Motion agreed to and bill read the second time.

Mr. KELLNER moved:

That Bill No. 41, respecting the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, be immediately referred to the select standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines, on the grounds of urgency and pressing necessity, and that standing order No. 105 in relation thereto be suspended.

Mr. DUNNING: I did not catch what the hon. member said.

Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the opposition): What was asked was that the bill be referred immediately to the committee and not be delayed in consequence of having to be posted under the existing standing order 105. In view of the discussion that took place in the house the other evening I think the minister would be glad to have the bill referred to the committee immediately so that the whole matter may be before it for discussion of the pros and cons.

Hon. CHARLES A. DUNNING (Minister of Railways and Canals): With that explanation I have no objection, but because the hearing of matters of this kind involves the gathering together on the part of each of the great railway systems of a number of their officers, I have endeavoured, in cooperation with the chairman of the committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines, to get some sort of a date in advance. I believe the arrangement now is—and the chairman of the committee can correct me if I am wrong—that the bills respecting the Canadian National will be considered at the Thursday meeting of the committee; that Thursday will be the Canadian National day, and that other matters before the committee will be taken up to-morrow morning. The position created by this motion will be that by Thursday the Canadian Pacific bill will also be in the hands of the committee and before it for consideration.

Mr. BENNETT: Otherwise it would not be?

Mr. DUNNING: No.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk).

IMMIGRATION OF MINERS

Mr. BOULANGER:

1. How many miners were brought to Canada from England for the harvest last summer?
2. How many of said miners are at present in Canada?
3. How many of those who remained here are settled on the land?
4. What was the cost to Canada of this experiment?

Mr. FORKE:

1. 8,449 persons came to Canada under the harvester movement.

2. Upwards of 2,000.

3. No definite information.

4. There was no outlay on the part of the government of Canada in connection with the harvester movement, except cooperation in placing them at harvest work. The British government and the transportation companies were responsible for transportation to Canada and for the return of those who went home.

HOME SEEKERS RATES

Mr. BOULANGER:

What was done to carry out the recommendations of the committee on Agriculture and Colonization in regard to granting reduced rates for the transport of Canadian settlers and with reference to the advantages which were to be given to sons of Canadian farmers having a knowledge of agriculture in order to facilitate their settling on the land?

Mr. FORKE:

The report of the select standing committee on agriculture and colonization recommended on June 6, 1928, that "measures be taken to ascertain whether the railways will restore the homeseekers' rates in effect prior to the war, making such rates effective eastbound as well as westbound." In accordance with this recommendation a letter, dated July 7, 1928, was addressed to the presidents of the Canadian Pacific railway and the Canadian National railways by the Deputy Minister of Immigration and Colonization, calling their attention to the recommendation of the select standing committee and inquiring if the railways would restore the homeseekers' rates. All the railways in Canada being concerned, the matter was referred by the presidents to the Canadian Passenger Association which subsequently replied as follows:—

Referring to your letter of July 7th addressed to the presidents of the Canadian National and Canadian Pacific railways quoting an extract from report of the select standing committee on agriculture and colonization advocating the restoration of home seekers' rates in effect prior to the war, making such rates effective eastbound as well as westbound.

As this is a matter that affects all Canadian railways to a more or less extent, it has been referred to the Canadian Passenger Association for consideration and reply.

Specially low fares for home seekers from eastern to western Canada were inaugurated, as you will probably recollect, many years ago when it was difficult to secure settlers for the prairie provinces and it was necessary from a national standpoint to encourage the movement in every way possible. At that time there was very little business and commercial travel oetween the east and west.

As the settlement of the western provinces ,rogressed, business and commercial travel gradually developed and the home seekers' travel from eastern Canada steadily decreased. As the legitimate use of the fare gradually diminished, the railways in order to protect their interests against the advantage being taken of the fare by business and commercial travel gradually raised the charge.

The increase in home seekers' fares has not been detrimental in so far as settlement of the west is concerned, inasmuch as the exceptionally low harvest help fares authorized each year meet the requirements of the actual land seeker from eastern Canada far better than the home seekers' excursion fares, which is evidenced by the fact that for a number of years the majority of those in eastern Canada who desired to settle on the land in the west took advantage of these special harvest help fares. This gives them the advantage of working for farmers in the west and earning more than enough to pay their passage fares both ways, and those who decide to settle in the western provinces arrange to move their families at the time of the next harvest excursion, when they have their buildings and home under way and ready to receive them.

Further, we are of the opinion that present conditions in Canada are such as to make it inadvisable to unduly encourage removal of individuals and families from one province to another. All provinces have vacant land and are anxiously endeavouring to not only hold their present population but to secure new settlers. Certain of the provinces have even felt the drain caused by the harvesters' excursions and have made protest against the arrangement. Our records indicate that from fifteen to twenty per cent of the harvesters who go west each year do not return to the east and that the majority of those who do not return actually settle on the land.

After very careful consideration the railways are strongly of the opinion that it would not be in the general interest to make any reduction in the present so-called "homeseekers' fares".

The select standing committee also recommended, subject to the completion of satisfactory arrangements with governments of the provinces, that assistance equal to that given by the British government to British emigrant boys be extended by the government of Canada to the Canadian youth who are trained in agriculture. This is still the subject of negotiation with the provincial governments.

DISTRESS AMONGST WELSH MINERS

Mr. CHURCH:

Mr. MACKENZIE KING:

1. No official intimation has been received.

2 and 3. In cases of unemployment it has not been customary for one government to propose a grant for relief without an indication from the government of the country in question that such a course would be acceptable.

4. $806,736.72 has been paid since 1905 for relief in cases of sudden disaster and famine.

VANCOUVER ISLAND DEVELOPMENT

Mr. NEILL:

In view of the extensive developments on the west coast of Vancouver island, has the government in contemplation a more extensive program of charting the coast and inlets?

UNOPPOSED MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

OLD AGE PENSIONS

Mr. CHURCH:

For a copy of all correspondence, orders in council, agreements, and other documents exchanged between the government of Canada or any member thereof, and the government of the Province of Ontario, or any member thereof, relating to old age pensions for the said province of Ontario, and showing the terms and conditions of federal aid in this matter.

PINE FALLS LEASE

Mr. HEAPS:

For a copy of all letters, correspondence, and other documents in the possession of the government, pertaining to the lease of Pine falls to the Manitoba Paper Company.

BAILEY'S BROOK PIER—PICTOU WHARVES

Mr. THOMAS CANTLEY (Pictou) moved:

For a copy of all correspondence exchanged between the minister of public works, the deputy minister, or any officer or clerk of the department, and any person or persons in the county of Pictou, referring to or in any way dealing with the subject of repairs or renewals of the repairs to or the extension of the pier at Bailey's Brook and repairs to railway wharves, Pictou; also for a copy of all payrolls and accounts in connection with both of above works;

2. For a return showing the names of the several foremen and all persons employed thereon, the number of days of employment, the rate of pay and the total amount paid each;

3. For a return showing materials used in such repairs or renewals, particularly the kinds and quantities of timber, lumber, iron and steel, and fastenings, and the prices paid therefor;

4. For a return showing other materials, their quantities and the prices paid therefor, the total cost of same in each case and the names of the parties from whom purchased and the amounts paid to each;

5. For a statement showing the date when the work on each of these repair operations begun, when operations ceased, whether repairs are completed in each case, and if not, what proportion of the work has been done, when the work will be resumed and when completed.

Hon. J. A. ROBB (Minister of Finance): I do not rise to offer any objection to the motion, but simply to point out that when the estimates were being prepared we discovered some increases in the different departments, and upon inquiry we were advised by the deputies that the increases were due to the very greatly increased work that had fallen on the departments in preparing returns asked for by this parliament. I submit that a motion such as this will add materially to the expenses for the coming year, and next year possibly we may be asked for further increases to pay for additional help required in preparing these returns for parliament.

Mr. CANTLEY: The minister is getting very economical all at once.

Motion agreed to.

IMPERIAL CABLE MERGER

Mr. A. A. HEAPS (North Winnipeg) moved:

For a copy of all letters, cables, correspondence and other documents or agreements, entered into by the Canadian government in connection with the imperial cable merger of 1928.

Hon. P. J. VENIOT (Postmaster General): Before this motion is carried, I should like to draw to the attention of the hon. member the fact that we have certain correspondence of a private nature between the contracting parties, the different governments of England, Australia, New Zealand and Canada, and that until we receive permission to place that correspondence on the table, we cannot do so. I might further add that the merger includes not only the Pacific cable but other cables over which Canada has no control. I would ask the hon. gentleman if he would allow the matter to stand, and perhaps before the end of the session we may be able to obtain the information that he is now seeking and place it before the house.

Mr. HEAPS: This question has been thoroughly discussed in other parliaments in different parts of the empire, and there is no reason why the house should not have an opportunity for discussing it after we have been able to go through the papers which may be in the possession of the government. I have an idea that the papers which the minister may want to hold back, have been produced in some other parts of the empire.

Mr. VENIOT: That may be quite true, but there is no evidence to show that any part of this confidential correspondence has been submitted to the British parliament. If that has been done, permission from the other governments has most likely been received. We have not had time since this motion was placed on the order paper to obtain permission. I have no hesitation in having the matter discussed, but I do hesitate to produce documents of a confidential nature before getting permission to produce them.

Mr. HEAPS: I have no objection to the statement of the Postmaster General (Mr. Veniot), except that he states it may take till the end of the session before the papers are produced. Surely it would not take that long.

Mr. VENIOT: I did not say that.

Motion stands.

ST. LAWRENCE WATERWAY

DEVELOPMENT OF WATER-POWER AND IMPROVEMENT OF NAVIGATION

The house resumed, from February 21, consideration of the proposed motion of Mr Church:

That, in the opinion of this house, immediate action should be taken, without further and unnecessary delays, to enter into a treaty with the government of the United States for the immediate development and generation of water-power on the St. Lawrence river and its deepening and development in the interests of navigation, and that a great St. Lawrence waterway is an immediate and economic necessity for the welfare and best interests of Canada.

And that this house is further of the opinion that the government should undertake the construction and operation of this canal as a public undertaking itself and the power incident herein should be developed and generated at cost by the government for the people under public ownership and not alienated to private interests for gain or exported for use outside Canada.

He said: This particular resolution calls for a national federal policy regarding the St. Lawrence waterway, a policy such as was given to Ontario in light and power in this matter by Sir James Whitney and Sir Adam Beck.

There would have been no hydro-electric movement in Ontario had it not been for the Conservative party. It was this policy of Whitney and Beck that did so much for the industries of the province of Ontario, and made it the great agricultural province it is to-day, by giving cheap power and light to the farmer, the labourer, and the housewife in the urban centres of population.

The particular St. Lawrence waterway proposition before us has been under discussion and has stood the test of investigation by committees of advisory engineers for ten years. They have made their report, and the Conservative party, if in power, would have no difficulty whatever in solving this problem. There is, I admit, a little division in our own party on this question, between our friends from Quebec and our friends from Ontario, but I predict a solution will be had that under our honoured leader (Mr. Bennett), who has given his life to public service, and has spent his best years in service for others and for the good of the country generally. There is no district in the province of Ontario where the name of Hon. R. B. Bennett is more honoured and stands higher or more respected by everybody and by all classes of citizens than in Toronto.

The Conservative party would have no difficulty in solving this problem were they in office. So far as I am concerned, I make no apology about saying I have always been a Whitney-Beck Conservative. I have stood for the preservation of our water-powers for the people all the time, and I would like to see the Conservative party in this Dominion take up the development of the St. Lawrence waterway and make it a plank in the Conservative party platform. The country owes everything of a constructive nature to the Conservative party. It is the party which the country always sends for when in trouble. The Liberal-Conservative party founded the hydro-electric system in the face of the opposition of the Ross-Hardy government. I warn this government to be very careful in what it does with respect to water-power, because in 1905 the Ross-Hardy government in Ontario was defeated at the polls and driven from office by people of all parties in the province of Ontario because of the iniquitous power deals they had made. To-day in the city of Winnipeg the Bracken government is on its last legs over the question of the Seven Sisters falls. A year ago the Beauharnois boys very nearly got away with the title deeds of power in the St. Lawrence waterway, from this government in power here at Ottawa, and then we would have had, the St. Lawrence waterway. Last session I asked for papers to be brought down to parliament dealing with the Seven Sisters question, but the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Stewart) asked me to let my motion stand, and the result was that the proper papers have never been brought down at all. I advise the government to go slow in regard to the Beauharnois project. Let them look at Winnipeg and see what is happening there over cheap light and power. The people of Canada are in no mood to put up with this giving away of the title deeds to our natural resources.

The Conservative party was responsible for the construction of the Canadian Pacific railway. It is the party that is responsible for the policy of protection. It has always been a consistent constructive party, and has always been ready to risk unpopularity to stand by its principles. It is the Conservative party that is to-day developing the Pacific coast province, where the Liberal administration was recently defeated at the polls. The Conservative party at present in Ontario has given the province the best administration it has ever had in the various departments since confederation. We now have honesty of administration. The different public departments in the province were never so well run as they are to-day. We have never had such progressive administration in the province in the matter of public health, good roads, education or research. There is only one matter in which I differ from the government of the province, and that is they have given up the policy of Sir Adam Beck, and are failing to generate and distribute the power and have become just a purchaser of power. No public enterprise ever encountered the venom and experienced more unfair and unjust misrepresentation than did the work of the Hydro-Electric Power Commision of Ontario, and now the St. Lawrence waterway has to encounter the same kind of opposition. But the hydro-electric power commission became the chief glory of the Liberal-Conservative party in Ontario, headed by Sir James Whitney and Sir Adam Beck.

The country always sends for the Conservative part in time of national difficulty and when great economic problems have to be solved. If any government ever made a football of a great economic problem it is the present government in its treatment of the St. Lawrence waterway. They talk about a division of opinion in the Conservative party with respect to the proper solution of this question; but that is nothing compared with the lack of harmony among hon. gentlemen opposite in regard to the same question. This government no longer represents the true principles of Liberalism. Sir James Whitney and Sir Adam Beck, when they founded the hydro, had to face all kinds of opposition, abuse and obstruction. They were even called amateur anarchists, and the opponents of the hydro in the press and in the elections did everything to ridicule the Niagara and Chippawa power projects.

Lord Kelvin was called in to advise regarding the possibility of bringing power from DeCew falls to Hamilton, thirty-eight miles. Apparently he could not see very far, for he said that if they put their money in the Welland canal they could dredge the canal and might get it back, but if they put their money in the proposed DeCew falls development they would never get it back. Amid such doubts and fears Sir Adam Beck went ahead and overcame all opposition and, backed up by the hydro Conservatives, he made hydro development in Ontario the sucess it is to-day as a means of cheap light and power. The government and its Beauharnois friends will have the battle of their lives on their hands if they try to alienate the sovereign rights of the province of Ontario in the water-powers of the St. Lawrence and the water-powers of Ontario. These are the property of the people, and they must be developed for the benefit of the people. It was the people's money that demonstrated the worth of water-power development in Ontario, and there can be no greater dereliction of duty on the part of those who are departing from that basic principle under the bogey of a temporary saving by buying power instead of developing it, a saving which in years to come will cost the people of this province tens of millions of dollars. There should have been no departure from that basic policy of Sir Adam Beck.

In the Beauharnois company the people of Canada are threatened by a monopoly more powerful than Canada has ever seen, and should the water-powers of the St. Lawrence be turned over to that company, generations yet unborn will be adversely affected in their economic and industrial development, and in their domestic life. In parting with these water-powers we are in effect placing a huge debt on future generations and mortgaging the profits of their labour.

As the Ontario government has apparently changed its hydro policy, and has revoked Sir Adam Beck's program of developing and generating power, becoming thereby a mere customer or purchaser of power from the electric monopoly in Quebec, the federal government has a great opportunity to come out with a federal hydro policy. And it is not outside the British North America Act for the federal authorities to develop and generate power from canal works and distribute the current at cost to the provinces. This would make for a greater Canada.

The national advisory committee appointed by the government reported on the St. Lawrence project as follows:

1. That the project is practical, necessary and urgent;
2. There is no fear of United States aggression, or loss of sovereign rights;
3. It involves no further cost to the Dominion government or the taxpayer;
4. That it will be of incalculable benefit in navigation and power;
5. The entire project is an economic desire that should be immediately accomplished.

This report goes on to show the utter economic absurdity of an all-Canadian canal. An all-Canadian canal is not feasible from the standpoint of navigation, power or diversion of water, and the country could not afford it. The sovereignty bogey is raised by the private power interests to enable them to grab the people's heritage. They talk about the American bogey while various Ontario governments have conceded in economic ways to the Americans more territory than did King George III. From the Ottawa river to the Nipigon, in the vast hinterland of new Ontario, the timber, the pulpwood, the mines and the water-powers have been ceded to American promoters for a few paltry dollars.

I believe the time has come when the Conservative party should take up this St. Lawrence waterway question. They should close their ranks and try to solve this vital problem for the benefit of the central provinces of Canada. That used to be the attitude of the Ontario government. I heard Mr. Ferguson on platforms all over Ontario supporting that policy of a greater St. Lawrence waterway. If they have since revoked Sir Adam Beck's program I shall be much surprised, because it will hurt the Conservative party in Ontario which has always been the champion of the great public ownership policy in Ontario under which hydro-electric development has been made such an outstanding success. The Conservatives did it all and deserve the credit. The municipalities of Ontario now have nearly $300,000,000 invested in that development in light, power and transportation. The city of Toronto has an investment of nearly $100,000,000, and it is my duty to protect that investment, and I will continue to protect it. If the Ontario government have become a mere customer of the great electric monopoly in Quebec, then the federal government has a unique opportunity to proclaim a federal hydro policy. As I have already said, such a policy is not outside the British North America Act. What is wanted is a national and federal canal policy, and a national and federal hydro policy, as applied to the St. Lawrence. This would be the salvation of Canada and the making of any party that undertakes it in the open.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the resolution of the hon. member for Toronto Northwest (Mr. Church) might more appropriately be termed a series of resolutions. With the permission of the house I will re-read his motion:

> That, in the opinion of this house, immediate action should be taken, without further and unnecessary delays, to enter into a treaty with the government of the United States for the immediate development and generation of water-power on the St. Lawrence river and its deepening and development in the interests of navigation, and that a great St. Lawrence waterway is an immediate and economic necessity for the welfare and best interests of Canada.
> And that this house is further of the opinion that the government should undertake the construction and operation of this canal as a public undertaking itself and the power incident herein should be developed and generated at cost by the government for the people under public ownership and not alienated to private interests for gain or exported for use outside Canada.

The house will observe that the motion asks, first of all, that a treaty be entered into immediately with the United States for the development and generation of water-power on the St. Lawrence. That is the first proposal; it is with respect to water-power. The second is that a treaty be entered into immediately with the United States for the deepening and development of the St. Lawrence river in the interests of navigation. The third proposal is that the house declare that a great St. Lawrence waterway is an immediate and economic necessity for the welfare and best interests of Canada. In the fourth place, the resolution proposes that the government of Canada should undertake the construction and operation of this canal as a public enterprise. The resolution does not say what canal is meant, whether it is some canal, which is to be ancilliary to the St. Lawrence river, or whether it is the channel of the St. Lawrence when deepened. Then there is a fifth proposal, that the power incidental to the canal—that is, either the supplementary canal or the deepened channel of the St. Lawrence—should be developed and generated by the government at cost. There is a sixth proposal, that the power incidental to the canal should be developed under public ownership and not as a private undertaking.

And, finally, there is the recommendation that the power incidental to the canal should not be exported for use outside of Canada.

There are seven different propositions on which the house is called upon to pronounce in a single resolution. I direct the attention of the house to this immediately, because it is important that all parties interested should understand the reason which may govern the house should it decline to accept the resolution in the form in which it has been presented. It is not a single resolution; rather, as I have said, it is a bill of fare, and I am inclined to think contains too many items to admit of proper digestion at a single session of parliament.

I would invite my hon. friend's attention to the step which was taken early last year to refer to the supreme court an important constitutional question relative to the respective rights of the provinces and of the Dominion with respect to power generated in connection with developments by the Dominion for navigation purposes. The hon. member has taken too little account of the answers which have been given by the supreme court to this question. They concern the relative rights of the Dominion and the provinces in relation to proprietary interest in and legislative control over waters with respect to navigation and water-powers made available by or in connection with works for the improvement of navigation.

Take the first recommendation of the resolution—that a treaty be entered into immediately with the United States for the development and generation of water-power on the St. Lawrence river. My hon. friend's remarks directed to the government with respect to water-powers have for the most part been to the effect that this government has no right whatever to deal with the question of water-powers; yet he now suggests, in the first clause of his resolution, that we should enter into a treaty with the United States in connection with the generation of water-power. Were the government to undertake to follow the hon. gentleman, I fancy we would not be able to proceed very far before he himself would be the first to object that we were exceeding our jurisdiction in entering a field of operation which is one with which the provinces are more particularly concerned.

I do not intend to review the various proposals of my hon. friend's resolution but rather to discuss the broad subject of the development of the St. Lawrence, because I take it that this is the theme which it was intended should be discussed upon the introduction of the resolution.

For over one hundred years past the St. Lawrence river has afforded a common highway and transportation outlet to the peoples in the interior of this continent, whether residing in Canada or in the United States. In that period of time the St. Lawrence highway has been the subject of many treaties and conventions and its development has been, as well, a matter of continuous effort and consideration. I have in my hand a report of a special committee of the senate of Canada which was appointed at the last session, to inquire into the development and improvement of the St. Lawrence river. At page 7 of that report there is a chapter entitled, "A Quarter of a Century of International Negotiation". This chapter, which was prepared by Mr. Yates, the Assistant Deputy Minister of the Department of Railways and Canals, sets out the more important stages in the negotiations between Canada and the United States respecting the St. Lawrence river development. In discussing this matter I intend to use the word "negotiations" in the same sense in which it is used in this report of the senate committee. Possibly the words "joint consideration" would be even more appropriate than the word "negotiation", lest by use of the latter term it might be inferred that steps have been taken which are of a binding character with respect to the particular project which is the subject of discussion at the present moment.

Reviewing negotiations which have taken place, it will be found that the most important step was taken twenty years ago when a treaty was entered into with respect to boundary waters. The treaty was made in 1909, and pursuant thereto the International Joint Commission was appointed, to which commission were referred, among other subjects, matters pertaining to the development of the St. Lawrence waterway. In 1919 the International Joint Commission took up more particularly the investigation of the feasibility of improving navigation facilities on the St. Lawrence between Montreal and lake Ontario so as to transform that section into an ocean shipway; its report was made to the governments of the United States and of Canada respectively in December, 1921. In that report the International Joint Commission strongly recommended the undertaking of the deepening of the St. Lawrence as an ocean shipway between Montreal and lake Ontario. The commission, however, advised that before a final decision was made there should be a further examination by a board of engineers with regard to engineering considerations, of which account would have to be taken. On March 14, 1924, the president of the United States appointed what was known as the St. Lawrence River Commission, of which the Honourable Mr. Hoover, then Secretary of Commerce, now the president-elect of the United States, was made chairman. This commission was asked to consider the whole project in its economic and national aspects and to express an opinion as to whether the project should be undertaken. Shortly after the appointment of this commission by the United States government the government of Canada on May 7 appointed a body with similar functions. It is known as the National Advisory Committee. Of that committee Right Hon. George P. Graham, the then Minister of Railways and Canals, was appointed chairman. By an exchange of notes between the two governments, through the arrangements brought about by these two bodies, a joint engineering board was appointed and instructed to review and extend the engineering plans as recommended by the International Joint Commission in 1921. The joint engineering board, composed of three representatives from the United States and three from Canada, went into matters very carefully and it made an elaborate re-survey of lake and river systems both as to navigation and power, and its report to both governments upon all the engineering aspects was presented on November 16, 1926. For the most part the report is unanimous; it is unanimous in its statement as to the feasibility and advisability of the improvement of the St. Lawrence waterway for navigation and power purposes. With reference to the advisability of the undertaking, if I am not mistaken, it draws attention to the fact that there are considerations of which each of the countries may wish to take account, but as an engineering project it makes it quite clear that the deepening of the St. Lawrence as a ship-way is wholly feasible. There was a difference of opinion between the engineers appointed by the United States government and those appointed by the Canadian government with respect to the best form of development; the United States engineers favoured a single stage development in the international rapids section of the St. Lawrence river, while the Canadian engineers favoured a two-stage development in that section. This report was submitted to the United States St. Lawrence River Commission whose members accepted it and advised the United States government to do likewise. The commission recommended that negotiations should be entered into with the government of Canada in an endeavour to arrive at an agreement as to the development of the waterway. The government of the United States adopted the recommendations of the St. Lawrence River Commission and so advised the Canadian government. In this manner correspondence was opened between Canada and the United States in a series of communications which extended over the period April, 1927, to April, 1928.

The first communication was from the United States and was dated April 13, 1927. It proposed as I have already indicated that negotiations should be entered into to arrive at an agreement with respect to the deepening of the St. Lawrence as an ocean shipway, and Canada was invited to become a party to such an agreement. At the time this communication was received the advisory board in Canada was awaiting appendices to the report of the joint board of engineers which contained alternative plans with respect to the development of the international rapids section, and the board advised the government not to reply finally to the request with respect to an agreement until they had been given an opportunity to consider in its entirety the report of the joint board of engineers. Accordingly on July 12 a communication was sent to the United States government advising that there would be a delay in answering its request but that when we had received further information from our national advisory board we would reply, discussing the whole situation, including the proposal made.

In January, 1928, the national advisory committee made its report to the Dominion government. The committee had received a full report from the joint engineering board, and in its report to the government it set out what in its opinion was the nature of the reply which should be made by Canada to the United States. Subsequently a reply was sent to the United States government very much along the lines indicated by the national advisory committee. That reply pointed out that in addition to the engineering features there were important financial and economic considerations which Canada would require to be taken into account and also that, with regard to one particular phase of the matter, namely, the export of power, it would have to be distinctly understood we could not consider any agreement which would involve the exportation of power from Canada to the United States.

Perhaps in passing I might touch on this point specifically. It is the last one referred to in the resolution of my hon. friend and is one which it might be well to have in mind in connection with any further consideration of the matter. Our government has repeatedly made clear its policy with respect to the exportation of power from Canada to the United States. We have given it as our opinion that power should not be exported. That opinion was endorsed by the national advisory committee with respect to the power which might be generated in connection with the development of the St. Lawrence. Accordingly, in writing the United States with respect to any possible basis of negotiation, our position in this regard was made very clear. The exact statement made by our government will be found in the correspondence which passed between the United States and Canada all of which was tabled in this house on April 17, of last year. In that correspondence will be found a communication dated January 31, 1928, which contains these words:

Reference was made in your note to the early development of hydro-electric power as a factor which must have equal application to and influence upon the Dominion of Canada. The opportunity of developing great quantities of power incidental to navigation is, it is agreed, a special advantage possessed by the St. Lawrence project, and an important consideration in determining its advisability. In this aspect of the project, however, there are again special features in the Canadian situation which it is desirable to make clear. Public opinion in Canada is opposed to the export of hydro-electric power, and is insistent that such power as may be rendered available on the St. Lawrence, whether from the wholly Canadian section, or from the Canadian half of the international section, shall be utilized within the Dominion to stimulate Canadian industry and develop the natural resources. With this view the national advisory committee expresses itself as in complete accord.

When the United States government replied to our communication it was made perfectly clear that from the point of view of the United States, Canada was entirely within her rights in taking such a position, and that no question would be raised on the part of the United States with respect thereto. This recognition of Canada's attitude and right will be found in the communication dated March 12, 1928, and is as follows:

The United States fully recognizes the right of the Dominion of Canada to the ownership and use of the Canadian share of the power which may be developed in the international section of the waterway as well as to all that developed in the national section and it recognizes also that the disposition of the power is purely a domestic question. It recognizes further that this share is an inherent attribute of Canadian sovereignty, irrespective of the agency by which the power may be developed.

Mr. HEAPS: May I ask the date of that communication?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That communication was dated March 12, 1928.

Mr. BENNETT: Have any licenses been granted during the last two years for the exportation of power?

Mr. MALCOLM: The principal license covers export of off-peak power granted to the Ontario Hydro Electric Commission.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: If my hon. friend is referring to the development of Niagara power that settlement has been endorsed by the Ontario government. It was a matter of negotiation between the government of Ontario and this government, as well as the government of the United States.

Mr. BENNETT: The hydro-electric?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes. That matter will possibly come up when we discuss the approval of a treaty between the United States and Canada with respect to the scenic beauty of Niagara Falls.

What I wish to make clear at the moment is that, with respect to any projected St. Lawrence development, this parliament may take it as definitely settled and understood between the United States and Canada that power generated on the St. Lawrence and belonging to Canada will not be exported to the United States but will be used for the development of our industries and our natural resources.

The national advisory committee, in indicating the points which in its opinion should be mentioned to the United States in reply to its communication, touched, among other things, on the depth to which it would be advisable to deepen the canal. The joint engineering board had suggested a depth of 25 feet, but the advisory board was of the opinion that the canal should be dredged to a depth of 27 feet; that that would be a wise precaution, having regard to possible future development and contingencies. This was embodied in our reply. The attention of the United States government was also drawn to the difference between their engineers and ours with respect to single and double stage development and also to the fact that engineers of the Ontario government had plans which differed in some particulars from the plans prepared by the engineers of the Canadian government and the joint engineering board; it was stated we would naturally be desirous of having the engineers appointed by the federal government to the joint engineering board meet with the engineers of the province of Ontario to discuss the two Canadian plans—if I may so refer to them—and see if an agreement could not be reached between them with respect thereto.

Mr. BENNETT: The Ontario plans referred only to waters other than international.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: No, they referred to the international rapids section.

Mr. BENNETT: The Ontario government took the position, as did the Quebec government, as I understand it, that with respect to waters which were not international in character they and they only had the right to construct works that did not in any sense interfere with or impede navigation.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I have not here the phraseology used, but I have been corresponding with the Premier of Ontario with respect to the matter, and I have had in mind the rapids section referred to by the joint engineers in their report, and I am sure Mr. Ferguson had the same waters in mind. These waters are part of the international section of the St. Lawrence.

In its communication to the United States government replying to the possibility of our entering into negotiations to arrive at a treaty with respect to the deepening of the St. Lawrence, the Canadian government sought to bring to the attention of the United States government all considerations which were likely to be material factors in arriving at any settlement. These questions were brought up at the outset so that there might be no doubt in the minds of either the Canadian public or the American public as to the basis on which we would be prepared to proceed with negotiations, which basis we regarded as all-important. In this regard mention was made first, of certain financial considerations; secondly, of certain economic considerations; thirdly, of the engineering considerations; and fourthly, a matter to which I have not as yet referred, of the constitutional question between the provinces and the Dominion as to their relative rights in the matter of water powers made available by or in connection with works for the improvement of navigation.

May I pause for a moment to say a word as to the constitutional question. In the fall of 1927 a Dominion-provincial conference was held in this city, at which questions of concern to the provinces and ourselves were freely discussed. At that conference the premiers of Ontario and Quebec brought up the question of power rights as between the Dominion and the provinces where the power was generated as a result of developments for navigation purposes. We were asked if we would refer that subject to the Supreme Court to get an opinion as to the respective rights of the provinces and the Dominion. We agreed to do so, and on January 18, 1928, the Dominion government presented a series of questions to the Supreme Court with respect to the relative rights, interests, powers and control of the Dominion and the provinces respectively as they pertained to power and navigation. After these questions had been submitted we were asked by the provinces if we would agree to supplement them by other questions which would clarify the position as to the rights of the provinces with respect to power. Complying with that request, the original order in council of January 18 was amended on April 14 to include two additional questions which the provinces wished to have added to the original questions submitted. The Supreme Court had its hearing on these matters in October, and within the month past has given its answers to the questions which were submitted.

Mr. GEARY: Is the right hon. gentleman free to say what action, if any, and what steps, if any, are to be taken with regard to the judgment to which he has just referred, either by way of appeal or resubmission of the questions?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I will come to that in a few minutes.

The conference between the provinces and the Dominion having taken place in the month of November and before our reply was sent to the United States, we felt that we should draw the attention of the United States to the fact that these constitutional questions had been raised by the provinces at this conference, and the fact that we were submitting to the Supreme Court, a series of questions, and asking the Supreme Court for answers thereto. What we asked the United States in so many words was whether the United States would be prepared, when it came to negotiating, to accept as a basis of negotiation what we had indicated we would wish to have taken into account with respect to finances; what we had indicated would have to be taken into account with respect to economic conditions; what might have to be taken into account as the result of the answers made by the supreme court to the questions which had been submitted. Finally, we made mention of the Dominion's desire to have a conference with the provinces immediately concerned, namely, Ontario and Quebec, before giving a final answer to the United States in reference to the suggested agreement. In other words, our communication sent on January 31, 1928, outlined the considerations of which we felt Canada would have to take account, and asked if the procedure outlined would afford "an acceptable basis of negotiation," in which event we would then consult with the provinces, once the supreme court's answers to our questions were given.

The reply, dated March 12, which we received from the United States, was with respect to all these matters broadly in the affirmative. The government of the United States said that while it could not say that it agreed with all that was set out in the report of the advisory committee, nevertheless it felt inclined to regard as an acceptable basis of negotiation a proposal along the general lines indicated, namely, along what had been suggested with respect to a division of costs, what had been referred to as economic considerations of which we would have to take account, and the matter of there being no exportation of hydro-electric power as the result of any agreement that might be entered into, and finally, the understanding that the Dominion should, before seeking any final settlement, have a conference with the provinces immediately concerned. I think that covers fairly accurately most of the essential points. It was suggested that the two countries should proceed with the appointment of commissioners to discuss jointly the problems presented with a view to the formulation of a convention. We replied on April 5, 1928, that Canada recognized that an acceptable basis of negotiation had been found sufficiently definite to enable us to take the next step, namely, that of consultation with the provinces concerned, following which we would be in a position to make an appropriate reply to the United States. The United States on April 7 agreed that our government should take up this matter with the provinces.

With regard to the engineering features the United States government also intimated that it could see no objection to the Dominion engineers conferring with the engineers of the province of Ontario with a view of seeing whether an agreement might not be reached between Ontario and the Dominion as to the best plan of development of the international rapids section. The United States went a step further and indicated that after the province and the Dominion had come to an agreement on engineering features with respect to the Canadian point of view, they would be quite willing to refer the whole engineering aspect of the question back of the joint board of engineers with a view to seeing whether there could not be, as there would necessarily have to be in time, unanimity with respect to the plan of development of the international rapids section.

I hope I have made clear what the difference really is with respect to the development of the international section. The United States engineers preferred a one-stage development; they preferred that because they believed it would be less costly; that more power could be developed at a less cost, and that it would obviate the necessity of the construction of one lock. The Canadian engineers preferred a two-stage development, believing that it would avoid the necessity of constructing the large embankments or levees necessitated by the single-stage plan, which the Canadian engineers thought would be viewed with some concern by communities in the immediate vicinity. It was also felt by the Canadian engineers that a two-stage development would permit of the power being developed and marketed by degrees; that the power from the first stage would be available before the second stage was commenced, and that by the time the second stage was completed, the country would be in a position to absorb the further power.

Mr. McGIBBON: Can the Prime Minister tell us the difference in the cost of the two projects?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I am sorry I have not the figures showing the difference in cost. The report contains them. The Canadian project is somewhat more expensive, but how much more expensive I cannot say. The United States government suggested in the communication to which I have just referred, that it might be unnecessary to wait until the engineers had completed their further consideration of the projects, before appointing commissioners to draft the convention that might serve as a means of bringing about an agreement. It was suggested that possibly commissioners might be appointed and the work of arranging an agreement proceeded with while the engineers were doing their technical work; that they would be called upon to advise any commission that might be appointed and that the two could proceed concurrently. At this point in April of last year the correspondence between the Dominion and the United States concluded.

From April up to the present time there has been no further correspondence for the reason that we have been awaiting the answers by the supreme court to the questions which were submitted to it. The answers were given at the beginning of this month. Hon. members must already be familiar, if not with the text, at least with the general nature of them. We had hoped we might find in the answers which the supreme court would give to the questions submitted to it, a solution to the very intricate and involved question of the relative rights of the provinces and the Dominion with respect to power. But while the answers which have been given by the supreme court have clarified certain points, they certainly do not help very much in making clear many of the questions that are of importance with respect to the relative rights of the provinces and the Dominion in the matter of power. The court did not find itself able to give a very definite answer to several of the more important questions submitted. It will apparently be difficult to secure from the courts by submission of questions of general scope any definite or precise finding. In so many words, the judges of the supreme court say—and their opinion is unanimous—that it is impossible, from a series of abstract questions, to give concrete answers which will meet all situations which may arise; that the only way in which, so far as the courts are concerned, definite answers may be expected with regard to this involved question, is to have each case submitted and decided on its merits.

This much is clear, and here I come to answer my hon. friend who interrupted me a moment ago. From the opinion of the supreme court it would seem that we might wait from now to the day of judgment, if I may use that expression, to get from any court an opinion conclusive enough to settle as between the Dominion and the provinces all of the questions with respect to their relative rights in the matter of power. So far as we can be guided by the opinion of the supreme court, it would appear that if an appeal from the answers which they have given were taken to the privy council, we could expect nothing more from the privy council in the way of definiteness than what we have already obtained from the supreme court. In the circumstances, having sought in the first instance a solution of the constitutional question by an appeal to the courts, and having received the replies which we have received, the government is of opinion that it is in the interests of all concerned, of the provinces and of the Dominion in their relations to each other, as well as of the Dominion in its relation to the United States in dealing with this question of international waterways, that we should not seek for the present at least to settle this matter by any further reference to the courts, but that we should endeavour to seek a solution by direct conference between the provinces immediately concerned and ourselves. Accordingly the government has decided, as we advised the United States government we would decide when we received the replies from the supreme court, to ask the governments of Ontario and Quebec to meet us in conference, to see if it is not possible to arrive by agreement between us at some settlement which will secure the provinces in their full rights with respect to power, and secure the Dominion with respect to all national interests involved. We are at the present time sending communications to the Premier of Ontario and to the Premier of Quebec asking that, as soon after this session of parliament is over as may be convenient to them, they meet us in conference, that we may see as a result of direct conference whether it is not possible for us to come to an agreement which, as I have said, will permit without further question the development of the power in which the provinces are interested, and which will secure the Dominion in all its rights in respect to navigation and power, and which will enable the St. Lawrence development to go forward on such lines as may be agreed upon between the provinces and ourselves; in other words, to see if it is not possible to work out a plan of St. Lawrence development which will safeguard any interests of the provinces in the development of power as well as the national interests.

That is the present position, and I submit that it would not have been possible for the government to have proceeded in this matter more rapidly or more effectively in any other way than by the method I have described. Had we met the provinces without referring the constitutional question in the first instance to the supreme court, we would have been in the dark as to what in the event of a submission we might expect. We know now the point at which we are likely to arrive as the result of submission to the court of questions with respect to constitutional rights in the matter of power. But we see no reason why, speaking for the federal government, it should not now be possible for the Premier of Ontario and the Premier of Quebec, with a group of their colleagues, to meet with members of the federal government and, actuated by a desire to remove those differences and uncertainties which make for friction and create doubt as between the provinces and the Dominion, to work out some sort of settlement which will be satisfactory to all concerned. In other words, we are following in regard to Ontario and Quebec the method which we have followed in our dealings with the other provinces of Canada. We have attempted, for instance, to deal with the problems which were uppermost in the minds of our friends in the maritimes by going carefully by direct negotiation into the questions which are of greatest concern to them. We are taking up by direct negotiation with members of the western governments the questions of the transfer of the natural resources which are the outstanding and immediate questions so far as they are concerned. So far as the two old provinces of Ontario and Quebec are concerned the question of power development, and the question of the development of the St. Lawrence channel as an ocean shipway, are the matters which are of prime importance, and it is our hope, indeed, it is our expectation, that meeting together with a sincere desire to work out a solution of these problems, we shall be able to find a satisfactory solution.

I say that with the more confidence because of experiences that we have already had. I referred a moment ago to the dominion-provincial conference held in 1927, at which conference there were a number of very intricate problems. With respect to many of those problems we were able by conference to find a solution to the satisfaction of the governments concerned. With respect to this very matter of power and navigation rights, we were able to make some progress in one important particular. Since the conference was held there has been an agreement with the province of Ontario with regard to the preservation of the scenic beauty of Niagara falls. That agreement involved, in a small way to be sure, but, nevertheless, involved practically all the considerations that are likely to come up in this larger issue. We were dealing there with international waterways; we were dealing there with power rights; we were dealing there as well with questions that had to be made the subject of agreement with our neighbours across the line, questions which in the long run could be dealt with only by treaty; but we were able by our engineers working in conjunction with the hydro-electric engineers, through goodwill, to find a solution which was satisfactory to Ontario, satisfactory to the Dominion, and satisfactory to the United States, and a solution which I believe will be found satisfactory to this House of Commons when the treaty will be submitted for approval, as I hope it may be to-morrow.

But there is another reason why we feel encouraged in regard to the matter, and it is this: Some time ago we drew the attention of the Premier of Ontario to the fact that the hydro-electric engineers had prepared plans with respect to a two-stage development of the international rapids section of the St. Lawrence different from those of the Dominion engineers, and that as we were negotiating or expecting to negotiate with the United States in regard to the St. Lawrence waterway development, we felt if any headway were to be made in this matter it was important that there should be complete cooperation between the provincial government of Ontario and the Dominion government. I am happy to say that as recently as Saturday last I received from Premier Ferguson a communication in which Mr. Ferguson expresses regret, for reasons which from his letter are obvious, at not having been able to reply sooner to the communication which had been sent to him, and saying that he would be pleased to appoint two engineers, and naming on behalf of the Ontario government two engineers, to meet with the engineers of the Dominion government. This is a first essential step in settling this phase of the matter as between the Dominion and the province of Ontario. So I say that, to say the least, the signs are propitious.

In addition to that, other matters have progressed which up to the present time have tended somewhat to complicate the situation. One of the most troublesome questions with which the Canadian government was confronted each time a discussion took place on the St. Lawrence waterway was the diversion at Chicago of large quantities of water from the great lakes through the Chicago Sanitary District canal. Well, this much can be said with regard to the Chicago diversion, that more progress has been made in the last four or five years towards getting that matter satisfactorily settled than had been made in all the previous period of the diversion. The Secretary of State for War of the United States, in giving his permit to the Chicago Sanitary District in 1925 to divert a certain quantity of water, did so on the condition that that diversion must gradually be lessened. It provided for a steady reduction of the diversion and for the construction of sewage works and for metering the domestic supply as means of reducing the volume of water withdrawn. The joint board of engineers have definitely ascertained and set forth the effect of the diversion on the levels of the great lakes. That point is now beyond controversy. As a result of the verdict of the United States Supreme Court recently given in the case of the Lake States versus The State of Illinois it has been made clear that the diversion for sewerage purposes does not rest on any legal basis, and it is provided that the Hon. Charles Evans Hughes, as master, is to report on a procedure to be followed which, while according the sanitary district a reasonably practicable time to provide other means of disposing of the sewage, will ensure the speedy and continuous reduction of the diversion. Therefore with respect to the Chicago diversion and to the position at Niagara, within the recent past, the situation has materially bettered.

As indicated, we have been seeking to co-operate with Ontario in its power problems, and we have been doing the same with respect to Quebec. The province of Quebec, like the province of Ontario, is interested in power development. The province has certain rights with respect to power developments; we have certain rights with respect to the protection of navigation. In any negotiations with the province of Quebec, and with respect to the approval of any plans which may be submitted by any company holding a charter from that province, we shall take and are taking great care to see that nothing shall be granted to a company or to the province which in any way will impede or interfere with the St. Lawrence development project, or the full rights of the Dominion in navigation on the St. Lawrence. Viewing the matter broadly, therefore, it would appear as though it required only the good will of all parties interested to work out some agreement as between the provinces and the Dominion which would settle this vexed constitutional problem in a manner satisfactory to all concerned, and which in addition would enable the provinces and ourselves to take a course which in their interest and the interest of Canada as a whole would be considered most advantageous in negotiating with the United States with respect to further development of the St. Lawrence shipway.

Now, Mr. Speaker, may I say a word or two with reference to the security of this Dominion in any negotiations with the United States relative to the deepening of the St. Lawrence. Mr. Ferguson, in answer to one or two questions which have been put to him recently, has made a very obvious reply, namely, that for his part he will not, in dealings with the United States, countenance anything which will affect the sovereign rights of Canada, that he will not in the slightest particular part with any sovereign right which the Dominion has, nor will he permit that right to be threatened or impaired in the least. That sentiment will, I believe, be echoed by every individual in this Dominion —certainly in this parliament. I cannot think of an hon. member who would for one moment contemplate any kind of an agreement with the United States which would impair in the least the sovereignty of this country with respect to any rights which it now has. And may I say further, I do not believe the United States would think of negotiating with Canada on a basis which involved or contemplated anything of that character. However, let me make it perfectly clear that with respect to the St. Lawrence development, whatever steps are taken hon. members may rest assured, and the country may rest assured, that in no particular will any of the sovereign rights of this Dominion with respect to power or navigation be impaired in the least, or even be made subject to the possibility of impairment.

Mr. CAHAN: Does the right hon. gentleman say the same with respect to the rights of the provinces?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I would certainly say the same with respect to the rights of the provinces. There is a good deal of what I think might be termed loose talking with respect to some phases of the St. Lawrence development. Why it is indulged in, I am at a loss to understand. I think we would be wise to get at the truth and stick to the truth in public discussion and in the discussion of international questions above all others. For example we hear it sometimes said that under no circumstances should there be permitted an international waterway which will not be an all-Canadian waterway, that so far as the St. Lawrence and great lakes are concerned there must be an all Canadian water route and that on no account is there to be any going backwards and forwards as between the United States and Canada. Now, those who speak in that way cannot have the least knowledge—or if they have they are not applying it—as to what is existing at this moment and has existed for years past, and as to what the engineers who have appeared before committees of parliament, and in particular the committee of the Senate to which I have referred, have made very plain, namely, that at the present time the utilized channel through the great lakes and the St. Lawrence is not a channel which is all within the waters of Canada or all within the waters of the United States, but is a channel which part of the way is in American waters and part of the way in Canadian. That is the position now, and in all the development of the St. Lawrence and the Great lakes that has thus far taken place, that fact has been recognized. The United States has taken care of some parts of the channel, Canada has taken care of other parts. Both countries, according to the treaty signed in 1909, have equal navigation rights in the Great lakes and the international section of the St. Lawrence. So when there is a discussion about having an all-Canadian route, let us understand exactly what that means. It does not mean the construction today of some small portion of a water route in one province or in another, but it means changing existing routes to an extent that, engineers tell us, will involve—I do not know the figures, but the expenditure will run into many millions of dollars.

Mr. DUNNING: Hundreds of millions of dollars.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That proposal can only be put forward for the purpose in some way or another of confusing the public mind with respect to this great and important project.

In conclusion let me say a further word as to the security of this country in all negotiations with our neighbour to the south, with respect to international waterways or any other negotiations that may need consideration. The St. Lawrence waterway and the great lakes are in considerable part international waters. A broad division can be made. There is a portion of the St. Lawrence which is wholly within Canada, there remains the balance of the St. Lawrence which is in the nature of an international waterway as are the great lakes up to Sault Ste. Marie and beyond. With respect to the international section, the nation's rights are already secured by treaty, and those treaty rights, both as regards Canada and the United States, are supreme over anything that can be done by the government of either country. The treaty lays down very clearly that any works materially affecting the level of these boundary waters must be approved either by special agreement between Canada and the United States or by the International Joint Commission. That is under the boundary water treaty of 1909, and it applies to what may be done by the governor in council or what may be done by act of parliament; because a treaty overrides both and is supreme.

Mr. BENNETT: But there is a treaty, prior to that in point of time, on which our rights are based. So I apprehend.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: As I have said, there is a series of treaties; I made that clear at the outset. As regards my hon. friend's remark, I repeat: Every right secured by any treaty will be maintained in any negotiations. Treaty rights are supreme in every respect. But what I am seeking to make clear at the moment is this. The sense of security which this parliament has a right to feel with respect to whatever may be done on the St. Lawrence, whether in the international section or in the national—and I am dealing for the moment with the international—is wholly ample. Our rights in the international section are secured by treaty.

Let us come to the national section. And may I pause here to say a word as to the bill which was introduced by the same hon. member who has moved this resolution—the bill providing for some enlargement of the Navigable Waters Protection Act. It is very seldom that on a question of this kind particularly where there has been much in the way of general discussion, the hon. member when he concludes is not followed by some other hon. gentleman in the house. The government had expected, seeing that the subject with which his bill dealt was one that had been considerably discussed in the public prints and elsewhere, that a good deal would be said by hon. members opposite with respect to various phases of the matter.

Mr. BENNETT: Why not on the government side?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The government intended to make its position quite clear. But I confess that we were taken very much by surprise when no one followed the hon. gentleman, and therefore no reply was made immediately. A complete reply could have been made in ten minutes and would have avoided the division we had on that occasion. That reply would have been in effect very much the statement which I am now making. Apart from the fact—and I do not think my hon. friend relished it either—that in voting for the hon. member's bill he was endorsing retroactive legislation, which I do not believe he likes, every hon. member who supported that bill was endorsing legislation which was unwise in other respects. They were voting in support of a measure which was in no sense necessary to attain the object at which it was assumed to be aimed, and which had it carried would have rendered many necessary developments impossible.

As I have said, in regard to the international section of the St. Lawrence, parliament's security is obtained through the treaty. With regard to the national section, assuming that as a result of anything done in that section the waters which are a part of the international section are raised, such action becomes the subject of review on the part of the International Joint Commission in precisely the same way as if the particular action were being taken in the international section.

Further with respect to the portion of the St. Lawrence which is wholly within Canada, and indeed in respect to all navigable waters, this parliament is already secured in its powers of supervision under the Navigable Waters Protection Act, which gives to parliament the right not merely to review but to annul whatever may be done by the governor in council should it be shown that in any particular the action taken is unwise. Let me give to the house the sections of the Navigable Waters Protection Act bearing upon this question. Section 4 reads:

> No work shall be built or placed in, upon, over, under, through or across any navigable water unless the site thereof has been approved by the governor in council, nor unless such work is built, placed and maintained in accordance with plans and regulations approved or made by the governor in council.

Section 10 provides:

> The governor in council may make such orders or regulations as he deems expedient for navigation purposes respecting any work to which this part applies or of which the plan and site are approved under any act of the parliament of Canada.
> 2. The local authority, company or person constructing, owning or in possession of any work shall be subject to such orders or regulations.

I come now to section 12, which is the important provision. This is the section which I wish hon. members to note particularly:

> Parliament may, at any time, annul or vary any order of the governor in council made under this part.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Parliament?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes, parliament. Subsection 2 goes on:

> Any action of parliament in that behalf shall not be deemed an infringement of the rights of the local authority, company or person concerned.

Where then is the need for adding anything further to this particular act? My hon. friend the member for North Winnipeg (Mr. Heaps) asked me the other day as to whether parliament would have the right to review certain matters which might be in contemplation. He has no need for concern as to the powers of parliament with respect to the possible acts of the government he had in mind whether they were of to-day or of six months ago or are still of the future; because parliament, with respect to the protection of navigable matters under the act as it stands, has the power not only to review but to annul whatever may be done by the governor in council. Words cannot be stronger.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The right hon. gentleman realizes that he is opening up debate on a question already disposed of by the house., and this may involve the house in a rather protracted discussion.

[Mr. Mackenzie King.]

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I am merely seeking to make plain the points that bear particularly upon the St. Lawrence water development. I am not dealing with the other question; to that I have referred only incidentally. But this is very material to the question of the St. Lawrence development with respect to the rights of this parliament touching any act of the government, by order in council or otherwise.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Would it not be better sometimes not to pass an order in council than to have to annul it afterwards?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My hon. friend has asked a reasonable question, and I am glad that he has done so. There are some matters which are administrative in character and others which are legislative; there are some questions which are technical and which can be dealt with only by experts, and other questions which are suitable for discussion in a deliberative assembly. When one comes to such questions as sites for water-power, the volume or rapidity of water passing over a particular point, the question of the effect of obstructions upon the levels of waters, the effect of the ice flow in certain localities, all of which are important questions when we are dealing with navigation, these questions can be settled and settled only by expert engineers; they cannot be settled in a deliberative assembly. Most questions that relate to public works are of that character; they are questions for the experts of the government departments; and parliament in its wisdom has made clear that it is not advisable to prevent development by requiring in the first instance that parliament itself shall perform functions or duties which it is not at all fitted to perform. That is the reason this section is worded in the way it is. In other words, so far as provincial rights may be concerned, what is sought by the Navigable Waters Protection Act is to allow, the full development which provinces may seek with respect to power but where navigation is likely to be affected to assure at the same time that the general interest will be wholly and adequately secured.

May I add just one word. The section which I have read makes it quite clear that parliament has the power at any time to annul any act of the government which may be contrary to the public interest where we are dealing with works which may affect navigable waters, but in regard to negotiations such as those affecting the St. Lawrence development parliament has a further security. Under our general policy we have laid it down that before a treaty is finally ratified it shall be brought to this parliament for approval, and I wish to repeat now the assurance given parliament not once but on different occasions that if at any time, while this administration is in office, a treaty is arrived at between the United States and Canada with respect to the development of the St. Lawrence waterway, that treaty will be brought to this parliament and not ratified until parliament has approved of it.

Mr. HEAPS: Why could not the same principle apply to any scheme entered into with regard to the development of the St. Lawrence river?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I have already distinguished between that part of the St. Lawrence which is in the international section and the part which is in the national section. Parliament's ultimate control of both sections is secured under the Navigable Waters Protection Act, while additional security with respect to the international section is afforded by bringing a treaty to parliament for its approval.

Mr. HEAPS: I am speaking only of the principle of having parliament ratify something before it is ratified by the cabinet.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: There again, as I tried to explain to my hon. friend from Bow River, there are technical features which can be worked out only by engineers. In negotiating an agreement with respect to water-power, water rights and navigation, where the considerations are so largely technical in their nature, parliament is scarcely in a position to discuss such matters in detail; it is for experts to work out these matters.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): But I am afraid my right hon. friend is on the horns of a dilemma in this case. If because of a lack of technical knowledge parliament is incapable of arriving at an intelligent decision in the first place, lacking that technical knowledge how is parliament to arrive at an intelligent decision with regard to the annulment of an order in council later?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: As my hon. friend knows, you can present a final plan to parliament, you can have a committee before which you can bring your experts fully to explain a matter, but you do not begin a project of development in that way. You could not construct a street railway in that manner. You must have your plans and your agreement practically consummated before they can be properly discussed in an assembly such as this.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): But the right hon. gentleman is aware that that is how we have worked in several cases. For example, when we considered the question of harnessing the tides of the bay of Fundy, we had a committee go into the whole matter and consider all the details. Why not do the same in this case?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I do not think those tides have been harnessed yet.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): No, but we have passed upon the plans.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I do not think any plans or details were submitted. However, I wish to make clear the government's point of view, that so far as the St. Lawrence project is concerned, whether it refers to our relations with the provinces or our relations with the United States, this government intends to see that the rights of Canada are fully protected.

Having said that much, Mr. Speaker, may I conclude by reminding the house that in some respects the present moment is perhaps a critical one at which to discuss an international matter which affects our relations with our neighbours to the south. I do not wish to discourage discussion in any way; in fact I welcome all that may be said, but in debating this matter I hope hon. gentlemen will bear in mind the fact that whatever is said in this parliament at this time may have a very far-reaching effect upon some decisions which may be reached in the very near future with regard to matters which are of real concern to both countries. With that one word, which I think it well to say at this time, I will conclude my remarks.

Mr. CLARK: What is critical in the situation with regard to the United States at this time?

Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I only wish to observe that it is somewhat strange that a matter of such transcendent importance to the people of Canada should be now discussed by the Prime Minister on the resolution of a private member. The policy of the administration with respect to a matter of such far-reaching importance should have been stated on an occasion when there would be ample opportunity for debate altogether apart from the resolution moved by a private member which only expresses his opinion with respect to the subject matter of the discussion

We advised the government last year not only in this but in a similar matter as well that any reference to the Supreme Court of Canada with respect to any matter in the form of questions amounted to nothing more than obtaining the opinion of the law officers of the crown. The Privy Council has so stated, and in a judgment of Right Hon. Mr. Justice Duff, speaking for the Supreme Court, he indicated that their decision was based on that view. It must be remembered also, as Lord Loreburn observed, that the legislative always controls the executive branch of government, and I take it that the right hon. gentleman, in seeking a reason for the attitude of the house the other evening, will find it in that sentence, "The legislative always controls the executive branch of government." This house has lost confidence in the way its executive has dealt with the water powers of the St. Lawrence river. We know from the public press, from the discussions of gentlemen who support the government and from the different opinions expressed privately, not to me but to others, by members of the government itself, that this house has good reason to express its loss of confidence in the way the government, as a government, is dealing with the problems connected with the St. Lawrence waterways. That is the real reason why this house voted the other evening as it did, because the members realized that in the exercise of that second branch of the executive's power, namely the legislative branch, they were exercising that power in a manner inimicable to the public interest of Canada, or at least in a manner that threatened to be so.

When the right hon. Prime Minister refers to the question of retroactive legislation he realizes that it was retroactive to the first day of this year, 1929, a not unusual thing with respect to legislation similar in character to that particular legislation, because it was felt that if matters of such transcendent importance as the utilization of the St. Lawrence river for a ship-way, with the incidental development of power, were to be considered as they should be considered, then it would be better to present them for the approval of parliament rather than have the government commit this country to a certain line of action and then later say we may annul it. I wonder which is the worse retroactive legislation, which would permit a private company after expending say $25,000,000, have its rights cancelled and the payment of damages demanded. Is that what the Prime Minister means when he refers to the Navigable Waters Protection Act and says there is power contained therein to annul an order in council after it has been enacted, after rights have been acquired under it, vast expenditures made, and securities issued under it, held in every part of the world? Does he say then that this parliament can annul it? Could anything be more ridiculous than an observation of that character? Could anything be more in keeping with the idea that is at the basis of our institutions, namely, that nothing of that sort can be done unless compensation is paid?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I think my hon. friend knows the section of the act which intimates that damages cannot be claimed.

Mr. BENNETT: I am coming to that. What the right hon. gentleman is endeavouring to do is to make it impossible for anyone to finance any undertaking based upon approval being given by this government, if it is covered by the Navigable Waters Protection Act. What will the life insurance companies, who are told these securities are trustee securities, say when they are told that this parliament has the right to annul under this act, the order in council under which an undertaking is commenced and render the securities valueless without compensation?

Mr. DUNNING: They have been doing it for years.

Mr. BENNETT: Annulling them?

Mr. DUNNING: Selling the securities.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: It has been the law for years.

Mr. BENNETT: For the simple and obvious reason that never in the history of our parliament has any such matter been submitted to parliament. It has been suggested by the Prime Minister that there is power under the act to destroy that which the executive has done. This involves consequences most far-reaching, but I am content to leave it at that for it is not a matter of importance at the moment. I will only say that the Prime Minister of Canada has suggested that when his executive gives approval with respect to any given undertaking that may interfere with navigation or otherwise, or where powers are called into operation, by reason of the provision of the Navigable Waters Protection Act this parliament may annul it and destroy it without compensation being paid the security holders.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: It is not my suggestion, it is a statement of law.

Mr. BENNETT: But it is suggested in order that hon. gentlemen who have raised certain questions may ease their consciences by saying that this parliament can do something which this parliament has never been asked to do, and which I cannot think this parliament would ever consider doing, for the simple and obvious reason that it is provided in the constitution that there can be no exercise of any such power. This country cannot now undo that which has been lawfully done. Daniel O'Connell once said, "Parliament is omnipotent." Parliament might have the power to annul an order in council, but the exercise of that power would absolutely destroy the credit of Canada.

I wonder if the right hon. gentleman recalls the difference between what was sought to be done in the power case and what was done by his illustrious predecessor? Certain railway interests made an agreement with Sir Wilfrid Laurier's government, whereby the government parted with the gold-bearing lands of the Yukon subject to the approval of parliament. The House of Commons gave approval to that agreement made by the then Minister of the Interior with the Mackenzie and Mann interests, but the senate threw it out. No man will say that that was not a proper exercise of power at that time, but the problem that confronts this house, to which the right hon. gentleman has referred, whereby this country can no longer safely continue to rely upon the sound exercise of its powers by the executive on its legislative side, is entirely different. It was only a few short years ago that this country resounded with cries uttered by the right hon. gentleman and those who sit beside him, about orders in council and government by orders in council. There was not one part of this country where the supporters of the right hon. gentleman did not go decrying orders in council. The Seven Sisters falls has been parted with by an order in council; there are the St. Lawrence orders in council; and an enormous part of the public domain in Alberta has been parted with for the purpose of grazing lands for a period of twenty-one years under orders in council. These grants were made in areas withdrawn from settlement, but if the government continues to part with these lands the western provinces will find themselves without public domain; the Dominion government will have parted with all the crown lands before they are transferred to the provinces. That is the position.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Will the hon. gentleman name any sections of Alberta that have been granted by lease and that were not formerly under lease?

Mr. BENNETT: I refer to those areas that had lapsed, south of Medicine Hat, in which a gentleman from Windsor has been very active and about which I trust this house will be fully informed at a later date.

Section 12 of chapter 140 of the revised statutes of Canada, 1927, reads as follows:

> Parliament may, at any time, annul or vary any order of the governor in council made under this part.

That is, under the regulations.

Mr. DUNNING: No, no.

Mr. BENNETT: The second part of the section reads:

> Any action of parliament in that behalf shall not be deemed an infringement of the rights of the local authority, company or person concerned.

Mr. DUNNING: Part 1 and part 2 are distinctly set out; one deals with public works and the other with marine and fisheries.

Mr. BENNETT: The section says, "shall not be deemed an infringement of the rights of the local authority, company or person concerned." That is, if the government acts under this section it shall not be deemed an infringement of the rights of the local authority. The right hon. gentleman has read it entirely erroneously.

Mr. DUNNING: Any annulment shall not be an infringement.

Mr. BENNETT: Shall not be deemed to be an infringement; therefore, their vested rights remain.

Mr. CANNON: My hon. friend is arguing for the other side.

Mr. BENNETT: I am presenting both sides, certainly. I will say very frankly to the Solicitor General (Mr. Cannon) that I do not believe the Dominion of Canada ever placed upon the statute books a statute which would enable public works to be destroyed without compensation and thus ruin the credit of Canada. The hon. gentleman has surely followed what was said. I said that if the suggestion made by the right hon. the Prime Minister is sound, and in which the Solicitor General concurred, that this parliament could annul an order in council granting approval to the erection of works in the St. Lawrence, it would destroy the securities if no compensation were paid. I am content to leave it at that. I say that parliament never intended to have placed upon the act the construction which has been placed upon it by the Solicitor General and the Prime Minister.

Mr. CANNON: What about the other argument?

Mr. BENNETT: I say the other argument is a sound argument; parliament never intended to destroy rights created under an authorization that had been given and before such authorization had been annulled.

Mr. CANNON: What is the hon. gentleman's opinion?

Mr. BENNETT: I was presenting the fallacy of its being suggested that this parliament should nullify the consent given by the executive, and I was content with that. However, at the moment I will adopt the language of Mr. Gladstone, which was that he would not prescribe until he was called in. I can only say that if the right hon. gentleman continues the course that has been indicated this afternoon, it will not be long before we are called in.

The question the right hon. gentleman has discussed this afternoon is a question of profound importance to the Canadian people. It is correct to say that for more than a quarter of a century it has engaged their attention. It is also important to point out that under the treaty of 1909, upon which such stress was laid, we have the old story of an even numbered tribunal, and all the consequent results that follow from that. I think the right hon. gentleman is right in saying that it is not desirable at this time to discusss this matter at length. I quite agree with him that there are reasons why it might well be discussed on some other occasion, and that is the reason why I had hoped that, rather than on the motion of a private member, the government itself would declare its policy as it has done this afternoon.

The rights with respect to the international section of the St. Lawrence river are determined by a treaty entered into between Her Majesty, Queen Victoria, and the United States of America. Those words we may modify and we may affect by a new treaty. At the moment that new treaty has not been negotiated. The right hon. gentleman in his correspondence has indicated to the United States that we are prepared to enter into a discussion and to negotiate a treaty dealing with power rights and navigation rights on the St. Lawrence river.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I do not think I went quite as far as that.

Mr. BENNETT: Well, the correspondence of last year.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: No, if my hon. friend looks at the correspondence, I think he will see that the government asked the United States whether a certain basis would be acceptable as one for negotiation. The United States has replied that it will be. Since then no further communications have passed, and it was made quite clear that no final answer would be sent until after a conference had been held between the provinces immediately concerned and the Dominion government.

Mr. BENNETT: What I have said is wholly consistent with what the right hon. gentleman observes, except that he has overlooked this, namely, that we stated that we were prepared to enter into discussions with respect to the matter with the United States of America, but that pending the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada, those discussions could not be carried forward. That is the sense of the note which the right hon. gentleman sent to the United States, he made it quite clear—and it is a matter which should be made quite clear—that until there was a final determination either by negotiation and ratification or by judicial interpretation of the rights between the provinces and the Dominion, the Dominion would not enter into a treaty that might thereafter be found, in a concrete case, to use the language of the judgment of the court, to be wholly beyond the jurisdiction of the Dominion. That is the position which the right hon. gentleman's note indicated the executive took. That is a position from which this afternoon he has not departed, but to which he has added this, that now the judgment of the supreme court has been delivered, which judgment indicates that the questions are incapable of being answered, and that, if answered, are no better than the opinion of the law officers of the crown the Solicitor General (Mr. Cannon) being one of them, those answers are no more important than opinions of the Attorney General and Solicitor General of the country. From that we may fairly judge the value that attaches to them, and it is very important that they should be so considered. That being so, the right hon. gentleman now says, and says very properly: I do not propose to appeal to the privy council. The judgment of the supreme court, which is indefinite in some respects and definite in others, is a judgment from which no effort will be made to appeal. That is, no application will be made for leave to appeal to the privy council, and that being so, the judgment may be taken as final and conclusive so far as it is possible for a judgment of the supreme court to be final and conclusive.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: They are answering questions.

Mr. CANNON: It is not a judgment.

Mr. BENNETT: The word "judgment" is used in our courts with respect to it. It is nothing more than answers to questions, which answers are made a judgment of the court, based upon the opinion of the judges for giving the answers that are given. In the privy council as in the supreme court, the judgments thus given, the word "judgment" being used in that respect, are published in the law reports of the country. Many of the questions, notably in the companies' reference and the ones with respect to fisheries, were questions in which judgments, so-called, were given by the privy council, and the questions were answered in some instances categorically, and others in the sense that because of their vagueness, they were incapable of being answered. The closing words of Mr. Justice Duff in this case are as follows:

> It is important, also, since the opinions evoked by such questions "are of course", as Lord Loreburn states in the same passage, "only advisory, and will have no more effect than opinions of the law officers", to observe that, when a concrete case is presented for the practical application of the principles discussed, it may be found necessary, under the light derived from a survey of the facts, to modify the statement of such views as are herein expressed.

I regard those last words as being words fraught with many serious consequences to this country. They at least support the position which we suggested to the government the year before last in connection with another matter. In other words, the supreme court says: When a concrete case arises, it may be necessary from a survey of the facts to modify the statement of such views as are herein expressed. Those words are very serious—to modify the views herein expressed. The opinions of the supreme court, therefore, so far as we are concerned, may be taken as having no particular or peculiar value and do not illuminate the dark recesses of our minds with respect to the complex problem with which we have to deal.

I am not going to make complaint of the government's action in this matter except to say that I do not think they did what the provinces suggested might have been done. It will be recalled that counsel for the provinces suggested that counsel for the Dominion along with themselves might attend before the supreme court and have a preliminary discussion looking to the formulation of questions, the answers to which would be illuminating and guiding. Counsel for the Dominion did not attend.

Mr. CANNON: There were no fewer than two conferences.

Mr. BENNETT: I am talking about attending before the court.

Mr. CANNON: How could we hold a conference before the court?

Mr. BENNETT: It was just what was suggested.

Mr. CANNON: The judges of the court said that they had no power to amend the questions.

Mr. BENNETT: Quite so, because they were submitted by the executive. It is perfectly true that conferences took place in the offices of the law officers; but on the suggestion of a discussion in the court rather than a conference, counsel for the Dominion did not attend. At least Mr. Rowell and his associate were not present on that occasion and nothing further was done with regard to it. My only complaint in that regard is, that it would have been much easier to have the provincial viewpoint submitted to the court in the form of satisfactory questions than to have formulated those questions in the final form in which they were and which, in the judgment of counsel for the provinces, did not properly place the matter before the court. That is the position taken, rightly or wrongly, by counsel for the provinces.

As regards the answers to the questions in the form in which they were submitted to and considered by the court, it would not require a highly skilled lawyer to say there was not much doubt the court could not answer categorically the questions submitted to it.

My first complaint is that the provinces and the Dominion are now being asked to get together instead of having been invited to get together in the first place for the purpose of just such a conference as the right hon. gentleman now suggests in order that the questions submitted might meet every viewpoint proposed by the provincial authorities. Had that conference been held in the first place, we could have avoided the language of the jurgment, namely, that the court may modify its present opinion in the light of concrete facts. Those words detract so seriously from the value of the judgment that I consider it is of little value. If the court reserves the right to modify, vary, amend, change or alter its opinion because of further light and knowledge and concrete facts that may arise in any particular instance, the value of answers thus given I consider to be very slight.

The next point to which I desire to direct attention is that it is clear that a treaty can be made only between the Dominion and the United States and not between the provinces and the United States. It is of the utmost importance that whatever is done in any negotiations that are carried on looking to that end, should, as the Prime Minister has now said, embody as far as possible the views of the provinces when the federal executive is presenting its views to the United States.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Just at this stage I should like to make mention of a point my hon. friend began to develop when he was interrupted. As I gather it, the impression in his mind is that before we had intimated to the United States that a conference with the provinces would be necessary at the outset we had indicated to the United States that we were prepared to make an agreement. What I wanted to make clear to my hon. friend was this: Our position with the United States all along has been that we could not even discuss a treaty with them until the provinces had been called into conference with ourselves, but that before we called the provinces into conference with ourselves we wished to find out what would be an acceptable basis of negotiation. We have given no final undertaking to enter into a treaty.

Mr. BENNETT: If for a moment my right hon. friend suggested that I had assumed he made any binding agreement to enter into a treaty, I relieve his mind at once; but I do submit that what he has done by the notes that have passed between his government and the government of the United States was to say that we were prepared to enter into negotiations, but that there were certain preliminary difficulties as between the provinces and the Dominion which we proposed to refer to the courts of the country for determination, and that they must first be disposed of before we would know how far we ourselves could go in making a treaty.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Even before the constitutional question came up, we indicated to the United States that we would wish, before entering into a treaty, to have the provinces confer with us.

Mr. BENNETT: The notes themselves give the exact language, but as they are not before me I cannot refer to them. Undoubtedly the Prime Minister indicated in his notes that he proposed that the constitutional position of the Dominion with respect to the provinces should be settled before a treaty was negotiated, but that the Dominion was ready—that was the whole essence of the notes—to enter into discussions looking towards the making of a treaty. I think that is as far as it went. That being so, the question as to the rights of the Dominion and the rights of the provinces became of paramount importance. The provinces claim to own the bed of the streams, and the Dominion claim the right of navigation. To what extent the right to develop power may be a right that belongs to the provinces, in view of their alleged ownership of the water, or to what extent the power may belong to the Dominion, the question also as to the right of the Dominion to claim ownership of the power as being ancillary only to the control of navigation, are questions to which the government sought an answer, and as to which the Prime Minister said his government had not received a final determination. Because of the uncertainty in which the matter is now left, it is my judgment that it would be desirable to have first, action taken by the provinces and the Dominion that will lead to a determination of the rights in question, and, second, ratification by the proper authorities of the relative rights of the provinces and the Dominion. I wholly agree with what has been said by the Prime Minister this afternoon, namely, that before any final determination is taken even to negotiate with respect to matters of this kind, there must be, by agreement, or by judicial determination, an exact delimitation of the powers of the provinces on the one hand, and of the Dominion on the other. That is what I apprehend to be the position, and I think with that every Canadian must be in accord.

But I would remind the right hon. gentleman that it is not quite accurate to say that the provinces of Ontario and Quebec alone are concerned. I think on mature consideration the right hon. gentleman will agree that a matter that affects the national life of the country and involves, it may be, our national honour by treaty obligation, and which must affect, as it does, the western provinces, for if the shipway is to have the value that has been mentioned in times past by successive commissions and advisory councils, then indeed those who live in the western part of Canada, as well as those who reside along the lake front in Ontario and along the river front in Quebec, must be vastly interested and concerned about the ultimate result.

I am not going to do more than say this: The obligation for the formulation of any policy which results in a treaty rests with the government of the day. That is clear. It is not the function or the duty of an opposition to indicate what its views may be with respect to the matter for that responsibility rests with the administration of the day. The Prime Minister has conceded that no acceptance of that responsibility translated into concrete action will be made effective unless this parliament approves. That is all this parliament might reasonably ask, namely, that before this Dominion is committed by its government to any treaty obligation the people of Canada through their representatives in parliament shall have an opportunity to express their views as to whether the treaty thus made is desirable or not.

With respect to the other matter, the question of the relative rights of the provinces and of the Dominion, it is reasonably clear in the light of the opinion to which I have referred, in its closing words, that unless the provinces have themselves agreed with the Dominion that certain action shall be taken, and indicated the form which that action shall take, then indeed a treaty otherwise negotiated and approved by this parliament would be but an invitation for future difficulties and troubles. How that approval by the provinces is to be taken, whether by resolution of their legislatures or otherwise, is not a matter that for the moment I shall discuss. It will be remembered that in the United States constitutional amendments require the various states to give their approval separately, as well as the congress of the United States. This matter affects not one province or two, but every province of confederation except British Columbia—it does not directly affect the maritime provinces, but in another sense it does, because if the ship-way is of the value that has been indicated in times past, it will enable them to move their products to central Canada by water rather than by rail—with the exception of British Columbia every province is vitally interested, and when the right hon. gentleman made his reference to two provinces, I presume he will modify that view to the extent of saying that all the provinces that might be interested would have the opportunity of expressing their views with respect to any arrangement that might be made.

I hardly think it was necessary to make the closing observations that he did, that any treaty negotiated would protect the interests of this country, and that it was proposed to see that it did so, because no government would endure in Canada, whether a Liberal government, a Conservative government, or some other form of government, that did not protect the interests of the Canadian people. The whole point of difference is whether or not, in the opinion of the majority either of the members of parliament or of the electors, the measures taken are measures that do adequately protect the interests of the people as a whole, and in the end the people determine that question. The government obviously must be assured that the measures they take shall be in the best interests of the Canadian people, unless it be that in this case the right hon. gentleman should suddenly change his mind and find evidence of a "thoroughly vicious principle," and come to the conclusion that the course he now proposes to pursue is one which he will then amend and change, as he saw fit to declare with respect to another matter the other day.

Mr. McMILLAN: I move the adjournment of the debate, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. CHURCH: In view of what the Prime Minister has said, and after having discussed this matter with the leader of the opposition, who I think is quite right when he says that it is the duty of the government of the day to find a solution for this great national and economic problem—

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. I understand the hon. gentleman is going to ask leave to withdraw his motion. If so, he must not engage in a debate, because there is another motion before the house.

Mr. CHURCH: I ask leave to withdraw my motion, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. SPEAKER: There are now two motions before the house.

Mr. CHURCH: I do not want a political football made of this question.

Mr. SPEAKER: Is it the pleasure of the house that the hon. member for South Huron (Mr. McMillan) shall have leave to withdraw his motion?

Motion withdrawn.

Mr. SPEAKER: Is it the pleasure of the house that the hon. member for Toronto Northwest (Mr. Church) shall have leave to withdraw his motion?

Motion withdrawn.

PROPOSED CHIGNECTO CANAL

Mr. ROBERT K. SMITH (Cumberland) moved:

Whereas in the year 1870 the federal government appointed a canal commission to report on proposed canal works in Canada;

And whereas said commission reported in 1871, dividing the proposed works into four classes and set forth "that all the works under the head of first class are really of so great importance and so essential to the welfare and prosperity of the whole country that they should be undertaken and proceeded with";

And whereas the proposed canal across the isthmus of Chignecto was placed in category of one of the first class projects;

And whereas the said proposed canal across the isthmus of Chignecto is the only proposed canal undertaking of the first class that has not been proceeded with;

And whereas said undertaking is of great importance and essential to the welfare and prosperity of the whole of Canada;

Resolved, that in the opinion of this house, it is advisable that the government of Canada take immediate steps to further investigate said project as to feasibility, cost of construction, economic and national advantages to be gained by the construction of a ship canal across the isthmus of Chignecto to connect the waters of the bay of Fundy with the waters of the gulf of St. Lawrence and further that the government be urged to make these surveys and investigations with the least possible delay;

And that when the surveys, estimates as to cost of construction and economic and national advantages are satisfactorily established the government should take the necessary steps to proceed with the construction of said canal at the earliest possible date.

He said: Mr. Speaker, in moving this resolution it is my intention to approach the discussion of it in the nature of a broad, national project. I am urging the government to investigate the matter in connection with the proposed construction of a canal across the isthmus of Chignecto, joining the waters of the bay of Fundy with the waters of the gulf of St. Lawrence, for the benefit of shorter, cheaper, safer and more advantageous transportation facilities from the national viewpoint.

May I first give the house a brief outline of the historical aspect of the undertaking for the purpose of refreshing in the minds of some hon. members the unwarranted delay of governments in the past in regard to its construction. Before, however, going into that phase, may I point out the geographical location. In this connection I have distributed on the desks of the members a rough sketch showing the saving in distance from many points in Canada to places inside as well as outside our country. The isthmus of Chignecto connects Nova Scotia with New Brunswick, and is about eighteen miles from water to water. The proposed canal route through the isthmus would pass through a soft clay soil, with less than one mile of rock formation, and that of a loose, gravelly content. The location, from the standpoint of dredging, excavating and cost of construction is about as ideal as could be found anywhere, using for some distance the channels of small rivers and lakes, and the engineering difficulties so far as I know present no serious problems. But I feel that that is a matter which I am not qualified to go into at this moment. It is a matter for thorough investigation and modern expert opinion. Surveys for the proposed canal were made as far back as 1825, over one hundred years ago. Several surveys have been made since that time, I believe five in all. A resolution that I shall read to the house in a few minutes will give a clear outline on that point.

[Mr. R. K. Smith.]

May I say that when the conferences preceding confederation were being held in Quebec and Charlottetown this question was discussed, and the impression left with the delegates from the maritime provinces was that this would be one of the transportation services that we would secure on entering confederation. Senator Dickie from Cumberland and Senator Botsford from Westmorland frequently testified to this point.

In 1870 a royal commission was appointed by the then government, consisting of Sir Hugh Allan and others, and that commission recommended to the government of Canada that it proceed with the least possible delay to construct certain specified canals, which they classified in the order in which they were to be built, and I am happy to inform the house that the so-called Baie Verte canal across the isthmus of Chignecto was placed in the list of first-class canals to be constructed without delay, but I am unhappy to say that it was the only one of the first-class canals projects so recommended that was not proceeded with. I wish to quote some findings of the commission touching on the matter of the construction of the Baie Verte canal. Before doing so may I say that this was a royal commission composed of the most representative commercial men of Canada selected from the various provinces. The Baie Verte canal, after full inquiry and examination, was placed by them in the first rank of canals to be constructed by the Dominion government. The following is extracted from the report of the commission submitted to the government of the day:

> The growth of intercolonial trade depends on cheap transit, since the merchandise passing between the maritime provinces and Ontario must be of a bulky character, requiring large vessels and rapid dispatch to be really profitable. When a propellor can go direct with a cargo of coal, or other produce of the eastern provinces, to Kingston and Toronto, and there get a return freight of flour, barley and other western produce, intercolonial trade will have entered on a new era.
> When Nova Scotia coal of the best description can be supplied abundantly and cheaply to western ports, a great impulse will necessarily be given to the transfer of the trade of the St. Lawrence and lakes to screw steamers, a transfer already taking place as we have previously shown.
> With the canals enlarged, coal freighters would be reduced to the minimum point—a lake propellor would always bring back from the lower ports a cargo of coal, rather than come empty—just as the English timber ships have been accustomed to bring the same articles instead of ballast.

Inseparably connected with the growth of intercolonial trade is the construction of the Baie Verte canal across the isthmus, connecting the provinces of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. The advantages that must accrue, not merely to the Dominion as a whole, but to the commerce of the maritime provinces, are so clearly pointed out by the boards of trade of all the leading cities of Canada, and by men interested in the development of our commercial interests,—not simply the merchants of St. John and other places in the locality of the proposed canal, but merchants of Hamilton, Toronto, Ottawa, Montreal and Quebec; that it is superfluous for the commissioners to do more than briefly refer to a few salient features of the scheme.

Mr. DUNNING: May I interrupt my hon. friend to ask what commission he is referring to and what is the date of the report?

Mr. SMITH (Cumberland): The commission headed by Sir Hugh Allan, which was appointed in 1870, and reported to the government in 1871.

Quoting further the report says:

A steamer laded with flour for St. John, N.B. now goes down the gulf as far as Shediac, where the cargo is transported by rail to its destination. The total distance by water from Shediac through the Gut of Canso and around the coast of Nova Scotia to the bay of Fundy as far as the commercial capital of New Brunswick is about six hundred miles, and the consequence is that there is little or no direct communication between the bay of Fundy ports and those of the river St. Lawrence. By a canal through the isthmus the distance from Shediac to St. John will not be much more than one hundred miles.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker, the government of the day decided to proceed with the construction of the canal. His Excellency Lord Dufferin, at the opening of the session of 1873, in the speech from the throne used the following language, which may be found on page 2 of the parliamentary debates of that year:

I am glad to inform you that plans and specifications for the enlargement of the Welland, and the construction of the Baie Verte canal, have been completed, and that the works can now be put under contract. The surveys for the St. Lawrence canals will, I am assured, be finished in time to commence the works at the beginning of next year. This will insure the completion of all these great works at the same period.

In accordance with the promise thus given in the speech from the throne $1,000,000 was placed in the estimates that year for the construction of the Baie Verte canal which, according to the late Mr. Page's estimate of the line surveyed by Messrs. Gzowski and Keefer, was to cost between seven and eight million dollars.

In 1875 another commission was appointed, with the late Hon. John Young as chairman. The report made by this commission was unfavourable. The Hon. Joseph Lawrence, however, one of the commissioners, protested against the verdict of the majority and in a separate minority report ably defended the commercial prospects of the canal. After a complete and thorough survey of the whole matter he summed up his conclusions as follows:

Having given to the trust delegated to me, as one of the canal commission of 1875, the most careful and studious attention, I would recommend to the government, in the interests of the Dominion, the construction of a full tide canal, of the size designated in this report, believing it to be adequate to all the exigencies of commerce, at least for many years. It is a matter, however, meriting the consideration of the government, as to whether the suggestion of Professor Hind, for a tidal highway, might not be adopted, for, should it be found not to meet the requirements of trade, it could be made into a canal.

It is a work which Sir Hugh Allan, Gzowski, Calvin, Gavreau, Jardine, Shannon and Keefer declared "was essential to give unity and completeness to the canal system of the country, and was Canadian in design, and must prove national in its results." With my colleagues. I most cordially join in "the hope that the existing depression in business will prove temporary, and that with increasing population, and the extension of the industry of the country, the progress of the future will be equal to the past, and this will be greatly stimulated by the cheapening of transit from all points of the interior to the consumers of the east, and to the ports of shipment to Europe." To the attainment of these patriotic aspirations, what will do more than a connection of the waters of the bay of Fundy with the waters of the gulf of St. Lawrence?

In the report of the second canal commission, reporting in 1875, it was discovered that there was an error in the computation of the distance to be saved by the shore cut. The commissioners had represented the distance saved from Montreal to St. John as only 225 miles, whereas it is actually 500 miles, making an error in that respect in their calculation of 275 miles. The prejudice produced in some quarters by the misrepresentation of the distance saved—and hence some of the erroneous conclusions of the report—endures in the east to this day.

With respect to the adverse report, may I point out that certain admissions were made. I should like briefly to refer to one paragraph in this respect. It is stated:

The evidence taken, and the observations which the commissioners have had the opportunity of making, have impressed them deeply with the vast resources of New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island, and the large increase which may reasonably be looked for in their trade and commerce.

May I now quote a rather lengthy resolution which was adopted by the Amherst Board of Trade on September 12, 1928, which I think covers quite thoroughly the salient points of this whole scheme:

Whereas numerous surveys of the route to connect the waters of the gulf of St. Lawrence with those of the bay of Fundy by cutting across the isthmus of Chignecto were made between the years 1825 and 1864, and

Whereas at the Quebec conference held in 1864 "it was distinctly understood and agreed" that the canal would be built if confederation were consummated, and

Whereas in 1870 the federal government appointed a commission of eminent men to examine into the canal projects of Canada, which commission held meetings and examined witnesses in Halifax, St. John, Quebec, Ottawa, Kingston, Belleville, Toronto, Hamilton, London, Stratford, Guelph and Windsor in Canada, and Chicago, Milwaukee, Detroit, Toledo and Oswego in the United States, and received reports from the corporate towns and public meetings, and

Whereas this canal commission reported in 1871 and divided the proposed works of Canada into four classes, and set forth:

"that all the works embraced under the head of first class are really of so great importance, so essential to the welfare and prosperity of the whole country, that they should be undertaken and proceeded with," and

Whereas in reference to the canal across the isthmus of Chignecto the report reads as follows:—

"Inseparably connected with the growth of intercolonial trade in the construction of the Bay Verte canal, across the isthmus of Chignecto connecting the provinces of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. The advantages that must accrue, not merely to the Dominion as a whole, but to the commerce of the maritime provinces, are so clearly pointed out by the boards of trade of all the leading cities of Canada, and by men interested in the development of our commercial interests, not simply the merchants of St. John and other places in the locality of the proposed canal but merchants of Hamilton, Toronto, Ottawa, Montreal and Quebec, that it is superfluous for the commissioners to do more than briefly refer to a few salient features of the scheme."

"The total distance by water from Shediac through the Gut of Canso and around the coast of Nova Scotia to the bay of Fundy as far as the commercial capital of New Brunswick is about 600 miles and the consequence is that there is little or no direct communication between the bay of Fundy ports and those of the river St. Lawrence. By a canal through the isthmus the distance from Shediac to St. John will not be much more than one hundred miles. This fact will show the insuperable obstacle that now exists to anything like extensive commerce between Montreal and the bay of Fundy ports of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, and the great impulse that must be necessarily given to trade by the opening up of a route which will shorten the distance so considerably, furnish an inland navigation from the Lakes to Boston, and consequently lessen freights between these points.

When we consider the shorter distance and the lessening of insurance in the autumn on account of a safer route than that now taken through Canso and round the Atlantic coast of Nova Scotia, so exposed at certain seasons to fogs and storms, etc. etc.

[Mr. R. K. Smith.]

The lumber and fishery interests of the gulf of St. Lawrence both of the island of Prince Edward, and what is generally known as the north shore of New Brunswick, will also be benefited by their being afforded a safer and shorter route not only to the ports of the bay of Fundy but also to those of the northeastern coast of the United States.

It will enable the valuable stones of the quarries, the olive freestone of Dorchester, the gypsum of Hants and Hillsborough, the grind and scythe stones in the vicinity of Cumberland bay, and as well the albertite of New Brunswick, which is unsurpassed for illuminating purposes, to be transported to the Canadian market from which it is now virtually shut off by the difficulty and cost of transit.

The St. John, N.B. Chamber of Commerce states the benefits arising from the construction of this canal as follows:—

1. The maritime provinces import, say 700,000 barrels of flour annually, besides a great many other articles of bulky character.

2. The maritime provinces possess inexhaustible supplies of productions required by Ontario and Quebec.

3. The chief articles of import from Ontario to the maritime provinces, and vice versa, being bulky, the element of freight forms a large item in their value; hence, any greater facility for transit tending to cheapen the cost must be productive of a greatly increased demand.

4. This canal would not only afford the desired facility for transit by rendering it unnecessary to break bulk between the points of shipment and destination, but would remove a great barrier to cheap freights by enabling owners of vessels to secure cargoes to Ontario and Quebec and thus build up a mutually desirable reciprocal trade, which may be increased to almost any extent.

And finally the report of the commission in dividing the proposed canals into four classes, put in the first class the following works:—

The Sault Ste. Marie canal.

The raising of the lock walls, waste weirs, and banks of the Welland canal and the enlargement of the Welland canal, on the scale adopted for it.

The Ottawa Canal improvements from Ottawa to Lachine.

The enlargement of the Chambly canal on the scale adopted for it.

The deepening of a navigable channel in the river St. Lawrence between Quebec and Montreal to twenty-two feet at low water.

The construction of the Baie Verte canal on the scale adopted for it.

The enlargement of the St. Lawrence to the same scale as the Welland.

The improvement of the channel in the river St. Lawrence above Montreal by removing all obstructions in the river and lakes between the several canals, and also at the ingress and egress of these canals so as to give 14 feet of water throughout.

This report was signed by:—

Sir Hugh Allan, of Montreal chairman.
Casimir S. Gzowski, C.E., of Toronto.
D. D. Calvin, Esq., of Wolfe Island, Ontario.
Pierre Garneau, Es., of Quebec City.
Alexander Jardine, of St. John, N.B.
S. L. Shannon, Esq., of Halifax, N.S., and by Samuel Keefer, Esq., C. E., as secretary.

Whereas every one of the recommendations contained in this report in reference to the works of the first class have been more than carried out except the construction of a canal connecting the waters of the St. Lawrence with the waters of the Bay of Fundy, and the navigable channel in the river St. Lawrence between Quebec and Montreal has not only been made 22 feet but has been made 30 feet, and

Whereas there was afterwards placed in the estimates and unanimously voted by parliament the sum of one million dollars towards the construction of this canal, none of which was spent, and

Whereas there has been spent on construction of canals of Ontario and Quebec a sum exceeding two hundred millions of dollars and for repairs a sum exceeding twenty millions of dollars, and

Whereas parliament afterwards resolved to grant one hundred and fifty thousand dollars per year for twenty-five years to the Chignecto Marine Transport Railway Company, for the operation of a ship-railway across the isthmus, none of which was ever paid as the ship-railway project was abandoned before completion, and

Whereas there is more need for the canal to-day than there was in 1871 for the purpose of interprovincial trade and particularly for the conveying of produce from Bay of Fundy ports to the markets of central Canada, including apples from the Annapolis and Cornwallis valleys, coal from the Cumberland coal basin, gypsum from the counties of Hants and Albert, and granite from Charlotte and Shelburne, and

Whereas the construction of this canal would lessen the distance by water from Prince Edward Island to St. John, N.B., by nearly 400 miles and would give potatoes and other products of that island much cheaper rates by water transportation particularly to the ports of the United States along the Atlantic seaboard, and

Whereas it would largely increase the trade of the eastern ports of New Brunswick and also increase the fishing industry of the gulf of St. Lawrence, and

Whereas it would lessen the distance by water between Ontario and Quebec and the port of St. John, N.B., by several hundred miles, and provide a coastal trade in which could be used boats which would navigate the canals of central Canada so that goods could be transported without breaking bulk, and

Whereas it would shorten the distance from points in northern Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island as well as from ports on the eastern coast of New Brunswick and the ports of the St. Lawrence river to the British West Indies and to Cuba, and

Whereas the total length of the canal would be only about eighteen miles, and would pass, according to the engineers' reports, except for the distance of less than a mile, through soft material.

Therefore resolved the Dominion government be requested to proceed with the construction of this canal at the earliest possible date.

Resolutions similar to this were passed by a number of boards of trade all over the martime provinces; I have some of them here but will not weary the house by reading them. However, I would like to mention one in particular, a resolution passed by the Springhill board of trade stressing the fact that the canal would be of considerable advantage to them in the shipment of their coal to Parrsboro then up to bay of Fundy through the proposed canal to the Montreal market.

I also wish to say that a resolution was passed at Halifax last year by the maritime board of trade, a body made up of all the associated boards of trade of the maritime provinces. It is non-political, dealing with various non-political matters and passing resolutions from time to time in favour of or condemning certain projects mooted in the maritime provinces. This project has received the wholehearted support of the maritime board of trade, although I am bound to add that the resolution passed by that body is not so strong as the one I have just read, in that it asks the federal government to investigate, by a survey and by modern, expert engineering opinion, this proposed canal to ascertain if the scheme is considered practicable.

I also have here some correspondence from different firms all over the maritime provinces with respect to the benefits which will be derived from the construction of this proposed canal. Most of the correspondence enlarges on the matters to which I have already referred, and points out the distinct advantage to the general trade of the three maritime provinces which would result from the construction of this canal. The possibilities of increased trade between the maritime provinces and the rest of Canada have not been developed in a corresponding or relative measure with the rest of the Dominion, due in part to a lack of adequate transportation facilities and geographical handicaps which place us to-day in a position of inequality since we do not fully participate in whatever measure of prosperity is being enjoyed by other portions of the country. We must remember that from the time of confederation up to March 31, 1928, we have spent $266,828,752.80 on the construction, maintenance, staff and repairs of the canals of Canada, while only $1,737,425.10 has been spent in the maritime provinces, on what is known as the St. Peter's canal in Cape Breton. So it does not occur to me that our request at this time is unreasonable or inopportune. I would point out further that when the Baie Verte canal scheme was revived by the Amherst board of trade last year we were delighted with the response from different parts of the country and from the newspapers of Canada. I have not time to read them all, but as an example I wish to quote from the Montreal Herald of July 26, 1928:

The memories of most of us do not go back fifty years to the time when the Baie Verte canal project was a live political issue. We venture to prophesy, however, that before a tiny portion of the next half century passes, the people of Canada will become aware of where and what this canal was and meant. In short, the Baie Verte canal scheme is now re-christened the Chignecto canal proposal, and the maritimes, discarding party politics, are showing a determined spirit to demonstrate to the rest of Canada its advantages and to stir the federal government to father the project.

H. J. Logan is one of the active promoters and one need know nothing more about Mr. Logan than the success of his efforts to revive our West Indies trade to realize that there is likely to be a stirring of the waters in good earnest.

Our readers will want to know what this Chignecto canal project is and means. We cover the subject briefly.

Chignecto bay and Cumberland basin give into each other at the head of the bay of Fundy. A fraction over 20 miles separates these waters from Baie Verte, an arm of Northumberland strait. The Chignecto canal will connect Cumberland basin and Baie Verte.

The country through which the construction would be carried on would present no great difficulties, and we believe the cost would be but a small fraction of any one of our other canal expenditures.

We would not be so greatly interested were the idea one that would be of sole benefit to the maritimes. Brief study only is needed, however, to convince that this is not a local or provincial concern, but one of national import.

It would shorten the distance by water from Prince Edward Island ports to Saint John and United States Atlantic ports by six hundred miles, and save the cost of breaking bulk and reshipment by rail.

It would shorten the distance by water from Montreal to bay of Fundy by five hundred miles, and to the West Indies by 400 miles. These distances mean a saving of two days—an important matter.

Apples from the land of Evangeline; coal from Cumberland, and gypsum from Hants; olive freestone from Dorchester; the grind and scythe stones from Cumberland; and albertite, unsurpassed for illuminating purposes, from New Brunswick, could be carried to the markets of central Canada at small cost.

"This canal would not only afford the desired facility for transit by rendering it unnecessary to break bulk between the points of shipment and destination, but would remove a great barrier to cheap freights by enabling owners of vessels to secure return cargoes to Ontario and Quebec, and thus build up a mutually desirable reciprocal trade, which may be increased to almost any extent."

Here is something good for the maritimes and for Canada. Every Montreal citizen, no matter what his origin, can give his support unhesitatingly. It is specially a project that the Maritime Provinces Club of Montreal, recently organized, might get behind with all the weight of the great influence of its membership.

[Mr. R. K. Smith.]

The maritimes may count on the unwavering support of the Montreal Herald, if party politics is left out of their efforts to make this dream come true.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. SMITH (Cumberland): Mr. Speaker, when the house rose at six o'clock, I had just concluded reading an extract from the Montreal Herald endorsing this project. In the concluding paragraph it stated that it would give it unwavering support if party politics were left out. I believe that can be answered to the complete satisfaction of all. The resolution of the Amherst board of trade read by me this afternoon was moved by the Hon. H. J. Logan, a recent and very popular appointment by the government to the Senate of Canada. Mr. Logan for some time past has taken a very keen interest in this project and is one of those instrumental in having the matter revived. The project has also been endorsed unanimously by the Maritime Board of Trade, a non-political organization in every sense, representing as it does all the local boards of trade of the three maritime provinces, to the extent of asking the government to ascertain as to the feasibility of the project. Many of the press of all political shades have endorsed the scheme, so that I believe this is one measure of which it can be truthfully said is stripped of all political colouring.

May I, in conclusion, draw to the attention of the house once more the fact that away back in 1871 the project was thoroughly considered by a commission whose personnel was of a highly responsible type of Canadian citizens of capacity and vision, and after a thorough and most exhaustive investigation they recommended that a canal across the isthmus of Chignecto was a transportation necessity from a national viewpoint, to complete the system of canals in Canada for the purpose of stimulating interprovincial trade, to alleviate existing geographical handicaps and also to promote further our commercial possibilities? Is it not fitting to say now that if there was reason for their favourable recommendations in the seventies, surely after upwards of fifty years progress along commercial and transportation lines, the national advantages and economic necessities are correspondingly greater in these days of speed, short cuts and elimination of geographical obstacles? This canal, if constructed, will not only serve the various interests of Canada I have mentioned, but have a far-reaching tendency to stimulate and develop commerce and tonnage through new channels, and develop trade, the greatest benefits of which can only now be visualized but the realities of which may be realized when the project is consummated and in operation.

On the various grounds I have mentioned I appeal to all members of the house to pass the resoluton which I take pleasure in moving, seconded by the hon. member for St. John-Albert (Mr. MacLaren), asking the government of Canada to further investigate the project with the least possible delay, as to feasibility; cost of construction; economic, provincial and national advantage to be gained; and, when these have been satisfactorily established, that the government take the necessary steps to proceed with the construction of the canal at the earliest possible date.

Mr. MURRAY MacLAREN (St. John-Albert): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Smith) has given the house a comprehensive account of the project called the Baie Verte canal. It is a subject that has been before the house on several occasions during the past number of years; but for various reasons the proposal has not been proceeded with, although, as hon. members will remember, at one time a sum was actually voted for carrying out the work. One important reason for stopping this project was a fantastic proposal to build a ship railway which was actually started but not completed, the result being that the unfortunate, unsuccessful proposal of building a ship railway has delayed the matter very seriously until we have arrived at the present time.

A new interest has now arisen, and a desire is becoming general that this proposal of the Baie Verte canal, so called, be now carried out. The province of Nova Scotia is connected wth the province of New Brunswick by what is called the Chignecto isthmus, which is a narrow isthmus varying from eighteen to twenty miles in width. Were the canal constructed, it would bring into contact two large bodies of water, the strait of Northumberland and the bay of Fundy. It would result in the ports of Prince Edward Island being approximated by some hundreds of miles to ports along the bay of Fundy and ports of the United States. It would also have a similar effect on the ports of the north shore of New Brunswick and the north shore of Nova Scotia, in all those cases there being a saving of some hundreds of miles. It is estimated that, by the construction of this canal, something like 500 miles would be saved in the distance between ports of the river St. Lawrence, Quebec and Montreal, and St. John and other ports on the bay of Fundy, and ports such as Portland, Maine, Boston and New York.

There are several outstanding points of interest in this connection. First of all there is the fact that it would be a short canal, being something less than twenty miles. The next point is the cost of construction. The soil can be easily removed and the quantity of rock is quite small. Another point is, in comparison with the short canal, the great saving of mileage between the strait of Northumberland and the bay of Fundy. This motion recommends that a survey be made of the area where the canal might be built, and that a report be made as to its feasibility and whether it would be a sound economic proposition; and should the report be favourable, the motion recommends that the construction of the canal be proceeded with. That seems to me a fair proposition. Personally I believe that such a canal would be of very great service to the shipping trade in that portion of the country, and I trust that the government will look upon this matter favourably and agree to the motion being passed.

Hon. CHARLES A. DUNNING (Minister of Railways and Canals): Mr. Speaker, the matter of a canal in the location referred to in the resolution of my hon. friend from Cumberland (Mr. Smith) has been, as he has stated, brought actively to the attention of the government during the past year, notably by Senator Hance Logan, and I have had the advantage of hearing from the senator many of the arguments which my hon. friend has advanced this afternoon and this evening.

The proposal is an old one, dating back to before confederation. I have been interested enough to delve somewhat into its history, and I find that there was a canal commission appointed in 1870 to report on the importance of inland navigation generally throughout Canada, a commission which dealt with the then existing canals and waterways and a number of other projects, including the one referred to in the resolution. The report of the commissioners, which was made in the following year, 1871, recommended this project at an estimated cost of $3,250,000 at that time, providing for locks two hundred and seventy feet in length, forty feet in width, and fifteen feet draught on the mitre sills. In passing, I might remark that in all probability a study would reveal that the dimensions provided for in the report of 1870 would not be adequate to-day. At any rate that question would require very careful examination.

Mr. CANTLEY: Those dimensions would be useless.

Mr. DUNNING: From a mere glance at the figures I am inclined to agree with my hon. friend, that they would be useless to provide adequate accommodation under modern conditions. In 1873 a report was made on the project by John Page, then chief engineer of the Department of Public Works, apparently on the same basis of dimensions. He reported the probable cost of the canal to be $7,100,000. The matter was further considered by the government of that time, and a second royal commission was appointed. My hon. friend from Cumberland has referred to that, and has read some extracts from the minority report which was presented by one of the members of that second commission. But the fact remains that this second royal commission, which reported to the Secretary of State on December 2, 1875, stated that it was not in the interests of the Dominion that the proposed canal should be constructed. I shall not go over the ground that my hon. friend covered in that connection. The commission reported, with the exception of one member, as I have just indicated.

In 1882, the company referred to by my hon. friend from St. John-Albert (Mr. MacLaren) was incorporated to construct a marine railway across the peninsula, having as part of its financial basis a subsidy payable by the federal government with respect to the operation of the railway once it was completed. After a somewhat hectic career, this company entirely ceased operations.

Mr. BENNETT: It did a good deal of work, though, first.

Mr. DUNNING: Yes, the company submitted its plans and they were approved. Progress was for a time made, and it was expected that the works would have been completed early in 1892, but work was suspended for financial reasons, and by a further act in 1891 the date for completion, for subsidy purposes, was extended to July 1, 1893, and the penal clause in this regard contained in the previous act was repealed. In 1892 authority was given to the Marine Railway Company to issue new mortgage bonds to the value of £350,000 sterling, and by an order in council passed on July 9, 1892, a recommendation to parliament to extend the time further to July 6, 1894, was promised, provided the works were actually in progress and that satisfactory evidence was given that the capital necessary for completion had been obtained. This evidence, however, was not obtained, and no action was taken, and the subsidy completely lapsed.

I refer to that Marine railway for the reason that it was one of these old companies in which doubtless a lot of people lost a lot of money, and I would not like it to be taken from the discussion here that there could possibly be any action to revive any old claims on the part of the shareholders of the Marine railway, should any action be taken to construct the canal advocated by my hon. friend.

With respect to the resolution itself, it calls for an investigation as to the feasibility, cost of construction, economic and national advantages to be gained by the construction of such a canal. The government is not disposed to deny or to attempt to deny such an investigation. A project having its roots back in pre-confederation days, a project which was evidently fifty years ago deemed to be of considerable economic value to Canada, and of very great importance to the people of the maritime provinces, cannot lightly be dismissed without a thorough investigation. The government is prepared to have made such an investigation as my hon. friend asks for in this resolution. But I do suggest to him that it would be advisable to drop the last paragraph of the resolution, which would commit parliament in advance to the construction of the canal, provided that such an investigation indicated that it was both feasible and had economic and national advantages. I feel sure that he will on reflection see that it is asking parliament to go quite a long way, to authorize an investigation, and then upon a favourable report to commit parliament in advance to the construction of the project. I submit that the proper course to pursue in a matter of this kind is to have an investigation and get a report; let the report be tabled in the house and be discussed by the members, because evidently this is a project of considerable magnitude. If it would cost $7,100,000 for the size and scale of project recommended in 1873, one can well imagine the commitment to-day would be an extensive one, under modern conditions of cost, if it was to be large enough to provide the very much greater accommodation which would be required to meet the necessities of modern transportation. So I say to my hon. friend on behalf of the government that if he will drop the last paragraph, which would commit parliament too far at this stage, the government has no objection whatever to the resolution and will endeavour to have the investigation asked for made.

Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, with practically everything that has been said by the hon. Minister of Railways (Mr. Dunning) I am wholly in accord. One of the earliest recollections of my political life was a discussion with a gentleman who represented certain interests that were undertaking to build a marine railway across the isthmus of Chignecto. As a consequence of that discussion I made some inquiries as to how the project came into being, and it was apparent that at one time the country did contemplate the construction of a canal across that isthmus. It was not carried forward. Under modern conditions, with improvements such as we have to-day, it may well be that we can construct such a canal for practically the same cost that was estimated in the first instance.

I saw some of the old ship railway canal construction work last summer, and I took the trouble to learn something of the one-time proposed location of the canal. Certainly it is a problem that has been engaging the attention of men and women from the maritime provinces for a long time as to how the waters of the straits of Northumberland might be connected with those of the bay of Fundy, thereby improving transportation facilities and decreasing the cost of the movement of freight from the lower provinces to the upper provinces and from the upper provinces to the lower, and even to the United States.

The minister has promised to give this matter the attention that has been suggested by the member for Cumberland (Mr. Smith) in the resolution, and I think this will commend itself to every part of the country, and I am sure it does to this house. I rather concur with his suggestion that the hon. gentleman withdraw the last paragraph of the resolution, for I am free to say I quite agree with the minister that an antecedent commitment by parliament to any course of action dependent upon a satisfactory report is too vague and indefinite, because what might be satisfactory to my hon. friend to-day might not be entirely so to his successor to-morrow. It might well be that some "vicious principle" would make it inadvisable to proceed with what the government thought to be sound a week before. Judging from the studied care with which the hon. minister of Public Works (Mr. Elliott) is now observing his reports, I am satisfied that he would not regard it as a "vicious principle" that this work should be undertaken by the Department of Railways and Canals, and not by the department over which he presides.

Mr. A. E. MacLEAN (Prince): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Smith) is to be congratulated on bringing this matter before the house. Of the three maritime provinces, probably Prince Edward Island is the most interested in this project. The fact that the survey was made away back in 1870 and nothing has been done in the meantime to carry out the work does not prove that such a work is not a necessity. As has been very well pointed out, even if it were not a necessity in the past, with the great increase in production of the maritime provinces, with the consequent need of more extended markets at the present time, this work is positively of greater concern to us now than it ever was.

A glance at the map that has been laid on our desks shows that a direct route would be opened up between Prince Edward Island and the ports of St. John and Boston, thus effecting a saving of a few hundred miles and to that extent reducing our cost of transportation and expediting deliveries. To-day we are more handicapped in Prince Edward Island and Nova Scotia and New Brunswick than we have been for a number of years with respect to markets for our agricultural products. The very fact that we are developing our trade with the West Indies and with Cuba makes it all the more imperative that this work should be gone ahead with in order to give us the cheapest transportation possible for our agricultural products, particularly in view of the possibility that the United States may through certain upward tariff revisions which are now pending intimate that they do not want to trade with us.

Cheap transportation is of vital concern to us in the maritime provinces. During the past year we had a large surplus crop of potatoes, which are bringing a very, very low price. Last season the Dominion Stores desired to place an order for two hundred carloads of Prince Edward Island potatoes. As hon. members are aware, there are freight zones throughout the Dominion, the freight rates to any particular point varying in each of those zones. As a result of a difference of about five dollars a car, the zones furthest away from the point of destination could not secure any of that two-hundred-car order although the difference in the cost was only $5 per car. That is one case that came directly to our notice last season. Therefore it will be seen what an advantage cheaper transportation would be to Prince Edward Island, for it would give us extended markets, and even $5 per car often means the moving of the crop or not moving it.

But in addition to our agricultural markets we require a market for our fish. Probably the best fishing grounds of the whole Atlantic are off our shores. On the north side of the island we have a very important cod-fishing industry, but up to the present it has never been developed in a profitable way. Some day someone is going to wake up to the possibilities of that great industry, and it will be so organized and developed that a larger market will be absolutely necessary for the products of this industry as well as for lobsters, scallops and other sea foods.

Hon. members may be surprised when I state that right in the province of Prince Edward Island if we had a short canal connecting the north side of the island with Northumberland straits it would do more for the province and for its fishing industry than perhaps anything else that we could devise. There is one point between Richmond bay and Bedeque bay where tidewater is only separated by about four miles. A canal cut through that narrow part would allow all the north shore of Prince Edward Island to be in direct communication with railway and cold storage facilities, and with the shipping facilities that the south side already enjoys. I do not know whether this matter has ever before been brought up, but the people of the north side of the province are asking for railway connection. This is one way of solving their problems. Last year the people on the north side of the island chartered schooners and loaded them with agricultural products and sent them an a voyage of one hundred miles around the north cape and down the south side of the island to Summerside habour where the cargo was transshipped to steamers there loading for the southern states. That is a hardship and an expense which the agricultural people of that community cannot bear. Why not investigate this needed work at the same time as the mainland scheme is being investigated. I am throwing this out as a suggestion as to what might be done. We were told this afternoon that a sum of over $266,000,000 has been expended on canals throughout Canada. Not one dollar of that money has ever been spent in the province from which I have the honour to come; and no doubt, as the development of canals throughout the country will continue, Prince Edward Island will be contributing in the future, as it has done in the past, to these public works from which the people in that province have been reaping no benefits themselves. I am offering this suggestion as one which in my opinion should be considered in connection with this project which is before the house at the present time. The linking up of the north shore of Prince Edward Island directly with the south side will provide facilities which are greatly needed, and if this work of the Chignecto canal goes on we shall be put into close touch with St. John, Boston and other markets. As has been pointed out, this work has been endorsed by the maritime boards of trade and by every public body in the maritime provinces. I feel sure, from what the Minister of Railways (Mr. Dunning) has said, that the matter will be given careful consideration, and I trust that at some future date we shall see this important work pushed forward to a satisfactory conclusion.

[Mr. MacLean.]

Mr. THOMAS CANTLEY (Pictou): I am in full accord with the proposal of the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Smith). It is true that to-day canals are not viewed as being of that degree of importance which they were fifty years ago. That is due largely to the great improvement which has been effected in railway transportation. Nevertheless, canals have their place, and in that connection I wish to point out, what has already been referred to, that while we in Canada have spent some $260,000,000 odd in canal construction, improvement and maintenance, of that vast sum but less than three-quarters of a million has been spent in the three maritime provinces. In view of that, I submit that the proposal which the hon. member for Cumberland has made should receive the support of all members of the house. I am quite in accord with the suggestion made by the Minister of Railways, that locks such as were considered by the power commissioners who investigated the project would be totally inadequate; they would be useless. If that canal is to be built, the lock would need to be not less than 500 feet in length with at least 25 feet depth on the sills. There is no use proposing or constructing anything under those dimensions, if modern steamers are to go through the cut.

Mr. DUNNING: Would my hon. friend consider 25 feet on the sills sufficient under modern conditions?

Mr. CANTLEY: I suggested that as the minimum.

Mr. DUNNING: I agree with my hon. friend.

Mr. CANTLEY: They should be 30 to 33 feet. The canal should have locks of equal capacity with those on the St. Lawrence, whatever may be ultimately decided upon.

Mr. DUNNING: Twenty-seven feet in depth and provision for thirty feet in the locks.

Mr. CANTLEY: Exactly. Now, I do not think I need say very much more regarding the proposal, in view of the statement made by the minister. I take it he is speaking on behalf of the government, who are prepared to go on with the investigation. I assume therefore that the mover will meet the minister's suggestion and drop the last clause of the resolution. A good deal could be said on the subject, but I do not think it now necessary.

Reviewing the history of the ship railway which was proposed by Sir Charles Tupper, I believe, so far as my memory goes, that it was the only project with which his name was associated in the development of Canada which was not carried through to a final and successful conclusion. In my opinion the whole scheme of the ship railway was wrong in essence and principle. I do not think there was any warrant for it; as it would compare in usefulness with a modern canal system such as is now proposed. The proposal, in connection with the ship railway, was to dock the vessels, raise them on a cradle and transport them across the isthmus, the railway for this purpose consisting of four bands of parallel standard gauge track laid with 110 pound steel. The dock was completed on one side and partially completed on the other. The machinery for lifting the vessels out of the water on the southern side was installed. The rails were laid over a considerable portion of the road. Subsequently the whole plant was scrapped; the rails were lifted and most were taken to New Glasgow, where the great bulk of them were re-melted. That was practically the end of the enterprise. As pointed out by the Minister of Railways, some considerable losses were sustained and claims made. The charter was extended on two occasions, but the project ultimately fell through.

I take it that, so far as the present proposal of the member for Cumberland is concerned, the government will see that an investigation is made. What the result will be remains to be seen, but I know that it will be viewed with a considerable degree of satisfaction in the maritime provinces, that an investigation is to be made. I leave the matter at that.

Hon. J. L. RALSTON (Minister of National Defence): After the statement by the Minister of Railways (Mr. Dunning) as to the attitude of the government in connection with the project under consideration, it is necessary for one to discuss the merits of the question, because that is the very essence of the investigation which it is proposed to make, namely, that the merits shall be thoroughly gone into, the economic situation examined, and all the information brought to bear which would assist in arriving at a conclusion as to the national advantage, the practical utility, and the economic possibility of the scheme.

My purpose in rising is perhaps a very personal one. The project happens to be put forward primarily by the citizens of my native town of Amherst. My hon. friend, the member for Cumberland (Mr. Smith), this afternoon read certain resolutions from the town council of Amherst. This brings back to my mind recollections of early days. Probably I had a more intimate association with the so-called ship railway, or Chignecto marine railway, than even the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett). I want to tell him that I drove a bread wagon which supplied bread for the navvies who worked on that particular job. I feel therefore that I know a good deal at first hand about the ship railway. It was with regret to myself as well as to the older citizens that the project was discontinued. Let me say for my fellow citizens of Amherst, that they are not the sort of people who just ask governments to do things. The citizens of Amherst are the kind of people who have tried to help themselves. There were a good many industries in that town—flourishing industries which were promoted in no small measure by the money, the energy and the courage of the people of Amherst. It was and is a matter of regret to us all that some of those industries are not in the prosperous condition in which we should like to see them. The citizens of Amherst have received a good many hard blows in connection with development there, but they still look forward and this is a project in which they are taking a real and definite interest. They are going about it in a dignified and logical way, but energetically nevertheless. They are not asking impossibilities; they are asking that the matter be first thoroughly investigated in the light of present day conditions and they are basing their request upon the fact that a great many years ago a commission did make findings favourable to the construction of the canal. There was, as the hon. member (Mr. Smith) has pointed out, a later commission which made a finding rather the reverse of that, and the project was allowed to lapse, whether on account of the proposal of the Chignecto marine railway or whether because of other reasons I do not know. However, I feel that with citizens and public bodies like these asking parliament for examination and consideration it is only fair and right that what is set out in the second last paragraph of this resolution should be granted and a full inquiry made. As a former resident of the county of Cumberland, in which is also the thriving town of Springhill mentioned by my hon. friend this afternoon, which of course would be interested, and in which are also other enterprising and active towns, I am glad indeed to be a member of the government which undertakes to say that the fullest investigation will be made into this question.

Mr. SMITH (Cumberland): Having received the assurance of the Minister of Railways, I am willing to consent to the deletion of the last paragraph of the resolution, of course on condition that the investigation into the feasibility, the cost of construction and the advantages to be gained by building this canal will be undertaken by the government with the least possible delay.

Mr. DUNNING: I want it made quite clear that I cannot promise to start to-morrow; my hon. friend appreciates that fact, but having regard to the other work which the type of men needed for this investigation are presently engaged in, I am sure my hon. friend will appreciate that we will get at it as soon as we possibly can, having regard to those conditions.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. gentleman cannot amend his own motion. Mr. Barber will move, seconded by Mr. Brady, that the resolution be amended by striking out the last paragraph.

Amendment agreed to.

Motion as amended agreed to.

NATURAL RESOURCES

PROPOSAL THAT DISPOSITION BE EFFECTIVE ONLY ON APPROVAL OF PARLIAMENT

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre) moved:

That, in the opinion of this house, no disposition of the natural resources, under the control of the federal government, shall be effective until ratified by parliament.

He said: Mr. Speaker, it would seem as though more and more we are being governed by the cabinet and by orders in council, and I propose to restore the control of parliament in at least one department. We cannot spend money on public works without the approval of parliament, but we may find that our natural resources worth countless millions of dollars have been alienated and that parliament has had nothing to say in the matter.. It seems to me that if in Great Britain there had been great natural resources such as we have in Canada they would have devised rules and precedents which would have served as safeguards, but there they had their feudal system under which the crown did not have the same natural resources as we have in Canada. We started in this country with half a continent, with forests, mines, timber limits, water powers and so on, an abundance of natural resources, and in a few short years we have alienated the greater part at least of those immediately available; apparently we had nothing in our constitution to prevent this alienation by governments.

A divorce case must go through a very elaborate process both in the senate and in this house, but it would seem as though the St. Lawrence waterway may be given away without this house having anything to say about it; in fact the Prime Minister intimated the other day in response to a question proposed by my colleague that it was proposed that the decision in connection with the St. Lawrence waterway would be made by order in council. To-day the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) suggested that parliament was not fitted to decide upon these matters, that the negotiations had to be carried on by the government. I am quite willing to have the government carry on negotiations, but I would say that after these negotiations have reached a certain stage parliament should be consulted. The Prime Minister suggested that with regard to the St. Lawrence waterways there was a possibility that before final arrangements were completed a treaty would have to be made between Canada and the United States, and that then the treaty would come before parliament, and he added that in any case parliament had the right to revoke the action taken by the cabinet. I would suggest that if that is true to any extent in regard to the St. Lawrence waterways it should be true with regard to all the other great natural resources. As my hon. friend from Bow River pointed out this afternoon in another debate, it is undoubtedly true that if parliament has the ability to decide after the harm has been done, parliament should have the ability to decide before there is any possibility of harm. Corrupt practices may be shown in the giving away of natural resources, but in the meantime the natural resources are gone, and if the contention of the leader of the opposition is correct, they are gone forever. Personally I want to protest against that interpretation; I take it that if through the incompetence or corruption of any government body the welfare of the general public suffers, we should have some way of holding that government responsible and regaining for the people what otherwise would be lost. The present situation is simply intolerable. Several years ago the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Stewart) stated that he was quite willing to concede this principle with regard to our national parks. If I am not mistaken he introduced a bill along that line, which was afterwards withdrawn, and he stated that he was willing that no disposal should be made of any portion of the national parks without reference to parliament.

With regard to the natural resources which at present are held in trust by this parliament for the western provinces, shortly before prorogation last session the leader of the opposition said:

> My submission is that since we hold these resources, that is, they are the property of the crown in the right of the Dominion, in trust for the crown in the right of the several provinces, we should not as an executive act or as a pure matter of administration part with so valuable a resource as a power site which is of such inestimable value to the people of the country, without the approval of this parliament.

I heartily agree with that statement, and I have brought in this resolution in order that parliament might put its seal upon that contention. The Prime Minister of this country took the stand only this afternoon that treaties should be subject to ratification by parliament. He said that parliament had certain control over the St. Lawrence by reason of the provisions of the Navigable Waters Protection Act. If treaties should be subject to ratification by parliament, why not this question of the disposal of our natural resources? If the government takes the stand—what I regard as an essential of the Liberal doctrine—of consulting parliament with regard to treaties, it seems to me they would be only consistent if they took the same position with regard to important matters such as the disposal of our great waterways and other natural resources.

Someone may raise the practical objection that my resolution is too broad; that it might be very difficult for parliament to revise many of the small transactions which pass through the department in the course of the year. For example, there are the homestead patents, leases and matters of that kind. I suggest that there is no reason why the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Stewart) could not lay upon the table of the house at the beginning of parliament a report showing the arrangements his department had made during the preceding year with regard to natural resources. In the general run of cases these would pass as mere routine and no one would question them, but it would afford parliament the opportunity of checking any case in which there was any suspicion that there had been crooked dealing or that parliament thought might not be in the general interest. These grants could be given to the various people with the understanding that there would be no vested interest until parliament had decided the matter. As I say, it would only be in the exceptional case that any action would be taken by parliament. I am not concerned with these little matters of administration; I am referring to some of those resources which are of unestimable value to Canada.

I might as well be frank and say what induced me to bring forward this resolution—it was the power situation. This is not a matter confined to Canada alone. Mr. Gifford Pinchot recently has published a pamphlet entitled The Power monopoly, from which I will read the following extracts:

> On June 30, 1927, 4,196 operating power companies were doing business in the United States. Of these, 3,108—more than three-quarters—were controlled by 41 holding companies. These companies produced 82 per cent of the electric current generated in the United States.

And again:

> This means that 35 out of the 41 power companies are controlled by six allied groups. These 35 produce just under two-thirds of the current generated in the United States.

And further along in the article:

> Such domination is almost incredible, but there is more to come. For the General Electric-Insul-Morgan-Mellon-Byllesby-Doherty group is for all practical purposes united into a single six-sided power monopoly.
> It is united through the Joint Committee of Public Utilities, through the power lobby which infests Washington, and in many other ways.
> The "big six" concerns, Mr. Pinchot shows, are capitalized at around eight billion dollars; and of this, he declares that at least three billions are "water", purer than any which goes through a turbine. Courts allow utilities 7 per cent return. Seven per cent on $3,000,000,000 means $210,000,000 per year.

The article concludes:

> We have seen the electric monopoly pick out state governments. We have seen it crack its whip over state assemblies. We have seen it with stupid arrogance and boldness corrupt elections, and attempt to buy a seat in the United States senate. We have seen it attempt to compel the senate to deliver that purchased seat.
> Do we care enough about the future of America to save it from a private super-state of electric power giants?

That is the situation in the United States. The revelations before the federal trade commission have shown that this great power organization has been bounded by no limit in carrying on its propaganda. It has gotten into the schools and universities, purchased newspapers, and so on. We have a power trust here in Canada and we might learn something of its nature and activities from what has been going on in the United States.

I should like to refer briefly to the granting of a license by the present administration covering the Seven Sisters falls. I need not remind this house that the city of Winnipeg has an important hydro-electric development. Power is very cheap in our city; we are able to use a great variety of household appliances at reasonable cost. We have a great central heating plant which heats a large number of the downtown blocks in the city. We are proud of our hydro, but we have had a constant struggle against the private interests who have sought to undermine the splendid position which the municipal hydro has been able to attain. On August 31, 1925, the city council passed the following resolution with regard to the Seven Sisters falls:

That the resolution passed by the committee on finance at its last meeting protesting against granting lease of Seven Sisters falls power site on the Winnipeg river to the Backus-Seaman interests, and the action of the committee in sending the city solicitor to Ottawa be approved and endorsed.

That resolution was carried unanimously. That was in 1925, but the private interests were at work, and although the Backus-Seaman interests were defeated other private interests were able to secure such influence over the city council that two or three years later that body was in favour of the Winnipeg Electric Company's proposal. Further than that, these power interests have obtained very great influence over the provincial parliament. The following resolution was passed in 1927 by the legislature of Manitoba:

Therefore, be it resolved, that in the opinion of the house, the government should press for the immediate granting by the federal government, all rights to the Seven Sisters falls, situate on the Winnipeg river, said site to be held by the government on behalf of the province of Manitoba.

I would take it that that resolution of the provincial parliament is essentially an instruction to the government of that province to hold those falls for the people of the province of Manitoba. Despite that resolution, which has never been rescinded, this government granted the Seven Sisters falls power site to a private corporation merely on the request of the executive of Manitoba.

Our most persistent and unscrupulous opponent in Winnipeg has been the Winnipeg Electric Railway Company. Its representatives have gradually been placed on every public board; it has secured, as I have said, a majority on the city council, and it has gradually obtained a very strong influence over the Bracken government. How that influence has been secured is now being investigated by a royal commission.

Further than that, to a considerable extent this same private company has been able to dominate, I will not say the board of trade proper, but at least the council of the board of trade. For example, when the Manitoba members of the federal house last year protested against the giving of the site of the Seven Sisters falls to a private corporation, this is what the council had the assurance to say:

That this council deprecates and hereby protests against the attempted assumption of responsibility by a group of representatives to the federal house in their attempt to seize the administration of the resources of this province and to exercise the power of veto over the acts of those hitherto responsible to the province and the people.

Now we find, without going into that matter any more fully, that the same private interest, the Winnipeg Electric Railway Company, has actually contributed to the campaign funds, not only of the Bracken government but of the other political parties as well. When the question of the disposal of the Seven Sisters falls was raised in the Manitoba legislature last year, the premier declared that no agreement had been reached. Yet within a few days of prorogation of the house he had relinquished the provincial claims in favour of the Winnipeg Electric, and as a matter of fact evidence shows that the draft agreement was in his desk all the time.

The situation that faced the Manitoba members last spring was this: if the Seven Sisters falls went to the Winnipeg Electric, the public would then have on the Winnipeg river only 228,000 horse-power, while private interests would have 530,000 horse-power. In the tentative agreement 200,000 horse-power would go to the company and only 30,000 to the province. There was no provision for the city. A heavy investment on the part of the citizens was at stake. Within six years the city would need to look for more power and there would be no likely development even for the rural districts. The Minister of the Interior (Mr. Stewart) asked the opinion of the Manitoba members of the house with regard to policy, and he stated definitely to us again and again that he would be guided by the opinion of the Manitoba members. The Manitoba members, after meeting together, there being thirteen in the group, drew up a resolution in the form of a letter to Mr. Stewart, which they passed nine to four, and which is as follows:

The federal members, representing the province of Manitoba, have had before them the question of the disposal of the power of the Winnipeg river at Seven Sisters Falls for some time, and after thoroughly going into the matter, beg to advise that their recommendation in connection with same is as follows:

1. That the site be not disposed of but that the matter be held in abeyance until the close of the next session of the provincial legislature for the purpose of giving the legislature of the province of Manitoba an opportunity to express its opinion in connection with the disposal of the said site or the development of it by the province of Manitoba.

2. That the said interval would afford the city of Winnipeg an opportunity to take a referendum vote on the question as to whether the said city desires to develop the power at said site in connection with their present hydro-electric system.

3. That in the event of the province of Manitoba deciding to develop the said power as a provincial undertaking, that they be given said right upon request.

4. That in the event of the province of Manitoba deciding not to develop the said site and the city of Winnipeg having reached a decision to develop same, that the city be given the opportunity of developing said power on such terms as may be satisfactory to the government of the province of Manitoba.

5. That in the event of neither the province of Manitoba nor the city of Winnipeg wishing to develop said site that the present applicant, the Winnipeg Electric Railway Company, be given priority to any other private corporation to develop same, subject to the usual restrictions and conditions imposed by your department and on such additional terms as may be asked for by the province of Manitoba in reference to any proposed lease or agreement to be entered into by the said company with the Dominion of Canada or the province of Manitoba.

Thus we had a promise given privately to that group by the Minister of the Interior. Further, on June 6 the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) asked a question across the floor of the house as to what was going to be done with regard to the Seven Sisters falls. He said:

I suggest that. . . that no water powers in western Canada will be alienated without the approval of parliament; because no other action will meet the situation adequately at this time.

The Minister of the Interior replied:

I quite appreciate the protection given a minister in securing the consent of parliament to any question which involves such an important decision as that of the disposal of 300,000 horse power, but I do say that Manitoba has been the storm centre ever since I came to this government. . . . and now a very grave difference of opinion exists with respect to the disposition of the Seven Sisters falls. Listen:

I may assure my hon. friend that until that difference of opinion is settled I am not going to issue any license for that water power. I think I may assure my hon. friend of that.

In July a conference was held between the federal government and the Manitoba government with regard to the natural resources, and at that conference it was agreed that in dealing with the natural resources the Dominion government should be guided by the Manitoba government. That is the very point at issue. Whether the Minister of the Interior was present on the last day or not; whether he was favourable or the reverse; whoever was responsible for the insertion of clause 6 of that agreement; whether the Seven Sisters falls was formally or only implicitly included—what do these things matter? The Minister of the Interior, as a responsible minister, had solemnly given his word to the Manitoba members of the House of Commons that no such action would be taken, and I submit that we cannot, as members of the house, allow that kind of thing to pass unchallenged. Either the word of a minister is sacred and that minister speaks on behalf of the cabinet or else the idea of cabinet solidarity and of the honour of this house becomes a thing of the past. Personally the very first definite intimation I had of the changed situation was through a wire sent to me on September 6, as follows:

In accordance with July agreement with Manitoba government have at their request prepared interim license of Seven Sisters falls to Northwestern Power Company. Have embodied in license every condition that I can think of to safeguard public interests. Attwood has full particulars. Expect final consideration will be given by council Saturday, September 8.

Charles Stewart.

I had heard nothing whatever from Mr. Stewart since July 6, and I was told on September 6 that final action would be taken two days afterwards. I immediately wired the Minister of the Interior as follows:

July agreement as interpreted your wire sixth is absolute violation of your solemn assurance for which independents will hold the government responsible. Suggest Prime Minister be advised.

This is the wire which I received in response from the Minister of the Interior:

Your wire seventh. Have taken every precaution to carry out my promise to federal members, even to extent of going to Winnipeg and interviewing them on two occasions. Regret you were not available. Prime Minister has been fully informed.

Not available! I was at any time as available by letter or by wire as I was on September 6. Not the slightest effort was made to reach me personally, and if an effort was made to interview some of the other members, I understand the majority of the other members stood precisely where they stood in June when the minister definitely assured us that no action would be taken.

I should like to read extracts from a very strong editorial which appeared in the Ottawa Citizen at the time of the disposal of the Seven Sisters falls. It was entitled The Common and the Goose. It reads:

Fortunes have been made by people on the inside in politics in just such transactions as the alienation of Seven Sisters falls from the public domain. Some people knew that the government had committed itself to this latest measure of special privilege for the benefit of private power interests. They bought stock in the Winnipeg Electric Company knowing that when the order in council went through to hand over the falls, estimated to be worth $28,000,000, the value of the stock would rise.

Again:

There would have been little prospect of getting the approval of parliament to hand over Seven Sisters falls in Manitoba to privileged interests. Hence the haste of the conspirators—

Mark the word:

—to put through the deal by order in council before the provincial legislature or the Dominion parliament could intervene. Premier Bracken waited until the session of the Manitoba legislature had ended before allowing it to be publicly known that he had made an agreement to waive the right of the province to develop the power at Seven Sisters falls. He knew the difficulty of having to defend an indefensible transaction in the legislature.

When the agents of special privilege came to Ottawa last spring, to instruct—

Again, mark the word:

—to instruct this government about transferring the power site they found themselves confronted with the strong opposition of federal members of parliament from Manitoba. In the face of this opposition the government found it expedient to postpone the transaction. The responsible minister at the head of the Department of the Interior, Mr. Stewart, gave the house to understand that no precipitate action would be taken by the government. The Manitoba federal members urged, as did the leader of the opposition, Mr. Bennett, that the provincial legislature be given the opportunity to pass upon any proposed alienation of natural resources before the federal government allowed the Falls to pass from public control. Parliament prorogued with Mr. Stewart's assurance to Mr. Bennett in the House of Commons last June as follows:

"A very grave difference of opinion exists with respect to the disposition of the Seven Sisters falls. I may assure my hon. friend that until that difference of opinion is settled I am not going to issue any license for that water power. I think I may assure my hon. friend of that."

[Mr. Woodsworth.]

Again:

As with the Bracken administration, however, influences have operated in Ottawa to bring the Dominion cabinet into line with the requirements of special privilege.

I ask, what influences have operated here in Ottawa? We are learning what operated in Winnipeg, where there is a royal commission which is taking evidence, but I ask, what influences operated in Ottawa It goes on:

The expedient of the order in council between sessions has been used once again to allow alienation of the natural resources of Canada.

The editorial concludes:

Someone has written a rhyme about stealing the goose from the common. In ancient times such theft incurred heavy punishment. In modern times it would still be punished; but the modern method is to steal the common from the goose—by order in council. The people of Canada are no longer such easy geese to handle, however. The stealing of the common is becoming a risky business politically, as it should be.

The question arises, what were these influences at Ottawa that were potent enough to cause the Minister of the Interior to disregard his promises made to the Manitoba members of this house, and further, for the cabinet to risk a great deal politically by taking the action that they did?

The Winnipeg Electric Company is simply one unit in a much larger concern—the Power Corporation of Canada, Limited. According to the last report of this organization, there was an increase in gross and net earnings over the preceding period of over 150 per cent, and the equivalent of $5.67 a share on the outstanding common stock as against $2.77 a share for the 1926-1927 fiscal year. The statement for the twelve months ended June 30, 1928 reflects the wide expansion achieved by this holding company. Gross earnings for the year under review, it is significant, were almost seven times those for the year ended June 30, 1926.

Power Corporation of Canada, Limited, holds a substantial interest in the bonds and shares of the following public utilities:

Canada Northern Power Corporation, British Columbia Power Corporation, Winnipeg Electric Co., Southern Canada Power Co., Ltd., International Utilities Corporation, Dominion Power and Transmission Company, Limited; Consolidated Gas Company of New York; Foreign Power Securities Corpn., Ltd.; East Kootenay Power Company, Ltd.; Manitoba Power Company Ltd.; Brazilian Traction, Light and Power Company, Ltd.; Shawinigan Water and Power Company; Montreal Island Power Company Northwestern Utilities Ltd., Bathurst Power and Paper Company, Ltd.; Canada Power and Paper Corpn., Public Service Corporation of New Jersey, Tokio Electric Light Company, Electric Investors, Atlas Light and Power Company (England), Gatineau Power Company, Ottawa Light, Heat and Power Company, Ltd.

If I had time to read the names of the directors of all these corporations, I think we would begin to see how powerful a combination we poor Manitoba members were really up against. The other day, as late as February 8, Mr. Nesbitt declared that the power companies in which the Power Corporation of Canada, Limited, of which company he is the president, was interested or controlled, had a development program on hand of more than fifty million dollars. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that when a great corporation has a development program of fifty million dollars, those connected with it are not going to allow a few hundred thousand dollars stand in the way of accomplishing their purpose. We are learning a little about how the deal was worked in Winnipeg, and I think before this house prorogues we shall have to learn how the deal was worked at Ottawa.

You may say that such a resolution as mine is locking the door after the horse is stolen. That is true, but there are still other horses in the stable, and instead of attempting at this moment to challenge the government, I would rather put before the house this resolution, the adoption of which would lead to definite constructive action. I am not so much concerned with the politics of the situation as I am with conserving the resources of this country. After the exhibition that we have had with regard to the alienation of the Seven Sisters falls site, it does seem to me that we should see to it now that nothing of this kind occurs in the future, and so I have moved in the resolution which is before the house:

> That in the opinion of this house, no disposition of the natural resources, under the control of the federal government, shall be effective until ratified by parliament.

Let the government proceed, as the Prime Minister suggested, with their negotiations. Let them call in experts; I am not suggesting that they should not, because the government is best fitted to do that. But when great public policies of this kind are to be decided they should be decided not by the government alone. They ought to be submitted to parliament for its ratification. Important transactions of this kind involving millions of dollars ought not to be left entirely in the hands of an administration. With such a procedure there is room for corruption. I am not charging corruption, but I say there is every opportunity for corruption, and the fact that we have had corruption in Winnipeg at least makes one suspicious that Winnipeg may not be an isolated case in this regard.

And what about the stolen horse? As far as I am concerned, it seems to me that it would be an intolerable situation indeed if this power site could be given away under what were essentially false pretences, under representations that were not correct. The Manitoba government did not really represent the will of the people of Manitoba; the people had spoken in that resolution in parliament a year or two previously, and there is not much doubt where the people of Manitoba stand to-day. This government gave away these resources under those conditions, and in spite of solemn promises given to this house. Because that is done we are told, the transaction is concluded, and we cannot recover. I think it is impossible that such should be the case. The Dominion parliament is a trustee for those natural resources, and cannot divest itself of all its attendant responsibilities as it has attempted to do. We must hold the Dominion government responsible for those natural resources until such time as they are formally turned over to the western provinces.

If parliament can annul certain arrangements made by order in council in matters affecting the St. Lawrence, surely parliament, as the supreme body in this country, is able to annul arrangements made under the conditions which prevailed in the city of Winnipeg at the time this lease was granted.

Last year when this matter was being dealt with I ventured to warn the Prime Minister that if these resources were given away it would involve serious political consequences in the west. The Prime Minister, perhaps rightly, sought the advice of his colleagues and took no action to prevent the granting of the lease. I venture to utter another warning to the Prime Minister to-day, that there will be still more serious political consequences if under these circumstances there is not some action on the part of the federal government in dissociating itself from the corruption that has been revealed in Manitoba by cancelling this lease and restoring to the people of Manitoba the water-powers that belong to them as part of their natural resources.

Mr. T. W. BIRD (Nelson): Mr. Speaker, I wish to support the motion of the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat (Mr. Woodsworth). Perhaps it will be interesting to the house if I quote the epigram to which he has referred in regard to the common and the goose. It is a piece of old English wit that goes back many centuries to the time when the landlords were enclosing the commons. It runs like this:

> It is bad enough in man or woman
> To steal the goose from off the common;
> But surely he is without excuse
> Who steals the common from the goose.

The process of stealing the common from the goose is going on apace in this country. In Manitoba during the last twelve months we have lost one of our most valuable public possessions and neither this parliament nor the legislature of Manitoba were able to make a protest or institute an investigation until the common had been taken away from the goose.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I submit that for any government, no matter whether Dominion or provincial, to give away our natural wealth by order in council is a ursurpation of the proper functions of parliament. Why not tax by order in council—why not increase the income tax by order in council; why not increase the tariff by order in council? Why not sign treaties by order in council? Why not legislate by order in council? Why not hand government over to some Mussolini without condescending to call together the representatives of the people? There is no logic or justice in the procedure whatsoever. Why, what is the difference between depriving the people of their property by taxation and depriving them by alienating their natural wealth? There is absolutely no difference in principle. Yet in the one case our whole parliamentary system has been built up on the basis of shielding the people from arbitrary taxation. In the other case, right up to the present time, cabinets in the dim seclusion of the council chamber can give away the people's wealth to the value of hundreds of millions of dollars.

It is a long time since governments attempted to tax the people by order in council. When Charles Stuart—I mean King Charles Stuart—levied ship money by order in council, it led to a case of amputation in a very short time. I do not want to see the present Charles Stewart suffer anything like the same fate, but there is an execution impending in the province of Manitoba. Surely we are of the same Anglo-Saxon stock; surely the same blood runs in our veins as ran in the veins of Pym and Hampden; surely we are not going to suffer our wealth to be frittered away by a committee of parliament in the recesses of the council chamber without having the opportunity to utter one word of protest.

It may have been a very harmless practice years ago before the people of Canada awakened to a sense of the vast importance of their natural wealth. When a water-power was just a matter of scenic beauty, when an oil field was just a potential sheep pasture, and a pulp forest a muskeg, it did not matter very much whether our natural resources were administered in one way or the other, there was nothing very serious implicated; but in recent years, particularly since the war, our natural resources have assumed a value that our grandfathers could not have imagined. We have come to a sense of our advantages as a country. Our national pride is constantly appealed to on the basis of the wonderful wealth that lies to our hands. Moreover, in every farm home, in every labourer's cottage, this sense of our common wealth has raised visions of a higher standard of Canadian life accessible to all, visions of the burden of taxation lifted, visions of domestic drudgery taken away. These visions have arisen in the minds of the men and women of Canada, and I say to this government or to any government, they are risking their very existence by tampering with this God-given wealth which belongs to the ten millions of people of Canada, and not to any government or privileged few. It is the business of governments to see that those visions are materialized, to see that these water-powers, with all this hidden wealth of forest and mine are somehow diverted into the lives of the common people, and not frittered away by unseen and secret methods to the money lords of this country and of the United States. Stripped of its traditional dignity, the government is but a committee of parliament; and I say that parliament is playing with fire when it allows governments to give away secretly the natural wealth of this country. By so doing it is creating forces and setting up influences which some day will turn and enslave parliament itself, if indeed they are not already doing so.

The nearest parallel to what is going on in Canada which I can find anywhere in history occurred about the time that little rhyme originated about four hundred years ago. The people of merrie England in the sixteenth century, in pre-Elizabethan times, owned the commons; an illimitable expanse of fertile land belonged to the inhabitants of England. But at that time the landlords began to absorb that natural resource; they began to fence it in and acquire it. Hence arose the saying that the commons were being taken away from the goose. That was four hundred years ago. As one in whom English blood runs more or less completely, I am always proud to think of old Bob Ket and his brother Bill, who in the sixteenth century rose up in their township of Wymondham in Norfolk, England, and protested against parliament allowing the landlords to absorb the commons. I can picture Bob Ket pulling down the fences of Sergeant Flowerdew. I can imagine his taking his sixteen thousand tatterdemalions to Mousehold Heath.

Years ago I stood on the very place, of which the immortal Borrow said, "There's a wind on the heath, brother". And there was more than a wind on the heath; there was something more spiritual than the wind that blew. There was something that had been agitated centuries back, and which all down the centuries had its influence on East Anglia. That is the neighbourhood where Cromwell got his Ironsides to withstand Charles Stuart; and even to this day you can find the influence of Bob Ket working in Norfolk and Suffolk in England, because they dared four centuries ago to stand up against the encroachments of landlordism. The historian Pollock says that these men were all of very simple spirit, religious minded people, and in the manifesto which they made out they told the people of England that they regarded the enclosure of common lands as theft from the community; and they innocently considered that the gifts of God in nature belonged equally to the peasant as to the landlord. That is what these humble people meant in their rebellion four hundred years ago. And they were not left to stand alone. Poor and ragged and simple though they were, we are told that the famous Bishop Latimer stood up and said on their behalf, "These landlords are enclosers, grabbers, rent raisers"; and he told his congregation that there was more cruelty, injustice, and pride in the landlords of his day than among the inhabitants of Nebo. I sometimes listen to the modern pulpit, and I think it would be a good thing if it came out of the vacuum which it has created around itself and addressed itself to some of these injustices which obtain in our time, as Bishop Latimer as well as the Roman Catholic clergy and laymen did in their time. In this way the blight of landlordism settled in England and on English institutions and government for the next three hundred years. There was a period of three hundred years of sterility for the common people of England because landlordism was clamped upon the country as we have seen.

Now to-day we are passing through a parallel process. Moneylordism is foisting itself on our free institutions in this country. As president Wilson said some years ago, there has risen up behind the forms of democracy an invisible government; it is the government of money kings, who seek privileges from parliament, whose cupidity has been stirred by the vast natural resources of the country, and who have been encouraged by the servility of governments—encouraged by our system, whereby grants of our natural resources do not come up for consideration by the people's representatives but are passed upon in the secrecy of the cabinet council. I say it is a serious thing for parliament. Parliaments, provincial and Dominion, are creating influences which some day will have them completely in possession, if they have not them in possession at the present time.

Discussion in parliament is the only means by which we can create a healthy public opinion on any question. True, discussion in parliament is not a perfect piece of procedure; we are all guilty at one time or another of indulging in talk which is unprofitable. We all do our best, and we have the best of intentions, but we sometimes waste time and bring this institution into momentary contempt. Nevertheless it is on the floor of the house that public opinion is moulded, if it is moulded at all, in the interest of the people. Oh, you will say, what about the press? What about all the agencies that are at work to build up an enlightened and intelligent public capable of taking care of its own concerns? Surely, it will be said, people do not depend upon parliament so much as they used to. Well, let me tell you of an experience we had in Manitoba with the press in connection with the Seven Sisters falls. In Manitoba we have a great newspaper which laughingly calls itself free. Not Mr. Bracken, but the Free Press is the guilty party. That great newspaper, which has insinuated its way into the confidence of the people in the last few years, and not altogether unworthily, is responsible to-day for Manitoba having lost its most valuable natural resource. Without the Free Press Mr. Bracken would not have had one printed word of support. The Grain Growers Guide, now called the Country Guide, refused to say a word in support of him—one of the most significant things you could think of. But the Free Press, the organ of light and liberty, immediately got behind Mr. Bracken the moment they saw that Mr. Bracken was getgetting behind the Winnipeg electric. The editor of that great journal is a big man with a big brain, which he does not always use fairly and squarely. This gentleman who in his editorials talks in imitation of a Greek oracle; this Manitoba king maker and king-breaker—and I say that almost literally, because I think he would have broken Mackenzie King two or three years ago if he could, and when he found he could not do so he filled his editorials with all the fulsome terms he could get out of the dictionary—this potentate in Manitoba, with his million dollar press, rides rough shod over every humble expression of opinion in Manitoba differing from his own. A short time ago at a farmers' convention I dared criticize the Free Press, in my humble way; immediately the million dollar mechanism started working and crushed the life out of poor me. That is what we are up against in Manitoba, a paper which has worked its way into the hearts of the people largely through its own advocacy, but when the people's rights are in the balance it flings itself on the side of the interests.

You say the press is a noble organ of public opinion; we cannot believe that in Manitoba. We leaned on a broken reed and it entered our hands. Like most Manitobans I used to put the Free Press next the Bible and Eaton's catalogue, and thought I was safe both for here and the hereafter. I no longer look at the Free Press in that light; I look on it as the seller of the people's property in Manitoba. Mr. John Bracken was like a fly on the chariot wheel, and the Free Press was the chariot. I honour and respect our journalists, but these joint-stock companies with no conscience cannot be trusted with public opinion. This is the only place to mould public opinion, but we do not get a chance to do so. If we do not try to mould public opinion here; if we do not here try to bring our people to a sense of the value of what is theirs, there are other people on the outside who are doing their utmost to mislead the people.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) has mentioned the power trust in the United States. A year ago this month the United States senate began an inquiry into the power trust of that country, and I have here some clippings taken at random, of which I will read only one from the Northwestern Christian Advocate:

> The public utilities people have begun a practice which may become a menacing educational custom. According to facts recently brought to light by the federal trade commission, the utility interests have a huge financial interest in opposing the idea of government ownership. And they have gone at the business of opposing it with system, thoroughness and all the money they need.
> They have paid out, in the last three years, a million a year to oppose government ownership—and how? By paying fees to men supposed to be impartial. By contributing, $30,000 to the General Federation of Women's Clubs for a "survey". By cooperating, financially and otherwise, with text-book writers, so as to get "bad books"—that is, books favourable to public ownership—out of high schools and colleges, and "good books" in.
> And by contributing sums large and small to colleges and universities for reports, lectures and inferentially for classroom instruction, on the merits of private, and the evils of public, ownership of public utilities.

Then I will add a little extract from a speech by Senator Norris, who said:

> Recent developments by the federal trade commission have shown that there is a giant monopoly in the generation and distribution of electric current, gradually spreading itself over the entire country.
> It has entered our schools and our homes. It has been working silently and stealthily to poison the minds of our school children. It has entered into the politics of the country from the school district to the White House. It has undertaken to buy seats in the United States Senate. It has made an attempt to control all the avenues of publicity.
> It has even reached its fingers into the church and undertaken to subsidize the men who preach to us from the pulpit on the Sabbath day.

All this came from an official investigation which took place less than a year ago. Organs such as the Free Press will say that we are not like that in Canada, that there is no earthly possibility that the stamp of men we have in Canada will permit that sort of thing to happen. My faith in Canadians is very deep and sincere, but I think we are of no different clay from our brethern to the south; I believe we are just as susceptible to the almighty power of massed dollars as they are. As soon as it is worth while for the power trusts in that country and this—there is no difference between them— to poison the wells of knowledge and shape the plastic minds of our children to their own doctrines of private ownership and private greed they will do so. There is nothing here which we can do to prevent it; we have denied ourselves the means of preventing it and have closed up the only means of counteracting that poisonous propaganda.

A motion of this kind is highly reasonable; to permit this state of affairs to continue is not good for the people and is not good for the government. There is not one of us here who is not sorry for what has happened in Manitoba; that kind of happening cannot be good for Canada, when governments get trapped in that way and are held up to the contempt of their opponents and of public opinion generally. That cannot be good for Canada, but what was the vicious source of this sort of thing? It lay simply in this outworn system of disposing of our natural resources in the secrecy of a cabinet council. We did think Mr. Bracken sufficiently enlightened so that nothing would prevent him from consulting the people, but he stooped to tradition; he said, "No, this thing is our prerogative and we will settle it behind closed doors. The people of Manitoba and the people of Canada have no right to look in or protest." I think it most remarkable that Mr. Bracken and his colleagues should have absolutely ignored his friends in this house who, from the very beginning of last session, long before we knew what his policy was, set our hands against this transaction. Petitions were sent to the Minister of the Interior asking that these falls be retained for the public, yet Mr. Bracken and his colleagues went on with their secret negotiations with the Winnipeg Electric Company as though the representatives here did not exist or, if they did exist, their opinions were not worth while. These things discourage and astonish me; one sometimes wonders whether there is a spark of hope for any progress in our public life at all.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I know it will be said of the last speaker and myself that we display a regrettable suspiciousness in regard to our fellow human beings. That has been said already this session; I recall a reference made with regard to the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Coote) by the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett), who said:

> When my hon. friend suggests that the time may come when the banks will have been reduced in number to one, I say that he shows little confidence, little faith in the integrity of the public men of this country in believing that there could ever sit in the great office of Minister of Finance any man who would countenance an amalgamation or a merger unless it were in the interests of the depositors and to prevent raids upon the public treasury.

That utterance of the leader of the opposition was dictated, as I judge, purely by his inborn disposition to preach sermons to other people. Where else did that criticism arise? Here is a gentleman who is drawing a salary to criticize the government; the very logic of his position is that the government cannot be trusted in the way he says it ought to be: Where else can criticism of the government come from except from the official opposition? That is rightly so; but why should we be marked when we express distrust of the government? Is that not the very basis of the development of our British institutions? Do not public men accept it that their whole conduct will be submitted to the clear light of reason? Surely they do; that is the foundation of our parliamentary system. When I seem to cast doubt upon the Bracken government, or upon this government, I must say that I rather hesitate. It is not a popular thing to do, especially with the governments that have been criticized. But on the other hand, here are the people of Manitoba whom I must put in the balance against those who have arrogated to themselves the right to dispose of the people's natural wealth. It may be against my disposition to cast unjustifiable reflections upon the government, or upon the Minister of the Interior, and I do not go as far as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) went. The Minister of the Interior did say to us quite plainly, before we left for home last session, that he could not hold up this matter until the Manitoba legislature met; he was very frank about that. But if I did not misunderstand him, and there is always the possibility that I might have—I can confirm what I am saying by my own diary, and his words in the house seem to confirm it—he said that before anything was done the members for Manitoba would be consulted. As I say, there may have been misunderstanding, and it is a very critical situation in which to make a mistake, but if the Minister of the Interior draws upon himself widespread suspicion he cannot blame those who are the instruments of diverting it upon him; he can blame only himself for the inconsecutive way in which he carried on his negotiations with us. We representatives of Manitoba had a natural right to expect that he would consult us, not personally but with respect to the position we hold as federal members for Manitoba. We all signed a round robin on the 4th of February last saying that the Seven Sisters falls must be kept for the people of Manitoba, and not one Manitoba member withheld his name from that document.

Mr. HOWDEN: I was not in Ottawa at the time and I do not think my name was on that.

Mr. BIRD: We can put this beyond peradventure, because we have the round robin upstairs. I made that statement believing that all our names were on it. But as the months passed on—not years: if it had been years one could have made great allowances because over a stretch of years minds can change a little—some of the staunch public ownership men began to think that after all perhaps they had been mistaken and had signed that petition under false pretences and did not know what they were signing with respect to the Seven Sisters falls.

Mr. THORSON: What document was the hon. member referring to a moment ago?

Mr. BIRD: If I am not mistaken, it was handed around this house about February 4, long before I knew that Mr. Bracken had any policy at all on the Seven Sisters falls. I learned subsequently that Mr. Bracken did have a policy, and so did other gentlemen from Manitoba. Somehow or other we in Manitoba, having started a party of a new brand, having originated a political party which was going to be beyond suspicion—

Mr. HOWDEN: I wish to withdraw my previous statement: I had reference to another document.

Mr. BIRD: I think I can state to the house that I very rarely make statements unless I am sure of their truth; I always do the house the honour of addressing it only when I am fairly well prepared.

As I said, we started out in Manitoba on new lines, as we thought, politically. I am almost ashamed of the number of platforms on which I stood and said, "here is the real thing in party politics." I think I was the only federal member in Manitoba who supported the Bracken government last year. I think I was the only federal member who went out and stood four-square for Mr. Bracken. What had I to say for Mr. Bracken and his government? I said, "here are men who do not say one thing and do another." I said that on every platform in my constituency, and I have made everlasting enemies of some of my supporters.

This is a serious situation, not only for me but for all those who believe that the pursuit of idealism is possible in public life, who believe there can be found an aggregation of men who will go to the country and say, "Here is what we will do if we get into power,"—and mean it. That is the message we had from Vancouver to Halifax in 1921. Mr. Crerar carried the banner of pure politics from one end of the country to the other, and he found an echo in thousands of hearts. But the people now ask if this is the same government they supported in 1922, the government that pledged itself to retain the water-powers for public ownership and then turned around and deliberately handed them over to private interests in a secret session.

It is not an easy matter for me to say the things I have said in the last few sentences, because I have committed myself in the last few years to the notion that idealism is possible in all the ramifications of public life. Some of us have not come into politics of our own intiative: we came from walks of life where we had no ambitions whatsoever, and we were brought into public life with the thought that the avocation we had been following would somehow be a guarantee that through all our public career we would stand four-square for idealism in public life. But how are we going to hold up our heads again when we remember what has happened in Manitoba during the last few months? How are we going to go on the platforms in our constituencies and face the finger of scorn from every quarter? All these petty things do not count much with the rising generation in the west. It was appealed to in 1922 in Manitoba, not respecting things of petty policy but as regards things that lay deeper down than political policies. Some of us have been called Don Quixotes, and I do not accept that altogether as a criticism; I have gladly tilted at windmills during the last twelve months, especially in my own constituency. Men who were my strong friends, went on one side while I was on the other. The past president of my own political organization to-night is on one side with private ownership, and I with public ownership. Who is to blame? We say: the Bracken government. I have said: the Free Press. I do not know perhaps whether we are justified in saying this or that, but some weakness has crept in somewhere. There has been some blurring of those clean-cut ideas with which some of us came here a few years ago. There has been some giving way, some unconscious forsaking of things we stood for then. I say it with sorrow more than with anger, that somehow or another I have the feeling of being forsaken, not only by the Manitoba government, but in a measure by the federal government, although the federal government, as far as I know, never committed itself to public ownership, and to that extent perhaps, it escapes criticism.

Hon. CHARLES STEWART (Minister of the Interior): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with a good deal of interest to the speeches of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) and the hon. member for Nelson (Mr. Bird) with respect to the motion that they have brought before the house. Anyone who has followed their remarks with any care whatever will note that the whole attack they lodge against the issuing of a license to the Northwestern Power Company is on the basis of their theory that only public ownership should be given consideration. They have said not one word about the contract itself or whether in their opinion the contract is in the interests of the people. They have contented themselves simply with the statement that so far as they are concerned they are against any contract, any arrangement that is not carried out by the government itself or by some municipal corporation.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: May I ask the Minister of the Interior to quote one paragraph of mine that lends any colour whatever to such a statement?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I am certainly entitled to my opinion. I followed the hon. gentleman very carefully and I have yet to hear him make one complaint other than that he is opposed in toto to private ownership.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I said nothing whatever about being opposed to private ownership.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I must be given the right to my opinion about what my hon. friend has said. He may have his.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Hansard will show.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I may be able, as I proceed, to show that what I say is correct. I propose to discuss the contract; I propose to discuss as well and to show just how impossible the application of a resolution of this character would be to the management and administration of the public domain of Canada that for the time being is under my control. May I recite in the beginning just how much is required of the department and how often we have to exercise our responsibility and, may I say, always under the control of parliament. I have just laid on the table of the house, in accordance with the statute which so requires, a complete resumé of all the acts of our department during the past year. They are under the purview of parliament, and previous governments, previous ministers, made the mistake of not taking the precaution by resolution to have the acts confirmed. We have found ourselves in some difficulty and from time to time we have had to have that remedied. We very frequently have to issue leases for one thing or another. Our sales of school lands are publicly advertised and publicly carried out. Everybody knows about them.

Mr. BENNETT: The statute requires publicity.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Of course. We do not to-day issue a lease for a timber berth without advertising it. The public know all about it, but private parties purchase it. It is true we issue thousands of leases annually for grazing purposes to this individual and the other, without competition, but we do so after we have satisfied ourselves that the applicant is responsible and capable of carrying out his contract. The leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) will recollect that for the cancellation of one of them we had to pay a very substantial sum last year. No longer do we dispose of the domain of the crown; it is all under lease which is liable to cancellation and it is all, at present at least, under the control of the Department of the Interior, the leases being issued by this department. There are quartz mining leases, coal mining leases, leases of every character, innumerable. The question is sometimes asked: Why do we need such a large staff to carry on the work of the department? The reason is that there is a tremendous amount of detail in order to keep a record of every one of these leases, to make the collections, and to do all the work necessary to carry out efficiently the various matters under the control of the department. I am not going to dwell on that because I want to devote all the time I can to a discussion of the particular matter brought up by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. I am not one of those who have firm convictions one way or another—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Just give me an opportunity to explain. What I mean is that I am not convinced that all the virtue lies in public ownership nor am I convinced that all the virtue lies in private ownership. I occupy a position where I think I have a fair chance to observe the working out of both systems of handling the public domain, or, if you will, the natural resources. Ontario is making a success of hydro; in Quebec, they appear to be making a success of it under private ownership; at least that is the decision of the government and people of Quebec. They are just as convinced they are on the right track in regard to private ownership as are the people of Ontario in regard to public ownership. The same thing applies to British Columbia and to the maritime provinces. Ontario, although it has hydro, is issuing leases for mines, timbers and water powers and is issuing them by order in council just as this government is doing. Under the direction of the Minister of Mines or whatever minister is in charge, the administration of the natural resources of the provinces is being carried out in this particular way. I claim no virtue, but I challenge my hon. friend or any other hon. member to say that I have not consulted to a greater degree in every respect hon. members who represent the various provinces than are private members of any of the provinces consulted about the issuing of leases in their respective provinces. I have always done that and I challenge my hon. friend again to name any lease of any importance that meant anything by way of public interest or was of a considerable extent in any of the three prairie provinces where the provincial government concerned was not consulted, and in the case of the territories where I did not secure as much information as possible on the subject before issuing a lease and before taking any definite stand in the matter.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: All I ask is that parliament be consulted.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Will my hon. friend give me a chance? He has made some rather scathing assertions with respect to my administration, and I propose to deal with them before I get through.

My hon. friend states that in so far as this particular lease is concerned, it should have been preserved in the public interest. May I just rehearse what has happened with respect to this particular lease? My position has never changed; I believe the lease is a good one. I said so to my hon. friend in my office; I said so to him on many occasions, as well as to other members representing the province of Manitoba; I say so still. I believe it is in the public interest, and I will give the house some of my reasons for saying so.

I have nothing to do with the action of the Manitoba government. I do not know anything about it; I do not know anything about what happened to them or why they are in difficulties to-day. I simply make the statement that I have not changed my mind about this lease, and I still believe it is in the public interest.

If my hon. friend will go back some years —I shall not have time to deal with details— he will remember that the Winnipeg Electric Company was established at Pinawa Falls, on a diversion from the Winnipeg river proper. This government has gone to very considerable trouble to secure for the people of Manitoba and for the city of Winnipeg a complete utilization of the power on the Winnipeg river, and that has not been done without a good deal of controversy. It has not been done without having parted me at least from some of my strongest and warmest political friends in that province who differed with me. I shall not have time to cover the whole details of what happened, but many of the older members of this house will remember the controversy about the Norman dam and as to the preservation of the levels of the lake of the Woods, and in respect to storage facilities in lac Seul in Ontario, to assist power development on the Winnipeg river. Hon. members will remember that there was a good deal of controversy about that.

[Mr. H. A. Stewart.]

I do not know anything about the history of the Winnipeg Electric Company. I do not know how they treated the people of Manitoba. They may have treated them very badly for all I know I do not know anything about the history of the company, but they were established at Pinawa long before I had anything to do with the administration of this department. We were anxious in our scheme for the development of the Winnipeg watershed to scrap the plant on the Pinawa diversion and throw the whole flowage of the river over to the Seven Sisters development, thereby securing for the people of Manitoba and for the city of Winnipeg fifty thousand horse power more than could be developed if the Pinawa plant were continued in operation. That was our first reason.

The Winnipeg Electric Company made first application for the development of the Seven Sisters falls. Later on when the controversy was on with respect to the Manitoba pulp and paper mill, my hon. friends will remember the bombardment to which I was subjected on that occasion, and I want to say again that the Manitoba members stood by me and gave me advice that was very valuable to me, and I think I shall be able to prove that they gave me good advice in connection with this matter. The Backus interests wished to secure this power site, and my hon. friends will remember that that application was backed up by very strong support from the city of Winnipeg, because they were promised a pulp mill there. I did not believe we were in a position at that time to warrant the application for a second pulp mill in the province of Manitoba, and I think later events have proved that my judgment on that occasion was sound. Nor did I think they were entitled to get the water power until such time as we were able to say to them that there was a possibility for development in the pulp and paper industry. They did not get it.

Later on, in 1925, Mr. Bracken became interested in this power site. I am led to believe from what my hon. friend has said, and particularly from what he has said about the Free Press, that someone must have been interested in the Manitoba government securing power rights in Manitoba for operation as a public utility. Mr. Bracken came to me and said that he was desirous of obtaining this power site. I have heard it stated that I had something to do with guiding Mr. Bracken in this matter. I never did. I make that assertion most fully and completely. I said to him, "Mr. Bracken," as I would say to the province of Alberta or to the province of Saskatchewan, "if you are desirous of having any of these water-powers and developing them as a public utility for the benefit of the people, then your application will be given priority over all comers." That was the assurance Mr. Bracken got from me on behalf of the federal government, and he occupied that position for almost eighteen months or more. But I made this statement. I said, "Mr. Bracken, in order to have full development on the Winnipeg river, we are desirous of getting rid of that Pinawa plant and throwing the whole flowage over the Seven Sisters falls, in order that we may have a larger power development than could be obtained by a division of these two interests." That was the only suggestion I made to the Premier of Manitoba. Not only that—and I must thank my hon. friend for reading the resolution passed by the members of the assembly for Manitoba, in which they pointed out that in the event of the province of Manitoba or the city of Winnipeg not requiring this public development, then they had no objection—in other words, no objection to placing the Winnipeg Electric in a position of priority.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: That was after parliament or the city should have been consulted.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I am coming to that; I want to deal with it in sequence. That was the resolution my hon. friend has read, and with which I agree.

The only condition I made was that Mr. Bracken take upon himself the responsibility of seeing whether or not it would be possible to make an arrangement with the Winnipeg Electric for the scrapping of that plant and diverting the whole flowage down the river. I want to make it clear that I did not put any strings on it, and state to Mr. Bracken what would result if he was not able to do that. I said I hoped he would try to do that in the interests of securing more power for Manitoba or the full utilization of the power available. If he had not been able to do that, there would have been no hesitancy on my part in recommending that the license should be issued to him. He went on and made an arrangement with the Winnipeg Electric. He had time to call in men in whom he had confidence, and men in whom I had the utmost confidence—particularly Doctor Hogg of the Ontario Hydro. I have worked with Doctor Hogg on the Niagara, and on other power and scenic developments, and he is a man whose opinion I value very highly. I did not see Doctor Hogg's report till long afterwards, but in effect Doctor Hogg advised Mr. Bracken, after viewing the whole situation, and having in mind the requirements of the province of Manitoba—the provincial government could not hope to dispose of any power to the city of Winnipeg, because it already had a development. The city had already made application for the Slave Falls, which they are now to develop, in order to supplement the power they already have. I make no defence of Mr. Bracken; I am simply stating the facts. He had no hope of selling power to the city of Winnipeg. His sales would be confiened to the rural parts, and in his arrangement he provided, first, for the scrapping of the Pinawa plant, carrying out what we were desirous of having done; secondly, he was to get for his own service thirty thousand horse-power for a period of thirty years, at a price in the neighbourhood of twelve dollars per horse-power.

Mr. FORKE: Eleven to thirteen dollars per horse-power.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes, but it averages about twelve dollars.

Now, having done that, Premier Bracken notified me that he had made a satisfactory arrangement with the Winnipeg Electric to get the power that he required, and so far as he was concerned he was desirous that I should issue the lease to the Northwestern Power Company—the company that it had been agreed should be created for the purpose of keeping this three hundred thousand horse-power development separate from the Winnipeg Electric undertaking.

May I say I did that in order that I might insert in the lease some rigorous provisions for the protection of the public, and I will deal with this phase later. But he then made this statement: If you do not deal with the Winnipeg Electric, it is my desire to be put back in the same position I was before; in other words, that I shall have priority of application for the development of this power site. That was the effect of his letter to me, namely, that he should have the thirty thousand horse-power, the Pinawa plant should be scrapped, that full development should take place on the Seven Sisters, which would mean fifty thousand horse-power more for the people of Manitoba, and that if I should not be willing to issue the lease to the Northwestern Power Company, then of course his agreement went by the board and he desired to be put back in the position he occupied before.

Now, what about public ownership? I had very clear evidence so far as the province was concerned from the men who I thought represented Manitoba—the provincial government—that they did not require the power. They had had their chance. I took the precaution to ascertain whether or not the city of Winnipeg was interested. I could not find that it was. The city was interested in securing Slave falls, and stated that for some years it would be developing that power site, and at the moment it was not interested in the development of this power. That is my defence, Mr. Speaker, with respect to what my hon. friends have repeatedly said, that if there was a demand by the public to develop this property they should have their chance. They did have their chance; they refused that chance, and asked me to issue the lease to the power company.

Dealing with what my hon. friend has said as to my not having kept my word with respect to this matter, it is quite true that time and again I consulted the Manitoba members about this very matter. It is quite true that several of them, like the two hon. gentlemen who have spoken and possibly some others who will speak, have never changed their minds on the advantages of public ownership versus private ownership in connection with this matter. It is not true that I did not consult the Manitoba members. My hon. friend said I did not see him. Well, I made an attempt to see him, but he was not in the province, neither was the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth). With respect to my hon. friend from Nelson (Mr. Bird), I was not able to see him, but on two occasions I did see a goodly number of the other members from Manitoba.

Now then, let me say this. In July, in accordance with the agreement with the Manitoba government, Premier Bracken came to Ottawa. I think he arrived on July 3, because I know on the night of the fourth I left for western Canada. I spent the day with Premier Bracken and the members of our government discussing the possibility of the transfer of the natural resources to the province. On that occasion there was a good deal of discussion as to what I might term new demands by the provincial authorities. The next day also was spent in discussion. I was not present. After this discussion an agreement was drawn up which provided, amongst other things, that a commission should be appointed to study the whole question of placing Manitoba on an equality with the other provinces of Canada as from the date of her creation as a province. It was also arranged that pending the report by the commission and the transfer of these resources, they were to be administered in accordance with the wishes of the provincial government. That happened, I imagine, on July 5. On July 4 I was not present, but I assume that that was the agreement which was entered into between our government and the government of Manitoba.

That agreement included all of the natural resources. When I visited Manitoba later I interviewed many of the federal members from the province and discussed the matter with them. After considerable discussion it was agreed that so far as the Seven Sisters power site was concerned—for I felt I owed some obligation to the Manitoba members to discuss it with them—if the provincial government were to take the responsibility of advising that this power site should be given to a private company, then the best thing for the government of Canada to do was to hand this development over direct to the Manitoba government. That was done by me after returning to Ottawa in a letter addressed to the premier of the province some time early in September. He replied stating that he could not accept the resources in that manner.

Mr. HEAPS: Why?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The reason he gave was that he had no authority to transfer them to anyone else, and it was his desire that they should go to the Northwestern Power Company.

