On several occasions, Mr. Speaker, I have brought to the notice of this house the question of the minority stockholders of the Quebec and Lake St. John railway. Some years ago a group of business men in the city of Quebec with the help of some friends in London, England, built this railway. It now forms part of the Canadian National Railway system. The railway is seven hundred miles long and runs through the lake St. John, Chicoutimi and St. Maurice territory, where it has contributed very materially in developing the pulp industry and the aluminum industry. The latter industry is of world-wide importance and virtually controls the aluminum market. This railway is one of the most profitable sections of the Canadian National system. The majority stockholders were paid only one-third of the money they invested in the enterprise, and the minority stockholders never got back a cent of their capital. The Canadian National Railways have paid those stockholders in London who held bonds of the Grand Trunk Railway, and I submit that the Canadians who made a sacrifice in this connection should be reimbursed by the system. I have raised this question many times before, and I take this occasion to mention it again; because, as I say, this is a splendid opportunity for members to present their views and make their claims on behalf of their constituencies.

The government some years ago purchased a piece of land in Beauportville for the erection of a public building. This is a very important place, which is now enjoying the benefit of a great development, and I consider it time that the Dominion government provided the necessary funds for the erection of this building to be used as a post office and for other purposes. In 1913, I believe, plans were prepared and tenders called; but the war came and the matter was laid aside. I would ask the Minister of Public Works to take the question into serious consideration and grant this reasonable request.

I wish also to refer again this year to the necessity for a bridge on the island of Orleans on the north shore, from St. Gregoire to Montmorency. This bridge was promised as far back as 1911, when one of my predecessors, Sir Rodolphe Forget, who was member for Montmorency at the time, intimated that the construction would be undertaken and that the federal government would contribute its share. There are six parishes on the island, the population comprising good, honest agriculturists. There is no industry there but agriculture. Now these good people have no communication whatsoever after the closing of navigation; they are absolutely isolated. They have therefore been asking for the construction of this bridge. The Hon. Mr. Taschereau, with whom I have the honour to be associated in representing the interests of the people of Montmorency, is well disposed in the matter and is prepared to do his part in building the bridge if the government will assume its share. I know that the building of roads and bridges is not within the scope of the federal government, but this would be an encouragement to the development of agriculture in that part of the country, and I do not think that the government should hesitate to make its contribution for the purpose. If the government would provide the necessary amount it would ensure the construction of this bridge, which is very much needed on the historic island of Orleans.

I wish to tender my sincere thanks to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell), who is doing so much for agriculture, for a grant which he has decided to make to the Quebec provincial exhibition. Last year when his estimates were before the house a vote came up for consideration in connection with the Toronto fair, and I then drew his attention to the fact that the Quebec exhibition was receiving only $3,000 per annum, while the Toronto exhibition was in receipt of an enormous sum. I have no objection to that, the Toronto fair being a Dominion exhibition to which the people at large contribute. But I would point out that the provincial exhibition has not of late been getting the benefit of the grant of $50,000 which was given by the federal government some time ago to many of the provinces. Some of the provinces received that grant two or three times, but when it came to Quebec's turn the grant was postponed on account of the war, and consequently we were deprived of the advantage which the other provinces enjoyed. I know that the federal government have discontinued this $50,000 grant, but in view of the fact that the province of Quebec ,and probably one or two other provinces, were not in a position to take advantage of it when it was available, I would ask the minister—thanking him for the $100,000 which he gave to the exhibition of Quebec at my request—to consider this question seriously at the present time and make the $50,000 grant to the provincial exhibition.

I wish to return for a moment to a consideration of the needs of the island of Orleans. The government have a telephone system on the island but it has never given any satisfaction. There is also a local system there owned by a private individual, a Mr. Turcotte. The service is very poor; it is not at all satisfactory. I have received complaints with reference to this service on many occasions and I would ask the government to take over the control of it, or so to dispose of the telephone system on that island as to make it possible to give the people a reasonably satisfactory service, especially in view of the fact that they are so completely isolated in the winter. I understand that at my request negotiations have been entered into by the Bell Telephone Company to purchase a privately-owned system on the island, and I believe the government have agreed to turn over the entire system to the Bell Telephone Company. I have no objection to this; I have been asking for it for some years, but I hope the Minister of Public Works will see that when the transaction is completed and the system turned over to the Bell Telephone Company, every care will be taken to see that the service is equal to that provided anywhere else and that the rates prevailing in other sections are imposed by the company.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. LAVIGUEUR: Then my time having expired, sir, I will take up the subject again on another occasion.

Mr. GROTE STIRLING (Yale): Mr. Speaker, with the amendment proposed by the hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie) I find myself in complete accord. In his thrilling speech yesterday afternoon he referred to industry after industry in this country which is suffering from the lack of that interest and care which it is within the power of the Dominion government to grant the industries of Canada.

My hon. friend referred to one industry in particular in which I take a deep interest; I refer to the fruit and vegetable growing industry which one finds scattered all over Canada and than which there is no finer section than the constituency of Yale, which I have the honour to represent. We are able to come to parliament this year with the experience of another shipping season and to lay before the government the difficulties as we see them, and which we consider have grown worse during the past season. I speak particularly of that part of British Columbia which lies between the Alberta boundary on the east and the line of the Fraser where it runs south to the town of Yale. Much the greater part of the products of that area come from the constituency of Yale, and last year there was an abundant crop. In order to give some idea of that crop, with the permission of the house I propose to place a few figures on Hansard. For instance, the total number of carloads of apples shipped during the last shipping season was 5,803, as compared with a total based on the average for the last four years of 4.956. The total carloads of all fruits for 1928 was 6,947, as compared with an average for four years of 5,955; the total carloads of vegetables for 1928 was 2,248, as compared with an average total for the last four years of 2,670. It will be seen from these figures that there was a very considerable increase in the fruit shipped from that area, almost the entire increase being in apples, while there was a comparatively small falling off in vegetables.

In examining the problems with which we are faced—because in common with all industries in this country we have problems peculiar to our industry—we may look upon them as being divided into three main classes, as follows: the problems the solution of which is in the hands of the producers alone; the problems which the producers must take to their provincial governments for assistance, and those problems which the producers would wish to discuss with the Dominion government. By itself the solution of any one of these problems will not put the industry on its feet. I do not maintain, for instance, and the prdoucers in my constituency do not maintain, that if the government should suddenly change its views and correct the deficiences which we consider exist in connection with our tariff, all would be well, but we do maintain that it would be a step in that direction and that our other problems might be made easier of solution. The problems which are peculiarly in the hands of the growers are the producing, harvesting and packing of the fruit or vegetables and the removal of dissension within the ranks of the producers themselves, because it is only by maintaining perfect cooperation among the producers that we can hope for success. The problems for which we turn to the provincial government for assistance include irrigation, and it must not be forgotten that throughout that great area practically all the fruits and vegetables are produced under irrigation with its attendant cost; in addition to that there are the marketing difficulties which are affected in one way or another by provincial legislation. In the third category come those problems connected with the Dominion government such as the fruit act, the assistance which we do obtain and may still obtain from the Dominion experimental farm, and last of all the Canadian tariff. It would not be proper in this place to discuss the problems coming within the first two classes, but it is proper to discuss those matters for which we turn to the Dominion government for assistance.

So, Mr. Speaker, with regard to the fruit act let me point out that it is entirely desirable that the production and marketing of fruit should be governed in all the provinces by a Dominion fruit act; it is entirely desirable that the fruit should be graded and that there should be clauses within that act for the purpose of safeguarding the consumer. But there is one change for which the producers in Canada are looking in the fruit act. They believe that the grades of apples should be removed from the act itself and taken care of in the regulations under the act. For instance, why should apples be singled out from all the other fruits and have their grades almost unalterably fixed in the act? This is not the case with regard to other fruits, nor is it the case with regard to vegetables, eggs, seeds, butter or cheese; in all these cases the grades are fixed by means of regulations put into effect by the minister, which grades may be changed after due consultation with the industry. The reason why I want a change in that respect is this: In my short experience in parliament occasions have arisen when the government has not seen fit to introduce legislation affecting the fruit act for the purposes of amendment; the exigencies of the political situation have been such as to make it inadvisable to bring up a certain act for amendment. At the same time, however, there being fashions in marketing as in other things, it has become desirable that a change should take place. The minister has the opportunity of consulting the industry; he has the opportunity of taking it up with that parliament of horticulturists which he brought into existence in Ottawa, the Canadian Horticultural Council, on which all branches of the industry are represented. It does not seem to me that the industry suffers any danger through leaving the regulating of grades in the hands of the minister.

Another matter which should be considered in this house is the question of the tariff. A great deal was said last year about the tariff on fruits and vegetables, and I desire to report what has happened in my own particular part of the country in that regard. We had a bountiful crop and we ascertained quite early that there was also a bountiful crop on the other side of the line. We also discovered that it was the full intention of the Washington growers to dispose of their lower grade fruit in our market. With the unwillingness of the government to give us any assistance under what has been nicknamed the dump clause, it looked as though we were in a powerless position. It was not possible to take the matter up any further with the Dominion government, and we therefore consulted among ourselves. An important meeting was held in the city of Vernon, which was attended by the representatives of the fruit and vegetable growers from this great area. It was decided at that meeting that a delegation should be sent to the prairie provinces to consult with those in those provinces who had been opposed to our ideas on the subject of a tariff on fruits and vegetables, and see whether it would be possible to iron out our differences. Before going into the doings of that delegation, I might refer for a moment to the report of the markets commissioner in the city of Calgary, who acts as a lookout for the fruit markets in the three prairie provinces. The following are one or two extracts from his report:

> It was early seen that United States importers had set their minds determinedly upon exploiting Canadian markets as the most profitable field to dump their glut surpluses in. Strawberries from Missouri in car lots were sent as far west as Calgary and Edmonton. Saskatchewan and Manitoba were canvassed and supplied with the cheapest berries of the year from Missouri and for the first time much of the preserving done by prairie housewives was done from fruit imported from the United States two weeks before British Columbia produce was ready to roll.
> In all, ninety-seven cars of American strawberries were consumed on the prairie markets and only about eighty cars of British Columbia berries were consumed there. Most of these berries arrived at prairie points within two weeks of the advent of British Columbia stuff. This same condition was found in cherries, plums, prunes, peaches, apricots, pears and even apples.

And then again:

> Prunes, peaches, grapes and potatoes have been quoted at prices far below the home cost of production and supplied to Canadian markets. The dump duty could not be invoked because glut conditions in the United States compelled the shippers to quote ruinously low prices on their home market and it could not be proved that prices quoted in Canada were less than the glut price on their home markets.

From that report it will be seen that we were at a decided disadvantage in marketing within Canada the fruits grown in Canada. We consider we should have ample facilities for selling to Canadian consumers. The situation in Washington is that they desire to sell their high grade products in their own city markets, but they want to save those city markets from the competition of their own lower grade stuff, and so they search for another outlet. They discover that Canada is improperly and imperfectly protected by a tariff fence, and they say: Into Canada let the surplus go. It is against that practice that we complain, and we suggest that it is only a reasonable request to make that the Dominion authorities grant us some form of protection against glut surpluses. We suggest that it might be a good thing to try to forget that word "dump." Many battles have been fought to decide whether or not we hold to that clause, but we suggest that it is not beyond the wit of the advisers of the government to devise some clause which, if put into operation, would protect us from that surplus of glut fruit. Those in the United States who have considerable quantities of such fruit at their disposal are naturally desirous of interesting Canadian brokers in its sale, and they use many methods to advertise their goods. I have before me a bulletin which was sent out by a certain firm of brokers in the state of Washington, in which they describe the goods at their disposal. I will read an extract or two from this bulletin:

The apples which we shall describe hereunder are now packed and in the warehouse. The management did not realize that it would probably be impossible to sell these apples but in the meantime they have their packing costs invested and would like to sell all of the descriptions shown hereunder at the best obtainable prices.

But they did not want to sell them on their own American markets. Those three states produce about seven times as much as we do under irrigated conditions in British Columbia. They market that seven-fold crop to a population twelve times as large as that of Canada, and we say that if they cannot dispose of their surpluses without hurting their own markets then they should not be permitted to send them into Canada to hurt ours. Another extract from this circular reads as follows:

You will note that I have placed no prices on these descriptions and bearing in mind that every penny over and above packing costs means help to these growers, I therefore want you to tackle this proposition and help us sell these few cars.

The bulletin continues with a description of the fruit:

The indentations are not severe; most of the apples carry a beautiful blush; here and there will be found an apple or two that is badly hail-marked, but taking them as a whole, these cookers or hail-marked Bananas are not bad.

And then again:

This personal letter to you is to find that market. It is up to each one of you receiving this bulletin.

The bulletin concludes with the following:

Please don't read this bulletin and say to yourself "It can't be done." If you have the will to do and the sympathy in your heart to help someone who is rather in a bad situation it can be done. Now it is up to you. Let me hear from you by wire.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): If I may interrupt, would my hon. friend give the name of the writer of that letter?

Mr. STIRLING: In reply to the Minister of National Health, I would be entirely pleased to show him the letter, but as it was given to me as a letter which had been received in the trade and it was considered inadvisable to publish the name, I would prefer not to do so.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I must take exception to that. This is the second time I have heard that letter read.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I rise to a point of order.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The name of the writer should be given.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Order.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): My hon. friend is entitled to give the name of the writer.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: Do I understand that the hon. gentleman is rising to a point of order?

Mr. GUTHRIE: My point of order is that the minister must not interrupt. It is a very simple one.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I will rise to a point of order. Documents cannot be read in the house promiscuously. The name of the writer of a document should be given and the document produced.

Mr. GUTHRIE: That is not a rule of the house.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): It is a new rule.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): My hon. friend should at least table the document.

Mr. STEVENS: That is childish.

Mr. GEARY: Why is the minister so much afraid of it?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I am not afraid of it at all. This thing has been bandied about the country too much and nobody will come out and tell the name of the writer.

Mr. STIRLING: I am sorry I have inadvertently hurt the feelings of the Minister of National Health—

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Not at all.

Mr. STIRLING: —because almost my next remark was going to be an expression of some gratitude to the Minister of National Health for having come into the fruit growing area last year and consulted with the industry, holding conferences at Penticton, Kelowna and Vernon for the purpose, as he said, of informing himself on the subject and being helpful. His visit there was entirely appreciated by the industry, and it was earnestly hoped that a further discussion of these difficulties by him with his colleagues might produce some results.

I referred just now to the visit of the delegation to the prairies. They also received the blessing of the Minister of National Health. He thought it was an excellent thing that we should endeavour to get away from the word "dumping". He thought it was a most satisfactory suggestion that our own growers and producers should go into the prairies and discuss with the farmers' organizations there the difficulties which existed. That delegation went to Winnipeg and the first farmers' organization that they met was the United Farmers of Manitoba—the diminishing remnant of undiluted free trade in the prairies. The delegation listened with considerable interest to speeches on the subject of undiluted free trade, and the United Farmers of Manitoba went so far as to endeavour to convert our producers to a campaign in favour of free trade in this country. Therefore we made little progress, for our representatives were not converted.

They received happier treatment at the hands of the Manitoba Cooperative Poultry Market Association and the Winnipeg District Vegetable Growers' Association. That is not to be wondered at, because both of those associations are suffering to some extent from the same trouble which afflicts us. They also met representatives of the Manitoba wheat pool and were received most courteously. I think it might almost be said that those gentlemen were prepared to adopt a position of friendly neutrality. Before leaving Winnipeg they had an opportunity of meeting men in the board of trade, the United Grain Growers, the Grain Growers Grain Company and the Winnipeg Grain Exchange, with all of whom they discussed the situation. With all of them they were able to an extent to explain differences of opinion and to meet criticism and what were supposed to be helpful suggestions for ameliorating the situation by exposing the difficulties that those suggestions, if carried out, might create.

From there they went on to Saskatchewan, and in Regina they met the representatives of the Saskatchewan wheat pool and the cooperative creameries. They met also the leading men in that province. Coming nearer home, at Calgary they had a most gratifying reception from the board of trade and there again they met men of prominence among the Alberta farmers. The interviews with individuals were of course not public, and it would not be proper for me to disclose what took place. But I may say that the delegation came back from that visit to the prairies thoroughly pleased with their reception and also surprised that in the three prairie provinces, where free trade is supposed to reign, the proposition which the producers put forward was received with favour in certain places, and at least with interest in others, making them think that possibly the time has come in Canada when there may be a coming together of interests on this matter, when it will no more be necessary for the government of the day to rely too strenuously on utter, out-and-out free trade if they desire to retain power.

It is noticeable in that regard that about the time of the meeting in Vernon, the Winnipeg Free Press published an editorial which contained these two passages. It started by referring to the vigorous demands that are being made by the fruit growers of British Columbia and Ontario for protection against dumping, and it continues:

> The dumping provision is regarded by public opinion as proper; and its enforcement during the summer season against consignments of the United States surplus entered for consumption at less than cost price, would meet with no opposition from the fruit-consuming Canadian public.

Later on:

> It is claimed that the dumping machinery in the Customs Act cannot be made to work in the case of so perishable a commodity as fruit. It surely ought not, however, to be beyond the capacity of our lawmakers to make provision by which the full advantage of the statutory enactment against dumping should accrue to our fruit growers. Inquiry and experiment along these lines might bring results advantageous to the fruit growers.

Of course the editorial goes on to condemn utterly any widening of protection or misuse of protection, but the very fact that these two sentences appear in an editorial in the Winnipeg Free Press was taken by us to mean that there was a little more kindliness of heart being shown in the prairies to our point of view.

Let me attempt in a very few words to put forward what it is the producer of fruit and vegetables is actually asking for. To begin with, he suggests that we forget the word "dumping." In the second place, he suggests that we shall be protected against the importation of the surplus products of another country. He is ready to admit that the machinery which has been made use of in the past has not always been wisely made use of, but he suggests that it is reasonable for the producer to bring this difficulty before the Dominion government and ask for a solution. In the words of one who years ago was an occupant of the House of Commons press gallery, writing in the Manitoba Free Press:

What the growers and allied interests requested at the recent tariff conference at Vernon was for some fair price-fixing regulation for purposes of importation in glut periods that would prevent glut conditions on Canadian markets, and prevent prices dropping to the point where the producer cannot get his cost of production and a reasonable margin of profit on his operations.

The one and only reason why the Canadian markets were not flooded in this last season by "C" grade apples from the Pacific states was just this: When our peak of production was approaching, we became aware of the fact that it was the intention of the United States to ship in this glut surplus, and it was therefore necessary for our shippers to make up their minds whether they would allow that stuff to come in, or whether they would shave the price, and keep on cutting, until it was inadvisable for the foreign shipper to come in. They decided to shave the price, with the obvious result that on the average, I think I am correct in saying, the apple producer at least in the interior of British Columbia will finish his operations with a debit balance on his books. That, Mr. Speaker, cannot go on indefinitely.

This is the fifth time that I have had the privilege in this house of endeavouring to lay the fruit growers' burdens before the government, and in each one of those years I have pointed out that this industry is sick. It is little better to-day than it was five years ago, and if this condition is allowed to continue much longer, we shall find that whole areas in Canada will go out of the production of fruit. And if that happens, when there is no Canadian fruit to give competition to the fruit of another country, the consumer in Canada will receive fruit from that other country just as it suits those shippers to send them in and at the price that the shippers choose to charge. The consumer in this country will be at their mercy. It is not only the fruit grower himself who will suffer. There is probably some $40,000,000 invested in the fruit and vegetable industry in the valleys surrounding the Okanagan, and besides that, there are all the other walks of life connected with the industry in that neighbourhood. The storekeeper will suffer, and so will the professional man, and if the fruit industry goes down, we shall have that sorry spectacle of another little piece of Canada neglected. It surely does not pass the wit of this government, if they have the will to take up this matter, to solve the problem once for all, for I would once more emphasize that the present condition cannot continue much longer. If we can have the Canadian market, we can satisfy the Canadian consumer, but if in the selling of our produce in the Canadian market we are to be met by the produce of another country, there can be only one result.

On motion of Mr. Fansher (Last Mountain) the debate was adjourned.

On motion of Mr. Robb the house adjourned at 9.45 p.m.

MARINE AND FISHERIES

FIRST REPORT OF SELECT STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. WILLIAM DUFF (Antigonish-Guysboro) presented the first report of the select standing committee on marine and fisheries.

Mr. Duff moved that the report be concurred in.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: This motion can be accepted only by unanimous consent.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Explain.

Mr. SPENCER: We do not know what the report is about.

Mr. DUFF: The report was read only a few minutes ago, and if my hon. friend had been listening he could have heard it.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: If there is an objection to the motion being adopted it will have to stand as a notice of motion for to-morrow.

Motion stands.

BEAUHARNOIS POWER PROJECT

PARTIAL RETURN LAID ON TABLE OF THE HOUSE

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I beg to lay on the table a partial return to an address of the House of Commons dated February 13, 1929, with respect to the project commonly known as the Beauharnois power and canal proposition.

Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the government would find it possible to lay on the table at the same time the papers in connection with the application of the St. Lawrence Power Company for a similar right some years ago, which application was refused. The papers must be in the possession of the department and they would be very interesting.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes, if such papers are there I will ask that they be laid on the table.

DIVORCE PROCEEDINGS

RIGHT OF MARRIED WOMEN TO ESTABLISH DOMICILE

Mr. W. J. WARD (Dauphin) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 75, respecting the domicile of married women in proceedings for divorce.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Explain.

Mr. WARD: The purpose of this bill is to give to women who have been deserted by their husbands or otherwise separated from them for a period of two years or longer the right to establish their own domicile, which right they do not possess at present.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

TORONTO HARBOUR

Mr. CHURCH:

1. What work remains to be done in Toronto harbour by the government under order in council and agreement made in 1913 with the city and harbour commission for harbour improvements?

2. What sums of money have been spent to date by the government on such agreement.

3. What were the terms of the erection of two bridges to Toronto island across the western and eastern gaps in said agreement aforesaid?

Mr. ELLIOTT:

1. By authority of order in council of June 10, 1913, the government was to undertake the following works which were estimated to cost approximately $6,400,000:—

(a) The excavation to a depth of 24 feet of a channel and basin in Ashbridge bay; the channel to be approximately 6,000 feet long and 400 feet wide, and the basin 1,100 feet by 1,100 square; along both sides of the channel and around the basin are to be constructed pile work retaining walls that will accommodate the traffic which it is intended to develop in this new industrial district; (b) The construction of a cribwork breakwater, approximately 18,600 feet long to protect the lake shore west of the western entrance to the harbour; (c) The construction of a seawall of pile work, approximately 17,295 feet long, to protect the lake shore on the east side of the eastern entrance of the harbour; (d) The building of two bascule bridges, one over the eastern entrance, and the other over the western entrance to the harbour.

Items (c) and (d) of the foregoing still remain to be done.

2. $8,188,741.08.

3. As included in the above mentioned order in council.

ALFRED PEAT BOG

Mr. CANTLEY:

1. What is the character of and what the obligation of Peat Fuels Limited to the government of Canada in connection with the Alfred peat bog?

2. What amount does the Canadian government claim as due on account of sums expended on remodelling Alfred peat bog plant?

3. Has the Dominion government any other claim against Peat Fuels Limited for rent, breach of contract or otherwise?

4. During how many days did Peat Fuels Limited operate Alfred peat bog during 1928?

5. What quantity of peat fuel did above company produce during 1928?

6. What is the cost of freighting peat fuel from Alfred to Montreal?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton):

1. Owing to the inability of Peat Fuels Limited to operate the Alfred plant, the government leased, under agreement, the plant and equipment of the company for a period of one year and eight months. Peal Fuels Limited agreed, on the expiration of this lease, to reimburse the government for all expenditures incurred in fully equipping the plant.

2. Approximately $84,130.08, plus accrued interest from January 1, 1929.

3. Yes, for sales of peat fuel $3,409.66.

4. None. Plant was operated by the government.

5. None.

6. Eight cents per hundred pounds for minimum shipments of 40,000 pounds.

MESSAGE TO PRESIDENT HOOVER

On the orders of the day:

Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): Before the orders of the day are called I would like to ask a question. The press despatches indicate that His Excellency the Governor General sent a message of congratulation to the President of the United States on the occasion of his inauguration. I desire to ask the right hon. Prime Minister if such message was sent by His Excellency on the advice or with the approval of his constitutional advisers.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): The communication to which my hon. friend has just referred was a personal communication in the nature of an international courtesy, for which I am prepared to take full responsibility.

ALLEGED IMPORTATION OF GERMAN WORKERS

Mr. PETER McGIBBON (Muskoka-Ontario): I would like to ask the Minister of Labour (Mr. Heenan) a question with regard to the accuracy of a report appearing in the Toronto Evening Telegram of Saturday last with regard to a strike at Oshawa. In this article it is stated that the strike was caused by the importation of Germans on the advice of the Minister of Labour, and I would like to ask if it is the policy of his department to recommend the importation of Germans to put Canadians out of jobs.

Hon. PETER HEENAN (Minister of Labour): The Minister of Labour is very glad to inform the hon. gentleman that there is no foundation for that statement.

Mr. McGIBBON: And you deny the accuracy of it?

SOLDIER SETTLERS IN BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. H. J. BARBER (Fraser Valley): I would like to draw the attention of the Minister of Immigration (Mr. Forke) to the serious state of affairs which appears to exist among the soldier settlers in a certain section of British Columbia. I have here a brief extract taken from one of the leading Vancouver papers, which is as follows:

> Say Soldier Settlers are Starving Here
> Fraser Valley Delegation to Ask Settlement Board for Relief Plan
> The soldier settlement board will be interviewed by a committee, to be appointed this afternoon by the Fraser Valley Milk Producers Association on annual meeting at Hamilton hall, it was decided this morning, to ask for relief in connection with assignment of milk tickets by soldier-settler members for liabilities to the soldiers' settlement board.
> Reduction in the price of butter fat has placed some of these members in a difficult position, it was stated. Some who have been unable to break the assignments have left the association altogether, while others, it was declared, with wives and children were starving.

I have also received a letter in connection with this matter, and I would ask the minister if some relief can not be given.

Mr. FORKE: I have no information regarding this matter, but I will make inquiries and give an answer to the hon. member.

THE BUDGET

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON THE ANNUAL FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The house resumed from Friday, March 8, consideration of the motion of Hon. J. A. Robb (Minister of Finance) that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of ways and means, and the proposed amendment thereto of Hon. Hugh Guthrie.

Mr. W. R. FANSHER (Last Mountain): Mr. Speaker, in rising to make a few observations on the budget as presented by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb), I would like to make reference to the remarks made the other evening by the hon. member for Yale (Mr. Stirling). He reviewed a state of affairs which exists with regard to the apple-growers of British Columbia, and his observations no doubt attracted considerable attention. I do not desire to have my remarks considered as offering any advice to those who have found themselves in the position described by the hon. member, but I would like to mention that the wheat-growers in the three prairie provinces found themselves in a somewhat similar position in 1923. In that year the farmers of western Canada found that they were producing their crops at a very serious loss. Many farmers had an actual cash loss of $3,000, and some farmers lost as much as $10,000. We had our backs to the wall and we had to devise ways and means by which we could benefit from our experience, and from the morass of opinion which was expressed at that time was evolved what is known as the western wheat pool. We did not believe that we could ask for protection and have the situation relieved in that way, but we believed in the old adage that mutual self help was the best help we could get and we proceeded to set up an organization which would put our product on the markets of the world at the lowest possible cost. In reviewing the situation at that time we discovered that the consumer of our wheat was paying a much higher price than was commensurate with the price we received for the product. I think we have succeeded to a very large extent in eliminating that large spread between the price the consumer has to pay for the finished article, the loaf of bread, and the price we receive as the producers of wheat. I am sure that we in the prairie provinces pay a sufficient price for a box of apples to net the producers a very handsome return. I can recall having paid as high as $2.75 for class C apples, and up to $3.25 for class A; I know that the cost of packing is about 55 cents and the freight is about 65 cents per box, and I do not see any reason why the prairie provinces should not be treated in the same manner with regard to apples as are the consumers of wheat. I do not see any reason why the producers in Yale and other constituencies in British Columbia could not make some arrangement with the consumers which would eliminate this wide spread. If that were done we would be able to consume more apples and the producers would receive a greater return for them. I only offer this as a suggestion, and I would like to see another goodwill deputation visit our provinces with the definite object of getting together on this matter so that we might both be mutually helped.

It is not my intention to detain the house in reviewing the budget, as I have a specific matter which I would like to bring to the attention of the house. A situation has grown up very recently in western Canada which, I think, should receive the very serious consideration of the Minister of Finance. I want to congratulate the minister on the very clear and concise manner in which he presented the financial statement of the affairs of Canada, and for the few reductions in the schedules which he has brought down. He also gave us a very clear understanding as to the indebtedness of Canada. If I have his figures correctly, he gave the dead weight debt of Canada as $2,330,835,086, a rather colossal sum. Although most of this enormous debt was created during the war, we must remember that the interest on this large sum of money, as well as any reductions in principal, must come through the efforts of the taxpayers of Canada. I am pleased to note that there is no reduction in the income tax in the budget of this year. We did have reductions in 1927 and 1928, and I remember receiving letters, pamphlets and exhortations from various organizations throughout Canada urging that I support the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance in the reduction of the income tax. Whenever I answered any of this correspondence I always stated that I was opposed to any reduction in this tax so long as we had a war debt which had to be met; so long as we had a war debt upon which the interest charges were accruing year by year. The income tax along with other taxes, was specially instituted to take care of the enormous debt thrust upon us because of the war. It is a tax which comes from those who are best able to pay. Those who come under the present schedules of the tax, in my opinion and I am sure in the opinion of many members of this house, are well able to pay that tax. It is a tax that is easily collected; there is no particular expense in connection with its collection. On the other hand, if it were done away with, whence would the interest charges come and whence would the amounts necessary for the reduction of our enormous debt be collected? They would be collected principally from the customs and excise taxes and even now, as I shall endeavour to show a little later on, the burden is very heavy on many of us. It is not my intention to go into the matter fully, but if we take into consideration the platform that was given us in 1919 and again in 1921, I feel that we are moving all too slowly along this line. In that platform certain commodities were specified that would be put on the free list. The government has been in power for seven years and the last item on the list, namely, fertilizers, has been put on the free list. I would impress upon the minister the necessity within the next few years of putting on the free list the next item, that is, cement. In looking over the report of the hearing before the tariff advisory board we realize that the cement people can well do without any protection whatever in the production of that commodity. It is a staple building material and it enters into the cost of our production to a great extent so that the removal of the duty would be of great assistance to us.

Passing on I should like to comment on the talk of prosperity in the Dominion. I was pleased to note in the speech delivered the other day by the acting leader of the opposition (Mr. Guthrie) that he said the prosperity had not reached the small towns and townships throughout Canada. If we pick up the papers and read the bank statements we would think Canada was rolling in wealth, and possibly from their point of view they are stating what actually exists. Bank statements show unprecedented prosperity; brokerage houses and financial corporations show a very large increase in their operations and profits. Our Canadian National railway was never before in its history able to make such a showing as it did during 1928. The gross earnings were far and away above anything it was able to show in previous years. The net profit that our nationally-owned railway made last year was $7,000,000, not including the interest accruing to the government. That is a very creditable showing. I just want to point out where the major portion of this revenue came from. In western Canada we had an immense crop, so far as quantity goes; considerably more than 500,000,000 bushels of wheat were produced there last year and from that crop the railways received the tonnage on which they were able to make such enormous earnings. But the western crop in the aggregate is not paying the cost of production. The revenue from this immense crop which has created such prosperity, we might say in the upper strata of the financial world, has not brought prosperity to the men who produced it. I could name hundreds of farmers in my own constituency in western Canada who, when they drew out every bushel of wheat that was taken from the threshing machine and marketed the same, found the first pool payment on that wheat was not sufficient by several dollars to pay the cost of threshing which is a very minor cost in the production of wheat. That is a very serious matter and it is driving us in western Canada to look around for new methods of production. That is not all due to climatic conditions. True it is, we had a frost just when the wheat was ready to harvest. This wrinkled the bran a little in some instances but it did not harm the milling value at all. As was mentioned by the hon. member for Yale (Mr. Stirling) last week, their grading system in regard to apples militates against their profits considerably, and the same thing can be said with regard to grain in western Canada; the grading system under which we operate at present was not applicable to last year's crop. The producers of last year's crop are suffering to the extent of millions of dollars because they could not receive the intrinsic value of their product, and because of the over-production the farmer's plight is made even worse. True it is, we produced an enormous crop in western Canada last year. We are told that the surplus production of wheat throughout the world in the harvest of 1928 was more than 400,000,000 bushels, and yet we have an immigration policy which is bringing into Canada only farmers to settle here, open up new territories and produce more wheat to flood the world's market and in that way reduce the price. That is a policy which, I maintain, is fallacious. We should make a complete survey of the situation and see whether some better method cannot be found than bringing into Canada immigrants ostensibly to go on the land and produce where production does not show a profit. During the last number of years the position of the farmer has not been rosy. True it is, the 1927 crop gave us a little ray of hope, but it was dissipated when we started to thresh our last year's production.

This leads me to another phase of the situation which I want to draw to the attention of the house, and especially to that of the Minister of Finance. In his remarks in bringing down the budget he had these words to say, as reported in Hansard, page 595:

> The constant expansion within Canada brings new problems. We should recognize that this generation has an obligation to build wisely for the greater to-morrow.

I want to bring to the attention of the house Canada's new problem. In western Canada we are not slow to adopt new methods of tillage, harvesting, marketing and so on. I might refer for a moment or two to what industries are doing. I remember well reading the report of the hearing before the tariff advisory board of the application for an increase in duty of fifty cents a ton on coke where one of the manufacturers engaged in the production of iron and steel threw across the table the remark that a certain institution in this country was a back number; that its machinery of production was out of date and that he himself was very strongly opposed to any advance of fifty cents a ton in the duty on coke, for the reason that he had spent several hundred thousand in putting into his plant new machinery, up-to-date methods of handling his product, and he felt that he should not be penalized to that extent because he wanted to keep abreast of the times. In western Canada in the last three years there has been an innovation in the harvesting of our crop and I want to speak particularly of the combine and the position in which it is placed through the tariff. I might draw the attention of the house to certain items in the customs tariff schedules which relate to harvesting machinery. Tariff item 445 specifies harvesting machinery as follows:

> Mowers, mowing machines, harvesters, self-binding or without binders, binding attachments, reapers and complete parts thereof: British preference, free; Intermediate, 6 per cent; General, 6 per cent.

The machine known as a combine, which is coming into extensive use in the west, is not wholly a thresher; it is only part thresher and part reaper; it falls under section 60 of the Customs Act, and section 60 reads as follows:

> If an article is enumerated in the tariff under two or more names or descriptions, and there is a difference of duty, the highest duty provided shall be charged and collected thereon.

To prove my statement that this machine is new in western Canada, and that the farmers are not slow in taking up advanced ideas in either tillage, harvesting or marketing, I would like now to quote you a few figures. I wrote to the Departments of Agriculture in the three prairie provinces, and I received from those departments similar answers, as they quote the figures given by the Northwest Farmer in their census of the situation. I hold here in my hand that document to which I have referred. It has been compiled from information secured from all machinery companies doing business in western Canada that sold or dealt in combines, and I want you to note particularly the rapidity with which the western farmer has taken up this particular machine. Combines first made their appearance in any number in 1926. In the province of Manitoba during that year there were two in operation; in Saskatchewan, 148 and in Alberta, 26—not a very large number when you consider the thousands and thousands of farmers in western Canada. But in 1927 twenty-one were added in Manitoba; 382 in Saskatchewan and 195, in Alberta, making a total of 598 put into operation in 1927.

Undoubtedly, these combines were proving their effectiveness and efficiency, because when we come to 1928, we see an increase of 611 per cent— 611 per cent in one year. In Manitoba that year, in addition to those already in operation, they had 206; in Saskatchewan, 2,356, and in Alberta, 1,095, making a total for the year 1928 of 3,657 new machines.

The grand total of those machines brought in and put into operation in the last three years was 4,431. These machines came in, and were classified under tariff item 447b, which reads as follows:

Wind stackers and threshing machine separators, including baggers, weighers and self-feeders therefor and complete parts therefor: British preferential, 5 per cent; Intermediate, 10 per cent; General, 10 per cent.

I want to detain the house a little while in explaining this. The rate is 10 per cent. It is 5 per cent under the British preferental rate and 10 per cent under the general tariff. A thresher-separator, that is, an ordinary thresher-separator, costs to-day anywhere from $1,600 to $1,900, according to its size. It is set in the field and remains in a stationary position, and threshes all day usually. It is not drawn around the field, and it is not subjected to anything like the wear and tear that a combine is put to. The tractor that furnishes the power for that separator comes in free, but the motor that furnishes the power for the combine is taxed 10 per cent. There is in this a great inequality. The combine costs anywhere from $2,000 to $4,000, and it takes a $4,000 combine to accomplish in a day the amount of work that can be done by the ordinary separator that costs $1,600. It is a new method of harvesting. It gets our wheat in a better condition to the elevator. It keeps it away from the snow because, as we know, we very often have a snow storm early in the season which necessitates threshing the remainder of the crop the following year.

It is my contention that this machine should come under item 445 and should be taxed 6 per cent instead of 10 per cent. If the combine would last as long as the ordinary separator conditions would not be so bad. But this particular machine is short-lived, and, under ordinary circumstances, a farmer will require two of them in the period of time during which an ordinary threshing separator would last him.

Mr. VALLANCE: Might I ask a question?

Mr. FANSHER (Last Mountain): Yes.

Mr. VALLANCE: Does the swather come under the same tariff item?

Mr. FANSHER (Last Mountain): Yes, the entire machine comes under the higher rate. The combine is essentially a harvesting machine. It does the harvesting and the threshing at the same time. When the crop is to be harvested it goes around the field, picks up the standing grain, threshes it and delivers it in the wagon. In being hauled around the field you will readily understand that the machine is in the dust and dirt all the time and, therefore, it is not a long-lived machine. It is my desire to impress upon the members very strongly this contention: that this particular machine should be designated as a harvester. It is essentially a harvester machine, and should be designated as such. Take last year, for instance. There were 3,657 of those machines brought in, and you must realize that the production of wheat in western Canada is penalized to a very great extent when I say that it was only in 1926 that they first made their appearance. The present classification is not in keeping with the spirit of the revision of the machinery schedule made a few years ago when all harvesting machinery then in existence was put under the six per cent rate and I am further convinced that no such classification was then contemplated. I feel sure that all the members of this house, whether they be agricultural producers or not, will see the inequality that exists in placing this machine which is, as I say, purely a harvesting machine, in a classification which so penalizes the production of wheat. May I repeat that the motor that furnishes the power to operate the combine is taxed ten per cent, whereas the tractor that provides the motive power for the separator which threshes the grain in the ordinary way—the system that has been in use in western Canada for many years—comes in free. The motors attached to the combine and the tractor develop practically the same power, they are largely identical in design, and yet, because one is attached to the combine and becomes a part of it a tax of ten per cent is levied upon it while the other being detached and classified as a tractor comes in free of duty.

Mr. STIRLING: Is this machine made in Canada at all?

Mr. FANSHER (Last Mountain): To the best of my knowledge these machines are not made in Canada. I understand that the Massey-Harris Company have been manufacturing them in the United States and shipping them across the line.

Mr. VALLANCE: It would not make any difference.

Mr. FANSHER (Last Mountain): As my hon. friend opposite says, it would not make any difference. Other harvester machinery comes under the 6 per cent schedule. Why not this? This is a very high priced, short-lived machine. An ordinary separator will outlast two of them. To be compelled to pay the higher rate of duty on such a machine seems to me to be altogether at variance with the spirit governing the revision of the machinery schedules that were dealt with a few sessions ago.

To show the rapid rise in the value of the imports of this particular class of machine during the past few years I propose to give the house a few figures which I have received from Mr. Coates of the Bureau of Statistics. In the figures are included threshing machines, wind stackers, baggers and so on—all parts of the threshing machine. Prior to 1926—the year that combines, we might say, made their first appearance in western Canada—our importations of threshing machines amounted in value to $2,482,830. The increase in the value of our imports for 1927 corresponds with the increase in the number of these combines that were imported, the figures being practically double those for the preceding year, that is, $4,044,503. It is not to be supposed that any more threshing machines were imported in 1928 than in 1927, presumably the ordinary importation to keep pace with the development of the country, but we find a very marked increase in the valuation of the machines imported, and this is due principally to the greater number of combines included in the figures. In 1928 the value of our imports under that schedule was $8,214,938.

It may be argued by those who advocate high protection that 10 per cent is not an unreasonable rate of duty; but this particular type of harvesting machine, which may be said to be first cousin to the threshing separator, is subject practically to a 20 per cent duty. So far as the number of bushels threshed is concerned, the combine cannot do any more work in a day than the ordinary separator costing $1,600, but it costs the farmer from $3,500 to $4,000. But although the combine does not do any more work than the ordinary separator, there is a saving of time and in other ways by its use. But we have to meet the changing conditions, and if the extra tariff duty on these machines has to be borne by the producers of wheat, then they are unjustly penalized; and if the harvest conditions of 1928 are repeated over a few more years, I am sure that many of us in western Canada will have to quit growing wheat. Therefore I appeal to the house and to the Minister of Finance seriously to consider this situation. The hon. minister in his budget speech said that new conditions are arising, and that it is the duty of the government to meet these conditions. Let me quote his words, to be found at page 595 of Hansard:

> In accordance with the fiscal policy of the government, the tariff changes to be submitted to-day are designed to reduce taxation and to lessen the costs of production.

I am confident, Mr. Speaker, that if I had the time I could prove conclusively to this house that these combines should come under the 6 per cent rate.

Mr. GEARY: Will the hon. member allow this question—in the majority of cases is the reaping done by the combines, or does the combine follow the reaper?

Mr. FANSHER (Last Mountain): It is done both ways. In the northern areas where the wheat has to dry in the stook the swather method is preferable. I use one myself. In the dry areas where the straw is stiff and stands up for a long period the method is what we call the straight combine—straight from the standing grain into the machine. But the swather is a part of the combine—an essential harvesting part. About one-half of the machine is the harvester, the other half is the thresher. Of course, a certain amount of the value is represented in the motor that operates the machine. I wish to quote further from the Finance Minister's budget speech. At page 594 of Hansard he is reported as follows:

> In so far as we have a fiscal problem, our task would appear to be that of readjusting,—

Will the house kindly note those words?

> —that of readjusting, as necessity arises, our customs tariff schedules to meet new conditions, of removing inequalities where inquiry proves such to exist.

I think the hon. minister will agree with me that the rate of duty on this particular machine is undoubtedly such an inequality as he had in mind when introducing his budget. Therefore, I appeal to him to give the matter his very serious consideration, and I trust that he will see his way clear to have the machine designated as a harvester to bring it under tariff item 445. In this way I can assure him that he will be conferring a great favour on those who are engaged in producing Canada's staple crop—wheat.

I would be remiss in my duty, Mr. Speaker, if I did not congratulate the hon. gentleman (Mr. Guthrie) who led the opposition in the absence of his leader on the very able speech which he delivered in criticism of the budget. I have already noticed that he referred to the prosperity mentioned by the Minister of Finance as not reaching some of the small towns and townships of the Dominion. In this I heartily agree with him. It is true that there is in this country a growing spirit of resentment at some portions of President Hoover's inaugural speech, and I am afraid that possibly our desire to retaliate will get the better of our good judgment, with the result that something rash will be advocated. But be this as it may, I feel that we have not a great deal to fear, no matter what tariff action is taken by the United States. True, our cattle industry may be thrown out of joint for a little while, our dairy men may suffer very materially for a short time, but I am convinced that in the long run the consumers in the United States are going to be heard from. If I might offer a suggestion in this connection, I would propose that while we are waiting to see what action is taken by our neighbours in the matter of tariff revision we should evolve a definite tariff policy ourselves. I would suggest a remedy, and in proof I would quote from the speech of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb), Hansard, page 594. He says:

> It is gratifying to note the steady development of inter-empire trade. Canada, the pioneer of the British preference, looks on empire trade as the keystone of its external trade policy and desires in every way to foster closer trading relations throughout the British commonwealth of nations.

I would just offer a suggestion in closing. In answer to anything that may arise from the tariff juggling which may take place in the United States, I urge that we put into effect the principle just quoted and that we materially reduce the tariff against Great Britain. Great Britain takes the greater portion of our agricultural products. She takes upwards of $300,000,000 worth of wheat and wheat products; some put it at $275,000,000, others at $280,000,000, while others again claim that it is over $300,000,000. Now if we are allowed to ship such a large proportion of our exportable surplus to a country the size of Great Britain, surely we can consider giving her a very marked increase in the preference which she now enjoys in the markets of Canada. And we can do this as a very effective answer to anything that may be advanced in the way of argument in connection with the tariff raising policy of the new President of the United States.

Mr. J. A. CLARK (Vancouver-Burrard): I am sure, Mr. Speaker, that you, like all the rest of us, in fact like all Canadians, perused with great interest Mr. Hoover's inaugural speech delivered on March 4, and I am sure also that your eye, as did the eyes of many others, fell upon one outstanding paragraph in that speech. I have no doubt that you looked through the speech to see what the policy of the United States was going to be towards this country, and it is rather significant that the paragraph in question should be so brief in a speech of such length. I should like to read the paragraph which relates particularly to the policy of the United States towards Canada and the outside world. That paragraph reads:

> Action upon some of the proposals upon which the Republican party was returned to power, particularly further agricultural relief and limited changes in the tariff, cannot in justice to our farmers, our labour and our manufacturers be postponed. I shall therefore request a special session of congress for the consideration of these two questions. I shall deal with each of them upon the assembly of the congress.

A remarkably brief paragraph for a special session of congress. We in this country have never called a special session of parliament except in great emergencies, such as war. But apparently the point indicated in President Hoover's speech is considered in the United States as of sufficient importance to warrant the calling of a special session of congress. I think my hon. friend from Last Mountain (Mr. Fansher) who preceded me need have very little fear about what will be done by this government; all he need do is to follow the history of the Liberal party during the past seven or eight years and he may be fully reassured as to what that party's action is likely to be.

Mr. ERNST: Inaction.

Mr. CLARK: Yes, a policy of inaction. Yet, Mr. Speaker, I am sure that you have with some alarm examined the trade returns as between these two countries. Take for instance the year 1925. In that year we had an adverse balance of trade with the United States of $92,000,000. In 1926 that became $133,000,000; in 1927 $208,000,000; and in the fiscal year 1928 $222,000,000, and, for the calendar year 1928, $333,000,000.

I would point out that the New York Times, a very reliable newspaper, states that our adverse balance of trade with the United States for the calendar year 1928 was $427,000,000. Now, Mr. Speaker, is it not beyond comprehension that any member of this parliament can rise in his place and say, "Stand pat on such a situation"? In my opinion this is Canada's outstanding problem to-day. How are we going to remedy the situation? Can Canada continue to pay the United States $400,000,000 a year? Can the Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb) contemplate the situation with equanimity? A few years ago the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) considered our balance of trade somewhat of a test with respect to our prosperity. I am sorry he is not in his seat; I should like to read to him his own words spoken in his budget speech in 1926. However, I shall still read them. I quote from Hansard, May 18, 1926, at page 3485:

> For the twelve months ending March, 1926, the visible trade balance of Canada amounted to $401,134,000, and that for the United States to $352,364,000. . . . or a cool $50,000,000 less than our favourable trade balance in the same period. This fact is a remarkable demonstration of how Canada is holding her own in the markets of the world. The policy of the present administration, of cheapening the instruments of production, has operated to increase the volume of Canadian exports.

I direct the foregoing particularly to the attention of the Minister of Finance, in the absence of the Prime Minister, and ask him to examine the monthly summary of foreign commerce of the United States, which he will find in our library. Therein he will discover that the favourable balance of trade in the United States for the calendar year 1928 was $1,000,000,000 while the favourable balance of trade for Canada in the same period was just $127,000,000. Moreover, had it not been for a phenomenal crop our Minister of Finance would have presented us this year with an adverse balance of trade; because for the first three months of this year there was actually an adverse balance against Canada with all countries. But, as I say, due to a phenomenal crop the minister was enabled to bring down a statement which showed a favourable balance of trade. To-day, however—and I invite the Prime Minister's attention to this—in world trade there is a "cool" balance in favour of the United States as against Canada of $900,000,000 instead of a "cool" balance of $50,000,000 in our favour as was the case in 1926.

Surely, Mr. Speaker, these facts call for action; they called for action before Mr. Hoover delivered his inaugural speech and they call for action much more definitely to-day. I am sure you wondered, Mr. Speaker, as we all wondered, why the Minister of Finance delivered his budget speech on Friday, March 1, when he knew very well for months in advance that the President of the United States would deliver his inaugural address on March 4. I believe he did it at the dictation of the Prime Minister of Canada, who desires to dodge his responsibility.

It is very interesting to analyse our export trade with the United States. For the calendar year 1928 and really for the fiscal year 1928, since there is a difference of only about $4,000,000, our exports amounted to about $496,000,000 which, by the way, is less than in the years 1920 and 1921, when they ran well over $500,000,000. Of that $496,000,000, however, we find that $237,000,000 is accounted for by the exportation of forest products which the United States must have; practically one-half of our exports to the United States consists of our forest products, and it is very interesting to contemplate how completely they control us in this industry. We find that Mr. Graustein, President of the International Paper Company, comes over from New York, and, with some others gets a strangle hold on our resources; they create over-production and the next thing we know is that instead of Canada getting $80 per ton for her newsprint, a contract is made with Mr. William Randolph Hearst, whose publications always have been hostile to British traditions, for $50 a ton, a loss to Canada of $30 a ton, and this government permits that sort of thing to go on. I direct the attention of the government to a pamphlet called Forest Facts, published by the Department of the Interior, and from that publication I would like to quote a few sentences:

> The forest resources of Canada are being depleted at the rate of about five billion cubic feet annually through cutting, fire, insects, and decay. If the reproduction and young timber are not protected, the stand of merchantable timber accessible for exploitation will not withstand this drain for more than twenty-five years. . . . Few people realize the urgent need which exists for a forest policy in Canada.

I wish the government of Canada would begin to realize that urgent necessity; one of their own departments publishes the facts but we see no interest taken by this government. No action was taken in the emergency which existed a few months ago in connection with the pulp and paper industry. It may be answered that this was a provincial matter, and it is true that Mr. Taschereau and Mr.

Ferguson stepped into the breach and have been able to do something; it is true that the provinces issue the licenses for the exploitation of these pulp resources, but the moment the timber is cut and is about to be exported it becomes a matter of fiscal policy; it also becomes a matter of trade and commerce and the responsibility devolves upon this government. The Minister of Finance was derelict in his duty during the past year in not calling into conference the heads of these few pulp companies and reading the riot act to them. It is high time that the men who have invested their money in the natural resources of Canada should be made to understand that with regard to our capital assets we will not tolerate any policy except one that gives to us a fair price for those assets. To-day we are not getting a fair price; we are sending to the United States annually about $250,000,000 worth of capital assets in the shape of forest products which we are not replacing, while the United States sends back to us products which are largely the product of American labour.

The policy of this government in regard to our great resources is also seen in connection with our industries, with one or two of which I will deal by way of illutsration. First let me take the sugar industry. In 1927 this country exported sugar to the value of more than $15,000,000; in 1928 these exports fell to $6,000,000, and for the calendar year of 1928 they were less than $4,500,000, a decrease of over $10,000,000 since 1927. I mention this because of the very interesting action taken by the British government to protect their sugar industry. On April 24, 1928, they introduced further safeguarding legislation with the result that the imports from Canada through the port of Bristol decreased to 645 tons, although in 1925 the imports from Canada had amounted to 6,193 tons. The effect of that policy on their importations from all sources is also very illuminating. For instance, in 1925 their imports through Bristol amounted to 62,024 tons, and this fell to 14,931 tons in 1928, showing very clearly the effect of a little safeguarding or protection on an industry.

My hon. friend from Last Mountain prayed that the government would not take any further steps in regard to protection of our industries as against Great Britain; in fact he advocated the repeal of all the existing duties against British manufacturers. It is very hard for one who has been brought upin the woollen industry, for example, to understand how anyone could have that point of view. On Saturday in this province, not far from where I was born, I saw the plants of three woollen mills, two of them closed and one which went bankrupt six months ago and which has been re-opened recently. In 1922, when this government came into office, according to statistics furnished by the bureau here, in thirty-seven identical mills there was an average of 4,333 employees. Since that year there has been a gradual falling off; I will not quote the figures for each year, but for 1928 the employees of these thirty-seven identical mills averaged only 3,683, showing the retrograde action in this industry. I point out, Mr. Speaker, that those figures only cover the thirty-seven identical mills and do not disclose the fact that dozens of mills have closed up altogether. No doubt the employees of such mills have migrated to the United States, but nevertheless we find members of parliament and citizens of this country actively advocating the further removal of duties from such an industry.

Let us look at the iron and steel industry. The Dominion Steel Corporation furnished the agricultural implement industry with nearly 6,000 tons of steel in 1903; in 1928 that figure had fallen to less than 900 tons. The same story would apply to the Nova Scotia Steel & Iron Company. The profits of the British Empire Steel Corporation fell off more than a million dollars, or thirty per cent last year. I have before me a summary of the trade of Canada with the United States for the calendar years of 1927 and 1928. The effect of the policy of this government upon the steel and iron industry is well illustrated in those returns. For instance, the importation of iron and steel products from the United States has increased from $113,000,000 in 1925 to a total of $295,000,000 in 1928; an astounding increase. In 1925 the Americans sent $10,000,000 worth of automobiles to this country, and in the calendar year 1928 that had risen to $40,000,000. In addition to that amount they sent $48,000,000 worth of parts, or nearly $90,000,000 worth of goods in one industry alone. I say the Minister of Finance of this country has sold out that industry to the United States. The same story is told with regard to the agricultural implement industry. In 1925 we imported $6,000,000 worth of agricultural implements; in the calendar year of 1928 that amount had arisen to $39,000,000; another industry sold out to the United States. I suggest that the Minister of Finance is the greatest extravagance this country has. Any man who sells out industries with a total production in excess of $120,000,000 is a great extravagance for any country, and that is what our Minister of Finance has done.

Mr. RALSTON: Does the hon. member suggest there should be higher duties on automobiles and agricultural implements?

Mr. CLARK: I suggest that the government is possessed of the power and has the information necessary whereby every agricultural implement used in this country could be produced in Canada without increasing the cost. The cost has gone up since my hon. friend's government tinkered with the tariff three or four years ago.

Mr. RALSTON: I am still waiting for an answer to my question.

Mr. CLARK: The hon. gentleman does not need to wait for an answer; what I have given is a complete answer.

Mr. RALSTON: I asked if the hon. member would raise the duties.

Mr. CLARK I would adjust the tariff in a manner which would result in these agricultural implements and motor cars being manufactured in Canada. That would solve the immigration problem and another minister, who is our second greatest extravagance, the Minister of Immigration (Mr. Forke), might then become an asset, because then and then only could Canada have an effectice immigration policy. When my hon. friend sees the folly of importing $120,000,000 worth of goods in two industries alone, every item of which could be produced here, he will then be in a position to do some good work for his country. He cannot do it now with the policy he is following.

Mr. RALSTON: The hon. gentleman will not say whether that is his remedy; I have not heard of any other remedy except raising the duty.

Mr. MANION: We are not trying to convince the hon. gentleman.

Mr. RALSTON: The remarks seem to be addressed to me.

Mr. CLARK: My hon. friends have established the tariff commission, which might be classed as the third greatest extravagance of this country. It has been the means of dissemmating political propaganda through this country but it has been the most useless thing the country has ever seen. It costs about $120,000 per year, and there must be an additional cost of upwards of $200,000 to the companies who are dragged to Ottawa and put to the inconvenience and expense of retaining counsel to defend themselves against attacks inspired by members of parliament organized under the guise of a Consumers league. One hundred and fourteen industries have been investigated, but no constructive action has been taken by this government. It has been a mere useless camouflage, and the hon. gentleman is a party to it.

Mr. RALSTON: I am still waiting for an answer.

Mr. CLARK: You will get your answer after the next election.

One does not have to look very far to discover the reasons for the prosperity that exists in Canada to-day. The abnormal wheat crops of the past two years are something for which this government should thank Providence every night. Another outstanding reason for this prosperity is to be found in the stock market. The market value of one mine, the International Nickel Company, has risen in three short years from about $100,000,000 to $1,200,000,000. That is greater than the gross agricultural wealth of the province of Alberta; greater than the gross agricultural wealth of the provinces of Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Manitoba combined; and within $100,000,000 of the agricultural wealth of Your Honour's own province of Quebec. Mr. Speaker, think what it would mean if the wealth of your own province could increase twelve hundred per cent in three years. What would that mean to your province and to the country at large? Think of the prosperity that would result if the agricultural wealth of the provinces of Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Manitoba increased twelvefold in three years. That is what has happened with this one mine, and there is no doubt that thousands of people have reaped their total prosperity through the increase in the value of that stock. Another illustration might be the Consolidated Mining & Smelting Company. That stock has increased three thousand per cent in a very few years. The people of Canada can thank their natural resources for their increase in wealth and for the present prosperity of the country. What has this government done to assist in the discovery of these mines, to increase their production to find markets for them? The French treaty?

I am sorry the Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb) is not present, because next to giving a market of $120,000,000 to the automobile and farm implement industries of the United States, perhaps the French treaty is his greatest extravagance. Last year that treaty cost Canada $23,500,000. Our adverse balance of trade with France was $16,500,000, whereas our favourable balance before the treaty was negotiated had been $7,000,000. The Minister of Finance represented to the house that that treaty would be of value for marketing nickel products. I take nickel products as an example. Under that treaty we sold France $19,000 worth of nickel, and that is typical of what that treaty has done for Canada. It has been one of the poorest pieces of business ever transacted by this country and one of the best for France.

While we are on the question of extravagances I might mention, apart from the purchase of a $10,000 car for the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell) to tour Europe with, apart from the European trip which he gave his chauffeur; apart from extravagances in the constituency of the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Malcolm)—and incidentally it might be observed that the Minister of Trade and Commerce still has a duty of 30 per cent on his furniture. What are the hon. member for Weyburn (Mr. Young) and the consumers league going to do about that?

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): What about the duty on coal?

Mr. CLARK: Apart from the $3,000,000 wasted in tearing down revenue-producing properties in Ottawa in order to produce a tiny park, the interest on which investment is going to cost the country $150,000 a year plus the upkeep, we find another extravagance which I do not think has been mentioned in the house this year. That is an extravagance on the part of the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Elliott) in the purchase of the New Edinburgh mills. That purchase is one of the most disgraceful performances we have had with public money in this country. The purchase cost the country the sum of $525,000, and, according to the minister's own statement, it will cost $125,000 to make it habitable. It is a place hardly fit for a stable but it is to be used to house the Bureau of Statistics although it is inconvenient to members who use the bureau most of all. It is a property unsuited for residential purposes, unsuited for stores, unsuited for every commercial purpose, except possibly a warehouse or a factory, and it is very much antiquated for that. In fact it could not be used for those purposes to-day. The Minister of Public Works said that it had some water-power connected with it, I think 2,000 horse-power, but with the hydro-electric development surrounding Ottawa, any development of 2,000 horse-power, even for a particular industry, will never be undertaken again because the cost would be prohibitive. That amount of power can be bought much more cheaply from the hydro power companies or from the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario. That amount of $525,000 plus $125,000 to make the property habitable, or a total of $650,000, is money thrown away. That money might have been spent more advantageously anywhere within the vicinity of these buildings, have beautified Ottawa and have given to the public service of Canada a useful asset.

We have a new bridge up the Ottawa river. I mention this bridge because recently in Vancouver we made a request of the government for a contribution for a bridge crossing a public harbour, thereby making necessary a draw. The bridge is going to carry rail traffic, giving facilities to the Canadian National in the city of Vancouver. A small contribution was asked of this government for that purpose, and it was refused, yet a bridge for the beautification of Ottawa is built without any hesitation whatever. Where a bridge is going to serve a commercial purpose and where it is going to cross a harbour which, admittedly, is the second most important and in the not far distant future will be, I believe, the most important harbour of this country, a small grant in order to make that harbour safe is refused. Other similar instances might be mentioned.

What I have stated does not exhaust the extravagances of the government. I notice a despatch from Vancouver dated March 8 which states:

> A select committee of the legislature started out this morning to investigate the secret service liquor fund. . . . Andy Blygh, former justice of the peace in Vancouver, said he was paid $165 a month by the Liberal attorney general and part of his duties was "to anticipate the arrival and public appearance of Liberal cabinet ministers from Ottawa and Victoria and to arrange for an enthusiastic audience, plenty of hand clapping and cheering, so as to make a public impression of hearts welcome and enthusiastic reception."

I wonder how this is going to be carried on now that their allies have been ousted from power. Will the Minister of Finance grant supplementary estimates for that purpose? He got quite a good reception there last year. I do not know whether it cost one month's pay to Andy Blygh or not. We would like to see him there again and I think we would give him an excellent reception for nothing.

Mr. CHAPLIN: They say the Minister of Trade and Commerce got a better one.

Mr. CLARK: I do not know what that cost. My time is drawing to a close and I am sorry it is because I have a good deal more that I could discuss with the government this afternoon. However, before I take my seat

I should like to direct attention to the statement of the Minister of Finance in regard to debt reduction. I note that the public accounts show a debt reduction from 1922 to 1928 of some $126,000,000, and a further general reduction for the current fiscal year of $69,000,000 making a total of $195,000,000 of reduction since 1922.

I have before me, Mr. Speaker, a list of guaranteed securities of the Canadian National Railways which have not been taken into consideration in that net reduction. They amount to $327,000,000. I realize, of course, that some of those guaranteed securities were guaranteed for the purpose of refunding—in all, I believe about $150,000,000 refunded from cash and guaranteed securities.

If, Mr. Speaker, these figures are analysed it will be found that there has been no debt reduction whatever, if the same system were followed to-day as was followed up to the time when Mr. Fielding left the office of the Finance department. And I would like to point out also that year after year some of the reported surplus has been swelled by moneys, which, Mr. Speaker, were paid to this country for the benefit of widows, orphans, and men who have been maimed or suffered loss and who should have received those moneys years ago. This country now has in its possession $15,000,000 to pay reparations provided for under a treaty, claims little in excess of $4,000,000, and yet the Finance minister retains those moneys and annually permits his surplus to be swelled thereby.

I would like to appeal to the sense of fairness of the Finance minister, and to the sense of fairness of this government, that they should no longer hold these moneys, that they should no longer permit the annual surpluses to be swelled by moneys that rightly belong to men who served their country during the war, or to their widows and their orphans, and their dependents generally.

Mr. J. F. POULIOT (Temiscouata): Mr. Speaker, I have just a few words to say to my hon. friend from Vancouver-Burrard (Mr. Clark). He spoke about the Edinburgh mills. We have there the bureau of statistics from which we get very valuable information, and if he had obtained his information there instead of finding it in American magazines or publications, he would have been more accurate in his quotations.

