of a revolution, as simply absurd.

EUROPE THREATENED WITH STARVATION.

LONDON, Nov. 24. At least one hundred people in Europe are in danger of starvation in the next few months, according to Sir George Paish. Speaking before the Ethical Society today he declared that although the world had not fully realized the situation, business men and bankers had done so and were coming together to advise remedial measures. Selfish and unselfish interests were coincident and the League of Nations had become an absolute world necessity. He had no doubt that America would enter the League.

PROMPT INTERFERENCE NECESSARY.

The older and more authoritative members of the party, however, such as Deputy Turati, leader of the Intransigent, Deputy Trever and Signor Modigliana, are against any excess.

A Defence of the Common Hen.

Editor Evening Telegram.
Dear Sir:—I see that the Poultry Association are having their annual show as usual this month. I have attended these exhibitions which have been held for several years past and with several others have noticed that no place in the exhibition has been given to the common or native hen. I have a few of so called common hens and I consider them just as much entitled to a place in the exhibition as the imported birds of Mr. LeMessurier, Mr. Calver and the other members of the Poultry Club. I will go further and enter my towels in an egg laying contest and will guarantee to beat the imported article by fifty per cent. It is all very well for the above named gentlemen to have a poultry show (a grant for which is allowed by the Government) to exhibit their fancy birds which have been washed and done-up for this special occasion, and then at the close of the show bestow ribbons and cups on each other, while the average citizen, like myself, is completely shut out, simply because we will not follow the Association in nonsensical notions about so called pure bred stock. It is a well known fact that the common hen is the best and most prolific layer and more adapted to the climatic conditions of this country, and why they are shut out from a place in the exhibition, is known only to Mr. LeMessurier and his associates. I should like to have an explanation from Mr. Calver, Secretary of the Poultry Club in this matter.

Yours truly,
LAY OR BUST.

Nov. 25, 1919.

And Still They Come.

Editor Evening Telegram.
Dear Sir,—I notice our fellows are getting restless and are coming to the old reliable—the Telegram—with their grievances. Well, considering our association is not showing much sign of life, I too, am coming. We must spot somewhere. Personally I am a "Dud" at letter writing, but can read fine, and I certainly do agree with "303 British." It is time we did something on our own hook, re-gratuity, etc. Surely nobody can say we are unpatriotic. I venture to bet that if we were called upon again in the same cause the "parade slate" would not show many absentees; but we should have something to square us to some extent at least for our time spent away from our trades and labors. There is a vast difference in the bank roll of the guy who stayed at home and the man who spent umpteen years "over there," especially if Mr. Stay-at-Home was handy at profiteering. Our army pay was one dollar and ten cents ($1.10) per day. Our brothers-in-arms who sport the maple leaf on their uniforms, needless to say, are mighty good men; but say, the least never had to show the "Bou" how to handle an affair of "No Man's Land," or beyond. So why wait for them or any one else now. And again the new Government, in their fight for the election, expressed themselves so very anxious to help us. Well, perhaps they will after they've helped themselves. Anyhow, as our old friend J— of A Co, used to say: "this marking time will get us nowhere!"

I thank you in anticipation for publication, Mr. Editor, and remain, Sincerely yours,
BLANK FILE.

Why Sunken Ships Never Rise.

When an ocean-going ship has been lost at sea, people sometimes wonder how it is that the mighty deep yields up no tales, and that though the vessel may have been built of good stout oak, she remains buried out of sight, never to be seen by mortal eye again, until the roaring main shall give up its dead.

But the explanation is a simple one, after all. When a ship sinks in deep water the pressure of the element about it forces minute quantities of the sea into the pores of the wood.

The wood, in this case, is made heavier than the surrounding water, and is as incapable of rising to the surface, even when detached from the submerged ship, as a pickaxe head or a lump of coal.

Gradually covered with sand, the heavy bulk thus sinks slowly out of the sight even of the fishes. On this ground it is very improbable that any success would attend the efforts of the treasure-trove seekers who, in different parts of the world, are convinced that Spanish galleons, sunk three centuries and more ago, or fleets submerged in the days of Greece or Rome, might be successfully grappled for.

The ocean is a jealous holder of secrets, and it is highly improbable that any considerable portion of the wealth which Neptune keeps under lock and key will ever be touched by the hand of man.

"Capt. Forsythe and the Forty Thieves."

When Captain Forster, of the Chinese Navy was sent on November 30, 1865, to take command of Li-Kiang Fort, in the heart of a notorious frontier smuggling district, and surrounded by the most desperate river pirates in China, he knew it was long odds that he would ever return alive. Two of his immediate predecessors had been murdered, and six times the fort had been stormed by the bandits, and its defenders put to the sword. Forster, however, was a born dare-devil, and he knew that every man of his forty Hukkas—"Forty Thieves," as he called them—would fight for him to the last gasp. So into this death-trap Forster went, into the most lawless region in China, hundreds of miles from possible help. Arriving there, the first sign of danger was not slow to appear. Soon there arrived in the river a large vessel which Forster recognized as that of Mew-ah-Pew, a notorious leader of pirates and smugglers; a desperado long "wanted" for an unparalleled series of most atrocious crimes—murders of officials, attacks on vessels, and looting of towns—crimes perpetrated with the most inhuman ferocity and brutality.

Mew-ah-Pew had come to assist the local smugglers in the seventh attack on the fort. Forster prepared his defences and the attack commenced that night. Soon a deluge of bullets, cannon balls and all kinds of missiles came hurling against the fort, which took fire. The defenders had to withdraw to hastily-constructed barricades, and a mob of infuriated demons surged upon them. Forster fired his cannon and the storming party were annihilated. A lull took place as the attacking party conferred together, soon to be followed by another rush, and an inferno of hand-to-hand fighting. In the life-and-death struggle Mew-ah-Pew himself fell from a bullet from Forster's pistol, and the attackers broke and fled in disorder.

But the pirates were not yet done with. They took refuge in an empty building not a hundred yards away, brought up two heavy guns, and again began to pound the fort. The defenders were now in a more desperate position than ever, which caused them to resort to desperate measures. Some of the gallant band, led by Forster, crept stealthily up to the building, laid an explosive charge of a four-minute limit, and had barely reached the shelter of the fort again, when they had the satisfaction of seeing the pirates' hiding-place, with the gang of desperadoes, blown to atoms. The seventh attack on the fort had failed, and the pirates had been taught such a lesson that it proved to be their last attempt.

The antiquity of the bell has often been a matter of discussion. The Romans had house bells like ourselves. Robert, the first king of England, has the credit of having inaugurated church bells, while Kingston-on-Thames—the spot where he was crowned, and where the stone is still to be seen on which he sat while the ceremony was performed—claims the honour of possessing the church in which they were first rung.

The lowest type of man is found among the bushmen of Australia. They are so primitive that they have no idea of building even the most rudimentary form of hut or shelter. Travellers tell wonderful stories of the nest-building peoples who inhabit the wilds. They found whole families of them nesting in the thickets like our ground birds, though their nests are not constructed so carefully and artistically as those of our feathered friends.

Giving Up Fortunes to Marry.

While many people marry with the object of obtaining wealth, there are others who go so far as to give up fortunes in order to espouse the man or woman of their choice. Not so very long ago the daughter of an American millionaire had to choose between her lover and a fortune, and she renounced the latter. She was engaged, but her choice did not please her father, and consequently he called her to give up either one or the other. The decision involved the return of thousands of pounds in bonds, a mansion, and various other property; but nevertheless, she remained true to the man of her heart.

Another wealthy girl adopted a similar course, and the step she took caused quite a sensation among her friends and acquaintances. They could not understand how a wealthy girl could give up all the pleasures of life in order to become the wife of a comparatively poor man; but she did so, in spite of threats and entreaties.

In another case, a girl who was heiress to a fortune renounced it, and became the wife of a labourer. The story of her wooing is quite a romantic one. One day, while listening to a band, she became infatuated with one of the players, and the soon got on speaking terms. The love was reciprocated; but, naturally such a life of conduct did not meet with the approval of the young lady's father, a wealthy banker. He threatened to disinherit his daughter, and all to no purpose for at the end of courtship of only a few months' duration she married the strolling player. Her father thereupon tore up his will, which had been made in her favour, and cast off the girl with the proverbial farthing. He also disposed of property valued at ten thousand pounds, which he had been holding in his daughter's interest, and forbade her to enter his house again.

Similarly another heiress fell in love with a collier, and ultimately married him. During a strike at the colliery the man obtained work on a farm, where the girl saw him, and was captivated. Her guardian sent her away, as he disapproved of her choice, in the hope that absence would make the heart grow fonder, and in her case, help her to forget the wild infatuation of her youth. It did, however, he was disappointed, and after a time the girl returned, and the lovers were married. When the case was reported, the collier and his wife were living not very far away from the home of her wealth. Such a transition would be very noticeable, one would imagine, in a girl of taste and refinement.

WE DON'T REALLY Are you ever astonished at the queer, selfish, wicked, unworthy things which you find yourself thinking? A little friend of mine once told me that she actually found herself speculating on the benefit that would accrue to her if someone who she holds very dear and dear should die.

I think I must be a positive de-berate," she cried with the eager perbole of youth. "or else I must be crazy. Do you suppose anyone, a decent person, I mean, was ever wicked?" She could hardly believe me when quite sincerely assured her that I suppose so.