Mr. HEAPS: What prevented his having the authority?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I cannot tell my hon. friend why. I am quoting Premier Bracken's exact words, and my hon. friend will find them in the files when they are brought down. Furthermore, he made the statement that it was his desire that this matter should be closed up. I again communicated with as many of the Manitoba members as I could reach, and I found that the opposition, so evident here in some cases, was very largely removed. When I made my statement referred to by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre in reply to the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett)—my hon. friend has quoted my words exactly; I have them on my desk—the hon. leader of the opposition impressed upon me the desirability in every case where water-powers were concerned of allowing parliament to deal with the question. I told him that that was an innovation. He reminded me that I had suggested it myself, because I was introducing a bill to provide that parliament should control the resources contained within the national park areas. That is true; I intend some day to bring that bill down when I have completed arrangements for the park boundaries. But my hon. friend will note that not at any time in that discussion did I agree that that provision should apply to the water-powers then in question or to future water-powers. I said I was willing to take the matter under consideration.

I think I have made clear to my hon. friend some things which heretofore were not clear. I did discuss this matter with members from Manitoba, and may I point out that there were a goodly number of Manitoba members who were at all times in favour of this arrangement.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Will the minister name them?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): No, I do not propose to name them; it is not fair to ask me to do so. My hon. friend knows who they were. It was after consultation with them and not before, as he would have us believe, that all were unanimous about the matter.

With respect to the round robin to which my hon. friend from Nelson (Mr. Bird) has referred, I did not know it was in existence; I never heard of it. I did know of the resolution presented by my hon. friend.

Mr. HEAPS: The round robin was presented to the minister in his office.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): My hon. friend presented me with the resolution.

Mr. HEAPS: No, but the signatures of seventeen members of Manitoba, with the exception of the Minister of Immigration (Mr. Forke), were presented to the minister in his office by the members from that province.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I have a perfect recollection of the other, but not of the round robin. And I am not in the habit of forgetting. At all events, the hon. member is well aware that a number of the members changed their minds very materially. He will remember that there was a considerable discussion in my office on one occasion among one or two of the members with respect to the question, and it became somewhat heated —very much heated in fact.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: May I ask the minister a question?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): What I want to point out is that if there was unanimity on one occasion it has not continued throughout even this session. Now, feeling as I did that as a government, myself being the minister in charge, we had some responsibility to the government of Manitoba, after having agreed with them that we should administer these resources according to their wishes, naturally when the government of Manitoba were insistent I was taking all the precautions I could to protect the public interest. I would do so in any case, and until the time when the lease itself was issued late in September we took these precautions to safeguard the public. The company is not the Winnipeg Electric Company; it is the Northwestern Company, a separate entity altogether from the Winnipeg Electric; and our object was to separate this unit of construction from any other. In any construction of this character we put an engineer in charge. In this case the agreement provides that if the engineer in charge and the company's engineers do not agree with regard to construction costs then the matter shall be referred to the court for decision, and the court's decision fixes the actual price of the work. Let me be clear about that: it does not fix the price of the transmission lines, but of the works, the transmission lines being supervised by the Dominion government's engineer. The price is fixed by that engineer, but if there is a disagreement between the company and him, then the actual price is fixed by reference to the exchequer court. Why did we so provide? We did so in order to avoid just the things that have been pointed out by my hon. friend; We wished to see that undue costs were not entailed in construction, and we also had in view later on putting in the hands of the board of public utilities, or of the minister himself if he so desires, the fixing of rates for the protection of the public. In that event the minister would know exactly what the undertaking would cost.

Moreover, there is provision in the contract that the government of Manitoba may take over the enterprise at the end of thirty years on the same valuation, less depreciation; they may acquire it after the plant has been operated for thirty years. Of course, the lease itself runs fifty years, but if it is taken over at the end of thirty years provision is made for compensation to the company; it is definitely and clearly provided that a certain percentage will be paid on the unexpired term, but the provincial government may acquire the undertaking as I have stated. In the meantime, every interest of the public is protected in so far as inflation and false returns with respect to costs are concerned.

That protection is thrown around the construction of this work. And the same precaution is taken not only in this connection but in every other work of this character; with respect to the very work which is going on at the present time in the constituency of the leader of the opposition in West Calgary, the Calgary Power Company are constructing a large power plant and the same procedure is being followed. Provision is made that control of rates may be had by the Minister of the Interior, but preferably by the public utilities board of the province in which the utility is to be operated. That is provided for. Provision is also made for the acquisition of the plant at the end of the thirty year period, at a fixed price; and until the price is fixed no operating license is issued. In this case they are constructing on an interim license, the license to be issued only after we have agreed upon the price.

I do not know of a single provision omitted from this contract which would protect the public interest; if there is any such omission I should be glad to know what it is. I know it is an easy thing to say that there will be inflation and that there is no redress against the rapacity of a private corporation. Let me say however that I have tried to provide against anything of the sort ever since I have had the honour to administer the natural resources under my department; I have endeavoured to guard against that very thing.

I wish once more to make it clear that I gave the province of Manitoba every opportunity to develop the enterprise; I gave the city of Winnipeg that opportunity. And the city of Winnipeg has the Slave falls. I believe we are getting, by the procedure which we are following, the full possible development on the Winnipeg river for the people of Manitoba, and we are safeguarding the public of that province against undue rates. May I add this: Not only did I want to be sure of my position with the Manitoba government, but you will find by reference to the documents that I insisted that there should be no mistake about the matter. The Manitoba government passed an order in council authorizing the issue of the lease to the Manitoba Power Company. This order in council was passed on September 11, 1928, and at the meeting there were present: The Hon. Mr. Bracken; Mr. McLeod; Mr. Prefontaine; Mr. Hoey; Mr. Montgomery.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: One of the members of the government present at the meeting has been forced to resign.

[Mr. C. A. Stewart.]

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I am not dealing with that; I do not know what has happened in Manitoba in that regard. I am simply dealing with the contract itself, and I am pointing out the precautions which I took to ensure that we should have a thorough understanding with the Manitoba government with respect to the question.

I have only a few minutes left, Mr. Speaker, but I think I have covered at least all the main points in connection with this matter. I have shown that the resolution does not deal with power sites but with all the natural resources, and how impossible it would be to administer the natural resources as outlined in this resolution. I have no quarrel with my hon. friends with respect to their advocacy of public ownership, but I do say that in fairness to the contract itself and in fairness to the development of the Winnipeg river, so far as the protection of public interest is concerned no such public interest has been neglected. The machinery is all there for the regulations of rates; means are taken to provide for a guarantee that there will be no excessive costs entering construction; machinery is provided for the acquisition of this undertaking by the province, if they wish to do so, at a valuation fixed in the contract itself. Every provision looking to the public interest is embodied in the contract, and that is why I say in my opinion it was a good contract. My hon. friend will not deny that I always said so. I know nothing about what happened in the Manitoba government or what influence may have been brought to bear upon it, but I do know that I have ample evidence that as far as I could ascertain they were advised that this was a good contract, and on that account I advised this government to issue the lease.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. gentleman's' time is up.

Mr. BENNETT: I would like to ask my hon. friend a question. Is there any difference between the terms of the contract with the Manitoba company and those of contracts with other power companies such as the Calgary Power Company, to which the hon. gentleman has referred?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes, there is a difference. It so happens that our regulations were amended before the lease was issued to the Manitoba Power Company. I did try to embody those changes in the lease to the Calgary Power Company, but was unable to do so.

Hon R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the resolution moved by the hon. gentleman whose address we heard, the speech made by the hon. member for Nelson (Mr. Bird) and the reply of the minister raise a question of some considerable importance. I have not time to-night to do more than direct attention to rather an important phase of it which has been dwelt upon by the minister. I take it that this house is not concerned with whether or not Manitoba made a good bargain; that is a matter for the electors of the province of Manitoba to settle, but to the extent to which this government became a party to a transaction which may merit public condemnation—whether or not it does I am not saying at the moment—is a matter for the consideration of parliament.

It must be borne in mind that the province of Manitoba has been endeavouring to secure its resources for a number of years, and what has a very strange aspect is that on July 3 and 4 last, only a few days after the prorogation of this parliament the Premier of the province of Manitoba discussed this question with the government of the day, and an announcement was made on July 11, 1928, as follows:

Following a conference held at Ottawa on July 3 and 4, 1928, between representatives of the government of Canada and of the government of Manitoba, the results of which conference have since been approved by the two governments, agreement was reached as to the method and basis of settlement of the question of the administration and control of the natural resources of Manitoba, as follows:—

1. The province of Manitoba to be placed in a position of equality with the other provinces of confederation with respect to the administration and control of its natural resources, as from its entrance into confederation in 1870.

2. The government of Canada, with the concurrence of the government of Manitoba, to appoint a commission of three persons to enquire and report as to what financial readjustments should be made to effect this end.

3. The commission to be empowered to decide what financial or other considerations are relevant to its enquiry.

4. The findings of the commission to be submitted to the parliament of Canada and to the legislature of Manitoba.

5. Upon agreement on the financial terms following consideration of the report of the commission, the respective governments to introduce the necessary legislation to give effect to the financial terms as agreed upon, and to effect the transfer to the province of the unalienated natural resources within its boundaries, subject to any trust existing in respect thereof, and without prejudice to any interest other than that of the crown in the same.

6. Pending this transfer, the policy of the government of Canada in the administration of the natural resources of Manitoba to be in accord with wishes of the government of the province.

It must be remembered that notwithstanding the years during which continuous efforts were made by the successive governments of Manitoba to conclude their dealings with this Dominion, and the fact that the provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta were not able to conclude their dealings with this government, suddenly on July 11 this announcement was made, that the agreement had been negotiated on July 3 and 4 between the government of Manitoba and the government of Canada. Why was Manitoba thus singled out? Did that fact bear any relation to the fact that during a period of months efforts had been made to alienate a power site, which efforts had failed up to that time because the members of this parliament from the province of Manitoba had filed a protest against action being taken by this government? That is the question we must consider, and it will be borne in mind further that on June 6, less than a month before action was taken to turn over the resources to the province of Manitoba, the minister made a statement in answer to a question put by myself, in which I said:

My submission is that since we hold these resources, that is, they are the property of the crown in the right of the Dominion, in trust for the crown in the right of the several provinces, we should not as an executive act or as a pure matter of administration part with so valuable a resource as a power site which is of such inestimable value to the people of the country, without the approval of this parliament. In my judgment that would be a proper release to the minister for any action he might take as trustee for the people affected, and would afford an opportunity to the several legislatures to deal with any matter which concerned them until such time as these resources, notably the power sites, were turned over to the crown in the right of the several provinces concerned.

At page 3853 of Hansard for last year the Minister of the Interior, who is the present minister, said:

May I give my hon. friend the assurance now that so far as his request is concerned I have no serious objection to offer except this: Of course I am always made more or less the storm centre for the settlement of these difficulties, particularly in Manitoba, but I have adopted the principle of consulting with the provincial governments about these matters. Possibly I have carried that principle too far, but I am never forgetful of the fact that I must take the responsibility for final disposition. I am going to say very frankly here and now that notwithstanding the fact that at present the government have adopted a line of action with respect to the Seven Sister falls I am not in any particular hurry to come to any decision about that matter, largely because of the fact that the members of this house have expressed very decided opinions about the matter as federal members. I am not very much disturbed by the statement that there must be immediate action; I have investigated the matter pretty well and I think there is plenty of time to give ample consideration to this matter before it is decided. In order to settle the question, and in order to prevent any delay, I do not see any reason why we should not await the action of the city council of Winnipeg and of the provincial government, which must take the responsibility, before a final decision is made here. I think that should satisfy my hon. friend.

I put this to the minister: Why was it that in a few short weeks the matter became so urgent that, in order to keep faith with the language he used in parliament, all the natural resources were turned over to the province of Manitoba? Why was it that Alberta was not so considered, and why was not Saskatchewan dealt with in this way also? Why were not the resources of Alberta turned over under a formal agreement without regard to nicety of terms or details? Why was it that the Premier of Saskatchewan came here the other day in this connection and was unable to make a bargain? With respect to Manitoba the only bargain made was to say that the Dominion would turn over the resources to Manitoba just as though it was one of the older provinces, and would account for them since 1870 when Manitoba was formed. Why could not that be done with respect to Alberta and Saskatchewan?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): May I interrupt my hon. friend? Of course they may have an accounting from the day of their inception, if they desire it; they have been offered that.

Mr. BENNETT: But the hon. minister must realize that that is only part of it. The point is this: why was it that at that moment it became necessary to do this thing? Why was it when there was no hurry on the sixth day of June, this is undertaken, in order to relieve them of the obligation, on the 4th day of July? This undertaking was solemnly made before the house by the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Stewart), but the whole resources were turned over and a clause inserted in the agreement by which it was said, "We will now administer them as the government of the province of Manitoba desires." Why was this not done until after parliament rose? It is all right to talk about taking steps for the purpose of safeguarding the public interests of the people of Manitoba, but the people of Manitoba are capable of doing that themselves. The order in council was passed a few days after the resolution of the conference had been handed out to the people of this country on the eleventh day of July, following the conference on the third and fourth of July just before the minister went west. The agitation of the private interests for this site had reached the point where the government of Manitoba was prepared to come down here and say, "We will accept the responsibility for administering them," and this government turned them over. Why could they not do the same with respect to the other provinces?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): They were quite prepared to do the same.

Mr. BENNETT: For the other provinces?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes.

Mr. BENNETT: Read what is said by the Premier of Saskatchewan in an interview he gave out the other day.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I have been trying to tell my hon. friend that long before the province of Alberta made an agreement with us, which failed to pass because they refused to go on with it, they were offered an accounting, and they have always been consulted as to the management of the resources and particularly with respect to water-power.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. gentleman knows that from the very inception of the endeavour of the province of Alberta to negotiate—a resolution was passed at the time both my hon. friend and I were members of the legislature, and Mr. Sifton wrote his letter to Sir Wilfrid Laurier—from that time on the province of Alberta has asked for only one thing, namely, that the resources should be turned over with a willingness to account from the day the Northwest Territories became a part of Canada.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Quite right. Wherein is the difference?

Mr. BENNETT: One difference is between the 6th day of June, when there was no hurry, and the 4th day of July, when there was great hurry, when the influence of the power company on the government of Manitoba and this government became apparent.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): My hon. friend is making a statement of what he supposes are facts, but he forgets that the conference was arranged for long before the Premier of Manitoba was known to have come down here.

Mr. BENNETT: So much the worse. Why was there no hurry on June 6 of last year when all the time the minister knew that this conference had been arranged for?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): My hon. friend is confusing the power site and the natural resources.

Mr. BENNETT: The trouble with this whole matter throughout Manitoba and throughout Canada is that no one has yet been able to understand why the minister made the statement that was made on the 6th day of June last, as to the position taken by this government, when there was no hurry, and that the city of Winnipeg and the province of Manitoba would be consulted; and then within thirty days after the house rose these resources are all transferred, so far as this government is concerned, by an agreement subject only to the question of accounting. The minister said, "We will administer them as the province of Manitoba want us to," but that is not what we were discussing. That is not the attitude this parliament took; that is not the attitude the members from Manitoba took when they communicated with this house; that is not what was contained in the round robin presented to the minister, according to the gentleman who presented it. Why this unseemly haste? Why this sudden hurry? Why this sudden scurrying to and fro to settle a question of resources which had been engaging the attention of statesmen in this country for the last thirty years? Why is Manitoba treated one way and Alberta another? That is the question, and it is one to which this country is going to have an answer.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Does my hon. friend want to know why they were treated differently?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): So far as each province is concerned, we are perfectly willing to try to deal with them on the basis on which they will negotiate with us, always having in mind the federal intersts.

Mr. BENNETT: Will the hon. gentleman say that that was the case from the very day the Liberal party first changed their minds in denying our resources; from the day the minister himself heard his then leader in the legislature of Alberta pass a resolution that we demand our resources; from the day that Mr. Sifton sent his letter to Sir Wilfrid Laurier? Was there ever a time when the province of Alberta has not said, all we want is our resources with an accounting since 1870?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Not since 1870; since 1905.

Mr. BENNETT: The speech by Mr. Haultain made in the old Territorial legislature when I was present; the speeches in the legislature of Alberta when Mr. Sifton was the leader, and in the provinces of Saskatchewan and Manitoba, have all been a demand for one thing, and one thing only: that we should have our resources as they stand with an accounting from the time we became part of Canada up to the date of the accounting being made.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: And a subsidy.

Mr. BENNETT: I cannot be taken away from the point; the subsidy had nothing to do with it.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Has my hon. friend the letter written by Mr. Arthur Sifton? It did not make any demand for an accounting.

Mr. BENNETT: He demanded that compensation should be given for the resources which had been alienated before we became a province.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): If my hon. friend will look up the letter I think he will change his mind.

Mr. BENNETT: Let us not get away from the question. Why the haste? Why the hurry? Do not let us get away for a single moment from the question that is agitating the people.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

RULES OF THE HOUSE

PROPOSED REFERENCE OF CERTAIN ESTIMATES TO COMMITTEE—THIRD READING OF BILLS

Mr. L. S. RENE MORIN (St. Hyacinthe-Rouville) moved that the first report of the select standing committee on standing orders, reading as follows, be concurred in:

Your committee have considered an order of the house dated 15th February, viz:—

"That the select standing committee on standing orders be instructed to consider the advisability of amending the standing orders so that certain estimates may be referred to a committee and so that bills reported from a standing or select committee shall be placed on the order paper for third reading after having been sufficiently debated by the house."

Your committee recommend that, during the present session, the house may refer any of the estimates to a standing or special committee, concurrently with the committee of supply, but that none of the estimates shall be concurred in by the house until reported by the committee of supply.

Your committee further recommend that, during the present session, when any bill, other than a government bill, reported from any standing or special committee, shall have been considered at two sittings and not disposed of, it shall be placed on the order paper for third reading; and when called in pursuance thereof, the question "That the bill be now read a third time" shall be put by Mr. Speaker and decided without debate or amendment.

Mr. A. W. NEILL (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I think the house would do well to hesitate to pass this report.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. The mover has something to say.

Mr. MORIN (St. Hyacinthe-Rouville): The order of reference to the select standing committee on standing orders was two-fold. The committee was instructed to consider the advisability of amending the rules of the house, first, to enable the house to refer the consideration of certain estimates to standing or special committees, and second, so that bills reported from a standing or select committee might be placed on the order paper for third reading after having been sufficiently debated by the house.

The purpose of the first part of the reference was to expedite the business of the house by referring the estimates of some of the departments which, under the present rules, can only be dealt with by the house sitting in committee of the whole, to standing or special committees upon which concurrent jurisdiction would be conferred, in which committees fuller and more accurate information could be obtained from the officers of the departments familiar with the circumstances of each particular item than could reasonably be expected from a minister speaking offhand on the subject from his seat in the house. The results to be expected from this new procedure would be more accurate and secure fuller information for the benefit of hon. members; and secondly, the discussion in the house would be restricted to the really contentious items, the debates thereby being materially shortened.

The committee was of the opinion that rather than amend the rules of the house at once, it would be wiser to test the expediency of the new procedure by an experiment during one session, and its recommendation is that during the present session the house may refer any of the estimates to a standing or special committee, concurrently with the committee of supply, such estimates, however, remaining subject to consideration and report by the committee of supply.

The object of the second part of the reference is again to expedite the business of the house and to enable it to give a decision on private and public legislation submitted to it after such legislation has been sufficiently debated.

The house expressed itself on this matter when, two years ago, with that definite purpose in view, it amended its rules by providing that private bills considered during the hour devoted to private bills on Tuesdays and Fridays, and not disposed of, would be placed at the foot of the list on the order paper.

But the rule resorted to has proved inadequate, and to remedy this situation the committee recommends that, as an experiment, a sessional order be passed providing that during the present session when any bill, other than a government bill, reported from any special or standing committee shall have been considered at two sittings, and not disposed of, it shall be placed on the order paper for third reading, and when called in pursuance thereof the question, "that the bill be now read the third time," shall be put by the Speaker and decided without debate or amendment.

The committee considered that after full and free debate on the second reading and before the special or standing committee to which the bill was referred and at two different sittings of the house sitting as a committee of the whole, any such bill had been sufficiently debated, and that if the members of the house so wished they should be entitled to an opportunity to give a vote thereon.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY (Argenteuil): Mr. Speaker, when the motion to refer this matter to the committee was brought up by the Prime Minister, the hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Gardiner) raised the point that it was a double-barrelled resolution. The event shows that he was correct in that respect, for there are two entirely different matters considered by the committee in this report. Would it not be possible to divide the report into two sections in order that they may be dealt with separately? Because in my humble judgment the first recommendation will be considered by all hon. members as a reasonable one; whereas the second may provoke a lot of discussion.

Mr. MORIN (St. Hyacinthe): I understand, Mr. Speaker, that the only course open is to refer the report back to the committee with instructions to amend it.

Mr. A. W. NEILL (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, the report contains two recommendations, as the mover has said, but in them both there is evidence of a tendency to divest this house of a certain portion of its responsibilities and to hand them over to other bodies, sometimes to the cabinet, sometimes to boards, and sometimes, as in this case, to committees. But all these bodies to which we are invited to hand over our authority are not so directly responsible to the people as we are, and they function in a way which prevents that desirable publicity being shed on their proceedings which is associated with our deliberations and actions in this chamber.

Now, there are two recommendations, and I propose to deal with them separately. The first one is to the effect that estimates may be sent to a special or standing committee, but it provides that those estimates must also go through our committee of the whole before they have any legislative sanction. It appears to me, sir, that on the face of it, if it does not go any further than that, it is a comparatively innocuous and, to tell the truth, a somewhat feeble suggestion. It reminds me of the epitaph on a tombstone in an old English graveyard erected to the memory of a three-day-old child. After stating the particulars of the infant's name and death this doggerel follows:

> If so soon I would be done for,
> What on earth was I begun for?

And it seems to me that if this innocuous recommendation does not really go any further, and is not intended to, what on earth was it begun for.

It will probably be said in the course of this debate, and correctly so, that this method of dealing with estimates has been a success in the case of the estimates for the Canadian National Railways. But the conditions are entirely different there from what they are in the action now proposed. The Canadian National Railway estimates represent what is entirely a national proposition. Broad policies are discussed, you have Sir Henry Thornton and his staff in attendance, and the leaders of the various groups in the house can readily agree whether the policy is a good one or not. But the other estimates are local estimates and so to speak, specialized; think of the thousand and one items that comprise the agricultural estimates, or those of the marine and fisheries or the Post Office Department —almost any of the estimates in fact other than the larger ones in connection with the national railways. Those items require local knowledge to illuminate them, as it were. As you know, the procedure now is for the minister to explain the reason for the estimate from the book that is placed in front of him. If further information is required, perhaps the over-burdened memory of the deputy minister is drawn on; but in the last analysis when it comes down to the giving of information for or against that particular item, is it not the member for the local district whose particular knowledge is relied on, and in the special committee that local knowledge will be lacking except as it may be furnished by the few members composing the committee. Now, if this proposal to send estimates to a private committee is to replace discussion in committee of the whole, then it is vicious, absolutely so. We are told that that is not now proposed, but I am very much afraid, sir, that it is the direction in which we will be heading if we adopt this recommendation. It is unreasonable in itself unless it is intended logically to go further.

However, to deal with what is absolutely before us, it is said to be concurrent; that is to say, that the discussion in the special committee will be additional to the discussion which will take place in this house. In that case it will be useless; if it is useless it will be wasteful and entirely unnecessary. Once upon a time an eastern potentate who had captured a city proposed to burn a valuable old library. On being remonstrated with he said: Either these books support the Koran or they are opposed to it. If they support it they are unnecessary; if they oppose it they are wicked. In either case they are superfluous. Thereupon he ordered the library to be burned. Now, all we obtain from this recommendation, provided it is not intended to go any further, is that the overworked minister—because he is busy at this season of the year—and his equally overworked deputy—who is also very busy—shall be compelled to go over all their estimates, one by one, in the fullest sense, twice, once in the special private committee—shall I call it the "hole-and-corner" committee?—and again in the full light of this house. What use will that be to anybody if the work is done twice? The answer has already been given by the mover, and will be given again: It will shorten debate in committee of the whole. That is all right, sir, as regards the estimates of the Canadian National Railways. When the three leaders in this house and the outstanding members of their parties tell us in committee of the whole, "We have looked at these estimates of the Canadian National Railways and are satisfied with them," I for one am quite prepared to accept their view, as I have no doubt are other members. But, as I say, the conditions are totally different with respect to what I call the local estimates. When it comes down to local matters affecting the coal mining, farming, logging and fishing interests of the constituency which I represent, I say emphatically, no; I will not surrender my right to discuss these matters; I will not surrender it to any lawyer from Winnipeg, any millionaire from Toronto, or any business man from Halifax, however worthy they may be; however much abler they are than I am in their particular spheres, they do not know the local conditions of the district I represent. I know that the time honoured gag will be trotted out—it is hoary headed in its hypocrisy: "Oh, but you can go before the committee and you will be allowed to speak there." How often have I not heard that advanced: You can go to the committee although you are not a member of it and you will be accorded a courteous hearing. Yes, you will be given a courteous hearing once; but when it comes down to butting in—to use a common expression—on every item and arguing the merits and taking an active part generally in the debate you will soon find that you are not wanted. Any member butting in—I cannot use any other word to express the idea—will find that he has as much weight there as the Hansard reporter has in the debates that take place in this chamber.

We are told that this would shorten the debate and save the precious time of the house. Well, that was the very bait that was held out to us two years ago when we sold our birthright of free speech, or a portion of it at any rate, for a mess of pottage. And a sorry looking mess the pottage was when we got it; to me it seemed more like the funeral baked meats of the ancient Egyptians. Certainly it was very much inferior to the life giving pottage of the days of Isaac and Esau, and indeed even inferior to what is supposed to be its lineal descendant, the brose of the modern Scot.

I would submit to the house in all seriousness that there are greater advantages to be gained by our considering every item in committee of the whole than by getting through quickly and going home, which is the main bait held out in this case. There are a good many members of this house, myself amongst them—and I am not ashamed to admit it—who exhibited great anxiety to come here and occupy the honourable position we hold, and who by hard fought campaigns and many promises secured this much sought boon. We told the people that we would do our duty to the last ditch, and so forth. Now are we getting tired and lazy? Do we want to shirk the obligations which we undertook when we came here? A few days, a week or two longer would not make any great difference. I would point out also, to put it bluntly that we are being paid for being here. I admit that the salary is quite incommensurate with the work we do, but at the same time we knew what the remuneration was when we sought the position, and if we are not satisfied to do the work for which we were sent here we should resign. I know there are scores of men in the district I represent fully as able and quite as willing to represent my constituency.

Another time-honoured gag will be trotted out for our delectation. When the report comes from the select private committee we shall be told: "Now, this matter has been seriously and carefully—almost prayerfully—considered in the select committee and the house would be well advised to accept their just and wise verdict." I can recall that gag also; many a time have I heard it in this house. Let me give an illustration of what actually happened on one occasion. I was endeavouring in this house to have the report of a select committee changed. The committee had reported something and I wished to have their report amended. The chairman of the committee got up and in sonorous tones he got off the gag I have mentioned; the matter had been so carefully considered by the select committee that the house would be wise to follow that committee's "mature judgment". But this is what actually happened on that occasion. It was a small committee and the recommendation I wished was defeated by a vote of four to three. One of my friends on whom I had relied to support me was absent, however, and on my reproaching him afterwards with his absence he said he was very sorry but he had gone to have his hair cut; and because that hon. gentleman had gone to have his hair cut something of material importance to certain interests in the country had to stand over for a year or, perhaps, be abandoned altogether. That is the effect of accepting always the report of a small select standing committee.

The other night the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) and my desk mate the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) told us, and it was not denied, that we were railroading divorce bills through the house at a scandalous rate. I say, it cannot be denied. And why does that condition exist? It is just a logical and direct consequence of the very system now proposed. These divorce cases used to be considered in this house in committee of the whole, but we drifted into the dolce far niente method of leaving the whole question to a select committee, with the result that divorces are now rushed through without the slightest attention being paid them. That is the natural and inevitable consequence of the same sort of system proposed in this connection; only in this case we are beginning in a small way and comparatively gently.

I may point out that this very practice has been tried elsewhere before. It was tried in British Columbia when I was a member of the local house, and it was never tried again. I got my estimates through, it is true, but by a method which—I have not the time now to describe to the house. But it was not desirable; it led to log rolling, most of us know what that means. Now, if the system here proposed were to be adopted I might be tempted to approach some hon. members opposite—perhaps I might select my worthy and genial friend from New Westminster (Mr. McQuarrie), because at times he has evinced a certain amount of the milk of human kindness, and we are brother British Columbians—and I would say to him: "If you vote for the wise and just estimates for my district, I will vote for the rotten, unjust estimates for yours." It is to be hoped, of course, that neither the hon. member for New Westminster nor myself would yield to that temptation. Still, Mr. Speaker, you, yourself, deem it advisable every day at three o'clock to pray that we be delivered from temptation, and sometimes I wonder whether it would not be wise if you renewed the supplication at eight o'clock for fear the strength prayed for earlier in the day might have waned.

I will be nothing but frank; I admit that this recommendation as it stands, word for word, and not going beyond that in the slightest, is comparatively innocuous. Nevertheless it is a wedge; it is that fatal thing known to us in this house as a precedent. Why did we spend three days last week debating the question of grants for roads? We did so largely because we had this great thing behind us, precedent. Once enter the fatal path of precedent and it will soon lead us to all the evils I have suggested. Moreover it is not merely a question of passing estimates for this post office or that wharf or something else of the kind; what is valuable is the discussion that arises out of the estimates. Statements which the leaders, the cabinet ministers, hear in their offices, statements made in caucus, are almost entirely ex parte; are they not? But it is in the light of the publicity obtained in this house that the members of the cabinet get the cross current of public sentiment. It is of the greatest benefit to them, to us all and to the country at large to hear the discussions that take place even on some comparatively trivial item—arguments which would be all lost sight of in this private committee.

Let me now state my final objection to this particular recommendation. I am utterly opposed to what I call star chamber methods. There would be no Hansard in this private committee; no votes would be recorded but merely totals; no names would appear. It would be possible for the government or a member to speak one way on the hustings and vote another in the committee. I referred a moment ago to a friend who was absent from a meeting because he had to have his hair cut. Now, I do not wish to be cynical for a moment, but it might be said by those who are cynical that the government whip had suggested to him that his hair was a little long! Also it would be open to unscrupulous opponents to accuse a member of having cast a wrong vote in committee and he would not be able to prove its untruth; for a lie can always get ahead of the truth. I am very much afraid, not so much of this particular recommendation as of what it would logically lead to. Before long we will be putting our power of voting estimates into the hands of a private committee, a hole in the corner committee, one upon whose actions they cannot, will not and perhaps dare not let the God-given light of publicity shine.

So much for that part of the report; I want now to deal with the second recommendation which is of much greater immediate importance. I refer to the recommendation with regard to the manner of dealing with private and public bills. We will do well to remember that this deals with both private and public bills; it may be a bill of a thousand pages, dealing with the Companies Act or with the Criminal Code, imposing some drastic restriction on the right of assembly or free speech. This is the course such a bill will pursue: After going to this private committee, where no vote is recorded and where there is no Hansard, it will be brought back to this house on two separate occasions. We know that public and private bills come before this house for only one hour on two evenings a week. It may be said that the bill may be brought up on Monday and discussed all day, but if there were any suspicion that a bill would be opposed very strenuously it would not be brought up on that day. It might be brought up at ten minutes to nine or it might be brought up at ten minutes after eight; strike an average and say it would be up for one hour altogether. Two advocates of the bill may speak on it; each is entitled to speak for forty minutes, so there will not be much left of the hour. Some hon. members may have some important amendments to offer, of which they may have given notice; the advocates of the bill, knowing that, could make it their business to talk out the bill, and at the end of the hour it would come to the house for third reading. That would be bad enough, but it becomes much worse. The next time the bill comes up it stands for third reading, and it is proposed that there can be no amendment and no debate on the third reading; you cannot put anyone on record from the second reading until the bill has gone through. Many members vote for the second reading of a bill with the idea of offering amendments in committee, but under this system we will never get the opinions of different members because bills will be talked out of committee on to third reading with no debate and no amendments allowed.

I am anticipating the arguments which may be brought forward in favour of this method. It will be said, "Oh, he is depicting an extreme case; these things are not done now, because the good sense of the house will not allow them." Will it not? Let me remind hon. members that two years ago I was opposing the establishment of the forty minute rule; I pointed out that if two or three obstructive questions were asked the member's time would be cut into seriously, and the answer given was that this would not be done, that time would be allowed for interruptions. Upon that understanding perhaps many members agreed to the forty minute rule, but has that been the case? It has not; the rules are strictly enforced, and quite properly so once we adopted them, so do not let us be beguiled by the suggestion that the rule reads one way but that we will be allowed to do something else.

There is one other feature of the matter to which I would like to direct the attention of the house. This rule will be introduced immediately, and there are two important private bills coming up this session, the Sun Life bill and the Bell Telephone bill. I think I voted for one of them last year, so I am not particularly antagonistic to them, but I can see what may happen to these bills and I am opposed to it. When they were brought in the other day on second reading there was practically no debate, in the expectation that the debate would take place in committee of the whole. Now, unannounced, we will be deprived of that right; we cannot go back and debate the bills on second reading, so all we have before us is two short periods of perhaps ten minutes each, after which the bills stand for third reading without debate. If this iniquitous rule is to be adopted let us at least send it back to the committee with instructions that it shall not take effect until next session.

I frankly admit that the rules were abused last session; these and other bills were deliberately obstructed. There is hardly a privilege we enjoy which is not subject to abuse at times, but because 10 per cent of the members abuse a privilege are we to deprive the other 90 per cent of their rights? Social conventions do not allow us to steal up behind a man and knock him down because we do not like the colour of his hair or the tie he wears; it is held that that is too drastic a remedy, and I submit that this rule is also too drastic for the difficulty it assumes to correct.

It may be said that I am merely offering destructive criticism, but that is not the case; I can easily suggest an appropriate remedy for the obstruction which undoubtedly occurred last year. I suggest simply the use of the rule we have had for many years, that is, the closure; that is the correct thing to do in such a case, simply put on closure. Almost every government in the world has the closure rule in some form or other, but some hon. members will say that closure is objectionable. Why, this is simply Ossa piled upon Pelion, with respect to closure; this is a hundred times worse than closure heaped up, pressed down and running over. Under closure you must give notice, and the debate can continue until two o'clock the following morning; each member is limited to twenty minutes, so that thirty or forty men may speak, but here we will be limited to perhaps two speakers. And as an aside, may I draw attention to the incoherent condition of our rules at present owing to the way we tinkered with them two years ago. Now we have one rule which says we can take a vote under closure at two o'clock in the morning and another which says we must stop the debate at eleven o'clock. Our mess of pottage is all spattered up with red tape like the seals on a Christmas parcel.

I hope the house will reject this motion altogether. The first part is only weakly evil. but it has potentialities of harm which make it undesirable; the second part is wholly poisonous and destructive, subversive of the right of free speech, both propositions are unsound in principle and will be unworkable in practice. I fully believe that not one-half the members of this house knew this question was coming up to-day, and not half of them have been made acquainted with the effect these recommendations will have if adopted, so in order to give the government and hon. members on both sides of the house an opportunity to see what they are voting on, I am going to move that this debate be adjourned. I have not solicited anyone to second my motion, but if anyone cares to do so in order that the matter may be discussed better in their caucuses or in some other way, they may do so. I move the adjournment of the debate.

Motion (Mr. Neill) agreed to.

OPIUM AND NARCOTIC DRUG ACT

Mr. J. P. HOWDEN (St. Boniface) moved that the first report of the special committee for the consideration of Bill No. 4, to amend and consolidate the Opium and Narcotic Drug Act, be concurred in.

Mr. SPEAKER: Notice should be given of this motion. Perhaps this may serve as notice.

Motion stands.

CIVIL SERVICE ACT AMENDMENT

RESTORATION OF EXCLUDED POSITIONS

Mr. E. J. GARLAND (Bow River) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 65, respecting the Civil Service (Restoration of Excluded positions).

Mr. GUTHRIE: Explain.

Mr. GARLAND: I am simply reintroducing, in general terms, the measure of last year. This is a bill to restore to the operation of the Civil Service Act, and to place under the administraton of the Civil Service Commission, excluded positions, and also to place under the commission particular departments or branches of departments which have not as yet been placed there but which have become permanent parts of the civil service.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

PRIVILEGE —MR. EDWARDS (FRONTENAC)

Hon. J. W. EDWARDS (Frontenac-Addington): Mr. Speaker, I desire to rise to a question of privilege.

Mr. SPEAKER: If the hon. gentleman will wait until the orders of the day are called.

Mr. EDWARDS: I understand a question of privilege is in order any time.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. gentleman is correct, a question of privilege is always in order.

Mr. EDWARDS: My attention has been called to a short article appearing in a paper called the Edmonton Journal which indicates one of two things; either that paper is engulfed in the most profound ignorance, or it has a disregard for the truth. The article is headed "Changes his stand" and reads as follows:

> Hon. Doctor J. W. Edwards, M.P., who led previous opposition to the western provinces securing their natural resources, free from any restriction, surprised the commons on Monday by moving a resoltion which will facilitate Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta securing a speedy return of their domains.

It is very hard for me to believe that any paper in Canada could be so ignorant of the facts. The article states that I led the opposition to the western provinces securing their natural resources, but page 360 of Hansard of February 16, 1927, shows that I moved the following resolution:

> That in the opinion of this house, it is in the general interest of this Dominion that their natural resources should be transferred to the prairie provinces at the earliest possible moment, and that such transfer should not interfere with, restrict or modify the right of said provinces to complete control of their educational or other local affairs.

In my judgment that resolution is a complete contradiction of the article, and that contradiction is supported by a statement made by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) that,

> "The agreement would be subject to the qualification that it should not interfere with, restrict or modify the right of the province to the complete control of its educational or other local affairs. That is where the disagreement comes in."

I was not attempting to restrict the transfer in any way, as is evidenced by the words of the resolution I then moved and by the remarks of the Minister of Justice.

I would also refer to Hansard of March 26, 1928, at page 1688 where I moved exactly the same resolution which this house saw fit to adopt unanimously last week. Word for word, comma for comma, the resolution compares with the one unanimously adopted by this house.

Whether this article is maliciously intended or not, it does me a grave injustice and is absolutely contrary to fact.

PRESERVATION OF NIAGARA FALLS

MOTION FOR APPROVAL OF CONVENTION WITH UNITED STATES

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister) moved:

That it is expedient that parliament do approve of the convention and protocol for the preservation of Niagara falls by the construction of remedial works and for the experimental wthdrawal of additional water from the Niagara river, which was signed at Ottawa, on the second day of January, nineteen hundred and twenty-nine, on behalf of His Majesty for the Dominion of Canada by the plenipotentiary named therein, and that this house do approve of the same;

And that a message be sent to the senate to acquaint their honours that this house unites wth the senate in the approval of the abovementioned convention and protocol;

And that the clerk of the house do carry the said message to the senate.

He said: The convention ensures adequate measures for the preservation of the greatest scenic asset of America, and in addition provides a considerable supply of power in Ontario and New York on an experimental basis during the winter season when the water is most needed for power and least needed for scenic purposes.

Preliminary negotiations with respect to this convention were conducted on behalf of the government of Canada by the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Stewart) and on behalf of the United States government by the Hon. Mr. Kellogg and the Hon. Mr. Hoover. The Canadian government acted throughout in the closest cooperation with the government of Ontario and the Hydro-Electric Commission, both with respect to the various steps taken and with respect to the convention itself. I shall leave to the hon. Minister of the Interior the major presentation and discussion of this matter, but it may facilitate an understanding of the one or two outstanding features of the convention and the circumstances which led to its being formulated, if I make a more or less formal statement.

In 1925-26 correspondence took place between the governments of Canada and the United States regarding the danger to the scenic properties of Niagara falls through the erosion of the escarpment. It was decided to appoint a commission to examine into this question and also into the question of the amount of water which might without injury be diverted for power purposes. The Special International Niagara Board was set up accordingly in October, 1926, and was constituted as follows:

J. T. Johnston, director of Dominion Water Power and Reclamation Service, Department of the Interior, Ottawa.

Dr. Charles Camsell, Deputy Minister of Mines, Ottawa, Major D. C. Jones, United States District Engineer at Buffalo.

Dr. J. Horace Macfarland, past president, American Civic Association, chairman of the Fine Arts Commission of Pennsylvania.

Mr. Johnston and Major Jones were the members of the International Board of Control established in 1923 to supervise and control the diversion of water authorized under article V of the Boundary Waters treaty of 1909.

Dr. Camsell was specially qualified to deal with the geological factors involved in a study of the recession of the falls, and Dr. Macfarland has been for many years a leader in the movement for the preservation of all natural scenic beauties. The services of specialists in the analysis of colour and light effects were also secured.

The special board has presented an interim report, which has been published by the Department of the Interior, and is completing its final report, which will present the technical details on which the recommendations were based.

The board found that the scenic qualities of the falls were being injured by various factors:

(i) The natural recession of the falls through the eating away of the crest, which has been going on since prehistoric times and which measurements since 1842 show to have been at the average rate of 3.7 feet a year in the Horseshoe falls;

(ii) Variations in the level of the lakes;

(iii) Withdrawal of water for power purposes.

The board, however, found that there was no basis for the fear that the Horseshoe falls was likely to disappear through the deepening of the notch in the centre. The chief injury lay in the baring of the flanks of the crest line and the thinning of the sheet in certain parts. They concluded that with adequate supervision and control the scenic beauty of the falls could be preserved in perpetuity and that by suitable remedial works, particularly excavations and submerged weirs, the water could be distributed over the bared flanks, erosion modified and the present scenic beauty enhanced.

The works proposed were estimated to cost $1,750,000. Following the publication of the board's report, the Hydro Electric Power Commission of Ontario and the Niagara Falls Power Company of New York submitted an offer to construct the works recommended, under government control, conditional upon their being allowed to utilize, during the winter season only, 10,000 cubic feet of water per second on each side of the river in addition to the diversion permitted under the Boundary Waters treaty. The special Niagara board reviewed this offer and recommended its acceptance with some amendments, limiting this experimental diversion to seven years and providing for continuous regulation by the International Board of Control, with supervision by the special board of four members of the effect of the construction of the remedial works and the experimental withdrawals.

Mr. T. L. CHURCH (Toronto Northwest): Mr. Speaker, under the proposed remedial agreement with the United States, the United States are going to secure 42,000 second cubic feet of water. Under the Boundary Waterways treaty the United States is entitled to 20,000 cubic feet of water a second and Canada to 32,000 second cubic feet, of which Canada exports 12,000 cubic feet of water a second. The result is that when this treaty is passed and the quantities are totalled, the United States will have 20,000 plus 12,000 plus a new 10,000, or a total of 42,000 cubic feet of water a second while Canada will receive only 32,000 less 12,000 plus 10,000, or a total of 30,000 cubic feet of water a second. It is extremely problematical whether these remedial works will, from an engineering standpoint, have the effect which it is said they are going to have. What I fear is this: the report says:

All the plans for remedial works hitherto suggested have contemplated replenishing the flow over the flanks of the Horseshoe fall and in the American channel and at the head of Goat island.

Now they are going to divert the water out of the Horseshoe falls. The main flow of water is on the Canadian side, and Canada is entitled to that water and the power developed from that flowing water. She is not, however, going to get it, according to the figures I have given. I am afraid they are going to get that water over to replenish the American falls and make it more beautiful at the expense of Canada, because Canada is not being properly protected and safeguarded. The report says:

Certain plans, including those for the construction of a curved weir across the main part of the rapids above the Horseshoe, and those for distributing the flow by numerous islands in the rapids, have had for their main object a radical reduction in the heavy flow over the central part of the Horseshoe. The premises upon which the assumed necessity for such a reduction has been based are:

First: That the American falls are more beautiful than the Horseshoe—

In my opinion that is not correct.

—and that consequently the general effect would be enhanced by thinning out the latter so as to make it similar to the former;

Second: That the Horseshoe is in danger of committing suicide and that the proposed thinning out would materially check the erosion; and Third: That such works would have available additional water for power purposes.

The treaty is no doubt all right as regards the legal side of it and the question of policy, but I feel we are being gold-bricked and I am objecting to some of the details. What I fear is that they will get this water out of the Horseshoe falls; it will go down by Goat island and on to the American falls, which have dried up and they will beautify and replenish the American falls at the expense of the Horseshoe and of Canada. The height of that fall is 160 feet and there is practically no water passing over the American fall today. These are boundary waters and Canada's rights should be protected. If these remedial works are going to have the effect which, in my opinion, Canada should have, there should be additional safeguards in this agreement. From an engineering standpoint, the main flow of water will be diverted from the Horseshoe falls over to the American falls and the people of the United States will get the water. If we are going to preserve the beauty of the falls, why was a treaty not made with the people of the United States along the lines of the great works of the Niagara Falls Park Commission which on the Canadian side revolutionized the beauty of the falls by the construction of the Queen Victoria park and the driveway from lake Erie to lake Ontario. They spent hundreds of thousands of dollars of Ontario's money to beautify our side of the river with the result that right from Fort Mississauga at the mouth of the Niagara river to the falls and on the Port Erie there is on our side a boulevard and a driveway sodded all the way and planted with flowers at the expense of the people of Ontario who, as a province, have been doing this national work themselves. I am sorry to see that in this particular report no provision is made for such beautification along the banks of the river both at the falls and north and south on the American side and a similar boulevard and parkway.

On the United States side there is nothing but power companies and chemical and by-product companies which are dumping refuse and sewage into the river with the result that some of it comes over with the flow of the rapids to the Canadian side. The whole river is full of sawdust and wood and refuse and the scenery is spoiled by the dirty water coming out of those sewer pipes and outlets of certain plants. If you look along the American falls, you will find both above and below the falls the outlets of those pipes and from them, come wood, dirt, sewage, chemicals, gasoline and many oils of that description which are to-day ruining the beauty of Niagara falls. If you go up in the Maid of the Mist, you see the sewage and the boat is covered with gasoline and oil. This matter should be taken up by the committee. If we want to preserve the beauties of the falls, we should do it properly and not do it along the lines of these questionable remedial works. How long has it taken to secure these remedial works? It is now one hundred and thirty or forty years. The report says:

> Surveys made in the years 1764, 1842, 1875, 1906, 1917, 1925, and 1927 indicate a continuous recession of the central portion of the crest-line of the Canadian or Horseshoe falls. The effect of this recession has been to lengthen the crest and to leave the flanks of the Horseshoe on either shore more or less denuded of water, the degree depending upon the total volume of the flow over the falls.

What I am afraid of is that when the people of the United States get this water, they will claim it for all time. I am very much disappointed that the Niagara Falls Park Commission were not made a party to this agreement as representing the government of Canada and that the government of the province of Ontario also were not protected on the half of this river. The bed of the river and the banks and rapids belong to the province of Ontario.

There is another point. I maintain that the government of Ontario should have been consulted with regard to these remedial works. They have an investment of eighty millions in the Chippewa plant and other hydro plants, and how is that investment going to be affected by these works? In winter, there is a big rush of ice down the river, and only a year or so ago the private owned company, the Niagara Cataract Company, had to close down some of their generators on account of the ice jam attacking their dynamos and inlet. In the winter of 1917-18 there was a big ice jam which took away the whole wharf at Lewiston, and the ice rose up the banks, almost half way up to Queenston Heights lower bank. That was a very serious state of affairs. I think these remedial works may interfere very seriously with the operation of the power companies on both sides of the river by diversion of waters without adequate compensating works.

It is stated in this convention that the remedial works are for the purpose of beautifying the falls, but how are they going to affect the operation of street cars and the supply of light and power in the municipalities of Ontario during the winter months.

I am very much in doubt whether these proposed remedial works, and the diversion effected by weirs and other erections—interfering, as they will, with the very heavy flow of water over the Horseshoe falls—will not have the effect of injuring the vested rights of power companies, and especially the plants of the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario, which is generating 780,000 horsepower in the Niagara zone. I am afraid that once this treaty is ratified, and permission is given to divert 10,000 cubic feet per second, they will not stop at that, but will divert more water to be used for other purposes, and then we shall not get the benefit of this beautification scheme, which is to cost in the neighbourhood of $1,750,000. I am surprised that there has not been criticism of this treaty by those gentlemen who are afraid of the sovereignty of Ontario in the matter of the St. Lawrence waterway. If a treaty of this kind can be made in the Niagara river there is no question about our making a treaty also in connection with the St. Lawrence waterway with the people of the United States as to boundary waters and their common use by the two countries.

Mr. MANION: I should like to ask as to the cost of the special Niagara board which the Prime Minister mentioned, and the salaries, if any, of the new members.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): They are all civil servants, so they are getting no additional salary.

Hon. J. D. CHAPLIN (Lincoln): Mr. Speaker, while the reference and the report as issued by the special Niagara board are supposed to deal, and do deal, primarily with the preservation of the scenic beauty of Niagara falls, the main urge, I declare, is the question of power. The state of New York and the body in the state of New York that was especially created to protect the scenic interests, the Niagara State Reservation, own the bed of the Niagara river from the international boundary to the American side. They also own, and claim to own, the water, and they get a rental for the water. On this side of the river, from the boundary to the Canadian side, the bed of the river in front of the park is owned and vested in the Niagara Parks Commission, and they also get a rental for the water. They also own the water; that is the claim, and it is not disputed.

This new special Niagara board, which was appointed, as the Prime Minister says, in October, 1926, worked for one year and two months on this proposition of preserving the scenic beauty of Niagara, and during all that time they never thought it worth their while to consult with the state authorities of New York, as represented by the government of that state, nor with the State Reservation authorities. I am not going to refer particularly to the fact that during that year and a half, although the Niagara Park Commission was especially appointed for the preservation and conservation of both the falls and the gorge, this special board took up only twenty minutes of our engineer's time in that year and a half, or year and a quarter.

I want the house to know how the state of New York feels about this situation. I know that the Prime Minister will say that the province of Ontario is satisfied because he had a letter from the premier of Ontario saying that he was satisfied. But the point I want to make clear to the house is this, that the urge is power, because these gentlemen never applied for any assistance to the people who are especially endowed with knowledge as to the conservation of the falls. On the contrary, they immediately applied themselves to the power people, and they made their arrangement at once with the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario, and with a privately owned power corporation on the other side. Let me show how the governor of the state of New York feels about this question. A few days ago under date of February 11, 1929, that is this month, he addressed a letter to Senator Wagner, regarding the water diversion at Niagara falls. He says:

> I have delayed answering your letter of February 2nd for several days because it brings up a matter very vital to the interests of the people of the state of New York.
> You ask me three specific questions in regard to the attitude of this state concerning the convention signed at Ottawa between representatives of the United States and the government of Canada in relation to the diversion of water in the Niagara river above Niagara falls.
> This convention is intended primarily to preserve the scenic beauty of Niagara falls by preventing rapid erosion of the centre of the crest of the falls through erection of weirs or other structures in the bed of the river above the falls on both the New York side and the Ontario side, thus diverting sufficient water to the wings of the falls.
> This convention is the result of careful study made by the International Niagara Board, and this board worked out a plan under which an offer of the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario and the Niagara Falls Power Company, a private corporation of New York state, was recommended for acceptance. Under this offer the Ontario commission and the New York private corporation agreed to build the necessary weirs and structures in the bed of the river and asked in return the use, for a period of seven years, during the six winter months of each year, of 10,000 cubic feet per second of water on each side of the river. It is estimated that this 10,000 cubic feet per second on the American side would enable the Niagara Falls Power Company to develop between 80,000 and 100,000 horse-power.
> First of all I want to call your attention to the important fact that quite aside from the merits of this proposal the state of New York was in no way invited to participate in the discussions attending this proposal; to the second important fact that the proposed weirs and structures would have to be erected on the bed of the Niagara river owned by the state of New York, and to the third important fact, that use of ten thousand cubic feet per second proposed to be withdrawn depends on the consent of the state of New York to that withdrawal and to the satisfying of the state of New York that if it is withdrawn the people of the state are to receive an adequate rental for this water.

In regard to the three categorical questions you asked me, I beg to advise you as follows:

(1) In pursuance of its long standing policy the state of New York requires that its consent is prerequisite before any disposition can be made of the additional ten thousand cubic feet per second of water made available for power development by the convention.

(2) In pursuance of the same policy of long standing the state of New York requires a charge for the use of such additional water, said charge or rental being determined in pursuance of the statutes of the state.

(3) In your other question you ask whether the state accepts the proposal to have the work of preserving the falls undertaken at private expense, and at the same time making available for private utilization by the Niagara Falls Power Company of the additional water to be diverted under the convention for a temporary period.

A careful reading of the proposed convention discloses the fact that the letter of the secretary of state transmitting the convention refers to a protocol to be agreed to between the United States and Canada. The protocol itself is appended to the convention and the protocol refers to the recommendations of the International Niagara Board. In other words, the three documents must be read together, and it becomes at once clear that the treaty itself is essentially an agreement to carry out a specific plan heretofore adopted. If the state of New York offers no objection to the ratification of the treaty by the Senate of the United States, the state may by inference be bound to the acceptance of the plan worked out between the International Niagara Board on the one side and the Ontario Power Commission and the Niagara Falls Power Company on the other. My easiest course as governor would have been to ask you and your colleagues in the United States Senate to oppose the ratification of the treaty as strongly as possible on the ground that the treaty ties the hands of the state of New York as to the methods by which the beautification and diversion can be arrived at, and forces the state to accept the offer of the Niagara Falls Power Company.

I think that I can speak for the whole state in telling you that we want to co-operate with the federal government and the congress of the United States in every way possible to aid in the preservation of the scenic beauty of Niagara falls and the Niagara river. That is why instead of direct opposition to the ratification of the treaty, I have tried, in a spirit of co-operation, to enter into a plan by which the scenic beauty of the falls can be preserved and at the same time all of the rights of the people of the state of New York in and to their property and governmental power can be equally retained.

After a number of conferences, I am glad to say that I have been able to obtain—

It will be noted, Mr. Speaker, that he does not rely on the federal government; he goes to the power company and makes them come to time.

After a number of conferences, I am glad to say that I have been able to obtain from the Niagara Falls Power Company a written stipulation duly executed by it, which stipulation fully preserves the property rights and governmental authority of this state.

[Mr. Chaplin.]

I might note the following facts in regard to the Niagara Falls Power Company:

(1) It is the only private company now in a position immediately and economically to utilize the proposed experimental diversion of the additional ten thousand cubic clear in this matter.

(2) The Niagara Falls Power Company has for a number of years been paying a rental to the state of New York for the water which it is now using.

(3) The Niagara Falls Power Company has paid this rental to the state under protest.

The stipulation signed by the Niagara Falls Power Company agrees that if it is allowed to use for seven years the additional water obtained from this experimental diversion it will—

First: Withdraw all objections to the payment of the rental now being charged by the state for existing water, and

Secondly: Will agree to pay such equitable rental for the additional experimental supply as may be determined by the state under the water-power act, and Thirdly: Will recognize the necessity of obtaining a license from the state for the use of this experimental water.

Now, Mr. Speaker, what has the Niagara board done to protect the interests of the only people who have the right to collect rentals as far as Canada is concerned? They have done absolutely nothing. You in this parliament, under this treaty, would give the Niagara board authority to divert this water without saying one word about the rentals payable to us, although that water belongs to us under the power vested in us by the province. "Oh, yes," the minister will say, "but the province of Ontario should have looked after that." Well, I am looking after it now. I do not know whether it should be our duty to go to the other people the same as the state of New York has done with respect to the power company over there and insist upon their giving us a special agreement. But the Niagara Park Commission owns the bed of the river on which these improvements are to be made. Under the treaty, through the board you have appointed, you say: We will get a permit. But what will be done suppose the permit is refused? They say: We will wait for the improvements until the permit comes. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that when the government were making this treaty they should have taken the facts of the case into consideration and not allowed the situation to get into this mess. The state of New York has taken the bull by the horns, it has gone to the private corporation and said: Do this or we will not let you make any improvements. The private corporation has done so and come to an agreement with the state. We are not in the same position. It is the duty of this parliament to protect the park commission.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): May I ask for information—do the Hydro commission pay your board any rental for the water diverted?

Mr. CHAPLIN: Oh yes; the Hydro, along with all the other power companies, pay a rental for the water to and through the park commission. We are the riparian owners.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I desire to refer for a moment to the Boundary Waters treaty of 1909, the treaty under which the power was originally diverted in a large quantity, and to point out to the house how the wording in relation to the water to be taken out is identical with the wording of the present treaty. Let me quote:

> The United States may authorize and permit the diversion within the state of New York of the waters of the said river above the falls of Niagara for power purposes not exceeding in the aggregate a daily diversion at the rate of twenty thousand cubic feet of water per second.

I should like to ask either the Minister of the Interior or the Prime Minister what that means. I take it to mean that at no time during each day can you use more than twenty thousand cubic feet of water per second. That is how it reads. The new treaty provision is in identically the same words, only that an additional ten thousand cubic feet per second may be diverted. In the interpretation of the treaty usually the courts are resorted to to elucidate or explain what may be in doubt; but in this case we have a board that does this for us. I do not think they ever had the authority but they are doing it, and I want to call the attention of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) to the fact that at the present time in the Niagara river, under the clause that provides for 56,000 cubic feet per second, 20,000 for them and 36,000 for us, more water is being taken than they have a right to receive. This board is allowing what they call a leeway or swing of 20 per cent, and they figure that, because their average over a certain period does not go beyond that therefore they are all right. But the treaty calls for 56,000 cubic feet, 36,000 on the Canadian side, and at no time must this be exceeded. One of the troubles there is accounted for partly by the fact that at times more water is taken than should be. That is why I said a little while ago that the urge was power.

I do not think that this is a matter which should be left to any board to determine. The treaty is quite explicit as it stands, that so much water shall be taken and no more. Let me confirm what I said regarding the new treaty, with reference to clauses 2 and 3 wherein it is provided that the additional diversion to be permitted within the State of New York shall not exceed in the aggregate a daily diversion at the rate of 10,000 cubic feet of water per second. The same applies to Canada.

Another question that arises is this. The Prime Minister says, "This water is being taken during the winter season at a time when tourists cannot see it." Let me say to the Prime Minister and to the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Stewart) as well, who is responsible for the treaty, that they are taking that water at the time when it is lowest. And there are thousands of visitors there. Perhaps they do not know that. But it is a fact that between the very dates when they propose to take the extra water the water is then at its lowest in lake Erie. They say, of course, that this is during the period when there is no tourist traffic, when the tourists will not be able to notice the diminution in the water. But, I repeat, they are taking that extra water at a time when the falls can least afford to have it taken. In clause 1, on page 3, it is provided that additional diversions shall be permitted only within the period beginning each year on the 1st day of October and ending on the 31st day of March of the following year, both dates inclusive. Well, as I have pointed out, the period within these very dates mentioned here is the period of low water, and that is the time they expect to take the extra water. And they camouflage the whole situation by declaring that this is the time when tourists cannot see the water; if there is any shortage of water, they claim, people will not be there to notice it.

The Prime Minister has said, and the Minister of the Interior also will say, that this board has great power. They will tell us, "We can stop it at any time we see fit." I ask the house this question: Is it a good policy to allow private individuals, private corporations to go on and do extensive work and then tell this house that they will be stopped before they have a chance to get back their capital investment? That does not sound very good to me. The very fact that you allow private corporations to invest their money implies that there will be always the urge on their part to seek to get back their money. This enterprise should have been undertaken by the federal authorities on both sides of the river so that they could be independent of any private or semi-private corporation.

Now just a word or two with regard to the remedial works. I would invite attention to page 25 of the document giving the map of the falls; there you will see an airplane picture of the falls. In two places in the river submerged weirs have been put in. Now the beauty of the falls is partly in the rapids above the falls. This picture shows the rapids all in white water, and if you glance at the Canadian side of the picture you will see in two places the effect of the submerged weirs, over a large area. Wherever the weirs are put in, you have perfectly smooth water, and I for one am very dubious about putting in submerged weirs as a means of producing a good scenic effect. The beauty of that river lies in the broken water, and where you have a submerged weir, with water smoothly flowing over it, you have not that effect.

The park commission have had this matter under consideration for the last twenty years. They made the suggestion that some islands should be put in in place of submerged weirs. We saw the effect of the weirs and did not like it, and so we asked that this suggestion be considered. It was passed over in a few words. Let me give you the exact words of the report. They are not attributed to the park commission, but the language is so framed that we felt it constituted a statement of the case which was not in accordance with our views. On page 12 of the report this statement is made with respect to remedial works:

> All the plans for remedial works hitherto suggested have contemplated replenishing the flow over the flanks of the Horseshoe fall and in the American channel and at the head of Goat island. Certain plans, including those for the construction of a curved weir across the main part of the rapids above the Horseshoe, and those for distributing the flow by numerous islands in the rapids, have had for their main object a radical reduction in the heavy flow over the central part of the Horseshoe.

So far as I know, no one else but the park commission ever mentioned islands in any report. But these gentlemen add the word "numerous". We took exception to that before it was published; we told them that we had never mentioned the word "numerous" and we asked them to withdraw that word. They had that letter from us before the report was published. They had furnished us with a proof of the report two or three days before its publication. When they found we made objection to it they suddenly withdrew it, having left it in our hands for an hour, but they dated the report three days earlier than our letter. The report was published under date of December 14 while our letter, written to them with the proof of the report, was dated December 17, and they left the word just as it stood although we never referred to "numerous" islands. Anyone can see the effect of islands; if you look at the maps you will see islands in the river to the right of Goat island. There are three or four islands there, and certainly they look a lot better than any submerged weir, and will continue to look better.

The fact remains that this Niagara board never consulted us and never took up more than fifteen or twenty minutes of the time of our engineers during the year and a quarter they were there. I do not know the gentlemen who comprise the board, but I do know their work. Some of them are engineers, no doubt quite competent, and they view the question from a practical engineering standpoint. The park commission have something more than that to look after; we have consulted the best scenic authorities in America and have had them on the ground giving us advice. I cannot find in any of the reports or from any of the men that there is a scenic man on this board. An engineer may say, "Oh, we have a scenic man" referring to Mr. Macfarland. I dispute that; Mr. Macfarland is a publisher and for a long time has been identified with the publishing business. I have kept a record of Mr. Macfarland for a number of years, and here is a very strange thing. I guess in the United States they proceed as we do in Canada; here if a man wishes to abolish the senate he is appointed to the senate, and as soon as he receives his appointment he changes his mind about abolishing it. This gentleman for many years hammered the board for certain things they were doing and for taking water out of the Niagara. I have some of his work here, and when it was proposed to take 56,000 cubic feet from the river he went almost crazy. He even published pictures of Niagara falls running dry about fifteen or twenty years ago, with 56,000 cubic feet taken from it, but after being appointed to the board this same gentleman changed his mind and is now willing to take 20,000 cubic feet more from the river when there is less water going over than before. That is pretty good, I would say. Let me refer to just one of his articles, published when he belonged to the American Civic Association. It is headed:

The Impending Destruction of Niagara Falls.

This is dated 1905, when the agitation was going on, and when it was intended to take 56,000 cubic feet from the falls. The article proceeds:

> Ten power-developing companies (four American and six Canadian) now have authority to utilize 35¼ per cent (1,339,500 horse-power) of the effective power of the falls. . . .
> If even half the authorized amount of water is withdrawn above the cataract, the American rapids will be entirely bare of water. . . . .

You can see that this gentleman was not very much of a prophet; he did not see what was going to take place and certainly he could not have believed his statements of a few years ago when he can consent to the withdrawal of an additional 20,000 cubic feet from the falls. I have a whole book full of material having to do with this gentleman; he is a publisher, and is no more entitled to have the word "scenic" attached to him than I am, and perhaps not so much. So far as I am concerned I have lived with this proposition for some twenty years during which I have been on the board, and we have been grappling with it all the time. He has been fighting it in the United States, but now he turns around and comes out in favour of the diversion of more water.

I started out by saying, Mr. Speaker, that the whole thing was a power proposition, and I ask that the government of Canada go slow and be very careful in what they do at Niagara. Personally I believe something can be done; whether or not you are on the right track I do not know, but as I have already said you have no right to ask a private corporation to spend their money on a proposition of this kind, because they must get that money back. That is the point I want to convey; they must get that money back and the impulse which will come to any one in charge is to give them a chance to do so, which is not in the best interests of scenic Niagara.

Hon. CHARLES STEWART (Minister of the Interior): Mr. Speaker, I was greatly interested in the statement made by the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Chaplin) with respect to the remedial works proposed to be placed in the Niagara river to preserve the scenic qualities of the falls, as well as to provide for a temporary diversion of 20,000 cubic feet divided equally between the two countries. I did intend to give a somewhat lengthy and detailed explanation of the whole matter, but in view of what has been said by the Prime Minister, supplemented by the remarks of the two hon. gentlemen who have just spoken, I think I can dispense with that.

In 1922, when I became Minister of the Interior, one of the first questions presented to me was this problem of the preservation of the falls. My hon. friends have stated that it has been a matter of controversy for years, and I think wisely so, from my own observations and speaking from what I have been able to observe at Niagara falls. Neither the hon. member for Lincoln nor the other speaker will deny that gradually, year by year, the concentration of the flowage there is getting through the Horseshoe and that there is not the same recession on the other parts of the crest of the falls. So much is that the fact that the water has practically ceased to flow next to Goat island, and for a large part of the year the whole crest line is exposed for a considerable distance from Goat island towards the Horseshoe. Naturally this has caused some concern.

Here and now I want to say that no one regrets it more than I do if the board appointed by the provincial government of Ontario for the purpose of preserving the park and the scenic qualities of the falls was not fully consulted and presented with every detail ascertained by the engineers of both governments. First let me say that no one can negotiate a treaty but the federal government at Ottawa and the federal government at Washington. If there is to be any change, of necessity these two governments must take the responsibility of making the treaty, and I do say that the first duty of a minister, the advisor of the federal government, is to keep himself fully in touch with the provincial governments affected. It is needless for me to say that the provincial government of Ontario would be vitally affected by any change which might take place in connection with this matter. We took the precaution of keeping very closely in touch with them and also had the advice of the Hydro engineers during the whole of this investigation. They played as large a part in arriving at the conclusion as did our engineers. In addition, there was complete collaboration with the American engineers before any definite program was laid dawn as to the purpose for which the board was created. Early in 1923 we directed our attention to the very matter which my hon. friend complains about, namely, that we were rapidly approaching a period when the power interests on both sides of the river would have full utilization of the 56,000 cubic feet per second provided for in the former treaty. We had not taken the precaution of ascertaining how much water was being used on our side, so we immediately set about that task and informed ourselves as to the flowage passing through these plants, and obtained full data on that particular question. In 1923 or 1924 —I am not exactly sure of my date—I visited

Niagara Falls and saw a panorama which had been made up—no doubt my hon. friend has seen the same thing—by the American engineers. The water was turned on this model and showed the proposed improvements in order that we might see just what the effect would be.

Mr. CHAPLIN: You are referring to the miniature falls on the other side of the river.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes.

Mr. CHAPLIN: That was prepared by the power company.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): That is quite right, but it was very interesting to see what the effect would be.

Mr. CHAPLIN: They were using islands in place of submerged weirs.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): On the only occasion I saw it I was informed that they were going to experiment with submerged weirs rather than with the islands.

In 1925, after having discussed this matter with the American government, we appointed a board to make a complete study of the question. With the jurisdiction of the state of New York or that of the province of Ontario or of the board or boards entrusted with the responsibility of preserving the scenic beauty of these particular areas, I, as a representative of the federal government, was not concerned. I confined my own discussions to the province of Ontario, and more especially to the officers of the Hydro who are very large users of the power on the Canadian side. If the Ontario Hydro are paying rental for the water already used by them I see no reason why they should not pay rental for the additional water provided for under this treaty. However, that is a matter to be dealt with by my hon. friend's board and the Ontario government; that is something which does not concern us.

Mr. CHAPLIN: How about the state of New York?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I do not know anything about what arrangements exist in the state of New York: I had no dealings with that state at all.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I never said you had, but you gave the board you appointed authority to act.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): It was undoubtedly the duty of the American representatives on that board to inform themselves on every phase of the question.

[Mr. C. A. Stewart.]

Mr. CHAPLIN: It was the business of the Canadian members to do the same thing.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): It may have been an oversight on the part of the board, but I would say to my hon. friend that the body who appointed himself and his board were consulted on every occasion.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I know that to be the case, and I stated so when I spoke.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): In dealing with the United States government we were dealing with those with whom we were making the treaty we were not making a treaty with the state of New York. We could not make a treaty with the state of New York, and if there was a difference of opinion between the American engineers charged with the responsibility of making a report to their government and the state authorities, I have no knowledge of the fact nor do I think it is of any particular interest to this house.

Mr. GEARY: Will the minister state on what ground the government of Canada thought they could deal with this matter? Was it a question of the peace, order and good government of the Dominion, or in what way did the Dominion profess to deal with it?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): It is the only way it could be dealt with; it certainly could not be dealt with by the Ontario government.

Mr. GEARY: Perhaps I have not made myself clear. You are dealing with a province in a matter that does not involve any question of a navigable stream, and I want to know under what Dominion jurisdiction the minister acted.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I do not consider it necessary to cite any particular statute or clause giving us authority. Having the assurance of the premier of Ontario, and of the manager of the Hydro that this treaty was entirely satisfactory, before we attempted to negotiate the treaty, I thought I was on safe ground in advising the government.

Mr. GEARY: Has the government any binding form of consent or authority from the provincial government to deal with the lands in question, the river bed and that sort of thing? I would be very glad if the minister would say just how that consent came about.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Remedial works in question are to be undertaken by the Hydro, who are parties to the treaty and who, I assume, are the creation of the provincial government and have that government behind them. I say to my hon. friend that the authority which created his board is in agreement about these remedial works proposed by the treaty.

Mr. GEARY: By letter, resolution, order in council or what?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): By letter, which I will produce if my hon. friend desires.

Mr. GEARY: I would like to have it.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I do not have it in my possession at this minute, but I will obtain it later on.

I do not think my hon. friend, even with his thirty years' experience, is competent to say what engineering works are necessary to bring about this desirable result. These works are the result of the best judgment of a corps of engineers most of whom are of outstanding ability. Doctor Camsell is not an engineer but he was placed on this board by this government because of the fact that erosion played a very important part in arriving at a decision as to what measures should be taken to remedy the apparent evil on the crest line of the falls. What the engineers hoped to do—I am discussing this purely as a layman—is to spread the water more evenly over the crest of the falls and stop the divergence into the Horseshoe falls which is receding at a much more rapid rate than the full crest line. Eventually, if it is not stopped, it will destroy the scenic beauty of the falls. I do not think that will be contradicted.

Part of the improvement is the proper distribution of flowage, so that the flow will cover the whole crest of the falls. They state in the report, that that is what they believe will happen when these remedial works are completed. My hon. friend has made a great deal of the fact that they have stated in the report that the increased flowage will occur only during the non-tourist season and, as he points out, at the low flowage period of the river itself, and that therefore it will do no harm. What I want to point out to my hon. friend in addition to that and what I think he has missed, is that they state most emphatically that, in regard to the scenic effect and the lighting effect, the full covering of the crest line of the falls will come as a result of these works at every period of the year.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I never disputed that. I do not dispute it now. I admit it.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I am satisfied if my hon. friend admits that; that is conclusive, and I wish to present the case to the house as I get it from the report of the engineers. Competent engineers on both sides have made a careful study of this matter; they have investigated all the proposals that were made to them as being necessary for the protection of the scenic quality of the falls. They have taken the precaution to recommend that this diversion shall continue only for a period of seven years. During that period they have stated that the board will continue carefully to watch the improvement and ascertain whether further remedial works than those proposed will be necessary.

Mr. CHAPLIN: What has the minister to say about this work being done by private enterprise on the one side?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I was coming to that. If my hon. friend's contention was correct that it was entirely private enterprise, there might be something in it, because I am willing to admit there is something in the argument of my hon. friend that, if it is found that these works are not sufficient for the purpose for which they are desired or that, by their installation and by the diversion of additional water, the falls will suffer, then because private capital has been put in, we would be compelled to continue the work for the period of seven years. My reply to that is that it will be at least three years or a fair proportion of three years out of the seven before these works are fully completed. As regards the Canadian side of the improvement I was attracted to it owing to the very fact that my hon. friend has mentioned, namely, that there is a scarcity of power, but I would require to be assured that the abstraction will not in any way affect the scenic qualities of the falls themselves. I have that assurance. My hon. friend doubts that, but I am giving him the word, as I have said, of a corps of competent engineers, and the Ontario government, who are the creators of and who own the Hydro system, are going to provide one-half of the cost of the installation.

Mr. GEARY: The Ontario government do not own the Hydro system. The municipalities own it.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): My hon. friend will admit that it is always stated that it is a provincial institution. It may be the municipalities, but it is the people of the province of Ontario—

Mr. GEARY: That is right.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): —who constitute one of the consenting parties to this agreement. The members of the house may not agree that the people of Ontario represented by their government, knew what they were doing, but I say that they knew every detail, both of the work itself with respect to the suggested development and of the cost. Indeed the cost was arrived at by collaborating with their own engineers so that what I have to say as a representative of the federal government is that, knowing these facts, I, with full confidence, recommended that the Dominion government join with the United States government in the ratification of the treaty.

Mr. GUTHRIE: At the end of the seven-year period, do all the works revert to Canada or Ontario, as the case may be, and do the power companies on either side cease to have any interest in them?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): As regards the interest of the power companies in the 10,000 cubic feet per second, it would end at the expiration of seven years. The works themselves would become the property of the provincial government or the state; as they are placed on provincial or state property, naturally they belong to the bed of the stream.

Mr. GUTHRIE: At the end of the seven-year period the 10,000 second feet on either side of the river will cease to be used for power purposes. Is that correct?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Unless a new arrangement is entered into with respect to it. That is the period for which the trial under the provision is stated.

Hon. HUGH GUTHRIE (South Wellington): I have only this to say in regard to the seven-year period, that my experience with respect to government undertakings of that kind has not been very good. I was engaged at one time on behalf of a former government of this country in connection with an application by a United States corporation known as the Aluminum Company of America, to divert temporarily a large flowage of water from the river St. Lawrence to the Long Sault rapids. The case occupied about ten days in the city of Montreal. It was held by the International Joint Commission that the application was launched as a war measure; the additional power was required by the aluminum company at their works in the state of New York to produce aluminum war goods. It had the sanction of the President of the United States. An arrangement was ordered by the International Joint commission to give the aluminum company a special diversion of water from the St. Lawrence river for the purpose of their works. They were to construct weirs, dams and the like for a period of five years after which the dams were to be taken out and the water restored to its natural flow. But what happened? The arrangement was subsequently made a permanent one. They have this diversion of water and they are using it to-day. I am afraid that what happened in that case is very likely to happen in the present case.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The mere fact that they got the five-year period did not in any way entitle them to receive a continuation of their contract.

Mr. GUTHRIE: But they got it and the argument used in that case will be the argument used in this: there is the dam; there is the expenditure; why allow this water to run to waste? At the end of the seven-year period it will be said: This flow of 10,000 cubic feet on each side was to be utilized for power purposes; it has been so utilized for seven years; why not let it be used in the future? This looks like a permanent diversion of 10,000 cubic feet of water on each side of the river. Speaking for myself, and for myself alone, as the Dominion government seems to be satisfied with the arrangement, and as the government of the province of Ontario seems to be satisfied with it, notwithstanding that personally I am doubtful as to the propriety of the arrangement, I am willing to let it go.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Suppose the weirs which are to be erected in the bed of the stream, which is vested in the park commission, prove unsatisfactory for the work they are intended to do; how are you going to get them out, and who is going to pay for taking them out? There is no provision for that at all.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): My hon. friend has asked me a question which I would not care to answer without previously consulting the engineers. It is an engineering problem wholly.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I think it is a legal one.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): My hon. friend will note that according to the agreement itself, so far as the engineers are able to judge, the works will provide a complete remedy; but if they do not, there is provision that further remedies may be provided. My hon. friend may rest assured that the engineers will not leave in the bed of the stream anything which they are satisfied will be injurious.

Mr. CHAPLIN: They are not sure about this plan themselves, and so they have made provision to go ahead and try it. It is so stated in the agreement.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): If my hon. friend is determined not to accept the judgment of competent engineers, then I have nothing more to say.

Hon. R. J. MANION (Fort William): I just wish to say a few words on this matter. I do not feel myself capable of entering into the controversy, but I have listened with a great deal of interest, as all hon. members no doubt have done, to the speeches that have been made on this question by the Prime Minister, the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Stewart) and by my hon. friend from Lincoln (Mr. Chaplin), because if there is a beauty spot in all Canada which should be preserved for our children and their children, it is Niagara falls. Away back in the days of the old French explorers, we have references to its great beauty, even by men most of whose time was taken up fighting the Indians. I remember reading just the other day a statement by one of the old explorers, Hennepin, who was the first to point out the beauties of Niagara falls, and from that time on to this day, Niagara falls has been one of the scenic wonders of the world. I do not know anybody who has visted the falls on a number of occasions who has not come away each time with a greater appreciation of its sublimity than he had on the previous visit. Therefore I say that anything that can be done to preserve the beauty of the falls should be done.

The hon. member for Lincoln is a member of that board, representing the province of Ontario, whose sole duty it is to preserve the scenic beauty of Niagara falls. The members of that board have no financial interest in the matter whatever. I believe I am correct in saying that they have been working on the board many years without cost to the province of Ontario, and their whole efforts have been to preserve its beauty for the province and the Dominion generally.

There has been a dispute apparently here this afternoon. The hon. member for Lincoln points out that while submerged weirs may bring about a spreading of the water, they do not result in as beautiful an effect as an island or a series of islands would. The point I wish to make is that as there is some dispute as to the results to be obtained from the standpoint of beauty by the construction of these proposed remedial works, as there is some doubt as to their effectiveness in the minds of this board which has been charged with the preservation of the beauty of the falls for many years, on behalf of the province of Ontario and Canada generally, I think this whole treaty should be held up temporarily, at least, until further consideration can be given to it. It seems to me extraordinary—I am not saying this in a critical spirit, because I suppose it was an oversight—that the board appointed by this government should not have consulted the one body in Canada which has been giving its time and its energies to preserve this magnificent and sublime scene in all its beauty for the people of this country, and, indeed, the whole world, and if for no other reason, I think the whole matter should be held up for further consideration. We all know that there has been a gradual process of erosion going on at the apex of Horseshoe falls. The Prime Minister said this afternoon that it amounted to 3.7 feet per annum, and that some remedial works are necessary to preserve the scenic beauty of the falls. It has been suggested by my hon. friend from Lincoln, and after listening to this whole debate very carefully I would say, properly suggested, that this whole scheme is a power scheme, and therefore I do think that the one body in Canada that is particularly interested in Niagara falls from the standpoint of beauty should have been consulted. They should have been given an opportunity to discuss this whole question with the Canadian board, and with the American board, perhaps, and should have been given the opportunity to present their conclusions after all these years of study.

There is another reason why I think this matter should be held over. I have been told—I heard it stated yesterday—that the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett), who has been called out of the city by reason of the illness of a relative, wished to take part in this discussion. For that reason also I should like to see this question held over. After all, I do not think there is any great hurry. I do not think the treaty has been ratified by the American senate, and in this materialistic age I do not think there is any need for us to hurry simply because there may be a desire to develop more power by some company or companies. We should not be hurried by such a consideration in a matter of this kind. I suggest with due respect to the Prime Minister that he hold over the consideration of this treaty for two or three weeks, so that this commission of which my hon. friend from Lincoln is a member, and of which all of us who have given any thought to the matter are so proud, because of the work they have done in beautifying the parks adjoining the falls, may be given an opportunity to consult with the new board that has been appointed.

Mr. G. R. GEARY (South Toronto): My friend who has just sat down (Mr. Manion) has touched upon a point which I think is very well worthy of consideration by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King), and it is a point upon which I venture to ask a question. I would like to know very definitely what form the consent of the province of Ontario took. Who instituted this inquiry, and how closely has the province of Ontario kept in touch with the work of the engineers? It seems to me extraordinary that the province of Ontario, if it were keeping closely in touch with the engineers, would neglect to consult the body of all bodies which has had to do, not with electric power, but with the scenic beauty of the falls. That has been professedly the first consideration, and it is therefore scarcely understandable that the province of Ontario should have neglected to consult the body which has scenic beauty in its care, rather than the development of power. If the minister will consider the circumstances of the appointment of this board, he first of all had the nucleus of the board in the presence of two gentlemen who had to do with overlooking the diversion of water provided for under the treaty of 1909. They are more or less power engineers; at least, I judge that they had to do with the diversion of water for power purposes. To this nucleus there were added two other engineers, but the board is primarily a power board. By whom was it instructed, and on whose letter is that board working? On the letter of two power companies, people primarily interested in power, the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario, and some power company on the other side of the river. So that you have loaded against you, so to speak, on the power side as against the scenic side, the personnel of the board, as well as those who are advising the board. When the hon. member for Lincoln discussed the question of submerged weirs, as opposed to "weirs," rising above the surface in the form of an island, or however they may be built, he was speaking of something which he has had every opportunity to study thoroughly. Those weirs will be left. The power people may fall down with respect to the scenic aspect, but you may be quite sure that when they finish putting in the weirs, those weirs will be amply sufficient to divert the water necessary under their plans, that is, ten thousand cubic feet per second. So I would suggest to the minister that he keep a very close eye on the development as it affects the scenic feature of the falls. After all, I think that is what we here are most interested in. We get only ten thousand cubic feet per second as against the ten thousand allowed the United States. The original proportion was as 36 to 20. Why are we not getting the same proportion of the additional diversion instead of only one-half?

I agree with the member for Fort William (Mr. Manion) that after the very careful presentation by the member for Lincoln, who knows the situation so thoroughly, and having in view that the chief object of this house is the preservation of the scenic beauty of the falls and not the development of power, more time might be given for the consideration of this question.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I say, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. STEVENS: Is the Prime Minister going to close the debate?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: No, that is exactly what I am not going to do, but I wish to make reference to the request that the debate be adjourned till the hon. leader of the opposition returns. May I say that when I learned the hon. leader of the opposition unfortunately was to be called away, I crossed the floor and asked him if there was anything on the order paper which he would wish to have held over until he returned, because if so I should be pleased to endeavour to see that his wishes were met. The hon. leader of the opposition assured me to the contrary, and advised that the government proceed with the orders exactly as we might wish. That is the reason why we are proceeding to-day with this resolution. Inasmuch, however, as it has been suggested that the resolution be held over until the leader of the opposition returns, I am only too happy to accept the suggestion. It is quite possible that the leader of the opposition may not have thought of mentioning his wishes to me, but afterwards may have mentioned to others that he would like to speak on the resolution.

I might add, Mr. Speaker, that the federal government acts of necessity as the government which has to do with the negotiation of treaties with a foreign country in matters of national concern. In taking up this matter, however, the federal government has had in mind primarily the province of Ontario and its special interest in addition to that of the entire Dominion in the scenic beauties of Niagara falls. If in Ontario the provincial authorities, who have been closely in touch with this matter throughout, and to whom it is of more concern than it is to the authorities of any other province, do not wish to have the treaty proceeded with, the government certainly will not press the matter further the next time the treaty is under discussion.

Mr. MANION: May I correct an impression that I gave the house? I had no authority to speak for the leader of the opposition, but I heard him express his intention when this matter came up to take part in the discussion. I quite agree with the Prime Minister that the leader of the opposition might easily have overlooked this. But I think an adjournment of the debate would serve two purposes; it would give him an opportunity to take whatever part in the debate he may think advisable, and, more important still, it would give time for reconsideration of the whole proposition.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I do not wish it to be understood, Mr. Speaker, that the government has any doubt in its mind in regard to the matter. But seeing that the province of Ontario is primarily involved, and that the government has relied upon the engineers of the Ontario government to keep advised the Ontario government as well as the agencies of that government, I am quite agreeable, in view of my hon. friend's request, to have the debate adjourned.

Mr. SPEAKER: Mr. Stevens moves, seconded by Mr. Stewart (Leeds) that the debate be now adjourned.

Motion agreed to and debate adjourned.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

AGREEMENT FOR PURCHASE OF ALBERTA RAILWAYS

Hon. CHARLES A. DUNNING (Minister of Railways and Canals) moved that the house go into committee to-morrow to consider the following proposed resolution:

That it is expedient—

1. To ratify and confirm the agreement dated the 6th day of February, 1929, between His Majesty the King in the right of the province of Alberta and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company and the Canadian National Railway Company, for the purchase of the undertakings of the Edmonton, Dunvegan and British Columbia Railway Company, the Central Canada Railway Company, the Central Canada Express Company, the Alberta Great Waterways Company, and of the province in respect thereof and also in respect of the Pembina Railway Company.
2. To incorporate the Northern Alberta Railways Company, in which are to be vested the said jointly acquired railways.
3. To authorize the governor in council to guarantee the principal and interest of the securities to be issued by the Canadian National Railway Company, to an amount or amounts fixed from time to time by the governor in council, for the payment of one-half the purchase price and one-half of the obligations assumed under the said agreement.

He said: His Excellency the Governor General, having been made acquainted with the subject matter of this resolution, recommends it to the favourable consideration of the house.

Mr. STEVENS: Will the minister bring down the agreement when the matter is under discussion?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes.

Motion agreed to.

AGREEMENT FOR PURCHASE OF QUEBEC, MONTREAL AND SOUTHERN RAILWAY

Hon. CHARLES A. DUNNING (Minister of Railways and Canals) moved that the house go into committee to-morrow to consider the following proposed resolution:

That it is expedient to provide that the Canadian National Railway Company may purchase the undertaking and railway of the Quebec, Montreal and Southern Railway Company for $6,000,000; and that the governor in council may guarantee the principal and interest of securites to be issued for this purpose by the Canadian National Railway Company, not exceeding in aggregate face value such amount as the governor in council may consider sufficient to raise the said sum.

He said: His Excellency the Governor General, having been made acquainted with the subject matter of this resolution, recommends it to the favourable consideration of the house.

Mr. STEVENS: May I ask the minister if he will lay on the table the correspondence leading up to this agreement prior to its adoption by the committee?

Mr. DUNNING: In that regard, Mr. Speaker, as I explained on a former occasion, I have no correspondence other than with the management of the Canadian National railways who undertook the negotiations. But any information which is desired can be secured at some stage of the proceedings. I suggest to my hon. friend that inasmuch as I intend to recommend to the house that the bills to be based on these two resolutions be referred to the committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines, in order that we may summon the officers who undertook the negotiations and who will be prepared to give any information that may be desired, that would probably be the better time to go into these matters. If it is agreeable to my hon. friend it would facilitate matters to proceed in that way in both cases.

Motion agreed to.

CENTRAL EUROPEAN IMMIGRATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. MICHAEL LUCHKOVICH (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Immigration (Mr. Forke) whether he has received any representations from editors of Ukrainian newspapers or any other responsible Ukrainian bodies denying certain insidious insinuations made in the Winnipeg Free Press and the Winnipeg Tribune of February 6 and 7, and in the editorial columns of many of our Canadian dailies, wherein it has been stated that Central Europeans domiciled in western Canada are preparing to deluge Ottawa with petitions protesting against what is termed "the discriminatory ruling against the entrance into Canada of more than a very limited number of Central Europeans," and that, failing action on the part of the Immigration department, these petitions would be effectively reinforced by united action in seventeen federal ridings in Canada at the next Dominion election. I might point out to the hon. Minister of Immigration that I have in my possession absolute denials from the editors of two Ukrainian newspapers of any such contemplated action on the part of Ukrainians in Canada.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Hon. ROBERT FORKE (Minister of Immigration): In reply to the hon. member, Mr. Speaker, I may say that I have received no such petitions or communications. I have had communications of an exactly opposite character.

IMMIGRATION DEPARTMENT REPORT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. E. TUMMON (South Hastings): I have not yet seen the annual report of the Department of Immigration and Colonization. Will the minister intimate when we may expect that report.

Hon. ROBERT FORKE (Minister of Immigration and Colonization): The report will be down in a few days; it is in the hands of the printer.

VANCOUVER HARBOUR COMMISSION

LOAN OF $10,000,000 FOR TERMINAL FACILITIES

Hon. P. J. A. CARDIN (Minister of Marine and Fisheries) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following proposed resolution:

Resolved, that it is expedient to authorize a loan to the harbour commissioners of Vancouver in an amount not exceeding $10,000,000 to carry on the construction of terminal facilities, upon approval by the governor in council of detailed plans, specifications and estimates for such works, and the deposit of debentures of the corporation to cover said loan.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Mr. CARDIN: This resolution provides for the introduction of a bill to authorize an advance of $10,000,000 to the harbour commissioners of Vancouver. The representations made to me by the commissioners are that they need this sum of money for the following purposes: First, for the redemption of commissioners' mortgage notes issued for the balance of the purchase price of the property known as the Hastings mill, the amount of these notes being $1,950,000; secondly, to provide for developmental work on the above property in the way of docks and terminal facilities; and, thirdly, for needed extensions to the elevator facilities. This probably will be for financing only; these facilities will likely be leased in advance for an amount covering interest and sinking fund.

There is no doubt that the harbour of Vancouver is in need of further development. Business has been increasing there rapidly, last year having been an exceptionally good year in the administration of the harbour. The receipts of the harbour of Vancouver, amounting in 1924 to $1,870,000 totalled in 1928, $2,057,739. The expenditure has been a little less than it was in 1924. In 1924 the expenditure was $1,741,000 and in 1928, $1,682,000. So that after paying interest on the money advanced by the government to the commissioners and providing for the sinking fund the commission is left with a very substantial surplus. It is quite clear, therefore, that the business of the port has been very good. And it is contended that the facilities asked for will help materially in still further increasing that business.

There are certain details which I have asked the commissioners to furnish me with before we get through with the bill, and under the circumstances I would ask the committee, if there is no serious objection, to allow the resolution to be reported and have the bill introduced, as was done in the case of the Montreal harbour commisison bill. The details can be supplied when the bill is before the committee. That is the procedure we followed with the Montreal resolution and I think it would help to expedite matters if it were adopted in this case. No hon. member will lose any opportunity of securing all the details he may require when the bill is under consideration. I shall then be in a position, as I am not now, to answer questions. I have not yet received from the commissioners the information I have asked for.

Mr. GARDINER: I presume the minister will have full information regarding the total expenditures under this loan, including the amounts spent for docks, elevators and so forth. He will have all those details.

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Mr. GARDINER: Can the minister tell us what surplus accrued last year after providing for sinking fund and so on?

Mr. CARDIN: That can be calculated from the figures I have given. The total receipts, to be exact, were $2,057,739.02. The total expenditure, including interest and sinking fund, I have given.

Mr. GARDINER: I presume the minister will be able to give information in the way of an official statement with regard to the terminal elevator.

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Mr. GARDINER: That is very important.

Mr. CARDIN: I will, certainly.

Mr. GARDINER: The minister has all the particulars?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Mr. POWER: Merely as a matter of information, may I inquire by what authority the Vancouver harbour commission, or for that matter other commissions, issue notes, for the redemption of which a certain sum is asked, in the present case by this resolution?

Mr. CARDIN: It is done under the law incorporating the harbour commissions.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in. Mr. Cardin thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 66, to provide for a further loan to the Vancouver harbour commissioners.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

THREE RIVERS HARBOUR COMMISSION

LOAN OF $2,000,000 FOR TERMINAL FACILITIES

Hon. P. J. A. CARDIN (Minister of Marine and Fisheries) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following proposed resolution:

That it is expedient to authorize a loan to the harbour commissioners of Three Rivers in an amount not exceeding $2,000,000 to carry on the construction of terminal facilities, upon approval by the governor in council of detailed plans, specifications and estimates for such works, and the deposit of debentures of the corporation to cover said loan.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Mr. CARDIN: The harbour of Three Rivers is not so important as the harbour with which we dealt last, but this port is very useful to the city of Three Rivers and also to the adjoining communities. As hon. gentlemen know, the city of Three Rivers is an important centre for the production of paper and is also one of the most important cities in the province of Quebec from an industrial point of view. During past years expenditures have been made on this harbour through the Department of Public Works; expensive wharves have been built and a certain amount of dredging carried on. In view of the request from the commissioners for an advance of $2,000,000 to place them on an equal footing with other harbour commissions, the government have decided to stop the expenditures formerly made through the Department of Public Works, and this money is to provide for necessary developments and increased facilities.

The port of Three Rivers is largely used for the importation of coal necessary in the production of pulp and paper, and it might be interesting to know the amout of business done by this port in the past. I have not the complete figures, but during the year 1924 the total receipts were about $39,000 and during 1928 they increased to roughly $74,000, so that in four years the receipts have practically doubled. In 1924 the expenditures amounted to about $24,000 and in 1928 to $34,000, in round figures, so after providing for their expenditures and meeting their indebtedness the commissioners are left with a relatively large surplus.

Mr. HEAPS: Might I ask the capital expenditure involved for the year 1928?

Mr. CARDIN: I do not know that I have that information. The liabilities are: Debentures at 5½ per cent, $200,000; debentures at 5 per cent, $27,500 and an advance from the federal government of $82,000, making a total indebtedness of $309,500.

Mr. GARDINER: Have they paid the interest on all these debentures?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes; the interest is included in the expenditures I have mentioned.

Mr. HANSON: Just for the sake of information I would like to ask the minister with reference to the port of Three Rivers, which we all recognize as a very important industrial city, whether it is not a fact that the principal users of the port are the big paper companies. If that is so, why do they not supply their own facilities, as they do elsewhere? Then I would like to know from the minister just what are the principal imports and exports. He has said that coal is the principal import; naturally that is used by the pulp and paper mills of the Three Rivers district. Then I understand that there are also very substantial imports of pulpwood; for instance, in recent years, a substantial quantity of pulpwood has been shipped by the International Paper Company from the Miramichi district in New Brunswick to Three Rivers. Why is it that these paper companies, which are so prosperous, do not supply their own port facilities? Why do they ask the government to do this work when in other parts of Canada the big manufacturing establishments have to do it themselves? I would like to know from the minister also what are the principal exports; if they are paper products from the mills located in that district why should not these companies supply their own facilities? I am not saying the policy is wrong, but I am merely asking for the sake of information.

Mr. CARDIN: It is true that the main imports are coal and pulpwood and the exports are mainly paper products, but when these big companies use the facilities they pay the dues. If they had their own wharves they would use them and the public would not have the advantage of such facilities. For instance, there is a steel plant at Three Rivers, and if my hon. friend's suggestion were adopted they could not use these facilities. I see nothing wrong in the fact that most of the facilities are used by the paper companies provided they pay for them, as they do. They are not getting any special privileges; they pay for the use of the wharves and at the same time these facilities are available to other concerns in the locality.

Mr. HANSON: I am not suggesting there is anything wrong about it; the minister must not understand that from my remarks. This is a matter of public policy which I presume has been well studied, and if all the other ports of Canada were doing the business industrially, that they are doing at Three Rivers I should be only too glad. As a matter of fact, however, is it not true that about ninety per cent of the total imports and exports are occasioned by these big paper companies who are supplied with these facilities at the public expense? It is true that they pay the charges, but why should Canada make these capital expenditures for large corporations who are able to take care of themselves?

Mr. CARDIN: At the moment I would not be ready to admit that ninety per cent, eighty per cent or even seventy-five per cent of the business of the port is done by these mills. Hon. members will realize that Three Rivers, with a population of 35,000 itself and more than that in the surrounding district, is in need of harbour facilities, and the harbour is used not only by the industries of Three Rivers but also by those in the surrounding districts such as the towns of Grand-Mere and Shawinigan. These two towns are quite important, and the port serves not only the north shore of the St. Lawrence but the south shore as well. A ferry runs from the south shore to Three Rivers. The south shore of the St. Lawrence will benefit through the facilities provided for the export of agricultural products. I think the facilities in the harbour are necessary for the general good of the community, outside of the use which will be made of them by the large power companies.

Mr. HANSON: Will the minister give us the value of the agricultural exports through the port of Three Rivers?

Mr. GARDINER: The minister stated, I think, that the total income for 1928 was $74,000, while the expenditure was $34,000, leaving a surplus of $40,000. It is proposed to expend $2,000,000, and if the rate of interest on the bonds is put at 5 per cent it means an interest charge of over $100,000. I suggest that on the second reading of this bill the minister have the information available which will show how that extra $100,000 is to be obtained from the traffic going through that port. Can the minister give any information as to the total expenditures made prior to the time the commission took over this harbour, and whether the commission has been charged up with those expenditures, the same as was done with Quebec?

Mr. CARDIN: I have not that information, but I will get it and present it on the second reading.

Mr. GARDINER: I want to know if we are treating this port the same as Quebec, or whether some new arrangement should be made for Quebec.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in. Mr. Cardin thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 67, to provide for a loan to the Three Rivers harbour commissioners.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

CHICOUTIMI HARBOUR COMMISSION

LOAN OF $2,000,000 FOR TERMINAL FACILITIES

Hon. P. J. A. CARDIN (Minister of Marine and Fisheries) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following proposed resolution:

That it is expedient to authorize a loan to the harbour commissioners of Chicoutimi in an amount not exceeding $2,000,000 to carry on the construction of terminal facilities, upon approval by the governor in council of detailed plans, specifications and estimates for such works, and the deposit of debentures of the corporation to cover said loan.

He said: In this case we are dealing with a locality which is practically new in the field of industry. Chicoutimi is situated at the head of the Saguenay river, about seventy miles north of the St. Lawrence. That river is the discharge of lake St. John which is a very large reservoir of water and has been used lately for the development of important water-powers. As a result of this development of lake St. John, ten or fifteen industries have been established in that locality. In the region of that lake about 1,500,000 horse-power will be developed. No one can doubt the importance of that locality from an industrial point of view when this power development is finally completed. At the present time a large amount of power is being developed and is ready for the market. Practically the whole of the operations of the American Aluminum Company are to be carried on at that place.

Eight or ten years ago the town of Chicoutimi had a population of about 7,000, but to-day there is a population of about 15,000, and there are over 60,000 people in the surrounding district. At present the only harbour facilities at this point consists of a wharf about 500 feet long. A large amount of coal is imported for the use of the mills and other plants established in the vicinity of lake St. John and Chicoutimi. In 1925, even with the poor facilities, nearly 115,000 tons of goods went through the port of Chicoutimi, and also a large amount of dressed lumber. At the present time there are no facilities to deal with the coal which is required for the different industries established at Chicoutimi, and I think the prospects of the future traffic through this port completely justify the advance of money proposed.

I am not in position to state definitely that this commission will be in position to pay the first year's interest on the advance, but we must remember that if we had not proceeded through the incorporation of a commission, large expenditures would have had to be made through the Department of Public Works. Every hon. gentleman in this committee knows of places where money has been advanced through the Department of Public Works and upon which the government will receive no interest. But, judging from the reports and representations made to me and taking cognizance of the situation there, I sincerely expect that this port is going to meet its responsibilities and that in the course of a few years it will meet its obligations. I repeat: we must do something; there is no escape from that. When we have all these industries located in the river, with that amount of power being developed there and important industries established there, there is no doubt that the government would be forced one way or another to make expenditures to provide facilities in that port.

Mr. HEAPS: Is this a company?

Mr. CARDIN: No, it is not a company at all.

Mr. GARDINER: There have been no expenditures prior to the present time by the harbour commission?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes, last year parliament under a bill voted a sum of $500,000, and with that money the commissioners started enlarging the wharf which existed at that time in the harbour of Chicoutimi.

Mr. GARDINER: Are they making charges at the present time for service?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes, last year they collected the sum of $18,000 in connection with their facilities.

Mr. HOCKEN: Why does the minister not make this a gift instead of a loan? He does not expect to receive any interest from it.

Mr. CARDIN: I certainly expect a return on it and there is justification for my expectation. The town is going to grow very rapidly.

Mr. HOCKEN: Has the minister any better expectations in this case than in that of Quebec?

Mr. CARDIN: The town is not as important as Quebec is now, but a few years from now I am sure it will have grown to such importance that we shall get all the returns we need to meet the interest charges and sinking fund in connection with the amount we are lending them.

Mr. HOCKEN: That is a speculation.

Mr. POWER: Far better than the Toronto terminals.

Mr. HEAPS: How long will it be before this $2,000,000 will be spent?

Mr. HOCKEN: I want to make it a gift.

Mr. POWER: We fear the Greeks even bearing gifts.

Mr. CARDIN: The bill which will be introduced provides that before starting work they have to submit a plan to the engineers of the Department of Marine and Fisheries and the plan has to be approved before the loan which has been authorized is spent.

Mr. HEAPS: The question I asked was how long it would be before the $2,000,000 would be spent? Would it be one year or two years?

Mr. CARDIN: More than two years.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in. Mr. Cardin thereupon moved for leave to introduce bill No. 68, to provide for a further loan to the Chicoutimi harbour commissioners.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

DIVORCE COURT FOR ONTARIO

The house resumed from February 22 consideration of the motion of Mr. Woodsworth for the second reading of Bill No. 38, to provide in the province of Ontario for the dissolution and annulment of marriage.

[Mr. Cardin.]

Mr. C. W. BELL (West Hamilton): Mr. Speaker, I desire to associate myself with the remarks that have already been made in favour of this bill by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth), and the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa). I think it must have furnished to the house a striking commentary on the situation which has been created, and which has called for the introduction of this legislation, to find a bill of this nature introduced by a member from the province of Manitoba and endorsed by a member from the province of Quebec.

My hon. friend the member for Labelle the other night seemed to feel that the situation called for some remarks upon the question of provincial rights, and the assertion of provincial rights in this house. It is not in that spirit that I am approaching the discussion of the bill to-night. Rather I take it that both the hon. gentlemen who have spoken on the subject so far have addressed themselves to it mainly because, although themselves not residents of the province of Ontario, they felt that it deals with a very important question of right and wrong, and it is upon that basis that I desire to address to the house such remarks as now occur to me.

It has already been stated that there is practically no issue here as to the principle of divorce, that the method is the only question which is before the house for consideration. I can readily understand how many persons who are conscientiously opposed to the idea of divorce might state to the house that they felt constrained, upon principle, to oppose the bill in the hope that thereby they would put an end to something which they regard as an unmixed evil. But, sir, we know from the record that we have before us, and from the situation in which we find ourselves to-day, that there is no such thing as doing away with divorce, and that the only question before the house now is whether divorce shall be dealt with to the best advantage, or dealt with in a less satisfactory manner.

There are two or three points in connection with this bill that I desire to present for the consideration of the house. It has been already pointed out by my hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre that every year finds a largely increasing number of these applications, and that it has been recently found impossible for the senate of the parliament of Canada to deal with all the applications that come before it in the course of a single session; so much so that, as we already know, this year there has been formed, or is in process of formation, a second divorce committee of the senate. Judging by the rate at which these applications have been increasing in the last few years, we shall very shortly find ourselves confronted with the necessity, if the senate is to continue to deal with these measures, of creating not simply one additional committee but two or three or four additional committees. It was the case, I believe, last year—I stand subject to correction if I am wrong—that although a large number of applications had been received, and although the divorce committee of the senate addressed themselves with great earnestness to the problem of dealing with those applications and followed them up with the utmost industry, even then it was not possible during the period of the session to deal with all the applications that came before the senate. So we had the unfortunate anomaly at the conclusion of the session, that decrees were granted to a number of people who had cases which upon being tested were found to be good, while on the other hand a large number of people who had cases presumably just as good and just as worthy of the decree of the divorce committee were forced into the position of not having their petitions decided upon simply because there was no time to deal with them. Surely we cannot say that the decision of the senate and of this house is being given with equality to all, as long as the test of relief—assuming that the applicants are entitled to relief at all—shall be, not the justice of their cause but merely the possibility of the senate overtaking its work and dealing with their petitions. That, I think, sir, is a proposition which will commend itself to every member of this house.

But there is something far more serious than that. The method of granting divorce on the recommendation of the senate committee and the passing of a private bill has set up this condition in the Dominion—that the man who is fairly well-to-do, if he has a just cause, can present that cause and have it adjudicated; but the man who is poor is denied that right. Surely it should not be possible anywhere in this country that material wealth should be the test of right or wrong. It is well known to all those whose work calls upon them to undertake the presenting of divorce applications to the senate divorce committee, that ever so often it is found that those who have a perfectly just cause, a cause founded upon honest, indisputable evidence, are nevertheless compelled to abandon that cause simply for the reason that they have not the requisite funds to take the steps necessary to obtain a decree. The fact is that under present conditions any man or woman in this Dominion who seeks relief by way of divorce must be able to pay for the cost of the senate bill, for the cost of having that bill looked after through the senate and through this house, and must be able also to meet the necessary expenses, which sometimes are extremely heavy, of bringing witnesses from the uttermost parts of the country to this city in order that their evidence may be heard by the committee and passed upon.

What a monstrous situation it would be that a man who, for example, had instituted suit for breach of contract should be told: You cannot obtain relief under the law unless you take your case to the city of Ottawa, no matter in what part of Canada you may reside. This is identically the situation in relation to divorce. The only possible way by which divorce could be made easy to people of small means would be to say that the sittings of the senate committee which is empowered to recommend the granting of a decree should be held throughout the length and breadth of the land. But we know how utterly impracticable that is. We know it is out of the question to consider it for one moment.

So, sir, we have this situation—and it must continue unless this bill is proceeded with—of people being able to say: I may have a just cause, I may have evidence right under my hand to entitle me to a decree of divorce, a decree which in fairness, honesty and justice I ought to be granted, but because of the fact that I am not possessed of sufficient funds to go to Ottawa and to pay the fees incidental to an application for divorce and to bear the expense of bringing witnesses to the capital, I am denied that relief which as a citizen of Canada is mine, and mine by right. Only by supporting this bill can that grievous inequality be removed. I think it is a standing reproach to this parliament and to this country that any citizen who has a just cause to seek divorce should be told: You have not the money, and therefore there is no possibility of your cause being heard. In other words, he is told: You are deprived of justice at the hands of the high court of parliament, the very highest court in the land.

It is for that reason, Mr. Speaker, that preeminent, that paramount reason, that I ally myself with my hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre who, as I see it, has unearthed a very grievous wrong that ought to be remedied. And until that wrong is remedied this parliament cannot divest itself of the reproach that under present conditions it is granting one thing to the well-to-do, and denying that same thing to the poor.

Mr. THOMAS McMILLAN (South Huron): Mr. Speaker, I feel this is a question which should be regarded from the most serious point of view. My hon. friend who has just taken his seat (Mr. Bell) has approached the question in the belief, apparently, that we are all in favour of the principle of divorce.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No, no.

Mr. McMILLAN: Now, sir, so far as I am concerned I must dissent from that view. Since I have had the privilege of a seat in this parliament I am at one with my hon. friend in saying that the manner in which these cases have received attention in this chamber is nothing less than a travesty. Many times I have thought of it seriously, and felt like rising to my feet in protest.

There may be hon. members present who are in favour of the principle of divorce. I have always held the opinion, and I am to-day more strongly than ever of the view, that marriage is a sacred union. Marriage is the key to the home: the home is the bulwark of society and of the nation. We talk of the greatness of our country, of our wealth, of our wonderful natural resources, but we should never forget that the greatest asset of a nation is the integrity of its people. The character and condition of the people is either the greatest asset or it is the most detestable scourge of a country. Therefore that thought brings me back at once to our homes and the home life of our people. In the mad rush and struggle for wealth and property and material possessions, which in this country is everywhere apparent, the higher and better things which go to build up the home and build up humanity should not be neglected. As I have said, the home is the bulwark of the nation. History records the fact that it has always been so, and it will continue to be so until the end of time. Go back into history and study it. Study, if you will, that old volume of the sacred law. What does it tell us? Among all its wonderful words of wisdom and of admonition to the human race, it tells us that in mere wealth, in mere sordid wealth and outward splendour, old Babylon had no rivals in ancient times. But her fatal weakness was that she put no real estimate upon true manhood. As a consequence, her gorgeous palaces and hanging gardens became the abode of selfishness and sensuality, with the result, as we now read, that over that spurious greatness rests the stillness of the desert, the gloom of an eternal night. It was in view of all this that Scotland's immortal bard tells us in The Cottar's Saturday Night:

> How he, who lone in Patmos banished,
> Saw in the sun a mighty angel stand,
> And heard great, Bab'lon's doom pronounc'd > by Heaven's command.

What of Greece? Ancient Greece was not a large country—her chief city, Athens—less populous than New York. Her people were great in art, great in philosophy, great in wisdom and great even in a certain kind of patriotism. But the fatal weakness of the people of Greece was that they had no real, true family life. Their public men were corrupt in their habits, loose in their morals, and their women, even the most accomplished, were unchaste. As a consequence, the fate of Greece was inevitable; and her fall was even more rapid than her rise.

What of ancient Rome? Read Gibbon's decline and fall of the Roman empire: we are told that that fall was due to the general corruption of the people and their engrossing love of pleasure and idleness. So long as the nobility of Rome considered it an honour to labour with their hands, so long as they continued to recognize the dignity of honest labour, Rome continued to flourish. We read of the time when the land was tilled in those days even by generals; as they left the field of battle they returned triumphant to the plough. But when the ruling classes of Rome began to live so luxuriously and so extravagantly that they considered honest labour as beneath their dignity, and as fit only for the engagement of serfs and slaves, from that day onwards dates the decay and downfall of the Roman empire.

Coming to the middle ages, we have no doubt all read of the time when Spain was the mightiest of European powers. The discoveries of Columbus had added to her possessions the new world of the west. The conquests of Cortez and Pizarro had poured into its treasury the riches of Mexico and of Peru. Its galleons brought the gold, the jewels and the ingots of silver to the harbour of Cadiz, while at the same time Philip was endeavouring to add to his possessions some of the fairest and wealthiest portions of western continental Europe. What were the means by which Spain was able to hold her people in subjection? It was through the terror of the Inquisition and the power of the stake and the sword. By such means a nation could never continue to flourish, and that country having been humbled and broken through the defeat of the Armada, her greatness soon dwindled away.

Let us come still nearer to our own time. We have often heard the expression of the first Napoleon that the great need of the French people was mothers; and indeed the outbreak of the first French revolution presented a striking illustration of the neglect of the purifying influence of motherhood. When that outbreak occurred French society was permeated with vice; morals, virtue and religion were swamped in immorality. The corrupt plays of the theatre commanded the attention of the people. Maternity came to be looked upon with reproach; true family life, true home life was gone; and as a consequence Napoleon's words were more than justified, that France was really motherless.

Now, Mr. Speaker, let us apply the conditions which destroyed those nations in the past. What does the lesson teach us? Does it not teach us that if a nation is to be great and is to continue to be great its very heart, the home life of its people, must be good? It must be virtuous, clean, self-sacrificing and true. What are we going to do in this young country? We have been the leader in many avenues of national and international life. But what is the truth with regard to divorce? The year 1883 was the first in which divorces were recorded in two figures; the number that year was 13. In 1903 there were 21 divorces; in 1909, 51; in 1913, 60; in 1918, 114; in 1926, 608, and in 1927, 748. It seems that the bulk of the applications before the senate to-day are from the province of Ontario, my own province. But I am proud to say that so far as my own section of the country is concerned, so far as my own riding goes, I do not know of a single case of divorce. As regards my section of the country, I wish that condition to continue. I will not be a party to the passing of a resolution or a bill in this house to establish a divorce court in my province, let this house deal with the matter as it will.

From the arguments which I have put forth thus far you can clearly see that my purpose is to do away with the condition which saps the manhood and the womanhood of this country at its very foundation. As I said in my opening remarks, marriage is a sacred institution. Marriage is the key to the home and the home is the bulwark of the state and of society. If we continue to desecrate marriage through divorce we sap the real foundation of society, and I for one intend to vote as I have expressed myself, against establishing divorce courts in this province.

Mr. JAMES ARTHURS (Parry Sound): Mr. Speaker, this is one of the bills which might be affected by the amendment to the rules proposed this afternoon, and this is one of the many reasons why I am opposed to that amendment. The matter is a most important matter from almost every point of view, and so far as I am concerned I am prepared to vote against this bill for three principal reasons.

In the first place I am opposed to the principle of divorce. In the second place I believe a bill of this kind should be made general in its application if passed by this house at all. There are six provinces of Canada which at present have divorce courts, while the provinces of Quebec, Ontario and Prince Edward Island have none; if a measure of this kind is to be passed at all it should be generally applicable to these three provinces. The third objection I have to the bill is that neither the province of Ontario nor anyone on its behalf has ever asked for this legislation.

On Friday evening we had a rather long and somewhat diverting speech in this connection by the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa). In the beginning of his speech he pointed out clearly and positively that personally he was opposed to divorce and that the divorces granted by parliament had been passed against his will and over his protest. Further on, at page 384 of Hansard, I find that he used the following words:

> ...we shall be making a grave mistake if we vote for this bill as it stands, without making it clear that we are not imposing it upon the people of Ontario, in the absence of any opportunity on their part, and on the part of their own representatives in their own legislative governing body, of signifying their will. If we impose the bill upon them under such conditions we shall, first, encroach upon the moral rights of the people of Ontario, and, secondly, drive another nail into the coffin of our constitution, because we are again discharging one of those abnormal functions of intervention which have worked to the evil of the country and to the evil of the province affected every time this has been done.

I contend that parliament has no right to pass this act and that there is not the least occasion for it. The arguments put forward by the hon. member for West Hamilton (Mr. Bell), whose legal opinion I value highly, do not appeal to me. The first reason he gave for supporting the bill was because of the delay which sometimes occurs through which certain would-be divorcees are debarred during the current session from obtaining the redress to which they think they are entitled. I might point out that this often occurs in courts of law; I have known cases to go over from one term to another and then, when all the legal gentlemen were ready, the court would adjourn for the long vacation. These delays occur in our courts as well as in parliament. The hon. member also claimed that there was a discrimination between the rich and the poor. I understand that the cost of a divorce is not very great, and in most cases where the senate committee finds the party is unable to bear the expense it is cut down to the bare cost of printing, with no further charge. Will the hon. member or any other legal gentleman tell me that the cost will be less in a court of law? From the little experience I have had with cases in court I firmly believe that the present procedure is not more costly than would be the case if the procedure were changed.

An hon. MEMBER: One-third less.

Mr. ARTHURS: I believe it is now one-third of what it would be then. The argument with regard to the procuring of evidence would also apply exactly the same in a court of law.

I am firmly convinced that the great majority of the members of this house are opposed to this bill; they are opposed to the general principle of divorce, and why should we as the parliament of Canada force the province of Ontario into this situation? If we are going to do it at all why not include all those provinces which at present have no divorce courts? Why single out Ontario for this legislation with no request from them? For my part I am prepared to vote against this bill on every occasion.

Mr. H. C. HOCKEN (Toronto West Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am one of those who deplore as much as anyone in this house the situation with which we are faced, but I propose to vote for this bill. If my hon. friend from South Huron (Mr. McMillan) were consistent and logical he would move for the abolition of divorce courts all over the country, and that necessarily must be the position of any person opposed to the principle of divorce. As the last speaker pointed out we have divorce courts in six provinces of Canada, and if those who are opposed to the principle of divorce were logical they would move for the abolition of these courts and the prevention of divorce under any circumstances.

Mr. ARTHURS: I would point out that this parliament could not pass such an act; those courts were established under the British North America Act.

Mr. HOCKEN: Then I would propose that my hon. friend would be willing to accept the British North America Act for the province of Ontario as well as for the other provinces, with all the privileges and rights given those other provinces.

I am supporting this bill not because it will make divorce cheaper or because I believe it will facilitate divorce, but because I believe that before a tribunal of this kind more substantial justice will be given the different parties. I have no criticism to make with respect to the committee of the senate, but consider their position: They are down here for a few months of each year and have to deal with hundreds of divorce cases. They must sit day in and day out and even break up their committee into two or three sections in order to deal with these cases, so under the circumstances divorces go through without the consideration they would get in a court of law. So I say I believe more substantial justice would be done in a court of law than is the case at present.

I am not opposed to the principle of divorce, although I am quite as firmly convinced of the sacrednes of the home and of marriage as my hon. friend from South Huron. There is nothing finer in this or any other country than a happy home, but where you find a home where a mother has deserted her husband and children and gone off with some other man to the United States is it fair to hold that husband to that position for the rest of his life? He may be a young man of only thirty or thirty-five years of age; should he be condemned to remain in that condition because of the weakness of his wife? On the other hand take a home where the man has gone off with some other woman, deserting his wife and family. If that woman can find some person with whom she thinks she can be happy why should she not be free to re-establish her home with a man who will be better to her and more honest with her than the one she first selected?

Mr. CANNON: Will my hon. friend allow a question? What about the children of the first marriage; are they to be considered?

Mr. HOCKEN: I believe that the children of any marriage who have been deserted by the father or mother will have a far better chance of a good bringing up with a step-father than they would have with the father who begat them.

Mr. CANNON: Suppose it works out the other way?

Mr. HOCKEN: I think it applies both ways. While I deplore the increase in divorces we must remember that conditions are very different to-day from what they were fifty years ago. If it were possible to make every man a decent husband and every woman a decent wife I would vote against the granting of divorces under any circumstances, but, in my judgment, while there may be a great deal of unhappiness caused by divorces this distress would not be remedied by refusing to grant divorces upon any ground.

We do not propose to facilitate the granting of divorces, but rather to establish in the province of Ontario what is already established in nearly every other province of Canada. I do not believe for one moment that the fact that a divorce court may sit in Toronto or Hamilton or London is going to attract business simply because the courts are there; the number of applications for divorce are just as numerous under the present rule as they would be if a court was established in the province of Ontario. I believe it is in the interests of those who are injured that a better tribunal be established—a tribunal with more time and with perhaps the experience it would gain. That would be a much better way of dealing with this social problem than the one we have at the present time.

Mr. J. L. BROWN (Lisgar): I think it is a pity that in a debate of this kind we cannot confine ourselves to the real point at issue. The hon. member for South Huron (Mr. McMillan) said that those who had spoken on this question up to the present time were all in favour of divorces. I think the hon. member who introduced this bill (Mr. Woodsworth), the hon. member for West Hamilton (Mr. Bell), and the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) have made it very clear that they were not discussing that phase of the question at all. My experience since coming to this house has made me favourable to a bill such as this. The duty has been imposed upon me, as I mentioned once before, of being the representative of the House of Commons on the divorce committee during the last three sessions of this house. Anyone who has attended even one or two sessions of that committee must be impressed with the terrible evil which is growing up in Canada. I have sat in that committee and witnessed scenes that were heart-rending, and I cannot but think of the possibilities that may arise if something is not done to stem this great evil.

Mr. McGIBBON: How would the courts stem it?

Mr. BROWN: At the same time I have come to realize that we are not dealing with it in the best possible way. Some of the remarks made during the last session have possibly given the impression to the public that this parliament was not seriously considering this question, and references have already been made at this session to the way in which these divorce bills pass through parliament. We in this house understand the procedure, but unfortunately the public will get the impression that these bills are passed through the parliament of Canada without due and proper consideration. I must say, Mr. Speaker, that while I have been in attendance at the divorce committee I have been impressed with the way in which that very serious business was handled by the gentlemen constituting that committee. It is true that because of the peculiar nature of that committee it has not been able to deal with certain phases of this question in a manner in which a court could deal with them, and it is also true that the pressure is becoming so great that this committee is unable to discharge efficiently the work committed to it. I do not believe that the passage of such a bill as this will either lessen or increase the number of divorces, but I do believe that the establishment of such a court in the province of Ontario, as is already established in most of the other provinces, will enable questions to be settled in regard to the care of children, alimony and many other things to which justice requires that consideration be given.

I can only say again, much as I deplore the tremendous increase in the number of divorces, that I am compelled to vote for the passage of such a bill as this; not that I like divorces, not that I want to see them increased, but in order that we may have a better way of handling a very difficult and complex question.

Mr. PETER McGIBBON (Muskoka-Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I think this bill is one that should not pass this house. I have had occasion to visit the senate divorce committee and have always been struck with the thoroughness, the dignity, the sobriety and the lack of publicity that is associated with all their work. I quite realize it is a hardship on the senators who have to sit there day after day, week after week and month after month to try these cases, but I think I am quite within the mark when I say I can supply them with 245 members of this house who will take the job for them.

I have listened with great interest to the member for West Hamilton (Mr. Bell) who spoke with all that eloquence for which he is famous, the eloquence which has stood him in great stead in the courts of this country. But when boiled down what does it all mean? His one argument simply was this: that there should not be one law for the rich and another for the poor. To which we all subscribe, but I ask you, Mr. Speaker, and I ask the members of this house, what lawyer will go into a court and ask that court to rebate fees because his client is poor, as we so often see happen in this house? Consequently I think the very foundation of his argument falls. It does seem strange to me that we in Ontario should have this thing foisted upon us by the member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa), who does not believe in it, and by the member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) who never has a good word to say for anything in the province of Ontario. But he comes forward, and the member for Labelle comes forward, and they say to the people of Ontario, "It is true that we do not believe in this, but you people in Ontario have got to drink the cup to its dregs."

Mr. BOURASSA: The hon. member is making me say the very opposite to what I said. The whole weight of my argument was to demonstrate that we had no right to impose this upon Ontario unless we knew that Ontario wanted such legislation.

Mr. McGIBBON: May I ask the hon. member how he is going to vote on this bill?

Mr. BOURASSA: I am not going to vote for the second reading unless the amendments which I submitted are adopted, that is, giving to the province of Ontario the right to say whether this legislation shall be put into force.

Mr. McGIBBON: The member for Labelle has again demonstrated the fact that he can talk upon all sides of a question and vote any way he desires.

When parliament is so susceptible to provincial rights as the house has been, we might at least wait until some responsible organization in Ontario asks for this bill. When it does, parliament will then have a better ground for discussing it upon its merits than it has at the present time. This legislation has not been asked for by the province of Ontario; it is not wanted by many organizations in Ontario. The Catholic church does not want it and I know my hon. friends on the other side will bear me out in that. A large element in the Orange order does not want it.

Mr. HOCKEN: How does the hon. member know that?

Mr. McGIBBON: I shall have to admit that I cannot speak with the authority of a grand master, but I have been so informed by many of the followers of that order and I have been supported in my objections to legislation of this character in the past. The churches are against it. A large number of the women of Ontario are against it. Who is in favour of it? A few people who want a divorce and who probably are not all entitled to it at that, and perhaps a few lawyers who want some employment. If this motion goes to a vote, I intend to vote against it.

Mr. T. L. CHURCH (Toronto Northwest): Mr. Speaker, there is no demand in Ontario for this legislation. This bill purports to provide that the Supreme Court of Ontario shall have jurisdiction with respect to divorce. It proposes to copy part of the law of England of the fifteenth July, 1870, and to provide that it, altered, varied, modified or affected as to the province of Ontario shall be the law of the province as to dissolution of marriage and as to annulment of marriage.

The Anglican church is strongly opposed to this legislation and always has been. The bishops of the church at every meeting of the synod have opposed it. Six or seven synods of the church have opposed this legislation as applying to an English speaking province, the province of Ontario. We have the opinion of the Anglican church at the Lambeth conference where the Church of England passed these resolutions. They are summed up in three or four paragraphs:

> It appears to a majority of the committee that the objection to saying the solemn words over a person whose wedlock has been sundered, "Those whom God hath joined together let not man put asunder," is very great. It is a grievous misfortune that in so many cases the really innocent party does not exist. (The report of the committee on marriage of 1908, p. 141).
> The conference affirms as our Lord's principle and standard of marriage a life-long and indissoluble union, for better, for worse, of one man with one woman, to the exclusion of all others on either side, and calls on all Christian people to maintain and bear witness to this standard. (Resolution 67 of 1920, p. 44).

I have a table given in a text book by the head of the Department of Sociology of the University of Pennsylvania showing that 10 per cent of the marriages in the United States have resulted in divorce. That means 100 divorces out of every 1,000 marriages. If you apply that to Ontario, it would mean 25,000 divorces in the province for two and a half million people or more. The Canada Year Book shows the huge increases under the court system as compared with that under the parliamentary system. The Canada Year Book says:

> For many years subsequent to confederation the number of divorces granted in Canada was very small, 1883, with thirteen divorces, being the first year in which the number attained two figures, while 1903, with twenty-one divorces, was the record year up to that time. . . .

The effect of the war was to increase very greatly the number of divorces granted in Canada. The causes may be found in the generally unsettling psychological effect of the war period, and the long separations between men on active service and their wives.

There are no resolutions or petitions from Ontario or the Ontario legislature asking for a change in the law. The principle of divorce was adopted at confederation. The change in this bill is as to method, and we should leave the method as it is until such a time as the legislature, church bodies and social organizations of Ontario ask for a change.

The house divided on the motion (Mr. Woodsworth) which was negatived on the following division:

HALIFAX HARBOUR COMMISSION

LOAN OF $5,000,000 FOR TERMINAL FACILITIES

Hon. P. J. A. CARDIN (Minister of Marine and Fisheries) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following proposed resolution:

That it is expedient to authorize a loan to the harbour commissioners of Halifax in an amount not exceeding $5,000,000 to carry on the construction of terminal facilities, upon approval by the governor in council of detailed plans, specifications and estimates for such works, and the deposit of debentures of the corporation to cover said loan.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Mr. CARDIN: This resolution, upon which a bill will be based, is to cover a loan of $5,000,000 to be made to the Halifax harbour commission. Members of the committee will remember that the port of Halifax is now under a harbour commission, just as the harbours of Montreal, Vancouver, and others have been operating under that form of administration for several years. Last year a bill passed this house providing for an advance of $500,000 to the newly organized Halifax harbour commission. That money has not been advanced to the commission, because, as I understand it, they were working towards a general program and they did not want to start making expenditures before being sure as to what their requirements would be. This year they have worked out a program for providing new facilities in Halifax harbour, and I think it is a reasonable request which they are now making to parliament. They are asking for the money necessary to enable them to proceed with the work which they have decided to do. Unfortunately, I have not under my hands the details of the work proposed. I have asked the commissioners to supply me with the details, but up to the present time I have not received them. I would ask the committee to treat this resolution in the same way as they did the other resolutions this afternoon, so that the bill may be introduced, and then on the second reading or in committee on the bill, hon. members will be able to obtain all the necessary information in regard to the work that is contemplated by the harbour commission.

Mr. QUINN: Will this vote of $5,000,000 cover any of the work that has been already undertaken or finished up to the present time?

Mr. CARDIN: I could not say exactly, because I have received no report of any work having been already undertaken.

Mr. QUINN: Recently a contract was let for $300,000 to build an office building for the commission. Will that be included in this vote?

Mr. CARDIN: No report has been made to the department on that as yet, but I will undertake to get the information, and when we are in committee, I shall be able to give a full explanation.

Mr. GUTHRIE: May I ask upon what the minister bases his request for $5,000,000? Has he any estimate? Does he know what the money is going to be expended for?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes. The harbour commission sent me a statement of the work they proposed to do. It is a very short summary, but I can give it to the committee, if my hon. friend so desires. First, they propose to build a revetment wall.

Mr. HANSON: Where?

Mr. CARDIN: In the harbour.

[Mr. Cardin.]

Mr. HANSON: In what part? Do I understand the minister to say that he is asking the house to consent to the passage of a resolution for a loan of $5,000,000 to the Halifax harbour commission, and that he has no knowledge of what their program is?

Mr. CARDIN: It has never been the practice to give these details on the resolution itself, but rather when we are in committee on the bill. That has been the custom in regard to the votes for Montreal, Vancouver, and other harbours. A very short resume of the work proposed is given on the resolution, and then a full discussion takes place later when the bill is in committee. I have here a long letter from the harbour commissioners, which I can read or place on Hansard, but it will not get us anywhere, because we shall have to start all over again in committee on the bill.

Mr. HANSON: I suggest that the minister place the letter on Hansard, so that hon. members will have the opportunity to study it.

Mr. CARDIN: Is the committee of opinion that I should read the particulars or place them upon Hansard?

Mr. GUTHRIE: The minister said he had a brief summary.

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Let us have the brief summary.

Mr. CARDIN: They provide as follows:

Proposed revetment wall	$ 400,000
Pier No. 4—repairs	8,200
Pier No. 3—repairs	17,300
New Pier No. 2—repairs	62,000
Sheds 23, 24, 25 and 28—permanent foundations and floors	216,000
Marginal road pavement	80,000
Pier "A"—two transit sheds	440,000
Pier "B"—together with two transit sheds	4,093,500
General, miscellaneous items, plant equipment	110,000
Extension to existing grain elevator, galleries, etc	1,159,000
	$6,586,000

Mr. HANSON: Do I understand that practically all this work represents repairs to the present piers?

Mr. CARDIN: I understand that "pier B, together with two transit sheds," provides for the building of the pier itself, because the amount is four million dollars.

Mr. QUINN: What is the amount for pier No. 3?

Mr. CARDIN: The amount is $17,300.

Mr. QUINN: Is it proposed to put that pier into shape for the loading and unloading of cargoes? The old pier was burned down some years ago.

Mr. CARDIN: I should think the idea of the commissioners is to put the pier in such condition that it can be used.

Mr. GUTHRIE: There is just one observation I desire to make to the minister at this stage. For the four harbours which appear on the order paper to-day we are asked to appropriate the enormous amount of twenty-nine million dollars; that is, ten million dollars for the harbour of Montreal, ten million dollars for the harbour of Vancouver, five million dollars for the harbour of Halifax, two million dollars for the harbour of Chicoutimi and a like amount for the harbour of Three Rivers. This money, if I understand aright, is advanced to the various harbour commissioners by way of loan, the harbour commissioners issuing bonds against it, which bonds are locked up in the Dominion treasury and looked upon as assets. I understand further that in respect of one or two of the harbours we actually receive interest payments, but that in regard to all the others where this system is in vogue we are not receiving the interest due or past due.

Now, it is to be noted that this vast expenditure is chiefly of benefit—I do not say exclusively—to particular parts of Canada, and that various other large and important parts of the Dominion receive absolutely no benefit from it. I doubt if the little province of Prince Edward Island will receive any direct benefit from this enormous expenditure; not a dollar of it is spent in the great province of Ontario, not a dollar in the four prairie provinces. Does the minister not think that with these enormous sums before parliament at this moment his grants are becoming a little over-balanced in respect to certain parts of Canada at the expense of other parts? What compensation for this tremendous expenditure can he give to the western provinces? How does he propose to even it up? What compensation can he give to Prince Edward Island, what to the great province of Ontario?

I do not say that there is no benefit to the Dominion as a whole in the improvement of our harbours, but the thought passing through my mind is that in respect of several of these items we will be a long time getting any revenue, and that we are plunging a tremendous amount of money into what is a highly speculative venture. I doubt very much if there is any revenue to be derived from Chicoutimi or from Three Rivers, and I understand that Quebec harbour is greatly in default in its interest payments to this government. I think the house should stop and consider whether at this particular time in the history of the country we are justified in lending twenty-nine million dollars of our money on what at most will be a rather doubtful security for the treasury of the Dominion.

Mr. CARDIN: I think my hon. friend's criticism is not fair. It is true we are providing for advances totalling twenty-nine million dollars, but we should not forget that we are advancing ten million dollars to Montreal harbour, ten million dollars to Vancouver harbour and five million dollars to Halifax harbour, or twenty-five million dollars to ports capable of taking care of interest and sinking fund.

Mr. GUTHRIE: It is problematical.

Mr. CARDIN: There is no doubt in regard to that, because that is what these ports have done in the past.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Halifax never had a harbour commission until recently: how do you say it has taken care of interest and sinking fund in the past? I have not offered any criticism in regard to those ports that have paid their interest and have probably justified a new loan; but the rest of it I say is highly speculative.

Mr. CARDIN: I think it will be a good speculation in regard to the port of Halifax.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I hope you are right.

Mr. CARDIN: In view of its importance and of the amount of business passing through that port, I am inclined to believe that the observations made by my hon. friend are probably the same observations that were made when the first advances were proposed to the port of Vancouver; but the development of that port has proved advantageous not only to Vancouver but to the country as a whole. The port of Vancouver, to a certain extent, is used by the prairie provinces, because through that port they export their wheat and import what they need for their development. To say that not a cent is being given to the prairie provinces is not fair. My hon. friend has only to look at the order paper to find that we are providing branch lines in the west to a very substantial amount. We are all in favour of that expenditure. But a similar expenditure cannot be made in the provinces of Ontario and Quebec. The money is spent in the prairie provinces because we think the building of branch lines there is amply justified; and we think also that the development of our harbours is helping the country at large.

Objection may very well be taken that Chicoutimi is not in a position at the present time to pay interest on any advances; but we ought to remember that the development at this port is just starting, and at the outset we cannot expect the revenues that we will get later on. Already a number of industries have been established at Chicoutimi, and there is no doubt that eventually they will be able to take care of the interest on the money advanced.

So far as Vancouver and Montreal are concerned, I am glad to see my hon. friend admits that they are capable of taking care of their obligations. With these proposed advances I have no doubt that those harbours will be in a position to meet the demands already made upon them for further facilities and show a return on the expenditure. Greater facilities are urgently needed in the port of Vancouver and the port of Montreal.

As to Halifax, I repeat, with the assistance we are trying to give to the maritime provinces, and the importance of the port in view of its situation, there is no doubt that this port, as well as the port of St. John, will be able to pay interest and sinking fund on all the money to be advanced.

Mr. GUTHRIE: What I thought I could impress on the minister was the fact that we are entering into enormous commitments. The minister has referred to expenditures in the west, and it was partly on that account that I was prompted to say a word in regard to harbour expenditures. On the same order paper one day last week there appeared $29,000,000 for harbours and $28,000,000 for branch lines, money which will have to be raised on the credit of the government of Canada and not on the credit of the railways. In addition to that we were presented with estimates of a proposed expenditure next year of $400,000,000. This, I submit, is enough to stagger the country; it is too much money; it is a riot of expenditure. I believe it is the duty of someone to call the attention of the government and of the people to the rate at which this government is piling up expenditures and piling up obligations which some day will have to be met by the people.

Mr. DUNNING: In fairness to the house I must call attention to the remarkable change of front as between last week and this week on the part of hon. gentlemen opposite. Only last week hon. gentlemen opposite were voting against this government because it did not propose to embark upon some very large expenditures. The Prime Minister gave information as to what commitments were involved. They were enormous,—

Mr. MANION: We did not agree with any such commitments.

Mr. DUNNING: —far more than any of these.

Mr. GUTHRIE: He talked a lot of nonsense about those commitments.

Mr. DUNNING: Either my hon. friend was talking nonsense then or he is to-night.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I am talking according to the order paper.

Mr. DUNNING: So far as the order paper is concerned, one can say this with respect to the general principle of expenditures of this character: that so long as the business of the country is sufficiently large and is expanding with sufficient rapidity to earn interest upon the investment made by the country, then that investment should be made by the country in the same manner as a business institution would make it. That, broadly, is the ground we take. As to my hon. friend's criticism of the item now under discussion, he speaks of $29,000,000 of speculation, but he demonstrates immediately that $20,000,000 of that sum cannot, in the light of past experience, be considered even slightly speculative, because the two great ports of Montreal and Vancouver have in the past earned sinking fund and interest payments on the moneys advanced by legislation of this parliament. That, therefore, leaves $9,000,000, of which $5,000,000 goes to the port of Halifax.

I am one of those who believe that Halifax will fully justify the confidence we are placing in it in that regard and that, as a result very largely too of the policies being adopted by this government with respect to trade expansion—trade expansion which will have a very great deal to do with the development of the port—it will be capable of earning interest on the expenditure now contemplated. If we regard Halifax as a good speculation that merely leaves Chicoutimi and Three Rivers. Now we had from the minister this afternoon information which indicated that the port of Three Rivers had been earning a substantial surplus in the recent number of years from 1924 onward. So that the speculation which my hon. friend so much fears comes down to very narrow limits indeed.

So far as the government is concerned, the same thing is true of branch lines. I would not have risen now had it not been for my hon. friend's reference to branch lines. The branch line program proposed by the government at the instance of the Canadian National Railways is expected to earn for the railways interest upon the investment. The best proof of the probability of this is the fact that the railway is now earning more than is necessary to pay interest on its obligations due the public; and the obligations which will be created by the program now before parliament are obligations which will be due the public and which the railway management expects to earn interest upon and, indeed, a little more than interest.

Mr. QUINN: Judging by the remarks of the Minister of Railways, I am afraid I have been misunderstood by the committee. I am not opposed either to this resolution or to the vote when it comes before the committee.

Mr. DUNNING: I had no intention of conveying that impression.

Mr. QUINN: But that impression might be conveyed to the public, and I have been misinterpreted on previous occasions. Up to the present I have asked the minister questions only with regard to expenditures that have been made, as to whether they would be charged up to this loan of $5,000,000 or not. With regard to the loan of $5,000,000 to the Halifax harbour commission, I am heartily in accord with the minister who has introduced the resolution, and I can assure the committee and this house that it would be one of the best investments which the government could make. I may point out, as I did last year, that the shipping tonnage of Halifax is greater than that of Montreal. Halifax is an all the year round port while Montreal is regarded as only an eight months' port; we have therefore a greater shipping tonnage in Halifax than they have in Montreal. So that in my view this loan of $5,000,000 would be justified. What I fear, however, is that the carrying charges of this loan may have some effect on the shipping charges of the port. We in Halifax enjoy the distinction of having one of the lowest priced ports in Canada, if not the lowest, and I am afraid that the carrying charges and the expenses in connection with the management of the harbour commission may increase our port charges, perhaps with serious results. I offer no objection to the resolution and will offer no objection whatever to the vote. I wish, however, to ask the minister to safeguard, as far as it is possible for him to do so, the interests of the port in the matter of low shipping rates.

Mr. MILLAR: Is the minister able to give to the committee the amount of grain handled through the port of Halifax in the last year for which there is any record?

Mr. CARDIN: Unfortunately I am not in a position to give that information, but I shall undertake to have it when we are in committee on the bill.

Mr. HANSON: Having regard to what the government of Canada has done for other so-called national ports in this country, I think the program which will be laid down before the minister and parliament by the harbour commission of Halifax, as well as that to be laid down by the harbour commission of St. John, will commend itself to the people of the country. If we are to have truly national ports on the Atlantic coast we can have them only by the expenditure of money. The city of St. John in the past has spent its own money, until it reached the point where it could go no further. The people of that city, with hardly an exception, have voted in favour of the harbour commission, and I for one, no matter on which side I sit, wish to see that port developed. I am not altogether in accord with the method by which this end is to be attained, but since it has been the settled policy of the country that it shall be done through harbour commissions, which commissions if possible should carry themselves, then I intend to support that principle until it is proved to be wrong. My idea of the development of national ports in this country is that as nearly as possible they should be free ports; I think that is what we should aim at with regard to the ports of St. John and Halifax especially, having regard to the competition we must meet from United States Atlantic ports. If we grant money to a port and make it pay interest on that money, with the heavy overhead which it must bear—and we cannot disguise the fact that there is a heavy overhead now—I am afraid that unless the tonnage is greatly increased the port charges may be raised. That is something which will militate against the port, and I want to say here and now that I believe it is the national duty of this parliament to sustain transatlantic traffic as far as possible through our Canadian ports, even if it is done at the expense of the public treasury. I believe that position will be upheld by the great body politic of the people of Canada, and I have pleasure in supporting this vote to the Halifax harbour commission. However, I do say that it seems more than passing strange that when the minister comes to parliament for support of a resolution of this character he is unable to give us any details. It does seem to me that he is a little premature in presenting this resolution.

Mr. MacLAREN: I understand that the minister proposes to present to the house the policy of the government with respect to the equipment of the ports of Canada. I believe during last session he stated that at a suitable opportunity he would do that, and we will look forward with a great deal of interest to his statement in that respect.

In these matters the point is not always whether or not the investment will pay directly; the loans to certain of these ports must be kept quite distinct and apart from the question whether there is actually a direct revenue to repay the loans. The reason is that this Dominion cannot for one moment take the position that it is not going to have properly equipped ports; Canada would not be a Dominion if it were not properly equipped with ports to carry on our trade with the rest of the world. This is a direct national question; I cannot regard it as a purely local matter, and I think many of the members of this house will agree with me. While the ports so equipped are of particular benefit to their own localities, they are of perhaps even greater value to the whole country. How could we possibly carry on our trade if we did not have ports properly and sufficiently equipped? I will support votes to all the ports that should be equipped; I cannot speak from personal knowledge with reference to the smaller ports on the St. Lawrence, but certainly I will support votes to Vancouver on the west and the ports on the Atlantic coast. I hope this year the minister will announce a national policy with regard to our ports, or certain of them which must be regarded as essential and necessary for the welfare of the Dominion.

I do not want to approach the subject by saying that when the ports are equipped the rest of the Dominion does not participate in the advantages they bring to the country, because that is not correct; they are equally valuable to the whole country, if not more so. Nor do I say that as an offset there is a huge expenditure on branch lines in the west, nor that in the central provinces, I would still have in reserve a vastly greater expenditure on the canals. However, I do not approach the question in that way; I do not think it desirable to do so. We should not have the idea in mind that a certain development in one portion of the country is of advantage only locally. All these ports will be of advantage to the whole Dominion, and they are necessary if we are to have a country which will grow and prosper and take care of its own business.

Mr. CANTLEY: I would like to call the attention of the house to an altogether different phase of this question. In the Duncan report the question of national ports and the harbours of St. John and Halifax are dealt with, and we must remember that in referring to the report of that commission the Prime Minister said the government were prepared to accept the recommendations practically in their entirety.

What were the recommendations of the Duncan commission as far as these two ports were concerned? They recommended that they should be nationalized and put under commissions, and what did that recommendation as to nationalization mean? We believe it meant that these ports were to be adequately equipped and that the expenditure necessary from time to time for their development and maintenance should be provided by the Dominion of Canada as a whole because these are national ports, open all the year and necessary for the development of Canada. But what do we find to-day? From confederation down until two years ago all the wharves, docks and equipment of the port of Halifax were provided either by the Department of Public Works or the Intercolonial railway, and the port was maintained and operated practically free from dues. Now the minister comes to parliament and asks us to authorize a loan to the harbour commissioners of Halifax upon which they must pay interest, and how are they to provide that interest? They can only provide it by imposing fees on all tonnage coming into the harbour, so that instead of maintaining this as a great national free to shipping port we will be doing the opposite. Was that the intention of the Duncan report? I am quite sure no man in this house who has read the report and who knows anything about the history of the port, its organization, and the part it played in the history of Canada, can form that opinion. I protest emphatically against these so-called nationalized maritime ports being placed by this government in such a position as that.

Mr. RALSTON: I thought the house and this committee listened last year almost ad nauseam to a discussion of the point just raised by my hon. friend, and I want to ask him now to read the recommendation in the report dealing with the ports of Halifax and

St. John and show us where it recommends what he has just suggested. I want to say to him that the report is to the effect that these ports should be dealt with as are the other great ports of Canada.

Mr. CANTLEY: Where do they say that?

Mr. RALSTON: In the report; apparently my hon. friend has forgotten. It he had been here last year he would have heard the whole thing discussed.

Mr. CANTLEY: It is not as convenient for me to forget as it is for some of my hon. friends opposite.

Mr. RALSTON: I do think that my hon. friends from Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, if they associate themselves with this discussion, should not put the province of Nova Scotia or the port of Halifax in the position of refusing what is being done in all good faith in an endeavour to carry out the recommendations of that report. The Duncan report recommended the appointment of a harbour commission; it was appointed and last year we made a loan of $500,000 to that commission. This resolution proposes a further loan of $5,000,000, and my hon. friends are not putting the province of Nova Scotia in a fair light before the whole country when they continually harp on the question whether or not this is the exact form in which the Duncan report described the assistance which should be given these ports. The point is that the money is to be granted and these ports are to be carried on in a businesslike and efficient way. The commission was appointed in order that there would be some body which would have an opportunity and be in position to get business for the port, and to provide facilities to both the shipper and those who provide bottoms for the purpose of carrying freight. This body was to work out a co-ordinated program for the development of that port, and it has endeavoured to do so.

I do not think it adds anything worth while to the discussion to harp continually on the question of whether the Duncan report has been carried out in its exact form. As a matter of fact, if you read the report with relation to these ports—and I have taken pains to ascertain this from other sources as well as the report itself—you will find that it was intended that these ports should be dealt with in a similar manner to that in which the other great ports of the Dominion were treated. It has been suggested that these ports are going to be damaged. A government would be foolish to adopt methods whereby ports which had been conducted in the way my hon. friend describes would suddenly find themselves injured by the establishment of such a commission. It would be nonsensical and idiotic for a commission to carry on their work in a way which would drive shipping away from the port. I want to say to my hon. friend, and say to this committee, that I do not subscribe for one moment to the doleful wails which come from time to time from our friends opposite, who are bound to look a gift horse in the mouth, as it were, and see if there is not some way in which they can accuse this government of not dotting every I and crossing every T in connection with the Duncan report.

My hon. friend the acting leader of the opposition (Mr. Guthrie) raised what seemed to me to be a new question with regard to this matter; he selected the vote to the harbour of Halifax as the object of an attack on this government for extravagance.

Mr. GUTHRIE: No, I did not; I said the aggregate of these votes.

Mr. RALSTON: He selected this resolution which is now before the committee. I did not hear him make any complaint before, but when it comes to the harbour of Halifax that is the time when hands must be raised and shrieks uttered to indicate that this government has started a riot of extravagance. I want to say that if every resolution and every item in these estimates is as fully justified as the vote for the harbour of Halifax, then I think there will be no complaint on that score. The words of my hon. friend's leader are still ringing in the ears of the members of this committee when he pleaded the other day for the expenditure of further large sums of money on certain works which were being discussed at that time. You cannot blow hot and cold at the same time.

My hon. friend the acting leader of the opposition raised another issue, and one which I am sorry to hear him raise. He does not generally do this, but in some way or other he seemed to have got off on a wrong tack. He asked where there was anything in this vote for the western provinces and for the great province of Ontario. He cannot vote money in one resolution for every province in the Dominion; we have to take one at a time. As has been properly pointed out by my hon .friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Cardin), there are specific resolutions on the order paper for railways in the west. A considerable portion of the western grain will pass through these eastern ports. I ask the province of Ontario through what ports of the Dominion of Canada they ship their goods of this time of year except through the ports of Halifax and St. John. My hon. friend shed tears over the province of Prince Edward Island, but there happens to be a vote in the estimates for something like $3,500,000 for a car ferry for that province. The provinces are not being neglected, and I do think it ill becomes my hon. friend to seize this vote as an opportunity to talk about extravagance and complain about the expenditures which are being made. My hon. friend's expression was that the house should hesitate in connection with this vote.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Mr. Chairman, I did not say that; I said the house should hesitate and be staggered by the aggregate of these votes.

Mr. RALSTON: I accept my hon. friend's statement, but Hansard will show just what he did say. Let us put it in the plural, and say that he said "these votes" while we were discussing this particular resolution, but I think he was effectively answered by his own fellow member from Halifax (Mr. Quinn), by the hon. member for St. John-Albert (Mr. MacLaren) and by the hon. member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Hanson). These hon. gentlemen have intimated that they are strongly in favour of this vote. Of course they are in favour, because it is a vote for a national port in the Dominion of Canada, a port which is absolutely necessary in order that the business of the Dominion should be carried on.

I am very much pleased that my colleagues in the government have agreed to putting this amount in the estimates and to making this advance to the harbour of Halifax. If my hon. friend the acting leader of the opposition had been in Halifax during the last few months and had seen the development there, had realized that the Canadian National ships are sailing from that port to all parts of the world, had realized the West India service is proving such a success, had known that the great steamship lines are making Halifax their turning point, then he would have realized that this house is fully justified in the vote which is proposed to be made by this resolution. I am glad to support it, and I am glad, as I said a moment ago, to be a member of a government which recognizes the importance of this port and which does not do any cheese paring when dealing with a port which has the merits of the port of Halifax.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Mr. Chairman, in no way did I limit my remarks to the port of Halifax, and no one in this committee understood that I did. It happened to be on this particular vote that I spoke, but my remarks were directed entirely to the aggregate expenditure proposed by the government, and not in regard to these four or five harbours. I referred to the aggregate expenditure proposed in regard to railway extensions, and the point I intended to make and did make was that it was time to call a halt. I mentioned the fact that the expenditures for harbours on the one side, and railways on the other, called for guarantees of about $57,000,000, and in addition to this amount there had been estimates placed before the house amounting to $400,000,000. I realize that the expenditure in respect to the port of Halifax is an attempt to carry out the recommendations of the Duncan report, but it is time that someone called attention to the manner in which this government is piling up expenditures. That is what I intended to do and what I hope I succeeded in doing, and I repudiate the suggestion that my remarks were in any way directed against the port of Halifax.

Mr. CANTLEY: I do not propose to be lectured by the hon. the Minister of National Defence. I think I have read the Duncan report as often and as carefully as has the minister.

Mr. RALSTON: I suggest that my hon. friend read it again.

Mr. CANTLEY: I will do that when it suits me to do so and without any advice from the minister. I may read and later refer to it so often that he will regret having referred to it. I think I understand the language of that report, and I submit, as I have already stated, that the action proposed to be taken now is not in accordance with the recommendations of that report. So far as "harping" on this commission's report is concerned, or "whining," which is the language —of another of the hon. minister's colleagues —I want to say that I am perfectly willing that my attitude and his should be left to the judgment of the people of Nova Scotia.

Mr. PRICE: I regret very much that the Minister of National Defence has become so stirred up over the rather mild criticism which has been offered from this side of the house with regard to the development of the ports of Halifax and St. John. The house is to be congratulated on the fact that we have been getting along so nicely; that legislation has been moving so rapidly, and that the policies of the government are being worked out by both sides of the house in such an harmonious manner. We are all pleased with the development that has taken place at the ports of Halifax and St. John, and also with the fact that the White Star line has given up the terminal of Portland, Maine, on the Grand Trunk system and has adopted Halifax instead. That suggestion, I think, came largely from this side of the house, and it was pointed out that the government had acquired the Grand Trunk—

Mr. RALSTON: I understand it was my hon. friends on that side of the house who voted to purchase the road to Portland.

Mr. PRICE: I was coming to that. After the amalgamation of the roads in days gone by and our being put in possession of the Grand Trunk railway which runs down to Portland, we were in a position to talk to the White Star people and to see whether it was possible to divert to a Canadian Atlantic port the traffic which was going to Portland. I am glad to note that has been done and the White Star line, after a successful test made with the steamer Regina, decided that Halifax would be in future their port. I am sure we on this side of the house are very much pleased with the efforts that have been made and the success that has been attained in this regard, in that the ports of Halifax and St. John are being recognized and that the government of the day, by improving them, is still further recognizing them. I hope in the near future the Minister of Railways will see his way clear to take the matter up with the management of the railways and see whether the grades cannot be lessened over that portion of the Canadian National Railways known as the Intercolonial where the grades are at the present time a little high. If that can be accomplished, we would have heavier trains passing through, and our Atlantic ports would be recognized more than they have been in the past.

I wish to point out to the Minister of Railways and the Minister of National Defence that the time is coming very rapidly when it will be almost unsafe on this side of the house to offer any criticism at all. We have been so far particularly mild on this side, but I can assure the government that there are points in connection with the recommendations of the Duncan commission that have not yet been carried out. As far, however, as these ports are concerned, we, as maritimers, are very much in accord with the stand which has been taken by the government in regard to their development.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in. Mr. Cardin thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 69, to provide a further loan to the Halifax harbour commissioners.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

78594—32½

RAILWAY ACT AMENDMENT

Hon. CHARLES A. DUNNING (Minister of Railways and Canals) moved the second reading of Bill No. 60, to amend the Railway Act.

Mr. STEVENS: Explain.

Mr. DUNNING: This bill contains several amendments. The matters dealt with in it are unrelated to each other, and it is therefore rather difficult, on the second reading, to discuss any one principle. The procedure I thought of suggesting to the house was that the whole bill might be referred, after discussion on the second reading, to the committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines, there to be examined without prejudice to discussion on the part of any hon. member at a later stage in committee of the whole. I will just run over the objects of the amendments proposed in the bill.

The first amendment deals with a matter discussed at the last session of parliament, namely, that of tolls on international bridges. It will be remembered that last session there was some discussion as to difficulties arising through various authorities having power to regulate tolls on international bridges, and I gave an undertaking on behalf of the government that we would look into the matter, and, if possible, propose a solution. The solution which is proposed in the first amendment in this bill is that all tolls on such bridges, however incorporated in the past, whatever the terms of the legislation presently existing may be, will in future be under the control of the Board of Railway Commissioners in the same manner as all other tolls.

The second amendment deals with a matter also discussed at the last session, and places under the control of the Board of Railway Commissioners the issue, sale or other disposition of increased capital stock of any company, the tolls of which are subject to the approval of the board. In that connection I would just say that the proposed amendment is of great importance and far-reaching in its effects. I am advised that a number of institutions coming under the legislation desire to make representations with regard to it, and I presume those representations will, if that is agreeable to the house, be made to the committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines.

The third amendment deals with the subject matter of the resolution passed a day or two ago, extending the provisions relating to contributions to the grade crossing fund for a further period of ten years at the rate of $200,000 a year. I gave some information when the resolution was before the house and if the bill goes to the railway committee it will be possible there to summon the officers of the railway commission and to go into any phase of the administration of the grade crossing fund.

The fourth and fifth amendments are made at the request of the Board of Railway Commissioners, and are technical in character, designed to facilitate the filing of tariffs and reduce the number of tariffs to be filed in certain cases. I am advised by the board that, in order to comply with the law as it at present exists, it is necessary for companies to file as many as 170 documents in connection with one particular item of freight traffic. The recommendations of the board have to do with simplifying the procedure in that regard.

The sixth amendment deals with a question much discussed last session, having to do with companies which are subsidiary to companies at present within the range of the act. My hon. friend from South Toronto (Mr. Geary) has a bill now before the railway committee dealing with this matter. During the recess the law officers of the department and of the railway commission and of the Department of Justice have been giving attention to the best manner in which to effectuate the purpose which was the subject of so much discussion last session, and which is now made a part of this bill. The method of obtaining the objective is unlike the one adopted by my hon. friend from South Toronto. The proposal in this bill is more far-reaching. It embraces all the companies falling within the purview of the act, but I think it will be found to be completely satisfactory so far as effectuating that purpose is concerned, if parliament desires to have that purpose effectuated. I submitted the proposal to the railway commission with the question as to whether they would have under these amendments with respect to subsidiary companies all the powers necessary to enable them to make any investigation into their affairs which the carrying out of the act would necessitate, and the answer was that the amendments proposed, and as contained in this bill, would enable them to do what was desired in that regard.

I think that covers all the proposals contained in the bill. While I am, of course, prepared to listen to a discussion of any of them, I am debarred on the second reading from speaking again and from answering questions, and I suggest that it would be more convenient to discuss the amendments at another stage. I just wish to advise the house that it is my intention to move that the bill be referred to the railway committee, in order that an examination of all the details of the bill can be there made.

Hon. HUGH GUTHRIE (South Wellington): I have listened with a good deal of interest to the explanation of the minister, and I have read the bill with some care. The bill is involved and to some extent technical, and I think the suggestion of the minister that it be now read a second time and be referred to the railway committee for further consideration is a very wise one.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, and referred to the select standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines.

WAR REPARATIONS

PAYMENT OF $2,500,000 TO CUSTODIAN

The house resumed from February 14, consideration of the motion of Mr. Rinfret that the house go into committee on the following proposed resolution:

That the Minister of Finance be authorized to place to the credit of the custodian, out of the reparation money paid into the treasury for losses sustained during the late war, a sum not exceeding $2,500,000 and that provision be made as to the method and scale of payments.

Mr. W. G. ERNST (Queens-Lunenburg): Before any debate takes place, I would ask the Secretary of State (Mr. Rinfret) if he would explain the proposals of the government under this resolution.

Hon. FERNAND RINFRET (Secretary of State): That is my intention. This question was before the house during the last session, having been brought up on a motion moved by the hon. gentleman who has just risen (Mr. Ernst).

Mr. GUTHRIE: Is the hon. gentleman closing the debate, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. RINFRET: No, I am opening it.

Mr. GUTHRIE: He has already spoken.

Mr. SPEAKER: I understand that the hon. gentleman has spoken once.

Mr. RINFRET: The question was raised the other day when this motion was before the house, and I understood there was to be a debate to give the minister a chance to explain the resolution. I am in the hands of the house, but it seems only natural that an explanation should be made.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Does the minister close the debate by speaking now? He has already spoken.

Mr. SPEAKER: No. He is simply appealing to the house for a chance to explain the resolution in committee.

Mr. RINFRET: Perhaps my hon. friends would consent to the resolution going into committee, and I will make my explanation there.

Mr. ERNST: I would ask the minister to make his explanation now.

Mr. SPEAKER: He has already spoken.

Mr. RINFRET: I cannot do it on both occasions.

Mr. ERNST: Before the resolution goes to the committee, there are some remarks that I wish to make. We are in the somewhat unusual position of having a resolution introduced by the minister, setting aside $2,500,000 for certain purposes connected with reparation claims, and we are completely in the dark as to what is meant by the resolution. As I understood the minister's attitude when the resolution was first moved, he refused to give information.

Mr. RINFRET: No, that is not fair.

Mr. ERNST: I asked him when he was on his feet to give the house some explanation as to his proposals. The only assumption we can make is that in setting aside $2,500,000 the government is setting aside a sum that is insufficient to pay the claims in full. Whether the minister may say later that the $2,500,000 is being set aside as a payment by way of instalment, I do not know, but I am going to assume for the moment that this amount is being set aside not as an instalment, but as the final dealing of the government with the question of reparations; that the government is setting aside $2,500,00, as was intimated by the minister, as an act of grace towards those who suffered loss by reason of enemy actions during the late war.

I had occasion last year to refer at some length to this matter. It is not my intention to go into it fully now, but there are a few remarks relative to the subject which I feel ought to be repeated in order that the house may have a clear understanding of the situation.

We have in the consolidated revenue fund of this country to-day, or had last year, the sum of $10,800,000, which has been received as payment on reparations from Germany under the treaty of Versailles. We should have to-day in the consolidated revenue fund, if Germany has made her payments during the year, approximately $15,000,000, because the payments of reparations by Germany to Canada are fixed at approximately $5,000,000 for an indefinite period of years. Those payments are made, if at all, by reason of one fact only, namely a contract made between this country, as one of the allied nations, and Germany, and that contract is known as the treaty of Versailles. Those payments are being made under article 232 of the treaty of Versailles, and at the risk of repetition I want the house to listen again to that article. I shall read only a portion of it:

> The allied and associated governments, however, require, and Germany undertakes, that she will make compensation for all damage done to the civilian population of the allied and associated powers and to their property during the period of the belligerency of each as an allied or associated power against Germany by such aggression by land by sea and from the air, and in general all damage as defined in Annex I hereto.

The first thing to which I wish to draw the attention of the house is that obviously the whole spirit of that section is the payment of civilian damage, whether it be damage to property or to life or to health. Added to it is "in general all damage as defined in Annex I" of the article. Now Annex I contains some ten subsections, eight of them relating entirely to the individual and only two of them relating to the state. One of those two is of no consequence, and the second relates to the payment of pensions on the French scale.

We have received money from Germany under that contract, and in no other way; and the whole spirit of the contract is that this money is paid as compensation for civilian losses during the war inflicted by Germany or her allies. We have received to-day, as I pointed out in the beginning of my remarks, approximately $15,000,000. That is one side of the picture. We have received that money from Germany under a contract, and it is ear-marked for a certain purpose.

The other side of the picture is this: Have we ascertained the claims for which that money has been paid by Germany? I need not take you any further back than the report of Mr. Friel, which was filed with the government on December 27, 1927. I may say in passing that last year the excuse which the Secretary of State offered for not dealing with the matter was that the government had not had time, that they only received the report late in the session. But they had the report of Mr. Friel in their possession on December 27, 1927, the date which it bears, or one month before the session began.

By this report Mr. Friel found that some sixteen hundred people in this country are entitled to payment of claims in full under article 232 of the treaty of Peace. Those sixteen hundred people have coming to them a total amount in round figures of $4,246,000. He has recommended the payment of interest at five per cent in the case of property loss from the date of the loss, in the case of all other claims from the date of the ratification of the treaty of Versailles by this parliament, January 10, 1920. With interest those claims amount to-day to approximately $6,500,000. According to the figures which the Secretary of State tabled last session they amounted then to just a little over six and one-quarter millions of dollars.

Now, sir, we have the complete picture. We have fifteen million dollars in the consolidated revenue fund of this country received from Germany, and we have the claims ascertained at six and a half million dollars, with interest. Why, then, is the government setting aside two and a half million dollars to pay these claims? Why not the six and a half million dollars which are requisite to pay them in full?

The attitude which the minister took last session was this. He said: we are going to follow the practice of Great Britain. Because they made ex gratia payments, we are going to make ex gratia payments, or charitable donations, if you choose to call them such, to those who suffered loss by enemy action. He also said that the provisions of article 232 of the peace treaty had been abrogated at the conference of the Spa in 1921, so that that article, in popular parlance, went by the board. I ask hon. members if they ever heard of a contract between two individuals abrogated by a bargain made between two other individuals. Suppose I make a contract with the hon. Secretary of State, can I abrogate that contract by entering into an agreement with the member for Inverness? Yet that is what he is saying in relation to article 232 of the treaty of Versailles. He cannot produce anything to show the house that Germany is paying one cent to this country or to any other of the allies, with the exception of the United States, under any other arrangement than that set out in article 232 of the treaty of Versailles; and in the case of the United States Germany pays under a separate treaty which contains exactly the same provisions.

Great Britain's course was what? Great Britain in 1920 set aside five million pounds, which was applied towards payment of necessitous claims in the first place, and on a sliding scale towards payment of all other claims. But for two reasons the case of Great Britain is not parallel with ours. Firstly, when Great Britain set aside five million pounds she was setting aside her own money; she had not received any from Germany. In the second place, Great Britain requisitioned all her shipping during the war. It was under the control of the state; the state insured it, and if a ship was lost the insurance company paid the policy money. In other words, if the owner lost his ship he did not lose the value of it; he received compensation. But in this country the shipping was carried on by private individuals, and if a ship went down the owner had to bear the loss. Consequently, as a majority of our claims are claims for shipping losses, there is no parallel between the situation in Great Britain and the precedent which the minister finds in the action of the British government, and our own situation.

Let us take the record of the government itself. The action of Great Britain dates back to 1920. In 1925 this government surely was aware of the precedent which had been set up by Great Britain, yet in 1925 they appointed Mr. Friel to investigate these claims. They were also aware of that precedent in 1923, when they appointed the late Doctor Pugsley to investigate claims falling within article 232 of the treaty. I ask the house to bear with me for one minute while I turn to the commission of Doctor Pugsley. This is the first paragraph:

> Whereas, in and by an order of our governor general in council, bearing date the thirteenth day of March, in the year of Our Lord, 1923, (copy of which is hereto annexed), provision has been made for an investigation by our commissioner therein and hereinafter named and report upon all of the claims set forth and referred to in the said order in council hereto annexed, for the purpose of determining whether they are within the categories in the first annex to section one of part eight (reparation) of the treaty of peace with Germany, and the fair amount of such claims, and to make such findings as may be of assistance to the government of Canada in determining which, if any, of such claims should be paid and the extent of payment thereof, and for the purpose of considering and recommending to the custodian of enemy property releases where the parties are necessitous, suffering and in hardship.

I draw the attention of the house to these words:

> —to make such findings as may be of assistance to the government of Canada in determining which, if any, of such claims should be paid, and the extent of payment thereof,

In the first place, Doctor Pugsley was appointed to investigate claims falling within article 232 of the treaty of peace. In the second place, he was appointed to determine the fair amount of the claims in order to assist the government in deciding what they should do. Doctor Pugsley's appointment, I may say in passing, was three years after the action of Great Britain, which is now set up as a precedent. In 1925, when Mr. Friel, was appointed, the recital in the commission reads in part the same as that given to Doctor Pugsley, but the last words are different:

Whereas in and by our certain letters patent under the great seal of Canada, bearing dates respectively the thirteenth day of March and the twenty-first day of May in the year of Our Lord, 1923, a copy of which is hereto annexed, we did nominate, constitute and appoint the late the Honourable William Pugsley, in his lifetime of the city of St. John in the province of New Brunswick, to be our commissioner to investigate and report upon all the claims set forth and referred to in the orders in council of the thirteenth day of March and the twenty-first day of May, 1923, copy of which was annexed to our letters patent respectively, and all claims which might be submitted to our said commissioner for the purpose of determining whether they are within the first annex to section one of part eight of the treaty of Versailles and the fair amount of such claims.

Now I ask the house to note the change in the wording. In this case Mr. Friel was appointed to investigate claims falling within article 232 of the treaty of peace, and he is appointed to recommend the fair amount of such claims. The words:

—as may be of assistance to the government of Canada in determining which, if any, of such claims should be paid, and the extent of payment thereof—

—have been deleted from the recital, and obviously they have been deleted for a purpose. That purpose was that the government at that date thought it would be bound to pay what Mr. Friel recommended. That is obvious from the fact that on the very day of issue of Mr. Friel's commission Mr. Copp, then Secretary of State, introduced into this house a resolution providing for payment of Mr. Friel's awards. How in face of that declaration of policy can the government come here and say to-day: "We are going to provide two and a half million dollars in payment of claims which with interest aggregate six and a half million dollars"? It is changing the whole policy of the government, and changing it, I submit, without reason.

Mr. Friel in the course of his report recommended that all these claims be paid in full with interest on property loss from the date of loss, and on all other claims from the date of ratification of the peace treaty by this country. Now, sir, in addition to that, when Mr. Friel was appointed, as also when Doctor Pugsley was appointed, there were other significant words in the orders in council. In both orders the German government was given the right to have counsel appear before both Mr. Friel and Doctor Pugsley on the investigation of these claims. I ask the Secretary of State, what interest has the German government in a charitable donation by this government to the citizens of this country? Why was the German government allowed to have counsel, indeed, asked to have counsel before the reparations commissioner if it was not because the government felt bound by article 232 of the treaty of peace?

It is not my intention to labour this question at great length, but I submit that we have in the United States an exact parallel to our own case. The treaty of peace between Germany and the United States contains a provision which is identical with our article 232. The United States last year provided for the payment of its reparations claims in full, and to do so they required $191,000,000. They did not have enough German reparations money and so they took $50,000,000 of their own. They took a large sum from the enemy property fund and paid in full all claims up to $100,000, and provided, in respect to the larger claims, that payment would be made in full as the money was received from Germany. Their situation being precisely the same as ours, they present an exact parallel; and if the government are looking for a precedent in this instance I would ask them to look, as they so often do, to the south of the line and not across the water.

But apart altogether from the equity of the matter, I submit that there are moral reasons why these claims should be paid. I know that the minister will probably reproach me with confusing issues if I refer to the enemy property fund and the payments made out of that fund. But we had in this country, and we have to-day, a very considerable fund made up of sequestrated German property and debts due from the people of this country to German nationals, and the distribution of that fund falls within articles 296 and 297 of the treaty. Broadly speaking, claims under the treaty can be made against that fund only in the case of detention or destruction of property within the boundaries of Germany during the war. Let me give an example. At the outbreak of the war the Thompson Shipping Company had two vessels tied up in Hamburg, where they remained during the war. That company were able to claim under article 296 of the treaty, and they received an award of $1,300,000 from the mixed tribunal which sits in London, so that the government of this country paid out of the enemy property fund that sum in settlement of the Thompson Shipping Company's claim. What is the difference morally or in equity between the case of the Thompson Shipping Company and that of Besco—or the Scotia company, a subsidiary of Besco—which had five vessels sunk on the high seas during the war? Are we to give the Thompson Shipping Company 100 cents on the dollar and, relying upon a technicality, give to the Scotia only 10 cents? Is that equitable or just?

Take another case within article 296. The Massey-Harris Company had a large amount of property sequestrated in Germany, in respect to which they received $300,000; while The T. Eaton Company had a large amount sequestrated in Amsterdam, outside the bounds of Germany, and so it did not fall within either article 296 or 297. The T. Eaton Company had to rely on article 232. The Massey-Harris Company received 100 cents on the dollar; and are we going to give the T. Eaton Company 10 cents? I ask the members of this house whether that is reasonable or just. Can we make fish of one and flesh of the other? Having considered ourselves bound by the provisions of articles 296 and 297, are we going to say that in this case article 232 is not applicable? Let me tell the house further that in the case of disputed claims, where there is no claim under 296 or 297, and where the claim has only been asserted, the German government pays 15 per cent in settlement. Now are we going to be worse than the German government, which pays our nationals 15 per cent on an unfounded claim, and pay to our own people, on claims which are just, only 10 cents? But there are other moral reasons besides.