I wonder if the house should be thankful to my hon. friend for the tip he gave us on International Nickel? I wonder if the stock will go up now. In any event, however, I entirely disagree with him on the matter. I have been telling my people that it is a very dangerous practice for them to trust to the stock market. No doubt some make money but they are the exceptions. They are few, and if my hon. friend is one of the few, I wish to congratulate him. But the vast majority of the people do not make money on the stock market.

As to the hon. the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell), we disagree again, because I think he is one of the ablest ministers of agriculture that we have had in this country since confederation. And I am very sincere in praising his accomplishments. If Canada is prosperous to-day we owe it first to Providence, and then to the government, because Providence is acting through the government in those accomplishments.

Mr. McGIBBON: The answer is, their cup of inquity is not yet full.

Mr. POULIOT: We believe in Providence on this side of the house, and we are very glad that the good years in Canada are the years during which the Liberal party have been in power. It reminds me of what the acting leader of the opposition (Mr. Guthrie) said the other day in his very illuminating speech. He said that the surpluses at the time when the Tories were in power were much bigger than the present surpluses under the direction of the very able Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb). Well, there is a great difference. The surpluses before 1921 were made of borrowed money, and the surpluses these last few years since the Liberals have been in power are, in fact, made up of earned money. As I say, there is a great difference.

Mr. BENNETT: May I correct the hon. gentleman? The surpluses were surpluses of the consolidated revenue fund and did not include borrowed money. The borrowed money was to pay for demobilization and railways.

Mr. POULIOT: I see that my hon. friend (Mr. Bennett) is just as mixed up as his acting leader.

Mr. BENNETT: See pages 44 and 45 of the public accounts.

Mr. McGIBBON: What is a surplus, any way?

Mr. POULIOT: I did not mean to deal with my hon. friend from Muskoka (Mr. McGibbon) just now, because I hope to quote him later on.

With regard to the grading and standardization of farm products, the Minister of Agriculture the other day said:

> But the policy we have adopted has been commended by those who are buying our goods, and I am encouraged to go forward in a policy of grading.

And he added:

> I look for some measure of support, if not from my friends immediately opposite, then from the balance of the house in carrying forward this policy of standardization of the remaining articles that are the be dealt with.

I think it would be just as well to quote my hon. friend from Muskoka now. I wish to say something about dairy products, and I am very glad that he mentioned the fact that the cattle herds have been reduced in all provinces except in Quebec and British Columbia. That is why I want to quote my hon. friend.

I have the report of the Minister of Agriculture for the year ended March 31, 1928. Quebec sold 294,197 packages of first class pasteurized butter—0.6 per cent of special, 92.1 per cent of first, 7.0 per cent of second and 0.3 per cent of third. That was for 1927. That shows a large increase over 1926. In 1926, 220,528 packages wer sold in Quebec—special, 1.1 per cent; first, 88.7 per cent; second, 9.4 per cent; third, 0.8 per cent.

With regard to unpasteurized butter, I am pleased to be able to state that in 1927, Quebec sold 87,122 packages, 74.7 per cent first quality, 24.2 per cent second quality, and 1.1 per cent third quality. Ontario during the same period, 1927, sold 47,179 packages of butter—78.0 per cent first, 20.9 per cent second, and 1.1 per cent third.

Ontario, on the other hand, produces more cheese than Quebec, but I am glad to say that the province of Quebec is the banner province with regard to the butter industry.

Grading has resulted in great improvement in quality and, as the records will show, it has brought about a much more satisfactory condition for producers and manufacturers. The average price of first class butter per pound is as follows: 1923, 38·4 cents; 1924, 37·2 cents; 1925, 39·4 cents; 1926, 39 cents; 1927, 40 cents; July, 1928, 40 cents; August, 1928, 41 cents; September, 1928, 43 cents; October, 1928, 42 cents; November, 1928, 43 cents, and December, 1928, 43 cents. The price has increased since 1925, the year in which the Australian treaty came into force, in spite of what was said in this house by the former member for South Oxford, our genial friend Mr. Donald Sutherland, who spoke on the matter at great length when the treaty was under consideration. I see by my hon. friend's smile that they remember the occasion very well. At that time we were warned that Canada would become bankrupt by the operation of the treaty but as a matter of fact it has done no harm to our commerce.

The farmers in eastern Canada are complaining that the price of potatoes has gone down this year, but it should not be forgotten that the price varies according to the demand. Larger areas were cultivated and the yield per acre was greater in 1928 than in the previous years. Therefore the larger supplies depressed the price and it went below fifty cents a bushel. Not so good as International Nickel.

Mr. HANSON: Or butter.

Mr. POULIOT: Let me put on Hansard the average yield per acre of the potato crop:

Press bulletin issued by the agricultural branch Dominion Bureau of Statistics, on Field Crops of Canada, 1928.

The following statement will no doubt be of interest to hon. members. It deals with the cultivated area, the yield per acre in hundredweights, the total yield in hundredweights, the average price per hundredweight and the total value of potatoes in Canada during the last four years:

	Cultivated area	Yield per acre	Total yield	Av. price	Total value
		cwt.	cwt.	per cwt.
1926..	545,918	89.6	48,682,000	1.47	71,598,000

Canada Year Book 1927-8, p. 235 and press bulletin issued by the agricultural branch, Dominion Bureau of Statistics, on Field Crops of Canada, 1928.

Some years ago at a banquet tendered to Hon. Senator Beland a badly informed politician propounded this question: "How is it that in Quebec American potatoes are served on the table?" That question was repeated by my Tory opponents in the general elections of 1925 and 1926. Let us see what quantity of potatoes Canada does export and import. Here is a comparison between the value of our exports of potatoes to the United States only and the value of our imports of the same product from all other countries, for 1928.

Comparison between the value of exports of potatoes from Canada to United States and the value of imports of the same product from every country to Canada in 1928:

Province	Value of exports	Value of imports
*P.E.I.	$ 467,065	$ 25
*New Brunswick	1,833,093	848
*Nova Scotia	17,713	8,437
Quebec	36,901	121,186
Ontario	45,471	309,260
Manitoba	5,921	17,440
*Saskatchewan	6,500	2,055
*Alberta	6,979	4,687
*British Columbia	45,971	37,791
Total	$2,465,614	$501,729

*The provinces marked by an asterisk have a favourable balance of trade. The imports include sweet potatoes which do not grow in Canada.

It will be seen, therefore, from the foregoing table, that of nine provinces six have a favourable balance of trade in potatoes while only three, Quebec, Ontario and Manitoba, have an unfavourable balance. The value of the exports of that product to the United States is $2,465,614, and the imports from all countries amount to $501,729. I will point out that this memorandum gives the comparison for the last year, as regards the value of exports of potatoes from Canada to one country only, the United States, while the imports of the same product are shown from every other country. The total production of potatoes in Canada in 1928 was 54,585,000 hundredweight, while the total imports in the same year were only 424,749 hundredweight. It means that the imports are 115 times less than the production.

I have demonstrated that the imports of potatoes into Canada from all other countries are approximately five times less than the Canadian exports of the same product to just one country, notwithstanding the fact that the United States imposes a higher duty than ours on that product. It proves also that in matters of trade high protection is not a universal remedy. Instead of wasting time praising high protection, would it not be better to find new markets for the output of Canadian potatoes? Such a policy is in accordance with the views of the leaders of the Liberal party and it would bring results.

As regards new markets, I have a statement from the Department of National Revenue with respect to Canadian exports of potatoes, by countries, during the calendar year 1928. I will give this table:

Statement of Canadian Exports by Countries of Potatoes: During the Calendar Year 1928.

Why is it that prices have declined in that trade? We have a great customer, our neighbour the United States. The total yield of potato crops in the United States in 1927 was 244,178,000 hundredweight, and in 1928, it was 297,391,000. The average in the United States for five years, from 1922 to 1926 inclusively was 236,266,000 hundredweight. This means that last year the crop showed a surplus of 61,000,000 hundred weight, as compared with the previous year. The price in the United States was not very high, either; according to the trade bulletin of November 17, 1928, in the northern states the crop was very good, with prices of from $2.15 to $2.25 per 180 pounds for first-class potatoes and about $2 per 180 pounds for other potatoes, which means approximately 66 cents per bushel. In this connection I noticed an interesting despatch in the Halifax Herald of January 4, 1929, coming from Hamilton, Bermuda, as follows:

> ...the House of Assembly adopted a resolution making the duty on Irish potatoes operative for the whole year instead of for ten months. It had been the custom to permit these potatoes free from Canada in October and November.
> The change is for the protection of the Bermuda farmer, who it is claimed can if granted this protection raise within a few years all the potatoes the island requires. Seed potatoes properly certified would still be free from duty.

That shows that there will be a continuous market for seed potatoes. Then I have another interesting despatch which appeared in the Montreal Gazette of December 10, 1928. This is from Fredericton, New Brunswick, and is as follows:

New Brunswick seed stock, although of high quality, is meeting severe competition because of the heavy yield of potatoes in all sections of the country. A considerable movement of seed potatoes took place during November with the states of Maine and Vermont taking the shipments. Other shipments are on order and will begin to move in January with others following in February and March. Virginia and North Carolina will take the bulk of that with some going to Long Island. The first of the shipments now on order amount to 15 carloads.

Fifteen thousand bushels of seed potatoes moved out previously. A price of $2 and $2.50 per barrel was paid for the best.

A total of 1,094,580 bushels of potatoes were shipped from this province during November, 719,250 bushels going by rail and the remainder by water from the following ports: Georgetown, 271,547; Summerside, 145,716; and Charlottetown, 58,067.

About 560,000 bushels of table stock were shipper to Ontario this season, and 150,000 bushels to Quebec.

I have here an interesting article written by Mr. D. Baribeau, of the Department of Agriculture, which appeared in a Rimouski paper Le Progrès du Golfe, under date of February 22. It is very short, and I will read it:

It may be inquired how this decrease in the potato crop of the province of Quebec can be overcome and outside competition met. Just simply (1) procure seed potatoes from certified stock (that is the main and indispensable requirement, without which you will not succeed in lowering the cost of production. Prince Edward Island sows 65 per cent of its area with certified seed stock and note the yield per acre). (2) Set aside a portion of land in order to maintain the yield of certified seed stock at its maximum. (3) Reduce the sown area, have a better prepared soil and make use of chemical fertilizers. (4) Sow the variety or varieties which the market demands. (5) Spray thoroughly with Bordeaux mixture. (6) Uniform grading of the varieties which are the most popular on our markets.

Now, Mr. Speaker, may I point out to this house the importance of this trade, which is of interest not only to my province or my section of that province but to all the provinces of Canada, because farmers everywhere grow potatoes. Although I am not a technician in this matter I will take the liberty of submitting some proposals which would perhaps improve not only the production, but also the sale of potatoes. No farmer in my constituency would ask for potatoes the price that was paid during the war owing to peculiar circumstances; they would be very well satisfied with an average price of $1 per bushel, and I think the consumer could not complain of that price. First I would ask the Minister of Agriculture to see if something could not be done in regard to the grading of potatoes, because it is very important that different grades should not be mixed. You may have a very good brand of potatoes, but if they are mixed with other potatoes they cannot be used as seed stock. That is my first point, and my second is that potato sheds should be built at railway stations by the provincial governments. The government of Quebec had this in view for some time, but the idea was finally abandoned. I think this proposal should be revived, because if there are sheds built something like the grain elevators, although not so large, where the potatoes could be placed and where Green Mountains, for instance, would not be mixed with Early Roses, it would be a great advantage to the farmers, and I believe our provincial governments should undertake that work.

My next point is that there should be a reduction in railway freight rates and also in maritime rates, because if we are to get new markets it must be made easier to ship our products to those markets. I take this opportunity of thanking the Minister of Agriculture, the Minister of Railways and the officials of the Canadian National Railways for what they have done in that direction. One cannot forget that the government does everything possible for the farmer.

My last point is that we should promote the organization of cooperative societies for the exportation of farm products. It is very hard for a single farmer to send his products to Hong Kong, Bermuda or anywhere else abroad; there must be something in the nature of a cooperative movement by which the farmers may be brought together. This might be done by means of the agronomists who are employed by the provincial governments; there are two of these gentlemen in my county, very able fellows, and I think they might organize cooperative societies and also try to locate new markets for farm products, especially potatoes. I believe if this plan were carried out it would be of great advantage to our farmers. This system has been put into force already; a cooperative movement has been organized, under the direction of the provincial agronomist in connection with maple products, at Compton, Quebec, as published in L'Action Catholique of February 7th last.

I have another article here by a professor at the university of Fribourg. This does not deal with potatoes, but covers general co-operative associations for the exportation of farm products. This method of procedure has been carried out in New Zealand in respect to dairy products, and it has been shown to be very successful. Under the circumstances, I hope the federal and provincial governments will continue to do what they can to relieve this situation.

What has the Department of Agriculture done with regard to the dairying industry? We have cargo inspection, iced butter car service, iced cheese car service, dairy news letters, dairy market intelligence, subsidies to cold storage warehouses, creamery cold storage bonuses, research in dairying, the excellent administration of the Dairy Industry Act and milk utilization service. There is a useful cold storage warehouse in my county, which has been operating very well. I hope that what has been done for the dairying industry will be done for the potato growers and that both will be equally successful in the future.

Mr. R. B. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, I desire to congratulate the hon. member for Temiscouata (Mr. Pouliot) on the amount of research which he has evidently made in the preparation of his speech. I am sure when all these figures reach his constituents that they will be very much elated at the effort he has made. I was struck with the tribute which he paid to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell) in connection with the prosperity which is alleged to be prevailing in this country. He put the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell) on a pinnacle and it was a long time before I could understand why he was doing it. But in the latter part of his speech the nigger in the wood pile appeared; the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of Railways (Mr. Dunning) have given the farmers of Temiscouata, Rimouski and Bonaventure counties a special freight rate on potatoes—that is the reason we have had this paean of thanks to the Minister of Agriculture this afternoon. If the Minister of Agriculture is entitled to all the encomiums which the hon. member has given him this afternoon, then I can only say in words of the poet Cowper:

> God moves in a mysterious way
> His wonders to perform.

I am sure the Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb) will not expect me to waste any time on empty compliments to him. I intend to devote a few minutes to some general observations on his budget, but before I do so I want to take this opportunity of placing on record my appreciation of the magnificent speech which was made by the hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie) on Thursday last. I have been a member of this house for some eight years and I think I can truthfully say, and I believe hon. gentlemen on both sides of the house will re-echo the statement, that there has never been a more forceful, clearer or more courteous exposition of the budget made by an opposition critic, and we have had some very able opposition critics during those years. I hope that the message contained in that speech will not only get across the floor of this house but get across to the people of this country. It would do a world of good if that could be the case.

With all due respect to the Minister of Finance, for whom I entertain a very high personal regard, I would say that during the six years he has occupied the position of either Minister of Finance or acting Minister of Finance, we have never had a real budget, such as the term is understood in England, on the financial condition of this country. Budgets may be viewed from two or three aspects. We have had a resume of the country's business for the preceding year; we have had certain taxation proposals and readjustments, but we have never had in any one of the budget speeches which he has delivered a straight categorical statement of the fiscal policy of this country, or any policy upon which the business men of Canada could build for the succeeding year. Apparently the Minister of Finance considers that there is only one aspect to a budget; a mere tabulation of fiscal and trade figures. Viewed in that light his budget is clear and illuminating, and to that extent he is to be congratulated, but from the standpoint of its being a disclosure of public policy it is as disappointing as it is gratifying on the former count. We have never had from him any estimate, based on announced fiscal policy, of the result of the nation's business for the ensuing year; we have never had submitted to us in any one year a true balance sheet of the country's business. Any hon. member who is interested in corporations knows that there are many ramifications in business; that many companies have subsidiary companies, and it is invariably the custom that every company submit annually to its shareholders a consolidated balance sheet, not only of the parent company but of all the subsidiary companies. We are the owners of the entire issued capital stock of the Canadian National railway system, and I believe it is the duty of any Finance minister, no matter what his predecessors may have done in that regard, to submit annually to the people of Canada a consolidated balance sheet which will take in the assets and liabilities of that great system. We have not had that from the minister, and that is one of the things for which I think he is to be criticized.

Why was this budget brought down on Friday last? Some wag on this side of the house has said it was because there was no meat in it. There was some meat in it, as that, of course, was only by way of a passing joke. Undoubtedly the Minister of Finance was anticipating the inaugural address of Mr. Hoover. Mr. Hoover has delivered that address and it is now an assured fact that he will implement his promises by both executive and congressional action. Friday's papers announced that congress had been called to meet in a special session on April 17th. The call for a special session of congress proposes legislation for agricultural relief and limited changes in the tariff. The proclamation says:

> These matters cannot, in justice to our farmers, our labour and our manufacturers, be postponed.

Those are very significant words for the people of Canada. We may expect, and undoubtedly we do expect, that tariff schedules aimed directly at the agricultural production of this country, if not against other production, will be the direct result. What is the attitude of this government? We do not know. If we are to judge from the statements of the Minister of Finance in his budget speech; if we are to judge from the veiled references in the minister's statement, the administration intend to adopt a policy of "watchful waiting." That is the policy which destroyed Mr. Asquith, and let me tell the Minister of Finance that that policy will destroy him and his government. Are we not entitled at this juncture to something more specific than the veiled references contained in the speech of the Minister of Finance? Is there in this country anyone, aside from the blind partisan followers of the government, who can view with composure such a declaration of "watchful waiting"? Is there anyone who believes this government, when they are actually confronted with the situation which will undoubtedly arise in the next few weeks, will rise with the weapons that are available to meet that menace? I use those words advisedly, because the action of the United States congress will be a menace to this country and it is up to our people to protect themselves. If there is any doubt upon this point, an analysis of the budget speech of the Minister of Finance, shows that he makes one specific declaration which to me at all events is very significant. I refer to his statement that—

> The policy of this administration is not a high tariff policy; it is a low tariff policy.

When he nails his colours to the mast on a low tariff policy he turns his back upon the only effective weapon he can use against the menace to which I allude. In other words, he has wiped out from under his own feet the only ground upon which he can effectively stand when the time for action comes. Such a declaration indicates to me but one thing—the unwillingness of the administration to use the only weapon at its command, namely, the application of the principle of protection. The situation cannot be better met than by the method indicated by the acting leader of the opposition in his speech in the house last Thursday. As reported at page 757 of Hansard, He said:

> So far as I can see, any difficulty that may possibly arise in the future can be completely overcome by action on the part of this government and of this parliament. We have nothing to fear in Canada in this respect, though I grant that we are going to reach as last a situation—if things develop as I anticipate they will—in which we must introduce into the tariff of this country, to protect our own people, that element of protection which the Canadian tariff does not now afford.

> A radical change in our fiscal policy will soon be necessary; the government must face this situation. They can do it; we know what we can do in this country; we have everything at our disposal. Do not let us have stage fright and do not let us feel any over-anxiety in regard to the matter. The matter rests entirely in our own hands. All can be put right, and if this government does not put it right another government will take its place in the very near future.

Does anybody believe—and I say this with respect—that the Prime Minister, in view of his well known past history, in view of his well known affiliations of the past, in view of the fact that for years he has advocated and when in power has put into execution a policy which has made for the peaceful penetration of the business of this country and the absorption of its industries and natural resources by United States capital, will do anything to protect this Dominion? Does anybody believe that the Minister of Finance, a low tariff man, will willingly use the only effective weapon at his command? Rather shall we not see again the spectacle of the government turning the other cheek in the face of hostile United States tariff schedules? Time only will tell, but a policy of "watchful waiting" should not be the declared policy of this country at this juncture. A declaration of virile Canadian independence ought to have been made in the fiscal budget. Such a course would have won the respect of and, I fully believe, would have been heeded by those now framing the proposed tariff schedules for presentation to congress.

The Minister of Finance in his remarks spoke of the optimism which is now obtaining in Canada, and I agree with him there is optimism. We have always been optimistic; those of us who believe in this country are optimistic and I associate myself with what the Minister of Finance said in that regard. But there is a vast difference between optimism and prosperity. The one is the hope, the wish for things yet to come; the other is an accomplished fact, and I deny absolutely that there is universal prosperity in Canada. If anybody does not believe me, let him come down to New Brunswick and mingle with the agriculturists and industrial people of that province. Last year we had tinkering with the tariff schedules; we had readjustments of the tariff, and the effect of those readjustments on the cotton industry in my constituency robbed the operators in that industry of eight per cent more of their labour and wages. In other words, they are receiving eight per cent less than they did the year before. They have been on short time practically every year since he and his government came into power, and to-day in the cotton industry, in the cotton mill town in my constituency the operators are feeling the direct pinch in the lack of wages. That has been the result of the minister's interference with the tariff schedules.

In reference to the agricultural population, we grow more potatoes in New Brunswick than in any other part of the Dominion of Canada. Can there be prosperity among the agriculturists of New Brunswick with potatoes at thirty cents a barrel, which was the price payable for potatoes in my province just prior to my coming to Ottawa The farmers of New Brunswick are going bankrupt; you cannot prate about prosperity to a farmer who cannot pay his fertilizer bill. That state of affairs is not by any means confined to New Brunswick. A similar state of affairs prevails in Prince Edward Island, Cape Breton, Nova Scotia, anywhere you like, and before I conclude my remarks I shall have something more to say about the potato business.

I do not intend to refer at any length to the dairying industry and to the losses which our farmers have sustained by reason of the importation of so much New Zealand butter. But would you believe, Mr. Speaker that to-day we are eating New Zealand butter in the restaurant of the House of Commons? I know the Ottawa Dairy Company imported six carloads of it within the last few weeks. That is butter that should be produced and sold by Canadian farmers. I believe the Minister of Finance made the greatest slip in his whole history when he put through the Australian treaty and forgot about New Zealand and its right to come in under the provisions of that treaty.

Mr. CHAPLIN: They deliberately added New Zealand afterwards by order in council.

Mr. HANSON: While I am speaking about optimism and the condition of our farmers, I should like to refer to the delay of now nearly two years in putting into effect the Farm Loan Act that was passed by parliament in the session of 1927. Everybody knows that that legislation was put through the house and the act brought into effect with the greatest reluctance on the part of the Minister of Finance; that it was put through at the behest of the western farmers who, at that time, had a real need for such legislation. The scene has changed; a few good crops have obviated the necessity for the application of that act in the west, so far as I have been able to learn—

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. HANSON: —but the necessity for the act in the east is most imperative and it is nothing short of an outrage that two years have been allowed to go by without the will of this parliament having been put into effect by the Department of Finance. I make no criticism of the appointment of Doctor MacLean as chief of the Canadian Farm Loan Board. I am told he is a good man. It may be that political pressure was brought to bear upon the minister to appoint him. I do not make any such charge, but what I do complain about is the delay in putting the act into effect in the province of New Brunswick, which accepted it from the very beginning. And I want to go a step further and say that there have been a good many complaints among the farmers in New Brunswick because they could not get the benefits of that act. We have in the province of New Brunswick to-day, organizing for the Liberal party, a gentleman who was formerly a Progressive member in this house, a loud-mouthed member, who sat here in the front seats year after year; and he had the audacity to go around the province of New Brunswick and say that the Farm Loan

Act had not been put into effect there because the provincial government had not requested it. The Minister of Finance knows that is not so. He knows the provincial government accepted it from the very beginning, and they are anxious and willing to have it put into effect. I myself have had applications from—I was going to say hundreds, but I will limit it to dozens of farmers, who find themselves in the position where they must have relief or go into the bankruptcy court, and I ask the minister to put that act into effect in the province of New Brunswick at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. ROBB: May I reply to my hon. friend now on that point? We will put it through just as soon as the provincial legislature passes its corresponding legislation.

Mr. HANSON: He laughs best who laughs last. I am informed by the Attorney General of that province that the legislation to which the minister refers was put through in 1928.

Mr. TOTZKE: It is only March yet.

Mr. HANSON: That is twelve months. How long does it take to make this great body move?

I wish to say a few words with respect to the national railways, I do not want anyone to say that I am an enemy of the Canadian National railway system. I had the honour for ten years, from 1911 to 1921, to be general counsel for the Canadian National Railways in the province of New Brunswick. I devoted a very large portion of my professional time to their service, and I think the Department of Justice will say that I won more lawsuits for them in New Brunswick in that period of time than all the ten thousand dollar counsel they have employed since.

Much of the railway history that was given by the member for South Wellington in his illuminating address last week was news to me. I was not a student of what took place in this house in 1919 to the extent of going deeply into the political events of that time. But I have had occasion to verify some of the things the acting leader of the opposition said, and if all he said is true, as I believe it is, the attitude of the present administration with respect to the national railways—save and except the Minister of Customs (Mr. Euler), who ever since he came into this house, and even before, has been a friend of the national railways—the attitude of the present administration in respect to the national railways is one of pure effrontery. Go back to 1919 and read the records for yourself; read the part that was played by the Minister of Finance. I wonder that he does not often blush at his action of that day. If you want any confirmation of the attitude of the Liberal party go to the session of 1922 when the railway estimates were under consideration in this house and read what Mr. Walter G. Mitchell, then member for St. Antoine division of the city of Montreal, said in a prepared brief on this very question in which he condemned the action of parliament in nationalizing the railways. Mr. Mitchell on that occasion, if I remember aright, made just half a speech. He got to the point where he condemned the action of the government, but he had no alternative proposal to offer. The Liberal party accepted that brief. It was their only attitude, it was the only policy they ever had—and again I want to except the Minister of National Revenue, because I heard him stand up against his own party in respect to this very matter, and I want to give him due credit for honesty of purpose.

When the party opposite were confronted with the responsibility of power, however, we had a change of attitude. We had the adoption of the policy of "fair trial," and I congratulate them upon their change of heart. It is very difficult, I know. It is very difficult in domestic life to take in an orphan child and treat it as your own. So far as they have done so, however, the government are to be congratulated upon having given the railways a fair trial—if they have done so. But I want to make the assertion right here that the government, at all events certain portions of the government, have not been free from political interference in the matter of the operation of the Canadian National railways. They have said that they have taken the administration of the railways out of politics. Well, perhaps they have. I hope they have. So far as I can speak as a member of parliament, I sincerely hope that the administration of the national railways is out of politics. But there are so many evidences accumulating on every hand that they are not out of politics that one begins to wonder at the good faith of the declaration of the government. If I were to go down to the city of St. John I could show you a defeated candidate who takes upon himself the burden of saying who shall be appointed as sectionmen on the national railways in that city.

Mr. HANSON: You will find that the most petty positions are under the thumb of Mr. Ryan, the defeated candidate in the city of St. John; at least, he arrogates to himself that position. I am not going to say anything more about that, but it is petty to say the least.

I have in my hand, however, concrete evidence of direct political interference with rate-making on the Canadian National railways, and if I wanted any corroboration of it, I find it in the speech of the hon. member for Temiscouata. In the St. John Telegraph-Journal of last Friday, the 8th of March, there appeared an editorial based on an interview with the chairman of the transportation commission of the maritime board of trade. This editorial is headed "Unjust Discrimination," and I commend it to the Minister of Railways, who, unfortunately, is not in his seat. I also commend it to the Postmaster General (Mr. Veniot) who will please bring the matter to the attention of the Minister of Railways. The St. John Telegraph is a journal which once thought very highly of the Postmaster General; in fact, I think it does so yet. I quote it to him:

In granting special emergency rates on potatoes to shippers in the Matapedia valley—

Please note that the Matapedia valley is that portion of the province of Quebec comprising the counties of Rimouski and Temiscouata, and possibly the county of Bonaventure. I think it would be fair to say that Bonaventure is included in it. It goes on:

—without extending similar reductions to dealers in the maritime provinces, the management of the Canadian National railway committed an act which has been interpreted as unjust discrimination against the shippers east of the Quebec province boundary. While the reduced freight tariff was put into effect, according to a note on the face of the tariff, "to assist in meeting adverse agricultural conditions temporarily in the limited section from which it is applicable," similar conditions have been troubling the potato shippers of New Brunswick, and consequently they should have received the same consideration as did their neighbours in the province of Quebec.

Why the Canadian National railways should mete out one kind of treatment to an agricultural community on one side of the Quebec-New Brunswick border, and deny the same treatment to those residing on the other side, and being in a similar plight, is more than the people of New Brunswick can understand.

Will the house please note this:

The railway made the keeping of the reduced tariff in force contingent upon there being no objection to it from other localities. In other words, they shifted the responsibility for its cancellation onto the shoulders of the potato growers and shippers of New Brunswick and of other places who might disagree with the favoured treatment accorded the Quebec potato men. This is unjust, and has placed the maritime potato shippers in an awkward position—if they object, they lay themselves open to a charge of having injured their fellow potato dealers in another province—if they hold their peace, they must face a discriminatory freight rate against them.

The logical and only fair solution of the question lies in the Canadian National railways maintaining the reduced rate to the potato dealers in the Matapedia valley and extending it to those of the maritime provinces.

This afternoon we had public thanks given by the member for Temiscouata to the Minister of Railways and the Minister of Agriculture for their action in getting that reduced discriminatory rate in favour of the potato growers in the Matapedia valley and against the potato producers of the province of New Brunswick. They are told: If you object to this rate being given to the Matapedia valley potato growers we will cancel it. In other words, they place on New Brunswick the burden of saying: You have been unjust to us and have favoured Quebec. I do not blame the member for Temiscouata for asking for that reduced rate. There is a distressed condition among the potato growers in eastern Canada, but we are ten times more entitled to a reduced freight rate in Prince Edward Island, New Brunswick and Nova Scotia than they are in the province of Quebec, because we are just that further away from the Montreal and Toronto markets. When the railway does that and attaches the rider that I have read, I think the situation is almost hopeless. I lay the charge, believing it to be true, that political interference has brought about this special rate, and that it was granted at the instance of the federal members from the province of Quebec working through the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of Railways.

Mr. POULIOT: May I correct my hon. friend? The request was made by the Department of Agriculture of Quebec.

Mr. HANSON: All right; it is political action again, and it makes the situation worse. I am glad to have the admission. Representations indeed were made through a certain channel by the hon. member for Temiscouata. If he was alive to his responsibilities as the federal representative for Temiscouata it was natural for him to do what he believed to be his duty when he requested that special rates be given in the circumstances; but I object to the discrimination against the people of my province, and the government have not heard the last of it, neither have the management of the national railways.

Mr. MacLEAN (Prince): My hon. friend I believe would like to be fair. There is a special rate to the other provinces.

Mr. HANSON: Certainly I want to be fair, but the hon. gentleman does not know what he is talking about. I hold in my hand the report which appeared in the St. John Telegraph-Journal, which quotes verbatim a part of the order. It reads as follows:

> This emergency tariff is issued to assist in meeting adverse agricultural conditions temporarily prevailing in the limited section from which it is applicable and expires with April 30th, 1929, unless sooner cancelled, changed or extended.
> In reply to a query from Mr. Paterson as to whether the same reduction could not be made applicable to maritime shippers, Mr. Cornell wired as follows:
> "Canadian National advise that rates were made from Matapedia valley under distinct understanding that same would be cancelled if any opposition were made by other shippers, and will not make any change in maritime rates."

So the hon. member for Prince does not know what he is talking about—unless it is something that has taken place since last Friday. Perhaps he has got something for his constituency?

Mr. MacLEAN (Prince): No. The rate was put through over a month ago and was published by the national railways. It is applicable to the three provinces. If this is a further reduction, I am willing to be corrected.

Mr. HANSON: This is a special privileged rate. Let me quote the following for my hon. friend's benefit:

> The reduction is applicable to potatoes shipped from
> L'Anse a Giles, Matapedia, Mont Joli, Montmagny, Rivière du Loup, St. Alexandre, St. Andre, St. Charles, Ste. Florence, St. Francois, Ste. Louise, St. Pacombe, Sayabec and Tobin, all in the Matapedia valley.

Mr. POULIOT: Is my hon. friend against that reduction?

Mr. HANSON: No, I made that quite plain. I am against the discrimination. Not only am I against the discrimination, I am against the political interference with the national railways. I would not think of asking Mr. Appleton to put in a special rate for the county of York-Sunbury. I know he would turn me down; it would not be wise for me to make the request.

Mr. POULIOT: When there were freight rate reductions for the maritime provinces, was there discrimination?

Mr. HANSON: Well, my hon. friend got his share of it.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Queens): Will the hon. gentleman give the date when the rate went into effect?

An hon. MEMBER: He has already given it.

Mr. HANSON: I will give the hon. gentleman the date. But I have only five minutes more at my disposal, and I do not want to be interrupted if that is the object.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Queens): No, I simply want the information. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will give the date of the newspaper despatch.

An hon. MEMBER: He gave that before.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Queens): I thought only one hon. member was speaking from the benches opposite.

Mr. HANSON: One at a time is quite enough.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Queens): Hear, hear.

Mr. HANSON: One of the professed policies of this administration is the development of inter-empire trade, and with that policy, generally speaking, the Conservative party is in hearty accord provided always—and I want to emphasize this proviso—that such a policy does not involve the sacrifice of any basic industry in this country, such as has happened as a result of the Australian treaty and its effect on our dairy industry. But in the light of this declared policy, what is to be thought of the recent declaration of Sir Richard Squires, Premier of Newfoundland, who recently visited this country, and who in a newspaper interview is reported to have said, in effect, that he found Canada cold to any proposals for closer trade relations? What underlies this statement? A declaration from the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Malcolm) would seem to be in order. Newfoundland is one of the oldest British colonies, and is one of our nearest neighbours. We have a large trade with that colony now. There is no reason why we should not have it all. But Sir Richard Squires went to the south of us and got a cordial reception, and before we know it he will have negotiated a trade treaty with the United States that will be altogether to the detriment of Canada, as happened once before.

Connected closely with this question of inter-empire trade is the question of trade generally with the countries of the West Indies and central and south America. I had the good fortune to visit thirteen West Indian and central and south American ports during the month of January last. Primarily the trip was a holiday, but I had the good fortune to have with me letters of introduction to the various managers, inspectors and supervisors of the Royal Bank of Canada, that great Canadian financial institution which has such extensive ramifications in all those countries. Being keenly interested in the development of trade with these countries, especially as such development may tend to the betterment of the welfare of the maritime provinces, I sought and obtained a great deal of valuable information.

I do not venture to go into any detail in regard to this important subject—time will not permit—but I have one constructive suggestion to make. With the Latin-American countries there is an abundant opportunity to conduct a large and profitable trade, most of which to-day is going to the United States. I found that business men in these Latin-American nations cordially detest the United States and would be delighted to open up new trade channels with Canada, but there is no point of contact save and except through the medium of the bank.

I was told that what is required at the moment are some live trade commissioners who have a competent knowledge of the Spanish language, I commend that suggestion to the minister. That is what the banks do; as far as possible, they train these men before they go there, and on their arrival they rapidly learn the language and become a valuable asset to the banks. I met Mr. Young, our trade commissioner at Port of Spain, Trinidad. I have no doubt that he is doing a good work there, but if one has visited that part of the world one will realize how great are the distances between the various ports and islands and how difficult is communication. Intercommunication between these ports and islands is very slow. Transportation converges on New York or Canada, and one man cannot possibly cover the whole territory. I suggest therefore the appointment of a competent trade commissioner at Panama, which is the pivotal point and now the most important port on the great highway from North America to South America. Advantage should be taken of the ramifications of the Canadian banks which are located at all these important points. They are willing, indeed eager, to assist in the creation of Canadian trade in this region and I commend this suggestion to the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

Like my friend the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. Manion), I have a suggestion to make to the government, which is this: In view of the impending special session of the United States congress called to meet on the 17th of April and the certainty almost of further tariff changes sure to affect adversely Canadian trade with the United States, I suggest to the government, and to the Finance minister especially that this budget be not closed—I do not mean to keep the debate open; God forbid, but I suggest that it is possible to devise some means whereby, after the tariff proposals presented to congress in special session have become known, this parliament at this session may be prepared to take and do take, action to protect our position. If you let it go a year it will be too late. That is my word to the Minister of Finance.

I have had large dealings, covering many years, with United States business men, and I find them among the keenest and most honourable business men in the world. At the same time they are hard bargainers, but they respect always the Canadian business man who stands up for his rights and who meets them squarely and on equal terms. I fear that the same cannot be said for the average United States politician, but I have no doubt that if this country meets the situation about to be created, resolutely, firmly and with a determination to protect Canadian interests, we shall at once obtain the respect of that nation and bring them to a realization of the fact—and they are already realizing it, if one is to believe what was written only a day or two ago in the Wall Street Journal and New York Evening Post—that they cannot afford to alienate trade with their best customer. I say therefore to the Finance minister that he should not close the budget proposals, and that if necessary this house should be adjourned, if other business is not available, and reassemble with the idea of dealing frankly and adequately with the situation that is bound to be presented. The Canadian people will expect any government charged with administration of our affairs to meet this situation resolutely and courageously, and if this government does not do it the frowning disapproval of the Canadian people will be manifested immediately and a new government, prepared to face the situation courageously by and through the means that are easily available, will carry out the will of the Canadian people.

What is there in the budget proposals of 1929 which makes provision for reasonable safeguarding and protection of the interest of this country, either agricultural or industrial? Absolutely nothing, and at a time, if ever there was a time when the agricultural and industrial interests, the interests of employer as well as of employee, should be safeguarded and protected. This party to which I have the honour to belong is therefore amply justified in bringing forward such an amendment to the budget as has been proposed by the hon. member for South Wellington and I heartily give my assent thereto.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. THOMAS McMILLAN (South Huron): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the attention of the house for a few moments this evening? Notwithstanding all that has been said by hon. members opposite, I consider this country fortunate in having as its Minister of Finance a gentleman of the calibre of Hon. James Robb. The budget which he presented on March 1 is a model of precision; I congratulate him on its presentation. It's substance should gladden the heart of every Canadian. It is most encouraging to think that after meeting all our obligations, in six years Canada has been able to reduce her national debt by over $226,000,000.

The vision of the Minister of Finance enables him to view this country as a great estate, a goodly heritage in the form of a big farm, placed in his charge under a heavy mortgage resulting from the war, and after being exploited by those who seemed willing to do almost anything to retain power and position. Like a thrifty parent with the lasting welfare of a large family at heart he realizes the wisdom of paying off the mortgage before dividing his property. His family is large; their names are agriculture, forests, mines, fisheries and numerous additional secondary births many of which have grown great and vigorous through the support of the eldest son, agriculture, but which persists in asking further nourishment from the same source. This eldest son, agriculture, has been a most dutiful and industrious child; he has toiled and spun; he has sacrificed and given of his substance for the whole family, and no one knows this better than the Minister of Finance. If it were not for the continued stamina of this eldest son the whole family fabric would fall to pieces. But there is some indefinable thing called high protection standing in the way, placed there by a group of trustees into whose keeping the property was confided some years ago, with disastrous results. This doctrine of protection somewhat blurs the vision of the minister and prevents him from seeing as clearly as he might. His eldest son, agriculture, is continually endeavouring to appeal to his reason, trying to make him see a little more clearly, but the blur still continues. In that respect his senior partner, the Prime Minister, has no misgivings; his vision is as clear as the noon-day sun. He knows what should be done, but he also realizes that it is not what any great statesman thinks ought to be done, that it is not always wise to attempt at the moment, but rather what step in advance can be taken and carry your countrymen with you.

There is a further difficulty in the way; the same party which fastened that vicious principle upon the economic life of this country is still lurking around the corner always ready to raise the tariff as high as Haman's gallows, as they did on July 13, 1926, the very moment they were sworn in. Moreover, that party now has at its head a brilliant and astute leader whom I greatly admire and whose political ebullitions throughout Canada last year require some consideration. I admire his amazing energy and the spirit with which he endeavours to revive a protective policy which has been rejected by the people of Canada no less than seven times since the beginning of 1896—

Mr. BENNETT: And which is still in force.

Mr. McMILLAN: —and which was given such a cold shoulder at the Winnipeg convention that they were afraid even to mention the name "protectionist," and where their resolution on trade policies was an emasculated expression disavowing the very name of protection. After having taken such an attitude, and more particularly after their milk and water amendment to the budget last year, why do they not come out boldly and repudiate the whole system? If they would only do that they would be on solid ground and might attain some healthy growth, but instead the old protectionist horse is trotted out once more. It came into sight very clearly the other day, with the leader of the opposition holding a string around its neck and his leading lieutenant hanging on by the tail.

Immediately after the close of last session the leader of the opposition went to Toronto and told his Tory stalwarts that the King government were imposing such a burden of taxation on this country and were so utterly extravagant, particularly with respect to undertakings designed to please their friends, that nothing but an aroused public opinion would remedy the situation. If only he had told his supporters that the King government were standing like watch-dogs guarding the public treasury against the attempted raids of himself and his friends it would have been nearer the facts. Every member of this house knows that when we were considering the estimates last year, hon. gentlemen opposite were always asking for increased expenditures; during the course of one day no less than seventeen hon. gentlemen opposite demanded increased expenditures, while just the other day they were highly indignant because this government would not immediately embark on a highway policy which would lead to the expenditure of $200,000,000 or more.

It is well known that the Department of Public Works is necessarily one of the great spending departments of the government; this is due to the necessary expenditure of money on dredging and other works to provide further canal and harbour accommodation and also to the construction of public buildings and other requirements brought about by the increasing needs of a young and growing country. The expenditure upon public works should bear some relationship to the growing trade of the country. During the fiscal year ending March 31, 1914, when our Conservative friends were in power, the foreign trade of Canada amounted to $1,074,000,000, and $27,991,000, or 2.7 per cent of the total foreign trade, was expended upon public works. During the last fiscal year, when the foreign trade of Canada had increased to over $2,359,000,000, this government expended upon public works, not $27,991,000 as their opponents had done, but only $17,408,000, or less than three-quarters of one per cent of the foreign trade of Canada as against 2.7 per cent under Tory rule. That is a striking instance of the manner in which this government is husbanding its revenues and exercising the strictest economy consistent with efficiency in control in one of the great departments of the public service of Canada.

After the hon. leader of the Conservative party left Toronto he went down to Quebec and the maritimes to enlighten the people in that part of the country. At Knowlton, Quebec, he exhorted the good women of that province to study politics, and then he proceeded to say:

> Who is there that does not believe that if we had reciprocity with the American people we would have long ago have lost our identity and been absorbed in and by the United States?

I wondered if he had lost all his common sense when he made an unguarded statement of this kind in a province where absorption with the American people would mean the loss of their long-cherished official language. But he proceeded to say it was a shame that the home markets of the farmers of Canada had been taken away from them and given to the farmers of New Zealand and the United States. As a Canadian, Mr. Speaker, it is humiliating to me to think that the leader of a great political party would hand out such mental trash to intelligent Canadians. Does he not know that the Liberal trade policy of gradually reducing tariff restrictions upon all necessaries, together with reciprocal trade, not only with our neighbours but with the whole world, are the two factors which will tend to build up a permanently successful agriculture and encourage industry, shipping and international trade? Does he not know that Canadians have become world citizens? Does he not know that Canada has emerged from doing business on the back streets and has opened her stand upon the great international business highways of the world? Canada can no longer continue to live within herself. The manufacturer in this country who within the next five or ten years, if a Liberal government is in power, does not realize that he must cater to the world's trade, will be a back number.

An hon. MEMBER: They will not be in that long.

Mr. McMILLAN: With fewer than 10,000,000 people we now stand fifth among the great commercial nations. Our increase in international trade since 1913, and more particularly since 1921, is simply marvellous. Our per capita trade is more than double that of most countries. Situated in such a pivotal position between the orient and Australia and New Zealand on the one hand, and the old world markets on the other, with two highly equipped lines of transcontinental railway, with such a wealth of still largely undeveloped natural resources, and the highest quality of production, our watchword ought to be to scale down gradually our needless trade barriers and go forth to win in open competition with the world. We are competing successfully with the world to-day and there is no good reason why we cannot continue to fortify and improve our present favourable trade position. As Sir George Paish, the British economist, has said:

> Unless the United States and many other nations cease telling their people to sell here but don't sell there, the world will, sooner or later, suffer an economic cataclysm which no country will escape.

If we are to be worthy of fully appreciating our great possibilities it is our duty to scale down gradually all needless trade barriers and let Canada lead the way. Hon. gentlemen opposite would have this country again go through the humilitating experience it suffered between 1878 and 1896 under the national policy.

An hon. MEMBER: You have that yet.

Mr. McMILLAN: That policy inaugurated eighteen years of stagnation in Canada, with trade dead, debt increasing, population at a standstill, immigration reduced to a minimum and migration at full flood, the greatest period of migration from Canada, more particularly to the United States. It was the dreary, hopeless period of Canadian history. During the eighteen years in which that policy strangled Canadian development, our total exports increased from $79,154,678 to $116,314,543. During the single month of July, 1927, our exports totalled $80,770,925, and in the month of July, 1928, the total was $127,368,623. The increase of July, 1928, over July, 1927, was more than $9,000,000 greater than the entire increase in exports during the whole eighteen years under the national policy. The paralyzing influence of those eighteen years of high protection in Canada should never be forgotten. Canada has never yet shaken herself entirely free from the blighting effect of that policy, and I urge upon this government that its duty is to proceed more rapidly along the lines of a well-considered tariff reduction. The danger cry has always been: Oh, we need the revenue; we must be careful. That argument can no longer be used. Every successive tariff reduction has verified our opinion in that it has yielded a greater revenue. I urge them again that we can do this kind of thing only in periods of good times. We cannot do it in times of adversity. Now is the golden opportunity and we should be taking advantage of it. Apparently, however, they seem inclined to mark time.

Mr. COOTE: Is this the time?

Mr. McMILLAN: It may be wise. I do not know what the special session of the United States congress will do; I am no prophet, but I know President Hoover has never shown himself to be a foolish man. There is no doubt he has a most friendly feeling towards his northern neighbour. He knows Canada is his best customer. He knows, further, Canada has a standing offer to his government of reciprocal trade in food products. He knows that 66 per cent of the United States people live in incorporated towns and cities and desire a lower cost of living. In our own particular lines Canada produces the finest quality of foodstuffs in the world. He also knows there is a decided shortage of fresh meat products for the domestic requirements of his own country. In 1927 there was a deficiency of more than 400,000,000 pounds below the previous year's production and in 1928 there was a further deficiency of some 642,000,000 pounds. Canada is the only country from which the United States can secure a supply of disease-free, high-class fresh meat. He knows further from the lips of the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mackenzie King), in a declaration made openly on the floor of the house, that if Canada receives fair treatment she is open and aboveboard and willing to cooperate in every legitimate way, in so far as federal jurisdiction will permit, in the development of the St. Lawrence waterways towards which he himself has set his heart. In the face of all those facts does anyone believe that the very first international act of President Hoover will be to hand out a serious economic handicap to both his own country and Canada? I refuse to believe it; I believe the United States people have elected to the presidential chair a great American who will prove himself worthy of the name. But I deprecate the attitude of hon. gentlemen on the floor of the house towards the United States people and government. That attitude in both gesture and expression manifested at this time for purely partisan purposes is beneath the dignity which should characterize the proceedings of this deliberative assembly. After repeated assertions by the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. Manion) listen to the following:

> But, I repeat, President Hoover has recently announced a policy of increasing the United States tariff against our farmers.

I dispute the imputation and I invite the hon. gentleman to quote from President Hoover's inaugural message one syllable which will bear any such construction. Mark the different tone of President Hoover's words in regard to the tariff:

> Limited changes cannot, in justice to our farmers, our labour and our manufacturers, be postponed.

Listen also to his noble expression in regard to permanent peace.

Mr. McMILLAN: My hon. friends opposite are laughing.

Mr. COTNAM: Why not ?

Mr. McMILLAN: Bear yourself in silence. When the hon. gentleman speaks, we will listen to him. The fact is that when hon. gentlemen opposite rise to speak in parliament, it is very seldom they have anything worth saying. Listen to the noble expression of President Hoover respecting permanent peace:

> The United States fully accepts the profound truth that our own progress, prosperity and peace, are interlocked with the progress, prosperity and peace of all humanity. . . . It is impossible my countrymen, to speak of peace without profound emotion. In thousands of homes in America, in millions of homes around the world, there are vacant chairs. It would be a shameful confession of our unworthiness if it should develop that we have abandoned the hope for which all men died. Surely civilization is old enough, surely mankind is mature enough so that we ought in our lifetime to find a way to permanent peace.

Contrast these words with the blustering, defiant mood in which the hon. member for Fort William jumps on to a big "if":

> If at that special session called by President Hoover any more restrictions are placed upon our sales to the United States. . . . then we in turn should deal in a red-blooded Canadian manner with their tariff attitude towards us.

But even that does not satisfy him and he becomes still more violently bombastic, and proceeds:

> I think we have been taking too white-blooded an attitude towards the United States all the time, and I submit that it is time for us to stand up and take a good red-blooded Canadian attitude.

That is the blood that courses through the veins of my hon. friend from Fort William, and it is also the blood which coursed through the veins of every member of the "shadow" cabinet when, in June 1926, they sat on the treasury benches, when the present Prime Minister metaphorically speaking, laid every one of them over his knee, and, after administering a sound spanking compelled every one of them to admit that not one of them had taken the oath of office and that they were guilty of endeavouring to mislead and deceive parliament and to put over the most indefensible act of power usurpation ever attempted on the floor of the Canadian parliament.

But that is not the spirit in which Canada should maintain the proud position which she occupies throughout the world to-day. Canada has achieved a high position in the minds and hearts of European nations. Great benefit has accrued to her through the sojourn of the Prime Minister in Great Britain and on the continent during the past year. His timely message of international peace, goodwill and conciliation rather than armaments as a means of settling disputes has lifted Canada to a high place among the nations of the world. Do these hon. gentlemen opposite want to discredit our proud position and trail it in the dust? Canada has now signally qualified as interpreter nation along the lines of peace, as a means of settling international disputes. The peace of the world depends more upon establishing good relationship between the United States and Great Britain and between Great Britain and France than upon any other single factor. The people of Canada, largely made up of two dominant races—the French and the British—have learned by experience to respect and honour the respective characteristics of those races. We have long since blended together those traits of character which enable us to work hand in hand and with the heartiest feelings of kindly cooperation have enthusiastically set ourselves to the task of building up a great and prosperous nation on the northern half of the American continent; building it upon the noblest principle of humanity, namely, the principle of peace on earth and good will towards men.

With such a prospect in view, and living alongside a nation with whom we enjoy the most friendly and intimate relationship, this Dominion understands and can interpret the French, the British and the United States characteristics. We are, therefore, qualified to act as an interpreter nation, and Canada holds it in her power to cement closer and closer those bonds which exist between us. But we also hold it in our power, by just such expressions as I have indicated coming from the opposite side of this house, to blast our good reputation and discredit Canada's prestige throughout the world.

Hon. gentlemen opposite would convey the impression that the Australian trade treaty has been an injury to the Canadian dairy industry. I am not going into an elaborate analysis of the effect of that agreement, but the fact is that it has not been detrimental to the dairy interests of Canada. Every economic student of those conditions knows that until very recently Great Britain has been the world's best market for dairy products and consquently the greatest distributing and price-regulating market of the world. But what happened? On October 1, 1925, the Australian treaty came into operation. From that time on there was a steady advance in the price of butter in Canada till March of 1926 when No. 1 pasteurized butter was ten cents per pound higher in Montreal than the price of Australian butter in London, and, generally, it has remained higher ever since. During the whole of the year 1926, the average price of No. 1 pasteurized butter in Montreal was 2.46 cents per pound higher than Australian butter in London. For the whole year 1927, it was an average of four cents per pound higher in Montreal than Australian butter in London, and during the past year Canadian dairy products have ranged for 2½ cents to 3 cents per pound above the world's market price. Yet the hon. gentlemen of the Conservative party want the consumers of butter in Canada to pay a still higher price for that product. I want every consumer of butter in Canada, and more particularly the mothers of families in every town and city in this Dominion, to know that this is the policy of the Conservative party under their present leader—wanting them to pay a price higher than the world's market price, and just to that degree destroy the purchasing power of the Canadian people.

On the 25th of October of last year the hon. leader of the opposition in the city of Montreal said:

> What are we doing to safeguard our agricultural life, not only for to-day but for to-morrow?

And after referring to the importations of butter under the Australian treaty, he continued:

> The dairy industry cannot be built up in a day or in a year. It is being destroyed.

His inference is that nothing is being done by this government to safeguard the agricultural life of this country. I wonder where the hon. gentleman has been sojourning when he thinks that the Canadian dairy industry is being destroyed. Has he actually sunk into such depths of real bachelordom? If any of our other bachelor leaders should develop such density we would have them married at once. That, sir, is the surest cure for any such ailment. The whole thing reminds me of an incident last June after I had put on Hansard the facts in connection with butter and the Australian treaty. I happened to meet some of my good Tory friends out in the corridor and they said: "Say, Mac, where is that butter?" "Boys," I said, "I plastered you all over from the soles of your feet to the crown of your head and you could not help yourselves. That is where the butter is." Apparently, however, their hon. leaders have never thoroughly cleansed themselves and are now living in an atmosphere of such lacteal density that their mental peregrinations are most amusing. They call to mind that divine injunction, "Man, know thyself." The greatest study of mankind is man, and, goodness knows, we members of parliament have a wonderful opportunity for study along that line. I often wonder where the hon. gentleman was browsing mentally when, in 1915, the American government removed every restriction against the importation of Canadian finished live stock and fresh meats and also placed wheat, flour and potatoes on the tentative free list. He was then very close to the members of the Canadian government. Why did he not then show his appreciation and safeguard the live stock industry of Canada by insisting that the government remove the duty on like American products coming into this country? Is it any wonder that after five years' experience of an entire lack of appreciation, during which time the Tory government in Canada maintained an almost prohibitive duty against like American products, the American government saw fit to withdraw the privilege? That was the time when he and his political friends should have shown some concern for the interests and welfare of Canadian agriculture, but they were asleep at the switch.

However, we do occasionally get a glimpse of their hon. leader's meanderings. Speaking at Cookshire, in the province of Quebec, last summer, he said:

> There should be in Canada a tariff commission such as they have in the United States . . . . This should determine the conditions under which our manufacturers and our producers have to meet the competition of the world.

According to press reports, on the 2nd of October, 1926, in his own city of Calgary, he made a similar statement:

> A tariff board, such as they have in the United States, should hear all the evidence and make its recommendations. By that we stand or fall.

What kind of tariff board have they in the United States? It is in effect a tariff commission for the purpose of giving the manufacturers the full power to exploit the consumer. For instance, it investigated the sugar duties. Its report was presented to the president. From that day to this the president has failed to make that report public. So close were the big interests linked up with the operation of the tariff board in the United States that actually the representative of the sugar interests was present on the board in the person of Mr. H. H. Glassie. Common decency and common justice should have intimated to that gentleman that he should abstain from sitting on cases in which his personal interests were so apparent. But this he refused to do. Congress passed a special law removing Mr. Glassie from the payroll of the nation until the case was finished. Yet this is the kind of thing that passes for a tariff board in the United States. Naturally this aroused some storms. Investigation was threatened. Senator Smoot, one of the big sugar men of the United States, was always on the job to block investigation. All this is mixed up with the notorious speculative sugar market of 1921 when the exploitation of the American people by the sugar trust was one of the most glaring instances of the looting of the consumer by predatory interests ever brought to the attention of the American public. Yet this is the kind of thing which the honoured leader of the great Conservative party apparently wants to have in operation in this country. Naturally very strong opinions are voiced in the United States regarding the work of the American tariff board. For instance, Dr. Taussig, of Harvard University, and a former chairman of the tariff commission, at a meeting of the American Economic Association two years ago, expressed it as his opinion that:

> The interests involved in the results of tariff making were so powerful and exercised such influence upon the party in power that disinterested and non-partisan action was practically impossible.

Those are strong words, but they come from a man of calm and reasoned judgment, a man who had had experience on the tariff board, and who was by no means an opponent of tariff protection. Dr. E. P. Costigan, of Denver, who also has had experience with the tariff board, said:

> It should have turned upon it the clearest searchlight of publicity, that its past performances have little to commend it, and until it conforms to disinterested standards of public service, congress should refuse any further financial appropriation for its work.

There is the situation. Possibly the hon. gentleman would like to revive the battledore and shuttlecock methods which were in operation just before the Conservative party was defeated in the fall of 1921.

It might be interesting to lift the veil for a moment on one commodity—sugar—to disclose the true situation. To really understand the facts, it should be known that when James Murdock resigned his position as the last remaining member of the original Board of Commerce of that day he preferred serious charges against members of the cabinet. Rather than investigate those charges, the government filled the vacancies on the board by appointing three paid servants of the government. There never was a case which showed more plainly the absurdity, the injustice, and the injury to the consuming classes of the enactment of customs duties than did this sugar monopoly in Canada. In the whole muddle one fact was clear, that the sugar trade of this country was largely in the hands of a group of refiners who for most purposes acted together, and who for many years had very successfully controlled the sugar situation in Canada to their own exhorbitant profit through the kindly aid of the tariff. In this particular case—I regret, Mr. Speaker, that I have exhausted my forty minutes.

Hon. JOHN A. MACDONALD (Kings): Mr. Speaker, in rising briefly to discuss the budget, I feel that the masterly criticism delivered last Thursday by the then acting leader of this party (Mr. Guthrie) covered the ground so thoroughly that the Conservative case might well be rested there. However, there are usually some local aspects to which those members who follow the leaders can give attention.

As has already been stated, the financial condition of the country is set out in the budget speech in clear and concise terms. The facts and figures are doubtless correctly stated, but the conclusions which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb) seeks to draw therefrom I submit are not altogether warranted. It can easily be shown that other factors besides the so-called Robb budgets have contributed to the prosperity and increasing trade of the Dominion. It can also be shown, as the member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Hanson) pointed out this afternoon, that the much-vaunted prosperity is not as far reaching as is claimed by the government and their supporters. The prosperity is largely a paper prosperity and is confined to the larger cities. As a matter of fact the annual reports of our banks and large corporations are relied on as evidence of that prosperity. I agree with my hon. friend from York-Sunbury that if you apply the prosperity test to New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island, to the farmers and fishermen of those provinces, and to many others who to-day are struggling for a livelihood, the result is not as satisfactory as the government would have us believe.

The eloquent speech of the hon. gentleman who has just resumed his seat (Mr. McMillan) was the most amazing example of inconsistency that I have heard this session. He opened his address by stating that everything is prosperous, but that high protection stands in the way of prosperity. He seems to overlook the fact that the government of which he is such an enthusiastic supporter are maintaining this high protection, and at the same time they lose no opportunity to proclaim the great prosperity which the country is enjoying under their beneficent control. But the hon. gentleman goes further, he characterizes this high protection as embodying a vicious principle, notwithstanding the fact that the government which he has supported so unquestioningly have had the power at any time during the last seven or eight years to put an end to high protection. Then he would eliminate trade barriers. Well, apparently, he still believes in the trade theories of Bright and Cobden and their contemporaries. But those theories are entirely out of date to-day. The nations of the world are protecting their industries and striving to build up a powerful industrial system and it would be utterly impossible for Canada situated as she is, to maintain her economic position under free trade. The hon. gentleman also stated that high protection brought eighteen years of stagnation. Yet he claims that we have this wonderful prosperity under the very system which has been continued with very little change down to the present time.

The tariff policy of the new administration in the United States was also discussed by my hon. friend. But why not face the facts? Everyone is aware that last fall the outstanding feature of the policy of the Republican candidate for the presidency and his party was protection for the farmers to cover all their products. There is no question whatever about the fact that the special session of congress that has been called is to be devoted to this particular purpose.

With regard to the tariff, the Liberals have always, in my recollection, claimed that the tariff was a tax; we have had to meet that argument in all of the elections I have had anything to do with for many years past. Yet in the face of present conditions they claim that they are reducing the taxation of the country. But what do we find on looking up the figures? The last summary issued by the Department of National Revenue shows that in the ten months of the present fiscal year, up to January, 1929, the duties collected in this country amounted to $162,703,554, as compared with the duties collected for the same period in 1928 of $139,355,327, or an increase in the last ten months, in duties paid—which the Liberal party has always claimed to be a tax—of $23,348,227.

A few days ago the hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie) showed by figures taken from the public records that the average increase in taxation during the last five years, as compared with the last five years of Conservative rule in Canada, amounted to $51,000,000 per annum. Yet, in face of these facts, hon. gentlemen opposite will stand up and say that they are reducing taxation. The fact is that there never was a time in the history of Canada when taxtation was as high as it is to-day by many millions of dollars; and notwithstanding the fact that they claim some credit for a reduction in the rate of taxation here and there, the situation shows that taxation has very largely increased. If this increase in taxation, resulting in increased revenue, were being economically made use of, if we were getting from it the services which the country stands most in need of, if we were obtaining a reduction in the debt to the extent that we might have by the practice of economy, then all would be well. But apparently this additional money has had the effect of tempting the government into a period of extravagant expenditure in which no amounts are too large.

I am one of those who would like to see Ottawa made beautiful; I am just as anxious as anyone else to see this done. But I do not believe that the millions of dollars voted for this purpose are being well expended, especially at the present time when the country has so many other pressing obligations, including the burden of debt which we are carrying. I do not believe that half a million—or more than half a million—expended on automobiles in this country is an economical or reasonable expenditure. And there are many others that one could cite; one could go on for an hour proving reckless and extravagant expenditures. These are but samples. Yet the government, because, as they claim, they have no money, are obliged to discontinue the technical education grant; the statement from the treasury benches is that there is no money. And they are obliged also to refuse any contribution to good roads in Canada; they have no money with which to assist the provinces along that line. But I would point out that there is no movement in this country to-day which would be of as great value to the farmers and to others who are attempting to carry on business as would be the improvement of the roads.

The last speaker (Mr. McMillan) referred to a national highway to cost $200,000,000. Why, sir, that is simply sidetracking the issue; no one would seriously consider such a thing. But there are ways and means of promoting the development of good roads in this country without tackling such a project. This Dominion, I believe, should follow the lead given by the late Conservative government when $20,000,000 was voted to assist the provinces in road work.

There is no question about the fact that if the government turned over a new leaf and practised sufficient economy they could wipe out the sales tax entirely and still not hamper the finances of the Dominion. So that, from the standpoint of economy, they are failing; there is no doubt at all that rank extravagance can be proved against the government.

There are many matters involved in a discussion of the budget, and among these may be included, as important questions, markets and transportation. When we come to look at this government's work along this line we also find much room for criticism. Markets and transportation are largely complementary; they go hand in hand. And when this government established, under the British West Indies trade agreement, the Canadian National Steamship Line and put steamers on that route, they made, it seems to me, a very serious error in not including as a port of call for these steamships the city of Havana in Cuba. I realize, of course, that under the treaty as it now stands this may be difficult and perhaps impossible. But I would urge as strongly as possible on the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Malcolm) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb), who have this work in hand, the desirability of making Havana a port of call for these steamships. Probably the British West Indies would not agree, inasmuch as they are paying a subsidy in support of the service. I submit, however, that it would pay the country, it would pay the Canadian National Steamships, to abandon that subsidy and make Cuba a port of call. What would happen? To-day these boats are going to the West Indies with very little freight; they are not half loaded. But if they were allowed to touch at Havana every cubic foot of space would be filled with potatoes every trip. That would mean that the earnings of the Canadian National Steamships would be largely increased. Moreover, it would give very much needed accommodation to the maritime provinces. The situation at the present time lends itself to monopoly in this regard. The ordinary shipper cannot ship to Havana at all; yet that is the biggest and best market we have to-day for our potatoes. That market takes 3,000,000 bushels a year from New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island, but no producer can ship a bushel there unless he is big enough to charter a steamer and despatch a whole steamer load. I submit that if it is possible to make some arrangement whereby these boats could call at Havana—they pass that port within a few miles every two weeks—it would operate to the advantage of the maritimes. If this cannot be done, some other service should be established and subsidized by the government in order to provide a connection with the port of Havana.