Decent People Do Have Lapses. Maybe I'm wrong, but I do truly think decent people often have lapses in which they find themselves making things that are absolutely contrary to their true tendencies. Surely Tolstol with his splendid attempt to really live Christianity is not only decent but much more so in that conservative word comes, yet here is a little passage in a letter he wrote to his aunt his youth.

Tolstol and His Mustaches. There is too little of joy to let us be like. So there is something fine and noble in manifesting indifference to life. I delight in this feeling. How strong I feel myself in facing all that may happen. How firm is my conviction that nothing but death is to be expected here! Yet the next moment, I am thinking with pleasure about a saddle—I have ordered how I shall ride dressed up in my checkered cloak and about the way I shall carry on with the Cossack; and then I fall into despair because my left mustache is higher than my right, and I waste two hours trying to arrange them."

WE DON'T REALLY MEAN IT.

Are you ever astonished at the queer, selfish, wicked, unworthy things which you find yourself thinking? A little friend of mine once told me that she actually found herself speculating on the benefit that would accrue to her if someone whom she holds very dear and dear should die.

"I think I must be a positive degenerate," she cried with the eager exuberance of youth, "or else I must be crazy. Do you suppose anyone, any decent person, I mean, was ever wicked?" She could hardly believe me when I quite sincerely assured her that I did suppose so.

Recent People Do Have Lapses. Maybe I'm wrong, but I do truly think decent people often have lapses in which they find themselves thinking things that are absolutely alien to their true tendencies. Surely Tolstol with his splendid attempt to really live Christianity was not only decent but much more than that conservative word connotes, yet here is a little passage from a letter he wrote to his aunt on his youth.

Tolstol and His Mustaches. "There is too little of you to let us love life. So there is something fine and noble in manifesting indifference to life. I delight in this feeling. How strong I feel myself in facing all that may happen! How firm is my conviction that nothing but death is to be expected here! Yet the next moment I am thinking with pleasure about a saddle I have ordered and how I shall ride dressed up in my Teberkess cloak and about the way I shall carry on with the Cossack girls; and then I fall into despair because my left mustache is higher than my right, and I waste two hours trying to arrange them." Just because he had these moments of triviality you would hardly call Tolstol frivolous, would you?

The Thing That Really Counts. The thing that counts is the preponderance of one's tendencies. One can have a wild notion that one would like to pick up a pile of money that one sees lying on a table without being within a million miles of being a thief. The weight of one's tendency the other way is so much heavier that the fantastic thought is like a feather in the scale against the heavy weight of one's real nature. Of course, one does not invite such thoughts, and when the ugly things come uninvited one puts them right out of one's mind and fills their place with normal healthy thoughts, but neither does one dignify them by thinking they really mean anything.

Rhinestones in chains are very appropriately worn with black satin and tulle. Fur costumes with kid waistcoats velour chiffon and velour panne are in demand.

Handsome cape collars of moleskin, mink and sable complete some of the long coats. Paradise plumes appear in profusion on high-crowned toques of fur and panne velour. Some of the most charming vests in the wrap-like suit coats have horizontal ornamentation. Tulle and brocade without an atom of trimming are one of fashion's most charming combinations.

THE VAGS.

Now the times are bleak and chilly for the homeless Weary Willie, there's no light in any window for the boy; all the Rum Holes are abolished and no barkeep, bland and polished, sets the tall and foaming schooners in a row.

There's no welcome for the vagrant when he comes, all soiled and fragrant, and requests a little handout at the door; we have cut out careless giving chastened by the cost of living, and we don't distribute wienies any more. So the Weary Willie journeymen from the homes of rich attorneys to the squalid huts of poets, all in vain; no one hands him pies or muffins, or the other standard stuffs and he's standing, pale and empty, in the rain. Even at the village prison, where a welcome once was his, he is held to be a nuisance and a frost; for he adds to our expenses, and the situation tense is, when we strive to make reductions in the cost. There's no welcome for the Willie, and a superstition silly seems to gain a fresh momentum every day; people say he ought to labor like his honest, plodding neighbor, ought to earn his right to victuals and the hay!

Twenty-four O'Clock.

There is a movement afoot to introduce into this country the Continental method of telling the time, which is considered by many to be vastly superior to the method now in vogue. During the war this system was adopted in all the Allied Armies, and was proved to be eminently successful in coping with the numerous discrepancies that arose in fixing appointments between different nations.

The present "a.m." and "p.m." will probably be abolished, and there will be no difficulty in determining whether the time stated is morning or evening. On many occasions, owing to carelessness or bad writing, important appointments and times for action have been missed, because there has been some difference in opinion as to whether the time fixed was "a.m." or "p.m." Many people write "12 a.m." for midday, and "12 p.m." for midnight, whilst some have an awkward habit of reversing the order.

The new system will entirely alter matters, and there will only be one twelve o'clock, which will be at midnight.

Instead of one o'clock, we shall say "thirteen o'clock," or perhaps, as they say in France, "thirteen hours." The system is simplicity itself, and we shall tell the time up to twenty-four hours, which is midnight. The correct way to write what is now called 12.30 midnight will be "24.30 hours."

Foreign time-tables will be greatly simplified by this means, and the Continental traveller will not be at a loss when he reads that the next train will leave at 17.05 hours.

The system may seem strange at first, but its superiority over the one at present in use will certainly establish its position in Britain.

THE GOOD BENEATH.

Sometimes the other fellow does a thing that I detest. Sometimes I hear him scoffing at the things which I like best. Yet I know that he is kindly, and I know that he is true. And I know the big and fine things are the deeds he wants to do. And I've come to this conclusion: that a dreary world 'twould be if we always judged each other by the trivial flaws we see.

No one ever gains perfection, and the best of us is stained. By the things we do in weakness our truest friends are pained. And I sometimes sit and wonder, as another's faults I see, if the world is overlooking all the blemishes in me. And I wonder, where we'll finish if we're judged by such a test. That our worst is held against us and God fails to see our best?

Oh the other fellow's trying just as hard as you and I. Here on earth to do his finest till the day that he must die. And with all his faults and habits, if we only understood, I think we'd find his motives for the greater part are good. And I like to give him credit, though he does things I detest. For the man he is and will be when he's living at his best.

A Canadian Queen.

It seems almost certain that the Prince of Wales will not seek a wife from any of the European courts, and public opinion will endorse this. Blood connection between the rulers of the various European states is not an unkind blessing, when one thinks of the German kaiser as a grandson of Queen Victoria. Such complications are better avoided. Under these conditions, perhaps the rumor that the prince has set his mind on a Canadian queen may not be entirely amiss. Certainly such a connection would achieve much in Empire building, emphasizing what the prince himself has said, that the king stands in exactly the same relation to Canada that he does to England. At any rate, if the Prince has been able to travel from coast to coast of Canada impregnable, he must wear a coat of magic mail, for it is a feat that few young men of twenty-four could easily accomplish. —Quebec Telegraph.

Maternity Home Campaign.

St. John's is not a model city—far from it. In most of the essentials of modern civic life, it is, in point of fact, a very backward municipality. Fortunately the first to recognize that fact are the citizens of St. John's, themselves, and of late they have begun in a business-like way to remedy some of the defects which before they contented themselves with simply admitting.

This work of reform received an impetus from the war and its demands, which brought all classes of citizens together, as nothing else could have done, in one public endeavour after another. Then the two great educational campaigns of last summer took place, with what gratifying results we well know. And the tremendous problem of housing has been tackled in an earnest and practical manner. Here we have two of the very foundations of society at last receiving the attention their importance demands, an attention they should have received long ago.

In a few days the public will be asked to turn their thoughts and their resources towards another proposition, not in any way less important, and even more urgent. "Give the children a chance," was the slogan in the educational campaigns. "Give the babies a chance" it must be for the next fortnight. At present they simply haven't got it. They haven't the chance they ought to have. They haven't the chance Nature intended ALL her little ones to have. What is even more to the point they haven't anything like the chance they could have, and would have, if we, who are responsible for them realized our responsibilities.

Consider some of the actual existing and quite common conditions in St. John's to-day. It is the exception, and not the rule, for a child to be born under the care and attention of a doctor. Thus, at the very beginning, infinite suffering—and worse, loss of precious lives—results. Expectant mothers have to go out and work right up to the last: what chance have they or the coming child?

Sale of Work.

Come and bring a friend. nov26,19p

And they must, as well, be at work again as soon as they can, not as soon as they ought. Again what chance have they or the little ones? Add then the resulting conditions from the high cost of living: from overcrowding: from the scarcity of clean, fresh cow's milk: from the want of proper warmth and ventilation: from malnutrition: from the absence, in a word, of almost all the things vitally necessary to the health and strength both of the babies and of their mothers—and you get some idea of the magnitude of the present need.

The first essential, necessary, is a proper knowledge and appreciation of such a need. That has come at last. The next thing necessary is to meet it. That is what the campaign is for. The sum aimed at is a modest one. It will be applied to the benefit of the whole city, and on the means and wealth of the whole city it will be but a slight tax. The amount required should be subscribed and oversubscribed in no less striking fashion than the objective set in the Educational Campaigns.

Child Badly Burned.

The three-year-old son of Mr. G. Taylor, of Dunford Street, was badly burned about the face and body yesterday morning. The little lad, with his sister, was playing in the kitchen preparatory to being dressed, and, as children will do, lit a piece of paper at the stove, which he let fall on his night dress. The mother who was upstairs, heard the children scream, and ran to the scene. She turned her hands considerably in tearing the flaming clothes from the child's body. The little fellow was badly burned and had to be sent to hospital, where this morning he was doing well and his recovery is only a matter of time.