Take the situation in my own constituency —and I know that the hon. member for Antigonish-Guysborough (Mr. Duff) will corroborate every word I say. A large number of fishing vessels were sunk there during the war; the submarines got amongst the fleet and destroyed the vessels. These vessels are operated on the share basis: the men go to sea in the ships, relying for their pay on the proportion of the value of the catch to which they are entitled. Many of these ships were sunk, in many instances when they contained their catch, so that the men lost their season's earnings. The vessels are more or less community owned; many of the men who sail in them are shareholders. The commissioner recommended the payment of property loss as well as payment on account of lost earnings; he also recommended compensation as solatium in the case of men who were set adrift sometimes hundreds of miles from land in open dories. In many instances these men came home penniless. Some had to mortgage their homes to get along or had to be carried by the local merchants. They had to pay interest on the money they borrowed to tide them over the period to which their earnings would have applied. They paid interest on that money, and are they not to be compensated for the loss they have sustained? I appeal to the government therefore, even at this late date, to amend this resolution so as to make payment not only of 100 cents on the dollar but also of interest, as recommended by the commission. In so doing, the government would be only doing justice, and tardy justice at that.

Mr. THOMAS CANTLEY (Pictou): I wish to support the claim made by the hon. member who has spoken (Mr. Ernst). I am surprised at the action taken by the government in this matter. In New Glasgow one of our ships, of about 5,500 tons, was taken over by the British government and was later sunk in the Mediterranean. The owners were paid the full value of that vessel years ago as was done in cases referred to by the hon. member for Lunenburg (Mr. Ernst). Take the case of half a dozen ships or more owned by the Scotia company of New Glasgow: we owned or controlled some 75,000 tons or more of shipping at the beginning of the war and at its conclusion had but one vessel left. We had a steamer carrying railway cars to Vladivostok, built at New Glasgow for the then allied Russian government; owing to the collapse of the Panama canal she had to be sent through the Mediterranean and the Suez canal. That ship was torpedoed south of the island of Crete, the crew being turned adrift. They were adrift some five days in wintry weather, finally landing on the south of Crete, after one of the boats was upset in the swell and its occupants thrown into the water. Now that is only one case out of several. Had these vessels been taken over by the British government, as was another New Glasgow-owned steam vessel, full compensation would have been made and that years ago. There was only one reason why they were not so taken over by that government; they were employed almost solely in the transport of railway cars or other material for use of the British government or the allies. Their charter value at that time, according to the rates paid other steamers, would have been quite $200,000 per month. As yet we have not received a penny, and now the Secretary of State proposes to pay us 15 per cent of our loss. Is there anything fair, is there anything just, is there anything reasonable in that proposition? I leave it to the house.

Mr. L. J. LADNER (Vancouver South): I rise at this stage to protest against the principle involved in this resolution. The very able addresses of the last two speakers leave little to be said, if it is possible to convince the government of the wisdom, even at this moment, of changing their course. There is another aspect of the question. I had intended covering some of the points made by the last two speakers, but will not need to do so. However, I would like to point out the injustice, the unfairness and the lack of consideration on the part of the government with respect to Canadian citizens as compared with the treatment received by citizens of the United States, Great Britain and Germany. There is the case of a company which insured vessels carrying produce across the ocean; the vessels were sunk, the goods lost and the insurance paid. The insurance company is subrogated to the ranks of the claimants. In the United States, under the act known as the Settlement of War Claims Act of 1928, the rights and merits of these claims were fully investigated and an act was put through providing that claimants of this kind, who actually sustained the loss, should be reimbursed to the extent of one hundred cents on the dollar plus interest.

Part of the work in Canada had been done before Commissioner Friel was appointed. I know of one case where Commissioner Pugsley brought down a judgment which was not officially reported, favouring the claimant. Mr. Friel inquired into the whole question again and came to the conclusion that the claim should not be allowed because of a technicality which is not recognized in any other country; in other words, equitably and legally he was entirely wrong. I understood that it was the intention of the government some time ago to provide for the right of appeal to the exchequer court; large sums of money and consequent far-reaching effects upon business make it right and just that something more than the authority of a commissioner of the government should be final in matters of this kind. Why the government have changed their course I do not know; they seek to appropriate $2,500,000 now, with the inference that this is the final distribution, notwithstanding the fact that the government have in hand approximately $15,000,000 of German money under the Dawes plan which, by all rules of common sense and ordinary understanding, was intended to reimburse the nationals of this country. I think the forceful argument of the hon. member for Queens-Lunenburg (Mr. Ernst) not only demonstrates that point but is overwhelmingly convincing in the conclusion he drew.

Now I put it to the government: On what ground of reason, fairness or justice to our own people whom we normally seek to protect can the government refuse to use this money for this purpose? In addition to that they have some $12,000,000 in the hands of the custodian of alien property, which under certain conditions would be available to our nationals. It seems to me that instead of aiming to protect and reimburse our own people for whom they are trustees, the government are seeking to deprive Canadians of the money and rights to which they are justly entitled through the depredations and the inhuman conduct of the enemy during the war; they are depriving our people of these things and extending to Canadians a treatment which the citizens of no other country are obliged to receive. I do not put it stronger than that, because I do not think it is the intention of the Secretary of State to throw deliberately upon the people of this country who were injured as a result of the wrongful acts of the enemy an injustice which cannot be defended in a court of law, in parliament or before the bar of public opinion.

There is just one other aspect of the case. I appeal to the government to carry out the understanding, whether official or unofficial, that the right of appeal to the exchequer court would be established. These claims, involving large sums of money, should not be left to the judgment of one official of the government; there should be a right of appeal to some court and I submit that the exchequer court is the proper place. I want to draw the attention of the government to the case of the Lusitania, which covers some of the points with which I am concerned, and which was considered in the United States before the umpire of the Mixed Claims Commission, whose judgment was as follows:

> The Lusitania was freighted with persons and with personal property. Germany's act in destroying her caused the loss of the ship, some of the lives, and practically all of the property that formed her cargo. The lives that were lost and the property that was destroyed entailed economic losses to the world, to the nations to which they belonged, and to the individuals owning or having an interest in the property or dependent for contributions upon the physical or mental efforts of those whose producing power was destroyed by death. The aggregate amount of the property lost became fixed when the ship sank and is neither increased or diminished nor in any wise influenced by the amount of the insurance or reinsurance thereon. The insurance becomes material only in determining who really suffered the loss. This is because a contract of marine or war risk insurance is a contract of indemnity ingrafted on and inhering in the property insured.

The extent of the liability thereunder is limited by the economic loss suffered. The insured suffers no loss to the extent of payments made him by the insurer, who is the real loser to the extent of such payments not reimbursed by reinsurance.

That is an extract from the decisions given by the Mixed Claims Commisison in the United States. I have had brought to my attention, among others, one claim of some substance which comes exactly within the principle of that decision, a principle which has been followed in Great Britain, and I submit that in the face of the finding of the commissioner, wherein he bases his decision against the law and against the equities as they are determined in other countries, nothing could be fairer than that the applicant should have the right of appeal to some other tribunal for final decision, where perhaps he would be given greater consideration both as to the law and as to the merits of the case.

Without involving the rule to which you referred, Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister now if it is the intention of the government, before the completion of this matter, to afford an opportunity for appeals of this kind to be presented, or is the present motion the final action on this question?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: When we are in committee we can answer the questions.

Mr. LADNER: If we allow the resolution to pass we are approving of the principle, and we think the principle unjust.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My hon. friend is asking a number of questions which can be answered only when the resolution is being debated in committee. I am not asking him to do more than to go into committee, and then the questions can be answered.

Mr. LADNER: How can we do that without approving of the principle?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The hon. member need not approve of it unless he wishes; that is for him to decide, but this is not the time to ask questions.

Mr. LADNER: There is no difficulty in answering that question if the minister so desires. I have stated, Mr. Speaker, and I desire to repeat it in another form in an effort to impress it upon the government—

Mr. RINFRET: I rise to a point of order. In view of the fact that I am precluded by the rules from speaking again on the main question, I should not be asked further questions.

Mr. STEVENS: On the point of order, I submit that the government have a dozen ministers who could answer this question.

[Mr. Ladner.]

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: It is not the proper time to answer them.

Mr. STEVENS: The Prime Minister is endeavouring to apply the rules in a manner which will force us to accept a principle which we do not think we should accept.

Mr. RINFRET: On another point of order, Mr. Speaker, I contend that the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens) has already spoken and that he should not discuss the resolution further.

Mr. STEVENS: I was speaking to a point of order, and therefore I was in order.

Motion stands.

Wednesday, February 27, 1929

The house met at three o'clock.

PETITION

APPLICATION OF SUPERANNUATION ACT TO GOVERNMENT TELEGRAPH SERVICE

Mr. A. W. NEILL (Comox-Alberni): I desire to present to the house a petition signed by employees of the telegraph service of Canada praying that they be permitted to come under the provisions of the Superannuation Act and would ask that it be read.

The Clerk Assistant read the petition as follows:

To the Honourable the House of Commons of Canada, in parliament assembled:

1. The petition of the undersigned employees of the telegraph service of Canada humbly sheweth,

That we are employed in the telegraph department of the government service as telegraph agent operators, telegraph messengers, linemen, foremen, operator-linemen, agent-linemen, etc.

2. That it has been ruled that we are not eligible for superannuation as we are said to be paid at "prevailing rates."

3. That this is only a technical distinction as our salaries do not fluctuate, but remain constant for many years at a time. In this connection we may mention that those who are classified as "telegraph operators" are entitled to superannuation. This will apply to subordinate operators in a town, while in small towns and in country places where the telegraph operator has the responsibility of action as agent, he is then classified as "telegraph agent operator" and is not eligible.

4. That parliament has decided that it is in the interest of the public that permanent experienced officials should be encouraged to stay in the service by the prospect of superannuation in their old age and that the same argument applies with equal force to our case.

Wherefore your petitioners humbly pray that your honourable house may be pleased to pass legislation enabling them to contribute to the superannuation fund and derive its benefit; and as in duty bound your petitioners will ever pray, etc.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

First report of the select standing committee on banking and commerce.—Mr. Hay.

OPIUM AND NARCOTIC DRUG ACT

REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON BILL NO. 4

Mr. J. P. HOWDEN (St. Boniface) moved that the first report of the special committee for the consideration of Bill No. 4 to amend and consolidate the Opium and Narcotic Drug Act, be concurred in.

Mr. PETER McGIBBON (Muskoka-Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I do not see why there should be any particular rush to hold special sittings of this committee while parliament is in session. The work of the house is well advanced; the session is young. At most a couple more meetings of this committee will enable it to finish its work. Personally I think we can find plenty of time for this purpose without sitting while the house is in session.

Motion negatived.

DOMINION ELECTIONS ACT

REPORTS OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

First and second reports of the special committee appointed in accordance with the recommendation by the select standing committee on privileges and elections.—Mr. Power.

PRIVILEGES AND ELECTIONS

Mr. C. G. POWER (Quebec South) moved:

That the first and second reports of the special committee appointed in accordance with the recommendation of the select standing committee on privileges and elections, concurred in by the house on June 5, 1928, be concurred in.

Mr. W. A. BOYS (North Simcoe): As a member of the committee, I would ask the chairman not to press the motion. Surely at this stage of the session there is no occasion for such a motion; if it becomes necessary later on, may it not be considered then? Surely we can have our meetings in the morning and not while the house is in session, when we desire to be here attending to our duties.

Mr. POWER: This appeared to be the unanimous desire of the members of the committee who attended at this morning's session, and therefore I have presented it. Perhaps I may be allowed to say a word to express what I regard as the views of the committee. The two acts, the Dominion Elections Act and the Dominion Controverted Elections Act, are quite bulky. There are a large number of articles which it would appear to have been the intention of the committee to go over thoroughly. If that is the case, it will take a great deal of time, possibly more than we shall be able to devote to the matter this session. Personally, much as I should wish to meet the desire of my hon. friend, I must urge strongly that we proceed at the earliest possible moment with the work we have in hand. It may be that this is not of any great importance to the general public, but surely members of parliament ought to be interested in the act which sends them here, and we should do our utmost to get on with the work as soon as possible. However, so far as I am concerned, the act is fairly satisfactory in that it has sent me here, and if it were not revised this year I do not suppose I should be any the worse.

Motion agreed to.

EXSHAW, ALBERTA, POSTMASTER

Mr. IRVINE:

The only other qualified applicant besides Miss Dobson was Mr. Adam Baptie, but as he was of advanced age, that is, over seventy years, the commissioners considered the appointment should go to a younger person. The selection was made as a result of a rating made from the applications, and the report made by the district superintendent of postal service, Calgary.

UNOPPOSED MOTION FOR PAPERS

IMPERIAL CABLE MERGER

On the motion of Mr. Heaps:

For a copy of all letters, cables, correspondence and other documents or agreements, entered into by the Canadian government in connection with the imperial cable merger of 1928.

Mr. VENIOT: On Monday when this matter came up I asked the hon. member to let it stand, for certain reasons which I presented to the house. I have no objection to the motion passing now, and I will undertake to produce the papers just as soon as it is possible to do so.

Motion agreed to.

NATURAL RESOURCES

PROPOSAL THAT DISPOSITION BE EFFECTIVE ONLY ON APPROVAL OF PARLIAMENT

The house resumed from Monday, February 25, consideration of the motion of Mr. Woodsworth:

That, in the opinion of this house, no disposition of the natural resources, under the control of the federal government, shall be effective until ratified by parliament.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): When the house adjourned on Monday evening last, the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) had just concluded speaking in reference to this motion. Listening to my hon. friend I gathered that what he was most anxious to ascertain was the reason for haste in the transfer of certain natural resources, in particular the natural resources of Manitoba. Hon. members will recall that over and over again the leader of the opposition asked: "Why this haste? Why the haste in transferring these resources?" I would ask hon. members to recall the speech made by the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) just two weeks earlier in the session when we were debating the address. My hon. friend was not asking then, "Why the haste?" He asked on that occasion over and over again, "Why the delay? Why the delay in the transfer of natural resources?" We had caused to be placed in the speech from the throne a reference to the desire of the government to transfer the resources of the western provinces, and indicating some progress that had been made; and when my hon. friend came to refer to that part of the speech, the whole tenor of his remarks was in the nature of a chastisement of the government for the long delay which had taken place in the transfer of the resources. May I answer his question as to "why the haste" by saying that "the haste was in order to avoid further delay." The whole reason of the haste was to avoid delay.

Let me briefly review the outstanding facts with respect to the transfer to the western provinces of their natural resources. I mentioned to my hon. friend at the time that primarily this government had not been responsible for the delay; as a matter of fact our efforts have all been in the direction of expediting the transfer with respect to all three of the western provinces. In 1911, as my hon. friend said on a previous occasion, when the Sifton government was in office in Alberta, Mr. Sifton made an appeal to Sir Wilfrid Laurier for the transfer to Alberta of its natural resources. The condition which Alberta proposed at the time was that the resources should be returned and that the province should also be permitted to retain the subsidy which had been given in lieu of resources when the province was created, and when it was decided that the Dominion government rather than the province should administer those resources. Sir Robert Borden's government succeeded that of Sir Wilfrid Laurier. Mr. Sifton was still in office in Alberta and he repeated the application for the transfer of the resources to Alberta in terms similar to those he had proposed to Sir Wilfrid

The war came on, and the question of the transfer of the resources stood in abeyance for the time being, but when the Union government was in office an application was made not alone by the premier of Alberta but by the premiers of the three western provinces to the Union government for the immediate transfer of the resources. They were given to understand that the resources might be transferred but that if this were done the subsidy which had been given in lieu of the resources would have to be discontinued. They were not satisfied with that reply and the matter dropped so far as the Union government was concerned. Then the Hon. Arthur Meighen formed an administration, and while Mr. Meighen was in office the three western provinces were represented at a conference with the Dominion government, at which conference the request was made that the resources be transferred. The representatives were told by Mr. Meighen that they could have the resources back provided they were willing to forego the subsidies being paid them in lieu of the resources. Mr. Meighen said that would be the quickest way to solve the matter, but that was not satisfactory and the western provinces refused to make an agreement with the Dominion government.

We can hardly be held responsible for the delay which took place from 1911 to 1921, but for what has since transpired we are to some degree responsible. However, that responsibility is not all ours; it takes two to make a bargain, and if the resources have not been transferred to the western provinces thus far it has not been because of our unwillingness to go as far as our predecessors went, or indeed because of our unwillingness to go a great deal further, but because of the unwillingness of the western provinces up to the present to accept the resources even on what we consider the very generous terms we have offered them. The present administration came into office in December, 1921; in 1922, our first year in office, we received a deputation of the western premiers and discussed with them the question of the transfer of the resources to the western provinces. We were unable to reach any definite agreement as to terms, but we did get along a certain distance with respect to a basis for further negotiations. When the deputation left Ottawa an announcement was made in this house that we had agreed with the western provinces that the transfer should be made on a basis which would put the western provinces in a position of equality with the other provinces of the Dominion. The announcement also was made that the provinces themselves felt that no good purpose would be served by all three seeking to deal with the government at the one time but that it would be better for each province to negotiate separately with the administration, and separate negotiations then started with the three provinces.

I might give to the house a very brief outline of the negotiations with all three provinces, and in that connection I would like the house particularly to notice how the negotiations have proceeded with respect to Alberta as compared to the progress made with either Manitoba or Saskatchewan, because the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) seemed to imply that Alberta had not been treated just as fairly and generously as Manitoba or Saskatchewan; he contended that there was no reason why Alberta should be third in the race, so to speak, and should not get treatment equal to that given Manitoba and Saskatchewan. A review of the situation will show I believe that as far as Alberta is concerned we have gone much further than we have gone with either Manitoba or Saskatchewan and that negotiations as to the transfer of the resources are much nearer completion with respect to that province than with the others, though of necessity the final word rests with the province of Alberta itself.

Now may I come back to Manitoba, and here again draw particular attention to the question of the leader of the opposition, "Why the haste?" The leader of the opposition sought to have it appear, as I gathered from his remarks, that there was some sinister reason which accounts for the fact that in the month of July last a basis of transfer was effected and an agreement arrived at with the province of Manitoba. In other words, his remarks were calculated to cause hon. members to ask why this basis was not reached in September, in November, in December or during this year instead of July of last year. That is the question I wish to answer, and I hope to make the answer quite clear by quoting to members of the house some of the correspondence which passed between the government of Manitoba and this government in arranging for that particular conference. I will not go back to 1922 and discuss what took place during 1922, 1923, 1924 and 1925, but I will give the house as the first communcation a letter from Premier Bracken of Manitoba under date of January 13, 1927. In listening to this letter I wish hon. members to seek to put themselves in the position of this administration in dealing with another government. This letter emphasizes the delays which have ocurred and urges that with as little delay as possible a conference be arranged. Note again the date of the letter, January 13, 1927. The letter is addressed to myself as Prime Minister and to the ministers of the federal government, and proceeds:

Mr. Premier and Gentlemen:

After more than four years of negotiations upon the basis of the agreement of April 21, 1922, between the governments of the Dominion and the province of Manitoba, we have reached very reluctantly the conclusion that the attempt to settle the natural resources question by mutual consent has broken down.

There have been two conferences, five or six less formal interviews, and almost continuous correspondence during the past three years.

Not only have all negotiations for a final settlement broken down, but the proposal of Manitoba to adjust at once less controversial details like the school lands and the school lands fund has proved unacceptable to the Dominion. In his letter of January 29, 1924, the Premier of Canada took the position that all negotiations

"have contemplated that the whole question should be dealt with as one, and disposed of either by mutual consent or by arbitration, as provided in the agreement made between the Dominion and the province on the 21st day of April, 1922."

In a subsequent letter, dated February 9, 1924, the Premier of Canada added that there were "limits beyond which, with the best will in the world, we cannot go and hope to obtain parliamentary approval of our proposals. . . . If no agreement can be reached, we must, I suppose, resort to arbitration."

In this conclusion the province of Manitoba is now prepared to acquiesce.

We take this opportunity also of stating frankly that the terms which have been made with the province of Alberta are not, and in our opinion never can be acceptable to the province of Manitoba, since Manitoba came into confederation in 1870, thirty-five years before the province of Alberta was created, and also because the agreement of April 21, 1922, was made exclusively with the province of Manitoba.

On behalf of this province therefore we beg to state that we are prepared to remit this whole question for arbitration to some tribunal to be mutually agreed upon. We would suggest that probably the most acceptable tribunal that could be agreed upon would be the Judicial Committee of His Majesty's Privy Council, if that could be arranged.

Will you kindly advise whether your government is prepared to proceed with the settlement of this question as above suggested.

Yours very truly,

John Bracken.

I replied to that letter on February 19, 1927, as follows:

Hon. John Bracken,
Premier of Manitoba,
Winnipeg, Manitoba.

Dear Mr. Premier:

I regret that it has not been possible to make an earlier reply to your letter of January 13th on the natural resources question, which you suggest should be referred to arbitration, possibly before the judicial committee of the privy council.

Some consideration has been given to the question in council by my colleagues and myself, but we have not yet been able, in view of the pressure of preparing for and carrying on the session, to give it the full and detailed attention its importance warrants. I should therefore greatly appreciate it if the matter could stand over until the end of the present session, which will not in all probability be a long one. We shall endeavour then to come as speedily as possible to an agreement with your Government as to the best means of dealing with the matters still at issue.

Yours sincerely,

W. L. Mackenzie King.

That was the year in which we celebrated the diamond jubilee of confederation, and the conference between the provinces and the Dominion was held during the same year. These two events, I think, helped to account for the circumstance that the matter of a conference with Manitoba was not carried out. There was the additional fact that Manitoba was holding an election that year, and no doubt it was not a convenient time at which to negotiate an agreement.

Then we come down to 1928, and the following communication was received from the Premier of Manitoba on January 10 of that year:

The Rt. Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King,
Premier of Canada,
Ottawa, Ont.

Dear Mr. King,

May I again draw your attention to my letter of January 13 of last year, and to the series of letters and telegrams—from myself on December 31, 1926, January 13, February 28, and April 19, 1927, and your replies of January 1, February 19 and April 21, 1927—with regard to the arbitration of the question of Manitoba's natural resources in accordance with the agreement of April 21, 1922. May I also remind you of Mr. Craig's interview with you in May last, and my own in November when we reiterated the request of the Manitoba government for the arbitration of this question without further delay.

It was conceded nearly a year ago, after two formal conferences, five or six informal interviews, and almost continuous correspondence, that the attempt to reach a settlement by mutual consent had broken down. The proposal of Manitoba to settle less controversial details like school lands and the school lands fund also proved unacceptable. Your government (January 29, 1924) took the view that all negotiations "have contemplated that the whole question should be dealt with as one, and disposed of either by mutual consent, or by arbitration, as provided in the agreement made between the Dominion and the province on the 21st day of April, 1922."

A few days later (February 9, 1924) you pointed out on behalf of your government that there were "limits beyond which, with the best will in the world, we cannot go and hope to obtain parliamentary approval of our proposals. . . . . If no agreement can be reached we must, I suppose, resort to arbitration."

Since that time a long and exhaustive series of claims has been drawn up by the maritime provinces. The Duncan commission was appointed to deal with these claims. A report was submitted, and the government has implemented that report in the most prompt and generous manner. The province of Manitoba, meanwhile, has been urging, not special bonuses and subsidies and freight rates, such as the Dominion has granted to the maritime provinces, but merely the arbitration of our case under an agreement made nearly six years ago.

You will recollect also the very friendly attitude adopted at the dominion-provincial conference in November last by the premiers of Quebec, Ontario and the maritime provinces towards the return of our natural resources. With the other provinces so favourably disposed and the whole dominion responsive to the spirit of the 60th anniversary of confederation, the time is singularly opportune for the settlement of this question by arbitration, as provided in the agreement of April 21, 1922. We cannot conceive any valid objection that can be taken to so fair and just a proposal at this time.

I am writing now to request of your government an early decision with regard to our proposal of January 13 of last year in order that we may make the necessary arrangements without further delay.

Yours very truly,
John Bracken.

I replied to that letter on February 28, 1928, as follows:

The Honourable John Bracken,
Premier of Manitoba,
Winnipeg, Manitoba.

Dear Mr. Bracken,

Since the receipt of your communication of the 10th of January I have had an opportunity to enter very fully with my colleagues into the representations of your letter regarding a final settlement of the natural resources question with the province of Manitoba. Let me say at once that we agree most cordially with you that the recent Dominion-provincial conference has created an atmosphere much more favourable to a satisfactory solution of the outstanding questions between us, and also that in view of the diamond jubilee celebrations of the past year the present moment would be a most opportune time to remove the entire question from the field of controversy.

My colleagues and I share your regret that it has not yet been found possible to reach an agreement by conference. I now write to say that we have in no way altered our opinion that in the absence of a settlement by direct negotiation, the questions at issue between us should be referred to arbitration. In arranging for arbitration, however, we can see some objection to sending the question to the privy council. It would, therefore, be well that we should reach an agreement both with respect to the terms of reference for the arbitration and the tribunal to which the matter is to be referred. These arrangements may be made by a conference with yourself or with any of your colleagues at such time as may be mutually convenient.

While agreeing to the principle of arbitration, we are still inclined to believe that the additional delay incident to arbitration might be avoided by further negotiations with a view to reaching a settlement by conference, and with this in mind we would suggest that one further attempt be made to settle the matter by this means, failing which we should reach a definite agreement as to the tribunal of arbitration and the terms of reference.

Yours sincerely,
W. L. Mackenzie King.

On March 5, 1928, I received the following letter from Mr. Bracken:

The Right Honourable
W. L. Mackenzie King,
Prime Minister of Canada,
Ottawa, Ont.

Dear Mr. King,

I beg to acknowledge receipt of your favour of the 28th ultimo, with further reference to the matter of the settlement of the natural resources question. I note that it is your view that the present is an opportune time to endeavour again to conclude some arrangement by which this question can be settled satisfactorily; but that you do not favour submitting the matter to the privy council, as suggested by us, preferring to attempt once again to settle the matter by conference, failing which, as you say, a definite agreement as to the tribunal and terms of reference can be decided.

The government of Manitoba is anxious to have this matter proceeded with at the earliest opportunity. Would you kindly advise, therefore, when you could arrange to meet representatives of the provincial government.

In concluding, permit me to express the gratification of the government at being assured of your desire to have this vexed question settled without any unnecessary delay, at this particular time in the history of the Dominion.

Yours very truly,
John Bracken.

On March 17 I replied to that communication as follows:

Dear Mr. Bracken: I have received your letter of March 5, with further reference to the settlement of the natural resources question, and I note that the government of Manitoba desires to have the proposed conference proceeded with at the earliest opportunity. As the questions to be considered will demand considerable discussion and investigation, it would seem advisable that we should select a date when the representatives attending the conference would be free to devote their whole attention to the matters under discussion. In the circumstances, I would suggest that the conference should be held imediately following the close of the present parliamentary session.

Yours sincerely,
W. L. Mackenzie King.

On March 26 I received the following communication from the Attorney General of Manitoba:

Province of Manitoba.
Attorney General, Winnipeg.

Dear Mr. King,

I have your letter of the seventeenth instant addressed to the Hon. Mr. Bracken with reference to the settlement of the natural resources question. Mr. Bracken is at present on a short vacation necessitated by the state of his health and has requested me to act for him in this matter during his absence.

I agree with you that it is advisable to select a date when the representatives would be free to devote their whole attention to the matter under discussion. I accordingly accept the suggestion that the conference be held immediately following the close of the present parliamentary session. I shall confer with our representatives with a view to selecting tentative dates which will be submitted to you in due course.

Yours sincerely,

W. J. Major,
Attorney General.

On March 30 my secretary, Mr. Baldwin, sent an acknowledgement of this letter to Mr. Major. On April 2 Mr. Major makes further reference to his former letter as follows:

Dear Mr. King,

I have now had an opportunity of consulting with the Manitoba representatives in regard to the conference on natural resources, to be held at the close of the present parliamentary session.

In the event of the session closing by May 24, I would suggest that the conference be held between the twentieth of May and June 10. Any day you may appoint within this period will be convenient to us.

Faithfully yours,
W. J. Major.

I replied on April 26, concluding the letter, after acknowledging Mr. Major's communication, with this paragraph:

I may say in reply to this suggestion—

That is the one I have just read.

—that it is impossible to predict at this time just what the date of prorogation will be. We shall, however, do our utmost to meet your wishes and hope that it may be possible to hold the proposed conference during the first week in June, the exact date to be arranged later.

On June 6, 1928, I received the following telegram from Mr. Bracken:

In view of possible prorogation this week can you name date for conference on natural resources question.

John Bracken.

I replied on June 16 as follows to Mr. Bracken:

Re natural resources. If Wednesday, June 27 will be convenient to yourself and colleagues, I shall be pleased to arrange conference with our government beginning that day at Ottawa, eleven a.m. my office.

Mackenzie King.

On June 18, Mr. Bracken replied:

Replying your message sixteenth which arrived during my absence from city, regret impossible to arrange attendance at natural resources conference before first week in July owing to absence of ministers in meantime.

I replied on June 19:

Replying to your night lettergram of the eighteenth please mention earliest date in July for conference. Will seek to suit your convenience.

On June 19 Mr. Bracken wired:

Wire to-day's date received. Can meet you re natural resources any time during first week of July or later date.

John Bracken.

My secretary replied:

Mr. King out of town. I now learn that western ministers have made plans to be in west after first July. Could you possibly reconsider suggestion that you come to Ottawa during week of twenty-fifth June.

Harry Baldwin.
Secretary to Prime Minister.

On June 20, 1928, Mr. Bracken sent the following communication to Mr. Baldwin:

Harry Baldwin,
Secretary to Prime Minister,
Ottawa, Ontario.

Wire yesterday's date received. Suggestion contained therein could have been acceded to a week ago but since then Attorney General who has charge of natural resources case has gone to northern Manitoba mining area and will not be back till end of month. Am endeavouring to reach him by wire but am not hopeful of doing so. Could conference not be held here if western ministers are to be here during first week of July? Kindly advise. If there is any prospect of getting Mr. Major back before latter part of next week will wire later but think this impossible.

John Bracken.

Mr. Baldwin replied to this on June 21, as follows:

Regret it is impossible to accede to your suggestion in yesterday's telegram since Prime Minister cannot leave Ottawa. If week of twenty-fifth impossible for you and Mr. Major suggest second, third or fourth of July.

Harry Baldwin,
Secretary.

Mr. Bracken sent the following wire on June 21:

As Mr. Major not expected back until late next week suggest July 4 for natural resources conference.

Then Mr. Bracken sent this wire June 23 to Mr. Baldwin:

Have assumed July 4 decided upon for conference. Kindly advise if correct.

Mr. Baldwin wired back to Mr. Bracken:

Replying to your wire of to-day mister Stewart asks me to say that if you can be in Ottawa on morning of the third instead of fourth he will meet you here instead of at Toronto.

Then there was this communication from Mr. Bracken on June 24:

Harry Baldwin,
Premier's Office,
Ottawa, Ontario.

Wire yester's date received. Will be glad to meet Mr. Stewart on morning of the third at Ottawa. Am I to understand you desire natural resources conference that day as well. This can be arranged if it will better suit convenience of premier and federal ministers.

On June 25 I sent the folowing communication.

Hon. John Bracken,
Premier of Manitoba,
Winnipeg.

This will confirm arrangements made with you during my absence from town by my secretary and Mr. Stewart. Shall be glad to meet you in Ottawa on morning of Tuesday, third of July.

W. L. Mackenzie King.

I hope that correspondence makes perfectly clear how it came about that the conference was held in Otawa on July 3, and I hope it answers the question of the leader of the opposition, "Why the haste?" There was no reason for the haste other than to avoid the delay of which Mr. Bracken had been complaining so long. As the correspondence shows, the government was sincerely desirous of getting the matter settled. We felt that the province had occasion to consider that there had been a delay and we were doing our utmost to meet its wishes for an early conference.

I might mention a further circumstance. Hon. members will know that after a long session of parliament running into the approach of summer most of the ministers do not remain in Ottawa; they go to different parts of the country. I was anxious to have this conference completed and over before the ministers began to disperse for the summer. As the correspondence shows, some of them had made engagements to be away in July, but they sacrificed their engagements in order to stay here to suit the convenience of Mr. Bracken and his colleagues. The Minister of the Interior (Mr. Stewart) had made engagements to be in the west. He stayed over for the first day of the conference, but in order to keep his engagements he was obliged to be away during the last two days.

The first day of the conference was taken up in reaching a basis upon which the resources could be transferred. We discussed the question of an appeal to the privy council, we gave our reasons for thinking that was scarcely an expeditious way of proceeding with the matter, and again asked the question whether it was not possible for us to agree upon some method and basis of settlement which would bring this large transaction to a finality. An agreement was reached as a result of the attitude of the conference and the announcement of the agreement was made in the press some time in the month of July. I do not recall the exact date on which the announcement was made.

When the conference concluded at Ottawa, there remained the question of securing the consent of certain gentlemen to act as commissioners to go into the questions which would have to be investigated. Perhaps I should pause here to say a word about the exact nature of the settlement which we made. The choice, as will be clear from what I said earlier in my remarks, had been from the outset between an agreement arrived at by conference and an agreement arrived at by arbitration. From the beginning, whenever arbitration was spoken of, it was perfectly plain that once an endeavour was made to ascertain the total receipts of the Department of the Interior in connection with the administration of western lands, the total expenditures made in carrying out that trust on behalf of the western provinces, what particular transactions were to be taken account of, and the like—it was quite plain, I say, in the first place, that the government would find it very difficult to state exactly what should be referred to arbitration, and, in the second place, extremely difficult for the arbitrators to go through the endless accounting that would be necessary to arrive at an exact finding. Something of an alternative character had to be suggested, and the proposal was evolved in the course of the discussion that if three representative citizens of Canada, in whom the Dominion government as well as the government of Manitoba had confidence, could be found who could be persuaded to go into this matter intelligently and thoroughly, visiting the Department of the Interior and reviewing the situation there, deciding upon what matters should be excluded from their inquiry and what matters should be left to an accounting or settlement in some other way, they might be able to make to the two governments a recommendation which would appeal to the general good sense and fairness of both parties. That idea appealed to the Manitoba government and to our government, and we decided to work out our agreement on that understanding.

A question that was of special importance was the basis on which this commission would proceed. Were they to proceed on the basis that Manitoba should be put in the position in which she would have been had she had her resources when she came into confederation in 1870, or on some other basis? We concluded that the just and right and the fair basis was the one I have indicated. I am pleased to say that the hon. leader of the opposition, speaking on the address, congratulated, perhaps I use too strong a word; at any rate he commended the government on having accepted that as a basis in dealing with Manitoba. So we have been fortunate to this extent at least, that the basis we laid down is one which appeals to both sides of this house, and I take it that hon. gentlemen in the far end of the house also feel that in that particular we have been fortunate enough to arrive at a basis of settlement which appeals also to them.

Here is the announcement that was given to the press as a result of the conference after we had agreed upon the gentlemen whom we would ask to act as members of the commission. The three gentlemen were the Hon. Mr. Turgeon, the Hon. Mr. Crerar, and Mr. Charles Bowman. Mr. Turgeon was in Europe at the time, and I had to cable him and ask if he would accept the position of chairman of the commission. Mr. Crerar was somewhere in Manitoba, and Mr. Bowman was in Kitchener. Until we were in a position to communicate with all three, it was not possible to give out an announcement to the public as to what had been agreed upon. This is the announcement which was given out:

Following a conference held at Ottawa on July 3rd and 4th, 1928, between representatives of the government of Canada and of the government of Manitoba, the results of which conference have since been approved by the two governments, agreement was reached as to the method and basis of settlement of the question of the administration and control of the natural resources of Manitoba, as follows:—

1. The province of Manitoba to be placed in a position of equality with the other provinces of confederation with respect to the administration and control of its natural resources, as from its entrance into confederation in 1870.

2. The government of Canada, with the concurrence of the government of Manitoba, to appoint a commission of three persons to inquire and report as to what financial readjustments should be made to effect this end.

3. The commission to be empowered to decide what financial or other considerations are relevant to its inquiry.

4. The findings of the commission to be submitted to the parliament of Canada and to the legislature of Manitoba.

5. Upon agreement on the financial terms following consideration of the report of the commission, the respective governments to introduce the necessary legislation to give effect to the financial terms as agreed upon, and to effect the transfer to the province of the unalienated natural resources within its boundaries, subject to any trust existing in respect thereof, and without prejudice to any interest other than that of the crown in the same.

6. Pending this transfer, the policy of the government of Canada in the administration of the natural resources of Manitoba to be in accord with the wishes of the government of the province.

The supplementary announcement read as follows:

The government of Canada and the government of Manitoba have jointly agreed upon the following persons as members to comprise the commission with respect to the transfer of the natural resources of Manitoba:

Hon. W. F. A. Turgeon,
Court of Appeal,
Saskatchewan.

Hon. T. A. Crerar,
Winnipeg,
Manitoba.

Charles M. Bowman, Esq.,
Director,
The Mutual Life Assurance Company of Canada,
Kitchener, Ontario.

These gentlemen will be apprised immediately of the agreement upon their names as members of the commission and will be invited forthwith to accept appointment.

With respect to the terms of agreement, I have yet to hear criticism in any particular except one. Some hon. members in the course of the debate seemed to take exception to the last clause, or at least to some phase of it—I do not know whether I am interpreting them correctly—which reads as follows:

Pending this transfer, the policy of the government of Canada in the administration of the natural resources of Manitoba to be in accord with the wishes of the government of the province.

Let us forget for a moment the province of Manitoba, and let us think of the province of Saskatchewan or Alberta, or as we are a little further along in the way of a final agreement with Alberta, let us take the province of Saskatchewan. Let us assume that we are negotiating an agreement with Saskatchewan, and that to-morrow we reach an agreement that the resources are to be transferred, but it is apparent that it will take some little time—or that it may take years, as my colleague remarks—before the actual administration of those resources can be assumed by the province of Saskatchewan, and that the province of Saskatchewan as a consequence says to us: "This agreement is exactly what we hoped we might be able to reach, but now that you have agreed to the principle that the resources are ours and have agreed to turn them over, that you are holding the resources only as trustee for us, as we have reached an agreement as to the basis on which that transfer is to be made is it unreasonable for us to ask that pending the final transfer you will administer those resources in accordance with the wishes of our government?" I venture to say that assuming that proposal were made to-morrow by Saskatchewan, after we had reached an agreement with the province in regard to the transfer of the resources and decided upon the method and basis of that return, if this government refused to agree to that proposal, we would be strongly condemned by hon. gentlemen opposite for having declined to take a step which was fair to the province of Saskatchewan in the circumstances, and for adopting a course which might prejudice the whole situation.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Is the Prime Minister not forgetting the solemn assurance given by a responsible member of the government in that regard?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: No, I am not forgetting it; I am going to speak of that in a moment. But what I am now putting before the house is the position of the government when we were negotiating with Manitoba. When this whole subject was under discussion, when these terms were being arranged, the province of Manitoba made the request of us that pending the actual transfer of these resources the Dominion government should administer them in accordance with the wishes of the province. Some hon. members have sought to imply that in some way the Minister of the Interior was responsible for that particular clause going in. What their motive is I do not know, and cannot understand, but may I say that I have looked carefully over my notes of what took place at the conference, and I find that that last clause was not discussed in conference on the first day. It was put in on the second day, when the Minister of the Interior was absent from the city and had left for the west. The suggestion came from the Manitoba government, and it was accepted by our government as wholly reasonable.

Now, may I say this further. My hon. friend has spoken about some undertaking that the Minister of the Interior had given. Personally I had no recollection of that at the time of the negotiations. I suppose I ought to know everything that is said in the house. I am afraid I was not present at the time the matter to which my hon. friend has just referred was taken up. But had I known of it, I would not have permitted the whole question of the transfer of the natural resources under an agreement satisfactory to Manitoba and to ourselves to be held up just because of some undertaking on the part of the minister to discuss with certain members from the province a particular lease before that lease was granted.

May I say this to my hon. friend? The Minister of the Interior, as I gathered from his remarks yesterday, did carry out his promise; he did, before the transfer was made even under these terms, see or seek to see the members from Manitoba in regard to that particular lease.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: No.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Let my hon. friend wait a minute; he will have an opportunity later. What I want to make clear is this. When the Minister of the Interior gave the assurance, he of course did not and could not know that by conference we would be able to conclude an agreement which would afford a basis of satisfactorily solving a problem which has been facing us for twelve or sixteen years. He could have had no knowledge of that whatever. He gave his assurance in the light of conditions prevailing at the time the assurance was given. He had no knowledge when this agreement was reached that this last clause was in it, and as a matter of fact when he saw it, I think he felt the embarrassment that was his as a result of the clause appearing there before he had had a chance of explaining to hon. members that it was one of the essential terms of the agreement reached with respect to the transfer of the natural resources. That was the position of the minister in the matter. At once he endeavoured to see those who were concerned. He did see some, but he admits that he did not see my hon. friend, the reason being that the hon. gentleman was not in Manitoba at the time.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Was any letter or wire sent or any other effort made to communicate with me?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I think there was. I know my hon. friend's object was a worthy one in every particular. But to enable the house to appreciate the position, my hon. friend will recall—indeed, he made mention of it—sending me a cable in regard to the matter while I was in Geneva attending a meeting of the League of Nations; that was a couple of months after this agreement had gone through. The terms of the agreement were public knowledge all this time. In the meantime the minister had sought to see the members from Manitoba and explained to them that while he had made a promise in the house not to let any lease go through until he had had a chance of conferring further with them, an agreement was now completed, and that one of the conditions imposed by the agreement was that the department over which he presided would have to carry out the wishes of the government of Manitoba which was the other party to this transaction.

Now, I ask hon. members what other basis would be fair and reasonable in dealings between governments. Was this government, in a momentous transaction of this character —dealing with the whole question as one, as we said not this year but from the beginning it must be dealt with—when we had reached an agreement, to impair the possibility of consummating the agreement by taking the position that we would not accede to some request that was perfectly reasonable, as far as I can see it, on the part of the government which we were placing in the position of owner of the resources? The resources are owned by the crown either in the right of the Dominion or of the provinces. What was happening here was not the parting with a possession of the crown without due protection. It was parting with resources that we interpreted as belonging to the province and putting the provincial authorities to all intents and purposes in full possession. Surely the government of a province has the right to administer its own resources. That is all we have done —transferred the resources to the provincial government. If we had not done that we would have been held responsible for our failure. And may I say this, if to-morrow—

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Pardon me. May I ask whether the Seven Sisters were definitely transferred to the Manitoba government?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I say with regard to the Seven Sisters that I never heard mention of one of them in the whole transaction. In the course of the negotiations which took place at Ottawa the question of the Seven Sisters was never mentioned.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Perhaps they were referred to in the correspondence that I inquired about the other day.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes, my hon. friend has not forgotten his friend. I am speaking here in the presence of my colleagues, the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Dunning) and others who were present at the conference, and I say to this house that in discussing the transfer of the resources the question of the Seven Sisters falls was never mentioned. We discussed the question of the transfer of the resources as a whole in a broad and large way. We were seeking to deal with it as government with government. We saw no reason to begin our negotiations, which were intended to create goodwill between the two governments, by at the the outset throwing distrust and suspicion upon the provincial government. What right had we to ask the Manitoba government to do what was in the interest of Manitoba?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I was trying to get at the legal point, that the transfer of the natural resources was not made to the Manitoba government, as I understood him to say was done, but that subsequent to the agreement the Seven Sisters falls power site was simply leased to a corporation.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Well, there are legal technicalities—I am not a lawyer—but I think I can make plain to my hon. friend what is essential in regard to that particular phase of the transaction. All of the resources so far as this government was concerned were being transferred to the government of Manitoba. After we had settled the agreement on that basis the government of Manitoba said: We want a particular lease to be made to a particular company. The minister himself was the agent of the government of Canada in carrying out its obligation under the agreement to which we had become a party, and among other things we had agreed to see that the resources were administered in accordance with the wish of the Manitoba government. The provincial government asked that that particular lease of the Seven Sisters falls should go to a particular company. What did the minister seek to do? He sought to transfer that lease not to the company but to transfer it to the government of Manitoba, so that they would have to deal with the question themselves. Then what did he discover? My hon. friend asked the question yesterday, and the minister I noticed said that he was not in a position to state the reason. I think it was because in his case the limitation was the same as in my own, that neither of us is a lawyer. But I understand the fact to be this, that the Manitoba government could not grant that particular lease until the resources were actually transferred, and it had been given by statute the necessary powers to lease the properties which are now subject to lease only by the Dominion. The lawyers of the house will be able to give the reasons in correct form, but I remember asking the minister why he could not make this particular lease to the government of Manitoba, and let the government of Manitoba deal with the company direct. His law officers advised him that that could not be done. The only way in which the wishes of the government of Manitoba could be carried out was for the minister himself to take action under the statute governing the leasing of these properties and make the transfer as requested by the Manitoba government. But in order to be secure in the matter, in order that there should be no doubt about his position, he did not take merely the word of the premier or a letter from the government of Manitoba as to what their wishes were. The minister demanded that before he would carry out their wish in this particular, the government of Manitoba, the whole government, should pass a formal order in council and forward it to him. That order was produced here the other day and the necessary action was taken as a result of it, carrying out in good faith this particular agreement.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): The federal government acting in the capacity of trustee and not in the capacity of sovereign owner.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Acting in accordance with the wishes of the government of Manitoba under the agreement that had been made with that government—the agreement governing the transfer of the whole of the natural resources. Let me say this, so that we may have a parallel case—and I believe it is only by removing the minds of hon. members from the field of prejudice that we shall get the true perspective of these questions: If to-morrow we were to agree to transfer their resources to either Alberta or Saskatchewan on identical terms with those we have been discussing and either of those governments came and asked us to do a particular thing in accordance with their wishes, I say we should be in honour bound to do it; we should feel bound to carry out our honourable obligations. And I am informed by the Minister of Railways (Mr. Dunning), who has had considerable experience in the matter, that we have been so doing right along in relation to school lands. There has therefore been no deviation from practice, no change in any particular in this connection.

I hope I have cleared up the doubts, if not the suspicions in the minds of some hon. gentlemen on this question. I have endeavoured to give all the facts as they have come before the government, and I believe that anyone viewing them in a fair and reasonable light will agree that the government did what was obviously the right thing to do in the circumstances.

May I go a step further and refer to the other phase of the attack which the leader of the opposition made. Perhaps I should not say attack; it may have been only an insinuation to the effect that Alberta had not been treated as well as the other provinces. What is the situation with respect to the transfer of natural resources to Alberta? When in 1905 the province of Alberta was organized one of the conditions in the act was that the Dominion government instead of the province was to administer the resources the province was to receive a subsidy in lieu of lands; in other words, the province was to receive a certain annual payment in cash instead of its natural resources. That subsidy was to be as follows: until the population reached 400,000, the sum of $375,000 per annum; until the population reached 800,000, the sum of $562,500 per annum; until the population reached 1,200,000, the sum of $750,000 per annum; and thereafter the sum of $1,125,000 per annum.

I have mentioned that in 1911 the government of Sir Wilfrid Laurier was approached by Mr. Sifton and asked to transfer back to Alberta its lands and resources. But Mr. Sifton asked at the same time that Alberta should be allowed to keep the subsidies. That was refused. It was refused again, as I have already indicated, by Sir Robert Borden; it was refused by the Union government, refused by Mr. Meighen, and refused by the present administration when we came into office. However, we did not refuse to continue to negotiate with Alberta; we have not refused to do so from the moment we came into power. We have sought by repeated conferences to arrive at some agreement by direct negotiation. Alberta, like Manitoba, has always had the right to have back its lands, with an arbitration to decide what, if anything, is owing to the province as a result of the administration of lands by the Dominion government, and the resources alienated. That however, has never seemed satisfactory to the province. Premier Greenfield of Alberta had several conferences with this government, I shall not take up the time of the house in going over them. Suffice it to say that as a result of those conferences, at which he was accompanied by Mr. Brownlee, at the time, Attorney General, we were able to work out an agreement which avoided the necessity of any resort to arbitration. That is the point I wish to make clear. These provinces have always had the opportunity to get their resources immediately, provided they were willing to have them without the subsidies being continued on the undertaking that the question as to the amounts, if any, owing to them for resources alienated would be settled by arbitration or by an accounting. We have always recognized that the matter of accounting was a difficult thing, that in all probability it would extend over years, and that then possibly no one would be satisfied with the outcome. Consequently we have tried to find some basis of settlement by mutual consent, and we succeeded finally in 1926 in securing not only a basis of settlement but terms of settlement with Alberta. We have never succeeded that far with Manitoba. The settlement with Alberta was embodied in an agreement presented to this house and dated January 9, 1926. Subsequently a bill was introduced into this parliament and into the legislature of Alberta, in which the terms of the agreement were incorporated; the bill was based upon the agreement. That is the extent to which we got along with Alberta as long ago as 1926.

I need not go into the reasons why these particular bills were not proceeded with; the reasons are known to hon. members of the house. In one particular there was a difference of view which was fully explained, but at any rate sufficient to account for a further delay. As a means of settling the difference, a certain constitutional question was referred to the supreme court, and delay was occasioned in consequence. The settlement which was reached in 1926, and which was acceptable to the government of Alberta at that time, was that Alberta should have the natural resources and that this government should allow Alberta the equivalent of three years' subsidy as a cash payment to help the province over the period which it was considered would be required to organize the department to administer the resources. There was to be no continuation of the subsidy, but simply a cash payment equivalent to three years' subsidy.

As I recollect the negotiations, the reason they extended over two or three years was first of all that Alberta wanted to obtain a continuation of the then existing subsidy for all time. When we would not agree to that, Alberta came down to ten years, and then to five years, and then finally to three, three years having been roughly worked out as the result of some estimates we had had prepared by the departments. In 1926, as I have said, Alberta, by a bill introduced in its own house, declared its preparedness to accept the resources on the basis of a grant the equivalent of the three years' subsidy, and without further accounting. In 1927 we had the Dominion-provincial conference. At that conference it became apparent to the federal ministers that the other provinces were prepared to take a more generous attitude in dealing with the western provinces. We had during the interval been dealing with the maritime provinces, and that had had its effect. So when Mr. Brownlee came back last year and asked us if we would resume the whole discussion in the light of what had taken place at the Dominion-provincial conference, in order to see if we could not reach a fresh agreement, which would avoid delays and further submissions to the court; we agreed so to do, and after discussing the matter a day or two made what we believed to be a generous offer to Alberta. We offered Alberta the resources and also a continuation of the present subsidy—not the subsidy increasing year by year as her population increases but the present amount of $562,000 yearly.

Mr. ADSHEAD: For all time?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes, for all time. That is the offer before Alberta at the present time. My hon. friend asks why we do not settle with Alberta. The reason is that Alberta will not accept that offer, or has not up to the present time signified her intention of so doing. Are we to be blamed for that and held responsible for the delay? We have gone very far with Alberta, and if there is any delay it is entirely due to the fact that this offer, which I venture to say this parliament will regard as generous, with no strings attached to it, has not been accepted by the province. We are not blaming any one; it is entirely for Alberta to say whether or not she wishes to accept the offer.

Mr. RYCKMAN: When was the offer made?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I think in December of last year. The conference took place on December 13 and 14, 1928, and my recollection is that the offer was formerly submitted to Alberta in writing in a communication from myself before the end of the year.

That is the position with regard to Alberta, and now I come to Saskatchewan. The leader of the opposition referred to some statement from the Premier of Saskatchewan, and said he could not see why Alberta should not be treated as fairly as Saskatchewan. I do not know what statement he read but I can tell the house what we offered Saskatchewan: We offered that province exactly what we offered Alberta. We offered to settle with Saskatchewan on the basis of its present subsidy and the transfer of the lands, without any strings attached to the offer one way or the other. Saskatchewan has told us definitely that she will not accept that offer, so that is the position with regard to that province. Are we to be held responsible for not having transferred the resources to Saskatchewan? Hon. gentlemen say we can make a settlement; yes, we can make a settlement if we are prepared to go just as far as these provinces wish us to go, but we must consider how far this parliament, representative of all the provinces of the Dominion, is prepared to sanction an action of the executive in this matter.

Mr. McQUARRIE: Before the Prime Minister takes his seat will he care to make any statement with regard to British Columbia?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes, I shall be happy to do so. Last year we agreed to transfer to British Columbia certain lands of the Peace River block and the railway belt. That offer was made to the last administration in the province of British Columbia, and the new administration had been in office only a few weeks when our friend, the former member in this house for Victoria but now the premier of British Columbia, Mr. Tolmie, came to Ottawa and asked if we were prepared to deal with him as generously as we had dealt with the previous administration. We told him our position in relation to him was exactly what it had been to his predecessors, and on leaving the city he gave out an interview in which he said that his conference with the Dominion had been wholly satisfactory. At present the officers of the departments concerned are working on the accounting and other details incident to the transfer.

Mr. McQUARRIE: May I ask what was the offer to British Columbia?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: We offered to transfer certain of these lands on considerations which the commissioner appointed to look into the matter said should be taken into account. British Columbia has not a legal claim, but the commissioner stated that the province had a certain claim in equity, and we are trying to work out an equitable settlement. That is the present position.

I do not wish to take my seat for just a moment, Mr. Speaker, because up to the present the discussion on the resolution has seemed to centre solely on the transfer of these resources and in particular the resources of Manitoba rather than on the resolution itself. May I say a word upon the resolution in order to see how far it would be wise for this house to consider adopting it. The resolution reads:

> That, in the opinion of this house, no disposition of the natural resources, under the control of the federal government, shall be effective until ratified by parliament.

That resolution is not restricted to any particular resources; there is no difference in principle between the transfer of a western homestead and the transfer of the whole resources of a province; the two transfers in principle are exactly the same. There is no difference in principle between the position of the Dominion government in disposing of lands to a railway company, an irrigation company or any other company for public purposes and the same government disposing of the entire resources of a province. That is the first feature I wish to make clear with regard to this resolution: if it is passed it will obligate the government to bring to parliament every transaction which relates to the natural resources it is administering; in other words, it will make wholly impossible the business of administration in the Department of the Interior and in certain other departments of the government; it will make wholly impossible the business of this parliament in the matter of legislation, because it would be absolutely impossible for this parliament to consider the many matters relating to resources which under acts of parliament are being transferred by the executive to-day and still devote time to anything else, that is if the approval of these transfers were to be the first business before parliament. So far as the government's administration of the resources is concerned, it is the result of acts passed by this parliament. These acts impose certain obligations upon the government in administering the natural resources of the country. Parliament has surrounded the actions of the executive in this regard with such safeguards as parliament has thought necessary to impose, one of them being to the effect that there must be laid on the table of this house within a certain period after the opening of the session each year a statement together with all particulars of the transactions which have taken place. In addition, there is an obligation that these transactions must be recorded in the Canada Gazette, and in many cases they cannot go into effect until after the Gazette has been published a certain number of weeks or months. There are innumerable regulations restricting the executive, all designed to prevent the very thing my hon. friend has in mind in connection with this resolution, namely, the possibility of any fraud on the part of the executive in administering the public resources.

What acts have been passed by parliament to this end? To mention only some of them we have the Dominion Lands Act, the Forest Reserves and Parks Act, the Yukon Act, the Northwest Territories Act, the Irrigation Act, the Dominion Waterpower Act and the Dominion Land Surveys Act.

Under the provisions of these acts the government is parting with some resources from day to day; parting with them under orders in council, which is the only way the crown can proceed in matters of the kind. If this resolution should pass we would have to stop dealing with these matters until we could bring them before parliament for approval. What would be the position of parliament when it came to deal with them? I will read one clause from section 75 of the Dominion Lands Act, it is as follows:

Every regulation made by the governor in council, in virtue of the positions of this act, and every order made by the governor in council authorizing the sale of any land or the granting of any interest therein, shall have force and effect only after it has been published for four consecutive weeks in the Canada Gazette, and all such orders or regulations shall be laid before both houses of parliament within the first fifteen days of the session next after the date thereof, and such regulations shall remain in force until the day immediately succeeding the day of prorogation of that session of parliament, and no longer, unless during that session they are approved by resolution of both houses of parliament.

In pursuance of that clause the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Stewart) on February 8, 1929, laid on the table of the House of Commons a return to orders under this and other acts; mention of this return will be found in the votes and proceedings of that date The minister laid on the table a statement showing the orders in council which had been passed since the date of the last return under the provisions of the Dominion Lands Act, the Dominion Forest Reserves and Parks Act, Migratory Birds Convention Act, the Yukon Act, the Northwest Game Act, the Northwest Territories Act, the Dominion Water Power Act, the Irrigation Act, the Dominion Lands Survey Act, and the regulations for the survey, administration, disposal and management of the railway belt in the province of British Columbia. Hon. members can see what these returns amount to from the size of the file of documents I hold in my hand, the resolution before us asks that every one of these orders should be reviewed by parliament before anyone of them would be effective. In preparing these orders, to secure the country against any shortcomings on the part of the administration, the departments have to have regard for the regulations surrounding the legislation. I asked the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Stewart) if he could secure some of the regulations, orders and acts which govern his department, and the volume which I hold in my hand, which is about four inches thick, is the legislation of which account has to be taken by the government departments in administering these resources. Before this parliament could decide definitely on these matters it would have to become familiar with all these regulations. This only shows how impossible is the task which the hon. gentleman is seeking to impose on us.

I have obtained a record of the business transacted at the Dominion Lands offices, and I will give the house the figures just for the one month of December, 1928. The number of transactions in Dominion lands was 3,737; in timber and grazing lands, 2,270; in mining lands, 1,873; school lands, 248, and miscellaneous, 226, a total for one month only of 8,354. Such transactions as these would have to be approved by parliament before they would become binding, if the resolution proposed by the hon. member should be passed and acted upon.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: What is the number of items of expenditure that would have to be passed upon in the course of the carrying on of the administration of the government of Canada?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I have been very busy during the last few days and I am afraid the hon. gentleman will have to work that out for himself. Perhaps I could give him some information which appears in the report of the Department of the Interior. For example, the report of the controller of the land patents branch and registrar of Dominion lands patents shows that for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1928 there were 5,490 letters patent issued, covering a total area of 938,652 acres. All those letters patent would have to be brought before this house and passed upon, should my hon. friend's resolution carry. Page 50 of this report contains the report of the superintendent, Mining lands branch; and the following is a portion of the first paragraph in this report:

The administration of those regulations which govern the disposal of mining rights on Dominion lands, that is, the mineral rights the property of the crown in the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta, and in the Northwest and Yukon Territories, is the duty of the mining lands branch.

The report continues:

All mineral rights are disposed of by lease, license or permit for limited periods of time, and not by sale.

And then again:

Of the above number, 1,603 petroleum leases were issued during the year, comprising an area of 318,605 acres.

The report has the following to say with regard to coal leases:

The total number of coal mining leases issued during the year was 73, comprising 26,788 acres, and the total revenue collected during the year for rental of such rights was $172,949.95.

Should this resolution pass, all such matters would have to be passed upon by this parliament. The report continues:

During the year entries were granted for 4,478 quartz mining claims, of which number 4,328 were for claims in the western provinces, for the most part in Manitoba.

Not one of those claims could have been dealt with if this particular resolution were in force. These are but a few of the transactions which might be cited in this connection.

I asked the Department of Indian Affairs this morning whether this resolution would affect the work of that Department in any way, and I have received the following memorandum from Mr. Scott the superintendent general:

The natural resources under the control of this department of the federal government consist of Indian reserves. These have been set apart out of the public domain usually under the stipulations of a treaty or agreement with Indians. They are held in trust and administered under the provisions of the Indian Act. This act provides for the surrender to the crown for sale for the benefit of the Indians the lands, timber, minerals and all other utilities appertaining to the reserves. When sales are made natural resources are alienated to this extent. As these transactions are numerous, it would be practically impossible to expect ratification by parliament. It is acknowledged that the ultimate interest in Indian reserves is in the province when the province owns the public lands and that upon extinction of the Indian interest (that is, if the Indians entirely disappear), all lands and moneys held in trust for them go back to the province.

The time of this parliament would have to be taken up with those matters to the exclusion of its proper duty.

Mr. EVANS: Did Saskatchewan turn down the offer because of certain conditions imposed by the Dominion government, or did they say that the subsidy was not enough?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The hon. member will have to ask the government of Saskatchewan what was in their mind. They turned it down, and I think the reason was that the subsidy was not enough.

I hope I have not trespassed too long, but I think it is important that the house should grasp the significance of some of the resolutions which are being introduced, and also the significance of some of the obligations which are placed upon the federal government. Were this particular resolution to be rejected it might appear to those who are not familiar with the business of government administration as though in some way hon. members of parliament who had opposed it were not as anxious as my hon. friend who moved the resolution to make parliament supreme in reviewing transactions of this kind. I have dwelt on this matter at the length I have so that the public as well as hon. members will be in a position to see just what is involved in the motion before the house. Parliament has its obligation in the matter of legislation; the executive has its obligation in the matter of administration, and the moment you try to have parliament become the administrator rather than the maker of the laws, at that moment you create endless difficulties both for the administration and for parliament.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Does the Prime Minister apply that to divorce cases?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I have not anything to do with divorce. I am not married. I have other problems to worry about.

May I come back to what I have been endeavouring to say? Parliament imposes upon the executive certain obligations. Parliament controls by regulation the work of administration. The duty of the executive is to carry out the obligations that parliament places upon it. It is not the duty nor the business of the executive to go further in these matters than was intended by parliament in its legislation.

I think it is apparent that most of the problems respecting resources relate to the provinces. The provinces are primarily concerned with the natural resources, whether they be lands, mines, timber, water-powers or other resources. I can conceive of nothing easier than to raise in this country the old issue of provincial rights if the federal government were to go beyond its jurisdiction and seek to perform in dealing with resources that belong to provinces acts which parliament never intended should be performed by a federal government. We have to be particularly careful in this Dominion, which is composed of provinces as well as a federal authority, to see that powers given to the Dominion for one purpose are not used to frustrate the rights of provinces as regards other matters which have been entrusted to them.

A good deal of discussion has taken place in connection with power resources, and I want to say a word in that connection, in order to make perfectly clear wherein the administration of water-powers within a province may belong to the province, and not to the Dominion, and wherein there may be a difference of views as to powers generated in navigable waters. The question has arisen whether, under the rights which the Dominion has with respect to the protection of navigable waters, the power that results from works constructed in a river for the purpose of improving navigation, would belong to the Dominion or the province. That question has been referred to the Supreme Court of Canada and the answer that we have received, as I made clear the other day, is to say the least, indecisive as to what in that regard are the rights of the respective parties. Some persons reading the judgment may say that the emphasis inclines in one direction, while others may say that it inclines in the other. I think the judges have indicated fairly clearly that they must have a concrete case before them before they will attempt to give any real decision as to the respective rights of the Dominion and the provinces. What I wish at the moment to make clear is that, as regards navigable waters, the authority given to parliament to protect navigation and the means taken by parliament to exercise that authority enables the government, with respect to any applications that comes before it for approval of plans of any company generating power in navigable waters, to impose such conditions as, in the opinion of its experts, are necessary to safeguard navigation. But it was never intended by any legislation of which I am aware, that the power which was given to the Dominion, to protect navigation, was a power to be exercised to frustrate provinces in the legitimate development of their own natural resources. That is an aspect of its rights and obligations which the government has to consider pretty carefully.

We have had placed before us by a company in the province of Quebec an application for the approval of certain plans that are essential in the development of power under a charter which has given to that company by the province of Quebec. From much of the discussion in the public prints, one would think that the Dominion government was giving a charter for the right to develop water power in the province of Quebec. The government has neither the power nor the authority to give a charter such as the one I refer to. The legislature of Quebec protects its own water powers; that legislature gives its charters to companies in the light of its administration of its own resources and what it may wish to have done with them, all that this government is called upon to do, under the legislation which has been passed by parliament to protect navigable waters—navigable waters being a subject which, by the British North America Act, is assigned to the Dominion parliament for protection and development—is to say whether or not those plans prejudice in any way or will injure the needs of navigation in the waters in which the works are to be placed or to which they may be related. When plans are submitted they do not go before a body of ministers; they go to expert engineers who examine them to see whether or not they would be an obstruction to navigation. If they are, then the Dominion has no right to approve them. If they are not, the Dominion has then to consider whether there are other obligations of a general character of which account has to be taken? Where the river St. Lawrence is concerned, I submit there is a very real obligation of which the Dominion must take account: the Dominion is obliged to see that any step which is taken under a provincial charter shall not be of a character which in any way will, in the first place, interfere with navigation, or, in the second place, prejudice any possible scheme of development of navigation of which account ought to be taken because of the important national interests involved or to be considered. In other words, in regard to the St. Lawrence, the government would not only be justified in refusing but ought to refuse to approve any power plans that would have the effect of prejudicing the development of the St. Lawrence as a great ocean shipway. But if engineers and experts, whose business it is to look into these matters, advise the administration that not only do plans submitted not obstruct or appear in any way as an obstruction but that they may also be made to serve to help the larger object, then the government has to ask itself whether it is justified in preventing an industrial development in the matter of water power in a province where it finds navigation fully safeguarded simply because under an act of parliament, it has been given the duty of safeguarding navigation? I am bringing this up at the moment because it also bears on the resolution of my hon. friend.

In matters of government certain acts are legislative; others administrative; while parliament has given to the executive power to approve plans, has parliament thereby parted with its power of controlling any situation, should it be found that the executive in the exercise of its duty and authority has made a mistake, has gone too far? Not a bit of it. The other evening I read to the house a section of the Navigable Waters Protection Act which provides with respect to any approval given by the Dominion to any works or other construction in navigable waters that parliament may at any time annul all that has been done. My hon. friend the leader of the opposition says: But would parliament think of annulling any act of the executive. He said if this were done it would destroy the credit of the country, that it would never do to make a contract and then subsequently to annul it. Well, that is something which the parties who apply for approval of their plans under the navigable waters protection act, have to take into account and have always had to take into account. That is how parliament protects itself. That is how the country's interest is protected. All a company gets when its plans are submitted is approval of its plans subject to the right of parliament to annul all that the executive may do in granting approval.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Is not that what my motion asks for?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: No, it does not do that. It is just the other way around. It suggests that even before any kind of approval is given, this parliament should of itself pass upon plans in the first instance. I think I have made clear that such a proceeding would make the prosecution of public business impossible in this parliament. We would be spending all our time in trying to approve plans, involving technical and engineering features of which with our knowledge we could know but little. My hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) has not made any new discovery by his resolution, or discovered any new way in which parliament can protect the rights of the people in the matter of these natural resources. Parliament has taken the one means that is consistent with parliamentary government and the administration of public affairs. If we were to adopt the method which my hon. friend has suggested, business administration and the work of parliament as well would be rendered impossible. That is the point I want to make clear, and I do submit that in matters so comprehensive in their scope hon. members should not permit their judgment to be obscured by current rumours with respect to a lease here or a lease there, rumours which as well known are often circulated merely for the purpose of confusing an issue, but rather that they should look at the situation in its entirety, and ask themselves whether existing legislation goes far enough to protect the public interest. If it does not, then by all means let legislation be introduced which will serve this end; but let it be workable legislation.

Hon. J. W. EDWARDS (Frontenac-Addington): Mr. Speaker, I shall not occupy very many minutes with what I have to say. The first observation I have to make is to say to the right hon. the Prime Minister that I do not think he was quite fair and candid in his reference to the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett).

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: In what particular?

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): I will say in a moment. I am sure the right hon. the Prime Minister realizes that when the leader of the opposition used the words, "What is the hurry? Why the haste?" he was referring specifically to the deal put through in regard to the Seven Sisters falls, and not the natural resources at all.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Not at all.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): In that respect I do not think the right hon. gentleman was quite fair.

In the second place, I want to say that I cannot support the resolution proposed by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth). I cannot do so because it says:

> That, in the opinion of this house, no disposition of the natural resources, under the control of the federal government, shall be effective until ratified by parliament.

I cannot support that because in doing so I would be giving acceptance to his statement that the natural resources of the prairie provinces are under the control of the Dominion government, and I do not believe that properly they are. I believe that in regard to the natural resources of the prairie provinces the Dominion government has usurped authority, and it cannot justify it by any reference to our constitution. It is clearly set forth in section 117 of the British North America Act that:

> The several provinces shall retain all their respective public property not otherwise disposed of in this act, subject to the right of Canada to assume any lands or public property required for fortification or for the defence of the country.

I make the statement that under the constitution the Dominion is a landless entity, that every foot of land within the bounds of a province is the property of that province as soon as it is created, with the exceptions specifically stated in the British North America Act referring to Indian reserves and lands required by the Dominion for fortifications or for purposes of defence. With these very clearly stated exceptions, I say that as soon as a province is created the land within that province is vested absolutely in the province, and not in the Dominion. That is just where we have got into all our difficulties in dealing with this queston of the natural resources. It should have been dealt with away back in 1871, when the province of Manitoba was formed. But when a party commits one wrong, it is easier perhaps to commit a second wrong. The first wrong committed by the Dominion parliament was in creating the province of Manitoba by the act passed on the 12th of May, 1870. The Dominion government delimited the boundaries of a certain part of the territories which formerly were under the Hudson's Bay Company, and said: We will call that the province of Manitoba. They had no right to do anything of the kind, because clearly the lands at that time had not passed from the Hudson's Bay Company, and did not pass from the Hudson's Bay Company till six weeks later. To give the exact dates, the Hudson's Bay Company rights were extinguished on June 23, 1870, and the province of Manitoba was created on May 12, 1870. If further proof is wanted that my statement is correct, it will be found in the British North America Act of 1871, in which section 5 was inserted for the express purpose of validating an act which up to that time was a nullity. That, I say, was the first act of piracy, if I may call it that—

Mr. CANNON: Does not the Imperial act render valid any act which may have been passed previously by the Dominion parliament?

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): That is just exactly what I said. The Imperial act, the British North America Act of 1871, was passed for one express purpose, and that was to validate the act which had been passed by the Dominion parliament in 1870, creating the province of Manitoba.

The next act passed by the Dominion parliament in regard to this matter was passed in 1872. That was the Dominion Lands Act, by which the Dominion of Canada or the government of Canada assumed the right of ownership over all that territory which they wrongly asserted that Canada had bought from the Hudson's Bay Company. There is a very common impression throughout the country that Canada bought from the Hudson's Bay Company, Rupert's Land and the northwestern territories for the sum of $1,500,000. The Dominion of Canada, as a matter of fact, never bought one foot of land from the Hudson's Bay Company for the province of Manitoba or any other province.

Mr. CANTLEY: You are wrong.

[Mr. J. W. Edwards.]

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): I am not; I know what I am talking about. The Hudson's Bay Company could not sell what they did not own, and the Hudson's Bay Company never owned that land. They had a lease or the right to trade which gave them certain powers over that territory, and when this Dominion parliament conceived the idea of adding that territory to the Dominion of Canada, did they go to the Hudson's Bay Company? No; they put through an address to Her Majesty Queen Victoria, asking that that land be transferred and added to the Dominion. Why did they appeal to Her Majesty the Queen? Because the Hudson's Bay Company held their charter from the queen, and the only one to whom the Hudson's Bay Company could surrender their charter was to Her Majesty the Queen. They did surrender their charter, and $1,500,000 was paid over as a consideration, we might say, in respect of certain improvements, and so forth, which had been made by the Hudson's Bay Company while established in that territory. But that sum was not paid over in payment for that vast extent of territory. That vast extent of territory did not pass from the Hudson's Bay Company to the Dominion of Canada. It passed from the hands of the Hudson's Bay Company back to Her Majesty the Queen.

The Act of Confederation very distinctly sets forth these facts, that while the Dominion of Canada had administrative rights over that territory until provinces were created, it did not have sovereign rights. It had the rights of a trustee only, and the moment a province was created that trusteeship ended and the sovereign rights in the territory were vested at once in the newly created province. All the trouble in connection with the natural resources of the prairie provinces has been from start to finish the effort on behalf of the Dominion to claim sovereign rights which, under the constitution, it has not got. I quote from a return brought down to this house:

> The Dominion claims the right of jurisdiction by authority of the surrender made by the governor and company of Adventurers trading into Hudson's Bay to Her Late Majesty Queen Victoria,—

Please note those words: "by authority of the surrender to Her Late Majesty."

> —bearing date November 19, 1869, and made pursuant to the powers and provisions of the Rupert's Land Act, 1868.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I should like any hon. member to point out to me any statute of the Imperial parliament, including the Confederation Act, which will warrant the federal government's claim to ownership of one foot of land contained in the three prairie provinces or any other province. The right hon. Prime Minister said a few moments ago: Oh, regarding the water-powers in the province of Quebec or any other province—no, not any other province; he was referring specifically I think to a certain plan under contemplation—we have the right in so far as the St. Lawrence is concerned, in fact it is our duty and our responsibility to see that navigation is not interfered with. But he was very distinct and emphatic in his statement that in regard to the water-powers, we will say, in Quebec or Ontario, not navigable rivers like the St. Lawrence, the government at Ottawa has no right to say a word. He says those powers belong exclusively to Quebec and Ontario. Then I should like to ask him: If the water-powers in the provinces of Quebec and Ontario belong to those provinces, and the only authority that has a right to say a word about their disposal is the local legislature, on what clauses of the constitution does he base that statement? Does he rely on those clauses which explicitly say the provinces shall own and have control of the natural resources within their boundaries? That being so, I ask him: By what right does this or any other government sitting at Ottawa undertake to interfere in the leasing of the Seven Sisters falls? Why not let the province of Manitoba do as the province of Quebec or the province of Ontario would do with any water-powers within their boundaries? Why did this government undertake to interfere and advise?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: We did not interfere or advise at all.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): The Minister of the Interior carried on negotiations with the Manitoba government. I submit that this government had no right to interfere at all. The government of Manitoba, if it only had the courage to go ahead, could have made its bargain with any company it saw fit to deal within regard to the Seven Sisters falls, or in regard to any other water-power within its boundaries, and tell the government at Ottawa to go hang. I say if the provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta care to assert their rights under the constitution, they can administer their lands and their water-powers without any reference to the government at Ottawa, and I believe their action would be sustained by the judicial committee of the Privy Council.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Did not the provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta surrender those rights because of the subsidies granted in 1905?

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): No. No person will so assert. Alberta does not say so, Saskatchewan does not say so. Alberta submitted or agreed to an arrangement to accept a certain subsidy in lieu—not in surrender of—in lieu of certain property rights; and as I think the Minister of Railways very properly said, the very fact that a subsidy was given to those provinces in lieu of their resources is an admission on the part of parliament and the federal government that those provinces have property rights in their natural resources, that those resources belong to them.

Mr. DUNNING: Unquestionably.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): True they accepted the subsidy; but not in exchange for their right of ownership, not in exchange for their sovereign rights. That was only a temporary arrangement.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): But did not transfer of control of administration over the resources go with the acceptance by the provinces of the subsidy?

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): That is a matter of agreement which I claim is based on a wrong foundation.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): That may be.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Now, in a speech last session the Prime Minister said that in his judgment it was a great mistake that these resources had not been handed back to Alberta and Saskatchewan in 1905. With that sentiment I entirely agree. It was a great mistake. It was also a mistake when the resources of Manitoba were not handed back in 1870.

Mr. MARCIL: Perhaps the reason was that those provinces at that time thought the subsidies were more necessary to them to organize and carry on their government than possession of the lands.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Perhaps they did. I will not undertake to give the reasons that moved them to agree as they did; but I repeat that the agreement for the acceptance of the subsidy was not in lieu of their ownership or proprietary rights over the land.

Mr. DUNNING: If my hon. friend will permit me—the very words themselves bear out his contention, " inasmuch as the province will not have administration of the resources."

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Yes, I can understand that. Let us be fair in discussing this matter. I am prepared to attach a certain amount of blame to the present government for not returning these resources. But this is not the only government to be blamed. Unquestionably a certain amount of blame attaches to every government that has held office since those provinces were created; and a certain share of responsibility and blame attaches to us as members in allowing this condition of affairs to go on from year to year. It has gone on so long that the people of Alberta and Saskatchewan and Manitoba have come to the conclusion that they cannot do anything without coming down here to Ottawa and asking permission. They have become accustomed to the yoke around their necks, and not being free men, they have come to regard the Dominion as really owning those lands. The Dominion of Canada from 1870 down to the present time, not by one piece of legislation but by dozens, has been guilty of acts of political piracy without parallel in any other civilized part of the world.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Yes, that language is not too strong. The Dominion has been guilty of acts of political piracy without parallel in any other civilized country in the world.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: It is good alliteration.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): I hope you like the sound of it. The Dominion has been exercising sovereign rights where it possessed none, and I challenge any member of the government or of this house—

Mr. CANNON: Will my hon. friend allow me? What does he do with the order in council of June 1870, transferring the Northwest Territories to the Dominion?

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): What order in council?

Mr. CANNON: That of June, 1870.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): The order in council of the Imperial government?

Mr. CANNON: Passed by Her Majesty the Queen.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Transferring what?

Mr. CANNON: Transferring the Northwest Territories to the Dominion.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): That is all right; I never disputed that; I said so a moment ago. Certainly they transferred it to the Dominion. But I should like my hon. friend to grope around and look further into that book and find if he can where the transfer to the Dominion constituted the Dominion anything else than a trustee and not owner. The transfer did not give to the Dominion sovereign rights. I defy my hon. friend to point to any clause in the constitution contradicting my words; the constitution did not give sovereign rights.

Mr. CANNON: I find it in the act of 1871, passed by the Imperial parliament, which ratified the Manitoba Act passed by the Dominion parliament.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): There again my hon. friend will need to do a little more searching. This is what happened. The Dominion parliament in 1870 said, "We will create another province out there," and they did not stop to ask whether they had even administrative rights over the territory occupied by the Hudson's Bay Company. They did not stop to ask that. They said, "We will take possession of it, cut it out and call it Manitoba." And as a matter of fact, when the federal government down here did cut out a slice of that territory and call it Manitoba, the Hudson's Bay Company had not yet relinquished its rights; it did not do so until some six weeks later. That is why in 1871 the Dominion government, having seen the mistake, the blunder they had made—it took them only a year to see their blunder, and in that respect they are much speedier than the present government, for in about a year's time they did see where they were wrong—got together and said, "We have created a province out of territory that belonged to someone else."

An hon. MEMBER: It was not owned by the company.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Well, it was leased by or was under the jurisdiction of the Hudson's Bay Company. As I say, having seen their mistake, the Dominion government applied to the Imperial parliament to get them out of the hole, much in the same way—history repeats itself—as the right hon. gentleman opposite appealed to the privy council against a decision of the supreme court given unanimously in his favour. They appealed to the Imperial parliament, and the Imperial statesmen said, "Yes, you have made a mistake; you are a little too soon. This land had not yet been transferred to you; it was not transferred to you until six weeks after you passed the act creating the province. The only way we can fix that is to put a clause in the British North America Act." And a clause was incorporated in the act of 1871—clause 5. You will remember that clause 2 conferred upon the Dominion the right to carve out provinces, delimit their boundaries, and give them government, and clause 5 ratified or validated the act of 1870 passed by the Dominion parliament. Now, if the act passed in 1870 by the Dominion parliament was valid and binding, if the Dominion parliament in 1870 had the right to pass that act, what in the name of Heaven was the use of the act of 1871 for the purpose of validating something which was already valid? But it was not valid, and the mistake was rectified. My hon. friend the Solicitor General (Mr. Cannon) says, "Did they not by the act of 1871 transfer the lands in Manitoba to the Dominion of Canada?" Not at all. According to the constitution, the moment that province was formed—and it was validly formed as soon as section 5 was embodied in the act of 1871—that moment even the administrative rights of the Dominion ceased over that particular piece of territory, and the sovereign rights of Manitoba in that territory began. And the same thing is absolutely true of the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan.

Under the Northwest Territories government things were somewhat different. The government of the Northwest Territories was operating under delegated authority, an authority delegated to them by this parliament as trustee of that domain. But while this Dominion had administrative rights over that country during the time it was in territorial form, I contend that the moment the autonomy bills were passed in 1905 the sovereignty of the people of Alberta and Saskatchewan became supreme in every foot of land within their boundaries and in every water-power, mine and other resource they had. And the Dominion of Canada, in undertaking to administer those natural resources, did so as trustee. It may be that the Dominion acted with the consent of those people; but if they acted with the consent of the people of the west then I say that the right of ownership lying in the people of Saskatchewan and Alberta, the Dominion government in administering the resources has been merely discharging the function of an agent for the owners, and should not assume the rights of ownership.

Mr. GARDINER: Would the hon. member include in his statement that area set apart for national parks in Alberta?

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): I say this. It seems clear to me, from my reading of the British North America Act, that the moment a province is formed its sovereign rights in every foot of land within the province begin, with the exception of Indian reserves and such lands as are required for fortification or for purposes of defence, and which are specifically exempted. The rights over the parks are in the province; it is up to the province as owner of the land—not in any sense as tenant but as owner—if it so desires to enter into an agreement with the Dominion to set aside a particular area for parks. The province has the right to do that. But they should not come here to the Dominion government as suppliants, the Dominion going ahead and taking what lands they see fit and calling them parks. Alberta and Saskatchewan come here and accept the terms of the Dominion. That is not right. That, Mr. Speaker, is not the way land was set aside for public parks in Ontario. Who set them aside? The people who owned the land, the people of Ontario. And so the people of the western provinces, as owners, have the right to say how much of their land shall be reserved for parks, and to enter into such arrangements with the Dominion as seem best to them for the purpose, but never relinquishing for a moment their position as owners, never relinquishing their sovereign rights to the control of the territory within the bounds of the province.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Would my. hon. friend say that the town of Banff, because it is in Alberta, is under the control of the province?

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): There is no use repeating what I have already said; I have made my statement as clear as I can. However, I will make it again. Under our constitution, the moment a province is created the sovereign rights to every foot of soil in the province, with the exception of Indian reserves and land required for fortification and defence purposes, lie or are vested in the province, whether Banff or any place else. I believe that these provinces in the west have been handling this matter from a wrong standpoint; they have been handling it from the standpoint that it was up to them to come here and get down on their bended knees and appeal to the government at Ottawa to give them this and that. So the Prime Minister says, "We have had negotiations; we have presented certain propositions to Saskatchewan, but Saskatchewan would not agree." By what right does the right hon. gentleman present certain terms to Saskatchewan?

Mr. CANNON: Under section 21.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): No, not under any section of the constitution or anything else do you present certain terms to these western provinces on the assumption that you are the owners. You are not the owners and never were.

Mr. CANNON: If my hon. friend will read section 21 he will see that the ownership is expressly given to the Dominion for the purposes of Canada.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): I say the contrary; I have read section 21 and every other section.

Mr. CANNON: This is the law.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Yes, that is the law which is misinterpreted by the Solicitor General and which has been misinterpreted by this government and by every other government which has been in office in Canada since confederation; it has been misinterpreted for the purpose of enabling the Dominion of Canada to exploit these western provinces. I am not a lawyer; perhaps it takes me a little longer to get the gist of a legal argument, but I have read over these acts and I stick to my former statement. I ask the Solicitor General to challenge, if he can, the statement that as soon as a province is created the right of ownership is vested in that province and the trusteeship and administrative rights of the federal government automatically cease under the constitution. That is my submission, and I would like the hon. gentleman to take up the challenge and quote if he can any section of any Imperial act or any other act to the contrary, except acts passed by this parliament. Do not bring to your support acts passed by the Dominion of Canada such as the Dominion Lands Act, because my answer would be that you had no right to pass such acts; you were assuming the right of ownership which you did not possess; you were undertaking to say what should be done with property belonging to someone else. Do not quote any acts passed by the Dominion government; get back to the constitution itself, sections 91, 92, 93, 117 and others which specifically deal with the Dominion's right of ownership. No, I am wrong; I do not mean the Dominion's right of ownership, but the administrative rights of the Dominion, which it has over parts of the country which are not incorporated into provinces. Even there it has not ownership rights, and its administrative rights cease the moment the bounds of a province are fixed.

Now my hon. friend has referred to section 21, presumably of the British North America Act?

Mr. CANNON: No, section 21 of the Saskatchewan act and section 21 of the Alberta act.

[Mr. J. W. Edwards.]

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Section 21 of the Saskatchewan act of 1905 and the Alberta act of 1905? Mr. Speaker, when Manitoba became a province, when Prince Edward Island became a province, when British Columbia became a province, the acts passed here were validated by the Imperial parliament. Were the acts of 1905 constituting Saskatchewan and Alberta provinces placed before the Imperial parliament for validation? They were not and now, after these acts which were based upon a rotten foundation have been in existence for more than twenty years, the Solicitor General comes forward and says, "But look at section so and so of an act which we undertook to pass, which we assumed we had the right to pass but which, under the constitution of the Dominion of Canada, we had no right to pass in its present terms."

Mr. CANNON: Who says we had no right to pass it?

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): I say so.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): I suppose hon. members are as much justified in laughing at that as they would be in laughing if the Solicitor General said the opposite. However, when I make the statement that I say so I am giving, as I have a right to do, my interpretation of something more powerful and dependable than the word of the member for Frontenac-Addington or even that of the Solicitor General; I am referring to the terms and conditions laid down in the British North America Act. That is what I mean when I make the statement that I say so, by repeating what is there, and so far the hon. gentleman has not done anything but wriggle and twist in order to find some way to get around that fact. Up to the present he has not found any section in the British North America Act which will bear him out and support this and previous governments in the course taken with respect to western resources.

Could anything possibly be more ridiculous on the face of it than this: Back in 1912 we added 114,000,000 acres to the province of Manitoba, taken from Rupert's Land which was formerly under the administration of the Hudson's Bay Company; we also added 93,000,000 acres to the province of Ontario and 227,375,000 acres to the province of Quebec. What absolute piffle and nonsense it is for the Prime Minister or any other member of this house to get up and talk about equality of status as between the provinces. Were any restrictions placed upon the province of Quebec with respect to the 227,375,000 acres added to that province? Not a bit of it; that would not have been good politics. You can imagine the flood of eloquence which would have issued from the lips of certain supporters of the government in that province if the government had taken the position that Quebec should be given that extension of territory only on condition that there would be no separate schools and no French taught in that territory. Just imagine the roar which would have been sent up, and quite properly so. Yet restrictions of this kind are supposed to be swallowed by the people out west.

Mr. CANNON: What about Ontario?

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Thanks very much; you need not have reminded me because I was just coming to that. What a howl would have arisen in Ontario if, when the 93,000,000 acres were added to this province in 1912, this government had said, "Yes, we are going to increase your territory but only on condition that you agree to certain restrictions with regard to schools or something else." Just imagine the froth and foam from Queen's Park in Toronto, and from all over the province of Ontario. They would have said, quite properly, "Mind your own business; hand over that territory, and the moment it becomes a part of Ontario under the constitution it is ours to administer; we own it from that moment." So they did; so did Quebec, without any question, but when it comes to adding 114,000,000 acres to Manitoba it is different. Then the government says, "You can have the territory but not without certain restrictions."

When the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan were created, certain tracts of land were set aside and given these names, but Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba are not provinces to-day and never have been provinces. The British North America Act defines a province, and it does not give two definitions. So I say it is pure nonsense to talk about equality of status as between the various provinces of Canada. It is all right to cross the ocean and have a conference and then come back with another Magna Charta held under your arm; come back and tell the long-suffering people of Canada who have been tyrannized so long by the mother land that they can now breathe freely of the air of liberty; that now every unit of the British Empire is absolutely on an equal footing, but the man that would make that pronouncement to the people of Canada would be admitting that the so-called provinces are being held by the throat and deprived of their rights. To talk about the equality of status is only a farce. This is not a dominion at all; it has not been a dominion since the parliament of Canada in 1867 first started to assert rights that did not belong to it, and assert control over property to which it had no right. I shall not vote for the motion of the hon. member (Mr. Woodsworth) because to do so would be an admission on my part that the federal government has control over those lands. It has no rightful control; it is exercising usurped authority, and the longer it continues to exercise such authority the more shame attaches to the parliament of Canada.

Mr. A. A. HEAPS (North Winnipeg): If I do not follow the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat (Mr. Edwards) in his own particular argument, I do so because I believe in what the right hon. Prime Minister said a few moments ago, when he told the house that they should endeavour to understand what the resolution really means and keep as near to the resolution as they possibly could. I regret the Prime Minister did not heed his own advice. During the course of his address he confined himself to the reading of correspondence and telegrams which had been laid on the table of this house a couple of weeks ago, and in which I do not believe this house had very much interest. If the Prime Minister had dealt with the import of the resolution then perhaps we would have had something of a more useful nature from him.

If I understand the purpose of the resolution of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth), it is to stop such actions as have taken place during the past twelve months, and in particular the signing of such a contract as that between the government and the province of Manitoba. I have not the slightest objection to the government handing over the resources of Manitoba to the government of that province, provided it is done in a proper way, but what I do object to is the manner and method adopted to overcome a difficulty which had arisen last year. When the Prime Minister spoke this afternoon he dealt with everything but the circumstances under which those resources were tentatively handed over to the province of Manitoba.

I want to take this house back to the end of last session of parliament. In May and June of last year the members for Manitoba received a certain assurance from the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Stewart), and we believed that assurance would be binding on the government. Had we thought otherwise, we could have brought to the attention of the house something which we thought was of vital importance, not merely to the people of Manitoba, but to the people of the Dominion of Canada. But we accepted the pledge given to us by the minister and therefore we did not raise that question in the concluding days of the last session.

The Prime Minister in his treatment of the question this afternoon stressed the differentiation between that which is legislative and that which is administrative. I think most of the members of this house have had the opportunity of dealing with administrative matters as well as matters which might be termed legislative, but there is another function of this house, just as important as its legislative function, and that is deliberative. If this house is refused the right to deliberate on questions of utmost importance, then we lose one of the most important functions that this house possesses. I do not think there is one member of this house who can tell me where the administrative function begins or ends, or where the legislative function begins or ends, because one is often merged with the other. What I might call administrative the government might call legislative, and vice versa.

We object to the circumstances under which this transaction was carried out. At the end of last session we left this house thinking that no further action would be taken until the minister consulted with the members for Manitoba. Not only did he say he would do that, but he said he would take no action until the differences which then existed between the members for Manitoba were adjusted. If I am not correctly stating the substance of the minister's remarks, I hope he will put me right. I challenge the minister to say that those differences have been composed.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The hon. gentleman surely does not mean to infer that the last man who was opposing this thing was to have his difference composed. That would be an impossible position.

Mr. HEAPS: To my knowledge, Mr. Speaker, there is not one member from the province of Manitoba who has changed his mind since he left this house last session.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I must take exception to my hon. friend's statement.

Mr. HEAPS: I am speaking of my own knowledge.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I cannot agree with that statement.

[Mr. Heaps.]

Mr. HEAPS: Perhaps the hon. minister has information which is not available to the rest of us.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I think I have.

Mr. HEAPS: I would be very much interested in knowing who those members are. I think this house has a right to know, because the matter is a public one and consequently there should be nothing to be afraid of. I do not expect that any of the Manitoba members who have changed their minds will be afraid to tell the members of this house that they have done so.

The minister said that he would consult again with the members from Manitoba. How did he consult with them? I never knew the minister intended to visit Winnipeg; I never received any intimation in that regard. I want to say to the minister now that had I received word that he desired to consult with me I would have endeavoured to the limit of my ability to meet him and discuss the whole question. The first I heard of this whole situation was some time in the month of August. I then wrote a note to the minister and told him that I hoped the pledges we had received from him would not be rescinded, and that the Seven Sisters falls would not be given over to the company then being formed. I received a reply from him saying that he would like to meet me when I was in Ottawa. So far as any action on this particular site is concerned, it had all taken place before the end of August last year.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The lease was not issued until the end of September.

Mr. HEAPS: I am not speaking now of technicalities; I am speaking of facts and not merely of what comes to the knowledge of the public. There was a great deal of which the public knew very little, but some of it is now becoming public property. How did the minister meet with the members from Manitoba? Did he call them together in a group as was done here in the house, and consult with them? I do not think so. He called them individually into some back room of the Royal Alexandra hotel in Winnipeg and discussed the matter with them individually. There he got their opinion. I do not think that can be really called consulting with the members of the Manitoba group. I think if he would use the words "insulting the members of the Manitoba group," that might be more appropriate.

In the house the other day reference was made to a round robin that had been signed. Somehow or another—

Mr. SPEAKER: Was the hon. member suggesting that the minister insulted the hon. members from Manitoba?

Mr. HEAPS: I certainly would not like to suggest that, because I know the Minister of the Interior is too good natured a man to insult any member of this house.

I was saying, Mr. Speaker, when you rose, that the minister the other night forgot the round robin that was presented to him early in February, 1928. At that time we had received word from Manitoba that the government of Manitoba intended to dispose of this site. We immediately got busy and had a petition circulated amongst the members of the Manitoba group. I have a copy of that petition in my hand signed by seventeen members from Manitoba. There are altogether eighteen members from that province and there is only one exception, namely, the Minister of Immigration (Mr. Forke). I believe I am doing the Minister of Immigration no injustice when I say that at the time this petition, if you would call it such, was presented to the Minister of the Interior, the Minister of Immigration was in favour of the petition. It is dated Ottawa, February 8, the day it was presented to the minister in his office. It reads:

> The Honourable Charles Stewart, Minister of the Interior, Ottawa:
> We the undersigned members of parliament from the province of Manitoba respectfully request that the power site on the Winnipeg river known as Seven Sisters falls be retained for the use of the government of the province of Manitoba in their own provincial hydro-electric system.

That was very definite. Besides this petition only one other request was made to the minister, and that was on a subseqent occasion, I believe some time in May, when the hon. member for Portage la Prairie (Mr. McPherson) took a message to the Minister of the Interior telling him how the situation was at that time, that we had split nine to four on that occasion but still retained the position that we had in the month of February last year.

I do not know what happened in Winnipeg when the minister met the various members of parliament from Manitoba. Possibly some might have changed their minds; but I should like to remind the minister that if any one of them changed his mind, in the month of September, before the agreement was finally ratified between the provincial government and the Dominion government, there came down to Ottawa the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Thorson) who pleaded with the Dominion government not to proceed with that agreement. I believe when my hon. friend came down to plead with the cabinet on that particular occasion, he represented the overwhelming majority of Liberal opinion in the city of Winnipeg. I might say, while I am this afternoon expressing my disapproval of the action the government took on this question, that I, too, represent a large body of Liberal opinion in the city of Winnipeg and probably in the province of Manitoba.

I said a moment or two ago that this lease had practically been disposed of long before the month of September, 1928, and in order to substantiate my statement in that regard I will read a very brief article from the Financial Post, published in Toronto about the first week in March, 1928. Financial people as a rule know a good deal more about what is going on in connection with power sites than most members of parliament do; they usually are in advance with such information. This is what it said, and I want hon. members to bear in mind that this was published in the first week of March, 1928:

> New financing in connection with the Seven Sisters falls power development in Manitoba, is forecast by an unofficial announcement that a satisfactory report will shortly be issued from Winnipeg, giving the Winnipeg Electric authority to go ahead with its development at this site. Assuming that the government gives its sanction, it is understood that a new company will be formed to develop the Seven Sisters site. A public issue will probably be made to provide the money necessary for the project. The premier of the province undertook recently to inquire into the question of power development in this region, and although as yet no official announcement has been made, it is understood that this report will be very shortly forthcoming, and will be entirely favourable to the development of a site by the company. Following an official announcement to this effect, the next move, as already stated would be the creation of a new company, associated, with, or controlled by the Winnipeg Electric, and which would then proceed to issue securities for the purpose of financing the development.

I will go a little further than that, and state that in the winter of 1927-28, the same company were buying land in the vicinity of the Seven Sisters site, because they were pretty certain that site was going to be theirs in the very near future. They went a little beyond that. In addition to buying land in that area, they were actually proceeding with the development work and during the winter of 1927-28 equipment was taken out to the site. Yet when we members from Manitoba took up the question in parliament we had no knowledge of the facts I have just enumerated. I should like to know how these financial people in Canada knew probably before the house met last year that they were going to get the site and yet six months or longer than that afterwards, the Dominion government and the government of Manitoba were dickering in regard to some form of agreement. If there had been no hitch in the granting of that site to a private corporation that was formed for taking it over, I do not think the agreement would ever have been consummated. I asked a question the other day of the Minister of the Interior, and I think hon. members will remember that the minister said that the premier of the province of Manitoba had no authority to hand over this site to another company. That is quite true. He did not have the authority; he would have had to seek authority from the provincial legislature, and the reason why he did not want to accept the agreement as originally submitted by the Minister of the Interior, I believe was that if the site had been handed over to the premier of the province of Manitoba he would have been compelled to submit the agreement to the legislature of the province, and that was the last thing the premier of Manitoba wanted to do. Therefore I say that the Minister of the Interior, together with the premier of Manitoba, assumed a very grave responsibility, because by his action the Minister of the Interior was assisting the premier of Manitoba to defeat possibly the will of the people of that province.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Thursday, February 28, 1929

The house met at three o'clock.

PRIVILEGE—MR. KING (KOOTENAY)

Hon. J. H. KING (Minister of National Health and Pensions): I wish to speak to a question of privilege. Just before coming into the house to-day I had brought to my attention an editorial appearing in the Ottawa Journal this morning under the heading, "Keep Politics out of the Pension Board." This editorial begins as follows:

> From an authoritative source information reaches The Journal that an effort is being made to limit the powers, destroy the independence, and curtail the usefulness of the Board of Pension Commissioners.

This is a very serious assertion, Mr. Speaker, and it is so unwarranted and contrary to the actual conditions existing in the department to-day that I wish to give it an unqualified denial. It is my purpose, with your consent and the consent of the house, to make a further statement in regard to this matter, after I have had an opportunity of perusing this long editorial.

[Mr. Heaps.]

THE BUDGET

On the orders of the day:

Sir EUGENE FISET (Rimouski): May I be permitted to ask the Minister of Finance when we may expect the budget.

Hon. J. A. ROBB (Minister of Finance): To-morrow.

MONTREAL RAILWAY TERMINAL FACILITIES

REPORT OF MR. FREDERICK PALMER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. G. BELL (St. Antoine): In view of the Palmer report regarding the terminals at Montreal, may I ask the Minister of Railways what action is contemplated by the government during the present session? What is the intention of the government as to acting on that report?

Hon. CHARLES A. DUNNING (Minister of Railways and Canals): The report was secured by the government in order to render service to all the various interests concerned in the solution of that problem. Any action taken in this parliament can be action only with respect to the Canadian National Railways. It is not contemplated by the government to force upon the city of Montreal or upon the various interests affected the adoption of any particular general plan. The effort of the government was merely to secure for the interests affected—the people of Montreal, the city of Montreal, the harbour board, the tramways, the two great railway corporations—expert information bearing upon their problem. That information is now in their hands. The president of the Canadian National Railways has indicated that so far as the Canadian National are concerned they desire to move in the matter of Canadian National terminal construction or reconstruction in Montreal; but I gather from him that any suggestions which the Canadian National make to-day or this session will not have the effect of rendering impossible the evolution later of a larger scheme. I take it that the proposals of the Canadian National, if adopted at this session, would tend to fit in with any future ultimate development which might be decided upon by agreement among the various interests affected.

Mr. BELL (St. Antoine): Is it the intention of the government, then, to take some action regarding Canadian National facilities this session?

Mr. DUNNING: We are awaiting the representations of the Canadian National in that regard; the matter has not yet been considered from that point of view.

BRITISH COLUMBIA PENITENTIARY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. G. McQUARRIE (New Westminster): May I ask the government when it is anticipated that the vacancy in the wardenship of the British Columbia penitentiary will be filled? It has now been vacant for a year. The same question might be asked in reference to the deputy's position. There has been a good deal of comment owing to the fact that the present incumbent, the acting warden, is residing at a hotel in Vancouver instead of at the penitentiary.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): As my hon. friend will observe, I am unable to answer the question in the absence of the Minister of Justice. I assure him that if he is an applicant his application will receive every consideration.

Mr. McQUARRIE: I can inform the Prime Minister that I am not an applicant.

JACK MINER'S BIRD SANCTUARY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. C. HOCKEN (Toronto West Centre): Is it the intention of the government to make a grant to Jack Miner's bird sanctuary?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The estimates are down and they indicate such grants as the government is asking for at the moment. The particular subject my hon. friend has mentioned is one we will have to consider, and I shall be glad to bring it to the attention of the proper authorities.

CAMP BORDEN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. W. KAISER (Ontario): May I ask the Minister of National Defence whether he has come to any decision with regard to the suggested removal of Camp Borden from its present location?

Hon. J. L. RALSTON (Minister of National Defence): The answer is in the negative.

NORTHWEST TERRITORIES ACT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. B. ADSHEAD (East Calgary): I would like to ask the Prime Minister if it is the intention of the government to introduce an act this session to amend the Northwest Territories Act with regard to trial by jury.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): That is another question I will have to refer to the Minister of Justice, and I will ask him to give my hon. friend a reply.

INQUIRY FOR RETURN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. N. CAMPBELL (Mackenzie): On February 13, a motion in my name for production of papers was passed by this house, but as yet these papers have not been laid on the table. May I impress upon the government the necessity of securing these papers at the earliest possible date?

NATURAL RESOURCES

PROPOSAL THAT DISPOSITION BE EFFECTIVE ONLY ON APPROVAL OF PARLIAMENT

The house resumed from Wednesday, February 27, consideration of the motion of Mr. Woodsworth:

That, in the opinion of this house, no disposition of the natural resources, under the control of the federal government, shall be effective until ratified by parliament.

Mr. A. A. HEAPS (North Winnipeg): Mr. Speaker, I feel that I must deviate somewhat from the line of discussion which I followed yesterday. During yesterday's sitting the Minister of the Interior laid on the table rather voluminous correspondence in connection with the Seven Sisters site in Manitoba, and—

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): May I correct my hon. friend? I sent the correspondence to the Secretary of State, who tabled it together with other documents.

Mr. HEAPS: The minister is quite right, but the correspondence related principally to the Department of the Interior, and I am afraid I must read part of it in order that members of the house may have some idea as to what took place before the site was handed over to the Northwestern Power Company, a subsidiary of the Winnipeg Electric Company.

The correspondence to which I am now referring is found at page 16. First I intend to read the last part of a letter from the Minister of the Interior to the Premier of Manitoba under date of February 16, 1927, approximately two years ago. The letter is as follows:

In view of what has been outlined in the foregoing, and particularly of the fact that I understand that the company is now giving serious consideration to the desirability of abandoning the Pinawa plant (which policy we have advocated for many years, although only recently with much hope of achievement). I would inquire of you as to whether you do not consider that the present time is opportune for the province and the company to endeavour to reach some mutually satisfactory understanding covering the development of the combined Pinawa-Seven Sisters reaches which will serve the two-fold end of adding a substantial block of power to the developable resources of Manitoba, and at the same time of providing the province with a substantial block of power for its present and future needs. There are many alternative ways in which this arrangement could be effected and the above ends achieved. I would appreciate receiving an expression of your views.

This letter was in reply to the request of the Premier of Manitoba that his government be given the lease of the Seven Sisters site.

Now I want to go a little further in the correspondence and refer to a letter written under date of June 7, 1927, from the legal department of the Winnipeg Electric Company to Mr. J. T. Johnston, director of water-powers, in Ottawa. The letter is as follows:

Dear Sir,

I hereby apply for a priority permit for the right to develop power on the reach of the Winnipeg river known as "Seven Sisters" in accordance with plans which are now being prepared and will be submitted to you in the near future.

It is desirous to have the permit issued in the name of a company which is now in process of incorporation. As soon as it has advanced sufficiently I shall furnish you with the name of the company in question, and which of course will be a subsidiary of Winnipeg Electric Company.

This is a continuation of the negotiations which have been carried on for some time with your department relative to power development at the above site.

Yours truly,

(Signed) E. Anderson,
Counsel.

Now I will refer to something which does not appear in this correspondence and which, of course, could not appear in it. About this time the Nesbitt-Thomson interests acquired four foreign-language newspapers in the city of Winnipeg, I am told, for the express purpose of educating the Polish and Ukrainian citizens of Winnipeg and the German citizens of Manitoba to the idea of private development of power resources in that province. I suppose most members of the house will know that these papers have been put up for sale, now that the purpose for which they were bought has been achieved. This fact came out during the hearing of a court case in the province of Manitoba during the last session of parliament.

Going a little further into this correspondence I find a letter dated October 28, 1927, addressed to Mr. Johnston and signed by the counsel of the Winnipeg Electric Company, who is now the president of that company. The letter is as follows:

I am informed that someone has applied for homestead rights, or right to purchase two legal subdivisions 9 and 10, section 25, township 30, range 11, east. As this land is in the vicinity of Seven Sisters falls it would be reserved for water-power purposes.

I presume that "would" should be "should."

I understand the Dominion Lands office here is to give an answer to the applicant on or before the 25th November. Perhaps you will be good enough to take this up with the proper department at Ottawa and see that the land is reserved for waterpower purposes.

I might say that the department did take it up and went considerably beyond what is contained in this communication.

Now I come to a rather more significant point. I have just read some communications which show how willing the department was to acquiesce with the requests of the Winnipeg Electric Company, and on February 6, 1928, after questions had been asked on the floor of this house and the whole matter was to be aired here, the following telegram was sent by the Minister of the Interior to Hon. John Bracken, Premier of Manitoba:

Your wire February second re Seven Sisters. No truth in report that Winnipeg Electric Railway Company is urging federal government for lease to develop Seven Sisters falls. Company's application was dated June seventh, 1927, as to which your government has knowledge. Company has not submitted any further request for action in respect to its application. Mr. Johnston expects to reach Winnipeg Monday morning in accordance with your request.

Here we have a telegram from the Minister of the Interior to the Premier of Manitoba stating that there had been no such request from the Winnipeg Electric Company when I am sure that if I had time to peruse the 750 pages of this return tabled yesterday I would find it full of correspondence similar to that I have read.

Now I go a little further. I think hon. members will remember that on June 6 last the leader of the opposition raised the question of the disposition of this power site. The matter was brought up at about ten o'clock in the evening and the minister then gave the assurance to the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) that no action would be taken by him or by the government until he had consulted with the members from the province of Manitoba. He also said that if the differences had not been composed there would be no leave issued for this development. In the following correspondence which was tabled yesterday I find this communication dated at Ottawa, June 7, 1928:

Dear Mr. Bracken,

I have your letter of the 31st ultimo re the Seven Sisters falls lease, together with the memorandum of statements made in your legislature about the matter.

As the matter is one that has created a great deal of interest in Manitoba and last night, was made the matter of comment in the house by the hon. Mr. Bennett and, in view of the fact that delay of a month or so will not injure the prospects of this development, I think it wise on my part to delay the issuing of the license for that time.

However, I note you have not changed your position from that taken in your former letter.

Mr. MANION: What was the date of that letter?

Mr. HEAPS: June 7. Within twenty-four hours of the minister giving his pledge to the house he writes this letter to the Premier of Manitoba, as much as to say: Do not take any notice of the pledge I gave in the House of Commons; we have something in common between us and we are going to slip it over. I think the house deserves a little better consideration than that. I do not know whether the Prime Minister was acquainted with this correspondence, but he was good enough to read into the records of the house considerable of the correspondence in connection with the return of the natural resources. I would be pleased to have the Prime Minister read into the records of this house the correspondence from which I have just read myself.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): If the hon. gentleman is inferring that there was a breach of faith on my part, I want to say to the house that I tried to indicate in my speech the action I had taken to reconcile the difference of opinion which was evident among the members at that time. As I pointed out, the lease was not issued until the end of September. There was a great deal of correspondence passing between the parties; considerable pressure was brought to bear upon me throughout the whole proceedings, and I feel that I had satisfied, as far as it was humanly possible, the objections that were raised to the granting of this lease.

Mr. HEAPS: I have no comment to make on what the Minister of the Interior has just said. I think the letter I have just read speaks for itself.

This action of the government has created a good deal of feeling in Winnipeg and Manitoba, and rightly so, because we have had a very hard struggle to maintain our public utilities in the city of Winnipeg. These utilities represent a large investment and are the result of a long struggle on the part of the people of Winnipeg, and anything that is done by any government institution, either by legislative or by administrative act, is bound to create a good deal of feeling in that city.

This transaction has created a feeling of distrust in the province of Manitoba. I do not know whether or not that feeling is well founded, but I would like to read a letter written by the manager of the city Hydro to the chairman of the Ontario Hydro Commission, Mr. Magrath. This letter was dated February 8, 1928, and I will only read a brief extract from it. I think the Minister of the Interior knows who Mr. Glasco is, and I do not suppose he would impute any wrong motives to him. At the time this letter was written I do not suppose there was any thought that this correspondence would be made public, but as this whole matter has received considerable publicity I think I can quote one or two brief sentences. This is what Mr. Glasco says:

> The water-powers branch's engineers and their minister too, I believe, seem partial in every way to the private power interests in this dispute that has arisen, and I am hoping that Mr. Johnson will not be able to impress his views too strongly on Dr. Hogg during his sojourn in Winnipeg.

The "Mr. Johnson" mentioned in the letter is Mr. J. T. Johnston, the head of the water-powers branch of the Department of the Interior. On February 20 I received certain replies from the minister (Mr. Stewart) in reference to a series of questions which I had placed on the order paper. My questions were as follows:

> 1. Who requested Mr. T. W. Johnston, head of the water powers branch of the Dominion government to go to Winnipeg in connection with the disposition of the Seven Sisters falls site?
> 2. What instructions were given to him in the matter?
> 3. On whose authority did he collaborate with Dr. Hogg?
> 4. What authority did Mr. Johnston have to submit a series of questions to Dr. Hogg as to whether the Seven Sisters falls should be developed under public or private ownership?

I received the following reply from the Minister of the Interior:

> 1 to 4 inclusive. At the request of Premier Bracken, Mr. J. T. Johnston, Director of Water Power and Reclamation, Department of Interior, visited Winnipeg to place at the disposal of the provincial government all physical and technical data required for the consideration of the Seven Sisters falls matter under review.

I would ask the house to pay particular attention to the latter part of this reply.

> Mr. Johnston did not collaborate with Dr. Hogg other than to supply data as above mentioned, nor did he submit any questions to Dr. Hogg as to whether the Seven Sisters falls should be developed under public or private ownership.

I would like to quote from the Winnipeg Tribune of Friday, February 15, 1929, with reference to the evidence given under oath by Mr. Clubb, who was then Minister of Public Works. In this article Mr. Clubb described the first meeting with Doctor Hogg, expert of the Ontario Hydro who was with the government. Premier Bracken, J. T. Johnston of the water powers branch, Ottawa, and C. H. Attwood of the water powers branch at Winnipeg had been present. The meeting had lasted two hours and he had not conferred again with Doctor Hogg. A list of questions had subsequently been drawn up between Doctor Hogg and Mr. Johnston for Doctor Hogg to answer, said Mr. Clubb. I would like to know who is telling the truth about this matter, the head of the water powers branch of the Dominion government, or the hon. minister?

Unfortunately I have only the ordinary allotted time in which to discuss this extremely complicated question, and my first opportunity to peruse the correspondence brought down was this morning. However, I would appeal to my Liberal friends on the other side of the house who believe in the principles which elected them to office in the year 1921. During that year this country was flooded with literature, with pamphlets and with documents pleading with the electors of Canada to turn out the Conservative party. I discovered a little book in the library which contains a series of Liberal pamphlets which were broadcast throughout the length and breadth of the Dominion of Canada.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Broadcast by whom?

Mr. HEAPS: By the Liberal party. This is what appears on the very first page:

> The Liberal Party led by > Honourable W. L. Mackenzie King > stands for > Government of the People—
> Not—by Autocrats
> Government by the People—
> Not—by Big Interests
> Government for the People—
> Not—for a Favoured Few.

On page 10 of this book the following appears:

> Restoration of the control of the executive by parliament, and of parliament, by the people through a discontinuance of government by order in council and a just franchise and its exercise under free conditions.

If that was the policy of the Liberal party in the year 1921 I would like to know why they have departed from that policy to-day. If government by order in council was no good in 1921, I want to assure my hon. friends on the Liberal side of the house that it certainly is no good in 1929. Conditions between then and now have not altered so much as to make it necessary for people to alter their principles. When this matter was raised by me through a question across the floor of the house a couple of weeks ago on the subject of the development of the St. Lawrence waterways, we were told that big questions could not be settled by the ordinary members of parliament; that the ordinary member of parliament had not the understanding, the knowledge and the technical wisdom that the members of the cabinet had. That was the inference anyone would draw, because what the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) has told the members is that these technical questions should first of all be settled by the cabinet, and that when the deed was signed, the house could have an opportunity of reviewing the matter.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I correct my hon. friend? I said that even the cabinet had not the technical knowledge; that the cabinet had to depend upon the advice of expert engineers.

Mr. HEAPS: Then how does the cabinet decide these questions?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: On the advice of expert engineers who have the knowledge.

Mr. HEAPS: Can the house not do the same?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I presume so.

Mr. HEAPS: Then the only difference between the Prime Minister and myself is: why does the house not do it? He says that the house should not do it, and I say that the house should. One of the fundamental Liberal principles is the supremecy of parliament, not the supremacy of the cabinet. In spite of all that has been said, in spite of the good qualities possessed by many members of the cabinet, I believe there could be convened from the 230 or so members who are not in the cabinet, just as good a body of men who would understand the technical advice submitted to them as there is in the cabinet itself.

Mr. J. A. GLEN (Marquette): Mr. Speaker, when I first read the resolution moved by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) I realized, as has been pretty well established in the discussion that has taken place since, that its terms are altogether too wide. The resolution reads:

> That, in the opinion of this house, no disposition of the natural resources, under the control of the federal government, shall be effective until ratified by parliament.

The hon. member himself recognized that the terms of the resolution are altogether too wide because, in his own speech as reported on page 441 of the Hansard of February 25, he said:

> Someone may raise the practical objection that my resolution is too broad.

Further on, as reported on the same page, he said:

> I might as well be frank and say what induced me to bring forward this resolution—it was the power situation.

Having widened the terms of his resolution to include, as has already been stated, so many of the functions of the administration of the departments, he will, I am sure, after the speeches of the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King), recognize that it will be impossible to support his resolution in its present terms. In this matter I realize fully what was intended by the hon. member in introducing his resolution. I have a good deal of sympathy with the spirit which evidently actuates the resolution, namely, that there should be no domination of the power interests in the Dominion of Canada. I, like him, have had to fight against these in the house, not in the form of the financial interests; but I remember the old feudal system of Scotland where we had just as great an iniquity as we have in the financial situation as it exists in Canada to-day. There a head was raised which it was easy to knock. Unfortunately the financial interests of Canada constitute a hydra-headed monster so that no sooner do you hit one head than another rises, and in many cases you do not know where these financial interests have their head at all.

Having said that, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre went on to complain about the domination of the power interests and he sought to illustrate that by a particular instance. I think he will agree with me that when he was at school and took his lessons in logic he learned that when you introduce a universal premise with a particular minor premise, you cannot draw a universal conclusion. He has done this, in that the domination of these interests is the major premise, while the particular premise is the Winnipeg power site; and therefore draws the general conclusion that all should be abolished. I cannot agree with that.

I think, however, something will have to be said from the point of view of the members for Manitoba who took part in all the negotiations leading up to the issuance of the lease. In this I am speaking not for any group but for myself, giving my own individual opinion. May I say at the outset that I have not changed my opinion from that which I held at the inception of our agitation regarding the issuance of the lease. Some history will have to be given as to the attitude of the Manitoba members. The opposition was absolutely clear and I think it can be stated in very few words. I do not propose for one moment to enter into the correspondence of which the hon. member for North Winnipeg (Mr. Heaps) who has just taken his seat, has spoken, because I have not been able to see it. I do not think it is my particular function to defend the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Stewart) in any of his negotiations. I will speak afterwards of the meetings that we had with the Minister of the Interior, but in the present instance I wish to say that despite the implication of the hon. member for Frontenac-Addington (Mr. Edwards) yesterday that the members from Manitoba had no right to enter into this controversy because the province had all the sovereign right and were in absolute control of their resources, nevertheless the fact must be recognized that the Department of the Interior had, if not absolute jurisdiction over those resources, at all events the disposal of them within their right. That being an acknowledged fact, we as federal members from Manitoba had to take the position that we should, if possible, give our advice to the Minister of the Interior. The Minister of the Interior, very properly I think, asked the advice of the members from Manitoba. Before that was done a round robin was signed by sixteen of the seventeen members from Manitoba and addressed to the Minister of the Interior. It read:

We the undersigned members of parliament from the province of Manitoba respectfully request that the power site in the Winnipeg river known as Seven Sisters falls be retained for the use of the government of the province of Manitoba in their own provincial hydro-electric system.

After that date it is not possible to give in chronological order all the meetings that took place. We had many meetings among ourselves as members and I can assure the house that some of them were very hectic. There were some differences between the members who sit in the southeast corner of the house as well as among those who sit in line with me. Some took one position, some another, and their opinions were expressed very strongly at those meetings. At all events, suffice it to say that after a vote had been taken among the different members from Manitoba, a letter was addressed to the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Stewart) on May 15, 1928, as follows:

Re: Seven Sisters Falls

Dear Sir,—The federal members representing the province of Manitoba have had before them the question of the disposal of the power of the Winnipeg river at Seven Sisters falls for some time and after thoroughly going into the matter beg to advise that their recommendation in connection with same is as follows:

1. That the site be not disposed of but that the matter be held in abeyance until the close of the next session of the provincial legislature for the purpose of giving the legislature of the province of Manitoba an opportunity to express its opinion in connection with the disposal of the said power site or the development of it by the province of Manitoba.

2. That the said interval would afford the city of Winnipeg an opportunity to take a referendum vote on the question as to whether the said city desires to develop the power at said site in connection with their present hydro-electric system.

3. That in the event of the province of Manitoba deciding to develop the said power as a provincial undertaking, that they be given said right upon request.

4. That in the event of the province of Manitoba deciding not to develop the said site and the city of Winnipeg having reached a decision to develop same, that the city be given the opportunity of developing said power on such terms as may be satisfactory to the government of the province of Manitoba.

5. That in the event of neither the province of Manitoba nor the city of Winnipeg wishing to develop said site that the present applicants The Winnipeg Electric Railway Company be given priority to any other private corporation to develop same subject to the usual restrictions and conditions imposed by your department and on such additional terms as may be asked for by the province of Manitoba in reference to any proposed lease or agreement to be entered into by the said company with the Dominion of Canada or the province of Manitoba.

Mr. GEARY: What was the date of that?

Mr. GLEN: The 15th of May, 1928.

Mr. SPENCER: Who was the writer of that letter?

Mr. GLEN: The letter expressed the majority opinion of the Manitoba members, and was signed by myself as chairman of that meeting.

In the whole controversy which ensued, whatever may have been in the minds of others, the one dominant feature in my mind was that if the issuance of this lease was a departure from the principle of public ownership, which I with other members had been on record as supporting, then so far as we federal members were concerned, we were determined to do all in our power to delay the issuance of that lease until the representatives of the people of Manitoba had had an opportunity of declaring themselves on the matter in the legislative assembly.

It will be noted that the letter I have just read demands that the province of Manitoba, in the first instance, shall take over the site. The hon. member for Nelson (Mr. Bird) spoke the other evening of having quarrelled with many of his friends. I can tell him that he is not alone in that respect. We found after this letter had been signed by the majority of the Manitoba members in the federal house that we were bombarded right and left, and that a great many of our political friends were taking opposite views from us. The Manitoba Free Press lost no opportunity to berate us, and I felt that in self-defence it was necessary that I should state and re-state in the province of Manitoba the position we took at that time. I therefore wrote a letter to the Manitoba Free Press, and also to the Winnipeg Tribune, which I propose to put on record. It is dated June 25, 1928, and reads as follows:

Dear Sir,—I would like to re-state the position of the federal members for Manitoba in view of the issues which are being injected into the controversy, and the motives which are being ascribed to them.

When the proposed agreement with the Winnipeg Electric Railway Company was before the Minister of the Interior he naturally, and as I think, correctly asked for the views of the federal members. These power sites are at present under the control and jurisdiction of the Dominion parliament. The acceptance or rejection of this agreement could at any time be the subject of discussion in the House of Commons, and in that discussion I presume even the critics, newspaper and otherwise, would not challenge the right of the representatives of Manitoba to take part. However the fact is that the opinion of the Manitoba members was invited, and may I say that I am convinced no member approached this question either in the role of expert, or as a politician, giving to the latter term the sinister meaning which is intended to be conveyed by editorial writers. It was a matter of the deepest concern to every individual member. I am in a position to state, that during all the discussions which took place among the members, the political significance of any decision which might be arrived at, was not even mentioned. The whole matter resolved itself into two fundamentals which I think the members were competent to discuss, these being (first) whether the proposed agreement was in violation of the principle of public control of national resources, and (second) whether the people of Manitoba were fully seized of the proposed alienation and had had opportunity of so expressing.

As to the first there can be no doubt that only extraordinary and incontestable circumstances would warrant the transfer of the Seven Sisters power site to a private company. At the time there was nothing to indicate that the transfer of this site had ever been considered as a concrete proposal by the legislature of Manitoba, and I think it is a fair statement to make that the publication of extracts of speeches of individual members demonstrate the fact that at the time these utterances were made there was no definite proposal for the acquisition of this site. Subsequently an effort has been made to show that a shortage of power will take place by 1929, according to Mr. Anderson, K.C., although Mr. McLimont puts it at 1931, and apparently there is no doubt in the minds of any of the promoters for the electric company that there will be no difficulty in disposing of the power to the consuming public. The question naturally arises in one's mind that if private capital which is usually operated on conservative and safe bases, are willing to make this large investment assured of adequate returns then certainly the province of Manitoba should hesitate, and carefully consider the granting of a franchise which despite the safeguarding clauses as to expropriation may mean the alienation of a national resource. I, with other members, have taken the position that this imperative demand for the immediate disposal of this power site is not justified. There are factors in this matter which are being, if not ignored, at least evaded. I do not propose to refer to these at this time. So far as the majority of the federal members are concerned it is not necessary in view of their decision, but it is certainly a warrantable assumption that the transfer of the Seven Sisters site means the electric company will have the dominant control of the Winnipeg river and the development of other power sites will occur only and if the company at their sweet will decide to do so.

This brings me to the second fundamental I have referred to, whether the citizens of the province are seized of the facts and have expressed themselves. To state that is to answer it. It can be moderately stated that until the proposed agreement was submitted for completion the people generally had no idea of its purport. Since then there has been a newspaper controversy which while helpful does not reflect general public opinion. I have met Winnipeg citizens who might have been expected to take sides on behalf of the electric company protesting against the feverish activity to dispose of the power site. It is somewhat remarkable that this immediate need should develop in so short a time, and should take the form of a stampede. Those of us who sought and requested delay in order that sane and reasonable consideration should be given to a matter so important have not in my opinion exceeded our duty as members, apart altogether from our rights as individual citizens. We did not take a position antagonistic to the electric company. We did not assume a knowledge of the whole question, although some of us could, I think, without unduly straining our intelligence, form and express a decision on the subject matter quite as competently as those who assume the position of promoters. All we did was to counsel delay and this was done in the form of a resolution whose terms seem to have been forgotten, and which were as follows:

Then follows the letter which I have already read, and with which I shall not trouble the house again. To continue:

There is danger in the confusion of issues which have been created. There is no hostility on the part of the federal members to the proposed agreement with the electric company. As a matter of fact there is a specific declaration that in the event of the province or the city of Winnipeg refusing to develop the power site this company be given priority to any other company. There is no hostility to the provincial government. If no mandate is given by the people to the government to undertake the proposition they will suffer no loss of prestige, in fact the contrary. If the city of Winnipeg decide not to proceed to develop then the whole proposition must come back to the electric company and the consideration then of the terms of the agreement. Whatever the ultimate result we have taken the position that this whole matter should not be disposed of until some opportunity is given to the people to express their opinion. That is what we recommended. Was it an unreasonable request? The people must judge.

For these reasons I was convinced then, as I am now, that our proposal that the government of Manitoba submit the agreement to the legislature for ratification was the proper procedure.

[Mr. Glen.]

Now I come to what has been injected into this controversy, namely, the conference which took place between the representatives of the Dominion and the province of Manitoba, an announcement regarding which was made on July 11, 1928. There will be some difference of opinion among the members from Manitoba as to the effect of clause six of that announcement. It reads:

Pending this transfer—that is, the transfer to the province of the unalienated natural resources within its boundaries—the policy of the government of Canada in the administration of the natural resources of Manitoba to be in accord with the wishes of the government of the province.

During the session of 1928 the Prime Minister announced that an opportunity would be given for a discussion with the province of Manitoba in regard to its natural resources. That assurance was prompted probably by members on this side of the house, and in particular by some of ourselves representing Manitoba constituencies. There was a resolution on the order paper dealing with the return of the natural resources of Alberta, which I will frankly say gave us some concern as to how we were to vote. It became a question whether the natural resources were to be dealt with according to the wishes and the direction of the provinces. Ultimately that resolution was withdrawn, but the Prime Minister on the floor of the house gave an undertaking that the natural resources question with the province of Manitoba would be settled at an early date, and we were satisfied.

A conference did take place for the purpose of dealing with the question of the return of the natural resources to the province of Manitoba. In my judgment that altered the position so far as I personally was concerned; and as I said at the beginning I am speaking wholly for myself. Before I became a member of this house I with many other citizens had been urging the provincial government to request the Dominion government to return the natural resources. Every government that I know of, whether Liberal, Conservative or Progressive, has from time to time demanded the return of the natural resources to the province. When the time came for a discussion between the Dominion and the province it was set forth in the announcement to which I have referred that these resources would be returned to Manitoba, and that pending their transfer the provincial government would have control and that the Dominion government would make whatever disposition of the resources the provincial authorities might desire. I think, as the Prime Minister stated yesterday, that that was an entirely reasonable thing for the province of Manitoba to ask, and I am still of that opinion.

As I say, I took that position then, and I stated it to the Minister of the Interior when I saw him in Winnipeg in August last. The only modification in my view was this, that I thought the responsibility for the disposal of that power site must rest with the province of Manitoba. As a federal member, having expressed that view publicly, I was determined that the province of Manitoba should take absolute control of the disposition of its natural resources, and that it was the right and duty of the provincial government so to do.

I understand that for the meeting with the Minister of the Interior in Winnipeg in August last a number of the Manitoba members were not available, and consequently were not present. I happened to be at that meeting, and I may say it was not held in a back room. Seven of the federal members from Manitoba met the Minister of the Interior. We expressed the opinion then, as I think we will express it now, that there was no change in our attitude with regard to delay, that that attitude had not been altered in the slightest degree; but we did state what I have already stated, that in view of the anouncement made by the federal government that the natural resources would be held at the disposal of the provincial government, we must see to it that they definitely and unequivocally assumed full responsibility in the matter. If my memory serves me right, I suggested to the Minister of the Interior that no report of any interview with Premier Bracken was sufficient, that there ought to be an authoritative statement from the Manitoba government by way of order in council that they wished the Dominion government to issue a lease of the water-power site.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of the Interior did consult with seven of the members from the province of Manitoba, and he advised us of the demand that had been made by Premier Bracken and what the federal government proposed to do. That did not alter my personal opinion that I as a private citizen of the province of Manitoba will have a right to express at any time in the future, but I did take the position, as I do now, that the provincial authorities having accepted the offer of the Dominion government for the return of the natural resources —and that agreement is likely to be ratified by this parliament—they were responsible solely for the disposition of any of those resources.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: May I interrupt the hon. gentleman—supposing the present government is defeated on the issue, what would be the situation?

Mr. GLEN: In the province of Manitoba?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Yes.

Mr. GLEN: You are anticipating. I do not expect they will be defeated; I sincerely hope not.

Mr. HEAPS: Do you approve of their action in this matter?

Mr. GLEN: I have already stated my viewpoint as frankly and as clearly as I know how. I should like to say further that I had an opportunity of discussing this matter with Premier Bracken right here in Ottawa. I know there have been suspicions aroused with regard to his integrity, and it has been suggested that the machinations of some people influenced him in the action he took. I have known Premier Bracken personally for many years, I know his character, and the whole province knows his splendid reputation. In the discussion which I had with him—a perfectly frank discussion by the way—he took a certain line with which I did not agree; but I will say this, no man, unless he had indisputable evidence, would ever convince me that Premier Bracken was improperly influenced by any power in the province of Manitoba or the Dominion of Canada.

Mr. CAMPBELL: May I ask if Premier Bracken issued any lease at all? Was not the lease issued by this government?

Mr. GLEN: There is no use quibbling about what we already know. After my discussion with Premier Bracken I am of the firm conviction that he acted solely in the interests of Manitoba. I am willing to give him that credit, although I differ from him—in answer to your question—as to the method he adopted. The position of the members in Manitoba was clear and unequivocal. I believe that the province of Manitoba through its legislature is alone responsible to its citizens for what is done with that power site. Our duty ceased as soon as the agreement was arrived at between the Dominion government and the province.

Mr. T. L. CHURCH (Toronto Northwest): The hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Glen) will not be true to his principles of public ownership or true to the interests of the province of Manitoba or of liberalism so far as its natural resources are concerned, if he does not now vote to defend those principles. Manitoba and the two sister provinces in the years to come will be very greatly interested in mineral development and in water-power, even though agriculture at the present time may be the basic industry there. What has kept New Ontario back for so long has been the lack of cheap light and power. Away back in 1905 Sir Adam Beck wanted to electrify the Temiskaming and Northern Ontario railway, but was defeated in his efforts. New Ontario was thus set back twenty or twenty-five years because the water-powers in that great country were controlled by private interests. The Ottawa Journal says of Mr. King's policy:

Government by Sidestepping

As an adroit side-stepper of issues calling for decisiveness and responsibility, the palm must go to our Prime Minister, Mr. Mackenzie King. His handling of the St. Lawrence waterway question illustrates his skill. Last year Mr. King said that nothing could be done about this problem until the Supreme Court decided the respective jurisdictions of the Dominion and the provinces in regard to water-power. In the circumstances, the obvious course was to get the provinces and the Dominion to agree upon a set of questions to be answered by the court. That, indeed, was what the provinces wanted. They suggested that there should be a preliminary meeting with the court, and that at this meeting an effort be made to arrive at questions which should be drafted for consideration.

That, however, didn't suit Mr. King. What did suit him was that the Justice Department should draw up a set of vague questions baffling to the proverbial Philadelphia lawyer. The result is well known. The Supreme Court held a hearing; there were long arguments by high-priced counsel; much expense—and nothing else. The court, while answering certain things that didn't much matter, left other things that did matter almost as they were. The questions, it said, were too vague.

That, however, didn't worry Mr. King. It had gained him almost a year of delay, and, what was more to his liking, it gave chance for further delay. And Mr. King took the chance. He took it in the form of deciding that there should now be a—conference. Nothing, when you want to drag something, like a conference.

The conference that the provinces wanted last year, is to be held this year. It is to be held after the session, between Ontario and Quebec on the one hand, the Dominion government on the other. The other provinces, if they evince sufficient interest, may be let in. The conference, of course, is to be over the same old question of the ownership of power.

So Mr. King gets at least another year when he doesn't have to worry over what Canada should do about the St. Lawrence Deep Waterway. He has written a nice letter to Washington about it, telling them that until he can get this matter settled it is impossible to negotiate wih Mr. Hoover or anybody else about going ahead with the project. Truly, Mr. King missed his vocation; he should have been a diplomatist.

[Mr. Church.]

Not that Canada is terribly anxious about the St. Lawrence Waterway. Except for Toronto, which has a pipe-dream about being a great seaport, it isn't anxious at all. That, however, isn't the point. What we are trying to show is the tortuous, circuitous, yet adroit way Mr. King has of getting out of saying Yes or No.

Yesterday we had a remarkable speech from the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King). We need not worry as to where the Liberal party stands to-day in this matter. The official Liberal party has always been opposed to the hydro and cheap light and power, controlled and developed and owned by the people themselves. In 1905 we had just such a spectacle as we saw yesterday in the Prime Minister's speech. At that time similar speeches were being made by members of the Ross-Hardy government, who were removed from office by the people when they gave away the last concession of 20,000 feet of water in the Niagara. The day before yesterday the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Stewart) also made a speech in this house, showing that he had not played the game with the Manitoba members.

Last May I was prepared to move the adjournment of the house for the purpose of raising this very question of the Seven Sisters site. On that occasion I moved for the production of papers, letters and so forth regarding the Seven Sisters falls, and I also requested at the same time the correspondence with reference to the Slave falls. The Minister of the Interior, in reply to that motion, is reported:

Hon. Mr. Stewart:

A great deal of corespondence would have to be brought down if the motion was passed as it stands, and I am informed that a great deal of the correspondence is not material to anyone. Perhaps the hon. gentleman would let the motion stand until I have had an opportunity of discussing it with him. I think we can reduce the order very materially.

The report goes on—"motion stands." In that reply the minister states that a great deal of the correspondence "is not material." Of course it is not material to anyone now except the Winnipeg Electric interests. The hon. gentleman certainly led me to believe that nothing would be done during the recess; that is the impression I gathered. The motion came up again in the house and was passed unanimously on June 6, and shortly after that parliament prorogued. From that day to the present time I have not seen these papers. A few weeks ago in this session I moved again for the correspondence and I understand that it was brought down yesterday. After the prorogation of parliament I happened to be in Orillia and I read that a bank merger was taking place, and a few weeks later the Seven Sisters development was handed away over the head of the Manitoba legislature, over the heads of the people's representatives in that body and over the head of this parliament, to the Winnipeg Electric Company; and this parliament also has been treated with contempt by the government, as evidenced by their refusal to bring down the papers, and getting away with things in the recess of parliament.

At the present time the people of Manitoba and, indeed, of Canada are faced with a very grave menace to future development. It is most regrettable, now that efforts are being made to re-establish Canadian business on a firm and solid basis, that the difficulties are being multiplied in this way, and that such a basic necessity as hydro-electric power should be alienated in that province. Yet this is what the federal government is doing over the heads of the people's representatives in parliament. The federal government and the Bracken administration are jointly responsible for the unholy alliance which has been formed to give away the water-powers of Manitoba, which should be under the control of the people of that province. This government has simply handed over a vast monopoly to the Winnipeg Electric Company and the parent body, which has interests as far as the United States, Brazil and even in Tokyo. The Canadian people are no longer willing to sell its rights to private interests, and the government has no right handing out monopolies in this way without the consent of the people. As a matter of fact, it was a miracle that the Georgian bay canal deal did not go through in 1927, with Sir Clifford Sifton, Sir Herbert Holt and others who were interested. But that deal would have been consummated if the new proposed rules to be brought down were then in existence; it would have been put through if the government's new gag rules could have been applied then here in parliament.

In the present transaction millions of dollars are being handed over to a monopoly, at the expense of the people. Only the other day evidence came out to show that while there may be small deficits for the first two or three years in the development of this power by the people, yet in a short time the Winnipeg Electric Company under the present plan will be taking a million a year profit out of the pockets of the residents of Winnipeg. Generations yet unborn will suffer in consequence in their industrial, economic and domestic life. The government is simply mortgaging the labour of future generations for the benefit of a few power grabbers, and party henchmen in Winnipeg, and this is being done, as I have said, over the heads of the people's representatives.

Now where is democracy while all this is going on? Where are all "the great principles of liberalism" which roll so glibly off the Prime Minister's tongue when an election campaign is on? Why, the old family compact, in the days of the struggle for responsible government, is nothing to the 1929 family compact of hon. gentlemen opposite in their conspiracy to part with the water-powers that belong to the people of the province of Manitoba. Yesterday the Prime Minister made a speech in regard to natural resources, defending the government in relation to this question. Well, to-morrow a similar defence will be put forward in this house in regard to the Beauharnois power. But there is this difference between the old family compact and the compact we see to-day: in the old days they had nothing to give away, while to-day they are giving away to favourites the rights of the people in natural resouces. We see nothing here now but every day the incapacity of the government to govern or to solve any economic problem, and the whole attitude of the government in this matter indicates the decay of parliament and the decline of the House of Commons; for over our heads they part with these resources without our consent. The economic loss and waste which we have seen in the railways out west is due directly to the insane railway policy of the Liberal party and the Grand Trunk Pacific and Crows-nest pass deals of other days. In those days the cry was "Cox can't wait," but now it is "Backus can't wait; Jones can't wait; Dafoe can't wait." Dafoe, this great pooh-bah, this king-maker who stands behinds the throne in Ottawa and Winnipeg and pulls the strings, can't wait; Bracken can't wait; Nesbitt can't wait, but the working classes and farmers of Manitoba can wait and will wait until doomsday before they will get any control or regulation of these rates, now that the power grabbers have won. In and out of this house the Liberal government always has been the foe of cheap light and power, not only in Ontario but in the other provinces as well, and have stood for private interests. The government of the day seem to have adopted the motto of a celebrated American, so far as the public of Manitoba are concerned, namely, "The public be damned!" The government can fool some of the people all the time and all the people some of the time but they cannot fool all the people all the time in connection with this great give-away of the resources of Manitoba, the Seven Sisters give-away, and the give-away of power rights on the St. Lawrence; no government, either the Bracken government or the federal government, can stand against public opinion, and that public opinion will be expressed at the first opportunity, once the enormity of these matters is fully appreciated.

The Prime Minister was very fortunate yesterday; as a local newspaper has said, he is a very adept side-stepper. His handling of the St. Lawrence waterways question illustrates that. The Prime Minister's speech of an hour and forty-five minutes yesterday was taken up in reading a mass of agreements, letters, orders in council, telegrams and so on which were not relevant to the issue at all; he simply ran away from the issue before the house, namely, the Seven Sisters deal. In reference to this question of the return of these resources he said the matter had been considered by three or four prime ministers of Canada and that the various governments of Canada had agreed to return the resources if the provinces would give up the subsidies they were demanding as well, but that the three western provinces declined to do so, with the result that the matter dragged on for eighteen or twenty years. That being the case, what was the reason for the rush on the part of the federal government to turn over these resources to Winnipeg interests? Then the Prime Minister said that in all the discussions about this matter he never heard the words "Seven Sisters" mentioned, and turned to the Minister of Railways for corroboration of that remark, but that does not seem to be borne out by recent developments.

From the time of confederation the federal government has been simply the trustee of these resources for these provinces. Why was Manitoba singled out for this preferential treatment; why were not Alberta and Saskatchewan treated in the same way? Before 1921 the Prime Minister complained about government by orders in council, commissions and the law courts; has anyone ever known the economic problems of this country to be made such a football of as this government has made the question of the resources of Canada by orders in council, and references to commissions and law courts? It seems to me that the government are unable to deal with this question or lay down any policy, and the result has been what we might call a merry-go-round policy. If we were to set up a large merry-go-round in this chamber we would have a concrete example of the policy of the government in relation to this question of natural resources and water-powers. In the first place you would hear the brass band of the Beauharnois boys playing the tune; we would see the question of the St. Lawrence development given a ride through the law courts, through different commissions, back to this house, on to Mr. Taschereau and Mr. Ferguson and back to Ottawa for another year. The Seven Sisters site was placed also on the merry-go-round; we were told last June that nothing would be done during the recess, but the brass band of Dafoe's fusiliers got busy and the Seven Sisters site went for a ride too and the Winnipeg Electric ring won out. Now Dafoe's fusiliers will be marching down the main street of Winnipeg in triumph, and this is the so-called liberalism about which the Prime Minister is so fond of preaching. As I have said in this house many times, there is no such thing as liberalism in this country; the Liberal party has been automatically abolished. We remember what happened when a number of Canadian soldiers from Oshawa, engaged in the automobile industries of that city, came here in 1926, and when their wives came also to save their husbands' jobs; the Prime Minister told them he was not to be intimidated by numbers. I quote from Hansard 1926, May 7, where I said in the budget debate as follows on the principles of liberalism of the present government:

> The deputation from the motor car workers had this great effect that it caused the right hon. gentleman who received them as Prime Minister to repudiate one of the greatest traditions of historic Liberalism. The right hon. gentleman has not a sliver from any plank in that Liberal platform of 1893 to show as proof of his loyalty to the traditions of Liberalism, which abounded in that platform. The right hon. gentleman's association with politics has contributed much to Liberalism going back on the principles of its platform. There is a Liberalism that goes back beyond the Liberal platform of 1893, the Liberalism that rejoiced in that great Liberal tradition of a party that always insisted on the right of petition and the right to send a deputation into the very presence of enthroned tyranny.
> I am not in love with the nature of Liberalism as we have it in Canada. As I said before, the word Liberalism no more implies love of liberality in the souls of present day Liberals than the word Progressive implies progress in the souls of Progressives. I am in love with, and never cease to love, the nature of the Liberalism that inspired the freeholders of Buckinghamshire to mount their horses and ride to London to defend John Hampden against the tyranny of Charles Stuart. Macauley has taught us to love the nature of the Liberalism that brought miners from Cornwall on a deputation to defend Trelawney against the tyranny of James II.

The right hon. viceroy of King Robert Forke denied civilian workers and returned soldiers from Oshawa and their wives the opportunity to exercise the great Liberal right of deputation. The right hon. gentleman proceeded to go back on the Liberal principles of his illustrious grandfather, because history tells us that in the dark hour of William Lyon Mackenzie's fortune, a deputation of 1,100 voters in York county insisted on the right to meet the government in Toronto and protest against the injustice inflicted on the grandfather of the present Prime Minister. The right hon. gentleman does not believe in deputations. Why? The freeholders who rode from Buckinghamshire to aid John Hampden, the miners who marched from Cornwall to the help of Bishop Trelawney, never had to fear a more legalized tyranny than the tyranny that spoke in the words of the Liberal leader who tried to rebuke British subjects for seeking help in their hour of need. Some of the voters who rode to Toronto to join the deputation to protest against what they called the destruction of their liberties at the hands of the Family Compact had their homes a few miles from Oshawa. It was from Oshawa that the great deputation came to protest against the destruction of their jobs at the hands of the modern family compact of to-day, that is to say the farmers' compact. The so-called tyranny that rebuked the deputation sent to Toronto on behalf of the right hon. gentleman's grandfather was dubbed with the name "Toryism". The actual tyranny that dared to rebuke a deputation that came to Ottawa in defence of jobs that keep Canadians in their own country wears the so-called name of "Liberalism". The right hon. gentleman, not content with his denial that speaks in the great Liberal tradition of deputations, went back on his grandfathers's principles when he suggested to the Oshawa deputation that he was not to be intimidated by numbers. That is what the Family Compact informed the York county deputation when they insisted that William Lyon Mackenzie be given the seat to which the deputation and its supporters had elected him.

Mr. Charles Lindsey has the following to say about Mr. Mackenzie and his Liberal principles unlike the liberalism of to-day.

"Whatever may have been the means he employed, his aims were honest and public spirited. He was no money hunter; he was the friend of purity and economy in the administration of public affairs. Let no man who values the political freedom and enlightenment we enjoy, fail to give a meed of praise to one who struggled for long years, amidst enormous difficulties, to secure for his country a free constitution and an efficient administration of affairs."

We hear a lot about the Winnipeg Free Press, but this paper should be called the Electric Free Press, for that is all it is. We had two or three papers in the city of Toronto of the same type in 1905 and after when the hydro was launched. The interests who owned the Toronto street railway adopted the same methods of grabbing light, power and transportation resources as has been done in Winnipeg. I would like to quote from an editorial on liberalism which appeared in the Toronto Globe of March 12, 1927.

Perhaps it may be well once again to make the position of the Globe clear. It takes no orders from would-be party managers, "practical" politicians or profit-seeking promoters. Its liberalism is of the old-fashioned, independent George Brown school, which seems sometimes to be getting out of date at Ottawa. It still deems it the duty of a national newspaper to support those policies which it believes are in the public interest, and to fight, if necessary, for those principles which it is convinced should dominate in the consideration of public affairs. It still subscribes to the apparently antiquated theory that the natural resources of the country are the heritage of all the citizens. And it still regards the welfare of the whole people as more important than the avaricious ambitions of a few.

There is a huge electric merger in the United States which has also spread to Canada more or less.

We have to-day in the city of Winnipeg the Winnipeg Electric of a larger Canadian power trust with connections with many other companies. This vast United States trust is a super-power trust and covers in its organization the country from Washington to California, and to the Canadian border and port of Quebec and New York and it is reaching up into Canada to secure the water-powers, not only in new Ontario but in Winnipeg and many other parts of the country. This policy of giving away our water-powers was revoked in Ontario a long time ago. This policy of the government with regard to the Seven Sisters lease will give them the battle of their lives during the next election. The water-powers in Manitoba are the property of the people. Ontario has found the benefit of following out such a policy and Manitoba should; there should be no departure from that. In the years to come millions of dollars will have to be paid by the people of Manitoba and of Winnipeg to recapture and buy back these rights from the Winnipeg Electric people.

The Bracken government stands indicted before the bar of public opinion for their betrayal of public rights, and the government of this country also stands indicted, not only in Manitoba but throughout all of Canada on its give away, the water-powers policy. It is nothing but a crime when we consider that the people will have to pay prohibitive rates for domestic and commercial lighting based on a heavy over capitalization. In Ontario we get this service at cost, but when you buy milk, bread and power in Manitoba you not only pay the cost price but also in addition a dividend on millions of dollars' worth of watered stock. I will move an amendment in a few minutes which will give the Liberals of Manitoba a chance to declare themselves.

The Minister of the Interior has mentioned the safeguards which have been put around this lease. He said it was only a temporary lease. It is a definite lease, an agreement in writing. Anyone who is familiar with the city of Winnipeg knows what a grasping, avaricious monopoly the Winnipeg Electric is. The minister says that there is control exercised over the rates; he says that the Public Utilities Commission of Manitoba, which is only the Bracken cabinet, governs the rates to be charged for light and power.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The Bracken government is not the utilities commission; Manitoba has a utilities board.

Mr. CHURCH: What has this so-called utilities commission of Manitoba done to regulate the power rates for the city of Winnipeg. They have and can do nothing. The consumers of power, both for commercial and domestic lighting, if they want to get the project back, will have to pay a heavy ransom as Ontario and Toronto had to do in a light, power and transportation sense.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The city of Winnipeg own their own power plant and therefore the commission would not function at all.

Mr. CHURCH: The Minister of the Interior is trying to use up the balance of my time. I think I know something about the city of Winnipeg; I know they own their own plant separate from the private company and have a very fine scheme of domestic lighting for the homes and domestic services and an excellent heating plant and all that. The city of Winnipeg never had a chance on this Seven Sisters grab; the city council reversed a decision they had given for public ownership of this particular Seven Sisters site. You would think you could look to the Winnipeg board of trade to do something, but you might just as well have looked to the board of trade of the city of Toronto in 1905 when the hydro got started. The Winnipeg Board of Trade would rather back the Winnipeg Electric Company than support public ownership and public control. If the cheap light and power movement in Manitoba has to depend on ministers like the Minister of the Interior, the board of trade of Winnipeg, the city council and the Liberals like the public ownership Liberals from the province of Manitoba, then it is good-bye and good-night to the cheap light and power movement in that province. Cæsar once said that all Gaul was divided into three parts. The gall of this Winnipeg electric crowd, and the Beauharnois crowd in Ottawa is so great it is absolutely indivisible.

The minister said that Doctor Hogg was sent up there to investigate this matter, but his report is almost absurd and will in time be found to have been all wrong, just as the one we had back in 1905 from Lord Kelvin when he was brought out from the old country to report on the Decew falls, near Thorold and to report on the practicability of transmitting power from Thorold to Hamilton, a little over 40 miles. He ridiculed it as an impossibility. He said that from an economic standpoint it was impossible to do it. Sir James Whitney and Sir Adam Beck had confidence enough to start the hydro-electric system in Ontario. What was the result? Lord Kelvin said that it could not be done. He said: If you put your money in the Welland canal you can dig and you will get it out again; but if you put it into hydro, you will never get it back. Lord Kelvin was wrong; so is Doctor Hogg on the Seven Sisters matter.

I have not covered all the facts that I should like to have referred to, but I will now move my amendment. I beg to move, seconded by Mr. Gott:

That all the words after the word "That" in the motion be struck out and the following substituted therefor:

It be referred to the standing committee of this house on mines, forests and water-powers, to consider and investigate all leases, grants or permits issued during the past year in respect of natural resources under the jurisdiction of the Dominion of Canada, known as "water-powers"; with power to send for all papers and documents, to summon and examine witnesses, regarding any such leases, grants and permits.

And further, with power to the said committee to report whether such leases, grants or permits are in the public interest, and whether the interests of the federal authorities are amply protected.

And also to report whether, in the opinion of the committee, the said lease or permit in respect of the Seven Sisters falls in the province of Manitoba should be revoked and cancelled, and if so, upon what terms and conditions.

And to report all matter and findings to this house.

Mr. SPEAKER: In my humble opinion the amendment is out of order, for the following reasons. Beauchesne, section 397, states:

An amendment must not raise any question which by the rules of the house, can only be raised by a distinct motion after notice.

The hon. gentleman will notice that the question before the house is an abstract one. It reads:

That in the opinion of this house, no disposition of the natural resources, under the control of the federal parliament, shall be effective until ratified by parliament.

By his amendment the hon. gentleman asks, inter alia, that the lease of a specific water-power called the Seven Sisters falls be investigated by the committee on mines, forests and water-powers. What is the procedure in this matter? I read this from Bourinot, fourth edition, page 321:

It is an imperative rule that every amendment must be relevant to the question on which the amendment has been proposed, and this rule has been invariably insisted upon by Canadian speakers.

Further:

If such a practice were tolerated, all the benefits of giving due notice of a motion, and allowing the house a full opportunity of considering a question, would be practically lost. A member would then be in a position to surprise the house at any moment with a motion of importance,—

This is undoubtedly a question of importance.

—and the necessity of giving notice would be superseded to all intents and purposes. It is not, therefore, surprising that the latest English decisions are in accord with those of the Canadian speakers. Sir Erskine May, in later editions, however, lays it down as "an imperative rule that every amendment must be relevant to the question on which the amendment is proposed."

I have on many occasions looked over precedents on the vexed question of amendments and subamendments, and the ruling is uniform on the subject that no new question must be introduced on an amendment; it must be relevant to the main question. In the present instance the resolution is an abstract one while the amendment refers to a specific subject different from the main one. I therefore rule the amendment out of order.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Mr. Speaker, would you hear just a word on that before coming to a final decision? The test, as I understand it, of the matter in accordance with the paragraph you read from Bourinot is the question: is the amendment relevant? The motion reads:

That, in the opinion of this house, no disposition of the natural resources, under the control of the federal government, shall be effective until ratified by parliament.

The resolution refers to the question of the natural resources under federal control and what disposition should be made of them. The amendment refers to the very same thing. It deals exclusively with natural resources under federal control, proposing another way of investigation or inquiry than that proposed by the motion. Surely it is relevant to the motion whatever else may be said about it. If it is relevant to the motion, no notice is required of such an amendment. I can understand the force of the rule that where a new question is raised irrelevant to the motion, then notice must be given and the rule must be enforced. But if the point at issue is the relevancy of the motion—and that is what Bourinot says—it refers to the identical matter and proposes merely another way of dealing with it.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I entirely disagree with my hon. friend the acting leader of the opposition as to the relevancy of the amendment proposed. The amendment of the hon. member is an effort to obtain from the house a committee to investigate a particular transaction referred to more or less specifically in the last clause of his amendment. The amendment in my opinion is so framed as to appear to reflect upon the manner in which the administration has carried out its obligations with respect to certain government leases. If the hon. member has in his mind a suspicion or any ground for suspicion that in any particular the ministry has not performed its duties or any member of the ministry his duties in a befitting manner, he has the privilege, which every hon. member has, on his own responsibility to say so and to make a charge. If the hon. member on his responsibility as a member of this house will make a charge against any member of the administration, I can assure him that the government will very speedily grant him a committee; but we do not propose to have the time of parliament wasted by accepting amendments proposed by the hon. member for general inquiries which amendments are in no way relevant to the subject being discussed and which in this particular instance has to do not with parliament's investigation of one particular transaction or combination of transactions, but wholly with ratification by parliament of the disposition of all the natural resources of the country.

Mr. GUTHRIE: The amendment refers to all transactions within the space of a year.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I submit that His Honour the Speaker has placed the right interpretation on the motion of the hon. member, and having regard to the authorities which His Honour has cited, the house should support his ruling. One rule cited was that:

> An amendment must not raise any question which by the rules of the house, can only be raised by a distinct motion after notice.

It is certainly clear that notice should be given in a matter of this kind, because the amendment does raise a separate and distinct question. Nor does the amendment run consecutively with any portion of the main motion, and the rule in that regard is:

> Every amendment proposed to be made either to a question or to a proposed amendment should be so framed that if agreed to by the house the question or amendment as amended would be intelligible and consistent with itself.

I contend that this amendment would not be consistent with the main motion which is now before the house, and that the ruling of His Honour the Speaker in that regard should be supported.

Mr. SPEAKER: If no other hon. member wishes to speak to the point of order, I have already declared the amendment out of order, and I so declare now.

Mr. J. L. BROWN (Lisgar): When the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Stewart) was speaking in this debate, he mentioned that there were some Manitoba members who did not agree with the position that had been taken by the majority, and at that point the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) interjected what seemed to me to be a rather offensive remark—"Name them" as though the particular members referred to were endeavouring to hide themselves and to refuse to accept responsibility for their attitude. I was one of those who did not agree with the position taken by the majority of the Manitoba members, and I was in good company. I was in company with men who were capable of taking facts, as well as theories, into consideration, men who were capable of taking into account the situation that prevailed at the time these negotiations were being entered into. I was in company with men who were just as sincerely anxious to solve this question in the interests of the people of Manitoba as were those who took the contrary view.

This is not the time nor the place to discuss the conduct of the Manitoba government. I do not conceive that this is a time to discuss the terms of the contract into which they entered, nor do I think that the extent to which any individual Manitoba member may have helped the Bracken government in the provincial election of 1927 is a matter of any great interest to this house. The question before us is the conduct of this government and the responsibility of the minister in relation to this lease, and that, I think, is the only question that should be the subject of discussion at the present time.

The main grievance seems to have been that the minister did not to the very last letter fulfil the obligation that he had assumed in consulting with certain Manitoba members, but it has been made clear also in the course of this debate that the minister did consult with seven of the Manitoba members, in a group, in the city of Winnipeg. It would seem, therefore, that according to the view of certain hon. members the Minister of the Interior could only have fulfilled his obligation by consulting with them. Apparently they assume that they were the ones who must be consulted, and that if they were not consulted, then the minister did not fulfil his obligation. Just at this point let me say that these same members seemed to arrogate to themselves the right to dictate the policy of this government and of this parliament, as well as that of the government and legislature of Manitoba, and of the city council of Winnipeg, and that if action were not taken by these various bodies according to their preconceived views, then that action must necessarily be wrong.

The resolution on the order paper is in very general terms, but everybody knows that it was introduced because a specific question had been brought to the attention of the public. Therefore, I propose to speak briefly as regards my own attitude towards the situation that confronted us during the last session.

Reference has been made to a round robin that was signed by the federal members from Manitoba. I do not know why they introduced that subject. It seems to me that they have made no point by introducing it. The only point that could be made was that they might urge that those who took a position contrary to the position which they themselves had taken were in some way receding from the position which was taken when that round robin was signed. Certainly we signed that document; there is no question about that. I had forgotten the exact terms of the document, but I had a fair understanding of what it meant, and I know what was in my mind when I signed it. As I understand it, we signed a petition addressed to the Minister of the Interior urging that when that particular lease was granted, the Manitoba government should have the first opportunity of acquiring that particular water-power site. Having done that, I conceived that we had discharged our duty in the matter. It was a perfectly proper step for us to take to ask the Minister of the Interior to allow the Manitoba government to have the first say in the disposition of that power site. Not only was that my understanding of the document, but I think the terms of the document itself confirm my understanding, and show that that is all that could be read into it. The petition was addressed to the Hon. Charles Stewart, Minister of the Interior, at Ottawa, and reads:

> We the undersigned members of parliament from the province of Manitoba respectfully request that the power site on the Winnipeg river known as Seven Sisters falls be retained for the use of the government of the province of Manitoba in their own provincial hydro-electric system.

That is exactly what has been done. The course that was indicated by the majority as the proper one to be taken contained three propositions: first, that the Manitoba government should have the first say as to the disposition of the power site; secondly, the Winnipeg city council, and thirdly, the Winnipeg Electric Company. But Mr. Bracken took the position that if the lease were not granted to the Winnipeg Electric Company, he was going to assert his rights and still occupy the position of priority which had been accorded to him. Now if the course that had been advised by these other gentlemen had been followed, then when it came to granting the lease to the Winnipeg Electric Company, the Manitoba government would have had no say whatever as to the terms of that lease, nor would it have been able to enter into a contract with them, as it did.

What was the position taken by the minority of the Manitoba members? The hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Glen) has stated that he took a certain position at that time, and that he has not since changed his mind. I think perhaps some others of us can say the same, that the position which we took we deemed then, as we deem it now, to be the right one. I took this position in regard to the disposition of that site. As I have already said, when we signed that round robin, and presented it to the Minister of the Interior, I felt that we were doing our duty as representing the people of the province of Manitoba.

Having done that , I took the position that we had discharged our full duty, and that any further responsibility must rest upon the government of Manitoba, with whom the people of the province would deal when the time came. I know the Minister of the Interior did not accept as fully as I did the view that he should act as trustee for and in accordance with the wishes of the province of Manitoba.

It will be recalled that there had been an interprovincial conference in the fall of 1927. The announcement then made in regard to the objections that hitherto had been raised by the other provinces with regard to the return of these resources to the prairie provinces was sufficient I thought even at that time to warrant the government acting on the principle that they would dispose of these resources in harmony with the wishes of the government of Manitoba. So when the announcement was made following that conference, I said at once that it fully justified the position that I had taken. I think hon. members will agree that the government acting as it did following the conference with the government of Manitoba, was simply acting in accord with the course that I had considered proper to pursue throughout the negotiations.

Now, reference has already been made to that conference. I was rather amused when the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) the other night in discussing this matter seemed more than ordinarily to attempt to overwhelm the house with a multitude of words. I could not but wonder whether he was doing what the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens) charged the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Garland) with doing last session, and which he himself confessed he sometimes did, that when his argument was bad he made up for it by vigor of assertion.

Mr. STEVENS: That was a confession, made in the spirit of contrition at that.

Mr. BROWN: Yes. Now, we were well aware that that conference was to be held, it was a matter of public knowledge, and indeed I had special reason for knowing, due to the fact already mentioned by the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Glen) that there was a resolution on the order paper by the hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Edwards) dealing with the disposition of certain natural resources in the west. During the Easter recess last session I happened to get hold of a copy of the Orange Sentinel containing an article by its parliamentary correspondent, in which he indicated that this resolution might possibly prove to be embarrassing to the Progressive members from Manitoba. He said:

> It will be singularly embarrassing to the Liberal-Progressive element in the house, who are all from the western provinces. They must vote for the transfer of the natural resources to their different provinces if they desire to consider the sentiment of their constituents.

On the other hand, if they take that course, they will defeat the government, and they are not very keen about that. It puts them on the gridiron, and places them in a hot spot between their desire to support the government and their duty fairly to represent their constituents.

Well, to be forewarned is to be forearmed, so when I was home at Easter I called together twenty-five or thirty of my supporters and placed the situation before them. I told them there was a possibility that the resolution by the hon. member for Frontenac might come up in a form to involve a vote of want of confidence in the government, and I asked them how I should act under the circumstances. Well, they did not want the government to be defeated. For whatever differences there may be between the Liberals and Progressives of Manitoba, they are unanimous on one point, they do not want a Tory government. They told me they did not want to see the government defeated on that resolution, but they felt very strongly on the question of the return to the province of its natural resources. I told my supporters that according to the press there was to be a conference between the Dominion government and the government of Manitoba. They decided then that the proper course for me to pursue, if the matter came up in the form I suggested was that if I could get an assurance from the Prime Minister that the proposed conference would take place, then I might vote against the resolution of the hon. member for Frontenac, involving as it would a vote of want of confidence in the government. That resolution was not proceeded with. I was sorry for I wished to show how we would act when placed on the gridiron. I mention that because of the discussion which has arisen in regard to that conference. It was a matter of public knowledge, and I had an assurance from the Prime Minister that the conference would be held. The result of the conference was entirely satisfactory to me.

It has been said that when the agreement was made following that conference the Seven Sisters site should have been made an exception. I cannot understand how anyone could make such a suggestion. In a conference of that kind where it was agreed that the natural resources should be handled in harmony with the wishes of the government of Manitoba, it would have been absolutely absurd to make an exception with regard to one particular case. It is true that Premier Bracken in his negotiations held a position to the disadvantage of those who took the other view, but none the less they must accept the position as they find it. I have not the slightest doubt that if the question of the return of the natural resources to Manitoba had come up at an earlier stage of last session, and if such a method of dealing with them had been suggested, every member would have voted in favour of the course adopted, and probably would have resented the suggestion that any exception at all should be made.

As I have said, Mr. Speaker, I do not propose at this time to deal with the terms of the contract made by the Manitoba government. That is a matter for which that government is responsible to its own people, and they alone have the right to decide the question. As an elector of Manitoba I propose when the time comes to deal with the question according to my best judgment, just as I try to deal with the questions that come before this house, and I do not think anything is gained by introducing irrelevancies that have not the slightest bearing on the matter in hand.

I propose to vote against the resolution. I have heard it suggested that an amendment might be moved limiting the scope of the resolution to water-power. The suggested amendment has not yet been moved. I cannot vote for any resolution or amendment that would in any way have the effect of qualifying the agreement that was made between this government and the government of Manitoba that the resources should be handled by this government in harmony with the wishes of the provincial government.

Mr. J. T. THORSON (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, on Monday last the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Stewart) stated that after communicating with as many members from Manitoba as he could reach during the summer, he found that the opposition which had been so evident here last session was largely removed. In view of that statement, and in order to put my position clearly on record, I feel it my duty to say that my opposition to the leasing of the Seven Sisters falls power site to private interests continued from first to last. I know that was the position also of the hon. member for Winnipeg South (Mr. McDiarmid). In fact, all of the members in this house from the city of Winnipeg, whether Liberal or Labour, were united in their opposition to the transaction from the beginning to the end, and I am not aware of the slightest wavering on the part of a single one of them.

The various steps that were taken in connection with this whole controversy have been enumerated, and I shall not deal with them in detail. The first document which I placed on my file in connection with the matter—and I have a very voluminous file on the subject—is a copy of the letter dated February 8, addressed to the Minister of the Interior and signed by every single private member from Manitoba in this house. We all signed that document thinking that we were supporting and furthering the wishes of the government of Manitoba.

The next event of importance in connection with the transaction was the announcement which appeared in the press on March 22, 1928. The announcement as it appeared in the Manitoba Free Press of that day is as follows:

> Abandons Scheme for Development at Seven Sisters
> Will purchase supply from Winnipeg Electric Company at $13.80 per horse-power on thirty-year agreement
> Abandoning its scheme for the development of the Seven Sisters falls site, as a public ownership enterprise, in consequence of the unfavourable report submitted by Dr. T. A. Hogg, Ontario power expert, the provincial government has entered into a contract with the Winnipeg Electric railway for the supply of 30,000 horse-power for 30 years at $13.80 per horse-power.
> As a result of the agreement the company will at once proceed with a $15,000,000 power development scheme at the Seven Sisters falls.

I will say quite frankly that this announcement, coming so soon after the previous request of the Manitoba government, came upon us like a thunderbolt, in view of the previous attitude taken by the Manitoba legislature and the Manitoba government with regard to the Seven Sisters falls power site.

The controversy then began to rage at Ottawa. The Minister of the Interior asked the opinion of the Manitoba members with regard to the application of the private company. We were bombarded in the usual way with letters, telegrams, and resolutions passed by various bodies and organizations both for and against the application of the private company for a lease of the power site. The Manitoba members held several meetings to discuss the matter and during the Easter recess a committee of their number went to Winnipeg to study the situation there. I was not a member of that committee but I had already advised the Minister of the Interior of my opposition to the application made by the private company.

On May 15 the Manitoba members held their final meeting in connection with the matter, and I am quite free to admit that it was a very stormy one. A letter was drafted and sent to the Minister of the Interior advising him of the views of the majority of the Manitoba members. I was one of the majority who voted for delay in granting the application that was under consideration. The terms of the letter addressed to the Minister of the Interior have already been placed on Hansard and I need not refer to them further.

On May 25 a very large delegation came from Winnipeg, many members of which were political and personal friends of my own, urging that the lease be granted immediately. That delegation met a committee of the cabinet in the morning, and in the afternoon there was a meeting of the Winnipeg delegates, the Minister of the Interior and several of the Manitoba members. I was one of the members present at that meeting, and nothing that I heard on that occasion caused me in any way to change the opinion I had formed.

Reference has also been made to the statement made by the Minister of the Interior on the floor of this house in reply to a question put forward by the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett). The statement of the minister is on Hansard and has already been referred to in the course of this debate. It is very wide in its terms: I must confess that the letter which was read this afternoon by the hon. member for North Winnipeg (Mr. Heaps) comes as a shock to me. After the Minister of the Interior had made his statement on the floor of the house he gave us privately to understand that he would take no action in connection with the application for the lease until he had consulted further with the Manitoba members. That is the position in which the matter was left at the close of the 1928 session of parliament, which prorogued on June 13.

The right of the Manitoba members to intervene in the matter was freely challenged at the time, both editorially and in a resolution that was drafted by the persons who had arranged the Winnipeg delegation. That resolution was referred to by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth); it was obviously drafted in heat and lacked that calm deliberation which a resolution of that sort should have shown. I therefore make no further reference to it. I should like, however, to say a few words with regard to the question of responsibility for the administration of the natural resources of Manitoba. At the meeting with the members of the Winnipeg delegation, to which I have already referred, I took the view that we, as federal members, owed a duty to our constituencies in the matter and that we would discharge that duty in the best interests of our constituencies and not in the interests of any groups or organizations; I took the view that we would discharge that duty in accordance with our best judgment. At that time there was no doubt whatsoever that the responsibility for dealing with the natural resources of Manitoba and with the application that was before the federal government for consideration lay primarily with the Minister of the Interior and the federal government. That fact was recognized by Premier Bracken himself in the communication which he addressed to the federal government. He had not expressed any desire to assume responsibility for granting the application of the private company; in fact, he had indicated in his letters that the responsibility for granting the application was solely that of the federal government. In his letter of March 22 he says:

I am writing you at this time to say that a satisfactory arrangement has been arrived at and that as soon as the details of our understanding are embodied in a contract between the Winnipeg Electric Company and the provincial government we shall be in a position to advise you that we shall withdraw our application for the lease of this site so as to leave the way open for such negotiation as may be necessary between the Winnipeg Electric Company and yourselves concerning the lease of the site.

The granting of the lease was to be made a matter of negotiation between the Winnipeg Electric Company and the federal government. Then he wrote again on April 25, as follows:

We are writing you now to advise you that a tentative contract between the Winnipeg Electric Company and the provincial government has been agreed upon, and that once you decide to lease the site to them you may disregard our application for the same. If for any reason, however, you should decide not to lease the site to the Winnipeg Electric Company, after all these negotiations, we desire our application to stand, since equally favourable terms must be secured to the provincial government from any other company securing the lease before we would relinquish our prior claim to it.

The question of where the responsibility lay agitated the minds of others. The Manitoba Free Press of May 26, the day after the Winnipeg delegation arrived in Ottawa, contained an editorial entitled "Where Responsibility Lies," the first paragraph of which contained the following:

The facts as to where power and responsibility lie in the granting of the right to make use of our natrual resources can be briefly stated. These resources belong to the crown as represented by the federal authority. Under the regulations, adopted by the Dominion government, the power of granting rights to cut timber or pulpwod, to develop mines or waterpowers, rests with the Minister of the Interior.

[Mr. Thorson.]

It is, of course, the right of anyone interested to make representations to the minister. He can listen to their representations and give effect to them if he chooses; but the decision is his and the responsibility is his.

Further on the editorial contains this statement:

Any claim which may be made by members of parliament from Manitoba that they have the right to decide is sheer pretention. They have neither a veto nor a directive power over the minister. What he does, he does on his own responsibility.

On his own responsibility to whom? His responsibility is not to any provincial government but to this parliament, of which we are the members most interested. If the minister is not responsible to the members of this parliament, to whom is he responsible? We were not seeking in any way to assert any right to decide the matter in our capacity as private members of parliament. Under our system of government decision with respect to matters of this nature rests with the cabinet who, I would remind the house, occupy the positions which they do because the people of Canada have seen fit to send more members to this side of the house than to the other. The responsibility for their decision in this matter, as in all executive matters, is to this house. Should we, who had been expressly asked for our opinions in the matter, have refused to give them? Each Manitoba member gave his opinion, I believe, in the honest and sincere discharge of the responsibilities which he in turn owed to the electors of his own constituency. I am not impugning the motives of a single Manitoba member. On June 2, 1928, the Free Press contained a further editorial entitled:

The Extent of the Bracken Government Responsibility.