That brings us to the general condition of the potato market at the present time, which everyone knows to be very bad. If it were not for the fact that Prince Edward Island potatoes are recognized as the best obtainable anywhere we would have had a very poor market last fall; in fact it was poor at its best, but to give you some idea of how largely the quality enters into the marketing of our crop I will just quote from the United States market report in connection with the Boston market a few days ago. The quotations show a very decided preference for Prince Edward Island stock, as follows:

> Prince Edward Island, 90-pound sacks, Green Mountains A grade, $1.50-$1.75.

That condition assisted us very materially in marketing our potatoes this year, because the same preference is shown in Cuba and in the Canadian markets. Even at that, however, we cannot unload the large quantity of excellent potatoes which still remains in the hands of the farmers. In that connection I might say that we have been endeavouring to take advantage of the market which exists in western Canada; it is not a good market with regard to price but it could be made an outlet for a considerable quantity of our potatoes. In endeavouring to make use of it the Canadian National Railways did give us a very nice reduction in freight rates, but it was not sufficient to enable us to send our produce to western Canada; the freight rates were still too high although quite a few carloads were shipped. A few years ago we had a similar condition; the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell) took a hand in the matter then and claimed credit for a reduction in freight rates which was given. In a circular which he sent out at that time he said:

> We would add here a reminder that this movement will be in competition with selected stock imported from well-organized shippers in Minnesota and North Dakota, their shipments over shorter distances bearing lower rates, particularly to Winnipeg, but with 33 cents per one hundred pounds duty.

This winter the shippers appealed to the Canadian National Railways for a further reduction of 15 cents per hundred pounds, which would enable us to ship quite a few potatoes to the west. We were not able to obtain that reduction, but the government had it in their power to give us that 15 cents advantage by raising the duty on potatoes to 50 cents per hundred pounds, which would place it on an equality with the United States duty. If that were done we would have the advantage we need in order to compete with the potatoes of North Dakota and Minnesota. That would apply to the condition of not only this year but every year; never a year passes without many thousands of bushels of potatoes coming into Canada from the United States in the spring while our last year's crop is still in first-class condition and fit for use anywhere. I venture to say that within a month we will be offered new potatoes from Florida and Georgia in the restaurant of this house; that has happened every year in the past and probably will happen again this year, although there are millions and tens of millions of first-class potatoes in Canada which we should be eating instead of using potatoes from the United States.

These are matters to which the government should give some attention, matters with which they should deal in order to protect our farmers from this outside competition, and give them a chance against our neighbours to the south, who take advantage of our markets to dispose of their surplus products in the off-season. They should give protection when needed, something which will be stable and which will allow our farmers to carry on with a reasonable assurance that they will at least have the full benefit of the Canadian market when the foreign markets will not absorb our products.

These same arguments may be applied to the butter trade, and notwithstanding the statements of the last speaker we find that there has been an enormous change in the imports and exports of butter since the Australian treaty came into effect. We find that there has been a serious decrease in the dairying industry generally, and we all know that the number of cattle in Canada has dropped seriously. What are some of the results of this treaty from a marketing standpoint? In 1925 Canada exported about 24,500,000 pounds of butter; in four years our exports dropped to 2,056,500 pounds. These are the latest figures taken from the dairy letter issued by the Department of Agriculture and received to-day; the figures include our exports up to January of this year. Now let us consider the other side of the picture; in 1925 we imported 162,848 pounds of butter, while according to the same letter last year we imported 21,108,929 pounds, valued at over $7,000,000. The farmers of this country should have produced that butter and should have distributed that money among themselves. And the loss is not only the money lost by not producing this butter, as every farmers knows; in eastern Canada especially we are not able to keep up the fertility of the soil if we do not keep cattle. We must have cattle in order to maintain the fertility of the soil, so that in addition to the direct loss there is a heavy indirect loss. Practically all milk products, as well as butter, show a decrease in exports with the exception of cheese, which increased to some extent.

What is the cure for this condition? We know what we are up against; what are we to do about it? There is only one way to go about it; we must look at the whole matter from a broad national standpoint; we must endeavour to build up Canada as a whole from coast to coast with all kinds of industries and an industrial population which will provide markets for the produce of the farms. Then, if we protect these markets, the farmers will be reasonably safe. It might be said that I am speaking against foreign markets, but I am not. I have as much respect for foreign markets as any person in Canada, but they are always treacherous and tricky. If you have a well developed home market, a large consuming population of your own, then you are safe. In various parts of Canada, and especially in the maritime provinces, we have always had the Liberal party holding up before the people this policy of protection as a fearful bogey; telling them it would increase their cost of living; it would ruin them in various ways and make millionaires of all the manufacturers, and build up the cities at the expense of the country. The Liberal party has been able to put that over so successfully that practically solid delegations of Liberals have at times been returned from the maritime provinces; wholly solid from Prince Edward Island and Nova Scotia and nearly so from New Brunswick. But that day is past, and the maritime provinces have awakened to the realization that they must fight for protection for their industries and see that it is provided for the rest of Canada. They have come to realize that even though they have to pay a little extra for a machine—I do not admit that this necessarily follows—which they would have to buy once in ten or fifteen years, it is better to pay that extra cost and have it manufactured in Canada. By doing that they establish a safe market for what they produce with that machine. They were told their industries had been killed by the industries of upper Canada. This was true to some extent, but we are getting our stuff much cheaper to-day than in the days when we were manufacturing at home in a small way. It is true we have lost our industrial population, and, as far as Prince Edward Island is concerned we have lost over twenty per cent of our total population, but we are producing more to-day with that smaller population and we are getting our stuff at a cheaper cost because of the mass production of upper Canada. Unfortunately, there is also some coming in from the United States, which has killed off our little industries.

I would like to refer to the question of old age pensions, particularly as it applies to Prince Edward Island. It has been said that I opposed old age pensions when that question was before the house in 1926. That statement is not correct. I, with others on this side, opposed the system by which the government was putting more than half the burden upon the shoulders of the provinces. We regarded that as being unfair and argued that the government should make it a federal scheme entirely. There is much difficulty in the smaller provinces with a limited revenue in taking hold of this situation. Take the position of Prince Edward Island, with its small revenue and lack of all resources from which revenue can be secured except by direct taxation on the farmers. According to population, this scheme would be more expensive there than it would be anywhere else in Canada. Many of our young people leave during the producing age and we have a smaller proportion of that class in our community than is to be found in any other province in Canada. The following comparative statement is taken from the census of 1921:

10 to 19 years.. ..	204.32	195.14
20 to 44 years.. ..	312.33	365.27
45 to 69 years.. ..	203.79	169.38
70 years and over.. ..	60.24	28.11

From the above tabulation it will be seen that Prince Edward Island has a much larger percentage of population from 10 to 19 years than the rest of Canada. But when we come to the ages of 20 to 44 years, which are the best producing years, we find that Prince Edward Island has a lower average than the rest of Canada. The population coming under this class are producing revenue in the other provinces, they have left Prince Edward Island and we lose in that respect. In the classification of 44 to 69 years Prince Edward Island heads the list again, and when we come to 70 years and over it is found that Prince Edward Island has a very much larger percentage than the rest of Canada. It can be seen quite easily that Prince Edward Island would have considerable difficulty in undertaking the carrying out of the old age pensions scheme. I still believe that this should have been undertaken by the federal government, because provinces like Prince Edward Island. which may not be able to undertake it, will have to contribute towards the scheme for the benefit of the other provinces.

I would like to refer to the work of the Department of National Revenue with special reference to the prevention of smuggling. In order that the house may have some idea of just what the conditions are in Prince Edward Island, I wish to read an article which appeared in the Charlottetown Patriot, on January 18th. This paper is an out-and-out suporter of the government. The article is as follows:

We all know that smuggling is rampant not only here but elsewhere, and that bootlegging is constantly on the increase, while the number of places that it is rumoured in which liquor can be procured either by telephone message or personally are said to be constantly multiplying. Further, it is declared that in many of these places liquor is sold by the glass, as well as by the bottle.

It is a well known fact that for the past three years there has been more smuggling of liquor than previously, and as a natural consequence more people should be fined.

I would like the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Euler) to take note of this statement as put forward by a newspaper which is an ardent supporter of his government. I suggest that something be done in connection with this very serious situation. We who live there, surrounded as we are by water, with opportunities for the vessels to get into every creek, bay and river, know that there never was a time in the history of the province when there was as much liquor floating around as there was last year. I would urge upon the minister that in making arrangements for the coming year he take this fact into consideration and make some effort to enforce the laws in this respect.

Mr. J. A. BRADETTE (North Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, before I speak on the budget and its amendment I would like to make a few remarks with reference to a question which has come to the forefront in the province of Ontario, more particularly since the beginning of this session. I refer to the activities of the Ontario Prohibition Union. In the past few weeks circular letters have been received from organizations working to assist the United States in preventing Canadian liquor from entering that country. I have always been an advocate of temperance and I am always prepared to sponsor and further true temperance. At the same time I cannot see why we Canadians should be called upon to enforce United States law. I have read many comments in both wet and dry papers in the United States, and they are firmly convinced that the Canadian government is following the proper course in that respect. It is a well known fact that the officers of the United States government have a right to enter any ship on this side of the line and examine the papers before the ship is released, and it is also a well known fact that they have access to all boats, whether Canadian or American, on the other side of the line. It is also a well known fact that unlimited quantities of intoxicating liquor are finding their way into the United States from Cuba, which is a protectorate of that country. Cuba is yearly shipping enormous quantities of intoxicating liquor, and apparently no checks are being used against such a practice. But I consider that the demands made to the Canadian government by the United States were absolutely unwarranted; they should have made the same demands to Great Britain and France. It is a well known fact that even under the Volstead Act liquor is being used for sacramental and also medicinal purposes in the United States. The government of the United States through its dispensaries has been receiving tens of millions of dollars in the sale of liquor. Therefore I am convinced, as one of the leading temperance men in northern Ontario, that the government in this instance is following the proper course. It must also be considered that the exportation of spirituous liquors from Canada to the United States represents only two per cent of the total consumption, so they must get it much more extensively from other sources.

The budget speech of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb), with the facts and figures contained in it, speaks very eloquently of the present prosperity of Canada. In all parts of the country we find a spirit of optimism that can be brought about only by a general improvement in business. It is noted with great satisfaction that every year since 1923 has seen a decrease in the net debt of the Dominion, the reduction this year amounting to more than $50,000,000. As the interest on the funded debt at the present time represents about one-quarter of the yearly revenues of the country, this debt reduction from year to year makes possible an ever-increasing reduction in taxation and at the same time larger expenditures on the necessary developments of the country.

We are also pleased to note that the Dominion bond issues maturing during the year have been paid instead of being renewed and by following the same policy in future it should not be necessary to renew any bond issues until 1933. As I have said, the country seems to be well satisfied; and this budget, the same as the five previous ones, has been accepted by the country as a whole, as a "Robb" budget, meaning by that that there is keen satisfaction with it throughout the length and breadth of the Dominion.

It was acknowledged by the acting leader of the opposition (Mr. Guthrie) in a magnificent oratorical effort, that we are experiencing prosperity. A person has only to glance over some of the headings in the newspapers and periodicals of the country to realize to a very large extent that we are really experiencing prosperity. Let me quote a few of them coming from the industrial issue of the Ottawa Journal:

General expansion placed pulp and paper industry in unusually good position.

Annual review of industry shows expansion in newsprint production more rapid than consumption—exports to countries other than United States increase—New laboratory in Montreal.

High mark for construction reached in past twelve months is likely to be maintained.

Normal building year now exceeds 1912 boom—building likely to continue at present levels—Ontario leads all other provinces.

Wide distribution of bank assets make for safety and permanence unaffected by market conditions. Underlying conditions of trade today make for greater stability of Canadian banking institutions as compared to conditions at confederation.

Over 211 million bushels grain handled by harbour of Montreal but limit by no means reached. Is world's premier grain shipping port, having reached new record during past summer—many improvements under way including port for aircraft.

Record wheat yield of year outstanding contribution to present prosperous era. All previous records broken states C.P.R. president, who is most optimistic—he believes time has come when immigration regulations should be relaxed.

West is entering industrial field with oil and mining also prominent states president of national lines.

Prairie provinces outgrown period when agriculture only industry—new records made by C.N.R. in 1928—extensions made and services improved.

Advance in Canada's foreign trade one of outstanding achievements in modern economic development.

Noted banker reviews export trade which has developed 100 per cent since 1913—recognizes value of great tourist expenditure.

There is one particularly from northern Ontario:

Various subsidiaries making up huge industral group reveal pronounced trend toward increased activities—scope of companies is broadened.

Canada's advance is outstanding in present day economic history while future is full of promise.

Statistics prove achievements were not equalled by people of any other country—bumper crops one of chief factors in financial situation in which all classes shared—advances in mineral development.

General anticipation is that present wave will continue during first six months of 1929 at least.

It is true that the opposition maintain that this is all due to Providence, but I believe in the fine old idea that the Lord helps him who helps himself. While the administration has much to do with the present situation, there is a spirit of cooperation throughout every part of the country, and I feel certain that the people have more confidence in the present administration than they had in that of a few years ago.

I was amazed to hear some of the criticisms levelled by the acting leader of the opposition at some of the reductions in taxation, particularly when he stated that the government, in removing the tax from Pullman tickets, were helping only the richer class. In the part of the country which I have the honour to represent they do not regard it is a luxury to buy berth accommodation when they travel from northern Ontario to Ottawa, Toronto and Montreal, so this is helping the working and travelling class as a whole. The same thing applies to the criticism levelled against the reduction in the tax on cables and telegrams. The hon. gentleman said that this was going to benefit only the big corporation. But the larger corporations have always the happy peculiarity of unloading every possible tax on the public as a whole, and this principle applies also on telegrams and cables.

I listened with a good deal of attention to some of the remarks made by the hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Ross), the hon. member for Nanaimo (Mr. Dickie), and this afternoon to the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard (Mr. Clark), in regard to the exportation of raw pulpwood to the United States to the amount of 1,500,000 cords a year. One thing every hon. member must have in mind is the fact that raw pulpwood to a settler is the finished product. I was in full sympathy with the action that was taken by the premiers of Quebec and Ontario in calling a pulpwood conference to discuss the situation in which the newsprint industry has found itself in the way of over-production and lack of market. We all know that prices were pared to such an extent that in many cases dividends could not be paid. I would be the last man to put too heavy demands on the newsprint industry. In the constituency which I represent we have three pulp and paper corporations: the Iroquois Falls Pulp and Paper Company, Limited, The Mattagami Pulp and Paper Company and the Spruce Falls Pulp and Paper Company, which have a daily capacity of 1,300 tons of finished newsprint. Therefore I would be the last man to wish anything harmful to that industry. One thing that surprised me was the fact that the premiers of those two provinces did not see their way clear to have the pulpwood producers or the settlers represented at that conference. I have under my hand figures giving the actual cost of the pulpwood production to the newsprint industry. This is given by the companies themselves.

Cut on their limits..	$6 25
Duties to government and also ground rent and fire rent..	2 35
Overhead..	1 50
Total for each cord of wood cut by the companies themselves..	$10 10

For the same quantity of wood, the same size of pulpwood, not delivered at the mill, the price is $5.75 to the settler. I believe there is an anomaly there which should be remedied as rapidly as possible. I would be the last man to be in favour of a policy of price-fixing, but at the same time I was absolutely in favour of the two premiers of Ontario and Quebec calling a conference, because the newsprint industry was not receiving a fair remuneration for the finished product.

During the course of last week in the Ontario legislature, the Minister of Lands and Forests in putting a bill through that body said that in northern Ontario the worst enemy of the forest was the settler. I believe that in respect to some instances may have been right, but I have no doubt that generally speaking he was wrong on that score. But if the settler of northern Ontario is the enemy of the forest, it is simply on account of the fact that he is not able to realize a sufficient price for his product. Up in that country there is what we call the clay belt, an area of 35,000 square miles. It is one of the best rural sections in the whole of the country. They have plenty of pulpwood up in that section but, as far as I have been able to ascertain, the settlers have never been able to receive a fair price for that product. So you will readily understand why the settlers are not trying to save the forests. There was exported to the United States last year 1,500,000 cords of pulpwood; and it is indeed surprising to learn that American buyers come hundreds and thousands of miles to buy that wood and pay a higher price for it than do the local buyers. The settlers have no remedy in such a situation. They have to find an outlet for their product in some way or other.

I would urge upon this government the necessity of calling a conference between the settlers and representatives of the pulpwood industry. I know that I am talking shop now, but this is a very important problem and one that should be dealt with if we are to advance the colonization of northern Ontario.

I desire to congratulate the Finance minister on the reduction of duties on mining equipment. That is just one instance showing that high duties are not always wise, are not always best for the development of any district, especially a new district like northern Ontario. We see it quite often in the newspapers that the empire is looking northward. Most of our present day development is in that north country, getting farther and farther away from the large industrial centres. We hear of large mining corporations. One of the hon. members to-day spoke of one of those companies being capitalized at one billion dollars. It is true that these companies are investing large amounts of money, but it is also true that people going into the mining game are gambling purely and simply. True, a lot of those ventures have turned out all right, but others have not turned out quite so well. This government must help the people in northern Ontario. I myself have received many letters from organizations like the Hollinger and other mining corporations, first, pleading for a reduction of the duty on their mining equipment, and later congratulating the Finance minister upon the reduction of duties of mining equipment in general.

Some big mining men in Toronto and Montreal have started up an industry, that of manufacturing mining machinery. It is true that some of their equipment is purchased here in Canada, but in almost every instance the equipment is purchased either in Great Britain or in the United States, and I am pleased to say that the mining interests in northern Ontario are perfectly satisfied with the reductions that have been made.

It seems to me that our friends on the other side think that they have a cure for all ills. One member said to-night there was no mention of protection at the last Conservative convention at Winnipeg. During the whole of last session I remember very well some of the members on this side tantalizing members on the other side as to what they meant by certain expressions, but hon. gentlemen opposite would never commit themselves.

Ever since the session the leader of the opposition has been going up and down practically every section of the country telling the people that the only solution he could offer was higher protection. But I must state with all frankness, as a representative of northern Ontario, that the people of that part of the country realize that this government has the only real policy in connection with tariff. We realize also that this government is not satisfied with the tariff policy that was good for this country fifteen or twenty years ago. We realize, however, that this government is formulating a tariff policy applicable for this year just the same as the tariff of twenty years ago was applicable to the needs of the country at that time.

On account of our geographical situation, we should be free traders, but we are fully alive to the needs and requirements of governmental administration, the revenue for which must partly be raised by indirect taxation or collection of customs duties. We produced last year thirteen hundred tons of finished newsprint daily and it would be absolutely impossible for northern Ontario, or for that matter, the whole of the province of Ontario, to consume even a very small proportion of that newsprint. Of necessity, we must go to the outside markets of the world. Not only that, but on account of being a new section of the country, and being quite a distance away from the industrial centres, we must naturally buy on a high tariff market all the commodities that we require. But we are perfectly satisfied to play the game with the rest of the country. We believe that under some circumstances a certain amount of protection is required in connection with a new industry, and we need a tariff for revenue purposes. Hon. friends opposite would seek to put up a high tariff that would not be acceptable to the whole of New Ontario. At the present time, we must export. Take our mining industry; it must find its outlet in the markets of the world. Our newsprint industry must find its outlet in the markets of the world, and high protection is absolutely a policy and a principle that I am positive my hon. friends opposite were they in power, would never dare to apply to that section of the country which I have the honour to represent.

With regard to vegetables and fruits, I do not believe that we will ever be able in that section of the country to produce a sufficient quantity to supply the needs of the people there, or the people of Ontario. However, the growers should have protection. I believe that the British Columbia growers have sufficient protection in connection with their industry. There is one thing, however, that puzzles me, and that is that we have to pay such excessive prices for British Columbia fruit. In northern Ontario, in the winter time, for instance, we have to pay 25 cents for three British Columbia apples, yet the growers of British Columiba claim that they have not sufficient protection. There was quite a movement inaugurated last fall by the fruit growers of British Columbia, complaining of the fact that there was practically no tariff protection extended to the fruit growers of this country. As I was very much interested in that question, I took the trouble to make an inquiry into the matter, and to my astonishment I found that we had a higher rate of protection against American fruit than they had against us. I will just give a list of eight fruits to corroborate that statement. Let us assume that a Canadian importer imports one thousand pounds of each of the fruits enumerated. At the same time an American importer also imports one thousand pounds of each of these fruits. The duties paid by each of the parties would stand as follows:

	Present Canadian Rate	Present American Rate
Apples	$ 6.00	$ 5.00
Pears	5.00	5.00
Strawberries	20.00	12.50
Peaches	10.00	5.00
Plums	7.50	5.00
Cherries	20.00	20.00
Apricots	5.00	5.00
Raspberries	20.00	12.50

So at the present time the fruit industry is fully protected. There are times when we have to pay, in northern Ontario, as much as fifty cents a pound for tomatoes. Someone must be making a certain amount of money at such a price.

As I say, we are perfectly satisfied to play the game with other sections of the country, but at the same time I am firmly convinced that higher tariffs will be no solution of the situation in this part of the country. I believe this government is following the proper course, a business course, a course that will be beneficial to all concerned.

I do not intend to deal at any length with what the United States are going to do in connection with their tariff. It amused me, however, this afternoon, to hear some of the hon. members opposite mention the fact that the Minister of Finance waited until Friday to place his budget before the house; that he should have brought it down after the inaugural speech of the president of the United States. I do not see the logic of that argument, and I do not see why we should time our actions in accordance with theirs. I for one am not dreading the situation as some of the hon. members opposite seem to dread it. As has been well said by one member on this side of the house to-day, I fully believe the United States are going to maintain the amicable relations they have had with us in the past, even on tariff matters. We must also consider that there are two schools of thought in the United States the same as here in Canada on that question. It is true that perhaps some farmers situated near the border on the American side will benefit by an increase in tariffs on Canadian farm products, but as the urban population in the United States is much larger than the rural population, so I am not apprehensive of that movement. It would be a movement that would be resented by the majority of the people of that country which sentiment the American politician must take into consideration.

Now, even if the United States do increase their tariff at the special session of congress next month I do not believe it would be prudent for us to take such steps as would simply increase the cost of living in this country. Speaking for a large section of northern Ontario, I am positive that if the Canadian tariff is raised we are going to pay for it in good Canadian dollars. But I have sufficient confidence in this government to realize that they will deal in a logical way with whatever situation may develop. In this connection I may be permitted to quote certain authorities. Writing in Barron's Weekly, Sir George Paish expresses the following opinion:

> The world cannot enjoy political peace in a condition of economic war. The great world conference convened by the League of Nations, in affirming that "no machinery for the settlement of international disputes can be relied upon to maintain peace if the economic policies of the world so develop as to create not only deep divergencies of economic interest between different masses of the world's population but a sense of intolerable injury and injustice," stated a truth that cannot be doubted. Political peace is impossible without economic peace, and economic cooperation. The nations must work together for the common good. No nation can live at the expense of another.
> In the bankers' plea for the removal of restrictions on European trade, it was wisely stated that our neighbours are our customers, and that their well-being is essential to our own welfare. The world economic conference affirmed this truth in language that cannot be misunderstood. But the nations, by their actions, are still unconvinced of its truth.

Indeed, they seem to be convinced that it is untrue. Trade restrictions and tariffs are still being increased in many directions. Even in Great Britain "safeguarding" is being extended. The whole world is pursuing a policy of trade restriction, the effect of which is the exact reverse of that which the situation demands.

The principle here enunciated applies also to Canada to-day. It may be true that the American tariff will be raised on certain commodities that we now export to the United States, but it is not certain that any substantial increases will be made. My other authority is Sir Herbert Holt—a practical man, not a theorist. At the annual meeting of the shareholders of the Royal Bank of Canada he said:

In spite of the fact that the present trade relationship between the two countries—

Referring to the United States and Canada.

—is disproportionately favourable to the United States, there is active discussion of further tariff increases that seem likely to shut out the few competitive items which Canadians now sell there. It would seem that those who propose such tariff changes fail to realize that checks upon Canadian prosperity automatically check the volume of goods which can be bought from the United States, and that on the other hand continued improvement in Canadian conditions brings corresponding increases in the volume of goods which they can sell us. From this viewpoint it might be considered economic statesmanship for the United States to discover means to increase their purchases from Canada, rather than to consider measures which will constitute new trade barriers.

Moreover, it is not feasible for a country to sever completely foreign policy from tariff policy. Official observers from the United States at the world economic conference at Geneva, and influential representatives of the United States Chamber of Commerce at the meeting of the international chamber of Commerce at Stockholm, expressed disapproval of such measures as would be likely to hinder the flow of international trade. With other nations looking to the United States for assistance in reconstructing the world's economic organization, the proposed tariff increases would constitute a severe blow at international economic cooperation and goodwill.

If further handicaps are placed upon the exports of Canada to the United States, it will be imperative for Canadians to seek more favourable trade agreements——with other nations and to change the present relationship by the application of measures for their own protection. As a last resort, it may be necessary to meet this situation by direct tariff increases and by granting further preference to Great Britain and to most-favoured-nations. This is not a statement in favour of exhorbitant tariffs. I am not suggesting tariffs which will increase the cost of living in Canada, but rather such measures as will permit the continued growth of Canadian production and stimulate trade relationships with those countries who are willing to buy agricultural and other products from this country on terms which will permit the maintenance of a reasonable and stable prosperity.

No mention of higher tariff.

Those are practically the words of the Minister of Finance in his budget speech. There is no mention of retaliation. No one will dare say that Sir Herbert Holt is a dreamer. His practical views should be very carefully considered before we go on the rampage with respect to tariff matters. By hasty retaliatory measures, instead of penalizing our friends to the south we might penalize our own people.

Now, Mr. Speaker, a few words on immigration. At the outset I may say that I firmly believe Premier Ferguson is a friend of northern Ontario, as is also his Minister of Lands and Forests. Northern Ontario is a wonderful part of the province, immense in area, and richly endowed with minerals, with water-powers and with forest resources. It is also one of the best agricultural sections, the 35,000 square mile clay belt being admirably adapted for settlement. At the same time I do not think an immigration scheme on a large scale will be feasible in that country. I presume all members of this house are familiar with the failure of the Kapuskasing colonization experiment, on which the provincial government spent millions of dollars. Unfortunately, the immigrants were not familiar with farming conditions in northern Ontario and did not become acclimatized, and of course they failed to make good. In fact the government had to transfer those people to Toronto and other large centres. Recently I read in the December issue of the Empire Review an article by Premier Ferguson in which he described the kitchen garden farms of Denmark. Speaking of the size of these farms the Premier of Ontario said that they were from 15 to 50 acres in area. Had he visited that country four or five years ago, I would have been inclined to believe that he had tried to apply the same principle to northern Ontario. About five years ago, and apparently without any consultation with the settlers of that section of the province the size of the farms was reduced from 150 to 75 acres. But those small farms would not be suitable in northern Ontario. Not a single farmer from the older portion of the province would attempt farming in northern Ontario on such a small scale. Everybody familiar with a timber farm will tell you that allowance must be made for a certain amount of waste land. In clearing such a farm the pioneer must select an elevated spot on which to build his home and start farming operations, and eventually he gets access to the lower lying land, but almost invariably there is a good deal of rocky land which cannot be brought under cultivation. I am sorry that I cannot air my views on this subject in the provincial legislature, and therefore I must take this opportunity to do so here. I submit that northern Ontario is not equipped to take care of a large immigrant population. In many sections where the people have been on their farms for ten or fifteen years they are still without roads and therefore have no access to markets. I have stated that they are not getting a fair remuneration for their pulpwood, and it is absolutely necessary that they should, because they rely upon this for their living. The farmer depends upon his pulpwood for himself and his family. So that we must be very careful in dealing with this matter. We are also trying to get agriculturists to come to Canada, and we know that eventually 50 per cent of them will find their way to the larger centres.

The ACTING SPEAKER (Mr. Power): The hon. gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. M. N. CAMPBELL (Mackenzie): I do not propose to enter into a general discussion of the whole budget, but I desire to deal with a matter which I consider to be of paramount importance at the present time; and in this connection may I quote from the budget speech of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb) delivered in this house on February 16, 1928—that is to say, the budget speech of last year. The remarks to which I wish to call the attention of the house will be found at page 513 of Hansard of that year:

> In order to foster empire trade there is a general tendency in the Dominions and the mother country to increase the percentage of cost of production requirements on goods receiving the benefit of the British preferential tariff. At present Canada requires 25 per cent to be empire labour and materials. It is proposed to double this percentage. There will be similar increases in the percentages required on goods entering under treaty rates and the intermediate tariff.

Now I will not accuse the Minister of Finance of attempting to deceive the house, but I did receive an entirely wrong impression because, when I began to study the situation, I came to the conclusion that this regulation would have exactly the opposite effect. Speaking in this house on February 27, 1928, I drew the attention of the minister to that fact. May I be permitted to quote briefly from the remarks I made on that occasion. I said:

> Ninety per cent of the short staple cotton used in British mills is purchased outside the empire, 30 per cent of the total American exports of cotton going to the United Kingdom. Not more than 15 to 20 per cent of the cost of the finished product of the British cotton mills is labour.

I pointed out that the effect of this regulation would be to debar British manufactured cottons from the benefits of the British preference. It might be that when the raw cotton was very low in price the labour and other materials might happen to be 50 per cent or more of the cost, and under these circumstances these cottons might come in under the British preference. But when cotton prices were high certainly cotton manufactured goods from Great Britain would be debarred from the benefits of the British preference. I pointed out that in effect the Minister of Finance was saying to the consumers of Canada that when cotton prices were low the duty might remain as it was, but that when cotton prices were high he proposed to increase the tariff. In fact, I quoted some figures, which I will read at the present moment.

> In ten years the average value of the raw cotton used in British mills was 46 per cent of the finished value of the goods. In one year it was about 58 per cent. It is quite obvious, then, that under this new proposal the advantage of the British preference will largely be lost to the British cotton manufacturers.

On February 29, two days later, the Minister of Railways (Mr. Dunning) was addressing the house on the budget and I presume he was referring to my remarks when he said, as reported at page 893 of Hansard:

> As to the criticism which has been uttered with respect to the intimation by the Minister of Finance that in future it was proposed to ask that all goods coming in, taking advantage of the British preference, should have a 50 per cent British or empire content, I desire to say just this: the Minister of Finance gave that intimation in no sense intending thereby to limit the British preference in the slightest degree.

Further on he said:

> Some hon. gentleman in the far corner—I forget who it was—instanced the possibility that the raising of the limit to 50 per cent might have the effect of debarring British goods. I can assure my hon. friend on the authority of the Minister of Finance that there is no intention to permit it to be used for any such purpose, and if as a result of experience it is found necessary to provide a different percentage of content for different classes of goods, as other British dominions have done, it is quite within the competency of the government to work out the solution along those lines.

That assurance seemed fairly definite. But that is not all. On March 13 the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King), speaking in the same budget debate, made further reference to this matter. Referring to this provision regarding the British preference, he said:

May I say this to the house: If we discover, in connection with the enforcement of a regulation of that kind, that the consumers of this country are in any particular losing the benefits which the British preference was intended to give, we shall not hesitate speedily to make such changes as the circumstances may demand.

Then the Prime Minister proceeded to deal with what I presume were my remarks, in which the suggestion was made that when cotton prices were high that was the very time the duty would be raised; and concluding on that particular point the right hon. gentleman said:

I wish to say that if that situation arises it is not the intention of the government to make the existing 25 per cent British content 1 per cent higher than it is at the present time.

Now these remarks of the two ministers cannot be misunderstood, and for my part I went home after last session feeling assured that this provision would not be carried into effect. Imagine my surprise, however, when on the first of February this year the provision, without being modified or amended to any degree, was put into effect. And it is in operation at the present time.

Some protests have been made by the British High Commissioner and by the British Federation of Industries over the enforcement of this provision. Their opposition is based, of course, on the opinion that it will debar some British goods from the benefits of the preference. On March 4, a week ago, I secured an order from this house for the return of correspondence between the government and the British High Commissioner and between the government and the British Federation of Industries with respect to this matter. I regret that although one week has elapsed I have not received these papers. On Saturday morning I called at the minister's office and was told that they were all ready, but the minister had not given his authority for them to be turned over to me. Of course I am not suggesting that he was withholding them until after this debate, but certainly the matter has been overlooked. I am sorry that these papers are not in my hands, because I should then be in a better position to deal with the question. At the present time the only information I have with respect to the protests made by the British High Commissioner and the British Federation of Industries is what I have gleaned from the newspapers. May I quote from the Manitoba Free Press of February 11 last. In a rather lengthy article dealing with this provision and its effects on interimperial trade the following appears:

[Mr. Campbell.]

Imports of cotton under the preferential tariff will be radically restricted unless the new regulations are modified. Efficiency of cotton spinning, weaving and finishing in England is so great that in many of the early stages of manufacture the cost of raw cotton, 20 cents a pound at the present time, is more than 50 per cent of the sale price of the article. Under the new regulations various cotton goods will be unable to qualify for the British preferential tariff.

In the case of low count yarns, for example, the preferential tariff is 10 per cent and the general tariff 20 per cent. Grey cotton fabrics are dutiable at 12½ per cent preferential and 22½ per cent general.

This means actually doubling the tariff on many articles of cotton manufacture. Further on the article draws attention to the fact that Canada's importations of semi-manufactured and manufactured cotton goods in 1928 approximated $33,000,000. It goes on to say that this trade is divided between Great Britain and the United States; the British trade is almost entirely in manufactured goods while the United States trade is at least partly in semi-manufactured goods; and in conclusion the article says:

Therefore the new regulations, unless modified, will be of assistance to the Canadian textile industry.

On this point there is no dispute; the Canadian textile manufacturers are well aware of this feature of the new policy which, by the way, they are strongly supporting. The Canadian Textile Journal of January 17 says:

The new regulation is a progressive step and it should be enforced without qualification or equivocation.

Again I quote from the Manitoba Free Press of February 12, which contained an article dealing with the various commodities which will be affected by this provision. First there is the question of copper, and the article quotes from a memorandum presented to the minister by the British Federation of Industries:

"It is true," says the memorandum, "that copper is imported into Great Britain from within the British Empire but the main source of the world's supply is the United States of America. With the best of intentions British manufacturers will be quite unable to certify that any finished copper article exported to Canada is made of Australian copper and still less of copper from any other part of the empire, for the simple reason that firms importing copper cannot segregate supplies coming from one particular source or another."

Then it refers to the fur industry:

Still another industry to be affected will be fur manufacturing. There are no raw furs produced in the United Kingdom, and while quantities are brought from Canada, a large part comes from Russia.

Then it refers to the matter of velvet, and says:

The raw material of velvet comes from China and Japan and is brought to England where it is woven. Then it is sent to Germany to be fabricated and back to England to be finished.

Then it refers to boots and shoes, and says:

It seems that much of the raw material going into British boots and shoes—leather raw hides—comes from the Argentine. To most people it will seem incredible that the cost of the raw leather should exceed 50 per cent of the cost of the finished product, but it is so represented in Ottawa. No doubt the cheaper grades of boots and shoes are more particularly affected.

Let us analyse these particular items; first there is the question of copper. Under ordinary circumstances it might be said that this provision would compel the British manufacturer to use Canadian raw copper, but at present this will be of no benefit to Canadian copper producers because, as hon. members know, there is a world shortage of copper. Just now it is not a matter of selling our copper; the output has been sold for months ahead, and all the copper mines in the world cannot keep up with the demands of the industry. Copper has risen over 50 per cent in the markets of the world during the last six months, so for that reason this provision will be of no benefit to the copper industry.

Then we come to cotton, and there seems to be no question but that the British cotton manufacturer must purchase his raw material in the United States, which debars cotton from the benefits of the British preference altogether. This affects not only Great Britain but also Australia, New Zealand, Czechoslovakia and France, countries which now enjoy special treaty tariffs.

I would like to point out that from what I have gleaned from the press the British High Commissioner has been very moderate in his demands. He is not asking the Canadian government to repeal this regulation; he simply asks the government that all materials not produced economically within the empire should be exempt and that a list of the articles so exempt should be published as has been done in Australia and New Zealand. I may say that cotton is an outstanding example of these articles. Now may I quote again from a London despatch appearing in the Manitoba Free Press of January 21, as follows:

The British overseas trade department confesses itself surprised at the discovery that certain cotton goods exported to Canada from Lancashire cannot claim more then 50 per cent of their value to be due to British labour. An important official said to me: "I make it my business to watch all that concerns trade relations with Canada and when the regulation requiring 50 per cent qualification for preferential tariff was announced it never occurred to me that textiles would be affected. There were some goods affected of relatively small importance, perhaps only one British firm would be supplying them to Canada, but in this case of cotton it affects Lancashire. I find that the goods causing the difficulty are grey cloths. Raw cotton comes here, is spun and woven and then sent to Canada for bleaching and dyeing. You will see that last year Canada imported nearly 29,000,000 yards of greys, of which more than 9,000,000 went from Britain. It is almost the largest item in our cotton trade with Canada and the new regulation will drive the trade to the United States."

Now I would like to quote again from an Ottawa despatch appearing in the Montreal Gazette of January 18. This includes many figures which go to show that the effect of this provision will be to drive that trade to the United States rather than to Great Britain. It states:

During the first six months of the present fiscal year, Canada imported from the United Kingdom yarns and threads to the value of $2,136,714, an increase of $300,000, as compared with the corresponding six months last year. This trade will be greatly handicapped if not entirely shut off under the regulation effective on February 1 next. On yarns over forties single, Britain has recently been taking the Canadian import trade away from the United States owing to the British preference, the customs duties being 10 per cent on goods from the United Kingdom and 15 per cent on goods from the United States.

Further on there are figures which tend to prove this contention, and then the article proceeds:

The change a fortnight hence will undoubtedly result in dwindling imports from the mother land and increased purchases from the United States. British manufacturers claim that they are helpless, for they must import their raw cotton from the United States. —

If there were any doubts as to the ultimate effects of this regulation and as to the sources from which pressure was brought to bear upon the minister, those doubts may be set at rest by an editorial appearing in the Canadian Textile Journal of November 29 last, which states in part:

Manufacturers and producers will welcome the announcement from Ottawa that after February 1 goods to enjoy the British preference entering Canada will be required to be 50 per cent of empire material and labour, instead of 25 per cent as at present. The new ruling, which was forecast in the last budget, also applies to goods coming into Canada from other countries enjoying special treaty privileges, in which case goods must contain at least 50 per cent of the labour and material of the country from whence imported.

I would like to quote further from an article dealing with this regulation which appeared in the same issue of the Canadian Textile Journal:

> This increase in empire content was foreshadowed by Hon. James A. Robb in his last budget and is due to the repeated demand of Canadian producers. —

So there should be no doubt whatever as to the source from which came the pressure. I hold in my hand a memorandum which was sent to the minister two years ago by the Canadian Manufacturers' Association recommending this very provision, with the exception that in some cases they requested a 75 per cent content instead of 50 per cent. Apparently this memorandum was turned over to the tariff board on May 5, 1926, and it seems not to have been heard by the board at all. Just here I want to point out what I consider a serious discrimination on the part of the minister. A year ago the United Farmers of Canada sent a delegation to wait on the minister asking for certain tariff changes which they considered in the interests of their industry. The minister refused to listen to them and said they must go before the tariff board. It now appears that these textile manufacturers were allowed in by the back door; they were not obliged to go before the tariff board and place their cards upon the table, but when the farmers asked the same thing they were curtly told they must place their case before the board. The following appears in an editorial of the Canadian Textile Journal of December 6th, 1928:

> There is still much to be done on the question of the textile tariff, and it is gratifying to learn that the wool cloth items will be reviewed again shortly either in a public or private enquiry, but it is our opinion that having stated its case publicly this branch of the industry will gain more through private conference with the Commissioner of Customs than by further public reiteration of its adverse condition.

Apparently they were speaking from experience.

Mr. FORKE: If I understood the hon. member correctly, he made the statement that a deputation from the United Farmers of Canada came down to lay their case before the government and were refused a hearing and told to go before the tariff board. I was present at that meeting, and I think the Prime Minister was there, as well as the Minister of Finance and other ministers. Those men made their statement before a committee of parliament, so they were heard when they came to Ottawa.

Mr. CAMPBELL: They must have been told their case could not be considered, because certain members of that delegation came to us and informed us that the minister told them they would have to lay their case before the tariff board. My complaint is that there is discrimination here; these other gentlemen were not obliged to go before the tariff board with their case. I would just as soon have it heard by a committee of ministers as by the tariff board, as long as there was no discrimination in the matter.

The following appears in an editorial in the Saskatoon Star of February 15. This editorial deals with the change which was announced in the method of applying the British tariff, and says:

> When the change was announced it was remarked here that the effect would be simply to cut down the advantage enjoyed by British manufacturers in this market, and just to that extent, to discourage British imports into Canada.

The editorial goes on to itemize the various commodities affected, and in conclusion says:

> Unless something like this is done, the change which occurred this month will be in effect nothing more than a straight increase of tariff taxation on British goods of several sorts. Increases in tariff taxation of any kind are certainly not in line with the declared policy of the government, nor are they demanded by the Canadian public. Least of all is there any call for higher duties on goods from Britain. Our trade with Britain now shows a very heavy balance in favour of Canada. If any change is to be made in the tariff levied on goods from the United Kingdom, the preference should be increased and not cut down. One may expect to see the government questioned on the matter during this session.

I would like to quote from the speech delivered by the minister (Mr. Robb) in this house on March 1, as follows:

> Canada, the pioneer of the British preference, looks on empire trade as the key-stone of its external trade policy and desires in every way to foster closer trading relations throughout the British commonwealth of nations.

In this instance I think the actions of the minister belie his words. The minister continues:

> As the years go by an increasing quantity of our domestic production must necessarily be marketed abroad. It is our desire to trade freely with any and all who are willing to trade with us.

That has been taken throughout the country, and I believe throughout the United States, as a gentle hint to the new government of the United States. But the same kind of hint may be given to us by Great Britain, because we are in precisely the same position with respect to that country as are the United States with respect to Canada. On reference to the official trade report of the Department of Trade and Commerce, I find that our total imports from the United States in the year 1928 amounted to $825,740,612, while our exports to the United States amounted to $492,-541,120. This leaves what we commonly call an unfavourable trade balance of $333,199,492. This figure is really increased in another way. I noticed an article in the Financial Times of March 8, taken from the Wall Street Journal, protesting against any raise in the tariff on Canadian goods and pointing out that Canada is not only one of the United States' best customers for manufactured goods, but is also one of the best customers for its money. The article stated that up to the end of 1928 there was an investment of United States money in Canada amounting to $3,250,000,000. Taking an annual dividend of about five per cent on that amount, which should be paid by the shipment of goods to the United States, it will be seen that it would increase our unfavourable trade balance to about half a billion dollars. The trade reports show that our imports of cotton from the United States in 1928 amounted to $44,171,933, but of this amount $27,107,186 represents raw cotton, which leaves a balance of $17,064,747 in manufactured goods. I find that our imports from the United Kingdom for the same year amounted to $190,712,351, while our exports amounted to $447,883,646, leaving what is commonly called a favourable trade balance of $257,171,295. This is a trade we should foster and not put into effect regulations which will tend to destroy that favourable trade balance. We imported manufactured cotton from Great Britain to the value of $13,593,034, and our exports to Great Britain of grain and grain products amounted to $325,092,144.

Anything which will tend to interfere with the trade between Canada and England will be fraught with serious consequences for our grain trade. At the present time Great Britain is practically the only market we have for our grain and grain products. It is absurd to say that Great Britain must buy our grain, because there are other countries producing grain. Russia may be in a position in a short time to supply a great deal of the British market, and these other countries are prepared to buy dollar for dollar from Great Britain for the grain they sell. I would like to quote from a speech of Sir Herbert Holt delivered recently at the annual shareholders meeting of the Royal Bank of Canada. Referring to the agitation in the United States for an increase in the duties against Canadian products, he says:

> It would seem that those who propose such tariff changes fail to realize that checks upon Canadian prosperity check the volume of goods which can be bought from the United States, and that on the other hand continued improvement in Canadian conditions brings corresponding increases in the volume of goods which they can sell us. From this viewpoint it might be considered economic statesmanship for the United States to discover means to increase their purchases from Canada rather than to consider measures which will constitute new trade barriers.

Any student of political economy will subscribe to the principle laid down by Sir Herbert Holt, and, paraphrasing his words, let me say: From this viewpoint it might be considered economic statesmanship for Canada to discover means to increase their purchases from Great Britain rather than to consider measures which will constitute new trade barriers. Sir Herbert Holt continues:

> As a last resort, it may be necessary to meet this situation by direct tariff increases and by granting further preference to Great Britain and to most favoured nations.

When a known protectionist like Sir Herbert Holt advocates an increase in the British preference, one would not expect this government, which claims to be a low tariff government, to be putting further trade barriers in the way of Great Britain.

The following is a resolution passed at a recent convention of the United Farmers of Canada, held at Saskatoon:

> Whereas the existence and continuation of agriculture in the prairie provinces depends upon satisfactory markets being found and maintained for wheat;
> And whereas at the present time Great Britain buys a very high percentage of our wheat, while the United States virtually excludes it by a prohibitive tariff;
> And whereas Great Britain must sell her manufactured goods if she is going to be able to buy our agricultural products;
> And whereas it is the avowed purpose of the Republican party to increase the duty against Canadian agricultural products;
> And whereas many lines of goods now purchased from the United States could be supplied by the British manufacturers, which could create a greater purchasing power for our wheat and other agricultural products;
> Now therefore be it resolved that we call upon the government of Canada to immediately increase the British preference, and provide for successive reductions each year until we have free trade with Great Britain.

Let me appeal to the minister and particularly to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) to implement the pledges and assurances which they gave to the house last year that this provision would not be allowed to do what we know it is doing at the present time. I trust that if the government cannot see its way clear to eliminate the regulation altogether, it will at least modify it to eliminate those products that cannot be economically produced within the empire.

I have just a few moments left and I wish to refer briefly to a matter which was brought up in the house by the hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Gardiner) when he spoke on the address. He drew the attention of the government to an agitation that was going on in western Canada asking for the dismissal of the Board of Grain Commissioners. I am not going to constitute myself a judge of the Board of Grain Commissioners, but this agitation cannot be overlooked; it cannot be dismissed because there is more behind it than a mere demagogic impulse. Resolutions were passed by the United Farmers of Alberta and the United Farmers of Canada calling for the dismissal of the board. I thought, after the matter was drawn to the attention of the government by the hon. member for Acadia, we would have had some pronouncement from the government, and I wish to point out now that we should have some pronouncement. This cannot be ignored and it cannot be delayed.

For some reason or another—I am not going to say just how—certain sections of the Canada Grain Act were ignored and overridden last year by grain companies. Sections 150 and 225 are the ones about which we have heard these complaints. Section 150 of the Canada Grain Act gives to the producer the right to determine the destination of his grain. We know that pool farmers placing their grain in line elevators have been refused that right time after time by private grain companies. Section 225 stipulates the form of ticket that shall be used, and it says that no ticket except that provided by statute or by an order in council shall be used. The ticket to which the hon. member for Acadia referred, and which is commonly called the "hybrid" ticket, was in general use last year. It is not one of those prescribed by statute; it is not covered by any order in council and yet, while repeated complaints were made to the Board of Grain Commissioners, no action whatever, so far as we know, was taken to carry out the law. As I say, we have no government pronouncement of policy with respect to the matter and we are entirely in the dark as to what the government propose to do. There are rumours—I have read them in the press—that the government propose to ask parliament for a change in the Grain Act. It is absurd for the government to come and ask parliament for another change in the Grain Act until we enforce what we have at the present time. That is what the farmers are asking for to-day and until an honest attempt has been made to enforce the act, it is useless to come to the house and ask for other changes. I wish to impress this matter on the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Malcolm) who, I am sorry, is not in his seat. So far he seems to be very sympathetic to suggestions that were made to him from this side of the house, but I want to point out to him that the temper of the western farmer is such that this cannot be ignored, and neither this government nor any other self-respecting body would want to have its statutes overridden as these have been. The fact that these two clauses in the Grain Act have been overridden during the past year has cost our western pools some millions of dollars. Millions of bushels of grain that should have gone directly to the pool terminals went to the terminals of the line companies. We know what has happened there; the grain is mixed down to what we call the minimum of the grade. The cream of the grain is sold and the premium secured and the skim milk, as it were, is turned over to the pool. In addition to that there are serious complaints of alteration in routing. Many factors that I cannot explain at the present time enter into this, but I wish to impress upon the government that it is imperative that some action be taken at the earliest possible moment with respect to the matter.

Mr. F. W. PERRAS (Wright): Mr. Speaker, in company with other members, I take very keen pleasure in saying a few words in unqualified approval of the budget, so ably prepared and presented by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb). Ordinarily, a budget, being composed almost entirely of figures, makes very dry and uninteresting reading; but in the present instance at the very outset vivid interest is aroused by the figures quoted, in view of the fact that they mean a substantial reduction in our net debt of $50,984,137.17 for the fiscal year 1927-28, and that the estimated total revenues for the fiscal year 1928-29, ending March 31, will be in the neighbourhood of $454,942,000. Nothing can speak more highly in favour of the present administration than these figures, and, when the increases of $28,000,000 in customs revenue, $6,000,000 in excise duties, $1,900,000 in income taxes, $660,000 interest on investments, and $840,000 from miscellaneous sources are taken into consideration, even the youngest student of statistics is struck by the results. A rapid calculation of revenue and expenditures gives the gratifying result of $69,782,000 of estimated surplus revenue.

The scrupulously clear compilation of figures prepared by the hon. Minister of Finance shows that Canada's finances are in competent hands and that we need have no fear of mismanagement. Figures do not lie, and the substantial increase in revenue over expenditures can mean nothing but commendation of the government and its methods. No effort has been spared to place before the public, in a most implicit manner, undeniable proof of honest endeavour, combined with ability, to place Canada on an enviable footing. Progress is the watchword.

There is something in this year's budget to meet all requirements. The reduction in the sales tax will please the purchaser; the reduction in the national debt will please everybody; improvements in various services have been carried out, and although there is bound to be some criticism—for if there were no criticism there would be no opposition—yet there is no denying that this government has done wonders.

It is indeed a very great honour, Mr. Speaker, of which I am deeply appreciative, to represent in this parliament the county of Wright. Situated as it is along that wonderful valley of the Gatineau—and I may say in the heart of the Laurentian hills—it is unsurpassed in beauty and in picturesqueness by any portion of the so-much talked of and so much admired Swiss Alps. I doubt indeed if the grandeur of the Rockies can compare with the beauty of the Gatineau valley and the Laurentian hills. But, sir, I am not only concerned about the physical features of that wonderful country; but I am even more anxious to see that the interests of those pioneers be looked after as a component part of this great dominion. I am satisfied that those interests, diversified as they are, have been well safeguarded by the policy of the Liberal government, and particularly by the budget speech of the hon. the Minister of Finance.

Of course we all know that agriculture is at the base of the national prosperity of Canada, and that to that hard-working, self-sacrificing and patriotic class we owe a great deal. But I feel that by virtue of the Liberal policies those interests are well protected under the able administration of the present Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell). I want to state clearly that this basic industry of agriculture must continue to be safeguarded, to be properly looked after, and that the interests of those who contribute such a large part to our national existence should continue to receive all the care and attention to which they are so well entitled.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there is one subject on which I must say a few words—the Beauharnois project, which loomed up not so very long ago as a mountain of contention and resolved itself into a national windfall. There is no doubt whatever that the realization of this enterprise will mean a lasting benefit to Canada. The bugbear of a monopoly of untold magnitude has been duly enlarged upon, but this argument was met by such an able refutation that even those who wavered in their allegiance became firmly convinced of the necessity of supporting this measure.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King), in laying before the house all the data in connection with this undertaking, left nothing to be guessed at; with the exception of the technical details that must necessarily be left to expert engineers, we know all there is to be known about this great national enterprise. The findings of the advisory board, the decisions arrived at in conference, and the wording of agreements have given us ample assurance that Canadian rights will be protected in every possible way and no serious-minded Canadian citizen can possibly feel alarmed because an undertaking of great magnitude has been consummated. There are, of course, conscientious objectors, but the really fair-minded, far-sighted business man could not but feel that he is in duty bound to give the project favourable consideration.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I must say that one does not need to be an incurable optimist to feel elated over the success that has attended the efforts of this administration, and even the confirmed pessimist will eventualy, if he finds it too difficult to become a convert, silently fold his tent, and, like the Arabs, steal away. I do not want to pose as an extremist in fair weather prophecy, but the figures have been tabled, concrete results have been shown, and deficits are conspicuous by their absence—what better proof could be asked for?

On motion of Mr. Brown, the debate was adjourned.

On motion of Mr. Robb the house adjourned at 10.40 p.m.

MESSAGE FROM THE GOVERNOR GENERAL

ACKNOWLEDGMENT OF ADDRESS

Mr. SPEAKER: I have the honour to inform the house that I have received the following communication from His Excellency the Governor General:

I have received with great pleasure the address you have voted in reply to my speech at the opening of parliament, and thank you for it sincerely.

8th March, 1929.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Fourth report of the select standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines.—Mr. Cahill.

AGRICULTURE AND COLONIZATION

FIRST AND SECOND REPORTS OF SELECT STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. W. F. KAY (Brome-Missisquoi) presented the first and second reports of the committee on agriculture and colonization. He said:

With the unanimous consent of the house I beg to move:

That the first and second reports of the select standing committee on agriculture and colonization be concurred in.

Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): The second report, as I understand it, dealt only with the committee sitting while the house was in session, and there was no recommendation about hearing witnesses or dealing with problems of wheat grading as, it was suggested, would be in the report. The report as read did not contain that.

Mr. KAY: These two reports ask, first, for permission to sit while the house is in session, and, second, that the committee be allowed to print its proceedings from day to day for the information of the members. It is true that in the committee this morning a motion was passed asking for an enlargement of the reference to the committee, but I am sorry to say that I was not able to have that report prepared for to-day.

Mr. BENNETT: There is no objection.

Motion agreed to.

FIRST REPORT OF SELECT STANDING COMMITTEE

On motion of Mr. William Duff (Antigonish-Guysboro) the first report of the select standing committee on marine and fisheries was concurred in.

POST OFFICE ACT AMENDMENT

Mr. T. L. CHURCH (Toronto Northwest) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 76, to amend the Post Office Act.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Explain.

Mr. CHURCH: This bill is to restore to the Post Office Act the words "His Majesty's Mail" which were the words used in the days of the old provinces of Canada before confederation. When the statutes were revised a couple of years ago the words "His Majesty's Mail" were struck out and the words "Canada Mail" inserted. The object of the bill is to restore the former words.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. PETER McGIBBON (Muskoka-Ontario): I should like to ask the government if an order in council has been passed imposing a tax on motor boats and other pleasure boats. If so, why has that been made to apply only to the Muskoka lakes?

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): In reply to my hon. friend I may say that taxes are never imposed by order in council.

GERMAN IMMIGRANTS AT TORONTO

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. A. HEAPS (North Winnipeg): I would like to ask the Minister of Labour whether, in view of the importation by the Rapid Grip, Limited, of Toronto, of a number of mechanics from Europe to displace the men who were working for that company, is it the intention of his department or the government to introduce legislation to prevent an occurrence of that kind in future?

Hon. PETER HEENAN (Minister of Labour): I do not care to state at this moment what the policy of the government may be, but I said on a previous occasion that I thought, in view of the fact that the employers of labour and those who were out on strike had arrived at a basis of agreement, it would not be in the interests of the agreement itself that we should discuss the matter on the floor of the house.

GRADING OF GRAIN

WHEAT—INQUIRY RESPECTING REPORT ON PROTEIN CONTENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. J. GARLAND (Bow River): In the absence of the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Malcolm), might I direct a question to the Prime Minister? Last year the select standing committee on agriculture and colonization considered a resolution referring to the protein grading of wheat or the grading of wheat having regard to the protein content. Arising out of that committee's work a recommendation was made to the house, including amongst other things, a request for an annual report or a report this year by the National Research Council and the Board of Grain Commissioners to the Department of Trade and Commerce. I would ask the department, if that report has been received, to table it, and, if not, to state when such a report may be expected.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I shall have pleasure in directing the attention of the Minister of Trade and Commerce to my hon. friend's request.

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON THE ANNUAL FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The house resumed from Monday, March 11, consideration of the motion of Hon. J. A. Robb (Minister of Finance) that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of ways and means, and the proposed amendment thereto of Hon. Hugh Guthrie.

Mr. J. L. BROWN (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, the few remarks that I shall make in connection with this debate will be directed towards certain statements that have been made and certain opinions that have been expressed with which I may presume to differ. My remarks will refer particularly to the arguments that have been used in favour of increasing the duty on agricultural products.

The hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie), in his capacity as acting leader of the opposition, made a very able address setting forth what is undoubtedly the position taken by the Conservative party throughout Canada in regard to the tariff. It is evident that the pussy-footing attitude of the Winnipeg convention is to be departed from, and that they are now lined up under the banner of a higher protective tariff. Hon. members opposite are to be congratulated on that fact. They are also to be congratulated on the very able presentation made by the hon. member for South Wellington. The hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) is to be congratulated on having a lieutenant who so ably performs the duties of that office when he finds it necessary to be absent from the house.

There were, however, expressions used and statements made which, I think, will bear some examination. The hon. member for South Wellington endorsed the statement that has been made so frequently that Canada is enjoying a season of unbounded prosperity. In a very large sense that is true judged by the tests that are usually applied—the test of bank clearings, carloadings, railway earnings, exports and imports. Undoubtedly Canada is enjoying a season of great prosperity. But then he went on to say that that prosperity was confined to the large cities, that it had not yet reached the small villages and towns and the rural sections. Again, in large measure, I agree with the hon. member for South Wellington. I had a conversation with a merchant in our local town just before coming east, and he made a remark to me something to this effect: "We talk about prosperity, but it has not yet reached us."

I admit that times are not as bad as they were six or seven years ago. The years immediately following the close of the war found the farmers of Canada in a desperate condition. The price of agricultural products had fallen to an alarming degree while prices in other lines had not come down, and during the first session that I was here I made a statement that was absolutely true, that I had to sell nineteen head of cattle and put aside $125 in addition to pay the wages for one hired man during the year. But though conditions are not as bad as they were six or seven years ago, in a large measure it can be said that a condition still obtains particularly in regard to our major product—wheat—under which everyone who handles that commodity makes money out of it except the man who produces it. It is quite possible, Mr. Speaker, to produce an enormously large crop, a crop that is the main factor in the financial prosperity of Canada to-day, and yet produce it with little or no margin left for the producer after the expenses of production have been met. It is not the volume that counts; it is the margin of profit that remains for the producer. If to-day we were getting that twenty cents or twenty-five cents that we would like to get—that is, the twenty-five cents a bushel less that we are getting for wheat to-day as compared with a year ago—on the 400,000,000 bushels that have been produced, it would mean all the difference between comfort and distress on the farm. So I say, Mr. Speaker, it is not the volume that counts, it is the margin of profit. I can imagine that there were times of great prosperity before the civil war in the southern states, that prosperity was abounding, and yet the men who did the work got only their board and clothes out of it. There are many people throughout Canada to-day who are contributing very largely to the great mass of production who are scarcely getting their board and clothes out of it. There are those who seem to think that the farmer is not entitled to a margin of profit, and if there appears the slightest indication that there is such a margin, they begin at once to move heaven and earth to find out how they can take it away from him. Just about a month ago I saw an article in the Montreal Gazette dealing with the question of the Crowsnest pass rates, and in that article this very sage remark was made, that if it had not been for the restoration of those rates the railway companies would be making so many million dollars more. We know, of course, that they would have made so many million dollars more, but those millions undoubtedly would have been taken out of the already depleted pockets of the wheat producers of the prairies.

Up to this point I have agreed fairly well with the hon. member for South Wellington, but here we must part company. We agree on the diagnosis of the disease but we do not agree on the remedy. The hon. member for South Wellington says that with one stroke of the pen all these economic evils can be corrected, and he proposes to use that pen to make increases in the tariff all along the line. And particularly has this been urged in regard to agricultural products. I am firmly convinced, Mr. Speaker, that increased protection on agricultural products cannot ultimately redound to the benefit of the producer. I oppose the increase for two reasons, first in regard to our major products on which we are still on an export basis. The mere putting on of a duty will not affect the price, for the price on the home market is always determined by the price on the export market. I oppose that policy because if the farmers of Canada should succumb to the temptation to seek higher duties on their own products we would immediately be met by demands from all other quarters for the raising of the tariff on their products, and our last state would be worse than the first.

We are asked to look to the United States. Well, let us look. For over a century the farmers of the United States have been responding to the cry for higher and higher protection. They have followed in the trend of the protected manufacturer. What is the meaning of this cry for farm relief? No expression was heard more frequently during the last election in the United States than that demand for farm relief. I had hoped a year or two ago that the farmers of the United States had seen the folly of their position. I had hoped that they had seen that it was not possible in the final analysis to protect them by means of tariff, and that they were seeking relief along other lines, by such bills as the McNary-Haugen bill. Not that I care to endorse that as economically sound, but I had hoped that they had found out that the farmers cannot be protected by tariffs. But it does seem that they have gone back to their old position and are now asking for higher tariffs on their products. It may injure us if these are granted, but it will be of no benefit to themselves, for the reason that their imports from Canada form an infinitesimal portion of their total production and consumption. The probability is that it will not affect their prices in the slightest degree.

I wish to direct my attention now to some of the articles that have been mentioned on which it is urged that higher duties should be placed. I shall not deal with the question of wheat. I do not think it requires any argument to convince hon. members that a duty on wheat would be of no value to the Canadian producer of wheat. We might make the duty five dollars a bushel and it would not affect our market price in the slightest degree. In a large measure, the same can be said of oats and barley. I want to come, however, to another of our products to which a great deal of attention has been directed. I refer to butter. It has been urged upon us that the dairy industry is suffering because of a large importation of butter. In my judgment, the dairy industry is one of the most prosperous industries in the country to-day. Protectionists make the mistake, whether deliberately or otherwise, of fixing their attention entirely upon one article, taking into account only one phase of the question; whereas we should look at the dairy industry in all its aspects and from a broad standpoint. As reported at page 792 of Hansard the hon. member for South Wellington —I think he was referring to last year— said that we imported milk and milk products, exclusive of butter, amounting in value to $2,370,000. I do not think there was any intention to mislead as regards the figures, but I cannot understand where the hon. gentleman got those figures.