According to the Greeting the places suggested for services, are Grand Bank, Carbonear and Bonavista. Conditions obtaining at the time, says the Monthly Greeting, will probably decide whether or not the evangelists will come.

C. of E. Men's Meeting.

The speakers for the occasion will be the Lord Bishop, Canon Bolt, Mayor Gosling, Sir William Lloyd, Hon. W. R. Warren, Rev. L. Jeeves and Mr. Brian Dunfield. St. Andrew's Sociable.

The Newfoundland St. Andrew's Society is holding a gala time in the C. C. C. Hall to-morrow evening, beginning at 8 o'clock. The event will be opened by a concert, presided over by Mr. J. J. McKay, in which the following ladies and gentlemen will take part:—Mrs. F. J. King, Miss B. Langmead, Miss Mary Keegan, Mrs. J. Baxter, Miss M. Mitchell, Mr. A. Williams, Mr. Moncrieff Mawer, Mr. J. McIntyre. The accompanists are Mrs. Dickie and Mr. W. Moncrieff Mawer.

Special preparations have been made for the grand dance, which will be a finale to the evening's programme. The C.C.C. band has been engaged, under the leadership of Capt. A. Bulley, who of late has trained his musicians in the very latest musical dancing airs. With Mrs. R. G. Ross convener; Messrs. R. E. Innes, J. Irvine, J. MacIntosh, A. Ross, and W. B. Eadie, who represent the society in the arranging of this event, those present at "St. Andrew's Night" in the C. C. C. Hall, Thursday evening, will most assuredly enjoy themselves.

IN GOWER STREET CHURCH. Very few of the committee of 100 workers were absent at the supper-hour last evening in the basement of the church. These men and women have the gift of stick-to-tiveness that goes a long way towards success. The object of the gathering was to undertake the raising of the budget for the current year's expenditure. This will be $12,300.00, of which $4500.00 is assigned to Missions. Mr. W. G. Currie placed on the blackboard the outline of a plan whereby such a sum could be secured from 300 subscribers. After a brief address by the Pastor, the organizer, Mr. Albert Soper, described the whole method of procedure by which prospects were to be assigned and the canvass conducted. The cards were then circulated, and the workers chose their prospects. During the evening Rev. Samuel Soper gave an address full of inspiration and encouragement. The canvassers will meet again to-morrow evening to make reports.

This Afternoon's Sale.

A sale of pickles, jans, cakes, etc., began in the Lecture Room of the Congregational Church this afternoon. At eight fifteen this evening a concert will begin, a number of the most well-known of our local vocalists and instrumentalists having promised to take part. The affair is hoped to be the most successful and enjoyable for many years.

BRITAIN'S EGYPTIAN POLICY.
LONDON, Nov. 25.
Earl Curzon, the Foreign Secretary, speaking in the House of Commons today said that Egypt neither was able to protect her own front from aggression, nor to guarantee a stable internal Government. BRITAIN'S EGYPTIAN POLICY.

LONDON, Nov. 25. He declared that Great Britain could not wash her hands of a country standing at the door of Africa, and the highway to India. The idea that the aspirations of the Egyptian Nationalists were to be crushed, however, he said was an extravagant misconception. The Egyptian Government continued, could not be shown too clearly that whatever peace was imposed on Turkey, recognition of the British protectorate would be one of these terms, therefore no provision in the Peace Treaty with Turkey would alter the task, with which the mission, headed by Lord Milner, Secty. for the Colonies, to investigate the unrest in Egypt had been entrusted to Lord Milner, whom he said, had not the constitution in his pocket, but was going to consult with the Egyptians with regard to how they could best cooperate in the management of their country under British guidance.

GENERAL SATISFACTION.

LONDON, Nov. 25. No domestic event in a long time has so stirred the press as the reduction in the price of coal, announced in the House of Commons yesterday by Sir Auckland Geddes, Minister of National Service and Reconstruction. The action, coming as it did shortly after a statement by the Minister that even a six shilling decrease was impossible, caused general amazement and satisfaction at the prospect of cheaper household coal, which has been tempered by mystification as to how it was done on the one hand and why it was not done sooner on the other. In consequence a deep political move is imagined in some quarters to be at the bottom of the matter, one section suggesting that as several bye-elections are pending, the concession to householders is a vote catching dodge, while coal owners through some of their spokesmen declare the reduction in price means ruin for them, as coal cannot be produced under such conditions except at great loss. The miners' leaders contend that the reduction can, and ought to, be carried much further.

LENINE'S BOAST.

LONDON, Nov. 25. "Impudent attacks by enemies of the revolution have wrought a miracle. We have gained a full victory over Kolchak, which will be of historic importance for the people of the East." This statement was made by Nikolai Lenin, the Bolshevik Premier, in the course of an address to the Second All-Russian Congress of the Russian Communist Organisation of Eastern Peoples, according to a wireless message from Moscow to-day.

WHO LIES?

LONDON, Nov. 25. The communiques of both the Russian Soviet Government and General Denikine, received by wireless to-day, claim a victory at Katulinska, in the Kemyshin region on the Lower Volga, each side asserting that the number of prisoners taken by it was large. General Denikine declares that his cavalry surrounded and nearly wiped out several Bolshevik detachments.

BOLSHEVIKS TO ACT HONORABLY.

NEW YORK, Nov. 25. The Bolsheviks do not intend to repudiate the $100,000,000 worth of bonds issued by the Empire and Provincial Governments of Russia, as reported, according to Ludwig C. A. K. Martens, self-styled Soviet Ambassador to the United States.

AMERICAN CABINET DEADLOCKED.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 25. Like the miners and operators, whose troubles it was trying to adjust, President Wilson's cabinet to-night seemed hopelessly deadlocked on the question of a wage increase in the bituminous coal industry. After a six-hour session the Cabinet, which took up the wage scale agreement between the operators and miners left off last week, adjourned until to-morrow, when another attempt will be made. Fuel Administrator Garfield will be made to agree upon a pay scale that will satisfy the mine workers and owners and the people in all sections of the country who are clamoring for normal production of coal.

MANUFACTURER INTRODUCES SIX-HOUR DAY.

NEW YORK, Nov. 25. Sweating the machine, not the man, is the economic principle of which Lord Leverhulme, the great British manufacturer, justifies the six hour day for workmen, and the twelve hour day for machinery. This schedule his firm had determined to introduce in their factories in Great Britain, Canada, the United States and elsewhere, hoping thereby to protect their workmen and themselves.

The Poultry Show.

The Newfoundland Poultry Show opens this evening in the Morris Building. Mr. W. R. There are over 500 on exhibition. Hon. R. A. Squires has donated a beautiful silver cup for competition. The classifying committee will allocate the special prizes to be awarded in each class, at the meeting to-night.

What the Medical Profession Says:

"The establishment of a Maternity Hospital in the City of St. John's is desirable and necessary, and meets with the approval and support of the medical profession of the City."

"In the opinion of the medical practitioners of St. John's, the proposal of the Salvation Army for a Maternity Hospital is feasible, desirable, and commendable."

To obtain more adequate maternity facilities for the benefit of St. John's, the Outports, and the whole Dominion—for the poor, also for those in modest circumstances—for mothers and for babies—previous to birth, at birth, and after birth—better nursing, nourishment and medical attention—better hospital accommodation with modern hospital equipment. Read below the actual conditions at present endured by the suffering mothers and helpless babies of Newfoundland.

It is exceptional among the poor that doctors attend confinements. Doctors are not called in one half of the poor cases. While a number of mid-wives are well meaning and conscientious, they lack the essential training for the important work they undertake. The care and treatment of mothers and children leaves much to be desired—involving needless suffering and loss of life. Expectant mothers obliged to go out to earn for the support of their families—to the detriment of the health of themselves and their unborn children.

Such mothers often scrub, wash, fetch water, cook, and care for their families up to the day the baby is born, and are at work again in less than two weeks thereafter. Premature and still-born babies are often the result of this overwork and overstrain. Many tired, discouraged, overworked, undernourished mothers are overwhelmed by conditions which severely handicap themselves and their babies. The high cost of living in many cases destroys the last hope of good nourishment, or even bare comfort.

Prince of Wales' Message

TO NEW YORK CITIZENS.
(New York Tribune, Nov. 19.)
The Prince of Wales gave the following signed message to the New York newspapers last night:
"New York's welcome to me this morning was so much warmer than I had any reason to expect that it took me entirely aback, and I did not express my feelings at all adequately in the few words which I was able to speak at the City Hall. I am therefore delighted to have this opportunity of expressing my appreciation and gratitude directly to you gentlemen who represent the press. You can convey them to a vastly wider audience than my own voice could reach, and I am very grateful to you for offering to publish this message on my behalf.
"Greatly as I value the honor conferred on me this morning, when I was made a freeman of the city of New York I was even more deeply touched by the speeches made in conferring it, and more particularly by the much too kind things said about myself by the Secretary of State and by Mr. Wanamaker, the chairman of your reception committee. Both were good enough to allude to my very modest service in the war.
"I do not pretend to have done as much as any other junior officer at the front, and no one realizes more clearly than I how little any such service as mine was worth by comparison with that of the splendid men who sacrificed life and health that the democracy of the world might be safe. But my four years at the front did teach me to know my brother officers and men in the Allied forces on three different fronts, and I hope that our common service as comrades in arms in a splendid cause remains as valued a memory to them as it always will be to myself. I shall value the beautiful flag presented to me to-day more particularly as a souvenir of what Mr. Hugo and Mr. Wanamaker said to me in that respect.