The last paragraph of that editorial is as follows:

The Manitoba government, by its action in withdrawing its application, left the field clear for the Winnipeg Street Railway to press its application at Ottawa; but it did not thereby, as many of its critics insist, turn Seven Sisters falls over to the street railway. It has not even made recommendations to that effect. It is for Mr. Stewart to say whether the application is to be granted or not. His liberty of decision in this respect is not in the least limited by what has been done by the Bracken government.

Up to that time there had been no suggestion on the part of the Manitoba government that the Minister of the Interior necessarily must act as the government of Manitoba might desire him to do and the Minister of the Interior admitted in this house that the responsibility was his.

This, then, was the situation when we left Ottawa at the close of last session. We who were urging that the lease should not be granted were attempting to assist the government in discharging their responsibilities in accordance with what we thought was in the best interests of the constituencies we represented.

Upon my return to Winnipeg I made a public statement as to my stand in the matter on June 26, at a dinner given in my honour by some of my constituents. In order that I may place my stand on record I now read what I said on that occasion:

I would not be doing justice to my constituency or to myself if I failed to say a few words with regard to the Seven Sisters falls controversy and the stand which I took. On February 8, the 16 private members from Manitoba signed a letter addressed to the Hon. Charles Stewart requesting that the Seven Sisters power site be retained for the use of the province of Manitoba, notwithstanding the fact that there was a previous application from the Winnipeg Electric Company for the site. In so acting we were seeking to preserve what we all conceived to be the public interest of the province. The name of every single member from Manitoba, with the exception of the Hon. Robert Forke, is attached to that letter.

Naturally we were astonished when the agreement was signed between the province and the Winnipeg Electric Company and the application of the company was presented.

The responsibility for dealing with the application rested, as it still does, with Hon. Charles Stewart and the Dominion government. Mr. Stewart has adopted the practice in the past two years of consulting with the Manitoba members on matters affecting the disposal of natural resources in Manitoba. That policy worked well in the past, particularly in connection with the establishment of our great pulp and paper industry at Pine falls. That industry was established in spite of vigorous protests from several Winnipeg sources. I had an active share in the preliminary negotiations with the government here.

In pursuance of his practice Mr. Stewart asked the opinion of the Manitoba members as to what action should be taken on the application before him. We discussed the matter at several meetings, studied the question to the best of our ability with the information which was available to us.

On May 15, when we held a meeting at which we finally reached a decision, there were four members in favour of granting the application immediately and 10 against. I was one of the 10. Of the 10 members there were four Liberal, three Liberal Progressives, two Labour and one Progressive. Seven sit on the government side of the house and three with the opposition.

I mention these facts merely to show that the question was not one of party politics at Ottawa and it is not a political question in this city.

When I add that the city council is almost evenly divided on the matter and that six out of the 10 members from Winnipeg in the provincial legislature are in favour of delay and full consideration of the question, I think you will agree that there is a strong difference of opinion. I also suggest that it is possible for all these representatives elected by the people in various capacities to hold the views they do without being either fools or knaves. It seems the lot of public men to suffer abuse. I realize that fact, but I do not intend to deviate from the discharge of my responsibilities through fear of personal abuse and am prepared to submit to it, if necessary, in the discharge of my public duties.

I voted against the granting of the application because I believed it was not in the public interest to grant it. I did not wish to stand in the way of development, but unless it was demonstrated to me that it was necessary to grant this valuable site to private interests for development, I did not wish that to be done. I felt also that the grant of this site to the Winnipeg Electric Company would place the Winnipeg hydro at a serious disadvantage and would endanger its future.

At present we have an ideal situation in Winnipeg, two concerns handling power, one publicly, the other privately owned, each acting as a check on the other and each controlling a substantial block of power. The Winnipeg hydro has 138,000 horse-power at Point du Bois and the Winnipeg Electric 205,000 at Great falls and Pinawa.

I was not convinced, and am not now convinced, that the shortage of power is so acute that it is essential to turn the site over to a private concern. Granting the site to the Winnipeg Electric Company would leave our great power asset 30 per cent in the hands of the public and 70 per cent in private hands. That in my opinion, would be fraught with serious danger.

If there is no available market for power developed by the province, there is no immediate need for development by the Winnipeg Electric.

We are told that the present horse-power resources will be exhausted in two years. I doubt the accuracy of that statement. If the provincial government or the city of Winnipeg are not prepared to develop the Seven Sisters site then I am in favour of development along the following lines:

The Winnipeg hydro to develop Slave Falls and the Winnipeg Electric McArthur Falls. That would give 228,000 horse-power to the former and 259,000 horse-power to the latter. That process of development, even admitting the statement as to power shortage, would amply provide for power needs for at least six years and would maintain an even balance between the two systems, a consideration which I deem highly desirable.

By that time the development at Pine Falls must take place and an additional block of power amounting to 111,000 horse-power would be available.

The Seven Sisters site should be used as a reservoir from which the two competing systems could draw. In my opinion it would be profitable and sound business for the province to develop the Seven Sisters site in the future when the power situation requires it, with this situation in mind; either to go into the power business or preferably to sell to the competing systems in large blocks as required for distribution by them.

It is profitable for the Winnipeg Electric to do this now. Why should it not also be profitable for the province? This wholesale business would be profitable in itself and would serve as a profitable basis for extension of the system elsewhere if it should be deemed advisable.

We must remember that the province outside of Winnipeg has rights in the matter which must be considered.

The situation at Pinawa could be easily met by allotting to the Winnipeg Electric a reasonable block of power in return for closing up the Pinawa channel. In my opinion the Winnipeg Electric would be glad to come to such an arrangement if the control of Seven Sisters was in the hands of the province.

We have had many battles in the past over the Winnipeg river and we have reaped the rewards of vigilance and foresight. Waterpower is too vital an asset to hand over without careful deliberation and I see nothing but value in a thorough airing of this controversy.

It is not pleasant for those around whom it centres, but that is of minor importance. The essential thing it that the best interests of the public must be safeguarded.

I have stated very briefly my reasons for taking the stand which I did and I see no cause for receding from it. It was no easy matter to come to a decision in view of the differences of opinion, the pressure that was brought to bear and the threats that were made. Each member, when he voted as he did, took the responsibility for his decision on his own shoulders. I am not seeking to have this meeting endorse my views. Mr. Robson has his views on the matter and many of my best friends are opposed to me on this question. They are entitled to their opinions.

I am not vain enough to claim infallibility of judgment. Time alone will tell whether my attitude was right or wrong. I think it was right and I shall face the responsibility for my actions when the time comes.

Then came the natural resources agreement between the Manitoba government and the Dominion government. I will deal with the natural resources agreement a little later. Personally I cannot complain that I was not consulted by the Minister of the Interior. It is true that I was not consulted until after the natural resources agreement had been arrived at, but subsequently to the date of that agreement I was consulted on several occasions. I think it is only fair to the minister to say that. He saw me on July 6, if I remember correctly, but he could not have taken away from the interview we had then the belief that my opposition had weakened in any way. He saw several of us again in Winnipeg in the month of August, and my impression of that meeting was that there had been no change in the attitude of the members present at that meeting with the possible exception of one member. I had not altered in any manner the position which I had previously taken regarding this matter. On September 5, learning that it was likely that the matter would be finally dealt with by the cabinet, I wired to Ottawa stating that the hon. member for South Winnipeg (Mr. McDiarmid) and myself were strongly opposed to the granting of the lease, and asking for an opportunity to appear before the cabinet to present our views. On September 6 I received a reply stating that the matter would come before the cabinet two days later, and I left Winnipeg on the evening of the day I received that reply. On September 8 I appeared before those members of the cabinet who were in Ottawa at the time and urged our opposition to the granting of the lease.

After the natural resources agreement was entered into between the province of Manitoba and the Dominion of Canada the question of the responsibility for administering the resources of Manitoba took on a different complexion. Premier Bracken, who a short time before had requested that the Seven Sisters falls power site should be reserved for the province of Manitoba, now insisted that under the terms of the natural resources agreement, and more particularly clause 6 of that agreement, the Dominion government should grant the lease to the private company immediately. I believe there was quite a lengthy correspondence between the provincial government and federal government with regard to the subject; in fact the correspondence amounted almost to a barrage. Before the lease was signed the federal government insisted on an order in council from the Manitoba government, and the Manitoba government finally passed an order in council directing the federal government to issue the lease as set out therein. Finally the lease was granted at the insistence of Premier Bracken.

In putting forward the opposition which I did both before and after the natural resources agreement was entered into, I was acting in what I believed to be the best interests of the people who had sent me to parliament. I was convinced that the majority of the electors in my constituency were opposed to the granting of this lease to private interests. I took the view that so long as the lease was not actually signed there was still hope of saving the Seven Sisters falls from going into private hands—but stronger forces prevailed.

Mr. McGIBBON: May I ask the hon. member what his stand is to-day?

Mr. THORSON: I do not disapprove of the natural resources agreement; I think it is a good agreement in so far as the province of Manitoba is concerned. I agree that it is high time that the question of responsibility for the administration of the natural resources of the province of Manitoba should be definitely settled and one authority given control over them.

However, I have this to say in connection with the natural resources agreement: there has been a fundamental change in the policy of this government as to the administration of the natural resources of the province of Manitoba. Prior to the making of the natural resources agreement in July last, the federal government took the view that the responsibility for administering the natural resources lay with it, and that it was not bound by the wishes of the Manitoba government. It did not follow in all respects the wishes of the Manitoba government in connection with the matter. An outstanding example of that is to be found in the manner in which the Minister of the Interior and the federal government dealt with the pulp and paper proposition of two years ago, to which I referred in my speech at Winnipeg. The federal government did not accept the advice of the provincial government in respect of that transaction and it had never formally recognized the right of the provincial government to dictate to it what its policy of administration of the resources of the province should be. It had of course followed the policy of consulting the province of Manitoba in respect of the larger matters but it had reserved the right of deciding for itself whether it would follow the wishes of the province or not.

When the natural resources agreement was entered into there was a vital change in the policy that had been followed prior to that time; for, in pursuance of clause 6 of the agreement, the federal government has constituted itself merely the agent of the provincial government to administer the resources according to the wishes of the provincial government and it has definitely and formally recognized its position as a trustee. Perhaps this is as it should be, but I have this criticism to make: the first five clauses of the natural resources agreement carry with them the implication that they shall not go into effect until they have been ratified by parliament. I should perhaps state that in a different way—that the final transfer of the resources shall not be effective until the findings of the commission set up have been ratified by parliament, but there is no proviso of that sort with regard to clause 6 of the agreement. Immediately and automatically on the making of that agreement, the responsibility of the Dominion government for administering the resources is changed. I have this criticism to make, namely, that the change in policy was so vital that it should not have become effective until ratified by parliament, and that a rider should have been attached to clause 6 of the natural resources agreement to the effect that until the fundamental change in the policy of administering the resources had been approved by parliament, the change of policy indicated by clause 6 should not go into effect.

In view of the differences of opinion that existed in this house; in view of the differences of opinion that existed in Manitoba; in view of the undertaking which the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Stewart) gave on the floor of this house, and in view of the developments that have taken place, I think it would have been a wise course to follow to take the view that before this fundamental change in the policy of administering the natural resources of Manitoba should come into effect, it should be ratified by parliament. That would have been in the interests of all concerned here; it would certainly have been in the interests of the government of Manitoba which finds itself in such difficulties to-day.

I have been very glad to associate myself with the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth), the hon. member for North Winnipeg (Mr. Heaps), and all the other members of this house who opposed the granting of the lease to private interests; but notwithstanding my opposition to the transaction I cannot agree with the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, the mover of this resolution, as to the terms of his resolution. The argument of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) on the resolution appears to me almost unanswerable. It is impossible, in my opinion, to assign to parliament the executive functions of government. The business of administration could not go on if every disposal of property should, before becoming effective, be ratified by parliament. There is a further reason for my objection to the general terms of the resolution. I do not believe we should endeavour in this country unduly to restrict the executive, nor do I think we should attempt to develop a water-tight sytem of compartments of responsibility. It is of the essence of our constitution that it should be elastic; that it should be based upon confidence and trust, and that as few restrictions as possible should be imposed upon those responsible for government. The electors of Canada send us to parliament with wide powers; having expressed their confidence in us, the will of the electors also determines from which party in this house the cabinet shall be formed and who shall be charged with the responsibility for executive acts. The resolution seeks to remove from the jurisdiction of the executive powers which are not legislative but executive. I do not believe that in the long run, much as it would have assisted us in this particular case, it would be in the interest of sound government to adopt the resolution. I think the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is to be congratulated upon having made this motion and upon having discussed this very important question here. It will have served the very useful purpose of reminding the government of its responsibility to parliament. While executive acts must be performed by those appointed for the purpose, they are responsible for their executive acts to parliament. No cabinet in any British country should be allowed to forget for one moment that responsibility. I have fought the Seven Sisters falls power lease to the best of my ability; I have been opposed to the granting of the lease from the beginning to the end, but for the reasons I have given I cannot see my way clear to approving the resolution that is now before this house.

Mr. J. P. HOWDEN (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, like the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Brown) I belong to the lesser group of the federal members from Manitoba who had under consideration last spring the matter of the Seven Sisters power lease in that province. For that reason I think it is up to me, as it were, to give the reasons for my stand in the house, and perhaps to mention one or two other matters relevant thereto.

The very able and comprehensive speech of the Prime Minister in this house yesterday afternoon surely made it plain that it was impossible for the house to adopt the resolution of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth), and I shall not pause to speak on that point except to remind hon. members that should the house adopt such a resolution, and the government find itself thereby obligated to come to parliament for approval of every such agreement, not an acre of hay land, not a section of pasture, not even a cord of pulpwood could be disposed of in the Dominion of Canada until the agreement had first been ratified by this House of Commons. I do not think, however, that the purpose of the resolution really was to test the feeling of the house on the principle there involved. It seemed to me that it was being used rather as a weapon of attack and censure on the hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Stewart). I sat here and listened to a rather savage attack from hon. members opposite on the hon. minister, and I was reminded during the course of their remarks of the story of Abraham Lincoln's deacon, who being caught one dark night in a heavy thunderstorm, cried, "Oh, Lord, give us a little more light and a little less noise." It was a two-sided attack, as it were. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre condemned the Minister of the Interior for having released the Seven Sisters power site without first obtaining the sanction of the federal members from Manitoba.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: After having given the promise that he would do so.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I think it is pretty nearly time my hon. friend was corrected. I did not give a direct promise that I would consult every member and have every member satisfied, as my hon. friend will see if he will look up my words. In speaking to the house, I said that it was an utter impossibility to satisfy everybody, and I should think my hon. friend must have learned that by this time.

Mr. HOWDEN: A little later the minister was soundly taken to task by the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) for having entered into an agreement with the province of Manitoba whereby that province could direct the disposal of its natural resources. Speaking for myself, I cannot remember the Minister of the Interior having given any undertaking to the members representing Manitoba that he would not release the Seven Sisters power site without first obtaining their permission, as it were, but rather that he would inform us of any change of policy and let us know before a final release of this power site was made. That much is certain, and that he did, with possibly one or two exceptions.

With regard to the charge of the hon. leader of the opposition, I would like to point out this fact, that if Manitoba had had control of her natural resources, as she should have years ago, there would have been no obligation on the federal members of this house from Manitoba to act as monitors, as it were, for the government of that province. Had Manitoba had control of her natural resources, the question would not have come before this federal house at all. Members from Manitoba have urged repeatedly that the natural resources be returned to that province, but yet when an occasion arises, when the province of Manitoba seeks to direct the disposal of one of her natural resources in connection with a project which she deems to be for the benefit of the province, the federal members say: No, Manitoba is not right; she is either ignorant of her responsibility to her citizens, or worse, and is not to be trusted in this matter.

The attitude that was taken by myself, and I am sure by some of those who were with me, was that this was a provincial question. As I said before, if Manitoba had had control of her natural resources, as she should have had, the question would not have come before this house at all. We were urging that the natural resources be returned to the province, and for that reason I took the attitude that the matter might very well be left to the discretion of the province. But quite apart from that, and although it has been stated in this house that any contract that might have been made with a private power company was not worthy of consideration here, still that did have some influence on my attitude and action. I would like to state for the information of the house a few facts in connection with this matter:

1. Manitoba was threatened with a shortage of industrial power.

2. Manitoba could not consistently finance the development of the Seven Sisters power reach.

3. Manitoba could not, under the most favourable circumstances, produce power as cheaply as arranged for under the contract with a private power company.

4. The Manitoba government, the city council of Winnipeg, the Winnipeg board of trade, the trades and labour council, and all the big business and industrial interests, together with a number of the rural municipalities, were in favour of the immediate development of the Seven Sisters falls site, and so expressed themselves on many occasions.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: May I suggest that, so far as the trades and labour council is concerned, that is hardly correct.

Mr. HOWDEN: Two representatives of the trades and labour council came to Ottawa, and they stated definitely that they represented some fourteen or fifteen branches of that council.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Their statements were afterwards repudiated by the council.

Mr. HOWDEN: I cannot vouch for that. I am giving that information for what it is worth. To continue:

5. The Pinawa channel was leased to the Winnipeg Electric Company in perpetuity, and so was permanently alienated to Manitoba. The bearing of that will appear in the next clause.

6. The power on the Seven Sisters site would be augmented by 50,000 horse-power by the closing of the Pinawa channel. This could not have been done if the power site was developed by the province of Manitoba without securing the rights of the Winnipeg Electric Company over the Pinawa channel.

7. The Seven Sisters site is not lost to the province of Manitoba, but rather it is rented at a good rental for thirty years to a firm which is in a position to carry on an immediate development, and which is under agreement to supply Manitoba with as much or as little power as she may require up to 30,000 horse-power, at a better price than that at which the province could hope to develop power itself. This relieves the province of the onus and responsibility of the distribution of the balance of the power developed at this site.

8. The Manitoba provincial hydro, a government-owned utility, with a very considerable investment, has been in existence for some dozen years, and has supplied two or three towns and some fifty farmers with electricity, and incidentally has lost about $1,750,000 in the interval.

I mention this merely by way of showing that naturally the government of Manitoba was a little bit chary of entering into a deal which would cost it in the vicinity of thirty million dollars when its experience of public ownership had been so unsatisfactory.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that the disposition of the Seven Sisters power site was of more vital interest to the government of Manitoba than probably any issue that had come before it since its accession to office. The government believed that the prosperity and the very industrial life of the province depended on the proper development of that power. That is why it was so insistent that the contract should be entered into.

For these reasons, I felt obliged to support the attitude of the government of Manitoba, and so when this matter was brought before the Manitoba group in this house, I moved the amendment that the attitude of this group was in accord with the action of the provincial government. Now, Mr. Speaker, I have explained my attitude.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. G. R. GEARY (South Toronto): I quite agree with this much of what was said by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Thorson), that if nothing else results from this debate, at all events it will serve as a reminder to the government that in these important matters it should not proceed by order in council but should rather trust to the sense of parliament; it should trust to the declaration of parliament rather than legislate behind the closed doors, so to speak, of order in council. When my hon. friend says that, when he says that the government will be reminded of this, I take it he is perfectly aware of and subscribes to this state of facts, that the government has pursued such a course of action in this as well as in other matters and therefore needs reminding that it should hesitate to continue in the course it has adopted and has pursued so long, of legislating by order in council rather than by the free will of this parliament.

As I look through the correspondence which has been tabled, one thing stands out, and that is that the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Stewart) felt enough concern about this matter to realize that there would be no satisfaction in any way of dealing with it unless that way were by means of legislation. He evidently had communicated these views to Mr. Bracken of Manitoba, because there appears on the file a letter in which Mr. Bracken seeks to assure the Minister of the Interior that as a matter of fact the question of the Seven Sisters falls has received attention in the provincial legislature. And to substantiate this he goes to the trouble of transcribing newspaper reports of what different members of the legislature of Manitoba said. This was not action on the part of the legislature of Manitoba; it was simply Mr. Bracken's method of trying to assuage certain fears in the breast of the Minister of the Interior as to the attitude of the legislature of that province towards what was proposed to be done in this instance. The minister had a perfect right to be concerned about what the legislature of Manitoba thought. It is a new venture for the province of Manitoba to deal with natural resources, and of all natural resources probably the most important, so far as our experience in this house goes, has been that of water-powers. So, as I observe, I think the minister was perfectly right to feel some concern about what the legislature of Manitoba thought of the alienation of water powers. But the provincial legislature had never had an opportunity to decide upon what should be done in regard to the granting of this particular water power, the Seven Sisters falls, nor for that matter of any other water power which is included in the general term natural resources. And if the Minister of the Interior and the government of which he is a member had followed up that natural concern of theirs with some action we should have been saved all this trouble. Had they said to the prime minister of Manitoba, "Very well, your letter is good up to a certain point; even an order in council of your government, the executive, is good to a certain extent; but that is not enough for us to act upon. We prefer to have the firm declaration of the legislature itself, so that we may be assured that what we propose to do at the request of your government is what really suits the people, the electors, those who have a right to decide these great questions in your province"—if the minister had taken this stand it would have saved this trouble. It seems to me, therefore, that the manner of dealing with the matter was unsatisfactory. The matter should have been reserved to be dealt with, not by the government in council, behind the shelter of their doors and their walls, but in the broad open, where all the legislative acts could be laid before the people, who are the ultimate court in the matter, and who could decide whether or not those acts were proper.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Does that remark apply to the province of Alberta as well?

Mr. GEARY: I do not know to what the hon. member refers.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Should the granting of a water power license in Alberta be submitted to its legislature before being granted to a private corporation?

Mr. GEARY: Probably I shall have something to say in answer to my hon. friend, but the question is not relevant at this particular moment; indeed, it is not specific enough.

Mr. ADSHEAD: The Minister of the Interior granted to the Calgary Power Company a license to develop water power by consent of the premier of Alberta without the legislative assembly taking any action.

Mr. GEARY: I am not aware of that. As the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre also properly observed, the agreement which was come to early in July is somewhat peculiar. It has six or seven sub-heads, and of all these sub-heads there is only one which does not depend for ratification upon action of the legislature of the province and of this Dominion parliament; and that particular subsection is one which enables the province of Manitoba, through its government, to dictate to this government of Canada just what should be done in regard to the alienation of natural resources. I do not for the life of me see why all the other questions should be subject to ratification by legislative action and this one question regarding alienation should be left wide open for the government to deal with. The whole agreement may be set aside because the legislature of Manitoba and this parliament do not happen to agree on what is done; but in the meantime the resources will have been alienated by the Dominion government, acting on the advice of the Manitoba government. I should think it would have been better for the government to pursue the same policy throughout rather than to have left that one matter subject to the whims of the government of Manitoba. Moreover, the Dominion government of the day not only felt some concern about this, but they felt some trepidation; the government felt that their action would be severely criticized, because they took very special care to see that they should be protected in every possible way. They were not satisfied with a letter; they were not satisfied with an interview; they insisted in this particular instance that there should be an order in council from the Manitoba government. That is far different from what was done in the matter we discussed the other day with respect to the waters of Niagara river. There the government entered into a treaty, concluded arrangements, signed the convention and protocol, and submitted to this house for ratification an agreement for the preservation of the scenic beauty of Niagara river; this they did without doing more at most than receiving a letter from the Premier of Ontario to the effect that the proceedings they were taking would be satisfactory to him. There, I suppose, it was felt that because the preservation of the scenic beauty of Niagara is a matter strongly favoured by the public, they would be safe in the course they took. In this case, however, it seems to me that the government felt that they were treading on dangerous ground and had to protect themselves in every possible way; they did not follow the ordinary course of receiving merely a letter from the prime minister of Manitoba, but sought to fortify themselves by getting no less than an order in council.

It must be remembered, Mr. Speaker, that this whole question of water-powers is quite distinct from the ordinary course of dealing with natural resources. The Prime Minister went to some pains to show how many individual matters relating to public lands would be required to be considered by this parliament if we adopted legislation necessitating that before such orders in council went into effect they should be approved by the Dominion parliament, but these questions of water-powers stand on an entirely different footing. Fresh in our minds, as having occurred less than two years ago, is the attempt to force through this house a matter affecting the water-powers of the Ottawa river, and fresh in our minds also is the fight waged in that regard and the temper of the house then so clearly shown. I take it from that discussion that the opinion of the house was that the natural monopolies of a country should be conserved for the people of the country and should not be diverted to private sources for private gain. With that expression of the feeling of this house in their minds the government of the day must have known that in dealing with a water-power, and especially one of such importance as the Seven Sisters development, they should have consulted the people of the province concerned not through their representatives in this house but through the legislature of the province, but now they seek to wash their hands of the matter by saying they simply handed the site over to the province of Manitoba. I say that is not a valid defence; that is not the way to get out of the difficulty. This government must share the onus with the government of Manitoba for what has happened with regard to the Seven Sisters falls.

Apparently the Minister of the Interior inaugurated a procedure in dealing with these matters by which he consulted with the members for the different constituencies of the province of Manitoba, and the hon. gentleman who preceded me said that had been a very satisfactory method. Has it turned out to be quite satisfactory? I am not going to weary the house by going into these things in detail, but I would refer to the passage from Hansard already cited, in which the Minister of the Interior gave his unequivocal, direct and final assurance in regard to this license. He said:

> I may assure my hon. friend that until that difference of opinion is settled I am not going to issue any license for that water-power.

I presume he meant the difference of opinion as to whether this development should be undertaken by a public or a private enterprise. Later on he said—

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): May I interject a correction? I had not in mind the interpretation my hon. friend has taken from my words; my difficulty was that the members for Manitoba were divided on the question, and that was the difference of opinion to which I had reference.

Mr. GEARY: Before that my hon. friend said:

> . . . . and now a very grave difference of opinion exists with respect to the disposition of the Seven Sisters falls.

I understand now from the minister that he was referring to the difference between the fourteen members from Manitoba, but as far as I know these members were practically unanimous, so where was the difference of opinion?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): May I again correct my hon. friend? At no time were those members unanimous; no one has made that assertion.

Mr. GEARY: There was not a great deal of difference of opinion.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: What about the round robin signed by everyone except the Minister of Immigration?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I have it before me, and it is a clear indication that my business was to ascertain whether the city of Winnipeg would have the power or whether the provincial government would have it, and the round robin distinctly stated that if neither of these bodies wanted it, then their objection was removed. Later on the question of appeal to the legislature enters, or I do not understand the round robin.

Mr. GEARY: I will stand by Hansard, and I quote from page 3853 of Hansard for June 6, 1928:

> I am going to say very frankly here and now that notwithstanding the fact that at present the government have adopted a line of action with respect to the Seven Sisters falls—

I presume that means the Manitoba government.

> —I am not in any particular hurry to come to any decision about that matter, largely because of the fact that the members of this house have expressed very decided opinions about the matter as federal members. I am not very much disturbed by the statement that there must be immediate action; I have investigated the matter pretty well and I think there is plenty of time to give ample consideration to this matter before it is decided. In order to settle the question, and in order to prevent any delay, I do not see any reason why we should not await the action of the city council of Winnipeg and of the provincial government, which must take the responsibility, before a final decision is made here.

I stand by Hansard on that; the minister knew action was to be taken by the city council of Winnipeg and by the provincial government; he knew there was a feeling among the members from Manitoba in regard to this matter, which I thought was fairly unanimous.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: May I interrupt for a moment? Quite a few of the members from Manitoba were opposed to the proposition while other members were in favour of it. I think they stood about half and half, or nearly so.

Mr. GEARY: A round robin was signed. I was not at the conference, so someone else can take up that point, but if the differences of opinion referred to were those existing among the fourteen members from Manitoba as now stated by the Minister of the Interior I do not read Hansard aright.

Mr. HOWDEN: Does not the hon. member think possibly this was taken out of the hands of the minister by the agreement reached between this government and the province of Manitoba?

Mr. GEARY: I think that begs the whole question, and I may pass it over because it is not pertinent to what I have in mind. I am not seeking to attack the Minister of the Interior except as the victim of the system which forced him to be the instrument of a government which did not do the right thing.

I do not intend to carry that further, but my point is that the government knew they were dealing with a matter which was of grave concern to all public bodies, to the city council of Winnipeg and to the entire province; knowing this, and having fresh in their minds the temper of this house together with the feeling of at least some of the citizens of Winnipeg, they should have taken steps to see that some parliamentary act was taken by the representatives of the people concerned before the Seven Sisters development was put under private ownership. I was reading what the minister said; that was on June 6, in reply to the leader of the opposition. Sometimes it seems to me that one overworks a quotation; I remember saying this before, but it seems to me that "the funeral baked meats were scarcely cold" before the Minister of the Interior sat down and wrote a letter to Mr. Bracken in which he used words to this effect: "Apparently this is a matter of great concern to Winnipeg and to this house, because yesterday it was brought up by the leader of the opposition, but I want to assure you that we have decided to grant this permit. However, for the sake of appeasing these gentlemen," probably the round robin gentlemen, for all I know, "we will let it rest a month or two. Perhaps the clouds will blow away; perhaps we will have a little easier task, but there is no great hurry so we will just let it rest a month or two." That was immediately after the promise of June 6 was given in this house

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Would my hon. friend permit a short statement? I do not wish to interrupt him, because I think he is eminently fair—

An hon. MEMBER: You are taking up his time.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): In that case I will refrain, but I will say that what I had in mind was to ascertain whether or not these divergent interests could be reconciled, to be sure that the city of Winnipeg did not want this power, and to be sure that the Manitoba government—both mentioned by the hon. member who spoke before—were consulted.

Mr. GEARY: I will read this letter once more, and then the house may draw its conclusion from what the hon. minister has said and what I say. The letter reads as follows:

Ottawa, June 7, 1928.

Dear Mr. Bracken,

I have your letter of the 31st ultimo re the Seven Sisters falls lease, together with the memorandum of statements made in your legislature about the matter. As the matter is one that has created a great deal of interest in Manitoba and last night was made the matter of comment in the house by the hon. Mr. Bennett and, in view of the fact that delay of a month or so will not injure the prospects of this development, I think it wise on my part to delay the issuing of the license for that time.

However, I note you have not changed your position from that taken in your former letter.

Yours,

Charles Stewart.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that the whole method of dealing with these matters has been wrong, and that we should be on the safe side in respect of an important matter like water powers by first obtaining the judgment of this house. The right hon. the Prime Minister said that the Navigable Waters Protection Act contained a provision which permitted the annulment of any permit issued under that act. Such a provision stands in the face of the men who have put money into an enterprise, who obtain a permit from the department and they are always faced with the fact that such permit may be annnulled ten years afterwards, but the whole thing is so unfair that it has never been acted upon and I cannot imagine a case where it would be acted upon. I intend to move an amendment whereby such important matters shall be returned to the house for its ratification before they go into effect. The Minister of the Interior did not think that a delay of a month or so would make any difference in a matter of this kind, indeed I submit it will not make any difference if there is a delay of six months or a year until such matters are ratified by the parliament of Canada. No harm will be done but only good, because the people will see how these major resources, these water powers, are being dealt with by the government of the day. We feel that the provision proposed to be inserted in the Navigable Waters Protection Act should properly be in that act. I agree with the Prime Minister when he says that we cannot clog up the business in this house by passing on every little transaction. We do not insist that every homestead and that sort of thing should be returned to this house to get the ratification of parliament, and until that ratification had been given should have no effect. I do not think that is necessary, and in that regard I think the resolution of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) goes too far, although the principle is good if applied in the proper way. When a water-power site like this one is given away it is diverting from the people of the country their rightful heritage. It is the natural run of water as nature left it and no private person should have that to the exclusion of benefits which should accrue to the people. We could split the resolution at that point, and I propose to move an amendment which will have that effect.

I judge from the utterances of the Prime Minister that we are on the eve of seeing a permit granted to the Beauharnois people. He said that the engineers must certify that any development will not interfere with navigation. Before we finished the session last year we had a discussion on the St. Lawrence waterway, and this much came from that discussion: that we must consult the premiers of the two provinces concerned, Quebec and Ontario, and we must seek to have reconciled the conflicting views of the engineers in regard to the development. These engineers have not met; they have not reconciled those conflicting views, and in the absence of such reconciliation, and in the absence of those engineers saying the development can be proceeded with, I think we are making a grave error in doing anything with the power sites on the St. Lawrence river until a full agreement has been arrived at by the engineers. These matters should be settled with regard to the whole stretch from lake Ontario to Montreal before we attempt to interfere with one part of it. To my mind, it will only spell disaster to deal with it piecemeal; to my mind there is no surer way of ruining the St. Lawrence as a navigation proposition than to deal with one part of it now and close the matter, so to speak, for all time to come. We will have a very difficult time trying to fit navigation into the proposed development of water power.

Feeling as I do about the resolution, I desire to move an amendment to it. I have attempted to follow in this amendment the reasoning which induced Your Honour to declare the amendment of the hon. member for Toronto Northwest (Mr. Church) out of order. This is a relevant amendment and one which follows very closely the subject matter of the resolution that is before the house. I, therefore, move:

> That all the words in the motion after the word "house" be struck out and the following substituted therefor:
> The present method of disposing of the water-powers which form part of the natural resources under the control of the federal government is unsatisfactory, and that the whole question of the disposal of such water-powers should be referred to a committee of this house for inquiry and report.

Mr. RALSTON: I rise to a point of order. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that the so-called amendment is not in fact an amendment at all; it is a new motion which the hon. member is endeavouring to get before this house, and of which he has given this house no notice whatever and in connection with which hon. members have had no time to form an opinion. The resolution to which this is alleged to be an amendment is one which has to do with all natural resources; this amendment is confined to water-powers. It is not an amendment within the terms of the rules of the house. If the resolution now before this house should be defeated there would still be an opportunity to move the resolution which is now the subject of the amendment. The very object of having matters come up by way of an amendment is that the whole matter may be disposed of and there will not be two debates on the same thing. I submit that this is a new motion and does not come within the relevancy of the rules and, therefore, it should not be put to the house.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I think I am within the judgment of the house when I say that if this amendment is out of order as applied to this motion, it is impossible to draft an amendment to a motion. The opposition have rights in this matter and we intend to insist upon them. The motion deals with all natural resources in Canada. The amendment seeks to limit it to a single natural resource. If a proposal comes before the house to build a hundred miles of railway, an amendment may come before it to limit the proposal to seventy-five miles of railway. It is merely limiting the scope of the original question. The whole subject of the amendment deals with the subject of the motion, and if the amendment is out of order, I submit it is impossible to amend any motion moved in the house.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Might we be accorded the courtesy of being given a copy of the amendment? No one on this side of the house has one and it is rather a strange procedure that a motion of this character should be made without our being given an opportunity to see it.

Mr. DUNNING: Might I direct your attention, Mr. Speaker, to another feature which I deem of some importance? The acting leader of the opposition (Mr. Guthrie) discussed the amendment from the point of view of reducing, as the amendment seeks to do, the application of the resolution from natural resources as a whole to certain natural resources, and he argued that that proposed reduction would be a proper amendment. Even if that were so, the amendment seeks also to change absolutely the intention of the resolution. The intention of the resolution is quite clear; it is to prevent any disposition of any natural resource until such disposition is ratified by parliament. The amendment of the hon. member for South Toronto (Mr. Geary) deals only with some natural resources, but in addition it seeks to have the matter examined by a committee of the house.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No, no.

Mr. DUNNING: Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, you will be the person who will say yes or no. Hon. gentlemen opposite have no more the determining of this point than I have, and they might at least do me the courtesy of permitting me to make my argument in peace. The amendment is in effect a direct negative to the original resolution because the latter seeks to lay down a definite principle that natural resources shall not be alienated save by the vote of parliament. The amendment negatives that completely, and says merely that the matter of disposition of water-power —I believe that is it; I was not supplied with a copy—shall be made the subject of investigation by a committee of the house. It is a direct negative to the motion before us.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): With reference to just one point raised by the Minister of Railways (Mr. Dunning), I understand he contends that because it is now proposed to submit a part of the original resolution to a committee, the amendment is therefore out of order, and in effect, a negative of the original motion. The hon. gentleman knows very well it is a common practice on the part of the house to pass upon and accept references of motions placed before it for decision to a committee without expressing itself upon the motions. I take it that the amendment is for the purpose, first of all, of circumscribing the original motion.

Mr. DUNNING: It eliminates it. My hon. friend, I presume, has not a copy of the amendment?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I said, as I understood it.

Mr. DUNNING: As I read it, the amendment eliminates all of the original resolution.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The amendment as I understand it eliminates all the resources referred to excepting one. To that extent it has narrowed the scope of the original motion down to dealing with one natural resource alone. It submits that this one resource and the questions contingent thereupon shall be referred to a committee. I have in my hands the rules of the house with respect to questions of that kind. As I understand the rules, one may amend a motion of this character in the form submitted by the hon. member for South Toronto (Mr. Geary). From my reading of the resolution it would appear to me that the amendment is quite in order.

Mr. DUNNING: Will my hon. friend quote the rule?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Section 395 of Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms reads:

> It is an imperative rule that every amendment must be relevant to the question on which the amendment is proposed.

The amendment is quite in order in so far as that regulation goes.

Mr. CAHILL: Will my hon. friend quote the amendment?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I have heard it, and made some notations of its contents. I have not the amendment before me. The hon. member for Pontiac (Mr. Cahill) is up to his usual clever little tricks. He learned them so efficiently during that famous naval debate when he was one of the leaders of that gallant little ginger group of the Liberal party. I do not happen to have the amendment before me, but I am quite satisfied it is as I have stated it, and I am so informed by the mover.

Mr. CAHILL: Not as I heard it.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Section 395 continues:

> Every amendment proposed to be made either to a question or to a proposed amendment should be so framed that if agreed to by the house the question or amendment as amended would be intelligible and consistent with itself.

Mr. DUNNING: That is the point.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I contend that the amendment is intelligible and is consistent with the original motion. All it does is to circumscribe the original motion, narrowdown its scope and then to suggest that it be referred by the house to a committee for further consideration.

Mr. CANNON: The amendment, if I understand it rightly, seeks two purposes, first, that the subject matter should be restricted to water-powers instead of covering all natural resources. Therefore there is no doubt it is a restriction on the original resolution. But the other object sought by the amendment is that the matter be referred to a special committee, and that is where I think the amendment is out of order because, according to Beauchesne, section 397:

> An amendment must not raise any question which by the rules of the house can only be raised by a distinct motion after notice.

The appointment of a special committee is evidently a motion which needs notice.

Mr. MANION: I have listened with a good deal of interest to the arguments regarding this amendment. I also listened with a good deal of interest to the argument regarding the other amendment. The other amendment moved by the hon. member for Toronto Northwest (Mr. Church) was complained of because it was too large; because it went too far. This one is complained of because it is too small; because it does does not go far enough. I do not know how we can satisfy our hon. friend across the way. They also complain that they were not supplied with copies of the amendment. They have two or three copies over there and their arguments are not very strong.

The Minister of Railways (Mr. Dunning) says that this is a negative of the motion. It is nothing of the sort; it is a positive of the motion in a concentrated form. One thing we must remember regarding our whole parliamentary institutions is the spirit of a motion submitted to the house. The whole spirit of the speech made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) was a complaint regarding the Seven Sisters falls. The amendment distinctly deals with that complaint; it concentrates upon the one fact dealt with by the hon. member who introduced the original resolution. I think we have absolutely boiled the resolution down to what it really deals with, and I submit that if there is a possibility of moving an amendment that would apply to this resolution at all, that amendment is now before the house.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Might I say a word in answer to my hon. friend from Fort Willian (Mr. Manion)? The motion moved by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth), as it appears on the order paper, reads:

> That, in the opinion of this house, no disposition of the natural resources, under the control of the federal government, shall be effective until ratified by parliament.

The whole discussion that has taken place in regard to this resolution is as to whether or not the supreme power of parliament should be invoked in a matter of this kind—not the question of submitting it to a committee—

Mr. GUTHRIE: That will be discussed hereafter.

Mr. ELLIOTT: —but the question whether parliament should pass on the alienation of some of the natural resources.

Mr. MANION: And parliament does all its work by committees.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Perhaps my hon. friend will allow me. I would quite agree with what has been said by the acting leader of the opposition (Mr. Guthrie) and the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Garland) if the present amendment said that the present method was unsatisfactory, and that the disposal of water-powers, not the natural resources, but part of the natural resources, should not be effective until ratified by parliament. But that is not what it says. It takes an entirely different tack from that pursued during the whole course of this discussion, and instead of saying. "until ratified by parliament," it goes back to the other amendment which was proposed before, and which was ruled out of order, and says, "until passed upon by a committee of parliament." In other words, it is not part of the original resolution, and, under paragraph 397, I submit that it is entirely out of order in the same way that the other amendment was.

Mr. STEVENS: I would like to direct the attention of Your Honour and of the house to two rules found in Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms. First, I would draw attention to section 422, which deals with the question of relevancy, and reads as follows:

> The law on the relevancy of amendments is that if they are on the same subject-matter with the original motion, they are admissible, but not when foreign thereto.

I pause to point out that the amendment deals with the natural resources, limited in this case to water-powers, whereas the main motion deals with the natural resources, without any definition as to which natural resources are referred to.

I now ask your Honour to turn to section 406, which deals with the matter referred to by previous speakers, and reads as follows:

> The object of an amendment may be to effect such an alteration in a question as will obtain the support of those who, without such alteration, must either vote against it or abstain from voting thereon, or to present to the house an alternative proposition either wholly or partially opposed to the original question. This may be effected by moving to omit all the words of the question after the first word, "That", and to substitute in their place other words of a different import. In that case the debate that follows is not restricted to the amendment, but includes the motives of the amendment and of the motion, both matters being under the consideration of the house as alternative propositions.

Now I bring to the attention of Your Honour this significant fact; the debate up to this time has intimated, I think, to all who have followed it that some hon. gentlemen find themselves in sympathy with the general principle of the main motion, but they cannot follow it in its entirety as they consider it goes too far and is too sweeping, and so my hon. friend from South Toronto (Mr. Geary) has suggested an amendment which will meet, in his opinion, the views of those who are unable to follow the original motion in its entirety; but he has left sufficient of the original motion to make his amendment a technical amendment within the rules of the house. He has strictly observed the rule as to relevancy, as he deals with one section of the natural resources without dealing with them all, and he has met the objection of certain hon. gentlemen and submitted to them an alternative proposition by inviting them to refer this matter to a committee of the house for further study, rather than conferring upon parliament the rather extended powers called for in the original motion. Under the rules, Mr. Speaker, I submit that the amendment is strictly in order.

Mr. RYCKMAN: I desire to say a word on the point of order, Mr. Speaker. I wish that the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Dunning), the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Ralston), and other hon. gentlemen would consider their remarks in Hansard to-morrow before they attempt to make this house appear ridiculous before the country. If there ever was an amendment that was peculiarly and appropriately an amendment within all the rules of parliament, it is this one that has been submitted by my hon. friend from South Toronto (Mr. Geary). It is absurd for the Minister of Railways to say that this is a mere negative. He understands the English language. It is not a negative motion. It does not take away from the government the power to deal with this matter after it has been referred to a committee—not at all. It is a proper amendment within every rule for the moving of amendments. My hon. friend the Solicitor General (Mr. Cannon) says that there must be notice—notice with respect to a matter that has been debated in the house for two whole days! Suppose the government side of the house proposed a reference to a committee in a matter that had been considered by the house for two whole days; would any hon. gentleman say that such a proposal would be out of order?

Mr. STEVENS: It is constantly being done.

Mr. RYCKMAN: It is being done all the time, here, and in every other deliberative assembly.

Mr. STEVENS: It was done this session in connection with the narcotic drug bill.

Mr. RYCKMAN: I will not say I would like the government to do it, but I ask this government, sitting on the government benches in control of the procedure of this house to consider well before they rule this amendment out of order, and let the people of Canada judge—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order, order.

Mr. RYCKMAN: The Minister of Railways is good on the low notes when it comes to interrupting.

Mr. DUNNING: I rise to a point of order, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member (Mr. Ryckman) is not discussing the point of order before the Chair.

Mr. RYCKMAN: I am discussing the point of order, Mr. Speaker, and I am pointing out the dilemma in which the government will be placed if the ruling of Your Honour should by any possible chance be against this amendment being an appropriate amendment to be considered by this house.

Mr. POWER: I rise to another point of order, Mr. Speaker, and that is that the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat (Mr Ryckman) has insinuated in his remarks that you will do something which is contrary to the public interest. He has challenged, not the government, not the people on this side of the house, but you, Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. MEMBERS: No, no.

Mr. POWER: —to give a decision on a point of order raised in this house. It is for Your Honour to give the decision, and not for members sitting on this side of the house or on that.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: Does any other hon. gentleman wish to speak to the point of order? The motion reads:

That, in the opinion of this house, no disposition of the natural resources, under the control of the federal government, shall be effective until ratified by parliament.

To which has been moved the following amendment:

That all the words in the motion after the word "house" be struck out and the following substituted therefor:

"the present method of disposing of the water powers which form part of the natural resources under the control of the federal government is unsatisfactory, and that the whole question of the disposal of such water powers should be referred to a committee of this house for inquiry and report."

As has been pointed out during this discussion, the motion seeks to provide that any disposition of the natural resources shall not be effective until ratified by parliament.

While the amendment proposes, that disposal of such water powers should be referred to a committee of this house for inquiry and report.

At page 127 of Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms I find the author in paragraph 396 comments on standing order 48 as follows:

An amendment on a question must not be inconsistent with a previous decision on the same question given at the same stage of any bill or matter.

And in the following paragraph he points out very definitely, as referred to by the Solicitor General (Mr. Cannon), that:

An amendment must not raise any question which by the rules of the house, can only be raised by a distinct motion after notice.

In my opinion the latter part of the amendment asking that this matter be referred to a committee contravenes section 397.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Why?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): What about 406?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: No matter can be referred to a committee of this house except on motion, after notice and certainly there has been no such notice given. Consequently under this rule I am forced to declare the amendment out of order.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I appeal from the ruling of the chair.

Mr. Speaker having resumed the chair put the question as follows:

Mr. Woodsworth moves:

That, in the opinion of this house, no disposition of the natural resources, under the control of the federal government, shall be effective until ratified by parliament.

To which Mr. Geary moves in amendment:

That all the words in the motion after the word "house" be struck out and the following substituted therefor:

"the present method of disposing of the water-powers which form part of the natural resources under the control of the federal government is unsatisfactory, and that the whole question of the disposal of such water-powers should be referred to a committee of this house for inquiry and report".

Whereupon the Speaker ruled the amendment out of order on the well known principle that:

An amendment must not raise any question which by the rules of the house can only be raised by a distinct motion after notice. Beauchesne, standing order 48, paragraph 39f.

Thereupon Mr. Guthrie appealed from the Speaker's ruling. Shall the Speaker's ruling be sustained?

The house divided on the question: Shall the ruling of the Chair be sustained? And the ruling was sustained upon the following division:

Mr GUTHRIE: Mr. Speaker, I beg to move, seconded by Mr. Boys:

That the motion be amended by striking out the words "natural resources" where they occur in said motion and by inserting in lieu thereof the words "water-powers".

Hon. J. W. EDWARDS (Frontenac-Addington): I stated the other day the reason why I could not support the motion as moved by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth). That reason I can put in a very few words. The motion declares:

That, in the opinion of this house, no disposition of the natural resources, under the control of the federal government, shall be effective until ratified by parliament.

I said I could not vote for that motion because that would be accepting on my part the proposition that these natural resources were under the control of the federal government, and I did not think that they were. The amendment substitutes for "natural resources" the words "water-powers", and if that were not qualified I could not vote even for the amendment. But the amendment proposes that no disposition of water-powers under the control of the federal government shall be effective until ratified by parliament, and I am sure that those who have a commendable mental acuteness will appreciate the fact—and it is a fact—that there are certain water-powers on navigable streams, such as the St. Lawrence, which are more or less under the control of the federal government. For that reason I shall support the amendment.

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre): Since this amendment has been made to my motion and I shall have no opportunity of discussing the subject further unless the amendment is voted down, which I hope will not be the case, I should like to refer now to a few matters that have come up during the debate. I shall vote in favour of the amendment, not because it gives all that I wanted, for I was laying down a general principle, but because it is in line with that principle, and sometimes one must take half a loaf if one cannot have a whole loaf. The Minister of the Interior the other day tried to sidetrack the discussion which has been going on by saying that this was a matter—

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. I would ask hon. members behind the curtains to be silent. I cannot hear the hon. member although he has a very powerful voice.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I was saying that the Minister of the Interior attempted to sidetrack the real issue by suggesting that my resolution and my speech had to do entirely with the question of public versus private ownership. I would point out that the resolution pre-supposes grants to private individuals or corporations, and I think the amendment may be taken to pre-suppose similar grants. The fact is that the general policy of public versus private ownership is not involved in my resolution. Personally I am in favour of public ownership, but I say that question is not directly involved in the resolution. The purport of the resolution is to insist that natural resources shall not be alienated merely by order in council, without ratification by parliament. The minister went on to suggest that the contract was a good one; again I say that was not the point at issue. I will admit that the contract has some good features, but the point is that nothing of this kind should be done merely by order in council, especially in this case, the matter should have been submitted to parliament.

I charged that the action of the government was a violation of solemn assurance made to the Manitoba members. This point has been fairly well covered during the course of the discussion. We were told that we would be consulted; I ask if any member of this house says we were consulted when all that has been brought out is that of seventeen members seven were called together in Winnipeg, and the rest of us were not in any way notified. Even then these seven were simply informed that the government had concluded an agreement with the Manitoba government whereby the understanding with us could not be carried out. Is that consultation?

Then again the minister stated to the house very definitely, in answer to the leader of the opposition, that he would take no action. In view of what he wrote the next day I wonder whether any member of this house can say he intended to carry out that assurance. The minister immediately sat down and wrote that the original undertaking, on which apparently he had set his heart, would not be impaired in any way. In order to have it perfectly clear, let me quote the letter from Mr. Stewart to Mr. Bracken:

As the matter is one that has created a great deal of interest in Manitoba and last night was made the matter of comment in the house by the Hon. Mr. Bennett, and in view of the fact that delay of a month or so will not injure the prospects of this development—

On which apparently the minister had set his heart.

—I think it wise on my part to delay the issuing of the license for that time.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton) : I rise to a point of order. I must object to my hon. friend reading words into letters written by me which are not there. I emphatically deny the words used by my hon. friend. I have no objection to his reading the strict text of the letter, but I object to his interjecting words in the hope that they will appear in Hansard as part of the letter itself.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I have no desire that anything will appear in Hansard as part of the letter which is not there; I merely put in an interjection, as we often do. The exact statement of the minister was as follows:

. . . delay of a mouth or so will not injure the prospects of this development. . . . .

That was written one day after he had given a solemn assurance that no action would be taken.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I must object again; I gave no solemn assurance. My hon. friend persists in using that word, and I object.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Very well; let me read Mr. Stewart's statement from Hansard:

I may assure my hon. friend that until that difference of opinion is settled I am not going to issue any license for that water-power. I think I may assure my hon. friend of that.

Those are the exact words of the minister, and he will not deny them. Further than that, I suggest that this is not the first time the minister has issued a statement not in harmony with the facts.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Let me note the situation which existed in Winnipeg. It was suspected by some of the members of the local legislature that this grant was to be made to a private corporation; friends of mine in the local legislature wrote and asked us to make inquiries here. We did make inquiries in this house concerning the matter, and now let me read what Mr. Stewart telegraphed to Mr. Bracken on February 6:

No truth in report that Winnipeg Electric Railway Company is urging federal government for lease to develop Seven Sisters falls. Company's application was dated June 7, 1927, as to which your government has knowledge. Company has not submitted any further request for action in respect to this application. Mr. Johnston expects to reach Winnipeg Monday morning in accordance with your request.

Let me direct particular attention to one sentence contained in that telegram: "Company has not submitted any further request for action in respect to this application." Yet what do we find? I turn over the correspondence as laid on the table and find that on August 7, one month later than the application, E. Anderson sent information with regard to the incorporation of the Northwestern Power Company Limited. He said:

It is in the name of this company that we desire to have the priority permit issued in respect of the Seven Sisters development.

A month later than the application we have this letter written by Mr. Anderson to the department.

Mr. RALSTON: Will my hon. friend read it all? It would be much better to have it all on record.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The file was given another member of this house to-day and has not been returned to me.

Mr. RALSTON: Then will my hon. friend repeat the date?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: August 7, 1927. Then I go on three months, to October 28, under which date Mr. E. Anderson, counsel for the company, writes to Mr. Johnston of the department protesting against the granting of homestead rights in the vicinity of the Seven Sisters falls because it might interfere with power development. It is evidently taken for granted that this development will go through, and he writes that the company should be protected in that regard. Then I turn over the file again to November 18, a month later, when I find certain suggestions made by Mr. Anderson to Mr. Johnston that the settlers in the district near the Seven Sisters power site should not put improvements on the land as otherwise I suppose there would be added expenditures. There may be other letters, but I noted only these in the hurry of this morning. The minister has this to say on November 18:

The company's application was dated 7th June, 1927. The company has not submitted any further request for action in respect to its application.

There is request after request, and the whole tenor of the correspondence shows that the scheme is taken for granted as between the department here and the Winnipeg Electric Railway company. It is very significant that the only letter I have following the last one read is dated March 21, when Mr. Anderson announces that an agreement had been reached with the provincial government and arranges for a meeting with the department.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): During that whole period the Manitoba government had priority in connection with that lease.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I recognize that.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): There is no doubt that letters were passing back and forth until Mr. Bracken refused that lease.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Is there any record of that?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I have given my solemn word to this house at least a dozen times.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I challenged a solemn assurance the minister gave in another connection.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order, order.

Mr. DUNNING: Mr. Speaker, may we have a ruling on that?

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member must accept the word given by one of his colleagues.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Am I permitted to read the records as laid on the table?

Mr. SPEAKER: Certainly.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I was reading the record.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No, no.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The minister distinctly stated on February 6 that after June 7 the company had not submitted any further request for action in respect to its application, but after that date, on August 7, we find a further request; on October 28 we find still another request; and on November 18 we find further requests with regard to this application. I leave the record to speak for itself.

The government is a trustee, I take it, of these natural resources, including these waterpowers. Although the Manitoba government had no authority to grant a lease without submitting the proposal to parliament, this government was willing, on the strength of the provincial order in council, to turn over to a private company properties estimated at a value of $28,000,000. I think the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Thorson) has dealt very adequately with this phase of the question. It is considered necessary that before the natural resources are finally turned over there should be ratification by this parliament and also by the parliament of Manitoba.

Mr. GLEN: If the province of Manitoba, which has not as yet obtained its natural resources, approved in the legislature of the granting of a power site lease to a private company, would the hon. member support that?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I think the question can be answered in the words of the member for Marquette (Mr. Glen):

> "We have said everything we can say," said Mr. J. Allison Glen, M.P., Marquette, when advised of the action of the cabinet at Ottawa. "We are disatisfied, of course. We took the stand that it was too important a matter to put through by private agreement without consulting the representatives of the people. The proper place to have the issue discussed was on the floor of the legislature. If Mr. Bracken chooses to adopt some other course, that is his responsibility. The federal members who opposed the deal considered they had some responsibility and believing the agreement was not in the best interests of the people they registered their opposition. There is nothing more to be said just now."

Mr. GLEN: The hon. member has not answered my question. I asked the hon. member if he would have any objection to the legislature of Manitoba approving of the granting of a lease to a private company?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Once the natural resources are formally turned over the legislature of Manitoba is supreme.

Mr. GLEN: That is not an answer to my question. The amendment now before the house says that the disposal of power sites shall be subject to ratification by this parliament. Would the hon. member say that the legislature of Manitoba has no right to grant a lease to a private company without that lease being ratified by this parliament?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I would say that the resolution says what it means. Whatever is within the jurisdiction of the Dominion should come before this parliament; what is not within the jurisidiction naturally does not come before it.

Mr. GLEN: That is not an answer to my question.

Mr. BROWN: The hon. member mentioned a figure of $28,000,000.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: That was the estimated value.

Mr. BROWN: Would he tell us how that estimate has been arrived at?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the settlement of this great question of the natural resources of Manitoba which has occupied this country for well on to fifty years should not have been settled in a few weeks in the way it was, by order in council; an order in council on the part of the province and an order in council on the part of the Dominion. They did not dare to bring this matter before the legislature of Manitoba.

The Prime Minister said that this government did not advise. I wonder what we can call it other than advice, at least with regard to the action on the part of the department with regard to this whole matter. Anyone who has looked over the correspondence cannot but see that the deputy minister of the Department of the Interior definitely allied himself with the private bodies in order that the development should be done under a private company. We are told there was no advice, but that is the only conclusion that can be arrived at by reading the correspondence.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Does the hon. member make the statement that my deputy minister, Mr. Cory, is allied with the private interests?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I meant the water-powers branch. The correspondence between the private company and the water-powers branch indicates very clearly that that branch was desirous of giving this development to the private company. I did not intend to mention the deputy minister.

In my speech introducing the resolution, I asked a question with regard to the recovery of this valuable water-power. I would suggest, without discussing matters that are now under investigation in Winnipeg, that enough has already come to light in Winnipeg to show corrupt practices, and it seems to me that this should invalidate the lease. We have had no word whatever from the Minister of the Interior, no word whatever from the Prime Minister, with regard to this matter. If these water-powers have been acquired on what are more or less false pretences; if there has been manipulation behind the scenes; if there have been misrepresentations, it would be an outrage that any company could secure this water-power by order in council and then that it should be impossible for us to recover. I do not think the people of Canada will tolerate that kind of thing.

I come to the resolution as I prepared it. I prepared it in all good faith, but I find that the discussion has taken a very broad turn. We have had the whole of the natural resources question discussed from half a dozen different angles. The Prime Minister took advantage of this occasion to give a most important pronouncement with regard to the way in which the government proposed to deal with the natural resources. This all arose out of this little resolution of mine. The purport of the resolution is clear. Even the hon. member for Frontenac-Addington (Mr. Edwards) is, I think, rather mistaken in his criticism. The scope of the resolution is limited to those natural resources which are under the control of the federal parliament. If, as he believes, the lands or the water-powers are not under the control or, if you like, the administrative control of the government, then the resolution does not mean anything; it will not do any harm. But we all know, as a matter of fact, wherever the ownership may have been, it is the Dominion government which has been charged with the administrative control. Hence so far as the form is concerned I think anyone could vote for the resolution.

The Prime Minister, in attempting to answer my serious argument, descended to ridicule it. It seems to me that is hardly worthy of the Prime Minister. In a similar way, the other day he undertook to anticipate a resolution placed on the order paper by the hon. member for Southeast Grey (Miss Macphail) and to ridicule that resolution, and, in the ridiculing of it to misrepresent it and thus prejudice the house against its proposals.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I take exception to my hon. friend's remark. I was not attempting to ridicule any motion. I was pointing out what literally in the matter of expense would be involved if the terms of a certain resolution were carried out. I was not casting any ridicule upon it.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The Prime Minister to-day brought in some big books and in a childish way—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I think I am using a parliamentary expression. He held up a great pile of books and said that, if my resolution passed, all the details in these books would have to come before the house. When I made this motion I expressly stated that, as a matter of course, all the small items would, as they are now, be laid on the table by the Minister of the Interior and it would be only in an exceptional case that objection would be taken. As I pointed out in my first speech, in theory not a dollar of public money can be expended without the sanction of the house. I hold in my hands, following the childish gesture of the Prime Minister, the report of the Auditor General containing, I suppose, thousands or tens of thousands of items of individual expenditures. One might say it would be absolutely absurd to have parliament pass on all these, yet in passing the estimates our theory is that we do consider every dollar that is spent by the government of the country. If it is possible to review thousands of items in this way, I see nothing inherently impossible in having these estimates laid on the table even in the case of homesteads and leases. On these small transactions there would be no discussion whatever; they would be passed en bloc as we have been passing even divorce bills. They would be passed as a matter of course, but at the same time the house would be given an opportunity to check anything that was not in the public interest.

We were told that even in the case of the St. Lawrence waterways it would be very difficult to secure the revocation of the license. We are told, with regard to the Seven Sisters falls, that already vested interests have been created and that it would be extremely difficult for the government to cancel the license. I know there is that difficulty. Perhaps it is put forward as being greater than it really is, but I want to obviate a difficulty of that kind by insisting that until parliament finally passes on the matter, there is no vested interest on the part of anyone. I would say: Let the government go on with its negotiations; let it call in its experts; let it work out the agreements and let it tentatively give licenses or contracts, but let every licensee know that that license must come for review before this house. In view of the tens of millions of dollars of the natural resources of this country which have been alienated during past years without any sanction from parliament, I urge in all seriousness that we ought to take steps now to insure that our natural resources are safeguarded. In discussing the resolution, I used the disposal of the Seven Sisters falls as an illustration. I did not know that the whole of the discussion was going to centre on the Seven Sisters falls; but as I stated frankly, it was the manner in which that lease was granted and the subsequent events that led me to put this resolution on the order paper.

I accept the amendment and will gladly vote for it, and I hope that many members on the government side will do the same. I know this is expecting a good deal when there has been party feeling aroused by this discussion. By this resolution I did not intend to introduce a vote of censure of the government. If that vote of censure is introduced in the house, it ought to stand by itself. If I had intended a vote of censure of the government I would have brought in a vote of censure. I did not intend the resolution as such; I put it on the order paper months ago, and it came up at this time simply in the regular course. But in view of the growing public interest in matters of this kind, it seems to me that many members on the Liberal side as well as members of the opposition could well afford to subscribe to what I regard as a fundamentally sound proposition—and I limit it to the proposal of the amendment—that the vast water-powers of this country that are so essential to its future development ought not to be left entirely in the hands of any party government. I would be as loath to leave them in the hands of the Conservative party as I am to leave them in the hands of the Liberal party. Now that the Conservative party to-night, owing to a rather curious development of events, are willing to vote for a great principle of this kind, I hope it will not be defeated by the so-called Liberal party of Canada.

Mr. J. A. GLEN (Marquette): Mr. Speaker, I had not intended to discuss any further the resolution before the house, but in view of the extraordinarily heated remarks of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) I feel that I must follow on the remarks I made this afternoon. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre says that he did not import into this discussion the question of the Seven Sisters power site.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: No, no. That is a misunderstanding.

Mr. GLEN: He says that he did not understand that the discussion would centre around the Seven Sisters falls power site; I think those were his words. But not a man in the house spoke of the Seven Sisters site until after the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre had mentioned it. The whole of his argument was a condemnation of the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Stewart) for the action he took in that connection. He spoke in the first instance, when introducing his resolution, of the domination of the financial interests particularly with regard to power, and he proposed to make that the basis of his argument, but afterwards he departed altogether from that line and came to the question of the disposal of the Seven Sisters falls site as a horrible illustration of his argument. I have entire sympathy, as I said this afternoon, with all that he said with regard to the domination of the financial interests in this country, but I am not prepared to accept the argument he submits, namely, that the question of the disposal of the Seven Sisters site should determine my attitude in the vote that is about to take place on the amendment.

I asked the hon. member to answer a question; he has not yet done so, but I think the question is very relevant to this discussion. I asked whether in the event of the legislature of Manitoba, or Saskatchewan or Alberta, if you will, passing a resolution approving of the granting of a power site to any private individual or corporation within the province, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre would in those circumstances—the representatives of the people having expressed their will through a resolution of the legislature—say that the province had no right to request the Dominion government to grant that lease. There was no answer from the hon. member, although both in this house and on platforms throughout the country—I have no particular occasion in mind, but I think I do him no injustice when I say this—he has always stood for the autonomy of the provincial legislature. Yet in this house to-night he is asking hon. members to support an amendment which would make the granting of the water-powers of the different provinces subject to ratification by this parliament, and only then would the disposition of those water-powers become effective.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: No. Read the amendment.

Mr. GLEN: I do not think that is an incorrect statement. The amendment, if it means anything, means that the disposition of the water-power sites in any province shall not be effective until ratified by parliament.

Mr. HEAPS: What control has this parliament over the water-powers of the province of Quebec, for instance?

Mr. GLEN: I am very much concerned with the province of Manitoba, and with the three prairie provinces generally, which have not yet got their natural resources.

Mr. HEAPS: The hon. gentleman has just made the statement that my colleague from Winnipeg North Centre wants to interfere in the granting of the leases by the different provinces in Canada, and I am simply testing his statement.

[Mr. Glen.]

Mr. GLEN: If the hon. gentleman had listened to my argument, it was this: Under the amendment, the Dominion of Canada would have control over the power sites in this Dominion irrespective of the wishes of the provincial legislatures in the three prairie provinces.

Mr. HEAPS: That is not possible.

Mr. GLEN: I shall endeavour to make my hon. friend understand that it is possible. Suppose that instead of having the Seven Sisters power site under discussion in the circumstances in which it is now before us, Premier Bracken had acceded to our request that the question should be submitted to the provincial legislature, and that the provincial legislature, which is now sitting, had decided after open discussion that they would grant the lease of the Seven Sisters falls power site to the Winnipeg Electric Company, and in furtherance of that action had requested the Minister of the Interior to accede to the granting of the lease. My question is, would the hon. member say that in those circumstances the Minister of the Interior would be justified in withholding what the people of the province of Manitoba claimed as their right, namely to dispose of their own natural resources? Would he take that stand, in view of the undertaking given by the Dominion government at the Dominion-provincial conference, that pending the transfer of the natural resources the Dominion government would hold them at the wish of the provincial government? Yet the amendment says that no disposition of the water-powers shall take place until ratified by this parliament.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Yes. They must not be given away by order in council, but by parliament.

Mr. GLEN: The order in council was passed not by the Dominion government but by the provincial government.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: No. I think the hon. gentleman will agree that the lease was granted by order in council passed by the federal government.

Mr. GLEN: The lease was granted by this government on the request by order in council of the government of Manitoba. There was the considered opinion of the province of Manitoba asking that the lease be granted to a particular company, and expressed in the form of an order in council, and this government naturally acceded to that request, as they were bound to do.

The hon. member has been speaking of provincial autonomy. I would like to know what the members from Saskatchewan and Alberta have to say about this. I am informed that a number of leases have been granted, if not to individuals, to corporations within the province of Alberta, and these leases have been granted with the knowledge and consent of the premier of the province, and the same with regard to Saskatchewan. Will the members from these two provinces take the position that if this amendment carries, no lease the granting of which is asked for by the Premier of Alberta or the Premier of Saskatchewan shall be granted until it is ratified by this parliament? Will they, taking the position which the hon. member for Frontenac-Addington (Mr. Edwards) takes, that the Dominion is but the trustee and that the provinces are the beneficiaries of the natural resources, say that the beneficiaries have no right to say where the assets of their estate shall go?

The hon. member for North Winnipeg (Mr. Heaps) raises the question of the province of Quebec. I say that I am concerned with Manitoba. That is my first and my only consideration just now, and I say that the province of Manitoba would be restricted by the terms of this amendment. It could not be otherwise, and for that reason I intend to oppose the amendment.

Mr. MALCOLM McLEAN (Melfort): I have not occupied the time of parliament during the session any more than my hon. friends across the way have, but I do intend to say a little to-night. Like most of the members I have been listening off and on to this discussion for two or three days, a discussion of a most extraordinary nature on a most extraordinary subject. Coming from western Canada I have been accustomed there to take pride in the growth of that part of the country, developed as it has been under the policies of successive federal governments, of disposing—alienating is the word that would be used to-day—of certain natural resources of those sections, which have existed there since the dawn of creation. Those lands were not worth twenty-eight million dollars, they were not worth a nickel, until men came in and brought them under cultivation. But, as I have said, we had become accustomed to the wonderful growth of that western country under the policy adopted, and adopted wisely, a generation or two ago by this parliament and adhered to during the intervening years. What was that policy? That the government of this country, under legislation passed by parliament, was empowered to alienate the resources of the prairie provinces, to give them to individuals, to lease or sell them to corporations, with the result that to-day that western country upholds the trade and financial credit of the Dominion in the markets of the world. And yet the policy under which that tremendous development has taken place is attacked to-night by the original motion, and in a milder form by the amendment of the hon. leader of the opposition.

Now, Mr. Speaker, had the policy which is now being proposed been in effect during the last thirty or forty years would western Canada to-day be supporting millions of people, would we have the great cities of Winnipeg, Calgary, Edmonton, Regina, would we see the railways strung across from the lakes and over the Rocky mountains to the Pacific seaboard? Such a development would have been impossible if every homestead application had to be passed on in this house, and if hon. members wanted to know why John Jones should get a certain quarter-section, and required that the application and all the correspondence and other papers relating thereto should be placed on the table of this house. But that is exactly what would have happened if the principle of this resolution had been in force. On the very next page to that containing the resolution now under discussion I find the following notice of motion for production of papers:

> For a copy of all letters, telegrams, correspondence, and any other documents in the possession of the government or any department thereof, in connection with the sale of section 26, township 32, range 32, west of the first meridian.

This motion for a copy of documents relates, it will be noticed, to the sale of a section of land. The hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Campbell) wants to know all the details; but if that land and other resources had been given away you can imagine the number of inquiries that would appear on the order paper, and it is safe to assume that this house would find it very difficult to discharge its functions as a branch of parliament. The policy under which western Canada has been developed has been almost uniformly successful, experience has shown it to be wise, and it would be a sad state of affairs if it were displaced by the policy now proposed.

I remember the leader of the opposition speaking very feelingly about the officers of the Department of the Interior. I should like to pay a tribute to the department not only since the present minister has been in charge but since its inception. Since the prairie provinces began to grow settlers have looked to the Minister of the Interior and to the officers of his department as their friends.

They came into the country largely on the invitation of the department, and on the lands given to them they built their homes, and under all governments of whatever shade of politics generally speaking those people have received fair and reasonable treatment from the department. Why? Because the sole object of the department was to people those western plains and get them under cultivation. And yet this motion which has been debated for two days and the amendment now under consideration would change that policy and throw the work into the political arena.

I am quite sure hon. gentlemen opposite do not really mean that. The only reason I can suggest for their support of the amendment occurs to me from a statement made by the hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Edwards) yesterday, when he told the house he could not support the resolution as worded, but apparently he and his friends are quite ready to support the amendment that no disposition of the water-power under the control of the federal government shall be effective until ratified by parliament. But there is no difference in the principle involved. If the water-powers in western Canada, for instance, are not rightfully under the control of the federal government that government could not dispose of them now. And if the lands and other resources still under the control of the federal government should not be disposed of by the Department of the Interior, I cannot see how the hon. member for Frontenac can justify his change of front. It is too subtle for my very ordinary intellect to grasp.

I should just like to point out what the passing of this resolution would mean. I admit that if the amendment passes it would not have all the effect that I am about to describe. The Department of the Interior disposes of scores of thousands of homesteads every year. Men go into the prairie provinces every year to hunt up new homes, to find new ways of making a living. Those people would have no assurance of title or other security until the proposed grant of their homesteads was brought before this parliament and disposed of. Well, a year or two ago some of us thought that the sessions of parliament lasted too long. Last session the rules were amended in order to shorten the length of time which hon. members have to spend in Ottawa, and I think there was very little difference of opinion in any part of the house as to the desirability of the changes then made. In the face of that change this proposal, which we have been discussing for two days, would throw on parliament the extra burdens that I have outlined. The department also disposes of timber lands. I am well aware that possibly a generation ago it was said that certain things in connection with the alienation of these resources were not altogether right. I do not know myself, I am simply stating what I have heard or read. Now, supposing someone like my hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth)—of whose sincerity in this matter I am absolutely convinced; I am only questioning his judgment in the course he has taken—supposing, I say, some hon. member introduced a resolution that until this parliament ratified the disposition of any timber lands those resources could not be alienated by the Department of the Interior. What would have been the effect on the men who were depending for their living on the cutting of that timber?

Now, a new thought has struck me—does the hon. member for West Hamilton (Mr. Bell) interrupt?—the hon. gentleman who was so busy telling the house three years ago that the extremely hard conditions in his city had forced hundreds of working men to go out in the depths of the Canadian winter and pull grass off the mountain for fuel, and that those hard conditions were due to tariff reductions? If he has any interruptions to make I ask him to make them now.

There is a point in connection with this matter which I think the hon. member who proposed the resolution has overlooked. It is not asked that the disposition of lands shall be ratified by this house; it is proposed that it shall be ratified by parliament. Now, without saying anything derogatory, which would bring down on myself the wrath of the Chair, everyone knows that the other part of parliament, of which I must speak respectfully, has not always seen eye to eye with this house. Many times legislation passed by this house has received the cold shoulder in the other chamber, and now are we going to ask that no development shall be allowed in the western provinces, which, generally speaking, have been under the administration of the Dominion government—under the control of the Department of the Interior and to some extent of the Department of Fisheries—until the consent not only of this house but of the other also has been obtained? I think the thing is ridiculous, and as a western member I cannot support the proposition. Nor can I understand how anyone else can support it.

I was speaking a moment ago of timber lands. At the time when certain irregularities were supposed to exist in the handling of timber, would anyone suggest that no timber should be sold until the sales slips should have been brought to parliament and O.K.'d by the members of this house and of the other as well, and duly ratified? The act was amended to some extent, the regulations were changed, and provision was made for the disposition of timber in such a way as would remove all fear of danger in the future. The result is that the man who wishes to purchase timber from Dominion lands can now go to the nearest Dominion land office and obtain application forms, or he may attend an auction sale and make his purchase. But in any event he is assured of security. Take, again, grazing lands. If the proposal of my hon. friends were to be adopted, and all grazing leases held had to be ratified by this parliament, many of the cattle would die of hunger in a hard winter; they would not have the grass on the mountains to sustain them. The same principle applies to fishing.

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): If they were Liberals they would get thistles.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): I am sorry I did not catch that.

An hon. MEMBER: You didn't miss anything.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): I do not suppose I did. I am making a serious argument.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): I am glad to get at least that meed of praise from my hon. friends opposite.

Mr. MANION: It is not praise.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): In that case it must be what an hon. member suggested a little while ago—the loud laugh that speaks the vacant mind.

Mr. MANION: The vacant mind is over there.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): To proceed, if there are no more interruptions. The man who wanted a fishing license, according to this proposition, would have to come here and have his application ratified before he could engage in fishing, and the fishing season would be past before he could make a catch; he could not feed the people of Montreal and Ottawa and other eastern cities with the delectable northern trout we get to-day. And what about minerals? The prospector goes into the north and files his mineral claims, but according to this resolution he would have to come here at great trouble and expense, only to be informed that parliament would have to be consulted before he could begin operations. At the present time under the regulations he may file his claim knowing that he is absolutely protected on his holding, provided he does certain things which are reasonable; when he does those things he is sure of getting title. But under the proposed arrangements he would have to wait until parliament gave him title.

There is another matter that has been discussed a good deal during the debate and that is the question of water-powers. There has been considerable criticism of the disposition of certain water-powers in Manitoba. Now, something like five per cent of the water-powers of Manitoba was alienated from the control of the Dominion and turned over on the recommendation of the province under an agreement between the province and the Dominion. For the past twenty years there has been a determined demand on the part of many people in the west to secure control of natural resources including water-powers. This government arrives at an agreement with another government—a provincial government—to turn over certain water-powers and that provincial government advises that something shall be done with a certain water-power, a very insignificant percentage of the water-powers of Manitoba. The same water that flows over the Seven Sisters falls flows later into lake Winnipeg and out into the Nelson river where it forms a part of many millions of horse-power in that river. That is a tremendous river, draining a vast stretch of territory from the Rocky mountains on the west on to Hudson bay on the east, and from the northern United States, draining up through the Red river of the north, through the Assiniboine, the waters of western Ontario, draining through the Winnipeg and other rivers in that district, all flowing finally into the Nelson river, representing millions upon millions of horse-power. Yet because the government of the province asks this government to dispose of a water-power site in a way which so far as we know is satisfactory to the provincial authorities, and in a way which they had a perfect right to suggest, we have engaged in this long debate in parliament. How does this affect the other provinces? I assure you, Mr. Speaker, I should be derelict in my duty were I not merely to refrain from voting but to decline to protest against a proposal such as this, which would tie up the development of the province I represent. I have no desire to see a change made in the regulations which would compel any man who wishes to secure a water-power in northern Saskatchewan—to speak of the province I know best—to wait until the proposition had been considered at Ottawa and passed upon by this parliament. We have often heard, and the people throughout the country have heard, about the harm done new industries in the newer parts of the Dominion through the control which banking and financial interests exercise. It is said that it is impossible to develop industries in the newer parts of the country as they should be developed because the banks have their headquarters in the eastern cities, and an industry in western Canada may be retarded cn this account. I have heard it reported, with reference to an industry in Fort William—the constituency represented by my hon. friend opposite (Mr. Manion)—that it was difficult to obtain sufficient financial credit by reason of the control of funds by business men who happened to be directors or owners or representatives of similar industries located and already established in the east. Some hon. gentlemen may ask, what has that to do with the water-powers or the alienation of resources?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): I hear an hon. gentleman say "hear, hear," but he knows pretty well what bearing it has on the subject. He knows perfectly well that the financial men can check the growth of western business. I am not accusing them of doing so; I am merely stating that which has been said in this house many times as well as on the street. And if they can do that in connection with financial power they can do it just as well in connection with the development of natural resources. In Saskatchewan, in the constituency I represent, there is proceeding at the present moment one of the most wonderful winter operations ever tackled in Canada. Freight is being hauled from the town of The Pas, a distance of eighty-five or eighty-nine miles, on a railroad where a year ago, this day 1928, there was nothing but muskeg and rock over the greater part of that eighty-five or eighty-nine miles. Courage, skill and industry last winter made it possible to lay steel over the muskeg, and this summer the steel was raised, the grade put in under it, and the rest of the road built. The result is that at this time development is taking place day and night, tractors hauling tremendous loads the rest of the distance from Flin Flon to the water-power site at Island falls. Ten tractors are hauling loads of some seventy tons apiece over a distance of from eighty to a hundred miles. They run on a twenty-four hour schedule, getting through with the material to build the dam at Island falls on the Churchill river. Now, Mr. Speaker, if anyone expects that I can conscientiously vote for a change in procedure which will make it impossible for such developments to proceed, I cannot agree with him.

An hon. MEMBER: You were not expected to.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): I know the hon. member for Toronto does not ask me to agree with him, so we agree to disagree, and throughout the Dominion as a rule not many agree with what goes on in Toronto or with what emanates from there. I know my hon. friend will not feel too badly hurt over that, because I am sure he does not believe everything that comes from Toronto.

However, Mr. Speaker, I want to protest against the idea that a development of that kind should be held up until some one can come to parliament and have all that deal pawed over here for political reasons, by politicians—and I do not use the word disrespectfully, being one of that brotherhood myself. This would mean a tremendous delay, and it would discourage investors, financiers, industrialists, miners and prospectors from going into that country if they knew they would have to run the gauntlet of parliament before getting power with which to turn the wheels of industry.

This is what I say, Mr. Speaker, and it is the main part of my speech—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): —which, like good wine, I have saved for the last. I am not interested a particle in the disposition of Seven Sisters falls, except as an ordinary citizen of Canada, but the people of Manitoba are not children; they are grown up and the province is autonomous. I would remind hon. gentlemen opposite that a previous federal government fell on the question of the civil and autonomous rights of the people of Manitoba, who are well skilled in punishing governments with which they do not agree and in rewarding those with which they do agree. Surely hon. gentlemen opposite know that; their memory is not so short but that they remember what happened in 1914 and 1915, when the people of Manitoba took the direction of their affairs into their own hands. Because something happened in Manitoba which does not suit some hon. members of this house I do not believe there should be a complete change in the procedure under which western Canada was built up and developed.

Speaking for the province of Saskatchewan, I do not want to see any change in the law such as is proposed, until the people of Saskatchewan ask for it. Saskatchewan is quite capable of electing a legislature and selecting a government in which it has confidence; it has done so for twenty-five years, and when that government comes to Ottawa requesting this government to permit development of power on the Churchill river or some other river in a certain way, unless there is something palpably criminal on the face of it which would warrant this government in asking for time in which to consider the matter, I say that request should be granted. This is a question of constitutional rights which we are fighting to-day, and I protest against the idea that our people are children, without the full right and ability to govern themselves.

Now let me develop the argument in which I was engaged when I was interrupted by the applause of my hon. friends opposite. We sometimes hear that industries in that western country are hindered in their development by a lack of financial support due to the fact that men interested in the same kind of industries are on the boards of banks and other financial institutions in the east; so I think we are leaving ourselves open to the charge of hindering western industry which requires water-power or the use of other natural resources for its development. We will do that if we make them come to this house and to the other house for approval of grants of this kind. We must remember that the other house was unkind enough—and I hope this is not unparliamentary—to stop the development of western Canada six years ago on the question of the construction of necessary branch lines, and so held back people of that country from the proper development to which they were entitled. If the members of the other house had seen farmers hauling their grain thirty, forty to fifty miles to market in weather perhaps from thirty to fifty degrees below zero, I do not think they would have taken that action. I appeal to my hon. friends in the southeast corner of the chamber as to whether or not these conditions have existed in the past in western Canada.

Now what about the prospector? Every once in a while I receive a resolution or a request from a prospectors' association in northern Manitoba or northern Saskatchewan asking me to make representations to the department, alleging that certain conditions are too harsh in one way or unsuitable in some other way. We must remember that these men go out in the winter time with their dogs and a limited amount of food; they can stay out only so long, and if the snow is too deep or the weather too severe they cannot do very much. However, they keep moving, locate their caches and so on, and in the spring they come out before the ice goes. Then they must get together their summer outfits, after the breakup is complete. These men endure great hardships, and when they find something they come back to try to sell it to someone who will go in and develop the country as the Whitney people have gone into the Flin Flon area, where they are doing such good work. However, if these men were to be told, "Now, your option expires on a certain date and you may not be able to get power, because it is necessary to go to the parliament of Canada, and they may say you cannot have it," I submit it would make very difficult the development of the mineral areas of western Canada. So through you, Mr. Speaker, I ask this house to vote down a resolution which would hinder such development and would not do any good. I can quite understand certain members of this house objecting to the way in which water-powers, lands, timber limits and so on have been handled in the past, but just because hon. gentlemen may not like the way I wear my hat or do my hair, no one would think of saying that the proper punishment would be to amputate me just behind the ears. So just because there may have been something in connection with the transfer of natural resources in Manitoba with which they disagree, I do not think we should change the whole system. I believe it is the duty, the right and the privilege of the people of Manitoba to deal with that question for themselves, and I ask this house not to do anything which will penalize the home makers of that western country. Do not let us make it harder for the lumberman who may want to buy timber from the government, with which other people may build houses, for the miners, the prospectors and others. Let us permit the people of Manitoba to do as they wish with what is theirs, but leave the resources of Saskatchewan under the same administration they have had in the past. Let them remain under the federal government, acting through the Department of the Interior in consultation from time to time with the government of Saskatchewan, in order that the resources may be administered on behalf of all the people until they are transferred to the province.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, when the house entered upon the debate on the address hon. gentlemen opposite, through the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) spent some time in criticizing the government on the delay in the transfer of the natural resources to the western provinces. Since the present government came into office we have been doing out utmost to hasten this transfer, believing that the western provinces were justified in desiring the return of their resources at the earliest possible moment. What is the one reason above all others which has occasioned this desire on the part of the western provinces for the speedy transfer of their resources? Water-power to-day is coming to have a significance in industrial development which it has never had heretofore in the history of this country. The people of western Canada, appreciating that fact and realizing what it means to have possession of their water-powers, are anxious to have those water-powers under their own control to further in the manner they think best the industrial development of their provinces. What is the position being taken in this parliament this evening? The hon. the acting leader of the opposition (Mr. Guthrie), who comes from the province of Ontario which is highly industrialized through the development of electric power, introduces a motion which absolutely divides eastern and western Canada; which says in so many words that while the older provinces of Ontario and Quebec may have all the freedom they wish to develop their natural resources, and to develop their water-powers in particular, the western provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta are not to be permitted to have any industrial development dependent upon electric energy developed from water-power until the particular plans and sites and all transactions incidental to the transfer of their water-powers and to their development are approved by this parliament.

Parliament is made up of two houses, the House of Commons and the Senate. Hon. gentlemen opposite still have a majority in the senate, and the industrial development of western Canada is to be made dependent upon the will of a Tory majority in the senate. That in effect is the result of the amendment before this house at the present time. I am somewhat surprised that my hon. friend (Mr. Woodsworth) who is a bit of a radical, is prepared to put his province in a position where its industrial development will depend upon ratification of the majority in the senate. The amendment reads as follows:

> That in the opinion of this house no disposition of the water-powers under the control of the federal government shall be effective until ratified by parliament.

That does not mean the water-powers in the provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island, Quebec, Ontario or British Columbia, but it does mean all of the water-powers in the provinces of Saskatchewan, Alberta and Manitoba, because those water-powers are under the control of this government pending their actual transfer to the western provinces. This government has entered into an agreement with the government of one of these western provinces, and one of the conditions of that agreement is that its natural resources, including its water-powers, are to be administered in accordance with the wishes of that province from the time the agreement was made until the province is actually in full possession and control of its resources. Is the spectacle not an amusing one for us to be asked by a member from that particular province, of all parts, to break that contract and all that is implied in it? This contract provides for the transfer of the control of all the resources, not only one particular resource. The Manitoba government stressed its desire to have all its resources administered in accordance with its own wishes, and so far as the resources were concerned I remember particular emphasis being laid in our conferences upon the effect the explorations in northern Manitoba today would be likely to have on future industrial development. A development such as we have not seen in Canada before may be expected in a very short time, in Alberta or Saskatchewan as well as in Manitoba, but as has been mentioned by the hon. member who has just taken his seat (Mr. McLean, Melfort), industrial development is something that has to be proceeded with rapidly or it will in many cases fail altogether. What is true of Manitoba is equally true of Saskatchewan and Alberta. So far as the government is concerned we have made a contract, on behalf of the Dominion of Canada, with one of the provinces of the west, and we have promised to make similar contracts with the two other provinces. This government will not begin a great policy of transferring the natural resources by contractual agreement, a policy which tends to unite this country from coast to coast more firmly than ever, by breaking one contract at its very inception.

The most serious issue that can be raised in this country is the issue of provincial rights, and that question is raised the moment any province is told that it cannot do what it likes with its own but must wait for the ratification of this parliament. The transfer of the natural resources to the western provinces has been delayed for one reason, among others, namely, because the proposed agreement stipulated in effect that the provinces were to be placed in a position of equality with the other provinces of the Dominion as far as their natural resources were concerned. Those words seemed to be fair enough, but it was alleged by the western provinces that they admitted of debate, and that there was doubt as to what they might mean. The province of Manitoba alleged that it might be necessary to get an interpretation as to their exact significance from the privy council. This government took the position that the right thing to do was to say that we believed the western provinces should be put as nearly as possible in exactly the position they would have been in had they had their resources from the moment they were created as provinces. That is the position we have taken in this new agreement; it admits of no debate or doubt, and having taken that position we intend to stand by it. We intend to see that the western provinces obtain their natural resources on a basis which will put them, so far as may now be possible, in the position they would have been in had they had the administration of their natural resources from the time they were created as provinces, and that means the right of their governments and legislatures, not our parliament, to decide what is to be done.

I think we have discussed this question long enough. There are many arguments that might be urged, but I do submit that when we have such a great issue as the question of the rights of the provinces as against the Dominion raised in an amendment; when we have an issue created which tends to divide eastern Canada from western Canada; when we have an amendment which threatens to hold back the industrial development of a large part of this Dominion to which the rest of the Dominion is already widely indebted, we should not waste very much time in letting the country know where we stand in regard to it.

Mr. JOHN EVANS (Rosetown): While this debate has been a day out for the Seven Sisters, I do not think I am trespassing when I take a few minutes to present some views regarding natural resources in general. I took some notes while the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) was speaking the other day—

An hon. MEMBER: Louder.

Mr. EVANS: If hon. gentlemen would not talk so much I could be heard all right.

I was proceeding to say that the right hon. gentleman made some remarks the other day with reference to the fact that all parties and governments since confederation had played with the western provinces. I think it has been one of the most laughable farces that has ever taken place in this house to see one side accusing the other of delay and then of being in a hurry at the same time. I did not think they could blow hot and cold with the same breath as literally as they have. The hon. gentleman said that not only had the Liberals' offer of the natural resources been refused, but Mr. Meighen's offer of 1911 was also refused. Mr. Meighen's offer could not be accepted, for several reasons. One of the reasons was that no accounting was to be made of all resources alienated during the years that they had been held by the Dominion government. The same restriction was to apply as has applied and this has been the reason for not handing over the resources since the time of confederation.

The Prime Minister also stated that the Dominion government was now willing to hand over these resources but that the provinces were not willing to accept the very generous offer. What was the generous offer? The most generous offer that has yet been made is that those provinces shall be given their natural resources and retain the present subsidy at the amount at which it stands to-day. Every province receives a subsidy, and if the provinces that have not their natural resources accept them on those conditions, those subsidies should be on a sliding scale in proportion to what the other provinces are receiving and according to population.

But I have yet to find out why those resources are not handed over and those provinces put in the same position as the other provinces of the Dominion. Why should the Dominion government be in a position to make offers? Who took those resources; who usurped the right to hold them? Was it not the Dominion government itself? To illustrate that I might mention something that has just occurred to me. If I stole a man's purse—and according to the code of ethics which is bandied back and forth across the floor of the house that would be no crime on my part if I were strong enough to get away with it—if I stole a man's purse and during the time I had it in my possession I freely used whatever was in it, should I be the one to make the owner an offer as to the conditions upon which he should receive it back? That is how the Dominion government stand to-day in relation to those provinces, and yet they say: We are making a generous offer. As a member from Saskatchewan let me tell the Prime Minister to keep his generous offer.

Mention was made of negotiations with the provinces. The Prime Minister said that hon. gentlemen seem to think some sinister motive is at the bottom of the whole thing. I am not going to say that it is sinister, but there is a motive. Are the house and the country to forget the speech made by the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) in this chamber in January, 1926? Are the house and the country to forget that an official of the Dominion government was sent to Alberta to get Brownlee to agree to the provisions demanded by Quebec? There is a motive. Why hide it? I am not saying this because I am a Protestant and not a Roman Catholic. I have no prejudice against Roman Catholicism.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. EVANS: Hon. members may laugh, but I have none. I say, however, that when any province seeks by its religion and racial relationships to dominate politically the rest of the Dominion, I am going to rebel. Does Quebec send sixty-three or sixty-four members to this house every election only for the general good of Canada?

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): Yes.

Mr. EVANS: I do not believe it.

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): We do.

Mr. EVANS: We cannot accept the return of our resources with those restrictions. I have no prejudice against Roman Catholicism but I have against political domination by any one class or race in the Dominion, and until those restrictions are entirely removed from the acceptance of our resources, I am still going to rebel. I want to tell the Prime Minister that there have been two rebellions in western Canada. In 1870 Louis Riel was fighting for his own rights, for the rights of that territory, and I do not know, had I been there then, that I should not have been alongside of him.

Mr. POWER: I might suggest that the hon. member would have got into trouble with the organization to which he now belongs.

Mr. EVANS: I want to tell the hon. gentleman that no organization has ever had any strings on me.

Mr. SPEAKER: May I suggest to hon. members that we are discussing the natural resources of Canada and not the Riel rebellion?

Mr. EVANS: I was endeavouring to answer an accusation of the hon. gentleman, and I want to tell him that no organization has ever had any strings on me. I intend to preserve my freedom for the rest of my life.

As regards another reference made by the Prime Minister, the reason for dealing with those provinces separately in this instance is the very same reason why those who governed us in the early days saw fit to divide those territories up into three provinces in order that they might deal with them separately. If Saskatchewan is to accept the remainder of her public domain without an accounting for the alienated land of that province, the subsidy should be on a sliding scale according to population and in relation to what the other provinces are receiving.

To come more particularly to the resolution and the amendment, assuming that the Dominion Lands Act was not a usurpation and ultra vires of the British North America Act, I submit that the principle of the resolution should have been adopted when the Dominion Lands Act came into force, but I do not even admit that the Dominion government had the right to pass the Dominion Lands Act and to apply it to our resources during the last sixty years. But then, just as is the case to-day, those two provinces, Ontario and Quebec particularly, assumed the right to rule over the western part of Canada. It is time they abandoned that practice and that the western provinces be given their full autonomy. For many years past, organized agriculture has from time to time declared its views in this matter by adopting resolutions something in these words. I hold in my hand what is known as the farmers' platform, on which the whole Progressive party that occupied this part of the house after 1921 was elected. The resolution reads:

The council recommends that no more of the natural resources be alienated from the crown, but that these be brought into use only under short-term leases in which the interests of the public shall be properly safeguarded, and that such leases be granted only by public auction.

I am sure the Minister of Railways (Mr. Dunning) will remember this resolution as well as some of the discussions which took place before the Canadian Council of Agriculture. More than that on many occasions my hon. friend from Lisgar (Mr. Brown), as president, put this resolution before his own organization. I cannot understand the action of men to-day in dealing with this matter. The action of the Liberal party and of the Conservative party on this question has been a mystery to me for many, many years.

Mr. DUNNING: Has not the hon. member also been a little mystified occasionally by the action of the Progressive party? I think he will admit that.

Mr. EVANS: The hon. gentleman can think that too if he likes. But whatever was the excuse in 1870 for the passing of the Dominion Lands Act, when responsible government was created in Rupert's Land and the northwest territory there was no need for the Dominion government to withhold those resources from their rightful owners. Had there been any excuse even for that, surely when the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan were created we should have been placed on an equal status with the rest of the Dominion. Why mince matters any longer? There is one faction on that side and one faction on this.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Friday, March 1, 1929

The house met at three o'clock.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

First report of select standing committee on miscellaneous private bills.—Mr. Parent.

PRIVATE BILL

FIRST READING

Bill No. 70, respecting Joliette and Northern Railway Company.—Mr. Ferland.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

CHANGE IN MEMBERSHIP OF STANDING COMMITTEES

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister) moved:

That the name of Mr. McIntosh be substituted for that of Mr. Bock on the select standing committee on banking and commerce.

That the name of Mr. Bock be substituted for that of Mr. McIntosh on the select standing committee on agriculture and colonization.

That the name of Mr. Howden be struck off the list of members of the select standing committee on miscellaneous private bills.

Motion agreed to.

PRECEDENCE OF BUDGET DEBATE

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Following the practice respecting the debate on the budget, whereby the debate is accorded precedence over other matters once the Minister of Finance has introduced his budget, I beg to move:

That on Monday, the 4th of March instant, and every day thereafter the motion for the Speaker to leave the chair for the house to go into committee on ways and means have precedence over all other business, except the introduction of bills, questions, and notices of motion for the production of papers.

Hon. HUGH GUTHRIE (Acting Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, personally I have no objection to the motion, but I must say that it would suit my convenience very much if it took effect on Tuesday instead of on Monday, and in conversation with my hon. friend who leads the Progressive party I believe it would suit his convenience also. Monday then would be private members' day, according to the order paper. I do not want to urge my objection too strongly, because it is entirely a personal matter.

Mr. JOHN MILLAR (Qu'Appelle): I rise to support the view of the acting leader of the opposition.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. MILLAR: I think on that side of the house they often need support. On looking at the order paper it will be seen that the first resolution refers to the grading of wheat. That matter itself could very well stand over until after the budget debate with no serious result, but it is intertwined and interlocked with matters of vital importance to western Canada, one of them being the mixing of grain and I know that members on both sides of the house are anxious to have this question proceeded with and sent to committee in order that the other matters which are of pressing importance and which will possibly necessitate legislation during this session may be investigated without loss of time. If the matter stands until after the budget debate is concluded, probably two weeks of valuable time will be lost, and I think it important that this question go to the committee at once. It will not take very long, and if Monday were allowed for private members the matter would go to the committee and they would have something of importance to proceed with.

Mr. ROBERT GARDINER (Acadia): I desire to support the views of the hon. gentlemen who have preceded me. There are some very important questions which should go to the agriculture committee, and if the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Millar) is given an opportunity to bring up his motion on Monday it will give the agriculture committee an opportunity to look into some questions affecting the grain act which we in western Canada feel should be dealt with this session. Therefore I would suggest to the Prime Minister and his colleagues that Monday remain private members' day and that we proceed with the budget on Tuesday.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Naturally the desire of the government is to meet the convenience of the house and particularly the wishes of hon. gentlemen leading other parties. May I say that I believe there is a desire on the part of members of the house to conclude the debate which has been in progress during the last few days on the motion regarding the disposition of natural resources, moved by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth). I had thought there might be some expression of opinion as to the desirability of concluding that debate before continuing with the budget debate, and if that request had been made I was prepared to grant it, more particularly since, having regard to the sequence of the order paper, I doubt if it would come up again for some time this session. The motion now appears under public bills and orders and from now on, for the remainder of the session, the notices of motion of private members will be reached before public bills and orders are taken up. I would not say that this motion will not come up again, but there is the probabilty of considerable delay. If hon. members would like to dispose of that motion and also consider the other motion to which reference has been made, I have no objection to amending my resolution in order to permit these two matters to be proceeded with prior to the continuation of the debate on the budget. I think that would suit the convenience of all.

Mr. GUTHRIE: That would be satisfactory to this side of the house.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: It would be highly satisfactory if the motion in my name could be proceeded with; I think it would be more satisfactory to all sections of the house if it could be disposed of and not left until after the debate on the budget.

Mr. SPEAKER: Shall the motion as amended be agreed to?

Motion as amended agreed to.

RULES OF THE HOUSE

PROPOSED REFERENCE OF CERTAIN ESTIMATES TO COMMITTEE—THIRD READING OF BILLS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. JAMES ARTHURS (Parry Sound): Mr. Speaker, the following motion appears on the order paper under date of February 26:

Resuming the adjourned debate on the motion of Mr. Morin (St. Hyacinthe-Rouville) for the concurrence in the first report of the select standing committee on standing orders.

As this is a very important matter relating to the conduct of the business of this house, and as a number of the members are absent during the early hours of the Monday sessions, I would ask that we be assured that this matter will not be brought up on Monday.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I am prepared to give that assurance to the hon. member.

THE BUDGET

ANNUAL FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF HON. J. A. ROBB, MINISTER OF FINANCE

Hon. J. A. ROBB (Minister of Finance) moved:

That Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of ways and means.

Mr. SPEAKER: In accordance with the rules of the house on Fridays the Speaker leaves the chair without question put, but by unanimous consent this motion may be put.

Mr. ROBB: Mr. Speaker, the general optimism prevailing throughout Canada has, during recent months, been so widely reflected and strongly emphasized in provincial legislative assemblies, annual reviews and financial statements that, in presenting this annual budget, little need be said beyond submitting official figures which, when analysed and compared with the records of previous years, will show a steady and continuous reduction of both debt and rates of taxation.

The fiscal year ends, as hon. members know, on the 31st of March, consequently, when on the 16th of February, 1928, the annual budget statement for 1927-28 was presented, it was necessary to make an estimate of the total revenues and expenditures. The public accounts for that year have since been tabled and give in detail the various revenues and expenditures and show that, after transferring certain old and doubtful assets and soldier settlement loan adjustments from active to non-active assets, the actual net debt reduction for the fiscal year 1927-28 was $50,984,137.17.

Fiscal Year 1928-29

Revenues

For the fiscal year 1928-29, which ends on the 31st March, it is estimated that the ordinary revenues will be $450,000,000, which, with special receipts from reparation payments of $3,500,000 and receipts of $1,400,000 from the Imperial government in final adjustment of disputed claims, together with $42,000 miscellaneous receipts, makes total estimated revenues for the year of about $454,942,000. This will be an increase of some $25,000,000 over the revenues for the year 1927-28.

It is estimated that customs revenues will be $185,000,000, an increase of $28,000,000 over the previous year; excise duties $63,400,000, an increase of $6,000,000; income tax $58,500,000, an increase of $1,900,000; interest on investments (including $1,500,000 interest derived from temporary investments of our surplus cash holdings), $11,600,000, an increase of $660,000; and revenues from other sources $16,350,000, an increase of $840,000.

Services which it is estimated will show decreases are: excise taxes, sales, stamps, etc., $81,500,000, a decrease of $8,700,000 from the previous year; delayed business profits tax $450,000, a decrease of $500,000; Post Office $31,000,000, a decrease of $560,000; and miscellaneous services $2,200,000, a decrease of $370,000.

Expenditures

Our ordinary expenditures for the year, Mr. Speaker, are estimated at $355,200,000. This includes payments made under authority of the Maritime Freight Rates Act, 1927, of $2,992,000 to meet the twenty per cent reduction in maritime freight rates, and $4,303,000 to meet deficits on eastern lines. It also includes $1,600,000 by way of special grants to the maritime provinces, $800,000 to be paid to the provinces of British Columbia, Saskatchewan, and Manitoba as the Dominion's share of old age pensions payments, and $2,190,000 to the Federal District Commission under authority of the Federal District Commission Act as amended in 1928.

The capital expenditures are estimated as $24,150,000 and special expenditures at $1,937,000. In addition, loans in cash to the Canadian Government Merchant Marine are estimated at $1,000,000 and to the Quebec Harbour Commission $2,873,000. As these loans are carried as non-active assets the amounts are included as expenditures for the year. The total estimated expenditures will, therefore, be $385,160,000, an increase of $22,332,000 over the expenditures of the previous year.

By deducting the estimated total expenditures of $385,160,000 from the estimated total revenues of $454,942,000, it will be observed that the estimated surplus of revenues over all expenditures for the current fiscal year is $69,782,000.

Mr. Speaker, for the convenience of hon. members, may I, with the consent of the house, place on Hansard a comparative summary showing the actual revenues and expenditures by services for 1927-28 and the corresponding estimated revenues and expenditures for the current fiscal year; also a statement of the estimated ordinary revenues and the estimated expenditures, by services, for the present fiscal year, together with their percentages to the total revenues or expenditures as the case may be.

Reduction in Net Debt 1928-29, $69,782,000

Mr. Speaker, having dealt with the revenues and expenditures, the attention of hon. members is now directed to the net debt of Canada which, at the beginning of the present fiscal year, amounted to $2,296,850,232. At the close of the present fiscal year it is estimated it will be $2,227,068,000 or a reduction during the year of $69,782,000. This reduction is arrived at as follows: To the $94,800,000 surplus of ordinary revenues over ordinary expenditures is added special revenues of $4,942,000, being reparation payments and receipts from the Imperial government in final adjustment of disputed claims, thus giving a total of $99,742,000. There are, however, certain other expenditures which must be deducted to arrive at the net decrease in debt. These are: special expenditures on account of adjustment of war claims and miscellaneous charges against consolidated fund $1,937,000; capital expenditures $24,150,000; loans to Canadian Government Merchant Marine, $1,000,000; loans to Quebec Harbour Commission, $2,873,000, making a total of $29,960,000 which deducted from $99,742,000 will result in a reduction in the net debt for the present fiscal year of $69,782,000.

In connection with the debt reduction which the Dominion is again able to accomplish, may attention be directed, Mr. Speaker, to our record in that regard. An examination of the public accounts shows that for a period of fifty-six years, from confederation to March 31, 1923, the net debt was increased year by year with the exception of the fiscal years 1871, 1882, 1900, 1903, 1904, 1907, 1912 and 1913. From the beginning of the fiscal year 1923-24 to the end of the present fiscal year, the net debt has annually decreased, the total reduction in the six-year period amounting to about $226,708,000, or a yearly average reduction of some $37,700,000.

Public interest naturally centres in what has been accomplished in the post-war period; may a survey, therefore, be made commencing with the fiscal year 1921-22. The net debt that year was increased by approximately $81,000,000. For the purposes of eventually effecting a balanced budget, provision was made in the budget of 1922 for certain additional taxation. The major increase was made in the sales tax where the rates were increased fifty per cent over the then existing tax. There was also an increase in the stamp tax. These taxes have been steadily decreased year by year until to-day they are considerably less than the rates of 1922. Certain other taxes, generally classed as manufacturers taxes, were imposed, the articles affected being automobiles, confectionery, cigars, ale and beer and other beverages; these have since been repealed or removed with the exception of the tax on ale and beer, cigars and part of the automobile tax.

The additional revenues thus received, aided by economies in expenditures, in 1922-23 resulted in a lessened increase of net debt by $50,000,000 as compared with the previous year. The following year the era of surpluses and debt reduction commenced, and, as already stated, the net debt for the six-year period has been reduced $226,708,000. In addition, through reductions in the rates of taxation in force in 1922, the sum of $241,000,000 has been remitted to the taxpayers.

Retirement of Maturing Loans

On the 15th October, 1928, the five-year five per cent refunding loan of 1923, amounting to $53,000,000 matured. Previous to the date of maturity $20,866,400 of these bonds were purchased in the open market, thus effecting a saving in interest of $482,000. The balance of the bonds, amounting to $32,133,600, was redeemed in cash at maturity. The saving in interest resulting from this redemption will be $2,650,000 annually.

Mr. Speaker, as the interest charges on the national debt are large, it is a source of general gratification that each year witnesses a reduction. Seven years ago, on the 1st April, 1922, the annual interest charge on bonds, debentures and treasury bills outstanding in the hands of the public, amounted to $133,482,113. On the 1st April, 1929, we will have an annual interest liability of $117,142,100, a decrease of $16,340,013. This saving in interest includes the redemption of our bonds held by the Imperial government which by agreement in 1923-24 were cancelled and written off against advances made by the Dominion to the Imperial government.

On the 1st August, 1929, the 5½ per cent loan of 1919, amounting to $60,000,000, matures. The government will be in a position to take up this loan out of surplus revenues and thereby effect a further annual interest saving of $3,300,000.

For the information of hon. members, and with their unanimous consent, a statement is now placed on Hansard showing the outstanding funded or dead weight debt in the hands of the public. In doing this it might well be observed that on 31st March, 1914, the dead weight debt in the hands of the public was $303,560,938, while the debt to-day is $2,330,835,086. It means that our annual interest charge of $117,142,100 on the funded debt represents one-quarter of our present yearly revenues. The policy of this administration to provide annually for a substantial reduction of the maturing obligations causes a saving in interest, an improvement in our national financial reputation and paves the way for further taxation reductions towards the pre-war level.

Guaranteed Securities

Certain public services are assisted or allied with our national treasury and a brief survey of our financial commitments in the present fiscal year in connection with the Montreal Harbour Commission and the Canadian National Railway may be made.

Montreal Harbour Commission

During the year the government guaranteed securities of the Montreal Harbour Commissioners, as authorized by chapter 58 of the statutes of 1924, to the amount of $9,000,000. The securities were used in the raising of money needed for the completion of the South Shore bridge.

Canadian National Railway Finances

With the exception of the payments made by the government to cover deficits on the eastern lines, no direct financial assistance was extended to the Canadian National Railway Company apart from certain temporary loans, since repaid. The same situation prevailed as in the previous year, the company's financial requirements being raised in its own name, mainly with the guarantee of the Dominion, but, in part, without such guarantee.

This financial position has been reached gradually. In the early years of government ownership, deficits were met, the lines unified and the system rehabilitated largely at the Dominion's expense. Latterly, however, deficits have been converted into a substantial surplus and the management anticipates that further improvements and extensions, involving new capital, will be self-sustaining.

In the calendar years 1920 to 1927, inclusive, leaving aside interest nominally payable on government advances but not actually paid, the net deficits of the Canadian National Railways amounted to $202,900,000. In the corresponding fiscal years, the Dominion paid in cash to the railways, the sum of $367,700,000. In other words, the government paid all losses and, in addition, supplemented the company's capital by $164,800,000. In earlier years, as hon. members know, the companies were operating as separate units and large advances were made by the government for capital purposes, as well as deficits. Mr. Speaker, with the consent of the house, the record for each of the years 1920 to 1927 will be placed on Hansard.

* Surplus.

Coming now to the railway year recently closed, that is, 1928, the railway officials advise that after paying all charges with the exception of interest due the government, the accounts of the company will show a surplus of about $7,000,000. This sum is, therefore, available to the company for capital purposes. The interest due to the government, amounting to over $32,000,000 for the year, is taken into the books of the company as a liability but not paid. As no credit is taken in the books of the government for this unpaid interest, it may be left aside in estimating the outcome of the year's business when considering the government's and the railway's fiscal relationship.

In December last, the government guaranteed an issue of $35,000,000 Canadian National Railway Company 4½ per cent forty-year bonds which were sold by tender. In addition, the company borrowed $40,000,000 by way of temporary loans from Canadian chartered banks. These obligations were issued to finance expenditures on construction and betterments as approved by parliament, and also to refund maturing securities. The following statement indicates the authorities under which these borrowings were made:

Railway Loan Appropriation, 1927-28	$ 5,900,000 00
Railway Loan Appropriation, 1928-29	32,851,890 40
Branch Lines, special Acts	9,500,000 00
Toronto Terminals Railways Act	4,000,000 00
Canadian Northern Income Charge Act, 1928 (refunding)	22,748,109 60
	$75,000,000 00

The net addition in 1928 to the liabilities of the railways, in the form of outstanding long term and short date debt, amounted to $44,800,000. The balance of the borrowings effected during the year was required to provide for the redemption of maturing securities.

Forecast of Revenues and Expenditures

Before leaving the financial accounts, some reference might be made, Mr. Speaker, to the probable revenues and expenditures for the coming fiscal year.

Without being unduly optimistic, the government feels it is warranted in anticipating that, notwithstanding the reductions to be submitted in this budget, the revenues will meet all expenditure obligations and also provide for the redemption of the loan maturing in August next.

The ordinary revenues for the present fiscal year have already been estimated at $450,000,000. It is hoped the ordinary revenues for the coming fiscal year will be at least equal. After making provision for the statutory charges and maturing obligations, the expenditures have been allocated to such votes as will provide for long deferred repairs and needed improvements to the public properties and services, as are required by a growing and prosperous country.

Mr. Speaker, the monthly publication of trade statistics being available to all, it is unnecessary to place on record any extended statement of the volume of the Dominion's external trade. In the first ten months of the fiscal year the Department of National Revenue reports total exports amounted to $1,187,400,000, which, when the total imports of $1,033,300,000 are subtracted, leaves a favourable trade balance of $154,100,000 for the ten months' period.

The remarkable growth in Canada's external trade may be illustrated by the fact that the favourable balance just quoted is almost equal to the total export trade of this Dominion thirty years ago. It might also be noted that a comparison with the pre-war year of 1913-14 shows the 1927-28 exports of fully manufactured goods exceeded the total exports of raw, semi-manufactured and fully manufactured goods in the year 1914. Canadians may well take pride in the great increase in the per capita producing ability of this Dominion.

Unfortunately, no method has yet been devised whereby the ultimate destination of our exports may be determined. This is particularly true in respect to exports of grains which, on the basis of last year's statistics, represent about one-third of the total exports of the Dominion. Vessels oftentimes obtain clearance for the United Kingdom, but unload in European ports. Thus, while our export records shows a credit to Great Britain, the actual destination is some other country or countries. The trade records of both France and Switzerland illustrate this. The import records of the French government show that in the year ended December 31, 1927, France imported from Canada goods to the value of $28,400,000, but our records for the same period credit an export to France of approximately $11,700,000. The Swiss records credit $17,000,000 as the imports from Canada, while our export records state this Dominion only sold $483,000 of goods to Switzerland.

It is gratifying to note the steady development of inter-empire trade. Canada, the pioneer of the British preference, looks on empire trade as the key-stone of its external trade policy and desires in every way to foster closer trading relations throughout the British commonwealth of nations.

Throughout a period of years parliament has authorized the adoption of various commercial treaties with foreign countries, and it will be recalled that last session agreements with a number of countries were accepted. These were formally brought into effect during the year. Sufficient time has not yet elapsed to justify a survey of these arrangements, but the trade reports show that in the fiscal year 1927-28 Canada sold 165 million dollars worth of goods to countries with which we have enjoyed most-favoured-nation treatment over a period of years. From the same countries our purchases amounted to 103 million dollars. This record is a substantial improvement over the fiscal year 1921-22 when our exports to the same countries had a value of about 82 millions of dollars and our imports of 57 millions of dollars.

In 1921-22 the concern of all Canadians was that our dollar should be brought back to par, that the nation's purchasing power be substantially increased, that no man willing to work be out of employment, that Canadian goods become firmly established on the international trading markets and that Canadians, wherever they might be, would feel that the problems of each section were the mutual concern of all.

Our dollar is no longer at a depreciated valuation. Canadians to-day are prospering. Employment is at a high level. Our basic and manufacturing industries are producing large quantities of goods for home consumption and also for the vast external trade outlets which have been developed. Many new trade channels within the British commonwealth are being opened and, in addition, the ever-increasing number of countries with which Canada exchanges most-favoured-nation treatment assists Canadian business to establish permanently "made-in-Canada" goods on the markets of the world.

These, we believe, are factors which, coupled with good crops, have materially assisted in the expansion of our basic industries, encouraged the enlargement and extension of industries throughout the Dominion, and provided much new business for Canadian transportation systems. Our railways, relieved in some measure of pressing financial problems through the general increase of business, are now in a position to extend services to parts of the Dominion where additional traffic will add to their earnings.

Enjoying such advantages and blessed with a fertile soil and vast resources, Canada has many opportunities for developing a well-balanced diversity of production within the Dominion as well as securing permanent trade channels with other nations. In so far as we have a fiscal problem, our task would appear to be that of readjusting, as necessity arises, our customs tariff schedules to meet new conditions, of removing inequalities where inquiry proves such to exist, of encouraging greater and more economical production of quality products, of assisting in the utilization of domestic resources and, other things being equal, of favouring those countries which favour our products. In applying these principles, availability of supplies, transportation costs, and the proximity of markets are factors which must be considered if all are to benefit and the Dominion prosper.

The constant expansion within Canada brings new problems. We should recognize that this generation has an obligation to build wisely for the greater to-morrow. The expansion of business within Canada has increased local competition and interlocked the interests of many activities. Add the problems arising out of the varying costs of domestic production, sources of supplies, transportation charges and the location of domestic and external markets. Consider as well the demands for tariff changes of various interests, and it may be of interest to note that there are basic industries applying to the Minister of Finance for increases in customs tariff rates, also manufacturing industries applying for reductions in schedules, and we have an appreciation of some of the domestic problems which must be considered in connection with any tariff revision.

The Advisory Board on Tariff and Taxation has actively investigated numerous requests referred for investigation. Many public hearings have taken place, and the spirit of the applicants before the board, the frankness of the discussions, and the impartiality of the commissioners have created a favourable impression among the Canadian people. It is apparent that it is physically impossible for the advisory board to investigate thoroughly in a few months the scores of applications which have been referred to it and that time must elapse before the government can be placed in possession of the fact-findings, especially in those cases where whole tariff schedules are involved.

This Dominion continues to be one of the world leaders in the volume of its external trade; therefore, problems arising in connection with our foreign trade can never be ignored. As the years go by an increasing quantity of our domestic production must necessarily be marketed abroad. It is our desire to trade freely with any and all who are willing to trade with us. What may, or may not, be possible in this particular necessarily depends in some measure on the purchasing power and the fiscal policies of other countries. The policy of this administration is not a high tariff policy; it is a low tariff policy. Its policy is to encourage production at home and the marketing of our excess of production abroad. In applying this policy both domestic and international factors must of necessity be considered.

In accordance with the fiscal policy of the government, the tariff changes to be submitted to-day are designed to reduce taxation and to lessen the costs of production. The changes to be submitted arise out of references which the Advisory Board on Tariff and Taxation has investigated, and are based on its fact-findings. The board is continuing its inquiries, on which substantial progress has already been made, into several larger problems which involve the consideration of whole tariff schedules and the interrelation of many important Canadian industries. While these inquiries are being pursued, opportunity will be afforded for considering the possible effect on trade of changes being proposed in the tariff schedules of other countries, should they be implemented by legislation.

Dealing specifically with the tariff changes proposed in this budget, the resolutions now submitted provide for a revision of certain tariff items of particular interest to the mining industry. In accordance with the traditional policy of assisting the development of our basic industries, the rates of duty on certain machinery and equipment used in the mining industry have been reduced.

There have been various references before the Advisory Board on Tariff and Taxation of interest to those engaged in the fishing industry and it is proposed to assist that industry further by placing certain articles on the free list.

Representatives of the horticultural industry have stated that it would be of assistance if the tariff rates were reduced on certain apparatus for the purposes of bulb sterilization and determining the maturity of fruit. It is proposed to reduce the duty on such apparatus from 20 per cent to 5 per cent under the British preferential tariff, and from 30 per cent to 10 per cent under the general rate.

Resolutions will be submitted for your approval empowering the governor in council, when satisfied that copper bars are being sold in the country of export at a lower price than for export to Canada, to impose, under the general tariff, a duty on copper rods of one-half cent a pound, to equalize such differential as may exist.

Various reductions are submitted affecting items of concern to Canadian industries and are recommended as measures of assistance to producers in order that their cost of production may be reduced.

In all reductions, where applicable, the British preference has been kept in mind.

Mr. Speaker, a comparison of the fiscal reports shows that each year our surplus has increased, although annual reductions are made in the rates of taxation. If the duty of parliament were simply to preserve a balance of revenues over expenditures, the government might either substantially increase the public undertakings, or, abolish some sources of revenue. The national debt, however, cannot be ignored. The annual interest charges on the funded debt amounting to over 117 millions of dollars, are a direct and pressing charge on the revenues of this country. It is a sound and helpful policy to plan to reduce this non-productive outlay and to do that the national debt itself must annually be reduced. The government is, therefore, again budgeting for debt reduction.

At the same time, following the settled policy of this administration, substantial taxation reductions are again proposed. It is the intention of the government, in addition to other reductions, to abolish as quickly as possible those taxes generally known as "nuisance taxes," and which affect the general public.

Early in the war years, under the Special War Revenue Act, a tax of one per cent was imposed on insurance premiums, other than life or marine. This tax has been a heavy burden to certain companies, particularly farmers' mutuals and the hail insurance companies. This tax is now abolished.

Another tax imposed during the war was the transportation tax, a levy on railway and steamship tickets. It is now felt that this tax can be dispensed with and, effective May 1, it is abolished.

Allied with the transportation tax is the three cent tax on telegrams and cables. This tax was also imposed during the war years. It is another of the nuisance taxes which the government feels our revenues can do without, therefore, it is proposed to abolish it.

The major reduction will be in the sales tax. This year a reduction of one-third of the tax is proposed. The reduction involves a large loss of revenue, but the tax is burdensome and its gradual disappearance meets with general commendation.

For many years there has been a tax imposed on the sale and transfer of shares of stocks. Instead of a flat rate, it is proposed to classify the tax in four divisions on a graduated scale, ranging from one cent to four cents per share, regardless of par values. The change will simplify the collecting of the tax and at the same time will ensure that the government receives a more equitable share of the proceeds resulting from the present-day stock market transactions.

The taxation changes just submitted, on the basis of this year's estimated revenues, represent an estimated loss of revenue of approximately $25,000,000.

The past fifteen years have witnessed the dislocation of many international structures and the financial stability of many countries is not now measured by the possible producing capacity of the citizens, but by the degree of success with which these national governments are able to meet the demands made upon them. Sometimes inability to do so has interfered with general credit and hampered industrial and national expansion.

Happily Canada is not suffering from such a blight. For six successive years the rigid application of a policy of spending less than was collected has made it possible for every activity of the Dominion, including all capital expenditures, to be paid out of current revenues and, in addition, to reduce the national debt. This fiscal record has not only enhanced the international credit of the Dominion, but has also strengthened confidence in our domestic credit markets, thus smoothing the way for the provinces and private enterprises. A healthy business expansion, the government feels, is of the greatest importance to Canada.

In drafting the fiscal program for the coming fiscal year, the government has sought to err on the side of caution. The lightening of the burden of taxation is, admittedly, a sane policy, and to that program this government remains committed. Previous taxation reductions have stimulated business and simplified public financing and it is hoped the experience will again be repeated, but I frankly state that, while the government is prepared to encourage in every way the national progress of Canada, the administration will refuse to support any extravagance in the spending of the taxpayers' money. To this policy we again solicit the support of hon. members in order that at the end of another year it may again be found that, continuing to live within the public income, Canada is able to retire maturing obligations and also to make still further reductions in taxation.

I beg to give notice that when the house resolves itself into committee, I shall move the following resolutions:

1. Resolved, that it is expedient to amend Schedule A to The Customs Tariff, being chapter forty-four of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1927, as amended by chapter seventeen

TECHNICAL EDUCATION ACT

The house resumed from February 22 consideration in committee of Bill No. 34, to amend the Technical Education Act.—Mr. Heenan.—Mr. Johnston in the chair.

On section 1—Disposition of unexpended balances.

Mr. STEVENS: The minister was going to tell us what balances were still unused by the various provinces. Will he give that information now?

Mr. HEENAN: The lapsed and unexpended balances together in the several provinces are:

Prince Edward Island	$133,870 01
Nova Scotia	381,840 51
New Brunswick	119,510 07
Quebec	498,193 15
Manitoba	537,402 19
Saskatchewan	705,021 80
Alberta	73,853 03
British Columbia	153,420 78

Ontario has received her full proportion.

Mr. MANION: How were the original amounts determined—by population?

Mr. HEENAN: By population.

Mr. STEVENS: Having had an opportunity to think the matter over, is the minister prepared to make any statement as to the renewal of these grants for a further period of ten years? I should like the minister to be vocal instead of shaking his head, because I want Hansard to get his answer.

Mr. HEENAN: The principle embodied in this bill represents the thought and policy of the government.

Mr. MANION: Is this one of the "unnecessary extravagances" to which the Minister of Finance referred a few minutes ago?

Mr. HEENAN: You will have to ask the Minister of Finance.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: It is a luxury, not an extravagance.

Mr. MANION: If the house were permitted to vote on the question, without restriction or discipline of any kind, I think the unanimous opinion would be that this, instead of being an extravagance, is a necessary expenditure. I think some of the other unnecesary extravagances which according to the minister have been eliminated might well be replaced by a real expenditure on technical education which is so necessary to the advancement of Ontario and the other provinces of this Dominion.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Will the minister tell us if the three western provinces have made any request that the time for payment of these grants be extended? Are they going into the work of technical education with a view to earning these grants?

Mr. HEENAN: The only request I have had was from Manitoba, and they asked us to extend the act in its present form.

Mr. GUTHRIE: What about Alberta and Saskatchewan; has the minister had any request from either of those provinces?

Mr. HEENAN: No; not that I know of.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Any discussion or correspondence with them?

Mr. HEENAN: I do not think so.

Mr. ADSHEAD: The province of Alberta has about $75,000 coming to it yet. Is that amount for the next five years?

Mr. HEENAN: The amount is $73,853.

Mr. ADSHEAD: For the next five years?

Mr. HEENAN: Yes.

Section agreed to.

Bill reported.

Mr. HEENAN moved the third reading of the bill.

Mr. SPEAKER: When shall said bill be read the third time?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Now.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Next sitting.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The bill has not been amended, so there is no reason why it should not be read now.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

MILITIA PENSION ACT AMENDMENT

The house resumed from February 22 consideration in committee of Bill No. 33, to amend the Militia Pension Act—Hon. Mr. Ralston—Mr. Johnston in the chair.

On section 1—Computation of pension on compulsory retirement.

Mr. CLARK: I understood the minister to say that this period coincided with that in the Civil Service Act, but I think that is an error, because the civil service period is five years.

Mr. RALSTON: My hon. friend was good enough to point that out to me the other night. It is true that the period does not coincide with the Civil Service Act but the principle is the same; that is, instead of a man being pensioned or superannuated on the basis of his salary at the time of discharge or retirement he is pensioned on an average rate of pay. Under the old retirement act the period was five years and I think under the present act it is ten years. I am glad my hon. friend directed my attention to this point. I understood the period was the same but I have been instructed that what was told me was that the principle was the same.

Mr. CLARK: Why is the three-year period adopted instead of the period contained in the Civil Service Act?

Mr. RALSTON: The reason is that this is the period which always has been in the act, as I understand it, for non-commissioned officers and men. The idea is to put officers on the same basis as non-commissioned officers and men with regard to the computation of their pensions.

Sections 2 to 5 inclusive agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

AGREEMENT FOR THE PURCHASE OF ALBERTA RAILWAYS

Hon. CHARLES A. DUNNING (Minister of Railways and Canals) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following proposed resolution:

That it is expedient—

1. To ratify and confirm the agreement dated the 6th day of February, 1929, between His Majesty the King in the right of the province of Alberta and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company and the Canadian National Railway Company, for the purchase of the undertakings of the Edmonton, Dunvegan and British Columbia Railway Company, the Central Canada Railway Company, the Central Canada

Express Company, the Alberta Great Waterways Company, and of the province in respect thereof and also in respect of the Pembina Railway Company.

2. To incorporate the Northern Alberta Railways Company, in which are to be vested the said jointly acquired railways.

3. To authorize the governor in council to guarantee the principal and interest of the securities to be issued by the Canadian National Railway Company, to an amount or amounts fixed from time to time by the governor in council, for the payment of one-half the purchase price and one-half of the obligations assumed under the said agreement.

Mr. E. J. GARLAND (Bow River): Before the motion is agreed to I would like to ask the minister if he is prepared to make a statement on this resolution now, or if he prefers to wait until we go into committee.

Mr. DUNNING: I was going to ask the house, for the sake of convenience with respect to questions which will be naturally asked, to permit me to make my statement in committee, when I think I will have all the information required.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Mr. DUNNING: The object of the bill which will be based upon this resolution is to authorize the Canadian National Railway Company and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company jointly to acquire the undertakings of the Edmonton, Dunvegan and British Columbia Railway Company, the Alberta Great Waterways Company, the Central Canada Railway Company and the Central Canada Express Company. It will authorize the acquisition of the capital stock of these companies, and the assumption of the undertakings of the crown in the right of the province of Alberta in respect to these railways and also in respect to the Pembina Railway Company. The bill will provide for the incorporation of the Northern Alberta Railways Company, in which are to be vested the jointly acquired railways. It will also ratify and confirm the agreement between the Canadian Pacific Railway Company and the Canadian National Railway Company regarding the joint acquisition and control by the Northern Alberta Railways Company. The basis upon which these lines have been acquired from the government of Alberta involves the assumption of obligations by the two railways aggregating approximately $26,000,000, in addition to the amount required to construct certain lines already under construction or to be constructed. The obligations to be assumed will be as follows:

[Mr. Dunning.]

Cash payment of $15,580,000 in the following instalments:

1. $5,000,000 on June 1, 1929, if the delivery of the undertaking has been made on or before that date.
2. $5,000,000 on June 1, 1933.
3. $5,580,000 on June 1, 1939.
4. Interest on the deferred instalments on the 1st day of June in each year at the rate of 4 per cent per annum.

The new company will assume certain outstanding mortgages as follows:

$3,000,000 (£1,438,356) first mortgage 4 per cent debenture stock of the Edmonton, Dunvegan and British Columbia Railway Company, due December 16, 1942; $2,420,000 first mortgage 4½ per cent bonds of the same company, due October 22, 1944.

The new company will assume the obligation to complete the construction of extensions of existing railways from Wembley and from Whitelaw to the Waterhole district.

Mr. KENNEDY: That is already built.

Mr. DUNNING: The company will assume the obligation to pay to the province the cost of the extensions just mentioned, and the portion of the cost incurred by the province up to the date of the delivery of the line. The new company undertakes to construct and put into operation within five years not less than sixty miles of additional branch line.

The properties transferred by the government of Alberta will be subject to $7,400,000 first mortgage 5 per cent debentures on the Alberta Great Waterways Company, due January 1, 1959, the interest and principal of which the province undertakes to assume. An agreement has been entered into between the two railway companies with respect to the incorporation of this new company whereby the Canadian National and the Canadian Pacific each are to be liable for one-half of the purchase price and one-half of the obligations. That is, the Northern Alberta Railways Company, which is to be formed and which will be incorporated under the bill to acquire, maintain and operate these properties, will have its capital equally supplied by the Canadian Pacific and the Canadian National Railways, and each company is to be entitled to appoint one-half of the directors. The agreement, which will be a schedule to the bill ,will also provide the basis upon which the lines to be acquired are to be operated in relation to the systems of each of the joint purchasers.

That is all the information I desire to present at this stage, Mr. Chairman, except to indicate that following the introduction of the bill and its second reading I intend to ask the house to send this bill to the railway committee in order that the officers of both roads may be there and give any information and any particulars regarding the agreement between them bearing on the acquisition and operation of the properties. As I say, the agreement will be a schedule to the bill itself and will be available for study by the members of the committee and members of the house between the present time and the time when the bill will be considered in the committee.

Mr. GUTHRIE: To what extent will the Canadian National be obligated, not only with respect to the purchase but with respect to the proposed extensions?

Mr. DUNNING: I mentioned the figure of $26,000,000.

Mr. GUTHRIE: It would be $13,000,000 of that?

Mr. DUNNING: It would be half of that. I used an approximate figure because there will be adjustments between the province and the newly formed company with reference to lines still under construction by the province of Alberta. The Canadian National will also be obligated within five years for one-half of the cost of the sixty miles of branch lines which is provided for in the agreement with the province of Alberta.

Mr. GUTHRIE: What will that cost be?

Mr. DUNNING: I will have to figure that out.

Mr. KENNEDY: As I understand this resolution the Northern Alberta Railways Company will be a subsidiary of both the Canadian National and the Canadian Pacific and any new commitments or extensions required in the nature of branch lines, or a Peace River outlet, will require the sanction of the Canadian Pacific, the Canadian National and the Dominion government. This company would be only an agent for all concerned, and any new capital expenditures would require the cooperation of the two railway companies and the Dominion government.

Mr. DUNNING: It is only natural to assume that this organization in proposing new commitments for itself will decide whether it shall promote them itself. Now, what is itself? Itself is, as the hon. member indicates, a board of directors consisting of one-half Canadian National appointees and one-half Canadian Pacific appointees. This parliament will have to be consulted regarding commitments which involve the assumption of obligation by the Canadian National Railways' half of that board, as it is consulted and must be consulted in connection with the assumption of new obligations by the Canadian National Railway Company.

Mr. CHAPLIN: What would happen in the event of a deadlock?

Mr. KENNEDY: You could not do anything.

Mr. DUNNING: I think the hon. member (Mr. Chaplin) is capable of estimating what would happen in that regard.

Mr. CHAPLIN: My experience in matters of that kind has been that there is seldom an even board of directors: there is always someone who has the say. I want to know who is going to be the deciding factor in this case.

Mr. DUNNING: The arrangement proposed and agreed to by the government of Alberta, and I believe by the legislature of Alberta, and the two companies involves an absolutely even obligation, an even responsibility and an even control.

Mr. IRVINE: Can the minister give some good reason why the Canadian National did not undertake the purchase of these lines itself?

Mr. DUNNING: Many unfair statements have been made in that connection to the detriment of the Canadian National management and I would very much prefer it if my hon. friend who, I know, wants to be fair in the matter, would wait until Sir Henry Thornton and the railway management are before the railway committee in connection with the matter, and let them answer for themselves. I can assure my hon. friends opposite that the record of the Canadian National in connection with the whole matter of this negotiation is one of which they have no reason to be ashamed. I can only give this assurance at this time; I would much prefer that the management answer for themselves in connection with the matter.

Mr. SPENCER: In regard to the joint board of directors that will be appointed from the Canadian National Railways and the Canadian Pacific Railways, is there any arrangement as to which company will have the chairmanship of the board?

Mr. DUNNING: I do not think that is covered in the agreement. It may involve the answer to the question propounded by my hon. friend from Lincoln. That inquiry might very well be pursued when the authors of the agreement are before us and explaining the details of it.

Mr. CLARK: As the matter now stands, can either one of these railway companies hold up development which the other railway may desire, which the province of Alberta may desire and which even the public generally may desire?

Mr. DUNNING: A hypothetical question like that is difficult to answer from the terms of a legal agreement. The reason why I was delaying for a moment was because I was looking over the agreement in order to find something which might touch directly my hon. friend's question. Quite frankly, I cannot conceive of a situation in which one of the parties to the agreement, backed by public opinion, desires to have certain development of the jointly owned property, to which development the other party can or would impose insuperable objections. Both of these great public service corporations are and must be amenable to public opinion, particularly as one of them is in cooperation with public opinion, as was indicated by the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard. I do not think we can imagine a situation arising in which the other would conduct a hold-up.

Mr. CLARK: It is obvious that if there is an equal division of directors on the board, one or the other may legally hold the matter up. We know as a matter of fact that over a long period of years the management of one or possibly both of these organizations was distinctly opposed to railway development in the Peace River district. True, they both appear to have altered their attitude at the moment. One has entered into an agreement and the other is now joining with it. But it seems to me a most unsatisfactory arrangement if the Pacific coast and the Peace River district generally must depend upon an equally divided board of directors for an outlet which we at least in the western country consider an essential to the development of that portion of Canada. That particular area presents an opportunity for colonization which is not presented in any other part of the country, and yet either the Canadian Pacific Railway or the Canadian National organization individually can hold up that development.

Mr. DUNNING: No.

Mr. CLARK: It certainly can if the management of this is to be left to an equally divided board.

[Mr. Dunning.]

Mr. DUNNING: Will my hon. friend permit me? He is under a misapprehension.

Mr. CLARK: I hope I am.

Mr. DUNNING: With respect to extensions to the Pacific coast I am aware of nothing which would prevent either the Canadian National or the Canadian Pacific, whichever one of them desires to do so, from building a line which would be owned by itself from a point on this line to any other point on the west coast.

Mr. CLARK: They would have to come before parliament for their charter just as both companies are before parliament this year.

Mr. DUNNING: What bearing has that on the point?

Mr. CLARK: Just this, that it makes it very much more difficult, when these two bodies come before a parliamentary committee and represent that they have assumed a big financial obligation in taking over the Edmonton and Dunvegan, for parliament to come to a decision. Parliament will naturally hesitate to issue a charter to one or the other when the two have joined together in connection with the Edmonton and Dunvegan. We will all naturally be inclined to give that organization an opportunity of extending to the coast north, west or in any other direction that may be advisable, and delay will result unless an independent director is put on the board so as to enable it to make a decision which will be binding on both railways. It will be unsatisfactory if the matter is left to an equal number from each of the organizations.

Mr. DUNNING: What does my hon. friend suggest?

Mr. CLARK: At the moment I must confess I have not had an opportunity of considering the matter as the minister has, but if I had had an opportunity of considering it, I would certainly undertake to make a suggestion. I do not propose to make one offhand.

Mr. DUNNING: I asked the question not with the idea of embarrassing my friend, but because I have been compelled to give consideration to the matter, and because, quite frankly, I cannot see a way out of that particular difficulty save that of the circumstances of the case itself. My hon. friend means that if one of the railways owning the Northern Alberta railway desires to build a line and the other one does not, that prevents the joint undertaking from constructing it. But it does not prevent the one which desires the construction from proceeding on its own account. That is the position.

Mr. LADNER: Supposing one of these lines entered into an arrangement in regard to the construction of a line south from the Peace river to connect, let us say, with the Pacific Great Eastern on its way south to Vancouver. Under the arrangements as now existing between these two great companies with respect to the Edmonton and Dunvegan, has the company which would undertake such a southern projection of its line the right of operating its cars over the Edmonton and Dunvegan and carrying on its business excepting with the consent of the joint board, or does the agreement give them power to have the right of way, or is there some way in which they could be protected apart from the Board of Railway Commissioners?

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend, of course can understand the difficulty I am under in answering these questions by means of chasing through an agreement which is not yet in his hands, but which will be in his hands the moment the financial resolution passes and the bill is introduced. I suggest to my hon. friends, particularly those who are lawyers, the desirability of studying the agreement which is part of the bill itself, in order, let me say quite frankly, to help me in dealing with the matter instead of, in anticipation of the bill being in the hands of members of the commttee, asking me questions relating to an agreement, which questions it is very difficult under the circumstances for me to reply to intelligently.

Mr. LUCHKOVICH: Just a few moments ago I heard the Minister of Railways make some remarks which conveyed to me the idea that public opinion was the factor in railway matters. From my experience in railway matters I have come to the conclusion that the public are ignored.

Mr. DUNNING: The hon. member has not had much experience before the parliamentary railway committee. The railway committee of this parliament, no matter which government is in office, does give painstaking attention to the public interest, and the arguments made by members of that committee. no matter on which side of the house they sit, do, I believe, reflect the opinion of the members of this house in the public interest so far as railway extensions are concerned.

Mr. CLARK: But the minister overlooks that these bills that go before the railway committee are initiated by the railway companies, and not by the public. Public opinion has nothing to do with the initiation of these bills.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend asked me a question relating to the attitude of this parliament towards the public interest in connection with railway construction.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): No. The point raised by my hon. friend from Vegreville was that in his experience he had not found that the railways paid any particular attention to the public interest. My own experience has been precisely that, especially in connection with the Canadian Pacific. I am glad to say that we are getting a lot of the difficulties ironed out now, and they are going ahead with construction work that we have been waiting for, in one case, for fifteen years, during which time a perpetual agitation for construction has been sustained. Fortunately we are now getting the needed construction, but it took fifteen years to do it.

There is just one other point. The Minister of Railways a few moments ago said that he could not contemplate a situation where a board of directors of this character, dual in make-up, would, having in their minds the public need, divide equally on a question of important public interest. Was not that what the minister intimated?

Mr. DUNNING: No. I know my hon. friend's misunderstanding is unintentional, and I am not complaining of it—

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Perhaps the minister would repeat what he said, so that I can get quite clearly what he had in mind.

Mr. DUNNING: What I mean is this: I cannot conceive of a situation where one of the owners, the Canadian Pacific or the Canadian National, desiring a jointly owned property to follow a certain course of development, and backed by public opinion, would be successfully held up by the other party.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The minister will not be at all surprised, I think, as a result even of his own experience, to know that in connection with the joint ownership of a proposed branch line, just that very thing occurred. For years the joint section of the Rosedale southeasterly branch was held up by one or the other party, and in every case each accused the other of holding it up. I took the matter up with the Hon

George P. Graham when he was Minister of Railways, and we had some pretty heated discussions of the matter in this house. There was a specific instance in which one or other of the parties—I am not levelling any charge against either—deliberately prevented the construction of that line, or possibly both were not anxious for its construction. At any rate, somebody held it up, contrary to the public interest and public demand.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend will permit me to say that my remarks were based upon this particular set of circumstances. The area to be dealt with is large and important. It is not similar at all to a small joint operation covering only a comparatively few miles, but has to do with the operation of a very considerable mileage of railway, serving a very large portion of northern Alberta; in fact, serving practically all of Alberta north of the city of Edmonton, with the exception of some lines that run through the southern part of that area, and I cannot conceive that in such a case the danger which is pointed out is likely to be acute. But I can say this: I am prepared to put before the two railway companies any suggestion which may come from members of this committee or of this house, after consideration, designed to overcome the possibility which apparently my hon. friends fear. I would suggest again that it is possible to discuss this matter with the officers of both companies concerned in the railway committee, where the matter could be threshed out thoroughly, and any remedy that was thought necessary perhaps be devised. I gather that there is no serious opposition in this committee to the joint acquisition proposal, but there is this criticism, properly and fairly made, that joint and equal ownership has in it obviously the theoretical possibility, at all events, of a deadlock.

Mr. LADNER: The practical possibility.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend thinks it is a practical possibility. There I rather part company with him, because of the largeness of the issues which would be involved. We say sometimes that the British constitution is a most impractical thing, that theoretically it is unsound, but, nevertheless, it works partly beause of the largeness of the issues involved, and mainly because of the common sense of the people who are applying it. Now one of the parties to this undertaking will be our nationally-owned railway system, and the other will be the Canadian Pacific Railway, both of them prominent in the public eye, and constantly coming before this parliament in connection with various features of their own undertakings, and under those circumstances I cannot conceive of any large major difficulty arising in which one of the parties, backed by public opinion, and taking one view, would be blocked by the other party. The issues are too large and too important for that danger to be as real as my hon. friends think. That is just my opinion. But in spite of that opinion, if hon. members, after a study of the agreement which they will be able to make when they get the bill in their hands, have any practical suggestions to offer whereby that difficulty could be overcome, I shall be very glad to give consideration to them.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Does the dual ownership of the lines, and what is contingent upon that ownership, extend into the field of future development also; in other words, will this board of directors really have anything to do with extensions? Is that provided for?

Mr. DUNNING: Again I have to chase through page after page of the bill, which my hon. friend will have in his own hands at a later stage, and I wonder if he would not mind dealing with that question when he has a copy of the bill in his hands.

Mr. LADNER: Referring to the point raised by the minister a moment ago, that the issues are too large for any conflict to exist, I would ask him to consider this feature: Supposing in this joint arrangement, you had a board equally divided. For the sake of argument let us assume that the Canadian Pacific decided to build a short cut from the Peace River district to the coast, to Stewart, Prince Rupert, or Vancouver—

Mr. DUNNING: Do not forget Prince Rupert. If you are going to ask hypothetical questions, you might as well cover the whole ground.

Mr. LADNER: I have in mind a southern outlet for the Canadian Pacific. The Canadian National have a direct outlet from Edmonton over their regular line to the coast, but the Canadian Pacific, to get out of the Peace River district must go to Edmonton, and then to Calgary and across the Rockies, so from a railroad point of view it is only natural that the Canadian Pacific should be desirous of building from the Peace River district south, rather than the Canadian National. The point is this: Suppose the Canadian Pacific decided to build such a road. It would be necessary to have some working arrangement with the Edmonton and Dunvegan railway, controlled by the joint board of directors, because the trains would have to go eastward as well as westward.

The point would be reached where that board might very easily arrive at a deadlock with respect to the terms under which the Canadian Pacific Railway would be allowed to operate their connections with the southern road. That is why I contend the arrangement with respect to this particular line is of vital effect to British Columbia to the south, and were the joint board to be equally divided it would not be a good business arrangement. I do not offer this as a final suggestion, but it seems to me, in view of the public interest involved, that the Minister of Railways might have something to say in such a contingency, and in that way protect the interests of the public against the disadvantages that might result from a conflict between the two railway systems through this joint board.

Mr. BRADY: Mr. Chairman, I wish to ask the hon. minister if the proposed agreement between the two railway companies entered into in connection with the Edmonton, Dunvegan and British Columbia Railway will interfere with the work already done by way of survey and reconnaissances in seeking an outlet from the Peace River to the Pacific coast. Will that work be continued? The answer is a vital one; for the question of a Peace River outlet has been a live question in the house since 1925.

Mr. DUNNING: I am of opinion—and of course my hon. friend will understand that it can only be an opinion—that this arrangement will distinctly facilitate rather than hinder that development. While listening to the questions raised by hon. members I have been trying to look through the agreement. As I said before, I did not anticipate having to discuss the agreement at this stage; indeed, it is very doubtful if we are in order in doing so. I would call attention to this last clause in the agreement:

> Disputes arising out of this agreement in respect of any matter within the jurisdiction of the Board of Railway Commissioners for Canada shall be referred to the board. Disputes under clauses 4, 5, 6, 7, 8 and 9 of this agreement, not within the board's jurisdiction, shall be submitted to two arbitrators.
> The parties agree to co-operate with fairness and candor towards each other and give effect to this agreement in the most liberal and reasonable manner, to the intent that each of them shall receive a fair and equal share of the benefits of the joint undertaking, subject to the provisions of clause 4 hereof.

Mr. SPENCER: Will the minister give us clause 4?

Mr. DUNNING: This is clause 4:

> The operations of the new company shall always be conducted with due regard to economy, consistent with good railway practice, and having regard to the future requirements of the property and the necessities of the territory to be served.

Mr. KENNEDY: I do not think we can get very far discussing the agreement piecemeal at this stage. This bill proposes to do something that I understand is a new departure in the Dominion, taking into consideration the problem of the development of the Peace River country. It seems to me a better course to pursue would be to get the bill with the agreement before the committee and then we shall have a chance to discuss every phase of the matter.

Mr. DUNNING: Absolutely.

Mr. KENNEDY: The outlet and everything else. I think we ought to let this bill go through and get it in such shape that we can obtain full information with the agreement before us.

Mr. DUNNING: I am sure my hon. friend would be the last to charge me with attempting to stifle full discussion in the committee. I think he will agree that usually I try to afford as full facilities as possible. But as to whether a discussion of this bill can bring about any determination of the outlet question—if my hon. friend desires to have the house on this bill determine the routes and so forth with respect to outlets—then I cannot guarantee it. But I am sure I cannot prevent him from discussing the subject.

Mr. KENNEDY: But as the agreement might bear on the working out of the problem.

Mr. DUNNING: Quite.

Mr. CLARK: Mr. Chairman, before the resolution passes I should like to urge the minister to request these railway companies to come before the committee with a concrete suggestion to make it possible to determine finally matters of policy, even though the respective members of the two companies be equally divided, one on one side, one on the other. There must be some way, by agreement or otherwise, of placing on the board a sufficient number of directors to insure a majority on matters of policy. I cannot urge too strongly this fact. Here are practically the two greatest institutions in this country; they are rivals; there are bound to be differences of opinion between them, and the bigger the matter involved probably the more decided will be the differences of opinion. We have had enough experience to realize that a small difference of opinion between two great institutions such as these may delay a legitimate project for years and years. So far as the pressure of public opinion is concerned, may I point out that the initiation of any project rests with the boards of directors of these two companies. Where do we find the public opinion which will force these organizations to proceed with a new development? Any public opinion in the Peace River district, or in British Columbia for that matter, is negligible. Public opinion in Canada is largely in the central portions and the middle west where the population exists; that is where there is pressure of public opinion. The pressure of such public opinion as exists in the Peace River country would never be heard here, and the people there could send down all the delegations they liked if there was a difference between the two railway companies without producing any effect. I ask the minister to put it clearly before the two railway companies and to ask them to come before the railway committee with some solution of this difficulty, for I see it is a real difficulty. It should be possible to have a board of directors which can decide a matter of policy one way or the other, and not leave it up in the air simply because there is an equal division of opinion between the directors of the two institutions.

Mr. DUNNING: I shall be glad, Mr. Chairman, to bring this discussion to the attention of the presidents of both railway companies. Of course, we have proceeded somewhat in the dark through not having the terms of the agreement before the members of the committee. I might point out in fairness to my hon. friend from Vancouver-Burrard (Mr. Clark), that in connection with most matters of policy which might be the cause of such a division as he indicates the agreement itself decides. The one matter which of course cannot be decided finally by an agreement relates to extensions—

Mr. CLARK: That is the big thing.

Mr. DUNNING: Wait a moment. This is definitely set out in the bill itself. As to certain branch lines and the building within five years of a further sixty miles, those points are covered in the agreement. So far as the operation of the property is concerned, I believe the agreement is devised in such a manner as to overcome any possibility of difficulty through differences of opinion on matters of policy. With respect to extension, may I point out again that when I spoke of public opinion a little while ago I had in mind public opinion in cooperation with one of the parties to the agreement. I admit freely, in connection with any proposal to extend the Northern Alberta Railway Company's undertaking, that if both the owners do not wish to initiate it, it cannot very well be initiated.

Mr. LADNER: Suppose one of them does.

Mr. DUNNING: Suppose one of them does, and assuming it is the major undertaking which my hon. friends all have in their minds —although they have in their minds very different major undertakings and probably would not agree among themselves as to which particular major undertaking would be the best—

Mr. LADNER: Surely they would; you are wrong there.

Mr. DUNNING: I am glad to hear it. If there is absolute unanimity—and is my hon. friend stating that there is absolute unanimity as to where a western outlet from the Peace river should go, and by what route it should go through—will he say—

Mr. LADNER: Pretty well.

Mr. DUNNING: Well, he is a courageous man. I am sure the hon. member for Peace River—

Mr. KENNEDY: Which member is it?

Mr. DUNNING: Exactly; and that is the best answer that can be given. Now the point I was at is this: that with respect to a major undertaking which would relate itself to the lines of this company, if one of the joint owners desires to go ahead with it, and has public opinion with it, I see no reason why it cannot be dealt with as an undertaking of the one desiring it instead of an undertaking of the joint company.

Mr. LADNER: But if the two companies did not cooperate it would not be possible, and how would public opinion be expressed?

Mr. DUNNING: Again I must say that lawyers have been looking into these considerations. If my hon. friend will only wait until he gets the agreement before him he will be able to answer that question for himself, and any further doubt he has he can put before the officers of the companies responsible for the drafting of the agreement.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in. Mr. Dunning thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 71, to incorporate the Northern Alberta Railways Company, and respecting the Canadian National Railway Company and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

Mr. SPEAKER: When shall said bill be read the second time?

Mr. DUNNING: Now.

Mr. FRASER: Where are we going to discuss the general principles of the bill if the second reading takes place now?

Mr. DUNNING: As regards the general principle that such a company should be incorporated and owned in the manner set out in the resolution, that principle is being decided now. I am in the judgment of other hon. members, but I think that is the position. So far as discussion is concerned, and the possibility of amendment, I undertake that there shall be the freest opportunity before the railway committee and again when the bill returns here in committee of the whole. I gave that undertaking to my hon. friend from Peace River (Mr. Kennedy). I move that the bill be read the second time.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the select standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

QUEBEC, MONTREAL AND SOUTHERN RAILWAY

Hon. CHARLES A. DUNNING (Minister of Railways and Canals) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following proposed resolution:

Resolved, that it is expedient to provide that the Canadian National Railway Company may purchase the undertaking and railway of the Quebec, Montreal and Southern Railway Company for $6,000,000; and that the governor in council may guarantee the principal and interest of securities to be issued for this purpose by the Canadian National Railway Company, not exceeding in aggregate face value such amount as the governor in council may consider sufficient to raise the said sum.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Mr. DUNNING: The Quebec, Montreal and Southern railway extends from a junction with the Canadian National railways at St. Lambert, opposite the city of Montreal, easterly along the south shore of the St. Lawrence river through the city of Sorel and through Yamaska to Fortierville, a distance of 110 miles, with a branch extending in a southerly direction from Bellevue junction, which is five miles southeast of Sorel, to a connection with the Canadian National Railways at Noyan, a distance of 81 miles, passing through St. Hyacinthe and Iberville.

The railway throughout its entire distance passes through a very good farming country and serves St. Lambert, Longueuil, Boucherville, Varennes, Vercheres, Contrecoeur, Sorel, Nicolet, St. Aime, St. Judes, Pierreville, La Baie, St. Hyacinthe, and Iberville.

The population served exclusively by this railway is 85,000, and the total population of the territory served is 217,000, of which 135,000 is served jointly by the Quebec, Montreal and Southern and other railways.

The tonnage handled by this railway amounts to 650,000 tons annually.

The purchase price of this railway is $6,000,000.

The cost of reproduction, less depreciation, of the railway, exclusive of equipment is $4,200,000. The equipment cost of reproduction, less depreciation, is $1,900,000.

Through the purchase of this line the Canadian National Railways will be able to effect economies in the operation of lines on the Levis division to the extent of $150,000 per year, and expect to make use of this low gradient line for heavy freight service between Montreal and Quebec. The Levis division is the third heaviest traffic division on the system, and consideration has been given for some time to the possibility of effecting grade revisions, so as to reduce the grades on the present line between Montreal and Quebec, which are 1 per cent and the Quebec, Montreal and Southern Railway from Montreal to Fortierville will make it possible to obtain a four-tenths of one per cent gradient between Montreal and Quebec through the construction of a twenty mile connection with the existing line from Fortierville.

The Canadian National Railways desire to purchase this line for the reasons indicated, and it is believed to be a very important and good piece of business from the point of view of the operation of the Canadian National system.

Mr. CLARK: What have been the net earnings for a period of five years?

Mr. DUNNING: I have not that information.

Mr. CLARK: That seems to be the vital thing. Is it worth the money? What will it earn?

Mr. DUNNING: I am not supplied with that information, so if necessary I will leave the matter here. I will be quite frank with my hon. friend; I did not expect to get on with these matters this afternoon and I have before me only a broad memorandum instead of the large file of information which I usually bring before the committee. However, I can assure my hon. friend that every feature in connection with this proposal can be examined before the railway committee, as in the case of the previous resolution, and the officers of the railway can be examined also.

Mr. KAISER: When shall we be able to get such information as to how long this railway has been in operation, who are its present owners, and its present earnings and financial position? Is the railway a financial success now?

Mr. DUNNING: I believe so; I do not think there is any doubt about that. The present owners are the Delaware and Hudson Railway Company of the United States. This is a United States line in Canada, as I understand it, a subsidiary of the Delaware and Hudson railway.

Mr. KAISER: How are we to obtain the information for which I have asked?

Mr. DUNNING: I propose to refer the bill to the standing committee on railways and canals, where all the information requested by my hon. friend, together with everything else, will be made available by the officers of the company who are recommending the purchase.

Mr. KAISER: But we are not all members of that committee.

Mr. DUNNING: I will undertake to see that these specific questions are answered, and I am sure also that some member of the committee will bear them in mind.

Mr. SPENCER: Has this particular line been on a paying basis up to the present?

Mr. DUNNING: I cannot give my hon. friend the exact details, but I think there is no doubt about it; my answer would be yes. There is no doubt as to the opinion of the management of the Canadian National railways that they can make this a very important link in the system, particularly from the viewpoint of a saving in operating expenditure. The very important point is the economy in operation of the Levis division, estimated by the officers of the company at $150,000 a year, which will be made possible by the acquisition of this line. There is the further feature that this line represents practically a water grade along the south shore of the St. Lawrence between Montreal and Quebec. A grade of four-tenths of one per cent is obtainable over the whole distance by only twenty miles of new construction, whereas the existing Canadian National grades are one per cent on a division which is the third heaviest loaded on the whole system.

Mr. GARDINER: What is the mileage of this road?

Mr. DUNNING: I gave that a while ago; it is 110 miles with a branch of 81 miles, a total of 191 miles.

Mr. GARDINER: What would be the probable cost of the extra twenty miles necessary to make this effective?

Mr. DUNNING: I think one could say roughly that $40,000 a mile would be a fair estimate of the cost. I cannot guarantee that figure, because I do not know the exact nature of the country.

Mr. BOYS: I believe the minister said a four-tenths grade could be secured. What is the present grade on that twenty mile portion?

Mr. DUNNING: The twenty miles of road are not built. The four-tenths grade applies over the 110 miles which would become Canadian National main line, as against a one per cent grade on the existing Canadian National main line.

Mr. KAISER: Has the minister any information as to the cost of that 20-mile stretch?

Mr. DUNNING: I believe there is no difficulty at all in that district.

Mr. GEARY: Does the minister mean to say that the Canadian National railways operate over 100 miles on a steady grade of one per cent, or is that the governing grade?

Mr. DUNNING: I did not say that. I will read again the exact statement of the company in this regard: "The Levis division is the third heaviest traffic division on the system, and consideration has been given for some time to the possibility of effecting grade revisions so as to reduce the grades on the present line between Montreal and Quebec." It mentions the one per cent grade, but when a railway man uses that term it means that one per cent is the controlling grade on the line, and not necessarily that the whole line is on an up-grade of one per cent.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in. Mr. Dunning thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 72, respecting Canadian National Railways and to authorize the acquisition of the Quebec, Montreal and Southern Railway.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first and second times and referred to the select standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines.

On motion of Mr. Mackenzie King the house adjourned at 5.15 p.m.

Monday, March 4, 1929

The house met at three o'clock.

PARLIAMENTARY RESTAURANT

Hon. J. A. ROBB (Minister of Finance) moved:

That a message be sent to the senate to acquaint their honours that this house has added the name of Mr. MacLaren to act on the part of the House of Commons as a member of the joint committee of both houses on the restaurant.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk).

HOG CHOLERA—ESSEX COUNTY

Mr. GOTT:

1. How many hogs were slaughtered in the recent hog cholera epidemic in Essex county?
2. How many hogs were immunized or treated?
3. What is the policy of the department relative to reimbursement?
4. When is it expected, the vote having been exhausted, that reimbursement of losses will commence?
5. What is the approximate loss to the hog raisers?
6. What is the approximate loss to the country in, (a) salaries; (b) expenses; (c) allowances made to farmers; (d) other allowances or expenditures?

Mr. MOTHERWELL:

1. 6,318.

2. 11,736.

3. In order to prevent the spread of infection hogs which are infected or are suspected of being infected with hog cholera and those which are in actual contact with infected hogs on the same premises are ordered to be slaughtered and the carcasses burned or deeply buried.

The Minister of Agriculture may order compensation to be paid for hogs ordered to be slaughtered.

The hogs are valued by the inspector, the maximum valuation allowed under the Animal Contagious Diseases Act being $50 for a pure bred registered hog and $15 for a grade hog. The compensation payable is two-thirds of the valuation placed upon the hog by the Inspector.

No compensation is payable for hogs which have died and compensation may be withheld if the owner has violated the hog cholera regulations.

The veterinary inspector may at his discretion serum treat and quarantine hogs on infected premises, which have not been in direct contact with diseased hogs, provided they have normal temperatures, and can be fitted for the block within a period of three months.

These hogs may only be removed for slaughter by license and no compensation is paid for them.

4. As soon as further funds are made available.

5. The total of the valuations placed on hogs slaughtered is $67,164. The total amount awarded in compensation is $44,776. Accordingly the loss to the hog raisers on account of animals slaughtered presumably amounts to $22,388.

6. Assuming that the words "loss to the country" mean "cost to the country" the answer is as follows, (a) $5,937; (b) $8,038; (c) $44,776; (d) $7,100.

What share was assumed by the Canadian government in the agreement concluded between Great Britain, Canada and certain provinces in connection with the $5,000,000 to be expended during the period of ten years, and with the object of allowing young immigrants between the ages of 14 and 20 to settle on lands in Canada?
4. What provinces are especially interested in said agreement?
5. What was the per capita cost in cash, assistance or otherwise to the Canadian government for the 8,500 harvesters of 1928?
6. How many of them settled in this country?

Mr. FORKE:

1. The total number of British Juvenile immigrants was 2,070.

2. Approximately $45.

3. Canada's maximum advances in loans under the boys' land settlement scheme are not to exceed $2,000,000 for the ten-year period covered by the agreement.

4. Ontario, Manitoba, New Brunswick and Nova Scotia.

5. No cost to the federal government.

6. Upwards of 2,000.

Mr. DUNNING:

Also a copy of all correspondence passing between the government or any official of the government and the successful tenderers.

BENACADIA POND POSTMASTER

Mr. JOHNSTONE (Cape Breton North-Victoria):

For a copy of all telegrams, correspondence and other documents, in possession of the government, relating to the dismissal of James Smith, postmaster at Benacadia Pond, Cape Breton.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—SPECIAL FREIGHT TARIFF

Mr. PARENT:

For a copy of requests and representations made to the government and to the Canadian National Railways, relative to the city of Quebec sharing with the maritime provinces the special freight tariff rate granted said provinces on the railway line formerly known as the Intercolonial railway.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

Mr. EVANS:

For a copy of the agreement between the Dominion government and the government of Saskatchewan, together with a copy of all letters, telegrams and other documents relating to the installation of The Royal Canadian Mounted Police, to take the place of the Provincial Police of Saskatchewan.

SALE OF LANDS

Mr. CAMPBELL:

For a copy af all letters, telegrams, correspondence, and any other documents in the possession of the government or any department thereof, in connection with the sale of section 26, township 32, range 32, west of the first meridian.

POSTMASTER—SIMCOE, ONTARIO

Mr. STEWART (Leeds):

For a copy of all orders in council, reports, recommendations, correspondence, telegrams, resolutions and other documents on file in any department of the government or the Civil Service Commission, in any way relating to the appointment, cancellation of appointment or dismissal of George E. Whitaker, and the appointment of Charles R. Bowyer to the position of postmaster at Simcoe, Ontario.

PACIFIC GREAT EASTERN RAILWAY EXTENSION

Mr. KENNEDY:

For a copy of all correspondence, telegrams and other documents exchanged between any person or persons and the Department of Railways or any any other department of the government, and between the Canadian National Railways and the British Columbia government, and between the Canadian Pacific Railway and the British Columbia government, and between the Canadian National Railways and the Canadian Pacific Railway, with reference to the survey which will be undertaken jointly by the Canadian National Railway, the Canadian Pacific Railway and the British Columbia government, into the resources of the country which conceivably might be served by any extension of the Pacific Great Eastern Railway.

Mr. DUNNING: I would call the attention of the hon. member to the fact that he is asking for the production of correspondence between the Canadian Pacific Railway and the British Columbia government. I do not think it is within the power of parliament to ask either of these parties to table their correspondence, and I would ask the hon. member to drop those words from his motion and we will gladly produce the rest of the correspondence.

Mr. KENNEDY: That is agreeable to me.

ALBERTA RAILWAYS ACQUISITION

Mr. KENNEDY:

For a copy of all correspondence, telegrams, and other documents exchanged between any person or persons and the Department of Railways and Canals or any other department of the government, and between the Canadian National Railways and the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Alberta government, and between the Canadian National Railways and the Canadian Pacific Railway, with reference to the joint purchase of the Edmonton, Dunvegan and British Columbia Railway, the Pembina Valley Railway, the Central Canada Railway and the Alberta and Great Waterways Railway, in the province of Alberta, since November 1, 1927.

Mr. DUNNING: I urge the same objection to this motion as I did with the previous one, as correspondence between the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Alberta government is being asked for. I would also point out that the date November 1, 1927, overlaps with a previous return, and if the hon. member will withdraw that part of his motion, I will undertake to bring down to the house everything that has not previously been brought down.

Mr. KENNEDY: That is agreeable to me.

BOARD OF GRAIN COMMISSIONERS—DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River):

For a copy of all letters, telegrams, correspondence, and other documents passing between the Board of Grain Commissioners and the Department of Justice, or between the Department of Justice and the Board of Grain Commissioners during the year 1927.

CONFEDERATION BUILDING

Mr. STEVENS:

For a return showing the specifications upon which tenders were called for the new confederation building on Wellington street, Ottawa, together with a copy of the successful tender and a copy of the contract awarded.

RADIO BROADCASTING

On the motion of Mr. Stevens:

For a copy of the agreement made between Canada and the United States or between officials of the Canadian government and officials of the government of the United States regarding radio broadcasting, together with a copy of all notes or correspondence of any kind passing between the Canadian government or any official of the Canadian government and the government of the United States or any official of the government of the United States during the past eighteen months on this subject.

Hon. H. H. STEVENS (Vancouver Centre): This motion was drafted and handed in before the announcement was made that an arrangement had been arrived at between the Canadian government and the government of the United States. I would ask that it be dropped, if the government would be good enough to lay on the table in the usual way a copy of the arrangements between the two authorities. It was not the two governments; it was officials of the governments who came to an understanding.

Hon. J. A. ROBB (Minister of Finance): All my hon. friend requires is a copy of the agreement?

Mr. STEVENS: Yes.

Mr. ROBB: I will direct the attention of the officials to that.

Motion dropped.

DUMPING DUTIES—REFUNDS

Mr. H. J. BARBER (Fraser Valley) moved:

For a return showing a list of all refunds granted during the years 1926, 1927 and 1928 of dumping duties collected by virtue of orders in council passed under section 43 of the Customs Act as applied to the importation of fruits and vegetables.

Hon. W. D. EULER (Minister of National Defence): There would ordinarily be no objection whatever to bringing down this return, were it not for the enormous amount of work involved in its preparation. To obtain the information required by the hon. gentleman would necessitate the examination of about 160,000 claims. Perhaps my hon. friend will be satisfied if I say to him that, according to the recollection of the Commissioner of Customs, no such refunds whatever were made, and under the circumstances he may be content to let the motion drop.

Mr. BARBER: Yes.

Motion dropped.

EXTRA TERRITORIAL LEGISLATION

Mr. E. J. GARLAND (Bow River) moved:

For a copy of all letters, telegrams, correspondence and/or documents of any character passing between the government of Canada and the government of Great Britain or any department thereof, in regard to the following resolutions, which passed both the senate and the house of commons of Canada:—

1. The resolution passed in 1920 which reads as follows: "Any enactment by the parliament of Canada otherwise within the legislative authority of that parliament shall operate and be deemed to have operated extra territorially according to its intention in like manner and to the same extent as if enacted by the parliament of the United Kingdom."

2. The resolution passed in 1924, which reads as follows: "An enactment intra vires of the parliament of Canada if expressed to operate extra territorially shall be deemed to have had that operation in so far as it is a law for or ancillary to the peace, order and good government of Canada."

Hon. J. A. ROBB (Minister of Finance): In the absence of the Prime Minister, may I ask my hon. friend to allow the motion to stand? It may involve the permission of the government of the United Kingdom.

Motion stands.

BRITISH PREFERENCE

Mr. M. N. CAMPBELL (Mackenzie) moved:

For a copy of all orders in council, letters, telegrams, correspondence, and any other documents exchanged between the government of Canada, the British High Commissioner and the British Federation of Industries, dealing with the regulation effective February 1st last and which regulation calls for fifty per cent empire labour and materials in goods entitled to British preferential rates.

Hon. J. A. ROBB (Minister of Finance): The government offer no objection to this resolution, but I must put in the reservation that we should have the consent of the British High Commissioner before tabling the correspondence.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Might I have the papers, then, any correspondence with the British High Commissioner being eliminated. There would be no objection to tabling the correspondence with the British Federation of Industries.

Mr. ROBB: How does my hon. friend know the British Federation of Industries has no objection?

Mr. CAMPBELL: The British Federation of Industries is just a private organization. Surely there is no objection to tabling any correspondence with them.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: It is understood that the motion is carried with the reservation as stated by the Minister of Finance.

Motion agreed to.

OLD AGE PENSIONS—YUKON

On the orders of the day:

Mr. GEORGE BLACK (Yukon): I would like to ask the Minister of Labour a question based on a statement made in the current number of the Canadian Congress Journal, the official magazine of the Trades and Labour Congress of Canada. In a short paragraph dealing with the Old Age Pensions Act, the journal states:

> Under provisions of the act the federal government has extended its application to the Yukon and last month further extended it to the Northwest Territories. This latter action was necessary in order to take care of many early pioneers of that district now forming part of the province of Manitoba which until a few years ago was within the northwest territory. Not having actually resided under the jurisdiction of the Manitoba government for twenty years these men who have done so much for the upbuilding of Canada would otherwise have been denied the payment of their full pensions. Another interesting sidelight to this extension of the old age pension to the Northwest Territories is that, as Eskimos are British subjects, and being citizens of Canada they will be entitled to the receipt of pensions after having passed the age of seventy.

I am not so much interested in the Eskimos and the Northwest Territories, but I should like to ask the minister if it is a fact that the Old Age Pensions Act is now in operation in the Yukon? My information is that it is not and that no pensions have been paid or will be paid there.

Hon. PETER HEENAN (Minister of Labour): The commissioner for the Yukon, before he left Ottawa, signed an agreement with the federal government to put the Old Age Pensions Act into effect in the Yukon, but it has to be ratified by the Yukon council. This has not yet been done.

NATURAL RESOURCES

PROPOSAL THAT DISPOSITION BE EFFECTIVE ONLY ON APPROVAL OF PARLIAMENT

The house resumed from Thursday, February 28, consideration of the motion of Mr. Woodsworth:

> That, in the opinion of this house, no disposition of the natural resources, under the control of the federal government, shall be effective until ratified by parliament.

And on the proposed amendment thereto of Mr. Guthrie:

> That the motion be amended by striking out the words "natural resources" where they occur in said motion and by inserting in lieu thereof the words "water-powers".

Mr. JOHN EVANS (Rosetown): Mr. Speaker, in addition to what I said the other evening, now that development is being carried on all over Canada in regard to water-powers, minerals and oil lands, it is more than ever necessary that the house adopt as a principle the spirit of the resolution. It is only a few years ago since the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario, which at present is furnishing a precedent to the whole world in the matter of power supply at cost, had to purchase those valuable water rights at enormous cost. The plant and water rights at Niagara falls had to be purchased from a private corporation. This was property that had been alienated from the people for a mere trifle. The natural resources such as coal, for example, should never have been allowed to fall into private hands, but should have been developed in the interests of the people. New Zealand furnishes a splendid example in that respect. That country owns and operates several of the mines in New Zealand, and the people there are getting their coal at cost price.

To come back to the principle of the resolution, when I first went to western Canada and settled near Saskatoon, I found that the Dominion government had granted some two million acres of land around what is now the city of Saskatoon to what was known then as the Temperance Colonization Society. I had in consequence to go further back from the railroad than otherwise would have been necessary because all the free homesteads between where I settled and the railway had been taken up. This large tract of land that I speak of was given away practically for a song, and under the agreement which the society had with the government, they had to locate a settler on each section of land within three years. They brought out a good many ne'er-do-wells from Ontario—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. EVANS: It is quite true, Mr. Speaker, that there were still a good many left behind. I believe that most of them who came out there were ministers' sons, but that does not count. At all events, after they had exhausted the little loan which the society was allowed to advance to them, they simply pulled up stakes and went away, and any of us who acquired one of those homesteads had to pay five hundred dollars or so, or go further out.