Mr. GUTHRIE: From the trade and commerce report for 1928.

Mr. BROWN: I have here from the Bureau of Statistics figures of our imports of milk and its products. These are for the calendar year 1928.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Mine were for the fiscal year as published by the department.

Mr. BROWN: Even for the fiscal year I am inclined to believe there must be some discrepancy, as I will show. For the calendar year 1927 our imports were $676,629, and for 1926 they were $533,957. So even if we take the fiscal year to March, 1928, we could not reach the figures that he has given. However, that is not the important part of my argument.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I will get the report.

Mr. BROWN: I am going to take the figures for the calendar year 1928 which I have received from the Bureau of Statistics, $643,745—

Mr. STEVENS: What classification does that give?

Mr. BROWN: This gives all the milk products.

Mr. BENNETT: Does it include condensed milk?

Mr. BROWN: Yes, milk and cream, fresh, butter, casein, cheese, condensed milk. I want the house to notice, however, that of this $600,000 odd, $544,373 represents our imports of cheese. The great bulk of these imports comes from European countries and undoubtedly is made up of varieties of cheese that we do not produce in Canada, and therefore such cheese cannot in any real sense come into competition with our own product. I ask hon. members to keep that half million dollars in mind. Now let us turn to our exports of cheese. In the calendar year 1928 we exported to the value of $25,467,642. That is, on cheese alone we have an excess of exports over imports of $25,000,000. I turn to butter. According to this same schedule we imported $5,937,170 worth of butter, most of which of course came from New Zealand; but we also exported during the year $805,055 worth; that is, there is an excess of imports over exports of $5,132,115. But that does not tell the whole story of the dairy industry. We exported a number of other milk products in large quantities, for instance:

Milk powder	$ 541,064
Condensed milk	2,324,044
Evaporated milk	598,601
Casein	33,892
Cream	5,593,399

A total of $9,957,920. That is, apart from cheese and butter we exported milk and milk products to the value of almost ten million dollars, nearly double our importation of butter. So the total excess of our exports of dairy products over our imports comes very close to thirty million dollars. Under such conditions as those it does not seem to me that the dairy industry is really declining. I have not been able to get the production figures of butter for 1928, but I have the figures for 1926 and 1927. They are given as $90,000,000 for 1926, and $96,000,000 for 1927. Then it is urged on every hand, and we believe it is true, that the home consumption of dairy products has very greatly increased during the last year or two. It is reasonable to suppose that that would be the case. We are told that the American tourist traffic means about $246,000,000 to Canada every year, and naturally dairy products would form a very large proportion of that total.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): May I ask the hon. gentleman a question? He maintains that in the last year or two, to go no further back, there has been an increase in the amount of milk used in the production of butter and cheese. Was there an increase in the amount of milk used in the production of butter and cheese in 1928 as compared with 1927 or 1926?

Mr. BROWN: I cannot answer that question. It is not always possible to state the exact amount of milk that was used in the production of those commodities. What is the value of our production of them must necessarily be a matter of estimate, especially in the case of butter produced on the farms, but it seems to be the general opinion that the consumption has very substantially increased in Canada. There is good warrant for that belief. As I have said already, the American tourist traffic is said to be worth $246,000,000 to Canada annually, and in the very nature of the case we would expect a large amount of that to be represented by dairy products. Then we know there has been a great development in the mining industry, and in fact all along the line. Take the one item of ice cream, everybody knows that the manufacture and consumption of ice cream has increased enormously in the last year or two.

Mr. McGIBBON: Might I ask the hon. member a question? Does he not know that the production of butter fat, the basis of the whole thing, has decreased in the last few years?

Mr. BROWN: The hon. gentleman may make that statement if he likes, but he should not ask me to say if I do not know. I wish to read a brief extract from the report of the Manitoba Cooperative Dairy that I received last night—

Mr. ERNST: May I ask the hon. gentleman a question?

Mr. BROWN: I am not averse to answering, but I have only a limited time in which to speak and therefore I do not care to be interrupted. I was about to say that I happened to be a small shareholder in the Manitoba Cooperative Dairy, and the following is a passage in a letter they have sent out:

Dear Shareholder:

We are pleased to report the past year as the most successful in the history of our association; as you will note from the enclosed financial statement, 1928 shows a net surplus of $36,545.12; this is the largest surplus we have recorded in any year;

There is another matter with which I wish to deal, because of an incident that occurred in this house last year. During a debate at that time I interjected the remark that we did not import hay into Canada. When I made that statement I did not intend it to be taken quite literally, for I knew that we did bring in some hay; I was aware of that fact, as I had pointed out on a former occasion, in 1926, when I spoke on the same subject. I did mean, however, that our imports of hay as compared with our exports were almost negligible. The hon. member for Frontenac-Addington (Mr. Edwards) was good enough to tell me that I did not know what I was talking about.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): The hon. gentleman has just admitted that he did not.

Mr. BROWN: But I did know; I have admitted nothing of the kind. I knew quite well. At any rate, I know now exactly what I am talking about, if the statistics are to be relied upon. I have the figures in this case for the fiscal years from 1923 to 1928, inclusively. I shall not give the value but simply the number of tons imported and exported. The table is as follows:

Evidently 1923 was a bad year for hay in Canada, for the exports were the smallest of any of the six years for which I have the record, while our imports in that year were larger than the total for the four succeeding years. To continue:

1925..	10,282	225,403
1926..	8,493	368,787

In both cases trading was done chiefly with the United States, with Great Britain second. That is to say, for these six years, the proportion of exports to imports varied all the way from 20 to 1 to 60 to 1. Under such circumstances, will anyone seriously contend that an import duty, if it were raised to $4 a ton, as advocated, following the United States, would be of any value to the Canadian farmer? And remember that when we export hay the average price is in the neighbourhood of $10 a ton, whereas when we import it the price is about $15 a ton. So that it would mean an additional tax of about $2 a ton upon hay.

Let me now refer to the question of hides and skins. The hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie) quoted figures to show that we were importing $14,000,000 worth of hides, $10,000,000 being from the United States, while we were exporting about a similar amount; and he indicated something to the effect that these were simply cross entries and that we might wipe the whole thing off the slate and use our own hides instead of importing from the United States. If the hon. member had taken more than a superficial view of the question he would not have assumed that position. It is true that we import hides to the value of $14,000,000 odd, from the United States $11,164,668, while we export to the United States $11,266,660 worth of this product. But there is this point to which I would call the attention of the house: That class of hides which forms the great bulk of our imports and exports consists of raw cattle skins, that is, the heavier hides. Now, on the hides we imported we paid a little more than 23 cents, and for the hides we exported we received 19 cents. Someone may say, "That is bad business; why export hides at 19 cents and import at 23 cents?" But a little close thought will surely convince anyone that there is a reason for this. The Canadian tanner is surely a business man who can be trusted to buy what suits him, and therefore he pays that 23 cents for the class of hides he wants because he cannot get them in Canada. When I made a similar statement three years ago it was absolutely endorsed by Colonel Mullins, of Marquette, who has had a large experience in the cattle business and is familiar with the tanning industry. He absolutely endorsed the statement that the class of hides—or at least a large proportion of the hides—which the Canadian tanner requires cannot be obtained in Canada, so that he is obliged to go elsewhere for them. But we cannot consider this question of hides by itself; we must take into account the whole business of buying and selling hides and tanning them into leather, and also the selling of the leather. I notice that we sell to the United States such grades of leather as harness, sole leather, upper leather, with a very small quantity of other leathers, the total being $7,682,521. That is the country with which we cannot compete in these matters. So that the total figures would indicate a situation something like this: Our excess of exports of hides and unmanufactured leather, so far as the United States are concerned, gives us a favourable balance—to use the term which is commonly employed—of something over $3,000,000; and taking our total exports into account we have a favourable balance of about $1,500,000. Now, if by one stroke of the pen a duty is imposed on hides, what do we do? We simply make it so much more difficult for the manufacturer, the tanner, to obtain his raw product, and we strike at this very profitable business which he is carrying on with the United States and other countries, securing no benefit for ourselves. The probability is that if we insisted on handicapping the manufacturer of leather in that way we should put him in the position where he would not be able to pay as good a price for that proportion of our own hides which he now uses.

I think I have shown that on some of our major products a protective tariff would not only do no good but would in some cases be actually harmful. If, however, it is decided that the people of Canada should not eat foreign produce, then I want to go the whole distance and not part of the distance. If we should not be eating fresh fruits and vegetables from the United States, then let us put on an absolute embargo. I do not propose to take the position which will make it possible for those who live at the Chateau and at high class clubs, or in wealthy homes, to obtain these products, while the poorer people who are now using them in large quantities shall be deprived of the privilege. I wish to see us all on the same basis.

Now, Mr. Speaker, from the standpoint of the ordinary consumer I confess that there is not a very great deal in this budget; it does not contain much meat, of course, but we may be glad that it does not contain any poison. I am firmly convinced that the greatest danger to be faced by the Canadian producer to-day is that propaganda which will be carried on throughout the country to induce him to accept the principle of higher protection for his own products. I am sufficiently human to feel that if a man hits me I would like to hit him back; I am not defending that attitude but am simply making a confession, as the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens) said the other day. We can understand that attitude—

Mr. BENNETT: That is a reservation for self defence.

Mr. BROWN: I heard it put this way the other day, so it is not original with me: We can understand a man, when he is struck on his right cheek, striking the other fellow on the left cheek; that may not be a very admirable disposition, but we can understand that feeling. Perhaps we can even understand the Christian doctrine, even though we do not practise it, that when a man strikes you on the right cheek you should also turn to him the left, but the one thing we cannot understand is the man who, being struck on his right cheek, strikes himself a blow on his left cheek. That is very similar to the Japanese revenging himself upon his enemy by committing suicide upon his enemy's doorstep.

It would be most regrettable, Mr. Speaker, if we should engage in anything of the nature of a tariff war, by which we would hurt ourselves and do no one any good. It is generally conceded now that nobody wins in war; everyone loses. We may appear to win for a time, but ultimately everyone loses and that is equally true in a tariff war. As I have said already, the United States may hurt us with their tariffs but they cannot do themselves any good, and ultimately they will find that to be true; they may appear to enjoy some benefit when the tariff is first raised, but matters will readjust themselves in a short time and they will find themselves in the same relative position.

For the reasons I have indicated, Mr. Speaker, I feel compelled on this and on every other occasion to oppose the principle of increased tariffs on farm produce as a means of maintaining the prosperity of the farmer. Relief must be sought along other lines; we must seek it by reducing rather than by increasing the farmer's cost of production.

Mr. C. W. BELL (West Hamilton): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat was generous in his opening remarks in congratulating various hon. members of this house. I think one may very fittingly congratulate the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Brown) in turn because, while one may find much with which to disagree in what he said, the hon. member has offered the first attempt at serious criticism to come from hon. gentlemen opposite, so far as I have heard, with regard to the speech, delivered by the hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie) the other day, a speech which will be so long remembered by everyone who heard it. With the exception of the arguments presented by my hon. friend from Lisgar this afternoon the house has heard no serious attempt to deal with any of the propositions then advanced by the hon. member for South Wellington. It is quite true that we had the privilege, which we should have missed had we been deprived of it, of hearing once again from the hon. member for Stanstead (Mr. Baldwin); it is quite true that we were regaled by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell) in his own inimitable way, but until we heard from the hon. member for Lisgar this afternoon there had been, I repeat, no serious attempt to deal with, to meet or to criticize in any way those figures, facts and conclusions placed before the house the other day by the hon. member for South Wellington.

Instead of any serious attempt at argument we have been met with the reiteration of that platitude—for in reality it is only a platitude after all—which has been so widely broadcast throughout this country that we are enjoying a great and unexampled prosperity. This was the key note of the entire budget speech delivered by the Minister of Finance this year; this was the key note which he emphasized last year, and one might say it was introduced as a counter-irritant, much as a dentist tells you that what he is about to do is not really going to hurt and that you must keep your mind fixed on something else. As I have said, the Minister of Finance stressed this prosperity as the key note of his budget speech last year. In presenting his budget, on February 16, 1928, he said:

> . . . . seldom have the annual statements from leaders of finance and industry throughout Canada so generally reflected such progress and prosperity as that of the year 1927.

Will the house mark these words, that the test is the annual statements from the leaders of finance and industry. In presenting his budget this year, the Minister of Finance said:

> Canadians to-day are prospering. Employment is at a high level.

I know of but one true test of prosperity, Mr. Speaker: What are the working and living conditions of the wage earners, whether they be upon the farm or in the city? What are the conditions of the men and women who labour with their hands, the makers and the keepers of small homes? We heard from the hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Irvine) in the very able speech he made the other day; we heard from the hon. member for Last Mountain (Mr. Fansher) only last evening, and we heard from the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Brown) to-day as to the condition in which the farming community finds itself at present. But some will say, "There is prosperity in the larger cities; your own people will tell you so and the leaders of finance and industry will assure you of it."

It is because that has been so stressed; it is because it has been put forward as an excuse for all the deficiencies and wants of this budget, and the course pursued by the government, that I propose to address myself in the time at my disposal to a consideration of how far this alleged prosperity actually exists in those same large cities.

As an example, I will take the largest, richest city in the province of Ontario, the city of Toronto, and in order that I may not be accused of bias, I will refer to two great Liberal journals; to the two great pillars of the Liberal party in the province of Ontario—the Toronto Globe, pillar of cloud by day, and the Toronto Daily Star, pillar of fire by night. I will refer particularly to the pages of the Toronto Daily Star, that paper whose slogan is: Enterprise, efficiency and accuracy. We should expect authentic information from this paper, and in going back to that period of which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb) speaks I notice an article in that paper of August 30, 1927, at the time of the bountiful harvest of that year, which graphically describes the condition of thousands of wage-earners in the city of Toronto. The Star refers to the condition of one family, which it says is typical of many, and headlines the article thus:

> Child breaks down through malnutrition.
> Father out of work for a year.

The article continues:

> They stuck to it through thick and thin until at last one of the children broke down under the strain. Malnutrition in reality, starvation, pure and unadulterated.

The article goes on to say that while some people were making money at that time this was the condition of over a thousand such families in Toronto, living in utter destitution, and who came through the last long winter no one knows how and whose only outlook was to face another such experience. Such was the prosperity of thousands of city wage-earners under the Robb budget during the time of the bountiful harvest of 1927. Someone might say that that condition was only temporary, and to refute that argument I turn to the Toronto Star of December 7, 1927, which describes how scores of wage-earners and workers were living in Toronto at that time. The Star speaks in particular of a deserted woman who was struggling to keep six little children alive, and to use its own words:

> Here the deserted mother eked out an existence upon city allowance in one of a score of dens similarly inhabited and brushed by the pestilential blow of poverty.

The street was a mere tunnel through rotten houses. . . . shacks and dens where women live and children play—and die.

A pleasant picture of prosperity in Canada during the year of grace, 1927. Let us take the year 1928, when we had the greatest of all crops and the greatest possibility for national wealth, impeded as those chances were by some reasons which have already been given to the house. In the Toronto Star of August 10, 1928, we read of yet another typical, large city family. The article describes a man and wife with five children, the man left without a position through an illness of three weeks. He was without employment for one solid year although he had sought for any job that would keep body and soul together. But the level of employment was so high that he could not reach any of it, and so he went down and out. He had never learned how prosperous he was; he had never read the statements of the leaders of finance and industry. We shall hear presently from the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Malcolm) and he will probably tell us a great deal about seasonal employment. May I respectfully suggest that when the hon. minister approaches the house with his arguments on the question of seasonal employment, he will explain just what particular season would have been open to these unfortunate people when they sought work without return day after day, week after week, month after month for years at a time.

Coming a little nearer to the present season, I read in the Toronto Globe of Wednesday, November 14, 1928, of a soldier who had served his country well but was forced to leave it. The article reads in part:

A decorated ex-aviator, artillery officer and British secret service operative, with high educational qualifications and impressive military recommendations, and with seven years, continuous service to his credit, is to be Canada's loss and the United States' gain as a result of his inability, in spite of two years' effort, to find suitable employment in the Dominion.

There were others who could not go; there were others who had to remain, and I see, by reference to the Toronto Star of December 18, 1928, how some of them were found at that time working their way around by singing and playing musical instruments in the streets. The article continues:

The men satisfied Chief Draper, through references from well known firms, that they were employed through no fault of their own. The chief sent for Captain Charles Nash, secretary of the Toronto and District Council of the Canadian Legion, who informed him that he could do little toward finding work for the two and who added that dozens of members of the legion are unemployed.

"I feel it is a disgrace that men like these should have to stoop to what is only one stage removed from begging to provide for their families," the chief declared.

In the Toronto Globe of January 5, of this year the following article appears:

Long Bread Line For Midday Meal
Yonge Street Mission Fed 350 Hungry Men Yesterday

Evidence of need and hunger has been manifest at the Yonge Street Mission during the past few weeks and Mr. Davis yesterday told the Globe that although the twice-weekly free meals are only beginning this week, from 100 to 150 lunches have been daily handed out to men who in many instances have been eager for even dried crusts of bread.

Then, Mr. Speaker, I come to March 2, 1929, the day after the Minister of Finance delivered his budget speech in the house. On page 4 of the Toronto Daily Star of that day the following streamer appears:

Hon. James Robb's Tax Reductions Reflect Canada's Prosperity

But on turning to page 2 of that same issue, I find the following heading over a photograph of a long line-up of destitute men on Yonge street:

Underneath the photograph, we find the following:

Here is surprising confirmation of numberless hungry mouths and tight belts that stalk abroad within the limits of the city of Toronto during the cold, cheerless months of winter. These are the "rank and file" of the "legion of the unemployed". Yesterday 3,500 beef sandwiches and 100 gallons of coffee were distributed to the "wanting".

How that line-up of cold and hungry men must have felt a warming glow, if any of them possessed the two cents to purchase a paper, after reading about the Minister of Finance's tax reduction. Imagine a settlement worker entering one of those homes which the Star describes so graphically; he sees the condition of the shivering inhabitants of the "shack", as the Star calls it, and his heart is wrung with pity. But he says to them, "We would like to do much for you but unfortunately the demands upon us from the thousands of unemployed in this city are so great that we are not able to do half of what we would like to do. We are short on clothes; we have not very much food to give you, but there is one thing I would like you to appreciate: Do you realize that the net debt reduction of the fiscal year of 1927-28 was $50,948,137.17?" The man looks up from his miserable pallet which, according to the Star, serves as his only bed, and a new light comes into his eyes as he says: "What, Sir, is it really true? Was the actual net debt reduction for the fiscal year of 1927-28, $50,948,137.17?" The visitor replies: "Yes, my poor fellow, I do assure you that the actual net debt reduction for the fiscal year of 1927-28 was $50,948,137.17." "Then" comes the answer, "I starve in peace." How can we ever be sufficiently grateful for the real information given us by these two great Liberal journals about the actual position of affairs in our large Canadian cities? Shall we not be full of gratitude to both these pillars of the Liberal party that makes us so aware of the full measure of our mercies and, particularly, to the Toronto Daily Star, that journal of enterprise, efficiency and accuracy? How far that little candle throws its beam across our prosperous province!

I notice that if we pass from the ranks of those who toil with their hands and come to another numerous class, we have those who are spoken of as the "white collar" workers, many of them in the employ of this government, such as postal clerks, letter carriers, civil service employees generally. How they must have thrilled to learn that the government shows a total revenue of $454,942,000; that the government proposes to pay out of surplus revenue the $60,000,000 loan maturing August first next, and to realize that meanwhile in the employ of the government are scores of married men with families who are working for the magnificent sum of $65 a month, or $20 a month less than the amount officially stated in the government's own publication to be requisite to purchase the bare necessities of life. If there is any greater reproach to be laid at the doors of any English-speaking government anywhere, I thank heaven I do not know of it.

Elsewhere in the budget we read that the estimated total expenditures are $385,160,000, out of which not one cent is to be expended on technical education, which doubtless takes its place beside old age pensions as an exemplification, in the eyes of the government, of a vicious principle.

But I started by saying that I too was anxious to congratulate where congratulations are possible, and I venture to extend my congratulations not only to the Minister of Finance but to other hon. gentlemen on that side of the house. For example, I desire to congratulate the Minister of Immigration (Mr. Forke). True it is that the results in his department show that last year was the leanest and poorest for many years in this country; but when we consider the blessed state of the workmen, as revealed by the Globe and the Star, and when we appreciate what the Robb budgets have been doing for those men, let us congratulate the Minister of Immigration that there is any immigration at all.

I desire to congratulate my good friend the Minister of Labour (Mr. Heenan) who was successful, either personally or by deputy, only about ten days ago in settling the strike of the textile workers in the city of Hamilton. What had caused that strike, by the way? It had been caused by the fact that the action of the government, following the budget of last year, had been such that the workers were compelled to take on much additional work, many longer hours, at the same pay which they had been receiving theretofore, or the works would have had to close down. They rebelled against that; they struck. The conditions were investigated. It was claimed that the manufacturer, a wolf in sheep's clothing, was trying to grind his men, but it was discovered upon investigation that the budget of 1928 had left those workers in such a position that they would either have to accept added work, added hours, without any more pay, or go without a living at all. Therefore they went back to work and I congratulate the Minister of Labour upon that discovery.

I desire to congratulate the Minister of Finance upon a very recent conversion. About a year ago when the estimates were up in the house, I pleaded with him to have the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Elliott) permitted something more than the magnificent sum of $31,000 for widening and deepening the Burlington channel, a work which the Minister of Public Works agreed was absolutely necessary and the cost of which the engineers of his department had placed at $1,500,000. The Minister of Finance chided me severely for advancing the ridiculous proposition that more than $31,000 should be devoted to that work, but I see in the estimates which are brought down this year that there is to be allotted to that work one-third of the $1,500,000 which the engineers declared necessary. I congratulate the Minister of Finance upon his conversion and I give him my honest assurance that I propose to watch very carefully the coming of the other $1,000,000 and to congratulate him when it comes along.

Mr. BOURASSA: And then will the hon. member vote for the government?

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): No, because, unlike some hon. gentlemen, I preserve my principles whether I get anything or not. I congratulate, too, the government as a whole, although I did not agree with it in the least, because it succeeded in killing the proposition for the national highways. I congratulate the government on its success in that regard because, if that plan had ever gone through, it would have gone a long way towards revealing to all people, not only residents of this country but those who visit it from time to time, the true extent of the depletion that is going on in our forests and mines to the effect that United States workmen may be enriched and receive the wages that should go to the Canadian people.

Last, but by no means least, I venture to congratulate the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King), although he is not present at the moment. When I came to this house in 1926, on my first excursion into politics, I did not appreciate him. I had not the faintest conception of what the words "masterly inactivity" could ever mean. I had not the faintest conception of how a more homely phrase "safety first" could be put beside the words "masterly inactivity." But I know now. I have seen during the time that I have spent in Ottawa masterly inactivity brought to a pitch of perfection that I should never have believed possible. I have seen the right hon. gentleman with that grip upon office for which he has become so famous employ to the very, very best possible extent his policy of masterly inactivity which has lulled the Canadian people to sleep, which has made Canada the Rip-van-Winkle of the Rockies. The Prime Minister only a few days ago in this house sat opposite my hon. friend from Fort William (Mr. Manion), and when my hon. friend from Fort William made one of the most patriotic suggestions that this house has had the pleasure of listening to for many a day, and when in connection therewith he used the expression "red-blooded" the Prime Minister was only able to see amusement in it. Will the country care? Perhaps. Not long ago the right hon. the Prime Minister declared that he had discovered the necessity for a provincial conference in respect to the waterways question. Does anybody seriously believe for one moment that the Prime Minister sought in that conference anything but an evasion and a postponement of a decision on that question, a question that is pressing in this country at this hour? Do the people really care? May be. There are signs that there is somewhere an awakening actually beginning. There are signs that on the waterways problem, as on the power question, and in many other directions, the people at last are beginning to waken up to the fact that "do nothing" may be a good means of retaining office but it is very bad policy for the country.

We have had various opinions expressed in the course of this debate about the attitude which it would be proper and prudent for Canada to adopt if higher tariffs are enacted against us in the United States by the government of Mr. Hoover. But surely there can be no one found to say that the ideal behaviour for Canada, or the attitude for Canada to take would be to do nothing at all. And that has been the policy of this government under the Prime Minister. Mr. Speaker, if that is to continue to be the policy of this government, if the indifference of the people is to be counted on, relied upon, and exploited, then it cannot be long before the public will assert itself and will insist that others shall take the seats of those who now occupy the place of office in this land. Until then we have little to hope for, because the policy of "do nothing" has been so successful, from this government's point of view. But if the authorities in charge of the tariff proposals on the other side shall injuriously affect this country by the enactment of higher tariffs against us, we know of one party anyway that will insist that the only stand to be taken by this country shall be to say to our neighbours to the south, "We are most friendly to you, we want to be your friends now and always; we are willing to be conciliatory to every reasonable degree, but if our interests continue to be adversely affected then we will stand up for every one of our rights, positive, firm and unafraid. And, sir, if we cannot get that from the present incumbent of the Prime Minister's chair then it will be the duty of this country to assist us to go out and take it, in order that the interests of the country may be served, in order that its former high estate may be restored, and in order that those hopes that we have entertained for Canada—the hopes of our fathers and the hopes that have come down to us—shall once again stand a reasonable prospect of realization.

Mr. J. A. VERVILLE (Lotbinière) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, a number of speakers who have preceded me in this debate have taken a delight in praising the Divine Providence for the numerous favours with which it has overwhelmed the people of Canada under the present administration, especially during the last fiscal year. Some have even asserted—and it is my opinion—that we have a providential government, highly assisted by Providence above.

The hon. Minister of Finance, in introducing his budget on March the first last, apprised us that the finances of the country were in a healthy state, and that the period of surpluses is continuing in a most encouraging manner. This management of the public funds is of a nature, to my mind, to foster industry, trade, even agriculture, and to considerably increase in the minds of this people their confidence and trust in the future.

While heartily acknowledging the favours as stated in the budget speech, there are some for which, I think, we must thank both Providence and the government. I feel at liberty, sir, to make certain comments that in no way would I wish to be interpreted as reflecting on the present administration, but I deem it my duty to openly make them, trusting they may serve public interests and also those of the constituents that I have the honour of representing in this house.

The prosperity enjoyed by this country has been vaunted in every possible way. It is even stated that this prosperity is felt in every field of activity and throughout the Dominion. Like others I can see this prosperity, I acknowledge it and rejoice at it; nevertheless you will allow me to point out that the farmers, in certain parts of this country are not entirely wrong in complaining of the conditions prevalent at present, or rather are nearer the truth in complaining of their lot. By no means do I agree with the conclusions of the amendment, as set forth by the hon. acting leader of the opposition (Mr. Guthrie), when I express such views, because I think that this unfavourable situation of the farmers, in certain parts of the country, is due to certain causes or reasons, none of which can be imputed solely to the acts of the government. This unfavourable situation is brought about by numerous and various causes, some of which are traced to the farmers themselves—as it was so clearly pointed out on Thursday last by my hon. friend the member for Matane (Mr. Dionne)—others are traced to climatic or other conditions, and I am happy to acknowledge that the government is doing its utmost to help and encourage the farming class, yet I respectfully submit that it is in its power to do more. In certain sections of the country, our farmers have seen their work crowned with success. They received for their farm products top prices; however, I assert that, although this may be generally the case, there are nevertheless—and very unfortunately—exceptions and that in certain sections of the country such are not the conditions prevailing.

I trust that no one will begrudge me the few minutes that I shall take to glance over Quebec. I may say, sir, that the farmers of certain parts of my province situated on the south shore of the St. Lawrence, where the county of Lotbinière lies, have not been, this year, very fortunate as regards their crops and are feeling the pinch of rather hard times. They are forced to seek elsewhere their seed grain and fertilzers of which they are absolutely in need; they are obliged to purchase those articles at top prices and must further pay excessive rates for freight. They are not so fortunate as the hon. Minister of Finance is in balancing his budget by surpluses; but like the governments which have preceded the present administration, they are in the sad plight of acknowledging at the end of each year, deficit after deficit.

Again, in no way do I wish to place the responsibility on the government's shoulders for this exceptional situation nor in any way blame them, but seeing that the budget brought down in the house, this year, informs us that the finances of the country are more than ample, I wish to take advantage of it by requesting the government to help, if possible, the farmers who might find themselves in the exceptional situation that I have just brought to your notice, and for which I request government assistance. I would therefore ask the government to grant the farmers which are in a precarious situation, what is granted elsewhere for other industries and in other sections of the country: a special rate, a reduction in freight rates for the shipment of goods of which these farmers are absolutely in need to maintain their land in good farming condition.

There is another feature to which I would like to draw the attention of the house: the budget makes no mention of changes in the income tax and I think on this score the government is worthy of praise. Unfortunately I cannot say as much with reference to the methods used in enforcing the Income tax act, especially in connection with our rural population, our farmers, the small land owners and the labourers of our countryside. These people with very few exceptions cannot pay this tax, simply because their revenue is only sufficient to keep their families in a decent manner. Nevertheless they are sent letters warning them that they have neglected to send in their statements, and must file same immediately if they do not wish to be dragged before the courts. These letters have attached to them a form which perhaps is quite the correct thing for accounting purposes but is a Chinese puzzle to those who receive them. These people are most of the time unable to fill in such forms; they are just as intelligent as city people or others, but this form is so complicated that they are unable to fill it in unless they can afford paying for a secretary or an accountant. This does not only apply to my riding but also to other sections. I do not wish, sir, to leave you under the impression that no one, among our rural population, pays the Income tax; on the contrary; I am simply mentioning the fact that the forms as printed and sent to our people are too complicated. When parliament enacts a measure and puts it into force, why not use a simple method which our people can readily understand and willingly submit to? When such an act is surrounded with too much and difficult formalities, it is open to criticism by the ratepayers and they, by all possible means, try to avoid the law. Let us place at the disposal of our people a simple form which the ratepayers will be able to fill in, they will then respectfully submit to the measures we enact.

With reference to the sales tax, I must say that the means applied in the enforcement of the act are entirely disgraceful, and let me, Sir, cite an example: here is small rural manufacturer who is sued for having neglected to make a statement of his sales during two months, and simply for the reason that during that period he had not worked his factory. Previous to that time, he had always sent in his statements monthly. During those two months he was not producing nor making sales, he therefore made no report; the man is sued without being given any preliminary notice and forced to pay considerable costs. I respectfully submit, sir, that if a business firm, bank or any commercial institution adopted this method of suing its clients out of pure whim, without preliminary notice, I respectfully submit, sir, that these clients would be forced to close their doors, and this, under very short notice. Why should what exists in the business world not occur also in the intercourse between the government and the people? Why should the former not adopt the same methods?

These few comments are suggested to me by my sense of duty, not with a view to criticism but simply with the hope that the government, while endeavouring as in the past to improve the lot of our people, may give consideration to these few suggestions in order to alter somewhat the forms in use and thereby help our people as it is done in other business occupations.

I do not wish to close my remarks, sir, without performing a duty dear to me, that is to thank the hon. Minister of Railways (Mr. Dunning) for having been kind enough to extend some consideration to the province of Quebec in the distribution of railway lines. The county of Lotbinière which I represent should have had 75 years ago a railway crossing it, which is so very necessary for the population of that county as a whole, but especially for six or seven parishes on the south shore which are pressingly in need of such a railway.

Mr. RINFRET: Hear, hear!

Mr. VERVILLE (Translation): I hear the hon. Secretary of State (Mr. Rinfret) saying: "Hear, hear!" His uncle, Dr. Rinfret, of Sainte-Croix, promised this railway to his constituents for 20 years, when he was member for the riding of Lotbinière, relying, of course, on the promises made to him by the cabinet ministers of that day, promises like those which were made to me for some time past in connection with further extending the railway line.

I wish to thank the hon. Minister of Railways (Mr. Dunning) for the purchase he made, only I do not wish to be too enthusiastic in my thanks and praises fearing that, with the recollection of a promise 60 to 75 years old, I might be obliged to make another which might last a further 25 to 30 years.

A bill was introduced in the house on March the 1st last, and received its first and second reading. This measure enables the present government to purchase the Quebec, Montreal and Southern Railway. The hon. minister in introducing this bill, gave us the cost per mile for the construction which remains to be done. He informed us that there remained 20 miles to be built at an estimated cost of $40,000 per mile. Must we not infer from the figures he gave the house that he intends to do everything possible, as I surmise, to push this railway line through and locate the terminus at Quebec instead of Fortiervielle, in the county of Lotbinière. He further added that this railway would serve to relieve the congestion of the Levis division, the third in importance on the Canadian National Railways which also contributed to the extent of $150,000 per year to the assets of the state railways. I assert that our national railway system will realize quite a profit, providing that they complete this railway just acquired—for its purchase is now a foregone conclusion—I was present in the railway committee room this morning, and the committee unanimously decided to adopt this bill, and I feel confident the government will sanction it.

I am here to look after the interests of my constituents, and I wish to draw the attention of the house to the fact that at present we are a a disadvanage as regards to railways. When I was praising, a few moments ago, the hon. Minister of Railways (Mr. Dunning), because he remembered the province of Quebec in the distribution of railway lines this year, I had also intended to place before the house certain statistics with which you are as familiar as I am; these statistics are very accurate, establishing the fact that we have not been unreasonable in our requests, moreover that we were absolutely within our rights in obtaining what was granted to us. The distribution of railways at present, in proportion to the population, is as follows: in the west the ratio is 1 mile to every 125 people; in Ontario 1 mile to every 250 people, and in Quebec, 1 mile to every 500 people. Our request was therefore not unreasonable, and if I have complimented the Minister of Railways (Mr. Dunning), he deserved it, but he will prove himself more worthy of praise if he could double the railway lines of the province of Quebec, so as to establish the same proportion between the western lines and those of the east.

I trust, sir, that the period of promises has come to an end, and that we are to live in the realm of realities so far as the railways we have been discussing are concerned. This line crosses the most beautiful part of my county, the oldest parishes on the south shore, pioneer parishes, not only of the county of Lotbinière, but along the whole of the south shore, for it is from these places that sprung the population which settled all the south shore parishes; they are the most beautiful and prosperous in that part of the county and it is my opinion that the government by extending the railway just purchased will not only be helping a large population which is absolutely in need of this public service, but will considerably increase our national inheritance.

Before resuming my seat, sir, I wish to state that I am satisfied with the budget brought down, first, because it gives us surpluses; secondly, because it leads us to hope that the lot of our rural population will greatly improve inasmuch as the public funds will permit. I shall therefore cast my vote in favour of the budget and against the amendment moved by the hon. acting leader of the opposition (Mr. Guthrie).

Mr. THOMAS CANTLEY (Pictou): Mr. Speaker, I presume that the debate on the budget having proceeded so far it is not now necessary to pay any further compliments to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb), particularly as he is not in his place at the moment.

I have no present intention of discussing the fiscal questions involved in income, expenditure, surplus or debt reduction matters referred to in the budget speech of the Finance minister, but prefer to review the proposals of the minister for the most part as they effect my constituents; or from the point of view of those of us here who represent the eastern counties of Nova Scotia, interested as we necessarily are in the coal and steel industries.

The minister stated that, as to the tariff board, the impartiality of the board had created a favourable impression among the Canadian people. May I say to the minister that the impression among the people of my native province is one of distrust as to the purpose for which it was created and contempt as to its accomplishments during the nearly three years of its apparently useless existence.

Another gem I quote from the budget speech:

> In accordance with the traditional policy of assisting the development of our basic industries, the rates of duty on certain machinery and equipment used in the mining industry have been reduced.

> There have been various references before the Advisory Board on Tariff and Taxation of interest to those engaged in the fishing industry and it is proposed to assist that industry further by placing certain articles on the free list.

Now let us see what the traditional policy of assistance to basic industry à la Hon. James Robb really means. In reply to these questions asked by me:

> Coal Mining Machinery—Imports
> 1. What was the value of all coal mining machinery other than stone dusting equipment imported into Nova Scotia during the calendar year 1927?
> 2. What was the value of such machinery which was duty free?
> 3. What was the value on which duty was paid?
> 4. What was the total duty paid on such machinery?
> 5. What was the value of all stone dusting equipment imported into Nova Scotia during the same period?
> 6. What was the total duty paid on said stone dusting machinery?

> 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6. Imports of "Percussion coal cutters, coal augers and rotary coal drills and complete parts," entered for consumption in the province of Nova Scotia in the calender year 1927, amounted in value to $1,170, and the import duty collected was $234.
> This is the only coal mining machinery and equipment which is separately classified for statistics, and the department has no record of the separate value of other machinery of this class imported or of the duties collected on such imports.

Therefore, it should seem that the traditional policy of my hon. friend the Minister of Finance, so eloquently referred to will, perchance, assist the basic industry of coal mining by $234 yearly. Now I challenge the Minister of Finance to show from the records of the Department of National Revenue that the proposal I have read gives any greater relief to the coal mining industry than the figures I have just quoted as supplied by the minister of that department.

But, Mr. Speaker, the fishing industry was also to partake of the benefits of the traditional policy of assisting basic industries. The following articles are in part placed on the free list:

632c. Specially designed needles of a class or kind not made in Canada, for use only in repairing fish nets, when such nets are used exclusively for the fisheries, but not for use in repairing nets for sportsmen—Free, Free. Free.

682b. Metal swivels, of a class or kind not made in Canada, when used exclusively for the fisheries, not to include swivels for sportsmen's use—Free, Free, Free.

689b. Equipment, of a class or kind not made in Canada, and integral parts thereof, for distributing stone dust in mines—Free, 5 p.c., 10 p..c.

Stone dusting machinery, now used extensively in all our gassy coal mines to prevent coal dust explosions, which are extremely violent and disastrous in their effect, is still dutiable at 10 per cent in the general list.

Even among the friends of the government in their stronghold of the province of Quebec, no enthusiasm is shown for this budget. Let me instance that Liberal journal, the Montreal Daily Herald, where on page four, of its issue of March 4, the Monday following the budget speech of the Finance minister, I read:

A Colourless Budget

No one looking through the budget presented by the Hon. James A. Robb will doubt that Premier King was perfectly sincere when he told parliament a few days ago that the government does not contemplate holding a general election this year. It is true that when Mr. King made that statement he added that the government would of course reserve the right to call an election should unforeseen events make such a course advisable, but the possibility of such events occurring must be very remote in the view of the government, or they would never have brought down what is the most colourless and most disappointing budget which the present administration has yet submitted to the house.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I turn to the Nova Scotia press and quote from the Halifax Herald:

Mr. Robb yesterday opened the most colourless —and least satisfying—budget of his career as Minister of Finance. His speech told of gratifying Canadian progress and bounding federal revenues, but the public at large will find in the tariff and taxation proposals of the present session little to promote more than passing attention.

So far as Nova Scotia is concerned, it is what the budget does not contain that will provoke comment and dissatisfaction. Proposals to aid the coal-steel industry, long delayed, have not materialized, at least, not in this budget.

Tariff changes are anything but "sensational".

There is nothing to offset the effect of the drawback item which remits the duty on bituminous coal imported for use in Canadian coking plants—an item which almost completely nullifies the provisions of The Domestic Fuel Act based upon a major recommendation of the Duncan commission. There is no inducement to use domestic coal in Canada coking plants with that drawback item in the tariff schedules. Either the item should have been removed or other provision made to counteract its serious and detrimental effect upon our own coal industry.

Similarly, there is nothing to offset the drawback of duty on bituminous coal imported for metallurgical purposes. Here again a direct recommendation of the Duncan commission is ignored.

The reduction of duty on certain types of mining machinery and equipment, welcome as they will be in proportion to their extent and value, form no adequate substitute for the direct recommendations of the Duncan commission which are entirely ignored. These reductions will help the coal industry a little, perhaps, and the steel industry not at all.

It may be that something will be done for the coal-steel industry before the house prorogues. It is earnestly to be hoped so. But the absence from the budget announcements of any mention of real aid is disappointing to the Nova Scotia people.

Mr. Speaker, the fact is that the latest Robb budget has really no tariff changes worth mentioning; knitting needles, brass swivels for fishing lines, eye dusting machinery, cocoanuts —goods never made or produced in Canada, of little importance in two of the major industries of Nova Scotia—fishing and mining; a gesture, only a gesture, small, cheap and of value comparative with its cost to the giver.

Next year the minister will, peradventure, make a gesture of assistance to our two basic industries—a matter which overshadows all other questions in eastern Nova Scotia. We have now waited two years, and another soon closes, without any suggestion of that relief recommended by the commission appointed by this government and which the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) two years ago promised would be implemented practically in its entirety; which definite promise has not been honoured by the Prime Minister or by his Minister of Finance.

We apprehend that, next session, in anticipation of an appeal to the country, some election bait will be thrown to us by way of long delayed coal and steel tariff readjustment. It will then be a case of "needs must when the Diel drives" and fully understood as such.

That other ambassador of empire—the honourable the Minister of Mines (Mr. Stewart), built on generous and substantial dead weight lines, while on pleasure bent last summer was reported by the British press as having been right royally entertained in the great metropolis, when, after dining—let us assume wisely and well—he took occasion to advise the British coal masters to look alive and arrange to ship more of their coal to Montreal, where a great market awaited them, or words to that effect. Such, Mr. Speaker, are some of the efforts of a minister of this government whose duty is to aid, foster, protect and extend the Canadian mining industry. Mention peat, and the minister is alert—ready to spend forty, fifty, sixty thousand dollars in any year at that sink hole, the Alfred peat bog, into which we have already thrown $335,408.92, with no practical result worth mentioning or in prospect.

Canadians had recently the experience of seeing in action our lately created ambassador to Washington. What, Mr. Speaker, was his first diplomatic problem?—what the first great Canadian or international question to be discussed with our adequately protected friends of the United States? Simply this, Mr. Speaker, an abject appeal for charity; an appeal to the United States to allow some thousands of our Canadian citizens to enter that country and obtain from their manufacturers the employment denied them in their own country. Surely every Canadian worthy of the name was ashamed and felt humiliated by the thought that our country's accredited representative should approach our rich and powerful neighbour with so contemptible a request, and hang around the door of the Washington minister for a week or more reiterating his request that our people should be given an opportunity to work in American factories to produce, in many cases, goods which were afterwards exported to this country. Surely, Mr. Speaker, a national policy is needed, and a government that will provide it.

Now, we have the product of Soviet Russia pouring into the cities of Quebec and Ontario —coal mined under Soviet conditions of virtual serfdom in the Donetz basin, and sent here to buy food for their rationed miners who must work for a dog biscuit bread ticket. This coal, on which the railway freight from the mines to the sea is absorbed by the so-called government of Russia, freighted six thousand odd miles through the sea of Azof, the Black sea, the Dardanelles, the whole length of the Mediterranean across the Atlantic to Portland, and thence nearly 250 miles to Montreal, is then admitted duty free into Canada in competition with the labour of our Nova Scotians and Alberta miners. I would point out that the first cargo of this coal that came across the Atlantic was destined for and went to the port of New York. It was not allowed to be landed because the government imposed a duty of $3.42 per ton on it. The ship was turned around and sent up the St. Lawrence to Montreal, and there the cargo was discharged, and no duty paid.

A few days ago I asked the Minister of Mines a question regarding the quantity of Russian coal that had come in. He gave me some figures which I do not think are reliable, because my information is that the tonnage particularly the quantity which entered the port of Montreal is more indeed nearly 50 per cent greater than the figures he gave me. Be that as it may, the fact is that a large quantity of that coal has come into the country. The other day I saw a letter to a coal dealer from one of the prominent coal importers in Montreal, in which he pointed out that he was handling this coal and that he could assure the dealer that he would be in a position to supply it regularly throughout the entire coming season. Is this government to sit still; are all the resources of this government of no avail to deal with this matter? Canada is said to possess one-tenth of the total coal resources of the world, yet with many of our coal miners idle to-day our beneficent government allows coal to come into Canada from a Soviet-controlled country, transported over a distance of about 6,000 miles to enter into competition with Canadian coal, in direct disregard of all business economic principles. I appealed to the Minister of Mines, the Minister of Trade and Commerce and the Minister of Customs, and was told that the government is powerless. Each appeared quite unconcerned; they could not or they would not act.

Mr. BENNETT: Did you try the Minister of Agriculture?

Mr. CANTLEY: No, I did not. I exempt the Minister of Finance from criticism; for he did exhibit some interest, some concern, and I think he will make some inquiry into the facts. As for the others, they are hopeless.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I point out that no tariff consideration is given the Canadian coal and steel industry. The excuse of the Minister of Finance for ignoring applications from other Canadian producers for adequate protection is the thread-bare assertion that they are still being considered by the tariff advisory board. So far as the coal and steel industry is concerned, he is so contemptuous of it and of those interested in it that he does not even trouble to make this paltry excuse. One remark he does make, doubtless intended for the hon. member for Rosetown (Mr. Evans) or those few who hold similar opinions; he says that the policy of this administration is not a high tariff policy but a low tariff policy; its policy is to encourage production at home and the marketing of our excessive production abroad. We see how a low tariff policy, with respect to iron and steel, not only encourages but has actually ensured the marketing in Canada last year of about $300,000,000 worth of American iron and steel, at least 75 per cent of which could and should be made in this country with enormous economic advantage to the steel and coal industry, the transport workers and other associated spheres of activity. During recent years the government, when giving consideration to the tariff, have paid no attention whatever to the interests of the Canadian coal miners or steel workers. The tariff tinkering of the past few years has clearly demonstrated that the tariff advisory board is an effective obstacle to any upward readjustment of the tariff, while the minister holds himself quite free to decree, and does decree, a downward revision of the tariff on his own initiative or perhaps at the solicitation of party friends. We had an instance of this last year in the boast of the Minister of Trade and Commerce when he boasted that he had induced the minister to reduce the duty on coal for the sake of some of his friends, who, he admitted, had not asked for the favour.

In addition to that, Mr. Speaker, there is no sign from this government of any intention to comply with the recommendations of the Duncan report with respect to the coal and steel industry. The budget recently presented by the Minister of Finance does not even make a pretence to protect this industry and, so far as tariff relief is concerned, those interested either by way of occupation or investment may take what comfort they can from the knowledge that the present ministry have definitely turned a deaf ear to all their representations and requests for safeguarding protection or relief. The subvention of 50 cents per ton on native coal used in the Nova Scotia steel industry is ignored by the government and is still denied us, in spite of the findings made nearly three years ago by a royal commisison created by this government and notwithstanding the fact that three sessions of this parliament have been held since the commission completed its work on maritime claims. Not only have these remedial recommendations made by the royal commission been entirely ignored, but other recommendations are also treated as scraps of paper.

Just here I would like to refer for a moment to the coke oven bonus introduced by the Minister of Mines in April, 1927. I pointed out then to the minister that his proposal would be of absolutely no value to the Nova Scotia industry, and now I want to point out to the Minister of Finance and to the house that although that policy has been in force for two years not one dollar has been expended or claimed by way of bonus on Canadian coal used in the coke ovens of this country. The only report made so far is one as to about 15,000 tons used in Halifax in a small plant which was built to replace an antiquated city gas installation built some fifty years ago. Some of the friends of the government had under consideration, at the time this bill was passed, the location of coke ovens for the production of coke and gas in Montreal. They knew the provisions of the proposed act before the act was voted on, and before the plant location was decided on, and I want to point out to the house that they deliberately built their ovens alongside the Lachine canal. Why did they do that? They decided upon that location because they had no intention of using a ton of Nova Scotia or other Canadian coal in that enterprise. If they had so intended they would have located their plant down at the lower end of Montreal harbour, where Nova Scotia coal could have been unloaded direct into their storage bins from the colliers. They decided upon their present location in order that American coal could be transferred direct from the holds of the steamers to the bins of the plant, and that is being done, therefore if they now for any reason should wish to take advantage of the bonus as to Canadian coal they would have to tranship the coal into lighters or by rail at a cost of from 50 cents to one dollar per ton, in order to get it to their plant, this due to its location. They knew what the proposals of the government would be and they simply ignored them. I do not know whether or not the government really knew how little value these proposals had; my impression is they did not care; they constituted a gesture. At all events the Minister of Mines gave us a gold brick, to use ordinary parlance.

I am sorry the Prime Minister is not in his seat; I should now like to put a few plain questions to him. I ask the Prime Minister if he is determined to continue to dishonour the findings of his own royal commission, the recommendations of which he said on August 30, 1926, speaking at Windsor, Nova Scotia, would have great weight in parliament. What did he mean when, from his place in this house on March 18, 1927, he stated:

> The government hopes that by accepting as we have the recommendations of the royal commission on maritime claims virtually in their entirety, parliament and the country will recognize in the attitude of the government a wish to remove this great question as largely as possible from the arena of sectional discord and party strife.

Does the government's inaction and failure to implement an important portion of the Prime Minister's promise mean that his cabinet is divided on the question and that he is delaying and denying justice to Nova Scotia rather than grapple man-fashion with the reactionaries within the cabinet? Whatever the causes may be, the failure of the government to carry out the promise of the Prime Minister is producing an effect on the steel and coal situation in my native province and developing a state of feeling among those dependent on these two basic industries which bodes no good to the government and has checked and arrested plans of reorganization, extension and betterment of the industry, and we in this house, representing the counties primarily interested in and, to a very great extent, absolutely dependent upon the prosperity of these industries, demand a declaration of the policy of the government in regard to the carrying out of the recommendations of the Duncan commission in the matter of these two outstanding major industries of Nova Scotia.

Mr. Speaker, I take it that each member of this house is the representative of the electors of his constituency and, as such, should by right support in the debates of the house those principles and ideas clearly expressed by the majority of those who sent them here. In my case, I have no shadow of doubt as to the views and wishes of my constituents on the matter of the implementing of those recommendations of the Duncan commission not yet acted on by the government. May I remind the house that less than a year ago, or to be exact on May 22nd last the Finance minister, in a moment of irritation characterized the expressions of dissatisfaction of the hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. MacDonald) and myself, as "whining." Again, during the debate of some few days ago, namely, on February 26 last, the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Ralston), twice in one speech referred to what he called "continual harping" on the questions raised by the Duncan report and later in the same speech referred to what he called the "doleful wails" which come from time to time from those on this side of the house representing the province of Nova Scotia. These wholly uncalled for and most offensive gibes we hurl back at the authors of them, in entire justification of our attitude and discontent as to the measure in which the Duncan commission's recommendations have been implemented. I want to tell my worthy friends that so long as the rights of the province of Nova Scotia as I see them remain unredressed and so long as I can obtain sufficient oatmeal to supply my internal combustion engine, I will offer protests in this house on every fitting opportunity.

I now draw the attention of the house and the Prime Minister to some features of the Nova Scotia case and point out that a certified copy of a report of the committee of the Privy Council on April 17, 1926, to be found on page 6 of the report of the royal commission on maritime claims, reads as follows:

> The Prime Minister is also advised that on the 12th day of March, 1926, the Premier of the province of Nova Scotia presented to the legislative assembly a resolution to the effect that his government is engaged in preparing a memorandum setting forth in detail the claims of that province with the object in view of seeking such adequate redress as will insure a return of contentment and prosperity to the people of that province.

The report continues:

> The Prime Minister observes that it is most undesirable that any section of the people of the maritime provinces should entertain the opinion that their interests are being knowingly prejudiced, and that the public interest requires that every occasion for the existence of a feeling of grievance should, if possible, be removed.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in view of the foregoing declaration of the Prime Minister that the public interests require that every occasion for the existence of a feeling of grievance should, if possible, be removed, it surely was incumbent upon the Prime Minister to make every possible effort to that end notwithstanding which the undeniable fact is that no action has been taken by his government on two of the most important recommendations of the Duncan commission—recommendations accepted by him. I refer to their evasion of and deliberate refusal to implement the recommendation of the commission as to the two basic products of the maritime provinces which, he admitted, lie at the very foundation of the economic prosperity of those provinces. The Prime Minister, speaking in this chamber on the subject of the Duncan commission report on maritime claims on March 18th, 1927, said:

With reference to the natural basic products of the maritime provinces, namely, agriculture, fish, timber and coal, the government shares the view expressed by the commission that aspects that arise from the character of these natural basic products of the maritime provinces "lie at the very foundation of the economic prosperity of these provinces," and that, as respects these subject matters, "no greater dis-service could be done than to evade deliberate decision."

With regard to the question of coking plants, the commission's recommendation that immediate practical steps be taken, has been accepted and a bill will be introduced at the present session of parliament respecting the establishment of coking plants at convenient centres in Canada under government assistance, along lines approved by the special committee of the House of Commons, which dealt with the fuel question last year.

I submit that nothing more farcical has ever been put upon the statute books of Canada than the legislation arising out of that promise of the Prime Minister. Hundreds of coke ovens have been built and not one dollar has been paid by way of bounty, nor will it be. The Prime Minister continues:

The recommendation of the commission that the tariff advisory board should be asked to give immediate consideration to the customs tariff in its relation to coal, anthracite and coke, has been met. The matter is now before the tariff advisory board.

How long will it be there?

An hon. MEMBER: Twenty-five years.

Mr. CANTLEY: If the board lasts so long, but I submit such will not be the case, due to an impending change of government. The Prime Minister continued:

The question of protection on the primary products of iron and steel was, as stated in the report, under the consideration of the tariff advisory board at the time of the commission's investigation. Owing to the existing uncertainty of conditions surrounding the iron and steel industry in the maritimes, the government does not feel in a position to make at present any pronouncement with respect to the commission's recommendation of a renewal of the system of granting bounties with respect to steel when Canadian coal is used in its manufacture.

I submit that if the industry was in such bad shape surely that was the time when the government should have exhibited some interest and come to its assistance. In conclusion he says:

In concluding this statement, may I say that the government hopes that, by accepting as we have, the recommendations of the royal commission on maritime claims, virtually in their entirety, parliament and the country will recognize in the attitude of the government a wish to remove this great question as largely as possible from the arena of sectional discord and party strife, and a desire to give to our Dominion in the sixtieth anniversary of its founding, a renewed expression of the spirit which animated the fathers of confederation in their efforts to construct out of British North America a federal union under a system of government devised "to protect the diversified interests of the several provinces and secure efficiency, harmony and permanency in the working of the union."

God save the king!

Mr. Speaker, two full years have passed since the Prime Minister made these important declarations as to the policy of the government as regards matters which, he then rightly stated, lie at the very foundation of the economic prosperity of the maritime provinces. Two years have passed—two years of, for the most part, trial and stress for coal and steel—the two basic industries of Nova Scotia—as to which the Prime Minister stated no greater dis-service could be rendered than to evade deliberate decision thereon.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I charge the Prime Minister, his Minister of Finance, and the government with evasion of—to use his own words—"deliberate decision" on the vital matter of protection of these two natural, basic products of my native province.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: Might I remind the hon. member that his time has expired.

Mr. HERMAS DESLAURIERS (St. Mary) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, my first duty is to congratulate the government for the admirable skill shown in the administration of the affairs of this country. Our friends in the opposition seem to have agreed among themselves to deny all credit to the government for the good this administration has accomplished, attributing everything to Providence. We readily admit as they do, that nothing on earth happens without Providence's kind intervention; however, the government's followers and the people of Canada as a whole must rejoice in the fact that the administration of the Right Hon. Mackenzie King has been found worthy of the kindness and generosity of Divine Providence, as this never happens when our opponents are in power. Hence, we are led to believe that the people of Canada will for a long time trust this administration which is so favoured by heaven, and that they will for as long a time withhold from the fateful hand the management of our affairs.

In my brief remarks, sir, I wish to particularly draw the attention of the government to the rights and the future of a class of people that are entitled to all their consideration; I mean the labouring people including every class. Within the last few years, we read in both the Canadian and European press, article after article expressing the views of certain people on the so called necessary immigration to Canada; we have had the visit of distinguished Lords who came to submit immigration schemes, and on August 30, 1928, in these parliament buildings, the British Parliamentary Association held a meeting where the delegates of all the sister nations were present in numbers. The United Kingdom, Australia, New Zealand, South Africa, the Irish Free State, Newfoundland, India, the Island of Malta, Southern Rhodesia and Canada took part in the proceedings. The agenda was as follows:

Trade and economic development particularly from the viewpoint of markets within the empire, and the immigration problem.

As a result of this conference, we may conclude that the majority of these states regretted that they were unable to admit any more immigrants owing to the large number of unemployed in their respective countries. All agreed with the fact that Canada had an immense space to fill up and that Great Britain had a choice in material to send over.

Expressing my own personal views, I put to myself the following question: have we in Canada, at present, and for years to come, a real problem of immigration to solve or inaugurate with whomsoever it may be? According to certain newspapers' reports, 1,500,000 British people without work and unsuited to farming would immediately be dumped into this country, this would simply increase the number of those at present out of work, create a problem of unemployment, cause misery and reduce the wages of our excellent workers or replace them as the thing too often happens. Indeed, we sympathize with those unfortunate unemployed of the motherland, but not to the extent of shouldering their burden. We may thank Lord Lovat for the great interest he takes in the development of Canada, but we would prefer that he exerted his energy in solving the problem of his country, and this on his own soil. We consider it too dangerous to allow waves of immigration like those of 1815 when Great Britain which had thousands and thousands of unemployed soldiers threatening to stir trouble, sent us thousands of them to found a military colony in the neighbourhood of Perth, soldiers with no other training than that of camp life or of factory work in Glasgow's spinning mills. Again, in 1823, to relieve Ireland of its unrest, poverty and misery, the Ramsay district, near Perth was invaded by hundreds of these poor Irishmen; and again in 1825, the district of Peterborough, on the river Trent, admitted thousands of unemployed that the mother country sent. Furthermore, weighing the words, I think, of Mr. Chamberlain, addressed to the British Labour party with reference to the approaching general elections, in England, I state that at present Canada does not desire immigrants, with a revolutionary and subversive turn of mind to disturb the peace of this country. Shall we be so unfortunate as to have an immigration problem because our country, of all those that took part in the last war, is recovering more rapidly and marvellously from the disastrous effects of that war? Or will it be because, besides meeting our current expenditure, we are yearly redeeming our debt by 50 to 60 million dollars? Does danger threaten because we are the foremost nation of the world in the production of nickle, asbestos, paper, waterpowers and agricultural cooperation? . Or because Canada stands foremost as a producer of gold, silver, copper and all metals even coal, or again because statistics place us in the forerank in regard to construction, automobile industry and tourist trade?

Is it a calamity for our people to be assessed by banks at $225 per capita and that our dollar by its purchasing power is worth more than the par value of all countries in the world? Were we wrong in ranking ourselves the second nation in exports, per capita; are we in danger because out of a total of 15,000,000 h.-p. we develop at present 5,000,000 h.-p., and because prosperity is at its peak in all fields of activity: insurance, banking and industry especially the wheat industry which has given Canada the surname of granary of the Empire?

What in the world is there to induce us to create here a problem of subsidized immigration? I cannot see why we should solve the problems of others at our expense and at the risk of the worst consequences. The problem we have to deal with in Canada is one of moderate and careful settlement, that of stemming the emigration of our people in order to keep up farming activities in those parts already cleared, and then opening new districts giving preference to the native sons of Canada, or later to an immigration of farmers coming from a country where the climate is similar to ours and where the people are accustomed to economic and strenuous farming life.

I shall not refer to the vastness of our country or of our national resources whose development is in its infancy, I shall even acknowledge that agriculture, trade and industry can absorb a certain number of chosen immigrants. However, if the reports of the Labour Gazette on unemployment are consulted, the government will not allow anyone to immigrate here unless they are assured that these immigrants will not be a charge to the state or that they will not deprive our people of their right to existence by replacing them or reducing the salaries of our workers. In the course of last summer, while on a trip to the west, I was somewhat astonished to read in local newspapers that a congress was being held in Winnipeg with the object of fixing the number of harvesters that the various western provinces could absorb during the crop season, in view of the scheme planned to import miners from Europe.

With the knowledge that modern machinery, to-day, forcibly creates unemployment, it seems to me that we should be able to pick up here all the hand labour which we need, on condition that the workers be reasonably remunerated, humanely treated and that the rates of transportation do not deprive them of most of their savings; unfortunately these conditions seem to be entirely lacking. If we are allowed to draw a conclusion from the importation of 8,500 miners who came to us during the harvest season to work on the land, it cannot be very flattering to us since a very small number settled here and the remainder returned home more or less satisfied, finding no attraction here—another proof that we cannot make a farmer out of everybody.

An important fact not to be lost sight of, is that last year 5,000,000 bushels of wheat remained in the elevators, having found no favourable market, and owing to this fact, the price of wheat was considerably depressed. When I find that wheat growers' associations want to prevent the presidents of railways, Mr. Beatty and Sir Henry Thornton, from publishing bulletins on crop outlooks, pleading that truth hurts their interests, I think I have a right to conclude that although our western plains are able to absorb many more farmers, we should regulate their development, bearing in mind the markets actually at our disposal and capable of absorbing our production. And what is true for agriculture is also true for all industries.

Immigration must not be a question of sympathy but one of business. What is the use of transferring hardships from one locality to another or else increase it? Each country should have sufficient patriotism and self sacrifice to solve their own problem of unemployment and not seek to add exile to their unhappiness. If we wish to attract farm settlers to this country we must revert to the liberal policy in force between 1896 and 1910, under the direction of the Hon. Clifford Sifton, when the west made extraordinary strides. It is an error to set aside the continental immigration or to neglect, in a continental country like ours, people that are trained to farm life, thrifty, hardy and steady, living in a climate similar to that of Canada.

Is it not a fact that years ago no Canadian settler wanted that swampy land to the east of Winnipeg and back of the Rivière Rouge, yet, to-day, it is the most fertile land of Manitoba, it was drained by a settlement of Galicians hailing from the Carpathian mountains, without any government assistance, they but asked the privilege of working in peace? To-day they are good British Canadian citizens, happy, contented and respected.

Was it not so for the western part of lake Winnipegosis where continental people, without any aid, made a success of that district? Such was also the case with a settlement of Hungarians who, with no assistance, took up land back of lake Manitoba, to the east of Neepawa. and made a success of life. Furthermore, we find continental immigrants settling the arid lands along the Rosthern railway, from Regina to Prince Rupert, digging wells, irrigating the land and making of this district one of the most productive in the west.

Mr. SPEAKER: Private bills having been disposed of, the house will revert to consideration of the motion of the Minister of Finance, that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to resolve itself into committee of ways and means, and the proposed amendment thereto of Mr. Guthrie.

Mr. GEARY: Will not Your Honour go into public bills and orders?

Mr. SPEAKER: I am afraid not. In the case of a special order which takes precedence over public business, Bourinot says:

> The hour for private bills is not interfered with when precedence is given to a particular order, but sometimes they are not called in order to meet the general convenience of the house, and its desire to conclude a debate. In such cases, this is a matter of arrangement with the members in charge of private bills.

It appears therefore that while an exception is made in respect to private bills, the special order takes precedence over public bills and orders. In this instance, the special order for consideration of the motion of the Minister of Finance does not exclude private bills.