"Now that I am a New Yorker in my own right, I can tell you exactly what I think about New York. I am still a little bewildered by your greeting and I only know the city at present by one drive through your streets. But two things stand out very clearly in my mind from the crowd of first impressions which my first arrival made on me to-day.
"The first of these was the beauty and dignity of the towering skyline of the city as I came across the Hudson from Jersey City to the Battery. I have naturally never seen anything like that before, and I am not trying to flatter my new fellow citizens when I say that it struck me as a splendid sight. I was confirmed in this impression afterward as I drove under those towering buildings through your most busy streets.
"My second impression, an even greater one, for men and women appeal to me more than any scenes or sights, was of a most warm and friendly welcome which followed me all through my drive in the city. I can only say that your greeting to-day has touched me very deeply, and has intensified my hope that this, my first visit to New York, may be by no means the last."

A Leading English Sculptor.

On Thursday, Nov. 25, 1841, died Sir Francis Chantrey, who, as a celebrated sculptor, was a member of the Royal Academy, a Fellow of the Society of Arts. Born at Norton, near Sheffield, in 1781, he, when a mere child, showed considerable talent in drawing and modelling, and during his apprenticeship with Mr. Ramsay, a carver and gilder at Sheffield, the whole of his leisure hours were devoted to the study and practice of these, his favourite pursuits. After a short visit to London, where he attended the Royal Academy School, he returned to Sheffield; but his career of fame and fortune did not commence until 1809, when he received an order from Mr. Alexander, the architect, for four colossal busts of Howe, St. Vincent, Duncan and Nelson, for Trinity House, and for the Greenwick Naval Asylum. From this period he was increasingly successful, and among the productions of his chisel there appeared, in 1817, that exquisite group of "The Sleeping Children," the daughters of the Rev. W. Robinson, in Lichfield Cathedral, universally acknowledged as 'images of artless beauty and unaffected grace.' Orders thenceforth crowded in upon him in numbers beyond his ability to execute. Amongst them are his busts of Lord Castlereagh, Sir Walter Scott, the poets Wordsworth and Southey, Mr. Canning, John Rennie, George IV., Queen Victoria, Lord Melbourne, Sir Robert Peel, the Duke of Wellington; and his statues of James Watt, Dr. Cyril Jackson, Grattan, Washington, Sir Joseph Banks, Spencer Perceval, Roscoe, General Gillespie, Lady Louisa Russell and others. To this list must be added his principal statues in bronze, namely, George IV., at Brighton and in Edinburgh, Pitt at Hanover Square, London, and at Edinburgh, and the equestrian statues of Sir Thomas Munro at Madras, India, and the Duke of Wellington for the City of London.

Church Notes

FROM THE OLD COUNTRY.
It is likely that a new Cathedral will be erected in Sheffield as the war memorial of the diocese.
Dr. J. L. Darby, who has been Dean of Chester since 1885, died at the Deanery, Chester, on Nov. 24.
The new Bishop of Chester (Dr. H. L. Paget) refuses to occupy the episcopal palace, and will live in a more modest residence.
A churchyard pulpit, a chapel in the crypt, and an illuminated cross on the steeple are features in the war-memorial proposed for St. Martin-in-the-Fields, London.
The Rev. V. W. Pearson, a well-known Wesleyan minister of Sheffield, preached recently in the Cathedral at a service organized by the Sheffield Teachers' Association in memory of their colleagues who fell in the war.
A unique ceremony took place in St. Paul's Cathedral, London, on St. Luke's Day, when no less than six Bishops were consecrated by the Archbishop of Canterbury. Twenty-five Bishops assisted the Primate in the act of consecration. The Rev. E. Chisholm Dewick, Acting Principal of St. Paul's Cathedral College, Calcutta, was the preacher.
The creation of a Province of Wales and the appointment of the first Archbishop is being largely discussed. It is understood that the revival of the Archbishopric, certainly in the first appointment, will be associated with the Bishopric of St. Asaph as the present Bishop of St. Asaph, the Right Rev. A. G. Edwards, D.D., is the senior prelate of Wales.

"Syrup of Figs" Child's Laxative
LOOK AT TONGUE! REMOVE POISONS FROM STOMACH, LIVER AND BOWELS.
Jack Kearns, his manager, is expected here to-morrow. In a few days the champion plans to leave for Southern California to begin work on a moving picture contract.
Dempsey stated he expects four months to pass before this engagement is completed and that after that time he would again begin rigid training for his next fight.

Dempsey Declares He is Fit.
Salt Lake City, Utah, Nov. 20.—Jack Dempsey, world's heavyweight champion, in Salt Lake City, to-day, for a short visit with his mother, declared his physical condition "fit as a fiddle."
Regarding his next fight Dempsey said he would meet the winner of the Carpenter-Beckett match to be staged abroad December 4, if the victorious European fighter will agree to come to America. If not, Dempsey says he is willing to go to London or Paris. He confirmed the report that he had signed a $175,000 contract with Dominick Tortorich, New Orleans promoter, to meet either Carpenter or Beckett, if the proposed match can be arranged for New Orleans. This match probably would take place March 17.
Accept "California" Syrup of Figs only—look for the name California on the package, then you are sure your child is having the best and most harmless laxative or physic for the little stomach, liver and bowels. CHECKS FOR $100,000 CONTRIBUTED BY FORMER PEOPLE TO BOLSHEVIKI FUND.
NEW YORK, Nov. 21.—Checks aggregating $100,000 donated to the Communist party of New York by some of the city's "Parlor Bolsheviks" are in the hands of Chief Magistrate McAdoo, it was learned to-day. They were seized in the raids on radicals on Nov. 7 and said will be submitted to the extraordinary grand jury investigating seditious activities here, it was announced.
Checks amounting to $11,000, payees not designated, made out by Mrs. Rose Pastor Stokes, are included in them, according to Assistant District Attorney Bourke. It was to interrogate her concerning them that she was subpoenaed yesterday.
When the list of contributors to the Communist leaders is made public the people of New York will realize how far its ramifications extend, Attorney General Berger said.
"People in both social and religious circles, according to our disclosures, are Bolsheviki to the bottom of their hearts," he added.
The Grand Jury to-day began investigation of the secretary of the Jewish Protective and Aid Society, concerning the identity of several persons belonging to that organization, whose names figure in Communist records.

Rich materials are used for the long, straight evening gowns. Wool yarns dyed with vegetable colors are by far the prettiest. Flouncings and draperies of lace seen over cloth of metal tissue. Evening cloaks become richer and richer, with furs and metal work.

An Interesting Discovery
An ancient masterpiece of art has been discovered in a barn in the Spanish province of Estramadura. It is a Madonna, with the infant Jesus on her lap, a blackrobed monk on one side and a white-robed monk on the other, probably meant for St. Benedict and St. Bernard. It is painted on wood, is less than four feet square and is thought to have been produced about 1500 to 1550. To prevent it being taken out of the country, a millionaire of Bilbao has advanced the large sum demanded by the owner of the barn, and has offered it to the Spanish Government. Meanwhile, it has been placed in the Prado Museum at Madrid.

LONDON GOSSIP.

DIAMONDS AT THE KING'S BANQUET.

LONDON, Nov. 10. A friend who witnessed the brilliant gathering in the ballroom at Buckingham Palace, when the King entertained the Shah, tells me that many splendid jewels were worn, but that others paled into insignificance beside those worn by Queen Mary and the Shah. Her Majesty wore a magnificent diadem which included "The Lesser Stars of Africa," cut from the Cullinan diamond, and brilliants of exceptional size and color round her throat. The Shah's diamond star, by which the aigrette is fastened to the front of his fez, is a remarkable specimen of the lapidary's skill. It is encircled with every movement of his head, and its many facets glowed with all the colors of the rainbow.

PRINCESS MARY'S UNIFORM.

Princess Mary attended a demonstration by Girl Guides at the Albert Hall last week, and by way of encouragement to the movement appeared in Guide's uniform. Apparently she had difficulty in getting this for the notice was very short. The uniform had to be made in strict accordance with the rule and requirements of the organisation, and in these days even Royal personages cannot make tailors hurry. The uniform was delivered at Buckingham Palace only a short time before the Princess was due at the Royal Albert Hall, and had still to be tried on.

A NEW INTERESTING COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF.

An interesting appointment just made by the Admiralty is that of Vice-Admiral Sir Trevelyan Napier to be Commander-in-Chief of the North American station. Vice-Admiral Napier will be the youngest Commander-in-Chief of the British Navy. He is every inch a sailor, for his father was an admiral, his brother, Charles L. Napier, is also an admiral, and he is married to a daughter of Admiral Sir Michael Clive-Seymour. He served in the Grand Fleet all through the war, first in command of the Third Light Cruiser Squadron, with his flag on the Falmouth, when he fought at Jutland, and then in command of the First Cruiser Squadron when his flagship was the Courageous, one of the "hush-hush" battle-cruisers. From her bridge he witnessed the surrender of the German Fleet a year ago.