Even after 1896 the same practice continued, but on a much larger scale. This gave rise to suspicion, and a great many of our government heads at that time were brought under suspicion. The Saskatchewan Valley Land Company was a case in point where a tract of land comprising almost as much as an empire was given away. They only paid one dollar per acre for the land, and they were also given the privilege of selling at an enhanced price by giving the settler a free homestead alongside—a privilege which they got from the federal government. Immense areas were disposed of in that way.

When confederation was first mooted, the railway question was the chief problem of government. Indeed, sir, it seems to be still a thorny problem for this government, although our financial ability to cope with it is much greater now than it was then. One of the conditions of the provinces uniting was that a transcontinental railway should be built, and I want to point out that the burden of the construction of this great highway fell particularly on western Canada. The government gave away land that amounted in value, I believe, to more than the whole plant of the Canadian Pacific Railway was worth at any time. The west was not able to defend itself at that time against these injustices, and the whole burden of industry and railway construction fell practically on that part of Canada. Every transcontinental line was built "for the people of the west," to let the politicians tell the tale. The people of the maritime provinces were not even content with a railway which gave them connection with the rest of Canada. Ontario got railways built through a wilderness as big as an empire, at the expense of the people of western Canada. It was really the farmer, with his wife and family, who by sweated labour had to pay the taxes on a billion dollars' worth of land in order to construct roads to get at the sidings of the Canadian Pacific at that time, and to construct schools for their own use.

Since then, this problem has been intensified by the granting of water-powers to private interests, and this has brought another set of privilege seekers to parliament asking favours in this respect. It is very likely—this is more than a guess on my part—that campaign funds are furnished sufficient to elect the henchmen they can trust in this respect. One would think that Canadian statesmen of to-day would hurry to settle this vexed question, and relieve themselves from any suspicion that might arise in the matter of the disposal of these water-power sites and other natural resources. Not only has the great water-power site of the Seven Sisters falls in Manitoba been disposed of, but the great riches of the Flin-Flon areas are now to be exploited for twenty-five years without the people getting any benefit from their God-given resources. The people in that case are simply being plundered, robbed of their own possessions, and this is being done without making any exaction of the company as to permanency of employment, or even as to the rate of wages to be paid in that area.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): For the sake of accuracy, may I ask my hon. friend if it is a fact that all the minerals of the Flin-Flon area are to be exploited without recompense?

Mr. EVANS: It is true respecting some concessions which the present company has in part developed.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): A small part of it.

Mr. EVANS: I do not know how small it is. Nobody can tell yet what that area comprises.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): Does the hon. gentleman apply his remarks to the major part of the Flin-Flon area in the province of Saskatchewan?

Mr. EVANS: What I was going to say was—

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): That is good.

Mr. EVANS: I was going to say that not long hence labour troubles will arise, expenses will be created, and then what? All I can say is that we are increasing the vote each year for the militia and defence. Troubles are going to arise in those areas, just as they have done with the British Empire Steel Company, and how are you going to settle them? The west is still bearing the burden of all these things, as well as the burden of the railway construction which formed the basis of confederation, and yet freight rates are higher in western Canada to-day than in any other part of the country. At confederation there was practically no sentiment for union in the maritime provinces or in the other provinces. It was virtually a case of necessity. I question whether to-day there is very much national unity to be found in this Dominion. I go further, Mr. Speaker. The way things are, and judging by the legislation emanating from this house, in all seriousness I say there is not much of a spirit of Canadian unity exhibited here. It does seem to me that the part played by certain areas through their representation in this house is simply a case of grab and grab —get what you can. The Duncan commission was clearly the outcome of party expediency. Its recommendations were carried out for the same reason. Coming back to the west, I understand that by an agreement between the Dominion government, the Alberta government and the Hudson's Bay Company, the company agreed to release certain areas of land in that province, to be later selected from a list that the Minister of the Interior would furnish to the company. Where are these lands to be located? In Saskatchewan? If that is true, it simply gives a clue to the reason for dealing with one province at a time, and the injustice will still be perpetuated against Saskatchewan.

On page 583 of Hansard, in referring to the conferences held by the Dominion government with representatives of the provincial governments, the Prime Minister is reported as follows:

> This government took the position that the right thing to do was to say that we believed the western provinces should be put as nearly as possible in exactly the position they would have been in had they had their resources from the moment they were created as provinces.

Now, the conditions prevailing at the time that these provinces received partial autonomy in 1905 have nothing to do with the conditions on which they should receive their natural resources to-day. The constitution of Canada, the British North America Act, provides explicitly for just such conditions. Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta never entered the union as provinces; they were carved out of an area known as Rupert's Land and the Northwest Territories. These entities entered the Dominion in 1870 by an imperial order in council dated June 23 of that year. It was passed at the request of the Dominion government, which presented an address to Her Majesty requesting that this be done. At that time the provinces of New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Ontario and Quebec never made any claim whatsoever to any of the natural resources, they never suggested that Rupert's Land or the Northwest Territories ever belonged to the original confederation. The claim put forward the other day by the member for Prince (Mr. MacLean) and other members from the maritime provinces that they had a proprietary right in the natural resources of western Canada would apply just as well to any part of Australia or to any of the territories in South Africa.

Instead of carrying out its trust obligations, the federal parliament in 1872 passed the Dominion Lands Act, by which it appropriated to itself the lands of these new members of the confederation. The rights of these provinces in the matter of their public domain, minerals, water-powers, timber areas, grazing leases, fisheries, and so on, and their rights in regard to education and taxation were defined by the imperial order in council to which I have referred. The Dominion Lands Act ousted these new members from their rightful place in the confederation. The return of their property now must be made on the basis of the imperial order in council of June 23, 1870, when Rupert's Land and the Northwest Territories entered the union as free entities and were entitled to all their rights and possessions just the same as any of the older provinces.

Now, if Rupert's Land and the Northwest Territories entered confederation at that time, no denominational rights then existed in those territories.

It was also provided under section 118 of the British North America Act that a subsidy should be paid by the Dominion government to the several provinces for the support of their governments and legislatures. Canada also assumed the debts of the provinces that entered confederation at that time. So it would seem that Rupert's Land and the Northwest Territories entered the Dominion on much more favourable terms than any other province.

But this is what I should like to impress on the government now. We must be a confederation of states united by unmistakable constitutional rights or we shall become a series of colonies, more diverse and unrelated as time goes on. I say the Dominion must stop meddling in what is purely local provincial affairs, and I say further that equality of status is the only real basis of union.

Mr. E. A. McPHERSON (Portage la Prairie): Mr. Speaker, it was not my intention when this debate opened to take part in it, but as it proceeded it became noticeable that the original resolution hardly met with the approval of any section of this house. In fact the mover of the resolution recognized this himself in his opening remarks. Afterwards an amendment was moved, the effect of which was to confine the purpose of the resolution to waterpowers.

The major portion of the debate has not centered around the resolution or the amendment in its widest sense but has been restricted to a subject which is now pretty well understood in this house, namely, the disposal of the Seven Sisters water site in the province of Manitoba. Now, discussing the amendment last Thursday, the mover of the original resolution (Mr. Woodsworth) made a few remarks which I think necessitate my stepping into the debate as a member from Manitoba, and especially to put on record my own views and actions in connection with the Seven Sisters discussion. The hon. member's statement, made on February 28, 1929, is found at page 571 of Hansard. It reads:

> I charged that the action of the government was a violation of solemn assurance made to the Manitoba members. This point has been fairly well covered during the course of the discussion. We were told that we would be consulted; I ask if any member of this house says we were consulted when all that has been brought out is that of seventeen members seven were called together in Winnipeg, and the rest of us were not in any way notified.

That statement makes it necessary for me to explain my own position. I cannot agree with the mover of the resolution; although I was not one of the seven members who attended the meeting referred to—in fact I never heard of it until I came to the house— I was consulted by the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Stewart). I may say that my attention was first called to the problem in Manitoba by an article which appeared in the Winnipeg papers, both the Free Press and the Tribune, on the third and fourth days of February last. I shall quote only the article from the Tribune, inasmuch as there is very little difference between the two newspapers so far as the news report is concerned. In the Winnipeg Tribune of February 4 the following appears:

> In answer to a question of Mr. Farmer, M.L.A., Premier Bracken read a telegram sent Thursday to the Hon. Charles Stewart, Minister of the Interior, in which he requested no action be taken in connection with any lease grant which would prejudice the province's application for the site made more than two years ago.
> The government, he said, would strongly object to any commitments being made in favour of a private company.

The impression I received, not so much from that telegram as from the discussion in the house, was that the provincial government at that time had in mind the obtaining of this site for the purpose of developing it themselves in connection with their hydro-electric system throughout the province, from Winnipeg west and southwest. And I heartily agreed with them in retaining it if they thought that they could develop it economically as a part of their system. For that reason I signed the document, which has been referred to by the hon. member for Nelson (Mr. Bird), along with other members of the house, asking the Minister of the Interior not to dispose of the site but to retain it for the purposes of the provincial government; and in that document there were added the words, "For the purpose of development with the hydro-electric system".

The hon. member for Nelson stated that we had signed a round robin. I would point out that, like the hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Howden), I nearly rose to my feet to object to this statement, because I have no recollection of signing such a document. I do not think for a moment that the hon. member when making that statement intended to mislead the house; I am absolutely satisfied that he did not. But it is only fair to direct the attention of the house to the fact that the execution and signing of a round robin is an entirely different thing from an instrument signed in the ordinary way. A round robin, as I understand it—and this I think is the impression which generally prevails—is a document signed in a circle in order to hide the identity of the person who raises the question. when there is some doubt as to whether that person should be known or not. Such a person is rather ashamed of his action. Now, there was nothing like that in connection with this document. I do not know where I came on the list, but I presume it was signed as submitted to the various members. This document asked that the site be retained for the purpose of the provincial government in connection with their hydro development, and if that government wanted it for that purpose I was personally prepared that they should have it. It was purely a question of business whether it could be logically and economically developed by them. I had a good deal to do with the provincial hydro-electric in Manitoba; in fact, I was a member of the legislature at the time it was started, the government having previously purchased power from the Winnipeg power plant. As to whether they could develop this site or not, is I think, a question which we need not discuss to any extent; and as to whether they entered into a reasonable agreement, I am not very much concerned at the moment. That is a question which we in Manitoba will dispose of when the necessity arises, and the opinion of the province as a whole will, I think, ultimately prevail. But so far as we are concerned here, the fact remains that when I left Ottawa I left with the impression that the Minister of the Interior would consult me in some way before there was any definite disposition of the power site to the province in any form, either directly or indirectly. And I may say right now that the minister, so far as I am personally concerned, fulfilled his obligation to the limit. I met the minister in Winnipeg; I have forgotten the date, but it was the day he arrived from the east, while the Dominion-provincial conference was being held in Ottawa in connection with natural resources. He told me then that he had left the conference in session and that he expected there would be an arrangement whereby the natural resources would be turned over to the province of Manitoba. In view of that situation he asked me what my attitude would be towards the lease of the Seven Sisters. Now my nationality makes me cautious, and I told the minister that I should much prefer waiting until I knew what the terms were before I gave a decided opinion on the matter. A few days or a week afterwards the terms on which the province was to obtain its natural resources became public property, and some time between that and the 10th of August I sent word to the minister that in view of the fact that the natural resources agreement had been amicably settled between the province and the Dominion I personally could see no reason for pressing my views regarding one item of the resources for the purpose of blocking the whole deal. And I withdrew my opposition to the execution of the lease, with one proviso only, namely, that there must be no mistake, if the lease were given to the private company, that it would have to be given on the request of the provincial government and in such a way that there could be no doubt about it, and that the provincial government would have to assume the whole responsibility. On that ground I withdrew my objection. It is only fair to the minister to make this statement. I never saw him afterwards; I was not at the meeting.

Now as to the resolution as a whole, my reasons for opposing it are, I think, based on good grounds. Ever since I can remember, the province of Manitoba has been demanding the return of its natural resources. That and the Hudson Bay railway had been the two great war cries out there as long as I could remember. We have settled the one, and the other is now in shape to be settled. I personally have supported resolutions demanding the return of these natural resources when such resolutions have come up in the local house while I was a member. I did not think it my duty to interfere in any way with the completion of that deal, which has been so long in coming; to me it was not a hurried affair but the result of years of conferences and negotiations, and it could not be concluded too soon.

The effect of the transfer will be to give us complete control, but I cannot quite understand why the amendment has been proposed. I do not see why, if the original resolution was too broad, they should pick upon the water-powers as the one resource which should be retained under the control of this parliament, and there are two reasons why I cannot understand that. The first reason is to a certain extent a matter of record, and I want to read a few words of the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Cahan), delivered in this house on April 19, 1926, and found at page 2569 of Hansard. We were discussing water-powers, and the hon. member said:

> It is true that we have vested in the crown, as represented by the Dominion government, large water-powers in the territories which undoubtedly are soon to be vested in the several provincial legislatures, but I will say that I do not believe any department of the Dominion government is more honestly and more efficiently managed, supervised and controlled than is the water-powers branch.

That was the opinion expressed by one of the leading members of the official opposition, a gentleman eminently fair in debate, regardless of whether or not we agree with his views. The peculiar situation which arises is that following that statement the mover of this present resolution (Mr. Woodsworth) said:

> I quite agree.

I have no doubt the Minister of the Interior will agree with the member for St. Lawrence-St. George, so we have the unique situation of members on this side of the house agreeing with one of the outstanding members of the opposition and with the mover of this resolution that the water-powers branch is one of the most efficiently managed departments of the government, yet this is the one department which it is desired to put under the control of this house.

Then there is another peculiar situation. I could understand the situation more easily if the amendment had dealt with mines instead of water-powers; as a rule mining is an industry which is developed in a very small way at first. A prospector goes out and makes his location and if he can interest capital the property is developed. The location of a mine has very little to do with its development, if it is rich enough, but the development of water-powers is quite different. Water-powers must be developed by large corporations or by governments, because the amount of money necessary for such development is very large. In addition, there is no immediate return as there is from a mine; they must depend upon the demand for power, and usually that demand is not nearly sufficient to utilize the initial output of the development, so the people interested in a water-power development must take means to create a demand which will utilize the output of that development to its fullest capacity. That means a good deal of work; it is more or less of a speculative proposition and necessitates a large amount of detail work in the way of business management. The amendment to the resolution has been proposed by a representative from the province of Ontario, and I would like to point out that the provinces of Ontario and Quebec have great water-power resources which have been developed to a large extent. When the province of Manitoba undertakes the development of its water-powers, either through private corporations or under public ownership, it comes in direct competition with the provinces of Ontario and Quebec from an industrial point of view, and the result of this amended resolution would be to give the representatives of competing provinces a control over the development of water-powers in the province of Manitoba. I object to that from the very start, Mr. Speaker; I think it is fundamentally unsound. No matter how honest they may be—and I am not questioning their integrity for a moment—I would consider it poor business if I had to operate a business under the control of an active competitor.

The province of Manitoba has been demanding the return of these water powers, and now the government have entered into an agreement to return not only the water powers but the rest of the natural resources as well. Speaking as a member from the province of Manitoba I strongly object to the resolution both in its original form and as amended. I claim that Manitoba is not still in swaddling clothes; we have grown up. We have waited a long time for the return of these resources, and while some hon. members have expressed doubt as to whether Manitoba can be relied upon upon to exercise proper judgment in the development and disposition of the natural resources, I believe we have the average, if not better than the average, class of legislators, and whether the government be Conservative, Liberal, Progressive or Labour, if that government does not use good judgment and carry on the business properly it will get its deserts at the hands of the electors of that province. I want to leave the disposition, management and control of our natural resources in our own hands, and we in Manitoba will be willing to take full responsibility for their proper administration. For that reason I strenuously object to this resolution, which says in effect, "You are not capable of managing your own business."

Hon. E. B. RYCKMAN (East Toronto): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry that the Prime Minister is not in his seat; he debated this resolution and amendment for a couple of hours and then stated that he thought the discussion had lasted long enough. However, statements made by the Prime Minister render it necessary for me to attempt to convince the house that they are not in accordance with the facts, especially with regard to what the Prime Minister said would be the result if this amendment were adopted, namely, a conflict between eastern and western Canada and the failure to allow the prairie provinces to develop their own resources.

In the first place I feel it necessary to say that the stricture which was passed upon my leader by the Prime Minister is wholly incorrect. The Prime Minister charged that my leader and we on this side of the house were not in favour of a speedy return of these resources, but that statement is not borne out by the facts. Anyone who will read Hansard will see that my leader was referring to the situation created by the Minister of the Interior himself in relation to the Seven Sisters falls. If a tramp who is loitering along the highway suddenly starts to run you naturally want to know the reason for all the hurry, and in any case my leader did not have before him the letter of June 7, which followed the statement made in this house by the minister on June 6.

I desire to discuss this matter apart from any consideration of the Seven Sisters power site, as I understand that is something we cannot recover. We have an amendment before us which, in my opinion is sound, good business and within the proper exercise of the discretion of this house. I do not think anyone will say that an important asset such as water-powers should be disposed of by cabinet control and not by the control of parliament. The Prime Minister was of the same mind on February 9, 1924, as appears by the letter which he placed on Hansard, and if we relate the amendment back to the transfer of the natural resources to Manitoba we find that the Prime Minister thought the approval of this house necessary to such a transfer. I am opposed, and I believe other members of this house are opposed, to the alienation of important assets without the consent of parliament. It is admitted by everyone that water-powers are amongst the most valuable assets that the Dominion or the provinces have, and that they should be alienated by a body of men or by the Minister of the Interior, as happened in the case of the Seven Sisters falls, is something to which the people of this country will not submit. It is the opinion of some members of this house that a mistake has been made with regard to this particular water-power site, but I belive it is the unanimous opinion that if the house or the provincial house is to deal with the water-powers of the Dominion or of the province it should be carried out according to some plan which is well understood by parliament, and one in which parliament has the final word. The Prime Minister said that in this case it would relate to only the three prairie provinces; that Ontario and Quebec would not be concerned and that the only control the Dominion had was in relation to the water-powers of the three prairie provinces. I think it is necessary that the Prime Minister should read the British North America Act again, and I think he should consider the water-powers within the railway belt in British Columbia. The question of the disposition of the water-powers of the Georgian bay and communicating streams was before this house, I believe two years ago. There is also the question of the Carillon falls, in which the people of Canada are interested.

One thing that surprises me is that not one word has been stated in this debate as to the claim the Prime Minister made as recently as the month of October when a factum was presented on behalf of his government claiming that the Dominion of Canada had control over every water-power in any navigable water in Canada. Navigable water means navigable in fact, but what does navigable in fact mean? It does not mean that it shall be necesary that a Mauretania can ply through the waters, that some river boat shall find passage, or even a rowboat, but it means the waters where a lone Indian in his canoe can pass and re-pass—that is navigation in fact. I have before me the brief on the reference which was made to the Supreme Court of Canada, the brief out of which His Lordship the Chief Justice of the supreme court said he did not think anything could have been left. This brief is signed on behalf of the Attorney General of Canada; it is signed Lucien Cannon, N. W. Rowell, Charles Laurendeau, H. J. Symington, C. P. Plaxton and Vincent C. MacDonald. The claim was made on behalf of the government of the Prime Minister that in any water navigable in fact, such as I have described—if my description is not considered as being correct I will read the long definition appearing in this factum of the Attorney General—in such a stream controlled by the Dominion government, the Dominion government controlled all water-power and could expropriate it without compensation and go into the business of generating and disposing of electrical power.

Mr. CANNON: The government never claimed anything of the kind.

Mr. STEVENS: He does not know what he signed.

Mr. RYCKMAN: I am afraid the hon. Solicitor General (Mr. Cannon) signed this without knowing what it was.

Mr. CANNON: I never sign anything without knowing what I am signing, although that may be the practice of the hon. member.

Mr. RYCKMAN: We will reserve that argument for another day.

Question 7, page 103 of this factum signed by the Solicitor General, reads as follows:

> Has the parliament of Canada legislative power to authorize the construction and operation by the Dominion government of works wholly for power purposes and the acquisition by purchase or expropriation of the lands and property required for the purposes of such works including lands of the crown in the right of a province (a) in interprovincial rivers; and, (b) in provincial rivers?
> The Attorney General submits that both branches of this question should be answered in the affirmative.

It was contended in the argument—I listened to it—that by reason of the control of the Dominion over navigable waters it had the right to expropriate without compensation—

Mr. CANNON: For navigation purposes.

Mr. RYCKMAN: —any water-power, and to go, as this question puts it, into the business of distributing hydro-electric power throughout the province.

Mr. CANNON: The hon. member could not have understood the argument.

Mr. ERNST: Did the Solicitor General?

Mr. RYCKMAN: If it is necessary I will bring the argument here where it is positively stated and urged with great ability that that was the situation; that there was not a water-power in the country, on any stream that was navigable in fact, that the Dominion could not expropriate, without paying compensation, and develop the power and sell it to the people.

Mr. CANNON: Will the hon. member tell us what the decision of the supreme court was in the matter?

Mr. GUTHRIE: The hon. member is only giving the claim made by the government.

Mr. RYCKMAN: The answer of the supreme court was that these questions framed by the Solicitor General, who never signs anything without knowing what it is, were indefinite and unintelligible.

Mr. CLARK: Those questions, I presume, were approved by the Prime Minister?

Mr. RYCKMAN: I do not think the Prime Minister, because of his argument when the matter was last before the chair, could have approved them. That being the position, how futile it is for the Prime Minister to say that it is an amazing spectacle to see the hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie) supporting this amendment. What the real position is has not been decided by the Supreme Court of Canada. If the position of the government is as was stated by the Prime Minister, the supreme court has been trifled with, because that is not the case which was put before the supreme court. The Prime Minister says: What an amazing spectacle it is for the hon. member for South Wellington to be found supporting this amendment!

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I did not say that was an amazing spectacle.

Mr. RYCKMAN: I will stand corrected, but I remember the words "amazing spectacle".

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That had reference to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth), not the acting leader of the opposition.

[Mr. Cannon.]

Mr. RYCKMAN: The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre can take care of himself. It cannot be said that there is anything out of the way when the claim is made that the house should seek to exercise control over such powers, large and important as they are. That is the purport of the amendment. As to the question of dividing east from west, to drag in an argument of that kind in a case such as this is beneath the contempt of the house. There is no question of east and west being separated over a matter of this kind. The east, as I understand it, is unanimously in favour of the west receiving its resources and administering those resources in the interests of the provinces themselves and not, I may say, in the interest of the Dominion government, as was the position taken before the supreme court.

The agreement reached with Manitoba contemplated the approval of parliament, and I wish to refer briefly to this. Just exactly what the agreement was between the federal government and the government of Manitoba I do not think has been given to the house except in the statement which refers to the conference that was held and which appears on page 518 of Hansard. The fourth paragraph reads:

> The findings of the commission to be submitted to the parliament of Canada and to the legislature of Manitoba.

I wish to direct attention to the fifth paragraph:

> Upon agreement on the financial terms following consideration of the report of the commission, the respective governments to introduce the necessary legislation to give effect to the financial terms as agreed upon, and to effect the transfer to the province of the unalienated natural resources within its boundaries, subject to any trust existing in respect thereof, and without prejudice to any interest other than that of the crown in the same.

Paragraph five provided that the parliament of Canada and the legislature of Manitoba should ratify the terms of the transfer to the province of its unalienated natural resources. Paragraph six was just a working paragraph, in the interim providing for ordinary business. The transfer of the Seven Sisters falls, a transfer of such immense importance which fixed upon the province the question of public or private ownership for thirty years, was one that was not contemplated without the authorization of the provincial legislature or the approval of parliament.

Mr. GLEN: If the legislature of Manitoba agreed to transfer those resources to a private corporation, would the hon. member say that parliament should still ratify it?

Mr. RYCKMAN: I am not concerned with that. That is a hypothetical question. My answer to that is that if those resources belong to Manitoba and the legislature of Manitoba, knowing the nature and value of its property, says: Do so and so, it is proper that should be done.

Mr. GLEN: The amendment does not call for that.

Mr. RYCKMAN: What did take place? It has been stated that Manitoba could not have done this itself. I think it could and just in this way. Manitoba could have accepted the lease in this case in all its terms just in the same way as it could accept any other benefit. It could have made a simple assignment of the property in the lease and directed it towards that company. But the government most unwisely undertook to do for Manitoba what Manitoba could not do itself because it did not have the approval of its people and of its legislature. That is plainly the situation. If that approval had been obtained, all the trouble, doubt and suspicion to which the Prime Minister has referred would have been avoided. If there was not something sinister, it is strange that paragraph six should be in the terms in which it is. What is the result? As admitted by every hon. member there is a large question of provincial policy, that of public or private ownership. This has been decided for Manitoba by the federal government and the Bracken government without the people of Manitoba having had an opportunity to express their will. Private ownership has been fastened on Manitoba for at least thirty years and perhaps for all time, and this has been done, as has been shown, without the approval of the members of the house. That is, the action of the federal government has been taken without the members interested having had an opportunity to express their opinion upon the matter, and a great deal of explaining is necessary as to why, when the matter was up for consideration, no chance was given to consult either the legislature or the people of Manitoba. As regards the members of this house who were interested, I think they have been put into a bag, tied up like blind kittens and dropped over the Seven Sisters falls. I am anxious that it will be impossible for such a situation ever to occur again. Therefore, why not let us pass a resolution of this kind saying that when it is the intention to dispose of such important natural resources as water-powers, the house, if it has control over those water-powers, shall have a say in the disposition of them? Years ago many now sitting on that side of the house stood, when on this side of the house, for that very thing—no alienation of the important assets of the Dominion without the consent of parliament. Even the present Prime Minister then declared that parliament should speak, that the government of this country should be by parliament, and not by the few, that the members of parliament, whether of his party or of any other party, should have the opportunity to express their will. But the Prime Minister now says that he is asked to break an agreement. He is not asked to break an agreement. There is no such question raised in the amendment to the resolution.

Let me point out to the Prime Minister what actually has occurred in an other case. His government by order in council authorized the execution of a contract with Sir William Petersen. That agreement was subject to the ratification of parliament. That contract was, if I may use the word, a most unworthy contract, having regard to the needs of the people of this country. Instead of giving, as it purported to give, lower ocean freight rates to the shippers of this country, it gave control of rates to Sir William Petersen, and when that was found out, parliament did not ratify the contract. Canada receded. The name of the Minister of Trade and Commerce, the Hon. Mr. Low, was on that contract. The contract had been authorized by the government and by the right hon. the Prime Minister, but the government receded from that contract which it had authorized. The government could have forced it through the house if it had so desired, but the result would have been a contract which was not in the interests of Canada. Parliament had its chance, and parliament saved the situation. If this amendment passes, parliament will have the chance to save the situation again.

Mr. A. L. BEAUBIEN (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, as this resolution and the amendment concern the three western provinces only, I feel that I should be neglecting my duty, having the honour to represent one of the ridings in the western provinces, if I did not raise my voice in protest on this occasion.

Mr. SPENCER: Where in the resolution are the three western provinces mentioned?

Mr. BEAUBIEN: The natural resources of the three western provinces are the only resources of any province in this Dominion which are in the hands of the federal government; that is why I say the three western provinces.

The effect of the resolution and the amendment would seem to be to say to the rest of Canada that Manitoba—I speak for Manitoba because I am mostly concerned with that province, and know it best—although it has been in confederation for almost sixty years is still in its infancy and does not know how to handle its natural resources.

I am surprised also, Mr. Speaker, that the resolution should have been introduced by a member from western Canada, especially by my hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth). He has made some wonderful speeches in this house against the centralization of control. In connection with imperial relations, for instance, he denounced centralized control of the empire in any shape or form, but when it comes to provincial matters and the natural resources of the western provinces, he takes the colonial attitude and preaches the finest Tory doctrine I have ever heard in my life. I believe the hon. member is honest in his opinions, but I think he has been blindfolded by the theory of public ownership.

Mr. HEAPS: Would my hon. friend mind quoting him?

Mr. BEAUBIEN: These hon. gentlemen have spoken, Mr. Speaker, for about six days on this question, and I intend to speak for only ten minutes. They can say what they like when I get through.

Mr. HEAPS: Do you object to answering the question?

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: I am for public ownership; I believe in it, but I am not blindfolded by it. I am convinced that if Premier Bracken had gone into the development of the Seven Sisters falls he would have killed public ownership in the province of Manitoba for ever, because it was proved beyond a doubt in the report of one of the most competent engineers, Dr. Hogg, who is renowned in Ontario for his integrity, and whose authority I think no one will question, that the development of the Seven Sisters power site as a provincial enterprise was a folly economically.

Here was the situation. We needed power in Manitoba, and the Seven Sisters was the first power site that should be developed. The provincial government in Manitoba entered into a contract with the Winnipeg Electric Company. That was one of the best contracts that ever was made by any province with a private corporation. It was the most water-tight contract possible, with the public protected in every way, shape and form. The Manitoba government said: We will withdraw our application for this lease if you will sign that contract; and the Winnipeg Electric Company signed the contract.

What does that contract mean? It means getting closer to public ownership than we would ever have done had the cantract not been made. Why? Because it eliminates one of the greatest obstacles in the way of the development of power on the Winnipeg river. It wipes out the perpetual rights which the Winnipeg Electric Company enjoyed on the Pinawa channel. It increases the development of power on the Winnipeg river by between fifty and sixty thousand horse-power. In addition, the provincial government at the end of thirty years have the right to expropriate the development on a cost basis, less depreciation, the cost to be arrived at by the engineers of the water-powers branch, who are on the works at the time of construction, and the engineers of the Winnipeg Electric Company, and if they fail to agree, the question is to be referred to the exchequer court, whose decision shall be final.

So I say that the provincial government made a good contract for the people of Manitoba, and I am positive that when the political turmoil in the province of Manitoba is over, and the people of Manitoba have had a chance to find out what is in that contract, Premier Bracken will go down in the history of the province as having made one of the best deals that ever was made for the people of Manitoba. That is my opinion. Not only is Premier Bracken to be congratulated, but the hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Stewart), the right hon. the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King), and all his colleagues are to be congratulated, first, because they have placed Manitoba in a position where we are going to get our natural resources in a very short time. Even if we do not get them within a year or two, in the meantime they will be administered by the federal authorities in accordance with the wishes of the province of Manitoba. I wish to congratulate the right hon. Prime Minister and his colleagues on bringing the agreement so close to completion in July last.

My hon. friend who has just taken his seat (Mr. Ryckman) asked: Instead of granting the lease of the Seven Sisters power site to the Winnipeg Electric Company, why did not the Minister of the Interior lease it to the Manitoba government? Well, I am not a lawyer—don't want to be—but my understanding is that until the resources are actually transferred to Manitoba the Minister of the Interior had no other course open, he simply had to grant the lease as requested by the Manitoba government. I congratulate him on the fact that in this lease from the water-powers branch to the Winnipeg Electric Company the interests of the public are better safeguarded than in any similar lease within my knowledge or, I think, within the knowledge of most hon. members.

But, Mr. Speaker, we are in a most extraordinary position. My hon. friend from Frontenac-Addington (Mr. Edwards) the other night when the amendment was moved by the acting leader of the opposition (Mr. Guthrie) said: Since it mentions water-powers I can vote for the amendment. How is he going to reconcile his attitude with the resolution which he had on the order paper for two sessions to my knowledge, and which this house passed unanimously the other day for the return of the natural resources to the prairie provinces without any restrictions? Are we now going to say: Four or five days ago we did not know what we were doing; we want to put restrictions on the return of those resources. I have said before and I repeat my statement, that this resolution and the amendment thereto affect the three prairie provinces and no others. The maritime provinces, Quebec and Ontario have always handled their natural resources. I say to my hon. friends opposite from the province of Ontario, who to-day are trying to convince the public that they are so much concerned over public ownership in Manitoba, that all the water-powers in northern Ontario were given to private corporations by order in council. And rightly so, because if the Ontario government had waited for the local legislature to approve of the contracts the development of that great northern country would have been retarded, and Canada would have been the loser.

Let us be fair, Mr. Speaker. Western Canada has been fighting for the return of its natural resources ever since I have been in that country, which is close on fifty years. Manitoba has been a member of confederation since 1870, but she has never had control of her natural resources. We in Manitoba can handle our own affairs, we are just as intelligent as our fellow-Canadians in the sister provinces. I for one will not be a party to having any outside authority say what we in western Canada shall do with our natural resources. Therefore I intend to vote against the resolution and the amendment, and to oppose with all my strength any proposal tending to restrict the development of western Canada.

Mr. H. B. ADSHEAD (East Calgary): Mr. Speaker, I am a disinterested spectator of what has been going on between the Manitoba government and the members from that province and the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Stewart). The resolution deals with the control of parliament over the disposition of the natural resources now administered by the federal government, but the discussion has developed into an attack on the Minister of the Interior for his alleged breach of faith with eighteen of the Manitoba members with respect to the leasing of the Seven Sisters falls power site. In fact at one stage the attack became so severe that you, sir, had to call some hon. members to order for challenging statements made by the minister.

Now as to the dispute, I have not much to say. The order in council dealing with the power site was signed on August 1, 1928. It says:

Pending this transfer—

That is, completion of the agreement between the government of Manitoba and the Dominion government.

—the policy of the government of Canada in the administration of the natural resources of Manitoba to be in accord with the wishes of the government of the province of Manitoba.

From that very date the power of the Minister of the Interior to administer those resources was subject entirely to the wishes of the provincial government. It has been argued that the minister should not have taken final action until the provincial legislature had passed upon the action of the Bracken government. I do not think that is the real situation. I believe that the government of Manitoba was appointed by the legislature as its agents, and as such the provincial government are responsible to the legislature, and to no other legislative authority.

I know in the province of Alberta the Minister of the Interior on one occasion was criticized for having granted a license for hydro-electric power to the Calgary Power Company without having consulted the premier, Mr. Brownlee; but afterwards it was found out that he had done so. At once the criticism of the United Farmers of Alberta was directed at Premier Brownlee

Looking through the press of Manitoba, I find that even those papers that are averse to the granting of the lease to the Winnipeg Electric Company do not criticize the Minister of the Interior, but Premier Bracken and his government. Therefore I cannot vote in favour of the resolution or the amendment. As has been said, the resolution is double-barrelled. It may be said: If you vote against this resolution or against the amendment the people of Calgary will think you are opposed to public ownership. On the other hand, by voting in favour I may be charged with a desire to perpetuate the control by the federal authorities of the natural resources of the western provinces. But I am quite satisfied that if the resolution and amendment carry it will be inferred not only in this house but throughout the Dominion to be a vote of censure on the Minister of the Interior. Therefore having reached the conclusion that under the agreement between Manitoba and the Dominion he could have taken no other course than comply with the wishes of the provincial government, I can support neither the resolution nor the amendment.

Hon. W. R. MOTHERWELL (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the resolution would seem to be the result of certain political backfire investigations that have been preceding in the province of Manitoba for some time. It is not so apparent, however, just what the meaning of the resolution and the amendment is, judging from the wide scope of the discussion and the many interpretations put upon them.

Taking the interpretation of the hon. sponsor of the resolution, I gather that he does not desire to raise the question as to the respective merits of private ownership of power and public ownership; nor does he wish to discuss the merits or demerits of the bargain itself. He is of the opinion that the lease is an exceedingly good one, prepared under an act which possibly is not excelled in any part of the world. So that we are reduced to this interpretation of the matter, from the standpoint of the hon. gentleman, that he raises the question as to whether any further alienation of our resources in the west—not exclusively in the west but particularly there—shall be permitted without submitting each separate contract or lease to this parliament for ratification. I take that to be the meaning of the resolution.

Judging from the alacrity with which my hon. friend from Frontenac-Addington (Mr. Edwards) has switched his allegiance from opposition to the resolution to support of the amendment, I gather that he thinks there is a decided difference between the amendment and the resolution itself. There may be some distinction between the two, but for my part I can see no difference in principle. Suppose the amendment carries: it will have to be implemented by legislation; the government will have to bring down amendments not only to the Dominion Lands Act but to the Water-Powers Act and possibly half a dozen others. How can be justify segregating water-powers and deciding that they shall be dealt with in the particular manner provided by the amendment to the resolution, leaving all other resources to be administered as they have been for the last half century or more? No government could justify making that distinction and legislating thereon. It is true, resources are of varying importance and different in character; but there is no difference in principle between the resolution and the amendment, so far as I can see.

We have heard the expression, "no strings on our resources." I wonder whether the acting leader of the opposition desires to have this kind of string, of which he is speaking, tied to the resources of Manitoba after they are transferred. Surely not. No such string is tied to any other province. Well, if it is not desirable to have it tied to the resources when handed over, why is it desirable to have it tied to this particular resource? There must be some reason for it. This is the law and the practice that has obtained for the last half century, and there has been no complaint against it that I have heard. The onus of proving the advisability of a change lies with those who ask for the change. Who wants to make a change in a law of this nature, especially with respect to the Water-Powers Act, which has been in force for so long a time and has been satisfactory to the public interest generally? I have listened attentively to this debate and have read in my spare moments some of the addresses that have been delivered, and I cannot find a valid reason for any change. I find, on the other hand, many reasons, which must appear sensible to thinking men, why we should continue an act that has given satisfaction all round. But no attempt has been made to give any valid reasons for the change. I am prepared to show that no such change should be made, for the simple reason that it would retard the development of resources indefinitely.

Referring to the statement made by my hon. friend from East Toronto (Mr. Ryck-man), the hon. member criticizes the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King), trying to find a statement of his in which he intimates that before any natural resources should be completely returned the matter should be confirmed and ratified and a bill passed through this house. Of course, that is taken for granted. But there is no comparison between that statement and the point under discussion. That deals with all resources; it deals with all three provinces. A bill did pass this house with respect to the resources of Alberta, and a bill will pass this house with respect to all others before any bargain can be consummated.

Let us go back to the development which has recently taken place in Manitoba—and this has been referred to already. Imagine the delay that would have been experienced in connection with the Hudson Bay mining development scheme if that had had to be referred to this house. As everyone knows, the Whitney people's option expired in the fall of 1927; they had to execute it or the option would have expired. If the law had stated that the matter must first be submitted to the house, they could not have taken up their option and gone ahead with the enterprise, with the result that the key to that great northern development might still have remained unturned; that would have been the situation if that proposition had first to be submitted to this parliament for ratification. Then later on power had to be obtained and a lease secured. There was a difference of opinion as to whether the White Mud falls or the Island falls at Churchill should be used. It was decided in favour of the latter, and that meant that Saskatchewan was concerned as well as Manitoba. As a matter of fact, the province of Saskatchewan was consulted with regard to the Hudson Bay mining development, more familiarly known as the Flin Flon, and the representations of both Manitoba and Saskatchewan were incorporated not only in the mining lease but also in the power lease on the Churchill. Quite recently it has been found, too, that in order to facilitate the development of the falls on the Churchill, before mining operations can actually begin in connection with the Flin Flon or the Hudson Bay scheme, a smaller development is required to provide power, in the absence of coal, which is usually used during the construction of the plant. A considerable amount of power is required, and in lieu of coal a small ten or twelve hundred horse power plant was asked for. Under this resolution, that could not be granted until the meeting of this parliament, when the issue would have to be decided. The result is that the whole mineral and water development of the western country would be tied up if such a resolution as this passed.

Later on, we anticipate, a further request will be made in Saskatchewan. Explorers and those who are investigating these matters, and miners as well, are even now appearing at Rotten Stone lake, 200 miles north of Prince Albert. Those of you who read the western papers will see that all roads, if not converging in Prince Albert, are at least developed outward from that centre. Fleets of airplanes and dog trains as well are travelling in all directions into the north land with supplies for those who are investigating the possibilities of mining in that vast territory. Now let us suppose this house prorogues, and the Rotten Stone lake or the Reindeer lake or both desire to secure mining lands with accompanying water-powers; they will have to sit by and wait until the house meets next year and we discuss among ourselves—laymen for the most part—what is entirely an engineering proposition. All that procedure would have to be followed before a decision could be arrived at. I cannot imagine anything more ridiculous; yet that is the string my hon. friends opposite have been talking about. Why, it is a cable that they are tying to the whole problem. I think the cat is out of the bag; I do not believe they care three hoots about resources. They know the resources will be transferred soon and they want to get into our band wagon and do some of the shouting and claim some of the credit. That is what this resolution amounts to, with its amendment. The same thing might be said with respect to Alberta. I wonder how my hon. friend from Nelson (Mr. Bird), and my friends from Saskatchewan, can advocate a proposition which will hamper the development of that country's resources—resources which have been lying dormant from time immemorial. Those resources are now on the verge of development and they want a further delay until next year. Evidently they think the time is not ripe for the development of these resources and they want to hamper progress for another year by means of this resolution, with its amendment.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Has the Dominion government done anything with Alberta's natural resources without consulting the government of Alberta?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Not that I know of With respect to another province an order in council has been secured which I will read, if you like. This order in council was passed under date August 1st last, and section 6 thereof refers to the transfer of natural resources and the agreement arrived at between the two governments, the terms of the agreement being set out. This is the last section:

Pending this transfer, the policy of the government of Canada in the administration of the natural resources of Manitoba to be in accord with the wishes of the government of the province.

Nothing could be more complete or more simple than that, and that clause was embodied in the agreement for the express purpose of showing that if this investigation should be prolonged we were sincere in our desire virtually to give them control of their resources by carrying out their wishes in connection with them. That has been the practice of this government ever since we came into power and now it is confirmed by this order in council so that the people of Manitoba will have no reason to object to the length of time involved in a final settlement, because now their resources are administered exactly as they wish. Surely that is the very essence of provincial rights, as recognized by the Liberal party ever since confederation. With respect to the other two provinces, I happened to be acting Minister of the Interior at the time the Hudson Bay mining lease was granted, and I know there can be quite enough delays even under our present system of administration without this parliament making more. With regard to the resources of Alberta and Saskatchewan, the same method of consultation has been in vogue all these years; sometimes they were not so anxious to exercise that right but that is another story. The fact is that we have consulted them and they virtually have had their resources so far as the method of administration was concerned. This agreement gave the assurance that at the earliest possible date we desired to return the resources fully.

While this may not be particularly germane to the question, in passing I would point out that the reason the resources have not been returned by any government is because the original bargains with the provinces were so good that the provinces were not going to have them abrogated until they were given better bargains. Take the province of Saskatchewan; the bargain they made in 1905 proved to be so good that they decided to keep it until some one produced a better bargain. They are awaiting that day yet, and when it comes it will be found that there will be no difficulty in consummating the transaction.

There is another development taking place on Ghost river; that is a bad name, but I understand the river is actually there. We have heard of the Spray falls development up near Banff, and I understand the Ghost river development is midway between Spray falls and Calgary. If we had to wait and go through all this rigmarole and discussion, where would that development be? This is an example of what would happen; this shows how much we know of the engineering features connected with these developments, particularly those members who have not yet visited western Canada. Nothing would be done, and whoever was financing a development never would know where they stood until finally the agreement was passed by this parliament. I hope we will never have such a condition of affairs. Imagine financiers waiting for something to go through this house, say during the first five years we were in office, wondering what was going to happen. You could not get money under those circumstances, and consequently the development of the country, which has been delayed long enough, would be held back still further. While I was listening to my hon. friend who preceded me (Mr. Ryckman) I was going to remark that his province was enjoying its own natural resources but apparently he is desirous of strangling our development while camouflaging and humbugging and pretending he is lying awake nights wondering how to help us.

I do not like to introduce any extraneous matter into this debate, but I am constrained to refer to the Dominion Water Powers Act, passed in 1919, when I think my hon. friend the acting leader of the opposition was a member of the government in power at that time. It is claimed that this act is one of the best ever placed on our statutes as far as the safeguarding of the public interest is concerned, and I would point out that in his present stand my hon. friend the acting leader of the opposition is stultifying himself. The lease was given under this act, which he himself helped to frame.

In connection with the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth), who moved this resolution, may I say that under this act the government is given power to administer those resources, under conditions more favourable to labour than are contained in any other similar act on this continent. In section 83a of the regulations based on this act we find the following:

Every license shall be deemed to be executed on the express condition that the licensee shall pay or require to be paid to those employed in the construction, alteration, extension, maintenance and operation of the works authorized by such license, wages not less than those generally accepted as current for similar services in similar undertakings in the locality, and that such licensee shall maintain conditions of labour not less favourable than those prevailing in similar undertakings in the locality.

That is part of the regulations associated with and based upon this act, and this is the act upon which the lease was based. So our labour men, both in and out of this house, should be the last to argue against the merits of this lease, although I believe my hon. friend intimated that he was not discussing the merits, and I presume this is one of the good things he had in mind.

I shall not dwell further on this matter, Mr. Speaker, except to say that I know hon. gentlemen opposite are hard up for something to talk about this session; they have been looking for a toe-hold ever since this session opened, and so far they have not located one. Last year they thought they had something on the Department of Immigration, but that fizzled out. An investigation was made covering weeks and months; they were going to do all sorts of things, but nothing happened. We have had other investigations during the last few years, but they have always back-fired upon hon. gentlemen opposite, and if I know anything about it this will do the same thing. It is not necessary to intimate that they are not going to be much better off when they begin discussing the budget; certainly they will have to get out their magnifying glasses in order to find any fault. They want to find something to object to, on the principle that it is not good politics to agree with everything the government bring down. They are hoping, as was intimated by the hon. member who preceded me (Mr. Ryckman) that something may develop from the situation in Manitoba which will in some way incriminate this government. They do not care anything about the natural resources; if we allow them to do so they will tie them up tighter than you could tie them with a logging chain. They do not care anything about the resources so long as they can make a little capital out of them, and God knows they need it.

Hon. CHARLES STEWART (Minister of the Interior): Mr. Speaker, at this stage I think I should make some further explanation of the contract in connection with the Seven Sisters falls. The question of the desirability of adopting the resolution and amendment has been pretty well discussed, I think, and I have nothing to add except that so far as any safeguards which can be thrown around any department are concerned, I do not think any minister will object to them. I think no one in this house has a greater appreciation of the responsible position occupied by the Minister of the Interior than I have, and whether this resolution is accepted or defeated the one thing I must keep in mind is that in connection with all the leases, of which there are thousands annually, they are apt to be revised and are all subject to consideration by any member of this house who cares to investigate or ask about them. To a very large degree parliament does exercise control over the department which I have the honour to administer. I was especially careful with respect to this particular agreement which is under discussion. There was a great deal of controversy in connection with it, and I may say that since I have been minister there has never been a lease of any moment issued in the province of Manitoba on which there has not been a wide difference of opinion. This lease presented some very serious difficulties—I mentioned a number of them the other day, and I will not cover that ground again. The hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Beaubien) mentioned one of the most difficult points, namely, that as early as 1893 the Winnipeg Electric Company had started a small development on the Winnipeg river. In 1911 that agreement was amended and brought somewhat under the control of the Department of the Interior, although we did not control the cost of construction or the rentals. That agreement gave the Winnipeg Electric Company the right to divert 9,000 cubic feet from the Pinawa channel in perpetuity for $100 per year. The city of Winnipeg had a similar agreement for a larger amount of water, and they still enjoy that privilege.

May I say here that my sympathy goes out to public ownership and I am willing at every stage to see that there is first a refusal of any utility, be it water-power or anything else, on the part of the representatives of the public. That was the case with respect to this matter. In 1906 the Winnipeg Electric Company had secured all the land around the Seven Sisters development. Hon. members have criticized me somewhat severely with respect to this very matter, but I had nothing to do with the acquiring of that property. From looking over the correspondence complained of, I would assume they were simply taking the precaution that in the event of their developing, or the development by the Manitoba government, they would be protected; for at that time the application of the Manitoba government had priority.

I have given my unqualified backing to the engineers in my department with a view to accomplishing the maximum development on the Winnipeg river stretch, as well as on the English river stretch in Ontario, although we have nothing to do with any action taken by the Ontario government in that respect. Members of the house will remember the controversy over the Norman dam between the Backus interests and the Dominion and Ontario governments. We have a storage basin in the lake of the Woods that is of inestimable value to the people of the Winnipeg district and the province of Manitoba. Not only that, but we have succeeded in obtaining a storage in lac Seul through the consent of the Ontario government. I will tell my Ontario friends quite frankly that I agreed to the construction of the dam to increase the storage facilities at lac Seul on a cost plus basis, without tender being offered, as I had the utmost confidence in the people who are doing that construction work at lac Seul. This work is being carried on under the auspices of the engineers of the Ontario hydro, and we are putting $500,000 into that enterprise. I still have some confidence in my fellow men and I do not share the suspicion that has been expressed so frequently by those—and I say this with all due deference—who knew very little about the matter they were talking about.

I am not quarrelling about public ownership or private ownership. As I have stated, I first ascertain whether the representatives of the public in any particular locality are desirous of an enterprise being developed under public ownership. Having ascertained to my satisfaction that they do not wish to do this I am prepared to make, with a private corporation, the best deal I can in the public interest and that is what was done in this instance.

Through the arrangement we made with the Ontario government, we were able to say to the people of Manitoba that we were going to increase their power possibilities on the Winnipeg river stretch. Through the securing of this storage basin we were able to increase the development by 300,000 horse-power. We have spent $2,000,000, but we will get that back in instalments from the power company after the development takes place. That is what we have accomplished in the interests of the people of Manitoba.

The Manitoba government could have developed this stretch themselves, but there was the difficulty in removing the Pinawa plant. We had discussed this to some extent with the Winnipeg Electric Company and they believed that their lease in perpetuity costing $100 per year was worth $6,000,000 to them. This is a staggering sum, and it looked like a very difficult proposition to get over. When Mr. Bracken came into the matter in 1927 he was told of what we had done in Ontario and that if the Pinawa plant could not be scrapped, thus diverting the flowage over the Seven Sisters reef, then the people of Winnipeg would be deprived of 50,000 horse-power. As I said the other night, he was told that if it was found impossible to deal with the Winnipeg Electric, and he desired to have the Seven Sisters site with the loss of the 50,000 horse-power, I would see that he got it. I made that statement the other night, and I make it again.

Mr. HEAPS: When was this?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): In 1927, when he decided to make application for the development.

Mr. HEAPS: What month in 1927?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I am not dealing with definite dates, and I cannot give the hon. member the month.

I made another stipulation to Premier Bracken; that if he decided later on to recommend dealing with the Winnipeg Electric Company, a separate company should be organized. I did not want to be confronted with the financing of the Winnipeg Electric Company; I wanted to know the provisions contained in the contract and what the work would cost so that it would be a guide with respect to a future purchase or the control of rates—hence, the Northwestern Power Company. For over a year Mr. Bracken was negotiating an agreement with the Winnipeg Electric Company. I was interested in bringing about this development through the scrapping of the Pinawa plant in order that we might get rid of that 9,000 cubic feet in perpetuity and thus have 50,000 horse-power additional on the Seven Sisters reach, and $25,000 or more per year in revenue. But if the Bracken government had been desirous of carrying on this development I would have issued a lease to them. That is my position with respect to private or public ownership. He made his agreement, but I am not going into that. We know he got the power he required for twelve dollars or in the neighbourhood of twelve dollars, between eleven and thirteen dollars. He got the company to agree to scrap the Pinawa plant, to construct the Seven Sisters, to give up their right in perpetuity in that water, they to use it for thirty years for $100. At the end of thirty years rentals prevailing for the water-powers on that reach will prevail as regards the 9,000 cubic feet. But they get in addition, from the moment of construction, fifty cents per horse-power for a minimum rental of 50,000 horse-power or $25,000 a year for the thirty years.

I said that it was a good agreement and I say so still. I did not sign or execute that agreement until I was satisfied that every public interest, so far as I could conceive it, was protected. May I say, with respect to the purchase of the plant, that is provided for at the end of thirty years. If my hon. friends can create in Manitoba a sentiment that can change the Manitoba government or the Manitoba representatives so that they want to buy the plant, every provision and every safeguard are inserted in the agreement to enable them to do so.

The first fifteen years at least from the inception of that power plant will be the worst years, the lean years. People talk very glibly about the way in which private interests get away with all the natural resources of the country. There is not a single natural resource of which I have had the administration since I came into this office that I have sold outright to anyone. They are all under lease and the leases can all be cancelled. I am under review and the operation of my department is under review by the members of the house. If I were sitting in the opposition as a private member and if I had an objection to take to any particular deal consummated in my province or constituency, I think I could promise you I would bring it to the attention of the house, and I do not think private members are lax in taking an opportunity to complain if they believe they have a right to do so. That is the control parliament exercises over the minister, the department and the government. That is the situation with respect to the Seven Sisters deal. I say most emphatically that no public interest has been neglected with regard to the arrangement.

Let me deal now with the statement of my hon. friend that I have not played fair with the Manitoba members. In the first place, may I refer again to the famous statement that is quoted so often, that was made to the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) in the house? After a considerable discussion with reference to the Seven Sisters I made this statement and I want to read the concluding paragraph:

Possibly I have carried that principle too far—

That is the principle of consulting.

Mr. ADSHEAD: When was this?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I am quoting from page 3853 of Hansard. This was in reference to the matter when the estimates of the Department of the Interior were going through and the leader of the opposition had this question up.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Last year's Hansard?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes, June 6. It has been referred to very frequently and perhaps I had better read my last statement with respect to the matter:

Mr. Stewart (Edmonton): May I give my hon. friend the assurance now that so far as his request is concerned I have no serious objection to offer except this: Of course I am always made more or less the storm centre for the settlement of these difficulties, particularly in Manitoba, but I have adopted the principle of consulting with the provincial governments about these matters. Possibly I have carried that principle too far, but I am never forgetful of the fact that I must take the responsibility for final disposition. I am going to say very frankly here and now that notwithstanding the fact that at present the government have adopted a line of action with respect to the Seven Sisters falls I am not in any particular hurry to come to any decision about that matter, largely because of the fact that the members of this house have expressed very decided opinions about the matter as federal members. I am not very much disturbed by the statement that there must be immediate action; I have investigated the matter pretty well and I think there is plenty of time to give ample consideration to this matter before it is decided. In order to settle the question, and in order to prevent any delay, I do not see any reason why we should not await the action of the city council of Winnipeg and of the provincial government, which must take the responsibility, before a final decision is made here. I think that should satisfy my hon. friend.

That was the final statement made to the leader of the opposition when the matter was under discussion. A great deal has been said about that and it is said that the next day I wrote a letter to Premier Bracken in which I said that the matter had been up for discussion in the house and there would have to be a delay for a month or so; that is, that I was going back on my word to the members of the house, to the leader of the opposition and to the private members from Manitoba. Let me say that so far as I was able I kept my word both to the house and to the members from Manitoba. That letter was written and I delayed the issuance of the lease until late in September. I took every precaution to carry out my word to the leader of the opposition in seeing that the city of Winnipeg was consulted. The city council on two occasions made it a matter of resolution and vote.

Mr. HEAPS: That was before the minister sent that letter.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Never mind. That was my answer to the city council and my hon. friend need not quibble about that particular phase of the matter. With regard to the provinces of Manitoba I was constantly in consultation with the authorities and nobody knows better than my hon. friends in that corner of the house that such was the case; nobody knows better than they that on the night of July 3 I left here and I discussed the matter with the members from Manitoba. Later on, learning that the Prime Minister, as he stated the other day, had made an agreement with the Premier of Manitoba that these resources would be administered in accordance with their wishes, I again consulted the members from Manitoba, not on only one occasion but on half a dozen occasions. My hon. friend was not in the city of Winnipeg at that time; neither was the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) .

Mr. BEAUBIEN: The hon. member for North Winnipeg was mending antique furniture in Montreal.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I do not know where he was but all I have to say is that he was not in Winnipeg. What did my hon. friends say by their resolution?—and I hold it in my hand. Did they not say, in the round robin of which they spoke, that I was first to ascertain whether or not the development could take place by public ownership either by the city or by the province, and failing that I was at liberty to deal preferably with the Winnipeg Electric because they had been the first applicants? I do not know wherein I have committed any breach of trust in connection with the administration of this matter. I must confess that I did not wait until I had consulted every member who represents Winnipeg. I did not consult the members who, I knew, from the very inception of the matter were in favour of it. I took care to consult the members who, according to their own statements, were opposed because they hoped that development by public ownership would take place.

Mr. BIRD: I am not finding any fault, but I do not want it to go out that the minister consulted me.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I think my hon. friend (Mr. Bird) made the fairest statement of any member of the house in respect to my participation in the matter, and I want to thank him for it. His statement was eminently fair. Perhaps I had better read it in order to clear the matter up so far as he is concerned, because I do not want any reflection cast upon anyone, much less am I going to take any reflections upon mfself. I quote from the statement my hon. friend made when speaking on this matter, as it appears on page 449 of this year's Hansard:

> The Minister of the Interior did say to us quite plainly, before we left for home last session, that he could not hold up this matter until the Manitoba legislature met; he was very frank about that. But if I did not misunderstand him, and there is always the possibility that I might have—I can confirm what I am saying by my own diary, and his words in the house seem to confirm it—he said that before anything was done the members for Manitoba would be consulted. As I say, there may have been misunderstanding, and it is a very critical situation in which to make a mistake .

I did say that, and if it is any satisfaction to my hon. friend, I will say that I did not see him on any of the occasions on which I consulted with the Manitoba members. While I assume my responsibility to every member of this house, I have a particular responsibility to the members who sit on this side of the house, who think as I do, and whose advice I must first seek. I do not desire to evade the advice of any man, but I have a particular responsibility to the members on this side of the house who support the government, and they certainly were consulted.

With respect to leaving it to the legislature, I suggested that very course to Premier Bracken in July, and I find in the correspondence which was brought down and laid on the table of this house a statement from Premier Bracken citing the statements made by members of the provincial legislature as evidence that the legislature was behind this matter, but he distinctly said that he was going to take the responsibility— I repeat, I am seeking to evade no responsibility—even to the extent of passing an order in council, which order in council was read by my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell). So that while I seek to evade no responsibility that is mine, I say again that so far as I was concerned I took all the precautions which I promised to any member of this house I would take and after assuring myself that the provincial government were insistent upon this lease being executed, I decided to recommend to our government that that be done.

Mr. A. D. McRAE (Vancouver North): Mr. Speaker, I propose to take up but a very short time this afternoon in support of the amendment. Many of us in the house felt that when the resolution of the hon. member for Frontenac-Addington (Mr. Edwards) was unanimously adopted by the house on the 18th of last month, this question of the natural resources of the provinces had been pretty well settled. The speech, however, of the right hon. the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) on Thursday evening, followed by this debate, would lead one to believe that our western provinces are yet a long way from getting their resources.

Reviewing tersely that part of the debate, we find that Manitoba had practically consummated its agreement with the government, that Alberta was also in agreement, and that the province of Saskatchewan is now negotiating its case. It would seem that the government might implement the wishes of this house and give early effect to that settlement which we all desire.

The right hon. the Prime Minister spoke the other evening about dividing east and west over this amendment. I have only this comment to make: the great prairie provinces, it would appear, have been very patient and forbearing, and their breaking with the east will depend on how long the government is going to take to give them control of their resources. Parliament has decided the issue, and it seems to me that the matter rests with the government. While I am not familiar with the technicalities of parliamentary procedure, I am quite sure that if this matter was dealt with on a business basis, a final settlement, which is largely a matter of accounting, could be arrived at with very little loss of time.

There are one or two points which have not been considered in this debate to which I would like to draw the attention of hon. members. Eliminating the question of the resources of the western provinces, it would appear that this amendment involves the matter of navigation in our navigable rivers, and the administration of water-powers beyond the boundaries of our provinces. Few, I think, will disagree with the need for protecting the national interests so far as navigation is concerned, and no body is so competent to pass on the national interest as this parliament. I noticed in the Ottawa Citizen this morning a statement that the government proposed to make an announcement on the Beauharnois project some time to-day. It would be very interesting to the members of this house, Mr. Speaker, and very pertinent to this debate, if that statement were before us now. I am not all familiar with the Beauharnois power project, but I am to some extent familiar with the St. Lawrence development, which has been before this government and the country for several years now, and on which we have expended a large sum of money for the purpose of making an investigation and bringing in a report. If the Beauharnois development does not interfere in any way with the St. Lawrence development, in connection with which our government has already advanced to a final stage, if it does not involve the diversion of the water dealt with and included in the report of the engineers on the St. Lawrence development, then I do not see that nationally we are concerned about it. But on the other hand, if it does not make for the economic development of the entire project as submitted by the engineers, then I think this government and this parliament is vitally concerned in the matter, and we should have before us in considering this resolution the information which it is stated in the press will soon be submitted to the house.

With regard to the water-powers beyond the boundaries of our provinces, there I approach a matter that I know something about. Few of us can appreciate the magnitude of our water-powers beyond our provincial boundaries in our great north country. To get a correct appreciation of their magnitude, you have to go down some of these gigantic rivers and see the numerous falls and rapids that you have to pass as you go along. It is evident that in our estimates of power in our great north, only the big and cheaply developed powers are taken into account. In almost every case there are innumerable sites where smaller developments would have already taken place had those sites been close to centres of population. I think it is a safe statement to make—it is difficult to contradict, at any rate—that the power in our northern country beyond the boundaries of our present provinces is at least twice our present estimates. Those powers cannot be developed to-day on account of the cost and the loss in transmission. There is a demand for the power, but it is too far away for commercial development. But viewing the great advances in electrical science in the past twenty years, particularly in the last ten years, with the marvelous development of radio, who is to say that we are not approaching the time when this power will be available for use in our present centres of population, and perhaps even further afield? I have in mind a statement made last spring by Mr. Isaacs of the British Marconi Company. He stated that his company was experimenting with the transmission of electric power through the ether, and he had sanguine hopes of success crowning their work, in which case the electric power generated on the North American continent would be available for Great Britain. That may seem rather farfetched, Mr. Speaker, but wo do know that during the past few years experimenters in the United States have succeeded in transmitting power for a few hundred feet without the use of a connecting wire. I have no hesitation in saying that I am firmly convinced, as are many men much better qualified to pass an opinion, that by a beam system or some other means, probably a cheap lead wire, not only will the cost of transmission be greatly reduced, but also the loss in transmission will be largely eliminated.

That leads me, Mr. Speaker, to a calculation of the national revenue that would result from the development of these great powers with which a generous Providence has endowed us. Owned and operated by the government for the benefit of the people, I believe the resultant revenue would soon offset, if not wipe out, the debts of our provinces and the national debt as well. I am not enthusiastic about public ownership, I never have been. I have always felt that employing of large staffs as well as competition with private business was not a desirable government activity. But it does seem to me in view of the probable electrical developments that lie ahead that public ownership in the operation and control of our water-powers might well be entertained. To-day we build bridges; no one is needed to look after these structures. Only one or two men would be required to look after a big power development. Thus the objection of a large personnel is now obviated so far as the public ownership of our water-powers is concerned.

Several advantages would follow the government construction of power dams. In the first place, there would be cheap money and cheap credit; in the second place, there would be no promoters' profits, the plant would be developed at cost, and in that way the power would reach the consumer on an actual cost basis. Therefore I believe the time has come when this country should reserve for the benefit of the people all the water-powers not already alienated, to be developed by the government when and as required for the benefit of the nation generally. I would not have the government engage in the retailing of the power thus generated; according to my plan it should sell the power en bloc to distributors as well as to large users of power. In this way the government would always be in a position to see that the charges to the consumer were fair and reasonable.

If any warning is required as to the danger we run in connection with the private development of electricity in this country, we do not need to look very far afield. I say, and I say it advisedly, Mr. Speaker, that the exploitation of water-powers in the United States is the crime of the century. The best people there realize it, and the information I am about to give hon. members is furnished me by men who are so wrought up over conditions in their own country that they have impressed on me, as they would impress on every member of parliament, the vital importance of preventing similar raids on our own water-powers. Why, I know of one little development of a few thousand horse-power that has changed hands five times in as many years, and to-day the securities representing the entire cost belong to whom? To those who own that water-power. But that is not all. One man in New York by the exploitation of water-powers in the United States cleaned up in 1927 the huge profit of one hundred million dollars. He has given no useful service whatever to his fellow-citizens by that sort of exploitation.

I hope the house will bear with me for a moment while I refer to one state of the union that has prevented similar raids on the public domain. California fortunately has a law on its statute books regulating the development of water-powers. That law has not been detrimental to the development of hydro-electric power within the state. I am told by reputable residents of California that private corporations have developed ample power to meet all requirements; but there has been no exploitation, simply because under that law the expenditure on power developments is supervised and the earnings are regulated.

Mr. DUNNING: If my hon. friend will permit me—that is a state law. In Canada it would be a provincial law.

Mr. GEARY: Not necessarily.

Mr. McRAE: True, it would apply to our provinces, and would serve them well. I think it would be advisable for the provincial legislatures and this parliament to enact legislation along similar lines.

I regret, Mr. Speaker, that I have fallen so far short in my attempt to lay before the house the great intrinsic values of the water-powers of the Dominion, water-powers which will flow forever, and which will steadily increase in value and in revenue as the years go by. Properly administered, these water-powers will be one of our greatest natural resources, and I for one believe that the time is opportune to surround their development with the restriction provided for by this amendment.

Mr. E. D. R. BISSETT (Springfield): Mr. Speaker, it had not been my intention to take part in this discussion, but inasmuch as most of those who have spoken have addressed themselves to the circumstances surrounding the granting of the lease of the Seven Sisters falls water-power site, I feel it incumbent to state to the house the part that I played in the transaction. I do not propose to discuss the lease between the Manitoba government and the Winnipeg Electric Railway Company or any subsidiary company; I consider that is a matter for discussion in the Manitoba legislature and not in this house. But if such is the case it might be interesting to find the reason why the members representing Manitoba in the federal house took a stand on this question at all. To do that it would be necessary to go back to a news item appearing in the Winnipeg papers in 1927, which stated that owing to a report from the city of Winnipeg, that the street railway company of that city had applied to the federal government for a lease of the Seven Sisters falls, the then leader of that government, Mr. Bracken, had stated that he was unalterably opposed to the street railway company getting that permit and was prepared to go, if necessary, as far as expropriating the Pinawa plant of the company on behalf of the province. When that news item reached Ottawa it was a matter of discussion among the Manitoba members, and in order to get behind the Manitoba government on the question a letter was drafted and sent to the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Stewart), on February 8, 1928. This letter reads:

> That we, the undersigned members of parliament for the province of Manitoba, respectfully request that the power site on the Winnipeg river known as the Seven Sisters falls be retained for the use of the government of the province of Manitoba in their own provincial hydro-electric system.

That was signed by the following members from Manitoba: Bissett, Bancroft, Steedsman, Milne, Ward, Lovie, Beaubien, Glen, Bird, Brown, McPherson, Howden, Thorson, McDiarmid, Woodsworth and Heaps. In other words, sixteen out of the seventeen members representing Manitoba signed this letter which was sent to the Minister of the Interior on February 8, 1928. Subsequently it was found that the government of Manitoba had changed their mind in respect to the development of this power; for after an investigation they had apparently come to the conclusion that it was not wise for the province as a province to develop this water-power. But the one thing I wish to point out here is that the legislative assembly of Manitoba had passed in 1927 a resolution reading:

> Therefore be it resolved that in the opinion of this house—

That is, the Manitoba legislature.

> —the government should press for the immediate granting by the federal government all rights to the Seven Sisters falls, situate on the Winnipeg river, said site to be held by the government on behalf of the province of Manitoba.

At the same time the city of Winnipeg passed a resolution protesting against the granting of a lease of the Seven Sisters falls power site on the Winnipeg river to the Backus-Seaman interest, the action of the committee in sending the city solicitor to Ottawa "to be approved and endorsed." The Manitoba members, as has been said by several speakers in this debate, had a good many discussions with the Minister of the Interior relative to this lease and finally, on May 15, 1928, wrote to the federal minister the following letter which was signed, not by all the Manitoba members but by the majority of them. I wish to discuss this letter somewhat in detail. It reads:

> The federal members, representing the province of Manitoba, have had before them the question of the disposal of the power of the Winnipeg river at Seven Sisters falls for some time, and after thoroughly going into the matter, beg to advise that their recommendation in connection with same is as follows:
> 1. That the site be not disposed of but that the matter be held in abeyance until the close of the next session of the provincial legislature for the purpose of giving the legislature of the province of Manitoba an opportunity to express its opinion in connection with the disposal of the said site or the development of it by the province of Manitoba.

Now the whole object of the Manitoba members in writing this clause into their letter was based on the fact that the Manitoba legislature—and the legislature, we are given to understand, is supreme—had by formal resolution requested that this particular power site, which was specified in the resolution, be held by and on behalf of the province of Manitoba. Clause 2 of the letter read:

> 2. That the said interval would afford the city of Winnipeg an opportunity to take a referendum vote on the question as to whether the said city desires to develop the power at said site in connection with their present hydro electric system.

That section of the letter was put in as a result of the resolution which I have quoted as having been passed by the city council of Winnipeg, which resolution protested against the Seven Sisters power site being handed over to private enterprise. The letter also requested:

> That in the event of the province of Manitoba deciding to develop the said power as a provincial undertaking, that they be given said right upon request.

And further, that if neither the province of Manitoba nor the city of Winnipeg wish to develop the said site, the present applicant, the Winnipeg Electric Railway Company, be given priority to any other private corporation to develop same, subject to the usual restrictions imposed by the water-power regulations.

Now I contend that that letter presented a very fair view on behalf of the Manitoba members. We insisted that inasmuch as the legislature of the province had asked that this site be held for the province, in our opinion this should be done; and we also asked that, inasmuch as the city of Winnipeg had protested against the alienation of this power to private interests, if the province was not interested the city of Winnipeg should be given the next opportunity to develop the site; and, thirdly, that failing either of these parties becoming interested, the railway company, the present applicant, should be considered ahead of any other applicants subsequently applying.

As the house has been told by a number of speakers, various interviews took place between the Minister of the Interior and the members from Manitoba, and I wish it distinctly understood that the Manitoba members were not all of one opinion regarding this proposition. The minister has been quoted with reference to a promise he gave the Manitoba members prior to prorogation, and which has been the subject of a great many remarks, not all of them to his credit. I feel that I should explain exactly what my position was with respect to the promise made by the minister. When the house prorogued I was under the impression that before anything further was done in regard to this power site I would be consulted, and I want the house to understand that prior to the conference and agreement being signed between the provincial and federal governments with respect to the natural resources I had not changed my mind in regard to this deal between the street railway company and the provincial government. Further I want to say that until the agreement was made between the province and the Dominion with reference to the transfer of the natural resources I did not at any time see the minister or have any discussion with him by letter or otherwise in regard to the matter.

[Mr. McRae.]

However, I must say that I saw the minister in Winnipeg, after the agreement was signed, and with a number of other members discussed the whole agreement with him. On that occasion I told the minister that since there was an agreement in existence between the province of Manitoba and the federal government with respect to the disposition of the natural resources, my position was that the federal government should stand by that agreement. I want this distinctly understood: Had I been able to express myself prior to the drawing up of this agreement I would have objected to the insertion of clause 6; however, I did not have the opportunity of doing so and rather than see the agreement jeopardized by any controversy, which certainly would not have any effect on a binding agreement of that kind, I withdrew any opposition I had to the Seven Sisters deal, because it was bound up with the general natural resources agreement.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. BISSETT: Mr. Speaker, when the house rose at six o'clock I had just stated that at the time of my last interview with the Minister of the Interior the agreement between the province of Manitoba and the Dominion government relative to the transfer of the natural resources had been concluded. Consequently, I found I was in the position of having either to oppose the whole natural resources agreement or to accept it in toto, and inasmuch as the Seven Sisters power site was part of that agreement I was forced to withdraw any opposition I might have had to the Seven Sisters falls project going ahead. I contended then and I still contend that the Manitoba members should have been consulted prior to the inclusion of clause 6 in that agreement, but after considering the difficulty which has been encountered during the years since this natural resources agreement has been the subject of controversy within the province and within this house, I felt that I must not do anything which would in any way defeat that objective.

The resolution on the order paper reads:

> That, in the opinion of this house, no disposition of the natural resources,—

Or the water-powers, as the amended resolution reads.

> —under the control of the federal government, shall be effective until ratified by parliament.

I do not propose to vote for this resolution. I contend, rightly or wrongly, that the disposition of the natural resources in any of the provinces is not a matter for parliament, but is a matter for the legislatures of the provinces concerned. If the province of Manitoba had had full control of its natural resources this question of the Seven Sisters power site would never have arisen in this house, and, therefore, I urge again the necessity of turning over the natural resources of each of the provinces to their respective owners with as little delay as possible. I do not think it is fair for the members for Manitoba to try to interfere in any way with the natural resources belonging to the provinces of Saskatchewan or Alberta. We have it on the word of the Prime Minister that agreements along the lines of the Manitoba agreement have been effected with the other provinces, so I do not think there is any necessity for this resolution.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I want to say that I opposed and still oppose the alienation of the Seven Sisters power site in the public domain of the province of Manitoba and I regret that this very valuable power site is lost to the public ownership interests in that province. As I stated at the beginning of my remarks, the responsibility for this power site being handed over to private interests is a matter which rests entirely with the legislators of the province of Manitoba, and any criticisms I have to make will be made as a private citizen of that province and not as a member of this house.

Mr. A. A. HEAPS (North Winnipeg): Mr. Speaker, just prior to the adjournment at six o'clock we listened to an address from the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Stewart). I have listened to that hon. gentleman on many occasions, but I have never seen him exhibit so much heat, so much power and so little light as he did this afternoon. He was anything but illuminating on this particular question. He did not seem to remember very much about dates, but he made one or two references to the Manitoba government having the right of the utilization of this site, and I asked him if he knew the date in 1927.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes, in 1927.

Mr. HEAPS: I would be very glad to have the minister give me that date, because I have been looking over the correspondence which has been tabled and I am unable to find that particular letter.

An hon. MEMBER: Put a question on the order paper.

Mr. HEAPS: There is no need of my putting a question on the order paper when all the correspondence has been asked for in connection with the Seven Sisters site. The only intimation I can find, after a very hurried perusal of these documents, is where the Manitoba government on August 18th, 1928, relinquished claim to the site.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Mr. Bracken was given that assurance in my office in 1927.

Mr. HEAPS: Was that a verbal assurance?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes.

Mr. HEAPS: Of course this house is not acquainted with all the verbal assurances given by the minister with regard to the Seven Sisters falls.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I made that statement before and I simply reiterated it to-day.

Mr. HEAPS: I am not disputing that that statement was made, but I do think when a provincial government is offered its resources with a possible development of about 225,000 horse-power it requires something more than a mere verbal assurance from the minister; I think there should have been something in writing.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): No water-power site has been handed over by me without the consent of Premier Bracken, or any other western premier.

Mr. HEAPS: That is quite correct. All I wanted to know was whether there was anything in writing, some time in 1927, between the two governments in connection with the provincial government having the right to develop this site, apart altogether from the verbal assurance the minister informs the house he gave the Premier of Manitoba in 1927. Again looking up the correspondence tabled in the house last week, what do I find? On June 7, 1927, the following letter was addressed to J. T. Johnston, director of water-powers, Ottawa:

Dear Sir,

I hereby apply for a priority permit for the right to develop power on the reach of the Winnipeg river known as "Seven Sisters" in accordance with plans which are now being prepared and will be submitted to you in the near future.

It is desirous to have the permit issued in the name of a company which is now in process of incorporation. As soon as it has advanced sufficiently I shall furnish you with the name of the company in question, and which of course will be a subsidiary of Winnipeg Electric Company.

This is a continuation of the negotiations which have been carried on for some time with your department relative to power development at the above site.

Yours truly,

(Signed) E. Anderson,
Counsel.

This is from the Winnipeg Electric Company applying to the department at Ottawa for a priority permit for the development of this site. I would venture to state that when the company made application for this priority permit in 1927 they were pretty certain they were going to have the site. There is, of course, nothing on record to prove that. I am only expressing an opinion and I will support my opinion with one or two other letters that are on file. I read now a letter dated August 23, 1927, from the Winnipeg Electric Company, legal department, to J. T. Johnston, director of water-powers, Ottawa, Ontario:

Dear Sir: We have incorporated the Northwestern Power Company Limited under Dominion charter and it is in the name of this company that we desire to have the priority permit issued in respect of the Seven Sisters development,

Yours truly,

(Signed) E. Anderson,
Counsel.

Mr. RALSTON: Might I suggest that the hon. member read the answer to the first letter he just read, that of June 7? It would indicate the attitude of the minister.

Mr. HEAPS: Certainly. This is a letter dated June 13, 1927, from the Department of the Interior, addressed to E. Anderson, Esquire, counsel, legal department Winnipeg Electric Company:

Sir: This will acknowledge receipt of your letter of June 7, applying for a priority permit for the right to develop power on the reach of the Winnipeg river known as the Seven Sisters, in accordance with plans which are now being prepared and which will be submitted in the near future.

I note that it is desired to have the permit issued in the name of a company which is now in process of incorporation and that as soon as this has advanced sufficiently you will furnish me with the name of the company in question. It is noted further that this application is a continuation of the negotiations which have been carried on for some time with this department relative to power development at the above site.

As you are aware, in view of our commitments to the province in respect to the development of this Seven Sisters reach, it will be necessary to have an exchange of views between all parties concerned, centering around the securing of the maximum possible power output from the combined Pinawa-Seven Sisters reach, before any final commitment will be made by this department. In the meantime, pending the receipt of your further material in support of your application, your application for a priority permit is duly recorded on our files.

Your obedient servant,

(Signed) J. T. Johnston,
Director.

But I notice there is nothing on file from the Manitoba government.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): If I infer correctly, the hon. member is endeavouring to prove that we were blocking the Manitoba government's attempts to get this power site. In view of what he is endeavouring to do, may I ask this question: did Mr. Bracken or anyone in the Manitoba government ever suggest that they had a priority permit for that power site?

Mr. HEAPS: I am not making any such suggestion just now.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): What is the hon. member trying to do?

Mr. HEAPS: What I want to point out is that the minister has on more than one occasion stated that the provincial government were advised of everything that was taking place in reference to this power development.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Absolutely.

Mr. HEAPS: Were the provincial government advised immediately after June 7, when this communication was signed by the minister's department, that the Winnipeg Electric Company had made application for a priority permit?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): They were kept advised of everything. Not only that, but my hon. friend well knows that from 1927 onwards they were negotiating with the Winnipeg Electric Company about this very matter, and there certainly was no attempt on our part to hide or withhold anything from the Manitoba government. The contrary is the case.

Mr. HEAPS: To me it is rather surprising that if the Manitoba government were being kept advised of everything that was taking place here, there were no communications sent from the department to the Manitoba government.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): May I refer the hon. member to the letter written by Mr. Bracken in which he states that he has now made a satisfactory arrangement with the Winnipeg Electric Company and asks that his priority permit do not have precedence, but points out that if I refuse to deal with the Winnipeg Electric he wants to be put back in the old position. That is on the files.

Mr. HEAPS: That communication was some time in 1928.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I am speaking of the whole proceeding. That communication came from Premier Bracken to me and it is direct evidence that he, at all events, felt he had priority in connection with the permit.

Mr. HEAPS: I am a little at a loss fully to understand the minister in his statements. I would very much like to follow him and endeavour to find a basis for his argument; but in this correspondence that has been tabled there are only three or four letters for the whole of 1927 and nothing to show that the provincial government knew what negotiations were taking place between the minister or the head of his department and the Winnipeg Electric Company, and all I can go by is what is actually on record. I do not know what conversations took place between the minister and the Manitoba government.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I am asking the hon. member not to depend on conversations but on the letter which is a clear indication that during the whole proceeding the Manitoba government had no other idea than that they occupied a priority position, which they did.

Mr. HEAPS: If they did, it was only in a verbal sense anad not in a written sense. I think that is fairly clear from the statements made this evening by the minister himself.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I am not going to argue further with my hon. friend.

Mr. HEAPS: All I am trying to do is to get the facts.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Well, my hon. friend has them.

Mr. HEAPS: I would be satisfied if I had them and I will have to place my interpretation upon the correspondence tabled. Nobody in Manitoba seemed to know in 1927 that a company had been formed for the purpose of taking over the Seven Sisters site. It came as a distinct surprise to me and it was only lately that most people in Manitoba became aware of the fact. When we met the minister in conversations on so many occasions last year I do not think any statement was made in reference to any company having been formed for the purpose of taking over this particular power site. In October and November of 1928 the same company wrote to the department in regard to lands which were then being acquired by private individuals, protesting against those people obtaining lands because they thought if those lands were obtained, the development of the power site might be in some way interfered with. The Manitoba government never wrote about that. They never made any protest about this land being obtained by those private individuals. It was practically all a matter of negotiations that were carried on between the private corporation and the government.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I do not propose to let my hon. friend during the course of the debate get away with any insinuations in regard to the matter. I told him to-night, speaking before six o'clock, that the Winnipeg Electric had those lands secured in 1906—he will find that if he will refer to his notes—and that negotiations had been pending for more than eighteen months between the company and the Manitoba government in respect to the matter. Evidently at that time the company felt that they were going to make an arrangement with the Manitoba government. I have no knowledge of that.

Mr. HEAPS: The minister has just stated that in 1906 the Winnipeg Electric Company was buying up land.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Around the Seven Sisters.

Mr. HEAPS: Did not the minister say that there was no land being bought up in 1927 by the Winnipeg Electric Company?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): No, I did not say anything of the kind; you are saying that.

Mr. HEAPS: Agents secured land for the company near the site of the Seven Sisters falls. Allow me to read this letter from Mr. Anderson, counsel of the Winnipeg Electric Company, addressed to the water-powers branch, under the date of October 28, 1927:

> I am informed that someone has applied for homestead rights, or right to purchase two legal subdivisions 9 and 10, section 25, township 30, range 11, east. As this land is in the vicinity of Seven Sisters falls it would be reserved for water-power purposes.
> I understand the Dominion Lands office here is to give an answer to the applicant on or before the 25th November. Perhaps you will be good enough to take this up with the proper department at Ottawa and see that the land is reserved for water-power purposes.

There is another letter of a similar character in regard to people who were contemplating building summer cottages in that district, and the government was asked to try to prevent them from building because of the damages that might subsequently ensue.

Mr. BOWMAN: Was not that the right thing to do?

Mr. HEAPS: They seemed to have a pretty good idea at that time as to what was going to be done. That was in October, 1927.

The minister told us this afternoon that his department had made a very good contract with the company. Well, about ten days ago one of the directors of the Winnipeg Electric Company was on the stand in Winnipeg giving evidence, and he said that the company had also made a pretty good contract with the government. I leave it to the ordinary member to say which party would be likely to get the best of such a bargain. Having had a little experience with these public utility corporations myself, I have no hesitation in saying that there is no contract which the minister or his department could enter into with a private corporation that could not be shot full of holes. No contract is proof against the wiles of lawyers when it comes to shooting holes in it. I have had that experience in Winnipeg, and thirty or fifty years from now you will find this agreement so hedged around in a thousand ways that it will be almost impossible for the people of Manitoba to own that utility.

For the benefit of one of my hon. friends from Manitoba who thought the government had done very well in this contract, and asked how much the site was really worth, let me quote from the financial page of a newspaper which certainly will not be accused of public ownership tendencies, the Montreal Star. In its issue of January 25, 1929, about six weeks ago, it had this to say, in a little item on its financial page, headed "Seven Sisters Power":

Seven Sisters Power

"The Seven Sisters Power financial plan will be announced shortly and it is understood that Winnipeg Electric will be given 80 per cent of the common stock of the company," state O'Brien & Williams, members of the Montreal Stock Exchange. The item adds: "When Winnipeg was handed 60,000 shares of Manitoba Power, under similar circumstances nothing was thought of the transaction yet the Manitoba Power shares last year sold far over $100 on the market and it was rumored that control of Manitoba could have been sold for 200. As Winnipeg now owns 100,000 shares of Manitoba people did not need a pencil to calculate that Winnipeg had been given an asset on a silver platter that might be conservatively valued at from $15,000,000 to $20,000,000. The believers in Winnipeg Electric, with the Seven Sisters project in mind, are expecting history to repeat itself".

That will give hon. members some idea of the value people on the stock exchange attach to the power site.

Let me give this other illustration for the benefit of some of my hon. friends from Manitoba. There was a proposal made for the canalization on the St. Lawrence waterway which has come to be known as the Beauharnois scheme. People were prepared to develop that canalization scheme for nothing, provided they got the rights to the power incidental to its development. I am informed by what I believe to be reliable authorities that the total amount of horse-power that could be developed in the Beauharnois project is about equal to the water-power that could be developed at Seven Sisters. Putting one project against the other, you get some idea of the value of the Seven Sisters power site on a commercial basis.

My hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre put the value of the site at $28,000,000. I want to give you another idea of its value, particularly for the benefit of my friends from Manitoba. When the Manitoba members were discussing this project one day with Mr. Anderson of the Winnipeg Electric Company, who now is its president, he put the value of 35,000 horse-power at the Pinawa plant, where the rights run in perpetuity, at $15,000,000. That was no doubt a very high estimate, but if you reduce that considerably, and calculate the value of the Seven Sisters site on the same basis, it would be worth in the neighbourhood of $40,000,000, not $28,000,000. Those who are in touch with water-power development estimate that two dollars per horse-power per year would not be a very high figure for a power development such as that at Seven Sisters, and at that rate of two dollars per horse-power per year, for 200,000 horse-power continued for some thirty to fifty years—well, hon. gentlemen opposite can very easily calculate what that site should be worth in dollars and cents.

I want to deal for a few moments with one or two remarks that were made in this debate by some of my hon. friends from the province of Manitoba. The hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Glen), speaking the other day, seemed to castigate me because I had suggested that when the hon. member and some of his friends went to the Royal Alexandra hotel in Winnipeg to meet the minister, they met in a back room. Of course I knew very well that when the minister went to the hotel to consult with the Manitoba members and deal with the question of the Seven Sisters site he would not meet them in a back room of the Royal Alexandra or any other hotel. I knew that he would have a suite of rooms befitting the dignity of a minister, and meet the members in a nice, large, airy room. What I implied was that it was a room that the public had not access to. I was using the words in a metaphorical sense; I meant that they met in a room to which the press did not have access, and where the people of Manitoba did not know what was going on. I am sure the hon. member for Marquette would admit that the people of Manitoba were vitally interested in what the disposition of the site was going to be. So far as the seven members who were present are concerned, I have really little to say.

Mr. DUFF: One for each sister.

Mr. HEAPS: I do not wish to make any references to that; that more becomes my hon. friend.

Speaking the other day on this question, the hon. member for Marquette made the following statement, which I do not think was altogether in keeping with the remarks he has made previously on this question. He said:

> The lease was granted by this government on the request by order in council of the government of Manitoba. There was the considered opinion of the province of Manitoba asking that the lease be granted to a particular company, and expressed in the form of an order in council, and this government naturally acceeded to that request, as they were bound to do.

When my hon. friend considers the statement which he made I think he will agree with me that it does not do his previous utterances justice. He will not say for one moment that the opinions expressed by the Premier of Manitoba were the considered opinions of the province. They certainly were not. Perhaps I could not answer the hon. member for Marquette better than by reading the telegram which he sent to the Minister of the Interior on September 8, 1928, and which will be found in the correspondence tabled last week. When the hon. member, along with the other members from Manitoba, received a telegram from the Minister of the Interior to the effect that he had made the best agreement possible, my hon. friend sent this message in reply:

> Received your wire. Regret decision that federal government should give lease. I still feel you should hand over all documents to provincial government and they attend to completion of them. Correspondence should be immediately published and you should have no dealings with company.

Mr. GLEN: Exactly my position.

Mr. HEAPS: I quite agree with that statement, but I do not agree with the statement the hon. gentleman made in this house on Friday last. The two are at complete variance. Undoubtedly if the Minister of the Interior had handed over this power site to the provincial government to deal with as they saw fit, they would have been compelled to submit their decision to the legislature, and I would have had no fault to find with the action of the minister.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Oh yes, you would.

Mr. HEAPS: I think the hon. minister is a little bit too presumptuous.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Not a particle.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. HEAPS: I have given the minister no occasion to be offensive. This afternoon he made certain remarks which I resented, and if other members conducted the debate in the same way, as did the minister, this house would be denied all opportunity of intelligent discussion. He pointed to this corner of the house and accused the members sitting here of not knowing what they were talking about. I would not make such a remark in reference to any hon. member, no matter in what corner of the house he happened to sit. In making a statement of that character I am forced to the conclusion that the minister was not acquainted with all the facts. It is just possible that some of us who are criticizing his action may have some little understanding of the situation so far as hydro-electric development in the city of Winnipeg is concerned. Prior to my becoming a member of this house I spent almost nine years in the city council of Winnipeg, and during the major part of that time I was closely identified with the hydro-electric development in relation to the city's public utilities. When the minister taunts us in this corner with not knowing what we are talking about on hydro-electric development, it seems to me he should be a little better grounded in his facts.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I did not make that particular statement—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I think I am in order; when I am out of order I will resume my seat. The statement I made this afternoon had reference only to this particular lease that we are discussing. I am not accusing my hon. friend of not knowing all about the Winnipeg Electric.

Mr. HEAPS: This lease, Mr. Speaker, is very closely bound up with hydro-electric development in Winnipeg. No other part of Manitoba has the same vital interest in the terms of the lease as have the people of that city.

Mr. GLEN: Will you allow me a question? In reference to some words of mine that the hon. member quoted, I do not wish to accuse him of misleading the house as to what I intended to say; but if he will look at what I said he will appreciate that I was speaking with regard to the lease. I said that that lease was granted at the request of the government of Manitoba through an order in council, and I went further and said that the federal government naturally acceded to that request. Has the hon. gentleman forgotten that already this government had undertaken to deal with the power site at the wish and pleasure of the province of Manitoba, and they were naturally bound to do so?

Mr. HEAPS: That is the hon. member's explanation, and he has read exactly what I read. Consequently I do not see that I can be accused of misquoting him.

Mr. GLEN: The hon. member is not misquoting, but he attempted to convey something different from what I intended to convey.

Mr. HEAPS: I do not think I conveyed anything except what is stated by the hon. gentleman himself. I am afraid I did not know what his intentions were in the matter, but I am ready to give him credit for good intentions.

While the agreement was made some time in July, I think if no arrangement had been made between the province of Manitoba and the federal government—again I am only expressing an opinion—the lease anyhow would have been made to the Winnipeg Electric Company. In my opinion the lease of July was only a more respectable way of handing over the power site than if it had been dealt with directly. It also afforded a very good reason for some of my hon. friends to be able to say: Now that the federal government have agreed to hand over its natural resources to the province of Manitoba, we cannot oppose the action of the government. The very haste with which the lease was made in the early part of July of last year lends weight to that particular interpretation.

Mr. GLEN: It is an opinion.

Mr. HEAPS: Yes, it is an opinion on which we both differ. My hon. friend knows how to hold to his opinion; I shall hold to mine; and in the ultimate I suppose the people of Manitoba will be the judges.

I intend, Mr. Speaker, to vote for the amendment. Not because it happens to be moved by a member of the Conservative party; I would have voted for it had it come from any other section of the house. One of the first things I did this session was to ask the right hon. Prime Minister, in connection with the St. Lawrence development, whether the house would be given an opportunity to discuss the question. I am in favour of all these important questions being dealt with by parliament, not by order in council. I believe that is good Liberal doctrine. I know it is characteristic for the Conservative party to become Liberal when in opposition, and for the Liberal party to become Conservative when in power. Evidently we are witnessing such a phenomenon at the present time on the question of orders in council. I remember very well that one of the very last speeches by the grand old chieftain of the Liberal party, Sir Wilfrid Laurier, was delivered in the city of Ottawa in January of 1919, and it was a scathing denunciation of government by order in council. I oppose government by order in council, whether it has to do with the Beauharnois scheme or with the Seven Sisters scheme. If the province of Manitoba were in full possession of their natural resources, I could have no objection whatsoever to any disposition that the provincial government might make of this particular power site. But the Manitoba government did not have that power last year when they requested the Dominion government to hand over the Seven Sisters power site to the Winnipeg Electric Company. If this resolution we are now considering had been in effect a year ago, then I believe we should all have been better off for it; and the fact that it would have been a good thing a year ago is no argument that it is not a good thing to-day. It merely indicates that we are somewhat late in having a motion of this character discussed by the house. The resolution is not aimed at Saskatchewan or Alberta or any of the other provinces. I believe that if this resolution were adopted by this house such questions as the Beauharnois development on the St. Lawrence would also of necessity have to come to the house for ratification. And why not? After all this house has to assume the final responsibility.

This afternoon I listened to the very eloquent speech of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell). The hon. gentleman spoke of what would happen in the event of the delay that would be occasioned if this house approved of this resolution for the ratification of water-power leases. But what is happening now in connection with the Seven Sisters lease? Has not the Manitoba government, even at this late hour, said to its legislature that it intends submitting to that body the agreement for ratification? Does not that in itself indicate that delay is not of such great consequence? When a power development is under consideration, covering a lease of fifty years or probably longer, then a delay of three or four months is of little consequence to the people of the Dominion. Moreover, these private corporations who intend to develop these natural resources are not undertaking their development from philanthropic motives; they are developing them because they believe it will be profitable. I am sure, therefore, that these financial corporations could very well afford to wait a few months until parliament could ratify an agreement. Consequently I am in favour of the amendment, which has now been restricted to water-powers. The case of Alberta has been cited by my hon. friend from East Calgary (Mr. Adshead). I want to assure him that there is no analogy between Alberta and Manitoba; the two cases are entirely different. Alberta has no publicly owned development; the development there is carried on by private utilities. In Manitoba, however, we have a very large development by publicly owned utilities and a large development by private enterprise, and in my opinion if Alberta were in the same position as we are in in the province of Manitoba they would be fighting for their power rights just as the members from Winnipeg are fighting.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Did not the government of the Dominion consult the Premier of Alberta, and not the legislature?

Mr. HEAPS: That is perfectly true; he did. At the same time, let me point out, he did not consult with the members from the province of Alberta, whereas in this case the minister consulted with the members from Manitoba, giving them an undertaking that no action would be taken until they had composed their differences. And no hon. member will get up to-day and say that we have composed our differences. We are almost in the same position as we were in last year; we have not composed our differences. Consequently, when that statement was made by the Minister of the Interior on the 6th June, 1928, we accepted his pledge implicitly; and because he gave that pledge we decided to take no further action in parliament. Had the minister stated on June 6, 1928, that it was his intention to hand over the site to the private company for development, ways and means would have been found in this house of testing the feeling of the house as to whether that was the right and proper thing to do. We therefore let the opportunity go by last year, when we had that opportunity, because of a statement made in this house, and consequently we have a right to feel somewhat disappointed at the attitude of the minister on the question. I am not questioning that he did what he considered to be in the best interests of all concerned, but I question whether he used the best judgment in the circumstances. And there is, of course, a big difference between the two.

In a way I am sorry to see the fight between the private and public utilities of Manitoba brought into discussion on the floor of the house; I should prefer to have seen the question fought out in Manitoba. And had the matter been fought there I am satisfied on which side the people of Manitoba would have stood. There is no question about it. One of the reasons why the Premier of Manitoba did not want that agreement sent direct from the government to the private company was the fact that he was not too anxious to submit the matter to the legislature of Manitoba. He was not sure whether the legislature would adopt it. We see what has happened in that province. I am safe in saying that the Premier of Manitoba to-day has completely lost the confidence of the people of that province.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. HEAPS: Are my Liberal friends coming to the support of the Premier of Manitoba?

Hon. CHARLES A. DUNNING (Minister of Railways and Canals): The resolution now before the house, with the amendment thereto, is fraught with such serious consequences to industrial development in the prairie provinces that I cannot allow the discussion to close without contributing some remarks on the subject.

One of the great problems of Canadian development in the past twenty-five years has been the fact that there has been comparatively little industrial development in western Canada while there has been a very marked industrial development in the east. During the past few years a change has come about and western Canada is now experiencing a greater industrial development than at any period in its history—an industrial development which I feel sure will go far to maintain that balance between agriculture and industry which is a necessity if a country is to be permanently prosperous.

The resolution as drawn on the record is entirely impractical; it would involve in effect an act of parliament for the disposition of any of the resources presently administered by the Dominion in the three prairie provinces, whether those resources be land, water-powers, minerals, coal, timber or anything else —a situation which does not obtain in any of the other provinces of Canada which control their own resources. I gather from the discussion that the resolution was framed in order to give my hon. friend who introduced it (Mr. Woodsworth), and others, an opportunity of expressing in this house their views in connection with the particular disposition of the Seven Sisters falls rather than an opportunity for discussing the whole broad general question as it relates to the three prairie provinces.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I have already said that such was not my purpose in introducing the resolution.

Mr. DUNNING: The discussion has been very generally directed to that one transaction, and I think my hon. friend will agree with me that he did not advance very cogent reasons for the adoption of his resolution in its wide application, as indicated by its language. He did not advance cogent reasons as to why, for instance, the land policy of the Dominion with respect to western Canada should be wiped out, why that great body of law which has been built up in the fifty years since confederation, to control the actions of the minister and of the government in administering the resources, should be abolished with a scratch of the pen, as would be necessary if the resolution were adopted, so that the policy should be followed of saying to every one, "Well, we cannot tell you whether you can get this piece of land, or timber, or water-power, or these minerals: you will have to wait until parliament acts", —the parliament of Canada being the House of Commons and the Senate in parliament assembled. That is what his resolution means, and I am in the judgment of the house as to whether my hon. friend did advance any cogent reasons why such an important change in public policy should be brought about at the present time. I am concerned with it, I say, because of the industrial development presently taking place in western Canada, a development largely based upon the natural resources of that part of Canada which are now receiving, in one way or another, greater attention than has been the case previously in the history of the country.

Let us take one stream and consider the effect of the amendment relating to water-powers; take the Winnipeg river. The water in the Winnipeg river, so long as it remains in the province of Ontario, could be disposed of by an order in council from Queen's Park, Toronto, but once that water passed the boundary of Manitoba, if my hon. friend's amendment carried, an act of this parliament, confirmed by the senate, would be required before any use could be made of it. That is the ridiculous situation which would be brought about by the amendment moved by the acting leader of the opposition (Mr. Guthrie) in connection with just that one stream.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: May I ask as a matter of fact whether the development of the upper reaches of the Winnipeg river is not handled by this government for the welfare of Canada as a whole?

Mr. DUNNING: I do not believe that is a fact. The government of Canada have cooperated in conservation matters on that particular river, but I am in the judgment of the Minister of the Interior as to whether the disposition of the water-power of the Winnipeg river in Ontario is not in the hands of the provincial government. The moment the water passes into the province of Manitoba, however, if the amendment moved by the acting leader of the opposition went into effect, an act of parliament would be necessary to make it available to the industries of Manitoba.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I do not want to interrupt—

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend has made two speeches on this subject already, and I propose to take up only ten or fifteen minutes of the time of the house. I do not wish to make any insinuations about my hon. friend's motives in moving this resolution; I believe him to be quite sincere, but I do think he displayed bad judgment in the drafting of the resolution. I will not say of him unkind things such as he has said of the Minister of the Interior, but I have some knowledge of the difficulties with which the minister has to deal in connection with these matters of leases and so on, and I know that no man who has occupied that position has guarded the public interest more meticulously than has the present Minister of the Interior.

Then let us pass on from the water in the Winnipeg river; let us consider the prospector who is in the Rocky mountains looking for a ledge of gold or some other precious or base metal. When he found that ledge, if my hon. friend's system were in vogue he would have to worry about which side of the divide he was on, and sometimes in the Rocky mountains it is rather difficult to tell which side of the divide you are on. If he were on the British Columbia side he could go to the office of the nearest mining recorder and there and then get possession of his claim subject to the laws of the province, but if my hon. friend's system were in operation and his find happened to be on the Alberta side of the divide, an act of this parliament confirmed by the senate would be necessary before that prospector could do anything. Surely that is an absurd situation. As I say, this parliament has taken fifty years to build up a body of law which will ensure that successive ministers will administer these resources in the best interests of the people of the country. Parliament is made acquainted each year, through documents tabled here, with the manner in which the minister for the time being has been discharging his stewardship, and of the hundreds and thousands of dispositions which have taken place and which have been reported to this house, the only one to be discussed during the course of this debate is that in connection with the Seven Sisters falls.

Now may I refer to the policy of taking advice from the provincial governments of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta with respect to the disposition of their important resources. I want to say that ever since the present government came into office in 1921 the Minister of the Interior has consistently followed the policy of consulting the western governments with respect to the disposition of major resources of this character. He consistently consulted me during the time I was premier of my province; I know he has consistently consulted the premier of Alberta and the premier of Manitoba as well during that period. Is that policy wrong? It is an acknowledgment of what we were debating in this house the other day; it is an acknowledgment that with respect to these resources in these three prairie provinces the Dominion is in reality a trustee. These provinces have had responsible government for nearly twenty-five years. Who then should speak for the people of these provinces if not the responsible governments elected by the people? How can this government expect to secure information with respect to what the people of a province require if not from the government of that province? What would be said if we refused to regard a statement made by the government of Ontario or the government of Quebec, as expressing the will of the people of these provinces? One has only to imagine it.

Mr. BOIVIN: We would not put up with it.

Mr. DUNNING: That is what we would have to put up with in the west if the sort of thing advocated by the resolution and the amendment were permitted.

I listened with a great deal of interest and pleasure to the hon. member for Vancouver North (Mr. McRae); I was very much interested in what he said in respect to water-power and the desirability of public control—and I use those words "public control" advisedly, because that does not always involve public development even in the public-ownership province of Ontario. However, I suggest that my hon. friend was preaching to the wrong congregation this afternoon. When he spoke, and spoke truly, of the situation which has developed in the United States he did not answer his own obvious question, "Why has it developed?" It has developed because in the United States, as in Canada, there is a federal system of government and the states do control their own water-power. He cited one instance which proved that point, when he referred to the very excellent laws on the statute books of the state of California for the control of water-powers within that state. Yes, that is true; the laws are on the statute books of the state of California, and not on those of the congress of the United States. His arguments were splendid, but they were addressed to the wrong body.

However, I agree that his argument would apply with respect to the Northwest territories lying north of our existing provinces; I think my hon. friend made reference to the Northwest territories and the wonderful water-powers on the northern rivers. It seems a strange thing that after starting to deal with all the resources of the country the discussion finally narrows down to water-powers, and then practically altogether to the water-power of the middle west. My hon. friend even left those alone; he was inclined to concede that with respect to the resources of the western provinces the governments of those provinces should be considered, and then he went away off to the north of the existing boundaries of our western provinces, although I venture to say that not a single water-power has been alienated in that region as yet, because no one wants them. I agree that it is well for this parliament and for all the provincial legislatures having these matters within their control to bear in mind what my hon. friend said with regard to the necessity of conserving these great resources for the maximum benefit to the public to whom they belong, but again it is a question of whose jurisdiction obtains. If this parliament or any member of it set up a claim to-day to the water-powers of the province of Quebec or those of the province of Ontario I can just see my hon. friends opposite rising in their serried ranks to protest against any such claim on the ground of provincial rights. We have often heard that cry in this house, but we in the west possess provincial rights just as much as they are possessed in the older provinces of Ontario and Quebec.

Mr. HOCKEN: You have not got them.

Mr. DUNNING: We are progressing in that direction, and this government has made greater progress in that way than any other government since the provinces were formed, and we intend to continue along that line. The criticism which has been directed against the Minister of the Interior has been directed against him because he has gone further in an acknowledgement of the provincial rights of the province of Manitoba than any other minister of the interior ever went. That is the reason for all the criticism, and that government is not regarded as a supporter of this government politically; it is a Progressive government.

Mr. HOCKEN: What is the difference?

Mr. DUNNING: I will let hon. gentlemen in the corner speak and vote for themselves in that regard. My hon. friends do not seem to have much difficulty in cooperating with them on some matters this session, and we will just see how that works out in the course of time.

There can be no question in the mind of anyone that the minister acted in accordance with the desires of the government of Manitoba, a government which must be presumed a responsible government, responsible to the legislature of that province. Let me apply the principle to the province of Alberta. Would anyone in this house say that if the government of Alberta were consulted, as is frequently the case, by the Minister of the Interior with respect to the disposition of major resources of that province, the minister should ignore the recommendation of the province and regard that government as not representing their province?

Mr. IRVINE: Precisely what he has done.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Where?

Mr. IRVINE: Spray lakes.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I deny that charge, and I want the hon. member to take it back. At no stage did I not consult with the province of Alberta.

Mr. DUNNING: If the hon. member is correct, then the Minister of the Interior is to get it coming and going; he is to be wrong if he does consult with the provincial government and take their views, and he is to be wrong if he does not consult with them. Applying the principle of public ownership to the province which is the best known throughout the world for public ownership development of electrical power—the province of Ontario—I believe I am correct in saying that power sites are disposed of to private interests; not all the power sites in the province of Ontario are held for ever until they can be incorporated in the provincially owned power system. I do not blame the province of Ontario for doing this; they are dealing with a condition and not a theory. There are areas in the northern part of that province similar to the northern parts of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta where great developments are in prospect; where for many years there can be but one user of the electrical powers created. I do not blame the Ontario government for saying in such cases, "You can have this power to develop, but it must be developed under certain terms." That is precisely what is happening in the northern parts of Manitoba and Saskatchewan; I do not know so much about Alberta.

If any such amendment as this passed the house, carrying with it as it would the necessity of amending the law, it would tend to strangle, as nothing else could, the industrial development of the resources of northern Manitoba and northern Saskatchewan. Why is that? In certain parts of this country it is possible to get coal for the purpose of developing the large base metal resources, but in these northern parts it is necessary on economic grounds to use electricity, and that electricity can only be secured from one source, the streams and falls which are there. Shall we refuse to allow that development to go on? Shall we say to everyone, "You must take the chance of running the gauntlet of parliament"? This house could do nothing which would be more sure of stifling and strangling the industrial development of the northern parts of those western provinces than to pass this resolution or the amendment and to amend the laws which would be necessary to be amended if the resolution or the amendment were passed. For these reasons, Mr. Speaker, which are satisfactory to me, I intend to vote against both the resolution and the amendment.

Mr. G. R. GEARY (South Toronto): Mr. Speaker, it may be assumed from the speeches of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) and the member for Melfort (Mr. McLean) that water-powers as distinguished from other natural resources have some special attributes and characteristics. That being the case, it follows naturally that they are deserving of some special treatment, and this amendment, as I read it, provides that special treatment. The resolution, as amended, reads:

> That, in the opinion of this house, no disposition of the water-powers, under the control of the federal government, shall be effective until ratified by parliament.

I understood the Prime Minister to say the other day that we would be breaking an agreement by the passing of this amendment —referring, I take it, to the agreement made with the province of Manitoba in July of last year. With all due respect, Mr. Speaker, I cannot see how that could be. If that agreement entered into under an order in council in July last is a binding agreement as to resources under the control of the federal government, then this resolution cannot be said to be a breach of that agreement because it deals with the resources now under the control of the federal government. If the resources passed under that agreement from the control of the federal government no action of this house under the resolution could have any effect upon that contract. It has been said that we would be acting in breach of that agreement by discussing the matter in parliament and passing a resolution which refused to ratify the agreement. I say that is precisely what parliament is for, otherwise why do we bring conventions and protocols here for ratification? Simply to have the rubber stamp of parliament's approval put upon them, or to have discussions upon them and to ratify them when found proper? The Prime Minister, speaking only a few days ago on the proposed amendment to the Navigable Waters Protection Act, told the house that there was already a clause in that act which would enable parliament to undo what had been done by order in council or through the granting of a permit under the provisions of that act. In principle that is the sort of thing we are doing here to-day. We are discussing this matter after the thing has been done; whether it should have been done and whether or not it should be ratified. If we have not the power to change it no harm is done; if it requires ratification we are within our rights in refusing ratification. In any case we have the satisfaction of having the whole question disclosed and aired in the house. I think the resolution as it now reads will find ready acceptance by the member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Thorson), and perhaps by the member for South Winnipeg (Mr. McDiarmid), who seems to have agreed throughout the negotiations with the member first named.

I do not think the member for Winnipeg South Centre is in the house, but he will recognize the words he used and which are found in Hansard of February 28, 1929, on page 559. He was there discussing clause 6 of the agreement entered into with the province of Manitoba in July of last year, and he says, at the bottom of the page:

> I have this criticism to make, namely, that the change in policy was so vital that it should not have become effective until ratified by parliament, and that a rider should have been attached to clause 6 of the natural resources agreement to the effect that until the fundamental change in the policy of administering the resources had been approved by parliament, the change of policy indicated by clause 6 should not go into effect.

On the same page, he has the following to say:

> In view of the differences of opinion that existed in this house; in view of the differences of opinion that existed in Manitoba; in view of the undertaking which the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Stewart) gave on the floor of this house, and in view of the developments that have taken place, I think it would have been a wise course to follow to take the view that before this fundamental change in the policy of administering the natural resources of Manitoba should come into effect, it should be ratified by parliament. That would have been in the interests of all concerned here; it would certainly have been in the interests of the government of Manitoba which finds itself in such difficulties to-day.

I assume that the member for Winnipeg South Centre, and the members of the house who agree with that hon. gentleman and have agreed with him throughout these negotiations, cannot do otherwise than support the amendment now before the house.

I am not so sure about the member for Marquette (Mr. Glen). There have been occasions when that hon. gentleman has been decidedly of one opinion, but when the time came for a vote he cast his vote the other way, and I believe that is his case to-day. Let me remind the house of what the member for Marquette said when this matter was under discussion on the 28th of February last. His remarks will be found on page 543 of Hansard and what his concern was throughout the negotiations with the Minister of the Interior is stated as follows:

> We were determined to do all in our power to delay the issuance of that lease until the representatives of the people of Manitoba had had an opportunity of declaring themselves on the matter in the legislative assembly.

That is good doctrine, and if those hon. gentlemen are disposed to adhere to what they said at that time, the opportunity is still before them to see that this particular transaction and others like it are ratified in the house and come up for discussion and action before the legislative assembly of Manitoba. As regards the Minister of Railways (Mr. Dunning), he can see no good whatever, now or at any previous time, in a member of the house holding views similar to those which have been expressed by my hon. friends from Marquette and Winnipeg South Centre. So in one case I would expect and in the other I would hope that when the yeas and nays are called for on this resolution, my two hon. friends, with those who have been closely associated with them, will be found voting in favour of the amendment now before the house. True, there is this to be said of the hon. member for Marquette, that he found himself at the end of his address able to say that he was supporting his government. He said:

> I believe that the province of Manitoba through its legislature is alone responsible to its citizens for what is done with that power site. Our duty ceased as soon as the agreement was arrived at between the Dominion government and the province.

I submit to the house for its consideration whether that last clause is inspired by some sort of feeling of relief or of disappointment.

I do not propose to refer at any length to the controversy that has arisen between the Minister of the Interior and certain hon members representing constituencies in Manitoba; but it seems to me strange that the other night—and I regret to say this is the second time I have spoken on this matter—the minister interrupted me when I was speaking, and his interruption was welcomed, to say that when he answered the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) last year, he was referring to a difference of opinion, not between parties in the legislative assembly or parties amongst the citizen body of Winnipeg or of Manitoba, but existing among members from Manitoba in this house. My hon. friend narrowed that a little again to-night. He said that he was quite willing and ready at all times to discuss matters with members representing constituencies in the particular province affected. He preferred to assuage the anxieties of the members from that particular province who were with him, thought as he did and sat on the same side of the house as he did. If it be a desirable thing that the Minister of the Interior, in discussing the affairs of his department and deciding what he is to do in carrying on those affairs, should consult any body of members of this house, even restricting that body to members of the house who are on the same side as he is then it seems to me a certain principle is admitted, namely, that all the members of the house are entitled to some opportunity for discussion and consideration of the action to be taken in regard to a transaction about to be consummated. Having admitted the principle, I cannot for the life of me see why he will not go the whole distance and say that, if it is proper to consult members from that particular province or even members from that province who sit on the same side of the house as he does, it is proper that he should consult all the members of parliament who are here and prepared to discuss matters of that sort. I think that was in the mind of the Minister of the Interior before, because there is in the file that was laid on the table a letter which shows conclusively that the question of having the legislature of Manitoba consider this particular transaction, the Seven Sisters falls, was before the parties who entered into the contract in August last, since Mr. Bracken writes to the Minister of the Interior as follows on 31st May, 1928. He had apparently been down here discussing the matter of the Seven Sisters falls with the Minister of the Interior. He begins his letter thus:

> In view of some of the statements made to us in the conference in Ottawa on Friday last with regard to the provincial legislature dealing the power question, I am transmitting to you for your information. . . . press reports of what different members of the legislature have said.

Therefore I take it that at the conference with the Minister of the Interior it was considered proper by at least some members of the conference that the matter should be considered by the legislature of Manitoba before action was finally taken. That is carrying out precisely the views of my hon. friends from Marquette and Winnipeg South Centre.

There is just one comment I have to make on the famous letter of June 7, and I am not going to refer again to what my hon. friend's action seems to have been, writing so soon after, in fact the next day after he had informed the house, as he did, that there should be no further delay. He says in this letter:

In view of the fact that delay of a month or so will not injure the prospects of this development—

I commend that to the hon. member for Melfort (Mr. McLean). As a matter of fact, the application was then practically one year old and applications for power development of any size—and power developments of any size are the only ones in which we are particularly concerned—do not suffer one bit by waiting over for a session of a legislature or of parliament. Everyone knows there is no enterprise or business undertaking that is so much sought for by certain monied interests as a water-power and its development. As a matter of fact, much higher prices may be realized if there is any delay in granting the lease or the right to develop the power. In any event it cannot be shown in a single instance the any damage would be done in the case of any individual water-power, especially one of great size or potentiality, if the matter had to rest over. A company having a permit and knowing that it had to obtain the approval of parliament, no harm would be done by its having to wait for that length of time.

As a matter of fact, I doubt if there would be any difficulty as regards financing, because once having secured a permit and no great public question being aroused over the matter, people could go so far as to finance the whole proposition on the assumption that the matter would, being altogether honest, straightforward and aboveboard, be ratified at the next session of the legislature or of parliament.

It may be said at this point that there is no provision in the resolution for securing ratification by the provincial legislature, but that would be a mere quibble. We cannot legislate in regard to the provincial assembly; we can legislate in regard to our own action, and when we say by resolution that no alienation of a water-power shall be given until ratified by this parliament, we are by that very act giving time for the provincial assembly to make up its mind and make its deliberations in the case of that water-power and to communicate the result to parliament. I venture to say, that being done, there would never be the slightest suggestion that it would not be sanctioned by parliament after having been passed by the provincial legislature concerned..

There is one feature to which I must refer in connection with the meeting at which this agreement was so hurriedly come to. This was on July 3. The matter about which most discussion arose, about which there was most concern, was what? Natural resources. The natural resources in the House of Commons are under the charge of the Minister of the Interior, and yet that meeting of representatives of the Dominion government and of the government of Manitoba met without the one man present who had the most to do with the whole transaction, and within whose knowledge it was whether or not the natural resources could be disposed of advantageously in any manner that might be suggested.

He did not know anything about it; he did not hear about it until after the whole thing had been done. Is it any wonder that my friends from Manitoba were slightly shocked to hear of the rapidity with which that particular transaction went through? Even after the door was locked, after that particular horse was stolen, they still had the consolation of meeting the minister at Winnipeg, at which meeting they made their protest, not sorry, I should judge in some cases, to find that their protests were all too late.

When that conference met in July, 1928, the ministers of the crown present knew, or if they did not they ought to have known, that there was great public discussion about the granting of a lease to a private corporation for the development of power at the Seven Sisters falls. That was a very important public matter. It was not a matter that was heard of merely round the corner; it was discussed in all the newspapers and formed the main topic of news and editorial writing for a very considerable time. It was a matter of the highest importance to the people of the city of Winnipeg, and yet it had not been heard of, according to the Prime Minister, it was not made a note of in carrying on the discussions and the negotiations, and it was not mentioned when the final agreement was carried through.

We are not discussing, I take it, so much what will happen in regard to this or that water-power. The Minister of Railways (Mr. Dunning) has made his whole attack upon the inconvenience in point of time that would occur because the granting of a lease had to await action by this house. What I take it is the point and the whole point of this discussion is whether or not we have abandoned to the government, to the executive, entirely so that we cannot have it back, the power of dealing with the vast natural resources, not by order in council, but by parliament in free and open discussion. That, it seems to me, is the point at issue here, and not the consideration of any question of mere delay being caused by the adoption of a rule that the granting of water-powers be ratified by this house. It has been part of the Liberal platform preached constantly and continuously to protest against government by order in council, and it seems to me that in negotiating this bargain the government would have been well advised to have remembered that policy and taken account of it by inserting into this arrangement with the province of Manitoba a provision either for ratification by this house or for opportunity to be given for the legislative assembly of Manitoba to consider the question before the site passed finally into the hands of private parties. It was not so in Alberta. In Alberta an agreement was drawn up which contained this clause: "This agreement is made subject to its being approved by the parliament of Canada and by the legislature of the province of Alberta, and shall take effect on the first day of the calendar month," and so on. If that was good practice in the case of Alberta, why was it not good practice in the case of Manitoba? Why was clause 6 of the Manitoba agreement which had to do with the transfer of the natural resources not made the subject of ratification as well as all the preceding clauses of the agreement which had been arrived at? It was done in the case of Alberta. Why was it not good for Manitoba?

Delay has been complained of. Was the government so anxious over the question of delay in regard to the natural resources of Alberta? Rumored criticism of the constitutional authority of the province under the provincial act of 1905 induced this government, after an agreement had been signed by both parties, to withhold it from submission to the legislature and to parliament, involving the delay of one year, for the purpose of submitting absolutely useless questions to the supreme court of this country. If the government is so anxious to get the natural resources into the hands of the people of the provinces, why was it necessary or advisable, or why did the government think at that time it was fair, to delay the transfer of the natural resources for a year? There was no questions then of delay being disastrous. The question of delay has come up here for the first time and is used simply as a make-weight in opposing this resolution, and not for any sound and valid reason that one can see.

The final argument was made by the Prime Minister. What was it? I read it as I go through my Hansard, and recognize it as the last word that the government has to say against this resolution. Gone from that argument is that lofty preaching of unity that we heard from every platform in this country. Gone from that argument too are the attempts at reasoning which have characterized the speeches of the Prime Minister in this house on that same subject before. In their place what do we find? Nothing but a heated appeal to sectional prejudice, nothing but an attempt to inflame—I will not say deliberate attempt, because perhaps that would not be fair; but something that might very well result in inflaming some sectional prejudice in the west against the east. It is easy to conjure up a spectre of that sort. It is very easy too, I might suggest to my right hon. friend, by suggesting dissension, and by talking dissension and insisting on dissension, in time to give that spectre somewhat of a body and make it somewhat of a menace in disturbing the peace of this country. I am hardly suggesting that the Prime Minister in conjuring up that spectre of dissension has any desire to fashion a tool for use in party politics. It must be that he simply made a mistake. But he should not think the people of the west or of the east are of that calibre that they are afraid to discuss matters, that they want to bury them out of sight, rather than meet them face to face. The men of the west as well as the men of the east can face their difficulties and smooth them over. They do not need to hide them out of sight. They are not afraid to discuss them frankly and freely in the open. Frank and free discussion is the only way in which to get a satisfactory solution of any public question. So we need not be afraid that by bringing up this question we are going to incur in the eastern provinces the enmity of the people in the west. I think better of the west than that. No matter if we in Ontario and Quebec have our natural resources—it would take a long time to explain; the cases are not analagous; there is no parallel between them—I take it that the men in the west, because we back an amendment such as is before the house requiring ratification by parliament before there is any more alienation of the natural resources, are not going to characterize us in the east as enemies to the progress of the west.

But the most serious argument that was made by the Prime Minister was this. The Prime Minister has made a party cry of the alleged Tory majority in the senate. He held in that last speech of his, as an argument against this measure, that by this amendment we are going to make the welfare, so to speak, of the people of the west dependent upon the will of a Tory majority in the senate. I wonder whether, if the Liberals had a majority in the senate, this argument would disappear. I take it that the argument is an acknowledgment by the Prime Minister that he has no trust in this parliament in connection with these matters. Because perforce a measure emanating from the Department of the Interior, as in this case, has to be brought before this house and so to the senate for ratification, surely it is wrong to say that as a certain party is in control in the senate ratification there would depend on political expediency. We have argued that in regard to all these matters they should be ratified by parliament, and that in the provincial sphere the legislative assembly has the same duty to perform in regard to its part. If we insist upon legislating by order in council we are removing these matters from the control of parliament. I take it the Prime Minister's whole objection on that point, when he refers to the Tory majority in the senate, is to leaving these matters to the judgment of parliament, that he insists on proceeding by order in council and is determined that parliament shall never have a voice in the matter one way or the other.

Are we to be governed by order in council, or are we to proceed in a free parliament by open discussion? That to my mind is the point at issue, and I submit that in regard to these major natural resources, such as water-powers, this parliament would be doing wrong to refuse the amendment. It covers the principle which was enunciated by the hon. leader of the opposition last session somewhat more fully. He had the same object in view as is sought by this amendment, that is, to secure that there be ratification of all these matters by the parliament of Canada, and that the alienation of these major natural resources should not be allowed to depend simply upon the whim of the government operating through one of its departments.

Mr. CAHILL: Would my hon. friend support the resolution if it applied to the water-powers of Ontario?

Mr. GEARY: I certainly would. In further answer to the question, may I say I am very sorry that it has not been obligatory upon the executive of the province of Ontario to refer such matters to the legislature for ratification.

Hon. J. L. RALSTON (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I want to direct the attention of the house for a very few minutes to what has been said with regard to the correspondence which passed between the hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Stewart), the government of Manitoba, and the other parties in connection with the transaction under discussion. I feel that perhaps the house has not appreciated the effect of the correspondence quoted by my hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) between the Minister of the Interior and the Premier of Manitoba prior to February, 1928. There seemed to be a disposition on the part of some hon. members to suggest bad faith on the part of my colleague and I was glad to-night to hear the assurance that the criticism was directed simply to the minister's exercise of judgment. But that does not fit in very well with the construction which was sought to be placed on some of the correspondence. A telegram of February 6, 1928, was read which had been sent by my friend the minister intimating that the Winnipeg Electric Company had not made any further request. In order to contradict that statement or to make it appear that it was not true certain letters were quoted, one of August 7, 1927—this was a wrong date; I think the hon. member will find the correct date was August 23, and two others of October 28 and November 18, 1927. The three letters referred to were not in any way contradictory of what had been said by the Minister of the Interior; they simply followed the original application of the Winnipeg Electric Company, the letter of August 23, 1927, gave the name of the company to whom it was desired the license should be given if any was to be issued. The letter of October 28 simply suggested that the status quo be preserved, and that applications for homestead rights had better be reserved. For what? Not for the Winnipeg Electric, but, as the letter itself shows, for the development of water-powers. Exactly the same sort of suggestion appears in the letter of November 18, 1927, in which it is proposed that it would perhaps be as well not to have settlers put improvements on the land, in view of the fact that applications for power leases were outstanding.

Now, what applications were outstanding at that time? Not simply the application of the Winnipeg Electric but the application as well of the province of Manitoba. All these letters amounted to were simply suggestions by one of the applicants that the land be so maintained that water-power leases could be granted if the government so decided. Very different altogether from the suggestion that my hon. friend the minister was in some way or other endeavouring to mislead those with whom he was communicating by stating that the company was not "urging" the lease. What was proposed was, I think, a perfectly proper and logical and natural thing for any applicant to suggest. I will not detain the house by quoting the letters in full. I repeat that they refer to water-powers, not to the Seven Sisters falls, and not to the application of any particular company.

Now, let me refer to the other matter which has been dealt with at great length with regard to my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior. He made statements to the house on June 6, 1928. I am afraid hon. members have perhaps not appreciated exactly the order in which those statements were made, or their contents. There has been repeatedly quoted a statement by the hon. minister in reply to a question addressed to him by the hon. leader of the opposition, in which he said:

I may assure my hon. friend that until that difference of opinion is settled I am not going to issue any license for that water-power. I think I may assure my hon. friend of that.

But that was not the final statement. Following that, as the records shows, was a long speech by my hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett), and then the Minister of the Interior replies to him in these words:

I am going to say very frankly here and now that notwithstanding the fact that at present the government have adopted a line of action with respect to the Seven Sisters falls I am not in any particular hurry to come to any decision about that matter, largely because of the fact that the members of this house have expressed very decided opinions about the matter as federal members. I am not very much disturbed by the statement that there must be immediate action; I have investigated the matter pretty well and I think there is plenty of time to give ample consideration to this matter before it is decided. In order to settle the question, and in order to prevent any delay, I do not see any reason why we should not await the action of the city council of Winnipeg and of the provincial government, which must take the responsibility, before a final decision is made here. I think that should satisfy my hon. friend.

Now, that is the understanding arrived at, that my hon. friend would await the action of the city of Winnipeg and the provincial government, and would consult the federal members from the province. My hon. friend from Nelson (Mr. Bird) understood that, as has already been pointed out by the Minister of the Interior this afternoon. The hon. member for Nelson was quite frank in his statement to the house. He said:

It may be against my disposition to cast unjustifiable reflections upon the government, or upon the Minister of the Interior, and I do not go as far as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) went. The Minister of the Interior did say to us quite plainly, before we left for home last session, that he could not hold up this matter until the Manitoba legislature met; he was very frank about that. But if I did not misunderstand him, and there is always the possibility that I might have—I can confirm what I am saying by my own diary, and his words in the house seem to confirm it—he said that before anything was done the members for Manitoba would be consulted.

[Mr. Ralston.]

That is what my hon. friend himself understood. And what does the minister do? I ask hon. members to consider this in all fairness, because some caustic criticism has been made of the Minister of the Interior. The minister waits for over three months, instead of a month or a month and a half; he goes to Winnipeg twice and consults members there. True, he did not consult all the members; I understand that, and the minister has been quite frank about it. But he did consult the majority of the members there, and the whole resources question intervenes; it comes up about a month after the statement was made in the house. A very different situation presents itself to him. The government had arrived at an agreement to transfer the whole of the natural resources to the province of Manitoba subject to certain stipulations, and provided the house ratified it and in the meantime they consented to dealing with its natural resources according to the wishes of Manitoba under the powers which the statutes conferred on the executive. Let me right here refer to what has been said by the hon. member for South Toronto (Mr. Geary). That hon. gentleman has talked about the alienation of natural resources otherwise than by parliament. I would ask the house to bear this in mind, that we are discussing a power which has been exercised under the Dominion Water Powers Act for a good many years. The governor in council is authorized under that act to grant licenses. I quite understand that there is no authorization to transfer them absolutely. And that, it seems to me, is the distinction which is to be made in connection with the argument which is being advanced on the other side of the house. There is a difference between administrative action and legislative action. Administrative action is taken every day. The Minister of Public Works, after a vote is passed here, has to do, let us say, with the construction of a building; if something goes wrong there you do not take away the power of the minister to construct that building and confine that power to parliament. You censure him if censure is justified, and you may have him dismiss someone if there is someone in the department who is not acting properly. But that does not give you any justification to come here and say, "We are going to remove from the minister the administrative power and vest it in the legislative body." Under the Dominion Water Powers Act the government has to-day—as I know the province of Nova Scotia and the province of British Columbia have, and as I think the province of Ontario and the province of Quebec also have—the right to grant licenses of water-powers; and these licenses are being granted every day as an executive act. My hon. friend speaks of a change of policy in connection with paragraph 6 of the agreement, which indicated that this government was going to follow the wishes of Manitoba, and he suggests that this ought to have been made a matter of legislation. But the legislation was on the statute book. This government had the power, under the Water Powers Act, to do all that was done in this case, namely, to grant the license to the Winnipeg Electric Company or to Manitoba as the case might be. And that was all that this government did. It did not need further administrative power at all; it had it. It needed legislative power if there was to be an absolute transfer of natural resources. Take the province of Nova Scotia, for instance: every day the Minister of Mines grants licenses on mineral areas. That is administrative, and such action the government can take. If, on the other hand, he proposes to transfer the whole of the minerals of the province, that is to say, to transfer the absolute fee simple, in that case legislation is required. And such legislation was provided for in the agreement between Manitoba and this government. We must, I say, carefully distinguish between legislative power and the administrative power, the administrative function vested in the Dominion government and in every local government in Canada, and that power it is now proposed to take away from this federal government by the resolution now before the house. We are losing sight of this distinction, and it would contravene the very spirit of the working out of our constitution if we decided to make this legislative body an administrative body.

My hon. friends have been most severe in their criticism, but they do not charge the minister with being dishonest and I do not think they should assume that a government will exercise the powers vested in it dishonestly. But it is suggested that because this transaction has taken place—a transaction which is quite within the powers of the executive—the remedy should be to remove entirely the power which is properly vested in those by whom it should be exercised. That is not a logical suggestion; it is not workable; it is not a practical suggestion. I do not think it is a suggestion which will commend itself to the judgment of the house.

Many times the terms monopolies and corporations and trusts and capitalists have been used in the debate, and it seems to me that it is these terms which have influenced at least some hon. members more than anything else in connection with the transaction. If this lease had been made to the government of Manitoba, that would have been all right; but because the licensee happens to be called a "company", with "limited" added thereto, that makes it all wrong. I submit—and I do not think one needs to make very much of an argument about it—that if the transfer to the licensee is made at the request of a public body, in this case the government of Manitoba, the province of Manitoba, the principle of public ownership is just as much respected as if the transfer had been made to the premier of Manitoba, or the Minister of Public Works or the Attorney General.

I do not think there has yet been read the statement with regard to the proposal of this government to transfer this lease to the province of Manitoba. The statement is contained in a letter of August 18, 1928, to Mr. Bracken. It reads:

Dear Mr. Bracken,

After discussing with my colleagues the applications made for the right to develop the Seven Sisters power site on the Winnipeg river, we have decided to offer the Manitoba government the right to develop this power site. It is to be understood, however, that the lease will be in accordance with the provisions of the Dominion water-power regulations governing the leasing of power sites.

We will prepare an interim license at once if this meets with the approval of your government.

Yours sincerely,

Charles Stewart,
Minister of the Interior.

The federal government is there proposing to transfer, not to the Winnipeg Electric but to the government of Manitoba itself, this power site. And what is the reply? It is contained in a letter from Premier Bracken dated August 21, 1928, addressed to the Hon. Charles Stewart. It reads:

Dear Mr. Stewart,

I have your letter of the 18th instant, in which you advise that after consultation with your colleagues you had decided to offer the government of Manitoba the right to develop Seven Sisters power site, in accordance with the regulations of the Water Powers branch.

I beg most respectfully to point out that no matter how willing our government might be to accept this offer, it has no legal authority to do so. Might I also point out that the policy of this government under the circumstances now obtaining, as you know, is not to develop this site itself but to permit it to be developed by the company which now controls in perpetuity nearly one half of the water in this section of the Winnipeg river. This policy was arrived at after having obtained opinions and recommendations from the Dominion Water Powers branch and advice from expert hydro-electric engineers both in your department and outside.

The minister has mentioned two electrical engineers, Doctor Hogg and Mr. Gaby.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): That might be misunderstood. I merely mentioned Mr. Gaby as an engineer in whom I had complete confidence and who was an associate of Doctor Hogg; but he was not employed on that work.

Mr. RALSTON: Then I am corrected as regards Mr. Gaby. The letter proceeds:

In accordance with that policy, the government negotiated a contract with the Winnipeg Electric Company and the North Western Power Company. We were successful in obtaining terms which would make for the complete realization of the plans and policies for which your Water Powers branch has been contending for several years. The contract provides for the abandonment of the Pinawa development and the closing of the channel, and for the single development of the maximum power possibilities of the Winnipeg river at the Seven Sisters site. It also assures the province of an adequate supply of power sufficient to meet the needs of the provincial hydro system and of rural Manitoba for the next thirty years, at a very low price.

By this contract the perpetual right of the company to the Pinawa flow will be extinguished and the acquisition of the Seven Sisters development by the province at the end of thirty years made possible.

We should have preferred undertaking the development ourselves but for the fact that under the circumstances existing it would have been an unsound financial proposition and would have prejudiced the principle of public ownership. The arrangement entered into makes possible immediate development under conditions where rates can be controlled, the interests of the public adequately protected, and the development taken over at the end of thirty years under conditions much more likely to make possible successful operation as a publicly owned enterprise, without our having to expropriate or to pay for the present Pinawa plant or the perpetual rights now held by the company.

These are the reasons why it was not granted to the government of Manitoba direct. But, Mr. Speaker, I contend that the government can be taken prima facie to represent the people of Manitoba. My hon. friend from Vancouver North (Mr. McRae) spoke this afternoon about what had been done in the country to the south, where power developments were kept for the people, as he said. I do not know who better represents the people of a province than the government elected by that province; I believe this provincial government was elected in 1927 and received a vote of confidence in a by-election in 1928. This Manitoba government, by order in council which I think has been read, definitely requested the government of the Dominion to issue this license to the Winnipeg Electric Company. Let me read just a paragraph:

And whereas the said interim license was prepared by the water powers branch of the Dominion government in accordance with the request of the provincial government;

And whereas before executing said interim license the government of Canada desires to have same approved of by the government of Manitoba;

And whereas it appears expedient for the government of Manitoba to approve of said interim license;

On the recommendation of the honourable the minister, the committee advise—

That said interim license be and it is hereby approved and that the Minister of the Interior be requested to execute the same.

I do not know of any transaction which could be more within the statute than that, and I cannot understand why that transaction should be invoked in an endeavour to support the resolution now before this house proposing to take out of the hands of the government the right to execute licenses under the Dominion Water Powers Act. It has been suggested already what would be the situation in Alberta and Saskatchewan, and I only want to suggest what would be the situation in Nova Scotia, where for years the executive had the right to issue licenses for water-powers and for crown lands and where there never has been a suggestion that the legislature should pass on each individual act in that respect. As I said a moment ago, the only time the legislature would be called upon to act would be in case of the transfer of the fee simple, the title to the natural resources.

Just one further word: It seems to me that we have lost sight of the fact that some days ago this house adopted a resolution moved by the hon. member for Frontenac-Addington (Mr. Edwards) and seconded by the hon. member for Rosetown (Mr. Evans) stating:

That, in the opinion of this house, in the best interests of confederation, and the economic development of western Canada, the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta should be granted their natural resources—

What we are doing here, and what has been done, is to endeavour to expedite that transfer as far as could be done under the statute as it stood. What has been done is this: It has been agreed by this House of Commons that it is now our policy to transfer to the western provinces their natural resources. In July of last year this government, believing this policy would be adopted by the House of Commons, entered into an agreement which it expected would be ratified by this house, and I take it that that agreement has been ratified through the adoption of this resolution. In connection with that agreement it was not proposed to wait until actual legislation was passed when the government had already the power in connection with an individual case to grant a license, but to exercise that power according to the wishes of the province for which the federal government from that time on held the property; and so the license was granted to the province of Manitoba pursuant to that arrangement, in the spirit of the resolution which was adopted by this house, in an attempt in good faith to grant to the province of Manitoba those natural resources which everyone agrees should go back to them.

With regard to the contract itself, very little attempt has been made to criticize it in any way, and really one finds it difficult to understand just why we have taken so long in this debate in view of that fact, because after all the merits of the contract itself should have something to do with this question. If it could be shown that the government had made an absolutely wretched contract, one which could not be defended, there might be some ground for taking some action in this house, but hardly a voice has been raised to suggest that the contract has been anything but proper and good for the province of Manitoba. By that contract the Pinawa development was to be discontinued and 50,000 extra horse-power has been reclaimed and made available to the power users of Manitoba; by the contract 30,000 horse-power will be supplied the province at a rate of between $11 and $13 per horse-power, and under the contract the rates are made subject to the provincial public utilities board, so there is no danger that the people of that province will have to pay too much for power. Let me read section 14 of the contract:

> Subject to designation for that purpose by the Governor in Council as required by paragraph (m) of section 12 of the act, the rates to be charged by the licensee for the power developed under this interim license shall be subject to and under the jurisdiction of the Municipal and Public Utility Board of the province of Manitoba, or its successor, and the said board shall have complete jurisdiction from time to time to fix just and reasonable rates to be charged by the said licensee determined in accordance with the provisions of the regulations.

Further than that, the following provision is made for taking over by the government of Manitoba itself:

> Subject to the approval of the governor in council after notice of taking over has been given, His Majesty in the right of the province of Manitoba shall have the right to take over the final license at Seven Sisters falls, together with all rights, powers, privileges, benefits and advantages in connection therewith, and all the works, lands and properties of the licensee at said Seven Sisters falls used by said licensee for the production of electrical energy thereat, in accordance with the conditions set out in section 11 of the said agreement of April 25, 1928.

I will just place before the house one other provision of the agreement which seems to me rather important. As I said a moment ago, this agreement was made with the idea in view that the natural resources were to be returned to the province of Manitoba. That means that the reversion in this license would eventually be transferred to the province of Manitoba as soon as authority was granted by this parliament; in other words the province of Manitoba would become the landlord, the person granting the license, and the body owning the fee simple. Paragraph (i) of section 10 is as follows:

> Notwithstanding any provisions of the regulations or of this license there shall upon the return of the natural resources to the province of Manitoba be paid by the licensee to the province of Manitoba for such provincial hydro-electric or other purposes as the lieutenant-governor in council of the province of Manitoba may determine such additional annual rentals per horse-power as the lieutenant-governor in council may determine by any general water-power regulations.

In other words, when the natural resources are actually handed over to the province of Manitoba and the province becomes the licensor to this company, because of the fact that it will take the place of the federal government, then under this section the province of Manitoba is entitled to impose upon the company such additional rentals as the lieutenant-governor in council of that province may see fit. That means that the company is under the control of the province in connection with the rates to be paid for power. The rates of the company are to be regulated by the public utilities commission of the province, and in addition to that the amount the company is to pay for rentals to be fixed by the lieutenant governor in council. It seems to me that should pretty well protect the public interest; and when we have the added fact that this license was granted on the request of the province of Manitoba itself it seems to me that we have to all intents and purposes public control and public ownership in just as full and free a sense as if the license had been granted to the province of Manitoba itself.

May I just say one thing more, and it is not in connection with the lease which is the subject of this debate. It arises from what was said by the hon. member for Frontenac-

Addington, who, in a very whimsical speech, put forth his ideas with regard to the constitutional question as to natural resources. I do not wish to raise a legal discussion in the house at this late hour, but I must say that I cannot, either as a member of this house or as a professional man, agree with the legal opinion expressed by the hon. member for Frontenac-Addington. I hardly think he will find that the western provinces themselves will rely upon the argument he put forward.

Mr. GOTT: He did not give it as a legal opinion.

Mr. RALSTON: Nearly all the sections of the British North America Act, the Alberta Act and the Manitoba Act were cited, and the hon. member was setting himself up, for the time being at least, as the chief justice of the court on constitutional principles. I do not think the western provinces will associate themselves with the contention he made, which was to this effect: It is true that when we came into confederation we got a certain payment in lieu of lands, but we now find that you had no right constitutionally and technically to withhold our lands; therefore we suggest that we should have the money in lieu of lands and the lands too. That was the argument of the hon. member for Frontenac-Addington, and I only desire to go on record as stating that I cannot agree with any such contention. The real contention is rather that this matter should be considered on broad and equitable principles and the natural resources handed over to the western provinces on that ground and not in this narrow and to say the least highly technical argument. If I am correctly informed, that is the position which is being taken by the province of Manitoba in connection with the hearing which is going on before the commission.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that neither the resolution nor the amendment to the resolution should be supported. I believe they lay down a principle which has never before been laid down in connection with the administration of public property. It has always been considered the responsibility of the executive to look after these matters, and the remedy is not that of taking away from the executive the power which is vested in them in the usual course of constitutional practice.

Mr. WILLIAM IRVINE (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, I have been drawn into this argument more by accident than by design. I chanced to make a remark during the course of the speech of the Minister of Railways (Mr. Dunning), and immediately the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Stewart) took very decided and I thought rather strenuous objection to my remark. Therefore, I feel called upon to make clear to the house the understanding upon which that remark was made.

Before doing so, let me be careful to say that so far as I am concerned I have not been very much interested in the fight which has been going on between certain members of the house and the Minister of the Interior. I do not understand the exact situation in Manitoba and I do not care to offer any comment on the misunderstandings which have developed in connection with the Seven Sisters falls in that province. It would appear to me that no matter how much the Minister of the Interior may or may not be involved in the matter, the government of Manitoba must accept whatever blame may befall in this connection. But when it comes to the amendment which is before the house there is a principle involved which I most heartily endorse, and I intended to vote for the amendment without any speech at all. However, the objection of the minister, to which I have already referred, makes it necessary for me to offer an explanation.

During the Prime Minister's speech on this question I understood him to say that it was the policy of this government to treat the provinces which had not yet obtained their natural resources as if they had always had them. That was his statement as I understood it, but when the Minister of Railways (Mr. Dunning) was speaking he not only made some extravagant claims for the application of the resolution to the natural resources in other provinces, but he made the statement that the Minister of the Interior had been treating all provincial governments alike in respect to their water-powers and natural resources. I took exception to that because I knew for a fact that the government of Alberta had been endeavouring for a considerable time to get control of the Spray lakes power site. The position of the Minister of the Interior in respect to Spray lakes has been this:—if I am mistaken he will correct me—he refuses to give a lease of that power site to the Alberta government unless they will assure this government that they intend to operate that plant as a government undertaking. That is the understanding I have, and if the minister denies it of course I shall have to withdraw the remark I made.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): If that is all the hon. member intends to say, I will do it at once.

Mr. IRVINE: That is only half of what I intend to say. That is right so far?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): All right.

Mr. IRVINE: When we come to the province of Manitoba the minister says, "I must give a license to that province because they desire that I should do so even though it is proposed to give the power site to a private company." Is that the same treatment he gave to the province of Alberta?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Is the hon. member basing his argument on the fact that my refusal to consider the granting of a lease to the province of Alberta was on the ground that they must develop that site themselves?

Mr. IRVINE: That is my understanding.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): That objection has been withdrawn for some considerable time. Spray lakes are within the park boundary at the present time, but we propose to exclude them if we can agree with the province. Before the province of Alberta were here on their last visit to discuss natural resources I told them that I had withdrawn the objection to their subletting that site. The situation at the present time is that we must be guaranteed 350 cubic feet of water in the Spray river during the three months of the tourist season, and they must undertake to construct a tunnel to convey the water from the storage basin to their power plant. I may also say that no other application will be considered until the province of Alberta decide that they do not want to embark on this enterprise.

Mr. IRVINE: I am glad to have this explanation from the minister, but he must recognize that the conditions he has submitted to the government of Alberta are impossible ones. I will not go into the details of that because it would require more engineering knowledge than I have at my command at the moment. Until very recently I had not seen any published statement from the minister or from the Alberta government that the conditions under which this power site might be taken over by the government had been altered by the minister. I take his word, but prior to a short time ago it is clear that he had not been treating those two provinces in precisely the same way. Those were the grounds upon which I put the query to the Minister of Railways.

Let me come now to the amendment as it may affect the Spray lakes. Supposing, say ten years from now, there is still a squabble between the provincial government and the Dominion government as to whether a certain number of cubic feet or something else shall be guaranteed or not in the Spray lakes proposition. Some kind of squabble has taken place and lasted, and the result is that the provincial government has not control. I am just afraid that something similar might happen to that power site to what has happened in the case of the Seven Sisters falls in Manitoba. True, the minister says to parliament now that he will guarantee that nothing shall be disposed of without the wish of the province of Alberta. I do not want to insinuate anything, but that was pretty much what I understood him to say last year and it might happen that an excuse could be developed. I am not saying that the minister needs an excuse but if he needs one he has made a very excellent excuse, I must say. It might happen subsequently that conditions would render it possible for the minister to make the same disposition of Spray lakes as has happened in Manitoba. Therefore, in order to prevent that kind of thing, since this power plant is in the national parks, the amendment has great point and force.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): If the province of Alberta desires to develop that site, it will certainly get it; and supposing Alberta said to give it to someone else, I would be in the same position, but the matter would be in the hands of Alberta, not in mine.

Mr. IRVINE: At the present time the disposal of this power site is, as I understand the matter, in the hands of the minister, and while I have a considerable amount of respect for the minister, nevertheless I would like to get the assurance of parliament that this site and others in a similar position would not be given away by a minister without at least a discussion in parliament in respect thereto.

I listened a few minutes ago to the hair-splitting legal distinctions of the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Ralston). I think I was able to follow his argument, and I think, too, it was only occasionally he came within range of the subject. He says that the disposition of water-power is a matter of administration; that being a matter of administration, it should not be interfered with by any limiting resolution of the character of the one now before the house. He says furthermore that, it being a matter of administration, why, we can come back to parliament and have a row with the minister as we are having now, that we can come back to parliament and we can lay all kinds of charges against the minister. That is rather a peculiar kind of argument. Just imagine forty years from now when our children are paying a very high price for electric energy, they will turn up Hansard and as a consolation for having to pay that high price, read what the minister says! Can you imagine them saying: Never mind; pay the high price; they had a row with the minister over making that contract? Is that a good argument? That, however, is precisely the meaning of the minister's argument. It is all very well to come here and make insinuations to a minister after he has done the deed, if he has done it, having of course, no reference at all to the present minister. That may be a great satisfaction for an individual on the floor of parliament in 1929 but it is a rather poor argument for those who, forty years from now, will have to pay a high price for power under the control of a private company. That is what we are trying to safeguard.

Then the Minister of National Defence comes to the last extremity of his defence—and only a minister of defence could think of such an argument. He says: "Mr. Speaker and hon. members of the house, surely something ought to be said for the contract; surely if it is a good contract, that ought to excuse the minister and the government of Manitoba and anybody else for anything that might have happened. Suppose somebody steals the watch from the pocket of the minister tonight when he is going home. Of course I do not say that the word "stealing" is applicable to the Seven Sisters; there is no reference to such a thing. But suppose to-morrow morning the gentleman who steals the watch of the hon. gentleman turns out to be a fine looking fellow and so we bring him into court and we say: "Now, don't be too hard on this gentleman; see how good looking he is, a fine stalwart fellow with a bald head and a mustache; a man who can hold his head up anywhere." Is that an excuse for his stealing the watch? His good looks has just as much to do with his stealing the watch as the minister's argument has to do with the question before the house or as the contract of the Winnipeg Electric has to do with the charges against the Minister of the Interior. No matter how good the contract was, it went to a private company and those who have been fighting for a principle, who believe in public development, think they have made a claim that the minister in some way or another broke faith with them. As to that I have no remarks to make, but I would say that the minister's ingenious argument did not have much to do with the amendment before the house.

Finally, I think the Prime Minister's argument was a strange one from our own Prime Minister who has been on the public platform the champion of parliamentary institutions to a more outstanding degree than any other public man I can remember in the history of Canada. I was reading just to-day the bible of the Liberal party. I do not know sir, whether you have seen it, but it is a real bible with the bust of the Prime Minister on the front page and a really biblical quotation from a great Liberal somewhere across the Atlantic. In that bible there are some very definite pronouncements in respect to the power of parliament and there are some very specific references to the orders in council which were passed by the administration prior to the present one. The whole righteous indignation of a great Liberal party which has fought for the liberties of the Canadian people throughout our history was aroused to the very highest pitch in denouncing that kind of thing and promising to the people of Canada that if ever a Liberal party should come into power, all those rights and privileges of the people would be safeguarded by upholding parliamentary institutions and giving parliament the rights which belong to it properly in considering every question which concerns the interests of the people. That is a splendid principle. I am sure the Prime Minister still believes in that principle, but his argument does not fit in. I should say that his speech on this question indicated a profound disbelief in parliamentary institution. I hope he has not had a change of mind; I hope I am misinterpreting him on the question, because I think it would be nothing short of a calamity were the Prime Minister so soon to have lost the ideals which no doubt went a long way towards giving him the confidence of the people which he now enjoys. The parliament of Canada, if this confidence is to be restored, must deal with matters so important to the welfare of the people as water-power.

Referring again to the administration argument of the Minister of National Defence, when those powers were granted by parliament who then thought of the importance of a river from a power point of view? Who then thought of the importance of electrical energy in the industrial development of the world? Nobody. Since that time electrical energy has become the greatest industrial motive force that we have, and consequently we might very properly make an exception in the administration of this particular natural resource. That is all that the amendment proposes. It makes a specific exception of water-powers because of their importance, and insists that before any water-power within the control of this government be given to any private company, parliament shall decide upon the question. That principle I uphold, and I shall therefore be glad to vote for the amendment.

Mr. L. P. BANCROFT (Selkirk): At this late hour I shall not delay the house at any great length, but there are a few remarks that I shou'd like to make in opposition to the resolution and the amendment now before the house. The resolution reads:

That, in the opinion of this house, no disposition of the natural resources, under the control of the federal government, shall be effective until ratified by parliament.

The amendment strikes out the words "natural resources," and substitutes therefor the words "water-powers."

In my judgment both the resolution and the amendment are aimed at the natural resources and water-powers of the three prairie provinces. I shall speak more particularly of the province of Manitoba.

The water-powers of Manitoba are very, very valuable. The Winnipeg and Nelson rivers are the chief sources of the water-powers of Manitoba. Winnipeg river drains lac Seul and the lake of the Woods into lake Winnipeg. This great river, falling over the rocky slopes on the western end of the Laurentians, creates a great amount of water-power, about three-quarters of a million horse-power.

The Nelson river, which flows from lake Winnipeg into Hudson bay, is four hundred miles long, and falls seven hundred feet in its course. This river is capable of producing somewhere around three and a half million horse-power. The people of Manitoba are very proud of these natural resources. They feel that these water-powers are their own property, that they belong to the people of Manitoba, and that no one else is directly concerned in their development or disposal.

The water-powers of Ontario have been developed or disposed of by the government of that province, representing the people of Ontario. The water-powers of Quebec have been developed or disposed of by the government of that province, representing the people of Quebec. Both these provinces have seen fit to develop and dispose of their water-powers without consulting the federal parliament. They never thought of consulting the Canadian senate. Yet if this resolution and amendment carry to-night, the people of Manitoba cannot develop their water-powers without first coming and consulting the federal members in this house from Ontario and Quebec, from the island of Cape Breton and from the Yukon, and if they succeed in convincing the majority of these members that their plans are good, next they have to run the gauntlet of the Canadian senate before they can proceed to develop what they believe to be their own water-powers. I cannot understand how any member from Manitoba, and this applies to the members from the other prairie provinces as well, can vote for a resolution which places the people of the province of Manitoba in an inferior position, as compared with the older provinces, in the matter of developing their natural resources. Surely the rights of the people of Manitoba are not less than the rights of the people of the older provinces. If they are, it is high time we knew about it.

Not much more than a week ago the house unanimously passed a resolution moved by the hon. member for Frontenac-Addington (Mr. Edwards) declaring, in effect, that in the best interests of confederation, and the economic development of western Canada, the three western provinces should be granted their natural resources free from restrictions. My hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) supported that resolution, and in view of his action then I cannot understand how he can now move a resolution which places a restriction upon the return of the natural resources to the prairie provinces. The whole house approved of the return to the provinces of those resources. The hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie), the acting leader of the opposition, who moved the amendment now before the house, supported the resolution of the hon. member for Frontenac-Addington, and yet his amendment would place a very serious restriction upon the development of the natural resources of the western provinces.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I should just like to remind the hon. member that the resolution to which he refers has not yet been acted upon by this government.

Mr. BANCROFT: I did not say anything about the action of this government. I do not know anything about the action of the government on this resolution. I said that the resolution had been accepted unanimously by the house.

Mr. CAMPBELL: But until it is acted on by the government, this parliament is responsible for the natural resources.

Mr. CANNON: How can you expect a government to act within two days?

Mr. BANCROFT: The resolution moved by the hon. member for Frontenac-Addington declared that the natural resources of the western provinces should be returned to them without any strings attached, but if the resolution and the amendment now before the house passes, the resources of the western provinces will not only have strings attached to them but they will be "roped and hog tied" by the other provinces. The amendment now before the house represents the Conservative policy on the question of the natural resources. Provincial rights are to be over-ridden, restrictions and limitations are to be imposed upon the prairie provinces. The development of the natural resources is to be subject to the whims of this house and of the senate.

The policy of this government with respect to the natural resources was clearly stated by the right hon. the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) on Thursday night. Speaking on this resolution the right hon. the Prime Minister said:

> Water-power to-day is coming to have a significance in industrial development which it has never had heretofore in the history of this country. The people of western Canada, appreciating that fact and realizing what it means to have possession of their water-powers, are anxious to have those water-powers under their own control to further in the manner they think best the industrial development of their provinces.

A little later on in the same speech he outlines the government's policy:

> This government took the position that the right thing to do was to say that we believed the western provinces should be put as nearly as possible in exactly the position they would have been in had they had their resources from the moment they were created as provinces. That is the position we have taken in this new agreement; it admits of no debate or doubt, and having taken that position we intend to stand by it. We intend to see that the western provinces obtain their natural resources on a basis which will put them, so far as may now be possible, in the position they would have been in had they had the administration of their natural resources from the time they were created as provinces, and that means the right for their government and legislatures, not our parliament to decide what is to be done.

There can be no doubt which of these policies will appeal to the western provinces.

During the discussion of this resolution the Minister of the Interior has been severely criticized for his action with regard to the lease of the Seven Sisters falls power site. Some hon. members have said that after the Manitoba federal members had decided by a vote of ten to four against the granting of the lease to the Winnipeg Electric Company, the minister went ahead with the deal. I might remind some of my hon. friends from the province that in a case like this it is just as well to be fair. There are seventeen members from Manitoba; ten and four do not make seventeen. The fact is that of the Manitoba members ten were opposed to, and seven were in favour of, the granting of the lease. This afternoon the minister expressed a preference for the views of those members from the province who were supporting the government. Well, fourteen of them are behind the government. Of these fourteen, seven were in favour of, and seven opposed to, the lease. So I submit he could not get very much guidance from them in view of that difference of opinion.

Mr. HEAPS: If my hon. friend will permit a question, does he think party considerations should govern the minister's decision in matters of this character, rather than national considerations?

Mr. BANCROFT: As I understand it, the Minister of the Interior consulted the Manitoba members, and then ascertained the views of the provincial government. The provincial government is the only body that is directly responsible to the people of Manitoba. Having done so, he acted on the advice of the Manitoba government. It has been stated that the minister did not consult the Manitoba members. I was one of those consulted by him in that connection. To my knowledge he consulted eight of the Manitoba members. We agreed, that, owing to the natural resources agreement our responsibility in the matter had ceased. Some four or five others he did not need to consult for he knew they were in favour of the lease.

It has been stated that the Bracken government has got into difficulties over the granting of the lease to the Winnipeg Electric Company, and will probably be defeated. I travelled extensively through Manitoba during last fall, I met many people and I attended a number of farmers' conventions. As a result I am of the opinion—I may be wrong—that a large majority of the people of Manitoba are in favour of the present agreement. I believe it will be ratified by the legislature. In my judgment, if the Bracken government had been defeated during the turmoil of the last two weeks, the government that succeeded it, regardless of party, would have put through the same deal.

The amendment and the resolution in my judgment would put the people of the western provinces in an inferior position as compared with their fellow-citizens in the other provinces in the development of their natural resources, and for that reason, Mr. Speaker, I intend to vote against both.

Mr. M. N. CAMPBELL (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, like the hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Irvine) I had no intention of participating in this debate until quite recently. Some remarks from the other side of the house caused me to change my mind.

I realize that in so far as this is a domestic question in Manitoba there would be impropriety in discussing it in this house. I intend to discuss the question only from the federal viewpoint. As to whether or not the Bracken government committed sins of omission or sins of commission, that I realize is for the people of Manitoba to decide, and not for me as a member from the province of Saskatchewan. But, sir, those resources are still under the control of the federal government. It is not a question whether the province of Manitoba should control them or not. We are dealing with facts, not theories. I repeat, this government does control those resources, and the very agreement that has been the subject of so much discussion here was made between the federal government and the Winnipeg Electric Company or its subsidiary; the government of Manitoba really did not figure directly in the deal at all. Therefore I submit we are within our rights in discussing this matter from the federal standpoint.

I listened with a good deal of interest the other night to the speech of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) and I congratulate him on coming out as the chief protagonist in this house of provincial rights. I rather welcome his stand. But I recognize that while appearing in this role, conversely he was attempting to put those of us who are supporting the resolution and the amendment in the position of being opposed to provincial rights. Well, in so far as I am concerned, I am quite ready to be judged by the people of the prairie provinces. I am perfectly confident that the people of the three prairie provinces will not regard us as being opposed to provincial rights.

The Prime Minister argued rather speciously that if this amendment carried and agreements of this character had to be submitted to parliament they would have to pass a Tory senate. Of course that argument might have a good deal of effect in some quarters. I recall when not so many years ago the Prime Minister toured western Canada and made the welkin ring as he denounced that same Tory senate, and his indignation was so intense that he pledged himself on platform after platform at the then coming session of parliament to introduce legislation to reform the senate. But that happened many years ago, and the Prime Minister apparently has forgotten all about his promise. Let me tell him now that should there be any danger of the senate interfering as he suggests, if he will only carry out his promise to reform that branch of parliament he will relieve us of any occasion to worry about what a Tory senate may or may not do.

I do not consider that submitting any agreement to parliament for ratification is an infringement of provincial rights. It is an absolutely absurd suggestion, so absurd that it does not deserve attention. Surely the submission of any proposed alienation of these resources to parliament for ratification cannot by any stretch of imagination be considered an infringement of provincial rights. Suppose the government has decided to grant any of these natural resources to some company or to the provincial authorities, as the case may be, the government is in control of this house by reason of its majority, and therefore there is no reason why it should not submit its proposal to parliament for ratification. It could be done in this way just as well as by order in council.

One particular reason why I am in favour of the resolution and amendment is that their adoption would relieve the public mind of suspicion. There is no use denying the fact that from one end of the country to the other there is deep-rooted suspicion that there was something wrong with the Seven Sisters power site deal, that there was some ulterior motive behind the rather indecent haste both in Winnipeg and in Ottawa to alienate this very valuable water-power. I am not one of those who share these suspicions. I do not believe for a moment that there was anything wrong or dishonest in the transaction, either here at Ottawa or in the province of Manitoba. But I say that there are tens of thousands, hundreds of thousands of people who will always believe that. If this agreement had been submitted to the legislature of Manitoba and submitted to parliament here, then the public mind would have been relieved, and it would have added to the dignity and prestige of parliament, which I must say has been impaired by this deal.

When the Prime Minister referred to the question of interference with provincial rights, I wondered whether he remembered the fact that it was only a few days ago that his associate, the Premier of Saskatchewan, had to break off negotiations with him and go home without those resources. The Minister of Railways (Mr. Dunning) made a great deal of the argument that the delay would hinder industrial development in the prairie provinces. I am just as anxious as he is to see a proper balance of industry in the prairies. I believe that the great industrial development which we shall see there in the next quarter of a century will relieve us of some of the troubles we have to bear at the present time and will bring about a better balance and create a home market. I am therefore just as anxious as any member in this house to see industrial development in the prairies. At the same time I think it is absurd to suggest that the submission of these agreements to parliament, so long as the federal government controls them, would seriously delay industrial development. Let me say, sir, that the basis of industrial development in the prairies as well as in other parts of Canada is cheap power, and if we give away these water-powers without any proper consideration of the public interest, we are doing the very thing which will delay, and seriously delay, industrial development in the future. If we are looking into the future, if we are considering those who will live in the country after we are dead and gone, if we want to see business and industry develop as it should develop, then I say that that is an added reason why we should be careful and should delay for a reasonable time in order to ensure that these resources are not dissipated but are properly handled so that those who are building up industry will not be taxed to such an extent as to render industrial development impossible. But when we consider the delay which the Minister of Railways suggests, I would remind him that the Canadian Pacific Railway must come to parliament for every branch line and every foot of railway it builds,—

Mr. DUNNING: No.

Mr. CAMPBELL: —except yard increases.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend is not right. If the Canadian Pacific Railway or any other railway company desires to build a line of railway wholly within a province it can go to the provincial legislature.

Mr. CAMPBELL: The argument is the same; they must go to some parliament to have it done. That is my point. Does the minister say that this is going to hold up railway building? The Canadian National Railways must do the same. There are many classes of companies, insurance and financial companies, that must come to this parliament to be incorporated. Not only must they come to parliament to be incorporated but they must come here in order to get the right to increase their stock. Is that such a serious matter? I do not think it is, and that should not justify any indecent haste in disposing of these resources.

Then the minister refers to the conditions in the prairie provinces as compared with Ontario and Quebec. They are not analagous at all. If the prairie provinces controlled these resources, then it would be a matter for those provinces themselves to decide as to what is the proper way to alienate them; and with that we have nothing to do. But we are deciding to-day on resources that are still controlled by this parliament—resources in the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta.

Now the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Ralston) used, it seemed to me, some rather remarkable arguments. He advanced as an argument why we should not pass this resolution the statement that the house had already placed itself on record and accepted unanimously a resolution in which the hope was expressed that the resources would be turned over to the prairie provinces. I believe that you, Mr. Speaker, some time ago referred to one such resolution as simply a pious hope. And that is all it is. Until that resolution is carried out and the resources are absolutely turned over, the question is simply an abstract one and means nothing.

Mr. DUNNING: Does my hon. friend argue that until they are actually transferred we should pay no regard to the wishes of the provincial governments with respect to their disposition? Is that the argument?

Mr. CAMPBELL: I was not dealing with that argument at all; I was dealing with the suggestion that we should not pass this resolution because the house a few days ago had passed another resolution. I say that the other resolution is not in effect at the present time. It is true that the house accepted it, but the very fact that the minister's own former colleague, the Premier of Saskatchewan, and his colleagues, had to break off negotiations and go back home shows how ineffective that other resolution is to-day. Surely we are not going to refuse to consider these matters simply because that resolution—which, as I say, you, Mr. Speaker, would probably describe as a pious hope—was passed by the house a short time ago.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend does not answer the question. I stated to-night—and the hon. gentleman has criticized me in this regard—that ever since this government came into office there had been an increasing regard for the trusteeship feature of the relationship, and that the provincial governments had been consulted. Does my hon. friend object to that consultation? Does he object to our being guided, even under present circumstances, by the wishes of the provincial authorities?

Mr. CAMPBELL: No, I certainly do not object to that at all.

Mr. DUNNING: That is the whole point.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I do not object to that, but I say that the fact that a resolution has been passed with reference to the transfer of some resources does not constitute any reason why the present resolution should not be adopted; and if it were adopted it would relieve the public mind of a great deal of suspicion, all of which I believe is unjustified.

The minister referred to this very beautiful contract which has been drawn up. And it looks very beautiful until you begin to analyze it. But here you have a company tied up with an agreement under which the government of Manitoba can expropriate that power plant after thirty years. Now the minister knows perfectly well that inside thirty years that company would be so entrenched, it would have such power and influence in Manitoba as to be in a position to upset any government that dared try to exercise the right of expropriation. Through the control of newspapers, by means of contributions to party funds, and so forth, it would be absolutely impossible for any government inside thirty years to interfere with an interest of that kind.

The Minister of Railways said that he, while premier of Saskatchewan, had always been consulted in regard to any major disposal of natural resources. I was wondering whether he was consulted in regard to the disposal of a considerable block of land in 1924. Some 129,517 acres of land in the province of Saskatchewan were turned over to the Hudson's Bay Company in 1924. I hold in my hand a copy of sessional paper 101, a return asked for by one hon. member from Alberta. The question is asked whether the Hudson's Bay Company has obtained any grant of lands in Canada since 1921 and if so in what province, what districts in each province, the date of transfer, and by what authority these lands were transferred; and there is a list showing the disposal of 65,533 acres in Manitoba; 129,517 acres in Saskatchewan; and 153,924 acres in Alberta, making a grand total of 348,974. The authority for the deed of surrender is the Dominion Lands Act, and the order in council was passed on December 19, 1924. It is P.C. No. 2158, and the agreement between the crown and the Hudson's Bay Company was dated December 23, 1924. I believe perhaps this is one of the reasons why the Premier of Saskatchewan refused the offer to continue the present subsidy and receive back the natural resources. A very large part of our natural resources has been alienated already, and I think it would be absurd for the Premier of Saskatchewan to accept the return of those resources without an accounting for what has been alienated in the past. I believe the Minister of Railways himself, if he occupied that responsible position to-day, would refuse to accept that proposition.

Mr. DUNNING: A short time ago my hon. friend asked whether I was consulted in connection with the settlement with the Hudson's Bay Company. I was not consulted, for the obvious reason contained in the report itself. That transfer was due to a settlement as to what were the terms of the original deed of surrender of 1867 from the Hudson's Bay Company to Canada. It was a matter of right and not a matter of giving something away.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I think perhaps the minister will agree that this was a transfer of land to the Hudson's Bay Company in lieu of some release of land they made in the province of Alberta.

Mr. DUNNING: Can my hon. friend find that in the documents?

Mr. CAMPBELL: I have not the complete file here but certainly that is what I gather. The argument still exists: our resources have been alienated and I say the province is entitled to some accounting for them.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): To settle the matter, may I say that the Hudson's Bay Company have not made absolutely final selections yet. They have been making selections for years to complete their agreement.

Mr. CAMPBELL: There is another matter to which I would like to refer, and that is the disposal of a large block of our school lands in Saskatchewan. This is a phase of the question which has not been dealt with during this debate. I hold in my hand a list of lands which will be offered for sale at Maple Creek, Saskatchewan, on Monday, March 18, 1929, and another list which will be offered for sale at Wolseley, Saskatchewan, on Wednesday, March 20, 1929. I wonder just what is the reason for the haste in disposing of these school lands. It seems to me positively absurd to hold a sale of school lands or any other kind of lands in the prairies in the month of March. There are various reasons why I am opposed to this sale. First, I claim that this government has no legal right to offer the lands for sale. I take the view held by the hon. member for Frontenac-Addington (Mr. Edwards), although the Minister of National Defence says he does not agree with that view. It seems to me this government agreed with it, and that is the view expressed by Mr. Bram Thompson, a lawyer of Regina, who I think was the first man to express that point of view. This government really accepted that principle in its dealings with Manitoba, and it seems to me they were influenced by that point of view in this transaction. So I say I am opposed to the sale of these lands because I do not think this government has any legal right to offer them for sale.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): Will my hon. friend permit a question?

Mr. CAMPBELL: I have only a few moments to speak, and I must make the best use of them. There is really an over-production of wheat this year; the best statistical authority on this matter states that there is an over-production of 400,000,000 bushels. A few days ago I read an article in the Financial Times of Montreal, a paper which can hardly be accused of agitating the farmer in connection with his grievances, and in this article the opinion is expressed that the net return to the farmer on the prairie this year for his wheat was only fifty cents a bushel. I say that to a large extent that is due to over-production, and just at this time it is absurd to throw all this extra land on the market which will result in an increase in this over-production.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): Did my hon. friend say the net return or the average return was 50 cents? Did he mean there would be a profit of 50 cents?

Mr. CAMPBELL: No, after the farmer paid for his threshing the net return would be 50 cents a bushel. I would hesitate to quote any farm paper in that regard, but this opinion is expressed by the Financial Times of Montreal, so I say it is absurd to throw a lot more land on the market and further depress prices.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Without desiring to interrupt my hon. friend, I may say that it is not usual to sell these lands in March, but this is being done at the request of the provincial government, and the sale itself is taking place under an agreement with the government.

Mr. CAMPBELL: May I ask whether the provincial government wanted the sale to take place in March?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes, and I will give the reason: They said they wished the sale to take place early so that the people purchasing the land might have plenty of time to farm it this season. That is the reason they gave me, although as I say we do not usually sell these lands in March.

Mr. CAMPBELL: That is a poor reason, because this is wild land and it must be broken up before it can be cropped. However, I am glad to hear the explanation; we will have to discuss this matter with the provincial government. It does seem to me, however, that with the tremendous increase in wheat acreage in the United States and the corresponding increase in Canada, due partly to immigration and partly to the combine in the west, this over-production will increase. In 1914 our acreage of wheat was only 10,000,000, while in 1928 it had increased to over 23,000,000 acres. The same laws of economics apply to the agricultural industry that apply to every other industry, although some people do not think so, and if your production is too great you will have a slump in the market. Look at the condition of the pulp and paper industry to-day; we have seen the premiers of Ontario and Quebec going to a great deal of trouble to get these mill owners to reduce their output, and finally they have reached an agreement. They considered it a national calamity because there was an over-production of pulp, but is it not an equally great calamity to have an over-production of wheat? The purchasing power of the farmers will be reduced this year by from $50,000,000 to $60,000,000 because of that over-production, and at this time we are proposing to put this additional land on the market in order to grow more wheat and increase that surplus.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Tuesday, March 5, 1929

The house met at three o'clock.