Mr. DESLAURIERS (Translation): Mr. Speaker, when the house rose at six o'clock, I had begun to enumerate a number of localities in the western provinces where the labour of the continental immigrants had accomplished marvels and to whom, perhaps, we owe to a great extent the prosperity of the west. Are not the prosperous districts located to the west of Swift Current the fruit of the labours of the Mennonites? Yet, in days gone by this territory was known as the "American desert."

To whom belongs the credit of having transformed in prosperous districts the land situated to the west of Dauphin, after this land had been refused by everybody? To the Galicians again, and this without any assistance.

Sir Clifford Sifton placed no faith in the immigrant who required assistance. All those brought over here by him are to-day among the most prosperous, the most contented and they make excellent citizens; these people immigrated to this country because they were tired of the continuous European wars, the vexing taxation and the ruinous legislation they had to put up with; they came to Canada to enjoy freedom and peace and they were not disappointed. They show themselves equally worthy in industrial life; their honesty rapidly promotes them to the management of affairs; their honesty, I say, is proverbial, they have no debts, their obligations are duly met; even the rare instances of government loans for digging wells and for irrigation have been faithfully met to the very last cent, a thing quite exceptional, it seems, when the government is the creditor.

We have no immigration problem in Canada, our financial situation does not require it and the markets at our disposal are ample for the rapid development of our country. It would be folly to risk creating here the problem of unemployment such as it exists in Europe, simply for the satisfaction of relieving others of their troubles. The cooperation of the various members of the Empire seeking to spread prosperity, is certainly an excellent thing, but not to the extent of burdening ourselves with the economic difficulties of others, created by the designs of their financiers; the solution of our own difficulties should suffice.

Notwithstanding all these considerations, I admit that we could allow certain classes of immigrants to come and settle on our vacant lands; however, on the other hand I strongly side with the views of Sir Clifford Sifton who had very little faith in the assisted immigrant, preferring greatly the individual coming from the farm and going to the farm without assistance, fortified by his pluck and determination to work and seconded by both his knowledge and practice of rural thrift, essential conditions to success, as the Abbé Bilodeau points out in his treatise on the emigration of our own people.

I have no faith in the system in which the British immigrant receives $45 for himself, $18.25 for his wife and his children under 17 years old, and $15 for every girl or woman coming to this country as a domestic. Endeavouring to place on the land people who have not thrifty habits, is fruitless; the whole federal treasury would be necessary to cater to their wants and then it would all end in failure. It is a serious problem to bring over to this country immigrants whose sole aim is to obtain credit here and there and on the slightest pretext, to be in everybody's debt and repay nobody; to insist on rural and bank loans, state insurance, tax exemption and railway stations at their door. I state that such immigration should not be encouraged, because those people will never be happy and always be very indifferent Canadians. It is not good policy to bring over in large numbers the unemployed of other countries, British or not, at the risk of seeing the salaries of our workers decrease to the extent of their not being able to meet the demands of the cost of living; no more than it is good policy to seek overproduction without having, first, the markets to dispose of such products.

The only problem that should need our attention is that of the emigration of our people and the settlement of our land by the native sons of Canada. In order to solve this difficult ploblem, the agricultural education of our people should be the main plank of our program; we should train our citizens to cooperate among themselves so as to develop their farms; the superiority of farm life compared with that of industry should be taught in schools, rural taxation reduced to its simplest form, every farmer's son not needed on the farm should at all times benefit by special transportation rates, in order that travelling expenses do not absorb the greatest part of his savings; a propaganda should be organized against this tendency for luxuries and easy life which is the first and perhaps the only reason for the emigration of our people; we must convince our people that this leads to poverty and the source of all evils. In a word, we must make the farmer happy and confident.

While on the subject, I think I should draw the attention of the government, and particularly the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell) to the methods used in establishing restricted areas throughout the provinces. All that has been done up to date is of a nature to discourage, ruin the farmer and force him to desert his farm. According to veterinary experts such as Mr. Hilton, the tuberculin test on cattle is not conclusive. That is why we should not follow the same course as in the past spreading error and destruction in the farmer's home, in a too positive and sometimes too arbitrary way. It is a crying injustice towards the farmer to have him winter his cattle, then come to him in June and condemn them with more or less a reason, or to keep them in quarantine part of the summer, having previously slaughtered a number of them, thus depriving the farmer of revenue during summer, when he is already poor, or to further oblige him to purchase more cattle coming out of winter quarters when prices are up, furthermore adding to all this considerable expenses for disinfection; and, all this trouble for a minimum assistance on the part of the government. The result of this innovation seems to me disastrous and we should proceed otherwise to avoid discouraging the farmer and inducing him to desert the farm.

Since 1881, and especially since 1910, the Canadian Pacific railway has spent $70,000,000 in settling people and has taken care that these settlers were provided with a certain number of acres of land under culture, building them a house and barn and providing them with a good water supply in view of sparing them the hardships to which the pioneer is exposed, and thereby giving them the opportunity of starting work immediately.

I understand that the Canadian Pacific railway has made arrangements to settle in this manner, within three years, 1,000 families, according to an agreement concluded with the Empire Colonization Bureau. Indeed, that is a praiseworthy act on the part of that company, but what would still be more practical and patriotic on their part would be to grant this same privilege first to the native sons of Canada, thus cooperating with the Dominion and provincial governments.

If a private concern can do such praiseworthy acts, may we not inquire if our national associations, such as the St. Jean Baptiste Society, Artisans, Caisse Nationale d'Economie and l'Alliance Nationale could not take an interest in our problem with their large funds available each year and under the guarantee of the Dominion government as it was done in France, when the Credit Foncier was founded. Could not some sort of an experiment be carried out?

All citizens, whether Canadian born or naturalized must, as their first duty, work for the development of their native or adopted country as the case may be. We are aware, however, that money is every day sent out to foreign countries in order to provide for a brother or a sister. Such things are possible under our Immigration Act drawn up and enforced in such a manner as to allow this state of affairs. The Canadian naturalized citizen should have the privilege to gather around him in Canada the members of his family, a very humane thing since the natural law compels the children to look after their father, mother, brothers and sisters and such is the case in all civilized nations; thus, it is an anomaly of our Immigration Act to allow a brother to bring over his brother providing he is not married. Is not the aim of immigration to increase the population? This young man will in time found a home, become naturalized, yet the law denies him the right to bring over his future wife. This seems to me to have no sense. The fear that these young people will become a charge on the State does not seem to me admissible. It is clearly proven that the spirit, family education and the economic life of these people make this impossible—that these people become a charge on public charity—thrift among them seems to be a family virtue.

I had the opportunity to verify in my own riding, where five or six churches have been erected by these various nationalities, the strength of their respective organizations, their proverbial honesty, their punctuality to meet their obligations and this without exception. All this tends to prove that they have the true conception of the principles of justice toward society, and which must naturally bind them first to their parents. Observe that they are noted for their powerful associations and the care they give to the education of their children who rank at the head of their classes in our English and French institutions. For the present, sir, we may disregard immigration as a problem, and we must condemn this present system wanting us to accept an intensive immigration under false colours, the real aim of which is to rid the motherland of its problem of unemployment and bring on a peace without sacrifice to its millionaires. We are in duty bound to safeguard the rights of our working class to a living and at a reasonable salary. Already our unemployed are sufficiently numerous in our towns, and we are not anxious to see a renewal of the scenes, troubles and hardships of 1913, when, without any consideration whatsoever, we attracted to our shores large waves of immigrants. Moreover, there is nothing to hurry us to over-populate our country and find ourselves facing the same problem as in the United States which to-day are forced to enact quota legislation. In Italy, Germany and Japan overpopulation of a restricted territory is a source of much trouble. Let the motherland preach the spirit of sacrifice and patriotism to her millionnaires in order to better the lot of the people.

Canada is prosperous in all fields of activity, it behooves us to have an eye to its development, which may be slow if necessary, but sure, in such a way as to have this desirable state last as long as possible, and to guarantee to our people that life of freedom, peace and happiness that all nations seek.

Mr. H. B. ADSHEAD (East Calgary): Mr. Speaker, during the course of this debate it seems to have become a custom to say something about those who first dealt with the issues which arise in connection with the budget. I do not propose, as the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. Manion) said, to toss many bouquets, but I think it only just to say with regard to the acting leader of the opposition (Mr. Guthrie) that we were extremely pleased with his excellent presentation of his case, and I think perhaps it is not out of the way to say that it was one of the best speeches he has ever delievered in this house. However, while I admire the manner in which he presented his arguments I cannot say that I entirely agree with them.

Having said that, I want to add that one of the things which has struck me as rather remarkable in this house during the last few years is that during the whole session those who sit to the right of the Speaker almost always adulate and praise the government in power of the day, seldom finding anyhing in their actions to criticize, while those who sit to the left of the Speaker almost invariably find fault with the government. Their very name, "the opposition," signifies that they are here to oppose, and this session the highest point of opposition was reached in the statement of the acting leader of the opposition that the present government had reached a carnival of extravagance through taxes wrung from the people. I think that was the height of the condemnation of the present government. However, there are evidences that the country at large is getting rather tired of this partisan state of affairs and this method of dealing with the business of Canada, the public takes with a grain of salt what may be said from the right of the Speaker in praise of the government or what may be said from the left of the Speaker in condemnation of the government. I was rather struck with an article appearing the other day in no less a Liberal paper than the Calgary Albertan, which is a strong supporter of the government. Dealing with this very question of partisan speeches, the article says:

> Twice in the present session of the House of Commons members have been privileged to witness the rather unusual spectacle of members voting strictly according to conscience without reference to party.

I wonder if there could be a more striking condemnation of our partisan system than the statement that it is a most unusual thing to see members of the House of Commons voting according to their conscience. Then the article goes on to say that whether satisfactory results were achieved in these two deliberations during which members voted according to their conscience—

> A tendency to independent thought in parliament is something to be welcomed. It encourages the hope that in Canada the day is coming when it may be no longer true that, as Gilbert said of the parliament at Westminster:
> "When members of the house divide,
> If they've got brains and cerebellum too,
> They have to leave their brains outside
> And vote just as their parties tell 'em to."

I was rather struck this afternoon with the remarks of the hon. member for West Hamilton (Mr. Bell). He took up the cudgels of the unemployed and spoke of poverty and sorrow in the city of Toronto; in fact I told him he would make a very good labour man and asked him why he did not sit in this corner with the representatives of labour.

Mr. McGIBBON: You must remember that he is opposing the government.

Mr. ADSHEAD: He might sit on the neutral benches and say exactly what his conscience told him to say. At any rate, he seemed to blame the present government for the poverty and unemployment which exist in the city of Toronto. I may say that as far back as 1913—and I am not blaming the government—in the city of Calgary I was in a parade in which a large number of unemployed walked through the streets waving banners on which were printed the words, "Shall we work, starve or steal?" At that time a Conservative government was in power and they repudiated any responsibility for unemployment. When the tide turned and the Liberals came into power, unemployment once more stalked through the land and made its appearance in the city of Calgary, and this government also repudiated any responsibility for that unemployment. I have letters on file from Hon. James Murdock, then Minister of Labour, in which it was distinctly stated that unemployment was not a federal but a local responsibility, and that although the government proposed to extend a certain amount of assistance it was only to be of a temporary nature, since unemployment was not the business of the federal government at all. So we see that all governments, whether Liberal or Conservative, repudiate any responsibility for unemployment, and the hon. member for West Hamilton had no right to chastise or blame this government for unemployment in the city of Toronto.

In considering the budget I must say that it seems a rather innocuous affair; it does not seem to have very much in it about which we can talk. However, I think we should congratulate the Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb) on the fact that he has a surplus. We are glad he has not reduced the income tax, but we are sorry to see that the reductions made in the tariff are certainly in favour of the manufacturer. It is a colourless, stand-pat sort of budget. No doubt the Minister of Finance had in mind the public opinion which has been expressed as to what the United States might do with their tariff, and I think possibly he was justified in marking time and in presenting a sort of stand-pat budget which is colourless and innocuous. There is very little in the budget to vote for; however, there is nothing in it which I consider it necessary to vote against, so that I do not see anything else to do but vote for it.

The Minister of Finance might well consider the suggestion of the hon. member for Last Mountain (Mr. Fansher) in connection with the harvesting machines, the swather and the combine, which are purely harvesting machines. I attended a banquet at the city of Toronto not long ago at which Hon. Mr. Euler and Hon. Mr. Stewart were present. A gentleman sat beside me and during the evening he related his experience with the swather and combine. He had two sections of land and when the snow came in the fall of 1928 he told me that had he not had the swather he would have lost his entire crop. He used that machine as a harvesting machine, and he was able to thresh his grain in the spring, and get No. 2 grading. The evolution of farm machinery shows that that is a true harvesting machine. We first had the sickle, and after that there came what was called the grapevine cradle. After the cradle there came a reaper, and after the reaper came the binder. We had some difficulties at first with the wire binder, but finally that was adjusted through the utilization of binder twine. We have gone one step farther and now we have the swather and the combine succeeding the binder in the mechanical evolution of farm implements. I would make a strong and earnest plea to the minister to support the contentions of the hon. member for Last Mountain, that he place these machines where they belong in the tariff rating, thus enabling them to come into the country under a six per cent rather than a ten per cent duty.

During this debate we have heard considerable about the favourable balance of trade. If our exports are greater than our imports we hear it said that the country is prospering; if our imports are greater than our exports then it is said we are not prosperous. I consider that an entirely erroneous idea. There is no real difference between imports and exports, because imports are accounted for, either by exports or in some other way.

The acting leader of the opposition has said that we in our corner never talk politics, but I think we should talk politics if politics is the business of the country. The word "politician" is looked upon as not being a very creditable term when applied to any man, while the word "statesman" is considered in the opposite light. I have been told that a statesman is a man who desires to do something for his country, while a politician is a man who would like his country to do something for him. The fact that our exports are greater than our imports seems to be taken by the minister as evidence of the country's prosperity, and when the imports exceed the exports then my friends on my left consider that business is being depressed. One of the greatest exporting nations of recent years has been Germany. She exported her coal from the Ruhr to England to such an extent that it nearly ruined the coal industry there. Surely no one will say that because she was such a large exporting nation she was prosperous. If Canada's exports are greater than her imports it may be that we are a debtor nation; it may be we are paying some debts and have to export more than we import, but unless the exports and imports of a country are analysed there is nothing to show whether that country is prosperous or not

I have before me a statement from the last English budget. The English people do not take it for granted that business is necessarily dull when their imports exceed their exports. They do something else, something which the Minister of Finance and the acting leader of the opposition have failed to do; they analyse their exports and imports to see just where they stand. If the Minister of Finance had to bring before this house a budget which showed a debit balance of imports over exports amounting to £359,500,000, as was the case in England last year, I am quite sure my friends to the left would hold up their hands in holy horror and the cry would go out that business was being ruined because our imports exceeded our exports to that extent.

An hon. MEMBER: You mean your friends to your right.

Mr. ADSHEAD: To my right, but on the left of the Speaker. You do not hear the Conservative party at Westminster saying that business has been dull simply because their imports were £359,500,000 greater than their exports. Even when their exports were greater than their imports they did not consider they were necessarily prosperous. They analysed these things to find out just where they stood. What did they find? They discovered the invisible imports and exports, the balances paid on account of interest, and in the final analysis they found they had a net credit balance of £149,000,000. Perhaps it is for the purpose of creating political capital that the opposition endeavours to give the outside public the impression that business is not prosperous because our imports are greater than our exports, while the other side leads the public to think we are prosperous because our exports are greater than our imports. I heard some hon. gentlemen on this side actually say that because we had bought from the United States so many million dollars' worth of goods than we had sold to them, Canada's good money was over in the United States whereas it ought to be in circulation in Canada for the benefit of our own people. I do not know why hon. members will make such erroneous statements, because I am quite sure they must know better. I am only a tyro in the study of economics, but my hon. friends who make those statements from year to year must surely know better. If they do not, they ought to and if, knowing better, they wilfully make statements of that kind they are doing so in a deliberate attempt to mislead the public. Such a course is no credit to the House of Commons.

I said a few minutes ago that the hon. gentleman who was acting leader of the opposition made an excellent presentation of his case, perhaps one of the best speeches I have heard in the house from that hon. gentleman during the three sessions I have been a member of parliament. Although as I have said, I liked his manner, I certainly cannot agree with his matter. One statement he made sounded extraordinary to me and I thought I would take it home and analyse it. He said that the enormous load of taxation was wrung from the people, and then he added: "What if the rate of taxation is reduced? Who cares for the rate? It is the amount of taxation that matters." That is a remarkable statement. I am not necessarily well versed in economics, but the peculiar and, so far as I am concerned, the amusing feature about the statement was this: he actually quoted William Ewart Gladstone, one of the chief leaders in days gone by, as having made that statement. For a Conservative leader to quote William Ewart Gladstone was something new to me. I should like the hon. gentleman to tell me where William Ewart Gladstone ever said any such thing, because I should be glad to read it. I do not say that he made no such statement because I do not know; but the humorous feature was this, that he turned to this corner of the house a little while after and said that very soon hon. gentlemen to his left would be leaving the musty, duty theories of Adam Smith of a century or so ago and turning to protection. There was no keener student of Adam Smith and no more devout worshipper at his shrine than the William Ewart Gladstone that my hon. friend quoted. It does not follow that because a thing is old, it is of no value. I am particularly astonished that my hon. friend who holds the past in such great reverence should make a statement of that sort. If we go back even to Euclid, who said, some centuries before Adam Smith lived, that two sides of a triangle were greater than the third, my hon. friend would discredit that on account of its age and because Euclid said it. There are many things which Adam Smith said which are just as true to-day as they were then, because two and two will always make four and that is true of what he said with regard to economics.

But I want to follow up the reasoning of my hon. friend. He said: "The amount of taxation is the great thing. Who cares for the rate?" After that statement my hon. friend should come over to this corner of the house. I turn to the public accounts and I find that the amount of income tax collected, when the rate was five per cent was $47,386,000. When the rate was reduced to four and one-half per cent, the income tax collection increased to $55,571,000, and upon being reduced to four per cent, according to the statement of the Minister of Finance the expected income tax receipts for this year will amount to $58,000,000. My hon. friend says we are burdened with taxation, and asks: "Who cares for the rate so long as the amount of taxation is reduced?" So we know that he is opposed to the income tax levy and will join with us in asking the Minister of Finance to raise the rate of the income tax to five per cent, because, if the rate is raised, the collections will be less than before.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): What about the double taxation of income?

Mr. ADSHEAD: I do not know that that applies to the question at issue. That is another matter which might very well be considered. If it comes to an extreme condition of affairs like that—who cares about the rate so long as the amount of taxation is decreased?—my hon. friend will be a free trader by and by, because who cares about the rates if we can only get less taxes collected under the tariff?

I come now to a statement made by my hon. friend in connection with the Australian treaty. Last year I had something to say about that treaty; the hon. member for Frontenac-Addington (Mr. Edwards) and I had a few words, and I stated in the house that if the farmers of the west could not meet the competition of our confreres of the British Empire 10,000 miles away over the equator in connection with butter, they had better learn the dairying business or go out of business altogether. I was chided by somebody for making a rather radical, rash statement. I took up the question immediately on my return to Calgary. That statement had preceded me, and the dairymen who were making butter but not milking cows took good care to spread the report throughout my district, where there are a large number of dairymen who milk cows. I was called to a large meeting in one of the rural districts where they have a big hall, and some of my friends who make butter but do not milk cows sent their agents there. The community hall was full, ladies and representatives of the United Farmers of Alberta being present, and I was asked to speak. I said: "I have come to render an account of my stewardship; what shall I speak about?" Immediately people in the audience cried out: "The Australian treaty." The only thing I did was to take the Hansard report of what I said in the house and read it to those present. I said: "By that statement I stand. What have you got to say about it?" I said: "Do you want me to go to the House of Commons and be an advocate of free trade and lower tariff in regard to the things you want to buy and then be a protectionist in regard to the things you want to sell?—because if you do, you had better get somebody else to take my place." I discussed the matter at some length, and when the meeting closed I received from that large audience in the community hall a standing vote of confidence. I was instructed to come down to the House of Commons and say that at least the dairymen in my constituency were not opposed to the Australian treaty, and they were not going to be free traders in those things they wanted to buy and then turn around and be protectionists in regard to the things they wanted to sell, and thus be caught in the meshes of my protectionist friends to my right.

In January, 1923, there was a dairymen's conference in the city of Winnipeg and the report, as given by Miss Cora Hind, of the Manitoba Free Press, makes this statement:

> He deplored the fact that there had been, during the year a falling off in total production due to some extent to the high prices on feed in the spring of 1928 and the high prices offered by American buyers for dairy cows. The high price of cheese too had been a factor in the reduction of the butter output. He stressed the growing home market and warned the members that if they were not prepared to produce enough to supply home demand they could not find fault if it was brought in from other countries.

I also had some kind friend who sent me a statement from the Saskatoon Star and Pheonix, giving a report of the cooperative dairymen's association showing the events of the year, showing how much butter they had made and what their success was. In reading over this cooperative dairymen's report I find this statement:

> That Saskatchewan products and particularly those of the districts adjacent to Saskatoon are finding a demand and a popularity abroad is evidenced by the shipments of creamery butter that are sent not only to eastern Canada and the United States but to the British Isles as well. The proof that these products are of first rate quality is seen in their demand in countries where world competition is unusually keen. The British markets receive goods from New Zealand and the Netherlands to say nothing of other lands noted for their fine dairy products. Saskatoon products measure up well to the high standards set in the world markets.

Our Saskatchewan friends mention specially the Australian butter which they have met in competition in the British markets, and they say that if they can meet the competition in England they are not afraid to meet the competition in Canada.

There was one more statement which my hon. friend made. He said that the Australian treaty was a gold brick. And then he made the statement that we had imported from Australia and New Zealand no less than $6,000,000 worth of butter during the year 1928. I have the returns. My hon. friend is right; it is not quite $6,000,000, but that is near enough for all practical purposes. The actual amount of Australian and New Zealand butter imported into Canada during the year 1928, to December 31, was $5,937,170. There my hon. friend was right. But as to the Australian treaty being a gold brick that is another matter. My hon. friend gave only half the truth; he gave only half the facts. I wonder why he did not give the other side of the question as well as this. What is the other side of the question? It is that the farmers in Quebec and Ontario found it far more profitable to ship their milk, cream and cheese and other products into the United States—

An hon. MEMBER: No.

Mr. ADSHEAD: My hon. friend says, no. Very good. I have the figures here to show exactly what I am talking about. I am not making the statement without knowing what the facts are. In the year 1928 the farmers of Quebec and Ontario, finding it more profitable to ship their milk and cream and cheese, and send their milk to the condensed milk factories and evaporated milk factories, shipped to the United States no less than $8,749,932 worth of milk, cream and cheese and evaporated milk and condensed milk. Now, you cannot have milk and sell it; you cannot have cream and sell it and have butter too. For that $6,000,000 worth of butter which we imported from Australia these men sold their products of milk and cheese, and those other products I have named, to the United States—I am not quite certain of this figure—for about 60 cents a pound.

Mr. McGIBBON: May I ask my hon. friend a question?

Mr. ADSHEAD: Yes.

Mr. McGIBBON: Is he not aware of the fact that the butter fat has been decreased in every province in the Dominion except British Columbia? That is a matter of record, not a matter of opinion.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Well, supposing it has.

Mr. McMILLAN: Butter fat is not the basis.

Mr. ADSHEAD: It does not alter the fact that those farmers in Quebec and Ontario chose to ship their milk and cream to the United States, cream to the extent of $5,591,816; milk to the extent of $866,920, and cheese to the extent of $1,841,874, and so on, the total amount being $8,749,932. That comes to about 60 cents a pound for their butter. And they bought the Australian butter themselves to take home instead of making their own butter. So that out of that $6,000,000 of imported butter they received themselves $8,749,932, or a difference between the two in their favour of $2,833,263. That is a difference of over $2,000,000 which my hon. friend says is a gold brick.

Mr. RENNIE: May I ask a question of my hon. friend? Does he admit or not that our dairy herds have decreased in Canada in the last twelve months?

Mr. ADSHEAD: What I read a minute ago clears that up. It says that that was due in 1928 to the scarcity of feed and also to the high price paid by American buyers for Canadian cows.

Mr. McGIBBON: But the fact is that they have decreased.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Supposing they have? They still have this $2,000,000. You will find when you start to scratch beneath that gold brick that instead of being a gold brick it is a brick of gold.

Mr. McGIBBON: Go and tell the farmers that.

Mr. ADSHEAD: I have told them.

Mr. McGIBBON: They would not believe you.

Mr. ADSHEAD: They believed me to this extent, that they have sent me back with that message to this house. That is exactly, Mr. Speaker, why I am so firm in that.

An hon. MEMBER: Not in the next election.

Mr. ADSHEAD: I shall be glad to meet my hon. friend any time on that question. I will give him the privilege of the platform any time he desires.

There is a part, however, of the statement of the acting leader of the opposition with which I fully agree. That is when he quoted the Australian treaty as regards raisins. I stand with him there. I do not believe there should have been any tax upon Australian raisins coming into Canada.

Mr. McGIBBON: That is part of the Australian treaty.

Mr. ADSHEAD: I know that, but I do not approve of it. I agree with the hon. gentleman who spoke for the leader of the opposition. He stated that as Canada does not produce raisins we should bring them into Canada as free as possible. Those were his words. Does my hon. friend agree?

Mr. McGIBBON: He denounced the treaty.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Not in whole; in part. Does my hon. friend think that because we accept one part we must necessarily disregard the whole? But I agree with my hon. friend that because we do not produce those things in Canada they ought to come in free of duty. That is his statement. Very good. Then my hon. friend will go a step further. We do not produce tea in Canada, but it bears a duty of ten cents a pound. So I am sure he will go with us to the Finance minister and request him to take off that duty simply because tea is not grown in this country. Then we do not produce coffee, and yet it is subject to a tariff only of from 2½ to 3 cents a pound.

Mr. McGIBBON: Does the hon. member think that that duty destroys any industry in Canada?

Mr. ADSHEAD: No; that is what my hon. friend said about the duty on raisins, that because Canada does not produce raisins no Canadian industry would be destroyed if they were allowed to come in free. That is perfectly logical. But if it is logical in regard to raisins, it is also logical in regard to tea and coffee.

An hon. MEMBER: What about butter?

Mr. ADSHEAD: Yes, if you like; we will go that far because we are not afraid of competition. As my hon. friend from Lisgar (Mr. Brown) said this afternoon, what would happen if the farmers asked for protection? I told the farmers of my constituency: If the protectionists on the right of the Speaker and on the left—they are on both sides; no question about that—could get the farmer to accept protection of three or four cents a pound on butter, those protectionists would almost howl for joy, for there would be no occasion then for the farmers to send representatives to parliament to express views similar to mine.

Mr. McGIBBON: The farmer is asking for protection.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Then the protectionists would ask for increased duties on everything that the farmer has to buy, they would increase the tariff on rakes, mowers, binders, trucks, and so forth.

Mr. DICKIE: Oh, no.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Why not? In the past they have been asked by the manufacturers to do so, and will be asked again. Therefore the farmer would stand to lose in the game. I am glad to say that my constituents have sent me here with the same message which I brought last session: that we are not going to run with the hare and hunt with the hounds—we are not going to be free-traders with respect to all those things we want to buy and protectionists with respect to all those things we want to sell.

Mr. W. E. ROWE (Dufferin-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, the hon. the Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb) has presented six budgets to this house, and this, his most recent presentation, has been commendable for the same lucid and dignified manner that has always characterized his activities in parliament.

The Robb budget, as it is called on the street, has been the annual business menu of Canada for the past six years. Budgets are usually of great national concern, but this one comes as a shadow only of something better to be expected at a more opportune time. Of the past, it is a glittering jubilee of power; of the future, it is more conspicuous for the provisions that are absent than for the minor changes it contains. It is undoubtedly the most colourless of all the budgets presented by the hon. minister. Surely it is an indication of an election in 1930. It plucks credit from the bed of providential roses for past prosperity, and vainly assumes that optimism for the future is born of this government's administration. It is like the old maid, who when told by a friend that the announcement of her engagement had appeared in the paper, was agreeably surprised and answered: It is not a fact, but I thank God for the rumour

It is indeed of interest, Mr. Speaker, to review the record of these apostles of economy. We have heard their heralded reduction of our national debt, and we have listened to the applause of their supporters as the minister removed the nuisance taxes from the rich and left the sales tax on the necessities of the poor at over four dollars for every man, woman and child in Canada. Every year we listen to the estimated debt reduction and relief of taxation, but it is noteworthy when one takes the government's own figures from Hansard of 1922 to find our net debt of $2,340,000,000 on March 31 of that year, reduced to $2,296,000,000 on March 31 of 1928. That is a reduction in six years of $44,000,000. During the same period the government guaranteed railway bonds to the amount of $253,000,000. So they have reduced the first mortgage on our estate and increased the chattel mortgage by six times as much as the first reduction on our holdings.

The war long since over, the government now propose to reduce in part only the taxation which the people have borne with great patience year after year, hoping for its total removal. I might ask, to whom will such relief be of most benefit? Surely not to the labour man or farmer on the rare occasions when he travels by train. He will save five cents on his ticket; while his wealthy friend who travels often and can afford a chair car and sleeper will save twenty-five cents. And if his wealthy friend seeks recreation in an overseas tour the government propose to save him five dollars on his ticket and three cents every time he cables or sends a telegram to his friends while en route; but the poor man will still pay two dollars sales tax on every one hundred dollars of his wages spent for the everyday necessities of his family. When the capitalist wishes to invest in the high-priced stocks he will pay less than the former tax, while the small investor in penny stocks will pay a tax of fifty per cent or more. As a result the small corporations will be retarded in their development accordingly.

It is therefore little wonder that the minister hesitated to call this a poor man's budget. It is perhaps for this reason that a private resolution was offered for the young and strong, by which families of five or more might be fed by the state; and for those seeking employment an unemployment insurance scheme to provide what is known in Great Britain as "the dole" has also been privately proposed. To the great basic industry, agriculture, relief will be offered by long-term government loans. To those toil-worn in cheap labour and with hopes undone by the years that are passing under this regime of unfair competition, the old age pension will be ready waiting. Is this the essence of unprecedented prosperity so glibly referred to, or is it a preparation for a less prosperous future ensured by present policies? It is indeed true that there are signs of prosperity in Montreal, Toronto, Winnipeg, Vancouver and other cities. The optimism of the Canadian people in our great natural endowments of mineral wealth has been responsible for much prosperity through speculation on the stock market, associated with the appreciation of a great heritage together with bountiful harvests of wheat in recent years. But, Mr. Speaker, with our hon. friends to your right rests the trusteeship of this estate. It is, therefore, to them the Canadian people have looked—but in vain—for leadership, for some sign of statecraft in business policy in keeping with these bountiful years of natural blessings, some direction toward an equalization of conditions whereby this so-called prosperity might reflect more reasonable recompense for the individual endeavour of all classes of our people.

Since this government has been in power we have seen the individual crowded out of business by the highly organized corporation. Individual business men in every section of the Dominion have been driven out of business by the chain organizations of big interests. The identity of the family name is no longer preserved on the window of the thrifty country stores, but is now replaced by the large corporation name most suitable for advertisement and mail order influence. It is pleasing, however, for the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) and the Minister of Finance to refer to the reports of the presidents of such organizations speaking at their respective annual meetings, of the prosperity they are enjoying through these amalgamated forces of commerce. It seems to me therefore that the government have listened to too much of the reports of presidents and heads of different highly organized forces of industry. The Prime Minister has quoted reports of different institutions, but in my opinion what we need is more of an outlook with the interests of the Canadian people as a whole in view. Since this government came into power we have seen a gradual increase in the imports of manufactured goods. In 1928 we purchased $400,000,000 more than we did in 1922, and $78,000,000 more than in 1927, while we exported $17,000,000 less, notwithstanding the fact that we had an increased export of wheat of $46,000,000. Thus we find ourselves in the position of a country with a population of 9,000,000 purchasing about $350,000,000 more than we sell to a country with a population of 120,000,000. It is difficult to see wherein there is sound economic management when such a situation is brought about. Since this government's latest inoculation with the free trade virus from the west, we have witnessed a gradual increase in the importation of manufactured goods, and the effect upon the consumer calls for serious consideration.

In 1925 the government reduced the tariff on automobiles. What has been the result? From 1925 to 1928 there has been an increase in importations of 260 per cent. And what has been the effect of the change from the standpoint of the consumer? From 1922 to 1925 the prices of automobiles declined 33 per cent, whilst in the period from 1925 to 1928, after this government reduced the tariff on cars, the consumer has benefited by reduction of only 9 per cent in price. We can therefore easily perceive the fallacy of the free trade idea in this connection.

The same thing is true with respect to farm implements. This government in 1922 reduced the tariff on farm implements 2½ per cent, while they tinkered with the sales tax, making a reduction of 1½ per cent; and they provided for drawbacks of 30, 40 and 99 per cent in respect to different articles of manufacture, giving the farmers to understand that they would have cheaper implements. I submit however, as one who has purchased these implements in all these years, that the farmer has not benefited one dollar. I have heard the Prime Minister make the statement that the unprecedented prosperity of the farmers was due to the reduction in the duty on the tools of production. I will ask any farmer in this house, or any member of the government, to show me wherein, taking a $2,500 set of farm implements, the reduction in the tariff since it was put into force has resulted in a sufficient reduction in price to enable the farmer to buy his boy a toy wheel-barrow. We know quite well that the increase in importations has been enormous. Every year since the government reduced the tariff on farm implements there has been a gradual increase in importations, according to the statistics we have before us. In 1924 the government reduced the tariff on farm implements 4 per cent. What has been the result? The United States papers tell us how many boys and girls have emigrated from Canada to that country since that time; every year we have seen a marked increase in the exodus. In 1928 we had $11,000,000 more of importations in farm implements than in 1927; and in the first nine months of the present fiscal year Canada has been importing from the United States over $30,000,000 worth of these implements, and exporting from $3,000,000 to $4,000,000 less. The fact is that the Prime Minister has not effected a reduction in the price of the tools of production which the farmer uses. And if he has not brought about a reduction in price—and I maintain that he has not—surely $30,000,000 spent in 1929 for farm implements of United States manufacture, if spent in Canada, would foster the industrial life of Canada and represent something substantial in the way of home markets in this country.

Let us take the two items, automobiles and farm implements. Last year we imported upwards of $100,000,000 under these two heads. I think it is reasonable to assume that $60,000,000 of that would represent labour, which would have maintained 300,000 more men, women and children in the Dominion. This is not the only evidence of fiscal instability on the part of this government, who have shown no evidence of a desire to preserve our markets either for Canadian industrialists or for Canadian farmers. We feel satisfied that the Minister of Immigration (Mr. Forke) might find some solution of the all-important question of labour by recommending to his leader and colleagues a fiscal change whereby diversified labour might be reasonably recompensed by the manufacture of our own requirements in this country. The minister scoured the whole European continent to bring immigrants to Canada as fast as our own Canadian boys and girls were leaving the country. In five years of his administration he brought into Canada 518,000 immigrants, while he watched 556,000 of our own Canadian boys and girls leave the Dominion. But, I would point out, these 556,000 Canadians needed nothing in the way of assimilation; they did not need to be taught our language. On the other hand, of the 518,000 who came into the country, 35 per cent could not speak the language and therefore had to be taught it before the process of assimilation could begin. These immigrants came to Canada at a cost of $32 per capita, and anyone who can see sound economic business in the Immigration Department, with such a situation existing, must certainly have the free trade obsession. We find the Minister of Immigration floundering as hopelessly as ever in the free trade tanglefoot. However, while he may never unravel the problem he has helped to tangle, the Canadian people will find in this, and this alone, at least the beginning of an immigration policy for Canada when next they have an opportunity to express themselves.

In view of the fact that I have the honour to represent a riding engaged chiefly in agriculture—I might say, intensive mixed farming for which the fertile lands of Dufferin-Simcoe are favourably adapted, and in which I am also personally engaged—it comes to me as a thrill of inspiration when the Prime Minister, general managers of banks, presidents of highly organized companies, and heads of the different commercial interests all emphasize the significance of our enterprise as the great basic industry—agriculture. Surely we have a right to expect consideration by this government; but to the surprise of everyone who understands rural activities, and to the disappointment of those so engaged, who have knocked at the door of the government for protection against unfair foreign produce, no relief is forthcoming. We have in the present cabinet four farmers, who have been listening to the representatives of agriculture, from one end of the Dominion to the other. Dairymen from every association in every province have been appealing to the government—what for? Only to be allowed to maintain their own markets for their own products. Vegetable growers all along the southern line, and fruit growers east and west, have also been making their appeal. And what has been the result? These four members of the cabinet from the agricultural vocation say to the farmers of Canada: "Surely you farmers will not be benefited by protection. We were only farmers and immigrants ourselves, and now look at us, almost intoxicated with unprecedented prosperity." It does seem to me that if agriculture is our great basic industry some of these ministers should assume the responsibility of speaking for their vocation. Where have these champions of farmers' rights disappeared to? Those hon. gentlemen who crossed the floor of this house to the larger party did so ostensibly to devote themselves to the interests of the farmers. What are they doing now? Do they realize that over 18,000,000 pounds of dairy products are coming into the country from New Zealand and other places? Surely the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell) should give this matter his attention; he should consider mixed farming as the groundwork of this great basic industry. Because, while wheat growing from the virgin soil of the Dominion is an important industry in which as Canadians we all take pride, I submit—and I know that every agriculturist in this house will agree with me—that we cannot go on forever with this form of soil mining. When we produce $100 worth of wheat on the farm we sap the soil of its productive value to the extent of $18; that is, it takes approximately $18 worth of phosphoric acid, nitrogen and potash from the virgin soil, but when we produce $100 worth of dairy products the fertility of the soil is renewed by approximately $30 worth of these materials. Therefore I submit that this government's policy is undermining the very basis of this great basic industry of the Dominion. We must remember also that in the production of pork to the value of $100, according to scientific analysis $23 worth of phosphoric acid, nitrogen and potash are returned to the soil. Even the production of $100 worth of eggs or poultry, of which this government make it their business to import, returns to the soil from $12 to $15 worth of these materials; the production of $100 worth of mutton returns an approximate value of $20 to the soil. Why, Mr. Speaker, who is there among the farmer members of this house that can say for one moment that we are putting agriculture on a sound economic basis? Who is so optimistic as to say that we can develop agriculture in this country under these conditions? I say this government have done much to undermine that most important industry.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I endeavoured last year to take this up more fully, but I know even the wheat growers are becoming convinced when we find such authorities as Doctor Saunders, who developed the marquis wheat known the world over, and from whose wheat the western provinces produced their millions of bushels in recent years, stating in a speech not long ago that he felt the western wheat exporter was too intelligent to increase very much his wheat exports but looked forward to the day when wheat exports would be less important and replaced to a great degree by the production of beef, mutton, pork, dairy products, et cetera, for export. We know very well that the farmers throughout Canada are not satisfied, and I submit that no farmers' party to-day speaks for all the farmers of Canada; I believe the farmers are anything but satisfied. They are dissatisfied with the absolute neglect of this government. They realize that the government have spent about $800,000 to establish foreign embassies, to sweeten international relationships and to help develop foreign markets for our products, while they have refused to take care of the home market. On the other hand we find the Minister of Agriculture and all the other farmer members who sit around the cabinet table doing nothing in response to these appeals during the last two years. Did they crawl under the table when these appeals came before them? For years the Minister of Agriculture has turned his deaf ear to these requests, and during the past summer, when the farmers of this country were toiling from early morning till late at night, the minister was doing nothing for them. They will look through this budget in vain for anything which will help them; they may even search for that old slogan which was formerly a feature of the Robb budgets, "Work harder and spend less," but they will not find even that. I believe the farmers from one end of this country to the other realize that this government have shown very little interest in agriculture except to make boastful references to it. The Minister of Finance continues to preach economy, retrenchment and thrift to our farmers, but the farmers know that he has collected from the people in taxes during 5 years of 1922-27 $259,000,000 more than his predecessors collected during the five years from 1917 to 1922 while part time engaged in the war. Yet the minister tells the farmers that the government cannot afford to continue the agricultural grants to the provinces, which were discontinued a long time ago; that they cannot continue the grants for technical education, and that they cannot consider for a moment granting money for a highway proposal which would be of great benefit to the rural districts of Canada.

But, Mr. Speaker, let us look at the other side of the question. According to the Auditor General's report the government spent $542,000 for automobiles for the use of the various ministers and their departments, and now the government propose to expend $3,000,000 to destroy valuable buildings in Ottawa so that these high-powered machines may have room in which to operate, and also I may say in order to beautify the view of the parliament buildings so that this will be the show window of Canada's great prosperity. These farmers who work so hard and who were toiling under the hot sun all last summer realize quite clearly that while they were toiling the Minister of Agriculture drove his high-powered automobile on board a steamship and toured the countries of Europe as a testimonial to the unprecedented prosperity of the Canadian people.

I do not wish to detain the house at any great length, but I think the farmers of Canada might well stop and think who are their friends, when the government turn a deaf ear to the needs of the great basic industry of agriculture and when we find even the minister taking no great interest in it. Apparently the sweets of office have so satisfied him that he has forgotten he was once a farmer, because there is not one phase of agricultural activity which has been promoted by any policy brought in by his government.

I believe the people of Canada have watched and waited all in vain for some move by way of retaliation in connection with the proposed tariff of the United States. From one end of Canada to the other the farmers are viewing with alarm the proposed policy of the president of the United States, and they view with equal disappointment and regret the attitude of the present government of Canada. We admit that the United States is a nation very friendly to us, but I submit that it is up to the Canadian government at least to look after our own interests. It does seem to me that when anyone from this side of the house even suggest that Canadians should look after their own interests in a bold and sincere fashion the Prime Minister is going too far when he suggests that this is a dangerous thing to say because it might endanger our friendly relationship with the United States. The United States are quite capable of looking after their own interests. The hon. member for Fort William (Mr. Manion) said the other day that we should look after Canada's interests in a red-blooded fashion; I submit that the president of the United States certainly will look after the interests of his country in that way, and I say it is the duty of Canadians to look after our own business.

This government is drawing near to that famous ten year mark; we have had almost ten years of this weak and extravagant administration, and when the government appeal to the country they will be considered by a cool and calm electorate who will have at heart the interests of all classes of Canada. The electors will consider the free trade policy of this government, which has been thrown out the back door of every other nation of the world, even including Great Britain, the greatest free trade nation of the world. How this government cling to those dusty old doctrines of free trade! But when the government go to the country the Canadian people will say, "We are no longer in doubt as to the fiscal policy of the government; no longer will we be fooled by the tariff board because it costs $120,000 a year." They will say, "We must look past this scarecrow of government protection," and when this stage curtain is removed and the ministers of the crown are revealed behind it the Canadian public will ask, "Why have 750,000 Canadian boys and girls of the old stock left Canada since you have taken charge of affairs? You have talked about unprecedented prosperity while our sons and daughters have sought foreign lands for opportunities to earn a living." They will also ask why our imports have increased until now they have reached the huge total of over $2,000,000 per day. They will ask, "Why did we purchase over $400,000,000 more in 1928 than we did in 1922?" They will ask why we imported $72,000,000 of shipbuilding since this government has been in power. The total imports if manufactured in Canada would have provided sufficient work to enable 2,000,000 to be added to our population. The government flounders around wondering how to inaugurate an immigration policy, but the people of Canada will soon consider that it is their duty to look after Canada first and have Canada for the Canadians. Unless conditions change materially the Canadian public will desire the inauguration of a national policy, a policy whereby Canadians will have work within their own country, a policy which will permit expansion from within rather than induce contraction from without. Surely this is the way the pioneers of upper and lower Canada intended that we should proceed, so that the descendants of those two great races, our original and foundation stock, should find employment within their country and not be so alienated from their own estate as to have to seek employment in foreign countries by such a policy of unfair foreign competition as at present exists.

Mr. R. H. JENKINS (Queens): Mr. Speaker, the important duty of any government is the administration of the affairs of the country in the most economical and efficient manner possible. The spending of large sums of money does not necessarily mean extravagance, because it resolves itself down to what you really get in return for the money expended. It may be possible to curtail a great many items in the estimates, but it might not be wise to do so. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb) receives considerable free advice, and there is a great variety in opinion as to the items which might be reduced or altogether eliminated. Some of our friends would eliminate a large proportion of the estimates of the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Ralston), but there are others in the house who consider the expenditure is not large enough. Differences of opinion exist as to the vote for immigration, and the same applies to nearly every department of the civil government. We believe that the estimates which have been tabled have been very carefully prepared considering the vast country to be served and the needs to be attended to. If in a desire to pay off the debt of the country we neglect public services and allow them to become impaired, we are practising false economy and it would mean disaster in the end. The government is not only attending to the business of the country, but it is also making substantial reductions in the public debt. Some of our newspapers find fault with this policy; they object to the government applying such large sums to debt reduction and state that it might give a little more consideration to the needs of the moment and of the immediate future and let posterity have a chance to carry some of the burden assumed by this generation in the name of prosperity. The Financial Post of Toronto states that any government does a fine thing in steadily reducing the burden of the national debt. It further points out that if circumstances arose which made large borrowings essential at any time in the future the task would be made easier by the debt reductions of today.

A large amount of the present expenditure is due to the Great War; that goes without saying. No government can be blamed for this heavy drain upon our revenues. Roughly speaking, about $160,000,000 is spent each year in paying interest and other charges on this liability. It would therefore appear that it will be necessary to move very cautiously and carefully in the way of reducing taxation. If we keep on eating away at our heavy debt it will only be a question of time before we can appreciably lighten the burden of taxation. Despite the war the growth of our country has been so phenomenal that we may confidently look forward with faith in the future.

Not only have the revenues of our country been buoyant but business in nearly all lines of commercial activity is marching forward. Carefully managed companies which have issued reports for 1928 show a healthy position. I emphasize the word "carefully" because we have heard in speeches in this house of the hard times certain companies are facing. I contend that no matter what government may be in power there will always be corporations and individuals who will find it hard to get along. It is generally their own fault, through inefficiency or lack of service. The Bell Telephone Company shows a substantial increase in the amount invested in plant, an increase of over $1,000,000 in surplus account; and it has also made larger appropriations for depreciation. In 1927 it employed 14,899 people, and in 1928 that number had risen to 16,240. The power companies operating in the Dominion have in every instance, in the balance sheets which I have had the opportunity to examine, made progress and in nearly every case are issuing new stock to provide for increasing business.

The textile companies have had a good year. Penman's Limited, one of the largest operators, show sales of $7,122,264; quite a substantial increase over the previous year. Stanfield's Limited, the largest company in this line in the line in the maritimes, report an excellent year. In order to show the situation at a glance, I desire to place on Hansard a statement issued by the Financial Post, probably the most influential paper of its kind in Canada. This article reads as follows:

Background of Business
Canada

Commodity prices:
Steady at present; may be lower.
Iron and steel:
Good business on hand; more in sight.
Building:
Off to a good start, should be big year.
Foreign trade:
Aggregate greater. Farm products feature exports. Industry importing heavily.
Employment:
Best in years. Seasonal adjustments less violent. Much new work in sight.
Car loadings:
Grain movement less; other loadings well maintained.
Stock market:
Growing more selective; reaction has provided some bargains.
Credit:
Abundant for business. Banks withhold further credit for stock speculations.
Agriculture:
Farmers in good financial position. Perhaps larger acreage this year. Better quality crop desirable. Dairying fair; live stock much better.
Trend:
Further acceleration expected in all areas. Consumption keeps pace with increased production, Newsprint revenues will be lower; flour milling is improving; lumbering slightly better; power output gains; automobile output grows; small firms suffer from competition.

Anyone engaged in business to-day knows that the larger firms are coming along at a very rapid pace and making it very difficult for the small man in business. Mr. L. W. Simms, president of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, states:

The year 1928 has seen Canada producing more kinds of goods of a greater volume and a higher quality for the consumption of her own people and those of other lands than ever before in her history or the history of any people of like population. The year 1928 has seen a deeper appreciation of and regard for the productive efforts of each section and group in Canada by every other section and group than ever before.

The tourist revenue of Canada has gone up of late years by leaps and bounds, and the year 1928 was the best of all. In that year tourist automobiles to the number of 3,645,455, as compared with 3,153,800 in the preceding year, entered Canada from the United States. This number was over fifteen times as great as that of ten years ago. In advance of the official computation of the value of tourist traffic to Canada in 1928, the figures would seem to indicate an increase of probably $35,000,000 for reported tourist travel alone over the $161,418,000 reported in the Dominion Bureau of Statistics estimate for 1927, bringing the total estimated expenditure in 1928 by tourists entering Canada via ocean ports and from the United States by automobile, rail and steamer, to the sum of $242,754,000. In our province we have a live publicity and tourist association doing a fine piece of work. A large quantity of literature is distributed each year and the men who are connected with the association serve without remuneration, the only expense in this regard being a small amount paid to an energetic lady secretary.

The widely prevalent belief that our country is entirely dependent upon the bringing in of capital from outside sources in order to finance her development is rather rudely shattered by the information disclosed that Canada is sending out of the country more money than she is bringing in and has been doing so for the past four years. We have always had considerable investments abroad in the form of banking balances in London and New York, railway lines in the United States, and investments in foreign securities by banks and insurance companies as well as private individuals who require diversified lists of securities. A rising Canadian prosperity with a greater volume of funds seeking investment outlet has resulted in a situation where the capital leaving the country exceeds by a substantial margin that coming in.

Based on figures issued by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics covering the situation as at January 1, 1927, careful estimates made upon information from most reliable sources by the same authority give the total of Canadian investments abroad on January 1, 1928, at $1,514,500,000 and on January 1, 1929, at $1,672,000,000. Thus the aggregate of Canadian investments in other countries represents more than 50 per cent of what other countries have invested in Canada. Of this total at the opening of the present year Canada had $939,000,000 invested in the United States, $112,500,000 in the United Kingdom, and $620,500,000 in other countries. Investments by Canadian insurance companies in diversified foreign securities continue to increase rapidly with the development of both their domestic and foreign business. Direct Canadian investments in branch plants in the United States commercial field and elsewhere are growing steadily. Canadian holdings of New York stocks and of European and South American government bonds have increased enormously. Altogether the record testifies most eloquently to Canadian prosperity and world progress.

May I say at this point that I think the Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb) is to be complimented on raising the tax a little on those penny mining stocks, because I verily believe many people in Canada to-day are losing a great deal of money by investing in stocks which are absolutely worthless. I do not say that all mining stocks are worthless, but many of the mines listed on our boards at the present time are practically holes in the ground and will never amount to anything. I am only too pleased to see the minister impose an increased rate of taxation on this kind of stock gambling, and, in fact, I would, if anything, rather see it higher.

Only a few years ago, Mr. Speaker, every taxpayer in the country feared that disaster would overtake the Canadian National Railways. It was with a sense of foreboding and increasing fear that heavier burdens were in store for us in the future that the report of the operations of the system was received. Admittedly the operation of this road had placed an enormous burden on the people of Canada and some of the enemies of national ownership predicted disaster. In 1920 the loss in operation was over $30,000,000. We are apt to forget these things; we sometimes forget the days that are gone by. To-day the surplus on operation is over $58,000,000, an improvement of approximately $88,000,000. This has been brought about largely through the management of Sir Henry Thornton and his associates. The present Minister of Railways (Mr. Dunning) is also responsible in no small measure for the continued building up of the system. A much better feeling has been created in the minds of the public generally towards the road and the fine cooperation of the employees has added much to the improvement of conditions. Railway progress and especially car loadings constitute one of the best indexes we have of national prosperity, and the great Canadian National Railways is doing much for the advertising of Canada and the increasing stability of the country.

Applications by the Canadian National and Canadian Pacific for branch line extensions totalling approximately 1,800 miles of new road form a most encouraging feature of this year's railway program. The extensions will represent an addition of nearly 5 per cent to the total railway mileage of Canada. This new building program serves to show the importance of the new era of railway building in Canada and is one of the most favourable factors in our economic situation. Not only does it mean extra work for construction companies and companies furnishing raw materials, as well as labourers, but it will do much in the development of the country at large and give added work to those who will be employed on the new lines. By the building and operating of such new lines we hope that population as well as production will materially increase.

I wish to say a few words about the fishing industry, in which we in our part of the maritimes are particularly interested. Conditions in the fishing industry in Canada were generally better in 1928 than they had been in 1927, as regards both fishing and marketing, and there was an increase in fishery production of approximately $4,503,000. With the final revision of the year's figures still to be completed, the Fisheries branch puts the total production for 1928 at $54,000,000 as compared with $49,497,038 in 1927. There was an increased production on both the Atlantic and Pacific coasts. As a matter of fact, not only were conditions generally better in the industry in 1928 than they had been in 1927, but last year saw the industry more successful and prosperous than in any year save 1926, since the introduction of the Fordney tariff in the United States. In 1926 exceptionally favourable conditions for fishing enabled fishermen to make unusually large catches and greatly increase production. In that year the value of the fishery production of Canada reached $56,360,633, so that production for 1928 was only some $2,300,000 less than for the exceptional year 1926. As compared with 1923 there was increase in the production in 1928 of approximately $11,400,000.

The sea fisheries of the Atlantic coast—that is, the maritime provinces and Quebec—are estimated to have had a production last year valued at $20,750,000. The Pacific Coast production reached approximately $26,250,000 and the value of the production of inland waters was about $7,000,000. In the case of Prince Edward Island there were increases in several of the catches, as, for instance, lobsters (an increase of 1,674 hundredweight to 64,474 hundredweight); oysters (an increase of 685 barrels to 4,756 barrels); scallops, which increased from 96 barrels in 1927 to 320 barrels, and clams and quahaugs, which totalled 2,552 barrels as compared with 1,174 barrels in 1927. On the other hand, there were decreases in such catches as cod, herring and smelt.

The oyster catch in Canada totalled 21,366 barrels as compared with 21,285 barrels in 1927, but there was a decline in the scallop catch from 38,530 barrels in 1927 to 25,834 barrels last year—a condition attributable chiefly to a lower price level. Exploratory and observational work in connection with scallop and oyster resources were carried on in Prince Edward Island and Nova Scotia during the present year by officers of the fisheries branch. At the Halifax experimental station experiments in connection with the rapid freezing process were carried on and the results are such that it is confidently believed that the use of this process will greatly increase the success and prosperity of Atlantic coast fishermen and serve as well the interests of the consumer in the inland areas of Canada.

Departmental broadcasting of weather, ice and bait reports continued to be of great value to the fishermen. Extension of the fish collection service of the branch on certain parts of the Atlantic coast proved very helpful to the fishermen in ensuring them a steady and immediate market for their fish and in enabling them to have more time to devote to the actual process of fishing.

We sincerely hope the government may see its way clear to assist the fishermen in our province in the same way as other parts of the maritimes.

Speaking particularly of our own province we may state that conditions have been moderately good and business fairly well maintained. Our farmers received somewhat of a set-back owing to the low price of potatoes. To those who have the faith and courage to stand up in the face of adversity, however, we have no doubt that over a period of three or four years they will be able to market their crops at an average price. Our farmers are hard working, systematic and energetic and are not easily discouraged.

The citizens of my province are deeply grateful to the Postmaster General (Mr. Veniot) and his very efficient associates for the carrying on of an air mail service between Moncton and Charlottetown for some time past. Weather conditions are sometimes very trying. I understand the company operating gives an excellent service.

The Canadian National railway line to Murray harbour is being standardized this year and in order to complete the necessary work without interfering with traffic, a connecting link will be built from a point on this particular line to another point on what is known as the eastern line. We have been asking for standardization of the road for some years past. It is the only remaining portion of narrow gauge road on the system and we are naturally pleased to see the improvement made. This will not mean any increase in freight rates owing to the longer haul, because the rate will be given on the shortest distance between any two given points. In our province several short branch lines have been asked for and we hope when the system is completely standardized and other necessary work completed that these requests may be given favourable consideration. I shall call this to the attention of the Minister of Railways (Mr. Dunning) when the estimates are up for discussion.

Fox farming, as you are all aware, is a profitable industry in our particular province and brings in a very large revenue. I have not the exact figures for 1928, but the net results would compare favourably, I think, with those of any previous year. Our pelts command the highest prices in the markets of the world, and breeding stock is shipped to many countries. To show the superior value of our silver black foxes one has only to read the last issue of the American magazine containing an article on fox ranching, in which it is stated that the injection of new blood from Prince Edward Island ranches has been a very important factor in the building up of a better quality of foxes in the American ranches.

A large amount of money has been brought into the province due to the export of butter, cheese and eggs, and in the latter line we are very fortunate in having a splendid cooperative company in the province, operated by the farmers themselves. This company has had a very successful season and is doing exceptionally fine work in increasing not only the quantity but the quality of the product as well.

I would like to refer, Mr. Speaker, to one further matter before I take my seat. There is in our opinion a splendid opening for the building of a new hotel in Charlottetown, the capital of the province. The largest hotel at this particular point was burned early in the year. It is understood that Sir Henry Thornton has asked an expert to go over the situation and bring in a report. We sincerely hope it may be favourable. There is every opportunity to make such a hotel pay because we have the climate which is suitable for tourist business. There is splendid sea and surf bathing, good fishing, plenty of sunshine, no fog—with rare exceptions—and in fact everything conducive to the building up of perfect health. There is no place to be found in the maritimes to excel our province, and we confidently hope and expect to see a Canadian National railway hotel located at this particular point, because we feel it will not only help the province but be profitable to the railway as well.

I have spoken, Mr. Speaker, of the wonderful progress being made in Canada in various ways. I am sure that as Canadians we ought to be proud of our country, but I am afraid we sometimes fail to realize just what a wonderful country we have, and in it there is no fairer gem than the little island which I have the honour to represent.

I thank you, Mr. Speaker, for your kind attention.

Mr. D. B. PLUNKETT (Victoria, B.C.): May I offer my congratulations, Mr. Speaker, to the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) upon the services he rendered this country at the signing of the Peace treaty? On that occasion he not only honoured this Dominion, but brought great credit to himself as our representative. And may I convey to the hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency (Mr. Lavigueur) my thanks for his kindly greeting upon my entry to this house? I can assure the hon. member that British Columbia values such courtesy, coming as it does from a representative of the historic province of Quebec.

I am sorry that neither in the speech from the throne nor in the budget as submitted by the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb) was there any specific relief or indication of help for the agricultural interests and working people of this country.

In regard to the prosperity to which the hon. ministers are continually referring to glorify their administration and to distract the attention of the people from the real issue of the day, I would suggest to the Prime Minister that having by force of circumstances been compelled to seek a constituency in the wheat belt, he should visit his constituents occasionally and talk with them. Had he done so I feel sure there would not have been such a tendency on his part to force this myth of prosperity upon the citizens of Canada, and particularly upon those engaged in agricultural pursuits. It is therefore difficult for me to give any further credit to the present government, especially for the budget introduced by the hon. Minister of Finance. I select this sentence from the minister's budget speech:

> The administration will refuse to support any extravagance in the spending of the taxpayers' money.

What hypocrisy and cheap political propaganda that sentence contains! Think of the cost of the trips taken and the time spent by cabinet ministers coming to my constituency in Victoria. I did not have the pleasure of speaking with them on the same platform in Victoria, but I am glad to meet them tonight, for I have a few stories to tell them of what they said on that occasion to the people of the city of Victoria, and I am going to ask them now to make good what they then promised or implied. I would suggest to the hon. members on my left that if they wish to get anything for their constituents they should resign. Then in the ensuing by-elections they will get wonderful promises, but they will have to wait for results.

Before the Prime Minister could become familiar with the plan of campaign of his party managers in Victoria, he sent the following telegram to the Liberal candidate, as it appeared in the Victoria Daily Times of Wednesday, October 31, 1928:

> I am delighted to learn that you have received and accepted the unanimous nomination of the Liberals of Victoria to contest the constituency in the interests of our party in the approaching federal by-election.

That was the only time that the interests of the party were ever mentioned. Presumably the Prime Minister had not yet had an opportunity of consulting his colleagues and did not know the plan of campaign that they had laid down. As I say, that was the only time that "the interests of our party" were mentioned. We were told in Victoria that the issue was local and was being fought by the Liberal party in the interests of our city. But let me proceed with the telegram:

> Your presence in the House of Commons would be of the greatest advantage to the government in every way, but especially in relation to all matters pertaining to the interests of the province of British Columbia.

The Prime Minister has on several occasions lectured the opposition for, as he alleged, preaching sectionalism and dividing east and west. But is it a good thing to favour one province as against the others, as this telegram implies? It might be good tactics at a by-election, but the people of Victoria did not think so; they exercised good judgment. The telegram continues:

> I cannot therefore express too sincerely my hope that in the general interest you may be returned as federal member for Victoria.

During the by-election I had hoped that we would have the presence of the Prime Minister. However, he did not visit us. But perhaps he thought it safer to send telegrams than to lose his political prestige by visiting us and learning at first sight some of the great needs of the Pacific coast, of which needs some of his federal ministers became convinced while with us. We did not have to wait for those ministers to reach Victoria to promise anything and everything; they started to do so even when they were at Vancouver, eighty miles from us.

Mr. STEVENS: Double-headers.

Mr. PLUNKETT: I am quoting now from the Victoria Times:

Expansion—New Steamer Service for B.C. Shippers. Hon. James Malcolm, federal Minister of Trade, tells delegation in Vancouver announcement coming on new link with Mexico and South America, and that request for subsidized service to Australia will have Ottawa's consideration at once.

That is what I want for British Columbia, this subsidized service. I will refer to it again later on. This is what the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce said:

"I hope within a few days to make an announcement that will be in line with your wishes in regard to trade from British Columbia ports to Mexico and other southern ports," declared Hon. James Malcolm, federal Minister of Trade and Commerce, to a delegation of lumber men who waited upon him shortly after his arrival in the city this forenoon, and asked a subsidy for shipping to aid the British Columbia lumber market in Australia.

In the course of my address I shall have occasion to refer again to the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce. Now let me give another quotation respecting what this minister promised to do for Victoria:

On November 26 last at a meeting in the Capitol theatre, Victoria, B.C., in the interests of Dr. MacLean, Liberal candidate, the honourable Minister of Trade and Commerce made this further statement: "British Columbia with its world of resources and its strategic position for world trade, will and must benefit to a greater degree through an aggressive trade policy than any other part of this Dominion, and conversely would suffer more through a restricted trade policy than any other part of the Dominion."

I would ask hon. members to listen to what follows:

In succeeding Dr. Tolmie as your representative at Ottawa, Dr. MacLean will possess the added advantage of supporting the government in power, an advantage so obvious that I do not need to labour it to an intelligent audience.

Mr. GOTT: The old stuff.

Mr. PLUNKETT: The hon. Minister of Finance, speaking with the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce at the same meeting at Victoria on November 26, said:

You will be helping both Victoria and us if you send Dr. MacLean to Ottawa as Victoria's representative in the Dominion House of Commons. I shall return to Ottawa fully convinced that we have duties and responsibilities towards this part of Canada.