W. T. I. D.

The War Trade Intelligence Department, which was disbanded last week, can look back with satisfaction on a great deal of useful and confidential Government work for which very few decorations were bestowed on its staff. It had the distinction, however, of being admitted by the permanent offices to be very efficient though wholly run by amateurs without the assistance of a single professional civil servant. The chairman, Sir Henry Penson, and the heads of sections almost to a man were strangers to the practice of trade—economists, historians, barristers, and professors (home and colonial). If they yielded to no man in their ignorance of trade at the beginning, they became experts in trade under war conditions, and their information was invaluable to many other offices. The department grew out of a handful of devoted volunteers from Lord Roberts's National Service League who became heads of sections when the department first took shape as the trade clearing house under the War Trading Department. When it had won its spurs as an adviser to the Contraband Committee, who dealt with vessels passing through the blockade, it was taken over by the Foreign Office when the blockade was strengthened in 1916, and became the record office and administrative centre of the intricate blockade machinery, and retained this function after America entered the war. British holders of export licenses knew it as the department which approved, and often disapproved, of their proposed consignees in the northern neutral countries, but its most important work was necessarily quite unknown to the public. It is sufficient to say that, if a raiding German airman had been lucky enough to drop a bomb or two on the huts in St. James's Park he would have deserved well of his country. The destruction of the main card index would have been well worth the loss of a Gotha. As a footnote to the history of the blockade one might add that the W. T. I. D. staff was described by some as "the Oxford history school at war work," by others less kind as "the sons of Bellini and Bellini." By common consent of the junior members (and some of these knew what they were talking about) the office was the nicest in London and the pleasantest to work in.

A DEATH OF CONVICTS.

England has four great convict prisons—Dartmoor, Maidstone, Parkhurst, and Portland—yet they do not at present contain between them more than 1,300 prisoners, and during the past year only 304 new prisoners were received. These figures constitute now low records. The Prison Commissioners, in their annual report, point out that it is not a case of the war having caused a sudden slump in crime. The decline has been going on gradually for ten years, and if it continues they are of opinion that the question of whether it is worth while continuing to maintain these prisons on the present scale will arise. To most people who probably have hardly realised how rapidly the criminal class is shrinking that will seem a surprising if pleasant state of affairs. The report gives, too, a rather different view of convict life than is usually held. The quarries, which have too often been regarded as the main working place of prisoners, actually employed fewer laborers than most of the other industries. The actual number during the whole of the year was 128. At Dartmoor the chief industry was the farm, the flourishing condition of which may be judged from the fact that one carthorse sold for as much as 137 guineas (£935).

THE TIMES WE LIVE IN.

A passenger on a train from Hull to London witnessed the other day this incident. It was a first class smoking carriage, with each seat occupied. Soon after leaving Hull one man got up and went into the corridor, and a little later a lady came along, looked at the empty seat, and asked the other passenger if anyone was using it. She was told that it was engaged and that the occupant would be coming back. She said: "Oh, it doesn't matter. I just want to smoke a cigarette. I'm in a non-smoking carriage." She was elderly, demure-looking, and very well dressed. The man soon looked in, and told her very loudly that the seat was occupied. The lady explained the situation, and said if he did not mind she would finish her cigarette. The man fussed a good deal and said, "This is very unusual." "Not in London," said the old lady sweetly.

A CHAMPION OF WOMEN.

The funeral of Mr. Coote took place at Forest Hill, on the south-eastern outskirts of London, last week. Since its formation in 1885, Mr. Coote had been secretary of the National Vigilance Association and International Bureau for the Suppression of the White Slave Traffic—an office which brought him into touch with every organisation and effort for the suppression of vice or the protection of girls. His special work was the safeguarding of girls for whom the white slave traffickers were lying in wait, either in this country or abroad, and it was through his energy that arrangements were perfected for giving help to lonely girls arriving at railway stations or travelling abroad. He and his staff knew who were the most active of the evil men and women who must be watched, and his name was a terror to hundreds, both here and on the Continent. He was tireless in his insistence on the danger to which girls exposed themselves when accepting situations abroad and in his efforts to save those who were in danger. His intimate knowledge of the laws concerning immorality was of great value to social workers. He gave invaluable help to the "Pass the Bill" Committee forced to secure the passing of the Criminal Law Amendment Act. He was diplomatic and sagacious, taking all he could get in the way of reform if he could not get all he wanted, and he was rigorously unsensational in his methods, refusing to quote any story until he had satisfied himself of its detailed accuracy. This insistence on verification gave great weight to his reports on appalling conditions.

LABOR-SAVING DEVICES.

With the object of demonstrating both the sympathetic appreciation of the Ministry of Health of the minor worries of domestic art and the degree to which the servant shortage has influenced them in their consideration for the housewife an exhibition of model houses fitted with novel labor-saving devices has been opened at the White-chapel Art Gallery in the East End of London. The scope offered by the fireplace to the reformer has in particular been

Jack Johnson to Fight Morris.

YUMA, Arizona, November 20.—Jack Johnson, former heavyweight champion, has been matched to fight Carl Morris, of Tulsa, Okla., at San Luis, 13 miles south of here in Mexico, according to announcement tonight by Al Jones, Yuma boxing promoter. The bout will be held some time in December, Jones said. It will be a finish fight. Both boxers have signed articles and posted forfeits, the promoter asserted. Johnson is expected to train at San Luis and Morris at Yuma. Johnson is at Nogales, Mexico, and it was said he probably would have to use an airplane to reach San Luis as the Federal officers would

EQUES FOR $100,000 CONTRIBUTED BY PROMINENT PEOPLE TO BOLSHIEVSKI FUND.
NEW YORK, Nov. 21.—Checks aggregating $100,000 donated to the Communist party of New York by the city's "Parlor Bolsheviks" are in the hands of Chief City Magistrate McAdoo. It was learned today they were seized in the hands of radicals on Nov. 7 and will be submitted to the extraordinary grand jury investigating seditious activities here, it was announced.
Checks amounting to $11,000, not designated, made out by Rose Pastor Stokes, are included in them, according to Assistant District Attorney Rourke. He is to interrogate her concerning a matter that she was subpoenaed yesterday.
When the list of contributors to the Communist leaders is made public, the people of New York will see how far its ramifications extend. Attorney General Berger said people in both social and religious circles, according to our files, are Bolsheviki to the core of their hearts." he added.
The Grand Jury to-day began investigation of the secretary of the Fish Protective and Aid Society, concerning the identity of several persons belonging to that organization whose names figure in Communist records.

The Argument Against.

For some time past articles have been appearing in the Canadian and American press, advocating the closing of the Straits of Belle Isle. Many hypotheses have been advanced as to the advantages such a blocking of the Straits would confer on Newfoundland and part of Canada. Probably no person accepted this scheme seriously, as no arguments against have been made. The following letter, however, published in the St. John's N.B. Telegraph, of Nov. 21 shows that the writer has a thorough knowledge of his subject, and will appeal to all who like himself, realises the impracticability of this Utopian project:

TO CLOSE THE STRAITS OF BELLE ISLE.

To the Editor of The Telegraph.

Sir,—In your valuable newspaper of November 18 I note an article clipped from The Canadian Engineer advocating the closing of the Straits of Belle Isle with a view to improving the climate of western Newfoundland and the Gulf of St. Lawrence. The article is an absurd one, based on the fallacy that the Arctic current flows inward through these straits, whereas there is an almost constant current of approximately two knots outward through said straits. It is only when there is a strong east or northeast gale that the current sets slightly inward.

The reason for this is that an enormous flow of fresh water is constantly poured into the great bowl of the Gulf of St. Lawrence by a score of rivers, while the only outlets from the bowl are Cabot and Belle Isle Straits and the Gut of Canso. The St. Lawrence alone delivers more water than any except three of the great rivers of the globe. Most of the outflow from the gulf naturally passes through Cabot Strait, sixty miles wide, and the balance through Belle Isle and Canso.

The winter ice formed in the gulf passes out in the spring time through the same outlets, but its course is much affected by the prevailing winds, which then come from the west and south. A southerly wind drives the ice northeastwardly toward Belle Isle, and if that strait were artificially closed would have the effect of detaining the ice with most chilling effect upon the climate of Prince Edward Island and western Newfoundland, making our late springs still later.

It should also be mentioned that while the herring, mackerel and other valuable food fishes reach the gulf by way of Cabot Strait, the codfish come mainly by way of Belle Isle. If that passage were closed it would seriously imperil, if not utterly destroy, the very, very valuable codfishery of the Gulf of St. Lawrence.

First Doctors Then a Skin Specialist—Then a bottle of D.D.D.

I will consider it a favor if you will allow me to add my testimonial to the many hundreds you no doubt have in praise of the great results effected by the D.D.D. Prescription. I was a sufferer for two years with eczema on the legs and ankles. I tried three or four different doctors and none of them did me any good. I got tired of trying their remedies. I then went to a skin specialist but he was no better than they. I was reading the Sunday paper and happened to see your ad. I am very glad that I did.

I secured a trial bottle of D.D.D. and it did me so much good that I sent for a dollar bottle, also a cake of soap. That is all I used, and I am perfectly well. I have advised several others to use it and the results have been the same. You are at liberty to use my name for I consider D.D.D. the best remedy in use.

J. W. CORNS,

Anyone suffering from skin trouble—mild or severe—should investigate at once the merits of D.D.D. Try it to-day. Your money back unless the first bottle relieves you. Ask your druggist.

Sessuo Hayakawa, the famous Japanese actor, stars in the screen presentation, "The Bravest Way," at the Majestic Theatre this evening. The fame and ability of the great Japanese are too well known to require retelling. Suffice it to say that in this picture his acting is even above the usual standard and patrons are assured of an absorbingly interesting picture for to-night's show. In addition to the feature a Burton Holmes' travelogue special, entitled "The Great Glacier," will be screened.