DOMINION ELECTIONS ACT

THIRD REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

Mr. C. G. POWER (Quebec South) presented the third report of the special committee appointed in accordance with the recommendation of the select standing committee on privileges and elections, concurred in by the house on the fifth day of June, 1928, as follows:

Your committee recommends that the quorum of fifteen members thereof be reduced to nine members.

He said: I beg to move:

That the third report of the special committee appointed in accordance with the recommendation of the select standing committee on privileges and elections, concurred in by the house on June 5, 1928, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

OFFICIAL REPORT OF DEBATES

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister) moved:

That the first report of the select standing committee to supervise the official report of the debates, presented on the 30th day of June, 1924, be referred to the said committee for reconsideration, with the object of making a certain amendment thereto respecting the distribution of Hansard.

He said: I am given to understand that at the present time hon. members of the Senate receive only one copy of Hansard, and that they desire to have three copies. This is to enable the committee to give each senator three copies instead of one.

Motion agreed to.

CRIMINAL CODE AMENDMENT

Mr. G. R. GEARY (South Toronto) moved the first reading of Bill No. 36 (from the senate) to amend certain provisions to the Criminal Code respecting the possession of weapons.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Explain.

Mr. GEARY: I have been asked not on behalf of the senate but by one of the members of the senate to introduce this bill. I did so last year. Last year it passed two readings in the house, passed the committee, and stood on the order paper for third reading. Seeing that the bill reached that stage last year, the members surely knew what they were doing, and I do not think it requires any further explanation.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

MONTREAL RAILWAY TERMINAL FACILITIES

REPORT OF MR. FREDERICK PALMER—PRINTING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. C. H. CAHAN (St. Lawrence-St. George): I should like to ask the Minister of Railways whether it is the intention of the government to print the report of Mr. Palmer which was laid on the table of the house recently, so that it may be distributed and examined.

Hon. CHARLES A. DUNNING (Minister of Railways and Canals): I tabled the report the other day and arrangements are now in hand to have a sufficient number printed for distribution to any who may be interested in the contents.

Mr. CAHAN: This is a matter of the utmost importance in the constituency which I represent, and it would be most opportune if the report were printed in both languages with the plans attached.

Mr. DUNNING: That is the arrangement which is being made. The report will be printed in both languages with the plans attached, but my hon. friend will understand that reproduction of the plans will take a little time. The work is being proceeded with as expeditiously as possible, and I can assure my hon. friend of any reasonable number of copies he may desire.

CANADIAN MINISTER AT WASHINGTON

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. J. GARLAND (Bow River): May I direct the attention of the Prime Minister to a news despatch to the effect that the Canadian minister at Washington was one of the few diplomats who appeared in full regalia at the recent inaugural ceremony? Is it the policy of the government that our diplomatic corps shall be properly garbed in regalia of a distinctive character, and if so, of what character is it likely to be?

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I assume that the Canadian minister at Washington appeared in a diplomatic uniform similar to that of the British minister. Wherever we have legations and there are also British legations or embassies there I think it is probable that our ministers will wear uniforms similar to those worn by members of the British diplomatic corps.

IMPORTATION OF FRUITS AND VEGETABLES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. J. GOTT (South Essex): May I be permitted to bring to the attention of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) an item in the Border Cities Star, of Saturday, March 2, in which it is stated, under the heading "Ottawa to Protect Growers, Promise" that "action to keep out low-priced United States fruit and vegetables is sure if underselling proved, says Mr. Odette, Liberal M.P. for East Essex." I would ask if it is the intention of the government to introduce a bill this session to protect the fruit and vegetable growers of western Ontario or of the entire Dominion.

Mr. SPEAKER: Notice would be in order.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I would not like to say anything to discount what the hon. member for East Essex (Mr. Odette) may have said, but I would say that the government's intention will be made known in due course.

PEACE RIVER RAILWAY OUTLET

On the orders of the day:

Mr. ROBERT GARDINER (Acadia): I would ask the Minister of Railways (Mr. Dunning) if he would lay on the table the report of the Canadian National Railway engineers with regard to surveys made for an outlet from the Peace River district.

Hon. CHARLES A. DUNNING (Minister of Railways and Canals): I am not aware just what my hon. friend has in mind, but if there is anything in the way of information which has not been previously tabled, I shall see to it that it is tabled.

NATURAL RESOURCES

PROPOSAL THAT DISPOSITION BE EFFECTIVE ONLY ON APPROVAL OF PARLIAMENT

The house resumed from Monday, March 4, consideration of the proposed motion of Mr. Woodsworth:

That, in the opinion of this house, no disposition of the natural resources, under the control of the federal government, shall be effective until ratified by parliament.

And on the proposed amendment thereto of Mr. Guthrie:

That the motion be amended by striking out the words "natural resources" where they occur in said motion and by inserting in lieu thereof the words "water-powers".

Hon. H. H. STEVENS (Vancouver Centre): Mr. Speaker, the motion before the house is a very brief one. I shall read it in order to keep fresh in the minds of hon. members the subject matter of the discussion which has been engaging our attention now for several days:

That, in the opinion of this house, no disposition of the natural resources, under the control of the federal government, shall be effective until ratified by parliament.

To that a very modest amendment has been moved, limiting the words "natural resources" to water-powers. On this motion and amendment there has been very considerable discussion.

I would like at once to remind the house, as many hon. members have done, that this resolution is in very broad general terms. I do not wish, however, to join with some hon. members who have attacked the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) who moved the original resolution, and to say that there was any ulterior design in expressing the resolution in such general terms, because I believe that what was in his mind was to introduce a resolution which would be of a character to enable members of this house to declare themselves on the principle which he had in his mind, and I think we should give the hon. member credit for sincerity in so far as that is concerned.

But I do differ with the hon. member, and I have felt myself in some difficulty from the commencement of this debate, in regard to the precise application of this resolution to the administration of the public affairs there referred to by a government, irrespective of what that government might be. I think, when a resolution of this kind is introduced into the house, the general tendency of parliament is to receive it in the spirit in which it is offered, and not to be too critical in the interpretation one puts upon it. Very frequently resolutions of this character are passed by this house, and they are not interpreted as directing the government to give effect to the exact letter of the resolution, but rather, the resolution serves as a general guide for the government. But in this case, the government, represented by the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Stewart), whose department was particularly affected, has attacked the resolution rather vigorously; in fact, I think we had four or five ministers yesterday expressing their views on the resolution.

There is enunciated in the resolution a principle which I think meets with fairly general support, and that is that within reason the public should keep control of these natural resources, such as water powers. Where we differ is as to the exact method of control. Some hon. members would have the water powers of Canada entirely under government direction and administration. Others are prepared to keep control of them in a measure, but to allow certain latitude to private enterprise. However, there has been a marked difference of opinion. A little later on, I desire to offer to the house an amendment which I hope will meet with general approval, and will in a sense break the deadlock which we have witnessed in the discussion so far, an amendment which I think will bring even my hon. friends on the government benches to its support.

But let me first bring to the attention of the government, and more particularly of my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior, just what precipitated this discussion, just what was behind the introduction of this resolution. I do not wish to be discourteous to the minister. It is customary, when you are going to offer some criticism of a minister's action, to tell him first that you think very highly of him. I shall not do that other than by this implication. He understands me, I think, sufficiently to make it unnecessary for me to indulge in those courtesies, but I do wish to say to him this: Last year on the 6th day of June, the Minister of the Interior, speaking from his seat in the house, and representing the government, gave certain assurances to parliament in reply to a rather pointed request made by the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett). I wish to read briefly some extracts from what the minister said on that occasion, and then I want to say to him that in the light of those statements which he made, he surely must realize that parliament is justified in criticizing him for—what shall I say?—at least not carrying out the spirit of his observations of last year; I think I can put it in that way. The minister said on that occasion, and this was in reference to a request I had made of him a couple of years ago regarding Spray lakes, that such resources "should not be alienated but be put under the control of parliament." He was referring there to the resources in the national parks. I want to bring this to the attention of the minister and of parliament right at this point. Yesterday the minister told us that the government had under way at the present time a process, by legislation or by regulation, of taking Spray lakes outside of the boundaries of the parks, and then they would be able to deal with them. I would suggest to the minister that that is scarcely keeping faith with his promise to parliament that these resources should not be alienated without consulting parliament.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Parliament will be consulted because the bill to eliminate Spray lakes will have to be presented to parliament.

Mr. STEVENS: That will meet that objection, and I am glad that the minister has given us that assurance. Then, replying to the hon. leader of the opposition, the minister proceeds:

> Now I understand my hon. friend to say that if I give a promise that no disposition of any water-power will be made until it is placed under the control of—

Mr. Bennett interrupted and said, No. The discussion continued:

> Mr. Stewart (Edmonton): What did my hon. friend say?
> Mr. Bennett: I said we should not part with any water-powers without the approval of this parliament.
> Mr. Stewart (Edmonton): That would mean that a private bill would be introduced?
> Mr. Bennett: Or approval of a contract given by resolution.

Then Mr. Stewart goes on:

> —and now a very grave difference of opinion exists with respect to the disposition of the Seven Sisters falls. I may assure my hon. friend that until that difference of opinion is settled I am not going to issue any license for that water-power. I think I may assure my hon. friend of that.

In regard to the license given for that water-power or to the action of the Manitoba government in granting whatever licenses it had power to grant, I have no criticism to offer because I am not in a position to say whether it was a provident contract or not. That is a question for the people of Manitoba to determine; I am not going to discuss it. But I say to the minister, whether his promise was in regard to the Seven Sisters falls or the Spray lakes or anything else, a promise given by a minister of the crown from his seat in this house should not only be observed in its general terms, it should be observed to the very letter. In other words, a ministerial promise ought to go even further than what might be squeezed out of the interpretation of its words. And it is because certain members of parliament, in fact a substantial number, feel that parliament has not been treated quite fairly and courteously in this regard that this debate has been precipitated. I suggest that a salutary lesson has been read not only to the present government but to future governments that it is not wise—shall I say?—to play with parliament in matters of this kind.

Now, as this debate has proceeded some difficulties have been disclosed. The Minister of the Interior tells parliament this year, as he did last year, that he has been the storm centre for some years in regard to dealing with the natural resources, particularly I think, those of Manitoba.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Only Manitoba.

Mr. STEVENS: Only Manitoba. He described to us in rather pathetic language the efforts that he has made to please the people of Manitoba and at the same time to discharge his responsibility as a minister of the crown in the federal arena. According to the method adopted—which, he says, perhaps he has carried too far—he has had to refer all applications respecting water-powers to the governments of the three prairie provinces for their review, approval and sanction. Then he added: he was forced, however, to take full responsibility. Yesterday he told us that he does take responsibility, evidently feeling that this responsibility had been unfairly imposed upon him in the light of the difficulties that have since arisen.

The minister described at great length, and other members have read into the record the letters, telegrams and documents of one kind and another which have passed between himself and the government of Manitoba in working out the granting of this license showing—

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I desire to interrupt my hon. friend as little as possible, but I do not want to let his statement go unchallenged, that I was ever pathetic in my defence or that I resented having to deal with the provincial governments.

Mr. STEVENS: Let me tell my hon. friend this. Yesterday one of his colleagues passed this comment, and the house will have to pardon me if I use the first name of the minister; his colleague said: Well, I think a little opposition spurs Charlie up, and I thought he did better to-day than he did the other day. So my hon. friend can thank us for spurring him up a little. To me the terms in which he defended himself were really pathetic and I felt sorry for him.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): May I assure my hon. friend that I do not desire it.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. STEVENS: But I am going to give it to him freely; I want him to know how friendly disposed I am towards him. The minister described time and again the difficulties with which he was confronted trying to compose the differences between himself, his department, the Manitoba government, the Manitoba federal members, the city of Winnipeg and the members of the local legislature, all of these being factors in the matter. All I am trying to do is to impress this on the house and to help the minister.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. STEVENS: I mean it; and in a few moments I am going to help the thin red line from Manitoba. What I am trying to point out is that the minister finds, and he has endeavoured to show parliament, that the present method of administering the water-powers and indeed the other natural resources of the three prairie provinces is an impracticable and cumbersome method. That is the whole burden of his speech. If his speech did not mean that, it meant very little else. Why, we had the record of letters and telegrams passing backwards and forwards, we had red robins, partly repudiated and partly supported—

An hon. MEMBER: Round robins.

[Mr. Stevens.]

Mr. STEVENS: Yes, round robins. I was looking at a red tie when I said red robins. We had round robins, we had resolutions and orders in council, and the minister went so far as to say that he was so involved in the mass of correspondence that he would not even take a letter from Mr. Bracken. He insisted on an order in council signed by all the members of the Manitoba government present at the council before he would be satisfied to act in regard to the matter. I do not blame him. The correspondence discloses the great differences of opinion between the various interests affected.

Well, such was the dilemma of the Minister of the Interior. Then we find the members from Manitoba sharply divided on this matter. Some of the hon. gentlemen sitting over to the southeastward of the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Brown)—under his patronage, as it were—are sharply divided in this house, and there is a distinct cleavage between hon. members on that side from Manitoba and hon. members from the province sitting on this side. Some are taking the position that the whole question of the granting of licenses for water-powers should be left to the Manitoba legislature; others take the position that if the government of Manitoba by order in council expressed its approval they are satisfied that the minister should grant the license. As I say, there is a very sharp division of opinion between the Manitoba members. This is apparent from the speeches delivered. I am looking for the moment at the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Glen), who, in a very eloquent speech the other night laboured hard to justify the position he is now taking. His conscience is worrying him; anybody can see it. The hon. member is looking for some way to escape from the dilemma in which he finds himself. I shall offer it to him in a few moments.

Mr. GLEN: Thank you.

Mr. STEVENS: Now, the hon. members from Manitoba signed a round robin last year, a petition, to the minister, in which they asked him not to take any action in this matter until their differences were composed and until the various elements that had a right to express their views had been brought into harmony. They were divided at that time; I point out to the minister that they are still divided.

Now I come to my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell). He is not in his seat. He told us yesterday that the whole proposal to divide water-powers from the other natural resources, as suggested by the amendment now before the house, is utterly ridiculous. The Minister of Agriculture, with his usual faculty for burlesquing something in opposition to which he cannot present sound reasons, made fun and sport of the whole business—in marked contrast to the Minister of Railways (Mr. Dunning), who, with his customary vigour, argued along another line. The Minister of Agriculture asks, whoever heard of a government doing such a thing as is proposed? Whoever heard, he wants to know, of a government separating one resource from another in administration. Let me read exactly what he said:

> How can we justify segregating water-powers and deciding that they shall be dealt with in the particular manner provided by the amendment to the resolution, leaving all other resources to be administered as they have been for the last half century or more?

He goes on—and I would direct the attention of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) to this:

> No government could justify making that distinction and legislating thereon.

I will show in a moment that this government has for ten years administered affairs just in that way; I will prove that conclusively. So that the Minister of Agriculture added nothing to the debate by ridiculing what his government is already doing.

The Minister of Railways was very much alarmed because, as he said, if this resolution were carried in its original form a prospector might be operating on the boundary line between Alberta and British Columbia, and not knowing precisely where on that mountainside the boundary line came he might find himself compelled to come to parliament if he happened to be on one side, or to go to Victoria if he happened to be on the other side.

Mr. DUNNING: No, to the mining recorder's office.

Mr. STEVENS: Yes, in case he happened to be on the other side. And in view of that contingency the Minister of Railways, with the usual vigour which characterizes all his addresses in debate, tried to show to the house that this was a hopeless and impossible proposition. Of course, he knew perfectly well that the spirit of the resolution did not contemplate the consideration in such a way of such details. But I will offer to the Minister of Railways a means of escape from the dilemma in which he finds himself.

I have just run over this matter hastily for the purpose of bringing to the attention of the house the cleavages of opinion in the house with respect to the question, and to suggest that we might frame some amendment that would meet the wishes of all. Before doing so, however, I should like to deal with another matter which I should have discussed at the outset. While I consider it to be more or less of secondary importance in this particular debate, at the same time it is in itself of major importance. I refer to the Beauharnois matter. I would not introduce that question had the Prime Minister not gone to such an elaborate extent in dealing with the natural resources question, and had he not so emphasized the rights of the provinces, not only in this matter but in others as well. He deemed it his duty to uphold the great doctrine of provincial rights. Now here we have before the government—not, I would remind him, before parliament—what is perhaps one of the largest questions with which this country has been faced in many years, namely, the granting of approval to the Beauharnois power scheme. But the Beauharnois power scheme is not the sole question; the question is: Does the Beauharnois power scheme dovetail into an economic and scientific development of the whole St. Lawrence great waterways problem? That is the first question. We do not know; parliament is not taken into the government's confidence in this matter. The government has intimated—at least through the press—that a statement will be made.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The government is not responsible for the press.

Mr. STEVENS: Well, I will say this to the Prime Minister: He frequently answers such a statement as I am making by saying that the government is not responsible for the press. I know that.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I wish to make that clear. There has been a great deal in the press, and the government is not responsible for any of it. Any statement the government has to make will be made to parliament.

Mr. STEVENS: This country, not only the province of Quebec or the province of Ontario, but the Dominion of Canada is vitally interested in this great proposed scheme of development on the St. Lawrence.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The government is fully aware of that.

Mr. STEVENS: It is the biggest thing this country has ever, not undertaken, but discussed or considered in the way of natural development; and I say to the Prime Minister that there has been so much discussion of this question, officially, semi-officially and unofficially, that the public is entitled to know where the government stands. The Prime Minister would probably answer—if he is not doing so in his own mind now—by observing, "In good time the government will reply, giving its views". But, I say, this thing is going on from day to day, progressing from one step to another, while parliament has no opportunity of considering whether or not the scheme is a sound one.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Does my hon. friend appreciate what the government's obligation in the matter is? It is to approve certain plans or not to approve them. If the government, after taking all considerations into account, approves those plans, that approval will be announced. But no approval will be given unless the government is satisfied that all public interests will be conserved.

Mr. STEVENS: But I submit that it will not satisfy parliament, it will not satisfy the country at large, if the government come to parliament and say, with the whip over their own members, "This is what we have approved and we stand or fall by it". That is not sufficient in a matter of this kind.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My hon. friend knows that the way in which the government gives its approval is the course that has been followed for years, and the government does not intend to vary from that course at this time.

Mr. STEVENS: And what is that course? Under the Navigable Waters Protection Act the governor in council will or will not give approval of the scheme. That is the way it will be done.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That is the only authority it has.

Mr. STEVENS: Ah! But I am trying to impress upon the Prime Minister now that this proposition is of such supreme importance to the country as a whole that parliament is entitled to know just where the government stands in the matter; parliament is entitled to know that before the government comes to a decision. It is not sufficient for the government to say, "The machinery at our disposal provides that it shall be done by order in council", and then come to parliament, look us in the eye, and say, "We have a majority of twenty and will put this through". Let me put this to the Prime Minister. In regard to the ordinary business of the department, minor questions which are not of great importance, that may be all right. But this question is of supreme importance to the country. I am not prepared at this time to say a word regarding the soundness or otherwise of the Beauharnois scheme, I am inclined to think it would be a sound way to proceed provided it dovetailed, from an engineering standpoint, into the development of the whole St. Lawrence great waterways proposal. I think I speak on behalf of those with me on this side, and on behalf of the vast majority of the people of Canada, who are anxiously looking for some pronouncement, when I put this question to the government: What is the government's position in relation to the Beauharnois scheme? Where do they stand? Does it conflict with the St. Lawrence great waterways scheme as portrayed by the engineers of the government? And what is the government going to do if it does so conflict?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: We will not grant approval.

Mr. STEVENS: Now I wish to offer to the house an amendment, which I think will meet the views of all hon. gentlemen.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. STEVENS: The Prime Minister and his chief whip have evidently a little joke on their side; the Prime Minister has been telling the chief whip to line up the crowd. That is all I can make out of their joke. Now, the Minister of Agriculture pointed out, with some degree of ridicule, that under this proposal the government would administer the waterways under one system and lands under another. Well, they have been doing so for sixteen years, under an act of this parliament passed in 1912, amended in 1913 and 1919, and now a part of the revised statutes of Canada, chapter 211.

In British Columbia there is a strip of land known as the railway belt, owned and administered by this government. In 1912 this parliament turned over to the province of British Columbia complete control of the water-powers in the railway belt so far as administration is concerned. I have the act under my hand; it is chapter 211 of the revised statutes, known as the Railway Belt Water Act. I wish to read one or two sections briefly, after which I intend to offer an amendment to the amendment:

(a) All water without distinction within the railway belt shall, during the pleasure of the governor in council, for the purposes of administration be under the control of the authorities of the province of British Columbia and be administered under and in accordance with the water acts, as if the said acts were enacted by the parliament of Canada...

Then the water acts are defined as being the water acts of British Columbia.

Mr. CANNON: What section is my hon. friend reading?

Mr. STEVENS: I am reading paragraph (a) of subsection 2 of section 5. I proceed:

The governor in council may direct that any act, or portion thereof, passed by the legislature of the province of British Columbia after the third day of March, 1913, relating to water in the province not within the railway belt shall apply to the water in the railway belt...

In other words, that makes the water acts of British Columbia applicable to the waters of the railway belt. Then, if the Minister of Agriculture were in his seat I would like to direct his attention to the following section:

Nothing in this act shall be construed as conferring any interest in or authority or control over any lands belonging to the crown in the right of Canada.

I think that effectively disposes of the opposition raised by the Minister of Agriculture. I have read these sections, into the details of which I cannot go since my time is rapidly passing, for the purpose of demonstrating to the house that the administration of the water-powers in a province may be delegated to that province by this parliament; that it has been done; that a government of Canada has been carrying on under that principle for sixteen years in regard to the railway belt, and the same principle can be applied to Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment. This is done, of course, pending the transfer of the natural resources in their entirety, and in this amendment I do not offer the details of legislation but simply cite the act and offer my suggestion to the house for its approval, after which the necessary legislation can be considered in detail. The following is the amendment to the amendment, moved by myself and seconded by the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. Manion):

That the said motion, as amended, be further amended by adding the word "further" after the word "no" in the first line thereof, and by striking out all the words after the word "government" in the second last line thereof, and by substituting the following words:

"In the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, shall be made under the Dominion Water Powers Act, but the said water-powers shall be administered by the respective provinces, under powers to be granted by this parliament similar to the powers granted to the province of British Columbia to administer the water-powers in the railway belt as set forth in the Railway Belt Water Act of 1912, and being chapter 211 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1927".

Now I will read the amended motion as it will appear with my amendment, in order to make it clear to those who have not the motion before them:

That, in the opinion of this house, no further disposition of the water-powers under the control of the federal government in the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, shall be made under the Dominion Water Powers Act, but the said water-powers shall be administered by the respective provinces, under powers to be granted by this parliament similar to the powers granted to the province of British Columbia to administer the water-powers in the railway belt as set forth in the Railway Belt Water Act of 1912, and being chapter 211 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1927.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): In what way will this sub-amendment help the hon. member out of his difficulty with regard to the disposal of the Beauharnois development on the St. Lawrence?

Mr. STEVENS: I will admit frankly that it does not affect that matter.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. STEVENS: I do not see the reason for this rather vacant laugh. This does not affect that question; it was not drafted to affect it, because practically all the discussion during this debate has centred around the natural resources of the west. With regard to the Beauharnois situation it is clear from the decision of the supreme court, so far as that decision has gone and from the reasonings contained therein, that the power rights rest with the provinces and that the right of the Dominion government is in regard to navigable waters. So the decision in regard to the Beauharnois scheme will be made under the Navigable Waters Protection Act and will not affect or alter the situation with which we are dealing here.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Just to clear up the matter I would like to ask a question Is this amendment exactly in accord with the statute turning over to the government of British Columbia for administrative purposes the waters in the railway belt?

Mr. STEVENS: Of course the minister will apreciate what I said a moment ago, that in this resolution I have not attempted to define the necessary legislation.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I just want to get at what is in the mind of my hon. friend.

Mr. STEVENS: I suggest that legislation of the character of the Railway Belt Water Act, if applied to the water-powers of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta would convey to those provinces the administrative control of the water within their boundaries.

Mr. DUNNING: Only so long as the governor in council saw fit.

Mr. STEVENS: Yes, very good.

Mr. DUNNING: That is what the law says.

Mr. STEVENS: I am not suggesting that this is a final transfer of resources, but I do suggest that it should be done pending a settlement of the transfer of the resources to the provinces.

Mr. DUNNING: That is practically what we are doing now.

Mr. STEVENS: No, that is exactly where the minister is wrong, if he will pardon my saying so. I do not want this to be taken as mere gush, so to speak, but I sympathize with the minister in the position in which he finds himself. Before he can deal with a water-power he must consult with the government of one of these three provinces. It is obvious to anyone that no minister here in Ottawa can properly administer the water-powers as these three different governments may desire, separated from them as he is by time and distance. He must carry on all negotiations by letters and telegrams, by influences here and influences there. The procedure is impracticable; it is not parliamentary; it is not in accordance with the principles of good government, and I say to the Prime Minister and his colleagues that his Minister of the Interior cannot continue the administration of these valuable water-powers under these circumstances. Consider what the Minister of Railways said last night with regard to the northern part of Saskatchewan, which is on the eve of a tremendous mineral development and where there are great water-powers to be developed. The province of Saskatchewan desires to obtain control over these resources, knowing or expecting that their resources are to be returned to them, yet they must communicate every detail of their desires and expectations to the Minister of the Interior at Ottawa and trust that he will place the proper interpretation upon their wishes. It is not fair to him and it is not fair to them.

Mr. DUNNING: That is quite right.

Mr. STEVENS: I say to this house that, pending the settlement of this great question of the transfer of their natural resources to these prairie provinces, we might well adopt this resolution and thus find a way of escape from the dilemma in which we find ourselves, with many agreeing on different phases of the question yet disagreeing on other points. I ask the government to adopt this proposal and thus give to the prairie provinces control of their resources at least so far as the administration of water-powers is concerned, and then carry on for the next six months or a year negotiations looking to the settlement of the great problem of the transfer of all the resources.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): How would this affect the situation we have in Alberta at present, where a great power development which is under consideration is contained within a park area?

Mr. STEVENS: The Minister of the Interior has stated that he is going to revise the boundaries of the park, which would place these lakes under the control of the Alberta legislature. My point is this: The people in the prairie provinces—I contended for this principle for the railway belt in British Columbia when I was first in parliament—have a right to determine how these things shall be administered and what general policy shall direct. Manitoba might adopt a policy of public ownership; Alberta might adopt a policy of private exploitation.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Not a chance.

Mr. STEVENS: I am just citing that for the sake of argument. British Columbia has adopted that policy, and I want to say to the Minister of the Interior that the Water Powers Act of British Columbia is looked upon as the finest piece of legislation regarding the administration of water-powers that there is perhaps on this continent; certainly it is the finest in Canada.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I never attempted to interfere with it.

Mr. STEVENS: I am not suggesting that. I offer the suggestion that the other provinces of Canada might very well study that act as a basis for the legislation it would be necessary for them to introduce should this resolution be adopted.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Since this resolution has been presented I have not had time to look up the Railway Belt Water Act of 1912, and I would like to know if it would be necessary, should this resolution be adopted, for the provincial legislature to take action before they would be able to administer their own water-powers.

Mr. STEVENS: The parliament of Canada would intimate to the legislatures of these various provinces that they proposed passing such legislation; then an act, similar to the Railway Belt Water Act, would be introduced here by which the water-powers would be transferred to the administration of the provinces. Undoubtedly, it would be necessary for the legislatures of the provinces to pass the necessary legislation to carry on the administration within their own boundaries.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: It would not be done by order in council.

Mr. STEVENS: I should not think so, although I am not sufficiently qualified as a constitutional lawyer to give that ruling dogmatically.

Mr. C. H. CAHAN (St. Lawrence-St. George): I listened to the debate yesterday, and I have had the privilege of reading the debates of the previous days. I believe in the principle of ministerial responsibility to parliament; the principle of legislative responsibility on the part of parliament and of ministerial responsibility in administration in order to give efficient and practical application to such legislation as parliament may enact; and in the further principle that in so far as powers are vested in the governor in council to be exercised in their sole discretion, they have the right to exercise that discretion subject to their being amenable to parliament. If I were called upon to decide as to whether the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Stewart) had exercised a proper discretion in granting the license for the Seven Sisters falls power site, I would be unable to do so because I am not in possession of sufficient information. If the issue is that of a condemnation of the Minister of the Interior, in justice to him and in justice to parliament it should be brought forward by a substantive original motion, or by proposing an amendment when we are on the motion to go into committee of supply or committe of ways and means. In that manner all the facts relevant and pertinent to the exercise of that discretion by the minister could be discussed by parliament upon the amendment then before the house, and we would be in position to deal with the issue on its merits.

I was somewhat embarrassed by the nature of the original resolution, and to a lesser extent by the amendment. I would have voted for the amendment as it stood, but would have done so simply as an expression of opinion on the part of the house, to the effect that, even although it may be within the jurisdiction of the governor in council to deal with certain matters by order in council, there are times when such matters are of such supreme importance to the whole country that parliament should be taken into the confidence of the government before a final disposition is made of the matter.

I had some personal experience with regard to the administration of the act of 1912, which vested in the province of British Columbia the administration of water-powers. When that act was first passed by this house it was provided that orders in council passed by the legislature of British Columbia in reference to the carrying out of the act should retain validity and force only until the close of the next succeeding session of the parliament of Canada, when, if they were not approved by the parliament of Canada, they became invalid and of no force or effect. The wide scope of that amendment brought before the parliament of Canada not only the granting of the original license or permit, but all such minor modifications or amendments as were necessary for the carrying out of the original undertaking. However, it was found that the administration of the Water Powers Act of British Columbia was made impossible when every minor matter connected therewith could only become permanently effective on receiving the approval of the parliament of Canada. I brought that to the attention of the government of the day, and the clause providing that every order in council should be brought before parliament for its approval was repealed, because it was found impossible to administer the affairs of the country under such a provision.

The debate has disclosed that the Minister of the Interior, in the exercise of his discretion in reporting to the governor in council and the governor in council in granting the permit or license for the development of water-power at the Seven Sisters falls, if that is the name, acted clearly within the well-defined limits of the powers vested in the minister and the governor in council by the act which has been under discussion, chapter 210 of the revised statutes, an act respecting Dominion water-powers. But we find that the minister, in carrying out the duties imposed upon him, not only consulted with his colleagues in the government but found it necessary, in view of the importance of that undertaking, to consult with certain members of the house, some fourteen in all, if that is the number. My contention is that if the minister in the exercise of his discretion finds it necessary, on a matter of the disposal of natural resources, the water-powers of the country, to consult ten or fourteen members, it is a matter of such importance that he should frankly come to the whole house, because each one of us as an individual member has exactly the same responsibilities as the members from Manitoba with whom he did consult.

Therefore, there are, as the circumstances have disclosed, exceptional cases when the house should be consulted with respect thereto. If I had voted for the original amendment, as I intended to do, I should have voted for it with the explanation that I think it is too broad in its terms and as merely indicating that there are circumstances which are peculiar, conditions which are special, which at certain times render it advisable that the government, before vesting these water-powers in companies or in private individuals, should consult the house with regard to their prospective action, so that there may be a clear discussion, a clear vision in the minds of the members as to what is involved, and so that the practical approval of the house may be obtained before such concessions are made. Had I voted for the amendment, I would not have voted as condemning the Minister of the Interior. He acted within the clearly defined jurisdiction vested in him by the act to which I have referred and that act, chapter 210 of the revised statutes, dealing with water-powers, was an act introduced into this parliament by the Right Hon. Arthur Meighen as a government measure when he was Minister of the Interior and was, after certain amendments, supported unanimously by the house. Therefore if it were shown that the Minister of the Interior had acted honestly, with no wrongful intent or corrupt motive, I would not be prepared to condemn him for exercising the power vested in him by an act of parliament which received the unanimous approval at least of this house.

But we have by a resolution which we passed the other day unanimously agreed that the natural resources of the three provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta should be vested in those provinces respectively, that is, vested in the crown as representing the three provinces respectively. Until that is carried out there must be a certain provisional period, and some temporary arrangements must be made, because it is essential to the administration of public affairs in this country that under our institutions ministerial responsibility should be maintained. Therefore I am not personally in favour of continuing a condition of affairs in which the Minister of the Interior, in exercising his duties as vested in him by an act of parliament, shall be in a position to come before the house and justify his action by reason of the fact that he has secured the prior consent of the government of a province. The government of the Dominion must be responsible to parliament; the government of Manitoba, Saskatchewan or Alberta must be responsible to the appropriate legislature. Therefore I think, as a provisional measure, the amendment moved by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens) should receive the unanimous support of the house, because until the transfer of the natural resources is made to these provinces respectively, it provisionally places the administration of the water-powers of Manitoba under the control of the legislature and government of that province, and the same in respect of the water-powers of Saskatchewan and Alberta. That is a temporary solution of the difficulties with which we are confronted.

I have had some practical experience over a period of years dealing with the development of water-powers. I was the executive head for seven years of the development in another country of one of the largest and most magnificent water-powers ever known. My experience is that in dealing with the development of water-powers it is impossible that every petty change in plans or specifications, or even a change of site or a change in the conditions under which the operations take place, should always, necessarily, receive the ratification of the legislative assembly or the parliament which is in legislative control. I could give a dozen such experiences showing the impossibility of bringing these matters up for legislative ratification. They must be left as matters of administration, and the government must remain responsible to parliament for their administration, the proficiency, the honesty of it. Therefore I suggest that this is a fair solution, because I firmly believe the development of water-powers should be left to the legislature and government of the province in which those water-powers exist.

If I might be permitted to refer to Beauharnois, I think the rights of the province of Quebec are clear with respect to the development of the so-called Beauharnois power on the St. Lawrence river. I have read in the press the questions and the answers given thereto by the supreme court on a recent reference, but I have not yet seen published in the press a full statement of the reasons embodied in the opinion of the court. I have heard it said inside and outside of parliament that it seemed to convey no clear idea as to the respective powers of Ontario and Quebec on the one hand, and the Dominion on the other. But after having read that opinion some six or seven times, I think we find in the opinion itself as clear and direct and even subtle an expression of the views of the supreme court as it was possible for very intelligent men to give under the circumstances.

May I suggest that the inference which I took from the announcement made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) the other day was that to a certain extent, in his own mind, the methods by which the St. Lawrence river might be developed for navigation, on the one hand, and for power, on the other, had somewhat changed to conform with the spirit of that opinion. In the Beauharnois matter I am clearly of the opinion that the power rights are vested in the province, and that the control of navigation is vested in the federal government of Canada, and I say it would be not only unconstitutional, it would be dishonest if the government of Canada, while pretending to exercise rights with regard to navigation, should use those rights indirectly for the purpose of destroying a power proposition which has received the support of the legislature and of the government of that province.

Mr. DUNNING: That is what the court says.

Mr. CAHAN: Therefore, while certain gentlemen on this side or on that side may feel that they would like to see all power projects carried on by governments of provinces or by municipal governments as publicly-owned undertakings, I am thankful that the opinion of the supreme court, as I read it, renders it impossible for this parliament to impose upon Quebec such an institution as you have adopted in the province of Ontario in the Hydro-Electric Commission.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. CAHAN: I am serious. I have not one word to say against the Hydro-Electric Commission. The legislators of Ontario may adopt that or any other form of internal development which they think fit, but in dealing with local works of that kind, they have no right to impose their views upon the sister province, which is at perfect liberty to adopt such means and methods as they may deem it expedient to adopt. I am prepared at any time to enter upon a discussion of the relative merits of the two economic systems which prevail in these two provinces. I have studied the facts so far as I can. Probably the question could not ultimately be determined except by an examination of the books and of the officials of the private companies in the province of Quebec and of the Hydro-Electric Commission of Ontario, but as nearly as I can ascertain, in the province of Quebec those using industrial power obtain it at slightly lower rates than in the province of Ontario.

Mr. EULER: Not at all.

Mr. CAHAN: And those using light obtain it at slightly lower rates in the province of Ontario than in Quebec. If the legislature of the province of Quebec—I differ from it in many of its legislative methods and acts —but if that legislature, which is supreme within its own domain, just as the parliament of Canada is supreme within its own domain, decides that the better industrial development, or the industrial life of that province is conserved by granting licenses or permits to private companies, then leave it to the private companies to carry on their undertakings in conformity with provincial laws.

Furthermore, I think the opinion of the supreme court gives to those of us who are anxious to see a reasonable and equitable settlement of the question of the development of power on the St. Lawrence river a basis of compromise that will be acceptable to the whole country. When this project was first discussed, it was proposed that the power development and the navigation development should be made by the government of Canada under the terms of a treaty to be negotiated with the United States. I believe that if the government had undertaken to carry out that policy, they would have met with great disfavour in all the provinces except Ontario and Quebec, because I have been from almost one end of the country to the other since that suggestion was made, and if I am able to gauge public opinion, public opinion in the maritime provinces and public opinion in the west is against this government undertaking a national liability of $300,000,000 or more for the purpose of developing cheap power for Ontario and cheap power for Quebec at the expense of all the rest of the country. But as it is clear from the opinion given by the supreme court that the province of Ontario, owning the bed of the river St. Lawrence to the boundary line, and being invested with the power rights and privileges, except those which pertain to the riparian owners, has under its legislative jurisdiction the development of power from the Canadian shore of that waterway, I think it is far better that that province should be left to carry on that development by such public-ownership methods or system as it desires to adopt.

Further, I entirely approve of the suggestion made by the Prime Minister the other day, if I understood him right, that he had decided, I presume in view of this opinion, to take the governments of Ontario and Quebec into consultation in order that together they might come to a unanimous agreement with regard to the exercise of their respective rights in the St. Lawrence river, whether as to the international section or the Quebec section. That removes one of the most aggravating causes of irritation and discord that would otherwise exist throughout the length and breadth of this land.

If I am not going beyond the question, I would like to make this suggestion to the Prime Minister. I have been accustomed to read engineers' reports. I have lived ten or twelve years of my life in daily consultation with some of the best hydro-electric engineers that could be procured either on the continent of Europe or in this country, and I have read each one of the reports that have been made on the development of the St. Lawrence river from earliest times down to the present. I would suggest to the right hon. gentleman that there is a method whereby we could preserve for all time, on the Canadian side of the river, a thoroughfare for navigation that would not be dependent in any respect on the legislative jurisdiction of the state of New York or of the congress of the United States, or be dependent on administration by the government of the state of New York or by congress itself.

I reject at once, in such opinion as I have, the idea of developing the international section of the river by one great dam south of Barnhart island. No volume of water such as that was ever contained by one dam, and there is no reason why we should enter upon the experiment. But if you make a dam at the foot either of Crysler island or near Ogden island across the river, which could only be done by agreement between the two countries, you bank up the water and form what is practically a great lake above the dam which will be of a depth suited for navigation. If you build another dam at the foot of Barnhart island you back up the water to such a depth that you have practically a new lake running away back for several miles. The plans which have been so far suggested provide for locks on the American side to drop down at Ogden island and locks, also on the American side, to drop down at Barnhart island. The plans provide further for a weir on the American side which will control the flow of the river, so necessary to maintain the proper levels at the city of Montreal, in which I am particularly interested. But what is worse, those plans provide for one powerhouse, one-half of which will be used by the American government or its licensees to develop its one-half of the 2,200,000 horse-power available, and the other half of the powerhouse will be used for the development of the power which appertains to Canada or, as I think, to the province of Ontario.

Now, I tell the Prime Minister, this country will never agree to have those locks and those weirs and that powerhouse entirely upon American soil. I believe that is the almost unanimous opinion of the public, as I come in contact with it. But it is easy to overcome that difficulty, and if this matter is to be further investigated I think the board's engineers should ascertain, as it is possible to put locks on the American side to enable the ascent from one level to the other, whether it is not also quite feasible and practicable to put locks on the Canadian side to fulfil the same functions at a not very extreme cost; and weirs should be placed on the Canadian side to control the flow of the river, so that for all time to come, while we accept the treaty pledges of the United States with the utmost confidence, we will alleviate all anxiety on the part of Canadian shipping that they may be compelled at certain times of stress to pass through American locks in order to proceed from the St. Lawrence up into the Great lakes. As a provision against that possibility the extra expense is entitled to very favourable consideration.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. I do not want to interrupt the hon. gentleman, but I think he is far afield. The house is discussing a question affecting the natural resources of the country, and the amendment to the amendment concerns the administration of those resources. I am bound to say that many hon. members in the course of the discussion have gone beyond the Seven Sisters, which were not even mentioned in the original motion. May I hope that the hon. gentleman will link up his argument with the main question before the house.

Mr. CAHAN: I apologize, Mr. Speaker, I got into one phase of the subject because I am intensely interested in the St. Lawrence scheme, and there has been no opportunity for discussing it, although it has been referred to incidentally in various ways. But to come back to the issue. We are confronted with the question of provincial rights. Only in exceptional circumstances do I favour the Dominion government undertaking the development of hydro-electric power and its transmission and sale. I think it is wise that that should be left to the different provinces, because those provinces have adopted different economic systems, and all the arguments in the world would not induce one province to accept the economic system which prevails in the other. Therefore in regard to the development in the west of the Seven Sisters power site and other water-powers which have been mentioned, I think it is wise that this provisional measure should be adopted, and so place the administration of those water-powers under the several provincial governments, subject to such laws and legislative enactments as the local legislatures may adopt. If they decide that the development must be undertaken by the province, by a municipality, or by some other public authority, the decision is entirely within their own discretion. If they decide, as in many cases I believe they will decide, that there are exceptional circumstances where private enterprise may be induced to carry out such developments to the advantage of the whole community, then too the matter is entirely within their discretion as to whether they grant a license to private companies or not.

Consequently, Mr. Speaker, in supporting this amendment I appeal to the government whether it does not offer a temporary solution which should receive their favourable consideration, because I believe it takes from the arena of political discussion an issue which is ever becoming a more grievous, irritating sore from day to day.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Before the hon. member sits down, may I ask a question? He is an authority on the working out of the British Columbia Act. Is it necessary under that act that parliament should take action; or could it be done by order in council?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): By order in council.

Mr. CAHAN: As I remember the act, it is done by order in council; but the legislative body which has the sole responsibility in the matter can impose such conditions upon the government as it sees fit.

Mr. F. W. GERSHAW (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I find myself in considerable difficulty in discussing this question at the present stage. The original resolution proposed:

> That, in the opinion of this house, no disposition of the natural resources, under the control of the federal government, shall be effective until ratified by parliament.

To this two amendments were moved, which were declared to be out of order. Then another amendment was proposed that the words, "natural resources" be changed to "water-powers". Finally we have the amendment now under consideration.

It would seem to me, Mr. Speaker, that hon. gentlemen opposite have been arguing for three or four days in favour of taking more and more precautions in guarding our heritage of natural resources, particularly water-power sites; but that in supporting the last amendment they are arguing directly opposite, that is, to lessen the precautions. The hon. member (Mr. Stevens) who moved the amendment very kindly said he was coming to the aid of the members on this side to get them out of their dilemma. I hold that we are not in any dilemma, for I am quite convinced that we are on sound ground in opposing the amendment.

As the debate has been in progress for several days my observations will be very brief. At the present time six of the provinces have their natural resources, and negotiations are now pending having in view the transfer of their natural resources to the other three provinces. This has been the condition for a long time, and it may continue for a long time yet. We have had legal discussions as to the relative positions of the Dominion and the provinces in regard to water-power sites. In a general way, my understanding is that within the province controlling its own natural resources the provincial authority has jurisdiction over the banks and the bed of water courses, but that any navigation features are under the control of the federal authority. Surely it was never intended that the Dominion government should take advantage of that in order to interfere with or impede or retard water-power development. Within the provinces that have not their natural resources, this government would have control of all. So that the amendment simply means that the three provinces that have not their natural resources will have to come to this parliament before they can make use of their water-power sites, whereas the six provinces who now have their natural resources will be able to go ahead and develop them in the interests of their own people. That, I claim, is not only an inferior but a humiliating position; and I claim further that it puts some of the provinces under the protecting wing of this parliament.

The members of the provincial legislatures have an opportunity to travel around their provinces and become acquainted with local conditions; they are in a position to decide what measures should be taken in regard to the development of water-power sites. The members of this parliament would have no such opportunity over the wide Dominion. So that this parliament would be asked to pass upon certain questions although it would be impossible for us to obtain the necessary information to enable us to come to a reasonable and a sound decision respecting those questions. If it is the idea further to prevent exploitation of our natural resources, why pick out only three provinces and leave the others as they are? Hon. members opposite have argued that we have tried to inject the question of provincial rights into this debate. I may assure them that nothing of the kind was our intention. We have the privilege of representing and speaking up for the people who sends us here and we wish to take advantage of that right, and nothing more. We who have visited the industries of the west and those of the east also know something of the magic which has been accomplished by white coal; we know how it can be transmitted long distances, and how it is revolutionizing modern industry. Last year in Canada more than half a million horse-power was developed, and more and more will be developed in the future. In Alberta the people are making a sincere effort to build up industry. The provincial government, the municipal and city councils and the associated boards of trade are all organizing and advertising and spending money and effort with the idea of building up industrial centres in the west. To do this they must have power, and the cheaper the power the greater will be their opportunity. They are investigating the power situation and are much interested in the whole question. I hope that the province of Alberta will soon get her natural resources, because I believe that the government and the people there are ready and able to deal with those resources. At the present time the agreement is being held up because of the subsidies. In Alberta a great deal of social work is undertaken by the government. At present they are advancing rural education, rural health clinics, and activities of that sort. If it were not for the profits, probably temporary profits, which they obtain from the liquor control, they would not be able to carry on that work, and I hope that increased subsidies will be given. But while they are holding out for increased subsidies, I trust that they will not be placed at a disadvantage regarding their natural resources, as they would be through this resolution. I find myself in agreement with the sentiments of the hon. member for East Calgary (Mr. Adshead) and therefore cannot vote for the amendment.

[Mr. Gershaw.]

Mr. H. C. HOCKEN (Toronto West Centre): I want to protest against the statement of my hon. friend from St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Cahan), who always speaks in italics, that there is some attempt on the part of the province of Ontario to dictate to the province of Quebec. He was very loud and vehement in that suggestion. The people of Ontario are satisfied with their hydro-electric system. They are perfectly satisfied, and are so entirely devoted to the conduct of their own business that they are not in the habit of interfering with any other province. Some of us have shown some interest in trying to secure for the prairie provinces their natural resources, but that is a broad general question for the Dominion, which might properly engage the attention and efforts of any member of the house.

Coming to the issue before us, I am sure that hon. members who were here yesterday and were able to make a contrast between the attitude of the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Stewart) and of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell), must have been very deeply impressed, first, with the seriousness with which the Minister of the Interior treated the question, and the buffoonery of the Minister of Agriculture. Some person ought to tell the Minister of Agriculture that this is not a three ring circus.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. I am sure it is only a slip; the hon. member is too courteous to use such language.

Mr. HOCKEN: Well, Mr. Speaker, the minister conducted himself as if it were.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. I will ask the hon. member to set a good example.

Mr. HOCKEN: Very well. Now I have sat with the Minister of the Interior for seven years and I have never seen him so much in earnest as he was yesterday; I have never seen him so excited, and I am bound to say that in my opinion there is a very good reason for it; because in my judgment the minister's conduct is not all that it should have been. We expect—at least I expect—something different from the Minister of the Interior. We do not expect on this side very much from most of the ministers over there. They have come down into this house and stated most positively, vigorously and emphatically that they were going to do so and so and then they have utterly failed to implement their promise. We all remember with what emphasis the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) promised to lay upon the table of this house, and to bring before the house for discussion, the equal status that he brought back from Europe. And it was never heard of again. So that we have become accustomed to the statements of the Prime Minister being implemented or not implemented just according to the circumstances that may prevail after he has made his original statement. Because in that instance he was evidently led to revise his original statement. But it is a little different with the Minister of the Interior. We always expect him to keep his word and do what he promises. And in this instance, I think it may be said, he has not kept his word and has not done what he promised to this house and to the members from Manitoba.

The Minister of Railways (Mr. Dunning), in his very natural and keen desire to defend his fellow minister, tried to draw an analogy between this government interfering with the water-powers of Ontario and interfering with the water-powers of one of the western provinces. There is no analogy at all, and if three years ago this government had followed the advice given from this side of the house or had even permitted the debate of a resolution it is more than likely that to-day Manitoba would be in the position of Ontario with regard to these resources, and it would not be necessary for the Minister of the Interior to interfere at all. Three years ago an attempt was made to begin the transfer of these resources to the prairie provinces; I believe the Minister of the Interior laid on the table of the house an agreement with Alberta which was perfectly satisfactory to every member of the house with the exception of the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa). His interference at that time prevented the government from beginning the transfer of the resources to the western provinces, and after the government weakly permitted that agreement to remain on the table of the house so that we could not discuss it; after they refused to implement that agreement and sent a man west with another agreement; after they dragged this thing along through the courts and delayed it in other ways for three years, they are solely responsible for the conditions existing to-day and the trouble in which they find themselves at present. If the resources had been transferred to Alberta at that time Manitoba would have had her resources by now, and would have had absolute control of her water-powers.

I disagree with the statements which have been made by hon. gentlemen opposite that this government has nothing to do but take the word of the government of a province in these matters. As a general rule I agree with that, but here was a case where a responsible minister promised the members from Manitoba in a statement made in this house that this license would not be granted until all the differences had been adjusted. His promise was that this would go before the legislature of the province of Manitoba.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I beg my hon. friend's pardon; I certainly cannot stand for that, although I am standing for a good deal.

Mr. HOCKEN: That is what I undesrtand the minister promised the members from Manitoba.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Then I am sorry that my hon. friend misunderstands the situation.

Mr. HOCKEN: At all events, the differences which exist there and which have existed for some time have not been removed, and the minister promised that this license would not be issued until they were removed.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I shall not interrupt my hon. friend again, but I must say I did not make any such wide promise.

Mr. HOCKEN: It is here in Hansard.

Mr. DUNNING: Not what you say.

Mr. HOCKEN: Yes, what I say.

Mr. DUNNING: Then read it again; it has been read over a dozen times already.

Mr. HOCKEN: Here is what the minister said:

> I may assure my hon. friend that until that difference of opinion is settled I am not going to issue any license for that water-power. I think I may assure my hon. friend of that.

The differences have not been settled, because if they had been settled this debate would not have taken place.

Mr. DUNNING: Pretty cute at taking a statement completely out of its context.

Mr. HOCKEN: I will read it all if you wish.

Mr. DUNNING: It is very unfair to the minister.

Mr. HOCKEN: That is a perfectly fair statement of what the minister said in this house, and it is the genesis of this whole discussion. I would be prepared to vote for the original motion; it might cause some embarrassment in the administration of the resources of the west, but it would have been a good thing for the western provinces if a lot of these leases and other transactions which have taken place there had been brought before this house for ratification. There have been a lot of funny things happen in the west.

Mr. DUNNING: Will my hon. friend name one of them? They have been all tabled and the Seven Sisters lease is the only one which has been mentioned in this debate. Will my hon. friend back up his insinuation by naming another case? All these transactions have been tabled in this house.

Mr. HOCKEN: I will say this, sir, that when the Saddle Lake reserve was opened up it was done in such a way that it had to be reopened and a second sale held, because a few men on the inside had gathered in the whole area which had been opened for settlement. That is one case.

Mr. DUNNING: And what did the minister do?

Mr. HOCKEN: There is another case up in Wetaskiwin just about as bad, so it is not only the water-powers.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): To what sale is my hon. friend referring?

Mr. HOCKEN: My hon. friend from Athabasca (Mr. Kellner) tried to get the facts in this connection. It appears that a man named Conroy had a lease for a large area in that district.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): That is correct.

Mr. HOCKEN: He secured that lease and never used it except to re-let the land to other persons, and he used land which he had no right to use for pasturage and for other purposes.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): That is news to me.

Mr. HOCKEN: It is in the correspondence. However, Mr. Speaker, whatever may be said about the leases and all that kind of thing going on up there, in which it is charged by those living in the district that gross favoritism is displayed, I do not see how any member especially from Manitoba could refuse to vote for the amendment which is designed to protect the water powers of that province. That is what I would prefer to vote for, but my hon. friend from Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens) has been so exceedingly generous in his treatment of the case that he has given the government a chance to get out of their present dilemma.

Mr. DUNNING: Given you a chance, you mean.

[Mr. Hocken.]

Mr. HOCKEN: No, I am not in any dilemma; I always steer clear of them, but I should think the government would accept the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre, because certainly it would let them out of a very awkward position. If they do not accept the amendment my preference would be to vote for the amendment proposed by the hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie), and I think that is a reasonable thing no matter how we may quibble about it. It is the only possible way to protect what is left of the natural resources of the province of Manitoba with respect to water powers. That is all.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, before I refer to the amendment to the amendment may I say a word with respect to a matter of procedure in this house in connection with amendments. It is customary, when amendments are being proposed from the opposite side of the house or when important motions are to be introduced to which the government is expected to make an immediate reply, that in advance the government will be supplied with a copy of the proposed amendment or motion. I do not say for a moment that my hon. friend, who has presented the amendment we are now considering and who is an old parliamentarian, intended in any way to overlook that practice; I am sure it was a mere oversight on his part, but since he intimated in his remarks that his desire was to find some common ground on which all members of the house could unite I think it would have facilitated what he had in view if before beginning his remarks he had intimated that he would move an amendment, and had in advance supplied the government with a copy of it. Hon. members will see in a moment that especially where reference is made to some statute passed years ago with special application to a particular province, the government cannot be expected, having a sense of its responsibility in matters of this kind, to accept immediately and in an offhand way a suggestion which may involve many factors not apparent on the surface, and to which some thought and consideration must necessarily be given. I would suggest to hon. members that this practice, which is one of the oldest of parliamentary usages, should be followed on all occasions where the desire is not to take the government unawares for the purpose of obtaining some snap verdict, but rather for the purpose of having a deliberate opinion expressed by those who are responsible.

May I say a word with regard to the amendment to the amendment. The original motion was a very broad one in its application; it related to the disposition of all natural resources. It soon became aparent, both to the mover of the motion (Mr. Woodsworth) and to hon. gentlemen opposite who have spoken in support of it, that they had gone much too far; that as a matter of fact they were advocating something which they had come to see was really unwise and unworkable. They began a retreat and sought to discover some means of gracefully accomplishing that retreat; at that stage the acting leader of the opposition (Mr. Guthrie) came forward to extricate his forces and introduced an amendment which limited very considerably the scope of the original motion. Instead of a further consideration of all natural resources, the acting leader of the opposition brought in an amendment which limited the subject matter to water-powers. That was a considerable step backward from the original motion which had been receiving the support of hon. gentlemen opposite. But my hon. friend (Mr. Guthrie) after he had brought forward his amendment discovered that he too had gone too far, and began to look around for a chance again to retreat. It was not the members on this side of the house who were in a dilemma, as the hon. member for Toronto West Centre (Mr. Hocken) has suggested; it was the acting leader of the opposition who found that he had introduced an amendment which was against the interests of the western provinces. Between yesterday and to-day he and the members of his party have been in conference as to how they could get out of the particular predicament into which they had fallen through that amendment. So in order to help the acting leader of the opposition out of his difficulty, the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens), his left bower at the moment, comes along with an amendment to the amendment. That is a unique spectacle, if I may use a word which has been adopted more than once in this debate; we have the acting leader of the opposition declaring a policy and then we have one of his followers asking, with his consent, that this parliament do not accept the policy which the acting leader has put forward but accept something much less important and significant.

We sympathize with the hon. gentlemen in their dilemma and we will go as far as we can to help them out. We are as anxious as they are to have this matter settled in a manner which may meet if that is possible, with unanimity in this house. So long as the house understands exactly what it is being committed to, there is no reason why we should not be in agreement with respect to the amendment to the amendment which has been moved by the member for Vancouver Centre. This amendment brings us back to the position this government has been asserting all along. My hon. friend (Mr. Stevens) drew attention to the fact that we had been stressing provincial rights, had been stressing the right of the provinces of the Dominion to their own resources and that we were seeking to have those resources administered by the provinces as speedily as possible. He says to us, "That being the case, why will you not accept my amendment? it only asks you to do that much." I may say to my hon. friend that we are prepared to accept his amendment if that is the significance of it, but in accepting it I want to have a distinct understanding with the house as to just exactly what we are accepting so that there will be no misunderstanding later on and the onus placed on the wrong shoulders with respect to the consequences of certain phases in the legislation which my hon. friend is anxious we should accept.

May I read one or two significant clauses in the Railway Belt Water Act so that hon. members will see exactly what is being proposed. Subsection 2 of section 5 of the act, which is chapter 211 of the revised statutes of Canada, 1927, reads as follows:

> 2. Subject to the property in and the rights to the use of water referred to in subsection one hereof,
> (a) all water without distinction within the railway belt shall, during the pleasure of the governor in council, for the purposes of administration be under the control of the authorities of the province of British Columbia and be administered under and in accordance with the water acts, as if the said acts were enacted by the parliament of Canada subject to the provisions of this act, and the officers and authorities having powers and duties to exercise and perform under the provisions of the water acts shall have the like powers and authority with respect to or in connection with the administration of the said water,

Section 7 of the act reads as follows:

> The governor in council may, at any time, repeal the provisions of section five of this act, by proclamation to be published in the Canada Gazette, and upon the repeal of the said section, the water shall be administered under regulations to be made by the governor in council.

I wish to direct the attention of the house to the fact that this legislation begins and ends with action by the governor in council. If we should accept this act, I do not wish to be told by hon. gentlemen opposite that we are proceeding to govern by orders in council. They have been condemning us day after day for doing certain things under orders in council and now come along and ask us to accept an act which contains provisions that certain things shall be subject to the action and approval of the governor in council. Let me repeat, if we accept this act, I do not want hon. gentlemen to say, when we act under it, that we are proceeding under orders in council and that instead we should be coming to parliament for some ratification which the act says nothing about.

My hon. friend (Mr. Stewart) has mentioned that at the time this act was passed certain provincial acts for the administration of water-powers within the province were in effect; also that there was a certain area referred to in this particular act, the railway belt, which was under the control of the Dominion government. In so far as the water-powers in that particular area were concerned, this act took them from under the control of the federal government and transferred them to the province of British Columbia to be administered under the water acts of that province. My hon. friend suggests that similar provision should now be made with respect to water-powers in the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta. I must direct his attention to the fact that at the present moment those provvinces have no water acts under which they could administer these resources; they will have to legislate in order to give themselves authority to administer these water-powers once they come under their control. That is the reason the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Stewart) instead of the government of Manitoba had to act with regard to the lease of the Seven Sisters falls; the Manitoba government could not take these resources, administer them and give the contract which was necessary as it had not the existent powers required to administer the resources as would have been the case had Manitoba had water acts similar to those which the province of British Columbia had prior to the time this act was passed. In accepting this amendment we must not be asked to tie up the whole development of the western power resources in the interval between this moment and the time at which the provinces pass the necessary legislation in the nature of water acts to give them the power of administration which they will require.

Mr. ADSHEAD: The government will always do it on the request of the governments of the provinces?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I was coming to that. In the interval we shall be prepared to do exactly what we are doing now—to proceed in accordance with the wishes of the provinces.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Then the amendment to the amendment does not mean anything.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I am telling my hon. friend what it means. I am not responsible for the amendment to the amendment; I am responsible only for accepting or rejecting it. I am saying, and I have told my hon. friend frankly that the amendment to the amendment in effect does not mean anything more than what we are now doing, but if we were to refuse to accept it we would be told pretty soon that something very plausible and reasonable had been proposed and we had refused to accept it. I do not intend to have the government put in that position. I am going to accept the amendment to the amendment, but in so doing I want it clearly understood what we are accepting.

Mr. CAHAN: In accepting it, will the government not be accepting the principle that hereafter the water-powers in the three western provinces will be granted and developed subject to provincial legislation?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Exactly, and that is what we are prepared and anxious to do. That has been our position all along and anything that will help to bring that about more rapidly than any other method, provided it has not some snare or pitfall in it, we are quite prepared to accept.

Mr. CAHAN: May I ask just for the purpose of elucidation: Does it not imply that those water-powers will be administered by the governments of the respective provinces without any interference whatsoever on the part of the parliament of Canada?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Just as soon as they pass the legislation. They will have to enact legislation giving them power to administer those resources.

Mr. CAHAN: Does it not imply, therefore, that hereafter the legislatures of the respective provinces will have exclusive power and control instead of the governments of the respective provinces, as is the case now, having control indirectly through their negotiations with the Minister of the Interior?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Our intention and purpose would undoubtedly be to get the administration solely under the control of the provinces, so that the provinces will become wholly responsible for it, but the act itself does not go that far. Let me read the section to my hon. friend, because it is all-important. I read it once before. Section 7 of the present act that we are asked to accept reads:

> The governor in council may, at any time, repeal the provisions of section five of this act, by proclamation to be published in the Canada Gazette, and upon the repeal of the said section, the water shall be administered under regulations to be made by the governor in council.

That is the control the government reserves to itself in case resources were being improperly administered. But it could be used to wipe out the whole thing if the government's policy were—

Mr. CAHAN: But this has remained for seventeen years and each government in succession, Liberal or Conservative or Unionist, has felt that so long as the water-powers were being honestly administered, it was not their duty or function to interfere.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Is this an application to all the other provinces of clause 6 of the order in council?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My hon. friend has the right point. It is an endeavour to put Saskatchewan and Alberta into the position in which Manitoba has already been placed whereby, so far as possible, the will of the governments and legislatures of the respective provinces will be carried out. That is the position. My hon. friend is quite right. The government would not wish to pass legislation of this character unless we were sincere in our desire to let the provinces have full responsibility. The clause which I have just read is, as I gather it, a safeguard by the federal administration to protect against acts which, as my hon. friend has just said, might be questionable in some particular. With the understanding that my hon. friend is not asking us to do more than is possible without prejudicing the rights of the provinces, namely, that before this particular act becomes applicable in the extended way in which it is now requested, before legislation is passed in this parliament to extend its provisions to the three western provinces, and before the three western provinces themselves have enacted legislation which will give them powers of administration, the effect of the suggested legislation shall not become binding on anyone, and that in the interval the water resources of the three western provinces will be administered by the federal government in accordance with the wishes of the provincial governments—with that understanding, I say that we are quite prepared to accept the amendment of my hon. friend opposite. I take it that his amendment is in the main a declaration of principle and I am accepting that principle in the fullest manner in which I believe it is possible for the government to implement it.

Hon. HUGH GUTHRIE (Acting Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my right hon. friend (Mr. Mackenzie King) in opening his remarks this afternoon seemed to think that I am in some kind of a dilemma in respect of the amendment I moved in the house last Thursday. I can only say that I do not find myself in any dilemma whatever in regard to that amendment. That amendment was drawn as an amendment to the main motion as it then stood, a motion which I did not approve, as in my judgment it went too far. By that amendment I limited the application of the motion as presented to the house by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) and the principle embraced in the amendment I moved is, I am satisfied, absolutely sound.

My right hon. friend is wrong in another surmise, that in some way I, as temporary leader of the Conservative party in the house, have been a party to framing a subamendment in order to get myself out of some dilemma. That is pure surmise on the part of my right hon. friend. I am free to admit this—and under other similar circumstances I would admit it—that at any time a new proposal is presented to me, as it was in this case this afternoon by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens), as one that might meet with the approval of the house, I have no hesitation in saying that I will accept it under those circumstances. Indeed I think it is my duty to do so; and I may add that I had had no prior consultation with the hon. member for Vancouver Centre when he brought this matter to my attention before the meeting of the house this afternoon. I think it is a better proposal than that embodied either in the motion or in my amendment, a more workable one and one that achieves the end we seek in regard to this matter.

What have we overcome? The principle which has been acted upon by the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Stewart) in the instance spoken of most frequently during the course of the debate is in my judgment an improper principle. It may be justified by the law of the country as it stands to-day; nevertheless that law is in my opinion founded upon an improper principle. Why should the Minister of the Interior be permitted on a matter of great public importance to be carrying on, unknown to this parliament, what is a secret negotiation or arrangement with the government of a province of the Dominion, in breach of a very strong assurance which the minister himself gave to this house on the 6th of June of last year? Our objection is that these negotiations are carried on secretly by one government with another, under the guise of orders in council, and that, in my opinion, is a pernicious principle when any part of the public domain of this country is involved. Our aim was, so far as it was possible, to stop further operations by this government or by any minister of this government in respect to these natural resources which the Dominion still owns and controls. The object sought to be achieved by the subamendment is to allow the legislatures of the three provinces named in the subamendment to have execlusive control of these natural resources when they are transferred to the provinces.

Mr. CANNON: Not the legislatures.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Not the government, but the legislatures of the provinces named, as they are named, in the subamendment.

Mr. CANNON: Is there any section of the Railway Belt Water Act which says "the legislature" of the province? It is the government of the province.

Mr. GUTHRIE: It says the province of British Columbia, and this subamendment expressly mentions the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta.

Mr. CANNON: But not the legislatures.

Mr. GUTHRIE: And not the governments.

Mr. CAHAN: Under the water-powers acts, which are legislative enactments of the provinces.

Mr. RYCKMAN: If the Solicitor General (Mr. Cannon) will look at the interpretation clause he will see that it is the board of investigation which has jurisdiction under the waters acts of the provinces.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I submit that if this subamendment carries it will to a very large extent obviate the difficulties which the country has experienced under the former mode of operation. We will have achieved our end in that respect, and I congratulate my right hon. friend the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) for the graceful manner in which he has accepted the amendment and got out of the dilemma in which he and his government found themselves, particularly with regard to his supporters in this house from the province of Manitoba.

[Mr. Guthrie.]

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. GUHRIE: We had the spectacle during this debate on a motion of a private member of four or five rather excited ministerial utterances, a thing that does not very often happen in this house, particularly in regard to a private members' motion. Anyone could see, an observer from the galleries of this chamber could instantly recognize that this government was in a dilemma, as regards not only its supporters from the province of Manitoba, but the great bulk of the people of this Dominion. This government has been rebuked by its own press for the manner in which it has conducted these negotiations. But now that we have given the Prime Minister the opportunity of getting himself out of the dilemma in which some of his ministers have placed him, I think he should tender his full thanks to my hon. friend from Vancouver Centre for having brought up his amendment.

Mr. T. L. CHURCH (Toronto Northwest): I wish to say a few words on the amendment to the amendment. The Prime Minister has made a declaration of policy but what this parliament needs is a bonfire made of the Dominion Water Power Act and to recover control by parliament of this work. There will be no cheap power for the people of this country so long as that act remains in existence. The Prime Minister has burned his bridges behind him. He seems to do everything by fits and starts, and nothing long on this water-power question. The other day when the question of water-powers was being discussed he abandoned as a waif and orphan and outcast the St. Lawrence waterway and the power that is to be developed therefrom. He seems to have a new policy for every hour of the day with something new to promise and employ. As a public-ownership supporter for some thirty years in the province of Ontario, I want to tell you that you are just going around in a circle by all these acts. The Railway Belt Water Act, chapter 211 of the statutes of 1927 relating to British Columbia, has been on the statute books since 1912, but it is not legislative enactments and decisions by the courts that give cheap light and power to the people of this country. It is the men who are behind the enterprise. This parliament has been going around in a circle during this past week with regard to this particular proposition. The original resolution deals with the natural resources, while the amendment deals only with water-powers. The time has come for this parliament to have charge of the granting of these water-powers.

If the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Stewart) has been guilty of an error, it was an error of judgment. Do not let us blame the minister; let us blame parliament. The Dominion Water Powers Act is twenty-five years behind the times. The annual report of the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1928, states on page 110:

On January 1, 1928, the total water-wheel and turbine installation throughout the Dominion amounted to 4,777,921 horse-power or only a little more than 11 per cent of the possible development. A very conservative estimate places the capital investment in the generation, transmission, and distribution at $875,000,000, a sum greater than that invested in any other single manufacturing industry in Canada.

An analysis of the utilization of the present installation indicates that

(1) 3,904,678 horse-power, or 81·7 per cent of the total, is installed in central electric stations for general public distribution.

(2) 528,731 horse-power, or 11·1 per cent, is installed in pulp and paper mills which, in addition, use power purchased from the central electric stations to the extent of approximately 775,000 horse-power.

(3) 344,512 horse-power, or 7·2 per cent, is installed in general industrial enterprise for electro-chemical reduction, manufacturing lumber, flour milling and other purposes.

The fact that the high average of 502 horse-power of hydraulic installation is available per 1,000 of population, is significant in an era when the industrial prosperity of a county is so closely linked with the amount of mechanical power available to its workers, and in this regard Canada occupies a most advantageous position amongst the countries of the world.

New installation during 1927 amounted to 221,655 horse-power, or a little less than during 1926. This figure gives no indication of the intense activity in hydro-electric construction during the year which will result in an additional installation of about 378,000 horse-power being completed by midsummer of 1928, whilst other developments upon which construction has begun or is about to begin will, it is anticipated, increase the installation by a further 2,000,000 horse-power by the end of 1930.

It is up to this house and parliament to adopt a new policy with regard to the granting of water-powers. Only eleven per cent of the power Canada possesses is yet developed. Change our policy before it is too late.

The subamendment of the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens) is very good as far as it goes. It provides that the prairie provinces shall have light and power laws of their own making after the fashion of the Railway Belt Water Act, 1912. I shall support the amendment on the ground that it means home rule for the western provinces. It will get way from the old policy that has prevailed in the past of the administration of these natural resources by a department of this government. It is the only proper policy to give to the three prairie provinces their water-powers free of all restrictions, and let them lay down a hydro-electric policy of their own along the lines of the Ontario system in conjunction and in partnership with the municipalities. There is no doubt that the Prime Minister has grasped at this subamendment like a drowning man at a straw and has burned his bridges behind him to stem the tide of criticism over the bungle made of the Seven Sisters site.

Might I ask the Prime Minister if it is also proposed to adopt the suggestion of the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Cahan) with regard to the Beauharnois project and immediately issue a permit? That project will destroy the whole hydro-electric system in the province of Ontario. The province of Ontario is to get power at the rate of $15 per horse-power, but at the end of the contract the price will be raised sky-high and may be nearer $40 or $50 per horse-power, and while a few dollars may be saved to-day, it will cost the province in years to come many millions of dollars to get a ransom and freedom.

Yesterday the hon. member for North Vancouver (Mr. McRae) characterized the exploitation of water-power sites in the United States as the crime of the century. Undoubtedly he is right. There was a great fight in Los Angeles between conflicting interests over the development of cheap light and power, and the legislature of California was compelled to pass a statute to control the development of water-powers and regulate the earnings and rates of the power companies. That should be done here. The people want the government to lay down a policy. Every session for the past seven years we have had battles in this house on this power question, and I have brought forward the power question in an attempt for seven years to get the government to declare its policy. In 1924 the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario applied for the right to develop and generate power at Morrisburg, an application similar to that made by the Beauharnois interests, but the government declined to grant the commission license to proceed. The hydro forces were routed in the battle of the Morrisburg dam. In 1927 this government was repulsed on the Ottawa river in what is known as the battle of the Carillon. For six weeks the government did not know whether they were for the Sifton proposal or against it. The government were not only repulsed, they were routed and put to flight in that particular Carillon battle. Last session the government were nearly defeated in what is known as the first battle of the Beauharnois, when the yeas were 54 and the nays 58 on my motion for the six-months' hoist of that proposition. We are looking for another battle along the same lines. Now there has been a fight in Winnipeg, and the Bracken government has capitulated.

The second battle of the Seven Sisters falls and the third battle of the Beauharnois power site will be carried to the polls, because it is the electors who are going to settle these questions. The principle involved will not be settled by the Prime Minister running away from a declaration of policy. This battle will be decided in the polling booths, and the people are going to demand that for all time there shall be a national water-power policy for each province. As far as I can see, the Liberal party has deserted its principles in its treatment of the natural resources of the western provinces. The members of that party must take full responsibility before the electorate for their failure to compel the government to lay down a policy regarding cheap light and power. Where does the Minister of Immigration (Mr. Forke) stand on this question? He is the only cabinet minister from Manitoba. Is he in favour of public ownership in his province? In the last election the party now led by Premier Bracken appealed to the people on a public ownership policy, but they were not twenty-four hours in office before they threw overboard their principles and pledges, and surrendered to the Winnipeg Electric Company. And where does the Minister of Labour (Mr. Heenan) stand on this particular question? After all, cheap light and power means more to the toiler than to anybody else. Both the Minister of Labour and his colleague the Minister of Immigration have yet to be heard from. The Backuses, the Holts, the Gundys, the Joneses, the Sweezeys and the other financial barons can all come down to parliament and get away with the water-powers of the country over parliament's head and many of the people. Why, the hon. gentleman from St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Cahan) propose to give some of them the Beauharnois power site.

We are told that this parliament is not concerned, that the government is absolute, and that parliament has no more to do with it than the pyramids of Egypt. Well, whatever may be said in favour of the party system, I think it has not maintained the prestige of this house on this power question. The decay of our influence has been particularly noticeable during the past few weeks. The House of Commons in Canada is becoming not a ruling body, let alone a critical body.

[Mr. Church.]

Ministers who now rule are in reality not ministers of the crown. The rigidity of the party system has marked the decay of the House of Commons. The party that wins a majority obtains automatically absolute control regardless of the wishes of the crown or of the country. As the franchise is more and more extended the party machinery has also been strengthened with the attendant result of the decay of parliament and of parliamentary institutions. In some of the provinces even the opposition in reality exists in name only and we have a one-man legislature, whose word is law and the assembly is powerless. The commission system has also deprived parliament of a lot of its powers and prerogatives mostly for the gain of selfish interests. Canada has just got a new status without the authority or knowledge or consent of the electorate.

The granting of the license to the Winnipeg Electric Company to develop the Seven Sisters water-power site has been justified by those in favour of it, or at least they have attempted to justify its alienation by pointing to the report of Doctor T. H. Hogg. I cannot understand how the Hydro-Electric Commission of Ontario, a public ownership body, released Doctor Hogg for any such purpose. In the olden days every child knew who was the chairman of that commission, but now you have to consult a directory to find out. Sir Adam Beck was the champion of public ownership, and every official of the commission had to follow him. To-day the chairman has slept at his post, and for two or three years past there has been no active support of Sir Adam Beck's policy. The chairman has refused to fight the battles of public ownership, and he let the engineer of the commission, Doctor Hogg, recommend the handing over of the Seven Sisters power site to a private corporation. Let me say to Doctor Hogg that he cannot serve two masters in this Seven Sisters proposition. He is described as Doctor Hogg. Well, the first prescription he issued in Manitoba has about electrocuted the Bracken cabinet, and it may have something to do with the electrocution in the next election of some hon. gentlemen opposite from that province. The west has little to hope for from the Prime Minister regarding a solution of the coal question or the railway question. The government have made a political football of the coal question in the west, they have made a political football of the natural resources of this country, now they are making a political football of this water-power proposition. I have very little hope of any solution of the question from that quarter.

The amendment is on the principle that if the House of Commons is not to lose its influence as a representative institution no disposition of the natural resources under the control of the federal government shall be effective until ratified by parliament. Only by asserting legislative control over our natural resources will it be possible to prevent their exploitation by powerful monopolies. The present family compact in this regard in my opinion is worse than the family compact of 1837. It may be urged that the terms of the present contracts with these monopolistic power companies are favourable to the consumers of electric current, but I fear when the time comes for those contracts to be renewed such prohibitive rates will be insisted on as will cripple the industrial development of this country, and the labour of generations yet unborn will be adversely affected and mortgaged.

To-day the west instead of being exclusively agricultural is fast becoming an industrial country. The extension of hydraulic power in Manitoba will be a great boon in providing cheap light and power. It is not intended for the city man alone; it is intended for the farmer, the housewife, the toiler, and the worker in every industrial centre. The extension of cheap light and power will serve to retain the rural population, it will assist in the work the good roads movement is doing, and it will help to solve rural economic problems. It is the means to the end of solving the troublesome question of men, money and markets. A low cost of hydraulic power, for city and farmer alike, means better homes, higher standards of living, reduced hours of labour, improved health and happiness, better crops and generally improved conditions. Cheap light and power would bring about a revolution in agriculture and would greatly improve conditions of labour on the farm. It would make for the joy of living on the farm. It would be a genuine boon to the farmer who is now ground down under long hours of strenuous labour, and who is faced periodically with bad times and poor prices. The question of farm relief is uppermost in the United States to-day as well as in this country, and one cannot emphasize too strongly the benefits to be derived from a proper system of hydraulic power when extended by rural lines to the farm at cost.

I have here a table showing what can be accomplished by man-power and machinery to-day in agricultural development. This table is taken from the bulletin of the National City bank of New York for December, 1928, and the facts it discloses are quite illuminating. There is also in the bulletin an article by Professor E. A. Stewart of the State Agricultural college of Minnesota, in which this writer shows what has been done by means of cheap light and power and modern machinery in that great state for the farmers, who are now operating under improved conditions. The article shows the effect of cheap light and power in the matter of economy, improved prices and the solution of the very vexed question of depopulation in rural communities.

The province of Manitoba is to-day in the position which Ontario occupied in 1905. At that time the last concession of 20,000 horsepower in the Niagara river was given away by the Ross government. Sir James Whitney then came in and, with Sir Adam Beck, launched the hydro movement, with the result that 868,000 horse-power are developed on the Niagara river to-day for the use of the people. A similar boon the province of Manitoba could have to-morrow if it adopted a sound hydro policy. What is needed not only in Manitoba but in Saskatchewan and Alberta as well is a proper municipal hydro policy for the development of hydro-electric power along the lines I suggest. But instead of taking steps in that direction this government is content to give away the water-powers of the country to private interests, making millionaires out of some people at the expense of the population at large—and this without the consent of parliament. In this case the government is acting without the consent of the legislature of Manitoba or of this parliament.

I am bound to say that I am very much dissatisfied with the whole policy of this government not only in connection with the Seven Sisters falls but also with respect to the Beauharnois power scheme, the Chicago diversion, and the administration of the Water Powers Act. I contend that a bonfire should be made of the Water Powers Act which is fifty years out of date, and a new policy adopted by parliament, so that the executive should no longer rule but that this parliament should decide upon what terms and conditions leases ought to be granted with respect to these water-powers, which are the property of the people of Canada. There has never been a country on the face of the globe so rich in water-powers as the Dominion of Canada. Yet only 11 per cent of this power is developed, 89 per cent being undeveloped. I say, there was never a country for which Providence has done so much and man so little; Providence has given us a great heritage, but we are doing nothing to preserve that heritage for the people who are to come.

The Ontario hydro-electric policy, or pattern, I urge, should be extended to the three prairie provinces, giving them home rule in this respect. And this is largely a labour policy. More than that, it is a protectionist policy. But in this regard, as in other respects, hon. gentlemen opposite are free traders; they believe in giving away the property of the Canadian people, as Santa Claus gives away toys from the Christmas tree. They have been giving away to their favourites the water-powers that belong to the people of this country. I repeat, the hydro-electric policy which we have in Ontario is a protection policy. Sir Adam Beck fought the battle of the masses against the classes in Ontario, protecting the masses of the people of that province against their oppressors, the light and power grabbers. He redeemed the province of Ontario from the slavery of high cost light and power, in the real sense of those terms, by giving them cheap light and power and transportation as well at cost. That is what will have to be done in Manitoba, and to-morrow in Saskatchewan and Alberta as well. The Tolmie government out on the Pacific coast has also a great opportunity with regard to cheap light and power if it will only adopt a hydro-electric policy in that great province, which gets so little from this government. It will make for a greater industrial Pacific province. The hope of that province is in the Tolmie administration. They will not be found wanting.

The Minister of Labour (Mr. Heenan) professes to have a great regard for the working man, but he utterly ignores the policy of the Labour people; forgetting their principles, he supports a policy like this, the object of which is merely to hand over to private interests the property of the people of Canada, without let or hindrance. The policy of the government in relation to this matter marks the decline of parliament, and it shows us how badly this country stands in need of a new policy for the development of our water-powers. The Minister of Labour describes himself as a deep sea diver. Well, may I point out to him that the principles of liberalism, about which we hear so much to-day, were long ago dumped on the scrap heap and have now been consigned like McGinty to the bottom of the sea. In the action of the government with reference to the Seven Sisters falls the minister, along with his colleagues, has thrown overboard all the principles of true liberalism and of labour. I ask the Minister of Labour now—he says he is a deep sea diver—to go down to the bottom of the sea and rescue those principles. Let him bring them up from the dark unfathomed caves of ocean and get his party and the government to do something with them.

The Minister of Labour is fond of making addresses in behalf of Labour. What has he done in this great war declared against the rights of the people in the matter of water-powers? Was he lined up with those who were concerned in protecting the working classes in Winnipeg and the farmers of Manitoba when these particular water-powers at the Seven Sisters were handed over, over the heads of the people's representatives? Was he opposing the surrender of these rights to private interests who wish to exploit them for greed and gain?

The people of Manitoba will not be really prosperous until their water-powers are conserved for their own use. The labour man in that province as well as in Ontario and Quebec pays not only the cost of his light and power but also interest on a capitalization of millions of dollars. Now what is the situation with respect to the Beauharnois proposition? The Prime Minister—if he does not run away to-morrow from what he said yesterday—proposes to give the Beauharnois people a permit under the Navigable Waters Protection Act. It has been said, of course, that parliament can intervene, by section 12 of that act, and revoke the permit. I contend that parliament cannot do so. A private bill will have to be introduced, and it will go to the foot of the list for the session after its first reading. When the contract is completed it will cost them tens of millions of dollars, because then the Beauharnois people will raise their rate for direct current. That is what happened in the Niagara district when the "big clean-up" deal was put through; the city of Toronto had to pay $32,000,000 to rescue the citizens of Toronto from the clutches of the privately-owned power companies. In the Financial Post of Toronto, shortly after Sir Adam Beck's death, appeared the following:

> Beck died at the height of a public ownership movement that swept him into a position of power and mastery that no other man in Canada has held. The hydro will likely disintegrate as a single institution into a number of smaller corporations, some publicly, and in time, many privately owned, but all linked in a super-power chain.

Is that what is to become of the investment of $300,000,000 made by the people of Ontario if they link up with the Beauharnois power movement set out so fully by the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George?

Reference has been made to new Ontario; why is it that new Ontario is controlled by private corporations to-day? The reason is that in 1907, 1908 and 1909, Sir Adam Beck and the hydro municipalities wanted Sir James Whitney to bring the joy of cheap light and power to the mining camps of that country, and electrify the Temiskaming and Northern railway, but he did not see fit to do so, with the result that private corporations from the United States gained control of that whole mining country and kept new Ontario back twenty-five years. Instead of our present silver production of about $18,000,000 and gold production of about $16,000,000, together with a very small population, if hydro had gone into that territory we would have a population now of about a half to three-quarters of a million with a gold and silver production of over $100,000,000 a year. Now the Ferguson government has to go into northern Ontario and buy out many of these private companies and pay a huge sum to do so.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order: I cannot hear the hon. gentleman.

Mr. CHURCH: I simply give this as an illustration of what happens when we allow private corporations to control these utilities. That has been the experience of new Ontario; to-morrow it will happen with reference to the Beauharnois development, and the day after to-morrow this will be the result of the Seven Sisters lease. If these privately-owned corporations are allowed to go on in this way, the day will come in the prairies and elsewhere to buy them out, and the people will pay.

The Minister of Public Works has heard the Beauharnois case, but he was not allowed to sit alone; he was provided with two official guardians, one of them being the Minister of the Interior who has handed over the Seven Sisters site to the Winnipeg Electric Company and its friends. No doubt we will hear in a few days that the Beauharnois proposition has been passed over the head of parliament, and there is no use saying parliament can revoke a license once given. As the leader of the opposition pointed out the other night parliament cannot revoke a water-power permit without, as I say, being brought into the exchequer court and forced to pay damages for the loss sustained by the private company as they will have vested rights. Then the argument was advanced that under section 12 of the Navigable Waters Protection Act these licenses can be cancelled. I have a bill under that section ready to introduce as soon as this permit is granted; all I can do is to bring in a bill saying that the order in council is hereby annulled, but that bill will be read a first time and then go to the bottom of the list.

Last session the government were asked to lay on the table of the house all papers in connection with the Beauharnois scheme; that request was repeated this year, but those papers have not yet been brought down and those re the Seven Sisters site only at the beginning of last week. So far as the people of this country are concerned, as the hon. member for East Toronto (Mr. Ryckman) has said, the whole question of water-powers some day or other must be decided by the privy council. That is one court where we can get some decision as to the division of authority as between the federal and provincial governments. As my hon. friend pointed out, before the Supreme Court of Canada, counsel for the Dominion contended there was no water-power in Canada on any navigable stream which the Dominion could not expropriate without paying compensation, and could develop it and sell this power to the people. These questions will have to be decided sooner or later; it has been pointed out already that the questions put to the supreme court were not properly drawn; they should have been framed jointly by the Dominion and the provinces, and in any event this question will have to go eventually to the privy council. There is no use in passing additional legislation; some private company affected by this legislation will take the question to the privy council eventually and you will not make any headway with regard to water-powers until the court of last resort has laid down under the British North America Act what are the separate powers and rights of the Dominion and the provinces. No question is settled until it is settled aright rather than making a football of things to kill time till after the next elections are over.

If the central provinces of Canada do not wish to develop and generate power themselves I think it would be good politics for hon. gentlemen opposite to adopt a national hydro-electric policy on the St. Lawrence from canal works in order to protect the working people in central Canada from paying rates on millions of dollars of invested capital held by private corporations, and sell this power at cost to the two provinces. In my opinion a decision of that kind would be in the public interest, because I have very little faith in anything being done with regard to the preservation and conservation of these water-powers for the whole people not only in central Canada but in the west as well. We have seen how this works in the United States; the late President Roosevelt pointed out how the water-powers had been frittered away, and he stated that posterity would have to pay millions of dollars to regain them. I think the example of Ontario in the light and power movement should serve as an illustration to the three western provinces. The twenty-five years of cheap light and power which Ontario enjoyed is an example to the other provinces of the Dominion. The only way to learn anything with regard to the light and power situation is from example and not by adopting the mistakes which have been made by some of the older provinces. Some of them have parted with their water-powers in the same way that Santa Claus hands out presents from the Christmas tree. Ontario provides a lesson on the results of a forward hydro policy for the prairie provinces. The net results in Ontario I sum up as follows:

In these paragraphs we have the result of what the Hydro-Electric has done:

1. Every dollar of the $160,000,000 hydro investment is earning interest and sinking fund.
2. Hydro investment saved Ontario from a coal famine that would have bankrupt the province in war time.
3. Hydro investment saved 2,200,000 shareholders over $75,000,000 in reduced coal, light and power bills.
4. Hydro investment saved Ontario over $100,000,000 on coal prices, which would have gone to $30 per ton in war time but for the hydro investment that gave Ontario the equivalent of 3,000,000 tons of United States coal per annum.

That is what was accomplished in Ontario, and we should endeavour to see that the water-powers of the country are preserved for posterity.

The amendment of the acting leader of the opposition is such that the executive or administrative side of the government would no longer have control of the parting with these magnificent water-powers, but parliament should recover the same and conserve them for the people.

Bill No. 19, to incorporate The Railway Brotherhood Casualty Insurance Company (and recommending that the title be changed to "An Act to incorporate The Railway Employees' Casualty Insurance Company").—Mr. Mercier (St. Henri).

Bill No. 21, to incorporate The National-Liverpool Insurance Company.—Mr. Guérin.

WAPITI INSURANCE COMPANY

The house in committee on Bill No. 32, to incorporate the Wapiti Insurance Company—Mr. Thorson—Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Sections 1 to 4 inclusive agreed to.

On section 5—head office.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Is this the old Wawanesa Mutual Insurance Company?

Mr. THORSON: There were two bills introduced by me, one of which is the bill that is now before the committee, and the other a bill to incorporate the Wawanesa Mutual Insurance Company. The latter has been referred to the banking and commerce committee and has not been reported back to the house. This is a different corporation.

Mr. CAMPBELL: There is no connection between the two companies?

Mr. THORSON: A number of the persons named are the same in both companies.

Mr. CAMPBELL: What is the object of having two companies?

Mr. THORSON: I am sure I cannot answer that question.

Mr. CAMPBELL: It seems rather remarkable that there are two companies organized in the one village and by the same men.

Sections 6 to 10 inclusive agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

CATELLI MACARONI PRODUCTS CORPORATION LIMITED

The house in committee on Bill No. 29, respecting a certain patent of Catelli Macaroni Products Corporation, Limited—Mr. Mercier (St. Henri)—Mr. Johnston in the chair.

On section 1—Power to commissioner of patents for restoration of patent.

Mr. POULIOT: I have studied this bill carefully, but I do not think the description of the patent is clear enough to satisfy hon. members. I would like to ask the sponsor of the bill if it has to do with spaghetti, macaroni or pork and beans.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri): It is for the manufacture of an improved paste. The paste is manufactured with milk. The patent will enable them to make a better paste and put it on the market more cheaply.

Section 2 agreed to.

ESQUIMALT AND NANAIMO RAILWAY COMPANY

Mr. C. H. DICKIE (Nanaimo) moved the second reading of Bill No. 62 respecting the Esquimalt and Nanaimo Railway Company.

Mr. DUNNING: Explain.

Mr. DICKIE: Mr. Speaker, by this bill the Esquimalt and Nanaimo Railway Company seek an extension of time for building a couple of branch lines on Vancouver island. I know of no reason why the bill should not be allowed to proceed. As you know, Sir, these branch lines are built as the requirements of the timber trade demand their construction. In the past there was no particular occasion to build these lines, but today with the increased forestry business of British Columbia they are necessary. The Canadian National Railway system is nowhere near the district to be served by these two lines. In fact, in railway parlance, it may be said to be Canadian Pacific territory. No other railway interest would be prejudiced in any way, and I cannot understand why there would be any objection to granting the extension of time.

Mr. A. W. NEILL (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I wish to say a few words on this bill. The hon. member for Nanaimo (Mr. Dickie) in moving the second reading says he does not know any reason why the bill should not be passed. I presume his point of view is merely that of one acting for the company and wishing to get the bill through. The proposed branch lines are some hundred miles away from his district; in fact they are entirely in the western portion of my riding, and he will therefore perhaps pardon me if I take a few minutes to discuss the bill more from the angle of the people of the district affected than that of the company behind it.

I may say that personally I am entirely in favour of the building of these branch railways, and I am quite sure that I speak also for every man and woman in that portion of the district affected. But, sir, when I say we are entirely in favour of the building of the proposed railways, and also entirely in favour of this bill, it is with this proviso, that we be satisfied that the passing of the bill and the building of the branch lines are one and the same thing, and not a means of tying up this country for another five, and possibly another ten, years. The original act was passed in 1919, so the promoters already have had ten years to carry out their plans.

Now, I see one or two points in this bill that I should like to mention. First, it contains no provision for the work to commence within two years of the passing of the bill; simply the promoters are given five years within which to complete the work. That is a departure from the ordinary practice. I have before me Bill No. 41, introduced by the hon. member for Athabaska (Mr. Kellner), and it covers a number of branch lines, some fourteen I think, to be built by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. I may say that the bill now before us, while ostensibly in the name of the Esquimalt and Nanaimo Railway Company, is really a Canadian Pacific Railway Company bill, as they own the subsidiary company. Bill No. 41 contains a provision that in respect of each branch line, construction must be commenced within two years after the passing of the bill and be completed within five years. This provision is not contained in Bill No. 62 now before us I should certainly like to have some explanation of the omission. I suggest it would give us a good deal more confidence in the genuineness of this application if the bill contained such a provision. The clause is embodied in other Canadian Pacific Railway bills, and at least its spirit is to be found in the Canadian National Railway bills, but their lines have to be completed within three years.

The hon. member for Nanaimo has said that no other railway is likely to go into the territory to be served by these proposed branch lines, the inference being, then why have any hesitation about granting possibly a very lengthy renewal of this charter. But sometimes things move very quickly, and there has been such a rapid development in the west that we do not know what may happen in another ten years. We have seen many railways built by the Canadian National in the last decade that were not even dreamed of before that period. And it is possible that before another five years have elapsed we may see the Canadian National Railway knocking at our doors.

But there is another feature in this connection. I have in my hand the votes and proceedings of the British Columbia legislature for January 29, 1929, and I find there the member for the local district, Mr. Hanna, asking the government what their intentions are with regard to building a highway from Alberni to the west coast of Vancouver island at or near Tofino, which is practically the route covered by this bill. The government reply, as usual, that the project is under consideration; but they also say that they have had a survey made. This I think indicates that the matter is genuinely under the consideration of the British Columbia government. Of course if undertaken the road would be built as a tourist and settlement road, and at a large cost. I think the estimate is something like four hundred thousand dollars, and undoubtedly before the road was finished it would probably cost a great deal more. In these days we are looking towards motor bus transportation, both passenger and freight, and it may be that the provincial government contemplates granting a charter to a bus company to assist the building of the highway. Governments are notoriously anxious and always willing to find excuses for not spending money, and it may be that the government would be glad to say, "We did contemplate genuinely enough building the highway but when we found that the Canadian Pacific Railway, through parliament at Ottawa, undertook to construct a railway on this same route it did not become us to bother about the matter". So that it might actually militate against the success of those who want the road, and we might not get either railway or highway inasmuch as both parties would be waiting, one on the other.

Of course, if the railway is going to go on, the whole ground is wiped from under my feet. I should be glad indeed if that were the case. But I recall what happened in the case of the settlers in the Peace River. They settled, fully expecting—indeed they were promised—that railway transportation would be provided; but it was not and the people were simply starved out. Pitiful tales could be told of what happened to those settlers, and I do not want the same thing to happen in connection with this interior road from Alberni to the west coast. Settlers are not learned in the law and do not understand that a bill which states ostensibly that a road is going to be built does not necessarily guarantee the construction of that road. An hon. gentleman opposite had a similar bill before parliament six years ago. I brought up the same point, that the settlers had been waiting for the railway and were entitled to have it built, and someone observed rather callously, "It is up to the settlers to take care of themselves." But I submit that the settlers are not in a position to take care of themselves. They are told by the colonizing agent in the old country that a road will be built, that the charter has been granted; and they think that the charter means a guarantee of the building of the road. On the strength of this they go into these remote places where there are no transportation facilities, and they are obliged to carry their flour and other stores on their backs. Notwithstanding that they have been promised that a railway will be constructed, and in view of such promise have taken their wives and families into these distant places, nothing is done and they are starved out. I want to avoid that in connection with this railway and to make sure that nothing of the kind will happen here. I do not want settlers to go into this district believing that a railway is to be built if there is no reasonable guarantee of construction.

The second point I wish to discuss in connection with the bill is this: there is no provision for bonds; that is to say, there is nothing providing for the money for the construction of the road. Even the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, wealthy corporation as it is, will not tackle an expenditure of a couple of millions without having provision for bonding privileges. Let me explain the point as well as I can. I am not a lawyer, and it may seem presumptuous for me to raise such a point. But it is not so much a question of law as of fact and common sense, of which even lawyers have not a monopoly. Indeed, one of the most celebrated lawsuits in the old country had its origin in the fact that an able and eminent judge had drawn his own will and made a mess of it. I want to explain how it comes about that there are no bonding privileges. The original act was passed in 1919, being section 83 of the statutes of that date; and section 4 of that act provided for bonding privileges. I need not read it; it provides that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company may issue securities not exceeding $50,000 a mile. That act was assented to on June 6, 1919. I particularly call attention to the date, June 6, because a good deal hinges upon it. That, I say, was the year 1919. Provision was made to begin construction within two years, completion in five years; the act provides that the privileges granted would lapse if the road were not built within five years after its passage. Now it is a well known point in law that an act is passed and goes into effect only when it is assented to; previously to that it is a bill and may be withdrawn or defeated. Five years from June 6, 1919, would be June 6, 1924. I have no doubt that the company intended to come to the house and obtain a renewal of the charter; and as a matter of fact it did. It came to parliament in 1924. I have the act before me. But they made what I regard as two slips in the drafting of it. First of all, they did not amend the old act, providing that the act should stand, and merely altering the date, which would be in accordance with the custom followed in amending such acts. They did not do that; they simply partially reenacted the measure. They said, "We are going to build the railway," and they re-stated in part the terms of the act. The second mistake was that they forgot to reenact the bonding clause. They put in a clause giving power to build the railway, but they did not reenact section 4 which deals with bonding privileges.

Mr. CAHAN: Is this company owned and controlled by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company?

Mr. NEILL: It is owned and controlled by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company.

Mr. CAHAN: They would not need bonding privileges to build a road like that.

Mr. NEILL: I think they would.

Mr. CAHAN: Why?

Mr. NEILL: They had it in 1919.

Mr. CAHAN: They could build it with their own funds.

Mr. NEILL: But it is not in accordance with the custom. At any rate, they themselves secured the bonding privilege in 1919. If the hon. gentleman says that they carry around a couple of millions loose in their pockets, and if they are satisfied to build it with cash funds, I suppose we have nothing to say. But the point I am making is this: I want to see this road built, and I do not want to have any flaw in the act. I have no doubt that what they intended in the act of 1924 was to revive the old act of 1919, which provided bonding privileges. But owing to the passage of time and the extent to which members talked in those days they did not get the act of 1924 assented to until the 19th day of July of that year, six weeks after the old act had lapsed. And of course you cannot revive an act. You can have it re-enacted. Well, they did re-enact the act but, as I have explained, they failed to re-enact the bonding privilege clause, which consequently is no longer in existence.

Mr. CAHAN: I should doubt it very much.

Mr. NEILL: Possibly it is a point for lawyers to argue, but I am anxious to see that no flaw shall creep into this bill. I do not wish, two or three or five years from now, to have the question asked why the railway has not been built and then be told that there was some slip in the bill and that no bonding privilege was provided. I merely throw out this suggestion, and no doubt the hon. member in charge of the bill will consider the point. I am not offering anything in the nature of destructive criticism.

Another suggestion I wish to submit is this. I see no reason whatever why this railway should not come in the ordinary course under the Railway Act, so far as section 161 is concerned. The Railway Act was intended to consolidate the legislation and provide one standard act, bringing all railway charters within its scope. I do not know why, I have never been told, and I cannot conceive why this company should be made an exception.

Mr. CAHAN: Is that section excepted in the original act?

Mr. NEILL: It is excepted, and it is excepted in this act by a few words at the end of section 1, which provides: "If the said railway lines are not so completed", and so forth. It is held that the insertion of these words vitiates section 161 of the Railway Act. In fact it is so admitted, and a special act always overrides the original. There is no justification for it, and if this provision were left out then the railway would come under the operation of section 161, which provides for the bona fide commencement of the work. Section 121 of the Railway Act prescribes that commencement of construction shall mean the expenditure of 15 per cent of the total cost, or of the bonding privileges, or something to that effect.

Mr. HEAPS: Has any work been started on the railway up to the present time?

Mr. NEILL: Eleven miles have been built under the charter of 1919, but nothing has been built of what is now proposed by the bill.

Mr. HEAPS: But do I understand that nothing has been done under the present act since 1924?

Mr. NEILL: Nothing has been built of what is now proposed, and I ask that these words be omitted, so that the Railway Act as it applies to other railways shall apply there. In that case we should have a guarantee of bona fide construction within two years and completion within five. If they once fulfil the commencement requirements there will be no danger of the road not being completed.

I propose to vote for the second reading of the bill, but I would suggest to the hon. member in charge of it that before the bill comes before the railway committee he get in touch with his principals and make the suggestions I have enumerated. He might suggest beginning the construction in two years; he might call their attention to that question of the bonding privileges which at least is doubtful and which might be easily remedied by inserting a clause in this bill, and also suggest that section 1 be amended.

Hon. HUGH GUTHRIE (Acting Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. The hon. member who has been discussing this bill has referred in unparliamentary terms, I submit, to the hon. member sponsoring the bill; he has referred to the hon. member's "principals," the company which he represents. I submit that is not parliamentary language and should not be used in connection with any member of the house.

Mr. SPEAKER: No one in this house is deemed to represent private interests. I did not catch the exact words used by the hon. gentleman, but if he did use that expression, "the principals" of the hon. member who is sponsoring the bill, he certainly went beyond the rules of the house.

Mr. NEILL: If that is the only thing worrying the acting leader of the opposition I would cheerfully withdraw the word "principals." I had no idea anyone could take it amiss.

Mr. SPEAKER: No one in this house is deemed to represent private interests.

Mr. NEILL: If I were sponsoring a divorce bill I would not suggest that I had a private interest, or any other kind of interest, in it. Then I would suggest that the hon. member for Nanaimo get in touch with the company whose bill we are discussing and which he introduced. I suggest that if the company whose bill we are discussing had their attention directed to the three things I have mentioned I believe the bill would be improved, because it would give a guarantee of a bona fide desire to build this railway. Under those circumstances no one would be more delighted than I to see the bill passed.

Mr. DICKIE: The hon. gentleman opposing this bill has made quite a little speech.

Mr. NEILL: Order. Is this the committee of the whole?

Mr. DICKIE: I am explaining myself. I can assure the house that the hon. gentleman has made a statement with respect to myself—

Mr. RINFRET: I rise to a point of order.

Mr. SPEAKER: Is the hon. gentleman dealing with a point of privilege or making a personal explanation?

Mr. GUTHRIE: The hon. member moved the second reading of the bill, and now he is replying.

Hon. CHARLES A. DUNNING (Minister of Railways and Canals): Perhaps before the hon. member exercises his right of reply I might suggest that in the ordinary course of events this bill will be referred to the committe on railways, canals and telegraph lines, and the promoters of the bill will be present on that occasion and I presume can be questioned with regard to the matters raised by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill). I have no knowledge of the merits of the various matters which he raises, but in the ordinary course they can be dealt with on that occasion. I simply wished to make this statement before my hon. friend closed the debate.

Mr. SPEAKER: Does any other hon. member wish to speak before the hon. gentleman closes the debate?

Mr. D'ARCY B. PLUNKETT (Victoria, B.C.): Mr. Speaker, since I come from a constituency which is adjacent to this district I wish to make a statement to the house in regard to this bill. The country through which this railway will be built is heavily timbered. Is it likely that a railway company will cut down the timber and lay steel unless it is assured that lumber and the timber will be taken out of this district? A railway is compelled to move slowly in this area. If this bill does not pass and the company is not given the opportunity to construct the line in question it will mean that a great many men will be out of work on Vancouver island, particularly in connection with the lumbering industry. I wish to register my protest against anything which will prevent the construction of that railway, because the result would be to interfere with the interests and the well-being of the working people of Vancouver island.

Mr. DICKIE: I have very little to say except that the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill) has misrepresented me and also misrepresented the railway in some particulars.

Mr. PARENT: Do I understand that the hon. gentleman is closing the debate? He has already spoken once.

Mr. DICKIE: Yes, I am closing the debate. The hon. member for Comox-Alberni spoke of the Peace River country, but the country through which this railway will pass does not resemble the Peace River country in any way. It is heavily timbered country, and as the demand for logs and lumber becomes greater the line is extended. It is necessary for a railway to look ahead, in order that it may not be held up by charter-mongers who may come in and get a charter and prevent the further development of the line. I am sorry to say that much of the railroad construction on the timbered part of Vancouver island has proceeded too rapidly; they are denuding our lands of the forests much too quickly. This road is for timber purposes altogether, since there is very little inducement for settlers in the district in question. In reply to the hon. member for Comox-Alberni let me say that I was approached only a few days ago and asked if I would sponsor this bill. I said I would be delighted to do so. I presume they should have asked him; I do not know why they did not, but I am the nearest member to that district with the exception of himself, and since I never have had a reputation of baiting corporations for the sake of political effect perhaps is why they approached me instead of the hon. member for Comox-Alberni.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the select standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines.

NATURAL RESOURCES

PROPOSAL THAT DISPOSITION BE EFFECTIVE ONLY ON APPROVAL OF PARLIAMENT

The house resumed consideration of the proposed motion of Mr. Woodsworth:

That, in the opinion of this house, no disposition of the natural resources, under the control of the federal government, shall be effective until ratified by parliament.

And on the proposed amendment thereto of Mr. Guthrie, and the proposed amendment to the amendment of Mr. Stevens.

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre): After studying the course of my motion I find I am in somewhat of a quandary to know whether I have been ignominiously defeated or whether, on the other hand, I have achieved a very signal victory. A short time ago I thought the majority of the hon. members of the house were very definitely against the principle contained in my motion, but there seemed to be some black magic connected with the subamendment of the member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens) for suddenly the atmosphere seems to have cleared and I find everyone in the house quite favourable to my motion as amended. The only difficulty is that as amended I hardly recognize it as mine.

As suggestions were made during the course of the debate that there was something rather sinister in my introducing this motion, I would like to read to the house two planks from the platform on which my colleague from North Winnipeg (Mr. Heaps) and myself were elected to this house. The first plank was as follows:

Regaining for the use of the people of this country the natural resources which have been so recklessly alienated by incompetent or venal administration.

The second plank follows very naturally from the first, and is as follows:

Public ownership and democratic operation of public utilities; and as soon as possible of essential large scale industry.

Our little group has tried to stand consistently for these principles, and when another of the great natural resources was alienated last summer I felt that we had to do what we could to protest against it; hence my motion. As I said before, I gave notice of this motion to the clerk of the house some months ago and I had then of course no idea that a commission would be investigating the situation in Manitoba at the time my motion would be introduced in the house. Notwithstanding what the members of the government have said, I still regard my motion as being quite a sensible one. I admit it has been quite easy to ridicule it by enumerating the details which would be involved in carrying it out. I tried to anticipate objections of that kind by showing that we could handle all these small transactions as we handle so many of the details in the estimates—the minister could lay on the table schedules of the transactions which had taken place in his department during the preceding year. I was not concerned in these small matters, but I believed that in view of the great value of the natural resources of this country the time had come when the water-powers, the lands and the mines should not be in the gift of the administration; their disposal should be subject to ratification by this house. I believed that when I introduced the resolution, and I believe it still. As I said, I accepted the amendment on the ground that half a loaf is better than no bread at all; if I could not get the land I was willing to take the water, and I suppose if I cannot get the water I will have to take the air. The amendment seemed to offer half a loaf, but I am afraid the subamendment only gives a few crumbs.

There are many things I do not like about the subamendment. In the first place, it excludes important water-powers such as the Beauharnois or other water-powers outside the present provincial boundaries. I prefer the amendment in that it included all water-powers, because I am one of those who see no reason why a development, even though situated entirely in one province, may not be regarded as being for the general advantage of Canada. When the Minister of Railways (Mr. Dunning) was speaking the other day he stated that there was no control by the Dominion government over the upper waters of the Winnipeg river, and I think his statement was corroborated by the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Stewart). I should like to ask the minister (Mr. Dunning) when the legislation declaring those upper waters to be for the general advantage of Canada was repealed. I remember a bill to that effect being introduced in 1922, but it was rejected by the senate; it was introduced in 1923, passed this house and was again rejected by the senate. I have no recollection of such legislation being introduced at a later time, but possibly the minister could give me some information in this regard.

Mr. DUNNING: The hon. member has not stated correctly what I said yesterday. I did not say that the Dominion government controlled the waters of the Winnipeg river east of the borders of Manitoba; I said that the water-powers on the Winnipeg river within the province of Ontario could be alienated or disposed of by the government of Ontario, and I had the authority of the Minister of the Interior for making that statement. I might have taken any other interprovincial river as an illustration, but it happened that this particular river had been under discussion.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I understood the minister's argument to be that the older provinces had control over their own streams.

Mr. DUNNING: The right to dispose of the water-powers on those streams.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: In the case of the upper reaches of the Winnipeg river which crosses the interprovincial boundary, as I recollect, legislation was placed on the statute books which declared those waters, and the developments on those waters to be for the general advantage of Canada.

Mr. CAHAN: When was that passed?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I cannot give the year, but an attempt was made to repeal it in 1922 and again in 1923.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): It was passed in 1921 and was repealed last year. We never took advantage of that legislation at any time, and we so stated when we asked for this bill.

Mr. CAHAN: As it was doubtful legislation perhaps that was the best procedure to take.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: There is a precedent involved, whether advantage was taken of the legislation or not. It was on the statute books of this country and in the case of interprovincial waters it was declared that their development should be for the general advantage of Canada. I am not quite sure that similar action could not be taken with regard to other developments which are obviously of more than local importance, and I was sorry that the subamendment should exclude great developments outside of the prairie provinces. Further than that, it did not seem to me in reading the resolution first that it was very clear whether the word "province" meant the legislature itself or the government. I am somewhat reassured when I learn that in the case of the railway belt legislation of British Columbia, referred to in the subamendment, it is necessary that there should be definite water acts, and if a similar course were followed in the prairie provinces it would be essential that the various provincial legislatures should pass similar water acts. The only trouble is that even then it might still be possible for the provinces to act under order in council, and that is the very thing that some of us are objecting to. We think water-powers held by the federal government or by the governments of the prairie provinces ought to be disposed of only after the matter has been brought before parliament. So in this I see a weakness in the subamendment.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): May I point out to my hon. friend that the matter would undoubtedly arise when the legislation was being put through the legislature?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: It seems to me that the subamendment gives us something more than we have had in the past. In the first place I think it extends to Saskatchewan and Alberta the concessions made to Manitoba, and these two provinces will come under the same sort of arrangement that now prevails with regard to Manitoba. But as regards Manitoba I cannot see that we shall be in a very different position from what we are in to-day. Pending the formal transfer of the natural resources it would still be quite possible for Manitoba to give away under order in council such water-powers as that of the Seven Sisters.

Mr. STEVENS: Will the hon. gentleman permit me to suggest to him that Manitoba would have to pass legislation before they could administer by order in council? In other words, it is in the hands of the legislature to determine what form their administration shall take.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Yes, and to that extent I think the adoption of the subamendment would be a distinct advantage and an advance on the present practice, because no doubt when this legislation will be considered, general principles will be discussed and, I fancy, some policy definitely reached.

What, however, disturbs me most is the Prime Minister's interpretation of this subamendment. He suggests that in the meantime matters would go along just about as they are to-day, and until the provincial legislatures meet we might still have this government by order in council giving away other natural resources. As an hon. member suggests, this is perhaps not likely, but it is that very procedure that some of us have so strenuously objected to in connection with the Seven Sisters. All we asked as private members was that the government should refuse to take action until the provincial legislature of Manitoba met. So in this regard it does not seem to me that the subamendment as interpreted by the Prime Minister will altogether remove the objections that some of us have made as to the present method of administering our water-powers.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Both the legislatures of Alberta and Manitoba are still in session and can pass the legislation as we can do this session.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: If those legislatures would do that, undoubtedly it would meet the objections which I have just now voiced. I am somewhat consoled with regard to the whole matter in that after this lengthy debate, after the opinions which have been expressed on all sides of the house and in the newspapers, I really do not think either the federal government or the governments of the three prairie provinces would dare to undertake the kind of thing that was done in connection with the Seven Sisters. To that extent possibly we have made a very considerable advance.

I do not want to go into the general subject that was discussed just before the house rose by the hon. member for Toronto Northwest (Mr. Church), that is, the advantages of public ownership. I would, however, like to say that the advantage of public ownership is what lies behind in my mind all the time in urging parliamentary control. I believe in public ownership and I believe parliamentary control over these resources is at least a safeguard, because we can discuss things in the open, and public sentiment is growing so rapidly with regard to the necessity of public ownership that I think the government would be taking big risks if it defied parliament or the legislative assemblies of the country. After the speech recently delivered by the Premier of Ontario with regard to the dangers to public ownership in the propaganda which was being carried on across this country, I think we can fairly well rest assured that at least none of the western governments or this government would dare to take any course inimical to the principle of public ownership.

I recall a statement made years ago by Robert M. LaFollette in Madison Square Garden, New York, when he compared public and private ownership. He referred to the lighting of the Niagara bridge, half of that bridge being under the jurisdiction of the Dominion authorities and other half being under the jurisdiction of the United States authorities. On the Canadian side we had the Ontario hydro; on the American side the private companies. On the American side the charge for lighting for a certain period was $43 while on the Canadian side it was $8.43. That is, it was five times as much on the American half of the bridge as it was on the Canadian half. The same waters flow underneath the bridge and there are the same possibilities of developing hydro, yet under a public ownership system the cost was only one-fifth of what it was under the privately owned system.

I would refer once more to a warning given out from the United States. I take it that along many of these lines what the United States is to-day, Canada is apt to be tomorrow and therefore we ought to be very careful to avoid some of the dangers into which the United States have come. Governor Pinchot in his message of transmittal, introducing the report of the Grant Power Survey Board of 1925, said:

As Pennsylvania and the nation deal with electric power, so shall we and our descendants be free men, masters of our own destinies and our own souls, or we shall be the helpless servants of the most widespread, far-reaching and penetrating monopoly ever known. Either we must control electric power, or its masters and owners will control us.

That which is so profoundly true in the United States is equally true in Canada. They have largely lost, at least for a good many years, the opportunities of controlling their great water-powers. We still have the opportunities within our reach, and I hope we shall not fail to take advantage of the opportunities that are still ours. I suppose, since the government accepts the subamendment, it will undoubtedly pass; it will hardly be necessary for any of us to record our votes. I do not see how we could very well vote against it, but it contains only a part of what I had hoped we might be able to secure from the house. I should like to see the principle established with regard, not merely to the water-powers of the three prairie provinces but to all the water-powers in Canada.

Mr. CAHAN: What has this parliament to do with the water-powers in the other provinces of Canada?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: That is a very large order.

Mr. CAHAN: It is a very simple question.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: It is not so simple as the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Cahan) may think. I quite frankly admit that in a general way the natural resources belong undoubtedly to the provinces, but I would point out this, that when the British North America Act was drawn up were thinking in terms of the natural resources which were then developed, and we had no idea of some of these new resources which would be developed in the future. The fathers of confederation were thinking in terms of line fences, of surveys, of corner-posts. In the meantime, we have developed our rivers. They had the rivers then, and as soon as they came to talk about those which passed provincial boundaries, there was the recognition even then of the larger concerns involved. As soon as we crossed the provincial boundaries we were compelled to take into consideration the larger considerations. I submit that when it comes to water-powers, we touch interests that are not merely local in their character.

Mr. DUNNING: The fathers of confederation showed considerable foresight in mentioning water-powers specifically in the British North America Act.

[Mr. Woodsworth.]

Mr. WOODSWORTH: There may have been some mention of them; I have not the act here, and I cannot recall the words. But I think even the Minister of Railways (Mr. Dunning) will admit that the water-powers, and all that the water-powers meant sixty years ago, was a very different proposition from what water-powers mean at the present time.

Mr. DUNNING: I only intended to convey that, in relation to the public affairs of that day, the water-powers were important enough in the minds of those dealing with them to justify a specific reference to them in the British North America Act, and, indeed, a specific conveyance to the Dominion of the canals and water-powers formerly owned by the provinces which were uniting. So they must have been considered in relation to Canada as a whole.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I quite admit that even at that time there were certain powers. Under the British North America Act all the matters of local importance were to be left in the hands of the provinces. But I do not think I misinterpret the spirit of the British North America Act when I say that there was also present the thought of matters that were of general interest to the country at large. But I am not interpreting the British North America Act to-night. I had no idea of going into that question except to suggest that there were certain powers which even under the British North America Act were left to the Dominion of Canada, and in view of the advances which have been made in water-power development I think we may very well consider whether the water-powers on the St. Lawrence are entirely a provincial matter. I do not think that this can be taken for granted as the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George seems to consider is the case. I think there is a wider interpretation possible even there.

But there are other powers located outside the organized provinces, and it was all this that I had in view when I said that I had hoped that the general principle would be taken into consideration to-night, and that we would concede that we ought not to deal with matters of this kind without reference to parliament itself. Of course, we cannot tie each provincial legislature; I am not suggesting that, but I would hope, so far as the western provinces are concerned, that they will adopt the principle which we have urged, namely parliamentary control of the disposal of our natural resources.

Mr. HENRI BOURASSA (Labelle): My hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) in opening his remarks this evening said that he felt himself to be in a quandary. I ought to be in a deeper quandary, for the reason that I have followed very little of this debate. Perhaps, for the same reason, I shall be in a position to give, if not a more intelligent vote, at least one less perturbed by many of the considerations and side issues brought up during this debate. For example, I do not propose, sir, to have anything to do with the Seven Sisters. I still feel too young to come so close to ladies of that character, especially after they have been handled in such a manner by politicians of all parties.

With regard to the three motions before us, it seems to me that my good friend from Winnipeg North Centre has not quite realized the effect of the subamendment proposed by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens); and the government having apparently decided to accept that proposition, I do not think that they, either, have quite realized its bearing. My hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre has suggested that this proposition should be adopted unanimously. Once more, I feel myself a little more Irish than the Irish: I am both "agin" the government and "agin" the opposition in this matter.

If I understand aright the proposition of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, it is a very simple one, a broad one, and one open to fair discussion. He lays down as a general principle of legislation that none of the natural resources, no part of the domain of the crown as vested in the right of the Dominion, should be disposed of until such disposition is ratified by parliament. That suggests the great and far-reaching principle of the paramount authority of parliament over government. If the subamendment proposed by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre is accepted, we at once divest ourselves of that authority which the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre wants to strengthen. Besides, we divest this government, and this government consents to be divested, of the powers of administration that have heretofore been vested in them by parliament and by the constitution of Canada. So that, as a matter of fact, the motion of the hon. member for Vancouver Centre is the very negation in principle and in practice of the motion proposed by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Mr. CAHAN: Does not the subamendment merely propose to vest the power in the provincial legislatures, which have real jurisdiction over their own rights?

Mr. BOURASSA: If my hon. friend will allow me, I am not preparing to enter into a legal argument with a lawyer of his ability. I am speaking simply as a parliamentarian, with a certain degree of experience, and some knowledge of the principles of parliamentary government. I am not discussing whether the motion or the amendment is right or wrong. I am simply saying that I cannot see how anyone who is in favour of the motion presented by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre can be in favour of the motion offered as a substitute by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre, because it seems to me that one is the complete negation in principle and in practice of the other. That is my first point.

My second point is that the subamendment is also very different from the amendment proposed by the acting leader of the opposition (Mr. Guthrie). I leave it to the hon. gentleman and the hon. member for Vancouver Centre to compose their differences of opinion in that respect.

With regard to the hon. member for Vancouver Centre, as he knows, much as I have of personal regard for him, as a parliamentarian I do not quite trust him. This is not the first time that he has succeeded—I compliment him for his ability—in getting this government to renounce its policy in favour of one offered to it by himself. So far as that is concerned he deserves much credit; but I do not think the so-called Liberal government deserves much credit for accepting an amendment offered to it by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre, not because it comes from the hon. member, but because of the manner in which it is presented, and also of what it leads to. I think it is a very weak attitude on the part of the government.

Let us go further. What will be the effect in practice not only as regards the three western provinces, but as regards the whole Dominion of Canada if this motion is accepted?

I leave the legal lights of this chamber to decide whether or not the government has the right to divest itself of these or any powers, held and exercised heretofore under the constitution, and to hand them over to provincial governments. I have been told time and again by the legal officers of the crown, and by eminent barristers as well, that neither the federal government can invest the provincial governments nor can the provincial governments invest the federal government with any of their respective powers. I simply cite their authority for that statement; I express no opinion upon it.

Now, by this amendment it is proposed to put the three provinces, Manitoba, Alberta and Saskatchewan, in the same position in which the government of British Columbia has been put by a certain piece of legislation which, I confess, I read for the first time ten minutes ago. But remembering the origin of this legislation, I am struck first with one basic difference as to the situation in British Columbia and the situation in the prairie provinces. British Columbia, as we all know, came into confederation as a fully-fledged province, just as the maritime provinces and United Canada had come in. The domain of the crown, including water-powers and everything else, was vested in the crown in right of the province of British Columbia; but by subsequent legislation the province consented to hand over to the federal government a certain piece of land in return for the disbursements made by the federal government under the authority of the federal parliament for the construction of the Canadian Pacific railway. So, when this act of 1912 was passed, the federal parliament was simply handing back to British Columbia a part of the rights which that province had given to the Dominion in 1884. This is entirely different from what we are asked to do now, that is, to prejudice, so to speak, the settlement of that great problem of the handing over to those three provinces the natural resources contained within their territory. To those resources the provinces may have a moral title; but as a matter of fact they never held them under any statute or under the constitution of Canada. So you see, Mr. Speaker, there is already apparent a very deep difference, both in principle, in law and in practice, as between the situation created in British Columbia by the act of 1912 and the situation which we propose to create by a stroke of the pen at the suggestion of the member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens) to be wielded by his followers, the members of the Liberal government!

Now there is another point which my hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre made a moment ago. I think it is a very strong point, and we should ponder it a little before we legislate unanimously upon this motion. The point is this. We are called upon to decide that no further disposition—I interject this: of any nature, for any purpose whatever, for any public right or interest whatever—shall be made by the federal authorities. The parliament of Canada, invested by the people with the responsibility of safeguarding the public interest, will now decide, by a stroke of the pen, as to the disposal, for any purpose whatever, of an asset that, as the Prime Minister said the other day, is simply the beginning of a source of industrial and economic strength and prosperity which no man in this house or outside can yet calculate. In order to arrange matters, and to put an end to an annoying debate, we are going to decide to renounce for all time to come, and hand over to the three prairie provinces —with whom this government has not been able to come to terms on the very principle upon which this is based—we are going to dispose, I say, on the spur of the moment, of what may become in the future one of the most valuable assets for the people of those provinces as well as for the people of Canada at large.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): May I ask the hon. gentleman a question there? Why would he condemn the people who make up the western provinces to a different handling of their water-power resources from what he now argues on behalf of the province of Quebec?

Mr. BOURASSA: Not at all. Perhaps I did not make myself clear to my hon. friend. I made no mention of Ontario or Quebec.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I just cited Quebec.

Mr. BOURASSA: If my hon. friend will be as patient with me as I am with him when he speaks,—although there is always this difference: he is interesting, I am not—I will explain what I mean. The point I made, first, was that before this parliament settles that big problem—and perhaps this may be a satisfactory answer to my friend—the principle upon which the western provinces are to receive their natural resources should be agreed upon. Ever since I have been in public life I have held the view, and I have expressed it in Quebec and elsewhere, that the people of Manitoba, Alberta and Saskatchewan should be put on the same footing as the people of the other provinces with regard to natural resources or any other question having to do with national or local affairs. I do not want Canada to have "superior" and "inferior" provinces; I want them all to be equal. But has this government the right, under the direction of one member of this house, to dispose of one factor of this problem before the whole problem has been dealt with? From the broad point of view, have they the right to divest themselves of one of their powers of administration, of which they are not the masters, but which has been confided to them by the people of Canada at large? On the other hand, as shrewd diplomats—and in a matter of this nature it is a question of diplomacy—have they the right to hand over to the party with whom they are negotiating, one of their most valuable assets? Have you ever heard in the world of diplomacy of one government giving away to the other party a part of what it has in its hands, prejudicing thereby a final settlement?

Now, with regard to the rest of Canada,—to my friend from Bow River I repeat, if necessary, that the people of the western provinces should be put on the same footing as the people of the eastern provinces; but I do not agree that in order to please the people of the three prairie provinces we should prejudice either the rights or the situation of the eastern provinces. This is the point to which the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has directed attention, and I want to emphasize it. Of course, as he said, the water-powers and all that they are capable of giving to the people of Canada could have been nothing in the imagination of the fathers of confederation, or, to speak of actual facts, those water-powers are comparatively nothing to-day, compared with what they may be twenty-five or fifty years hence. The enormous problem of the control of these resources, for navigation purposes, for industrial purposes, for the preservation of forests by the maintenance of large areas of flooded lands, especially in that vast country extending from Labrador to lake Timiskaming—this whole problem is bound up with this question of water rights and water-powers.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): My hon. friend seems to be arguing as though these resources were being turned over to the provinces. Only the administration of them is affected.

Mr. BOURASSA: I will make myself clear. I entirely agree with the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre that this is too considerable a question to be settled solely in reference to some provision contained in some small corner of the British North America Act passed in 1867 by men of whom perhaps not one knew what water-power was, and who certainly could not foresee what water-powers would be in our day; indeed, we ourselves cannot conceive their possibilities fifty years hence. I say, therefore, whether the question is one of disposal or of administration, that we have no right to prejudice any factor of this great problem. We have no right to lay down the principle that water-powers are any more the property of the provinces than of the Dominion. A classification will have to be made, first, from a technical standpoint and carefully studied, just as the problem of water-powers was studied and solved in Switzerland. for example, to speak of one country I know. There water-powers have been classified, first, from a purely technical point of view, then from the viewpoint of industrial possibilities, and finally handed over, some to the national government, some to the various cantons, and others to the municipalities for local needs. That policy I advocated in the legislature of Quebec twenty years ago, and while it does not make me any younger to refer to the fact, at the same time I feel now, as I felt then, that we have no right to make a gift of these powers either to Sir Herbert Holt or to the International company, as the so-called Liberal but really Tory government of Quebec is doing from week to week and from month to month. We have no right either, we the trustees of the Canadian people, to hand over all that possible wealth to the provinces, either for disposal or even simply for administration. If we vote in favour of the subamendment we commit ourselves in general, unequivocal and unreserved terms to the admission that all water-powers are of provincial interest alone. Whether we commit ourselves by the use of the word "disposal" or the word "administration", I for one, not being a lawyer, refuse to plunge headlong into this matter; I refuse to be crippled within the four corners—if one can speak in terms of dimension in this regard—of one or two words in a particular text. I always endeavour to find out the spirit and the consequence of a principle of legislation or of any determination of this house, and I have tried to read this text with that object in view. If I am right in my interpretation, it means this, that ten or twenty years hence, if this proposal is incorporated in the provincial statutes of the three provinces, if it forms a part of the final agreement with those provinces in relation to their natural resources, we shall have Ontario and Quebec, New Brunswick and Nova Scotia knocking at our door, asking us to renounce all rights and titles we may now have over any water-powers for the general interests of the people of Canada, in order to give these provincial governments the opportunity of handling those resources in the interests of their own people, who after all are but fractions of the nation as a whole, but possibly also to hand them over to a handful of sharks, as has been done in the province of Quebec for the last twenty years. I am not prepared to associate my name with any such proposal, the consequences of which I foresee.

For the last twenty years I have fought in the province of Quebec against both Liberals and Tories because of the manner in which they have dealt with the public domain of that province. Some of us succeeded after many years in getting the government of that province to do something to preserve the forests of the country; but so far as water-powers are concerned, there has been an orgy of favoritism, which is disquieting not only to thinking people, but to all enlightened men associated with industry and water-power development. I have myself heard this from one of the directors of a large company: "We don't know whither we are going, but we are obliged to take more than we can handle, because if we do not, the government will give it to the other concern." For that reason one large concern grabs all it can of forest reserves and water-powers, the object being to prevent the rival interest from obtaining these resources. That is a pretty clear illustration of what may ensue if we once lay down the principle and, for the sake of a bonne entente between warring parties in this house, thus compromise the future. It may be said that any act we pass now may be repealed. Well, I hope my good friend the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Stewart) will forgive me if I venture to suggest that I have read somewhat more extensively in history than he has, for the simple reason that I have had more leisure. And my reading, not only of Canadian history but of the history of many nations, convinces me that once a government divests itself of a given power it becomes impossible, especially in a so-called democratic electoral country, and more particularly in a confederation, for the central authority to resume control once it has lost it, or to take back anything it has given up. Why? Because the sense of public opinion, if you like, or the opposition of so-called vested interests, or, if you will, the feeling, laudable in itself, of respect for provincial rights, will render it impossible. Let my good friends of the government rest assured of this: If they support this proposal before us, they will never regain what they give up; they will be forced to disgorge everything that belongs to the people of Canada, of whom they are the mandatories and servants. And, what is more, they will be forced to do for the other provinces what they are doing in this connection. That is my deep and serious reason for not accepting the sub-amendment moved by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens).

[Mr. Bourassa.]

With regard to the motion itself, I may say to my good friend the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre that although I am generally pleased to vote with him I cannot agree with his resolution. It may be good in principle, but a single thought is sufficient to demonstrate that in practice it would handicap the functioning of government. The hon. member for Melfort (Mr. McLean), in a most practical manner, has demonstrated that if this principle of legislation had been adopted twenty years ago there would probably be no population in the western provinces to-day. I have known the western provinces for a longer time than many of those who represent them to-day. I travelled through that country thirty or more years ago, and then as now the people were grumbling against the handicapping of the federal administration; they were grumbling against the Canadian Pacific Railway and its servant, the parliament of Canada; grumbling at the Department of the Interior, the Department of Immigration, the Department of Indian Affairs. And it always came back to this objection: "Those men in Ottawa are too far away to know our problems." That is one of the reasons why I was converted to the idea of handing over the administration of the whole of these lands of the west, long before my good friend from Bow River crossed the ocean to become the excellent and distinguished Canadian he now is.

But precisely because I want the people of the west to deal with what is their own, or what will be their own after this question is settled, not piecemeal but according to principle and practice, I cannot accept the motion of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre either in principle or in practice. It is true that governments in this country as in England, the United States, France and elsewhere, have freed themselves of their moral responsibility to parliament; it is true that governments in this country under all regimes have done things behind the back of parliament which they should not have done. I think a couple of years ago I quoted the opinion once expressed by Lecky as to the abnormal authority now monopolized by the cabinet under the British system of government. So, from that point of view, I agree with the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre; but when it comes to a partition as between broad principles of legislation and matters of management, I must confess that I believe, and always have believed, that democracy and parliamentary government is a failure. Keep control over the principle of new law; keep control over the men who govern the country and punish them if they do wrong; but give them ample opportunity to administer; because if you force them to come before parliament with every small act of administration; if you force the Minister of the Interior to report to parliament the sale of every section or quarter-section of land in the west or of every bit of forest, while perhaps you may spare the country a few misdeeds—although I am not quite sure that parliament as a whole is much superior to the government as a whole, either in point of morality or in point of competency—you will hamper them to a very large degree.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Will the hon. member tell us how to get back the Seven Sisters?

Mr. BOURASSA: No. As far as management is concerned I am prepared to trust this government; I would trust hon. gentlemen opposite the moment the people of Canada thought fit, rightly or wrongly, to trust them, and as long as they were the government. So long as these gentlemen are the government I am prepared to trust them broadly in matters of administration. I do not think they should come here, lose their time and make us lose our time, in rendering account for every action taken by every department; but I would hold them hard and fast to the principles of our constitution and to the sound principles of government as they exist in every country. I would see that in connection with every bit of legislation brought down they do their duty by the people of Canada, and then trust them with small matters or even large matters of administration.

For all these reasons, sir, I find myself to be in opposition to the opposition; I find myself to be in opposition to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and in opposition to the government. No, I am mistaken, because if I understand correctly the situation, in this instance the government is the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens) and the members and followers of the government are simply voters behind him.

Hon. J. W. EDWARDS (Frontenac-Addington): Mr. Speaker, I shall require but a very short time for the few observations I have to make and which I am privileged to make because of the subamendment. The hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa), in opening his remarks, said he did not want to have anything to do with the Seven Sisters.

Mr. BOURASSA: I will leave them to you; they are in need of a good doctor.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): I thought, Mr. Speaker, I was to have the floor after the hon. member for Labelle had finished, but evidently the hon. member is not through until he is outside the door. I was about to remark that I was sure those ladies, the Seven Sisters, would very deeply appreciate the reticence of the hon. member for Labelle in leaving them severely alone, and probably if they could be vocal would express their deep gratitude at their escape.

The hon. member for Labelle has paid a high compliment to the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens); in the estimation of the hon. gentleman the government is at present on this side of the house in the person of my genial friend from Vancouver Centre.

In the course of the remarks of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) this afternoon I noticed two things in particular: First he spoke about getting some person on this side out of a dilemma, and he immediately followed that remark by the statement that it was his intention and the intention of the government to support the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre. Such tenderness of heart and such solicitude on the part of the right hon. gentleman for those who sit on this side of the house is extremely rare. There seemed to be a little dispute between the two sides of the house as to who was in a dilemma; on this side certain persons evidently wanted to get the government out of a hole, while the government was equally eager to get those on this side of the house out of a hole. I do not know where it is going to end, but I predict that if this sort of thing continues very long this session will be over long before Easter. I do think, however, from my knowledge of politics, that this throwing of bouquets and this kindness of heart manifested on each side spells danger for the Dominion of Canada.

The hon. member who has just vacated his seat and run out (Mr. Bourassa) said that the province of British Columbia entered into union as a full-fledged province, and in that respect was very different from the prairie provinces. Well, at least that is an admission on his part that the prairie provinces are not full-fledged, or in other words that they are not provinces at all up to the present. I was surprised, and I may say somewhat pleased, to hear the hon. member for Labelle state that he wanted to see the prairie provinces given equality of status with the other provinces of the Dominion. I did not gather that that was his attitude toward the prairie provinces in 1926, from what he said on January 29 of that year; I came to a very different conclusion then, and I believe the people of Canada came to a different conclusion at that time as to his attitude towards the prairie provinces.

When I rose, Mr. Speaker, I said I did not intend to take up very many minutes of the time of the house, but I should like to refer to some remarks made during the course of this debate by that eminent jurist, that man who some day probably will be Chief Justice of Canada or occupy some other high position on the bench. I refer to the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Ralston).

Mr. POWER: More bouquets.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Well, hon. gentlemen opposite can contemplate the bouquet as it is now and then look at it a little later. During the course of his remarks the other day the Minister of National Defence said that he could not, either as a member of the house or as a professional man, agree with the legal opinion expressed by myself. I was not aware that I had expressed any legal opinion. I did quote extensively from those who, I thought, were well qualified to express legal opinions, and if the Minister of National Defence had any confidence in his attainments as a lawyer he would have replied to the arguments I presented rather than directed his remarks to myself personally. I can assure him that he is entirely wrong in saying that I put myself up as the chief justice of the court of constitutional principles. I would not presume to do that because I have not the legal knowledge which would fit me for that position. Even though I had the legal knowledge I would not put myself in the field against the possible attainment of his ambitions for a position which, if he ever gets it, I hope he will fill better than the one he is in now. I desire to direct the attention of the Minister of National Defence to some words he used the other day, and which I was very much surprised to read in Hansard. He said:

> I do not think the western provinces will associate themselves with the contention he made,— —referring to myself.

> —which was to this effect: It is true that when we came into confedration we got a certain payment in lieu of lands, but we now find that you had no right constitutionally and technically to withhold our lands; therefore we suggest that we should have the money in lieu of lands and the lands too.

Those are the sentiments he credits to me as having expressed in the course of my remarks. He then continued:

[Mr. J. W. Edwards.]

That was the argument of the hon. member for Frontenac-Addington, and I only desire to go on record as stating that I cannot agree with any such contention.

Every hon. member who was present when I introduced my resolution, to which every hon. member agreed including the Minister of National Defence, knows that I never made use of any such words, nor did I make use of any words which by the wildest stretch of imagination could be twisted into the construction placed upon them by the minister. I want to say to the minister that as a minister of the crown it should be beneath his dignity to resort to methods of that kind. The minister has shown a disposition at various times in his political career to be anything but fair and to be absolutely unjust when it comes to dealing with matters in a political way. Apparently it is utterly impossible for the Minister of National Defence to divest himself of his political coat and his extreme partisanship in discussing any question in the house in which he is interested. The minister cannot find in my remarks the sentiments which he placed in my mouth, nor will he find them in the remarks I made in introducing my resolution, and my reason in speaking now is to draw that fact to his attention.

Mr. SPEAKER: With the permission of the house I will read the motion as it would read when amended by the amendment and the amendment to the amendment:

> That, in the opinion of this house, no further disposition of the water-powers, under the control of the federal government in the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta shall be made under the Dominion Water Powers Act but the said water-powers shall be administered by the respective provinces under powers to be granted by this parliament similar to the powers granted to the province of British Columbia to administer the water-powers in the railway belt as set forth in the Railway Belt Water Act of 1912, and being chapter 211 of the revised statutes of Canada, 1927.

The question is on the amendment to the amendment. Shall the motion carry? Carried.

Amendment to the amendment (Mr. Stevens) agreed to.

Mr. SPEAKER: Now the question is, shall the amendment as amended by the subamendment be carried?

Mr. BIRD: Before the amendment to the amendment is carried, as seconder to the original motion I should like to make a few remarks.

Mr. SPEAKER: Is the hon. member speaking on the amendment or on the main motion?

Mr. BIRD: I am speaking to the amendment as amended.

Mr. SPEAKER: The amendment to the amendment is carried.

Mr. BIRD: It is immaterial whether I speak to the motion as amended or—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. SPEAKER: The subamendment amending the motion as amended is carried; the question now is, shall the amendment as amended be carried? The hon. gentleman (Mr. Bird) has already spoken on the amendment.

Mr. BIRD: No, Your Honour.

Mr. SPEAKER: Very well.

Mr. T. W. BIRD (Nelson): Having taken part in the debate as the seconder of the original motion I think I have the right at this stage to make a few comments upon the question which is now before the house. The debate during the last few days has made it abundantly apparent that it is almost impossible to have a question discussed before the house on its merits. The question as presented to the house by the mover of the original motion was very clear, very specific, but no sooner was the motion before the house than the clouds of political animosity and contention began to descend and before the house knew where it was the original motion had been lost sight if. The principle as set forth in the original motion was clean-cut; there was no equivocation of any kind. In my former speech I adhered strictly to the motion before the house, and I endeavoured to impress the house with the first-rate importance of the principle involved, namely, that the wealth of the people as represented in our natural resources could not rightly be disposed of by governor in council without the ratification of parliament.

The debate having gone so far I am more convinced than ever of the value of that proposition. It seems to me when any matter that relates to the interest of the people is advanced on the floor of the house, there is straightway introduced the question of provincial rights, and an abstract discussion ensues which obscures the plain rights of the people to what is theirs. I am not concerned about these abstract rights with regard to which certain members of the house become excited. I do not see how the settlement of this natural resources question is going to put any bread into the mouths of the common people in my constituency. I can see at this stage of the debate that the question of provincial rights has been raised over and over again in order to obscure what I call popular rights. I am not going to be a party to proclaiming the sacredness of provincial rights to the detriment of what I consider to be the only valuable right of the people, that is, their right to the possession of their natural resources or to a say in their disposal. I have heard all I want to hear about provincial rights. There is no nourishment in that dry bone for a single Manitoba farmer or workingman. There may be in it an occasion for mental gymnastics on the part of constitutional lawyers in the house and elsewhere, but when the question has been discussed as many times as it has been in the house, the people of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta are going to be exactly where they were before, with the Seven Sisters gone, and all the rest of our natural resources will go in the same direction while the representatives of the people are indulging in high-brow discussions in regard to what they call provincial rights. I was not surprised that the debate should take that course, for one has not been in the house a few years without finding that whenever an attempt is made to benefit the people on the lower levels, somebody jumps in, intervenes, with this question of provincial rights, and anything proposed in the house scarcely ever gets to the people except in a maimed and imperfect fashion. I could mention old age pensions, unemployment insurance and many other things which you cannot bring on the floor of the house without somebody intervening with the old gag about provincial rights. It is time that we were finished with this discussion of abstract rights which have no relation whatever to the welfare of the people. What I want to know is how we are going to get the Seven Sisters falls back into the possession of the people of Manitoba. If we cannot do that, I want to know how we are going to prevent the repetition of that sort of thing in our province. I do not want to hear about provincial rights; I want to hear about the rights of the men and women in Manitoba.

I was not surprised that this provincial rights debate should arise in certain quarters of the house, but I was surprised to find it come from the lips of the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Glen). I was surprised that at a point in the debate when there was an opportunity of carrying a motion that would have some teeth in it, a motion that would have determined that no more natural resources would be alienated from the people by this house or any house without first the legislature or parliament pronouncing upon it; my hon. friend should come to the rescue saying: "Abstract rights, provincial rights, this sacred thing that has been handed down to us from confederation; that is all I am concerned about. I am not concerned any more about the Seven Sisters; I am not concerned about the actual possession by the people of their own property; I am concerned about this abstract thing, this matter of provincial rights, and therefore I cannot support the motion." I wonder why it is at that juncture my hon. friend should lay aside his plea, because he was just as zealous as any of us a year ago. He and his friends then joined with us in a plea to the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Stewart) that the Seven Sisters should not be relinquished until the matter had been passed upon by the legislature of Manitoba. That is how I like to hear my hon. friend speak and act, because then he is dealing with realities. But during the debate it became apparent, for what reason I do not know, that the government could not accept the motion of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth). The government has since accepted a motion from the opposition benches. My hon. friend from Marquette felt that he had to support the government at that juncture against the plain, clear-cut statement of principle as embodied in the motion of my hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre. It is a great pity when the necessities of any group of men in the house compel them to vote against, to reject a principle that they surely are pledged to, that their circumstances demand that they should support.

Mr. GLEN: May I ask the hon. member a question? Did the hon. gentleman himself who introduced the resolution not say that its terms were too wide and that this complaint would be made on the floor of the house?

Mr. BIRD: Yes, but that did not satisfy my hon. friend. When the terms of the resolution were narrowed down, were focussed to a point where one would have thought any member from Manitoba could have supported it, my hon. friend was astute enough to extricate himself from that position also. When the amendment was moved narrowing down the scope of my hon. friend's motion to water-powers, my hon. friend the leader of the Liberal-Progressives was still not satisfied, and we on this side of the house despair of ever satisfying him. If the leader of the Liberal-Progressives had said "I accept this motion which gives parliament control of the people's property," the government itself would have had to accept that motion—

Mr. GLEN: Really?

Mr. BIRD: I am saying that, judging by the theoretical position of my hon. friend. Theoretically, my friends the Liberal-Progressives hold the balance of power in this parliament. Theoretically, they are under obligation to the party to which they are hyphenated. The hon. Minister of the Interior said that he was under special obligation to them, and by the same token I would understand that they are under a similar obligation to the Minister of the Interior. There is no other description of the situation that I can think of. My hon. friend is surely under obligation to the government which he supports and to which he is connected by that hyphen. I am not criticizing that at all; I never have criticized the position of my hon. friend. He surely would not be there in that position if his constituents did not approve of it. I am not criticizing him from that standpoint at all, but surely if my hon. friends the Liberal-Progressives are under obligation to support the government at critical moments, the government itself is also under an obligation to consider my hon. friends when they are under obligation, not only to the people of Manitoba, but to themselves and to their own pledges. So I was somewhat surprised to hear my hon. friend rejecting the principle which the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre was urging—a time-honoured principle, a clear-cut, unequivocal thing, the principle that we should place the disposal of the natural resources where it ought to be and whence it should never have been taken.

Mr. GLEN: Where is that?

Mr. BIRD: From the control of this parliament, and that is what my hon. friend objects to.

Mr. GLEN: If the legislature of Manitoba agreed to transfer these resources to a private corporation, would the hon. member be prepared to say that they should still come before parliament to have the agreement ratified?

Mr. BIRD: My hon. friend is very good at conundrums.

Mr. GLEN: That is not a conundrum; it is a plain question. Answer it.

Mr. BIRD: In the far-off days when I tried to study logic, I was warned against categorical questions of that kind. My hon. friend ought to know something about elementary logic.

Mr. GLEN: You have not answered the question.

Mr. BIRD: I can answer it, but I am not going to put myself at the disposal of the hon. gentleman every time he wants to ask a funny question. Certainly I am in favour of the legislature of Manitoba controlling its own resources, and so was the hon. gentleman.

Mr. GLEN: And so I said.

Mr. BIRD: But the hon. gentleman has not acted very much like it while this resolution has been before the house. The hon. gentleman's question is capable of more than a direct answer. Certainly I am in favour of the legislature of Manitoba dealing with its own resources. On the other hand, I am not in favour of any legislature disposing of the property of the people.

Mr. GLEN: Is not the amendment a negation of that principle?

Mr. BIRD: Which amendment, the amendment or the subamendment?

Mr. GLEN: The one you are speaking to.

Mr. BIRD: The amendment is certainly not a negation of that, so far as I understand it.

Mr. GLEN: So far as you understand it.

Mr. BIRD: My hon. friend was face to face with a resolution which was as clear as day, and every word spoken in favour of it confirmed that its only aim was to secure for the people of Manitoba the control of their own resources. My hon. friends stood four-square with us until last summer, in demanding that the minister submit the disposal of the Seven Sisters falls to the legislature of Manitoba, but at that meeting, to which I was not invited, but at which evidently my hon. friend was present, as chairman of the Manitoba members, not as chairman of the Liberal-Progressives, my hon. friend evidently changed his mind. At that meeting he came to the conclusion that something had intervened which freed him from his responsbility to the people of Manitoba. He said that there was something more precious, more sacred than the concrete rights of the people of Manitoba. There was this abstract thing, he said, these provincial rights which have precedence; anything that returns to the people of Manitoba the abstract rights concerning their natural resources was worthy of his support, and I am willing, he said, to let the Seven Sisters go in order to get this abstract right. For the bread of power-at-cost, he gives the Manitoba people the stone of monopolistic control. At that moment my hon. friend and his colleagues had it in the hollow of their hands to save the Seven Sisters for the people of Manitoba. I want to bring that home to him. I want to make it clear to the house that the Liberal-Progressives, headed by my hon. friend from Marquette, at that moment in their history had it in their power to save this precious water site for the people of Manitoba, and my hon. friend and his colleagues let that opportunity pass on the plea which he has made in this debate regarding an abstract right. It does not matter whether the abstract right amounts to anything in the way of concrete benefits, it is the abstract right that is the thing to be fought for and maintained, and the lease of the Seven Sisters falls is a bagatelle compared with it.

Mr. GLEN: Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman is entirely misrepresenting what I said. What I did say was this—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. BIRD: Will the hon. gentleman just state wherein I misrepresented him?

Mr. GLEN: If I am given the opportunity.

Mr. BIRD: The hon. gentleman may have the opportunity if he will state briefly wherein I misrepresented him.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. GLEN: Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman gives me permission to correct what he has said. I said that the government of the Dominion and the government of Manitoba came to an agreement, that that agreement in my judgment represented the opinion of the government of Manitoba, and that therefore, so far as we federal members were concerned, our opposition would cease and the responsibility should lie with the provincial government.

Mr. BIRD: My hon. friend's explanation is just as clever as his explanation made earlier in the debate. I reaffirm—and I am putting my interpretation upon his own words—that there came a moment in his parliamentary experience when he was confronted with the duty of maintaining the rights of the people of Manitoba to the Seven Sisters falls, and he failed in that duty.

Mr. GLEN: That is your opinion.

Mr. BIRD: It is my opinion, and I am prepared to let it go out to Manitoba as such. The hon. gentleman certainly did not take his stand as he did at first with those of us who were prepared to bring pressure upon this government to retain the Seven Sisters falls for Manitoba. What I am trying to bring home to him is that for an abstract right, which can have value only to the legal mind, he sacrificed a real concrete right of unbounded value to the people of Manitoba. He was in a position of grave responsibility. I am not attributing any motives to him at all of a detrimental character. I am prepared to leave it as a criticism of his judgment. I am prepared to explain it, and allow it to be explained, by the fact of his association with the government of which he is a part; and I say I am not criticizing that association, because I know the hon. gentleman would not be here in the capacity he is if the people of Marquette had not said so. But I am pointing out the absolute weakness of the position in which the hon. gentleman and his colleagues are placed to-night. One opportunity came along in their political career to save a property of great value to the people of Manitoba; they did not seize that opportunity.

Now, one or two arguments of a similarly fallacious character have been advanced. The Prime Minister in dealing with this subject introduced a well-known device to discredit the argument of my hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre, that is, he took the principle enunciated by my friend and pressed it to its extremities. That is a well-known device, and I assert, Mr. Speaker, that you could discredit anything under the sun by the same method; you could discredit the Sermon on the Mount or the Ten Commandments for that matter. There is not one valuable provision in our constitution that you could not render absurd by the argument to the absurd. And that is not the kind of argument that I expected to hear from the Prime Minister—a two-edged argument, an argument which, if indulged in without the necessary sense of humour, is apt to react upon the one who uses it, because it is an argument easily seen through. Nobody at any time contends that any principle should be pushed to its logical conclusion no matter how absurd that conclusion may be. Every institution—the British Empire, for instance—is a compromise, something arranged whereby all the details of government may be brought to a focus under the heads of what are outstandingly important. And that is all we wanted in regard to our natural resources. We wanted to make certain that this method of disposing of our natural wealth, a method which has been so disastrous to the rights of the people of Canada, should not be continued. We were asking for a return to the customs and principles that have been maintained in British parliamentary institutions from their very inception. We pointed out the importance of these natural resources now as compared with years ago. But all that was unheeded in this argument to the absurd.

My hon. friends the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell) and the Minister of Railways (Mr. Dunning) indulged in another form of argument. They said: Any principle of this kind, no matter how deeply seated in custom, will under present conditions in Canada delay industrial development. I want the house to mark that —"will delay industrial development." I submit the opposite is the case. If the hon. ministers want to delay industrial development in Manitoba, let them go on with this policy of allowing our motive power —the only motive power we have in Manitoba —to drift into the hands of a few big financial organizations. Industrial development in Manitoba is not summed up in a few big overpowering concerns; in Manitoba it is an aggregation of small industries, most of which use power in some form or other. Agriculture is one of the industries in Manitoba; it too requires power. If you want to delay industrial development in Manitoba, just allow our natural resources to drift into the hands of the big interests.

But you say, What about delay? Well, I have noticed, Mr. Speaker, that whenever we are trying to get anything for the people all kinds of checks and balances are brought into play. Anything that we try to get through parliament for the people is delayed—delayed here, delayed in the other place, and a good many times it never arrives; but when you want to take something away from the people, you have got to hurry up, you have got to get it over with before the people have a chance to reflect. If you want to give away the Seven Sisters falls, do not for one moment let it come on the floor of parliament, get the transaction over with before the people have time to reflect. That is how it was done. That is how it is always done. And here we have the hon. Minister of Agriculture saying in effect: Let us advocate methods by which we can get rid of these things as fast as possible. I say if parliament can delay these matters it is thereby doing a great service on behalf of the people; it is thereby allowing the humblest citizen time to consider whether the disposal of property of this value is in his interest or not.

Now my time has gone, but before sitting down I wish to amend the amendment as amended by adding the following words:

And in the opinion of this house such water-powers should not be disposed of until ratified by the legislatures concerned.

Mr. SPEAKER: The question is on the amendment to the amendment as amended.

Mr. DUNNING: May I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that an amendment to the amendment as amended is not relevant; it is not in order. It seems to me that the reference in the subamendment already deals with an act which has for its objective the making operative of certain provincial legislation with respect to certain particular matters. How can you then make operative an act of a legislature and at the same time say that that act of the legislature shall not become operative until it is ratified by the legislature which passes it? The amendment just proposed seems to me to be entirely irrelevant.

Mr. SPEAKER: There is no question concerning the right of the hon. member to move the amendment. Many amendments may be moved to a motion. An amendment may be moved at this stage—

Mr. CANNON: An amendment to what, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. SPEAKER: To an amendment.

Mr. CANNON: The subamendment having been adopted, how can we amend it? I doubt very much whether an amendment can now be moved.

Mr. SPEAKER: It may be moved.

Mr. CANNON: I am not sure about that.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. First there is a motion by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) that the disposal of natural resources shall be subject to the ratification of parliament. To that motion an amendment was moved by the acting leader of the opposition (Mr. Guthrie) to restrict such ratification to water-powers; to which a subamendment was moved this afternoon by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens) to the effect that no further disposal of water-powers—thus embracing the amendment of the acting leader of the opposition—should be made until the passing of an act, operative in the three provinces of the west, similar to that conferring certain powers upon the province of British Columbia. Now the hon. member for Nelson (Mr. Bird) proposes another amendment to the amendment as amended.

Mr. VENIOT: How can we amend the subamendment?

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. The question now is whether or not the hon. member may go further and propose, by way of amendment to the amended amendment, that "in the opinion of this house such water-powers should not be disposed of until ratified by the legislatures concerned." In my opinion the amendment proposed by the hon. member is relevant and in order.

Mr. CANNON: With all due deference, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. GUTHRIE: Are you going to appeal against the ruling?

Mr. CANNON: I should not like to appeal against the ruling, but with all due deference I submit this: When the hon. member for Vancouver Centre moved his amendment this afternoon he summarized the situation in the words "The motion will then read." Then he proposed the amendment, which would make the motion read:

That, in the opinion of this house, no further disposition of the water-powers, under the control of the federal government in the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta shall be made under the Dominion Water Powers Act, but the said water-powers shall be administered by the respective provinces under powers to be granted by this parliament similar to the powers granted to the province of British Columbia to administer the water-powers in the railway belt, as set forth in the Railway Belt Water Act, of 1912, and being chapter 211 of the revised statutes of Canada, 1927.

This amendment was adopted by the house. How then can we have further amendments?

Mr. SPEAKER: Bourinot says:

When an amendment has been proposed—

Mr. CANNON: There would be no limit to discussion in the house.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. Bourinot says:

When an amendment has been proposed, it is competent for any member to move an amendment to the same. In this case the original question is laid aside practically for the time being, and the first amendment becomes, as it were, a substantive question. The Speaker will then submit the three motions in the order in which they are made, and first take the sense of the house on the last: "Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the amendment to the amendment?" If the amendment is rejected, it is regular to move another (provided, of course, it is different in purport from that already negatived) as soon as the Speaker has again proposed the question: "Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the amendment to the main motion (or original question)?"

If the amendment be resolved in the affirmative, it will not be competent to move that it be struck out, in whole or in part.

Amendments may, however, be proposed to add words to the main motion, or amendment, as amended.

I rule the amendment, as moved by the hon. member for Nelson, in order.

Mr. J. A. GLEN (Marquette): I regret at this late hour, and after so much discussion of the question concerning Manitoba, to be obliged to rise to my feet, and I would not do so but for the fact that an attack has been made upon me by the hon. member for Nelson (Mr. Bird).

I have endeavoured to explain to the house, as clearly as words can express, the attitude I took along with other members from Manitoba. We signed the resolution, along with the hon. member for Nelson, the first item of it being that this matter should be left to the provincial government of Manitoba if they so decided. If the provincial government of Manitoba had taken it into consideration as we desired we should not be discussing it to-night. What did happen was this. A conference took place between the Dominion government and the province with regard to their natural resources. That is a matter with which we have been dealing for many years past, and I think that the amendment moved in the first instance was an absolute negation of that right of the province of Manitoba, and for that reason I opposed it. When my hon. friend speaks of the meeting in Winnipeg he refers to me as the chairman and the leader of the meeting. I was called there simply as a Manitoba member entitled to be there and to give the viewpoint I had and which I have already expressed in this house.

The hon. member has stated that a principle can be carried too far. I submit to the house that the hon. member for Nelson has carried the principle of public ownership to the point of absurdity. When he speaks of provincial rights as "abstract rights" he is referring to the rights of the people of Manitoba, and they are not abstract. The question which came before us was whether or not the legislature should have the right to dispose of this power site, and most of us agreed that the cabinet of Manitoba, speaking, as they have a right to do, for the legislature of that province, having said that they wished to control the disposal of this site, we of necessity must conform to that wish. Further than that, I was deeply concerned for the province of Manitoba, and I saw in this amendment grave danger to the agreement which had been entered into between that province and the Dominion with regard to the natural resources. I saw that if this proposal were countenanced we might find that the abstract right to which the hon. member referred, that of the people of Manitoba, would be under the control and direction of this house and a Tory senate. That was a tremendous difficulty I saw in the way of voting for the amendment, and for that reason I am opposing it.

I say to the hon. member for Nelson that we have dealt with this matter in the best interests of Manitoba, and we are satisfied that when it is left to the province the legislature will decide properly. The amendment proposed by the hon. member would mean that this parliament would dictate to the legislature of Manitoba what they should do.

Mr. BIRD: I would ask the hon. gentleman to read the amendment.

Mr. GLEN: I read it, and it means that this parliament shall say to the legislature of the province of Manitoba what they shall or shall not do. I think that is a fair interpretation.

Mr. BIRD: Not at all.

Mr. GLEN: I would like to have the vote taken to-night and for that reason I do not propose to occupy any more time. My position is very clear; I contend that the legislature of Manitoba should deal with their own rights and that we, the federal members, should step out of the picture and allow them to do so.

Mr. B. W. FANSHER (East Lambton): Mr. Speaker, it seems that we have been travelling in circles in this matter. It reminds me of the boys who went out 'coon hunting; soon after they started out they got lost and wandered around all night, but in the morning they found themselves back where they had started. It seems to me that the government omnibus has become mired; the Conservative opposition have come along with their struggle buggy and become lodged in the same mire, and this afternoon we had the spectacle of the occupants of both vehicles getting out and helping each other out of the mire.

A few years ago, in 1921, this proposition was considered of sufficient importance for the government of the day to declare it a work for the general advantage of Canada, and I well remember two debates which took place during sessions of the fourteenth parliament, one in 1922 and the other in 1923, when attempts were made to repeal that legislation. It is true that these attempts were passed by this house, but they were turned down by the senate on both occasions. However, I believe that last year this legislation was repealed; in other words, the government had no sooner divested themselves of the right to claim that this was a work for the general advantage of Canada than they seemed to feel that this power could be given away to a private corporation. I would like to quote a few sentences from the speech made by the then leader of the opposition during the debate of 1923, appearing at page 4166 of the debates of that year:

Hon. members, of course, know that in the provisions of the British North America Act the parliament of Canada has power to declare any works to be for the general advantage of the Dominion, works which presumably theretofore were works over which the provinces had legislative jurisdiction. That power on the part of the parliament of Canada is unrestrained, but in practice is exercised wherever the works are such as affect the people of more than one province, where the works are such that, in the judgment of parliament, federal legislative control is preferable to provincial control.

Further on he said:

I urged then, as I urge now, that these are works that ought to be declared to be works for the general advantage of Canada, because they really are works for the general advantage of Canada. We have declared over and over again a few miles of railway wholly within a province to be a work for the general advantage of Canada. Here are works as respects which the province of Manitoba, though the works are in Ontario, is perhaps even more interested than the latter province. The power assets that the flow of the water constitutes are, to the extent I think of about 80 per cent, in the province of Manitoba, and the future commercial development of Manitoba is dependent upon the just and equitable legislative administration of those works. I repeat what I said a year ago: If there ever were works that ought to be declared works for the general advantage of Canada, that are appropriate for such declaration, these are the very works.

Those were the words of Right Hon. Arthur Meighen at the time this legislation was sought to be repealed. I remember that at that time a number of members from the province of Manitoba strongly supported that stand, and no less a person than the then member for South Winnipeg, Hon. A. B. Hudson, also supported the stand taken by the leader of the opposition. He went even further in stating that these works were for the general advantage of Canada and quoted quite extensively from what had been done in Switzerland in the line of hydro-electric development.

Mr. SPEAKER: May I ask the hon. member to confine himself to the subject matter of the amendment moved by the hon. member for Nelson?

Mr. FANSHER (Lambton): I thank you, sir, for reminding me; perhaps I was getting a little away from the Seven Sisters falls, although this legislation with which I was dealing concerned the control of the lake of the Woods, which is the headwater of these falls.

I was about to say that at that time the then Solicitor General also supported the stand taken by the leader of the opposition, and he made a long speech in this house showing why this legislation should not be repealed and why these water-powers should be declared works for the general advantage of Canada. To my mind this stand was taken because these gentlemen believed that while control was vested in this parliament these waters would not be alienated and given over to a private corporation. Hon. A. B. Hudson made quite extensive observations with regard to this matter. He stated that the property right did not pass upon the control being vested in the parliament of Canada any more than it did in the control of the fisheries by regulation; the possession of the fish did not in that case pass from the provinces.

I was amazed to find that the opposition seemed very anxious to eliminate the Beauharnois scheme from this resolution. We have been discussing a water-power which has been alienated; we have been crying, as it were, over spilt milk, but we are about to give another great water-power to a private corporation in the province of Quebec. I had hoped that the government of the day would give this country a lead in connection with power development, but it seems the government is taking the course of least resistance. The province of Quebec seems to be taking the lead in the development of water-powers by private interests; the government do not wish to gain their ill-will and they are agreeable to allowing the private interests to develop the power. The government of this country should declare that this St. Lawrence waterway should be developed for the general advantage of Canada. This is a waterway which leads into the heart of the country and—

Mr. DUNNING: I rise to a point of order. The hon. member is not discussing the amendment before the house; he is not within a thousand miles of it. The amendment relates to the three provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, and the amendment which has been moved by the hon. member for Nelson (Mr. Bird), to which I apprehend discussion will be confined at this stage, is simply:

That in the opinion of this house such water-powers should not be disposed of until ratified by the legislatures concerned.

Your Honour ruled a few moments ago that the discussion must be relevant to the subject now before the house, which is confined to Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta and the particular method of dealing with the resources in those provinces.

Mr. SPEAKER: The rule is that a member speaking on a bill as amended may speak on each amendment, but he must confine his remarks to the subject matter of that amendment; otherwise there would be no end to the debate.

Mr. CANNON: I rise to another point of order. The amendment which is now under discussion, moved by the hon. member for Nelson, has been introduced by the seconder of the original motion.

Mr. SPEAKER: The present question is the amendment as amended; it is a different question altogether.

Mr. CANNON: Can the hon. member amend his own original motion?

Mr. SPEAKER: He is not amending his own original motion, as it has been amended already, it becomes a new question.

Mr. FANSHER: (Lambton): I did not realize I was out of order because this Beauharnois proposition has been discussed before. However, if I am limited to the specific terms of the amendment I will try to confine what I have to say to it.

As I understand the amendment now before the house, it is simply that whatever decision is arrived at by the legislatures of the provinces concerned, the Dominion government will turn over the water-powers to the respective provinces. It seems to me that the people's representatives in the various provinces should have an opportunity of passing upon these proposals. Water-powers are one of our most valuable resources and we can scarcely estimate their worth to the provinces or to the Dominion as a whole. It does seem a pity to think that we might have a repetition of what has taken place in the province of Manitoba in connection with the Seven Sisters falls, and the government—

[Mr. Dunning.]

Mr. CANNON: I rise to a point of order. I understand the subamendment has been adopted. That subamendment contains a principle, and I would refer Your Honour to No. 413 of Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms:

No amendment shall call in question a principle on which the house has given a decision by its vote on a former amendment.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Wednesday, March 6, 1929

The house met at three o'clock.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Second report of the select standing committee on railways, canals, and telegraph lines. —Mr. Cahill.

Second report of the select standing committee on banking and commerce.—Mr. Hay.

OFFICIAL REPORT OF DEBATES

Mr. E. J. YOUNG (Weyburn) presented the first report of the select standing committee to supervise the official report of the debates, as follows:

The select standing committee to supervise the official report of the debates beg leave to present the following as their first report:

Your committee have had under consideration the report of the said committee, presented to the house on June 30th, 1924, for the purpose of re-considering some of the recommendations contained therein, which were presented to the house and concurred in at that time.

Your committee have become impressed with the view that senators should be supplied with a limited number of copies of House of Commons Hansard for distribution by the King's Printer in accordance with mailing lists provided by senators. At the present time honourable members of the senate are supplied with filing copies only, and frequent requests having been received from senators for additional copies to send out, the advisability of considering the matter has became increasingly evident.

Your committee therefore recommend that two copies of House of Commons Hansard, in addition to filing copies now delivered, be supplied for the mailing lists of senators and sent out by the King's Printer to such names and addresses as shall be forwarded to the Editor of Debates, House of Commons.

Your committee have also had under consideration the advisability of increasing the number of Hansards supplied to the members of the House of Commons. After careful consideration of the matter your committee beg leave to recommend that the present number of ten copies, four of which are delivered for the files and six for mailing purposes, be increased to twelve copies, two of which shall be for the files and ten copies and no more for distribution by the King's Printer in accordance with names and addresses supplied by members of the House of Commons to the Editor of Debates, House of Commons.

Your committee further recommend that the quorum of the said committee be reduced from the present number of seven to five. The total membership of the committee being but twelve it is found very difficult when other committees are functioning to secure a sufficient attendance to constitute a quorum at the number now fixed.

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn) moved that the first report of the select standing committee to supervise the official report of the debates be concurred in.

Mr. SPEAKER: The motion requires unanimous consent.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

HOUSE OF COMMONS STATIONERY

Mr. CHURCH:

1. Why are the lead pencils, pen holders, ink, pens, keys of desks, keys of offices, keys to members' post office boxes, and other forms of stationery furnished on members' desks in the house, made and purchased in the United States of America, including the atlas of Canada of the Immigration and Interior departments?

2. How long will this policy continue?

3. Will stationery made in Canada or the British Empire be substituted therefor, and when?

Mr. RINFRET:

1. The mass of stationery supplies furnished to the houses of parliament and the government departments is of Canadian manufacture. Goods of foreign make are, as the regulations require, supplied only when Canadian or British made articles of the type desired are not procurable at approximately equal prices. A few lines of supplies such as pens, lead pencils, penholders, typewriters, calculating machines, etc., are not manufactured in Canada, and some are not so far as known manufactured in the British empire. For several years pens not of British make only have been purchased for stock; any pens not of British make supplied in recent years would be on special order or to exhaust remainders of old stocks. Lead pencils of British make are stocked, but certain makes of foreign pencils are still demanded by customer departments in some cases. Penholders of British make are stocked, but most departments prefer penholders of United States manufacture, which are offered in a greater variety. Ink of Canadian manufacture only is supplied save to meet some positive demand for other goods. Typewriters and calculating machines of British make are not known.

Keys for desks are supplied with desks when purchased. Keys for offices are furnished under contract for the building, and keys for the post office boxes are supplied under contract for boxes. If any additional keys are required they are cut in Ottawa, in the Public works workshop, from blanks which are generally purchased in Canada.

The atlas of the Immigration and Colonization department is being published in Canada since the fiscal year 1924-25.

As far as the Interior department is concerned the only atlas published by the department in the last ten years is the animated atlas of Canada, which was published in Canada.

2. and 3. Answered by No. 1.

EDMUND RYDER

Mr. BELL (West Hamilton):

1. How many months' leave of absence through illness or otherwise, with full pay, did Edmund Ryder, Superintendent of Stationery, receive following April 1st, 1928?

2. On what date did the said Edmund Ryder resume his official duties in the stationery branch after absence?

3. What correspondence is there between the Auditor General and the King's Printer dealing with the shortages in tracing linen, and other irregularities in respect of the stationery branch stock, and how soon will the minister undertake to produce that correspondence in the house for inspection?

4. What correspondence is there in possession of the King's Printer, with the Civil Service Commission, relative to an increase in the salary of the Superintendent of Stationery, and how soon will the minister undertake to produce that correspondence in the house for inspection?

Mr. RINFRET:

1. Sick leave with pay: April 1st to September 27th, 1928, January 31st, 1929, a.m.; a total of 5 months 27½ days.

Annual vacation: December 22nd, 1928 and January 2nd, 1929, a.m.—1½ days.

2. September 28th, 1928.

3. Communications have been received from time to time from the Auditor General giving the result of his annual or more frequent audit of the various stores of the Department, the reports containing comments on the principal features of the audit, enumerating the respective shortages and overages, and recommending changes in procedure which might lessen these differences, and there have been replies to these communications. The correspondence involved will be produced when ordered.

4. There has been no correspondence relating specially to the matter of salary increase in the case of the Superintendent of Stationery, but in January 1927 that officer was included in a list (comprising all the principal administrative officers) which was placed before the Civil Service Commission with the request that a general review of the same might be made with respect to the matter of compensation; in the case of the Superintendent of Stationery and certain other officers the decision of the commission has not been received. Various communications on the subject have passed, and the correspondence will be produced when ordered.

IMMIGRANTS UNDER AGE OF TWENTY-ONE

Sir GEORGE PERLEY:

1. What number of immigrants under twenty-one years of age, (a) males, (b) females, came into Canada during the last year from the British Isles?
2. Can the department say how many of these were between fourteen and twenty-one years of age?

Mr. FORKE:

1 and 2. The immigration compilations do not show the number of immigrants from the British isles under twenty-one years of age. They show the number under eighteen years of age who came to Canada during the fiscal year 1927-28 as 14,523, of whom 8,479 were males and 6,044 were females. The total immigration from the British isles was 51,552. It is impossible to show from the statistics the number between fourteen and twenty-one.

O'Leary, of Halifax, for $5.25 per ton was accepted.

The resolution passed in 1920 which reads as follows: "Any enactment by the parliament of Canada otherwise within the legislative authority of that parliament shall operate and be deemed to have operated extra territorially according to its intention in like manner and to the same extent as if enacted by the parliament of the United Kingdom."

2. The resolution passed in 1924, which reads as follows: "Any enactment intra vires of the parliament of Canada if expressed to operate extra territorially shall be deemed to have had that operation in so far as it is a law for or ancillary to the peace, order and good government of Canada."