After seven years the Minister of Finance realized that he had some "duties and responsibilities" towards the Pacific coast. The representative from our province in the cabinet, the hon. Minister of Pensions (Mr. King), speaking on November 26 at Victoria, and no doubt feeling rather downhearted and despondent as the campaign progressed, decided to introduce a little sympathy to see if that would help out a lost cause, and so he made this statement:

While I am not complaining of the load, there are many times that it would be of the greatest value if I were supported by a member from British Columbia on the government side.

There are twelve Conservative members on this side of the house from British Columbia, and we will help the government any time if they do something for us. We also had a visit from and entertained the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Stewart) on the eve of the election. But as the minister has had so much trouble of late with the Seven Sisters falls episode, I do not propose to quote his statements. I can, however, assure hon. members that he said many kind things of our city, and we were convinced of his enduring affection for us all.

Now I wish to speak for a moment of the appointment of Doctor MacLean to the farm loan board. I had always understood, and I felt when Doctor MacLean was appointed to the position, that it was the job hunting the man —the old story. What does Doctor MacLean know about farming? Can he tell the difference between a sandy loam and a clay bottom? I question whether he can. But Liberal members are very versatile, and there is no job on earth which they cannot fill. If they lose one job they are equally proficient in another.

I am going to lead up to a question now to show these hon. gentlemen who visited us some of the things they could do for my city on the Pacific coast. In 1927 Victoria citizens, led by the city council, the chamber of commerce and some of the leading business men of the city, decided to start a campaign for industrial development. Too many of the young men and women had been compelled to leave for foreign fields through want of employment. There are four major industries in British Columbia—lumbering, agriculture, fishing and mining. Victoria citizens decided, when considering industrial development, to plan and develop a policy covering these four industries. The grain elevator was built for development of the agricultural interests of the prairies and for home markets; the cold storage was for the fishing, meat, fruit and agricultural interests; and the British Columbia worsted mills, to help the sheep and wool industry of the province. All these industries were considered mainly as to the question of providing more employment for working people. The result of the citizens' effort was a grain elevator built with a capacity of 1,000,000 bushels and an unloading capacity of 75,000 bushels in eight hours. Towards the cost of this elevator the city of Victoria has guaranteed the company's bonds to a total of $500,000, both as to principal and interest at 5 per cent; and as to the courage of the citizens let me read a telegram as received in Victoria from Sir Henry Thornton of the Canadian National Railways, showing how Victoria took on these financial obligations:

President.
Victoria Chamber of Commerce,
Victoria, B.C.

I have your telegram in regard to elevator situation. It seems to me the whole situation turns on the passage of the by-law. After discussion with financial people here certainly no banking institution would advance any funds unless it were definitely predicated upon the passage of the by-law. If the by-law is passed apparently you will get the elevator. Financial people here immediately say that if the people of Victoria have not sufficient faith in this proposition to pass the proposed by-law certainly they could not expect any outside interest to put up any money and this argument to my mind is unanswerable. I am sorry I have been unable to help you but it does seem to me that it would be a tragedy if the by-law you mention is not passed without further argument or discussion. I hope the electors will take favourable action and you may count upon our doing everything we can to assist in making the elevator a success from a traffic point of view.

H. W. Thornton.

Mr. BRADY: What have they done so far?

Mr. PLUNKETT: I believe there have been three or four boat loads. The elevator was finished in the summer. There is another telegram:

Montreal, June 30/27.

President,
Victoria Chamber of Commerce,
Victoria, B.C.

Delighted to learn that satisfactory financial arrangements have been made with respect to the construction of a grain elevator. The passage of the elevator by-law by the people of Victoria will establish your city as a permanent grain port. We have assured you the application of the Vancouver grain rate to Victoria thus placing Victoria on an equal basis with other Canadian Pacific ports. Will be glad to receive advice from you directly the by-law has been passed so that steps may be taken to provide for necessary facilities for the handling of the grain to Victoria.

Henry W. Thornton.

I have read these telegrams to show the members of this house what the citizens of Victoria took on, and the extent to which they were willing to pledge their money to make the port of Victoria and the whole Pacific coast fit for working people, and in the interests of the Dominion as a whole. It was not a selfish action on their part, for what they build will be in the interest of Canada at large. A coal storage plant to help the fishing and agricultural industries was also built at a cost of about $650,000, and the city guaranteed the company's earnings on $500,000 at 7 per cent for a period of ten years, which amounted to a pledged maximum amount of $35,000 per year. The British Columbia worsted mills was another plant which was endorsed by the city, and the bonds of this company were guaranteed to a total of $125,000, as to principal and interest at 5 per cent. The city also granted to the company the lands upon which the mills were built. With these industries Victoria taxpayers stand pledged to guarantee interest on bonds to the extent of $1,125,000.

Now what was the attitude of this federal government towards this woollen industry? In February, 1928, they removed the 12½ per cent duty on weaving yarns, which meant that 32 employees, mostly women, were thrown out of employment, as since the removal of this duty not a single pound of yarn has been made for the weaving trade, and the machinery for this line is now standing idle and is useless as a paying unit of this plant. This is the policy of this government. The Victoria taxpayers can put their hands into their pockets and pay out anything, and this government by legislation will nullify all their efforts. What a situation this is for the Victoria taxpayers to face when, after assisting in furnishing the capital to build industries for the Dominion, this government, as led by the right hon. the Prime Minister, immediately brings in legislation which ruins such endeavours for progress and prosperity.

I am now going to speak of the lumber business in British Columbia, and I will show that this government have utterly failed to develop the manufactured lumber industry of the Pacific ocean covering the orient, Mexico, South America, Australia and New Zealand. Australia alone uses about 700,000,000 feet of timber a year and receives 350,000,000 feet from Scandinavia, 300,000,000 feet from the United States, and 50,000,000 feet from Canada. As recently as 1921, about the time the present government of this country came into power, Canada supplied Australia with 42 per cent of the lumber which came from this continent, and last year only 13 per cent was supplied by us; and as our shipments decreased the shipments from the United States have increased. Let there be no misunderstanding. I want the hon. members of this house to know that lumber is not included in the Australian treaty, and if this government were desirous of extending empire trade, why has not a treaty been negotiated with Australia to this end, or an effort made by the government to amend the present treaty so as to include manufactured lumber? A tariff revision was made by the Australian government in 1927. Among other things affected at that time were some items of lumber. Prior to this the Australian tariff board gave the lumber situation careful consideration, and after listening to all phases of the question recommended to their government a revision of the tariff on lumber and lumber products, giving a British and intermediate preference on all items. Unfortunately, this recommendation was not acted upon, but instead tariff changes were adopted with the lower schedules for British preference and with intermediate tariffs eliminated, with the result that lumber products entering Australia from Canada are just where they have always been, on the same basis as the products of the United States or Sweden. American lines of steamships running to Australia and New Zealand are now drawing direct subsidies totalling $1,058,700. I hope that the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Malcolm) will note this, and will try to keep the promise he made in Vancouver, of subsidizing the vessels on the Pacific coast. The British Columbia lumber industry, as distinct from the pulp and paper industry, consists of over 1,000 firms employing over 28,000 men, with an annual pay-roll of over $34,000,000. There is no industry in the province which is of such great importance to the public, and the lumber mills are also the greatest buyers of machinery and supplies. To-day the United States, under the cloak of mail subsidies, is building up and developing a great export trade in timber and other commodities. If the government of this country withdraw the Canadian National steamships from this service, as was intimated by the Minister of Railways according to Hansard of May 20 last, will the freight rates on the Pacific be lowered? Is it not more likely that American ship owners will raise their rates and that the ultimate result will be the complete extinction of our export trade in lumber and many other lines? Should it not be the duty of this government to meet the subsidized competition of the United States ships by taking immediate action to retain this trade, which is the largest in pay-rolls and money invested of all the industries of British Columbia, Vancouver Island alone having 25 per cent of the merchantable timber of Canada?

Now let us take up a concrete example of the inefficiency and lack of detail of the present government with regard to any action for the benefit or convenience of the people. Consider our currency; for over six years we have had the insufferable nuisance of two one-cent pieces and two five-cent pieces, and whom does this affect the most? It has a direct effect on the poor people of this country, and how much longer is this burden to be placed upon them? I suppose when the ministers are travelling around the country they do not bother with pennies or five-cent pieces, but the poor people have them and have had them now for over six years. I would like to ask the responsible minister why these old coins are not called in.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I would say to my hon. friend that the people will have money of all kinds so long as this government remains in office.

Mr. PLUNKETT: There may be money of all kinds but it is very hard for the people to get their hands on it.

Now-a-days we do not hear very much about the reform of the senate, do we? We used to hear rumours of that in British Columbia and I expected to see all young fellows there.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): It is reformed now.

Mr. PLUNKETT: Perhaps so. Surely it cannot be that the Prime Minister, in view of coming events, has thoughts of the red chamber himself; surely not.

Then there is one other matter in which the government have fallen down; they always avoid any talk of the fiscal trade policy of Canada. They do not want that brought up, but I am going to bring it up to-night even though some hon. members never heard of it before. I would like the government, if they believe in the policy of free trade, to inaugurate that policy and make a test of it. The people of Canada are weary of talking about it, and as I look back over the history of the Liberal party in Canada it seems to me like Joseph's coat; it is of many colours in regard to a tariff policy. I remember them talking about free trade, then reciprocity, then commercial union and then restricted reciprocity; they ran short of names and had to start over again, but they never carry their policies into effect. They have lived under protection and are living under it to-day, snipping off a bit here and there in order to keep hon. members to my left in line but not doing the effective work they should be doing and which the people expect them to do.

There is one other matter I must bring up, but about which I must be very careful; I refer to the position taken by the Prime Minister on every occasion. I wonder if he can be smoked out of his position of splendid isolation or whether he is going to wait for coming events to cast their shadows before, as he has done in the past. I do not know just what position he takes, as a matter of fact; it has become a by-word all over Canada. If I were asked to describe his policy I could do so in four words, "dally, linger and wait." This government dally along the highway of opportunity; they linger as Mr. Micawber did in David Copperfield, in the hope that something will turn up, and they wait as they have done in the past to take advantage of the Conservative party when they initiate and develop a policy for the benefit and progress of this country. If the Liberal party would put in a policy of their own they would not require the services of whips as they have needed them during the last three weeks in this house; their supporters would follow the policy even if they did not follow the leader and there would be more jobs open to the whips.

I had intended to take up two or three other matters having to do with the Pacific coast, but I see that Victoria has been granted $46,000 in the estimates. When I go back I will have to tell my people that I do not know just how I will explain it, because when I left Victoria they were speaking of getting $546,000 according to the promises made them. I will go back and do the best I can; I will have to accept the $46,000.

Mr. SPOTTON: And see that it is expended.

Mr. PLUNKETT: Surely they always spend it.

Mr. SPOTTON: No, they do not.

Mr. ELLIOTT: That is a suggestion for the riding of North Huron.

Mr. PLUNKETT: Now I wish to take up a suggestion which was made by the leader of the opposition and which, to my mind, will do more for the benefit and progress of this Dominion and the empire than any other matter before us to-day. If the United States tariff is raised as I hope it will not be, I believe, as an hon. member said the other day, that there is enough red blood in this nation to resent that action, and then perhaps we will do something in regard to our own tariff. I believe if the suggestion made by my leader were put into effect the United States would be very careful as to what they did in relation to this country; I refer to the suggestion that the Prime Minister should call an economic conference of all the dominions of the British commonwealth of nations, to be held in the city of Ottawa. This suggestion was put forward by the leader of the opposition in his speech on the address, but no notice has been taken of it and I suppose the same "dally, linger and wait' policy will be followed in this connection. As we read the press despatches from the motherland, telling of the search of our king and emperor for a sunny clime where he may restore his worn body after years of care and service to the empire. I feel that rays of sunshine and gladness would enter his soul if the news were brought to him that Canada has said, in Kipling's words:

> Daughter am I in my mother's house
> But mistress in my own—

—and that this same daughter had decided to assume her proper place as the oldest of the self-governing dominions and take the lead in settling the economic problems of this great empire. I believe the king would welcome this suggestion and perhaps Britain's greatest ambassador, the Prince of Wales, who has visited every British dominion, might be sent by the king to open such a conference. Has the Prime Minister of this Dominion the courage and vision to grasp this opportunity?

On motion of Mr. Ladner the debate was adjourned.

On motion of Mr. Robb the house adjourned at 10.50 p.m.

Wednesday, March 13, 1929

The house met at three o'clock.

UNOPPOSED MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

DISMISSAL OF GORDON WILKIE

Mr. JOHNSTONE (Cape Breton North-Victoria):

For a copy of all correspondence, telegrams, letters, report of investigation and evidence taken, in connection with the dismissal of Gordon Wilkie from patrol boat No. 4, North Sydney.

BRITISH COLUMBIA PUBLIC TERMINAL ELEVATOR TARIFFS

Mr. EVANS:

For a copy of the evidence taken at the meeting held by the Board of Grain Commissioners in Vancouver last August, in connection with public terminal elevator tariffs in British Columbia.

CIVIL SERVICE SALARIES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. H. H. STEVENS (Vancouver Centre): I should like to draw to the attention of Your Honour and the government question No. 12 which, it has been asked, should stand as an order for return. I submit, with all due deference to the Minister of Labour, that this is not a question properly calculated to be answered by a return. The answers are all very short and simple. I am not asking for a list of names or anything of that kind; I want simply the number. I should like to urge the government that the question should be answered in due course. I am not seeking to inconvenience the minister, but it does not seem to me a question to be answered by a return.

Hon. PETER HEENAN (Minister of Labour): The mistake is mine. I meant that question No. 8 should stand as an order for return. Question No. 12 will be answered.

Mr. STEVENS: I would ask that the record of the clerk be corrected accordingly.

PRIVILEGE—MR. BOYS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. A. BOYS (North Simcoe): On a question of privilege I would like to refer to an editorial which appeared in the Vancouver Daily Sun under date of March 4. My comments are somewhat belated, but I received this in the mail only yesterday from a friend. The editorial which is headed "Patronage Gone Mad" is in part as follows:

The announcement by the Tolmie government of British Columbia that W. A. Boys, K.C., former Conservative whip, has been appointed to assist Leon J. Ladner, K.C., in handling British Columbia's freight rate problem, comes as a shock, and would appear to be an admission that the government fears that Mr. Ladner, on account of his inexperience in such matters may not be able to properly handle the case alone. Just why the government of British Columbia should have to go outside of this province and go to the east to get a lawyer to represent it in the all-important matter of freight rates, is a question which every business man in Vancouver should ask himself.

Then follow two or three other paragraphs which I need not read, but I will read the last one:

The government has now not only appointed Leon J. Ladner, K.C., of British Columbia, to represent it, but has also appointed W. A. Boys, K.C., of Ontario. Surely this is patronage gone mad.

I regret that no such honour has come to me. I have not been retained in any capacity whatsoever by the British Columbia government in connection with freight rates or anything else. I took the trouble to make inquiry as to the basis of this editorial, and I found that the services of Mr. A. C. Boyce, until recently a member of the Dominion railway commission, have been secured. Instead of the Vancouver Daily Sun criticizing this as "patronage gone mad," I think the government of Doctor Tolmie should be congratulated upon securing the services of such an eminent and able counsel as Mr. A. C. Boyce.

I would ask the representative of the Vancouver Daily Sun in the press gallery to make the necessary correction, and also to see that it receives, at all events, as much publicity as the editorial complained of.

EASTER ADJOURNMENT

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): There is a motion on the order paper under my name reading as follows:

That when the house adjourns on Friday, the 22nd of March, instant, it stand adjourned until Tuesday, the 2nd of April, next.

Since that notice appeared, I have been advised that in some parts of the house preference has been expressed for an adjournment from Wednesday, the 27th of March, until Monday, the 8th April, instead of the period within the dates previously suggested.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No, no.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: What I was about to suggest, Mr. Speaker, is that instead of pressing the motion at the moment the whips of the different parties should get together this afternoon and, if possible, take some sort of a census. The government will be pleased to abide by the wishes of the house as a whole.

Mr. BENNETT: It stands in the meantime.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. PETER McGIBBON (Muskoka): I would like to ask the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) a question. I am not finding fault with the Prime Minister's answer of yesterday, because I realize that he cannot be posted on everything. But I have in my hand an order in council that was passed imposing a tax on all canoes and motor boats in the Muskoka lakes, a thing that is very much resented by the people in that district. I would ask the Prime Minister if he would be good enough to rescind it. It was asked for by people from outside Muskoka, tourists. The request did not come from the people of the district.

Mr. DUFF: It is a license fee.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Perhaps my hon. friend (Mr. McGibbon) will let me see the order in council he has reference to. I think possibly my hon. friend is using a word that is not appropriate under the circumstances. It is suggested that it is a fee that may be imposed under a regulation. It is not an order in council imposing a tax. I will guarantee him that.

IMMIGRATION OF MINER-HARVESTERS

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre): According to the press, Mr. Speaker, arrangements have been made for the bringing in of more miner-harvesters from Great Britain, but apparently there is no provision for them being sent back in case of their not being able to retain positions. May I ask, in that event, who is to be responsible for their keep?

Hon. ROBERT FORKE (Minister of Immigration and Colonization): I will try, Mr. Speaker, to allay the hon. member's fears, if I possibly can. There is a despatch in this morning's paper, unauthorized by myself—I have no idea how it leaked out. It is partly true, but it does not give the proper explanation of what has taken place. I can assure the hon. gentleman (Mr. Woodsworth), however, that every precaution will be taken that anyone who is brought over here from Great Britain under any scheme of the department will be taken care of by the department.

Mr. ADSHEAD: What is the precaution?

Mr. FORKE: That can be gone into at a later date. This is not the proper time to make an explanation of that kind.

HOUSE OF COMMONS ELEVATOR SERVICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. THOMAS CANTLEY (Pictou): I understand, Mr. Speaker, that you are the protector of the rights and privileges of the members of this house. I call your attention to the fact that since the opening of the present session the elevators on the east corridor have not been operating either on Saturday or Sunday, or on any holidays we have had in the meantime. Unfortunately for the members from the eastern provinces also those from the province of British Columbia and other western provinces, we are forced to remain here over the week-end. Hon. members from Ontario and Quebec are able to go home over the week-end. Some of us endeavour to catch up with our correspondence on Saturday. You are aware, sir, that the room occupied by the stenographers is immediately adjoining one of the elevators that I refer to. As I say, during the present session, those elevators have not been operated on Saturday or Sunday, and I strongly protest against it. I appeal to you, sir, to see that they are operated for the remainder of the session.

Mr. SPEAKER: I have nothing to do with the elevators. They come under the immediate control of the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Elliott). I have called his attention to this matter. As he is in his seat he might perhaps explain to the hon. member the reason why those elevators are not running on Saturdays and Sundays.

Hon. J. C. ELLIOTT (Minister of Public Works): I might say, Mr. Speaker, that there is a desire in the Department of Public Works to observe the Sabbath day as far as possible. A certain number of elevators are kept going both on Saturday and Sunday, a number that was thought to be sufficient to supply the needs of the hon. members who were working on those days. I understand that such has been the case and that there is always an elevator available by just going round the corner from the elevator that is referred to by my hon. friend. However, if it is found that anybody is suffering inconvenience on account of inadequate elevator facilities, either going up or going down, we will endeavour to rectify it.

Mr. CANTLEY: I know exactly what elevators are operating, Mr. Speaker, and I know what elevators are not available. I expect that the members of this house will be able to obtain the facilities they formerly had. It is something new to find this government talking economy in matters of this kind.

UNEMPLOYMENT IN CITIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. L. CHURCH (Toronto Northwest): May I ask the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) whether the government has any plan for providing useful employment to the great number of unemployed in the large cities of Canada?

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Up to the present, Mr. Speaker, the government has not given consideration to the matter to which my hon. friend refers.

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON THE ANNUAL FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The house resumed from Tuesday, March 12, consideration of the motion of Hon. J. A. Robb (Minister of Finance) that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of ways and means, and the proposed amendment thereto of Hon. Hugh Guthrie.

Mr. L. J. LADNER (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, I desire first to pay a tribute to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb) for his able, concise and clear budget statement. I desire also to pay a tribute to the hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie) for his masterly review of the budget and for the manner in which he pointed out the fallacies and analysed the consequences of the minister's proposals.

Before entering upon the main theme of my remarks this afternoon, I wish to say a few words in connection with old age pensions. Hon. members will recall how in 1925 and 1926 the King government made a very strong appeal to the people of Canada to support their proposals with respect to old age pensions. They took the opportunity to claim full credit for having introduced that legislation. But having been elected to power, we now see certain doubts cast on the constitutionality of the Old Age Pensions Act, and those who are raising such doubts appear to have the sympathy of the Liberal government as well as of other Liberal forces throughout the Dominion. We have lately read in the press a statement by the Premier of Quebec that he had obtained the opinion of three eminent counsel to the effect that the old age pensions legislation is unconstitutional, and that the Dominion government has no authority to make contributions to the provinces for that purpose. At the time, sir, I did not pay any special attention to Mr. Taschereau's observation. We know that the province of Ontario is about to adopt the old age pension scheme. British Columbia, Saskatchewan and Manitoba have already adopted it.

But something still more significant was the attitude of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) a few days ago when we were discussing the question of federal grants to the provinces for highway construction. Referring to that system of federal assistance to the provincial governments, the Prime Minister stated:

> It is a bad system, a thoroughly vicious system, and that is the reason why the present administration has been seeking to put an end to a system that grew up at a time when the country was in the throes of war or had to meet a post war situation.

I asked the Prime Minister:

> What about old age pensions?

He replied:

> I am glad my hon. friend speaks of that. There is another case where we are giving to the provinces a lot of money in addition to what they are raising.
> Mr. Ladner: Is that vicious?
> Mr. Mackenzie King: I think it is, yes; I have come to the conclusion that it is a thoroughly vicious principle.
> Mr. Ladner: Why doesn't the government provide for old age pensions itself instead of shifting it to the provinces?
> Mr. Mackenzie King: It is the province's obligation, and so far as this government is concerned we have sought to safeguard the public treasury to the extent at least of one half of the required expenditure whereas hon. gentlemen opposite claimed they were prepared to duplicate what we are doing by assuming the entire obligation. What has been already paid in old age pensions in the province from which my hon. friend comes? We have given to the province of British Columbia $423,105.84; to the province of Manitoba $122,332.42; and to the province of Saskatchewan $76,417.62; or a total to these three provinces, thus far, of $621,855.88.

And the Prime Minister proceeded to state that hon. members would live to see the day when the annual payment will be something like twelve million dollars, which I think is an extravagant guess. What struck me as being very significant was the fact that in the midst of a debate on federal aid to the provinces for the construction of highways the Prime Minister should happen to have lying on his desk detailed information with respect to the contribution by the Dominion government to the provinces in respect to old age pensions, a subject that has very little relationship to highways. I refer to this, Mr. Speaker, because to some of us it is a question of far-reaching importance to this country. The old age pensions system in my judgment is sound from an economic point of view. It is not only a humanitarian act to alleviate the distress of our old folks in their closing days, but it is the just and right thing to do in the best interests of the Dominion. If it is the fact, Mr. Speaker, to me it is inconceivable that this government and the Liberal forces throughout Canada should be parties to a scheme to submarine their old age pension legislation after it has served their purpose before the electorate. It seems to me that the suggestion to test the constitutionality of the Old Age Pensions Act by a reference to the supreme court is an indirect method of destroying the effectiveness of the legislation, resorted to by certain forces in the Liberal party that do not approve of old age pensions and would like to shift the whole burden upon the provinces.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct the attention of the house to certain phases of the budget and to the fiscal policy of the government. The financial picture as disclosed by the Minister of Finance reveals, briefly, that we have this year a revenue of approximately $455,000,000, and expenditure of $385,000,000, and that this expenditure is $22,000,000 more than the expenditure last year. There is a surplus of approximately $70,000,000. The deadweight debt as of March 31 this year is $2,330,835,000. Our funded and bonded debt has increased by $28,000,000. But, sir, it is a source of pride that 71 per cent of the funded debt is held by the people of this country.

I wish to commend to the government the suggestion of my leader (Mr. Bennett), which suggestion was repeated the other day by the hon. member for South Wellington, with regard to adopting a policy for the reduction and ultimate extinction of the national debt. That suggestion was a sound constructive one. My leader pointed out that by providing a fund of $15,000,000 per annum with interest at four per cent, the debt would be extinguished in a period of fifty years. The hon. member for South Wellington also recalled to our minds that notwithstanding the method in which the budget was presented to the house, during the five years prior to 1922, under the Conservative government, the average surpluses were $66,700,000 per year, while under the present government, which has enjoyed the advantage of prosperous conditions, those surpluses were $69,700,000 a year, or a difference of only $3,000,000. I repeat those figures because I think it is well for hon. members to keep them in mind.

The fiscal policy of this government is a very indefinite one. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that our fiscal policy must be judged by its results on the masses of the people and upon the economic prosperity of the country. Throughout the world we are witnessing great economic prosperity—in North America, in South America, and in the European countries. When we analyze the returns in the report of the Minister of Labour we find this astounding situation, that due to our low tariff our working men are at the mercy of the cheap labour of foreign countries, and that comparing 1928 with the preceding years back to 1922, the average wages paid have decreased in all lines of industry; but while the wages have decreased the cost of living, based upon the family budget of twenty-nine staple articles, has gone up from five to ten per cent. So far as the manufacturers are concerned, raw or partly manufactured materials have advanced since 1922 between 7 and 10 per cent. But while the cost of raw material has gone up, the price of the manufactured articles as sold by the manufacturer has gone down. This report given by the Minister of Labour (Mr. Heenan) discloses that the manufactured articles have decreased in price about 9 per cent. So that the industries in our country are placed between the millstones of an increase in the cost of raw materials and a decrease in the selling price of the product. In other words, the fiscal policy of this government is destroying our industrial life while it is not assisting agriculture. On page 7 of the minister's report it will be seen that carpenters, electrical workers, plasters, sheet metal workers, stone cutters, boiler makers and machinists have had no advance in wages during the six years of Liberal rule, although the cost of living has gone up from 5 to 10 per cent. That summary, with the authenticity of the data upon which it is based, should effectively dispose of the attitude of the government, that the best interests of this country will be served by a lower and ever lower tariff until the free trade stage is reached

> The policy of this administration is not a high tariff policy; it is a low tariff policy.

In contrast with this we have the policy of the Conservative party, strongly held to and enunciated again in the amendment to this budget, that we believe in safeguarding and protecting our agricultural and industrial life. The positions of these two great parties are in striking contrast; and their relationship to each other and to the welfare of the country is brought forcibly to our attention by the attitude of the United States with respect to that country's tariff proposals, with which it is intended to deal at the special session of congress in April. I, for one, am of the opinion that we should deal with this matter in a spirit of good will, in a spirit of respect, in a spirit of tolerance, knowing that the question of the tariff in the United States is one of their own concern; it is their business. But in so far as it relates to their export trade, in so far as it relates to the $850,000,000, mostly of manufactured goods, which Canada purchases from the United States, then we in turn should give some attention to our own situation and our own welfare. I direct the attention of the house to some significant words of President Hoover spoken during his good will tour through the South American republics. Speaking in the republic of San Salvador he said:

> Our international and economic relations can have but one real foundation: They can grow only out of the prosperity of each of us. They cannot flourish in the poverty or degeneration of any of us. Our economic progress is mutual: It is not competitive.

These are splendid words, but when we read the remarks of the leaders of the party in congress we learn their real intent. Not that I complain about it, but it is a fact of which we should be possessed. Mr. Wallace Hawley, chairman of the ways and means committee of the United States, as reported in the local press, stated the situation in congress in rather significant words. Addressing a meeting in Boston on Saturday last, he said:

> The protective tariff is a domestic question. Foreign interests have no inherent right to trade in our markets. The admission of imports is an act of comity between nations, and we have the right to prescribe the conditions of which they shall enter our market.

I cannot see that the people of this country can have any complaint against that stand, but I can see where the government of this country can take notice of it and shape this country's course in a manner that will serve the best interests of the people of Canada. The United States has in the neighbourhood of $3,300,000,000 invested in this country while Great Britain has $2,200,000,000. We have important business with the United States and we want to keep their good will. Big business can be done with our friends to the south, and we hope it will be done. But it is folly in the extreme for them to exclude, if they intend to do so, the comparatively small quantity of goods, mostly raw materials, which we are sending to the United States and expect us to buy nearly a billion dollars' worth of goods from them a year. If they expect that, they are expecting too much and they should not be disappointed if we endeavour to trade in some other portions of the world.

The people of Canada have too much pride to approach this problem in the spirit of a mendicant or of a dependent; we must have courage, self-reliance and confidence in our nation as well as in our people. Now the question presents itself: just what should we do? I propose to offer a suggestion, which is somewhat different from some of the suggestions that have already been submitted to parliament. The government's course is a negative one; they have been drifting for years. The Liberal tariff airship has been gradually floating southward. This is not good for this country. If I were the leader of this government I would ask parliament, in the face of this impending crisis, to give authority to my government to make such variation in the tariff as might be in the interests of Canada, having regard to the action which the United States will take in April next. Then, sir, the day on which that action became effective under the laws of the United States, tariff adjustments based upon the safeguarding and protecting of our agricultural and industrial interests should likewise be made effective in Canada. I submit that if we wait until next session, or until a special session of parliament is called, irreparable damage will have been done to the agricultural and industrial life of this country, and more particularly to the great masses of our people who depend upon their wages for their living. But it is very unlikely that the King government will take this course. They have never shown any real courage and backbone in handling either the tariff question or any other problem in relation to the United States, and in my judgment Canada would gain the admiration and respect of the people of the United States if we displayed a little more courage and confidence in our own country and looked after our own interests to the advantage of our own people.

The tariff question is something which is discussed annually in parliament; it has been discussed for years. Read speeches delivered in the past; read budget debates as far back as you like to go, and you will find that there have been always two schools of thought on the question. In the past we have had an actual experiment to show the effect upon the people of this country of the increase of our tariff. There is a fallacy, shared to a large extent by members of the government and by some of our Progressive friends from the prairies, that an increase in duties necessarily involves an increase in price. That is an economic fallacy. I would commend to hon. members a study of the budget speech delivered by Sir Leonard Tilley in 1882. A very exhaustive and careful inquiry had been made of the consequences and the effects of the national policy of 1878, and Sir Leonard Tilley uttered the following words, to which I will ask hon. members to pay particular attention, inasmuch as they apply with equal force to-day and no doubt are frequently quoted:

What our manufacturers say is "We can manufacture as cheaply here as in the United States, but we want the market. We are prepared for the sharpest competition, and we do not fear our friends on the other side of the line, if we have the home market, and competition among ourselves will keep the prices down to the consumer."

The basis and accuracy of the inquiry is evidenced in these words of Tilley:

I wish reliable data, not data that could be shaken by any statement of fact that could be produced in the house, because we want nothing but the facts, and if the manufacturers are getting larger profits, it would be just as well that we should know of it, and deal with the facts as we found them.

Then he quotes a number of articles showing the variations in prices as a result of the increase in duty. I have copied them from the budget speech of 1882, and with the permission of the house I would ask that this short table be placed on Hansard:

Article	Variation in price
Etoffes, Tweeds, Fabrics	Average price lower than during previous 10 years.
Grey and white cotton and brown sheetings	10 per cent lower.
Medium and fine woollen fabrics	Lower than any time in history.
Woollen goods	Average price lower than for 10 years prior to 1878.
Flannels, Blankets	As low as any period in 10 years.
Coarse woollen caps and felt hats	Lower.
Underclothing	Lower.
Wagons	Lower (from $62 to $60).
Carriages	Lower (from $105 to $100).
Covered buggies	Lower (from $160 to $150).
Ploughs	15 per cent lower.
All agricultural implements	5 per cent to 20 per cent lower.
Organs	15 per cent lower.
Sewing machines (with business trebled)	$10 each cheaper.
Boots and shoes and leather goods, hand made	15 per cent higher.
Boots and shoes and leather goods, factory made	10 per cent to 25 per cent less.
Furniture, best class	Higher.
Furniture, ordinary class	Lower.
Stoves	A little higher.
Iron castings	9 per cent higher (equivalent to increased cost of pig iron and labour).
Tools and files	Cheaper.
Cut nails	5 per cent lower.
Finished nails	9 per cent lower.
Pressed spikes	12 per cent lower.
Railway spikes	$2 per ton lower.
Nuts and bolts	Cheaper.
Horse shoes	8 per cent higher.
Tea	5 cents to 6 cents per pound cheaper.
Sugar	50 cents per 100 pounds cheaper.
Molasses	10 per cent cheaper.
Rice	10 per cent cheaper.
Spices	Duty and price unchanged.
Soap	12 per cent higher, owing to increase in raw material entering duty free.

The effect of the increase in the tariff duties was this: There was an actual reduction in the cost of living of from 5 per cent to 10 per cent on the articles named. I say, Mr. Speaker, that this was an experiment; the conditions of 1878 were not the conditions of 1928, but generally speaking the economic conditions of 1878 with relation to 1882 were very much the same, and from this experiment we may obtain facts of great significance and benefit to those studying this problem to-day. when we are about to be faced with a high tariff wall in the United States.

What were the consequences of the application of the national policy with regard to an increased tariff? During those three years 95 new factories were established employing over 7,000 men; cotton factories to be completed before the end of 1882 would employ an additional 3,000 men. Of the 440 factories investigated and in operation in 1878, less the 95 factories mentioned, there was an increase in the number of men employed of from 5 per cent to 30 per cent, or an average of 17 per cent in 350 factories. In other words, in that three year period there was an increase of 24,875 men employed.

A more exhaustive examination was made in the city of Hamilton, and the results are extremely instructive. By the application of the national policy of Sir John A. Macdonald we find that the value of buildings occupied as factories in Hamilton was $705,200 in 1878, and by 1881 this had increased by $369,000, an increase of 51 per cent. The value of buildings had increased 113 per cent; the value of goods manufactured by 94 per cent; the number of employees by 117 per cent, and the average rate of wages per head showed an increase of 9¼ per cent. There was a further effect with respect to the activity of those factories which had not been operating full time. In 1878, thirty-three workshops were running full time and 24 were running short time; in 1881 fifty-six shops were running full time, one was running short time and 21 were working overtime. The rate of wages generally throughout the Dominion had greatly increased. These benefits were received not only by the industrial life of the country; our agricultural life received a great impetus as well. This report shows that there was an increased home market, an increase in the consuming power of the people, providing better home markets, and ability on the part of the farmers to obtain higher prices for vegetables, fruit, poultry, lamb, all kinds of meat, butter, cheese, oats and corn. In addition, the coal industry made a tremendous advance. A prominent Liberal manufacturer of Montreal named Green was asked this question: "If wages are higher how could the prices of commodities be lower?" Mr. Green's reply to Sir Leonard Tilley was, "Now we have doubled our production; we have orders ahead and our expenses of mangement have not increased, so we can sell at lower prices than we could before." The national revenue was greatly benefited and a deficit of $200,000 was turned into a surplus of $4,000,000. I refer to these matters, Mr. Speaker, because a careful study of the results of the application of a protective tariff in order to safeguard the agricultural and industrial life of this country shows that the cost of living does not as a result go higher, but that wages increase and that the volume of business becomes much larger.

This phase of our national life, in connection with the prospective attitude of the United States, is of great importance to British Columbia, where we have a population of 625,000 people. From our ports we export one-ninth of Canada's total annual exports. In 1928 the value of our forest products was approximately $94,000,000; of our mineral wealth, $65,000,000; of our agricultural production, $58,00,000; of our fisheries, $26,000,000, while the value of our manufactured goods was $300,000,000. In other words, in British Columbia we have diversified employment. More ships entered the port of Vancouver in 1927 and 1928 than entered any other Canadian harbour, something over 22,000, and we have some sixty steamship lines plying from Vancouver. As I say, in British Columbia we have diversified employment and activity; we have lumbering, mining, farming, fishing, transportation and the production of hydro-electric power, and with us the question of tariff is a matter of life and death. Eighty-five per cent of our lumber and shingle exports find a market in the United States; that is one of our greatest industries, and you can see the probable consequences of what would be an almost complete elimination of that market if the tariff duties of the United States were increased. We would have to readjust ourselves and find new markets, and that would be a difficult thing to do. So, where British Columbia is concerned, they scrutinize carefully the conduct of this government, and I can assure hon. gentlemen opposite that unless a sure and careful course is pursued, British Columbia, together with the rest of Canada, will express it resentment at the next election and will return to power a government which will put into effect a policy which will safeguard and protect the industrial and agricultural life of this country.

In our province the Australian trade treaty is a matter of considerable importance, and I desire to say a few words in that connection because we believe that a great deal of benefit could be obtained from that treaty. In making these observations, however, I wish to point out to the government that the trouble in which they now find themselves because of the harm done the agricultural industry of Canada, and particularly the dairy industry, is of their own making. They could have avoided that situation in the first place, and had they done so they would not find themselves in their present awkward position. When that treaty was originally negotiated it was worked out on what I might call a protective basis, to which the government of Australia were quite agreed. In order to give preference to Australia in the items contained in the treaty it was proposed to raise the general tariff with respect to other countries but to leave it as it stood with respect to Australia. In other words, the protective duty on butter and other agricultural products coming into this country from Australia would have remained as it was and Australia would have had the full benefit of the terms of the treaty; our industries would have been protected and we would have had no trouble. Instead of following that course, however, the Minister of Finance sent a representative to Australia, I suggest at the instance of the free trade members from the prairie provinces who raised some objection in the matter of raisins —and by the way, I believe that no quantity of raisins of any consequence has come to Canada under this treaty—and this representative brought back an alternative proposal from the government of Australia. Under that proposal the treaty was modified on a lower tariff or free trade basis. They allowed the existing duty under the general tariff to remain but in order to give Australia a preference, the duties on those items so far as Australia was concerned, were lowered. In that way they established preferences upon a free trade basis which caused unnecessary injury to the dairy business of this country. I must repeat the words of the Finance minister when he spoke the other day: "the policy of this administration is a low tariff policy."

I would like to refer to the matter of state health insurance. In my judgment the time will soon come, having regard to the surpluses we are enjoying and to the healthy condition of this country, when steps could very well be taken with regard to the question of medical assistance to the poorer people by means of some form of state health insurance. This system of aiding the masses of the people in medical and maternity benefits has been in operation in Great Britain and in other European countries since 1912, and has worked to the tremendous advantage of the masses of the people.

A matter of local importance to Vancouver is the question of an airport. Communications have been exchanged between the municipal authorities and the government of Canada, and some of us down here also have been in communication with the government. The government has announced its policy as that of being unwilling to assist in the establishment of airports, except to the extent of assisting the provision of beacon lights and making a fifty per cent contribution towards certain standard lighting equipment. I think the government should reconsider this matter. Canada has contributed vast sums of money toward the development of railway transportation systems. Aeroplanes and airships constitute a new system of transportation, and I think this is a matter of national policy which the government should consider. Aerial transportation is of great assistance to the Postmaster General in the transportation of mail, and it also is of no inconsiderable consequence in the matter of national defence.

A further matter of local importance is the harbour of the north arm of the Fraser river. That portion of the Fraser river is adjacent to the southern boundary of the city of Vancouver and constitutes the fresh-water harbour of the city. In the past, and particularly under Conservative governments, the importance of this arm for transportation and industrial purposes was realized, and approximately $900,000 was spent on the river. A jetty was built out to salt water, but at present that jetty is in a state of disrepair, and other works upon the river are urgently required. Our communications with the government in regard to this matter have not been entirely successful. There is a steady movement of industry from in and around the city of Vancouver to the north arm of the Fraser river, and these works are very necessary.

Another question of interest to the province of British Columbia is the matter of national highways. This matter was the subject of discussion in the house a few days ago, but the province of British Columbia stands in a special position in that respect. One of the terms under which we joined with the rest of Canada at the time of confederation was that in addition to a railway there would be constructed what was called in those days a wagon road through British Columbia to connect with the prairies. Certain concessions were made by our province in consideration of that arrangement. A dispute arose, and the government sent out a representative to make an investigation. The province offered, and the government of Canada accepted the offer, to abide by the decision of the Earl of Carnarvon, who was to investigate the matters in dispute, the government of Canada agreed that his award, would be carried out. The Earl of Carnarvon investigated the whole matter and made an award to the effect that the government of Canada should construct that road. That however, has never been done, and I would urge upon the government that they discharge their solemn obligation in that respect. The highway to which I refer is absolutely justifiable and necessary so far as our province is concerned, and in my judgment a national highway is justifiable in the best interests of Canada as a whole.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would say that I hope the government, in considering the problems which face this country, will forget the pledges of a political nature which have been made in the past, whenever such pledges are found to be unsound. The Prime Minister has told us that the platform of 1919 was merely a chart to guide him. That same reasoning should apply to-day when we are faced with possible action by the United States with respect to the tariff. I hope the government of this country, be it Liberal or Conservative, will have sufficient courage and determination and such pride in this country that they will give their best attention to the real interests of the people of Canada; that no matter what action the United States may take on this tariff question, their conduct shall be of such a dignified nature as to redound to the benefit of this country; that it will be characterized by good-will and tolerance, but also by a firmness of decision that the interests of Canada must come first.

Hon. P. J. VENIOT (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, in rising to say a few words on the budget I am not going to take up the time of the house in congratulating the Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb); because congratulations have been so heartily extended to him by every member of the opposition who has spoken that it is not necessary for us on this side of the house to repeat them.

Before touching on the main points which I wish to discuss, and to which I have given some thought, I should like to refer to the remarks of the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Ladner), who has just taken his seat. In order to prove to the house that an increased tariff did not increase the price of goods at home, he went back as far as 1882 and quoted Sir Leonard Tilley, one of the ablest men the province of New Brunswick has ever produced. If the hon. member wished to be convinced he was in error in making the statement he did, he need not have gone back to 1882; he had only to refer to the stand taken by the financial critic of the opposition, the member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie), who in 1917 felt that he had proved absolutely to the house that an increased tariff did increase the cost of goods for home consumption. There is no need, I say, for my hon. friend to go back as far as 1882.

Mr. LADNER: Does the hon. gentleman mean—

Mr. VENIOT: Now, I did not interrupt the hon. gentleman. I kept very quiet while he was speaking.

Mr. LADNER: The hon. gentleman has made a mistake, that is all.

Mr. VENIOT: I do not intend to allow the hon. gentleman to throw me off my argument, or take up my time.

Mr. LADNER: I rise to a question of privilege. The minister is misquoting my statement. I said that the increase in duties did not increase the price of goods; I did not say consumption.

Mr. VENIOT: That is what I said. If I am not able to make myself sufficiently clear in English to the hon. gentleman, perhaps I can do so in French.

Let me refer to another point made by the hon. member for Vancouver South. When he discussed the Australian treaty, I rather thought he would have defended the Minister of Finance for his bringing about that treaty. The hon. gentleman says that now he feels he should condemn the Australian treaty because of the injury it has done to the dairy industry of Canada. The hon. gentleman had ample proof of what the Australian treaty could do and was doing when, during the by-election in Vancouver, he addressed a public meeting on November 28 last and took credit for almost compelling the Minister of Finance to bring that treaty in. This is how he tells the story; I am going to give it in his own way. He says:

I saw Mr. Robb later—

I am not going to read the whole of his speech.

—and he assured me he would reintroduce the treaty, which was done the next day.

Everybody knows how the Minister of Finance called the bluff of the opposition and withdrew his motion touching the treaty, but at the solicitation of the hon. member for Vancouver South, who had such influence with the Minister of Finance, he reintroduced the motion the next day in connection with the treaty. The hon. member takes credit for that. He goes on to say:

The records show that the first speakers to follow with support of the treaty were Doctor Manion and myself.

I noticed the other day that the hon. gentleman whom my hon. friend mentions as having followed him in influencing the Minister of Finance was one of those who applauded the loudest the financial critic of the opposition when in unmeasured terms he condemned the Australian treaty.

Mr. MANION: My hon. friend is imagining things.

Mr. VENIOT: I thought my hon. friend would rise at this. What is the spectacle we have in the house to-day? We have members of the Conservative party applauding their temporary leader when he condemns the Australian treaty, and others, when they go out into the country, claiming credit for having forced the government to put the treaty on the statute books. That is the situation. But we have a worse situation than that in the house. We have our friends discussing the tariff and pleading for higher duties, claiming that it is the only way to bring about prosperity in Canada, but perhaps, according to them, to continue the prosperity that we as Liberals have given to Canada under a low tariff. We have these hon. gentlemen on the one hand pleading for higher tariffs; but if you touch hard coal or bituminous coal for steel purposes in Ontario, if you add a duty to it, Ontario will go wild. On the other hand, we have our friends down in the maritime provinces, especially from Nova Scotia, asking for a duty on coal and more encouragement for the steel industry in the way of duty because, after all, the bonus amounts to that. We have the Conservative party representing Ontario at loggerheads with the Conservative party representing Nova Scotia.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. VENIOT: My hon. friends say "No," because they are driven to the wall now. I am laying down the situation as it exists.

An hon. MEMBER: The minister does not know the situation in Ontario.

Mr. VENIOT: I know that the Steel Company of Canada and other steel works and industries in Ontario will not be satisfied until they have obtained a drawback on United States bituminous coal to help those industries. That is equal to free entry.

Mr. MacDONALD (Cape Breton South): They have it now.

Mr. VENIOT: Exactly, they have it, but the very moment the government would attempt to impose a duty on coal, Ontario would go into revolt. It does not surprise me at all to find hon. gentlemen getting up from their seats when their political duplicity is exposed.

I want to refer to a few other statements of the financial critic of the opposition. The other day when he was delivering what I am satisfied to call a very good speech from the standpoint of the opposition, but one of the most inconsistent speeches that I have ever heard fall from the lips of any public man; when he was making his argument on the financial condition of Canada as reported in the budget speech, I happened to smile. I did not think it was any offence to smile while I occupied my seat in the house, but immediately the financial critic of the opposition threw across the floor of the house the question: "Why is the Postmaster General smiling? He has shown complete ignorance of the financial conditions of Canada." That was because I smiled. After this I suppose members on the government side of the house will have to go on their bended knees to ask hon. gentlemen opposite, especially those in the front seats, whether we may smile or laugh. I want to say to the hon. member for South Wellington that there was a reason for my smiling; it was because of the way he was handling the finances of the Dominion of Canada in direct opposition to the way in which he handled them and to the principles he applied in years gone by. Conditions have not changed from what they were in 1916 and 1917 when I, as a Liberal, was wont and proud to follow the arguments and to accept the principles of my hon. friend. If he was right then, he is wrong now, and if he is right now he was wrong then; and he led many Liberals in Ontario and other parts of the Dominion astray by the principles he laid down at that time. He is on the horns of a dilemma, and he cannot very well extract himself from either.

But there was another reason why I smiled at the expense of my hon. friend, and I am going to refer to it. For instance, dealing with the tariff, he laid down the principle that for the benefit of Canada we should have a high tariff, or a tariff higher than we have to-day; that that was the only salvation for Canada, the only solution of our present financial or economic ills. And my mind ran back to those days when I, with other Liberals, travelled many long miles to hear the eloquent voice of the member for South Wellington laying down the principle that you must have free trade in Canada, especially in certain commodities.

Permit me, Mr. Speaker, to quote the hon. gentleman, and to ask if his stand then is consistent with his stand at the present time. In 1914 a debate took place in the house on the question of tariff. The Prime Minister of the Dominion at that time was pleading that if we admitted farm implements duty free into Canada, the great combines in the United States that were controlling the farm implements in that country would swamp Canada and put our manufacturers of farm implements out of business. On page 1567 of the Hansard of 1914, the hon. member for South Wellington said:

> There is a free market in Great Britain, and the trusts and the combines, the tremendous organizations which manufacture agricultural implements in the United States, meet in the free market of Great Britain the manufacturers of Canada, and Canada holds her own.

Of course, Canada can hold its own. Canada has always held it own, especially under the tariff laid down by the present government. And then he goes on:

> I desire in a few words to show that the removal, the entire abolition of the Canadian duties on agricultural implements, would not do an injustice to a single manufacturing establishment in Canada.

I should like, Mr. Speaker, to have an explanation from the hon. gentleman. Perhaps he has had a change of heart. I should like to know why that change of heart came about in respect to those questions, his views on which I—older, I think, than he is in age, but perhaps not in politics—was so proud to follow when he laid down that principle in the statement I have just read.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Does the hon. member desire the answer now?

Mr. VENIOT: No, not just now. The hon. gentleman, Mr. Speaker, had his opportunity, and he should have explained to this house his change of heart. But he thought the task was too heavy and he did not undertake it at that time, and I am not going to give him an opportunity now, in my time, to try to retrieve himself.

The acting leader of the opposition, Mr. Speaker, severely condemns this government because imports, he says, are too heavy, and of course he attributes this to want of a higher tariff in Canada. I wish to lay before the house a few figures to show that the principle laid down by the hon. gentleman was not a correct one. Let us take, for instance, the United States, the highest protected country in the world. I do not think I am making any mistake when I say that. We have it that under their high tariff the United States imported, in 1913, $1,756,900,000 worth of goods. In 1926—thirteen years afterwards—this had increased to $4,333,900,000. There is a country under the highest tariff in the world increasing its imports in thirteen years by three hundred per cent.

An hon. MEMBER: How about her exports?

Mr. VENIOT: If the hon. gentleman will just have patience I will come to that in a minute. Let us look at Canada, a moderately protected country, but a highly protected country in the first year that I will quote. In 1913 we imported $659,100,000 worth of goods, and, in 1926, $993,000,000, an increase of only thirty-one per cent, whereas in the United States, a highly protected country, they imported at a rate of increase of 300 per cent in thirteen years.

My hon. friend interjects a comment about exports. The United States exported in 1913 of domestic products—because that is the best way to deal with the exports of a country to show the effect of its tariff—goods to the value of $2,448,300,000. But in 1926 that had risen to $4,711,500,000, an increase of about 100 per cent. What did Canada do, a moderately protected country? Canada in 1913 exported $436,000,000, and in 1926, $1,268,000,000, or an increase of 300 per cent as against an increase of 100 per cent in the highest protected country in the world. Those are figures that cannot be gainsaid, and they are, to my mind, sufficient proof to any person who wishes to be convinced that the argument now advanced by the hon. the financial critic of the opposition cannot hold water in comparison with his former views as I have quoted them.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I wish to deal for a moment or two with the speeches of the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) during his tour in the maritime provinces. First I will take up his argument on the question of raw material. I find that the leader of the opposition very severely condemned this government because of the too large export of our raw material. If I mistake not, I think he laid down the principle that all raw material should be manufactured at home.

Mr. BENNETT: He did not, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. VENIOT: He laid down the principle then, Mr. Speaker, that we are exporting too much raw material and that we should retain our raw material at home in order to give employment to our people.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. VENIOT: I am accepting the hon. gentleman's word for what he did say, but the inference to be drawn from the newspaper reports is about what I say.

Mr. BENNETT: That, I think, is out of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. VENIOT: Oh, no.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. gentleman cannot accept the statement of an hon. member and then qualify it. He must accept it.

Mr. VENIOT: I did not qualify it. I referred to the reports of the press. They may be all wrong.

Mr. BENNETT: I am not going to argue the question, Mr. Speaker, but that is not what the hon. gentleman said.

Mr. VENIOT: The hon. gentleman stated—

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. BENNETT: The point is this, Mr. Speaker: The minister accepted the statement and then qualified it by saying that he thought he was right, judging from the inference to be drawn from the newspaper reports. The hon. gentleman is bound by the statement.

Mr. SPEAKER: That is the rule.

Mr. VENIOT: Yes, if he accepted the statement unqualifiedly of the hon. gentleman. But that does not prevent my making this statement, that according to the newspaper reports the inference can be drawn as I stated. I am talking newspaper reports now.

Mr. BENNETT: But, Mr. Speaker, that is what he cannot do.

Mr. VENIOT: If the hon. gentleman says that those reports are not correct, that ends it. In 1927, Canada exported raw material to the value of $578,000,000. I am dealing with 1927, because that was the year that the hon. the leader of the opposition was dealing with when he was in the maritime provinces. Of this amount, $340,000,000 was wheat. Canada exported forty-six per cent of its raw material, including wheat. When I look at the statistics of the United States I find that, including wheat, it exported thirty-nine per cent of its raw material—that great protected country that was going to have all its raw material manufactured at home to give employment to its people. If, Mr. Speaker, we leave wheat out of the Canadian exportation as well as out of the American, we shall find that the percentage of raw material exported by Canada is at least twenty below the percentage of the United States—that highly protected country which my hon. friend is always holding up to us for the soundness of its fiscal policy.

But let me go further. I am about to quote a newspaper report of a speech made by my hon. friend the leader of the opposition. If it is not accurate I will ask him to correct it, and I will accept his word unreservedly. He stated:

> Mr. Hoover said last week that five hundred thousand families in the United States were working on products received from Canada. Would you not like to have some of those five hundred thousand families come to Canada?

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Speaker, the hon. minister has asked me to correct his quotation if it is not correct. It was contradicted at the time. If he will refer to the same newspaper he will find that I said Mr. Hoover was reported to have said certain things, and that I could not vouch for the accuracy of his statement.

Mr. VENIOT: I can vouch for the accuracy of Mr. Hoover's statement, for I have got it before me. This is his statement:

> More than two million families in the United States earn their living to-day producing goods for export, and another million families earn their living in the manufacture of raw materials which we import in exchange for our exports. This increase in exports has brought a living to five hundred thousand families.

There is an instance of the principle that even in a highly protected country you have to export some of your raw material in order to get back that which you require at home to manufacture into the finished article and send it out into the markets of the world. Mr. Hoover goes on:

> This increase in exports has brought a living to five hundred thousand families.

Mr. Hoover was then referring to the trade of the United States with the whole world, and not to raw material imported from Canada.

Let me draw the attention of the hon. leader of the opposition to this fact. Of the 46 per cent of raw materials that Canada exports, 66.9 per cent goes to the United Kingdom and only 33 per cent to the United States. Do my hon. friends opposite lay down the principle that we are not to export our raw material to any great extent, that we must keep it at home and manufacture it to give employment to our people, and that we must cut out the whole or any part of that 66.9 per cent that goes to the United Kingdom to help out the British Empire? Will they lay down that principle? No, they dare not. In point of fact they dare not make any such clear-cut statement; but the arguments they use to condemn this government for the export of raw material can tend to no other direction.

Now, Mr. Speaker, let me take up another argument used in the maritime provinces by the hon. leader of the opposition. He condemned this government, and quoted figures to show that we were importing far beyond what we should import from the United States. But in dealing with this phase of our trade relations with our neighbours to the south he was not fair to Canada. He knew that very large quantities of our goods imported through the United States are not credited to the country of origin, but because in the United States there are wholesale houses representing those other foreign countries most of the goods we receive in that way are credited as exported from the United States. In that way the figures are swollen and Canada is credited with receiving more from the United States than she actually does receive. Let me give an instance or two. Take cotton used in the manufacture of rubber goods—not one ounce of it is grown in the United States, but it is imported into Canada through the wholesale agencies located in the United States of the foreign countries producing that cotton, and of course the United States gets the credit for the exports. Then take raw rubber—not one ounce of that comes from the United States, yet if you examine minutely the trade statistics of the United States you will find that our rubber is credited as an export from that country. I could enumerate many other commodities. I might mention tea. We have in Boston to-day the largest wholesale tea-importing warehouse in the world, and most of the tea from foreign countries comes through that wholesale house, which by the way is owned by a Canadian. Yet the United States is credited as the exporter of that tea to Canada.

Mr. MANION: May I ask the hon. minister a question? What percentage of our imports from the United States is made up of imports from other countries that come through the United States?

Mr. VENIOT: If I had thought my hon. friend possessed so little knowledge of this subject,—

Mr. MANION: I am afraid it is my hon. friend who is ignorant.

Mr. VENIOT: —I would have made inquiries and been prepared to enlighten him.

Mr. MANION: Not ten per cent.

Mr. VENIOT: Then why did my hon. friend ask me the question?

Mr. MANION: I wanted to see if the hon. minister knew anything about what he is discussing.

Mr. VENIOT: Does the hon. gentleman know how much of the raw rubber that we import is credited as coming from the United States?

Mr. MANION: No; but I know we get $825,000,000 worth of goods from the United States, and a very small part of that is rubber.

Mr. VENIOT: The value of that raw material alone is somewhere in the vicinity of $28,000,000.

Mr. MANION: That is a very small part of $825,000,000.

Mr. VENIOT: I know, but I could enumerate a lot of other articles that originate in countries outside the United States.

Mr. MANION: Go ahead.

Mr. VENIOT: All the tea, all the molasses, all the sugar imported into Canada comes through the United States.

Mr. MANION: Give the figures.

Mr. VENIOT: If my hon. friend will add together the value of all those commodities he will have quite a large amount.

Mr. MANION: About ten per cent.

Mr. VENIOT: The hon. gentleman has made his speech, and I may be permitted to go on with mine. Now I want to touch on the question of unemployment.

Mr. McGIBBON: Post office.

Mr. VENIOT: Yes, I can do that too when the time comes, and I will give the hon. gentleman all he wants, as I did on a former occasion. In his tour of the maritime provinces the hon. leader of the opposition attempted to make a strong point of the fact that a number of Canadians crossed the border to seek work in the United States, and he stated that if we had a high tariff like that of our neighbours there would be very little unemployment in Canada. May I be permitted to point out that the percentage of unemployment in the United States to-day is far greater than in Canada. What do we find in the United States for 1927, the very year that my hon. friend was referring to? The New York State Department of Labour reported a decrease of 66,000 factory wage-earners in that state alone. The federal Department of Labour reported unemployment throughout the whole of the United States at five per cent less than in 1926. The percentage of employment in Canada—let my hon. friends follow this—in 1924 was 85·3 per cent; while in the United States it was 90·3; in 1925 our percentage was 86 as against 91·2 in the United States. But in 1926 our percentage jumped to 92·1, an increase of six points, while that of the United States remained almost stationary. In 1927 the percentage rose to 95·6 per cent in Canada, a gain of fourteen points over the first year I have mentioned, while in the United States the percentage fell to 88·5, a decrease of 3·4 in that highly protected country. The leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) speaking in the town of St. Stephen, New Brunswick is reported to have said, on this question:

It was only this afternoon that I learned—

This was August 17, 1928.

—the cotton industry of Milltown was operating on part time, and I looked up the trade report to seek a reason. I found that the importation of raw cotton for the past year had decreased, while the importation of finished cotton had increased. That, to my mind, was one of the reasons why the cotton industry was only able to work part time.

I am glad he acknowledges that.

Employment was given to the people of the countries from which Canada was importing, and that is one of the reasons why Canadian young men and women were obliged to leave home and seek employment in foreign lands.

He condemns the foreign country because it is not sending raw material to us to give employment to our people, and he condemns us because we allow our raw material to go to other countries.

There were thousands of Canadians ready to return if they could get employment.

I do not believe that the leader of the opposition, when speaking in St. Stephen, realized the place he was in. St. Stephen is situated right across the border, a river separating it from Calais, in the state of Maine. There are two international bridges crossing that river. There is a cotton factory, there is a candy factory, and there is an axe factory at St. Stephen and Milltown, and every morning in the vicinity of from 550 to 600 Americans—residents of that highly protected country—have to come across the border to earn their living in the cotton factory and in the candy factory on the Canadian side. Is it any wonder that, as I am informed, when the hon. gentleman was making that highly protective speech at St. Stephen someone rose in the audience and asked him what he was going to do for the consumer and he was not able to give an answer.

I have only a few minutes left, but in those few minutes I wish to touch upon the question of immigration and emigration. I wish to quote again from the leader of the opposition—and I am quoting him frequently to-day because I followed him with deep interest while he was making that tour in the maritime provinces. He spoke at several places there, and when he came back to Ontario he addressed a meeting at Oshawa on July 23, when, according to the newspapers, he made this statement:

Since 1922, 573,000 people have been brought to Canada from all over the world. In the same period 591,000 have gone to the United States. In other words, since the Liberals achieved power 18,000 more people have left Canada to go to the United States than have come into it from all the world. Why? Because there is no work for the Canadians.

What are the facts? Why did not my hon. friend show both sides of the medal and tell the people whom he was addressing on that occasion that while it is true that a number of Canadians did leave the country it is also true that some 474,000 of them came back into Canada and are to-day residing in this country? Why did he not at the same time say to the people at Oshawa that while a number of persons left Canada to go to the United States there were somewhere in the vicinity of 147,000 people, residents and natives of the United States, who came across into Canada and are to-day permanent residents of this country? Why did he not treat the question as it should have been treated? As I say, why were not both sides of the medal shown? What is the record? We find that since the termination of the war 270,066 settlers left the United States—American subjects, American born—and came across into Canada to settle, being to-day permanent citizens of this country. Are we to infer that they had to leave the United States, that highly protected country, and cross the border in order to earn the living which they could not earn under high protection? And in the last fifteen years what do we find? We find that 524,772 Americans have left their native land and are to-day loyal and true citizens of the Dominion of Canada, earning here in a moderately protected country the living which they could not earn at home under a highly protective tariff. This is where my hon. friend was unfair. These facts should be known to him, if they are not. And the facts being known to him, he should have been sincere enough, or at least should have wished to be fair enough, to show both sides of the medal to the people he was addressing at Oshawa, allowing them to judge of the issue.

An hon. MEMBER: No wonder he nearly upset the Rhodes government.

Mr. VENIOT: I will not refer to that, although the leader of the opposition did visit Nova Scotia a few weeks before the political landslide in that province. And from what I can hear there, a great many even of the Conservatives say that it would have been better for the Rhodes government if the leader of the Conservative opposition in Canada had not shown his face there.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Time, time.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Go on.

Mr. VENIOT: Let me in conclusion quote from the Financial Post—and surely no one will tell us that this is a Liberal organ—regarding the question of immigration.

> The fact that the two nations be alongside of each other is bound to remain a constant stimulus to the movement of people back and forth.

Everyone knows that; even the leader of the opposition knows it. The Financial Post did not need to tell us; we all know it. Yet my hon. friend pleads ignorance of that fact when he argues the other way. The article goes on:

> After all what counts is the balance of immigration between Canada and United States. During June 4,346 Canadians left Canada to cross the border. At the same time 3,526 Canadians who had gone to United States to take up residence there returned to Canada. But there were in the neighbourhood of 3,000 Americans who came to Canada in June. The net advantage was distinctly in favour of Canada. Distinctly good business in Canada and a high level of employment are bringing Americans and ex-Canadians to Canada.

Mr. H. J. BARBER (Fraser Valley): I will not undertake to reply to the remarks of the Postmaster General (Mr. Veniot) in his tirade against my leader (Mr. Bennett), because I feel sure that when the leader of the Conservative party comes to speak he will be quite capable of dealing with such criticism.