A St. Catherine's Superstition.

St. Catherine, whose day is November 25, is one of those saints who was supposed to take under her special care forlorn and love-stricken maidens who desired husbands and wished to see them in the spirit before the flesh. In olden times on this day the young women of Abbotbury—a small town of Dorset—were in the habit of repairing to the Saint's Well, near St. Catherine's Chapel, Milton Abbey, where they make use of the following invocation:—

"A husband, Saint Catherine, A handsome one, Saint Catherine, A rich one, Saint Catherine, A nice one, Saint Catherine, And soon, Saint Catherine."

In order to dream of her sweetheart, the young lady had to put a piece of wedding cake under her pillow, and her wish was certain to be gratified, providing the piece of wedding cake had previously been passed through a wedding ring. If in doubt as to which of two lovers to accept, the maiden was to get a friend to write their names on the paper in which the cake was wrapped, and then for three nights the cake and wrapper had to be placed under the young lady's pillow for her. Should she happen to dream of one of the persons, that one was certain to become her husband at no distant date. Another charm was—"On St. Catherine's Day let any number of young women—not exceeding seven nor less than three—assemble in a room where they would be free from interruption. Just as the clock struck eleven each must take from her bosom a sprig of myrtle, which had been worn all day, fold it up in a bit of tissue paper, then light up a small chafing dish of charcoal, and on it each maiden must throw nine hairs from her head, and a paring of each of her toe and finger nails. Each must next sprinkle a small quantity of myrtle and frankincense in the charcoal and, while the odoriferous vapour rises, fumigate the pieces of myrtle—which plant is dedicated to Venus—in it. She would go to bed while the clock was striking the hour of midnight, placing the myrtle exactly under the head; and each would then dream of her future husband. One caution—the myrtle performance required to be passed in perfect silence."

To Pay Homage to the Unknown Dead.

(From the Montreal Herald.) A recent proposal to inter the bones of St. George, said to have been unearthed in Mesopotamia, in Westminster Abbey, was disdainfully rejected by the clergy in charge of the edifice on the ground that there was no room. That was early in September and nothing more has been heard of the cold deal handed out to the national saint.

It is now the turn of the clergy of St. Paul's to refuse a request preferred by the Comrades of the Great War, who wish to have one nameless soldier buried in St. Paul's alongside famous generals and admirals as a national tribute to the many thousands of unknown heroes who lie in France and Flanders. Dean Inge when asked his views about it replied: "We couldn't do that," and added: "I don't see any point in it."

The promoters of the movement are, nevertheless, going to Government to press the point that it is due to private soldiers that some special honor of his character should be conferred, whether at St. Paul's or Westminster Abbey. It has also been suggested that the remains of one soldier be brought from France and interred in London under a cenotaph. It is said that the French Government has adopted a similar proposal for the burial of one French soldier in the Pantheon.

The idea in itself is a splendid one, and would touch the hearts of all classes. The greatest honors have been paid to illustrious names but no organized effort has yet been made to provide an opportunity of rendering homage to the private soldier who died for his country, and whose very name is now lost in the devastation of the last five years.

In a Nutshell.

Like the sun, the modern gas fire warms solid objects—such as the furniture of a room or its occupants—without appreciably raising the temperature of the intervening air. At the same time the products of combustion in their passage up the chimney flue keep the atmosphere in healthy motion.

That is gas fire science and gas fire hygiene in a nutshell.

More Heat on Less Fuel.

Many thousands of users in City, Town and Country have learned from natural experience that the Caloric, the Original Patented Pipeless Furnace, heats the homes better than they were ever heated before, in all kinds of weather. Also that it saves one-third to one-half the Coke, Coal and Wood. If you want real winter comfort, if you want to turn your houses into homes, and if at the same time you want to cut your heating expenses to practically one-half, install a Caloric. The cost of installation and maintenance, in money and labor, is much less than the number of stoves required to heat the same space. Thousands of Caloric users have paid the first cost of their furnace through the saving of fuel. It can be installed as quickly in the old houses as in the new, frequently in a day, because it has but one register, and requires no pipes in floors or walls.

More than fifty thousand Calorics are giving satisfactory and economical service in all types of homes, up to eighteen rooms in size, as well as in churches, stores, factories and other buildings.

Read the following testimonial from one of our customers:—

St. John's, Newfoundland, November 12, 1919.

Messrs. Bowring Brothers, Ltd., Hardware Department.

I have installed the Caloric Pipeless Furnace in my home (it is also the first Caloric in Newfoundland) and find it to give all the satisfaction claimed by its manufacturers. I would therefore recommend it to anyone that wants the most perfect system of heating by the circulation of warm, moist air through one register.

THE FINEST GLASS OF WESTMINSTER ABBEY AND ST. MARGARET'S TO BE REPLACED IN POSITIONS.

The famous stained glass windows Westminster Abbey and St. Margaret's, which were taken down and stored in the crypt of the abbey after first German air raid on London, about to be "reinstated" in their original positions.

The most valuable of the windows were removed, the work of disassembling being too lengthy and costly for all to be taken to a place of safety. Each bit of glass had to be carefully taken out, numbered and away—a delicate and tedious but comparatively easy beside replacement.

The most historically interesting window that has been thus preserved is the east window from St. Margaret's, famous for the beauty of its design and the extraordinary story depicted within it.

It was originally intended for the chapel of Henry VII in Westminster, being the gift of Ferdinand and Isabella of Spain to that king on the occasion of the betrothal of the eldest son, Arthur, to their daughter, Catherine of Aragon. It was in Flanders, it was unfinished when Henry VII died, and never found its way to the abbey account of a remarkable chain of events.

Since Arthur had died before his father, after a brief married life of months and nineteen days, and his crown, therefore, passed to Henry VIII, who, soon after succeeding to the throne, married his brother's widow. It alone made the window an irreplaceable reminder of the fact that for the moment Henry desired to forget for in the left and right hand lights were the figures of Arthur and Catherine.

It is less appropriate did it become a Henry became, to-day at Cambridge and desired to divorce her. It accordingly sent to the abbey church of Waltham, where it remained until the dissolution of the abbey, when it was set up in a chapel at New Hall, Wiltshire. The property was soon afterward seized, curiously enough, by Sir Thomas Beley, father of Anne Suits By the Hundred.

A popular film star has confessed to owning more than four hundred different costumes, many of which she has only worn once. No lady of fashion would dream of possessing 100, let alone 400, dresses. She would not have time to wear half of them before the fashion had changed and they were out of date.

Big as this list is, it is nothing compared to the wardrobe of Lord Anglesey, whose clothes, after his death, were auctioned in 900 different lots. Among them were thirty bath gowns and over forty dressing gowns. There were a dozen smoking suits, the jacket of one being made entirely of Persian lamb. The waistcoats were numbered by the score, and were of silk, leather, wool, and costly furs.

Dickens and the Compositors.

Among the many distinguished traits of Charles Dickens was his inability to prepare manuscripts which could be read with accuracy or pleasure by the unfortunate compositors assigned to "set" them. James Howard, a former compositor in the printing house which published Dickens's "Edwin Drood," found occasion recently to make some remarks on the subject.

"His writing was just impossible," says Mr. Howard. "I recognized the difficulties of the task and allowed us fifty per cent. extra payment for the work. But this inducement did not attract us. There were about eighteen of us working on 'Edwin Drood,' and we were all anxious to get other work to print. Our attitude towards Dickens was, I believe, reflected in his attitude towards us. We said very unkind things about him and he reciprocated."

"We did the best we could with the manuscript that came along. We used to hold long discussions as to the meaning of some mark on his copy, and often we could not decipher it and had to make a guess. The proofs were sent to him, and he used to tear them to shreds. When the corrected proofs came back they were in a worse state than his original copy. Dickens had corrected them beyond recognition. It was obvious that he could not read his own writing, for the changes he made were nothing like the original."

Ex-Women Spies Launch Out in a New Line.

"We feared women spies much more than we did men spies during the war, for they were more difficult to detect, and now women are as elusive as crooks as they were as spies," said an officer attached to the Special Branch of Scotland Yard.

It was this department, under the capable directorship of Sir Basil Thompson, that was responsible for the tracking of spies. The number of emissaries of the Kaiser for which the Special Branch was able to account in this country is almost incredible, and light is now being thrown on its work behind the scenes by the number of German spies who are now being deported to the Fatherland.

There were few male spies known to the Special Branch, and they were only arrested after their intentions had been ascertained. What, however, baffled the police was to discover the women traitors. This was a task full of obstacles, for the methods used against the male spies could not be applied to women. Moreover, they were not necessarily Germans or Austrians, but even English, Belgian, French, or women of other nationalities.

asked of a guest by the host, and in this way at times some important information would unconsciously be divulged.

Various pretexts would be invented to communicate with other countries, and the integrity of the persons sending the messages being known to be of the highest, they were never suspected.

But the Special Branch were always alert, and several women spies were cleverly caught and punished in the manner they deserved. There were, however, barriers to face which were well nigh impenetrable.

Sold Their Services. It is superfluous to repeat here that our secret service is the best in the world, but, obviously unknown to patriots, there existed a few women living in an atmosphere of luxury who ostensibly acted to the world as true Britishers and pro Allies, but who were actually adventuresses undertaking German espionage.