BURLINGTON POSTMASTERSHIP

PRIVILEGE—MR. GLEN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. A. GLEN (Marquette): Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege. I find on page 707 of Hansard of March 5 the following statement made by the hon. member for Nelson (Mr. Bird):

> He said that there was something more precious, more sacred than the concrete rights of the people of Manitoba. There was this abstract thing, he said, these provincial rights which have precedence; anything that returns to the people of Manitoba the abstract rights concerning their natural resources was worthy of his support, and I am willing, he said, to let the Seven Sisters go in order to get this abstract right.

Throughout the whole of that statement the hon. member is referring to me. I recall that when he was seconding the resolution which has been before the house for four days he took very high ground with regard to the ideals of public life. I do think those ideals ought to carry with them some recognition of accuracy and veracity of statement. It will be noticed that this quotation from the hon. member's speech is not based on hearsay; it is a categorical statement of something which he alleges I said.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the other night when the Minister of Railways (Mr. Dunning) used the word "lie" you ruled that it was not a proper expression. I therefore refrain from using that word, but I do say that at no time have I ever stated to the hon. member for Nelson or to any other member of this house the words which I have just read from his speech, or any words which even the most vivid imagination could construe as such. I assert that the hon. member has given a statement to this house so contrary to every word I used, and so contrary to the spirit that actuated me throughout the whole matter, that I can only characterize it as being as false as sin.

Mr. T. W. BIRD (Nelson): Mr. Speaker, may I explain that the hon. gentleman is under a misapprehension. A reference to Hansard will confirm this. The words he has repeated to the house were not given by me as a quotation at all, and the Hansard reporter so dealt with them. Those words were never meant to be a literal representation of what the hon. gentleman said. They appear in Hansard, not in quotation marks, but in the same type as the rest of my speech, which makes it abundantly clear that I was giving my interpretation of what he said. So I do not think the hon. gentleman has any real occasion to rise up on his high horse of offended virtue.

PRIVILEGE—MR. HEAPS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. A. HEAPS (North Winnipeg): Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege and in the cause of accuracy of statement. I would point out that the hon. member for Nelson (Mr. Bird) did not second the resolution of my hon. friend from North Centre Winnipeg (Mr. Woodsworth) in connection with the disposition of natural resources.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. HEAPS: But, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. There is no question of privilege.

Mr. HEAPS: Then I rise to a point of order. The hon. member for Marquette (Mr.

Glen) said that the hon. member for Nelson seconded the motion of my hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre. He did not do so. The votes and proceedings will show that I was the one who seconded the motion.

PRIVILEGE—MR. STEVENS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. H. H. STEVENS (Vancouver Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege, but my object is more to set at rest a question of procedure. However, I raise it on a question of privilege in order that I may be within the rules of the house.

Yesterday the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) intimated that I had departed from the usual practice of parliament in not having given him notice of an amendment that I proposed to make, and which I subsequently did make. I will not quote his words; I do not think he will dispute my interpretation. I had hoped to have the exact reference from Bourinot, but I am not able to place my finger on it at the moment—

Mr. CAHILL: Beauchesne will do.

Mr. STEVENS: —but the fact is that Bourinot declares, as I think do all the other authorities, that no notice of an amendment is required; that it has been the custom in the House of Commons of Canada when it is proposed to move an amendment virtually constituting a motion of want of confidence in the government itself, on going into committee of supply, for instance, to give notice thereof to the government within a reasonable time. I may say from my own experience of the practice followed by this house that it has been usual to hand a copy of such amendment to the opposing party or the government as the case may be, an hour or two before the house meets. But in the case of a private member's motion, as was the motion which we were discussing, with the amendment thereto, it has never been the practice in this house or in the house at Westminster to give notice of such amendments. I wish to say to the right hon. gentleman and to the house that I should certainly feel very much grieved if it could be justly said that I had been guilty of a breach of the practices of parliament.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I hope my hon. friend will not take too seriously any remarks I may have made yesterday. He had, to use his own terms, referred to the delivering of a bit of a lecture to his side of the house and I reminded him of what hon. members know to be the case, that where there is a question that involves government policy, and the opposition expect the government to make an immediate pronouncement, the general practice is to have the government favoured in advance with a copy of the motion to be made. I said that my hon. friend, who usually is a model of courtesy, had evidently unintentionally overlooked that customary procedure. That was the extent of my criticism of him; and I would say to him now that if again he wishes the government, on the spur of the moment, to accept some amendment which is being introduced to the house for the purpose, to use his own words, of bringing us all together so that there can be absolute unanimity, I hope he will follow the practice of letting us know a little in advance what his objective is, so that we may be in a position to meet him at the moment and not be obliged to search statutes and consult authorities before being in a position to give him a final answer.

MONTREAL RAILWAY TERMINAL FACILITIES

REPORT OF MR. FREDERICK PALMER—PRINTING

On the orders of the day:

Hon. CHARLES A. DUNNING (Minister of Railways and Canals): The hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Cahan), yesterday asked a question with reference to the printing of the Palmer report. I have made inquiries regarding the matter and find that the manuscript, in both English and French, together with the maps, is now in the hands of the King's Printer, and only the delay incidental to the lithographing of the maps will prevent immediate distribution of the report. As nearly as I can ascertain, possibly two weeks will elapse before general distribution can be made.

PEACE RIVER RAILWAY OUTLET

On the orders of the day:

Hon. CHARLES A. DUNNING (Minister of Railways and Canals): The hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Gardiner) asked me to secure reports and information regarding the work done last year in the Peace River area. A request has been sent to Winnipeg for this information, which will be tabled as soon as it is received. I may say in connection with the same matter that some two years ago there was a report of the engineers acting jointly for the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Canadian National Railways with reference to the Peace River western outlet. The supply of these reports has run out, and in view of the demand we are having a reprint made.

ST. LAWRENCE WATERWAY

BEAUHARNOIS POWER PROJECT—APPLICATION FOR APPROVAL OF PLANS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. J. GARLAND (Bow River): Would the government be willing to table the application of the Beauharnois company for the approval of its plans in connection with what is known as the Beauharnois project

Hon. J. C. ELLIOTT (Minister of Public Works): What is referred to by my hon. friend is included, I think, in an order of the house which was made some time ago. I will look into the matter; I am sure there is no objection.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Will the minister let me know?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes.

OLD AGE PENSIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. B. ADSHEAD (East Calgary): Is there any truth in the report that the government of Ontario is negotiating with the government with reference to old age pensions in that province?

Hon. PETER HEENAN (Minister of Labour): So far the only question asked by the government of Ontario is whether, in the event of their adopting a certain system of administration it would coincide with the federal act; that is to say, whether they would be entitled to fifty per cent if they put into effect a certain system of administration.

COAL IMPORTS FROM RUSSIA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. THOMAS CANTLEY (Pictou): Is the Minister of Mines (Mr. Stewart) prepared to answer the question I asked last week in regard to the importation of Russian coal?

Hon. CHARLES STEWART (Minister of Mines): I have made inquiries as to when an answer will be forthcoming and I am promised it for to-morrow.

NAVIGATION AND WATER-POWERS

DOMINION—PROVINCIAL JURISDICTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. A. STEWART (Leeds): Will the Prime Minister lay on the table the full text of the answers given by the supreme court in connection with the reference relating to the respective rights of the provinces and the Dominion in connection with water and water-powers, and also the factum presented by the attorney general in support of that reference?

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): If that is not already down, I will see, with pleasure, that it is brought down.

NATURAL RESOURCES

PROPOSAL THAT DISPOSITION BE EFFECTIVE ONLY ON APPROVAL OF PARLIAMENT

On the order:

Resuming debate on the motion of Mr. Woodsworth—That, in the opinion of this house, no disposition of the natural resources, under the control of the federal government, shall be effective until ratified by parliament, on the proposed amended amendment thereto of Mr. Guthrie, and the proposed amendment of Mr. Bird.

Mr. FANSHER (East Lambton): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. SPEAKER: Before the hon. member proceeds, a point of order was raised last night by the Solicitor General (Mr. Cannon). May I ask him whether he persists in his objection to the amendment?

Hon. LUCIEN CANNON (Solicitor General): Certainly I do, Mr. Speaker, because I think the objection is well taken.

Mr. SPEAKER: The Solicitor General was automatically interrupted at eleven o'clock. Will he now be good enough to develop his point?

Mr. CANNON: The point which I raised last night, Your Honour, is to the effect that the amendment which is now before the house ought to be ruled out of order because that amendment contains a principle different from the principle laid down in the amendment already adopted, and the house certainly cannot be called upon in the same debate to decide upon two different principles.

Mr. SPEAKER: Does any other hon. member desire to speak to the point of order?

Mr. T. W. BIRD (Nelson): I should like to point out that the Solicitor General last evening, when he read the subamendment—and I was careful to follow the hon. gentleman—omitted the very significant words "similar to". Similarity is not identity, so on the point of principle alone—I am not pressing it at all—I contend that the amendment as passed does not bind the government to bring in an act identical with the Railway Belt Water Act. The contention of the Solicitor General depends entirely upon his allegation that this house has passed upon the principle of bringing in an act identical with the Railway Belt Water Act; but the words "similar to" clearly indicate that the government in bringing in that act have some leeway. However, I will leave that aside and direct the attention of the house to my amendment, which does not clash, either in intention or in wording, with the principle declared in the subamendment. My amendment reads:

> And in the opinion of this house such water-powers should not be disposed of until ratified by the legislatures concerned.

I was careful, Mr. Speaker, to avoid the objection which the Solicitor General has raised in his point of order. In the wording of the amendment I carefully avoided anything that would seem to indicate that we were wishing to impose upon the western provinces the will of this house. The intention and the wording of my amendment agree in this, that it is only an expression of opinion on the part of this house, which is meant only to have a moral influence upon the procedure in the western provinces.

Mr. J. L. BROWN (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a word in regard to the point of order. While the hon. member for Nelson (Mr. Bird) was speaking last night it was suggested that he might move an amendment, and I tried to imagine the nature of any amendment he might move which would not be out of order under rule 413, which says:

> No amendment shall call in question a principle on which the house has given a decision by its vote on a former amendment.

With the question of the propriety of submitting an amendment I am quite in agreement with the ruling already made, but the whole point turns on whether or not the present amendment is in violation of a principle which has been already adopted, and this is the point I would like to urge. If I understood aright the amendment of the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens) it was to the effect that the water-powers of the prairie provinces should be turned over to these provinces by an act of this parliament and that legislation should be passed by these provincial legislatures giving effect to that act. When that amendment was adopted I thought we were imposing no restrictions or burdens upon the provinces; I thought they were to be free to act according to their own judgment, and my contention is that the amendment submitted by the hon. member for Nelson is out of order because it does violate that principle in that it seeks to impose a limitation instead of permitting the full application of the principle we adopted yesterday in that amendment.

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I submit that whatever may have been in the mind of the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Brown), there is nothing in the amendment such as he has suggested. It is very clear that the subamendment moved by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre simply stated the principle that legislation should be introduced along the lines of the Railway Belt Water Act, and that the provinces should be given the right to administer their own resources. I take it that the amendment introduced by the hon. member for Nelson simply goes on to state a condition under which the provinces may be given this right of administration. We must remember that after all the Dominion government is the trustee, and in passing any legislation here this government can arrange the conditions under which it will suggest that the provinces administer this act.

Mr. DUNNING: But the hon. member who moved the amendment stated that that was not his intention in moving it, that his amendment was practically a pious hope which we might transmit to the provinces but in no sense a condition. That statement was made just now by the hon. member who moved the amendment.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I quite realize that the mover of the amendment made that statement and technically that may be correct, but I would point out that in practice we are suggesting, if you like that word, the conditions under which that administration would be carried out, which I take it we have a perfect right to do. I would go so far as to say that whether or not it is contained in the amendment as interpreted by the mover, this parliament has a perfect right to state the conditions under which the resources will be turned over to the administration of the provinces. If the mover of the resolution simply expresses that pious wish, as I think he does, perhaps that is even less binding than the conditions I would like to see substituted. We have only that before us, but in any case the condition is there; it does not alter the original principle that the provinces should be given the right to administer their resources in the interim.

Hon. E. B. RYCKMAN (East Toronto): I find it necessary to say a word on the point of order, Mr. Speaker. The subamendment which has been adopted provides that there shall be no further disposition of the water-powers but that they shall be administered in effect according to the water acts of British Columbia, or similar acts to be passed. Anyone familiar with what are known as the water acts of British Columbia knows that they do not provide for the alienation of the water-powers of that province. The proposed amendment states that the disposition of water-powers shall not take place without the consent of the legislature, therefore we are in this position: The subamendment adopted yesterday stated that no further disposition of water-powers should take place but that they should be administered under the water acts of British Columbia.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Under similar acts.

Mr. RYCKMAN: That is true, and this amendment goes a step further, but in my opinion it is quite legitimate and quite in order. It provides that in addition to the good we have taken by the subamendment there shall be no actual disposition of the water-powers without the sanction of the legislatures.

Mr. J. G. ROSS (Moose Jaw): I am not a lawyer and I do not intend to discuss this question technically, but as I understood the amendments as they came up the amendment moved by the acting leader of the opposition (Mr. Guthrie) would have made it necessary for the western provinces, had they wanted to dispose of any of their natural resources, to come to this house and obtain an act of parliament. The subamendment changed that and practically gave the assent and the approbation of this house to the policy which has been carried on by the Minister of the Interior in the past, and a forward step was made in the matter of the return of the natural resources to the western provinces. Now, as I understand the amendment of the hon. member for Nelson, he wants to take back something we have already done, or some part of it, and should the amendment of the hon. member be adopted we will be tying a string on the resources we turned over in a certain way yesterday. I agree with the objection of the Solicitor General, and I ask you, Mr. Speaker, to rule out of order the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Nelson.

Hon. HUGH GUTHRIE (Acting Leader of the Opposition): If I understand the meaning of the amendment moved by the hon. member for Nelson it is to meet this difficulty: There is at present no legislation passed by this parliament and there is no legislation passed by the three provincial legislatures to give effect to the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre, which was adopted. There will be an interval before such legislation can be passed, and I understand the object of the hon. member for Nelson to be that until such legislation is passed there shall be no granting of the water-powers under the control of the federal government without the consent of the three prairie provinces.

Mr. DUNNING: The legislatures of the provinces.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Very well, the legislatures of the provinces, although I think "provinces" would be a better word. However, to me the meaning is plain: There is no machinery at present, and until legislation is passed this amendment suggests that there shall be consent by the provinces before any of the water-powers are parted with by this government. That does not change the principle of the amendment which was passed, it endorses it; it provides only for an inter regnum, as it were, which we had not provided for. In my judgment, the amendment is wholly in order.

Mr. DUNNING: There have been several meanings adduced with reference to this last amendment. The meaning attached to it by the mover (Mr. Bird) is that it is only intended as a sort of pious hope that the legislatures will decide that no disposal of those resources shall take place without their ratification. The acting leader of the opposition (Mr. Guthrie) puts an entirely different meaning upon it, and the other hon. members who have spoken have put still another meaning upon it. The point of order raised by myself last night, and afterwards reinforced by the Solicitor General (Mr. Cannon), had reference to the relevancy of the actual words to the amendment already adopted by the house.

Mr. SPEAKER: I have heard the argument on the point of order raised by the Solicitor General, and I have no hesitation in ruling that the amendment of the hon. member for Nelson (Mr. Bird) is quite in order. The original motion of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) was that no disposal of the natural resources should be made in the future unless ratified by parliament. An amendment was moved by the hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie) restricting that principle to water-powers. There was a further amendment moved by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens) which stated that no water-powers in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta should be alienated unless they came under the administration of those provinces under powers to be granted by this parliament similar to those granted to the province of British Columbia to administer the water-powers in the railway belt as set forth in the Railway Belt Water Act, and being chapter 211 of the revised statutes of Canada, 1927. That subamendment was carried.

But does it prevent an hon. member going further and, without calling in question the principle of that subamendment, suggesting only that words be added in order to give the three legislatures additional power in connection with the water-powers to be assigned to them? Let me explain how and when amendments may be moved. The following appears in Bourinot at page 320:

> Amendments may, however, be proposed to add words to the main motion, or amendment, as amended.

That is the case in the present instance. This statement is confirmed by Redlich at page 232:

> If a motion is amended, the altered motion has to be dealt with as a principal question, and disposed of by a question. Thence arises the possibility of a subamendment, a subsidiary motion in the second degree, which can be interposed between the proposal of the question on the first amendment and the final putting of this question. An amendment to an amendment, then, is in order.

Cushing on Law and Practice of Legislative Assemblies, has this to say at page 618, section 1587:

> It frequently happens, while a question is pending and under discussion, that some other question—subsidiary, incidental or privileged—arises or is formally moved; in which case, the question, first moved, called sometimes the main, that is, primary, or principal question, is superseded or suspended for the time being, by the new question. When this proceeding takes place—as soon as the new question arises or is formally proposed—that is the question to which members must speak and every member is at liberty to speak to it, notwithstanding he may have spoken to the former.

An example of this occurs when an amendment is moved, which of course supersedes the original question until it is decided. While the amendment is pending the main question can not be spoken to, but when it has been decided, whether agreed to or rejected, the original question is revived and can be spoken to as before. Even though I had doubt in the present instance as to the regularity of this amendment, and I have none, I think the principle of the expressive power of the House of Commons should be asserted and vindicated. I do not think this amendment changes or alters the principle which was adopted yesterday; it only adds a condition in the proposed mode of administration of the water-powers; it expresses the view that the legislation based on the Railway Belt Water Act, when presented to this house, shall be so framed as to admit of ratification in the three western legislatures.

[Mr. Speaker.]

I therefore rule that the point of order is not well taken. The amendment is in order.

Mr. B. W. FANSHER (East Lambton): I had nearly finished my remarks last night, and I believe I would have done so had it not been for the contention raised that the amendment of the hon. member for Nelson (Mr. Bird) was not in order.

I was endeavouring to show that for many years the water-powers on the Winnipeg river and the waters of the lake of the Woods had been under review by this parliament. An act known as the Lake of the Woods Regulation Act was passed in 1921 which sought to preserve for Manitoba the water-powers on the Winnipeg river on which the Seven Sisters falls are situated. The following year an unsuccessful attempt was made to amend this act, and during 1923 another amendment was introduced. During the discussion of that year it was made quite plain that most of the Manitoba members were opposed to the repeal of this act; they seemed to consider that it was in the interests of the province of Manitoba that the act should remain in force. In supporting that principle the then member for South Winnipeg, Mr. A. B. Hudson, had the following to say:

> I think parliament would make a great mistake, having regard to the interests of Canada as a whole, to repeal this legislation.

The then member for Brandon, the present Minister of Immigration (Mr. Forke), was very much interested in having this act remain on the statute books. He had the following to say:

> I know the position the city of Winnipeg is in, and I know if these water-powers are hampered or interfered with, a disaster and a tragedy will be caused to the city of Winnipeg. There is no question about that.

It seems to me that the opinion of the hon. gentleman whom I have quoted was that it was preferable for the control of these water-powers to be vested in the Dominion parliament. The Minister of the Interior (Mr. Stewart), however, informed us last session—and we knew it to be right—that this act was repealed. The government last session in effect said this: We declare that these water-powers are not in the general interest of Canada; and having made that declaration they proceeded to grant rights to a private corporation, in compliance, of course, with the wishes of the Manitoba government. What this amendment seeks to establish is simply to make certain that in future such deals in connection with water-powers in any of the western provinces shall be approved by the legislatures of the provinces affected. Surely we are not afraid to trust the people's representatives. If these leases are wise deals; if they are good leases, surely they will bear investigating by the legislatures concerned. For my part I think the amendment is eminently desirable. There seems to be of late a disposition to alienate some of these water-powers from the control of the people, and I should be sorry to see these great natural resources, which mean so much to us in this day, alienated in any way whatsoever without a full discussion taking place in the legislatures that are concerned. The amendment is highly desirable and in the best interests of all concerned.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the whole question has become so involved that I am inclined to believe many hon. members of the house may not appreciate the full significance of some of the amendments which are being moved. This much I think is clear, namely, that we are first of all dealing with the disposition of natural resources; second, that the particular natural resources we are at the moment concerned with are water-powers; and, third, the water-powers only in the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta. A fourth factor is introduced by the amendment which relates to "ratification," as it is termed, by provincial legislatures. No doubt "approval" is what is meant. If we keep those four essentials clearly in mind I do not think there will be much difficulty in seeing just where the amendment of my hon. friend would land us if parliament should be tempted to pass it.

Yesterday the house accepted an amendment moved by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens) whereby it agreed that the water-powers of the three western provinces should be transferred to those provinces for purposes of administration. It was recognized by the house that an immediate transfer would be impossible. Indeed, it was recognized that some little time might necessarily elapse before the transfer as required by the amendment could be made, for the reason that first of all parliament would have to amend its own legislation so as to bring the three western provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta with respect to their water-powers into a position corresponding with that of British Columbia with respect to water-powers in the railway belt; in the second place that the three western provinces would on their part each have to pass enabling legislation which would give them the necessary powers to administer the resources when they were transferred. Clearly as a result of that amendment there are two periods of time that have to be taken into consideration. I do not agree with the acting leader of the opposition (Mr. Guthrie) when he says that the amendment of my hon. friend is restricted to only one of those periods. There is no restriction in the matter of time. It is a short amendment which says that no disposition shall be made until there is ratification by the provincial legislatures.

Mr. DUNNING: Ratification of each disposition.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes, ratification of each disposition, as my hon. friend has just said. Let us take the two periods separately and consider what the amendment means in relation to them. There is first of all the period between the present moment and the time at which parliament has amended its present legislation and the time that all three of the western provinces have passed their enabling legislation. The amendment means that in the interval the federal government cannot transfer any water-power without the legislatures of those provinces ratifying the disposition that has been made. In other words, the transfer can be made effective only after the legislatures themselves have ratified what has been done. That is a delegation of part of the obligation of parliament in the matter of administering the resources. Resources that are under the control of the federal government can be administered only by this government. Any legislation which tends to delegate that power is ultra vires of parliament. That in a word, is the position in regard to the first period. This federal parliament cannot divest itself of full responsibility in the matter of a transfer of resources by delegating any phase of that transfer to a provincial legislature so long as the resources are under the control of this parliament. So long as the transfer has not been made this parliament cannot delegate to any provincial legislature the legislative power over such disposition. Any provision which amounts in law to a delegation is ultra vires parliament. Let us understand that clearly, because that is one reason why the government cannot accept the amendment. It asks us to do something that in our opinion is ultra vires parliament.

Mr. BIRD: How would that apply to the subamendment?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I am referring to the subamendment. I am dividing its application into two periods, the period prior to the transfer, and the period subsequent to the transfer of the resources from our administration to the provincial governments for their administration. The amendment relates to the transfer to the provincial governments for the purposes of their administration. I am speaking now of the period that would elapse between the present moment and the transfer, and I say that in that interval of time my hon. friend's amendment, if it were passed, would compel us to attempt something that was ultra vires parliament. We cannot divest ourselves of a power which is exclusively ours with respect to territory and resources which are under our administration.

Let us consider the other phase. The second period contemplates the provinces in a position to administer their own resources; it necessarily contemplates the legislatures of those provinces deciding what, in their opinion, it is most advisable to do in regard to the disposition of the natural resources in those provinces. They will have to pass water acts of their own. If they do not trust their governments, they can put into their water acts, as one of the provisions, that the government shall have no power to do anything, only the legislature, and then the legislature becomes the executive; that is what it comes to. I am inclined to feel that much of the difficulty all through this debate has arisen through a failure on the part of many to comprehend the essential distinction between the legislative function in government and the executive function. The crown acts through the executive in executive acts; it does not act through parliament. Some of the amendments which have been moved are an endeavour to transfer the executive function from a responsible ministry to a legislative body, and as such, they do not have regard for the customary practice under British parliamentary institutions.

Let me come back again to what is involved in the amendment with respect to the powers of these provincial legislatures. Once the provinces are entitled to administer their own resources, this amendment, if it is passed, would in so many words declare that the provincial legislatures of Manitoba, Saskatchewan, and Alberta could not authorize their governments to dispose of natural resources in the nature of water-powers except, in the case of each, by the legislature itself ratifying every such disposition. Since when, Mr. Speaker, has this parliament had the right to tell any provincial government or legislature what it shall do or shall not do in the administration of its own affairs? Are we not going pretty far afield in respect of our own rights and privileges when we undertake here in this parliament at Ottawa to tell the three western provinces of Canada that they shall not have the right to legislate as they please with respect to the disposition of water-powers, concerning the administration of which we are giving them full and plenary discretion?

It comes back again to the position we were in with respect to the original motion. Here is an effort, not so intended, I admit, but, nevertheless, in effect, to strangle the three western provinces in the matter of the disposition of their water-powers, as compared with the other provinces of Canada. Supposing my hon. friend moved in this house that no power would be given to the government of the province of Ontario to make any disposition of its water-powers except by an act of the provincial legislature. How long would he be countenanced in that attempt by hon. gentlemen opposite? He would be told at once that that was none of this parliament's business, that the Ontario legislature is as supreme and sovereign in its rights as is this parliament in its rights, and that we have no right to dictate to Ontario how it shall manage its own affairs. The governments of the western provinces are responsible to their legislatures, and if the governments of the western provinces are not doing what is right then it is for their legislatures to say so. Two of the governments of the western provinces at the present time are Progressive governments, and I am amazed to find that it is my friends of the Progressive party opposite who are the ones of all persons in this house who seem to be most critical or suspicious of Progressive administrations. They seem to feel that wherever there is a Progressive government in office, they should in some way restrain it from performing an act for which it will be responsible to its own legislature. May I say that so far as I personally am concerned, I do not take an attitude of that kind with respect to the responsibility of ministers to their legislatures. I think that governments fully appreciate what their responsibilities are, and that they know very well where their power and authority comes from before they will perform any act. The provincial ministers are responsible to the provincial legislatures; the Dominion ministers are responsible to the Dominion parliament. You cannot make a Dominion ministry responsible for some act of a provincial legislature, or a provincial ministry responsible for some act of the Dominion parliament.

So, Mr. Speaker, I contend that with the best of intentions my hon. friend's amendment would put us in a strange and in an impossible predicament, and for that reason we cannot accept it.

Let me come down to one concrete effect of the amendment in a situation which is of considerable importance at this very moment. Forget for a moment the province of Manitoba, which undoubtedly is most in the mind of my hon. friend. I think that the government and the legislature of Manitoba have probably had enough in the way of experience already to make them go pretty gingerly in the future in respect to anything they may do with respect to water-powers in that province. I do not think my hon. friends from Manitoba need be the least bit afraid that any government in Manitoba from now on, if indeed it ever felt otherwise, will ask this government to do anything with respect to water-powers for which it does not feel it has the full support of the provincial legislature. But take the case of the province of Alberta. What is the position in regard to Alberta at this moment? We are, or we believe that we are, practically at a settlement with respect to the transfer of natural resources to that province. If this resolution passed, and were intra vires, and were to be acted upon, and Mr. Brownlee, the premier of Alberta, were to-morrow to ask the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Stewart) to make some disposition of a certain water-power in that province, no matter how urgent his desire and wish might be, the minister would have to reply that he could not do it, that he would have to wait until the legislature of Alberta reassembled and ratified whatever disposition he was in a position to approve. Similarily, when we are transferring the natural resources, this government would be obliged under this resolution to insert in any contract with the Alberta government that the Alberta government could not have back the water-power resources with authority to the ministry itself to make any disposition of those resources, that the government could only have the water-powers back on the condition that the legislature itself approves every disposition which the government makes. Now is that a fair position in which to put a government such as the government of Alberta? Is it a fair position in which to put the government of Saskatchewan? Is it a fair position in which to put the government of Manitoba? And these are the only governments that are affected by the amendment of my hon. friend. It does not affect the other governments of the Dominion in the slightest particular.

So I say, Mr. Speaker, having regard to the fact that, from one point of view, the proposed legislation is ultra vires, and that, from another point of view, it implies that this government may impose its will on the legislatures of provinces, which have complete autonomy and full rights with respect to matters under their own control, to say nothing of other objections which might well be raised, we cannot accept the amendment, and I cannot but feel that my hon. friend, if he appreciates that such is the effect of his amendment, will probably not press it unduly.

Mr. ADSHEAD: If the amendment were adopted, would the three prairie provinces be then on an equality with the other provinces?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: They certainly would not. The whole effect of the amendment is to put them in an inferior position as compared with the other provinces of Canada.

The house divided on the amendment (Mr. Bird) to the amendment as amended, which was negatived on the following division:

GRADING OF GRAIN

WHEAT—PROPOSED AMENDMENT OF STATUTORY DEFINITIONS TO INCLUDE PROTEIN

Mr. JOHN MILLAR (Qu'Appelle) moved:

That, in the opinion of this house, the statutory definitions applying to all contract grades of wheat in the western inspection division, should be amended in such a manner as to provide for including protein as a factor.

He said: Mr. Speaker, in presenting this resolution to the house I am aware that a goodly number of hon. members are very anxious to discuss the budget. I hope I may be able to allay some of their anxiety on that score when I state that I am quite sure the debate on this resolution will not last more than three days and may possibly be concluded within a somewhat shorter time.

This matter is one of very great importance in that it affects the grading of 500 million bushels of wheat. It is rather interesting to find that in 1918 Canada grew only 189 million bushels of wheat, while last year the crop reached the huge total of 533 million bushels. During past years the farmers of western Canada have gone through most trying times. They have the difficulties of frost, rust, hail, excessively dry weather—all those difficulties they must contend with; but in addition there are other difficulties that this parliament can remove, and it is those difficulties that I intend to deal with this afternoon. I purpose reciting the position of the farmer as I see it, and I purpose also mentioning three major reforms which I believe are required.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. I cannot hear the hon. member, who I understand is discussing an important question.

Mr. MILLAR: Each year, early in the threshing season, the milling companies of western Canada gather samples by the thousand from prairie shipping points and have them tested for protein or, in other words, for milling purposes. They have maps prepared—I have seen some of them—on which thousands of shipping points in the prairies are marked by pins of various colours to indicate strength, and the Canadian mills follow the practice of picking the strongest wheat from these points. That is the first step in skimming off the cream, and it is one of the complaints which the western farmer is making at the present time. Thousands of cars are sold in this way, because they contain very strong and good milling wheat, the very best. For this the farmer receives very little in the way of premium or extra price. It is true that some of the larger mills at their elevators will pay a premium of one or two cents and occasionally perhaps three cents, which goes direct to the farmer; but for the most part the farmer does not receive any benefit from this high class, high valued milling wheat picked off by the mills of Canada.

Now let us go a step further. The grain is conveyed to Winnipeg and other inspection points. What takes place there? The mills retain well paid experts at those inspection points, and their duty is to examine the cars, as they are shipped through, and pick out the best grain. There they have another chance to skim off the cream. I will point out presently how this affects the farmer, but before I do so I wish to go a little further. They are not the only ones who are picking the best; the mixing elevators also have an opportunity to pick the highest of each grade, or those that suit their purpose best for mixing. So that the process of skimming off the best goes on.

In the evidence given recently before the Saskatchewan Grain Inquiry Commission it was shown that when trains of cars are stopped on the siding at Saskatoon, Moose Jaw, Kenora and other points, the representatives of the mills, by an arrangement with ten line elevator companies, which include practically all the elevator companies of western Canada, have the privilege, with the consent of the railways, of going over these cars, breaking the seals, picking out the choicest cars and shipping them to their mills. That was rather startling evidence, and you can see that the picking process, the skimming off of the best, is complete. Very little choice wheat gets past the mills and mixing elevators for export. Let me make plain how that affects the farmer. You may say that this grain belongs to the line companies; they have paid for it, the farmer has received his price; what business is it of his, therefore? Let me point out that the largest factor in determining the price which the farmer will receive at the country elevator is the Liverpool market. That is not the only determining market but it is the greatest. The price which the farmer receives at his initial shipping point is determined on the quality of the grade that reaches Liverpool and other old country markets. There is a point here to which it is worth while to pay attention. When this matter was fought out in 1925, both in the committee and elsewhere, it was contended by those in favour of the mixing practice that the old country buyer, having the standard grade before him, buys on the minimum of that grade. To say that is to say that the old country buyer is practically a fool. On the contrary, he is I believe the most intelligent buyer there is in the world. He does not buy in that way but on the quality he has been receiving. He buys by cable millions of bushels. He does not see the grain but he knows what he has been receiving; he knows what he received last month, the month before and the month before that; he knows what he received last week. He therefore buys on the basis of the quality he has been receiving. That fixes the price.

I attended a meeting of the Board of Grain Commissioners in Vancouver some few years ago, when the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens) was present, and it was pointed out by several witnesses, including my hon. friend, that at that time the grain being shipped from the port of Vancouver was receiving a premium of five cents over that shipped from Fort William and Montreal.

The standard was the same; the definition was the same. What made the difference in price? Nothing in the world but quality. How long would an importer in Great Britain be in business if he were foolish enough to base his price on the minimum of the grade, when what he was actually receiving was worth three or five cents less? He would not be in business very long. There is not a business man in this house who would follow that practice twenty-four hours. However the statement to which I have referred has deceived many people. I noticed in the account of a meeting of the United Farmers Association in Alberta that a man who should be regarded as an authority made that statement before the convention when arguing in favour of mixing. There is absolutely no truth in it; an examination of the statement will show that it is simply silly. One has only to turn to the report of Dean Rutherford for confirmation of what I am saying. Again and again he quotes the British buyer to show that it is quality that decides the price. This stresses the point that mixing is detrimental to the best interests of the producer of wheat. It is an unwritten part of the contract—I think I may put in that way—that when he delivers a car of wheat at the country elevator he shall receive for that car, whether 2, or 3, or 1, what the grade of 2, or 3, or 1 will bring in the old country market, and anything that impairs that quality in transit—if some of the best is taken off and poorer stuff put in—results in a lowering of the quality and a consequent lowering of the price. So that the farmer suffers.

I have in my possession four graded samples of wheat which were sent to me through the mail by the pool. Those four samples did not look to me to be of as good quality as the farmer was delivering, and I took occasion to submit them to nine country buyers, some of whom have been buying grain for twenty years, and the assistant superintendent of an experimental farm. I know them well; they are good buyers. As country buyers go, they are good, as good as the average, I am certain. To these ten men I submitted the four samples of grain from outgoing cargoes, the same grain which will reach the old country market and will become the basis for determining the price the farmer will receive. Not one of these men knew what grades the others had placed upon these samples of wheat. I was very careful about that; I turned out the grain on a sheet of paper and asked them to grade without any other information. I did not say where it came from nor did I give any other information. The first sample was

No. 2 wheat out of Portland and the ten buyers graded it respectively No. 3 northern, No. 4, No. 4, No. 4, No. 4, strong No. 3, No. 4, No. 4, No. 4, No. 4. These four samples of grain were graded not only by these ten men but also by Inspector Steel, who was loaned by the pool to the grain commission and who travelled with them. He is a very excellent inspector and a very honourable and efficient man; I believe he knows more about grading grain that any of these other ten men, and before I go on let me say that Inspector Steel graded this wheat as a poor No. 2. You will notice the great discrepancy between his grading and the grading of the country buyers, and I will deal with this a little later on. Then I submitted a sample of No. 3 northern out of Montreal, which was graded by the ten men No. 4, No. 4, No. 4, line No. 4-5, No. 4, No. 4, No. 4, No. 5, No. 4, No. 4, and by Inspector Steel rejected No. 3, burned. The next sample was No. 4 out of Montreal; this was graded by the ten men No. 4, No. 5, No. 5, No. 6. No. 5, No. 5, No. 6, No. 5, No. 5, and No. 5, and by Inspector Steel No. 3 northern. The last sample was No. 5 out of Vancouver and was graded by the ten men as No. 6, No. 6, No. 6, No. 6, No. 6, No. 6, No. 6, poor No. 5, No. 6, and No. 6, and by Inspector Steel No. 5.

Mr. MANION: Where is Inspector Steel?

Mr. MILLAR: I think he was an inspector at Winnipeg, and for some time he has been inspector for the pool, whose duty it is to look after the cars as they come forward and ask for re-inspection and appeal where he thinks wise.

Mr. MANION: Had Inspector Steel been an inspector for the government?

Mr. MILLAR: I believe so; I would not say so positively but I am almost certain of it. I am told he is now head inspector for the central selling agency of the pool; he is a very efficient inspector.

Here is something I wish to point out. As I said before, I believe Inspector Steel has greater knowledge and can perhaps inspect grain better than any one of these ten men, but you cannot brush those men aside and say they do not know anything about grading grain. Look at the way they graded the No. 5 sample; nine of the ten graded it No. 6, without knowing how anyone else had graded it. They know how to grade grain; they are the men who do that work and the men with whom the farmers deal. That is a standard to which the farmer must submit, but why the discrepancy? I cannot understand it; it is a puzzle to me. It may be pointed out that these were samples of mixed grain, with which the country buyer is not familiar. That is quite true, but is Inspector Steel more familiar with them? I doubt it. If he has not graded out of Fort William or some other terminal port he would be no more familiar with mixed grain than the country buyer. They all knew these samples were of mixed grain and were not grown in their own vicinity, but there is the difference in their grading; I laid it before the grain commission and left it in that way, without explanation. I believe they all tried honestly to grade the grain as it should be graded to meet the requirements of Winnipeg inspection.

Mr. COOTE: That is a pretty good argument against mixing.

Mr. MILLAR: Yes, that is so. Leaving that point, let me go a step further. Our grain is shipped to the old country, and under our present system it arrives there on certificate final. That is a point with which I should have dealt when I was showing that the quality of the grain reaching the old country determined the price received by the Canadian farmer; I should have pointed out that the grain is received there on certificate final, and no matter what the quality may be there is no redress. They have been complaining about this for years, but the system has not been changed and when the quality is low they can only protect themselves by lowering the price. That price is not lowered immediately; it must continue on a lower or a higher level for a considerable length of time until confidence is reestablished or permanently destroyed, after which the price will follow the quality. They want uniformity; they are very anxious that when they buy 10,000 or 500,000 bushels of wheat on cable they shall receive a uniform quality, up to what they expect. If there is a constant variation either up or down it is unsatisfactory; if the variation is down it means a great loss.

Let me add here that considering the enormous development of the wheat growing industry it seems to me about time Canada established agencies at important overseas markets such as Liverpool and London to look after our interests. We have trade commissioners abroad and are reaping great benefits from their work, and I think we should have someone at those markets all the time to adjust these differences, consult with the buyers, obtain suggestions from them and iron out the difficulties which arise over grain shipments. It is quite apparent from the correspondence tabled here last year, from the letters received by the Minister of Trade and Commerce and by the Prime Minister and from reports from the old country, that our reputation has been sadly undermined. The practice of mixing, the skimming and the looseness of inspection have all worked to undermine the reputation of our wheat on the overseas markets. If you look at the correspondence appearing in Hansard and in the report of the committee last year you will find that the Liverpool Corn Trade Association used such strong terms as "if we cannot get strong wheat from Canada we may have to seek it elsewhere, probably in Russia." That is the essence of what they said.

The three major remedies or reforms, which I intend to mention in passing and with one of which I shall deal in a moment, are first the elimination of the skimming practice, second the removal of the evil of mixing grain, and third a better and more accurate method of grading. With this last point I wish to deal at some length.

In recent years a great deal of attention has been paid to the protein method of arriving at the value of wheat. If I had time I could quote a great many high authorities to show that this protein test is a much more accurate method of arriving at the value of wheat for the purpose for which it is to be used, but I will quote only three or four. The first quotation is a newspaper article dealing with the grain commission hearing at Saskatoon, and is as follows:

> B. H. Harris, chemist of the Quaker Oats Company, told the commission it was idle to talk of the visual test determining milling value of wheat.
> "And yet," observed Dean Rutherford of the commission, "that is the way all the wheat Canada produces is being graded. I think that remark of the chemist is very important."

The following is taken from a Stanford university booklet:

> All things considered, the amount of gluten, that is, of protein, seems, in the light of present day knowledge, to be the nearest approach to an ideal index of baking strength available.

Professor Larmour had the following to say before the Saskatchewan grain commisison:

> Visual examination cannot be relied upon to evaluate wheats within the grades.

The newspaper article reporting his evidence goes on to say:

> Historical references to the protein test formed the background of Professor Larmour's discussion of this apparently new phase of Saskatchewan's chief industry. He indicated that many years ago the protein test was evolved and during his evidence moved a step at a time toward the rapidly developing "miling and baking test" of grain. He stated the purpose of this latter test to be the examination of the wheat from the standpoint of the use to which it would finally be put.

"The value of the test," he said, "is that it correctly interprets the true worth of the wheat for the purpose to which it will ultimately be put, and it is the most reliable method discovered up to the present time."

I would point out that there is a demand for strong wheat in the markets where we sell our grain. Strong wheat means wheat with a high protein content of good quality. Doctor A. H. Benton, of the North Dakota agricultural college, has the following to say on this subject:

Protein content in recent years is of far greater importance as a price factor than is grade. During recent years premiums made ranged as high as sixty cents bushel over the previous quoted price for basic grades. Since federal inspection is found to be advisable for grade, protein, which is infinitely more important from the price standpoint, should likewise receive this attention of the central government.

Page 180 of the Turgeon report shows a British miller as making the following answer to a question put to him by Dean Rutherford:

Q. How does Manitoba 3 northern meet your requirements?

A. There are three factors affecting it, (1) frost, (2) soft wheat, (3) lightness, and we don't know what to expect. Frost is the most undesirable, and starchiness next, but we do not mind thinness in 3 so much, as with it we are likely to get more strength, and it is for strength primarily that we buy Manitobas.

Mr. T. B. Armstrong, assistant chief of the Kansas state grain inspection department, has the following to say:

The demand for milling wheat with a protein test of 12 per cent or better increased premiums to the highest point in history. The average spread between 11 and 14 per cent wheat for the entire season has been 24½ cents. At the peak during the last of April, it was about 36 cents. A car of high protein wheat sold last month on the Kansas City market at 48 cents premium over the May option.

That would be the premium over and above the price fixed on the inspection certificate. The following, with reference to the inland overseas millers, appears on page 162 of the Turgeon report:

But the inland millers must still have Manitobas or other strong wheats to blend with the softer home grown, in order to produce a brand of flour that will suit the needs of the baker.

And at page 171:

Flour made from your one northern wheat is our "trump card." It has strength and on account of that constitutes the base in our system of bread-making.

Again, at page 176:

"We want to be assured that we actually get on the Canadian certificate final wheat that is fully equal to that we should expect, and that the grading shall be accurate and regular."

[Mr. Millar.]

"We want uniformity in the grading, so that we may know what to expect—uniformity throughout the season and the same uniformity through the years." Another miller said, "I am indifferent as to how the Canadians handle their wheat so long as the quality, the uniformity of quality, and the price suit the conditions, i.e., meets the competition ruling here as affected by the competition of other exporting countries. You may be sure of this, that Manitobas have an intrinsic value in themselves, viz., for their strength and yield, especially ones and twos. If these are impaired in any way—if the grades are lowered by degrading or mixing either intentionally or unintentionally, the British miller will know it, and the price will be lowered in consequence." This was confirmed by the evidence of other millers.

On page 178 of the report the remarks of another miller appear:

We buy Manitobas for strength and yield. They are better at the first of the season, October, November and December, than from January to the end of the season. They contain less moisture and possess a better quality of gluten.

On page 178 the following, referring to questions put by Dean Rutherford to an overseas buyer, appears:

I said to him: "Do you know the statutory definition of Manitoba one, two and three northern?" He said, "No." I asked him how he arrived at the price he would pay for these various grades. "I take into consideration what I expect to receive on the Canadian certificate based on my past experience—strength as measured by the action of the flour when baked and yield of flour from the mill." Anything in a sample of wheat that deteriorates its strength or lessens its yield of flour lowers its value to the miller and consequently lowers the price he can offer for it.

And again at page 178:

When we get a bad shipment we have no redress and consequently we bid lower and substitute other wheat when possible.

And then at page 180 of the report:

"What would be the effect on price if Canadian grades were lowered?" "The price would be lowered accordingly."

Let me deal with another phase of the question. I would like to tell the house what the protein proposal really is. Some have an idea it is something like the method adopted in the United States. It is not at all; it is entirely different. It is merely an attempt to do what we are doing now, but to do it with greater accuracy. The proposal submitted to the committee last year was that we would leave the definition of numbers 1, 2 and 3 northern—and it is proposed to apply this only to numbers 1, 2 and 3 northern— as they are now, except as regards the specifications to determine strength. That is, we have one part of the definition: "The grain shall be equal to marquis." Then we have in another part of the definition that there shall be a certain percentage of hard red vitreous kernels. That is the way in which we endeavour to arrive at the strength that is in the wheat, and as millers and chemists will tell you, it is a very inaccurate and unsatisfactory method. It was brought out in the evidence before the committee that wheat that was submitted to a mill and prepared for milling, even though it might be a No. 1 northern, the best carload of wheat you could find, after it was submitted to the washing process of tempering for milling and then, instead of being milled, was submitted to the inspection department, would grade no higher than No. 3 or No. 4. No one will argue that the mill intentionally or unintentionally damaged that wheat, but it will be lowered in grade and consequently in price away down to a 3 or a 4. Therefore, in this case the colour, or visual test is a failure.

Now we come to the percentage of hard red vitreous kernels. That fails again accurately to determine the value of the wheat. It is not without value; there is a relation between the percentage of hard red vitreous kernels and the value, but it does not come anywhere near being an accurate test. The mills of Canada and of the United States are buying wheat not on the visual test but on a protein test which is a quantity protein test. Will anyone argue that if we introduce a system that will test the strength more accurately, this will not give satisfaction or will cause dissatisfaction to those who buy our wheat? We are testing for strength now by those two specifications, the variety and the percentage of hard red vitreous kernel, but it has proved unsatisfactory and the proposal is simply to substitute for that a chemical test. I have read sufficient authorities to prove that the chemical test is by far the most accurate.

What will be the advantage? A loose system is detrimental to the best interests of the producer. Why? I do not know that I shall have time to quote all the evidence that I have under my hand, but a chemist giving evidence before the grain inquiry commission at Saskatoon pointed out that in the same grade of wheat, he had found wheats which differed to the extent of 50 per cent. These were in the lower grades. That is, one car of wheat would be worth one and one-half times more than another car found in the same grade. You do not need to give much consideration to the matter to see that this plays into the hands of the middlemen who are picking off their choice. They have their experts watching the cars as they pass through Calgary, Edmonton or Winnipeg, and if a car is worth 50 per cent more than another one in the same grade, it will never go to the old country. It would be picked off and go to the mill or mixing elevator. Mark you, the farmer does not get anything in the way of a premium for a car that is picked off in that way. It goes to the middlemen and tends to swell their profits. I believe a company contended—and I think they are stating facts—that they paid to the farmers for such cars $70,000 in a year. I have heard the question asked many times when there were fifty or a hundred or two hundred farmers present: How many of you ever received a premium for those cars that were diverted? Sometimes out of a hundred men one man would raise his hand. Sometimes out of fifty or a hundred men no one would raise his hand. I have shipped grain for many years and I have never received such a premium. I believe the United Grain Growers are placed in a slightly different position. They wish to continue mixing; they wish their shareholders to be satisfied, and I believe they do pay some premiums to their shareholders and other customers. But I heard the manager of that company, on one occasion when we were discussing the question of who should be responsible for placing stamps on cheques sent out, say: "If our company paid for stamps on cheques sent out it would cost us $40,000. Seventy thousand dollars is not double the price of the stamps, so they do not pay very much to the farmer. It seems a great deal of money, but when you consider the quantity of grain that is handled, it is a very small amount they pay back to the farmers. It is generally true that the farmer receives nothing in the way of premium for his choice wheat that is diverted in this way.

I have heard this objection to the proposed method of grading: "Well, now, this proposal to have wheat tested for protein is merely another difficulty in the way of the farmer reaching the higher grade. It is hard enough for him to get his wheat into No. 1 or No. 2 now. This will only make it a little harder." "Well," I said to him, "let us see how this works out. We will just reverse the process. One specification in the definition is sixty pounds to the bushel of wheat. That is a difficulty preventing some farmers from reaching the higher grades. In order to make it easier, we will just remove that. We have another specification that there must be 60 per cent of hard red vitreous kernels. That is a difficulty in the way of some farmers reaching the higher grade. We will just remove that so as to make it easier." It was not very long before he saw that we were getting back to the point where we would not have any grading system at all. The welfare of the farmer lies in the opposite direction. He is safest and he is getting nearest to the actual value of his wheat when it is accurately graded. As soon as there is a looseness, as soon as two types of grain are put together that are not nearly alike in value, then he is the loser. The best will be picked off and he gets paid for the lower quality that remains.

I am surprised, sir, to find that my time is exhausted.

Mr. THOMAS DONNELLY (Willow Bunch): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to detain the house at any great length in discussing the subject before us. I just wish to associate myself with the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Millar) in many of the statements he has made concerning the inspection and grading of wheat. We must all recognize the fact that wheat has made western Canada. The hard red spring wheat has become well known and has made a name for itself throughout the world, and in that way western Canada has been built up. We may refer to our other agricultural products such as cattle, horses, butter and eggs, but after all the one important thing that western Canada is depending upon is its wheat.

If we look back at the history of the wheat growers in western Canada we shall find that about 1917 or 1918 they were more or less prospering, but when we come to 1921 and 1922 we find that they were almost broke. I know many men in my constituency who in 1917 had $7,000 or $8,000 in their pockets and who found themselves in 1921 and 1922 with not only the $7,000 or $8,000 gone, but with $7,000 or $8,000 of a mortgage on the farm as well. They were beginning to despair; in fact, many of them were leaving the farm. They were beginning to despair of ever being able to farm in western Canada at all. Thanks to the wheat pool and the organized methods that the farmers introduced at that time whereby they brought the wheat pool into operation so as to enable the farmers to market their grain with more profit to themselves, they were able to continue. Things went along with more or less success to the western farmers until the last two years. In the years 1927 and 1928 the farmers have found themselves again growing wheat at a loss; they have found themselves going from bad to worse. They began to feel that there was something wrong with the marketing of their wheat whereby they found themselves unable to raise it at a profit.

[Mr. Millar.]

At the present time the grading and inspection of wheat in western Canada constitute the most important problem attracting their attention. On all sides in the farming community we hear nothing spoken of but the grading and inspection of wheat and this should be so because their very existence depends upon it. They feel there is something wrong whereby there is a reduction in the price they receive and they are not able to grow wheat at a profit. They feel that some changes are needed in our Canada Grain Act so as to enable the producer to receive a more equitable return for the wheat he grows.

For the benefit of the eastern members I feel it is necessary to refer briefly to the whole question of the marketing of wheat, because it is through this that many evils have crept into the grain trade. The farmer knows how to market his wheat in his own town, but he does not know what happens to it after it leaves there. If he knew that, he would not put up with many of the evils that he has put up with in past years. When he brings his grain into the market there are, practically speaking, three ways in which he may sell it. He may sell it as "street" wheat. That is, if he is satisfied with the weight, the price and the grade, he sells it outright. That is called "street" wheat. The elevator takes charge of it; the farmer gets his money and the deal is closed. He has nothing more to do with it. The second way in which he can sell it is when he is satisfied with the weight and the grade but not with the price, he puts the wheat into an elevator under what is called a "graded storage ticket." Then he waits until the price is right and he sells it. The third way is when he is satisfied with the weight but is not satisfied with the grade or price, he puts the wheat into what is called a special bin. The wheat is sent down to Winnipeg or the terminal and it is graded there. Then when he is satisfied with the price he sells his wheat. Practically speaking, from the farmer's standpoint, those are the three methods by which grain may be marketed, but after it leaves his hands he knows nothing about what happens it, and I want to go briefly over some of the things that happen after that.

The wheat comes to Winnipeg and a man takes samples of it. I will not go into the details of how he obtains the samples; he is supposed to take seven or eight jabs through the car with his instrument in order to get them. These samples are brought into the inspection department where there are men to inspect it. The number and the name of the car are there but the grader knows nothing about who owns the wheat or anything of that kind. The grader takes the weight of the grain, the moisture content, and outside of that, other than by the sense of sight, he has no means of grading. According to the standard that is set before him he decides into what grade that wheat shall go. After this is done, the box containing the sample is put into a large room on a table where anybody can go in and look at it. That looks quite innocent and harmless, but as soon as the samples are put into the room anyone in the grain trade, any man interested in a public or private elevator, or anyone interested in the milling business can go in and look at them. Some of these samples of wheat will be the tops in each of the grades, because there are three statutory grades, as they are called, then four, five, six and feed, which are called the commercial grades, as well as the off-grades in the different varieties. There are three statutory grades, and in addition grades 4, 5 and 6, and feed, which are called the commercial grades, as well as off-grades of different varieties. These men come in there and look at these samples of wheat of the different grades, and a man may say, "That is a good one." It may be graded No. 2, but he thinks it is a No. 1, and so he says, "I will take that. Ship it to my private elevator," or he may say, "Ship that to my mill. I am going to pay No. 2 price, but I am getting No. 1 grade." Or he may see a sample that is graded No. 3, and he thinks it is No. 2, and he says, "Send that to my mill. I am paying No. 3 price, and am getting No. 2 grade." This is what we call diverting the wheat, picking off the cream, and then it is shipped to the mixing elevators or to the mills to grind.

I should have stated earlier in my remarks that there are different grades of wheat and different standards for each of these grades. For example, there are No. 1, No. 2 and No. 3. These are called the statutory grades because they are fixed by law. The standards for these grades are fixed by the grain commissioners. Then there is No. 4, No. 5 and No. 6, the standards for which are fixed by our grain standards board, which meets in the fall of every year and decides what the standards shall be.

I want to speak for a moment with regard to our standards. When they come to pick a standard, they draw a sample of the wheat and say, "That will represent No. 1 northern," and of necessity they say that anything lower than that cannot be classed as No. 1 northern. Everything going into No. 1 northern must be as good as that sample or better, and similarily with No. 2 northern; everything going into No. 2 northern must be as good as that sample or better. In other words, if I were to set the standard at 90—100 being perfect—it means that everything going into No. 1 northern must be 90 or better, and in practice, if you will take all the No. 1 northern going to Winnipeg, you will find that it averages probably 95. Similarly with No. 2 northern. If I set the standard between 80 and 90, the average will work out to around 85, and so on all down the line for the other standards. When it gets through from the sample room, outside the inspection room, in Winnipeg or any other grading station, all the cream has been taken off and there is nothing left but skimmed milk, and the result is that this poor stuff is all sent to our public terminals, and the good stuff is all sent to our mixing houses and to our mills.

We will next consider what happens when the grain comes to Fort William or some other terminal elevator. When we come to our terminal elevators, we have two kinds, the public terminals and the private mixing terminals. In the public terminals the law prohibits mixing, and everything that is on the line is sent to the public terminals, because there is no mixing there. For instance, if a grade goes in No. 2, and the inspector by mistake calls it No. 1, that goes to the public terminal. Anything that is "off" goes to the public terminals and is stored there. On the other hand, anything that is above standard goes to the mixing houses, where mixing is carried on to such an extent that within the last two years what goes out of our private terminals is very little better than the grain in the public terminals. This mixing that takes place was never made legal until 1925, when the Grain Act was amended to make mixing legal in the private terminals. Before that it was illegal. Mixing is being carried on to a greater extent year by year, and conditions have become so bad that in the last few years the buyers in the old country have lost confidence in our standards. They look with suspicion on all our standards, and they insist upon seeing the grain for themselves to decide whether it is up to the standard or not.

To show you the extent to which mixing is carried on in the terminal elevators, let me quote from the returns that were given to me last year. In the year 1924-25 there was shipped into the private terminals, 123,919 bushels of Kota wheat, an inferior variety, not as good as hard, red, spring wheat. What did they ship out? They shipped out 8,310 bushels; in other words, 124,000 bushels disappeared—the mice ate it during the winter time. Next year, 1925-26, what happened? There were put into the private terminals 792,166 bushels of this Kota wheat, and there came out only 49,000 bushels—the balance disappeared. In the year 1926-27, 386,409 bushels went in and only 19,000 bushels came out. What happened? It is quite evident that this poor wheat was dumped into the good wheat, and the mixture was sold in the markets of the world as good wheat; nothing else.

Now let us see what happened to some of our wheat. Let me refer to the three statutory grades, Nos. 1, 2 and 3, and see what the out-turns were. In 1924-25, 16 million bushels of No. 1 were shipped into the private terminals; 20 million bushels came out—a truly wonderful increase during the winter time. Of No. 2, 15 million bushels were shipped in, and 14 million came out. Of No. 3, 16 million bushels were shipped in, and 25 million bushels came out. Next year the mixing was made legal, and they began to mix a little better, they were getting on to the practice a little more sharply. Of No. 1, 41 million bushels were shipped in and 47 million bushels came out. Of No. 2, 42 million bushels were shipped in and 42 million bushels came out. But of No. 3, although only 22 million bushels were shipped in, 33 million bushels came out. But let us see what happened to the crop of 1926, to be found in the return for 1926-27. We find they are now getting very expert, as these figures abundantly prove. They put in 14 million bushels of No. 1, and took out 18 million bushels; they put in 32 million bushels of No. 2, and took out 40 million bushels; they put in 14 million bushels of No. 3, and took out 27 million bushels. In other words, in that year they put in something like 56 million bushels of Nos. 1, 2 and 3 combined, and they took out in the neighbourhood of 81 million bushels of Nos. 1, 2 and 3 combined. That is, they took 25 million bushels of the lower grades and dumped them in with the 56 million bushels of the higher grades. And yet they turn around and tell you that they can do that and not lower the grade, that it is just as good as ever. Everyone knows that you cannot mix 25 gallons of water with 56 gallons of milk without very seriously diluting the milk.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): How many terminals does the hon. member refer to in his figures?

Mr. DONNELLY: To all the private terminals at Port Arthur and Fort William. This is the return given last year. More and more of this mixing has been carried on since 1925, when it was first made legal, and it has a bad effect in the old country. Last session before the select standing committee on agriculture and colonization documents were produced to us showing that buyers in the old country have lost confidence in our grades. Let me quote a letter written by F. W. G. Urquhart, secretary of the Liverpool Corn Trade Association, to F. J. Rathbone, secretary of the Board of Grain Commissioners for Canada.

Mr. ADSHEAD: What is the hon. member quoting from?

Mr. DONNELLY: From the minutes of proceedings and evidence and the report of the select standing committee on agriculture and colonization which sat last session. This is from page 156. This is the letter:

> There is no doubt whatever that, during the last two years—1926-1927, and 1927-1928, so far as the latter has gone—there has been a very serious deterioration in the quality and condition of Canadian wheat shipments, especially in respect of Manitoba wheat, grade No. 3 northern, and my directors cannot accept the explanation that the weather has been entirely responsible for the poor quality of wheat received in this country and on the continent.
> It is quite apparent that the standard sample of No. 3 northern Manitoba wheat, 1927, is greatly inferior to the relative standard for 1925. My directors submit that to try to maintain a regularity of standard from year to year is essential and, if Canada has an inferior crop, that it ought to be graded accordingly.

The report also contains another letter from the same gentleman, but addressed to the Prime Minister. Let me read it:

> In years gone by, complaints were few and far between, but since the autumn of 1926 they have been very numerous, and the confidence which the trade used to place in Canadian certificates has been badly shaken. My directors find that the whole United Kingdom and continental markets are becoming very dissatisfied with the arrivals of wheat under "Certificate Final" and unless matters improve they are quite certain that there will be a strong agitation to discontinue this method of trading and to insist upon buying on standard samples in the same way as trade is done with other countries, such as the Argentine and Australia.

The report contains other letters showing that the trade in the old country has lost confidence in our standards of wheat. At one time they looked upon our wheat standards as being just as good as Bank of England notes; they knew the wheat itself would be just as good as or better than the standard. They have lost confidence in it and will hardly believe that our wheat is up to standard until they find it so. I consider this a very serious matter. Our whole western country has built up its reputation on wheat, and here we find these men, who are merely mixing the wheat, degrading our standards. We have discussed a good deal the advisability of raising the standards of our cattle, our horses, our pigs, our sheep, beef, fruit, butter, cheese and everything else; yet here is one commodity which has made western Canada, hard red spring wheat, which is being degraded by those who are only dealing in the commodity and not producing it. These men are degrading our standards, getting away with it, and making money in the process.

There are only two persons who in my opinion should be considered in the grading of wheat: one is the producer and the other the consumer. The producer has to grow a quality of wheat which will meet the demands of the consumer, and the consumer on his part expects to get the kind of wheat for which he is willing to pay. The English buyer is not paying any more for his wheat than he has to. He is a very shrewd buyer, and when the wheat reaches him he examines it carefully to see that it is up to quality. Perhaps he looks at a No. 3 and he says, "This is not as good as it used to be and I am not willing to pay the price for it. I would sooner have Irish wheat or Australian wheat or wheat from some other country". He pays only for the value he receives, because he is buying in the world's market. Make no mistake about that; he is buying in the world's market and the price he pays for this wheat determines the price the farmer in this country gets for his wheat.

In my opinion, not one dollar more comes to this country through this process of mixing wheat as it is going on at the present time than would come if there were no mixing. Not one dollar more comes into the country. The same amount of money comes in through mixing, but the point is that much of this money goes to the people who are doing the mixing instead of finding its way to the farmer. The mixer takes his toll, leaving the rest to the farmer; in other words, he is getting the cream while the farmer is doing the work. It is the interest of the farmer which we should look after, and not the mixer's. This is only one of the evils in connection with the grain business, but I consider it the greatest evil. If this mixing were done away with a great part of the trouble in connection with diverted wheat would cease. True, some skimming would still be done by the mills and by our American cousins across the line. But that is not the chief source of trouble; it is the diverting of wheat for mixing purposes.

I do not wish to delay the house on the question of the mixing of wheat, the evil of which I have emphasized. I wish, rather to refer to the resolution more particularly as regards the question of protein content, as one of the basic factors in grading. Our method of grading wheat to-day is very crude and unscientific. As I have said, we weigh it and take the moisture content, and then the rest of the grading is done by the sense of sight. If there is any method whereby we can make it more scientific, any means by which the producer may obtain a more equitable return for his wheat, this is a step in the right direction. There are many things in connection with the protein content of wheat which at the present time are attracting the attention of a number of wheat growers on this continent—considerations which, so far as I can see, are impracticable in this country. As regards carload lots shipped, either as graded storage or as special bin wheat, destined to the terminals at Fort William or Port Arthur or Vancouver, that could be graded and the protein content taken into account. But when it comes to the question of buying wheat in the country, when it comes to buying wheat at local elevators, of which there are hundreds all over the country, I do not see how we can make the protein principle applicable. I do not see how the country buyer can purchase a load of wheat from the farmer, either in a truck, or in a wagon, and then tell how much protein there is in it in order to give the farmer a just return for his wheat. The question has been worked out to a certain extent in the United States, in Kansas and Minnesota, where I understand they are looking into the subject at the present time. The grain commission which is sitting in Saskatchewan at the moment has expressed the intention of visiting Kansas to investigate the question, to see whether it is not possible to have the principle applied to grain in Canada. If it could be done it would, I think, be a step in the right direction.

I wish to say a word or two, in connection with this resolution, regarding grain grown in my own constituency. The grain grown in that constituency is grown on the bald prairie, where there is no excess of moisture; it is produced on a more or less sandy loam soil. In that district we get wheat which is higher in protein content than that grown anywhere else in this country—indeed, higher in protein content than wheat grown anywhere in the world. It is the best hard red spring wheat produced anywhere. Wheat grown under those conditions must of necessity be small in the berry; it has not a large starchy kernel. Yet the people who are growing this wheat do not receive an equitable return for their crop. In other sections of the country, where they grow a wheat with a big berry and a starchy kernel, giving a big yield, they get the same price as is paid for the other wheat. That is not fair, and if there is any method whereby the growers can receive for their wheat a return according to ingredients I am heartily in favour of it. Before concluding I wish to move the following amendment, seconded by the hon. member for South Battleford (Mr. Vallance):

That all the words after the word "That" be struck out and the following substituted therefor:

"in the opinion of this house, consideration should be given to including protein as a factor in the statutory definitions applying to all contract grades of wheat in the western inspection division and that this matter, together with its effect on existing methods of inspecting and grading wheat, be referred to the select standing committee on agriculture and colonization and report thereon.

Mr. ROBERT GARDINER (Acadia): When on Friday last the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) was requested to permit this resolution and the previous one to be debated on Monday, and when they were consequently made special orders of this house, we did not anticipate that the former resolution would take up so much time before being disposed of. There are several members in this corner of the house who desire to discuss to some extent the resolution now under consideration. We realize, however, that the house has been delayed by the debate which has been just concluded, and I merely wish to state that so far as we are concerned we are quite willing that the present resolution shall go immediately to the select committee, reserving our right, when the report comes back, to debate it at such length as we may determine.

Mr. VALLANCE: There are a number of members from Saskatchewan and also from Manitoba sitting on this side of the house who are interested in this question, and I understand it is agreed that if this amendment is adopted we are reserving the same right as has been reserved by the hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Gardiner).

Amendment agreed to.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

GERMAN IMMIGRANTS AT TORONTO

Mr. CHURCH:

1. What steps to enforce the Immigration Act are or have or will be taken by the Department of Immigration in reference to some thirty or more Germans illegally brought into Canada by the Rapid Grip Company of Toronto, to take the places of strikers locked out?
2. Will said German workers be deported in accordance with the Immigration Act? If not, why?
3. On whose orders were these immigrants admitted and who signed the permits and made the applications for admission?
4. Will those responsible be prosecuted under the provisions of the Alien Labour Act?
5. Has or will the attention of the Attorney General of Ontario be called to this open breach of the Alien Labour Act by the Immigration or Labour Department?

Mr. FORKE:

1. The Department of Immigration has had no correspondence or communication with the Rapid Grip, Ltd., Toronto, about importation of labour. The Trade Engraving Company of Toronto approached the department some months ago about importation of photo engravers and offset engravers. The company was advised to ascertain whether this labour could not be secured in Canada. No permit of any sort was issued by the department for the admission of any class of labour for this company, but the records show that during November, December and January last, 8 French, 5 German and 2 Swiss immigrants describing themselves as photo engravers or related occupations were admitted to Canada destined to the Trade Engraving Company, Toronto. These men were admitted in the regular way on compliance with the regulations applicable to such nationals.

2. The Department of Immigration is not aware that any of the workmen referred to in paragraph one are deportable.

3. Answered by No. 1.

4. Section 13 of the Alien Labour Act provides that "This act shall apply only to the importation or immigration of such persons as reside in or are citizens of such foreign countries as have enacted and retained in force, or as enact and retain in force laws or ordinances applying to Canada of a character similar to this act. France, Germany and Switzerland have no laws or ordinances of a similar character applying against Canada.

5. Answered by No. 4.

DR. L. E. BORDEN

Mr. ESLING:

1. Has Dr. L. E. Borden, medical examiner in West Kootenay, British Columbia, for the Department of Pensions and National Health. been dismissed?
2. If so, for what reason?

Mr. KING Kootenay):

1. Dr. Borden has not been dismissed.

2. Answered by No. 1.

COAL MINING MACHINERY—IMPORTS

Mr. CANTLEY:

1. What was the value of all coal mining machinery other than stone dusting equipment imported into Nova Scotia during the calendar year 1927?
2. What was the value of such machinery which was duty free?
3. What was the value on which duty was paid?
4. What was the total duty paid on such machinery?
5. What was the value of all stone dusting equipment imported into Nova Scotia during the same period?
6. What was the total duty paid on said stone dusting machinery?

Mr. EULER:

1, 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6. Imports of "Percussion coal cutters, coal augers and rotary coal drills and complete parts," entered for consumption in the province of Nova Scotia in the calendar year 1927, amounted in value to $1,170, and the import duty collected was $234.

This is the only coal mining machinery and equipment which is separately classified for statistics, and the department has no record of the separate value of other machinery of this class imported or of the duties collected on such imports.

ALFRED PEAT BOG EXPERIMENTS

Mr. CANTLEY:

1. When did the government of Canada first begin experiments in connection with the Alfred peat bogs?

5. How many B.T.U. does a ton of that fuel contain?
6. How many B.T.U. does a ton of Old Sydney Mine (Nova Scotia) bituminous coal contain?
7. How many B.T.U. does a ton of Welsh anthracite coal contain?
8. Is it the intention of the government to continue to spend money on the peat bog at Alfred?
9. Has the anticipation of the Minister of Mines, as expressed in the house last year, been realized?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton):

4. Average cost of peat recovered since experiments in connection with the Alfred peat bogs were undertaken by the government of Canada, has never been determined.

From results of experiments and operations, costs of peat fuel based on full season's operation under commercial conditions, was estimated, viz. $3.50 per ton f.o.b. siding—this figure including all overheads.

CANADIAN FARM LOAN BOARD

LOANS TO BRITISH COLUMBIA

On the orders of the day:

Hon. H. H. STEVENS (Vancouver Centre): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb) can give me a little information with regard to a despatch which appears in to-day's papers from the Canadian Press correspondent at Victoria. This is the despatch:

Farm loans should be available to British Columbia agriculturists by May 1, according to an announcement given out here to-day by Dr J. D. MacLean, chairman of the Canadian Farm Loan Board.

I would ask the minister, first, if he is in a position to confirm the statement made in this despatch; and, secondly, as I do not see provision in the present estimates, what provision will be made to supply funds for the loans so to be granted?

Hon. J. A. ROBB (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I understand that under the act as passed provision is made for organization. Dr. MacLean, the chairman of the Farm Loan Board, was to visit the different provinces and arrange with the provincial authorities to complete their organization. I gather from the despatch that he has come to some understanding with the province of British Columbia.

Mr. STEVENS: Would the minister please answer the questions, which are based upon the statement of fact quite properly reiterated by him? First, will he confirm the accuracy of the despatch and say if these funds will be available by May 1; and, secondly, what provision will be made to provide the funds?

Mr. ROBB: I can only repeat that I understand provision is made for this under the act. I have had no communication from Dr. MacLean since he left Ottawa.

COAL IMPORTS FROM RUSSIA

On the orders of the day:

Hon. CHARLES STEWART (Minister of Mines): The hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Cantley) asked me a question a week ago with reference to imports of Russian anthracite. Our records would indicate that there came to Montreal prior to the close of navigation, 1 cargo, 5,000 tons gross; to Portland, 2 cargoes of 5,000 and 5,500 tons gross; and in transit 1 cargo of approximately 5,000 tons, or a total of 20,500 tons.

ST. LAWRENCE WATERWAY

BEAUHARNOIS POWER PROJECT—APPLICATION FOR APPROVAL OF PLANS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. C. ELLIOTT (Minister of Public Works): In answer to a question asked yesterday by my hon. friend from Bow River (Mr. Garland) with reference to the application of the Beauharnois Company, as to whether or not that application would be included in certain returns, I may say that on inquiry I find that it was included in a return which was tabled on May 30 last.

SEVEN SISTERS FALLS

INQUIRY AT WINNIPEG

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre): Has the commission which is now investigating matters in connection with the Seven Sisters question in Manitoba received authority to proceed to California?

Hon. CHARLES STEWART (Minister of the Interior): That authority would come from Manitoba and not from this department.

THE BUDGET

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON THE ANNUAL FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The house resumed from Friday, March 1, consideration of the motion of Hon. J. A. Robb (Minister of Finance) that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of ways and means.

Hon. HUGH GUTHRIE (South Wellington): In rising to make some observations in regard to the national budget which was presented to this house on Friday last by the Minister of Finance, let me in the first place congratulate my hon. friend the minister on the lucidity of his annual statement upon the present occasion. Let me also congratulate him upon the precision of his language in regard to certain important announcements which he made in his address to this house, and also upon the concise manner in which he laid the financial transactions of Canada before us. Subject to some observations which I may have occasion to make later on, let me say that we on this side of the house rejoice with those in every other quarter of the house that Providence has continued to shower upon this country unbounded prosperity; and if we on this side are inclined to attribute the major portion of the credit for this happy condition of affairs to a beneficent Providence and to the intelligence and industry of our people rather than to the government little surprise will be felt that we take this attitude. Indeed, on occasions of this kind, one is inclined to speculate how much greater, how much wider and how much more evenly distributed that prosperity might have been in this country had we in power in Canada today a government more fully alive to the possibilities of this great country, and to the rights and interests of every class of the citizens of this Dominion.

Personally I express my own satisfaction that the Minister of Finance on this occasion has given us a clearer and, if I may say so without offence, a much more candid statement of our financial affairs than was his wont on former occasions. And I state also my personal opinion that the statistical information which he has laid before parliament on this occasion will probably serve to remove from discussion some at least of the controversial points of previous discussions.

I think we may now take it as fairly well settled that the net debt of the Dominion of Canada on March 31 next will be the sum of $2,227,068,000, as stated by the Minister of Finance. This has always been a more or less controversial point. We have never had very serious controversy about the funded debt of the country, but I am glad to note that in his speech last Friday the minister for the first time took serious account of what we know as the funded or bonded debt or, as he put it in his remarks, the dead weight debt of the Dominion of Canada. That, after all, is the important item in the financing of this country. The net debt is not a matter of the greatest consequence; in England they never refer to it at all. There they use the one term "dead weight debt", and I am glad that the minister has used that term on this occasion, because that is the debt which counts. It is the amount for which the government of this country has issued in solemn form its bonds and obligations, signed, sealed and delivered, which bonds are now held by people who have invested in our securities. These bonds have to be paid at maturity, and in the meantime interest must be met. They therefore constitute the real burden which the people of this country are compelled to carry.

The net debt is comparatively unimportant; it is a matter very largely of bookkeeping and depends upon how you see fit to estimate the value of your assets. We have assets that are certainly good liquid assets, but we have a lot of assets in this country which we carry as non-active assets, and if you want to transfer some of these non-active assets to the active list you can immediately decrease your net debt. It is, I say, a matter largely of bookkeeping. But the debt which counts is the dead weight debt.

Now we may take it from the statement of the minister that the dead weight debt in this country, as of March 31 instant, will be the sum of $2,330,835,000. That dead weight debt stood on the books of Canada on March 31, 1922, when this government first assumed power, at $2,420,000,000. So that after seven years of financing by this government there is a reduction in the dead weight debt of Canada of $90,000,000, or an average reduction of $13,000,000 per annum since the government took office.

Mr. Speaker, I consider an annual reduction of the dead weight debt of $13,000,000 a fairly substantial payment. I think that under all the circumstances it should have been more. But I am not altogether dissatisfied with the reduction of $90,000,000 in seven years. I submit to the minister that without further delay in this matter he should present a definite scheme to this house for the retirement of the whole of the dead weight debt. Every year for the past three or four years this question has been brought to the attention of the minister. Year after year he has evaded it; he has said nothing to the house respecting it, although last year, I believe, he did allege that some man named McCulloch, writing on financial questions in England some eighty years ago, had declared that the system of payment of debts by way of sinking fund was unsound. That is the only reason the Finance minister has given the house for his refusal to adopt a definite scheme for the retirement of our debt. I can only tell my hon. friend the Minister of Finance that the government of Great Britain, in spite of Mr. McCulloch's language, has adopted a definite scheme of debt retirement; they have done so in France; they have done so in the United States in regard to their war debt and they have done so in the province of Ontario in regard to the provincial debt. In each of these instances in thirty, forty or fifty years as the case may be these dead weight debts will be paid off. It was pointed out last year in this house by my leader that if the Minister of Finance would appropriate out of his enormous revenues the sum of $19,000,000 a year as a sinking fund, even with interest at only 4 per cent in forty-five years the accumulation of this fund would pay the whole of the dead weight debt of this country; or if $19,000,000 per annum is too much—and I submit it is not—if he took the sum of $15,000,000 per year, in fifty years we would wipe out the dead weight debt of Canada.

There is much to commend such a step to any reasonable man in this proposal. In the first place a system of that kind enhances the credit of the country in the financial centres of the world. When you go to the money markets of the world and the money lenders find that you have established a definite system of debt retirement by means of sinking funds, your credit is enhanced immediately. The province of Ontario has found this to be so in the New York market; they can now borrow money in New York on their bonds more cheaply than was the case formerly. We could do the same for the Dominion, and thus enhance our national credit. This was done in Great Britain, and while there never was a doubt about British credit yet they have re-established that credit in the eyes of the world on a firmer basis than ever before. We could do so also.

But there is still a further element worth considering in this connection. A definite commitment of $15,000,000 or $19,000,000 a year to be taken from the treasury for the payment of funded debt would prevent the accumulation of an unnecessary amount of money in the treasury, which is always a great temptation to a minister, to a government or to a private individual to relax anything in the nature of economic principles, and a great temptation to indulge in a course of extravagant expenditure. The adoption of such a system, which would permit us annually to take from our treasury a definite sum of money, would act as a serious check upon the spending propensities of the present government, and I trust the Minister of Finance will seriously consider this matter and next session bring in some plan which may be adopted by the house in regard to this question.

Now I pass on to the surplus announced this year by the minister, a surplus which in some respects is very creditable. A surplus in this country is arrived at in a prosperous year very simply; all the receipts of the government go into a single fund known as the consolidated revenue fund; all payments for the management of the business of the country are made from that fund. If the receipts are greater than the expenditures in any year there is a surplus, and if the expenditures exceed the receipts there is a deficit. This year the minister has announced a surplus of $99,000,000, out of which he proposes to pay in capital charges and special expenditure the sum of $29,000,000, leaving in round figures a net surplus of $69,000,000, with which he says he has reduced, or on March 31 next will be able to reduce, the net debt of this country by at least $50,000,000. For some reason best known to himself, when the Minister of Finance makes financial comparisons he studiously avoids any reference to the year 1923; he always starts his statements and comparisons with the year 1924, and his reason for so doing is purely artificial. He should start with the fiscal year 1923. Mr. Fielding was in control of the treasury then, and Mr. Fielding always assumed full responsibility for the financing of Canada during the year 1923. The Minister of Finance has announced that from the year 1924 to the year 1929, inclusive, he has been able to reduce the national debt by the sum of $226,000,000, or an average annual reduction of $37,700,000. Had he included the year 1923, as he should have done, his average reduction per annum would have fallen from $37,700,000 to $27,860,000, but because the year 1923 was not a very favourable year in Dominion financing, in all or nearly all the statements of the present Minister of Finance he deliberately excludes that year from his calculation.

In the year 1923 and in the year 1922 we had to add to the debt of this country. We had surpluses in those years, just as the minister has surpluses now, but perhaps it would be as well for Mr. Fielding himself to explain the financing of those two years. Those who heard him make his financial statement in this house on June 10, 1923, will recall his language; speaking then of the fiscal year 1922, which closed on March 31, 1923, he would have nothing to do with it although he was Minister of Finance during 1922, but he assumed full responsibility for the following fiscal year 1923. Well, he closed the year 1922 with a pretty handsome surplus, amounting to $34,000,000; out of this surplus he paid capital charges and special expenditures amounting to $18,000,000, so he closed that year with an actual cash surplus of $16,000,000. Then, however, he was met with deficits and cash requirements on the part of the national railways and the merchant marine; that year these demanded from him a sum of no less than $97,000,000. He had only $16,000,000 of surplus in the treasury, and consequently had to borrow money to make up these railway deficits, and in doing so increased the debt of Canada for that year by $81,000,000. The following year practically the same thing happened; he closed the year with a surplus of $62,000,000 in the treasury, which is a fairly substantial amount. He paid all the capital and special charges, amounting to $24,500,000, leaving a balance in cash of $37,500,000. However, war demobilization, the merchant marine and the national railways again demanded the sum of $68,000,000, so instead of having a cash surplus of $37,500,000 that year he added to the debt of the country by $31,000,000, and it is by reason of that addition to the debt in 1923 that the present Minister of Finance carefully excludes that year from all his calculations

Mr. Fielding did just what his predecessors in office had done. When there were deficits with respect to the Canadian National Railways; when money had to be supplied them for other purposes as well as deficits he put his hand in the treasury, took out the money and paid the charges and charged them to the debt of Canada. After Mr. Fielding's time, however, a change took place and we entered upon a new era of railway financing. I do not say that the new scheme is not good and sound; in fact I prefer it to the old scheme. Under the new scheme railway finances are kept separate as far as possible, whereas under the former government and in Mr. Fielding's time the treasury stood all the losses, and these losses were added to the debt of Canada. The railway now issues its own bonds and the government of Canada guarantees them by endorsement on the back of the bond instead of, as in the old days, signing the front of the bond. That is practically the only difference in the two systems, but it makes an enormous difference with regard to the financial accounts and statements of the Dominion of Canada. The Minister of Finance announced a surplus of $99,000,000 for the past year's operations, and of course there was tremendous applause from the government benches when that announcement was made. But let me say, Mr. Speaker, that the record of this government, starting with the year 1923 up to the present year inclusive, is scarcely one whit better than the record of its predecessor. The public accounts of this country disclose the fact, astonishing to some people, that the surpluses under the preceding government were but little below what they have been under the present government. I do not know whether the laughter of the Postmaster General (Mr. Veniot) is caused by the statement I made. If so, I can only—

Mr. VENIOT: Surely I have the right to laugh.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I can only state that he is absolutely ignorant of the public accounts of Canada. I propose to place on Hansard a statement from the public accounts of Canada. These have been laid on the table of the house by the Minister of Finance, and no one in the government can repudiate the figures because they are laid before us as the actual results of Dominion financing. I will start with the year 1917, when the Union government was formed, and give the surpluses which appear on page 45 of the public accounts:

1917	$84,101,950 77
1918	82,494,639 72
1919	80,215,464 20
1920	45,902,404 80
1921	73,268,391 39
1922	34,391,696 36

The aggregate of surpluses for the six years amounts to about $400,374,000, or an average surplus per year of $66,729,000. We will now give the record of the Liberal government, starting with the year 1923:

1923	$62,321,167 91
1924	72,024,492 47
1925	27,942,578 00
1926	60,085,026 44
1927	79,147,603 79
1928	86,550,021 70
1929	99,742,000 00

The aggregate for these years amounts to about $487,812,000, or an average per year of $69,687,000, or just about $3,000,000 more per year of surplus under the Liberal government than was the case under the Conservative government which preceded it. I make that statement largely in view of the fact that during the present session the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) flourished the public accounts in our faces when we were discussing the building of national highways. He referred to the fact that during the years I have enumerated, under the Conservatives the debt of this country had been materially increased. That was a most misleading statement, and no one knows better than the Prime Minister that the increased debt of those years was due to two causes, and two causes only. During those years we had practically as large surpluses and spent far less money on consolidated fund account than has this government, but the acquisition of the Canadian National railway system and the conduct of Canada's part in the Great war accounted for the increased debt of the country. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that the finances of the Canadian National railways are so inextricably interwoven with the finances of the Dominion of Canada that one cannot get a fair picture of either situation when viewing them separately. To a large extent they must be considered together and I am glad that the Minister of Finance has treated them in that way on this occasion. The interests of this country are deeply wrapped up in that great railway undertaking. It is by far the largest financial concern which this country has. Does the house realize just what it involves? I cannot give the precise figures with regard to the national railways for the year just closed, because the statement has not been issued, but I can take the financial statement of the preceding year as a basis and account for certain changes in figures which have occurred in the interval and which have come to the knowledge of the house.

I find that the Canadian National system had a bonded debt to private bondholders amounting to $981,000,000, as of January 1, 1928. According to the statement made to this house by the Minister of Finance, this year the bonded indebtedness will be increased by the sum of $44,000,000. These figures disclose the fact that the bonded indebtedness of the Canadian National railway system to the public has now passed the billion dollar mark. What about the Dominion of Canada's interest in that system? On January 1, 1928, Canada was a creditor of that system to the extent of $1,258,000,000; the total indebtedness of the road as of that date was $2,239,000,000. I give these figures in order that we may understand the tremendous financial undertaking in which we are involved in regard to these national railways. The result of operations for last year was very gratifying, and I would ask the Minister of Finance to note that the treasury of this country has been relieved very substantially for the last four or five years through the successful operation of Canada's national railway system. On January 1, 1924, an announcement was made by the president that for the first time in its history the national system had produced a net revenue over operating expenses, for the year 1923, amounting to $4,155,000; in 1924 that revenue had increased to $18,000,000; in 1925 it had increased again to $33,000,000; in 1926 the revenue was $48,000,000; in 1927 it dropped back to $42,000,000; and for 1928 we have the wonderful result of a surplus in net operating expenses amounting to $58,000,000.

It will take $50,000,000 of that amount to pay the interest on the bonds which the public hold. I understand the management of the road will pay that interest this year and will still have on hand a balance of $8,000,000 for other purposes. But what about the money it owes to the Dominion treasury? The minister intimates that the sum of $32,000,000 odd is owed this year to the government for interest. It is put down in the books as a debt of the railway but is purely a bookkeeping transaction and I presume it will be added to the $1,258,000,000 which the company owed to us at the beginning of the year, making the total indebtedness of the system to the Dominion treasury about $1,300,000,000 and to the public about $1,000,000,000.

In respect, however, to the national railway we on this side of the house are all optimists. We look upon that railway as practically our own infant and our own creature. Those of us who were in parliament—it is perhaps pretty far back—in the early days prior to 1911 know there was great activity in railway building in this country in those years. We far outbuilt the requirements of the Dominion of Canada as they existed at that time, but personally I am not in a position to offer any criticism whatever of the railway undertakings of those days because I was one of those who supported the proposals. However, early in the years of the war something in the nature of a national catastrophe was imminent to the Dominion of Canada in respect of our railways. The very extensive system known as the Canadian Northern, with all its subsidiaries and all its ramifications, became seriously involved financially. The government had to come to its rescue to the extent of an enormous amount of money and the only security which we could obtain from the Canadian Northern system was a blanket mortgage upon the whole undertaking and a transfer of sufficient of the shares in the various companies to give the government control of the whole undertaking. Apart from the granting of substantial aid, financial disaster loomed ahead of us. The Grand Trunk Pacific came next; insolvency stood at the door of that railway; the road was in fact insolvent. In that case we went to the exchequer court and asked that the affairs of the Grand Trunk Pacific be taken from the management which was then the old Grand Trunk company, and that it be placed in the hands of a receiver. It was placed in the hands of the Minister of Railways of Canada as receiver. No sooner had these matters been temporarily arranged than the financial difficulties of the old Grand Trunk railway system became only too apparent. That road was absolutely insolvent. Canada was threatened with railway insolvency on every hand. Moreover, across the ocean in France and Flanders we were carrying on Canada's part in the greatest war in history. There was serious financial calamity awaiting us at home unless speedy action was taken to relieve the railway situation and at the same time hundreds of millions of dollars had to be supplied to carry on the war. Such then was the critical situation in this country in the years 1918 and 1919.

The leader of the government (Mr. Mackenzie King) was not, I think, in the house until September of the year 1919, when he was returned for a constituency in Prince Edward Island and came back to the house as leader of the Liberal party. But he was present in the house during the second session of 1919 and I recall with the greatest distinctness what transpired during that session. So will my right hon. friend; so will the Minister of Finance; so would the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) if he were in his place. A great fight was then waged by the Conservative party to take over these three railway systems that had gone into bankruptcy, reorganize them, consolidate them and make them into a Canadian National railway to be owned by the people of the Dominion of Canada. This was the only way to save the country from what might have been national bankruptcy. Indeed, in spite of what we did, the prediction of national bankruptcy was made in the city of Montreal by so great a financial authority as Sir Lomer Gouin and other prominent persons.

We had a bitter fight in the session of 1919 in the old museum building, where we then sat, but we were fortunate in that great fight to have a very brilliant man to lead our forces in regard to the railway problem. I refer to the Right Hon. Arthur Meighen, who I believe was the first public man to realize the full gravity of the situation and who was at all times the great factor in engineering our way out of our railway difficulty. He formulated a definite plan; he produced it before parliament. It was immediately opposed in the bitterest manner by the Liberal party in the House of Commons, by the Liberal party in the Dominion of Canada and, I regret to say, by many friends and some newspapers otherwise friendly to the Conservative party. Mr. Meighen had a tremendous task ahead of him. Day in and day out in the old museum during the session of 1919 the railway bill was fought to a finish. Every kind and method of opposition was urged against it. Nothing was left undone or unsaid by our opponents. We were told that we were going to bankrupt the Dominion of Canada. It was claimed that those roads should be put into liquidation, go through the exchequer court of Canada and be put on the auction block. If such a course had been followed there was only one power in Canada to purchase them and that power would have been able to create the greatest railway monopoly ever created in any country in the world.

I remember some of the amendments that were moved on that occasion and I will mention one or two of them. Under the guidance of Mr. Meighen that bill was fought through the house. Amendment after amendment was moved to defeat it. The late Hon. D. D. McKenzie moved that the matter be dropped and not considered for the present time. His motion was defeated. Then came a motion by Mr. Denis, at that time member for Joliette and until recently a member of the house. His motion was defeated. Then there was a motion by the Right Hon. Mr. Fielding to appoint a royal commission to inquire into the whole matter, his object being to defeat the bill and to destroy the government as well. His motion was defeated. After that followed a motion by my right hon. friend the present Prime Minister on the third reading of the bill, just before it was passed, a motion to recommit it to the committee of the whole house, which constituted a want of confidence motion in the government on the third reading. It was intended to defeat the government and to destroy the bill. There followed another motion, which to-day seems rather ludicrous, moved by the hon. member for Quebec West (Mr. Parent). I would like to recall to the house the amendment which he moved. On the third reading of the bill the member for Quebec West formally moved that in the opinion of the House of Commons, as the Grank Trunk railway had terminals in the United States, our taking this road over as a national undertaking would involve us in annexation to the United States. Such of course were not the exact words of the amendment but merely the sense of it. At this distance of time it would seem impossible that any man would vote for a proposal of that kind, yet in the division list I find the following names—King, Lapointe, and others. Our good friend the Minister of Finance was cute; he ducked that vote; his name does not even appear in the list of pairs. When the Liberals had exhausted every effort to beat us, when they had tried everything in their power to destroy that measure and prevent the nationalization of these railways, the present Minister of Finance was put up to lead the final attack, and in the early hours of the morning he solemnly moved that the bill be given the six months' hoist. Again I look at the division list, and I find amongst those who supported the six months' hoist to destroy that measure, the following names: King, Robb and Lapointe. Such was the attitude of the Liberal party at that time, and of the Liberal press, and also as I said before, of an influential part of the Conservative press of Canada. They were all mistaken, badly mistaken in their judgment. The Liberals tried by everything in their power to destroy that measure but they failed. With them it was a case of the spirit being willing, but the flesh was weak.

Mr. ROBB: My hon. friend has an excellent memory. Will he tell us what was the attitude and the speech of his present leader (Mr. Bennett) upon that occasion?

Mr. GUTHRIE: My leader was not a member of the house at that time. My hon. leader did not run in the election of 1917, as the minister will remember.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Was it not true that that session was a special session called for the purpose of approving the peace treaty, and not a session called for the purpose of dealing with railway matters?

Mr. GUTHRIE: It may have been as my right hon. friend suggests, but I know that ninety per cent of the discussion at that session centered around the railway question. Two great volumes of Hansard are full of that discussion, and of little else. No, Mr. Speaker, hon. gentlemen opposite had no faith in a national railway system then, and they tried to kill it at its birth, and for two or three years afterwards they continued their efforts to destroy it. Why, even when the present government first obtained power, in the very first speech delivered from the throne, a speech penned by my right hon. friend the Prime Minister, he takes occasion in that speech to remark:

> The transportation system weighs heavily upon our national finances.

Some hon. MEMBERS: That was right.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Certainly, that was true in the early days, and it accounted for a very large part of the additions to the national debt, but even at that time my right hon. friend the prime minister had not become a convert either to the nationalization of the railways or to public ownership in general. He only took it on trial; in fact, it was popularly supposed by those outside the secrets of the cabinet that the system was going to be broken up, and not continued as a national undertaking. There were strong influences pulling the government this way, but other influences pulling them in the right direction, of course, and the government finally agreed just to feeling its way, and the Prime Minister made the Governor General say with great caution in the speech from the throne that he had decided "to give government ownership and operation a fair trial."

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: A pretty good decision.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Yes, and a reluctant one, too. My object, Mr. Speaker, in going into these old matters is this: Now, when this wonderful Canadian National railway system has more than justified itself, now, that it is rapidly becoming in the nature of a great national asset, now that we may look forward to a day, not perhaps in my lifetime, but in the lifetime of some here, when this system will start repaying the government of Canada part at least of the money it owes to the treasury, to the day when it will have a clean sheet, as it ultimately will have, in regard to its bonded indebtedness to the public; now that the system is in this, a thoroughly prosperous condition, this government desires to treat it as its own creature. Whereas in 1919 it tried to cast it out as base-born, now it wants to consider it as its legitimate offspring, and to profit by its success. Let me say, in concluding my remarks on this phase of the subject, that the national railway system in this country constitutes a lasting monument to the ability and statesmanship and determination of a single man, a member of a former Conservative government, and subsequently Prime Minister of that government. It is to his ability and foresight, to his statesmanship and determination that the people of Canada are indebted for this wonderful system of national railways.

There is another question in the budget which I think we should carefully consider, and that is the question of the cost of government in this country. The cost of government in this country is going up so rapidly that it is now out of all proportion with the advances which the country has made either in business or in population. When this government first came into power, I grant that they endeavoured to make some effort to reduce expenditure. Mr. Fielding, I fancy, did his best in that direction. For the year 1923, according to the public accounts we spent $350,000,000; in 1924, Mr. Fielding reduced that to $344,000,000; in 1925, he further reduced it to $339,000,000, and then, perhaps unfortunately for the country he retired from office. His successor the present Finance minister came into office at a time when the annual expenditure was $339,000,000. The first year after he assumed office the expenditure jumped to $343,000,000; in 1927, to $346,000,000; in 1928, to $360,000,000, and for the year just closed, according to the minister's own figures on Friday last, the expenditure was $385,000,000. Starting with an annual expenditure of $339,000,000 when he took office in 1925, he has increased that expenditure to the enormous figure of $391,000,000 to-day, or an increase in a few short years of $52,000,000 in annual expenditure. The business of the country has not increased in that ratio; the population of the country has not increased in that ratio; conditions in Canada do not warrant such an increase, and what, I would ask, has the minister been doing with the money? We on this side say he has been spending it recklessly and extravagantly.

When we come to the estimates which the Minister of Finance has laid before parliament for the coming year, we find that they show for next year another increase of $6,355,000 over last year But the minister is not required to spend this year all the money that he spent last year. He announces on the first page of the estimates which he has just presented to the house that he has a sum of $3,495,000 less in interest to pay this year than last; that is a large saving. We also know that there was an item in the labour estimates last year of $1,100,000 for technical education which will not be required this year. Again, last year he had to pay out $500,000 for a house for our ambassador at Washington. I hope he will not have to pay out a similar amount this year for a house in Tokyo. These three items should reduce the expenditure this year $5,095,000, and yet the minister is going to increase his expenditure by $6,355,000, or a total increase this year of between eleven and twelve million dollars over last year.

But that is not the end. Read the order paper for to-day and you will see provision is being made for loans to harbours and railways involving, as I tried to point out to the house the other day, a new expenditure of a permanent nature to the amount of $57,000,000. The truth is we have entered in this country upon a perfect carnival of extravagance. And by reason of the fact that the minister happens to have money in the treasury he is becoming grossly extravagant and is burdening the people of the country with an enormous load of taxation.

Now, this is where the precise language in his budget speech fitted in so well. How careful he was when speaking on taxation to use these words:

The rate of taxation has been reduced.

Well, even that statement was not true before Friday last. But who cares about the rate of taxation? The rate does not count. The only thing that counts in this world in regard to taxes is the burden of taxation—the load which the people have to carry. If my hon. friend would read the speeches of the late William Ewart Gladstone, when he was Chancellor of the Exchequer in England, on this very point he would get some light. Gladstone pointed out very definitely that the rate of taxation means nothing; the burden of taxation means everything. And is it not true? It is the burden that the people have strapped on their backs, the burden they have to carry that counts. And the record of this government in regard to taxation, as disclosed in the public accounts, is one to make the people of this country think. I take again the public accounts as laid on the table of the house by the Minister of Finance, and I say to him that he has enormously increased the load of taxation borne by the people of Canada. He cannot get away from his own figures. I am going to give them in round numbers, but I will put them on Hansard as they appear in the public accounts. Again I will take the Conservative record and compare it with the minister's own record.

When you examine the consolidated revenue fund in the public accounts you must know now, if you did not know last year, for the budget speech discloses it, that eighty-seven per cent of every dollar that goes into that account is derived from taxes, and thirteen per cent comes from rents, fees and other sources. I repeat, eighty-seven per cent of every dollar which goes into the treasury is taxes. I ask the house to listen to a comparative statement upon this question. Under Conservative rule in 1918 our taxation was $260,000,000; in 1919, $312,000,000; in 1920, $349,000,000; in 1921, $434,000,000; in 1922, $381,000,000. These were war years, and we taxed practically everything we could tax. We had to have the money to carry on the war. Now I take as a comparison with the Conservative record the last five years under the administration of the present Minister of Finance. In 1925 the taxation collected amounted to $346,000,000; in 1926, $380,000,000; in 1927, $398,000,000; in 1928, $422,000,000; in 1929—this year, as announced by the minister in this house—$450,000,000. Of those figures which I have given you on either side, eighty-seven per cent is taken out of the pockets of the people by way of taxation. Now, mark the comparison. Five years under Conservative rule, total taxation, $1,739,000,000; five years under Liberal rule, $1,998,000,000. In other words, in the last five years this government has wrung from the people in taxes $259,000,000 more than was taken by their predecessors in the same length of time. The following is a comparative statement taken from the public accounts, page 45, of the amount of taxation collected in the fiscal years 1918—1922 and the fiscal years 1925-1929:

Total Taxation

Conservative		Liberals
1918...	$260,778,000	1925...	$346,834,000
1919...	312,946,000	1926...	380,745,000
1920...	349,746,000	1927...	398,695,000
1921...	434,386,000	1928...	422,000,000
1922...	381,952,000	1929...	450,000,000
	$1,739,802,000		$1,998,991,000

What does that mean? It means an annual increase in taxation of $51,000,000. Now, what is the burden of taxation? I got the latest figures of our population from the Bureau of Statistics, and I assume they are correct, but I think they are very optimistic. According to their estimate the population of Canada to-day is 9,658,000, which means that the taxation on every man, woman and child in Canada under this government is $5.36 more than it was under the Conservative government. This means that for a family of five the increased taxation is $26.80 per year. This enormous annual burden of taxation has been saddled upon the backs of the people by this government. These figures speak for themselves, and as they appear in the public accounts I assume they are correct. At all events, I am certain there is no member of this administration who can contradict them.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Has my hon. friend comparative tables of the increase and decrease in the public debt during those periods?

Mr. GUTHRIE: I went over those figures before my right hon. friend came into the house. Now for a minute or two let us look at the alleged decreases in taxation. "We have decreased the rate of taxation," says the minister. The Minister of Finance has taken off the one per cent on insurance premiums. Well, I believe that yielded very little revenue anyway, but I do not know very much about it, so I will pass it over. Then he has abolished the transportation tax—one per cent on the cost of every railway ticket. So the man who buys a hundred dollars' worth of railway tickets in a year is going to save a dollar. But following his usual practice, the minister has taken ten per cent off the tax on parlour car and sleeping car tickets, and has thus relieved the people in this country who are best able to pay that tax. Ninety per cent of the travelling public never enter a parlour car or a sleeper; it is the rich ten per cent of our people who do so. The rich travellers are relieved of a rather heavy tax of ten per cent, while the ordinary travelling public get one dollar of relief upon every hundred dollars of railway tickets they buy.

Again, the minister has taken three cents off telegrams and cablegrams. Now tell me, Mr. Finance minister—if I may so address him—how many telegrams the ordinary family in this country send in the course of a year. It is only in matters of domestic rejoicing and domestic calamity that they send a telegram at all; but the rich men send a lot of telegrams and cables, the big corporations send an enormous number, so do the brokers, the stock exchanges and the banks. All these will be materially relieved. And that is the very same class of people which the minister has sought to relieve in budget after budget which he has presented to this house.

When it comes down to the ordinary, every-day people of Canada, all he has to say to them is: I have taken one per cent off the sales tax. That is some relief. The sales tax last year at three per cent yielded sixty million dollars. Next year at two per cent the yield will be twenty million dollars less. But why maintain this war tax which is so burdensome upon the backs of the poorer people of the Dominion? Do the people know even yet that they have to pay two per cent on their wearing apparel, one per cent on their boots and shoes, and two per cent on practically everything that goes into the ordinary household? And yet the minister has left forty million dollars of that tax still on the people, a tax which will average at least four dollars or five dollars for every man, woman and child in the Dominion next year. I tell my hon. friend, if he would take off that forty million dollar tax burden instead of informing this house, "I have a surplus of sixty-nine million dollars," his action would be applauded throughout the country. If he had cut off forty million dollars of his surplus and forty millions of sales tax and told the house, "I have a surplus of twenty-nine million dollars instead of sixty-nine millions," his statement would have been well received. Our taxes are ruinously excessive, they are burdensome to the last degree, and they have been enormously increased by the present government.

Let me refer to one other remark of the Finance Minister, which he expressed in rather precise language. Indeed I thought at the time he made it he was serious. He solemnly said to the house:

> This administration will refuse to support any extravagance in the spending of the taxpayers' money.

Of course we realized that it was merely a joke, whereat the Prime Minister laughed most heartily. In that respect every quarter of the house engaged in laughter, the minister himself not excepted. This bald statement as it appears in Hansard might mislead some people; they might regard it as a serious statement and not, what it was, a bit of dry Scotch humour. So that I would suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that there be permitted an interpolation in Hansard on this occasion: "Laughter, with great merriment in the house," or something of that kind, so that the people who read the minister's budget speech may not be misled. The minister cannot seriously make such a statement because he is not borne out by the facts. I charge that this has been the most wasteful and extravagant government this country has had since confederation. I am going to back up my statements with a few pointed instances.

First I would remind the house that one of the outstanding questions in the expenditure of last year or the year before related to an expenditure of $500,000 of the taxpayers' money, which was taken by this government from the taxes of the people to buy a palace in the city of Washington for the diplomatic representative of this government, instead of allowing him to rent or buy a house for himself, as should have been done. No one can justify that expenditure; it is extravagant and wasteful to the last degree, and I confront the minister with that particular expenditure as a direct challenge to the statement he made in this house last Friday that their government would tolerate no extravagance. But look at the estimates produced to-day. Last year the vote to maintain our Washington embassy was $60,000; to-day it stands in the estimates at $100,000—an unwarrantable and extravagant increase of $40,000. Paris, too: last year the vote for our representative stood at $75,000; now there is $5,000 more for the Paris office. No warrant for it. But in addition to that I find in the public accounts that we are maintaining another institution or agency in Paris, on which $44,000 odd was spent last year. Take Tokyo:

last year in the estimates the vote was $50,000. This year, another glaring extravagance, that vote is raised to $75,000. And there is no justification for it. And London: this government launched into a very magnificent bit of extravagant expenditure when it bought that wonderful property on Trafalgar square. There is a considerable yearly overhead to carry in respect of that property. When I was in the Meighen government the vote for the whole establishment in London was $69,000; this year the vote is $117,000. And there is absolutely no warrant for such an increase.

I have spoken of extravagance, Extravagance, I conclude, is the spending of more money than is necessary, or the spending of money unnecessarily. There is another kind of expenditure which is an absolute waste, which is the throwing away of money or the destruction of property. I charge this government not only with extravagance but I charge it also with waste. Fine properties in the city of Ottawa, worth hundreds of thousands of dollars, have been actually destroyed by the wastefulness of this government. And for what? Merely to improve the view. I am heartily in favour of improving our national capital, but I am absolutely opposed to waste in the form in which this government has permitted it to take place in this city of Ottawa.

Another thing I view as an absolute extravagance is our so-called tariff board, an absolutely useless board. This board now appears in the estimates at $120,000 a year, and I see by the public accounts that for some reason or other there was paid last year the sum of $71,000 for advisers to the tariff board. What they are doing I do not know. I have heard it said—and I have heard it said by supporters of the government—that there is one real use for the tariff board, namely, that it acts as a buffer between the minister and some of his supporters who are always pulling his coat tail to have changes made in the fiscal policy. I say, $120,000 a year is too much to pay, even for the repose of the Minister of Finance.

Let me mention another matter which to my mind is a gross extravagance. The minister may not know about this, but he should know. Does the house realize that during the last twelve months for which the Auditor General's report contains a record this government spent—I had better be exact in this statement—for "new autos and auto repairs and renewals" the sum of $542,000? I am trying to lay these things fairly before the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance because I want them to know what is happening. I do not think they have known it up to this moment, but they can go to their own Auditor General's report wherein they will find some twenty-eight items, for each one of which I can give the page and the reference.

An hon. MEMBER: Put them on Hansard.

Mr. GUTHRIE: No, I will keep them; let them find it out. As I say, $542,000 is the amount given in the Auditor General's report for the twelve months with which it deals. I call that gross extravagance; it is a waste of the taxes of the people.

Let us pass on to something else. Look over the estimates for this year and examine the civil service vote. Why is it that year by year this government increases the number of civil servants in this country by a very large percentage? This year, I find on looking over the estimates, the increase involves 143 new civil servants. Last year it was 159, and the year before, I think, 173. What is the extra work of these departments that renders it necessary to increase the civil service of Canada at this rate? It is popularly supposed in this country that the most overmanned, most over-staffed institution in this world is the civil service of Canada. Why, in some of the departments they are falling over each other this minute; they are so numerous that they are actually hindering each other in doing proper work. And not only are we going to appoint 143 new ones, but if you look on the same page of the estimates, at the very beginning you will find $316,000 more of an annual expenditure this year for civil servants' salaries and contingencies. What these contingencies are I do not know. We vote to every department of this government a very handsome sum for contingencies—a very large amount. The government cover everything they can in their specifications in the estimates; everything they can think of, every annual and special expenditure they think necessary, is first put in. Then in addition to that we vote every year a big lump sum for contingencies; but this year they increase the vote for contingencies by $101,000. Does not the minister call that extravagance?

Let me give the minister another instance of what I mean by extravagance. My hon. friend can take the estimates into his room and with a blue pencil can cut them down this year twenty, yes, thirty millions, and not injure the administration of government or the public service of this country to any appreciable extent. No one would know the difference. He can take the Department of Public Works estimates alone, involving $21,600,000, and blue pencil 25 per cent of that amount. Let me give him a sample of what he can do with a blue pencil. I will take the single case of the riding of North Bruce.

Mr. MALCOLM: I thought so.

Mr. GUTHRIE: My hon. friend says he judged so; his conscience must be pricking him. North Bruce is a rural constituency projecting into the Georgian bay; it contains a delightful little town called Kincardine, one of the small towns of western Ontario, another delightful little town called Port Elgin and a couple of very small hamlets, one known as Lion's Head and another known as Tobermory. What is the record of expenditure in regard to that single riding of this Dominion? For Kincardine last year we voted $53,000 for harbour improvements and this year we are asked to vote another $50,000, of which $10,000 is a revote, making a total of $93,000. For Port Elgin this year we are asked to vote $3,000 for dredging, and my recollection is that in the public accounts for last year there was another item of $4,000. I have not been able to verify this, although I think I have read it; the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Malcolm) will know whether or not I am right. For the little hamlet of Lion's Head last year we voted $17,800 for dredging, and this year there is another $2,600 for dredging and $4,000 for a wharf. For Tobermory, away up at the top of the Bruce peninsula, where the boys tell me there used to be some deer hunting, last year we voted $10,000 for a wharf and this year we are asked to vote another $2,000, presumably to complete the wharf. That makes a total for this one riding, containing these four small places, of $132,000 of the taxpayers' money. Then I went to the Customs department to find the revenue from those places. They all report to Goderich; they are too small to have ports of their own, and the total revenue from all four places is only $40,000 a year.

Mr. MALCOLM: My hon. friend has the wrong figures; we get $100,000 from Kincardine alone.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Then it must come in by the railways and not through the harbours. I took the figures from the report, which I have before me of the Customs department. Then I secured the entry of vessels to these places, and I find that for the last year for which there is a report the number of vessels entering these ports was only 17, and the number of outgoing vessels 16. This may be a very excellent way of spending public money to secure the election of political friends in various ridings but it is a very improper way to spend the taxpayers' money, and at the first opportunity the minister should blue pencil it and put a stop to this extravagant practice. My list of extravagances is by no means complete or exhaustive. I have tried to bring just a few glaring cases to the attention of the Minister of Finance and I hope he will speedily remedy the situation.

There is still another aspect of the budget to which I now wish to turn. During the whole course of the career of this government as an administration we on this side of the house charge that the government has been absolutely careless and neglectful of the interests of the ordinary people of the Dominion of Canada. When I began my remarks to-day, Mr. Speaker, I said we rejoiced over the continued prosperity in Canada, subject to certain observations I would have to make, and what I complain of is that while prosperity has been showered upon Canada for the last year or two the only evidence of that prosperity is to be found in the large cities of Canada such as Montreal, Toronto, Hamilton, Windsor, Winnipeg, Vancouver and so on. To the ordinary smaller cities, towns and villages; in the townships and the farming districts of this country that prosperity has not yet paid a visit. I tell my hon. friend the Minister of Finance that with the exception of the few larger cities of Canada the population of this country is either stationary or retrogressing. I will take him to any of the smaller cities in the western part of Ontario, the part of the country I know best, and in each one he will find the same story according to the municipal authorities; we are making no progress and in some of these places unfortunately, we are going back. The same thing applies to the country districts in that part of the country where I reside; the villages with few exceptions are getting smaller and the number of farmers in the townships is gradually being reduced. There are more farms for sale in western Ontario to-day than there has been for the past twenty years. It is not pleasant to state these things, but these are facts which one must recognize, and this condition has been brought about largely by the indifference of this government to the people outside of the big cities or to anyone except the big interests and the big corporations, who are enjoying this so-called prosperity which has been very thinly distributed among the other classes throughout Canada.

First I am going to deal with the agricultural class, and I say the condition of that class is not what it should be in any part of Canada at this moment. Before I forget it there is one matter I want to mention here in regard to the agriculturists of the west: Evidently there is something seriously wrong in connection with the system now in operation in regard to the grading and the sale of wheat; there is at this moment some serious difficulty in that regard in western Canada. This matter was brought to my attention last December by two gentlemen from Saskatchewan who had come to Toronto and Guelph to attend the winter fairs; they complained that they were being unfairly treated both in the grading and in the sale of their wheat. I must confess that I do not understand all the technicalities of the grain trade, but I could tell from the information given me and from the temper and earnestness of these two gentlemen that there was something radically wrong and that this government or a department of this government which is supposed to be in control of these matters was either thoroughly negligent or inefficient or both. All I can say in regard to this matter, Mr. Speaker, is that the question is so serious and affects so deeply the interests of the whole Dominion that if a grievance exists—I do not say it does, but if it does—it should be remedied before this house prorogues. If the department of government which now has control of the grading and marketing of wheat is unable to cope with the situation, let some other department take charge of this work; if the present Board of Grain Commissioners is acting improperly in any way or if the law under which they operate is improper, then let the Board of Grain Commissioners be changed or let the law be changed until the producers of this vast wealth in these western provinces are satisfied and are receiving a fair return for their capital and labour. We must recognize that the grain crop is the greatest cash asset possessed by this country, and anything which interferes with the success of the men engaged in the production of that grain is going to injure us in every corner of this Dominion of Canada.

I charge that this government has been absolutely neglectful of the interests of the farmers, and has handed them nothing but gold-bricks on several occasions. I can recall a time just prior to the general election of 1921 when the Conservative party was charged with bleeding the farmers white in regard to the duties that then existed on farm inplements. The farmers were told that if the Liberal party came into power they would reduce or abolish the tariff and that the price of farm implements would immediately come down because of the tariff reduction. Great relief was promised to the farmers in this respect, but they were merely handed a gold-brick. Notwithstanding the heavy reductions which the government made in the tariff upon farm implements, the price of farm implements has increased since 1891. I am not going over the whole list of implements, but will take just a single item which will serve as an illustration. Binders, reapers and mowers were subject to a duty of 12½ per cent when this government came into power, and they reduced it to 6 per cent. It was argued in this house that a 6 per cent reduction in the cost of a mower would be $15.96 on a $266 machine. The manufacturers were permitted to import, practically free, all the raw material that went into the manufacture of these machines, and it was said that free raw material would cause another reduction of $4 or $5 in the cost of the machine. The Finance minister of that day, Mr. Fielding, in order to appease the manufacturers, cut off the sales tax 5 per cent on farm implements, which should amount to $13.30 on a $266 machine. These total reductions amounted to $34.26, and it was openly stated that the price of the machine would be reduced to that extent. Has it been so reduced? I have obtained the prices of farm implements as of December, 1921, and those in force to-day. These prices cover the McCormick-Deering, the International and the Massey-Harris machines. There will of course be a difference in the cost of freight to various points, but the prices I quote are for machines at Toronto and Montreal. In December, 1921, a six-foot binder with bundle carrier cost $235; to-day the cost has risen to $239. A six-foot binder with bundle carrier and tongue truck—in the Massey-Harris list this is called a fore-carriage, but I understand it is the same thing—cost $252 in December, 1921, while to-day the price is $254. A seven-foot binder with bundle carrier and tongue truck cost $258 in 1921, and $260 in 1928. An eight-foot binder with bundle carrier and tongue truck cost $266 in December, 1921, while to-day the price is $288.50. Notwithstanding the reductions that were made in the duty and sales tax the price is actually a little higher for binders to-day than it was in 1921. You can go through the entire price list and you will find a slight increase in prices throughout as between December, 1921, and the present time. It is not a very heavy increase, I will grant you, but I charge that the government failed in their promise to reduce the cost of farm implements, and in that respect they simply gold-bricked the farmers.

But they injured the country much more seriously than that. What did they do? They transferred a very large part of the manufacturing industry in agricultural implements from Canada to the United States. The present importations of agricultural implements are enough to shock any patriotic Canadian. Beginning with the fiscal year 1925, when the new arrangements came into force, importations of farming implements were as follows:

1925	$ 6,494,986
1926	13,000,000
1927	18,000,000
1928	29,000,000
1928 (calendar year)	39,000,000

Every dollar's worth of this machinery should be manufactured in the Dominion of Canada, and if that were done what a boon it would be for unemployment in this country. The agricultural implements manufactured in the shops of the United States are to a very large extent made by Canadians who have gone over there to get jobs; a tremendous number of Canadians have left Canada and are now working in the implement factories of the United States. The manufacturers of this country, while they do what they can in their own market, are forced to sell their goods to Australia, New Zealand, France and Russia, but have been able only to send about $14,000,000 worth of implements to those countries when they should be supplying their own market instead of there being importations amounting to $39,000,000 from the United States.

Perhaps the greatest gold-brick that was ever handed by a government to anyone was handed to the agriculturists of this country when the Australian treaty was passed. I understand the treaty was negotiated by the Minister of Finance himself, and it has proved to be probably the greatest direct blow that agriculture has had in this country in many years. I cannot understand why the minister does not denounce or give notice to and put an end to that treaty at once. I have spoken in this house at a provious occasion, somewhat along the line I am taking to-day, in regard to the Australian treaty and two or three days afterwards I had an interview with a prominent paper manufacturer. He told me that I had better shut up because the paper makers were getting a mighty good thing through this treaty. That is the policy of this government; they endeavour to help those classes of the people who do not require help, such as the newsprint men, and do not do anything for the farmers of this country. What has been the result of the operation of that treaty?

When the Minister of Finance brought the treaty before parliament not one word was uttered as to its affecting any countries other than Australia and Canada. If the minister knew otherwise he did not disclose it. I do not think the minister himself knew that he was involving Canada with New Zealand when he made this treaty with Australia; if he had known he would have told us, and if he did not know then I do not think he should undertake to negotiate treaties with insufficient knowledge. That treaty passed the house and not one word was said about New Zealand. The house prorogued and two months afterwards we learned for the first time from the newspapers that New Zealand demanded the right to the same terms as Australia, because New Zealand was entitled to most favoured nation treatment. An order in council was passed by this government, which governs so freely by orders in council, giving to New Zealand the same right to bring her products into this country as was enjoyed by Australia. What has been the result? The Minister of Agriculture has been deluged by requests from dairymen's associations in all parts of the Dominion of Canada asking that this treaty be abrogated. Why? Because Canada is importing from New Zealand about $6,000,000 worth of butter to displace $6,000,000 worth of butter which the Canadian farmers could make in this country and could sell in the markets of this country if they were permitted to do so.

Is that fair treatment to the farming population? If the treaty was a slip on the part of the minister, why does he not say so and why does he not put an end to it? It is a terrible handicap upon the dairy industry of the Dominion to-day. Mine is not a strictly dairying constituency but there are dairymen all around it and I hear complaints on every hand. I hear the statement—and I believe it to be true—that the dairy herds in Canada are actually diminishing; that the complement of dairying is swine breeding and that the herds of swine to-day are diminishing. They are both diminishing on account of the blow which the minister gave to the agricultural industry of Canada by the Australian treaty. Then I find in the press the other side of the question, that during the last two years the dairy herds of New Zealand have increased by more than 50,000 animals and their herds of swine have increased by more than 20,000, thus demonstrating, as conclusively as possible, that this particular treaty entered into by the present government has been a positive injury to the dairymen of this Dominion and a tremendous benefit to the dairymen of the sister dominion of New Zealand.

The mistake in regard to the dairy industry was not the only one that the minister made in the negotiation of that treaty. There was one other outstanding blunder and I am going to refer to it. For the purpose of giving Australia a preference in the Canadian market in respect of a certain article known as raisins, the minister let the Australian people put one over him completely. They told him that if they got free entry they could export large quantities of raisins to Canada if Canada would place a specific duty of three cents a pound upon all importations of raisins into Canada from the rest of the world. The Australians represented that they could supply Canada with all the raisins we required and the treaty went through. We gave Australian raisins free entry into our country and we imposed a duty of three cents a pound on raisins imported from the rest of the world. What has been the result? Prior to last year we did not receive any raisins from Australia; they had not enough to supply themselves; indeed Australia was actually importing raisins for the use of her own people while we in Canada were paying into the treasury three cents on every pound of raisins that we imported from all other countries. We do not produce any raisins in this country; we get nearly all our raisins from the United States. True, we get some from Spain and other countries, but of the total importations of raisins last year amounting to some 44,000,000 pounds, practically all came from the United States save between 3,000,000 or 4,000,000 pounds from Australia. The duty on raisins before the treaty was only three-quarters of a cent per pound from the United States; the Minister of Finance increased the duty to three cents a pound for the benefit of Australia and the taxpayers of Canada have been contributing annually to the public treasury about $700,000, as a sort of penalty in order that Australia may at some far distant date in the future be able to supply sufficient raisins to the Canadian market. The only way in which I can describe such a result is to say that it is an outrage; it is a positive imposition upon every class of the community. Our enormous importation of raisins should be made as free as possible. As we do not produce raisins in Canada their importation does not interfere with production in this country. For many years a duty of three-quarters of a cent per pound was levied upon raisins for revenue purposes. But now we pay a duty of three cents per pound in order to give Australia a preference which she is not able to enjoy. I say that in all these respects the government has been careless and negligent and has not safeguarded the interests of the Canadian people, and particularly the agriculturists.

The government have maintained our customs tariff at a rate which allows millions and millions of dollars' worth of agricultural produce to enter and flood the markets of Canada and to compete with similar goods produced by our own farmers. I have not made an exhaustive or complete list of these agricultural imports, but I wish the Minister of Agriculture would give me his attention while I mention some of them. Last year corn was imported into Canada to the extent of more than $13,000,000, a large part of it being used for distilling purposes and part for feeding cattle and hogs. We imported $6,745,000 worth of raw tobacco and in western Ontario we have every year a magnificent crop of Burley leaf and flue cured tobacco. Our Canadian tobacco growers are forced to compete with an importation of $6,745,000 worth of tobacco from other countries. This is most unfair to Canadian growers.

In this cattle raising country we imported $14,000,000 worth of hides, $10,000,000 of that coming from the United States. Why should we import hides? My county is a cattle county and I have heard cattle raisers discussing this question. They say that they are not getting any price for their hides. The reason will be found in the fact that we are allowing hides to come into this country so freely from the rest of the world. The Minister of Agriculture should keep his eyes and ears open at the present time. In the Argentine republic they have a great deal of cattle disease; many of the cattle have been falling on the plains. These beasts are skinned and their hides are shipped abroad. I have reason to know what I am talking about because I have had litigation in the courts and I have examined certain invoices. These hides are marked "epidemic" hides. It is a simple matter for the government to put a stop to this importation; they can do it by an increase in the tariff or by other means. Surely the farmers of this country should enjoy the market in Canada for the hides of the cattle they slaughter here, but they are not getting it now as we are importing $14,000,000 worth from the rest of the world to displace our own product in the Canadian market.

I have mentioned butter. Last year we imported $5,391,000 worth of meats. Why injure the meat trade in our own country? Why not let our own agriculturists enjoy it to the fullest extent? A few other agricultural importations are as follows:

Commodity	Value of importations
Milk and milk products, excluding butter	$ 643,745
Eggs in the shell	476,605
Eggs, n.o.p.	402,790
Fresh fruits, not including tropical fruits	8,415,000
Dried fruits	6,311,000
Vegetables, fresh, not including dried and canned	6,175,000

These are all strictly farm products and they are coming in enormous quantities into Canada to displace the home grown product of the Canadian agriculturist. The above items, which are by no means exhaustive, total up around $50,000,000.

Mr. DUNNING: Does the hon. member include corn in that?

Mr. GUTHRIE: Yes, but I would like someone to pick out all the agricultural items —I had not time to do it—I desire a complete list of items for another purpose which I will mention in a few minutes. It is a matter of great importance to know just what we are importing.

An industry of very great importance in this country is the fruit industry which is established in Nova Scotia on a wonderful scale, in New Brunswick, on the southern shores of the river St. Lawrence where they produce Fameuse apples in abundance and throughout Ontario in general but especially in the Niagara peninsula between Niagara and Windsor, and also throughout British Columbia. Why allow this immense importation of foreign fruit practically to put out of business many of our fruit growers? We must admit that the United States has in the matter of climate an advantage which we cannot overcome. United States fruit comes on the market two or three weeks before ours is ready. There is a public appetite for new fruit when it first comes to market, and people are willing to pay high prices for this early fruit, but when that initial appetite is satiated our own crop is about ready and the market is glutted with fruit, and in far too many cases our own fruit is not plucked and gathered at all. Last August, between Toronto and Hamilton, I saw field after field of beautiful melons. "Why don't you pick your melons and send them to market?" I asked, and the reply was "They won't pay for the labour. They will not give me anything for them. These people in Toronto," he said, "are fed up with this American stuff, and they do not want our melons at all." It is the same in every line. Look at the fruit importations into Canada. According to the trade returns, we imported last year—I shall give only round figures:

Apples	$1,124,000

And yet in this country we grow the finest apples in the world:

Grapes	$1,189,000
Melons	498,000
Peaches	663,000
Pears	928,000
Plums	544,000
Strawberries	832,000
Other fruits, including cherries	408,000

We imported all this fruit from the United States a few weeks in advance of the ripening of our own Canadian crops, thereby displacing the Canadian fruit grower in his own market, and in far too many cases making his occupation unproductive altogether.

It is the same with vegetables. Up around Windsor we grow a tremendous quantity of onions. Last year there was a good crop. Last year we imported $548,000 worth of onions. Take new potatoes, not the kind we sell as winter potatoes; we imported of new potatoes $799,000 worth. We imported tomatoes to the amount of $1,550,000. These are very largely of the hothouse variety, and our people around Windsor are engaged in that very class of production. We imported other vegetables to the amount of $3,371,000. Total vegetable importations amounted to $8,475,000, and of these, $6,496,000 were from the United States. These latter figures include canned and dried vegetables.

The indifference of the government in regard to the claims of the agriculturists, because these people all are agriculturists, was never better exemplified, I think, than by an answer made by the Prime Minister in this house to a question asked by my hon. friend from South Essex (Mr. Gott) on the orders of the day on Tuesday last. Evidently the hon. member for East Essex (Mr. Odette) had circulated some statement up around Windsor to the effect that the government was going to take action this session and put a duty on fruits and vegetables. That rumor got into the Windsor press, and the vegetable growers, who are a very important part of that community, sent to Ottawa to ascertain whether there was any truth in this rumor. When the question was asked in this House of Commons by my hon. friend from South Essex, my right hon. friend the Prime Minister, as, of course, he has a right to do, gave no information whatever upon this question which at the present moment is of very vital concern to the vegetable growers in the county of Essex. These growers are now preparing for the coming season. Last season most of them lost money. They expected last year that a dumping clause duty would be put into effect, but it was not, and they were expecting some relief this year from the government particularly in view of the statement of the hon. member for East Essex. The question was asked in this house in the most natural and proper way, "Would the government do anything?" But the Prime Minister gave absolutely no information, and he did not even say that he would give any information on the matter at a later date, although these men are waiting from day to day to get their seeds and plants in, and their hothouses going to start the season's operations. If they are not going to get any relief this year, let them know it, and then they will go into some other line, because there is no use continuing in their present line under the conditions that prevailed in that part of the country last season.

I now wish to deal for a few minutes with the industrial workers of Canada, with that class of men who are known as wage-earners, who form a large and important class in this ccuntry and who earn their living by their daily wage. I charge again that throughout its whole course of seven or eight years this government has absolutely neglected to safeguard the interests of the wage-earners, or to protect their rights in any single instance. I know that my hon. friend the Minister of Finance made a few bland announcements the other day, but he forgot to say anything about the high cost of living. He remembers, just as I do, the election of 1921, when the charge was levelled against the government then in power that the cost of living had risen in Canada to such a point that people could no longer endure it, and I have no doubt that that statement changed a good many votes on that occasion. Does my hon. friend know that the cost of living is just a little higher in Canada to-day than it was in 1921? If he does not, he had better read the journal issued by the Labour department of this government, and bearing the official stamp of the Labour department, and he will find that it shows that the cost of living is a trifle higher to-day than it was when this government took office. He will find likewise that the family budget to-day—I assume that these figures are correct, because the Minister of Labour (Mr. Heenan) is responsible for them—the family budget of nineteen necessary articles, including fuel and light, was in January, 1922, $21.52 per family, and to-day it is $21.55 per family; that is, the cost of living is a trifle higher to-day in Canada than in those awful days when it was freely charged by Liberals that the former Conservative government was practically starving the people to death.

The minister also states in his budget speech that employment has been well maintained. Why, sir, there is just as much unemployment in Canada to-day as there was the day this government came into power.

Mr. McINTOSH: What is your employment index?

Mr. GUTHRIE: I am going to give it to the house in a moment. There has been little or no change in the intervening years, and what change there has been, according to the returns, has been against this government, because employment is a little lower to-day than it was when this government came into power. If anyone wants evidence of unemployment in Canada, all he has to do is go to Toronto, Montreal or Winnipeg, or read the bulletin that was issued by the civic authorities in Toronto last month showing that eight thousand men were willing to work and could not find jobs. If you are not satisfied with this statement, look at page 55 of the estimates for the coming year, and you will see there a vote of a quarter of a million dollars proposed by this government to help people who are unemployed. What better evidence do you want?

My hon. friend from North Battleford (Mr. McIntosh) asked for the index figure. I am not going to give the figures for the years 1920 or 1921, the demobilization years, when we were bringing back to Canada and demobilizing and bringing home 420,000 troops, as well as 240,000 troops in Canada, and when the employment figures were not normal. But for the month of December, 1922, according to the table furnished by the Department of Labour, the percentage of unemployment was 6·4. Taking the same month, December, last year, unemployment had increased in the interval to 6·6. So unemployment has not vanished. I only refer to unemployment at all to show that this wonderful prosperity that we hear about has not been well distributed among the people of this country. The working class, the wage earners of Canada, have not had their chance to share in it.

Let me mention one further matter. This unemployment situation in Canada could be cured by the government almost by a stroke of the pen. My good friend the Minister of Finance could cure it this session. He could cause employment in this country to be abundant and at good wages. He could stop the exodus of our people to the United States. This exodus has not stopped yet, for every United States consular agent in Canada still has a waiting list of Canadians anxious to go to that country. My hon. friend the Minister of Finance could settle the difficulties of his colleague the Minister of Immigration (Mr. Forke); he could settle the immigration problem in this country by creating employment, and he could do that by the application of a proper fiscal policy for this Dominion. We imported last year $350,000,000 of goods—and this is only an abbreviated list—and these were goods that we make in this country. The action of the Minister of Finance and the government has not been to assist labour. Take the removal of the duty on worsted yarns last year. I do not know whose advice the Minister of Finance was taking or what prompted him to remove this duty, although I have always believed that it was the Bradford board of trade in England, which certainly was in communication with the minister and his tariff board; but last year, the minister, by a stroke of the pen, wiped out the worsted yarn business in this country. The great big worsted spinning mill at Hespeler, where hundreds of men were employed, is now closed. The industry in Guelph is also stopped; in Guelph, worsted spinning only formed part of a larger woollen industry but the spinning of worsted yarns has practically ceased. All the worsted yarns used in Canada are now brought from Bradford, Yorkshire. The men in Canada are out of work, their employment has been transferred from Canada to Great Britain, and the price of worsted yarn and worsted clothing is just the same to-day as it was last year. That I give only as a sample. Look at the imports of woollens. This government tinkered with the woollen tariff when they first came into power. What has been the result? Our woollen imports increased to thirty-three million dollars last year. Practically all of these goods we could have produced here. Look at the employment that would be given our people. There is no question about it, Mr. Speaker, that with half a dozen strokes of the pen the Minister of Finance could settle this question of unemployment, could make the factories of this country boom, could keep young Canadians in Canada, and could create an active cash market for all the products of the Canadian farm.

But we have been pursuing a policy of practical ruin not only in this but in many other respects. I do not charge this government particularly in regard to the export of raw material, because I think the same system has prevailed for many years; but I do say that this question of the export of our raw materials to the United States has been brought to the attention of this government in a very definite shape upon many occasions during recent years, but they simply allow that exportation of raw materials to go on. They permit those valuable natural resources, those raw materials of the Dominion, to go into the United States at the rate of millions of dollars' worth every year. The factories of the United States are kept busy, the citizens of the United States get wages, and the people of the United States get the tremendous profit between the price of the raw material and the manufactured article which we buy back again from the United States. It is a false policy, it is a suicidal policy. Rapidly it is denuding our forests and exhausting our mines, and the minister should give serious consideration to the question.

My next reference brings up a matter which I know must be in the minds of most of our people. On Monday last when the President of the United States delivered his inaugural speech at Washington he announced to his countrymen and to the world that he had summoned a special meeting of congress particularly to consider the fiscal policy of the United States in regard to agricultural productions. In a good many quarters of course that announcement was not entirely unexpected. The policy of the Republican party in the United States during the late fall elections was a policy of greater protection for the agriculturists. I realize full well, Mr. Speaker, that while we have the right to discuss the fiscal policy of any other country in the world, it is not really a matter of our own business, and we must recognize the right of the United States to adopt such a fiscal policy as it deems fit without interference from us or from any other nation. For at least three-quarters of a century the fiscal policy of the United States has been one of protection, or, as I would say, of very high protection in many respects. Consistently they have maintained that principle, and as a result they find themselves to-day not only the richest, but the greatest commercial nation in the world, and the nation having the largest population in the world. Tremendous success has attended their efforts and their policy. For myself, I see no real cause for overanxiety in Canada in regard to any action which may be taken by congress upon the fiscal policy of the United States. I believe that we are in so strong and favoured a position in this Dominion that nothing more than temporary embarrassment or temporary inconvenience could result, no matter what attitude the United States government and congress may assume. But I base that statement wholly upon this condition, that we enjoy in this Dominion a government with sufficient resolution and sufficient courage to meet any situation which may arise. If we have not such a government, then I do see some real ground for anxiety as to what may face us in the immediate or more remote future.

When the Minister of Finance made his budget speech he gave the house a clear statement of the total trade of Canada based on exports and imports. Let me repeat it. I am taking the calendar year ending on December 31 last. There is a good deal of difficulty sometimes in adjusting the figures between the calendar and the fiscal year. These figures are for the calendar year ending December 31 last:

Total Trade, Domestic and Foreign
Exports..	$1,374,130,000
Imports..	1,222,318,000
Total..	$2,596,448,000

And the minister announced, amid great applause and approval by his supporters, that he had a favourable balance of trade of $154,000,000. That, I grant, is a substantial favourable balance. As I say, this statement was well received by his followers; they applauded to a very marked degree; they approved of the announcement by a marked demonstration.

Now let us return to our trade figures with the United States. It may be a matter of surprise to some that more than one-half of our total foreign trade is done with the United States. Last year our trade figures with the United States give us a total in exports and imports of $1,318,282,000. We imported $825,741,000, and we exported $492,541,000. In other words, our imports were $333,000,000 more than our exports; therefore our trade with the United States resulted in an unfavourable balance of that amount. Now, if a favourable balance of trade is a good thing for a nation—and the minister's announcement was heartily applauded on the other side of the house—what do these hon. gentlemen say of our trade with the United States when there results such an enormous unfavourable balance? Will hon. gentlemen opposite condemn that unfavourable balance of trade? They applauded the favourable balance of trade with the world as an excellent thing. Will they condemn our unfavourable balance of trade with the United States as an injurious thing?

[Mr. Guthrie.]

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that there is something seriously wrong in regard to the trade of this country with the United States. I believe I know what is wrong. I believe that we are buying too much from the United States year in and year out and are selling too little. Every year our purchases are increasing, and we are not selling enough to our neighbours, because they will only buy from us raw materials and a limited amount of farm products. At the end of the fiscal year our operations resulted, as I have shown, in an adverse balance of trade of $333,000,000. That balance has to be settled. We have to pay it either in gold or in goods. It cannot go on forever; it must be paid, and the money or the goods to pay it will have to come from this country.

Now it is worth while considering in a little more detail some of the trade figures as between Canada and the United States. What do we sell them? How shall we be affected by a change in the fiscal policy of the United States in regard to agricultural products? In our trade figures, as furnished by the Department of Trade and Commerce, it is just a little difficult at all times to find what are really farm products and what are not; our trade returns include in the figures a good many articles which are not strictly farm products. Let me give a rough analysis of some of these figures. I find that in agricultural and vegetable products we sell to the United States, according to our trade returns, $56,000,000 in round figures. That I grant is a large amount. But I find that included in that figure are ales, wines, beers, whiskies and rubber, amounting to $24,500,000—commodities that are not farm products in our view of the matter. These should be deducted from the $56,000,000, leaving a total of exports to that country, in agricultural and vegetable products, of some $31,550,000. When you come to the next classification, you find some further trouble—animals and animal products. This heading covers much more than farm products. Our trade returns show that we sent to the United States last year, in animals and animal products, $92,000,000 worth of exports. But when you come to analyse the items you find included in the total, fish, $13,000,000; furs, $14,000,000; leather, $8,000,000; oils and greases, $1,399,000, or a total of some $39,000,000 of goods which we do not consider strictly farm products. This amount should be deducted from the $92,000,000, and would leave a balance, under animals and animal products, of $42,385,000, or a total of agricultural products, properly so described, shipped to the United States, of $73,935,000.

I think we can fairly cut that figure down by another $10,000,000. We send the United States about $10,000,000 worth of raw hides and we buy from them $10,000,000 of raw hides. That item forms merely a cross entry. If our neighbors see fit to stop our hides from going to the United States we will use our own hides in our own country instead of importing them, and that will settle that point. So that we find actually that we sell them, in agricultural or farm products, as we understand the term, only $63,000,000 a year. We import from the world in farm products something between $50,000,000 and $60,000,000 a year.

Mr. MALCOLM: Will my hon. friend specify the figures as he did in the other case?

Mr. GUTHRIE: I put them on Hansard a minute ago.

Mr. MALCOLM: But specified imports.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I gave the agricultural imports, starting with corn. I furnished a list of only some of them. My list was not exhaustive, and it runs to over $50,000,000, probably $60,000,000, of farm products which we are bringing into Canada from other countries to compete with the products of our own farmers. That is what we are bringing in, while we are sending out to the United States if you exclude hides, only about $63,000,000 or less than ten per cent of our agricultural exports.

Would it not be a simple matter under these circumstances, to obviate any difficulty that might arise in connection with the tariff of the United States on farm products, if we produced in this country and sold to our own people those goods which we now sell to the United States, stopping the importation into Canada of those products which we are now bringing from other countries to compete with the products of our own farmers. To accomplish that, all we need is a government with some courage; all we need is a government with some resolution; all we need is a government that has at heart the real interests of the people, of the farmers of Canada. With such a government no permanent difficulty can ever arise.

Now I can see that any disarrangement of our present trade with the United States might for the time being cause considerable inconvenience, and some loss. I realize quite well that in many respects the United States market is the most convenient, the most expedient market which we have; in many respects it is the very best market in which to sell many of our farm products. But if the tariff of that country is raised so high that we cannot enjoy that market, then we shall have to shape ourselves accordingly by enabling our own farmers to enjoy the Canadian market to the fullest extent and at the same time seek other markets throughout the world. In order to do this, however, we shall need to have a fair application of the principle of protection in our customs tariff. And unless we adopt that principle, if the United States government sees fit to raise its tariff against our farm products, great difficulty will probably ensue in connection with the marketing of $63,000,000 of our farm products in the future.

I can conceive a situation which would seriously affect the shipment of our cattle to the United States. Last year we shipped to the United States $17,745,000 under this head. An adverse tariff might cause inconvenience and some loss for the time being in this regard. Our grain shipments were about $10,000,000—nothing like what I imagined they would be. In vegetables our whole shipment consists practically of about $5,000,000 in potatoes and, in turnips, about $700,000 or $800,000. We do send a large number of seeds to the United States; last year we sold them about $6,000,000 worth. Surely we can find another market for these seeds. In raw furs we sent them $14,000,000; hides, $11,000,000—and we bought back $10,000,000; meats, $11,288,000. This is a big item and one in respect to which there might be some temporary embarrassment and inconvenience. In milk and milk products the figure is $10,000,000, or nearly $11,000,000, and in this connection too the situation might be serious for the time being; while in hay the figure is about $1,000,000 or $1,200,000, and in bran and shorts about $2,000,000 to $2,500,000. These, so far as I can see, are the only articles with respect to which we could possibly be inconvenienced or for a time be seriously affected. So far as I can see, any difficulty that may possibly arise in the future can be completely overcome by action on the part of this government and of this parliament. We have nothing to fear in Canada in this respect, though I grant that we are going to reach at last a situation—if things develop as I anticipate they will—in which we must introduce into the tariff of this country, to protect our own people, that element of protection which the Canadian tariff does not now afford.

I can imagine that it will not be the easiest thing for my right hon. friend the Prime Minister, surrounded as he is by such out and out free traders as the Minister of Agriculture, the Minister of Railways, the Minister of the Interior, who would ring the death knell of protection in the House of Commons, and the Minister of Immigration. I can understand that my right hon. friend will have difficulty. But I fancy that these four ministers will be found amenable to reason. I believe that in a few months' time we shall find that they have become converts to the doctrines which have been advocated from this side of the house for a long time and which they have denounced. And I can tell you that the completeness and the suddenness of their conversion will rival that famous conversion that took place many centuries ago on the road to Damascus. But what about that peculiar type of free traders—Liberal free traders—whom we find scattered about in all the provinces of Canada? What will these Grit free traders do—these loud-voiced individuals who give us no peace, these worshippers at the shrine of Adam Smith, these men who still dwell in the political atmosphere of two centuries ago? I think I can make a prediction in that regard. I believe the word of command will go to them to "right about face", and they will obey that command with alacrity. Oh, the scales will fall from the eyes of these hard-shelled, thick-skinned free traders who are to be found scattered throughout this Dominion of Canada. I predict that by next year it will be found that they have shed their free trade skins and taken on new ones, and they will remind one of nothing so much as the snakes coming out of the stone piles in the spring. A radical change in our fiscal policy will soon be necessary; the government must face this situation. They can do it; we know what we can do in this country; we have everything at our disposal. Do not let us have stage fright and do not let us feel any over-anxiety in regard to the matter. The matter rests entirely in our own hands. All can be put right, and if this government does not put it right another government will take its place in the very near future.

Well, Mr. Speaker, I have transgressed for a long time on the patience of the house. For the reasons I have given, because this government has been absolutely neglectful of the interests of at least seventy-five per cent of the people of this country, neglectful of the interests of the agriculturists and of those engaged in industrial employment; because the government has failed in every way to safeguard and protect them, I beg to move the following amendment, seconded by the hon. member for Argenteuil (Sir George Perley):

[Mr. Guthrie.]

That all the words after the word "that" be stricken out and the following substituted therefor:

This house regrets that the financial proposals of the government make no provision for reasonably safeguarding and protecting the interests of those "engaged in agricultural pursuits or in industrial" employment in Canada.

Mr. WILLIAM IRVINE (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, while listening to the very comprehensive and forceful criticism presented by the acting leader of the opposition (Mr. Guthrie) I must say that for a considerable time I was inspired with some fear; I was afraid he would not leave one single charge for me to make against the government. Seeing that he covered the ground so thoroughly I hoped he might have continued until six o'clock in order to give me an opportunity of finding something with which he had not dealt. Fortunately, however, there were one or two points which he failed to cover.

I think I might characterize the budget now before the house as a comfortable budget. It suggests to the mind a fairly well-fed ruminating animal which, having eaten all the grass it wanted, lies down to chew its cud on the sunny side of a knoll quite unconscious of the fact that the frost of the preceding night had practically destroyed the crop and might prejudice its existence when winter comes. All finance ministers in their budget presentation strive to strike a political key-note throughout the country. Sometimes, of course, that key-note is drowned out by the carillon of debts and deficits, and sometimes the announced surpluses and balances jangle strangely out of tune. From a comparative study of budgets I have noticed that when a minister has to deal with deficits he never fails to point out very clearly that such defiicits are not at all due to any mismanagement on his part, to any lack of business acumen or any failure of government policy, but when he has the pleasure of announcing a surplus he never fails to show that such surplus was accounted for by the most excellent policy of his administration. That, of course, is what we might call the human and political element of the budget.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hurrah.

Mr. IRVINE: I hope time will be taken off for the interruptions now taking place. Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, you might send someone to the lobby to tell those gentlemen who are cheering that as yet I have not finished speaking.

When the loud cheering began, Mr. Speaker, I was pointing out that when a minister announces a surplus in his budget he is very anxious to claim that it is due to a certain policy of his administration, but we have discovered that a true explanation of prosperity in our national life must be sought in economic factors with which governments have very little to do. As a financial statement the budget now before parliament does not require a very great deal of criticism or opposition, indeed, I would congratulate the Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb) and his staff upon being able to add correctly. I find that all the millions are added properly and all the subtractions correctly carried out; we find that we have an estimated expenditure of $385,160,000, that we have a total estimated revenue of $454,942,000, and when we subtract the smaller figure we have a surplus of $69,782,000.

I might also congratulate the minister upon the splendid way in which he presented his budget to the house. I should like to impress upon him that I have a very high opinion indeed of his ministerial ability, and in addition to those lower qualities which are required of financiers and accountants generally the minister possesses others of more value. For instance, he is genuinely human, and he possesses a vein of humour so rich and deep that it takes a real Scot to sound it. Listen to this priceless gem which fell from his lips just after they had let fall the mighty millions resulting from his own tariff policy. He said:

> The policy of this administration is not a high tariff policy; it is a low tariff policy. Its policy is to encourage production at home and the marketing of our excess of production abroad.

It is not every minister who has the genius to inject humour into the millions of surpluses, debts and so on. Again, the minister said:

> In the first ten months of the fiscal year the Department of National Revenue reports total exports amounted to $1,187,400,000, which, when the total imports of $1,033,300,000 are subtracted, leaves a favourable trade balance of $154,100,000 for the ten months' period.

If statements like these emanated from an uninformed source, and were regarded by those who uttered them as being indicative of the economic position of the people of Canada, we would regard them with the contempt they truly merited; but, coming as they do from a well informed source, they can be appreciated only when seen in the humorous setting in which they appear. Everyone knows that the budget under the party system of government, with which we are cursed at the present time, means more than a mere addition and subtraction of millions of dollars. It contains the entire plot of a play. The stage is set, and after due advertising the minister appears in the dual capacity of hero and villian, depending on which side of the house hon. gentlemen contemplating him happen to be sitting. The population both in and out of parliament are waiting breathlessly; the moment is melodramatic it is true, but eventually the minister enters and announces a surplus. Sometimes the artistry of this particular show is drowned in the swelling flood of millions, and also encompassed with political humbug. The time has come, Mr. Speaker, to lodge an emphatic objection to the technique of party government, of which this and other budgets are expressions. What have hon. members of the house had to do with the budget now before them? The deliberative functions of parliament have been practically usurped by the party system. In the hodge-podge of figures, fiscal policy, debts, international trade and surpluses with which the mind is suddenly deluged, members have no part to play whatever. If we had, I venture to say that there are many things not in this budget which would be in it, and there are some things in it which would not be in it. But ours not to reason why, ours but to vote the pie for the noble six hundred. Let me illustrate the position of the private members of this house. I am sure the Minister of Finance, genial as he is, will forgive me for setting him in a particular scene which will illustrate my point. I am going to make him a chef in a first-class cafe, and I am going to give him the rest of the cabinet as his waiters. The members of parliament, the representatives of the people, of course, will be the patrons of this cafe.

An hon. MEMBER: Who gets the tips?

Mr. IRVINE: We all come in for our meal at the usual hour, and the Prime Minister, all dressed up in his proper habiliments for the occasion, presents us with the menu. We look it over and find that there are many things on the menu we do not like. There are some things we might like but we could not possibly accommodate all that is on the menu. However, we are told by the chef and the waiter that no selection is to be permitted; that we have to swallow it all from the consomme of tariff reduction to the surplus pie and the national debt pudding with the income tax sauce. We cannot make any selection from the menu; the dictum of the institution is that we must take it all or leave it. We have some dieticians who think that perhaps a better bill of fare could be arranged. We have others who are willing to close their eyes and open their mouths and take whatever comes, but those of us who desire the right to deliberate upon matters which come before this house regard the budget and the manner of its preparation as being the very opposite of true representative government, and absolutely void of the democratic principle which is supposed to inhere in this parliament. We neither deliberate nor create any detail of this budget. We are asked to give it a blanket endorsation or a blanket condemnation. Let me suppose for a moment, Mr. Speaker, that what I am saying is as wise as I think it is.

An hon. MEMBER: Impossible.

Mr. IRVINE: I knew the hon. member would be able to observe the obvious. Supposing for the sake of argument that it is as wise as I think it is. I am allowed to say it, but that is all. This parliament has perfect freedom in so far as speech is concerned, but when it comes to actually doing something we have the limits of the robot. I think the time has come when every member of parliament, who ought to be in the position of truly representing his constituents, should expose this sophistry of representative government, expose the sophistry of the supremacy of parliament, and indicate to the people the truth of the matter—the supremacy of cabinets in our system of government. Our cabinets have the power to give away our water sites. They tell us we can ratify their actions, or if we do not we defeat the government. They give away other things equally as valuable as the water-powers. They sign treaties that may have a far-reaching effect upon the peace of the world, and then come and ask us to ratify them. They bring down the budget, which has important economic and political implications, and we are not permitted to change one jot or tittle within the entire compass of that budget. All we can do is to take or leave it; take all or none. The Minister of Finance virtually comes to this parliament and says, "There is the budget, fix it if you dare." If we did fix it, according to the powers which we are supposed to have but cannot exercise, then he would dissolve parliament and we would have to assume the responsibility of having plunged the country into an election. This massive club of dissolution is always held over the heads of parliamentarians. I wonder if the members of the house could not swing the club of dissolution the other way once in a while. I wonder if the ministers are so immune to election fears that they would not pay any attention to that. I would like to psycho-analyse the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell) and find out if he would not yield a point or two were that club swung over his head, and I am sure there are others who might be led to consider following the same course. If hon. members asserted themselves we could force parliament from beneath the heel of cabinet domination. This is a phase of parliament which is most disgusting to the Canadian people, which is most discouraging to hon. members who have any intelligence; it deprives them of that nominal responsibility which they are supposed to have towards those whom they represent.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. IRVINE: Mr. Speaker looking at the budget from another angle, I should like to point out that it implies more than a mere financial statement. Under our system of government the budget reflects national policy and sometimes unfortunately it reveals the extent of statesmanship possessed by those on the treasury benches. It is a looking glass which reflects not only the ruddy face of the genial Minister of Finance but also the background of policy. I notice that standing out very prominently in the background of policy is the national debt. It stands out like a sore thumb that has received first aid from the minister. Of course there is a political setting given to this. The party which was in power prior to the present administration is inferentially shown as the debt creating party and the government of to-day is of course held up as the debt paying party. But when we come to examine into the details of the budget we discover who has been doing the paying and we have to admit that the masses of the people, especially the agricultural class, have been charged a great deal more in taxation than any other class for the surplus out of which a certain amount of the debt was paid last year. We find also that the people who ought to be able to pay more than anybody else have been taxed less.

But let me turn to the larger question of debt payment. Let me presume to suggest to the minister that payment of debt is an operation which requires a great deal of skill and caution in its performance. No doubt he is aware that there are times when debts should not be paid even if the government were in a position to pay them. There are times when to pay debts would very materially interfere with the business and industrial success of the country. If, for instance, the minister, because he happens to have a few millions in the treasury, rushes off to pay debts at a time when we are passing through industrial depression, it is altogether unlikely that such amounts of money as he paid would find opportunity for reinvestment and the result would be that, through removing from circulation the amount of the debt he paid he would force us into further depression. So there is a real problem there which I suggest for his consideration.

But I want the minister's attention on one point and I should like to emphasize it. It is that debts cannot be paid in the popular sense of the word "paid". I do not mean they cannot be paid because the amounts are so great that they are beyond our assets. That is not exactly true, although they are certainly great enough. I mean to say that they cannot be paid because our financial system is a debt creating system. Our financial system lives on debt, lives by debt, lives for debt and without debt it cannot live. If our debts could be paid in the sense in which most people accept the idea of payment, our system would collapse. It is the very nature of the financial system of which the minister is at the head to pyramid debts, debts built on debts built on debts, until the entire system is threatening to topple over, and it is more than the average individual can do to interfere in any way with that pyramiding. It requires a fundamental alteration of policy and one which the minister alone is in position to introduce.

The debt of Canada as of all other countries to-day is increasing by the principle of geometrical progression and it cannot be affected as long as the present system is in vogue. What does the minister mean when he tells us that he has paid so many millions of debt? He simply means that he has transferred a public to a private debt. Let me illustrate that in this way. Supposing he finds himself next year with a surplus of $100,000,000 which he has collected through over-taxation of the poor people of Canada; he proceeds to the Bank of Montreal, takes up $100,000,000 worth of bonds and makes a bonfire of them. What happens after that? That amount of $100,000,000 will immediately become somebody else's debt. The banks cannot afford to pay, for instance, 3½ per cent on $100,000,000 if they don't lend it out. As soon as the bank does lend that $100,000,000 it becomes somebody else's debt. Individuals whose bonds are taken up may make their own investment so that in any case, the amount paid on national debt must become private debts except it were withdrawn from circulation. So to pay debt is merely a transference of a national debt to a private debt, but with this difference, that on the national debt we are paying presumably about 5 per cent whereas on the private debt we are paying probably 8 per cent and that charge comes back to the consuming public in terms of prices, whereas the minister charges us the interest in terms of taxation. Therefore I hope the minister will be more careful when he is, in a human way of course, making political capital out of the fact that he has succeeded in reducing our debt in the last few years by a few million dollars.

This brings me to the guileless allusion of the minister to the Canadian dollar. He clothes that abstract instrument with personality, perches it on the boundary line with a flag in its hand, and causes it to say: "I, the Canadian dollar, can now look the American dollar square in the eye without blushing," and then he expects us to applaud for the great contribution which he has made in bringing about what he regards as that very satisfactory state of affairs. Rejoice with me, he says, because our dollar can now, without blushing, look the American dollar in the face. Mr. Speaker, that simply means nothing. Let me say plainly to the Minister of Finance that his inability or his disinclination to control the dollar value after the war was the means of doubling our national debt. Germany, we are told, and we believe, lost the war, and Canada won the war, but I discover that the per capita debt of Germany in 1926, was $8.76, while the per capita debt of Canada, which won the war, was, in 1927, $246.64. Canada's high per capita debt came about through the bankers' manipulation of credit, which the minister did not hinder, as he might have done. Everybody knows now that that manipulation was a bad thing. Even Lord Beaverbrook has been very outspoken on this point very recently. He says:

> The Bank of England's policy in adopting the gold standard was ill-considered and ill-advised.

He goes on to say that the bankers dictated the industrial policy of the country. He continues:

> We have had a bankers' policy all along, directed along the lines of favouring the general financial situation without regard to the industrial situation.

This has resulted in a per capita debt in Great Britain, which won the war, of $817.60, while Germany, which lost the war, has a per capita debt of $8.76.

Someone may suggest, do I advocate doing what Germany did? I would say in reply that what Germany did was a great deal more advisable than what Canada did, although it is not the course that I myself would recommend. The responsibility, I would say, was upon the Minister of Finance to have stabilized the value of the Canadian dollar on a war basis so that the dollar with which he now pays the debt would have had precisely the same value as the dollar with which the debt was contracted. But instead of doing that, the minister permitted the dollar to drop from its inflation value to its present deflation value, which practically doubled the Canadian war debt, plus five per cent; so that, due to the inactivity of the minister during the first few years that he was in office, he has placed a greater debt on the shoulders of the Canadian people than he will ever live to see removed, no matter how high he taxes the people. If the minister will ponder that problem, he will find that as the financial controller of Canada he has burdened the Canadian people with debt, and if he is satisfied that I am right in that, I hope that next year he will be apologetic and not try to make political capital out of what may be the fact, that he has reduced the debt yearly by an average of $37,000,000.

In his budget speech the minister deals in a very careless way with foreign trade and trade balances. He announced a favourable trade balance—mark the word "favourable"—of $154,000,000. This gives the impression that that $154,000,000 of a trade balance is in some strange way favourable to Canada, and that idea will no doubt be the basis of the Liberal party's propaganda in the press for the next few months. If there is a balance, it has been erroneously named a favourable balance. Trade, of course, is a fair exchange of goods, and if what the minister reports is true, then Canada has given away $154,000,000 for which she has received nothing. Otherwise, international trade cannot be a fair and equitable exchange of goods. On what basis does the minister do trade with foreign countries if it is not on an equitable basis? By what strange manipulation is he able to build up a favourable balance of trade anywhere in the world? The thing is utterly preposterous. It is a schoolboy's idea of international trade. Surely, if we have $154,000,000 worth of foreign trade more than we can handle, the minister does not need to look to other countries for greater markets than we now possess.

Let us look at it another way. I challenge the minister and his entire staff to come within two hundred million dollars of guessing the correct balance of trade between Canada and other countries of the world, because the technique of accountancy in this particular department of political economy has not yet been thoroughly established, and there cannot be anything which is much more than a guess at the balance; there must be a wide margin permitted for error. But we do know that when all invisibles are accounted for, such as tourist trade, interest on loans, freight payments, as well as capital transactions, then international trade must balance, or else the minister has been giving away our goods and been getting nothing for them in return. Which is the situation? Will the minister tell us which of the two it is? Has he been negotiating with other countries to take our goods for nothing, or has he wrongly reported a trade balance of $154,000,000? This seems to amuse the Minister of Railways (Mr. Dunning) very much. I do not know whether he is amused at the political economy of his colleague the Minister of Finance, or whether he is amused at the ease with which the minister's argument can be exploded.

Mr. DUNNING: I am amused at your political economy.

Mr. IRVINE: I am delighted that the minister has grasped it to the extent of being amused by it. Perhaps further consideration may change his amusement to something of understanding. Let me give an example to the hon. gentleman. In 1920, it was reported that we had an unfavourable balance of $268,000,000; in 1921, an unfavourable balance of $137,000,000, and in 1922, an unfavourable balance of $68,000,000. These adverse balances were made up of funds advanced to Great Britain during the war, and which were being repaid. In 1920, we received on that account $104,000,000; in 1921, $128,000,000, and in 1922, $84,000,000 thus the unfavourable balance vanished.

Our favourable balance means that Canada has increased her capital investments abroad. I want to draw the attention of the house to this fact, that during the war there was one and one-quarter billions of new money circulated in Canada, and corralled by those who had privileges, and that really marks the extent of our national debt. Now those people are looking for outlets for the reinvestment of their money, and if they do not find what they want in Canada—they are not very patriotic—they go where they can find suitable opportunities for investment.

Let me also point out to the minister that the balance of trade is to a considerable extent made up of investments by insurance companies in foreign securities abroad. The minister should take a hand in controlling that situation, and endeavour to keep that money in Canada, to finance the government of this country and look after the purchasing power of our own people. Let me ask the minister to tell us, the next time he brings down a budget, how much of the balance of trade goes to paying interest on borrowings abroad, borrowings which ought to have been made in Canada through the use of the Finance Act and the treasury board.

Passing from that, I think this budget will be regarded in western Canada as the "hame-strap budget". The Minister of Finance says that he has not reduced the tariff because the tariff board has not had time to make sufficient investigation in the three years it has been sitting. But I would point out to the members of the house that the tariff board has managed in that time to discover one kind of hame-strap on which the tariff ought to be reduced. However, it is too late now for that, because most of the farmers are using tractors and tractors do not require hame-straps. Furthermore, the promised tariff reductions have not been satisfactorily met. True, there have been small reductions in the sales tax, but the greatest tax of all, the tariff tax which falls on the common people generally, has not been touched, and to that extent we must hold the government responsible for their failure to redeem their promises.

As to how their fiscal policy compares with the announced policy upon which the Liberal party came into power, let me quote one section from the resolution passed by the Canadian Council of Agriculture and now included in the inspired writings of the Liberal party:

> And whereas the protective tariff is the most wasteful and costly method ever designed for raising national revenue because for every dollar obtained thereby for the public treasury at least three dollars pass into the pockets of the protected interests, thereby building up a privileged class at the expense of the masses, thus making the rich richer and the poor poorer.

Let us follow the reasoning of that resolution. In the light of that statement what does the budget tell us? We have an estimated revenue this year from the tariff of $185,000,000. For every dollar that went into the public treasury three went into the pockets of the protected interests. Multiply that by three and you have $555,000,000 which went into the pockets of the protected interests as a result of the policy of this so-called low-tariff government which we have in power to-day. Add those two amounts together and you have a total of $740,000,000 collected from the common people of Canada last year under this tariff-for-revenue policy. I saw something in the speech from the throne about the unprecedented prosperity of the Dominion. At the time I thought it was not true, but surely a country of ten millions of people that can pay that huge total in one tax must be prosperous. We now see who prospered on the national prosperity. Remember that $55,000,000 of the $740,000,000 went into the pockets of the protected interests. This government tells us they are giving us a tariff for revenue, but at the same time they say that it is the most wasteful and costly method ever designed for raising national revenue.

A studiously inclined member of this house wrote me the other day asking me a question. It seemed that a certain colossus had appeared who could answer all tariff questions. This is the question:

> What argument of the high tariff advocates do you consider the most difficult to answer, or the one which exerts the most influence on the voters?

Now, this is the strongest argument that I could furnish him. Canada is still a protectionist country. The Liberals are in power to-day; they have been in power for twenty-one years—off and on of course. The hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Kennedy) told us last session that in an examination of the tariff over a period of forty years he discovered that the Liberals had reduced it four-fifths of one per cent more than had the Conservatives. What then is the argument for which this hon. gentleman seeks an answer? The argument to be deduced from these facts is this. Either the tariff policy introduced by Sir John A. Macdonald has been found by the Liberals to be sound political economy and good statesmanship, or else that party has been false to its own cause and to the people's trust. The Liberal party may pillory itself on either horn of the dilemma which it cares to select.

We on this side of the house do not need anybody to explain to us the virtues of the tariff. What we want is an intelligent explanation of why a party that for twenty-one years has received the votes of the people to reduce the tariff has not yet found time to begin its work. That is the kind of explanation we want. Against that argument the propaganda about tariff reductions which our friends sometimes advance are absolutely useless. I picture the Prime Minister standing up in a canoe in the straits of Gibraltar and levelling a pea-shooter at that impregnable rock. That to my mind is about what would happen when the Liberals start to answer the argument I have just submitted to them in respect of their failure to implement their platform policies. A free-trade party? Of course. A revision-of-the-tariff-downward party? Certainly. A low-tariff party? Certainly. A tariff-for-revenue party? Yes. But always "tariff" appears in the title, and the tariff is the only part implemented.

Now, there is still a chance. I do not want to close the door on hon. gentlemen opposite. I want them to make good that policy or quit. The Minister of Finance indicated that tariff arrangements were matters of international policy. That is very different from what the party stalwarts say on the hustings, but I believe it is true. The tariff policy of the United States is causing a good deal of discussion at the present time. Some of our public men are talking about reprisals, and others are talking about—nothing. I do not know whether the hon. gentlemen sitting to my right are going to advocate raising the tariff brick for brick to keep pace with any increase of the United States tariff. Instinctively and rationally I feel myself drawn away from any policy of reprisals with respect to international relations. So I will suggest to the hon. gentlemen opposite that their last and only chance to retain the confidence of the people is to implement their low-tariff policy or get out. I would ask them now to call a conference of all the governments of the British commonwealth of nations with a view to arranging a free trade policy within the commonwealth as a means of offsetting any increase of tariff by the United States. In the first place, such a course would bind these loosely connected nations into an economic as well as a sentimental unit; in the second place, it would clearly intimate to the United States that if they want to trade with Canada they cannot do it by the tariff route; and in the third place it would reduce the cost of commodities to the Canadian people and enable them to offset the difficulties with which they would be confronted by the cutting off of the United States market to our live stock and our trade generally.

That is the suggestion which I wish to make to the hon. gentlemen opposite.

Mr. GEORGES L. DIONNE (Matane) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, at the outset of my remarks, I wish to sincerely congratulate the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb) for the well defined, concise and pertinent speech he delivered last Friday. I must also congratulate the hon. acting leader of the opposition (Mr. Guthrie) for the splendid speech he made this afternoon. His remarks were to the point and well adapted to the circumstances.

The question of the exodus of our people to the United States was broached, the problem of unemployment, the Australian treaty, the tariff and many other questions were discussed. The exodus of people to other countries has existed ever since the world was created. The causes of this emigration are numerous; I shall, however, enumerate but a few. We find, first: a love of adventure, then a greed of gain, a craving for luxury, a longing for comforts and an inborn desire of improving one's lot or situation. So far as this love of adventure, history records many such instances: those of Columbus, then Cartier and later on Champlain.

Our opponents were at the helm of the affairs of this country from 1882 to 1896; they appear very favourably disposed towards the working and farming classes when they are in the opposition, they always seem to have high practical advice and means to suggest for the betterment of the workman's lot, the protection of the farming class, the development of trade and industry, but when in power they soon forget their teachings; instead of helping those poor people for whom they have so much sympathy when in opposition, they favour the autocrats and magnates of finance, the large manufacturers and the captains of industries. The exodus existed from 1882 to 1896. What did our opponents do to blot out this evil? They had every possible means at their disposal, they were in a position to entirely stamp it out, yet, I am sorry to say, they absolutely did nothing.

Now, sir, with reference to unemployment, I do not think that the tariff has any bearing on this problem, because if we glance back at early history, we note that in the time of the Pharaohs there existed years of plenty and years of scarcity. Fortunately in those days there lived the intendant Joseph who wisely provided for the lean years.

Mention was also made of the United States. The Americans are business people, industrious and they are pointed out to us as examples. But, sir, let me say that in the United States like in all countries of Europe and of the world, unemployment exists; it has always been and it will ever be so. The tariff is like the pendulum of a clock. It either moves too fast or too slow, you have the regulator adjusted and still it may be too fast or too slow. It is an easy matter to prescribe remedies but the difficulty lies in the application of the means suggested and the advice given.

From 1896 to 1911, Laurier, of cherished memory, presided over the destinies of this country. He had charge of the administration, and I must say that when he assumed power in 1896, our opponents, who constantly speak of surpluses, had left but deficits. During fifteen years, thanks to a Liberal administration, thanks to an administration of business men, these deficits were wiped out. In 1911, the people of this country, I shall not say in a moment of bewilderment, but under the influence of fear, ceased to trust the Liberals and once more confided the management of affairs to the Conservatives. It was then that we witnessed deficits again cropping up. We note that during the period which elapsed between 1911 and 1920-1921, our opponents dragged in the Great war of 1914 to 1918 to justify their expenditures. Now that they are in opposition they advocate economy, but when in power they spend with a free hand, not in the interests of the people as a whole but to favour a privileged class. I admire, sir, the courage and endurance of those brave Canadians who joined the army and went overseas to fight on the battlefields of Europe and protect the rights of allied countries; I admire the devotion to duty and the generous sacrifice of those who fought energetically and then gave their life magnanimously for their country; I have no intention of criticizing all the expenditures that were made at the time. However, our opponents who advocate economy, could have practised it then and on more than one score. They could have economized on the purchases of motor-trucks and automobiles which remained in sheds in London; economy could have been practised after armistice was signed when troops were sent to Alaska for the benefit of manufacturers of army clothes and boots.

The hon. acting leader of the opposition mentioned, this afternoon, that he hoped to see a number of ministers who were free traders become protectionists. I am rather inclined to think that the hon. acting leader intends to become a convert and shows signs of it. He forsook Liberalism to join the ranks of the Conservatives. I really think his intention is to return to the fold of liberalism.

One word on protection. There is moderate and unlimited protection. Protection exists in the United States, and, it is said, that country is the most prosperous known, there are colossal fortunes, trade and industry have developed on a large scale and its population is over 100,000,000. Notwithstanding all their protection, the United States cannot prevent unemployment which exists in a great number of their cities. It is found in manufacturing centres, in industrial and commercial life. There are periods of depression and stagnation which are uncontrollable and neither free-trade nor protection can prevent these crises.

Let me now say a few words with reference to the Australian treaty. Within the last few years butter production in this country has decreased. Our farmers export their milk and cream to the United States and our butter factories do not produce enough for the consumers of this country. What would therefore happen were this treaty cancelled? The monopolizers, the trusts would purchase all the butter made, hoard it in cold storage and hold it until the next season's output was marketed, and the new market price would regulate the scale or rather would establish the sale price of the cold storage butter and the consumer would thereby be the sufferer.

Our country is large, immense, it possesses a variety of natural resources. We are charged with exporting too many of these natural resources to the United States. But, Sir, surely a young country that does not manufacture sufficiently for all its needs, can export to other countries some of its natural products and in return import articles of consumption or utility. I am, sir, as much attached to my country as anyone else. I wish to see it happy and prosperous. When I hear our opponents express doubt as to our real prosperity, I wonder if they show political wisdom. They advocate helping agriculture and contend that the farmers are financially poor and cannot make both ends meet, balance their budget, so to speak. I am among those who advocate helping agriculture because it is the industry "par excellence," because it is an essential industry. Therefore it is quite in order to assist agriculture by every possible means, but all must participate by their energy and good will. At times, the farmers' financial situation is somewhat critical. We do not practise the sound economy of our forebears; we have not their ability to manage our affairs, too much luxury has invaded our homes. A true and infallible means to success in business—as in everything—is to leave aside subtraction and division and practise especially addition and multiplication.

Before I resume my seat, may I observe that someone has been reproaching me because I am too staunch a Liberal. I will only say this:

Though I am hot red,
Am no fanatic.
I am not a hot head
Nor a lunatic.

Mr. T. L. CHURCH (Toronto Northwest): I wish to take this opportunity of congratulating the Liberal-Conservative party on the amendment which has been moved to the budget. The Liberal-Conservative party is the party of progress, and it is the only party upon which the masses in this country can depend to solve economic questions. In the hour of trouble the country always sends for the Conservative party. The Conservative party has always been consistent; it believes that the industrial welfare of Canada depends on protection and safeguarding and upon the conservation of our own markets for our own products and our own work for our own workmen.

The Liberal-Conservative party to-day stands for protection; it is a protectionist party. Protection is safeguarding and safeguarding is protection. In England to-day we see the remnant of a free trade country, with a million and a quarter people out of work taking the dole. That is a fine illustration of the success of free trade. England is losing her shipbuilding orders and her industrial supremacy in coal, and the union of coal and steel is what made England the great industrial nation it became in the history of the world. The motherland is now at the parting of the ways, and with a million and a quarter civilians and returned soldiers out of work—men who fought the battles of the empire in Flanders and France—the government over there is finding it necessary to protect her industries and adopt safeguarding. So that England also is coming around to protection in what is known as the safeguarding of basic industries, such as steel, coal and many others. The economic writers whose opinions are worth considering are all agreed that safeguarding is protection, although I favour simply the old word "protection".