This is one opportunity which the back bencher has to make himself known in this house, and it is fortunate that, under the rules, two debates are provided—one, the debate on the address and the other the budget—in which hon. members are not confined to any particular ground. I wish first of all to congratulate the hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie) upon his very able speech of Thursday last, in which he placed before the people of Canada the true condition of affairs as brought about by the policy of the present administration. Even our friend from Lisgar (Mr. Brown) admitted that the hon. member correctly diagnosed the troubles of Canada, although he did not agree that the remedy suggested by the acting leader of the opposition was a suitable one. In the matter of providing a remedy I think the physician in charge of the patient should be capable of prescribing an effective remedy, and in this instance those who have made a study of the branches of agriculture to which the hon. member referred surely should be in a better position to treat the case or to operate than the surgeon from Lisgar, who I think would take great pleasure in performing the major operation of severing the industry just above the shoulders.

Coming as I do from British Columbia and representing one of the richest districts in Canada I feel it my duty to make a few observations on this budget. I have said that mine is one of the richest districts in Canada; by that I do not mean that we have millionaires there or people with very large bank accounts but that the resources and the amount of money invested by the pioneers are very great. In order to convey some idea of the diversified industries and the richness of that district I would direct attention to the fact that not only are we rich so far as agriculture is concerned but that the amount of money invested in industry in the Fraser valley is about $55,000,000. We have great timber wealth, and although lumber has been manufactured in that district for over forty years we still have one of the richest stands of timber in the country. Over six billion feet of the very finest fir and cedar to be found anywhere on the continent are located in that district. We have some of the largest logging concerns in Canada operating in that valley and we have also the largest lumber mill in Canada. In addition to that, at the eastern end of the valley we have extensive mineral properties which are being rapidly developed.

The Fraser valley is perhaps more famous throughout Canada for its agriculture, for its dairy and poultry industries and for the production of fruits and vegetables; thousands of acres are devoted to the growing of small fruits such as strawberries, raspberries and loganberries, and such tree fruits as cherries, pears, apples, plums and prunes. Some of the largest commercial poultry plants are located in that district, running from 750 to 5,000 birds per plant; and speaking of records, I would like to inform the house that the Fraser valley was the district in which hen No. 6 made her great record of production. The Fraser valley is famous also for its pure-bred dairy herds and a number of world records have been made by the cattle of that district. A newspaper man, in an article concerning the district, described it as a valley flowing with milk and honey; I believe this is literally true, because last year a river of over 9,000,000 gallons of milk flowed towards Vancouver, together with a smaller river of about 180 tons of honey. This is not all; we boast of the greatest rose gardens in Canada, covering an area of forty acres, and we have the largest hop garden in the world, consisting of over 600 acres. With reference to the growing of hops I might say that the entire commercial production of Canada is confined to the Fraser valley, where some 1,200 acres are devoted to this crop, the annual value of which approximates three-quarters of a million dollars. This is a very valuable industry which should receive encouragement, and I point out to the government that the condition of this industry at present certainly requires the very best consideration of the Minister of Finance and those associated with him.

This little picture I have drawn of conditions in the Fraser valley would lead one to believe that we are enjoying that prosperity mentioned by the Minister of Finance. I am prepared to admit that the farmers of that district are in a better condition than those of any other district I have visited throughout Canada, but at the same time I challenge the Minister of Agriculture to go into that district and try to convince the farmers and producers that they are enjoying this bountiful prosperity. I do not say that they would treat him roughly, but certainly they would direct him to an institution at Essondale maintained by the provincial government for those not quite mentally sound. Representing this great district and knowing the problems facing the producers there, I heartily endorse the amendment moved by the hon. member for South Wellington. I agree with him that the financial statement is clear and concise; it shows that the financial affairs of Canada are in a very satisfactory condition. It further indicates to me, and I think to the people of Canada, that we are enjoying sufficient prosperity at least to pay our taxes. And now that I have come to the subject of taxes I might say that I believe the country has been rather misled in this respect. If you notice the Liberal press of the day following the presentation of the budget you no doubt observed headings which said "Robb Reduces Taxation;" "Taxes Reduced" and so on, and even the Minister of Agriculture said the other night that we should keep the Minister of Finance in office so long as he continued to reduce taxes. But, according to the minister's own statement, we find that he has been very careful not to announce a reduction in taxation. He announces a reduction in rates, but as someone has pointed out, it is not the rate but the burden of taxation that counts, and the burden of taxation imposed upon the Canadian people is increasing each year.

Let us examine the statement presented by the minister. Last year we collected from customs taxes about $185,000,000, an increase of some $28,000,000 over the previous year; in excise duties we collected approximately $63,000,000, an increase of $6,000,000 over the previous year; in income tax, we collected $58,000,000, in round figures, an increase of about $1,900,000. The increases from these sources totalled about $35,900,000, and then there were certain decreases. From the stamp and sales taxes we collected roughly $81,500,000, a decrease of about $8,700,000. We collected $450,000 in business profits tax, a decrease of $500,000, leaving a net increase in taxes collected from the people of Canada amounting to $26,700,000.

Another reduction has been made in the sales tax this year, but I think the people of Canada regret that this tax has not been entirely wiped out. Any business man who will sit down and figure out the result of this one per cent reduction can only say that the benefit will scarcely reach the great consumers of this country. The revenues from taxes have been very large during the past year, and I think the Minister of Finance could have wiped out the sales tax entirely.

During the course of this debate we have heard the argument from our free trade friends that a low tariff means lower taxes and a high tariff means higher taxes—an argument which cannot be backed up by the statement of the Minister of Finance. It has been proven that as we lower the tariff the volume increases, and it has been shown that during the past few years, in spite of a lowered tariff, the volume has increased to such an extent that the taxes from that source have increased. The budget announcements were received no doubt by some with a sigh of relief that the minister had ceased to tinker to any great extent with the tariff; by others it was received with disappointment, and a feeling of regret that he had not the courage to step out and give relief by way of protection designed to be helpful to the wage-earners and their employers which would stem the tide of imports from the United States. The minister made a very unnecessary announcement, something of which the country is quite aware, to the effect that his party stands for a low tariff. If the minister and the government continue to pursue the policy they have followed for the last few years they will soon be able to announce that grand old Liberal policy: "tariff for revenue only." Their policy at the present time is to make their imposts revenue-yielding rather than helpful in the building up of Canadian industry.

The trade returns for 1927 show that we imported from the United States goods to the value of $707,000,000, in round figures, while the exports were valued at $474,000,000, leaving an unfavourable trade balance of $233,000,000. For the same period in 1928 our imports are valued at $825,000,000, our exports at $492,000,000, leaving an unfavourable trade balance of $333,000,000. The increase in unfavourable trade balance from 1927 to 1928 amounts to $100,000,000. The policy followed by this government is forcing us to become more dependent on foreign countries. When that point is reached with regard to any particular product we all know what happens. The people of Ontario know that only a few years ago they were forced to depend on the United States for their peaches, when there was a shortage in Ontario. They were forced to pay the highest price they had had to pay for years. The Americans dictated the terms.

The policy of this government has created what we might well term distress in certain branches of the agricultural industry. I refer particularly to the dairy, poultry, and fruit and vegetable industries. Dairying is one of Canada's major industries, amounting to $250,000,000, or equal to our great mining industry. The combined dairy and poultry industries represent a business of four or five hundred million dollars per year, or equal to the great wheat production of this country. A few years ago we boasted of the great future of our dairy industry, and the Department of Agriculture undertook to institute some sort of campaign to encourage winter dairying. The farmers took that up and spent large sums of money in fitting up their buildings and improving their herds, so that the supply of butter might be distributed more equally throughout the whole year. Just about the time they were in a position to place Canadian butter on the winter market, the Minister of Finance with one stroke of his pen permitted butter to enter this country at one cent a pound duty. Butter fresh off the grass of New Zealand began to come into this country and compete with the product of the Canadian farmer. Thousands of pounds came in, and this increased to millions of pounds until to-day we find that over 21,000,000 pounds of foreign butter came into the Canadian market during the twelve months ending with January of this year. What does this 21,000,000 pounds represent? It represents the production of 100,000 dairy cows, and it means that the worth of those cows has been transferred to New Zealand. We find that the herds of New Zealand have increased by 50,000 cows, while our herds have been decreased to a much larger extent. I do not see how the government can pursue such a policy as this in regard to one of our staple industries.

There is another industry which is a very important one in British Columbia, and it has become a very large industry throughout Canada, namely, the poultry industry. The poultry men of this country are protected only to the extent of three cents, while the American poultry men enjoy a protection of eight cents. The import of eggs for the twelve months ending January of this year amounted to 979,433 dozen in shell, valued at $415,457. I assume this refers to case eggs from the United States. The import of frozen or canned eggs, mainly from China, n.o.p., amounted to 2,921,533 pounds valued at $658,490. The classification n.o.p. might mean "not awfully powerful," but I understand the real meaning is "not otherwise provided." The total value of the imports of eggs amounted to $1,073,947. It may be said that we have been exporting eggs to other countries, but I think the returns will show that the only exporting which did take place was to the United Kingdom, and the value of those exports was $306,708. The Vancouver firms undertook to place the British Columbia egg on the market of Great Britain. They sent shipments through to the old country and they lost on some of them. They went to the department in Victoria, to the provincial Minister of Agriculture, and they said: "We are undertaking to establish a trade in Great Britain; will you guarantee us against loss?" The department could not do that, and the result is that those exports that have been taking place during the past year have been more or less experimental. On the other hand, more than a million dollars' worth of an inferior quality of eggs came into this country last year to compete with the good Canadian egg. Eggs in my district during January were selling at twenty-two and twenty-five cents a dozen Many of the small producers had to go out of business; they could not afford to buy grain. And when I say they could not afford to buy grain, that brings up another question. I should like to point out to the government and our friends from the prairies that we are to-day paying more for grain in the Fraser valley than they are paying for the same grain in China or Japan. This is due simply to the domestic rate on grain, which is just double the export rate to Vancouver. While they pay twenty-one cents on export grain, we to-day are paying forty-two cents to Vancouver and then we pay the freight from there.

Last year British Columbia shipped two cars of eggs to the eastern market, and we have demonstrated that we can put on that market the very best quality of eggs in the best condition, far superior to any that may be imported, but we are barred from the eastern market by the policy of hon. gentlemen opposite who permit the free importation of United States case eggs and Chinese eggs leaving little or no opportunity whatever for our people to place British Columbia eggs on that market.

I come now to the fruit and vegetable industry. If we take into consideration the greatly increased consumption of these products, we wonder why our industry has not developed to a greater extent. The reason is quite plain. The policy of hon. gentlemen opposite has encouraged the replacing of our good Canadian product by that of a foreign country. We in British Columbia remember what happened last year when protests came from almost every fruit and vegetable association from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and when they prayed that the government give them some protection, at least during the season that our fruits and vegetables are ready for the market. A large deputation waited on the government and presented their case, but still nothing was done. The result was that last year was a disastrous one for the small fruit growers of British Columbia, and they were forced to sell at ridiculously low prices. The same conditions prevailed in other branches of the industry.

Hon. members may be surprised to learn that according to the returns we imported from the United States, last year $38,000,000 worth of fresh fruits and vegetables, and I challenge anyone to check over those returns and dispute the fact that at least $10,000,000 worth could and should have been grown in Canada. The government has not even the courage to step out and give these producers what they ask, namely, protection during the season that our fruit is ready for the market. They have promised us relief in the budget; they say: We will not raise the tariff on any product, but we are going to do something to help lessen the cost of production. Therefore, under schedule A, item No. 448, they have lowered the duty on spraying machines, fruit or vegetable grading machines, and pruning shears. There is one article in particular to which I wish to refer, and that is a special machine designed for sterilizing bulbs. This surely is not for the producers of bulbs in Canada, because on Vancouver island and on the mainland of British Columbia we grow just as fine bulbs as are grown in Holland. But we are up against this foreign competition, and now to save the importer of foreign bulbs from loss the government are going to put in a machine to sterilize those bulbs so that they will not be destroyed at the port of entry.

Mr. CHAPLIN: That machine is to sterilize the car of the Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. BARBER: These branches of the great agricultural industry have been looking to the government for some kind of relief, and they have decided what that relief should be. After a number of years of struggling with the problem, they certainly should be in a position to decide what the relief should be, and they have decided that they must have a protective tariff against this unfair competition so that they may enjoy their own home market. The opposition to this relief does not come from the industrial centres of the country, the large consumers; it comes from another branch of this great industry. It comes from the members from the prairie provinces, the grain growers, upon whose support the government owes its existence to-day. It is unfortunate that the opposition comes from another branch of agriculture. I think the great ambition in public life of the hon. member for Weyburn (Mr. Young) is to wreck the fruit and vegetable industry. Not only does he use his oratorical powers in the house, but he has an organization known as the Consumers' League, which employs counsel to fight this industry before the tariff board and to spread propaganda throughout the press of the country.

The hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Millar) says that he cannot support the amendment because he does not want wheat protected. Perhaps wheat does not need protection. These hon. gentlemen want some kind of relief; those of us who have sat in the house for a number of years feel that they desire some kind of relief. All that we say to them is: Bring down your plan of relief and you will have our support. I challenge the representatives from the prairies, so-called wheat growers, to point to one instance where we have turned down any proposition or any legislation or any vote that was destined to benefit the wheat growing industry. We are pleased to know to-day that the result of the financial support afforded through the parliament of Canada has placed that industry in the front line of the great grain growing countries of the world. We have this great industry divided; both of these branches are asking for some kind of relief, and as I said before, who is in a better position to say what that relief should be than those who are engaged in the industry? One branch has a definite plan, while the other says: you cannot have it. It is the duty of the government to endeavour to solve these problems and to bring the two branches of this great industry together as they should be. This is a question that has been very much discussed in the country to the south of us.

Let me point out that the value of the total agricultural production of Canada is estimated at $1,660,000,000. It is interesting to note that the total grain crop is put at $735,000,000. The difference of $910,000,000 is credited to the other branches of the industry.

In the country to the south we have producers of wheat, cotton, corn and tobacco, all exportable products. Then we have the dairymen, the poultrymen, and so on. It is the same in this country. We have the grain growing interests who produce an exportable product, and we are pleased to learn that to-day they are exporting seventy-five per cent of their crop, and although Canada is the greatest consumer of wheat per capita in the world we believe that the exportable percentage will be maintained in the years to come. The Canadian wheat grower has many advantages over the growers of other countries. He has the natural advantage, and his hard wheats are of the highest quality and much sought after by foreign millers. Compared with other wheat growing countries, the Canadian farmer has a larger yield per acre and a low cost of production. He has the most modern and scientific implements in the world. He is at a great advantage in having such magnificent technical equipment for the transportation, storage, cleaning and handling of his wheat from the local elevator to the sea-going vessel. A great railway organization plays an important part in the marketing of wheat.

With regard to the American situation, I do not think we should be worried over it for one minute. Ours is a purely Canadian problem while theirs is a purely American problem, and we must look after ourselves.

I wish to refer to an address given by a prominent American at a convention held in California last December. Referring to this great question of farm relief in that country, he said:

> The farmers that believe in cooperative marketing as the principle or only hope of farm relief, will see that cooperative marketing has only a slight chance of success when there are excessive surpluses to be dealt with, but it works very successfully when there are no surpluses. The combination into one or more plans of tariff, McNary-Haugen pooling and cooperative marketing, offers the farmers prompt and adequate relief.

He further points out, and this might be of interest to the Postmaster General (Mr. Veniot):

> That the tariff law, now in operation, was enacted in 1922. It was the aim of that law to protect American farmers as well as all other lines of industry. The tariffs on most agricultural products were raised by the Tariff Act of 1922, but results have proven that the raises in agricultural tariffs were so much too small that since 1922 our country has reversed its favourable position from always exporting much more of agricultural products than we have imported, to its ruinous position of importing in every year since 1922 much more of agricultural products than we export. This reversal amounts to over a billion dollars more of agricultural products and thus accounts for America's ruinous agricultural surpluses.

Such men as I have quoted here have made a study of this problem throughout the United States, and I believe they are meeting in Washington within the next two weeks in consultation with the new government. I think it is up to this government to call together representatives from the different branches of the agricultural industry, and bring down some legislation, or some policy, that will preserve the great agricultural industry of this country.

There is one other matter, Mr. Speaker, that I should like to refer to for a moment, and that is our transportation system. This is closely allied to the great industry of agriculture, and, in fact, to all the industries in this country. We are proud of our railway transportation companies, and especially our own system, the Canadian National Railways. It has made rapid progress and is rendering a great service to the producers of this country. But that is not what I was going to refer to particularly at this time. I was going to refer to the problem which has already been discussed in this house, that is, the problem of highway building. This is a matter that has been left entirely to the provinces, and, coming from the great province of British Columbia, I regret that the federal government have not seen fit to grant relief in connection with some of that work. We have been constructing a great highway through the Rocky mountains, known as the Caribou road. We have spent some two million dollars on it, and it will take another two million dollars to complete it. We are not building it for the benefit of the people of British Columbia alone. We are building it for the benefit of the people of Canada, and I believe, sir, that provincial highways through all the provinces should be considered as Canadian highways. I hope that by next session the government will have had some light on this great question, and that they will take a leaf out of the book of our neighbour to the south and bring down a vote in support of highway building. The federal government of the United States have been contributing large sums of money to highways, because they believe that a good highway is one of the best assets any country can have. You can take the highway at Vancouver, British Columbia, and travel clear through to Mexico, a paved road all the way, and you can take the highway here and travel right through to Florida. It has been pointed out that it would be a good business investment.

There are two industries closely allied with good roads, that is, the automobile industry and the tourist industry. Good roads and better roads mean more cars and more cars. It means an increase in our automobile industry, and, under the policy of the government, there will be a greater revenue in customs tax because there will be all the more automobiles imported. From the standpoint of the tourist traffic, when we take into consideration the fact that there is one car for every five people in the United States, and that there are sixteen million families in the United States who own their own cars, longing to get out into a new country, it is not hard to realize the benefits that would accrue. Here we have the pulling power. Canada's scenery pulls them this year and next year that attraction will be even more powerful. We have the playgrounds of the maritimes and the beautiful and historic spots of the old provinces of Quebec and Ontario, the grain fields of the prairies and the Switzerland of the Pacific coast?

The SPEAKER: The hon. gentleman's time has expired.

[Mr. Barber.]

Mr. LIGUORI LACOMBE (Laval-Two Mountains): Mr. Speaker, We must naturally infer from the budget which the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb) delivered on the first day of the present month that the affairs of the Dominion are in a flourishing state. Thanks to the prosperous condition of our finances, the Canadian taxpayer will further benefit this year by a reduction in taxation amounting to more than $25,000,000. The customs returns amount to $185,000,000, an increase of $28,000,000 over the fiscal year of 1927, apart from the increase of excise taxes and the revenue from the income tax, notwithstanding the 10 per cent reduction of last session.

During the last six years, the present government has decreased our national debt by more than $226,000,000. Our favourable trade balance amounts to nearly $155,000,000. This is why, I think, the Canadian people are bound to be proud of the administration. Notwithstanding an increase of $6,000,000 in the country's general expenditure, our government is in a position to apprise the people of Canada of a surplus of $97,000,000. Let me remind this honourable house that agriculture alone will be granted this year $1,189,055 more than it received last year. That, sir, is an act of justice on the part of the government in favour of our largest industry.

The farmer employs on the land 45 per cent of the Canadian labourers; almost half of the hand labour employed in industries. Have we ever seriously considered the consequences which might overtake our economic situation were agriculture to take one step backward or suffer a temporary check? Have we foreseen the disastrous consequences which would follow the desertion of the soil, the contempt for the farm and the disavowal of the patriotic virtues inherent in the calling and the person of our sturdy farmer? Will the happy folks of our countryside to-morrow, inherit the ideal good humour, energy and admirable perseverance of their predecessors?—the strength and prosperity of Canada in the past, and her glory to-day. Yes, so long as those at the helm of public affairs always bear in mind the true, constant and urgent needs of the producer and the consumer, and the welfare of all the citizens of Canada.

In the present debate, the hon. members for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie) and Fort William (Mr. Manion) have each in turn uttered their usual lamentations and exaggerated complaints. Indeed, the views of the most enlightened industrial and financial men, the statistics furnished by those who carry weight in the business world, suffice entirely to explode the bold statements of those honourable members. In fact, according to the annual statement of the Royal Bank of Canada, the contracts granted in connection with construction in this country during the first months of 1928 amount to $453,000,000, compared with $247,000,000 for the same period of the year 1924. The outlay for the building of bridges, wharfs, highways and streets increased from $5,000,000 to $100,000,000, during the last four years. This year the Canadian Pacific Railway Company intends to apply to its system of transportation by water and land the sum of $50,000,000, and the Canadian National Railways will expend $30,000,000.

With these facts before us and the statement of the hon. Minister of Finance, how will the hon. members of the opposition substantiate their charges? How will they contend, without exposing themselves to ridicule, that bankruptcy is at our door when the financial situation of Canada reveals an era of prosperity which on the whole is reflected in every field of activity? Is the hon. member for Fort William justified in stating "Let us have a more virile Canadian policy than that advocated by the government"?—when the present virile and courageous administration generously devotes itself to the interests of the nation. Will my hon. friend still persist in his charges notwithstanding the progress accomplished during the last few years? The marvellous strides of our country loudly proclaim the truly national policy of the government.

I shall not tarry over the compliments paid by the hon. member for South Wellington to his ex-leader, Mr. Meighen. I may, however, point out that the hon. member might have raised to his venerated leader a monument more flattering to both of them, than the unbusinesslike piece of legislation to which he referred, and which already has been judged and condemned by the people of this country.

Now, sir, in closing my remarks I cannot remain silent on the amendment of the hon. member for South Wellington. The object of the amendment was conceived in darkness and brought to light under the mantle of adequate protection.

I shall have the opportunity in the course of the present session to discuss our tariff policy. However, I have no fear in stating right now that the high protection which the hon. members of the opposition have been using as a talisman for a number of years is not suited as a whole to the interests of this country where the various types of farming and industrial aims are so different. I agree that for certain natural products of a national character we should carry out an experiment of a seasonal tariff during the months of June, July, August and September. I have already advised such a step, and I do now advocate and shall not cease advocating the trial of such a tariff by the government. Our fruit and vegetables, in the interest of the producer, must have free access to our home markets. The consumer, during this period of overproduction, cannot indeed find fault with the high prices since he can find on his own markets fresh vegetables in plenty. Moreover, has the consumer ever taken into consideration that he must often make good to the middleman the transportation charges on foreign products, amounting to from $60 to $80 per car?

Thanks to laudable rivalry among our truck-gardeners and to intensive gardening, the consumer will benefit greatly by the aid given to the farming class. The surplus of hand labour will find work in the neighbouring rural districts of large cities and thereby help production. The grading of garden products, and the ever increasing improvement in the methods of gardening are great assets both to the consumer and producer. Farming needs markets. The government has created them and is ever ready to grant this great basic industry generous assistance. All earthly things are subject to improvement. However, if we consider for a moment the evil regime of the Tory party and peer into the present glorious prosperity, we have no hesitation in giving our verdict.

If, for a moment, we glance at the dairy industry's situation, we see that it is developing splendidly under the benevolent protection of the leaders of the nation. So much so that Mr. Frank Herns, secretary of the Western Ontario Dairyman's Association, recently declared that it never had been so prosperous. If we glance at the marvellous expansion of industry and trade, the increase of more than 3,000,000 acres of our land under cultivation during the year 1928 alone, is it possible to accept as reasonable the exaggerated criticism of the opposition? No, sir! On the contrary, I believe that all well-thinking citizens of Canada will without hesitation cast aside the selfish charges of our hon. friends of the opposition. I am confident that the present government will endeavour to carry on the administration of the country in the interest of all classes, instead of sacrificing one class to another, always bearing in mind that every individual, in whatever trade or occupation he may be engaged, is entitled to justice and generous assistance.

Mr. C. E. BOTHWELL (Swift Current): The budget each year seems to bring many varied opinions from the different corners of the house. After the Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb) brought down his budget I was interested in noticing the press reports as to the opinion throughout the country regarding it, and it seemed to me that the budget was well received in all quarters of Canada I was somewhat surprised when last week the acting leader of the opposition (Mr. Guthrie) in his address in this house criticized that budget. He congratulated the Minister of Finance on the manner in which the budget had been presented, and also on the reduction which was being made in the debt of Canada; but he took occasion to criticize him with respect to many particulars in connection with it. I was rather interested in the quotations given by the hon. member for South Wellington from the public accounts. Reading from page 45 he stated that the Liberal government should take no credit for having surpluses because the party which he represents also, while in power, had surpluses; and he quoted from the public accounts to show that while there was a surplus from year to year during several years of Liberal regime, there were also surpluses during several years of Conservative rule. If the hon. gentleman had turned to the very next page he would have been able to give the country information as to what such surpluses really amounted to. He did not tell us, for instance, when quoting the figures for the years 1917 to 1922, showing an increase from $41,000,000 to $82,000,000, that these surpluses were gained at the expense of an increasing public debt in Canada from $81,000,000 to $674,000,000 per annum. The increases in the debt, taken from page 46 of the public accounts, for the years quoted by the hon. gentleman, from 1918 to 1922, are as follows:

1920..	674,337,591 35
1922..	81,256,818 04

The hon. member might also have directed the attention of the house to the fact that since confederation there have been only thirteen years in which there have been no surpluses, and ten of those thirteen years were during the regime of the party for which he was speaking the other day. On the other hand, during the Liberal administration—quoting for the same years, from page 46 of the public accounts—we find that the Liberal government not only had surpluses but also reduced the public debt of Canada. In 1923 there was an increase of $31,641,067.01, and from that time there have been continual decreases in the debt. It might be interesting to put these figures on Hansard in order to compare them with those set out by the hon. member for South Wellington. The decreases in the debt have been:

1926..	27,706,586 17
1928..	50,984,137 17

And according to the Minister of Finance the amount for the year ending March 31, 1929, will be $69,782,000. Since confederation there have been fourteen years in which there have been reductions in the debt of Canada, and of these fourteen years ten of them have been during Liberal administrations.

Mr. GEARY: To complete the record, would the hon. gentleman explain how the public debt was added to during the years from 1917 to 1922, by expenses in connection with the war and railway administration?

Mr. BOTHWELL: The public knows that. During the years from 1914 to 1918, and possibly in the years following, we have had the expenses of war and the aftermath of war.

Mr. GEARY: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. gentleman, but this is a little circumstance which is generally omitted in statements made by hon. members opposite.

Mr. BOTHWELL: Listening to the debate I gather that the main criticisms are two: first, that there should be further reductions in taxation, and secondly that there should be a greater measure of protection of industry. With regard to the first—reductions in taxation—this has been dealt with by speakers who have preceded me, and it has also been discussed at some length by the Minister of Finance himself in his address to the house. Since this administration came into office there have been reductions in taxation in various forms; we have had reductions in the income tax, in the sales tax, in the tariff, which is indirect taxation, in stamp taxes, postal taxes and so forth. It is not necessary to give the details of the reductions. It may be a fact that more money is being collected from the people of Canada now than was the case during the former administration, but to me that only reflects the increased prosperity of the country. The hon. member for East Calgary (Mr. Adshead) explained something of the difference between the burden of taxation and the rate of taxation; if the country is in a more prosperous condition it will contribute more money to the government by way of revenue which might be taken as taxation, but such taxation will not affect the people so much as otherwise would be the case.

I am going to leave that phase of the situation there and consider for a few moments the arguments for increased protection. I am reminded of the session of 1926, when quite a number of new members entered this house; during that session we listened for days at a time to different debates and we heard the calamity talk from hon. gentlemen opposite. We newer members almost feared that we were going to bring about the ruination of Canada; we were almost smothered with statistics quoted by hon. members opposite and it looked as though we were facing absolute ruin. Since that time we have learned not to take too seriously remarks made by hon. gentlemen opposite; after three or four years we find that instead of facing ruin Canada is now in a better and more prosperous condition than ever has been the case. It might be interesting to some hon. members to note a page of the Financial Post, which is not particularly friendly to this government. I refer to the issue of March 8, page 7, which deals with Canadian business conditions and where the following headings will be noticed:

Building Values Setting Records in Current Year.
Dollar Business Sets Up New Mark.
Iron and Steel Producers Active.
Labour Situation Best in Decade, Report Reveals.
January Trade Returns Above Those Last Year.
January Imports of Rubber Reflect Increased Activity.

Then in the summary, under the heading "Business Still Moves Forward" we find the following:

Commodity prices:
Steady at present; may be lower.

Iron and steel:
January output largest for some years. Looks like good year for industry.

Building:
First two months' total 50 per cent higher than same period year ago.

Foreign trade:
Good. January returns well above those of last year.

Employment:
Best on record at beginning of last month. Outlook exceedingly good.

Car loadings:
Larger for week of February 23 than in same week of 1928.

Stock market:
Displays good degree of strength. Company reports of favourable nature.

Credit:
Abundant for business. Banks withhold credit for stock speculation.

Agriculture:
Farmers in good financial position. Cheese exports in good volume. Live stock sales satisfactory.

Trend:
The new budget is uninspiring. Farming, mining and fishing industries benefit by tariff changes. Public debt is lowered. Dollar volume of business again increases. Wholesale and retail trade satisfactory in volume.

That does not look very much like what was forecast during 1926 and 1927; instead of the blue ruin we thought we might be facing from what hon. gentlemen opposite said, to-day under this government we have the conditions I have placed before you.

Many references have been made to the possible increase of the United States tariff; we hope that these increases will not materialize and we do not believe they will to any great extent. We realize that the United States is a country with which we want to trade; it is the natural market for the goods we have to export and we would like to have access to that market as easily and for as long as possible. However, in the event of the forecasts made by some American newspapers coming true and the tariff being increased, what possible benefit would it be to the people of Canada to increase our tariff by way of retaliation? This matter was dealt with yesterday by the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Brown), and he gave several illustrations. If we are shut out of the United States market we will not help ourselves by increasing our tariff and paying more for the things we bring into Canada; we will have to look for other markets. This government have been endeavouring continually to enlarge our markets and have our goods exported to countries other than the United States, and we must continue that policy. I say it would do us no possible good to increase our tariffs against the United States.

Over 50 per cent of our total exports are made up of agricultural and animal products; according to the trade summary for the twelve months ending with January, 1929, I find that the total export trade of Canada for that period amounted to $1,362,128,965. Of that amount agricultural and vegetable products totalled $655,028,655 and animal products $162,-369,317, so the total of these classes of exports is more than 50 per cent of all our exports, and of the agricultural products exported grain makes up a big proportion.

Mr. CHAPLIN: May I ask the hon. member a question? Would he consider fish as being part of the animal products he mentions?

Mr. BOTHWELL: Ordinarily fish would not be so considered, but even if I take the figures given by the hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie) when he analysed the budget, still I find that agricultural and animal products make up over 50 per cent of our total exports.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Would the hon. member consider furs as an animal product?

Mr. BOTHWELL: No, but I do class wheat, oats, cattle, beef, hogs and products of that sort as vegetable and animal products. We can exclude furs, fish and the other items mentioned by the acting leader of the opposition.

Mr. BRADY: What part of that fifty per cent referred to would come from wheat alone?

Mr. BOTHWELL: I have not those figures.

Mr. BRADY: I would like to know that.

Mr. BOTHWELL: I expect to continue my speech to-morrow and I will try to have that information for the hon. member.

An increased tariff on vegetable and animal products would not benefit the producer at all. We will not gain anything by putting up a tariff wall against the United States. Our wheat has to meet the competition of the world; our animal products practically have to meet the competition of the world, and what possible benefit are we going to derive from any increase in the tariff?

At six o'clock the house adjourned without question put, pursuant to standing order.

The house met at three o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS

FIRST READINGS

Bill No. 77, respecting the British Colonial Fire Insurance Company and to change its name to British Colonial Assurance.—Mr. Mercier (Laurier-Outremont).

Bill No. 79, respecting a certain patent of Jean Baptiste Hurteau.—Mr. Duff.

PRIVILEGE—MR. POULIOT

Mr. J. F. POULIOT (Témiscouata): Mr. Speaker, may I be permitted to rise to a question of privilege? My attention has been drawn to a paragraph in an article headed "Glimpses of Parliament", in the Ottawa Citizen of March 12, which reads as follows:

For once, Mr. Pouliot, the Liberal member for Témiscouata, laid off Premier Taschereau, his particular bête noire.

May I say, Mr. Speaker, to quote St Augustine, I do not desire the death of a sinner but only his conversion. I only wish at times to correct some erroneous statements that come from the premier of Quebec.

May I say, Mr. Speaker, that the correspondent of the Citizen was mistaken, because in the speech that was delivered in this house on March 11, there is the following:

Some years ago at a banquet tendered to Hon. Senator Béland, a badly informed politician propounded this question: "How is it that in Quebec American potatoes are served on the table?"

May I say, Mr. Speaker, that it is always impolite and very bad manners for a guest to criticize the menu? But that transgression was made by Mr. Taschereau himself, and as his name was not mentioned, his reference to American potatoes was perhaps lost amongst the millions of hundredweights of Canadian potatoes that were referred to in my speech.

PRIVILEGE—MR. BLATCHFORD

Mr. K. A. BLATCHFORD (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw the attention of hon. members to an advertisement that appeared in last night's Journal in connection with certain mining stock that is being placed on the market. It is signed by a gentleman by the name of Richard A. McClymont, Investment Counsel, whatever that may be. In the advertisement he twice referred to me as recommending this stock to the hon. members of this house, to my friends, and to the general public.

I wish, Mr. Speaker, to point out, that I am not a mining broker, not a stock salesman, nor am I recommending any line of mining stock to any one. I have never met this gentleman up to the present moment. The only recollection I have of Mr. McClymont is when he grew famous overnight through his letters in the press a year ago in connection with the civil service. I believe a recommendation from a man like Mr. McClymont would black the eye of any mining company, and would absolutely ruin the reputation of any member of this house, and I hope the Ottawa Journal will see its way clear to correct this impression.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

The fifth report of the select standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines. —Mr. Cahill.

The third report of the select standing committee on agriculture and colonization.—Mr. Kay.

EASTER ADJOURNMENT

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): This will probably be the proper time, Mr. Speaker, for me to move the resolution standing in my name, as follows:

That when the house adjourns on Friday, the 22nd of March, instant, it stand adjourned until Tuesday, the 2nd of April, next.

I mentioned yesterday that I would ask the chief whip to see the other whips of the house and ascertain if it was possible to come to some agreement that would suit the convenience of all. That was a pretty large order, but I am told by the chief whip that if this resolution were amended to read: That the house stand adjourned until the 4th of April instead of 2nd of April, he is of the opinion, from the conversations he has had, that the resolution would meet with general acceptance. Having that in mind, I would ask the house to permit me to amend the resolution by changing the date from the 2nd of April to the 4th of April. The resolution would then read:

That when the house adjourns on Friday, the 22nd of March, instant, it stand adjourned until Thursday, the 4th of April, next.

The SPEAKER: Is it the pleasure of the house that the right hon. gentleman may have leave to amend his motion?

Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): Before the motion carries, Mr. Speaker, I desire to observe that it was the consensus of opinion of those who sit to the left of the Speaker that we should have as short an adjournment as possible having regard to the late date at which the house convened, but apparently the chief whip of the government has concluded that what is now suggested best serves the interests of all. I have only to say that if a shorter adjournment were made it would be acceptable to those who sit to the left of the Speaker, but it appears to be important that the recess should begin on the 22nd, because of certain arrangements which some of the hon. members have made.

Motion agreed to.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' DAYS

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have a further motion that may help to expedite the business of the house when we return. My hon. friend will I am sure agree that since the house opened remarkable progress has been made with the work of the session, and I see no reason why when we resume we should not make even better progress after a brief respite. I move:

That on and after Monday, 8th April next and all subsequent Mondays and Wednesdays until the end of the session, government notices of motions and government orders shall have precedence over all other business except questions and notices of motions for the production of papers.

In connection with that resolution I might point out that last year eight days in all were occupied in discussion of private members' motions. This year up to the present time, private members have had eleven days, so that no one will have cause to feel that this motion will deprive anyone of his rights.

Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I apprehend that the Prime Minister is content that this should stand as a notice of motion.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes.

Motion stands.

AGRICULTURE AND COLONIZATION

Mr. W. F. KAY (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, if I may have the unanimous consent of the house I will move, seconded by Mr. Sinclair (Queens):

That the third report of the committee on agriculture and colonization be concurred in.

Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): This might stand as a notice of motion, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. SPEAKER: Stands as a notice of motion.

POSTMASTER AT SIMCOE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. A. STEWART (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I should like to draw the attention of the Postmaster General (Mr. Veniot) to the return which was placed on the table recently in connection with the dismissal of Mr. Whittaker, postmaster at Simcoe. This return does not appear to be complete. Will the Postmaster General have any objection to placing the original file on the table?

Hon. P. J. VENIOT (Postmaster General): I may say, Mr. Speaker, that I gave orders for all the original file of correspondence to be placed on the table. If it is not complete, I will look into the matter.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I am not saying that all the correspondence is not in the return; but all the relevant documents are not included.

Mr. VENIOT: I do not think any official of the department would take off the file any documents that should be laid on the table of the house.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): May I assume that the Postmaster General has no objection to laying the file on the table? That is what I want to know.

Mr. VENIOT: The original file is on the table.

LOWER DETROIT RIVER LIGHTS AND BUOYS

Mr. E. J. GOTT (South Essex): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I apprised the Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb) that to-day I proposed to make an inquiry of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Cardin). In his absence I should like to get some information from the acting minister as to the contract for lights and buoys in the lower Detroit river for 1929. Has the contract been made? If not, will the minister instruct that this be done as formerly by calling for tenders?

Hon. J. A. ROBB (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries and in his absence, I beg to give the house the following memorandum which I have received from his department:

The contract for the maintenance of the lights and buoys in the lower Detroit river entered into in March, 1926, for a period of three years, expires at the end of March, 1929. The said contract was a renewal of a previous contract concluded in 1923. Having regard to the importance of the service and to the satisfactory manner in which the work has been carried out by the present contractor since 1920, and also to the reasonableness of the price which was established by public tender, the Department of Marine and Fisheries has recommended a renewal of the present contract at the rate established by tender. The contract, however, has not yet been renewed.

POSTMASTER AT KITCHENER

On the orders of the day:

Hon. HUGH GUTHRIE (South Wellington): Mr. Speaker, might I ask the Postmaster General (Mr. Veniot) if he will be good enough to lay on the table all papers in connection with the recent dismissal of the postmaster at the city of Kitchener?

Hon. P. J. VENIOT (Postmaster General): I have no papers, Mr. Speaker, in connection with the dismissal of the postmaster at Kitchener.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Might I ask if he has been dismissed?

Mr. VENIOT: He has not. His case is being considered. Perhaps that is enough for the present.

BOARD OF GRAIN COMMISSIONERS—HYBRID GRAIN TICKET

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. J. GARLAND (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, could the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Malcolm) give the house any idea when the return asked for on the 20th of last month with regard to correspondence between the board of grain commissioners and his department will be laid on the table?

[Mr. Gott.]

Hon. JAMES MALCOLM (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I may advise my hon. friend from Bow River (Mr. Garland) that this correspondence was laid on the table to-day.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Thank you.

THE THUNDERER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. O. L. BOULANGER (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the Postmaster General if in view of the desirability of preserving a good understanding between people of different religious beliefs in this country, he does not propose to bar from the mails a sheet called The Thunderer, published in the city of Toronto?

Hon. P. J. VENIOT (Postmaster General): My attention has been called to such a sheet, but before coming to any decision as to barring it from the mails, I should like the legal officials of the department to have an opportunity to examine it and see whether it should come under the ban or not. The matter will be looked into.

SOLDIER SETTLEMENT IN BRITISH COLUMBIA

On the orders of the day:

Hon. ROBERT FORKE (Minister of Immigration): Mr. Speaker, on Monday last the hon. member for Fraser Valley (Mr. Barber) drew my attention to what he termed a serious state of affairs which appears to exist among the soldier settlers in a certain section of British Columbia. He read an extract from one of the leading Vancouver papers, headed:

Say soldier settlers are starving here.

Instead of repeating the article perhaps it will serve the purpose if I read to the house the following statement. I immediately wired the superintendent at Vancouver in regard to this matter and I shall now read his wire in reply:

Reference your wire date extract from newspaper apparently refers question of milk assignments brought up at annual meeting Fraser Valley Milk Producers Association held last week (Stop) Some settlers wish set aside assignments and press report indicates committee to be appointed interview board regarding matter (Stop) Interview not yet requested (Stop) Statement that settlers are starving gross exaggeration (Stop) Have always followed policy of refunding monthly milk payments where settlers circumstances appeared demand it (Stop) Agitation originated from few settlers evidently anxious sidestep obligations to board (Stop) Possibly also result of dissatisfaction because some settlers evading assignments by shipping in wifes name (Stop) Same question raised at meeting of association last year and explanations to president apparently satisfactory as matter dropped.

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON THE ANNUAL FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The house resumed from Wednesday, March 13, consideration of the motion of Hon. J. A. Robb (Minister of Finance) that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of ways and means, and the proposed amendment thereto of Hon. Hugh Guthrie.

Mr. C. E. BOTHWELL (Swift Current): Just before the house closed yesterday evening, two or three questions were asked from the other side, particularly by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Brady) and the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Chaplin). In reply to the hon. member for Skeena, I wish to inform the house that the statistics I gave yesterday were from the summary of the trade of Canada for January 1929 and for the twelve months ended January, 1928 and January 1929. The question was as to what proportion of our Canadian export trade consisted of wheat. In reply to that question, I may inform the hon. member that the proportion amounts to about 32 per cent. The question was also asked as to whether fish and furs were included or should be included with animals and animal products, and in answer to the hon. member for Lincoln I said that I did not consider these articles as coming under that heading; but even excluding them, the figures I gave still hold good. I want now to inform the hon. member further that from the exports enumerated yesterday we can eliminate not only fish and furs but also beverages, tobaccos, rubber and rubber goods, fruits and vegetables and still the proportion of the export trade of Canada, made up of agricultural and vegetable products and animals and animal products, is over 50 per cent. With regard to those items that are excluded, I cannot possibly see how industry in Canada could be benefited by the placing of a duty on fish and furs, for instance, the two items referred to by the hon. member. In that connection it might also be of interest to the house to note, from the preliminary report of the trade of Canada for 1928, that our percentage of exports of raw material, excluding grains, fresh fruits and vegetables, seed and raw tobacco, has steadily declined. In 1900 the percentage was 28.8 per cent and in 1927 it was only 12.4. Our export of raw material has been steadily going down, whereas in the same report you will find that the American percentage has increased.

Mr. BENNETT: Would the hon. gentleman think I was trespassing on his time if I asked a question? Does he realize that in that report we classify as raw material what in other quarters is classified as manufactured material? Take blister copper, for instance; we treat it as an export of manufactured or partly manufactured products, instead of its being classed as raw material.

Mr. BOTHWELL: There may be something in what the leader of the opposition says. However, on that particular page of the report, which came to me only this morning—page 15—the export trade of Canada in raw materials is compared with that of the United States. Now, following what I said yesterday, I have looked over the trade of Canada, with particular reference to the imports dealt with by the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. Manion), and I find that among the imports into Canada for consumption the largest single item, upon which the opposition apparently believe there should be an increase in the tariff, is that of iron and its products, amounting to $330,953,152. I took occasion to ascertain what the production of Canada was of iron and its products, and I also looked up the report to see what our exports were. As I say, we import $330,953,-152 and export $73,070,054 of the same class of products, leaving a net import of $256,883,-098. Our production in Canada, according to the report for the year 1927, the latest report I could obtain—and for 1928 I believe it will be considerably higher, judging from the newspaper reports—was $525,921,839, making a total consumption of $782,804,937. The proportion of imports amounts, therefore, to hardly 33 per cent.

Mr. STEVENS: Does not the hon. gentleman realize that a substantial portion of these imports, by the re-manufacturing process, enters into the item given for production? He is counting them twice.

Mr. BOTHWELL: That may be; no doubt a percentage of the imports goes into that process. Nevertheless the percentage of imports to our total consumption— and we import manufactured goods as well as raw material in that total I gave—is as I have stated. Now that is a pretty fair record for an industry which does not appear to be native to Canada, because we import a considerable amount of raw material. It is true, as the hon. member for Fort William says, that we have in Canada raw material which might be made use of. At the hearing before the tariff board of the applications made by the manufacturing concerns in respect to iron and steel, a statement was made, as appears in the brief of the Algoma Steel Corporation Limited which was filed in connection with that application. They give a schedule at the back of their brief in regard to the use of Canadian ore, and I wish to read this particular clause from the first column:

There are in Canada reserves of iron ores of excellent metallurgical quality, and large tonnages of the these ores are available and contiguous to the Great Lakes water system, and therefore in a position to be cheaply conveyed to the consuming centres, which are also situated adjacent to the same water system, but all the known deposits of ores located in this district require beneficiation before they can be used in the blast furnace. The cost of beneficiation is in excess of the cost at which American lake Superior ores can be laid down at Canadian furnace docks at the present time, and therefore governmental assistance in the way of bounties would be required to firmly establish a Canadian iron ore industry.

Then I read from the evidence taken on that same reference to the Advisory Board on Tariff and Taxation; this is reference No. 2, the resumed hearing held on November 27, 28 and 29, 1928. At page 25 of the printed proceedings I find the following statement:

. . . . until increased mining costs in the American iron ore fields force the price of ore well beyond present levels, we will be unable to proceed with the development of this important future source of supply.

That was the statement made before the tariff board. If the situation in Canada is such that it is going to cost us considerably more to use our own ore and coal in order to manufacture iron and steel, surely at this time it is good business for us to get our iron and steel from some other place; otherwise we would take the money from the pockets of people who can ill afford to pay it and place it in the pockets of other people who possibly do not need it. If we in Canada are producing about 66 per cent of our own consumption of iron and steel products it does not appear to me that our importations will affect us seriously.

In connection with this same hearing, and after listening to the remarks made in this house from time to time in favour of increased protection, I was somewhat surprised in reading the record of this hearing to find that the representatives of the manufacturers were not agreed among themselves on this question of tariff. The hon. member for West Hamilton (Mr. Bell), who represented Dominion Foundries and Steel Limited said:

We are of the opinion that the removal of tariff from pig iron for steel making and the placing of compensating tariffs on more highly finished steel will increase the production of pig iron in Canada as a part of steel making operations, therefore, no harm results.

Mr. Moffat, of Moffats Limited, in answer to a question put to him by the chairman, said:

. . . . I do not understand what they mean by making pig iron free. I do not want to see pig iron from the United States free, but free from Great Britain.

Mr. Sherman, of Dominion Foundries and Steel Limited, said:

We also want it free from Great Britain, but we do not want to discriminate in our tariff.

Then I find the following:

The Chairman: Do you think, Mr. Bell, the tariff should be free in pig as against the United States?

Mr. Bell: That is our proposition.

The Chairman: You remember the proverb about the ill wind. Am I to understand that there is no objection to free pig iron?

Mr. Bell: So far as this brief is concerned.

Mr. Long (Dominion Iron and Steel Company): Personally I should prefer not to answer that question offhand.

Mr. McInnes (Dominion Iron and Steel Company): I would say, no.

Mr. J. D. Jones (Algoma Steel Corporation): We are opposed to pig iron coming in free of duty; at any rate we do not believe it should be lowered any more than it is now.

If we have a number of manufacturers coming to the tariff board with no more unanimity than is shown from this evidence as to whether or not there should be an increase in tariff, I think it would be pretty hard for an economic conference such as has been suggested to arrive at anything definite in that respect. If a few of our manufacturers cannot agree among themselves on one particular item, with the varied opinions existing in Canada with respect to tariffs I am afraid an economic conference would not get very far.

Another item which has been stressed very often in this house is fruit and vegetables. I am not going to spend very much time on that subject, but I will say that I was rather interested in the bulletin read the other evening by the hon. member for Yale (Mr. Stirling) during the course of his remarks, the bulletin whose author he refused to name. After reading the speech of the hon. member I do not know whether that bulletin was sent to some dealer in the United States or where it was sent; there is nothing in his speech to indicate that. All I can see is that some fruit and vegetable exporter in the United States seems to have issued a bulletin in connection with some fruit damaged by hail. However, I do know that so far as the people on the prairies are concerned, the people who constitute the natural market for British Columbia fruit, they cannot afford to pay anything more for fresh fruit than they are paying at present. If it should be the policy of the people of British Columbia or of this government to increase the tariff on fruit coming into Canada it would simply curtail the consumption of fruit on the prairies. Fruit has come to be recognized as one of the necessities of life, and surely we are not going to be compelled to pay more for it or else deprive our families of fruit entirely. Last fall you could not go into any fruit store in western Canada and buy the best British Columbia fruit; I do not know what they do with it unless they export their best and ship to the prairies only the third and fourth grade fruit. All we could buy were C grade apples; if we wanted a good apple we had to buy one which came from some place in the United States, because there is very little eastern fruit in that market. Whether or not this is the fault of the marketing board of British Columbia or whose fault it is I do not know, but I do submit that an increase in the tariff certainly will not benefit the people who have to consume British Columbia fruit, and I believe the fruit growers of that province are banking too much on what the government can do for them. When you consider that the consumers on the prairies must put up with low grade crops, with consequent low prices, you can easily realize that the amount of money available for anything which might be classed as a luxury is very limited.

Last fall in western Canada, while we had a big crop it was not a paying crop; in looking over the newspaper reports in connection with the crop last year I found some very interesting figures in a Winnipeg paper of October 23, 1928. That day there were inspected in Winnipeg 2,341 cars of wheat; of that number there were only 29 cars of No. 1 northern, 272 cars of No. 2, 412 cars of No. 3, 468 cars of No. 4, 401 cars of No. 5, 461 cars of No. 6 and 183 of feed. The prices ranged from $1.21½ for No. 1 northern to 72½ cents; over 1,500 of these cars were sold at prices averaging 86 cents per bushel. Then you have to pay the freight out of that, which meant that the average to the farmer for the 1,500 cars amounted to less than 70 cents per bushel. It is impossible for a farmer producing wheat at seventy cents a bushel to have much money to spend on luxuries, and I submit it would be a crime to compel him to pay more than he now does for the fruit he wishes to purchase for the benefit of his family. The plea of the British Columbia people in asking for these legislative enactments is very well met by an article in the Financial Post of March 8, 1929. This article quotes Mr. T. H. Kirk, one of Vancouver's ablest business men, a financier of experience, as follows:

> Our legislative efforts should be directed toward assisting the producer to find wider outlets for his goods. The orient is an important field. There is every opportunity for reciprocal trade within the empire; but if our producers are hampered by legislation based on entirely wrong principles our cost of production is going to be too high. If, on the other hand, we encourage production by not only assisting to find markets, but by developing by-products to deal with the surplus, we are adopting a constructive attitude toward the entire productive capacity of the people.

Hon. JAMES MALCOLM (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, it is always with considerable satisfaction that one rises to compliment the Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb). He has on this occasion, as on previous occasions, presented a concise, easily understandable statement of the nation's business. I can also compliment the member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie), who gave the official criticism, in that he paid the Minister of Finance the tribute of having supplied statistical information as to the nation's accounting which removed from the field of controversy many subjects which had in previous debates occupied much of the time of the house.

Having had the pleasure of listening to the remarks of the official critic of the opposition, and having taken the time to read his remarks over carefully, I would say that when we eliminate the political thunder his observations and criticism can be boiled down to three statements. First of all, he admits that the country is in a prosperous condition; secondly, he admits that that prosperous condition is due largely to the intervention and assistance of a benign Providence and takes most of the credit from the government; in the third place, he goes on to show that if the party to which he belongs were in power Providence would not have had to play such a large part, and that there would have been a greater general distribution of the prosperity which he admits.

No one can disagree with the first observation that the country is reasonably prosperous. I think anyone who disagreed with that statement would be placing himself on record as being against every known authority in the Dominion of Canada; he would be placing himself against a unanimity of public opinion such as has never been equalled.

When he comes to the second point, that Providence deserves the credit and this government deserves none, I think he is going beyond the limit of fairness. I do not think I would yield to the hon. member in my respect and thankfulness for the bounties of Providence, but I would like to point out that Providence to-day, as in the past, is very good at helping those who look after themselves. Providence provides opportunities for an industrious man to profit by the bounties provided. Our great agricultural production is the result of scientific research on soil culture, careful working of the land and a certain amount of seeding. Providence provides no harvest of wheat where none is sown. Providence provides the soil which a man may work and from which he may reap the benefit. Providence does not mine, concentrate and refine any ore in our great mining areas.

Mr. MANION: Does the government?

Mr. MALCOLM: Providence provides opportunities whereby the wealth may be taken out of the soil through the engineering skill of man. Providence does not develop any hydro-electric energy from our streams. Providence provides the means whereby man, through his engineering ability, can take wealth from nature in that way. Providence provides no pulp wood mills in the forest, but provides the opportunity for industrious and intelligent people to profit by that wealth. The credit for the development of Canada's wealth is due to the industry of her people guided by wise leaders in governments, both provincial and federal.

Then we come to the hon. member's third point, that were his government in power things would be so much better. The hon. member said that the policies of this government had caused a decided concentration of the wealth of Canada in the urban centres. The memory of hon. members of the house would indeed be short if they could not recall the speeches which were made in this chamber during the years of 1922, 1923 and 1924. At that time it was said by hon. gentlemen opposite that if the government continued in its policy of legislating only for the basic producers our cities would diminish in size, industry would languish and there would be a greater flow of Canadian labour to American industrial centres. We were told at that time that our whole policy was against the industrial centres, but the wisdom of that policy of helping the basic producers has been shown by better figures in business, in banking and in transportation. The hon. member has said that the government has neglected the interests of the agriculturist and the worker, and proceeded to say that certain policies in which he believed would work to better advantage in distributing the national wealth. There are certain economic statistics which I do not think indicate any concentration of wealth, but rather a distinct distribution. I would like to place on Hansard one or two of these facts as an illustration of my argument. Statisticians the world over have paid a great deal of attention during the past few years to the records of car loadings as representing the movement of tonnage and the business which is carried on within a nation. Every division of the Canadian Pacific and Canadian National railways shows an increased tonnage. Some parts of Canada show a greater increase than others, but the growth has been general. The hon. member gave great credit to the managements of the Canadian National and Canadian Pacific railways for the very healthy condition of their finances, and I think he was correct. Their healthy condition was brought about by one thing, and one thing alone: They handled a sufficient tonnage to enable them to earn money and thus put themselves in that position. I think it was in 1923 that the railways began to keep a record of their car loadings. The first records show that 2,851,000 cars of freight were moved in the Dominion of Canada during 1923. Five years later, in 1928, the number of cars of freight moved by our two great railway systems had increased to 3,696,000, an increase of 845,000 cars, or 30 per cent. My hon. friend realizes also that the increase was greater than 30 per cent, because during the past five years there has been a tendency to use a very much larger car and I think it can safely be said that during that period the per mile tonnage of the two great railway systems has increased by about 40 per cent. It cannot be otherwise than that this increase in tonnage has helped employment in the transportation systems; there must be a very greatly increased employment by the Canadian National and the Canadian Pacific to have handled this amount of tonnage, and as railway tonnage represents the labours of other people who produce it, there must of necessity have been a corresponding increase in employment to produce the tonnage referred to.

I think the hon. member for South Wellington said that unemployment in Canada stood at six per cent some years ago—I have forgotten the date—and that in February of this year it stood at exactly the same figure. It would seem as though he wished to leave the impression that there is to-day as much unemployment in Canada as there was then. My hon. friend knows quite well, as does every other hon. member, that one of the great problems of the Dominion is that we will always face a certain degree of seasonal unemployment. The United States of America is said to-day by the statisticians to have somewhere between 10 and 15 per cent of permanent unemployment, and this is a subject of very serious consideration in Washington. There are always 2 or 3 per cent probably wilfully unemployed; there are always in every country in the world men who are registered as unemployed and who are still retaining their jobs hoping to get better ones. We had a great deal of that in Canada right after the war, but the figures of industrial employment as furnished to the bureau by industrialists throughout the Dominion disclose a state of employment which is a credit to the industrialists and to the whole of Canada and it is a figure of employment that corresponds very closely to the figures of car movements by the Canadian railways. Using the 1914 figures as a basis of 100, we have it actually recorded by industrialists that in February, 1927, the index number was 96.6, or 3.4 below the average of 1914. In 1928 it stood at 102 and it now stands at 110, showing an increase of 20 per cent in the number employed in industry as compared with that of three years ago. I do not think one can ask for more conclusive evidence than the corresponding relationship between our car loadings and our record of employment as provided by the industrialists themselves.

The industrial and urban life of Canada has undoubtedly prospered by the additional buying power of our people. If the movement of freight were entirely concentrated in Ontario and Quebec, my hon. friend's contention might be well founded, but this is not so. The tonnage of British Columbia and the prairies, the tonnage of the maritime provinces as well as that of Ontario and Quebec have correspondingly increased. Therefore I think it can be shown that with the increase of car movements and of employment, there must have been a general condition of prosperity.

My hon. friend refers to this government as being a financial one; he says that we are interested in the big financial corporations. May I point out to him that much of the phenomenal growth of building in the last few years in all our cities has been due to the necessity of providing homes for our workers who have been receiving better wages and more continuous employment than they did in the past? The building program of the past year has been the highest on record in the Dominion and I do not believe there is any other country in the world where there is a fairer or better relationship between employers and employees. I do not think there is any other country where the average worker is living under better social conditions as regards the type of home he has, and the facilities for education and transportation. What my hon. friend was trying to point out I cannot tell. We find, however, that the people of Canada during the past few years have, in addition to providing better homes for themselves, spent more money on motor cars and other luxuries than ever before. Therefore, if spending money on luxuries indicates any measure of prosperity, I think it can be shown that prosperity is general. It might be contended that if the average Canadian citizen spent so much on luxuries there could not be much left for savings, but during the past few years savings have risen to somewhere about $1,526,000,000, a gain of $144,000,000 in two years. Savings in savings deposit accounts in chartered banks do not constitute the principle form of saving in which the average person invests. I think more men are to-day investing in life insurance as a form of saving than in any other. We have the illustration of the Dominion having built up the enormous total of $5,609,000,000 worth of life insurance in force from the figure of $2,935,000,000 in 1921, or an increase of almost 100 per cent. If the people of Canada have been able to increase their savings in the past two years by $144,000,000, have in the past five years increased their life insurance in force by about $2,500,000,000 and have been able during that time to give as much business as they have given to Canadian industry for its products, by purchasing motor cars and comforts beyond what were considered comforts in the past, surely my hon. friend cannot be right in his contention that the worker has not prospered under this government's policy.

My hon. friend also contended that in some particular cases the policy of the government was inconsiderate, shall I say?—or at least thoughtless with regard to the agriculturist, and the particular illustration used was the dairy industry. From what my hon. friend said one would imagine that the dairy industry was in anything but a flourishing condition. My hon. friend endeavoured to place the blame on the New Zealand treaty; he said that if it were not for the treaty between Canada and the sister dominions of Australia and New Zealand, all would be well with the dairymen. My hon. friend's contention is not very wise when the matter is dealt with as one of international or empire trade. It is true that in recent years the production of cream, butter and cheese in Canada has diminished, but this is due to the growth of production in miscellaneous dairy factories. The quantity of condensed milk, evaporated milk and skim milk powder has increased from 59,500,000 pounds in 1922 to 95,400,000 pounds in 1927. The dollar value of those two figures is quite interesting. In 1922 we produced those three commodities to the value of $29,694,000 and we have to-day a production of $44,678,000. The production of dairy butter in Canada was less in 1928 than it was in 1927. But Canada was already an importer of butter in 1927. Our exports of fresh milk and other products of the dairy factories which I have mentioned, the condensed milk group, have proved more profitable to the average farmer in the Dominion, than the manufacture of butter, even though butter has maintained in the export markets a fairly high level of price. I have the prices here. The export price of butter in 1926 was 34.2 cents. In 1927, it rose to 39.6 cents, and in 1928, to 40 cents. The advance of domestic prices shows a correspondingly high return. The facts are that in spite of the relatively high value of butter our farmers chose to sell their butter in other forms, other forms for which they received more money.

I contend, Mr. Speaker, that there is absolutely no loss to the dairying industry because our farmers are milk producers in other forms, exporting to other countries, in forms for which they get a better return, exporting over $30,000,000 of milk products. May I ask this question, Mr. Speaker? There are certain areas in Canada, such as the Fraser valley of British Columbia, where my hon. friends from that province know that they have turned their production very largely into condensed milk. They are shipping a very excellent quality of condensed milk to China. The British army of occupation in China is using condensed milk from the Fraser valley. Many of these producers must find it more convenient to sell their milk in that way than to make butter at home.

But there is another side to this New Zealand butter question which I wish to call to my hon. friend's attention. Our department is looking after the interests of the trade of Canada by building up an export of as highly finished goods as possible. The commonwealth of New Zealand, with its small population of a million and a half, does not offer much opportunity for a protective tariff. As a matter of fact, New Zealand imports practically all of its manufactured goods. The goods which it has to sell, due to the very favourable climate, are largely pastoral products such as wool, frozen meats, butter, cheese and hides. Our exports to New Zealand were quite substantial. One has, first of all, sir, to consider this question: Do we want to trade with New Zealand at all, or not? Do we want to get $15,000,000 worth of manufactured goods into New Zealand? If we do want to trade with New Zealand there is only one thing that New Zealand can sell us. We might just as well be frank as business men, and recognize that fact. I think it can be shown that our exchange of products is very profitable.

Mr. Speaker, our exports to New Zealand cover quite a considerable range of products. We sold New Zealand rubber boots, rubber tires, automobiles and automobile parts. We sold them shoes, farm implements and many other articles. May I ask my hon. friend this question with regard to his criticism of New Zealand trade? The $15,000,000 which came to Canada provided, as I propose to show in a moment, a considerable pay roll for Canadian industry. Does my hon. friend think that the men who produced these manufactured goods for New Zealand did not eat some of the butter imported? Did they not provide some buying power in Canada in producing those goods? Were not they themselves, by virtue of the trade, able to take some of the butter which New Zealand says is all it has to give us in return for manufactured goods? I think my hon. friend will admit the logic of this.

There is another point on which my hon. friend criticized the government, and that is for allowing the cost of living to go up. I do not think my hon. friend said that the cost of living went up; I think he said it had remained stationary.

Mr. BENNETT: A trifling increase.

Mr. MALCOLM: In any event, he criticized the government in that respect. Now, Mr. Speaker, I contend that my hon. friend is not very consistent. He says: Keep New Zealand butter out of Canada. He also says, Give the farmer a high price for his butter, but keep the cost of living down. I do not see that my hon. friend can think anything else but that his is a very inconsistent argument. After all, however, it is only in line with other arguments used. My hon. friend said: You are injuring the job of the worker in the Dominion of Canada by importing $39,000,000 worth of agricultural implements. Quite so. It is a large amount of farm implements to import, and he led this house to believe that if the methods which he would adopt were followed this thing would not be. But I have before me, Mr. Speaker, a list of the imports of agricultural implements. It is an interesting list. My hon. friend remembers that when he was in the house a few years ago, and the party to which he belonged was in power, his government removed every single per cent of protection on tractors coming into this country from the United States. They did not leave one per cent of protection for tractors. I am not blaming my hon. friend; it was done in the interest of the farmer, but he cannot argue both sides of the question at the same time. He was in a government that put tractors absolutely on the free list, and of this enormous list of $39,895,000 worth of implements now coming in, I find that $21,000,000, or more than half of the whole, consists of tractors and their parts. I have nothing to say as to the advisability of the action of my hon. friend in doing this, but I do not think my hon. friend is so unfair that he will say to this government: You alone are responsible for doing this thing, and you are injuring the workers, when his government did the very same thing that this government did in considering the interests of the farmers in lowering the duty on implements of production.