Had our government sought their services they would as readily have acted for this country as for the Kaiser, money and luxury being their principal aim.

movements appeared innocent until Mrs. Bertha Frost, the society beauty specialist, and Miss Janocha, the Kaiser's accomplished Court pianist, were trapped in addition to several other women all over the country.

At the beginning of the war gaming houses and other establishments of vice were under the control of these adventuresses, but as the war progressed, the police kept continuous observation on these houses, and the delinquents thought of safer means for securing information.

Turning to Other Crimes. Spring now being an obsolete profession, the adventuresses who were fortunate enough to have escaped the clutches of the police are finding an outlet for their undesirable activities in other directions.

These ex-spies are now engaged in running some night clubs, gaming houses, and hotels for the purpose of immorality, etc. But the real criminals always take care that their identity is well concealed. During the war they escaped being shot, and now they merely risk imprisonment.

Scotland Yard is alive to the menace of permitting these persons to remain at large, and I trust that I am not divulging a police secret when I state that there are likely to be interesting developments at no distant date.—Lloyds Weekly.

Men and Money.

A Story With a Purpose.

By NELLIE L. MCCLUNG.
(In MacLean's Magazine.)

In a certain small prairie town in Western Canada, twenty-five years ago, two houses were built side by side. You will perhaps remember them when I tell you that they stood on thirty-three foot lots and were painted a stone color with brown trimmings. Each had a door and large window in the front, with a small verandah, over which were two small windows; each had a gray roof and lean-to kitchen, and the houses were divided from each other by a stone colored and brown fence, painted with what was left over from the houses.

You do not need to be told that the same man had built them, owned and rented them, and you know he was a dull fellow, without imagination, or he would have put a dab of red paint somewhere in the trimming of one, and green in the other, or an extra gable in one, or another sort of kitchen, or put the chimney or a window in a different place or made some change to break the spell. But he did not do any of these things because he had simply built them to rent, and renters are expected to be glad of anything to live in, and not to expect too much for twelve dollars and fifty cents per month, strictly in advance.

The front door opened into a small hall, whose meagre space was partially taken up by a gray painted stairway, and which afforded the occasional caller a full view of the inward workings of the kitchen, unless the door at the other end was kept shut; but the careful housewife overcame all danger of such exposure by hanging curtains over the door space. The living-room was to the right as you came in the front door, and the dining-room was separated from it by an archway, and more curtains. The dining-room had one window, whose upper portion contained squares of red, blue, and amber colored glass; the large window in the front room followed the same design. The walls were plastered, and the floors were of fir.

By these peculiarities, I am sure you will know the houses I mean.

Well, as I said, there were two of them side by side, and by a curious coincidence, they received their occupants the same day, and both mistresses were brides. William Brown, book-keeper for an implement firm, who had gone East and married Stella

Morrow of Pnerboro, and Herbert S. Wilson, banker, who had married Miss Summers, one of the teachers, were the tenants, and the people of the small town called that street "Honey-moon Avenue."

When the observant ladies of the Reception Committee of the Ladies' Aid called on the two brides, which they did in due course, they were unable to decide who had the best furniture. Mrs. Wilson had a green carpet and green chenille portieres; Mrs. Brown's were dull blue; Mrs. Wilson's china was the tea rose design, Mrs. Brown's was the gold clover leaf; Mrs. Wilson had house plants; Mrs. Brown had a bird; Mrs. Wilson had a silk eiderdown on her spare room bed, Mrs. Brown had a crocheted bedspread which her grandmother had made.

After careful discussion, the visitors of the Reception Committee were unable to institute a comparison, which should be abundant proof that the house of Wilson and the house of Brown had got away to a fair start.

At the end of the first year, the equality which had existed between the two families, was at an end, for there came into the Brown home a small, pink, blue-eyed infant, who constantly mistook the night for day, and persisted in wanting everyone to stand at attention.

Mrs. Wilson, who ran in the first afternoon to see him, presented him with a handsome garment, replete with blue bows, which she had bought the week before at a church bazaar, because, as she explained to her husband, "it was so hard to get out without buying something." It was really a very handsome present for the young barbarian, who mistook it for something of an edible nature, and even the first time it was put on him, chewed one of the dainty blue bows into shapeless squaginess. But this misdemeanor did not decrease his mother's admiration.

There were times, of course, in the first six months, when she wished he was not quite so imperative, and she often wondered how he could tell when she had gone down the cellar for the vegetables for dinner, and why he raised such a piercing wail every time she went out of the room. But she always rushed to him with breathless haste, fully expecting to find that some evil had befallen him. When she reached his crib and found that he was still intact, her thankfulness always drove out her indignation, and when he flashed his blue-eyed, two-toothed, dimpled smile at her, she forgave him freely, and marked his "board and keep bill" paid to date.

The observant caller would not have any difficulty in deciding which house had the best furniture, after the first year. The Wilsons now had a new and handsome Turkish rug in their living-room; the Browns had a cradle in theirs; the Wilsons had Japanese grass mats and swinging chairs on their verandah, the Browns had a baby carriage on the stairs. But there was no envy on either side of the mud brown paling which divided the two houses; everybody was satisfied with what they had. Sometimes, indeed, when young John Brown, dreaming of wolves, bears and kidnappers, awakened with loud wallings in the middle of the night, the Wilsons, hearing him, were sorry for their neighbors and were very glad that the quiet and calm of their own lives had not been disturbed by one of these over-bearing young things who know nothing of that unwritten law regarding the right of others to undisturbed sleep at nights.

Young John Brown awakened regularly at the hour of five each morning, and insisted upon his parents doing likewise. Perhaps it was the spirit of his industrious grandmother, the one who had made the crocheted quilt, which had been inherited by him, for he loathed late sleeping, and saw to it that both his parents began the day bright and early. Having accomplished this by the simple and unaided method of the human voice, young John settled down to a calm and refreshing sleep, during which time his mother, on tiptoe, hurried through her work, to be ready to take him out when he awoke.

Her neighbor joined a literary club that winter, and studied Maeterlinck, and Matthew Arnold, fragments of which she passed on to young John's mother, who said when the baby was old enough to take with her, she would be able to attend the meetings too. But the first time she took him to church, he tried to usurp the attention which, by all laws of fair play, belongs to the minister, and so had to be taken out in disgrace.

John's father saw in his bounding energy large possibilities of future greatness.

"Notice the shape of his head, Stella," he often said, "it is a perfectly rounded head, indicating a well-balanced disposition,—see the full forehead, with observation and reason usually full—veneration and conscientiousness especially large. This boy will never shirk his duty.—Never mind, Stella, even if you can't get out to the Browning Club, or whatever it is, you're doing something when you are bringing up young John Brown. You'll have more to show for your time than the members of the Club, in the spring."

"Of course I will," John's mother said happily.—"I expect John will be walking then, and won't I be proud when he can step out with me in the afternoon, in his blue suit and white straw hat, and is able to pass the time of day with the neighbors. He tries to say things now, and I think that's very smart for a baby only ten months old."

"He's a wonder," declared Mr. Brown, with conviction.

When John passed his first birthday, and began to walk on his fat, uncertain little legs, he had his first photograph taken, and the friends on both sides of the house were remembered in the distribution. Most of them wrote back, with strongly expressed admiration; some with faint words of praise, and one unhappy aunt sent not a word, and was struck off Mrs. Brown's correspondence list forthwith.

Mrs. Brown was too amiable a woman to be resentful even of such neglect, but she considered that any one who was not moved with admiration on beholding such a beautiful child's face, was too dull to bother with.

"When I go East, I'll go to see Aunt Grace and ask for the picture. Evidently it is of no use to her," said Mrs. Brown.

Mr. and Mrs. Brown's good opinion of their son was further enhanced, when, soon after his first birthday, he began to talk. Just what he was saying seemed to be unknown, except to the immediate family. But it was plain, as day to them. When asked what the kitty says, and what the cow says, and what the pig says, the answers he gave were strikingly similar in each case, but outsiders are often dull in such matters.

At sixteen months, he had learned one unmistakable trick—he saluted and responded when his name was called. "John Brown," called his father, when he entered the front door, and John Brown, in whatever part of the house he happened to be, struggled to his feet, and placing his heels together, stood very straight, and raising one fat hand, answered: "Present."

At least his parents said that he said "present," and it certainly sounded as much like that as anything else. His next trick was to tell, with unfailing accuracy, where his papa's boy was, by patting his own blonde head, and giving utterance to an animated whirl of sounds, which seemed like a succession of "da's," but which his parents had no difficulty in understanding. What the child said was, "Right here, right here!"

The Wilsons were brought over to hear John's tricks, and although he did them beautifully, and they laughed in apparent enjoyment, there was a slight lack of heartiness about their applause, and if John had been a real actor, he would have known that his audience was not in full accord with him, and that for some reason he had failed to put it over; but John did not care anything about their applause anyway—he had two devoted slaves on the front seats, and he did not look past them.

When the Wilsons went home, they laughed a little about John's tricks. "The Browns are nutty over that kid," said Mr. Wilson—"they make me tired sometimes."