As I say, protection is safeguarding and safeguarding is protection; the two terms are synonymous and are interlocked, they are allied and related terms. Now it is these two protectionist doctrines that we need in Canada to-day. And no industry in this country stands more in need of the application of these doctrines than the great basic industry of agriculture. But there are other industries that need protection. The prairie provinces in a few years will become a great industrial country and it will need protection brought up to date to meet the changing conditions there from time to time. It is for that reason that we have proposed the amendment to the budget, which amendment will appeal to every farmer in and out of the house, and to every industry in the country and to those out of work. It is based on an all-Canadian tariff for Canada. I support protection as a principle not as a privilege for a few.

[Mr. Church.]

We have a great leader (Mr. Bennett), who we regret is not here at the moment. He is a born leader of men, a skilful manager who has devoted his life to the service of his country and his fellowman at no small sacrifice. Put him in command of the ship of state and I venture to say that the industrial ills of every province in the Dominion, from the eastern provinces where he was born all the way to the Pacific coast, would be cured and their problems solved at once.

The economic ills of Canada are to be cured by the safeguarding of industry through protection. Protection is not a dead thing; it is a living thing and is continually growing and should be brought up to date. Take the United States to-day: in the late election the issue was protection and more protection all along the line for the entire country. Both sides there were agreed on it. In that country they have built up a high tariff wall and apparently they intend to maintain that wall still higher. This is the policy of President Hoover, whom I consider one of the world's greatest economic men, a man among men. He does not mean to be unfriendly to Canada, as evidenced by the great speech he made the other day at his inauguration. He is a man who sympathizes with humanity the world over and his life has been devoted to the welfare of civilization the world over. I say, therefore, that he does not cherish any enmity towards this country, and if he proposes to protect the United States from industrial invasion that is only something to be expected. After all, it is just as fair to apply the weapon of the tariff in time of peace, when you find the industrial invader at your door taking the bread out of your workman's mouth, as it is to apply it in time of war when the enemy is at the gates, and when you mobilize all the resources of the country to repel him. The principle of protection is the same in peace as in war for the nation as well as the individual.

I say that protection would solve the ills of the prairie provinces to-day, especially when we consider the attitude of the people of the United States. In the budget we have from the Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb) a statement which I will discuss as far as I can in the time at my disposal. I will say this for the Minister of Finance: He is the best voting card the government has in the country to-day. He is a plain able business man who is very much respected not only in this house but throughout the country for his many fine qualities of head and of heart; and is a great Canadian and true Briton. I do not criticize him at all except as to his policy; while I like and admire the man I do not like the Liberal party's policy. The liberalism we have to-day is not the liberalism of old.

I regret very much that the hon. member for Mount Royal (Mr. White), one of the oldest, most respected and able members of the House of Commons, has not been able to be with us this session on account of illness; I know he has been missed and we all hope he will soon return to his seat in this house with good health regained. May I add just here that I hope a general day of thanksgiving for the recovery of the king will be set apart, and I would suggest June 3, his birthday, as a proper day, when by God's grace I trust he will be fully recovered.

May I also congratulate you, Mr. Speaker, great Canadian that you are, on your lectures in France; you excelled as an ambassador of good-will. Your lectures on French history have done Canada a great deal of good in an international way for good-will in the old world. You are a great ambassador; Canada loves that glorious land of France, where so many of our own men sleep their last sleep as a result of the war; Canada adores that glorious nation towards which the eyes of the whole civilized world were turned during the war. The awful privations, the numerous trials, the untold sufferings and the terrible tribulations of the glorious French nation, surpassing anything the human imagination can conceive, will live in history as an example of the most sublime patriotism.

One of the main purposes of the budget debate is to take account of the nation's housekeeping, because after all the housekeeping in connection with an ordinary home is not very far distant in theory and method from the housekeeping in connection with a nation, and only about once a year do the representatives in parliament have a chance to discuss some of the economic ills from which the country is suffering. To-day we have a government which sits still and does nothing to cope with the economic problems of the country. Coming from an industrial constituency in Ontario I believe that the great empire province of Ontario has more economic problems to solve than all the rest of Canada, but this government seems to ignore Ontario altogether. For a long time we had not a single member of the cabinet from Ontario, 1926-7, and the present ministers representing Ontario constituencies do not seem to be sufficiently aggressive to stand up for the rights of this great province, which is paying about forty per cent of the taxes of the Dominion.

To-night the government is on trial before the bar of public opinion for their failure to govern and for their policy of laissez faire. The discussion we recently had in connection with light and power showed that our present government, as I said then, is a combination of big interests and appetites. The big interests are clamouring for more; they are weary and hungry; they are going further than they went last year and are demanding a shell-out, and the rules are to be amended to help them. To mention only a few, we have the Bell Telephone Company, the Sun Life Company, the Beauharnois power plant and all the rest, and who will stop these raids? I do not think the government will do it. During the naval debate the Liberal opposition made use of the word "gag;" now I say the rules are to be amended in order to apply "the gag" to give the big interests the right of way to what remains of the title deeds to the products of the sea, the soil, the forests and the mines of Canada. The big interests in this country such as the electric trust, the American power trust, the grain and elevator combine, the banking trust and the manufacturing trust seem to be the present masters of the administration. "Canada for the Americans" seems to be the economic policy of the government. That is shown in the government's pro-American tariff policy, in their power development policy, in their pro-American immigration policy, in their grain policy and their failure to place an embargo on hard wheat, in their failure to give adequate protection to the vegetable growers and market gardeners and their failure to apply the dumping duty, and in their separatist policy towards the rest of our empire.

To-night the government is weighed in the balance and found wanting; the unemployed asked for work in order to get bread but the government gave them a stone, together with a lot of platitudes from the head of the government. I asked a question with regard to unemployment last week but the Minister of Labour said in reply that unemployment is a question for the provinces, and from their erroneous index system say there is no unemployment. The government are being tried to-night for the way they have misgoverned; they have left undone those things which they ought to have done and they have done those things which they ought not to have done, —and there is no health in them as a government. We have had too little government from Ottawa and too much government from Washington and St. James street, including the power ring and the private millionaires of this charmed water-power circle from Montreal and the United States. Many of these younger power magnates hid their lights under a bushel during the Great war, staying at home and making a fortune while the men overseas were getting paid $1.10 a day.

My bill of indictment against the government includes two main counts, faults of omission and faults of commission. I charge that the faults of omission consist of twenty-six counts, as follows:

Failure to provide a policy of protection and safeguarding brought up to date to solve all the economic problems of every province.

Failure to provide a proper dumping clause.

Failure to provide some safeguards for industries.

Failure to provide a national coal and fuel policy.

Failure to bring in a policy looking to the conservation of the products of the sea, the soil, the forests and the mines for Canadians.

Failure to bring in an up-to-date Canadian radio policy. They fiddle along and send three favourites for a free ride around Europe while radio control is assumed by the United States.

Failure to provide a Canadian life-saving policy for the Great lakes.

Failure to provide a policy of farm relief.

Failure to implement the Duncan report in connection with steel, iron and coal.

Failure to provide for the preservation of water-powers for the people rather than for private gain and stock splits.

Failure to lay down a proper policy for the development of a greater St. Lawrence waterway as an economic necessity; this has been abandoned by the government as a waif, an orphan and an outcast.

Failure to provide an embargo on hard wheat.

Failure to deal with the question of unemployment.

Failure to lay down a policy looking to a united effort in the solution of the three great problems of empire trade, defence and migration.

Failure to provide a pro-Canadian, pro-British immigration policy.

Failure to provide any social legislation such as the extension of old age pensions and sickness and unemployment insurance.

Failure to bring in an advanced national policy on health matters.

Failure to reduce taxation, such as the income tax, the tax on cheques, the cigarette and liquor tax and other nuisance taxes.

Failure to take any taxes off the breakfast tables of the working classes.

[Mr. Church.]

Failure to bring in a national housing policy in order to help reduce the high cost of living.

Failure to make any reduction in the high cost of living.

Failure to enforce the Alien Labour Act. The Department of Labour, as I said in 1922, seems to be asleep and is one of the most useless and incompetent departments of the government to aid and protect the toiler and unemployed. Last year I asked the Minister of Labour some questions in connection with some sixty nurserymen or market gardeners who were brought to Ontario from the southern United States into York county, but I was unable to get an answer for a year. Then I was told that I could see the attorney general of the province, thus making a mere political football of the matter, although a federal one.

Another omission is the failure of the government to aid the maritime provinces by subsidies and subventions in connection with the steel and iron industries. Then the government failed to introduce a Pacific policy, to take care of that great empire province on the Pacific coast. They have failed to adopt a policy of closing up these wonderful embassies at Washington and Tokyo; they have failed to adopt a policy of protecting the public with insurance legislation, loan company legislation, trust company legislation and banking legislation. The working classes of this country pay millions to the insurance companies who charge anything they like, and this money is used to build up Japan, China and other countries at the expense of the Dominion.

It is time the general Insurance Act was brought up to date and revised. I do not mean to say that this legislature should fix the price of insurance, but it should give some protection to the government by having a proper audit made of these companies, and see that equitable rates are charged instead of the present prohibitive life and fire rates, to protect the policyholders.

The government gave away the Seven Sisters falls yesterday, and to-morrow they will be giving away the Beauharnois power site. Money has been spent in a very extravagant manner; it cost $36,000,000 to run the country when Sir Wilfrid Laurier took office in 1896, but it costs $400,000,000 to run it in 1929; they spend money like water. There has been a lack of national policy in the management of the natural resources. The government has committed these acts of omission and commission, and has failed to discover an economic policy that will assure the prosperity of Canada and make our people happy and contented. They have no policy which will solve the country's ills. The iron, coal and agricultural industries are being left to the mercy of foreign invasion and competition. Experience shows that as the basic industries of steel and coal go, so goes the country. The government has no policy on the tariff and the conservation of our resources. They have failed to find an economic policy which will steady or maintain our prosperity, or one in which more and more of our citizens will find a share. This would create a happy and contented nation and render the people less susceptible to the preaching of radical doctrines.

We have a government to-day with no forward-looking zeal or conservative principles, and with no demonstrated capacity for public service. No single factor aids a government so much as a background of prosperity, which to a degree exists to-day but for which the government is in no way responsible. What prosperity we have to-day is due to the fragments of the national policy which remains in this country, to Providence and a good crop, and to the thrift, industry and sobriety of our people. We have a government of ifs and buts and doubts and fears, a government against a government, all within itself and with no leadership to solve the country's economic ills.

Have they a policy on the St. Lawrence or on the preservation of our water-powers? No. They have a policy which is here to-day and gone to-morrow; a policy which is everything by fits and starts and nothing long. They are willing to give our valuable power sites to the big interests.

Have they a policy on radio? Yes, but it is one for the Liberal party and not for the national interests. They took nearly a year to appoint a useless commission which is roaming all over Europe now doing nothing but having a good time. They have a policy of farm relief, but it is all relief and no farm. The representatives on this commission are Mr. MacLean, of Victoria, B.C., and Mr. Drury of blessed and happy memory in Ontario. The farm relief board seems to be a happy hunting ground for downtrodden politicians. Would Mr. Hoover appoint gentlemen like that? No, he would appoint an economic person who knew something about farm relief. The farm relief board consists of those with heads of all boards but they know nothing about farm relief at all or how to cure the farmers' ills.

Have they a policy on the tariff? No. They appoint a useless tariff commission to make up their minds for them. I called them a minstrel show. If they would tour the country as a minstrel show they would make their fortune with the interlocutor and the tambo and bones who call themselves commissioners. They are making a political football out of this tariff question while six hundred thousand Canadians have to go to the United States to try to get jobs—a tariff board of spade and shovel men whose main object is to sound the death knell of protection and industry in Canada.

Have they an immigration policy? If it is a policy it is a continental European one and not a British-born one. Have they a policy on the return of natural resources? No. The speech from the throne 1926 said that the prairie provinces were to be given their natural resources, but when the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) objected to that they withdrew the measure. Have they a national coal policy? No. They had reluctantly to adopt my motion therein, but they failed to carry it out. They have a policy which helps the coal barons down in Pennsylvania, for they quoted a Canadian all-rail rate of nine or ten dollars per ton for the carrying of Alberta and maritime provinces coal, and they could get no business. If they had quoted a fair rate of six dollars per ton they would have obtained the cream of the business, but they would rather give the business to the coal barons of the United States and make work for the people in Pennsylvania.

Have they a policy for the returned soldier? Yes, they have a policy; the returned soldier gets all the pick and shovel jobs. The good jobs and those on the bench and in the senate go to those who were willing to pay a dollar to join the Liberal association and are civilians. You see articles and advertisements in the papers in Toronto asking for second-hand clothing for the men who fought the battles of this country for $1.10 a day and for their wives and children and a tag day to help soldiers. The government takes care of these young millionaires in the Beauharnois and other power companies and the Winnipeg Electric. I know one or two of them and they never did a thing in the war. They hid their light under a bushel and made a fortune while soldiers went to war for $1.10 a day.

Have they a policy for unemployment? Mr. Vincent Massey and Herbert Marler have been taken care of. No tag day will be had to maintain their embassies. Ottawa has become the seat of a great basic industry known as the ambassador cure for unemployment. That is the policy they have in this country for unemployment while six hundred thousand Canadians go to the United States as ambassadors at their own expenses looking for a job.

Have they a policy for solving the problem of British Columbia, the prairie provinces, the central provinces or the maritime provinces? No. Have they a policy which will solve the three greatest problems of empire defence namely, trade and migration? No. They went over to the colonial conference and never mentioned these problems and said Canada proposed nothing, it was satisfied.

I say the government's free-trade-wrecking tariff commission will go so far and no farther, for it is sounding the death knell of protection and industry in Canada. The government's policy has been to spend money like water and the only result will be that the labour of future generations yet unborn has been pledged for the payment of millions of dollars of interest on Canada's debt and maintenance account.

It is the duty of the government to protect the rights and prosperity, the health and comfort of its citizens. The government is sick. It looked pretty sick during the last five days when there was a discussion of the power question. It was only six votes short of defeat. The Manitoba government had to send for Doctor Hogg from Ontario and the chairman of the commission was too weak to prevent his going to Manitoba to destroy public ownership. The government of Ontario was responsible for sending Doctor Hogg to Manitoba. What did he do there? He is not a doctor at all; in fact, he has issued only one prescription in his life. He went to Manitoba and the prescription he issued electrocuted the whole Manitoba Bracken government. Before he gets through with some of the hon. gentlemen over there from Manitoba, he will electrocute them with the Seven Sisters falls in the next election, as well as the Liberal party which engaged him.

As I was saying, the government is sick; it needs a little physic. Even the Prime Minister and the cabinet on the power question were all sick of it and needed a little physic. A little tonic is often unpleasant, but it must be borne in mind that if a cure is to be effected, neither physician nor patient must flinch from taking it. So they captured a resolution or prescription the opposition gave them on water-powers.

An embargo should this session be placed on foreign products and foods that are competing unfairly with similar commodities produced in this country. The depression in coal is due largely to depression in trade of its best customer, the steel and iron industry. Give them protection in Canada and you will revive those two key industries. A revival of learning is needed in the cabinet to save the country from the tragedy of a wrecking tariff commission that is in an economic way illiterate and incapable of comprehending or of remedying economic conditions in Canada.

I am sorry there are only two front benchers present to-night. I hope I have not made the rest of the cabinet sick. No doubt they were taken very sick in the last few days when they heard the criticism of the opposition on water-powers. When they heard of so much water being used in the house during the last four or five days, no wonder they begged leave to retire and are not here to-night. Where is my hon. friend the doctor, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell), to-night? Where has he gone? Last year he became a doctor also.

Agriculture is a basic industry and requires special treatment. An embargo on hard wheat is required so as to provide work for our people in the mills in the milling of corn and flour.

As a program the budget is barren of any real progress to protect Canadians and to preserve our own markets for our own products and our own workmen. It is a very skimpy sort of chicken, a skimpy bill of fare for the working classes that fools no one. It should be committed to old mother Hubbard's cupboard so that the unemployed will see what kind of bone is in it for them. Probably that is where the balance of the cabinet have gone to-night, in order to look for the bone,—for what is left of the Liberal principles, the Liberal platform laid down in the city of Ottawa a few years ago. The budget is a full chicken with the bone out of it for the rich but the masses get not even a good bone. Shorn of a lot of its fads and frills, it contains nothing that will benefit the masses of the country. I admit the government have taken twenty-five cents off the expense of the tickets to which a member of parliament is put in coming to and going from Ottawa. That is one of the few things they have thrown over here. One thing I am sure we cannot do is blame the lord high executioner of the government, the Postmaster General (Mr. Veniot), for whom I have a great deal of respect, for having any part in its draftsmanship, because there is nothing in it to execute and no one to execute except the taxpayer.

What do the Liberal prohibitionist supporters of the government think of the way in which the government has played with the rum-running business and allowed the United States to violate a number of international treaties and have armed gunboats on the lakes? One thing left out of the budget is any instruction to the workers how they should spend their money, because the workers have no money to spend and because of the economic policy of the government many of them are out of work. We have to have a tag day for the soldiers in distress, but no tag day is needed for the maintenance of our ambassadors at Tokyo and Washington. If the government's budget is cut up into parts, it is a program of shin plasters for the rich and a committal to the poorhouse for the unemployed and the poor. Where is and what is the government's tariff policy? If we are to judge by the mock trials held by those delightful busybodies, the tariff commission, it may be summed up under two heads as follows:

(a) That nothing that can be bought in the United States shall be made in Canada, and,

(b) That everything that cannot be bought in the United States shall be imported from overseas, from Europe, preferably from Germany.

The government turns a deaf ear to any adequate dumping clause even though some of their own supporters ask for it in the house.

The great industrial system of the United States was built up on protection. President Hoover will yet drive Canada to erect a similar wall and adopt a self-respecting reciprocal policy. Canada can no longer continue to buy $900,000,000 worth of high-priced manufactured goods from the United States, nearly two-thirds of which could be manufactured in Canada, and pay for that $900,000,000 worth out of her raw material. We require a proper and adequate reciprocal treaty. The government will not insert in the tariff a clause to tell the United States so. Mr. Hoover is a business man and as business is business among individuals as well as nations, he would not object to it. The Monroe note and the Kellogg note mean nothing, but if the government would write a note along the lines I have suggested, they might accomplish something. As I said in the session of 1926-7:

> In the days of Horace Greeley opportunities for employment in the United States were threatened by imports from Europe. To-day opportunities for employment in Canada are threatened by imports from the United States. The United States did not require the founders of American industry to go before a tariff commission to persuade the commissioners that the tariff should be so changed that their industries would be able to employ Americans in their own country instead of driving them to seek employment in foreign lands. Nero never fiddled while Rome burned the way this government is fiddling in appointing a tariff commission to solve the economic problems of this country. Instead of announcing in the budget some measure of protection and safeguarding legislation that would solve our economic ills, nothing is being done by the government to relieve our unemployed who are asking for a job that they may get bread. Many industries are closed up altogether, others are working only fifty per cent, and even the great agricultural industry of the west is suffering.

This wonderful government which continues its policy of the ambassador cure for unemployment dooms 600,000 other Canadians to appoint themselves ambassadors at their own expense to search in a foreign land, the United States, for the jobs that they cannot find in their own country. In the days of Horace Greely opportunities for employment in the United States were threatened by imports from Europe as the opportunity to-day for employment in Canada is threatened by imports from the United States. The Americans from 1849-60 asked their rulers for the bread of employment. These rulers did not offer their countrymen the stone of free trade theory and the platitudes of a pro-American tariff and an economic policy of laissez faire. No, and these rulers did not require the founders of American industry to go before a minstrel show of a tariff commission and persuade the interlocutor, the tambo and the bones who call themselves commissioners, that the tariff should be changed in favour of industries that would employ Americans in their own country instead of driving these Americans, as Canadians are being driven, to seek employment in a foreign country.

The government's tariff policy has made it impossible for the workers to obtain the full product of their labour or a full dinner pail. The government never was and never will be a working class government or a government representing all sections of the country.

This budget would make a great crazy quilt for the Minister of Agriculture to raffle off at a fall fair and throw in with it a free prescription or two as well seeing that he has now a doctor's degree. The budget is an enigma, a Chinese puzzle; it means nothing, and will lead to nothing of economic benefit to the country; it will do nothing to better conditions and provide work for Canadians in any of the provinces. It is just a smoke-screen thrown over the economic ills with which the country is afflicted. The budget is a neat apology for the government's failure to govern and for its failure to shift the burden of taxation from the toilers and the farmers to the rich and those more able to pay. It is not even a platform to stand on, let alone one to get in on. It is a mixed grill kind of tariff, and no all-

Canadian tariff at all. It is only an academic thesis of several resolutions, platitudes, evasions, and excuses for turning over what remains of industry to our competitors; to the Americans and other foreign manufacturers at the expense of Canadian workmen. There can be no definite criticism from the opposition because there is really nothing in the budget to criticize.

The first cornerstone of an Immigration policy is to keep our own in Canada. The second great essential is to provide work for Canadians at present in this country, but the government proposes nothing to attain that end. The government have shown themselves incapable of bringing forth any legislation which will help solve the problems facing us and relieve conditions which exist all over the country. There is no adequate protection for industry. There is no social legislation in the way of an adequate and up-to-date pension scheme or some system of unemployed insurance. There is no social legislation for the workers in this budget. Many of the toilers in the old country are out of work. People over there got tired of the party system, and they formed the Labour party. And now all the old and new parties in England are in favour of social legislation. We should adopt social legislation in this country adapted to our finances and to our circumstances. If we had a little more practical religion and loved our neighbours as ourselves, this house would not prorogue until the soldiers and their dependents were all properly looked after. We would see that none of God's creatures in Canada who were willing to work were denied the means of earning their livelihood. We would abolish slums; we would solve the housing problem; we would give every man, woman and child in this country a chance to live and exist in a free country as God's creatures.

We require in this country a national policy of health. The cost of sickness in Canada is computed at $311,000,000 a year, eighty-nine per cent of which is a direct charge upon the individual. The loss of future earnings through premature death is conservatively estimated at $1,000,000,000 a year, so that $1,311,000,000 is the price paid for illness and its results in Canada each year. The health of the people is left, under the British North America Act, to the Dominion, and we need a national health policy in this country. In York county, $12.50 a head is spent on education, contrasted with 19 cents per head for public health. This is because the public asks for education, but they have not yet been able to see the value of public health. In England they have had a British board of health since 1831, as a department of the government. That has now developed into the ministry of health, one of the most efficient in the world. In this country we have only had a ministry of health a very short time, since 1927. As an example of what might be done, I might point out that in the year 1925, 30,000 people in the United States died of influenza, 90,000 of tuberculosis, and over 95,000 of cancer. The government will spend $2,000,000 to prevent deaths at level crossings, but very little in the war against disease. The time has come for a national health policy, and millions should be spent in it. Let the government economize on something else of a material nature instead of on something which is at the cost of the lives of our people.

Mr. W. K. BALDWIN (Stanstead): Mr. Speaker, fortunate is the hon. member who follows in debate our most estimable friend from Toronto Northwest (Mr. Church). I find nothing to criticize in what he says.

Turning to the address that was made this afternoon by the acting leader of the opposition (Mr. Guthrie), we all remember the critical times in this house nine or ten years ago when we were fighting over the question of public or private ownership of the railways. We were then sitting to the left of the Speaker, and on both sides of the house were found men in support of one policy or the other. We all remember the attitude of the then Minister of Railways, now sitting in the senate. The greatest critic of public ownership of the railways in the house at that time was the hon. member for Pontiac (Mr. Cahill), and surely he knew railways. We were all more or less skeptical as to the success of the railways under public ownership and administration. We remembered how on the old Intercolonial two-thirds of the passengers travelled without buying tickets, and naturally we who are now sitting on this side of the house were skeptical as to what would happen to the railways so long as the Conservative government was in power. We knew there would be no management worth mentioning so long as the Conservatives were in power. But when the Liberal government came into office, they searched the whole world over and found in Sir Henry Thornton the greatest railway man available, the greatest that could be found in this universe, and undoubtedly he has made an outstanding success in the management of the national system. He would not undertake the management until the government had promised him a free hand in the management of the road. He sought and obtained the loyal cooperation of every employee of the system, and under his management the road has progressed until it is now one of the greatest railway systems in the world. The railway committee may be of use to the presidents of the two great railway systems in this country, but personally I would trust Mr. E. W. Beatty, president of the Canadian Pacific, and Sir Henry Thornton, president of the Canadian National, to extend their lines anywhere they saw fit, because I believe they are both men of outstanding ability. Anyone who has travelled extensively must know that the two great railway systems in this country are the equal of any in the world.

The acting leader of the opposition went on to say, in effect, that this government was spending money like drunken sailors, and he condemned them especially for spending money on public works. We all know that during the war, from motives of economy, buildings were not properly maintained, and the result was that public buildings, wharves, and the like, got into a bad state of repair and needed painting inside and out. It is not prudent to allow public property to decay and tumble down, and it was necessary for the government to spend money to put the public works of this country in decent repair.

The acting leader of the opposition assailed the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell) in regard to the dairying industry. I should like to tell this house that the Minister of Agriculture has done more for the dairying industry than any other minister of agriculture since confederation. He worked for two years trying to prevent oleomargarine from being imported and sold in Canada. Before its sale was prohibited, you could buy butter much cheaper than you can to-day. If my memory serves me a right—and it is retentive—the leader of the opposition voted against the repeal of the oleomargarine law. But the ex-Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Tolmie), now Premier of British Columbia, Donald Sutherland and three others assisted us through two sessions of parliament in fighting and repealing that law. By that action we did more for the farmers of Canada than has been effected by any other legislation passed by this house. To-day butter is fifty cents a pound. Is that not a sufficiently high price for the labouring man to pay?

An hon. MEMBER: Too much.

Mr. BALDWIN: Yes; but the farmer gets a good price—he is not complaining. I come from an agricultural section, and a section that is also industrial and financial.

Mr. McGIBBON: The hon. member means that the farmers in his riding are not complaining.

Mr. BALDWIN: I mean the whole of Canada.

Mr. McGIBBON: Let the hon. member read the report of the National Dairy Council.

Mr. BALDWIN: Last session the Australian treaty was freely criticized, mainly on the score of the importations of butter from that country, but I have not heard any specific objections so far this session. Then the leader of the opposition assailed business conditions in general. He said the labouring men cannot get work, the farmers have nothing to do. I want to tell you, Mr. Speaker, that a company with which I am connected has brought industries into the eastern townships in the last nine years which industries in buildings and plant have spent $37,500,000, and annually they are paying in wages $5,200,000. Since I heard the hon. gentleman's speech I have received a letter from home. The manager of the small business that has been in my family for the past 120 years wrote me to say that he could not get help to start our mill, the people were so busy. That is typical all over the eastern townships. I happen to be in Montreal pretty often. The hon. leader of the opposition stated that there were a lot of people running around Montreal, Toronto, Winnipeg and Vancouver looking for work. Well, I have not noticed that in Montreal, but it may be that those people belong to that class which hunts for work and prays it wont find any. Nor have I heard of any soup kitchens. He mentioned something about money being collected to help the poor. Well, the poor we shall have with us always, as Scripture tells us.

Then my hon. friend attacked our ambassadorial homes in Washington and London, but I noticed there was not a word about the Scribe hotel. For two or three sessions we were told that the Scribe hotel was one of the greatest scandals in the history of this country. Well, I think the silence of the opposition proves that the Scribe hotel has been a very successful investment. That is why they have dropped the subject. My good friend from Toronto Northwest, mentioned the appointment to the Tokyo embassy. I am pleased that a gentleman from Stanstead county is to represent Canada in that wonderful country, and I am sure the appointment will be justified by the able maner in which our ambassador there will look after Canadian interests. And I think Mr. Massey in Washington is worth to Canada all and more than we are paying him.

With regard to the tariff, boys of my age and a long time before remember that ever since the abrogation by the United States of the reciprocity treaty in natural products the Conservative party has worked assiduously for its revival. It is useless for me to remind the house that members of Conservative governments from time to time have made more visits to Washington in an attempt to negotiate a treaty for reciprocity in natural products than have the members of Liberal governments. It was not until 1911 that the Conservative party made a change of front and thanks to their flag-waving campaign the country then pronounced itself emphatically against reciprocity with the United States. I believe that if you can have reciprocity equivalent to free trade in natural products it would be all right. But I am a protectionist—an adequate protectionist. I like to look after myself. Self-preservation is a mighty good thing in personal matters, in family matters, in county matters and in national matters.

I believe that we have men on the treasury benches who are big enough to cope with any problem, tariff or otherwise. It has been stated by some of the most prominent men in Montreal that the Beauharnois undertaking would result in a defeat of the government. Now, when I listened to my great chief—great? Yes, just as great as any prime minister that ever stood on the floor of this house—when I heard him map out that triune conference between Ontario, Quebec and the federal government, and his statement that when in that proposed conference they agree on a policy that will suit all parties, then, and not until then, will they resume conferences with the United States. To my mind, that is business.

There seems to be a spirit of fellowship between the other side of the house and this. I have to congratulate the leader of the opposition on having made one of the most comprehensive speeches ever made in this house, but the longer you are on your feet the more you lay yourself open to criticism, and I venture to say that in due time his arguments will be answered satisfactorily to the members on this side. I have not the least doubt.

Now, Canada is a wonderful and amazing country. If we do not know it, let us visit other parts of the globe and we shall realize how the world regards us. I have no fault to find with the member for Frontenac-Addington (Mr. Edwards), but if ever I was surprised by any proceeding in this house it was by his attack on the Minister of the Interior last year. The big Scotch head of the minister is full of common sense; and the best science in the world is the science of common sense, or horse sense. Now, then, the hon. member for Vancouver North (Mr. McRae) elaborated a plan of settlement on a large scale. But it was too expensive. Then a conference of all parties was held, but the great question of filling up our open spaces was not solved. But I think we must acknowledge our Minister of the Interior is a great man, for he did his utmost to make that conference a success. Our great railway systems and other organizations are doing all they can to attract immigrants. Personally I would give very little money to bring people into Canada. If every man and woman, boy and girl, whether at home or abroad, would tell the world what a wonderful country we have here, that would be the best kind of publicity; and if they feel they have not sufficient scope, let them talk of the Great British Empire. There is nothing that makes me shrink with such despair as to hear our boys and girls talking about going to the United States. My business takes me from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and occasionally into the United States, and I know of cities there, with a population of half a million, where the people are talking treason and rebellion and what not. Let a man say that he is from some part of the British Empire and those people will say, "You come from the finest country in the world, where honour and justice prevail". We do not see ourselves as others see us, and I can assure you that there are any number of people in the United States who will readily admit that we have an amazing country in this Dominion. They would come here and buy up every stock outright, our bank stocks, industrials, hydro-electric and everything else, if we let them. But our population, composed of English, Scotch, Irish and French, knows how to take care of itself.

We need patriotism in this country, and this government is doing all in its power to promote harmony among the various classes in Canada. I admire the genuine spirit of fellowship which has been displayed here in the past day or two in settling a great question which has been the subject of considerable debate in the house. The Canadian people are coming more and more to realize the greatness of their country. We are far better off than they are in the United States, if only we will all work together. There you find a population of some fifteen million negroes, and still further south in Mexico you find a terrible and pugnacious people. So far as labour is concerned, we have room for all those who wish to come in. An appreciable distance west of the Mississippi you will find labour of the class we have not in Canada, and on the Pacific coast there are crowds of Chinese, Japanese, and Mexicans. These people work seven days in the week and they work like Trojans. For my part I have nothing against them, and in this regard my views are well known; it will be found in many volumes of Hansard. I would let everyone come in who was law-abiding and willing to work, because I am not very strong on the colour line, for the simple reason that this climate will not attract the coloured races in great numbers.

I have spoken many times regarding the West Indies, and I firmly maintain that we should have political union with that section of the empire. As a result of the part we played in the war, we have a tremendous debt. Why, therefore, should not Great Britain acknowledge the right of Canada to have something for her sacrifice of life and money? And there is nothing at all unreasonable in the proposal. Take the United States: they have added as much territory to their domain as they had sixty-five years ago. Now they have Cuba, Porto Rico and other places, and the annexation has proved beneficial to both parties. If Canada could annex the British West Indies it would be a good thing not only for the West Indies themselves but for this country as well. The same thing applies to Newfoundland, where there are water-powers and other resources that could be developed advantageously. Certainly I believe that an arrangement could be arrived at between Canada on the one hand and the British West Indies and the mother country on the other, whereby we could have a very helpful political union. The method of representation of the West Indies in this parliament could be worked out; possibly they could have representatives in the senate. There are only two and a half million people in the British West Indies and there should be no difficulty in arranging this union. True, their skins are dark, but I am sure that no one would compare them with the coloured population of the United States. Booker T. Washington was, of course, a great man, and he was educated to some extent along high ideals. But I do not think that the coloured population of the United States, taken altogether, could compare with the people of the West Indies. I have attended conferences in Canada at which there were representatives from the British West Indies and I am bound to say I never heard more capable speakers. They also speak with a very pleasing accent. So far as I can see, therefore, there is no obstacle in the way of a political union between Canada and that promising part of the empire.

I would not offer very much assistance in the way of money as an inducement to get people to come to this country. In my opinion that is absolutely ridiculous. Let us make it known throughout the world that this is one of the greatest countries to which any man could come who was looking for an opportunity to make his way in life. Do not let us entertain any prejudices against some of the excellent European peoples merely because we happen to have fought against them some years ago. I do not want to say anything to hurt the feelings of anyone, but I may remark that during the war the people of one of the finest countries in the world, the Germans, were unduly criticized. Right in these benches in the Union government anyone who had a drop of German blood in his veins was regarded as a murderer. But some of the most progressive, some of the richest states in the American union are settled by these people. Take Wisconsin and Minnesota for instance: some of the richest sections in those states are peopled by Norwegians, Germans and immigrants from Sweden. I would have no barriers against immigration into Canada. I have seen people pouring into New York by the thousand, and I see no reason why they should be shut out. It is a good deal like fencing out sheep when some have tasted the pasture on the other side. You may build your fence as high as you like, but some leader will find his way through and others will follow. I have no doubt that many people are getting into the United States from Canada through the international border. Young men go there in search of work and after applying for one job after another they finally take to the shovel and spade. Then they are glad enough to come back to Canada; and they come back singing, "Home, Sweet Home." Tens of thousands of people who go there are forced to come back. If I were in charge of affairs in the United States and I had a lot of disgruntled people in the east and middle west to deal with, I would give them free transportation to the arid belt.

In the United States they have their troubles; the automobile has destroyed them; they have the curse and cancer of divorce. In Los Angeles nearly 5,000 divorces are granted each year and at Reno, Nevada, it is a daily occurrence. A man sees some little butterfly on the street and thinks what a wonderful time he would have if she were his wife, but if he gets her he probably has to darn his own socks and get his own breakfast, and if he has any money in his pockets she gets it when he goes to sleep. They have a great many things in the United States, but we must remember that the courts of Los Angeles are running every day of the week except Sunday; they have a seventeen story jail there and all the prisons are filled to overflowing. I have considerable property in the United States which I am willing to sell at any price. If you sell a farm in the United States the purchaser will not farm it; he may raise a few potatoes, but they are no more fit to eat than are green bananas, and I would much prefer a good Irish potato raised here in Canada. We have an example of what the Irish potato has done; look at that good old Irish race. They say the Irishmen did not know how to run their own country, but if you go to any part of the world you will find Irishmen helping to run almost every other country. I was in Louisiana shortly after Governor Long had been elected; he is an Irishman. The amount of money in the United States is perfectly amazing, but we must remember that in order to make that money the United States made a terrible sacrifice of human life. If I had been Stanley Baldwin instead of Billy Baldwin, when the delegation went to the United States to settle the war debt I would have said, "This settlement shall be contingent upon France, Italy, Germany and Russia paying their debts to us; if they default we will default also." Then we would have had the moral support of the United States in collecting those debts. Great Britain has been the greatest colonizing power the world has ever known and has done more for civilization than any other nation. You will remember that in his inaugural speech President Hoover said the United States was a cosmopolitan nation made up of all peoples of the world, but only one nation gave them their language. We know the country to which he referred, and I consider that a great compliment. If we must ape the United States, let us take her best features and leave her worst; then we will make great progress, because that country has a great many splendid things about it, but we should inform our young men and women that if they go to the United States to look for work they have not one chance in fifteen of becoming successful in comparison to the chances they have here in Canada.

Are our fathers and mothers doing their duty in this country? I think not. When I was a boy there was more love of country, more patriotism and more talk of Canada and the British Empire than we hear now. Nowadays everyone is busy trying to make money; we are making money, but the man who can make money and still keep his head is rare. Has anyone ever thought just what one good labouring man means to a country? You cannot compute it, so we should make every effort to keep these people, their children and their children's children in this country. My best friends, and those for whom I would do the most, are those who earn their daily bread, who do it cheerfully and make play of their work.

Mr. KAISER: Who does not earn his daily bread?

Mr. BALDWIN: I think there are quite a number of people in this country who do not earn their bread. Under our present system when a man commits a crime we put him in gaol; while he is there he spends his time thinking up what deviltry he will do when he gets out. I would make every man in gaol work until he would be glad to go to bed; I would treat him fairly well and perhaps pay him something for his work, but a country that keeps its prisoners in idleness makes a great mistake. I undesrtand that prisoners are not now allowed to work and I consider that very wrong; people who are sent to jail should leave after serving their sentences better men and women than when they went to jail. Last year it was proposed to lash a prisoner when he entered gaol and to lash him when he left; would that sort of thing make a good man out of him? These people can be made into good citizens; in the United States the prisoners farm large areas of land, and when these people have served their sentences and return to society they are respected by their neighbours. That is as it should be; I presume there are just as good people in gaol as are out of it.

I have found wonderful Jewish lawyers in New York, Chicago and Los Angeles—

An hon. MEMBER: And Montreal.

Mr. BALDWIN: Yes, and Montreal. I have confidence in the Jew. He is a good worker and he does not drink. That brings me to the subject of drunkenness, and I must say that I am sorry that Canada has undertaken to handle intoxicating liquors. I am proud of Prince Edward Island and I always thought that Canada could beat the States as far as prohibition was concerned. You can not have people drunk and prosperous at the same time, for the man is spending his money for drink when he should be keeping it in his pocket. I have great admiration for that woman's organization known as the Women's Christian Temperance Union. They are the most capable women in the world. During one of my campaigns the gentleman who opposed me made fun of them, but he lost many votes through his tactics. I believe the women are the salvation of the world, and only the married man knows what a wonderful woman a wife is.

There has been criticism offered with regard to the Minister of Finance who has saved this country $25,000,000. I would have liked to see that little pestiferous tax, the sales tax, cut out altogether. I am a small manufacturer, but I would rather do a little business at a fair profit than a large business at a loss. I am told that the large manufacturers are always paying so much sales tax at any given time that it would be impossible to take the whole tax off at once. But we got it down to two per cent. I would like to see this tax enforced through stamps, for it would be much simpler to go down and buy $10 or $100 worth of stamps than it is at the present time when you have to fill out so many forms. I do not want to say anything about nationalities, but there are many small clothing stores, employing ten or fifteen girls up in an attic, which do not pay any tax. On the other hand the big concerns with their bookkeepers and accountants have to account for every dollar and have to pay their tax. Some manufacturers have a hard time getting enough money to pay their help. The hardest task of the management is to get enough money to pay their employees in full. The average workingman is quite honest; you do not see many here in Ottawa soldiering on their jobs. I saw one man lay down his shovel to light his pipe, but he did it mighty quick. In Montreal or some of the big cities you may see them soldiering on the job, but not in Ottawa.

I have some very important things to say but my time is limited. I am sure that even the members on the opposite side of the house will acknowledge that we have a splendid cabinet. Sir Wilfrid Laurier picked a wonderful cabinet in 1896. I have sat in parliament with most of them and I know their worth. We have men of vigour and ability in the cabinet to-day; men of youth and sound physique and they will be able to hold their position so long as the electors choose to send them here. I believe the Liberal party is going to stay on the right of the Speaker for a long time. I think the Prime Minister of this country should receive at least $30,000 per year. I know many men connected with great corporations, where through the interlocking of subsidiary companies they act as president of one, general manager of another and vice president of still another. They may receive $75,000 per year, and I think our Prime Minister should be paid much more than he is receiving at present, considering the importance of the position.

An hon. MEMBER: How much would you pay the Minister of Railways?

Mr. BALDWIN: I would give him just as much as the rest of the cabinet.

As my time seems to have expired, I supposed I am forced to conclude my remarks.

Mr. A. E. ROSS (Kingston City): Mr. Speaker, I am sure we have listened to a splendid defence of the Robb budget. At the time that budget was delivered I thought it had some very good points in that it was clear, short and concise, but after our acting leader of the opposition (Mr. Guthrie) analysed it this afternoon I discovered there was something very much wrong with it. I am sure that every member of the house will congratulate the acting leader of the opposition upon his splendid budget criticism. I have heard compliments from both sides of the house and from all groups, on its being one of the best speeches delivered in the house for many, many years. When the acting leader of the opposition had completed his exposition of the government and the members composing it, I felt that we must have some doubt in our minds as to the opinion expressed by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) at the beginning of the session. During the early days of the session, when he was reminded that the prosperity of the country was in some measure due to the gifts of a kindly Providence, he pointed out that Providence must act through men and governments. He was not willing at all to give the credit to Providence for any part of our prosperity, but according to him it must be due to a combination of "Me und Gott."

I should like to remind the house that Providence is associated in a very peculiar way with this government. For example, one year ago the Prime Minister brought to our notice the case of many aged, dependent citizens of the country and the government introduced a policy of old age pensions. I can hear the Minister of Labour (Mr. Heenan), that kindly hearted Canadian citizen, speaking to the numerous audiences he has addressed and those he will address in the future of the beneficence of the Prime Minister who has so carefully provided, in association with a kindly Providence, for our aged and dependent citizens. But what must the good Providence feel like when, at this early date after the passage of that great measure, the Prime Minister pronounces this beneficent act coming from this government as a "vicious policy"? This is only one example of the actions of the men in this government with whom Providence has to act. If you want to picture Providence acting with men and governments as the Prime Minister said, picture it acting now through the kindly heart of the Postmaster General (Mr. Veniot) in a policy of execution of postmasters. Picture Providence cooperating with the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell) in his trip of economy through Europe taking along with him a government car and a government chauffeur.

Mr. MANION: "What have you to say about it?"

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): I have nothing to say about it. I am sure he has made the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Elliott) jealous that he cannot visit those places in Europe, for instance, the beautiful resorts of France. If the Minister of Agriculture had taken a government car and made a trip to the Holy Land where he might have been reminded of his sins of past days, I might have found some excuse for his trip with a government car and chauffeur.

On that occasion there was a second statement made by the Prime Minister, namely, that the prosperity was due to the policy brought in by the Robb budget. I have searched for a policy in the budget and even in the address and I can find no statement of a national policy of any kind that this country can build upon or look to with any hope. If there is one I should like to know it. If I were to pick out a policy that would mark this government, I would say that it had a policy of beautification. The government has set about to beautify this capital. I think the object was that people coming to the capital would be able to view from the great confederation square these magnificent buildings, but if one should go down on that so-called confederation square to-day where there has been so much destruction, and endeavour to get a view of these beautiful buildings, he would have to be cross-eyed to see them. They have beautified the capital of the United States to the extent of about $500,000; they have beautified the capital of Great Britain to the extent of more than a million dollars; they have yet to beautify the capital of Japan and the capital of France. When they get through with that, they will start on a policy of beautification of these great ambassadors of ours. One in Washington is already beautified and we are waiting with some interest to see what the beautiful adornment of this great minister to Tokyo will be. In fact the only policy of the government is that of a beauty parlour.

Turning to the Robb budget, so-called, as I have said it has merit. It has described in a simple way expenditures and revenues. There is nothing new in that. It has described our public debt. Our leader has dealt with those matters which are of financial importance and I am going to pass them by. It showed that we have a certain amount of prosperity. Everyone will admit that the country is prosperous; it cannot help being prosperous. While I admit there are some merits in the budget, I fail to find in it or the address which has been passed—because these two things combined should place before us the policy of the government and show us what is intended for the future—any effort on the part of the government to care for the people of Canada. You might say that they constitute rather a failure to provide. I would go further and say that the budget was well named in being called a Robb budget because we find that the result of the several Robb budgets that have been brought down is that they are robbing the country of certain factors we should have.

We can picture the prosperity of Canada. The Minister of Finance might well speak of all that the country now has and will have, of its possibilities in the making of a happy and contented people, of the attractions that we have to draw people to it, of the possibilities of establishing and building up great industries, and also of making a happy and contented agricultural people; and yet I can find nothing of that in the budget. The Minister of Finance and every minister on the government benches must admit that in spite of all our prosperity, in spite of all our possibilities, in spite of all that this country has in the way of resources, too many people are leaving Canada. Surely there must be some way to remedy this situation. The report of the United States Commissioner of Immigration shows that last year we lost some 73,963 people to the United States. Of that number we lost from the province of Quebec 17,963. I can imagine some member of the government rising in his place and answering: Oh, yes, but the number is decreasing year by year. Is that due to any policy of this government? Is it due to any one of the Robb budgets? Not one bit. Let me read to you what the United States Commissioner of Immigration says with respect to this matter:

Immigration from Canada has decreased from year to year since the present quota law became effective July 1, 1924.

It was in 1924 that we had the first tinkering with the tariff, and in that year some 200,000 people left this country. But in 1925, following the introduction of the United States visa law, which compelled everyone leaving this country and entering the United States to pay $8 per head, there was a decrease, and no wonder; but it was not due to any policy which this government had put in force; it was due to the law which the United States government had put into effect to prevent the great flow of people across the line from this country resulting from the policies initiated and brought into force by this government.

There are other factors connected with the immigration from this country of 73,000 people which are more important still, and which show that the successive Robb budgets are continually robbing us of something which cannot be measured in dollars and cents. Of the 73,000 who left this country, 11,009 were under sixteen years of age; 17,045 were between sixteen and twenty-one years; 21,000 were between twenty-two and twenty-nine; 10,000 were between thirty and thirty-seven; 5,000 between thirty-eight and forty-four; 8,000 between forty-five and fifty-five. In other words we are losing to the United States the best that this country produces, the young people; for of this 73,000 we find that 28,000 were under the age of twenty-one. So perhaps the Robb budget is well named, because we are losing our most valuable assets, the young people of this country.

The budgets that we have had for the last three or four years also show that we are acting in a very unreasonable way in another respect. I should like to draw the attention of the house to a few facts regarding our imports and exports; and by the way, I am shortening my remarks on this phase because our leader dealt so ably with this subject this afternoon. Here are a few facts I have taken from the trade reports of this country, from which we can assuredly draw some useful lessons; and I am going to put them to the house in a way that appears interesting to me. In 1927 there were imported into this country $12,160,529 worth of engines, boilers and locomotives. No one will deny that we can and do manufacture these articles in Canada, yet we imported them in 1927 to the amount I have stated. If these figures of importation were continually decreasing we might say that the government was doing something, but on the contrary our imports are constantly rising. In 1928, engines, boilers and locomotives were imported into this country to the value of $13,559,000. Of rolling mill products—I am selecting these items because they affect very considerably the small cities and towns along our frontier—we imported in 1927, $34,000,000; 1928, $44,000,000; tools, 1927, $1,800,000; 1928, $2,238,000; wool and its products, an article that should not be found in our imports, in 1927, $34,000,000 and in 1928, $38,000,000 worth; of textile products, in 1927, $14,000,000; in 1928, $15,000,000; milk and its products, in 1927, $2,700,000; 1928, $3,194,000 worth.

Now, turning to the other side, what do we find in the way of exports of similar goods? In 1927 we exported $8,700,000 worth of textiles, and in 1928, $7,600,000 worth; of animal products, in 1927, $128,000,000; 1928, $126,000,000; of rolling mills products, 1927, $1,600,000; 1928, $862,000; of farm machinery and implements, 1927, $11,000,000; 1928, $10,000,000.

Under the policies that have been brought into force by this government you will notice that in each one of these lines our imports are increasing each year and our exports decreasing. Surely the lesson is plain. Placing these import and export figures side by side, we see that during the life of this government our imports under the Robb budgets have been increasing each year, and our exports decreasing. What does that mean? It means less work in Canada and more work in the United States and other countries; and it is for these reasons that our young people, the working people of this country, are leaving for the United States, as many of them as can pay their $8 head tax and get out.

Three years ago I followed this same line and I pointed to information given to me by experienced superintendents of factories and experienced workmen to the effect that if we manufactured in this country, as we could, the goods we are importing, there would be work for 74,000 more people in this country. Based on the ordinary family we would have in the neighbourhood of three hundred thousand more people if a different policy had been adopted. Now with the increase that is taking place I am satisfied that we would have four hundred thousand more people working here under those circumstances.

I go still further. Since the introduction of the Robb budget and the treaties that followed we are affected in a similar way along other lines. To-day our leader gave figures of the importations of Australian and New Zealand butter. I am not going to deal with the subject because others better qualified to speak from the agricultural point of view will discuss it; but I want to point out to the government something that is taking place at the present time. Last year and the year before you could go into any grocery store in this and other cities and towns and buy over the counter Australian and New Zealand butter. To-day if a member of this house went to any of those stores and asked for a pound of Australian or New Zealand butter he would be told there was none available. But you can buy butter at those stores which I am told any person who has had experience can detect at once to be New Zealand or Australian butter. An injustice is being done our dairy farmers, and I should like the Minister of Agriculture to solve the mystery. Undoubtedly a double robbery is taking place: the agriculturist is robbed of his home market, which he is entitled to; and, if what I suspect is going on, the consumer also is being robbed, for he is paying from three to four cents a pound more for that mislabelled butter than if it were sold for what it really is—New Zealand butter. Notwithstanding this apparent absence of Australian and New Zealand butter our importations are increasing. I think this should engage the attention of the Minister of Agriculture and his colleagues.

By way of emphasizing and demonstrating the fact that the government are providing work for our friends across the line to the detriment of Canadian interests, I desire to bring to their attention a matter which is very generally discussed among those engaged in shipping on the great lakes. As is well known, our coastal law prevents American boats trading between Canadian ports, but by order in council they have been allowed to unload their cargo at a Canadian port provided they do not return to the Canadian head of the lakes for a second cargo. Nevertheless they have evaded the law and returned with another cargo. This has been drawn to the attention of the government for some time, and the lack of any action on their part forces one to the conclusion that, in a way, they favour American interests to the detriment of Canadian. During the past summer it was repeatedly drawn to the attention of the government that American boats were unloading grain and returning to the Canadian read of the lakes for a second cargo. If this was a matter of urgency and expediency, well and good; but it is not. This practice works to the detriment of Canadian labour and Canadian shipping interests. When the government could give no satisfactory answer as to whether or not this practice was to continue, I sent the following telegram to the Commissioner of Customs at Ottawa:

[Mr. A. E. Ross.]

Understand United States vessels loading storage cargoes of grain at Canadian ports under order in council 1599 and have unloaded at Canadian ports in Georgian bay and at Port Colborne, and returned for second cargo at Canadian head of lakes. Will you please state whether this is done in violation of the statute and order in council, or whether special permission was given, and if so whether given by further order in council. Vessels named so far are Berwind and Charles Hutchinson, but others are following. Please telegraph and confirm with full particulars.

In reply I received the following telegram:

Order in council provide that certain vessels may load grain for winter storage and unload such cargo at Canadian or United States port on resumption of navigation next spring, or unload at shipper's option at any such ports on or before opening of navigation next year. There is reasonable ground for the shippers to believe that the provisions of the order in council have not been violated.

Again we telegraphed that this practice was going on to the disadvantage of Canadian shippers, Canadian working men and Canadian homes. What was the answer? I ask hon. members to pay attention to this telegram from the Commissioner of Customs:

Order in council was not passed on recommendation of minister of this department, and the department considers order in council permitted action which has taken place.

Does this mean that this divinely chosen body of administrators are not acting in co-operation, that the minister of one department can have an order in council passed which will violate the principles of another department, or that one minister is not in touch with his colleagues? The whole procedure savours of favoritism to our friends to the south, to the disadvantage of Canadian commercial interests. It may be that the government has a sufficient answer, but in the meantime commercial interests have suffered, not only for one season but for several, and Canadian bottoms which are doing their best to give a satisfactory service are being discriminated against in favour of American boats.

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): Is my friend objecting to American boats carrying Canadian grain?

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Not at all. The hon. member does not get the point.

Mr. MALCOLM: They load for winter storage.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): I think the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Malcolm) understands.

Mr. MALCOLM: If I may interrupt—I think my hon. friend will admit that the practice has been carried on for a great many years; it is not new at all.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): We have asked for the new order in council permitting it, if there is any. It has been drawn to the attention of the government not once but many times. If the practice has been carried on for a great many years, surely the minister will admit that it is time to stop it.

Mr. MALCOLM: I admit that what the hon. member says is quite true. It is a very old practice each fall for the shippers of grain to request the privilege of allowing American bottoms to store winter grain. Permission has always been granted by special order in council each fall. I agree with my hon. friend that Canadian shipping men have almost every year of which I have found a record protested as my hon. friend is protesting to-night. I have no objection to the protest. It is only a question of judgment whether it is wise to continue to allow that winter storage.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Again I would ask the minister to note that it is not a matter of storage; we are agreed on that. We let them all come in and bring their grain. The minister knows as well as I do, however, that it is a violation of the law for these boats to go back and get another cargo. There is where the Canadian law is violated.

Mr. MANION: After unloading in a Canadian port.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Yes; the minister knows that.

Mr. MALCOLM: I had not known of the violation; I am free to admit that.

Mr. MANION: It happened last year.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): These telegrams—

Mr. MALCOLM: I think my hon. friend will believe me when I say that this is the first I have heard of it.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): I cannot understand it. If this is a divinely chosen body cooperating with Providence, as the Prime Minister tells us, to produce prosperity in this country, and they do not know after a dozen telegrams or so, then I do not know how much we can assign to Providence and how much to the men in the government.

Mr. STEVENS: Ninety-nine and a half per cent.

Mr. MALCOLM: Make it three-quarters.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): I have endeavoured to bring forward some new matters and I have gone into a fairly complete analysis of them. But let me say this before I sit down. While we say that the budget has done some good, we contend that there is displayed in the budget and in the policy of the government a total disregard for the development of this country. There is a total want of care or interest in providing work in this country, and I have shown that if we were to adopt a policy of the kind I have indicated we could save millions and have a greater population. In the budget which has been brought down one cannot help feeling just as our good friend from Stanstead (Mr. Baldwin) feels, in treating things: why take a little bit of a bite? The governement have made out of this sales tax now enough money to represent all the reduction in the debt. If the sales tax had been properly administered, if it had been properly arranged, it would have been a good thing. It was intended that the sales tax should guard against an excessive expenditure of money in this country. But it has not been administered along that line; it has not been used for that purpose. And the government, I repeat, have already made out of the sales tax enough money to equal every bit of surplus they have had in the past. The time has come, therefore, when this parliament should take a firm stand and say that instead of taking off a cent or half a cent or a quarter the government should abolish the sales tax.

The government have merely taken off two or three little things that they themselves put on. They put on these extra nuisance taxes. They criticized the old sales tax, but when they came in they imposed a heavier sales tax. Now the time has come, I say, when instead of taking off that little bit we should insist that the Minister of Finance abolish the whole thing and throw it into the scrap can.

There is another feature in which there is unfair treatment. The government have made a great ado about changes in postage. Sometimes these changes are put through in the budget and sometimes by order of the Great Executioner. At any rate, they are little bits of things. But the minister is yet holding over the cities that little war tax on postage, and I think the time has now come when he should decide to put back the postage in the city to what it was in pre-war days, just as it is in all other parts of Canada.

It seems to me that this budget, or any other budget, should pronounce some definite policy of debt reduction. I believe the Minister of Finance, in regard to interest and refunding, got his only hint from the speech —the only constructive speech—delivered by the hon. member for Toronto East Centre (Mr. Matthews). Following that speech there was a little bit of refunding and saving of interest, and if the minister went a little further and listened to another speech from the same hon. gentleman he might come back with some definite policy of debt reduction.

I submit further that the next budget should be a fair budget; it should not be a one-sided budget. It should set forth our railway financing. Whether it is a debt on the country or whether it is not, it should be shown in the budget and not be hidden, leading us to believe that we are saving a lot of money and getting out of debt when as a matter of fact, according to the interpretation given by some of our financial position, we are not. These are some suggestions which I should like to see taken into account.

Again, between the address and the budget we should now have got down to some stated immigration policy. This government, since it has come into power, has had twenty immigration policies. And has it completed any one of them? What the policy is to-day no one knows. We are going along in a bog and fog and nobody knows. At one time we are told that no obstacle is placed in the way of our blood relations coming from Great Britain; but let one of these fellows offer to come here and he has to go to a great deal of trouble, answer a great many questions, fill in a number of forms, and pass medical examinations which in my opinion are an insult to the medical profession of Great Britain. It is an insult to them that we should send our medical men over there, as much as to say that they could not do the work properly. If the roster doctors whom we had before were given distinct instructions from the department, they could do the work. At any rate, there are still obstacles in the way to anyone from Great Britain who can pay his way to Canada.

I submit therefore, that we should have a well defined policy laid down by this government. But what have they done? We hear a lot about status, ambassadorial pilgrimages, appointments and so forth. But what have we in the way of a straight agricultural policy? The Minister of Agriculture made a very delightful trip over to France. May I tell him something in the way of economy as practised over there? I should like him to have looked over conditions in France. Had he done so he would have found that the Department of Agriculture in that country looks after its people. Wherever they find over-production in any commodity they immediately go into the raising of something else. It seems to me it is a good thing that the Prime Minister never put into practice to the full extent the promise he made this country that free potatoes would be brought in. What a calamity that would have been to the province of the Postmaster General, where potatoes are selling to-day at thirty cents a bag. In France, had the minister studied the situation there, he would have found a department of agriculture which is an adviser and a parent to the agricultural people of that country, keeping them in touch with conditions, advising them what to raise and how to dispose of their surplus. But in this country there is no policy of any sort along the lines of agriculture.

[Mr. A. E. Ross.]

On motion of Mr. Manion the debate was adjourned.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Friday, March 8, 1929

The house met at three o'clock.

PRIVILEGE—Mr. CAHAN

Mr. C. H. CAHAN (St. Lawrence-St. George): Mr. Speaker, I wish to refer to a matter of privilege, and with the leave of the house I should like to make a short explanation of a personal character in connection therewith. In the Mail and Empire of Toronto of yesterday's date there appears an article from its staff reporter, Mr. T. H. Blacklock, whose name is attached thereto, and which is entitled:

> Cahan at odds with his party. Member for St. Lawrence-St. George against provincial ownership. Water-power issue.

I wish to say that there is not a shadow of a scintilla of truth in the implications of those headlines. In so far as this article relates to water-powers within the older provinces, I have always contended, and I stated in the debate on Wednesday last, that I believe that, subject to the incidental rights of riparian owners, these water-powers are vested in the crown in the right of the respective provincial governments, and that they are subject to the exclusive legislative jurisdiction of the respective legislatures of the several original provinces of this Dominion. In so far as this article refers to water-powers, which form a part of the natural resources of the three prairie provinces, I have constantly and consistently advocated that these water-powers should be vested in the crown in the right of the three prairie provinces respectively, and be subject to the exclusive legislative jurisdiction of their respective legislatures.

At the National Conservative convention at Winnipeg I assisted in the preparation and final revision of a resolution which I strenuously advocated in the resolutions committee, and subsequently in open convention, and which, as unanimously adopted by that convention, reads as follows:

> That in the best interests of confederation and the economic development of western Canada, the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta should be granted their natural resources, free from restrictions, within the legislative competence of the parliament of Canada, with provisions for the maintenance and administration of the school lands and school land endowment funds for educational purposes according to the laws of the respective provinces, but in compliance with the letter and spirit of the constitution, and that the claims of those provinces to compensation for loss for lands and resources alienated, and the claims of any other provinces in connection with this subject, should be investigated with a view to a satisfactory and equitable adjustment.

On February 18 last I advocated in this house the adoption by the house of a resolution introduced on that day, which was expressed in exactly the same terms as the Winnipeg resolution which I have just quoted. That resolution was approved and accepted by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) and passed unanimously by this house, and thereby, in my opinion, became an expression of the public policy of this government, of this house and of this country.

On Tuesday last, March 5, an amendment was moved to the Woodsworth motion, then pending, by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens), seconded by the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. Manion), which in effect provided that the water-powers in the three prairie provinces should be administered by the respective provinces, under legislation to be enacted by the legislatures of those provinces respectively, pending the final transfer to each province of its natural resources, in pursuance of the negotiations now pending between the Dominion government and the several respective governments of the prairie provinces.

This Stevens amendment was, in my opinion, entirely consistent with the resolution passed by the National Conservative convention at Winnipeg, and also with the resolution, expressed in the same terms, which was unanimously adopted by this house on February 18 last.

I then advocated in this house the adoption of the Stevens amendment. On the day on which that amendment was introduced it had previously been considered and, as I understand, unanimously approved by the Conservative members of this house, and, when introduced by the member for Vancouver Centre, it was accepted by the Prime Minister on behalf of his government and his party following.

I voted for the Stevens amendment in the form in which it was introduced, and in accordance with what I believe to be the spirit and intent of the Winnipeg resolution, and also the spirit and intent of the resolution unanimously adopted by this house on February 18 last. I afterwards voted against the subamendment which was subsequently moved by the hon. member for Nelson (Mr. Bird), a member of the Progressive party, because, according to my interpretation of the Bird amendment, I believed that it tended to place restrictions upon the respective legislatures of the three prairie provinces in the free exercise of their constitutional rights; and because I believed that the Bird amendment was not in accordance with the clearly declared policy of the Conservative party, and the clearly declared policy of this house that:

> The provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta should be granted their natural resources free from restrictions within the legislative competence of the parliament of Canada;

Provided that the subsequent legislative enactments of the legislatures of these provinces respectively, in respect of their water-powers, should be in compliance with the letter and spirit of the constitution by which they are governed.

Further on in this article Mr. Blacklock says:

> In the vote to-day to give the legislatures of the provinces the final say in the disposal of power sites, all the Conservatives, except C. H. Cahan (St. Lawrence-St. George, Montréal), and most of the Progressives supported this principle. Mr. Cahan's repeated disassociation of himself from the Conservative party has aroused considerable feeling.

My explanation of that statement is that it is entirely erroneous in saying that in voting against the Bird amendment I voted against giving to the legislatures of the provinces the final say with regard to the disposal of their power sites. If the Stevens amendment meant anything, it meant, in my opinion, that the final disposal of the power sites must be in compliance with any constitutional legislation which each of the said several provinces might enact. Furthermore, Mr. Blacklock states:

> It is fortunate that Mr. Cahan's repeated defection from the Conservative party indicates that the party is in harmony with the more progressive sentiment throughout the Dominion.

I do not know whether that is intended to refer to the progressive sentiment as represented by the hon. members to my left and by the hon. member for Nelson (Mr. Bird), who at times is an active and eloquent exponent of the views of that party, but Mr. Blacklock proceeds:

> His political vision does not extend beyond the island of Montreal, and what might have been an embarrassment from anyone else has really proved a valuable asset to his occasional leader and colleagues.

I do represent one of the central constituencies of the island of Montreal, and by way of explanation and emphasis I may say that the island of Montreal comprises one-ninth of the entire population of Canada; it has a population equal to one-half that of the three prairie provinces.

Mr. HEAPS: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I would like to know whether the population of the island of Montreal is relevant to a question of privilege.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. gentleman is giving a personal explanation on a question of privilege, and I believe he is quite within his rights.

Mr. CAHAN: As I was saying, the population of the island of Montreal is equal to one-half that of the three prairie provinces, which have an aggregate representation of fifty-four members in this house; it has a population twice as large as that of Manitoba, which has a representation of seventeen members in this house. Therefore, in the unavoidable absence of my colleagues from Montreal who sit on this side of the house, I am entitled to express here from time to time what I believe to be the sentiment and views of the people of that island. I do not know what is intended by Mr. Blacklock's reference to the occasional leader of the Conservative party, but I do not assume that the hon. member for Nelson, however eloquent he may be in this house, claims to be entitled at all times to the leadership of the Conservative party in this chamber.

Since I have been a member of this house I have always endeavoured to consider and discuss broad national issues and interests from a really national standpoint in the realization that the larger interests of the city and district of Montreal are really of national importance. I have been ever desirous of conciliating, when it has not been possible to eliminate, merely sectional prejudices and antipathies, and to that end I trust that, in my behaviour in this house since I have been a member, I have treated my colleagues here with the same courtesy and consideration they have ever accorded me. So I trust that the Mail and Empire will give at least equal prominence to my statement to that given the article by their staff correspondent in the press gallery of this house.

NAVIGATION AND WATER POWERS

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL JURISDICTION—REFERENCE TO SUPREME COURT

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I beg to lay on the table the questions submitted to the Supreme Court of Canada and the formal answers thereto in the matter of a reference as to the relative rights of the Dominion and the provinces, respectively, in relation to the proprietary interest in, and legislative control over, waters with respect to navigation and water-powers created or made available by or in connection with works for the improvement of navigation, and also the factum on behalf of the Attorney General of Canada in this matter. These documents were requested by the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Stewart), the day before yesterday.

Mr. HANSON: May I ask if the reasons for judgment are included in the papers just laid on the table, also whether or not these papers will be printed?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The question of printing is for the joint committee on printing to decide. With relation to my hon. friend's other question, the opinion and the reasons for the opinion are contained in the papers I have tabled.

Mr. W. F. KAY (Brome-Missisquoi): I beg to move, seconded by the hon. member for Queens (Mr. Sinclair), that the report of the Department of Agriculture and Colonization for the year 1928 be referred to the select standing committee on agriculture and colonization.

Motion agreed to.

BEAUHARNOIS POWER PROJECT

ANNOUNCEMENT OF APPROVAL OF PLANS AND SITE UNDER NAVIGABLE WATERS PROTECTION ACT

Hon. J. C. ELLIOTT (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I should like to obtain the unanimous consent of the house to make a statement on a matter of public interest and importance. I desire to inform the house that an order has been passed to-day by His Excellency in council approving the plans and site of the Beauharnois Light, Heat & Power Company, as set forth in the company's application to the Department of Public Works. As the house no doubt will desire immediate information with respect to the essential features of the approval granted, I would ask its permission to make a statement which I have prepared with regard to the more important conditions.

Under authority of an act and of an order in council of the province of Quebec a lease was given on June 23, 1928, by the government of that province to the Beauharnois Light, Heat & Power Company. This lease grants to the company the rights of the province of Quebec to such part of the hydraulic powers of the St. Lawrence river as can be developed between lake St. Francis and lake St. Louis through a canal having a maximum capacity of 40,000 cubic feet per second. It contains the provision that if the approbation required from the federal government be not obtained within twelve months from the signature of the lease it may be cancelled by the government of Quebec. The company applied to the Minister of Public Works for the approval of the plans and site of the works proposed under the Navigable Waters Protection Act. In the approval given it is expressly stated that nothing is granted except approval of the proposed works under the provisions of the Navigable Waters Protection Act, and that the approval shall take effect only after an agreement, incorporating the conditions enumerated in the order in council and satisfactory to the Minister of Public Works, has been executed between the company and His Majesty the King.

After an exhaustive investigation a committee of Dominion government engineers reported that the works proposed in the plans and application filed by the company would not in their opinion impede or interfere with navigation if the conditions recommended by the committee are met by the company; and that if the works are constructed in accordance with the plans and conditions they can be efficiently utilized in connection with and as part of a feasible and economical scheme for the deep waterway development of the St. Lawrence river. In this connection I would draw the attention of hon. members to the following conditions which are part of the order in council:

> Whenever the governor in council shall decide to construct locks and appurtenant works to connect lake St. Louis with the canal reach for navigation purposes, His Majesty shall have the right, by his servants or agents to enter upon and use any part of the applicants' lands, buildings, property or works which may be required for the purposes of such construction, and for the operation and maintenance of such locks and appurtenant works when completed, and the applicants shall convey to His Majesty, the King, in the right of the Dominion of Canada, free of all cost or encumbrance, the title to the necessary land sufficient for the site of such locks and appurtenant works, and no claim for any indemnity whatsoever owing to loss or inconvenience to works, operations, installations or distribution of power will be made by the company arising out of the construction of temporary or permanent works by His Majesty, either at the entry works, along the course of the stream, or at or below the proposed works.

In other words, should the government at any future time desire to use the canal constructed by the Beauharnois power company as a part of the greater St. Lawrence shipway, this substantial link, estimated to cost $16,000,000, will become the property of the people of Canada free of cost. Another condition of the order in council is as follows:

> The approval hereby granted is given upon and subject to the condition that in case it should be judicially determined that His Majesty in the right of the Dominion is entitled to any of the power now or hereafter to be developed in connection with the works the subject of this approval or any works hereafter to be constructed by virtue hereof by the company or which His Majesty may construct then and in such event the company shall pay to His Majesty in the right of the Dominion such compensation by way of annual rental as the governor in council may from time to time determine, and shall comply with all rules and regulations which may be made by the governor in council with respect to the rentals to be paid to the government, the sale of power, the regulation of price thereof and the other matters now referred to in the regulations respecting Dominion water-powers.

Approval by the government of the application, is given subject to conditions which also include provisions,—

That the diversion of water authorized by the province of Quebec shall be effected by and at the cost of the company by the construction of a canal 600 feet wide on the bottom, by 27 feet in depth at low stage, and at a rate of flow not exceeding 2¼ feet per second; that the canal, the embankments, walls, and retaining structures shall be constructed and maintained by the company in accordance with the standards of the international joint board of engineers and that the canal and every part thereof shall be constantly available for public navigation to the same extent as that provided in the case of the new Welland ship canal;

That the company shall convey to the crown in the right of the Dominion of Canada, free of all cost or encumbrance, whatever property may be selected by the government for the purpose of sites for locks, approach works, guard piers and appurtenant works leading from the canal to lake St. Louis, and shall provide such sites for aids to navigation and public wharves as may be determined by the government to be necessary;

That the company shall provide, free of cost to the government, electric power for the operation of locks and bridges and for lighting along the canal up to 3,500 horsepower per annum maximum demand, and in case additional power be required the company shall supply it at a rate not exceeding that paid by the customer having the lowest contract price with the company;

That the company shall not commence construction work until detailed plans have been approved, and the company shall whenever required provide any additions to, alterations in or removal of the works to preserve and maintain navigation on the river St. Lawrence;

That the works shall be constructed by the company to the satisfaction of the engineer or engineers authorized for such purpose by the minister, and the decision of the engineer or engineers shall be final and conclusive upon all questions which may arise in connection with the construction of the works;

That the works approved or made shall at no time raise the natural level of the water in the river St. Lawrence above the international boundary, or in any way contravene the terms of the Boundary Waters Treaty of 1909 or the treaty of Washington of 1871;

That the company shall save the Dominion government harmless should the construction of the work affect rights heretofore existing, and shall be responsible for and must compensate for any damage caused by the works to other companies or interests owning or operating water-powers on the St. Lawrence river, and shall settle all claims of riparians and other persons who may sustain any loss or damage in connection with the construction of the company's works;

That His Majesty shall at any time be entitled to acquire and take over the canals, works, buildings, erections or other property of the company constructed under or pursuant to or in lieu of the works shown in the plans approved by the order in council, and the lands upon which they are made or constructed, or such part thereof as in the opinion of the governor in council may be necessary, paying therefor such compensation as may be agreed upon between the parties or as may be fixed by the Exchequer Court of Canada in case of failure to agree; but in fixing such compensation consideration shall not be given to rights or privileges acquired by the company under or by virtue of the order in council granting approval;

That the company shall submit to all regulations imposed in the interest of navigation, and that the works approved or any modifications therein hereafter approved shall be operated in conformity with the requirements of navigation on the St. Lawrence river, and the water to be used shall not at any time exceed the maximum quantity of 40,000 cubic feet per second;

That in any question arising upon the application the settlement thereof shall be governed by the full recognition of the dominant interest of navigation and the necessity of reserving therefor all or any requisite parts of the natural flow of the St. Lawrence river.

From the foregoing it will be apparent that in granting its approval under the Navigable Waters Protection Act, of the plans and site of the Beauharnois Light, Heat and Power Company, the department has fully and adequately protected the public interest both with respect to conditions as at present existing and as regards all possible future development of a greater St. Lawrence shipway.

In order that hon. members may have full information at the earliest possible moment I desire to lay on the table the order in council passed to-day.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Will my hon. friend lay on the table the complete order in council?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes.

Mr. SPEAKER: They are laid on the table as "command papers," as they are termed in England. They will appear in the votes and proceedings.

Mr. E. J. GARLAND (Bow River): Yesterday the Minister of Public Works was good enough to inform me, in answer to my question of the previous day, that I would find in a return of May 30 last the application of the Beauharnois Light, Heat and Power Company. On examining that return I find that while it is true the original application is included in those papers, the modified application is not included. That is naturally so, because it was not modified until, I think, some time in January of this year. In view of the importance of this question I desire to ask the Minister of Public Works whether he will be good enough to table the report and records of the public hearings that took place in January with regard to this matter before three ministers of the crown.

Mr. ELLIOTT: The evidence and the full report referred to by my hon. friend is being included in a return which I hope to be able to table within a day or so.

SEVEN SISTERS FALLS

INQUIRY BY ROYAL COMMISSION

Mr. M. N. CAMPBELL (Mackenzie): I would like to ask the Solicitor General whether the judges of the royal commission of Manitoba require authority from the Department of Justice to go to Los Angeles and, if they do, whether that authority has been granted?

Hon. LUCIEN CANNON (Solicitor General): No request has been sent to the Department of Justice. I might also point out that the administration of justice is in the hands of the provincial government, not the federal government.

THE BUDGET

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON THE ANNUAL FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The house resumed from Thursday, March 7, consideration of the motion of Hon. J. A. Robb (Minister of Finance) that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of ways and means, and the proposed amendment thereto of Hon. Hugh Guthrie.

Hon. R. J. MANION (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, before beginning my remarks on the budget I should like to say that a few moments ago we had displayed to us by the government an instance of government by order in council—that form of government which was so much denounced for many years throughout the country by the present Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King)—on a matter which is of the utmost importance to parliament and to the people of Canada, the Beauharnois power project. Yet while parliament is sitting, it has never been given one minute to discuss this question.

While on personal grounds I have, as we all have, a high regard for the Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb), I am sure that he will forgive me if I do not use up much of my forty minutes in paying him empty compliments, for I intend to show so far as I am able, that the budget is largely a chronicle of events in which our fields, forests, fisheries and mines have played the parts of performers while the Minister of Finance has been merely a spectator in the wings or one of the audience, once a year getting an opportunity to come to the front of the stage, point out to the world that his is the directing mind, and then modestly stand back and accept the applause. I do not blame him for this, because it has been the habit of ministers of finance of all parties. Therefore I shall criticize not his action, but his inaction. I shall criticize him not for any positive proposals, but rather for his lack of positive proposals for the betterment of our national welfare.

There are in the budget some matters with which we must all be pleased. For example, the fact that the debt is somewhat less cannot help pleasing us all. One matter which the Minister of Finance did not point out and which is due, not particularly to the present government but to previous governments and this as well, is that four-fifths of the debt is owed to the people of Canada, and therefore four-fifths of the interest goes into the pockets of our people. I congratulate the Minister of Finance on the fact that there are in the budget no tariff changes of any moment; in other words, that tinkering with the tariff which we have condemned for a long time has been done away with for some time at least, and that famous cry of "The death knell of protection" is, to paraphrase an expression of Disraeli's on another occasion, not only dead but damned.

The budget is largely a negative affair. There are in it few positive proposals. A few of the nuisance taxes have been removed and one positive proposal that has received great applause is the reduction in the sales tax from three to two per cent. I am not altogether sure that a one per cent reduction in the sales tax will make any particular difference in the cost of living. When one considers that it means one cent in a purchase of a dollar, or five cents in a purchase amounting to five dollars, I am not certain that you will find goods in the stores or on the marts of the country marked down on this account. If the Minister of Finance had removed the whole tax, that might have had some effect.

I cannot help thinking the minister has left whatever changes he wants to make, for next year when he is trusting he will have an opportunity of making a popular preelection budget. If I am right in that conclusion—and I think I am—the Minister of Finance is worrying not so much about the business of the country as about the business of keeping his party in power.

The government and the minister have had exceedingly good luck because, without any effort on their part, our crops have been abundant, our mines prosperous, our fisheries teeming and our forests generously productive. For example, if we compare 1921 with the year that has just passed, agriculture has increased in production by from $500,000,000 to $600,000,000, and our mines during the same period have increased in production by $100,000,000. Six or seven hundred million dollars for those two items alone make a vast amount of money to assist in increasing the prosperity of the country. Perhaps it is no wonder the government are more or less satiated and treat Providence rather as we sometimes treat our poor relations. I suppose they hope that memories are short in this country and that the people will forget those deplorable years from 1922 to 1925, the first four years of government by the party now in power, when hundreds of thousands of our people were compelled to go across the line for opportunities denied them at home, an exodus which unfortunately is not yet entirely stemmed. Even at that our prosperity has been by no means general. That has been evidenced by speeches made in the house by members of the Labour party and members of the agricultural group in the corner to my left.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): And the acting leader of the opposition (Mr. Guthrie).

[Mr. Manion.]

Mr. MANION: I quote my hon. friends to my left because we may be said to be talking politics, which, of course, my hon. friends over there never do.

Conditions are not a criterion of the status of a government. What a government has done to bring about the conditions is the real test to which this or any other government must submit. I submit that this government has been doing nothing to bring about the conditions which prevail in this country. It has been merely basking in the sunshine of a prosperity which it has done nothing to create. It has been practising a policy of masterly inactivity, a policy of drift. It has been virtually in a twilight sleep on all questions which are of vital concern to the people of this country: such questions as immigration, iron ore development, conditions among the fruit growers and dairy farmers, the shipping interests, industry in general, and economy perhaps in particular. All of these are questions upon which a strong policy is of vital importance to the people of Canada. Let me deal briefly, as I must in the short time at my disposal, with these questions.

So far as immigration is concerned, we all know that the government has had no policy on immigration worthy of the name. This is evidenced perhaps best by the fact that just recently W. T. R. Preston, a past organizer of the Liberal party, wrote a letter to the Winnipeg papers, and perhaps to other papers too, but I saw it in the Winnipeg papers, roundly condemning this government for its inactivity on immigration.

So far as the fruit and dairy industries are concerned, protests have been rained, not only on the press of this country, but upon the government, pointing out the great injury that is being done to the fruit and dairy industries by cheap outside competition.

So far as the iron and steel industries are concerned, the government has done nothing. We have hundreds, yes, thousands of millions of tons of iron ore scattered throughout this country from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and yet last year not one ton of Canadian iron ore was used in our steel plants or blast furnaces, and we imported nearly 2,500,000 tons of foreign ore to use in our steel plants and blast furnaces. Our Conservative provincial government in Ontario made a proposition to this government two or three years ago, that they put on a bounty to aid in the development of the Canadian iron ore resources, but unfortunately this government has refused to cooperate with them and remains in its twilight sleep so far as the development of iron ore is concerned, just as it has done in other matters.

In addition, we imported during the year ending January 31, last, $330,000,000 worth of iron and steel products, practically all of which could have been manufactured in the steel plants and blast furnaces of this country had they been given the opportunity to produce them by a proper tariff policy. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb) in his speech the other day spoke of the basic industries. I submit that outside of agriculture no industry in any country is more a basic industry than the iron and steel industry, and yet this government does nothing to help that industry in any way.

Let me give a few iron and steel products that we could produce in Canada, and of which we imported last year, largely from the United States, $330,000,000 worth.

Pig iron	$ 3,000,000
Rolling mill products	57,000,000
Tubes, pipes, fittings	4,500,000
Wire	3,746,000
Engines and boilers	18,500,000
Farm implements	40,600,000
Hardware and cutlery	4,700,000
Machinery	58,000,000
Tools	3,000,000
Vehicles (largely automobiles)	95,600,000

One might almost come to the conclusion, in view of these facts, that this government takes more interest in the producers in foreign countries than in our own producers.

In regard to our Canadian marine interests, they insist that the ships of the United States are treated much more generously in Canadian trade than are Canadian ships in American trade, more particularly last fall, as was pointed out last night in an excellent speech by my hon. friend from Kingston City (Mr. Ross). The shipyards of this country also point out that if a Canadian ship should get repairs made in a shipyard in the United States, our government gives it a much freer entry back to Canada than does the United States government give an American ship that is undergoing repairs in a Canadian shipyard when it goes back to the United States, and our shipyards are at a disadvantage in that respect.

Regarding economy, the estimates of 1925, the year which the Minister of Finance always brings into his budget discussions, showed that we had a total expenditure that year of $339,000,000. The estimates brought down this year total $391,000,000, an increase of $52,000,000, in spite of a decrease in interest amounting to $3,500,000; and we must remember that the supplementary estimates are still to be brought down, and will probably add another $15,000,000 or $20,000,000 to the expenditure. So that our total expenditure for the coming year will show an increase over last year, not over 1925, of about $25,000,000 or $30,000,000, and yet this government, with my right hon. friend at the head of it, say that they cannot help technical education, which is an absolute need in this country, because the Prime Minister says that it is a luxury.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Oh, no. I always said that it was a necessity.

Mr. MANION: I am afraid I shall have to correct my right hon. friend. The other day he said it was a luxury. Does he deny that?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: It is a necessity which the provinces ought to attend to.

Mr. MANION: I was afraid my right hon. friend had almost forgotten having said it, and so I looked it up. The Minister of Labour (Mr. Heenan) was introducing an amendment to the Technical Education Act, and I said:

> Mr. Manion: Is this one of the "unnecessary extravagances" to which the Minister of Finance referred a few minutes ago?
> Mr. Heenan: You will have to ask the Minister of Finance.
> Mr. Mackenzie King: It is a luxury, not an extravagance.

I submit that it is not a luxury; it is not an extravagance; it is a necessity in this country.

My hon. friend and acting leader (Mr. Guthrie) yesterday, in a magnificent speech, a speech which was a more complete and convincing indictment of this government than I have heard of any government in twelve years in this house, dealt with the question of economy very fully, but I wish to deal with it from another angle.

The Minister of Finance pointed out that of the expenditures which the government made for the year ending March 31, 1929, 42 per cent were war expenditures, amounting to $162,000,000, to use the minister's own figure, and the balance general expenditures, amounting to $223,000,000. I looked up the figures in the public accounts, and I find that $223,000,000 is just exactly $101,000,000 more than the general expenditures of this country amounted to during the last year of Sir Wilfrid Laurier's regime in 1911, and $40,000,000 more than our expenditures in the last year before the war, and almost five times as much as the expenditures of this country in 1900. And for the coming year the estimates will be very much increased.

As my hon. friend from South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie) pointed out yesterday, the Minister of Finance is right in saying that he has lowered in some cases the rate of taxation, but, nevertheless, he has increased the amount, the burden, of taxation. As far as one can see, economy is not a popular cry with this government. I believe they have come to the conclusion that economy is not popular politics, but it might be well in these times of abounding prosperity so far as our natural products are concerned, for the government to remember the example of Joseph, and lay aside something for the lean years that are bound to come after the present years of plenty.

Mr. YOUNG (Saskatoon): Are you expecting to get into power?

Mr. MANION: I expect we will be coming into power as soon as the people get a fair chance at this government, in view of the many things that are happening under this government of which the people disapprove.

Mr. YOUNG (Saskatoon): Those were the lean years you were thinking of.

Mr. MANION: My hon. friend is very boastful of the prosperous years we have enjoyed, due to nature's bounty; but we cannot count on good fortune always smiling on Canada, and if this government stays in power much longer there will probably be lean years.

Since conditions are fairly good in the country, how much better would they be if the government adopted a really Canada first policy. I am not referring merely to the old national policy, although I believe that it would have been a great benefit to this country. But I do suggest a strong, firm, courageous Canadian policy to safeguard our farmers particularly about the industrial centres of Ontario and Quebec, to help our fruit and dairy farmers, to aid our manufacturers and to utilize to the fullest extent our natural resources, which we have in such plentiful measure, but which under the policy of this government are not being utilized to the full advantage of Canada. The Prime Minister's attitude on matters such as this was well illustrated in a difference of opinion between him and the leader of the opposition in the debate on the address in regard to butter and farm implements. The Prime Minister pointed out, quite truthfully, that the manufacture of farm implements in Canada amounted last year to $42,000,000, but he forgot to point out that our importations of farm implements for the same period amounted to $40,000,000. I submit, that if those farm implements had been manufactured in the factories of Canada—and as they could have been without enhancing the price to our farmers, as pointed out by the hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie) yesterday—it could have kept busy many idle plants in my own constituency and elsewhere throughout the country and provided work and wages for our working men. So far as butter is concerned, the Prime Minister said that the importation of sixteen million pounds was not particularly harmful because the milk from our Canadian dairies was simply used in some other form. That may not matter to the milk, but it does matter to the dairy interests of Canada, and to our decreasing dairy herds.

Any reasonable man who considers the conditions of England and France must be struck by the contrast. In England they have a million and a half workmen unemployed, while in France they boast that there is no unemployment. In England they have free trade, or near free trade, while in France they have a strong, national protective policy. Any man who gives serious thought to the striking contrast in these respects must come to the conclusion that the reason is to be found in the tariff policies of the two countries. The only industries in England that are doing well to-day are those that are being protected under the Safeguarding of Industries Act; whereas the whole national life of France is progressive and prosperous. And so far as the United States is concerned we know that they have built up their immense wealth under the protective policy that they have had in force during the past seventy-five years.

The Minister of Finance dealt with our imports and exports, and pointed out that there has been a great increase in our trade. He is right. For the past twelve months we have had an increase in our trade of about $266,000,000; but unfortunately more than half of that amount, or $136,000,000 was with the United States, and was made up of an increase in imports to the tune of $118,000,000, as against an increase in our exports to the United States of only $18,000,000. And yet at the present time we buy from the United States $825,000,000 worth of goods; we sell to them only $492,000,000 worth. There is no other foreign country that treats us in the same manner as does the United States. All the other foreign countries taken together buy from us two and a half times as much as they sell to us; the United States alone sells to us practically twice as much as they buy from us.

Let me give the figures of the increase of our trade with the United Kingdom. Of course, I am not speaking of the United Kingdom as a foreign country, but as an outside country. Our trade with the United Kingdom last year increased to the extent of $45,000,000; our imports increased by only $8,000,000, but our exports by $37,000,000. Our total exports to the United States amounted to $492,000,000, to the United Kingdom $446,000,000—practically the same amount, and to the whole empire, including the United Kingdom $545,000,000—a larger export trade than with the United States. But our total imports from the United States were $825,000,000, whereas from the United Kingdom they were only $190,000,000—less than one-quarter the value of the goods we imported from the United States—and from the whole empire only $254,000,000, less than one-third of the value of our imports from the United States. Other foreign countries, I repeat, treat us with much more consideration than do the United States. They buy from us two and a half times what we buy from them. I jotted down a few figures in this connection. For example, the Argentine buys from us nearly twice as much as we buy from them; Belgium two and a half times as much; Brazil over three times as much; Chile nearly seven times as much; China over six times as much; Denmark twenty-five times as much; Germany two and a half times as much; Japan three and a half times as much; the Netherlands over five times as much; Portugal eight times as much. But the United States buys from us only one-half of the amount she sells to us.

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that it is time to give serious thought to this problem, and I regret that I have not the opportunity to go into it extensively on this occasion. Unfortunately our imports of $825,000,000 from the United States are composed largely of manufactured goods. For instance, $451,000,000 represents manufactured cottons, metals, books, chemical products, clay products, jute fabrics, preserved fruits, glass, leather, bacon and ham, musical instruments, canned vegetables and furniture, all of which we could have produced in Canada under a proper policy. These are only the large items and do not by any means exhaust the list of manufactured products that we import. In addition to the $451,000,000 worth of manufactured goods we imported $60,000,000 worth of "other commodities," and I venture to say that $59,000,000 of that $60,000,000 represents manufactured goods. So without doubt we import from the United States in manufactured goods two-thirds if not three-quarters of our total imports of $825,000,000, and they buy from us only $492,000,000 worth of goods. We are increasing factory employment over there, and decreasing it in this country. We are increasing work and wages in the United States, and decreasing work and wages in Canada. Many of our boys and girls who have been forced to go over there are earning and spending wages in the production of those goods in the United States that we ought to be manufacturing in Canada.

Last year we bought from the United States one hundred dollars per capita while they bought from us only four dollars per capita, and yet President Hoover succeeded to office on a policy of putting up greater tariff restrictions against the imports of the United States from Canada. Instead of making any such move, I submit that the United States should be searching for methods to increase their purchases from us. All they take from us willingly is our raw materials, which they cannot get along without, and the most precious possession we have, our boys and girls.

It is true that the United States investments in Canada amount to three billion dollars as against those of the United Kingdom of two billion dollars. But the United States are to a large extent getting possession of our natural resources, and I am not sure that that is altogether to our advantage in the long run.

There is nobody in this house more friendly disposed towards the United States than I am, but I am a Canadian first, and I say it is time for us to assert unequivocally our position in regard to our dealings with the United States, just as they assert unequivocally their position from day to day towards us. After all, we are not mendicants, we are not even in the helpless position in which we were when the Reciprocity treaty of 1854 was abrogated by the United States. We are a strong, virile people. We have attained to business maturity, and to-day Canada stands in total trade fifth among the trading nations of the world. We are surpassed only by the United Kingdom, the United States, Germany and France; we are ahead of such countries as Italy, the Netherlands, Japan, British India and the Argentine. As showing our importance to the United States, we are their very best customer, and undoubtedly they need our raw materials just as much as we need the raw materials we buy from them, and very much more than we need their manufactured goods. But, I repeat, President Hoover has recently announced a policy of increasing the United States tariff against our farmers beyond the rates of duty provided for by the Fordney and other tariffs since 1921, under which they charge a duty of 42 cents a bushel on our wheat, 2 cents a pound on our cattle, 8 cents a dozen on our eggs, $4 a ton on our hay, and 12 cents a pound on our butter. From 1921, due to these duties, there has been a steady decline in agricultural exports to the United States, the difference between that year and the present amounting to $22,000,000. I admit that a large proportion of that was wheat, but these tariffs have had a depressing effect on our whole agricultural production in Canada. The United States have been virtually waging against us a tariff war—if the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) will permit me to use the word war in relation to that country. Over there they have a policy whereby they can, by proclamation, raise their tariff against us over night. And in fact they do. I have not time to cite many instances in support of this statement, but it is a fact that cannot be denied that on a number of occasions, by proclamation, upon the recommendation of their tariff commission, they have suddenly advanced their tariff against this country.

Last year in my speech on the budget I gave an example of a ladies' wear manufacturer in Toronto who was selling some of his products in the Detroit market, and merely because he was competing—and competing only on a very small scale—with the Detroit producers they over night doubled their tariff against his exports to that country, with the result that his goods were excluded and he had to have them returned to his place of business in Toronto.

Now I have no quarrel with the United States on this account; they are attending to their business, as they have a right to do. But, I contend, it is time that we did the same; it is time that we also attended to our business. Let us discontinue our subservient attitude to the United States. Let us speak to them courteously but firmly. Let us speak plainly, pointing out what we believe to be good, hardheaded, business principles, because these are the only principles they understand. In reply to that, I am sure that we shall get their respect and a good deal more custom from them than we are receiving at the present time. Let us stand by our own interests and let them do likewise; let us have a policy for our own advantage. I am speaking in no unfriendly tone to the United States; I am taking no antagonistic attitude to them; but it is time for this government to be firm and frank with the United States in an endeavour to show them the error of their ways in their business relations with their best customer; for Canada is not only their best customer but she is the country in the British Empire which understands them better and is understood better by them than any other part of the British commonwealth of nations.

I am particularly emphatic at the moment because last evening we saw in the public press a despatch which I shall read. It is dated Washington, D.C., March 7, and is as follows:

> An extra session of the seventy-first congress for April 15 was called to-day by President Hoover.
> Specifically, the call proposes legislation for agricultural relief and for "limited changes in the tariff".
> The proclamation says that these matters cannot in justice to farmers, labourers, and manufacturers be postponed.

Very well. But, Mr. Speaker, I submit that we owe some justice to our own farmers, labourers and manufacturers. Regarding that announcement which I have just quoted, I wish to make a proposition which I believe would be supported by public opinion from one end of Canada to the other—and I submit this to the Prime Minister in all seriousness. My proposition is this: If at that special session called by President Hoover any more restrictions are placed upon our sales to the United States, this house, if it has not prorogued, should have tariff proposals laid before it by the government to lessen our purchases of all kinds from the United States; or, if we have prorogued, then we in turn should call a special short session to deal in a red-blooded Canadian manner with their tariff attitude towards us. The Prime Minister laughs.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I am not laughing. I was struck with the words red-blooded.

Mr. MANION: I do not know why the Prime Minister should smile; is it not a good expression?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: It is a good expression, yes, but it is not one that I should have used in the circumstances.

Mr. MANION: I think we have been taking too white-blooded an attitude towards the United States all the time, and I submit that it is time for us to stand up and take a good red-blooded Canadian attitude. I say further that a speech along the lines I have just suggested ought to have come ere this from the government benches. I am reading this because I do not wish to be misquoted. I respectfully suggest, therefore, that the Prime Minister during this debate should stand in his place in this house and speak as plainly on behalf of the people of Canada to the American people as Mr. Hoover speaks on behalf of the United States to us.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Does my hon. friend think that a speech on my part along the lines he suggests would help relations at the present time?

Mr. MANION: I think it would materially help them. Did President Hoover hesitate to make a speech along these lines the other day, especially when he proposes to call a special tariff session? I am sincere when I say that in my opinion such a speech as I suggest would have an absolutely good effect on the whole of our business relations with the United States.

Mr. CLARK: Why should we pussyfoot?

Mr. MANION: The question is in the language of the street, but at the same time it is absolutely pertinent and for my part I repeat it: Why should we pussyfoot? What we need in this country is a stronger Canadian policy than this government shows. To my mind the government's weakness is this, that it is dealing too much with international affairs and too little with internal affairs. It is time for the government to take less interest in Canadian status and more interest in the state of Canada. Let us have, Mr. Speaker, a Canada first policy; for upon the success of our whole economic life depends the retention within our country of our own boys and girls.

I do not think there need be any apologies for speaking as I am speaking towards the United States. If they do not accept this attitude as just, if they show resentment and a tendency towards further antagonism to this country, then in my opinion we must look elsewhere for the trade which we should get from the United States; we must look, within the empire, to those countries which have shown themselves friendly to us; we must look to other foreign countries which purchase two and a half times as much from us as the United States does. We must look to the countries across the Pacific which purchased from us last year, for example, sixty million dollars worth of produce. And even if we should lose some trade by adopting an attitude such as I here advocate, I submit that it would make for gain to this country in that we should acquire not only a greater Canadian self-reliance but a greater empire self-reliance than we display at the present time and would result in our using our own coal and iron rather than American, and manufacturing to completion our own products—in nickel and asbestos for instance—producing these things finished in our own factories instead of importing them from the United States.

But, Mr. Speaker, under any circumstances, in the interest of the national welfare of Canada, this government should awaken to its opportunities to develop Canadian economic life by means of a virile, courageous Canada first policy—a policy which would retain our urban markets for Canadian farmers; which would develop our own resources instead of having them shipped to the United States to be manufactured into finished products; which would keep our own factories engaged rather than the factories of the United States; which would utilize our own Canadian iron ore and coal, instead of importing these commodities; which would encourage the fruit and dairy industries of Canada instead of destroying them; which would foster Canadian shipbuilding and shipping in preference to foreign enterprise in this direction; and, finally, which would build up a truly great nation north of the international boundary instead of south of it, giving an opportunity to us to leave to our children a prosperous, progressive country in all lines of endeavour, where they and their children might remain to enjoy a free and law-abiding democracy.

Hon. W. R. MOTHERWELL (Minister of Agriculture): I have a very pleasant task to perform this afternoon, in extending congratulations to my colleague the Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb) as well as to the acting leader of the opposition (Mr. Guthrie); because it is not very often that I have an opportunity to extend congratulations over the way, and I am going to take advantage of that opportunity now that I have it.

Any Minister of Finance who can keep on year after year reducing taxes and increasing surpluses, throwing away, as hon. gentlemen suggest, large amounts of revenue—estimated in the present budget, we are told, at $25,000,000—and at the same time reducing the national debt of the country—any Minister of Finance who can do this is, I say, one that should be retained in the service of the country just so long as he is prepared to stay.

My hon. friend the acting leader of the opposition opened his remarks by expressing gratitude for the unbounded prosperity we are enjoying at the present time. I am glad he has improved on the terms used by his own leader when present, who always qualifies such a statement by observing that we have been enjoying in the last few years a temporary prosperity due to good crops and mining activities, burrowing into the earth and turning out riches, and due to the depletion of our forests, and so forth. That is the story, always with some mournful dirge associated with it. My hon. friend began in a different tone, but before he got very far in his speech he also commenced to sing the same doleful dirge. He qualified his remarks about the unbounded prosperity which prevails, but what is the meaning of that word "unbounded"? It means without bounds, without reservations, without measurements, if you like, but he began to make a series of measurements, describing the country as being in a vortex of extravagance, with the farmers in need of relief as they are in the United States, and wound up his remarks by proposing that we give them this relief. If I understand the situation, all the yard-sticks by which the prosperity of a country is measured go to show that we have this prosperity in Canada, not only in the cities but throughout the country generally. It is true that prosperity never touches the pockets of every man; always there will be some people who have had misfortune, as there will be some parts of the country which will not have good crops, and with the exception of those who follow the sea there is no other occupation which I know of which has to contend with the vicissitudes of the climate like agriculture. So long as that is the case some portions of Canada always will be less prosperous than other portions, but speaking generally and judging from the bank clearings, the carloadings, the building permits and the railway returns, always a big factor, or by anything you like, we can reasonably come to the conclusion that we are enjoying an amazing period of prosperity considering the situation which existed when this government came into power. In 1922 everything was depressed; our railways were in a crippled condition where now they are strong and healthy, and we have the same story in connection with other matters.

Now I would like to deal with some of the remarks of my hon. friend the acting leader of the opposition. He stated that prosperity is to be found only in the cities, but was he not putting the cart before the horse? Does not the prosperity of the cities depend upon the buying power of the surrounding communities? While I feel like complimenting him upon the style of his address I am afraid I cannot compliment him upon much of the contents. It was a strong, vigorous presentation of a bad cause; I might also compliment those who surround him upon the way in which they upheld their leader, but when my hon. friend admitted the prosperity in the urban communities he inferentially admitted that the buying power of the country communities surrounding the cities must have been increased.

Then he described in very strong words the extravagances of this government. Surely if that were the case someone would have heard of it before. I have heard governments called tightwads because they did nothing in the way of developing the country, constructing new buildings and so on, but I have never heard them called extravagant either throughout the country or in the press except by hide-bound Tory papers which I do not believe would be pleased by any budget brought down by this party. However, the rank and file of the people are well satisfied with the budget; they do not object to any expenditure on railways and so on, nor do they object to the beautification of our capital city. My hon. friend referred to some of the extravagances in this city; how many people outside of politics really begrudge the money spent to beautify our one and only capital city? Furthermore, where could we start to beautify it except where we have already started? Some day these other buildings will be quite old, and then that park can be extended right along Wellington street. Canada is only starting its second sixty-year period; a hundred years ago this city hardly existed and consequently we are still in swaddling clothes to-day. We must look to the Ottawa of the to-morrow in connection with these matters.

Then my hon. friend referred to the Canadian building in London. Where would he have our staff housed? Should they be put on the street or should they be cared for in a proper building? If we are to take our part in the affairs of the world we must be prepared to provide proper accommodation for those who represent us and we must be as good as the other fellow. We have passed through our shack days, our colonial days, but our friends opposite want to linger a while; they do not want us to take a position commensurate with our progress up to the present. Then my hon. friend referred to our embassy at Washington. If there is anything for which the Prime Minister of this country is to be commended I think it is his policy in connection with these embassies. I heard that policy enunciated at a meeting in Toronto, that hod-bed of Toryism, and it met with the complete approbation of a large audience at Hart house in addition to being radioed all over the country. Yet my hon. friend, with all his ability, his enterprise and his high faculty of presentation, is still antediluvian in this respect; he wants us to go out and play hobo among the nations of the world, just to make a little party advantage, in order to play to the galleries and leave the impression that we are doing something extravagant when he knows very well we are doing the proper thing at the proper time. The same thing applies to Tokyo, and beyond that I will not follow my hon. friend.

Now I come to the Australian treaty, which is an old favourite, and before I forget it I remember that my hon. friend who has just taken his seat spoke of the possibility of extending our trade with other nations and other parts of the empire, yet one of the strongest arguments advanced yesterday was against the extension of our trade with Australia and New Zealand. So they sing different songs, but they are all directed against the government. My hon. friend the acting leader of the opposition dealt with the Australian treaty, but forgot to take up one particular section of it; I do not believe he meant to misrepresent the treaty, but simply forgot about this section. I refer to section 4, which is as follows:

That subject to the provisions of the customs tariff, 1907, the governor in council may, by order in council, extend the said advantages to goods the produce or manufacture of any British country.

That is as sweeping as the hon. member for Fort William seems to wish. That is contained in the act itself, and I am afraid my hon. friend overlooked it when he was making his point.

Now may I refer to our importations. The reason we have importation of anything is because we want it and are prepared to pay for it. During the administration of all governments since 1896 we have had a certain amount of antipodean butter come to Canada when we were short. In 1896 the amount was very small, only about 7,000 pounds; ten years later it had increased to about 16,000 pounds and by 1907 the importation had grown to about 205,000 pounds. Then, when the Liberals went out of office in 1911, the importation of this butter had increased to a little less than 1,000,000 pounds, from the two antipodean countries. In 1912, the first year after the advent of the Tory administration, this importation had increased from less than a million pounds to about 2,241,000 pounds, but no one on this side of the house took a cat-fit over that increase, because we were getting good New Zealand butter when we required it. Now let us see how it grew under the administration of our good friends opposite, who abhor this importation so much. I have given the importation which occurred during their first year in office; that had nothing to do with their coming into power, but there was no great hullabaloo about this importation such as we hear now. In 1913 it grew to about 6,000,000 pounds and yet nothing was said except by a gratified country over the fact that they were getting good butter for their tables instead of the vile stuff which was introduced later on in the form of intestinal fats called oleomargarine. Then in 1914 the importation reached almost 7,000,000 pounds; horror of horrors, what was to happen next? Yet there was not a squeal from the Tories. From that time on it began to grow less; in 1915 it was about 5,000,000 pounds; it grew smaller and smaller until 1924, when it was about 1,296,000 pounds and then, co-incident with the introduction of the Australian treaty, if you like, but also co-incident with many other things, the importations from New Zealand grew larger.

The claim has been made that every time you have a large crop in the west the butter production goes down. That is not the case; butter production goes down in the periods of big crops if it is not a profitable undertaking. The largest inflation in butter production in the west occurred in 1923 and again this year. So far this year's production will be double what it was at the same time last year, showing that the production of butter is due to the change in conditions out there, such as better winter weather, better fodder, improved cattle and more efficient administration of creameries. The point has been raised that we are getting New Zealand butter. When our Conservative friends were in power, and coincident with the time, my hon. friend went into the government of that day, during the last year of that administration, in 1920, we imported very little New Zealand butter, but 8,450,000 pounds of oleomargarine were manufactured in this country and 6,497,000 pounds were imported. Our friends are hollering about importing New Zealand butter, but they evidently preferred to feed the people of Canada oleomargarine rather than good New Zealand butter. Personally, I prefer butter rather than the mixture of intestinal fats and southern oils which were brought in from the southern states of the United States. The oleomargarine consumed in Canada during 1920, the last year of my hon. friends' administration, amounted to almost as much as the total importations of butter from New Zealand last year. That product did not possess the nutrition and vitamines, or the calories if you like, of the good butter which is given to our people today. My hon. friends' administration did not feed the people of Canada on good New Zealand butter during that time of shortage. You have to consider the whole policy contained in a treaty rather than take one isolated item. When you make a treaty with a country you cannot expect to get it for nothing. You give them what they want, as nearly as possible, and in exchange they give you certain things. You have to give and take; you have to barter in negotiating treaties of this kind. Great umbrage was raised over giving them preference on their raisins, but if my hon. friends think they are going to extend the trade of Canada by a one-sided basis of dealing, they are not going to get anywhere.

Mr. McGIBBON: What did we get from New Zealand?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We gave them the preferred nations clause. It was contained in the treaty and if my hon. friends did not criticize it at the time the treaty was approved then they were negligent.

I think my hon. friend (Mr. Guthrie) made something of a faux pas with regard to his reference to the grain trade. He stated two gentlemen came down from the west and poured out their lamentations about what was happening with regard to the grain trade due to mixing and all the problems incidental thereto. The whole thing began in 1912, the first session of the government of the party my hon. friend now belongs to—he was sitting on the Liberal side of the house in 1912—when an amendment to the Canada Grain Act was brought down, and under the guise of granting sample markets, this system of mixing has been going on for years. When this government attempted to correct it in 1925, or surround that vicious practice with safeguards which would eventually eliminate it, the act was changed by friends of my hon. friends opposite in the upper chamber of this parliament, to the detriment of Canadian grain. That is the story with regard to that. It was the same during the last decade of the last century, from 1890 to 1900, when the Conservative party were in power. No measures of protection were attempted until after the Liberal government came into power, and then the Manitoba Grain Act was put into effect in 1900. The only remedial legislation along these lines has been enacted at the instance of the Liberal party.

I rather compliment my hon. friend on the illustration he drew in comparing the alacrity of Saul of Tarsus on his way to Damascus to that with which he imagined we would be acting in the course of a year or two with regard to tariff matters. He put it rather well and rather pleasantly and complacently, and took all the fun he could out of it, which fun I would not deny to him at all. But the alacrity of Saul of Tarsus was nothing compared to that of Guthrie of Wellington when he was on his way to the treasury benches in 1917. Talk about conversions, there has been nothing like it in the history of this country.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I came in pretty good company and on a pretty good cause.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Saul's cause was good, there is no question about that.

Mr. GUTHRIE: And so was mine.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Saul's conversion has profoundly affected the world ever since, but I do not think it was a Damascus call that my hon. friend responded to.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Or Mr. Fielding or Mr. Graham?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I am talking about my hon. friend.

Mr. GUTHRIE: They came too.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: If my hon. friend wants to be classified with Mr. Fielding, why did he not do as Mr. Fielding did? I want to remove any concern my hon. friend may have about our possible conversion. We do not need any conversion on this question. We have a leader who faced a crisis in 1926, and the country singled him out as a man who was capable of leading this country and this party through any crisis.

Mr. ERNST: Was that 1926 or 1914?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I will repeat it, now that my hon. friend has been so clever. I said in 1926. The hon. acting leader of the opposition did not mention it, but I will; the whole policy of British preference is within the four walls of the policy inaugurated by the Liberal party. We can meet almost any emergency or any crisis which may arise through any possible change.

There is another matter I must point out to him. In his desire to assist agriculture he has a habit of making gestures towards that corner of the house where agriculture is supposed to be; he sort of coquets with them. Why did he not do something for them when budgets began to come down after this government came into power? In the first one in 1922, there was not a big change, but surely the smaller it was the better it would please my hon. friend. In 1923 we made a further advance in lessening the cost of the implements of production. In 1924 we made a decided advance in that regard, but did we get any support from my hon. friends? Not at all; they roared all the louder the more we did for agriculture.

I should like to draw attention to the specific advance in policy which this government made when we extended the reduction downwards, not only to the implements of the farm, but to implements used in developing all the natural resources of Canada. That was a distinct advance in policy and it had a distinct effect upon the development of those resources, because everybody engaged in developing them were able to go forth every morning with good, efficient tools at the least possible cost. That was a policy which brought results and had something to do with the development and prosperity that exist to-day. Why did my hon. friend not join with us in that? If he still had, shall I say, the red blood of Liberalism in his veins, he should have been able to support that; but apparently the longer he lives the more he gets into the stride of protection. At the Winnipeg Conservative convention, they were all so modest on the tariff question that neither prunes nor protection was mentioned lest the low tariff views of the western delegates would be offended. But they were back in Ottawa not five minutes until they began talking in terms of the national policy, and everything that was suggestive of protection. Then later, when the leader of the Conservative party, Mr. Bennett, was meandering around the maritime provinces and Quebec, he spoke of safeguarding industry, that old country phrase. Now my hon. friend comes out boldly—and let me give him credit for doing so—and says "protection". My hon. friend intends to talk about protection again and we are glad to know where he stands. Since a year ago last October my hon. friends have just been mincing around. In their hearts they have never changed; they have only changed their style, trying to be one thing while they are really another.

Now my hon. friend, at the end of his speech, brings in an amendment on the assumption that our farmers are in the same state as the United States farmers. That is a libel on our country. It is not so. The gross agricultural production of Canada this last year approached the $2,000,000,000 mark, the highest in our history. Our mines have produced abundantly and so have our forests. Every natural resource is buoyant and strong, and yet my hon. friend would like to leave the impression that conditions are bad and that he must come to the rescue. The people outside do not hold that impression. The hon. gentleman is just playing a part and he played it well yesterday, but he must not think it will fool anybody very much.

From the statement of the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. Manion) this afternoon, one would think we were sitting idly here wearing out our chairs and clothes, doing nothing. If you can find members of a government that have been as busy as we have been during the last six or seven years, I should like him to point them out. Nobody but men of strong physique and good health could have pursued the gait that we have maintained throughout this period, because otherwise they would have fallen by the wayside, as some have. The task is a hard one; we have pursued it diligently to the best of our ability from the time we took office and we are desirous of pursuing it still further and doing our best for the people of Canada.

The house will recall that we established a policy of standardization with regard to fruit products, especially for export. Until we came into power practically nothing was done in that direction except in connection with the grading of wheat. Some additional steps were taken by my predecessor, the Hon. Doctor Tolmie, but they were not put into practice until we came into power. I refer to the grading and standardization of farm products, and the establishment of a quality basis by selling on that basis. I know I have often wearied the house by introducing sometimes six or seven pieces of legislation in the one session. I used to be the object of ridicule by the hon. member who led the opposition during those first few years; I made a favourite target for him. He knew nothing about the matter but he had the skillful use of language which sometimes embarrassed me a good deal. I felt, however, I was right and I have pursued that policy ever since until last year, when public sentiment in the house seemed to justify letting two of those bills, one with respect to vegetables and the other with respect to hay, die on the order paper, I began to wonder whether I was going too rapidly, but I was told by a prominent premier, no other than the premier of this province that Canada was not doing enough in that direction. That is what he informed me at the last provincial conference. When I was told on the one hand I was not going fast enough, and on the other that I was going too fast, I thought it would be a good policy to go to the World Dairy Congress to which I was appointed with some fifteen other delegates, and see how the matter was worked out elsewhere. I thought that was the right thing to do because, after all, our customer, the man who pays out money for our goods, is the first consideration.

In addition to attending the World Dairy Congress I had an opportunity of looking into the matter of standardization of the dairy products of Canada. During five years our cheese was certified and graded, and during that short time our cheese had so improved in quality that instead of being simply on a parity with that of New Zealand, its chief competitor, it averaged one and a half cents more per pound, and to-day our cheese is worth five cents more per pound than that of New Zealand. I looked into the question of boxes and have taken action to put into effect by regulation the law that we passed last year that all cheese boxes for export must be reinforced by wire. Why? Because we found that from 30 to 40 per cent of the cheese boxes were so dilapidated one would think they had gone through a cyclone before they reached the old country. We found in that regard a most disgraceful state of affairs as compared with that of our antipodean sister.

As regards butter we maintain a very high reputation with our standardized products, and all the people over there wanted was to get more of it. Then we examined Covent Garden in London and we visited the apple market. We found the British Columbia apples were the pick of the market; Ontario apples were well up toward the top, and owing to our maritime friends not taking up the grading system, although I hope they will do so soon, their apples are good but not put up in the same style due to the fact that they have not the supervision of a government inspector.

Just a word more about cheese. Five or six short years ago a cheese certificate was unknown to the trade; they had never heard of it before; in fact they looked a little askance at it as something new. During the first year it was not worth the paper it was written on, but inside of six years Canadian cheese certificates were just as negotiable documents as any other negotiable document; they were taken at par without the cheese being seen, and passed from one to another without question. Six short years have built up the reputation, character and integrity of that certificate until it is a document which customers will accept without ever having seen the cheese. Such is the case with other goods.

I might instance our Canadian bacon. We went to Holland and Sweden and Denmark and Ireland, and let me say that Danish and Irish bacon has the highest reputation in the world. We have been grading live hogs. No country in the world has a policy of grading hogs on foot. They are always graded on the rail, as they are in Denmark, for instance. In examining the live hogs of all our competitors, I find that since we have adopted the system of grading hogs, no country that I visited has a finer type of bacon hog than ours, and that is saying a lot because these other countries were in the hog and bacon business for many years before we even pretended to be a competitor with them in that respect. After visiting all these countries, I do not come back to discourage our farmers or to tell them how far they fall short of measuring up to the standards in other countries, because so far as the quality of our bacon and hogs is concerned, our product is equal to the best, but we are short on quantity. No retail man is going to buy from a country whose bacon is on the market to-day and to-morrow, and not the next day. They have to supply their customers day by day, and they must be assured of a regular and continuous supply. We have only three commodities on that market continuously, wheat, flour, and cheese. I cannot think at the moment of any other commodity of ours which is always at the call of the customer, and it is because we have these three products always at the call of the customer in the European markets that one of them stands at the very top in their estimation, because in addition to quality there is quantity, and quantity is very important. There must be a regular supply, instead of this off-again on-again practice which we have at the present time.

In the few minutes at my disposal I can touch on only one or two of our activities, but the policy we have adopted has been commended by those who are buying our goods, and I am encouraged to go forward in our policy of grading. Just here I want to pay tribute to Dr. Tolmie, who has always been in favour of the grading policy, and I am glad to say that he has candidly said so in this house. I do not know who is going to take his place over there, but I look for some measure of support, if not from my friends immediately opposite, then from the balance of the house in carrying forward this policy of standardization of the remaining articles that are to be dealt with.

A word further as to what I found in the old country in connection with the grain trade. Our worst fears with regard to the slighting of our wheat both in the United Kingdom and Europe were realized. I went to every important marketing centre in the United Kingdom and on the continent and everywhere the same story was told. I found that what has terrified them more than anything else was the rapidly growing amount of piebald wheat and white wheat that we are sending over. Any cattle man knows that the man who is buying beef abominates a dairy herd steer, and the wheat farmer over there who is looking for a red hard, glutinous wheat hates the sight of a white kernel. I take this opportunity of asking the farmers of the west to cease growing all white wheats. There is nothing that causes our quality to slide so much as the mixing of white wheat with hard red kernels. In Australia they grow exclusively white wheat, and red wheat is abhorred there. The presence of white wheat in our grain indicates two things—a lack of quality, and the presence of the practice of mixing. The next big event on the horizon is the World's Grain Congress in the city of Regina, and we hope that in making up the prize list no recognition will be given in that list to white wheats of any kind, either bread or non-bread, for the sake of restoring our reputation in the growing of hard red wheat.

There is always a fly in the ointment, no matter how good the story may be. I gather that the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett), not the acting leader (Mr. Guthrie), does not like the means of locomotion which the Minister of Agriculture took to seek this information. He does not think I should have taken the official car and the minister's chauffeur. He left me in doubt what I should take. Should I have flown or walked, I wonder? What was the joke? Perhaps I am dense, intensely Scotch. I admit my name is Scotch, but that is about all that is Scotch in me, unless through the centuries some Scotch blood might have remained in my veins, so that I am not able to see the joke. Should a minister not inform himself with regard to the markets to which we are exporting our goods? Surely, that is admitted. Well then, will my hon. friend mention a cheaper and a more efficient way than going by motor car, and going with your own official car, rather than leaving it idle in the garage, and going out and hiring another one?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: All right. Mention a more efficient and cheaper way of getting the information which I got in the United Kingdom and Europe than by motor car. I challenge the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens) to mention a better way.

An hon. MEMBER: Walk.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: My secretary sat down and estimated the cost and found that it was $500 or $600 cheaper to go by the method I took than by any other method available. Yes, you can laugh, but mention a cheaper and more efficient way.

Mr. GUTHRIE: It sounds like joy riding.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Would it have been any less joy riding for me to have flown? It was not a joy ride. It was a necessary trip I took to the World's Dairy Congress, supplemented by a trip all over the United Kingdom to gather information at first hand, information which my hon. friend opposite does not possess even to-day, or he would not have mentioned the grain trade. I challenge anyone to mention any cheaper or more efficient way of getting information than going by motor car. I may be taking more trips in the future, and if my hon. friends have a cheaper and more efficient way, I am prepared to adopt it. But they cannot mention one. They laugh and they jeer, and that is all they do. They tell me that I exercise too much levity. There is levity now among them, with nothing at all behind it. My offer stands good, and I challenge them to mention a better way. When the accounts come down, I am sure they will challenge favourable comparison with some of the expenses of members of the opposition when they were in power, and I got very much greater results.

Mr. PETER McGIBBON (Muskoka-Ontario): Mr. Speaker, rising to speak in this budget debate, I should like first to compliment the Minister of Finance on the dignified and lucid manner in which he presented his budget. It was in marked contrast to the burlesque with which the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell) has just favoured the house. The Minister of Agriculture reminds me of the jester that we read about in Scott's novels, who was engaged to amuse the people at different functions. To me, sir, it does appear that when a man reaches the dignified position of a minister of the crown, and discusses any subject on the floor of this house, he should at least bring a little knowledge and ordinary intelligence into the debate and not make it a burlesque. The Minister of Agriculture has criticized the acting leader of the opposition (Mr. Guthrie). I may tell him, sir, that if he wishes his name to shine in Canadian history as brightly as will the record of the acting leader of the opposition, he will have to do a lot of work in a constructive way between now and his dissolution.

In association with others, Mr. Speaker, I wish again to congratulate the Minister of Finance on his lucidity and the dignified manner in which he presented his budget. Also in association with other members of the house I rejoice at what may be called the spotted prosperity of Canada. I describe it as spotted, sir, because before I sit down I intend to demonstrate that a large portion of the country to-day is not enjoying the prosperity pictured by the Minister of Finance. I recognize that not even the incompetence of the Minister of Agriculture can wholly depress a country that grows five hundred million bushels of wheat a year, that has an agricultural production of about one billion dollars, that digs up something like $275,000,000 worth of minerals and has a total trade of over two billion dollars. I repeat, not even the incompetence of the Minister of Agriculture combined with the destructive policies which he and his government have put around the necks of our farmers can keep this country back.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Mention them.

Mr. McGIBBON: I will as I go along.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The hon. member cannot.

Mr. McGIBBON: I hope the minister will profit by it too. Only a few places are benefited by this spotted prosperity. It is true we find prosperity in cities like Montreal, Toronto, Hamilton, Windsor, Vancouver, and so on. That prosperity is also to be found in the stock markets of this country. I assert, sir, that the policy of this government has driven capital out of industry and into the stock exchange to such an extent that to-day we are a nation of gamblers; nothing more nor less. Our stenographers, cooks and kitchen maids are better acquainted with the stock lists of the standard exchange than they are with the Bible. This condition of affairs has been brought about by the policy of the government, and I shall refer to it further in the course of my remarks.

At this point I would ask you, Mr. Speaker, why the budget was brought down four days before President Hoover delivered his inaugural address at Washington. The government benches had been strangely silent. I venture to suggest that the purpose of the Minister of Finance was to head off the announcement that President Hoover was going to make to the farmers of the United States, and this government wanted to have the budget down and their proposals made known so there would not be a demand from this country for the protection of our farmers. But why this haste, Mr. Speaker? For some years past the United States have put their tariff almost sky high against the farm products of Canada, yet this government, led in this particular by the Minister of Agriculture, has done absolutely nothing to protect our farmers. More than that, sir, they had good reason to know what the new administration in the United States proposed to do in regard to tariff policy. Last fall while addressing a meeting down in Tennessee Mr. Hoover made these remarks:

> The great expansion of agricultural production in Canada and the southern hemisphere combined with the increasing efficiency and increased production by our own farmers have rendered unstable those branches of our agriculture which are dependent on foreign markets.

The despatch continues:

> His solution of the marketing problem would be the appointment of a farm board clothed with powers and resources to assist the farmer in solving his own problems through co-operatives controlled by the farmer himself "to protect the farmer from depressions and demoralization and periodic surpluses."

That announcement was made six months ago. In his inaugural speech this week President Hoover announced that he intended to implement those promises. He said:

> Action upon some of the proposals upon which the Republican party was returned to power, particularly further agricultural relief and limited changes in the tariff, cannot in justice to our farmers, our labour and our manufacturers be postponed. I shall therefore request a special session of congress for the consideration of these two questions. I shall deal with each of them upon the assembly of the congress.

That promise also has been implemented; a special session of congress has been called for April 15 to formulate measures for protecting the farmers of the American republic. What has the government of Canada done? They have made this country a dumping ground for the world, with the result that to-day we have depression both in the ranks of labour and of agriculture. In spite of what the Minister of Agriculture says, we know that this depression is weighing very heavily upon the people of this country.

But, Mr. Speaker, I want to direct the attention of the house for a moment to one or two passages in the budget speech. First, the Minister of Finance emphasized the fact that this was a low-tariff government. Why, Sir, he could not do anything else, the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Stewart) the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of Immigration (Mr. Forke) being the main factors in the cabinet. Almost in the same paragraph the Minister of Finance threw out a threat that if certain countries—meaning no doubt the United States—adjusted their tariffs in a manner unfavourable to Canada he would raise our tariff against them. Those are not his exact words, but they are a fair deduction from what he said. I ask the Minister of Agriculture which of those statements appeal to him. Does he think the government intend to scrap the first, so that they will be no longer a free-trade government; or does he think they intend to carry out the threat and protect the people of this country in a manner that is worthy of any government?

I wonder how President Hoover felt when he heard this terrible threat from the Minister of Finance of this Dominion—the man who had fed starving millions in Europe during the war, the man who had advocated raising the United States tariff almost to the skies, the man who had seen this government deliberately bring down their budget four days before he made his inaugural speech—I wonder what he thought of such an idle threat, a threat which he knew could not be made good this year. Do you suppose, sir, he trembled like Macbeth did before the ghost of Banquo, in dread lest this government might raise the Canadian tariff against the United States? That sort of thing is ridiculous. Had it been written by the Minister of Agriculture it would have been perfectly in keeping with his whole conduct. But coming from the Minister of Finance, a man whom we all respect and who carries the greatest weight of any man on that side of the house with the people of Canada, it is something a little bit difficult to understand.

Now where are we going? I say, Mr. Speaker, that this government has never done anything to protect the farmers of Canada. I am quite willing to concede that the farmers have never received from any government the protection they should be given. But the little they did have has been wiped away since the present government came into power. I wonder if the Minister of Agriculture would like me to read something from the proceedings of the Canadian Council of Dairymen assembled in the King Edward Hotel, Toronto, on November 26, 1928. I wonder if he or the house recalls the fact that a large deputation came here a year ago, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, demanding greater protection for the fruit and vegetable growers, poultry men and the dairymen of Canada. I wonder if he remembers the two occasions on which, according to Mr. Calder in his address, they waited upon the Minister of Agriculture and asked for protection for dairy products and were refused. I wonder if he still thinks there is any doubt as to where the Canadian farmers stand in their attitude to protection. I shall refer to that question a little later, but I want here to discuss for a moment the great prosperity which is spoken of in the budget, but which in the main does not exist in this country. It never has existed since this government came into power and it does not exist to-day. Just the day before yesterday I sat in the committee on industrial relations and we had before us a man from Montreal representing the boot and shoe industry, and in reply to a question from myself he stated that the average wage in that industry was $20 a week. Now I would ask the Minister of Agriculture where the prosperity exists in this country—he at least says that there is prosperity—when men have to work long hours and support a family on $20 a week, while he sports in England with a ten-thousand-dollar automobile—ten thousand dollars of the people's money—having a good time. Where is the prosperity? Does the prosperity exist in the office of the Minister of Agriculture or is it with the working people of the Dominion? I have also in my hand—

Mr. MOTHERWELL: May I ask my hon. friend where he got the price of the car—$10,000?

Mr. CLARK: How much was it?

Mr. McGIBBON: Knowing the minister's expensive tastes I thought that nothing less than a ten-thousand-dollar car would do him. However, if I have over-stated it I shall be glad to be corrected.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I may say that the first four years I rode in a second-hand Tory unfumigated car.

Mr. McGIBBON: Let me tell the minister that nothing that the Tories ride in ever needs fumigation. It is only Liberal vehicles that need it. I wonder, when the Minister of Agriculture goes back to his riding, what they will say when he tells the poor farmer, who probably has not over two or three hundred dollars left at the end of his year, or tells the workingman, who has to raise a family on $20 a week, about his glorious trip through Great Britain, with his chauffeur and government car, all charged up to the public expense. I wonder what the people will say then as regards prosperity in Canada.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: It depends on what I brought back, what information I got.

Mr. McGIBBON: The minister says it depends on what he brought back. Knowing the minister, I do not think he would bring back anything that was good for the country.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I have tried to recite a few things.

Mr. McGIBBON: The minister says he has tried; I will go thus far with him—he has tried.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: It is not my fault if my hon. friend does not understand.

Mr. McGIBBON: I recall a little story told by Sir Henry Wilson over in France, criticizing the government of Great Britain for criticizing him. He said, "Of course, there is no time in a man's career when he can speak with such positiveness as when speaking of something he doesn't know anything about".

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. McGIBBON: I thought you had more respect for your minister. Now, as regards the question of prosperity, I have in my hand a table showing the average earnings of bakers, bricklayers, carpenters, electricians, painters, plumbers, salesmen, street railway men, and other workers, for the cities of Halifax, Hamilton, London, Montreal, Ottawa, Quebec, St. John, Toronto, Windsor, Calgary, Edmonton, Regina, Vancouver, Victoria and Winnipeg. And in all that list there is not a salary of over $1,600 a year. I would direct the attention of the Minister of Labour (Mr. Heenan) to the fact. When the government speaks of the great prosperity in Canada I would point to the unemployment that exists throughout the country, and impress upon hon. gentlemen opposite that the allegation is not in accordance with the facts. There is unemployment in nearly every part of the country except a few cities. Yet this government has the temerity to come to the house, in the face of such unemployment, and speak of great prosperity. I should like them to visit my riding where factory doors are closed. The other day I was speaking with a gentleman who hires labourers and he told me that he did not know where he could get a man a job.

Now to pay some further attention to the Minister of Agriculture. The government is anxious to avoid the subject of the dairy industry, and wishes to disown the treaty in this regard. This has proved an offspring which has been quite detrimental to the country. I would call the attention of the house to the Prime Minister's statement the other night that there was less butter made in Canada because people were using cream for ice cream. I want to tell the Prime Minister and the Minister of Agriculture as well that, according to the statistics of their own government, less butter fat was produced last year than the year before, and that is the basis of the whole thing. When the Minister of Agriculture tries to ridicule the remarks of the acting leader of the opposition in regard to butter, and the quotations respecting oleomargarine for 1920, 1919 and 1918, he forgets that a war was on during part of that time which materially altered conditions. He also forgets—at any rate, if he has not forgotten it, he did not mention the fact—that prior to 1912 the people of this country had been building up a dairy industry. When that production reached its peak and we were exporting about 25,000,000 pounds a year, this government stepped in and killed that industry and to-day we are not producing enough butter for our own consumption.

I do not like to weary the house with figures, but I feel that it would be of interest to place some figures on Hansard with regard to the effects of this treaty. In 1927 we produced about 12,000,000 pounds less butter fat than we produced in 1926, and our production of milk decreased by 3,428,571,428 pounds, yet the Minister of Agriculture says the dairy industry never was more prosperous! Does he know that the herds of this country have been diminishing year by year? Does he know that to-day our importations of butter from New Zealand are equivalent to what could be produced by 100,000 cows which should be reared in this country? Still the minister says we are prosperous. But that is not all: I would like to give a few figures about our herds for the years 1927 and 1928, showing the reduction in each province:

Prince Edward Island..	58,000	56,000
Ontario..	1,299,840	1,261,384
Manitoba..	255,874	248,630
Saskatchewan..	462,270	418,506
Alberta..	379,992	344,495
Nova Scotia..	142,000	137,000
New Brunswick..	111,000	109,000

In only two provinces have the herds not been reduced in the last three years—Quebec and British Columbia. I do not know the reason in British Columbia, but I presume that in Quebec they have been able to keep up their herds because of the great market to the south, especially in the city of New York. In every other province, however, through the action of this government in connection with the Australian treaty, the dairy industry has received the worst blow it has suffered in years.

But that is not all; associated with the dairying industry is the pork industry. In Denmark, which is practically the standard of the world in these things, they raise six pigs to every cow, but in this country I think we raise only five. Perhaps it may be of interest to place on record the production of swine, brood sows and other live pigs in Canada:

Prince Edward Island..	53,665	62,653
Quebec..	833,529	813,509
Ontario..	1,883,177	1,833,576
Alberta..	742,671	680,000
Manitoba..	387,269	330,803
Saskatchewan..	616,603	602,156

Then, going a little further, we find a corresponding diminution of production in the slaughtering and pork-packing industry. That reduction is as follows:

	1925	1927
Salted pork.	71,000,000 lbs	47,000,000 lbs
Hams..	45,000,000 "	22,000,000 "
Shoulders..	19,000,000 "	8,000,000 "
Bacon and sides.	87,000,000 "	69,000,000 "
Lard..	54,000,000 "	51,000,000 "

Then, sir, coincident with that and accompanying it we have a further diminution in exports of the same products and an increase in the imports. I hope the Minister of Agriculture sees what is happening under his policy. A few figures will illustrate how our exports have decreased:

	1925	1927
Mutton and lamb. ..	26,000 lbs	18,000 lbs
Bacon, hams, shoulders and sides	1,325,000 "	580,000 "
Canned meats..	466,000 "	324,000 "

I recognize the difficulty of the Minister of Finance; this treaty is his own child and naturally he does not want to abandon it, but I think in the interests of the farmers of this country the time has come for this parliament to make its voice heard. Here we have one of the great industries of Canada struggling along under adverse conditions. I wonder if the house would be interested in the figures showing the increased importation of butter since this treaty came into effect. The figures are as follows:

	Exports	Imports
1925..	24,500,000 lbs	193,341 lbs
1926..	23,300,000 "	7,029,084 "
1927..	9,878,000 "	7,190,000 "

I am told that last year no less than 16,000,000 or 18,000,000 pounds of New Zealand butter came to Canada, and the dairy commissioner of New Zealand is authority for the statement that next year they intend to send 30,000,000 pounds of butter to this country. I ask you, Mr. Speaker, whether it is fair to the people of this country, who have invested about $153,000,000 in the factory end of this industry, to be treated in this manner. I hope the minister will take this into his serious consideration and do something for the farmers of Canada.

I have only forty minutes, so I cannot devote too much of my time to this subject. The other day I was reading again the speech of the Prime Minister at Newmarket in 1925, and, as I read that famous sentence "no monopoly on land or sea is the policy of this government," I began to think of the monopolies created by this government or continued under it. My mind went back to the famous Petersen contract, an attempt by this government to break the ocean freight rates which they claimed constituted a monopoly injurious to the trade of this country. I compared the rates of that day with those prevailing to-day and found that they are higher now than they were at that time. Then I thought of the attempt to break the combine which was supposed to exist on the great lakes. I remember that legislation of a drastic character was passed here, and then the government had to send emissaries to the American ship owners and offer them protection against the law in order to get our goods carried from the head of the lakes, which was something they had not the legal right to do. I find also that the lake freight rates on wheat are higher to-day than they were then.

Then consider the matter of the banks. There is no institution in this country that can take the people by the throats, so to speak, can so cripple business, as can the banks. I recognize what the Minister of Finance has said, and what the leader of the opposition has said with regard to amalgamations, but my criticism is this: the procedure should be to bolster up the weaker banks and not let two or three of the stronger banks obtain a strangle-hold on the country. The Minister of Finance said in effect that the minute a bank's deposits were not equal to its loans then it was on the road to bankruptcy. He also said that the people of this country were taking their deposits out of the weaker banks and putting them in the stronger. I submit that the Minister of Finance having directed attention to that, there will be a tendency to make the weaker banks still weaker and we will have further amalgamations.

Speaking of monopolies, my mind travels back to the struggle we had in this house two years ago to preserve for the people of this country the great water-powers on the Ottawa river. An attempt was made to hand over to private interests one hundred million dollars' worth of power belonging to the people of Ontario and Quebec, without one voice being raised by a supporter of the government. Then we had an exhibition in this house last week which is not seen very often in a free parliament. We were discussing the fact that this government, together with the government of Manitoba, had given to a private corporation in Winnipeg one of the greatest monopolies ever created in the western provinces. After this parliament had been prorogued, and after the legislature of Manitoba had been prorogued, they handed over this great power site, although promises had been made in both houses that it would not be done. Then what do we see to-day? As the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. Manion) has very forcibly pointed out, we are witnessing the creation of one of the greatest monopolies this country has ever seen—the Beauharnois company. Parliament was not even consulted in this matter, it had no voice at all, and this government has gone ahead and created one of the greatest combines and monopolies that has ever existed. I looked up the provisions of the Combines Investigation Act, and I find that this act gives the government power to rid the country of all these monopolies. I went to the Department of Labour, over which our good friend the Minister of Labour (Mr. Heenan) presides, and I asked them what had been done under the provisions of this act since it came into force in 1923, when the government claimed the country was being grappled by the throat by these monopolies and obtained the powers contained in this act. I received a letter nearly two pages long, but boiled down it simply conveyed the information that this government, so enthusiastic for the rights of the poor downtrodden people had taken only one case to the courts and secured a conviction under the provisions of the Combines Investigation Act. This is pretty much on a par with the actions of every other department of the government.

In conclusion I should like to direct my remarks to the national status which the Prime Minister claimed he obtained for the people of this country. I should like the Prime Minister to tell the people, on the first occasion that presents itself, what he or his government ever did to increase the national status of Canada. I asked him that last year and he made a speech in Toronto this fall which covered two pages of the Globe, and he never once—I am sorry to say this, even though he is a political opponent—gave credit where credit was due. The 60,000 men lying over in France and the 50,000 cripples in this country and other countries drawing pensions, won that status for the people of Canada and not the King government. If any proof of this statement be required, I will read an extract from a speech delivered by Mr. Lloyd George at the imperial conference of 1921, as follows:

> The British dominions have now been accepted fully into the comity of nations by the whole world. They are signatories to the treaty of Versailles and of all the other treaties of peace; they are members of the assembly of the League of Nations, and their representatives have already attended meetings of the league; in other words, they have achieved full national status, and they now stand beside the United Kingdom as equal partners in the dignities and the responsibilities of the British commonwealth.

That was the pronouncement of Mr. Lloyd George in 1921. That status was won by the armies in France, followed up by the action of Sir Robert Borden and his ministers. I hope that the next time the Prime Minister takes credit to himself or his government for the position we hold, he will at least give some measure of credit to the people who won that position for the Dominion of Canada.

Mr. JOHN MILLAR (Qu'Appelle): Mr. Speaker, in rising to continue this debate I feel constrained to congratulate the Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb) on his excellent budget. I cannot say that that budget is all that I would like to have it, but I do not know that I can remember any budget since I came into the house that was as I would like it in every particular. But all things considered I think it must be confessed that the budget brought down this year is an excellent one. The continued surpluses, the increase in trade and the paying off of the national debt are things of which we should be very proud.

I also congratulate the acting leader of the opposition (Mr. Guthrie) on his brilliant address, an address of which this house should be very proud. However, I do not think I can say as much for his amendment. The amendment regrets that agriculture is not safeguarded and protected.

Let us examine that suggestion. One of the largest branches of agriculture is the growing of wheat, and it is interesting to remember that it was only in 1876 that the first shipment of wheat was made from western Canada. That shipment comprised the enormous quantity of 857½ bushels, yet in the progress of wheat growing we have jumped until now we are growing 533,000,000 bushels a year. The suggestion is that wheat growing should be protected. I would like to ask the acting leader of the opposition or anyone else on the opposition side just how they are going to protect the Canadian wheat growers. Is it by an increase in the tariff upon United States and other wheat coming into Canada? The tariff is very small at the present time, yet we do not see any trainloads of wheat from outside rushing through Canada except for export. Our low tariff is sufficient now to keep foreign wheat out of Canada; that is, we import practically no wheat—only a few hundreds or thousands of bushels. What then would be the good of adding to the tariff upon imported wheat? Supposing you increase the tariff to make it equal to the United States tariff of 42 cents a bushel. What good would that do? Absolutely none. I should be glad if those who speak on the other side of the house and are in favour of protection to help the wheat grower, would name one article in respect to which we could, by raising the duty, benefit the growers of wheat in Canada. It is not fruit; it is not agricultural implements; it is not any of the articles of production; it is not clothing. What is it? How and where would they apply a duty or raise the present tariff to benefit the growers of wheat? The remedy, it seems to me, is too much like that resorted to by the man who was aggrieved because someone hit him with a club and who thereupon took up another club and hit himself. They will not remove or alleviate in that way the difficulties, the evils, the handicaps under which the wheat grower is labouring to-day. An increase in the customs duty would simply increase his difficulties rather than assist him.

The acting leader of the opposition said that there is something wrong in the marketing of grain, and I agree with him. I know he is right, and I should like to point out just how that grievance has continued to the present time. Many people in the west have asked: Why is it not removed? Why does the government not act and stop that evil? I believe the reason is simply because the farmers themselves have not been unanimous as to what the remedy should be. The major evils were mentioned the day before yesterday. Mixing is one, diversion of cars is another, an inaccurate system of grading is a third. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell) told us what took place in 1925 —how another chamber destroyed an amendment to the Grain Act that would have prevented entirely the greatest of the three evils; but at that time the farmers of western Canada were not united themselves in regard to the evils of mixing. Fortunately the work done in the agriculture committee last year has gone a long way towards crystallizing public thought in western Canada in regard to this evil. Some ministers, I believe, were very sceptical about the wisdom of having a number of copies of the evidence of that committee printed for distribution. There were those of us on this side of the house, and some on the other, who believed the farmers were interested in that question and would send for and peruse the reports. The results have borne out our opinion. I took occasion the other day to find out from the department just how many of those reports had been sent out. I was informed that 10,000 copies were printed, 1,000 copies retained for the use of members and senators, and nearly 7,000 copies of the 9,000 available sent out, while further copies are going out all the time. The evidence in that report gives some of the best information we have on the grain handling question, and as I have said, it has gone a long way toward crystallizing public thought. I believe I am not overstating the case when I say that 95 per cent of, not the farmers only but the people of Saskatchewan generally, are against the practice of mixing. A great number of the people of Alberta and Manitoba are opposed to it. Therefore I believe that now there is sufficient backing for the government to take action, and I hope action will be taken at this session of parliament.

This mixing means an enormous loss to the country. It was pointed out the day before yesterday that the grain that was reaching the old country market was very much poorer than the grain the farmer was delivering. I will not say it is proved to the hilt that the grain is one grade lower, but I think, on the evidence that was brought out, there is more than a fifty-fifty chance that the grain reaching the old country market, which is the basis of the price the farmer receives, is one grade lower in quality than that which the farmer delivered. If that is the case, what is the loss? It is about six cents a bushel. What is six cents a bushel on 400,000,000, let alone 500,000,000 bushels? It means $24,000,000. It is no dream when I say that the farmer, through the practice of diversion and mixing and an obsolete method of evaluating wheat for grading purposes, is probably losing $25,000,000 a year. The government has not been greatly to blame in the past for not remedying this situation, because public opinion even in the west, even among the farmers' organizations, was not united. It was not well crystallized; some thought mixing was a good thing and a small percentage believe so still. It has even been argued that because of mixing the farmer gets more for his total crop, particularly on the lower grades. Take the case of feed wheat; you will find that the farmer, during the last shipping season, has been selling his feed wheat for about $18 a ton at his initial shipping point. If the same grower goes to the Western Canada Flour Mills Company or any other concern that sells bran, he will pay $30 or $32 a ton for bran. This is feed wheat that sometimes makes fairly good bread—not the bread that we would like to eat, but bread that will do for the orient and some other markets where they are willing to accept a poor quality of flour. He sells this feed wheat at $18 a ton and he pays $32 a ton for bran. Is that a fancy price that should tempt the farmer to support the practice of mixing?

This question of the grading of grain is one of very great importance. When we consider that just a little over one-sixth of the area of Canada is under crop, and that we have jumped in ten years from a production of a little less than 200,000,000 bushels of wheat to 533,000,000 bushels, the question arises in one's mind, what is the peak to which Canada may attain? How much wheat may we ultimately grow? I remember years ago, when we were producing very much less than we are now, making the prophecy that Canada would produce half a billion bushels of wheat within twenty-five years. We are producing more than that now, and I believe that with a proper fostering of the grain growing industry on the part of the different departments of agriculture, with a much needed solution of the rust problem, with the production of earlier varieties of wheat which will more readily escape frost and rust, with a vigorous campaign against weed pests and against growing so many poor milling varieties of wheat, it is well within the bounds of possibility that Canada in the next twenty years will be producing one billion bushels of wheat. Surely that is an industry that is well worth paying attention to. I heard the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Campbell), I think it was, suggesting the other night that bringing people to Canada to take up more land and produce more wheat was simply increasing the number of those who would come into competition with our Canadian farmer. I do not fear that competition very much, for the reason that new markets are opening up before us all the time. Just think of these figures: Norway consumes only 1·5 bushels of wheat per head; India, ·9 bushels; Canada, 9·9 bushels; France, 8 bushels; Great Britain, 6 bushels. The markets in China and Japan are opening up in a very satisfactory way.

[Mr. Millar.]

Again, if Canada were to retrench in her operations in growing wheat, what would take place? It would simply mean that other countries, the Argentine, India, Australia, and the United States would increase their production and supply the wheat that we could grow. I do not think that the remedy lies in that direction at all. I believe that the best thing for Canadians to do is to produce all the wheat they possibly can, and with the least possible overhead, under the fostering care of the Department of Agriculture. I should like to see the government spend twice the money it is now spending in research to overcome the rust problem. I am not overlooking the fact that a great deal has already been done. The progress made in recent years has been highly satisfactory, but still more money could be spent with great benefit.

Not only is this an important industry in itself, but agriculture is the key to the solving of the great problem which is causing a great deal of worry in Canada just now, namely, immigration. One of the difficulties is that the farmer, in addition to having to fight against frost, dry weather, too much moisture, and weeds, which have become a great problem, has also to carry the burden of evils which this parliament can overcome. If I am anywhere near correct in my estimate that the farmer by these practices which should not be permitted, is losing $20,000,000 to $25,000,000 a year, he is losing that which would fortify him and put him in a better financial position to face years like the present, when frost sweeps away the net profits on his crop. If that amount could be saved to our farmers, in the course of a few years the farmers of western Canada would be well fortified and immigrants settling on farms in western Canada would at least have a fair chance to succeed.

Now I come to the remedy. Many remedies have been suggested. It has been thought that we might control the practice of mixing, and that has been tried many times. The remedy which was proposed in 1925, to which the Minister of Agriculture referred, was to require the mixing elevators to ship grain from their elevators equal to the average quality, passing Winnipeg. That means nothing more than this, that they shall send to the old country markets grain equal in quality to what the farmer is delivering to the elevators. Is there anything unreasonable in that? Where else in Canada could you find a people who would submit to anything else? Why does the Canadian farmer submit to it? Lord only knows; it is a wonder that he submits to it. He has been subject to it for so long that perhaps he has become accustomed to it, but the time has come when he is not going to stand for it any longer. The practice has been carried to such an extreme and the rake-off has become so enormous that the farmers have awakened to what they are really losing, and they are uniting to put down this evil.

What is the remedy? I suggested one to the grain inquiry commission, a remedy which I now submit to the minister and the house. We are selling grain on the old country markets on what is termed certificate final. There is no redress, regardless of the condition in which the grain reaches that market. I suggested to the commission that they recommend that an international appeal board be set up in Great Britain, say at Liverpool, or London, or other market centres. To provide for those markets standard samples by the chief inspector, equal to the average quality passing Winnipeg. Supply the same standard sample at Fort William, Montreal, and at transfer elevators. In other words, right from Winnipeg to the ultimate market provide the same standard sample, equal to the average passing Winnipeg. There is no reason why that should not be done. Then we would have an appeal board, say at Liverpool, at Montreal, at Vancouver and at other inspection and transfer points, and the carriers across the ocean would be made responsible for delivering grain up to that standard. Give the carriers on the Atlantic protection from the elevators from which they receive the grain—say the Montreal elevator—make the Montreal elevator responsible for delivering the proper quality of grain, and give that elevator protection from the lake carriers that deliver the grain to the Montreal elevator. Work that system right back to Fort William, and then I think you will have found a remedy for the evil of mixing.

But how about the mills of western Canada? Let the miller buy direct from the farmer, and pay what he wants. Once a cargo of grain is billed to the terminal elevator, it should go to the terminal elevator; there is no reason why it should go anywhere else. You will find that there is no difficulty in working that out. I do not mean to say that it can be done without expense. Up to the present we have been operating on a broken down system, a system that perhaps was sufficient twenty-five years ago but is very, very inadequate to-day. We require an entirely new or a bigger system. The grain trade has expanded in the last fifteen or twenty years, but our system has stood still. We had three grain commissioners then; we have only three now, and they are not able to administer the Grain Act with proper attention to details. We have a very, very loose system of handling grain. The farmer will never get the full benefit of his grain until there is a more careful, and it will be a more expensive, method of handling the grain.

When you contrast our system with the American you find they are seven years ahead of us. They are puzzling over little points that we will not reach for some years yet. For instance, they pay for protein a different price for every quarter of one per cent, and they find that two chemists testing grain cannot come nearer to uniformity than twelve or fifteen points. Their contracts call for redress if the tests vary more than ten points. A trade journal has pointed out that what is necessary is a little more tolerance—that is the word they use—that no redress should be allowed unless there is a variation of more than twenty points. So you see what pains they have gone to, and how much more careful they are in the handling of their grain than we are. As a result the farmers of the United States are receiving many millions of dollars that in Canada would go into the pockets of the middlemen. A few months ago I noticed in the press a statement that Manitoba has twenty-one millionaires, Saskatchewan none, Alberta one. Well, I think there is a direct relation between the number of millionaires in Manitoba—they nearly all reside in Winnipeg—and the fact that there is a grain exchange in Winnipeg. There is no grain exchange in Saskatchewan.

It is now nearly six o'clock, Mr. Speaker, and as I have almost concluded what I purposed saying I will not detain the house any longer.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS

SECOND READINGS

Bill No. 40, to incorporate the Montreal Underground Terminal Company.—Mr. Rheaume.

Bill No. 61, respecting the Lacombe and North Western Railway Company.—Mr. Blatchford.

Bill No. 63, respecting The Toronto Terminals Railway Company.—Mr. Hocken.

THE CANADIAN DEXTER P. COOPER COMPANY

Mr. R. B. HANSON (York-Sunbury) moved the second reading of Bill No. 73, respecting The Canadian Dexter P. Cooper Company.

Mr. CAHILL: Explain.

Mr. HANSON: The object of the bill is merely to extend the time in which this company may begin operations. I understand that there is no opposition to allowing the bill to go to committee, although opposition may develop there.

Motion agreed to, and bill read the second time.

THE BUDGET

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON THE ANNUAL FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Hon. J. A. Robb (Minister of Finance) that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of ways and means, and on the proposed amendment thereto of Mr. Guthrie.

Mr. C. H. DICKIE (Nanaimo): I wish, in common with those on this side of the house who have already spoken, to compliment the Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb) on the clarity, lucidity and quality of his budget speech, and also to congratulate that hon. gentleman and his colleagues on the assistance that a kind Providence has given him in furnishing material for a speech as good as was the one delivered a few days ago. As the favourable figures tripped from his tongue, and before he had finished his speech, I thought that had some unsophisticated friends of the Conservative party been sitting in the gallery they would sympathize with the Conservative opposition, and wonder what ammunition there was to be used after the minister had concluded. I thought they would feel sorry for us. Two men, Casey and Riley, had a little argument as a result of which Riley went to the hospital. A spiritual friend called the next day day to see him, remarking, "Riley, Casey feels badly over what he has done to you, and I will pray that you forgive him." Riley, said, "Father, you will save time if you wait until I get out and then pray for Casey."

During the magnificent and masterly criticism of the budget by our house leader (Mr. Guthrie), I thought I could detect in the countenances of ministers opposite perhaps a little need for spiritual consolation. I wish to congratulate our leader on the wonderful criticism he made of that budget speech. The budget undertook to show this country was fairly prosperous. There is no doubt that we have a certain degree of prosperity, due largely to the fact that, with our agricultural resources, our people who live on the soil have been fairly successful. We have had also wonderful prosperity in our mines, while our forests have contributed materially to the success of the institutions of Canada. The forests have now reached the zenith of their production, and now is the harvest time for Canada. The same may be said of our fisheries. So that we may call this the harvest, and I do not think that the government have made a proper use of harvest time. There is an old proverb which says, "he that sleeps in harvest is a son that causeth shame". These are days of harvest for Canada. We have a great country, and all we require is a proper fiscal policy to make Canada renowned throughout the world. True, we are enjoying a small degree of prosperity; nevertheless there are people unemployed throughout Canada, and these unemployed claim our attention. We have them throughout the year in Winnipeg, Edmonton, Vancouver, Montreal and Toronto, and I do not know what they would do in Ottawa to-day but for the fact that there has been a great deal of snow and they have managed to get a little work clearing the sidewalks and streets. We wish to make this a country where the ordinary man can succeed. I hold no brief for the manufacturers; I only want them to succeed so that the labouring people, those who work with their hands and their brains, may succeed as well. I think I can indicate how we might accomplish this result; we can do it if we will adopt a satisfactory financial policy for Canada.

During his budget speech the Minister of Finance touched very lightly in the question of immigration, because our immigration history is not at all creditable. From 1922 to 1926 inclusive we brought 518,000 people to Canada from Europe, at a cost of about $11,000,000; during that same period 556,000 people went from Canada to the United States. Surely no person can say that is a satisfactory state of affairs for any country. We must remedy that condition, and we can do it by keeping in Canada some of the money we send to the United States for manufactured and partly manufactured goods. Last year we bought from the United States goods to the value of over $800,000,000, of which 67 per cent were manufactured and partly manufactured goods, for which we paid $536,000,000. If we could keep $400,000,000 of that money in Canada we would attract 500,00 people to this country and we would bring back our own people who have gone to the United States to look for work. We must furnish opportunities for those people or we cannot expect to keep them in Canada. During my life-time I want to see Canada become a country which pays its working men, both manual and mental, wages equal to or better than those paid in any other country of the world; I want to see all our expectations and hopes realized, and that can be done if we have a proper fiscal policy. I would protect our manufacturers; I would keep in Canada the greater part of the money we send to the United States, and if that were done I think we would have very little difficulty in getting people to come to this country. We argue from an entirely wrong basis in speaking of the tariff; if we keep the money in this country we will keep our people.

We have a tariff board touring the country, and travelling with that board is a gentleman who argues for free trade at every meeting. If the United States were permitted to appoint an advocate to appear before that board they could find no one more adapted to their purposes than Mr. Deachman, that gentleman who is always arguing for free trade and who loses sight of the fact that if we do not keep our money in this country we cannot keep our people. In the United States they have a tariff board also, but that tariff board is not a laughing stock as is the case in Canada; over night that board can increase the duty if they find goods coming into the country in such a way as to interfere with the labouring men of the United States. The hon. member for Fort William (Mr. Manion) cited one glaring case this afternoon, and I can give you another one now: Two years ago a textile factory in Ontario was manufacturing a very fancy grade of woollen sweater coats; some of these coats were worn in Windsor and were noticed by residents of Detroit, many of whom began to come to Windsor to buy them. The company sent representatives to Detroit and Chicago and put on a full staff of men, thinking that by working full time they could perhaps overcome the thirty per cent duty in force against that class of goods. They received orders for shipments of these sweater coats from Chicago and Detroit; the shipments got as far as the boundary line at Windsor, where they were stopped. A day or two later the factory wired to find out why the shipment had not gone forward, and the answer was that they were being held for an appraiser who was coming from Washington, which was an absurd answer. Then, before the coats could be sent forward, a duty of approximately ninety per cent was applied against them and of course they had to be returned to the factory. That is the way the government of the United States protects their factory employees, and this is the reason our young men go to the United States and remain there. We send our money there; we send our raw forest products there; we send our virile young people there, and apparently that is all they want. We buy our finished products from them, but you travel through the United States and see what manufactured goods from Canada you can buy there.

I can quite understand the viewpoint of hon. members to my left; they are men engaged in agriculture, which is an industry upon which national prosperity is based, an industry which has its roots in the soil, the surest foundation. I can quite understand these hon. members holding some modified ideas with regard to free trade; if we were to put into force a policy which would result in our buying goods manufactured in Canada we would find that for the present these manufactured goods would come largely from Ontario and Quebec. But, sir, with cheap power in Winnipeg and Calgary and with power available through the development of the coal regions near Regina there is no reason why the three western provinces should not become great manufacturing provinces as well. Let us try that policy; let us do what the Americans are doing. They have succeeded by it and France is making rapid progress under a similar policy.

During the budget speech we had some indication that some action might be taken as the result of a pronouncement which might be made by Mr. Hoover. Why consider Mr. Hoover? We are not children; let us show a little initiative. If we are to be a nation let us be one. Mr. Hoover and his congress have a right to do as they see fit and we have no right to criticize them. So far we have simply been hewers of wood and drawers of water for the United States, and they consider us weird, credulous people, narrow in the forehead and broad in the back. That is how the Canadian is regarded by American business man at present. What do we care what Mr. Hoover does? Let the United States pursue their own course, but let us do the same thing. I do not know of any reason why we should not go right ahead at present; we have been hampered and our farmers have been handicapped by the Fordney-McCumber tariff.

One would think from the announcements in the press that Mr. Hoover is going to protect the farmers of the United States and that in the past these farmers have not been protected; but as the hon. member for Fort William pointed out this afternoon, the farmers of the United States have been receiving protection equal to that afforded by any country in the world. They are protected by a duty of twelve cents a pound on butter, eight cents a dozen on eggs, five cents a pound on cheese and twenty cents a gallon on cream. I could go on for half an hour reciting the duties imposed against agricultural products entering the United States; even our wheat enters that country under a duty of forty-two cents per bushel, and what becomes of it then? It is made into flour and sold in competition with our flour in Cuba and other places which at present will not buy flour made from the soft wheat of the United States, and if that wheat is ground into flour and shipped back into Canada they receive a rebate of 99 per cent of the duty. They say to their people in plain language, "You shall not eat bread and cake made from Canadian flour, but if the Canadians are simple enough to let their wheat come here in order to enable us to improve the quality of our flour, then we will gladly let it come." I do not know what we should do about it; if it were up to me, I might be rash, but I would put an export duty on wheat going into the United States equal to the import duty of that country. I would say to them, "If you will not use the flour made from our wheat, you can not have it to defeat us in the markets of the world."

Mr. EVANS: Would you put an export duty on British Columbia lumber?

Mr. DICKIE: I do not think I would do that.

Mr. EVANS: Why not?

Mr. DICKIE: Because there is no fifty per cent duty on lumber going into United States. We hear the fear expressed that Mr. Hoover is going to do something. Why wait to see what he will do? To do that would be right in line with what this government has been doing during the long years I have been coming to Ottawa. It reminds me of that old quotation: "I am of all sects, but blindly sworn to none; for where the tempest drives I shape my way." This government has been shaping its way and trimming its sails for passing breezes instead of coming out with a strong, courageous policy and doing something which Canada wants it to do. The government has men of great ability, and if it would take a strong stand for a protective tariff which would keep the money in this country and make it prosperous, the name of that government would go down into history. As it is, it will not endure with the policy it has to-day. Supposing the special session which has been called by Mr. Hoover places a higher duty on our products going into the United States, as will probably be the case, there would be strong opposition in this country and the government would be forced to take some action. What will be said of a government that is forced into any action? Why not get out now and get some credit? France is doing it, Belgium is doing it and the United States is doing it, and a million of our people have crossed the line. We are right at the apex of our prosperity at the present time and we should take advantage of it. Why not make this country what it was designed to be by a munificient Providence? It can be done with very little trouble.

While you are protecting the farmers you are also protecting the manufacturers and others. I see no reason why a manufacturer who is protected by a high tariff should take advantage of that fact and charge too much for his goods. He should be allowed to make a good profit, sufficient to pay his employees as good or better wages than are paid any place else on the American continent. The manufacturers should not be allowed to profiteer and the books of any company should be subject to examination in order that we could extract from them, through an excise tax or in some other way, any money they had received through profiteering. We could go even further than the Americans have gone. They never consider whether a manufacturer is going to profiteer or not when they put a duty on articles coming in from Canada or the rest of the world. The greatest profiteer in the world to-day is Henry Ford, but have you ever heard one word against that gentleman on the American side? Certainly not. He gives employment to an army of people who are able to pay good prices for what they require, and that means good business all along the line. I would stop what they call cutting of melons. Let them make a liberal profit on the money invested and beyond that I would say: Thou shalt not go. By doing that we could build up mass production in Canada and have our factories running full time. We could sell in Canada just as cheaply as they sell in the United States. That great country to the south of us has 120,000,000 people as a market for the products of their manufactures and industries. We in Canada are struggling along with about 9,000,000 and we divide our market with the United States. What chance is there for mass production in Canada? Absolutely none. The Americans have got the right angle on this question, and they have pursued that course for years. They have made that country a wealthy nation. They may have carried it a little to extremes, and I do not deny that protection carried to its ultimate conclusion perhaps is not for the best. I know of no reason why such a country as Canada is to-day would not succeed if we had a tariff similar to the one across the line. We have a wonderful agricultural country and it would be a foolhardy man who would even hazard a guess as to the mineral possibilites of that great pre-cambrian shield which runs through northern Ontario, Saskatchewan and up to the Bering sea.

We are exhausting our great forests all too rapidly. We are doing that too recklessly in British Columbia by not making the lumbermen clear up the floor of the forest after they log it off. This would prevent the terrible holocausts which sweep through the country when everything becomes as dry as tinder in the summer time. I understand they have the same difficulty in northern Ontario. We should make the lumbermen clean up and thus eliminate that danger. Reports have been sent out that there is no danger of using up the pulpwood in Canada for all time to come. The Minister of the Interior (Mr. Stewart) has expressed himself as being against that belief, and I thoroughly agree with him. If you want to find the real forests of to-day, where do you have to go? Right back to the headwaters of the rivers. If you would go up the Gatineau river among the Gatineau lakes, as I did last year, and climb a high hill, what would you see? You would see light green trees, poplar and birch, and perhaps once in a while a sombre pine rearing its head above the broad-leaved trees. There is no sign at all of a new forest growing. That is the trouble with this country; we have allowed the broad-leaved trees to spring up in the place of those wonderful fir trees which we had. Last year we exported 1,500,000 cords of pulpwood, or about one-quarter of the puplwood manufactured in Canada. I have no objection, Mr. Speaker, to the exportation of poplar pulpwood, as that tree is one that grows very quickly. Many farmers are able to go out and cut these trees and ship the wood at some small profit. But the poplar tree is not to be compared with the black spruce so far as pulpwood purposes are concerned. If you went over to Hull I think you would find that the average age of the black spruce trees which had been cut for pulpwood would run from sixty to seventy-five years. For the sake of argument let us assume that the 1,500,000 cords of pulpwood exported last year was all black spruce. I know it was not, but I want to use that as an argument. The black spruce areas of northern Ontario and Quebec average about six and one-half cords of pulpwood per acre. One million five hundred thousand cords would mean 360 square miles. Is that lumber going to be reproduced fast enough to keep up the supply of pulpwood? Not a chance in the world. People will say: the farmers will suffer. How many farmers will suffer? Take every bona fide farmer who is cutting spruce pulpwood to hew himself a home out of the forest; you can keep him in the Chateau Laurier and make millions and millions of dollars for Canada. The people who are crying out for the exportation of pulpwood are companies that are making a great deal of money by exporting it. I have heard more than one American say that if that pulpwood did not go across the line, they would manufacture it into paper in Canada. Our pulp and paper people have been too ambitious. They have reached out a little too far, and just at present the industry is running to perhaps only seventy per cent of its capacity. If you kept that million or million and a half cords of pulpwood in Canada, those mills would run full time and pay better wages than, I am sorry to say, they are paying to-day. They could pay better values for the pulpwood they buy from the farmer, and we could keep $40,000,000 or $50,000,000 in Canada instead of sending our people across the line to participate in the prosperity that results there because we are sending our raw material to that country to be manufactured.

I do not know that I have any more to say in this debate. After such brilliant speakers as our house leader (Mr. Guthrie) and the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. Manion) got through, they have pretty well picked all the meat from the bones; the bones are thrown back to us and the best we can do is to look them over for the little meat that may be left on them and growl. I have endeavoured in a few words to show the house how I think we can do something for this Canada of ours, a country of which I am sure we are all proud.

Mr. H. E. LAVIGUEUR (Quebec-Montmorency): My first words in the debate will be to congratulate the Hon. Mr. Lemieux, Speaker of the house, upon the great success he achieved in Europe again this year, especially at La Sorbonne where he delivered a series of lectures. He did honour to this house, to Canada and principally to his race. We are proud of his achievements.

This year we have in the house four new members, two on each side, who have replaced four very prominent former members. There is the hon. member for West Lambton (Mr. Gray) who has replaced the late Mr. Goodison; also the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. Ferland) who has replaced Mr. Denis who has accepted a judgeship. The hon. member for Joliette is a bright young man who, I am sure, will be a great success in parliament. I take much pleasure in tendering my congratulations to the hon. member for Victoria, B.C. (Mr. Plunkett) who has replaced the distinguished ex-Minister of Agriculture, Mr. Tolmie; also to the hon. member for West York (Mr. Lawson) who has replaced Sir Henry Drayton.

I wish to express my deep regret for the incident that occurred in the provincial legislature in the city of Quebec when an attempt was made upon the life of the Hon. Mr. Taschereau.

Mr. POULIOT: No one takes it seriously.

Mr. LAVIGUEUR: We do.

Mr. POULIOT: My hon. friend is the only one who does.

Mr. LAVIGUEUR: Probably my hon. friend is the only one who does not take it seriously.

Mr. POULIOT: It is a great joke in Quebec.

Mr. LAVIGUEUR: The people of Quebec are entirely sympathetic and regret the incident. We are proud and happy that Mr. Taschereau's life was saved for the good of the province. The Hon. Mr. Taschereau is the best premier that Quebec has ever had and he is so recognized, not only in Quebec but throughout the Dominion generally. We all hope that the Hon. Mr. Taschereau will be able to retain the premiership for many years to come for the good of the province.

I take much pleasure in again congratulating the Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb) upon the splendid budget he has brought down. I wish also to congratulate the acting leader of the opposition (Mr. Guthrie), the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. Manion) and others upon the brilliant speeches they have delivered upon the budget. Of course they have a very hard case to deal with, and I do not believe their arguments will convince the people of Canada that the present budget is not a good one.

Since 1921 the situation in Canada has improved greatly, principally since 1923, the public debt having decreased to the extent of $226,000,000. The net debt of Canada today is $2,227,068,000. That is admitted by both sides of the house. The Minister of Finance, to the great joy of our people, has announced a surplus of $69,782,000, with a reduction in taxation of $25,000,000. I heard the hon. member for Fort William say to the house to-day that the reduction in the sales tax would not help very much; that it would mean only one dollar on a purchase of $100. That is so, but if you take the case of a farmer who buys $700 or $800 worth of agricultural implements and who spends for the upkeep of his family a like amount, or, say, $1,500 altogether, this reduction in the sales tax means a saving to him annually of $15. The reduction in the sales tax which the Finance minister has proposed in this budget will mean a great deal to every labourer, every farmer, and every citizen in this country. There has also been a substantial decrease in general taxation, by which all of our citizens will benefit. It has been stated that this has been made possible by the increased trade and the greater prosperity of the country. We all rejoice at this prosperity, but if we have prosperity in our country it is due to the good administration of this government. There is more confidence to-day in the public mind and in our commercial and industrial life. The people know that this government is giving them honest administration, and that the enormous debt of the country is being diminished year by year. As long as we have this government, and a man at the head of our finances like the Hon. Mr. Robb, the people of this country may rest assured that their affairs are in good hands. Another important fact which the minister mentioned was that we had a favourable balance of trade amounting to $154,000,000.

A great deal has been said about immigration. My hon. friend from Nanaimo (Mr. Dickie) who has just taken his seat, had something to say on this question. I cannot endorse absolutely all that he said, but undoubtedly there is a good deal in what he said about immigration. We must bring people to Canada who will help us to build up this country and pay off our enormous burden of debt. On the other hand, we should do everything possible to keep our own young people in this country. With that end in view, this government last year provided for grants to the provinces for repatriating our Canadians who are now resident in the United States, the grant being $50,000 to every province that would contribute a like amount. The government started with that amount as an experiment, and I am glad to say that in the province of Quebec, which contributed $50,000 for this purpose, this movement has proved a success, like everything else which is done by the government of the province of Quebec. I saw by the reports of the Minister of Colonization of the province of Quebec, the Hon. Mr. Perrault, that 651 Canadian families had been brought back to the province of Quebec on the sum of $100,000 jointly contributed by the federal government and the province. If 651 families can be brought back with an expenditure of $100,000, if the federal government would vote $100,000 instead of $50,000, and the other provinces would follow the example of Quebec, I think we would succeed in bringing back to this country from the United States many, many more of our citizens, and it would be a splendid achievement. I hope that the government and the Minister of Immigration (Mr. Forke), who is, I believe, doing his utmost for the benefit of this country, will take my suggestion into consideration and that a larger grant will be made for this purpose this year.

I notice that according to the estimates a large amount of money is to be expended this year on public works which are urgently required in the different provinces, yet in spite of that we shall have a large surplus. The acting leader of the opposition (Mr. Guthrie) took exception to the large amount of money that was to be expended in the county of North Bruce, represented in this house by the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Malcolm), so it is obvious that if we have a large surplus it is not due to the fact that the government is not spending money on works that are urgently required. All necessary works are going forward; we have a large surplus, the debt of this country is being diminshed year by year, and the Finance minister has announced that he will have enough money on hand to pay off the $60,000,000 loan coming due in August next, as well as other liabilities. So I think every citizen in Canada can have confidence and rejoice in the splendid showing which the Finance minister has made.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I purpose to deal with the subject of old age pensions. Some of the provinces, including Quebec, did not take advantage of the old age pension legislation passed last session. In my province we have several institutions that look after the aged poor, and under the laws of the province the provincial government contributes to the upkeep of these institutions. Moreover, the people of the province are accustomed to taking care of their old folks. This probably prompted Premier Taschereau, who is a statesman of large vision, not to take advantage of the federal statute. I am in favour of old age pensions, and I would suggest that where a province does not pass the necessary legislation to implement the federal statute a special grant should be made to such province to assist it in looking after its aged poor, such grant to be distributed by the province in whatever manner they may see fit. I trust this suggestion will also be taken into consideration by the government.

In view of the prosperous condition of Canada as set forth by the Minister of Finance in his budget statement, I think it may be well for hon. members to bring to the attention of the government the urgent needs of their constituencies. On previous occasions I have called the attention of the government to the very unsatisfactory railway situation in the city of Quebec. Over thirty million dollars is being expended in the city of Toronto to provide terminal facilities, and I understand that if the report of Mr. Palmer dealing with the terminal situation in the city of Montreal is adopted it will involve an expenditure of a hundred million dollars. In the city of Quebec we are urgently in need of terminal facilities. The Canadian National Railways is forced to use the Canadian Pacific Railway station, with the result that passengers brought to the city by the Canadian National system go to the Chateau Frontenac and the Canadian Pacific get the advantage of the outgoing traffic. We have made sacrifices to secure a railway station, and I believe ours is the only city that has contributed an enormous sum of money in the hope of securing terminal facilities. But notwithstanding this heavy expenditure we are still without those long-promised facilities. Once more I appeal to the government to come to our assistance, I appeal also to the railway commission, and I invite Sir Henry Thornton to come to Quebec and investigate the situation. He has made such a notable success by his capable administration of the Canadian National Railway system that I am sure a personal investigation of the situation would convince him of the necessity of providing these long-promised terminal facilities.