His wife suddenly went serious. "It's nice to be silly—sometimes," she said wistfully. "I often wonder . . . and wish—"

"I don't see it," he said; "raising a squalling kid does not appeal to me—it is too much like work—if you want to, you can adopt a half-grown one—past the howling age—I can't see myself parading up and down in my nightshirt, singing 'Beulah Land' the way Brown did last summer. Echoes of that coming across the fence was enough for me. A kid costs too much time, sleep, and money, and I tell you, May, they're not worth it—Now that's the straight truth! Look at my father and mother—they raised eight, and my mother was an old woman, with a bonnet, at forty. She never had a good time—She just slaved for my kids. Every last one of us now are married and gone, and the two old folks are there alone. We write at Christmas, and send a shawl and a pair of garters, that's all the communication there is between us—It isn't fair, but what can we do? I can't talk to my mother for five minutes—we belong to different worlds—She couldn't raise kids and read the newspapers too, and she dropped behind. Maybe she doesn't know it, but I do. It's nobody's fault, I guess—but it's uncomfortable, and I can't see the sense of raising a family, and losing all the fun in life."

They had argued the question before, and always to the same conclusion.

That afternoon when Mrs. Wilson was going down town for a hair-shampoo and manicure, and saw her neighbour hanging out a washing, with young John holding on to her skirts and clamoring loudly for attention, she rejoiced in her freedom, and the pleasant life she had. Bert was right, children were too much trouble!

The next summer, John had a little brother, an exact duplicate of himself, blue-eyed, dimpled and imperative, in the hot nights, when the windows were open, the piping wall of the new baby often broke into the nightly stillness of the street. These midnight disturbances helped to decide the Wilsons to make a visit to the Coast, though they had a feeling of real pity for their neighbors left behind to struggle with the heat and the two young children.

"Maybe they like it," said Mr. Wilson, when his wife was saying that some way she felt mean about leaving her neighbor, "some people do—it is a real instinct with some people to care for kids—but I must say it's not so with me—and you can't do them any good by staying—you don't know how to mind a kid anyway."

"She didn't know, either," persisted Mrs. Wilson—"but she's learning—I could learn too—if I needed to. I wouldn't be afraid to try it."

Then she added quickly—"But I am glad I don't need to learn just now."

"That winter, the baby, whose name was Tom, had a serious illness, requiring a trained nurse and a specialist. For a few days it looked as if he had decided to give up the journey on which he had started out so joyously six months before. His dimpled face, now shrunken and wrinkled like an old man's, haunted his father as he went about his work—it was too cruel, that anything so little and so sweet should suffer pain.

"Brown walks like an old man," Mr. Wilson told his wife that day as they sat at lunch in the hotel. They had been out late at a dance the night before, and she had phoned to his office that she did not feel like cooking, and suggesting that they "eat out."

"I guess it would be a relief if the little kid did pass out. They can't ask the nurse and doctor's bills like this. Brown was in to-day to see how much he could borrow on his Life Insurance, and I gathered from what he said, they are pretty well up against it!"

Then they talked of other things. But young Tom Brown did not die. There came a day when the troubled look went out of his tired eyes, and he knew his mother when she bent over him.

When Brown came home to dinner, he did not get a chance to make his usual inquiry, "Well—how is he?" for his wife was waiting at the door, with the first real smile that he had seen for months.

"Billy," she cried—"Oh, Billy, better—he's going to get well!"

And then, quite without warning, she, Stella Brown, the brave, headstrong, tearless one, buried her head on his shoulder and cried, and cried.

Softly stroking her pretty hair, he noticed for the first time that he had streaks of gray.

Australian Government Flying Competition.

With a Brief Description of the Fliers.

Messrs. Vickers Limited have entered a standard "Vickers-Vimy" to compete for the £10,000 offered by the Government of Australia for a flight from Great Britain to Australia, with Capt. Ross Smith, M.C., D.F.C., A.F.C., and his brother, Lieut. Keith MacPherson as Pilots.

Biographical Sketch.
They were both born and educated in Adelaide, South Australia. At the outbreak of war, Capt. Ross Smith joined the 3rd Australian Light Horse Regiment as a Private, and was promoted to the rank of Captain in the first Australian Expeditionary Force, landing in Egypt in August, 1914. After four months on the Western Front he was transferred to the Royal Flying Corps as a Pilot, and later on contracted enteric fever which was fatal to him. He was buried in the desert in March 1916, and his remains were sent back to the United Kingdom in the "Queen Mary" and reburied in the cemetery at Adelaide, South Australia, in October, 1918. In October of the same year he joined the 67th (Australian) Squadron, Royal Flying Corps, as an observer, qualifying as a Pilot in July 1917. He then rejoined his old Squadron, now known as the 1st Squadron, Australian Flying Corps, stationed in Southern Palestine, and remained there until the outbreak of the influenza epidemic in December 1918, when he was evacuated to England. He was accompanied by Air Vice-Marshal Sir W. H. Salmond, K.C.M.G., C.B., D.S.C., and Air Commodore A. E. Borton, D.S.C., D.S.O., A.F.C., on the flight from Cairo to Calcutta, and after arriving at Calcutta, proceeded to England on his reconnaissance for aerodromes in Burma, Siam, Malaya, and the Netherlands East Indies. He returned to England about a month ago.

His brother, Lieut. Keith MacPherson, R.A.F., will act as reserve pilot and observer. After leaving Adelaide, Lieut. K. M. Smith joined the 1st Squadron, Australian Flying Corps, and on the outbreak of war offered his services for Overseas duty. He was accepted for several months, but was rejected, several attempts to enlist in 1915 and 1916 met with the same result, but he was subsequently accepted for a commission which considerably improved his health, and afterwards, proceeded to England by the P. & O. S.S. "Medina," which was torpedoed and sunk in the English Channel during the voyage. On arriving in England he joined the Royal Flying Corps as a Cadet, shortly after becoming a Pilot of unusual ability, and was serving as an Instructor in the North of England until the Armistice. Captain Ross Smith and his brother will be accompanied by Sergt. J. W. Bennett, A.F.M., M.S.M., and Sergt. W. H. Shiers, A.F.M., who will act as Mechanics.

Their History.
Sergt. W. H. Shiers was also born and educated at Adelaide, and spent his early life on a farm. Later on he went to Broken Hill, New South Wales, and worked at the North Mine as an Electrical Engineer. He was a student at the Technical College at Broken Hill, studying Engineering and Mechanics in his spare time, and seven years afterwards proceeded to Barren Jack Irrigation Scheme in New South Wales as an Electrician for the Yanks-Leeton area in connection with Government contracts. In March he enlisted in the 4th Divisional Artillery at Sydney, and was sent to Egypt, where he transferred to the 1st Australian Light Horse Regiment. He took part in the battle of Romani, and in October 1916 was posted to the 67th (Australian) Squadron, Royal Flying Corps, as a Mechanic. He rapidly gained promotion, and owing to his ability and resourcefulness he was on many occasions sent out to the desert to bring in crashed or damaged machines, which was at times a most difficult and arduous task. He has handled almost every type of engine, and for the last 12 months of the war was working on Rolls-Royce engines. This is Sergt. Shiers' first visit to England, and being a great admirer of the Rolls-Royce engines, which he considers to be the finest in the world, recently seized the opportunity of paying a visit to this firm's works at Derby.

Sergt. J. W. Bennett was born at St. Kilda, Melbourne, in 1892, and spent 14 years of his early life at Hawthorn, Melbourne, where he received a Public School education, and attended night Technical classes. He took great interest in all things connected with the early progress of the internal combustion engine, both for Car and aviation use, and received a thorough and early training with Salloway Motor Engineers, and was employed for a considerable time with other prominent Motor Firms in Australia. At the outbreak of war in 1914, he was on the mechanical staff of Messrs. Denny Lascells, Motor Department, Melbourne, but enlisted in the Mechanical Transport, Australian Imperial Force, as a 1st Class Air Mechanic in No. 1 Squadron, Australian Flying Corps, with which he served in Egypt and Palestine until the Armistice.

On account of the excellent records of these two Sergeants, they were specially selected to accompany Air Vice-Marshal Sir W. G. H. Salmond, K.C.M.G., C.B., D.S.C., Air Commodore A. E. Borton, C.M.G., D.S.O., A.F.C., and Capt. Ross Smith, M.C., D.F.C., A.F.C., on the first Cairo to Calcutta flight, and Air Vice-Marshal Sir W. G. Salmond stated in India that the success of the flight was largely due to their skill and knowledge. They were subsequently awarded the Air Force Medal for their work in connection with this flight, and accompanied Air Commodore A. E. Borton and Capt. Ross Smith on their reconnaissance for aerodromes in Burma, Siam, Malaya States, and Netherlands East Indies. On returning to India, they both served with the North-West Frontier Forces in the late Afghan War.

The Plane Itself.
The Aeroplane is identical to those supplied to the Royal Air Force. It will be remembered that one of these machines was earmarked for the bombing of Berlin just previous to the Armistice. It is also similar to the machine used by Capt. Sir John Alcock, K.B.E., D.S.O., except that for this flight a smaller petrol capacity is required. The engines used are the Rolls-Royce "Eagle" Mark VIII, the petrol is drawn from the main petrol tanks by two Vickers Mark II Centrifugal Petrol Pumps, and delivered to the service tank, which forms a section of the top plane, from whence it falls by gravity to the Engines.

The dimensions of the Aeroplane are as follows:—
Span 67' 9"
Overall Length 42' 8"
Overall Height 15' 8"
Gap 18' 0"
Chord 10' 0"
The maximum speed is over 100 miles per hour, but Capt. Ross Smith intends to throttle the engines down to a cruising speed of about 90 miles per hour. The weight of the machine empty is three tons; when carrying her full load on this flight of 4 men, 516 gallons of petrol, 40 gallons of oil, and 10 gallons of water, together with Spares, Kit, Tools and Sundries (adding another 300 lbs.), the total weight fully loaded will be nearly 5½ tons.