I want to mention the speech of my hon. friend in one more respect. He presumed to criticize the extravagance of this government, and he made a rather unfortunate selection in criticizing the expenditures of the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Elliott) when he referred to the historical riding of North Bruce which I have the honour to represent in this house. My hon. friend showed the same lack of knowledge of Bruce that he did of the Scriptures when he substituted Macedonia for Damascus. I would like to point out to the house, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. gentleman failed to mention two of the largest industrial towns in the riding, the towns of Southampton and Wiarton, a district which incidentally at the moment is of such importance to the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario that a very strenuous battle is being waged as to who shall have the sale of power in that district. My hon. friend said that only seventeen boats cleared from ports in Bruce. The seventeen clearances referred to are self-unloading coal vessels that unload about thirty thousand tons of coal at Kincardine, much of which is used by the Canadian National Railways. My hon. friend is an Ontario man, and he knows that although the great lakes constitute the greatest inland avenue of water-borne traffic in the world, and have double the tonnage of the Panama or Suez canals, the people around the north end of lake Huron and surrounding Georgian bay have not asked this parliament for a single dollar by way of subsidy. There is not one subsidized steamship service. All around the district represented by my hon. friend from Parry Sound (Mr. Arthurs), all around the north of my constituency, the fishermen and farmers have only one outlet for their products. All the steamship services are run privately, and have not asked this government for any subsidies. All that these people ask are grants towards the maintenance of their harbours. Referring to Tobermory, I may say that this is the finest natural harbour on the great lakes. My hon. friend from South Wellington is on sound ground in stating that Canada might well provide life-saving facilities at this point for the great lakes shipping. But it would be useless to attempt it on a small scale, and it would cost millions to provide it on an adequate scale. Tobermory is the base for wireless operations, and accordingly messages are brought there in time of disaster. The harbour will accommodate any size ship; there is no need of dredging. All this government spent was to provide a small public dock for the accommodation of the ships that anchor there. Reference has been made to an expenditure of seventeen thousand dollars at Lion's Head. From this village the products of the farm and fisheries are shipped by steamers. I do not know what the trade there amounts to, but I do know that sixty thousands dollars' worth of fish is shipped from Tobermory. To Lion's Head a regular line of boats sails weekly from Owen Sound and Wiarton and thence via Tobermory to the south shore of Manitoulin island, carrying fishing and farming products. The harbour had to be dredged and the dock repaired. Really seventeen thousand dollars is a very small contribution for the Dominion to make to assist this trade in fishing and farm produce. Apparently my hon. friend does not realize that the premier of Ontario views the district in an entirely different light. The province is spending tens of thousands of dollars every year to provide good roads in the district. I believe it is money well spent, for it will allow transportation through a district where it would not be profitable to build a railway. I do not think my hon. friend would care to be quoted as saying that if he were in power he would cut off public expenditures in these outlying ridings; certainly I would not like to be so quoted. He inferred that such expenditure was a big price to pay for my presence in this house. But let me tell him that the people of Bruce do not elect their representatives on the strength of what those representatives may be able to do for the riding by way of securing public works.

However, they have the habit of electing representatives who do get public works where the works are required. So far as I am concerned, I know that the expenditures which have been made in my riding are fully justified.

Now, Mr. Speaker, may I mention a subject with which Providence has not much to do; nor do I wish to give all the credit to the government. I refer to the export trade of Canada. I do not believe there is a man in this house who is not in absolute agreement with me—that the more highly finished the state in which we can export our products the more profitable will be the results to the country. The Department of Trade and Commerce is not exercised over the sale of such commodities as wheat, because those commodities find their own markets; but we are interested in assisting the sale of manufactured products. My hon. friend the leader of the opposition is quite correct in saying it is a difficult matter to draw an arbitrary line between what are manufactured and what are semi-manufactured goods, but our exports of manufactured and semi-manufactured goods last year represented a total of $648,000,000. Very few people can visualize the immensity of this volume of Canadian trade. Last year the United States—with a population of 120,000,000—shipped $4,758,000,000 worth of goods; the United Kingdom $3,451,000,000; Germany $2,432,000,000; France $2,164,000,000. Canada stands twenty-seventh in population among the nations of the world, yet she stood fifth exporting to other countries $1,216,000,000 worth of goods, of which $648,000,000 was either in semi- or fully manufactured form, that is had been through some degree of processing.

An article may be manufactured in so far as the industry that produces it is concerned, but it may be the raw material for some other industry. Copper blister, mentioned by the leader of the opposition, is a good illustration of this. We import from the Argentine large-size hides. I think the hon. member for South Wellington referred to this importation. These hides are tanned in Canada, and shipped to Chicago to the harness-making plants. The large hides are purchased in order to give better cuts. That is a manufactured commodity export so far as Canada is concerned; it is a raw material import so far as the United States is concerned because it is bought as raw material for harness-making.

I wish to point out the value of our export of manufactured goods. The ratio of labour to the value of the goods going out of the factories of Canada is shown to be 43.8 per cent. Hon. gentlemen who know something about industry are aware that overhead represents largely labour, expenses of sales force, advertising, bookkeeping, and so forth. All the raw material originating in Canada which goes into the factory as raw material is a finished product to the industry that produces it; therefore it represents labour. A very careful estimate—and I think it is extremely conservative—shows that for every dollars' worth of manufactured products exported from this country fifty cents is spent in the Dominion on labour in some form or other. On this basis our total of manufactured exports represents an expenditure on Canadian labour of over $300,000,000. Allowing $1,500 as the average return for the Canadian worker, it means that 200,000 workers of this Dominion are employed by virtue of our export trade in semi- or fully manufactured products. Accepting the ratio of one gainfully employed in every four, it means that the manufactured exports of this country provide employment for ten per cent of our total population.

Therefore, sir, I submit that nothing this Dominion can do is of greater importance than to assist her industrialists to find outlets for their commodities in the markets of the world; this brings employment to our working men, it brings money to our shores, and it provides markets for the raw material of the Dominion, whether wheat turned into flour, or lumber turned into sash and doors.

Without unduly flattering the officers of my department, I believe we have representing the Dominion throughout the world as intelligent and aggressive a group of trade commissioners as any country could wish to possess. It would take too much time for me to read the numerous letters of testimony which have been received. The writers voluntarily have complimented our men in the field for what they have done to gather business for Canada.

But there is another service of great importance. Some years ago we inaugurated a steamship service between the Dominion and South Africa. This service has developed a trade which has put Canada to the forefront as an exporter to South Africa. Last June we subsidized a steamship service to the east coast of South America. We are paying $100,000 a year for six trips from Montreal in the summer, and four trips from the maritime provinces in the winter. We are now running four ships of eight thousand tons each to Brazil, Uruguay and the Argentine republic. We have increased the exports to these countries—substantially to Argentine—to $19,000,000. To the Argentine we sell farm implements to the extent of $3,000,000; rubber tires and footwear, $4,500,000; paper, $3,000,000; sewing machines, $4,200,000; automobiles, $2,000,000; dried and salted fish, $500,000.

The Canada-Australia service was started in 1892 with an annual subsidy of $100,000. The return subsidy paid by New Zealand is another $100,000, while the Fiji islands contribute $25,000. So that the service receives $225,000. There is a motor ship, the Aorangi, of 17,500 tons, and the Niagara, of 13,400. These services provide for the carrying of Canada's mail—a service which is said to be worth about $68,000. But the point worth noting is that, when that service was instituted in 1892 Canada's trade with Australia was $293,000; to-day that trade has grown to $16,000,000. In 1911 our trade with New Zealand was $1,000,000; to-day it is over $15,000,000—that is, our trade one way. I wish to point out the value of these steamship services. I should like to refer to the service to South Africa.

Mr. SPEAKER: Time.

Mr. SPEAKER: By unanimous leave.

Mr. MALCOLM: I want to put on Hansard what we are doing, and it will take only two or three minutes. In addition to the services I have already indicated, the Canadian Government Merchant Marine have thirteen boats, with 100,000 tons gross capacity, sailing between Canada and New Zealand. From Vancouver to the British West Indies we have subsidized a service to the extent of $3,000 per trip monthly, the vessels calling at Trinidad and intermediate ports. This service was established in 1926 and as a result of it last year 86,000 tons of freight of various kinds went from British Columbia to the West Indies. Of that tonnage, 1,700 tons were transshipped to some of the other British possessions at which the steamers did not call. Valuable business was secured in Douglas fir by virtue of that service. In the development of the Maracaibo oil fields in Venezuela we managed to obtain orders for British Columbia fir, and through the service a substantial business will be retained for this Canadian product.

The service to South Africa was established in 1902 and an average subsidy of $125,000 has been paid, by means of which we have built up with South Africa a trade which has increased from about $4,000,000 to about $11,000,000.

Mr. Speaker, the house has been very indulgent in allowing me to complete the statement and I beg to be allowed to conclude in a word. I contend that Canada, in view of her export trade in manufactured goods, rendered possible by these services, can well afford where necessary to subsidize transportation to every country in the world when the results are as I have indicated. To obtain a volume of business which supports 8 or 10 per cent of our population, and this with the expenditure of less than half a million dollars, is, I believe, an accomplishment of which as Canadians we have a right to be proud. I do not believe that there is any form of government assistance which will be shown in the future to be of such importance to this Dominion as the assistance which we are giving to those who employ labour in this country, to find markets for their products in foreign fields.

Hon. J. W. EDWARDS (Frontenac Addington): I have listened with a great deal of sympathy to the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat (Mr. Malcolm), because I realize that his health has not been quite good of late owing to a cold. May I express the hope that when the hon. gentleman's health improves—as I trust it will—his reasoning will improve proportionately. The hon. gentleman started by saying that there was unanimity of opinion in the Dominion regarding the prosperity of Canada. I challenge that statement at the outset, and I shall endeavour to show him that there are in Canada certain classes of people who are not enjoying the prosperity of which he boasts. The hon. gentleman referred to the part that Providence plays in our prosperity, such as it is, but in so far as the manufacture of our raw materials is concerned Providence gets no credit at all; any credit along that line must be given entirely to the government. The minister reasoned that, of course, it was advisable, it was better for Canada to have raw materials fully manufactured in this country since it gave employment to more people—that the more fully manufactured the goods which we exported from this country the more people there would be engaged in the production of those goods. Very well. Now let us measure the government by that standard and what do we find? I find that our exports of fully manufactured goods are decreasing; they are getting less from year to year. The minister shakes his head. Well, I have nothing better to go by than the report which is issued by authority of the minister himself. I appreciate the fact that, according to the judgment of the minister, in speeches made throughout Canada, and according to the statement of the Minister of Finance (Mr.

Robb) the other day, we are not to put very much reliance upon these reports; because both the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Trade and Commerce have repudiated their own reports. The Minister of Finance repudiated them in an endeavour to bolster up or to lend colour to the treaty with France. He tried to show that a large percentage of the goods shipped was in some way diverted as it crossed the ocean. He said that France buys more from Canada than our records show.

An hon. MEMBER: Hear, hear.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): An hon. gentleman says "hear, hear." Well, I suppose that was as true before the French treaty was arranged as after. But may I point out that the United States records show that they export to this country over $100,000,000 a year more than our records show that we import.

Mr. MALCOLM: Does the hon. gentleman want an explanation? It covers wheat going through Montreal—$91,000,000.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): How do they know that some of the American wheat shipped by way of Montreal is not credited to Canada instead of to France? The whole point is this: the government have made some very foolish trade arrangements; in fact, they have never yet made a wise one, and they are endeavouring now by repudiation of their own records to bolster up these treaties and to make them appear better than they are. I would direct the attention of the minister to this fact—and it is a fact—that it is a part of the policy of the United States, and has been for years, to encourage the importation into that country of raw material and to work up that raw material into the finished article, thereby giving employment to their own people. In pursuance of that policy over half of the imports of the United States are in raw form and 53 per cent of all they export is in the manufactured state. Exactly the reverse is true so far as Canada is concerned. According to this record I have here, be it worth what it may, 26.6 of our total imports is now in the raw state as compared with 28.9 in 1922, and we are importing 64.9 per cent of fully manufactured goods as compared with 61.5 per cent in 1922. So that, measured by the standard the minister himself suggests, we are fully manufacturing less goods now than we did some years ago when this government came into power. Consequently there are fewer people engaged in our industrial enterprises and there is less employment. It is a fact that we do export 73 per cent of our wood and wood products in the raw state, and we import 64 per cent of such products finished outside of Canada. Canada exports 87 per cent of her metals raw and imports 87 per cent of metal products more or less finished.

In order to present the matter as it impresses me I would like to refer to one particular article; I refer to asbestos, which we export in the raw state to the value of $10,000,000. Those exports go to some ten or twelve different countries, mainly to the United States but also to France, Japan, Austria and so on. The value of the raw rock exported to the United States is about $7,000,000; that is finished in the United States, after which it is worth some $36,000,000. There are 49 factories in the United States engaged in working up that raw material, giving employment to 6,129 people and having a payroll of $7,692,000. On this side of the house our contention is that the government have been indifferent and lax in encouraging the manufacture of our raw materials in Canada to the extent to which we believe they could be fully manufactured here.

Now I wish to refer to New Zealand for a moment; the hon. gentleman said, "Oh, we export goods to the value of some $15,000,000 to New Zealand," and he charged that hon. members on this side would scrap those exports because of our imports of butter from that country. That is not stating the case fairly; we are just as anxious to deal with other countries as are hon. gentlemen opposite, but we hope we never will be guilty of the mistakes they have made in their trade arrangements with other countries. May I remind my hon. friend that previous to the negotiation of this trade arrangement with New Zealand our exports to that country were about $1,500,000 more than they were last year. With respect to the dairy industry, the hon. gentleman laboured very hard indeed to bring forth an excuse which would be acceptable to his own side of the house and which might be swallowed by the country at large. He said, "Oh, it is true that we export less cheese and butter, but our milk is being made up in other forms." Very well; again we will take the hon. gentleman at his word and I will refer to another publication issued under his authority, which shows that our total milk production in 1927 was less by nearly 500,000,000 pounds than it was in 1926. I will give the figures; approximately 13,000,000,000 pounds of milk in 1927 and about 13,407,000,000 in 1926, and according to the same authority our production of milk in 1928 was even less. If the Prime Minister were here I would like to ask him if he believes that the New Zealand arrangement has worked an injury to the farmers; if you like we will admit that the Australian treaty has some advantageous points to it, but in the absence of the Prime Minister I would ask the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat if he will not agree with me when I say that the New Zealand arrangement has worked an injury to the farmers of this country. Will he admit that?

Mr. MALCOLM: I have just made a speech on it; I think it is a good trade arrangement.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Then my hon. friend does not admit the injury to the farmers?

Mr. MALCOLM: My hon. friend can take any inference he pleases from my speech; it will be in Hansard to-morrow.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Then will the Minister of Finance venture to say whether or not the farmers of this country have been injured because of the arrangement with New Zealand? He is busy at present so perhaps he will think it over. The reason I have asked these questions is because on September 21, 1925, the Prime Minister made a speech in the town of Woodstock; referring to this Australian treaty, which was to take effect on October 1 following, he said:

> There is one condition of that treaty which says that we are free to alter or to abrogate it altogether on six months notice. I say to the farmers of Oxford that if the Australian treaty does any injury to your industry I will undertake to say on behalf of the government that I will give that six months notice on short order.

An hon. MEMBER: Who said that?

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): The Prime Minister said that on September 21, 1925. Now I would like to direct the attention of the house to a further fact; the Australian treaty came before this house and the representatives of the people in parliament were given an opportunity to express their opinions for or against it, but it was only after dissolution that the cabinet, consisting of some sixteen or seventeen gentlemen, sat around a table here and by order in council made the treaty arrangement with New Zealand without any previous negotiation and without our receiving anything in return. That is what I find fault with.

Just here I want to say that I believe a wrong impression is going about that the advantages of this treaty had to be extended to New Zealand, and in that connection I quote a section from the act itself:

> . . . . subject to the customs tariff, 1907, the governor in council may, by order in council, extend the said advantages to goods the produce or manufacture of any British country.

It was on the strength of that section that the cabinet extended these advantages to New Zealand, and that action was taken just five days after the Prime Minister made his speech in Woodstock. Was the Prime Minister dealing fairly with the farmers of Oxford county when he spoke to them on September 21 with regard to Australia and said nothing about an arrangement with New Zealand, or are we to infer that on that date the government had no intention of extending this treaty to New Zealand and that that was the reason the Prime Minister made no mention of it? This is just one of those autocratic acts which have characterized this government ever since it came into office.

With regard to this arrangement with New Zealand I would like to direct the attention of the Minister of Trade and Commerce to one or two figures showing the results of this unprofitable bargain and the effect which it has had on the dairy industry and the farmers of this country. In 1926 our imports of butter from New Zealand amounted to 3,193,382 pounds; in 1927 they had increased to 8,714,985 pounds; in 1928 this increased to 16,124,641 pounds, and the trade commissioner for New Zealand estimates that in 1929 New Zealand will send to Canada double the quantity sent in 1928. Then I would like to direct the attention of the Minister of Trade and Commerce to the fact that last year we imported 16,801,656 pounds of butter, and taking the figures given by his own department as to the milk production of the average cow, that importation would equal the production of 84,000 cows; allowing 10 cows to a farm that would give a good start to 8,400 farms, and allowing 5 people to a farm it would mean something to 42,000 people. I would add to that this further fact: Since this arrangement was entered into we exported last year 35,000,000 pounds of cheese less than we did before this arrangement was made. That would represent the production of 83,000 cows on 8,300 farms and would affect 41,500 people. Add these two together, and the result of the improvident bargain which was made would be equal to the production of 167,000 cows on 16,700 farms affecting 83,500 people. It is a significant fact that while the number of milch cows in Canada has decreased 101,000, according to the minister's own report, and the number of swine has decreased 197,422 in the last year, the dairy herds of New Zealand have increased during the last twelve months by 57,000 cows, and the number of swine by 66,755. We used 347,000,000 pounds less of milk in the production of butter in 1926 than we did in 1927; we used 377,000,000 pounds less in the production of cheese, but although a little more was used in other ways our total production of milk was less than it was before this arrangement was entered into.

I would draw this further fact to the attention of the minister to show him that the prosperity he speaks of is not general throughout the Dominion of Canada. I call his attention to the exports of certain farm products, such as pork, bacon and hams, lard, cheese, butter, milk and cream, milk—condensed, evaporated or as milk powder. When he studies the figures relative to the export of the surpluses of those articles, closely identified with this trade arrangement, he will find that for the last calendar year our exports of pork were $900,000 less than before this arrangement was made; our exports of bacon and hams $20,000,000 less; cheese, $8,250,000 less; butter, $8,000,000 less; milk and cream, $1,400,000 less; and milk—condensed, evaporated or as milk powder—$1,400,000 less. Previous to our entering into this arrangement the exporting of the surpluses of these products brought into the pockets of the farmers of the Dominion of Canada the tidy sum of $88,115,725. The figures for last year, two years after we entered into this arrangment, show that the farmers received only $47,179,797. That is to say, the action of this government has decreased the revenue of our farmers by over $40,000,000. I do not expect the Minister of Trade and Commerce to be very much affected by those figures, because I note that he is reported in the Goderich Signal, a Liberal paper, of August 16, 1923, as saying:

> The farmers are the most dissatisfied men in the Dominion of Canada.

He said the farmer's occupation was essentially a labouring job. That is true, it is a labouring job and it is not receiving very much encouragement under this administration. The article continues:

> The fact of the matter is that the farmer is spending more to-day than 100 acres will ever yield.

He deprecated the tendency to take more from a job than the job would earn and declared that the farmer should live on the money he actually earned. He said a mechanic could only have a mechanic's living at the best. He advocated the importation of raw labour for the carrying on of our public works, and called attention to the fact that in years gone by the Irish came here and did this work. They were unfitted to do anything else, and that is the reason they did this labouring work.

Mr. STEVENS: Who said that?

Mr. EDWARDS: The Minister of Trade and Commerce. He then went on to say that the Italians came over and took the place of the Irish, and now the Slavs were the pick-and-shovel men of North America. All of this would seem to be indicative of the heartfelt sympathy the Minister of Trade and Commerce has for those who labour. The article continues:

> Mr. Malcolm contended that Canada should continue to import raw labour which will live humbly and which will do a day's work for a reasonable rate of pay. Canada's development depends upon plenty of cheap labour.

And so his colleague, the Minister of Immigration (Mr. Forke), has brought into this country during the last two years, according to the statement of his deputy minister, over 100,000 men from central and southeastern Europe and has dumped them into the cities to rob good Canadians of their jobs and force them to leave this country and go to the other side of the line.

I am sure that every member of the house was very pleased when the honour came to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell) of being created a doctor of laws by one of the universities. It is said that universities occasionally confer that honoured degree upon men of wealth with the object of having them make a large donation to an endowment fund, but in the case of the Minister of Agriculture I do not think anyone will say that it was done for that purpose. Undoubtedly this degree was conferred upon the Minister of Agriculture because of his outstanding merit and because of certain distinctive qualities which he possesses in a very high degree. I am glad to see the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Elliott) applauding so heartily, and I hope the same honour will come to him some day. What were the distinctive qualities which caused this university to confer the LL.D. upon the Minister of Agriculture? It seems to me that the one thing in which he excels, above all others, is in the vast number of new words and phrases which he has added to the English language, and the dignity he has given to slang and to political buffoonery. The minister took a trip over to Europe and he took along his car and chauffeur. Before he left he had emblazoned on the door of his car the coat of arms of Canada, and it was the duty of the chauffeur to explain to the people who gathered round to see this wonderful automobile that the insignia on the door of the automobile represented the coat of arms of Canada and that it was one of the things with which the Postmaster General (Mr. Veniot) had not up to date interfered. What did the Minister of Agriculture do over there? He says that he visited Holland Denmark, Sweden, and Ireland. And for what? I use his own words: "I went over there and I examined the live hogs of all of our competitors." While he was examining hogs—and I hope he fared better than did the prodigal son of ancient times—his chauffeur was explaining the coat-of-arms. As he passed through the country in a blaze of glory, it looked to the people of France as though Napoleon had come to life again, and as he went through Germany the little children shouted "Hoch der Kaiser!" The minister says that he has used certain yardsticks and that by all the yardsticks which indicate prosperity this is a prosperous country.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): The Minister of Public Works says yes. Let me direct this question to him: Is it not true that in his constituency any man can go out and buy hundreds of farms for the price of the buildings with the land thrown in? He knows that is a fact.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I might say to my hon. friend, if he will permit me—

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): I will not permit him to take up my time.

Mr. ELLIOTT: My hon. friend has asked me a question. There is no part of Canada where an intending purchaser of a beautiful farm can do better than in the county of Middlesex.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): I get my confirmation from the minister himself, although he did not intend his remark in that way. He says that an intending purchaser can come into his county and buy a beautiful farm cheaper than in any other part of the country and he wants that understood. But what about the man who is selling the farm? Is it a yardstick of prosperity that hundreds of thousands of Canadians are leaving this country and going to the other side of the line in order to get jobs? Is it not true that millions of dollars are being spent in bringing hundreds of thousands of aliens into Canada to take the place of Canadians who have been deprived of jobs in this country? Is it an evidence of prosperity that we tear down whole city blocks in Ottawa and the Minister of Agriculture intimated that the intention was, in the course of time, to rip out all the buildings along Wellington street and make it all a park? I suppose that will include the post office also. The Minister of Agriculture very properly held that a minister should be informed. Yes, of course, he should be informed. I presume it is just as well, when he goes trotting around Europe in a high-priced car, to take his chauffeur along with him so that he can be informed too and pick up some crumbs of information that the minister might otherwise miss.

I should like to direct attention to the importance of our home market. The home market for Canadian farm products based on the average of the last four years and indicating the percentage of the total production consumed in Canada, works out as follows:

Article	Percentage of total production consumed in Canada
Cheese	20 per cent
Milk, condensed or evaporated or as milk powder	51 per cent
Butter	95 per cent

Last year the amount of butter consumed in Canada was 99 per cent of what we produced. Let me direct attention to a statement which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb) will remember having made in 1925. He said that the policy of the government was to encourage the bringing into Canada of butter, eggs and so forth from New Zealand, and that we would sell ours in the United Kingdom. May I remind the hon. gentleman that in 1926 we had a market in England for more than 18,000,000 pounds of butter, and that last year we had a market for 47,000 pounds. Instead of our finding a market in England for our surplus butter, last year England shipped to Canada 1,300,000 pounds of butter.

Mr. ROBB: Because the price was three and a half to four cents a pound higher.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): The fact is that the butter was imported. What the minister said in 1925 was that we would let this butter come in from the antipodes and we would sell ours in the English market. We are not selling our butter in the English market; we are crowded out there. At the present time it is summer in Australia and in New Zealand where they are producing their milk, butter and cheese at the lowest possible cost, and the present government, which has never shown any proper regard for the farmers of Canada, proposes to compel them to compete with Australia and New Zealand at a time when the cost of production in this country is at its peak. That, in my judgment, is absolutely unfair, unreasonable and unjust. To continue with the statistics I was giving:

Article	Percentage of total production consumed in Canada
Eggs	99 per cent
Meats	93 per cent
Potatoes	93 per cent
Turnips	96 per cent
Sugar beets	92 per cent
Apples	62 per cent
Hay and clover	98 per cent
Wheat	39 per cent
Oats	94 per cent
Peas	93 per cent
Barley	69 per cent
Rye	51 per cent
Beans	98 per cent
Corn	100 per cent
Buckwheat	94 per cent
Wool	63 per cent

I maintain that we should do everything we can in fairness to our farmers who, according to the Minister of Trade and Commerce, cannot make a living off 100 acres of land. We should conserve the home market for the Canadian farmer; we should give him a fair show in his home market.

Let us consider the question of fruits and vegetables of which we imported last year $16,000,000 worth from the United States alone. Vegetables brought into Canada from the United States are brought in from the southern states in the first place. The Americans have three prices: they have, first, the high price for the early product in their own market without any competition from us; second, the high price in the Canadian market because they can get their stuff in here several weeks ahead of ours, and, third, a moderate or low price for whatever balance they have. They are willing to sacrifice that and the government permits them to do so by dumping it on the Canadian market. The same is true with regard to fruits. There are fruits rotting on the ground in Ontario and other parts of Canada while the Americans are sending their fruits into Canada at sacrifice prices. This strikes me as being so absolutely unfair as not to require any further argument.

If time will permit I should like to refer to the finances of Canada. In 1896 when the Laurier government came into power in Canada the national debt was $258,000,000. In 1911 it was $340,000,000, or an addition of $82,000,000 in the fifteen years under the Laurier government. Between 1911 and 1914 the Conservatives had decreased that debt by several million dollars. In 1921 it stood at $2,340,000,000 and, according to the statement of the Minister of Finance made in the house a few days ago, it is now $2,330,000,000, or $10,000,000 less than it was in 1921. What the the main sources of revenue? According to the Minister of Finance they are customs and excise and the special war taxes. They account for 87 per cent of our revenue. May I point out that in the seven years from 1914 to 1921 the Conservatives collected from these three sources of revenue $1,691,000,000, and in the seven years from 1921 to 1928 the present government collected from the same sources of revenue $3,131,000,000. The people of Canada have a right to ask what the government did with the money. The Minister of Finance said that there had been debt reductions amounting to $226,000,000, but he did not call attention to the statements of Mr. Fielding in 1922 and 1923 when he admitted that $179,331,000 was added to the national debt. If the Minister of Finance had been as candid as was Mr. Fielding, I suppose the headlines in the papers after he made his speech would have been in a good deal smaller type. Let us take railway subsidies, for instance. In the seven years, 1914 to 1921, during which the Conservatives were in power, $8,650,315 were expended. In the seven years, 1922 to 1928, during which the Liberals were in power, there were no subsidies at all. Then let us take expenditures under the head of war and demobilization. For seven years under the Conservatives, $1,687,402,782 was expended. Under the Liberals, the last seven years, $8,873,909 was expended.

I make this statement here to-day, Mr. Speaker, and I am able to back it up—the facts are indisputable—that during the whole of the Conservative regime, from 1911 to 1921, not one single dollar was added to the debt of Canada except for two purposes. One was the war and the responsibilities arising from the war, and the other was the taking over of the railways. I add to that still further, and I say that not only did the Conservatives live within their income during those eleven years—and I would like the Prime Minister to get this into his head and keep it there for future reference—but they met and paid off $698,809,700 of war debt out of revenue. Why, sir, they paid off $164,000,000 gratuities to soldiers, $102,000,000 soldiers' civil re-establishment, $90,000,000 pensions, $80,000,000 soldiers' land settlement, $7,000,000 soldiers' insurance, and voted $10,000,000 for technical education. That $453,000,000 they ought to get credit for. And there was the $25,000,000 housing loan, $35,000,000 to the western farmers to buy seed grain and feed, which they seem to have forgotten all about, $30,000,000 for shipbuilding, $20,000,000 for good roads, $10,500,000 in that time of financial stress as aid to agriculture, and $5,000,000 to encourage the live stock production of this country.

In addition to all that, Sir, they established thirteen new experimental farms or stations and interior government elevators, and provided the sum of $40,000,000 a year to the British government to enable them to buy our butter and cheese, bacon, hay and other products here in the Dominion of Canada.

When one looks back over the past, Mr. Speaker, and takes into consideration the reductions which the Conservative party made on agricultural implements and other things in that time, when is taken into consideration the stress and strain upon the government, which in itself was tremendous, I say, Sir. without any fear of contradiction, that never since confederation has there been a government in the Dominion of Canada which has as clean and creditable a record as the Borden-Meighen governments from 1911 to 1921.

May I, Mr. Speaker, in the few minutes left to me, call your attention to a few of the reductions made by the Conservatives during those years, because it is the custom of our friends opposite to represent themselves as the only friends of the farmer. I simply want to put one or two things on record here. In 1914, the Conservatives reduced the duty on binders, reapers and mowers, from 17½ per cent to 12½ per cent. They exempted wheat, tea, sugar, coal, binder twine and agricultural implements from the war revenue tax of 7½ per cent and 5 per cent. They reduced the duty on cement from 12½ cents to 8 cents per hundredweight. They made ditching machines and farm tractors free. They lowered the duty on cultivators, harrows, hay rakes, seed drills, manure spreaders and weeders, by 5 per cent, from 20 per cent to 15 per cent, and by 5 per cent on hay loaders, potatoe diggers, feed cutters, grain crushers, fanning mills, rollers, waggons, hay tedders and so forth, from 25 per cent to 20 per cent, and 2½ per cent on ploughs, windmills, and portable traction engines, and so forth, from 20 per cent to 17½ per cent. And several other things.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I submit that those figures indicate very clearly that at a time when if ever a government had an excuse for not making any reductions in duties, the government of the day at that time did not lose sight of the farmers in this country, but they did reduce the duties on many of those articles, while they were condemned by their opponents at the same time and by many in the west. I call the attention of western members to this fact, that Mr. Crerar, the head of the Grain Growers Grain Company, was condemning the Conservative party for what they did not do, in his estimation, giving them no credit for what they did, and at the same time, the company of which he was the head was pocketing a profit of over 21 per cent on all the sales of farm implements and everything else which they sold. That is something to which I would call the attention of hon. members from the prairie provinces, and it is a fact which no one can possibly gainsay. They could handle these articles if any person could, at a minimum of profit, because at the elevators they had men who were running the elevators—

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. member's time has expired.

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, no westerner can be very enthusiastic over the budget. Even the member for Lisgar (Mr. Brown) admitted that it did not contain much meat, but he seemed to find some solace in the fact that he could discover no poison.

I am inclined to think a good many of us are becoming rather weary of this negative goodness, in fact, I do not know whether we can even call it goodness. It is simply a stand-pat attitude. It is quite true that there is no further reduction in the income tax, and for that we are duly thankful. But there are practically no concessions to the western farmers, and, as far as labour is concerned, I am afraid that we are not particularly interested in the items of the budget. I recall an ancient condemnation of the Laodiceans, "I know thy works, that thou are neither cold nor hot; I would thou wert cold or hot. So because thou art lukewarm, and neither hot nor cold, I will spew thee out of my mouth." Some of the hon. members are inclined to say of the budget: Because you are neither too cold nor too hot, I think I can swallow you.

The amendment suggests that there is no provision for reasonably safeguarding and protecting the interests of those engaged in agricultural pursuits or in industrial employment in Canada. Perhaps it is hoped by the Conservatives that by taking such a position they may be able to attract the votes of those who are here specially representing the farmer or industrial groups. I am afraid, however, this amendment is altogether too general in its terms, and, as interpreted by the speeches, it simply means the old time-worn doctrine of protection.

May I point out, Mr. Speaker, without developing the subject, that protection of industry has never meant the protection of workers in industry. If it did, it might be some temptation to some of us to vote protection. But never yet, as far as I have been able to study the situation either in Canada or elsewhere has protection of industry meant protection of the workers. There was a very good suggestion contained in the report of the committee in Sydney which investigated the conditions among the steel workers. I referred to this report in my speech on the address in reply to the speech from the throne. The report to the ministerial association called attention to the fact that for the continuous operations in the steel works, that is, consisting of the coke ovens, blast furnaces and open hearth departments, approximately one thousand men a day are involved. The day shift is eleven hours and the night, thirteen, throughout a seven-day week. That is, the men in those departments work on an average of eighty-four hours every week, sixty-six during the week on day duty and one hundred and two for the week on night duty. Nothing whatever is being done for those men, and the federal government tells us that it has no jurisdiction. The report says, and I think very pertinently:

> We recommend that representations be made immediately to the federal Department of Labour and to the Prime Minister of Canada, urging that if and when the steel companies of Canada are allowed a protective tariff, provision be made for the men receiving the standard hours of labour adopted by the parliament of Canada, namely, the eight-hour day.

I would urge upon the government that if protection is to be accorded to this industry —and it already has received much at the hands of various governments of Canada—the least that could be done would be to insist that the workers be safeguarded, at least, to the extent of reasonable conditions of labour.

The member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Irvine) called attention to the unsatisfactory practice that at present prevails of the government bringing down a budget containing a great many different items and saying to the house: Take it or reject it. There is no alternative. In connection with a recent debate on another question, a sharp distinction was drawn by speakers on the government side between the respective functions of the administration and parliament, and we were told that the administration must assume the responsibilities for whatever course might be taken. Now, I know that has been the practice, but I would submit that there is no reason why it should forever continue to be the practice. In some respects the Prime Minister and the present government are more Tory than the Tory administration in Great Britain. In this connection I would venture to call the attention of hon. members to a very interesting report presented to the British house by the Secretary of State for the Colonies, Mr. Amery. It deals with a suggested constitution for the island of Ceylon, and is the result of the work of a special commission presided over by the Right Hon. the Earl of Donoughmore. The report contains one or two paragraphs that I think might very well be taken to heart by this house. For instance, it is suggested that at the present time there is:

> Uncertainty among those best informed as to the future form of parliamentary practice in Great Britain.

And:

> Within political parties in Great Britain inquiries are constantly being undertaken to ascertain whether the machinery of parliament cannot be reformed so as to make it more responsive to public opinion.

Then will the house kindly listen to this—and it is from Conservative members of parliament in Great Britain:

> We propose to take full advantage of the opportunities which we have enjoyed of gauging the deficiencies of current parliamentary practice and the direction in which the forces of constitutional evolution are now impelling us, and to frame our recommendations with the object of providing for Ceylon a form of government, modern, practical and democratic, which will combine with the best elements of the parliamentary system, features designed to escape its ascertained and acknowledged weaknesses.

That is a remarkable statement coming from Lord Donoughmore and presented to the British house by the Conservative Secretary of State for the Colonies. The report goes on:

> It is a scheme which is calculated to divert attention from the academic discussion of political theory to the practical consideration of the pressing administrative problems of the day.

How that would transform the discussions in this house!

> It is a scheme which, while giving responsibility as well as power, guarantees that political progress shall go hand in hand with administrative knowledge.

And further:

> We have framed our proposals in some relation to the system obtaining in the most modern deliberative bodies of power and influence, such as the League of Nations. Here the representatives of the world powers, with all their varieties of races and outlook, have though fit to organize themselves on a basis of standing committees as the most convenient method of disposing of the program of administrative and detailed work which habitually confronts them, of facilitating practical achievement, of acquiring and distributing an exact knowledge of those problems which await solution, and of inspiring all members with that mutual confidence so essential to effective co-operation in the common interest.

The report proceeds to suggest a constitution under which the conduct of the business of the house will be divided into various committees, the members electing the chairmen of these committees, and the chairmen then becoming what we would call departmental ministers. I think such a modification might well merit the attention of this house. We cannot but think of its advantages as we are asked to say "yes" or "no" to the budget.

A great deal has been said pro and con in regard to our national prosperity. I have often wished I was in the happy position apparently enjoyed by some members of being able with a good conscience to say that all the people of Canada are happy and prosperous. Let me suggest that the various social and economic movements which are taking place do not altogether corroborate the idea of general prosperity. We can maintain our population only by importing the poverty-stricken people of Great Britain and the continent of Europe. During the period from 1921 to November, 1928, we expended on immigration no less than $16,242,219.03. Sixteen million dollars to beg people from Great Britain, Europe and the United States to come to this country!

Miss MACPHAIL: And we cannot even keep them.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: No, as my hon. friend suggests, we cannot even keep them. I suggest that if we spent one-quarter of that sixteen million dollars in making conditions a little more tolerable in this country the results would be better for the nation. From 1881 to 1928 we received no less than 5,599,250 immigrants. Yet notwithstanding that addition we have hardly kept the population that we would have had we been able to retain our own native-born. That does not seem to reflect any very great and general prosperity throughout the Dominion. I am not blaming this particular government. In my judgment the doings of this or that government do not matter very much in regard to these great economic problems, but I do say it is absolutely absurd for the government in the face of such movements to suggest that the great mass of the people are prosperous.

Then again there is the general shift from the country to the city, so that now over half of our population lives in urban centres. I am not one of those who believe it is possible to retain a great majority of the people in the country. I think machinery has been introduced to such an extent that we can hardly hope for that condition. But undoubtedly it is because the agriculturists of this country, and indeed the agriculturists of the United States, have been placed in such an adverse position that there has come this very swift shift from country to city. Further than that, there has come a very decided shifting of employment from the truly productive to what might be called the merely luxury occupations. As far back as 1917 Mr. W. J. Hanna, the food controller, put this very well:

> That there have long been too many city people and too few farmers in this Dominion is common knowledge, but it is not so well known that among our city people there are too many mere distributors, too many shippers, packers, carriers, wholesalers, retailers, advertisers, printers, salesmen, brokers, sub-brokers, deputy brokers, assistant-sub-deputy brokers and the whole army of people in the services and professions that wait upon the middleman. I do not say that the functions of these non-producers could be done away with, but I do say that there were and there are too many for each function—too much duplication of effort and equipment. . . . This inflated staff of non-producers, not only in Toronto but in every Canadian city and town, was and still is, dependent for its wages upon the movement of farm goods to the city and city goods to the farm, and all the over-specialized, over-elaborated processes which a luxurious civilization imagines are necessary to its happiness.

We have to face that situation at the present time.

Futhermore, I suggest that the diminution in the birth rate is not altogether satisfactory. In 1921 the birth rate was 26·4, and from 1921 to 1926 it had fallen to 22. In eight provinces of Canada, Quebec excepted, there was a loss of 4·4; while Quebec dropped from 37·6 in 1921 to 32·1 in 1926, showing a loss of 5·5 points. In other words, there is a greater drop for the province of Quebec than for the other provinces of the Dominion. Or take the figures as given us in the census returns of families according to numbers. The number without children is 30·6 per cent; the number of families with one child, 20·9 per cent—that is to say, half of all the families in Canada have either no children or only one child; the number with two children is 16·7; the number with three children, 11·6; the number with four children, 8·0; the number with five children, 5·3; and the number with six and up, 8·7. I venture to suggest that the reason for the decrease in the size of families, while in part doubtless due to higher standards and even to the desire for certain luxuries, is also due to the fact that in the middle and wage-earning classes it has become simply impossible for people to attempt to rear families of even a moderate size. They cannot afford to have families.

The unemployment and misery existing in some of our eastern cities was very well depicted a day or two ago by the hon. member for West Hamilton (Mr. Bell). In this connection may I direct attention to a very suggestive editorial in this morning's Citizen, from which I quote the last paragraph:

> Well informed members like Mr. Bell must know enough of history to realize that only the most exceptional conditions under the present economic system can produce a situation where there are no employed, and hence no extreme poverty. They must know that a reserve of unemployed is one of the most helpful factors in the successful functioning of our present industrial order.

I wonder whether we all accept that. It does not come from some radical journal, but from the Ottawa Citizen.

Mr. STEVENS: Pretty radical.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: It is radical; that is why I quote it. I am one of those who believe that our present economic system is fundamentally inadequate to meet the needs of present day civilization, and it is such facts as these that drive me to that conclusion. But let me quote that last sentence again:

> They must know that a reserve of unemployed is one of the most helpful factors in the successful functioning of our present industrial order. They must know too that the great weakness in the system is that while it produces magnificently it fails to be so impressive as a distributor—hence over-production and under-consumption; and finally they must know that any remedy they have so far put forward or ever contemplated, cannot materially change conditions which are inherent in the economic system.

The Labour members believe that the present economic system must be replaced by a different one; hence in discussing these matters we are very much under a handicap, because it is generally assumed in this house that the present system is functioning fairly well. Under these circumstances we can do little more than to show the weaknesses of the existing order. But I would point out that even under the existing system we might expect to have have some alleviation offered by the government in power. The government, however, is offering practically no alleviation. Thus we are confirmed in our belief that there is something inherently wrong in the system. A friend beside me suggests that the opposition may believe the system is not perfect. I am glad to have the support of the opposition, and I fancy that if we were permitted to sit side by side in this house many years longer we might make the Conservative opposition into very good socialists.

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): My hon. friend is not a socialist, I hope.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: A socialist? That is why I am here. It all depends upon your definition of socialism.

An hon. MEMBER: Give us a definition.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: In a word, I would say this: we believe that the concentration of capital has gone on to such an extent under the existing system that it has got into comparatively few hands. We believe that a very small group of people have managed to gain control over this great system of production and distribution. We do not believe we can go back to the earlier system of individual production, and under these circumstances it is our opinion that there ought to be some sort of democratic control over the existing system—a control exercised for the advantage of the many and not for the profit of the few.

I should like to back up the appeal made by the hon. member for West Hamilton by giving a group of statistics which are closely related, one set to the other. The Department of Labour has given an estimate of family budgets at various levels. They take what they call the average family of five—for it is supposed that it is necessary that a married couple should have at least three children in order that, allowing for sickness and death, the race may be perpetuated. Taking the average family of five, the department says that the comfort level is $2,356.82; the health and decency level requires $1,719.23; while the minimum subsistence level is estimated at $1,396.92. They also give figures for what they denominate the poverty level. This they fix at $900, and the people receiving that income are on the ragged edge, apt to fall lower at any time. As a matter of fact, even where relief is well distributed, our relief agencies are frequently forced to give to families in the vicinity of $900 in order that anything like respectable conditions may be maintained in the homes under relief.

Now let us take the wages in Canada, and here we are not dealing with what it may be charged are the exceptional cases to which the hon. member for West Hamilton referred. A very extensive survey was made in 1921; let us consider the case of a skilled tradesman such as a carpenter. In Montreal the average earnings of an ordinary carpenter were $1,109.63; in Toronto $1,187.83 and in Winnipeg $1,224.56. Then consider the labourer; in Montreal the average earnings of a labourer were $881.41, in Toronto $965.48 and in Winnipeg $980.37. In other words, unskilled workers in Canada are down at the poverty level, either slightly above or slightly below it, whereas such skilled tradesmen as carpenters receive a little less than what the Department of Labour has established as the minimum for decent subsistence; they are below the level of health and decency.

We had figures given us by a gentleman representing the cotton factories of Cornwall who came before the committee on industrial relations several years ago; he told us that in certain factories workmen were receiving only $15 per week. Under the Minimum Wage Act the girls in these factories were receiving $10 per week, not too large an amount to keep them in decency, but the men most of whom according to the evidence were married, were receiving only $15.

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): There are scores of workmen in Hamilton getting no more than that right now.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Can any hon. member of this house say that is a decent wage? Can anyone say that fathers and mothers attempting to rear families can maintain them on a wage of that kind? It is all very well for the Minister of Finance, in looking over the bank clearances, the volume of trade and so on, to say that we are wonderfully prosperous, but surely when the great mass of the people are receiving wages such as I have indicated—and these statistics are furnished by our own bureau—it is impossible to say any longer that there is general prosperity among our people. That is the situation we must face. Only the other day, before one of the committees of the house, a manufacturer said with regard to his own men:

> I do not see how they can live, especially at this time. We are working from eight to four and not on Saturdays. They have to pay their expenses working about thirty-five hours a week.

Even civil servants in the employ of this government in many instances are receiving only $80 a month; they are down at the level of the poverty line. Now let me quote another set of statistics which seem to bear directly upon this question; let me give the average number of weeks of employment by workers of all ages in cities of 30,000 population and more, according to figures furnished in 1921. I select a few occupations and cities that are fairly representative:

Construction
Montreal	42.69
Toronto	41.34
Winnipeg	40.67
Labourers
Montreal	42.26
Winnipeg	42.04

Therefore these people are working only forty or forty-two weeks in the year, and the wages received during that time must keep them for the entire year. If they have a period of illness; if any accident happens or there is any other calamity in the family it throws them back for years and forces them to spend all their time paying debts. Some one may say that a number of these people have not large families. That is true, and I have here another set of statistics giving the average number of persons per family supported by heads of families of wage earners in cities of 30,000 and over, according to the figures of 1921:

Montreal	4.00
Winnipeg	3.61

That simply means that at a very early age the children must go out to work in order to supplement the wages of the father, and in this way we are mortgaging the future of the coming generation.

Now I should like to speak for a few minutes on some matters more directly related to the budget. After all, the government is a vast collecting agency; the estimated expenditure for 1928-29 is $385,160,000, an average of $40 per head, or $200 for a family of five. I submit that no family in Canada can be really uninterested in the way the people's money is spent when each family contributes an average of $200 per year.

How is this vast sum raised? The total revenue from taxation is $391,050,000; of that amount $58,500,000 comes from the income tax, leaving a total of $332,550,000 raised by indirect taxation, or an average of approximately $35 per head. The greater part of our revenue comes from the common people, and the larger the family the more they have to pay in taxation. On the other hand, how are these huge revenues spent? According to the Minister of Finance the principal expenditures attributable to the Great war, total 42.30 per cent. I submit, as I have done in previous years, that if to this total is added the amount made necessary in the collection of the much larger revenues and other large items of expenditure of that character, the expenditure attributable to the war will be in excess of 50 per cent. However we will take the figure given by the minister, 42.30 per cent. Contrast that with other expenditures. I look at the estimates which have been placed before us and I note a few of the items and the relation they bear to the total expenditure, as follows:

	Per cent
Scientific institutions	.29
Health	.23
Old age pensions	.21

On these four large and important departments of our public life we spend only one per cent of our revenues, while according to the figures given by the minister 42.30 per cent is spent on the last war. I think perhaps that very well illustrates one of the reasons why some of us connected with the labour movement are not tremendously interested in the budget. The common people of the country are getting very little out of it; the people who are receiving the greatest benefits under the budget are the people who hold a mortgage on Canada, many of whom obtained that mortgage by profiteering either during or since the war. Notwithstanding our protests of previous years the government have made absolutely no effort in the direction of a capital levy in order to extinguish our great war debt.

With regard to old age pensions, the Prime Minister said the other day:

> I believe that everyone who has given any attention to public finance will agree that it is a thoroughly vicious system to have one body raise taxes and another body expend the money thus secured.

I think it was the member for Vancouver South (Mr. Ladner) who then asked: What about old age pensions? The Prime Minister then continued:

> I think it is, yes: I have come to the conclusion that it is a thoroughly vicious principle.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Who said that?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The Prime Minister. Let me compare that with what the Prime Minister said on March 26, 1926, when he was advocating the government taking part in such a scheme. He said:

> As between the different provinces I fail to see where there is a distinction to be drawn between the money voted by this parliament say for the purposes of immigration which may go to place a man or woman in any one of the provinces, and money voted for preserving the individual no matter in what part of the Dominion he may be found. . . . I am proud to be able to stand here to-night and to join with others in giving permanent expression in the legislation of our country to the views and purposes that are therein expressed.

That is what the Prime Minister said in 1926 regarding the old age pension legislation, but he now tells us that it is a vicious system. I do not want to take the time of the house in discussing this question of the relative authority of the Dominion and the provinces.

Mr. SANDERSON: I think the hon. member is mistaken when he says the Prime Minister was referring to the old age pensions when he used that phrase.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: If the hon. member will refer to page 316 of Hansard he will find that the member for South Vancouver (Mr. Ladner) interjected the question, "What about old age pensions?" And the Prime Minister in answer to that question said, "I have come to the conclusion that it is a thoroughly vicious system."

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

The DEPUTY SPEAKER: I would point out to the hon. member that in referring to a previous debate in the present session he is not in order.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: My statement was in answer to a question.

Mr. SANDERSON: The hon. member is wrong: the Prime Minister was not referring to old age pensions.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: If the Prime Minister's contention is correct, what about the administration of justice? Surely the Dominion collects certain revenues and turns them over to the provinces. What about the subsidies to the provinces? The Dominion collects and turns them over. What about the grants to the Canadian National railway system? The Dominion collects and turns them over to another corporation. What about the loans to harbour boards? The Dominion collects and turns them over as loans to various corporations over which it has no direct control. If it is a principle accepted by this house and by the government that this kind of thing may be done—it is done in other countries; it is done in Great Britain—that we may make grants for certain specific purposes, it does seem to me an extraordinary thing that the Prime Minister should make such a statement as I have quoted, even before all the provinces have adopted the old age pension scheme. I hope he will explain this statement for the benefit of the hon. members opposite.

Mr. SANDERSON: He did not make the statement the hon. member says he did.

Mr. STEVENS: Certainly he did.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: We should soon face this question of Dominion and provincial jurisdiction. Take the question of the eight-hour day. We are told by the government that that is a provincial matter entirely and that the Dominion cannot handle the situation, and this notwithstanding the fact that Canada solemnly signed a treaty in which she undertook to carry out that principle. We bring up the matter of a minimum wage and are told that that is a matter under provincial jurisdiction, yet here again we undertook to see that the provision of the Versailles treaty and the Washington convention were carried out. In regard to a great variety of matters of this kind we are told that the Dominion has no jurisdiction. It is quite true the Labour department is very busy preparing reports and statements with regard to all these matters; it is quite true the government permits us to have set up a committee of industrial relations and to have referred to that committee various motions dealing with matters of this kind, but we sit there week after week and give our best attention to the different questions and when we are ready to bring in a report we are told by the Department of Justice that the Dominion government has no jurisdiction over such matters. I think it is nearly time that this situation should be clearly placed before the country. If the Dominion government has no real jurisdiction with regard to these matters, let that fact be broadcast from the housetops so that we shall not come to Ottawa expecting that something will be done. The government should then be unable to play with this house and pretend that it is possible to do something when they know all the time that nothing actually will eventuate. I think that is not too much to demand from the government.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. E. A. LAPIERRE (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker, notwithstanding the discursive criticism we have heard from the opposite side of the house, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb) should feel highly gratified at the reception accorded his budget by the press and people of Canada. His successive budgets have indicated more stability, lower taxation and a rapid advance towards a greater state of prosperity than Canada has ever before enjoyed. Time was when a budget was awaited with anxiety, but our Robb budgets have inspired confidence and are now showing annually that Canada has turned the corner and is rapidly becoming one of the most enviable nations of the world.

Another cause for gratification on the part of the minister is the fact that during the present year the prosperity of Canada was nation-wide, all the provinces having benefited equally by the policy of the government. The maritime provinces, which have been slow in recovering from the aftermath of the war, have, by the implementing of the Duncan report, taken their place along with the other provinces. During the last few years British Columbia has enjoyed the greatest prosperity since confederation. Agriculture, mining, fishing, industrial progress and the development of its ocean ports have placed it in one of the most enviable positions in the Dominion. The situation in regard to the three prairie provinces I shall leave to the Hon. Mr. Crerar who, in an address delivered in Montreal on February 17, made the following statement:

> Western Canada's growth was described as one of the most remarkable developments in the world by Hon. T. A. Crerar, of Winnipeg, at the Thistle Curling Club's weekly luncheon to-day. As an example he stated that prior to 1908 the record for wheat production in the prairie provinces had been 100,000,000 bushels, while last year it had been 540,000,000. Last year's crop he estimated would net the farmers of western Canada $450,000,000. Profit on live stock production would net $57,000,000, and on dairy products, $56,000,000. Each year, he pointed out, the grain belt was reaching further north and in Alberta it now reached to 600 miles north of the international border, the Peace river country, in his opinion, was destined to become one of the greatest grain producing areas known.
> Europe and Asia provided great markets for Canada's surplus volume of grain, Mr. Crerar continued. Canada was one-third the distance to Europe or Australia, while the rapidly increasing population of the United States was eliminating that country as a wheat-exporting area. Russia also was passing as a country of potential exporting possibilities and Canada was the logical country to fill the void.

The prosperity of the two older provinces of Ontario and Quebec is reflected in their budgets for the last fiscal year. Both those provinces have enjoyed the most prosperous year in their histories and they find themselves with ample surpluses that can now be used for the betterment of their people. But of all the industries which have contributed to the prosperity which has come to Canada there are three which deserve special mention, namely, pulp and paper, water-power and mining. These three combined have perhaps contributed more to Canada's progress than any others. The pulp and paper industry, the development of which dates back less than a decade, has been developed without any governmental assistance and has placed Canada in the proud position of being the greatest producer of newsprint in the world. The capital invested in our pulpwood industry amounts to $580,000,000. At the end of 1927, one hundred and thirteen mills were operating, employing 32,876 men, disbursing in salaries and wages $46,674,293. In 1928 Canada's newsprint production increased fourteen per cent, while during the same period America's newsprint production increased five per cent. In 1913 there were produced in Canada 350,000 tons of newsprint. In 1927 there were produced 3,000,000 tons, a gain of 570 per cent in fourteen years. In 1927 Canada produced newsprint valued at $132,286,729, making Canada, as I said before, the greatest producer of newsprint in the world. When we consider, Mr. Speaker, that less than fifteen years ago newsprint had taken but a very small place in our industrial life, this growth, as I have intimated, has contributed very largely to the prosperity of Canada.

Another industry to which I wish to refer, Mr. Speaker, is that of our water-powers. In these years of keen competition our water-powers are one of our greatest sources of wealth, and will in the course of time be the prime factor in making Canada one of the leading industrial nations of the world. No possession which Canada has is more envied by other nations than our almost unlimited water-powers. Those of us who were in the north country less than twenty-five years ago have lived to see that great area transformed from a wilderness into great industrial centres, of which newsprint is the basic industry, all due to the presence of a large amount of water-power.

The potential water-power of Canada that we know to be available amounts to 33,000,000 horse-power. We have at the present time a capital investment of over one billion dollars in developed water-powers. Of that 33,000,000 horse-power, in 1900 we had developed 170,000 horse-power. In 1928 we had developed 5,100,000 horse-power, an increase of 2,900 per cent in that period. As every thousand horse-power developed in connection with industry creates employment for 385 men, when we have reached the point of total development we will employ, directly or indirectly, 15,000,000 men, which means that Canada will have sixty millions of a population when all her water-power is developed. Our water-powers have been developed as follows: in the province of British Columbia there are now developed 9·2 per cent; in Alberta, 0·3 per cent; in Manitoba, 4·75 per cent; in Ontario. 26 per cent; in Quebec, 15·8 per cent; in New Brunswick, 50 per cent; in Nova Scotia, 21 per cent, and in the Yukon, 5 per cent. Possessing such an enormous quantity of horse-power, these sections of our country which have available so much of this white coal will, I have no doubt within the lives of those who are here to-day, rank amongst the largest industrial centres in the world.

Another industry, Mr. Speaker, which has come to the forefront very rapidly during the last twenty-five years is the mining industry. For many years those who were first interested in this industry found it very difficult to convince the average citizen of the tremendous potential value of our mining area. We have heard a great deal about agriculture, but it may surprise hon. members when I say that less than fifteen per cent of our great country is suitable for profitable agriculture, and that the other eighty-five per cent of our great heritage comprises the largest mining area known to science, an area that contains all the best and most valuable metals known to geology. This vast precambrian formation, which is as yet only barely scratched, has perhaps the largest potential wealth of any of our natural resources. Our mining industry, which produced $273,000,000 during last year, is but in its infancy, and the amount of its production during that period is no indication of what the near future has in store for us. Some of the recent discoveries made in Quebec, Ontario, Manitoba and Alberta indicate greater possibilities than in any other of our natural resources. Mining will also contribute very largely to the solution of our transportation problem. We are informed by economists in the United States that sixty per cent of the tonnage of American railways originates in the products of her mines. And it does not take much imagination to visualize what will happen in this country when these vast areas are fully developed. At the present moment we are producing 85 per cent of the world's nickel, 90 per cent of the world's asbestos, and we will soon rank amongst the largest copper producers in the world. Gold, silver, nickel, platinum and zinc are now being found in large deposits, and as only a small area of this vast formation has been explored, its future possibilities are beyond calculation. The mineral production in Canada for the year 1928 was $273,000,000, a gain of 140 per cent in sixteen years. In 1910 Ontario produced $42,637 in gold, and in 1927, $33,627,040. In nickel and copper, in 1928 Ontario produced $30,000,000. The gold, silver, nickel and copper mining industry gave employment to over five thousand men, and distributed in wages $9,520,939. To the end of 1927 Sudbury nickel and copper Cobalt silver, Porcupine-Kirkland gold had produced over one billion dollars. In dividends Sudbury nickel and copper had distributed over one hundred million dollars, Cobalt silver a like amount, and Porcupine-Kirkland gold seventy million dollars.

Time does not permit my going into further details of the wonderful development of our mining industry. Recent discoveries in the constituency which I have the honour to represent are such as to attract the attention of mining men throughout the world. As was stated by the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard (Mr. Clark), there is a mine in my district which in three years has increased in value from one hundred million dollars to one thousand million. These figures may sound fantastic, but they are known to the mining men of the world to-day. I may say that from present indications other mines now being developed may also become great producers. In the Sudbury area we are producing all the base and precious metals, and I have no hesitation in saying that we have in a small area of forty by twenty miles what at an an early date is going to become the largest mineral-producing area known to the civilized world. This is but one of the several mining camps which are rapidly becoming producers, and which in a few short years will be contributing largely to our national wealth.

British Columbia is fast coming to the fore as a producer of copper, and in northern Quebec there is a copper mine of great potentialities. In fact within the next few years we are going to become an important factor at a time when there may be a world shortage of this metal. During the visit to this country of the British Empire Mining and Metallurgical Association grave fears were expressed of such a shortage in the near future. Well, should that contingency arise, these recent discoveries of rich copper deposits will enable us practically to dominate the situation.

The rapid development of our great mining resources is reflected in our trade and commerce. The figures show a very satisfactory expansion, and this is most gratifying to those of us who have always had confidence in the wise policies of the government, policies which have tended to build up our overseas trade to its present impressive volume. We are now competing in the markets of the world with our manufactured products. The following figures of exports per head of population show that we lead the world:

Great Britain..	190 per head
Canada..	241 per head

This demonstrates the very satisfactory development of our foreign trade, and is ample proof that the tariff policy advocated and put into effect by the government is the policy best suited to our economic needs.

During the debate, Mr. Speaker, there have been frequent references to our trade relations with the United States, based on President Hoover's inaugural address. In my view those references are most inopportune, for I believe that the wise policy of the administration has manoeuvered Canada into such a favourable position that she will be able to obtain from the United States a satisfactory trade arrangement without any resultant loss to our agriculturists. As a result of the investigation before the ways and means committee in Washington, the people of the United States are beginning to realize that their high protective tariff policy is responsible for problems of such gravity as have not confronted any president during the last quarter of a century. That investigation has disclosed that after a period that has been, perhaps, the most prosperous in the history of the United States, President Hoover and his administration are face to face with several grave questions, such as the rapid concentration of wealth in a few hands, surplus production, chain stores, mail order houses, the agriculturists' demand for relief, and unemployment. Those of us who have followed the economic development of the United States realize that, being highly industrialized, their manufacturers must look to foreign markets for the disposal of their surplus production, but that their high cost of production will be an almost insurmountable obstacle to their competing successfully in the markets of the world. This means that the Republican administration cannot afford to put into effect any tariff policy which will shut out from their market their best customer—Canada. Moreover, there is a rapidly growing sentiment in the United States that a high tariff policy is no longer applicable. The solidarity of opinion in regard to tariff which until recently characterized a large portion of the industrial population of the United States is rapidly diminishing, and before the ways and means committee at Washington a large number of industrialists demanded a lower tariff and in some cases free entry of raw material. Some of the leading financial newspapers in the United States are to-day sounding a note of warning. I have here an article from the Journal of Commerce in which the following appears:

According to reports which have been sent to various newspapers in this city by trustworthy correspondents in that country, the inhabitants of Canada from west to east are feeling a good deal of worry at the proposal that has been made to adopt tariff duties at Washington which are quite manifestly intended to discriminate against them. Among these are the very high rates on farm products of various classes. True, they do not specifically discriminate against Canada, because they are technically applicable to goods from all parts of the world, but since Canada is the only quarter from which we are likely to get these goods in very large volume, they do, as a matter of fact, operate as a severe handicap upon Canadian trade with the United States. There are many other phases of the situation that appear to figure largely, but this one may be taken as a sample of all.

It ought not to be necessary to enlarge upon the various reasons why a friendly and considerate policy ought to be pursued by this country toward Canada. There are many such, and most of them are based upon the highest grounds of international good feeling. For the immediate purpose however, it is necessary only to refer to an obvious, but essential consideration —it would be bad business for us to do anything that could alienate the good feeling of the conservative men in Canada, or that could afford a reason to those who are always seeking to find some cause of offence in our conduct for attacking our trade and subjecting it to hardships.

The Journal of Commerce has on former occasions called attention to the fact that our export trade is a home industry which is greatly in need of attention.

The Boston News Bureau on the same date gives out the following:

It may not be true, except as a matter of business policy, that "the customer is always right." But two great neighbours who are a geographical unit would gain more from an approach to economic unity than from a tariff war. Far better the greatest possible interchange of goods than an unconsidered increase of duties that would affect adversely a fifth of our entire export trade.

In connection with the findings of the ways and means committee at Washington during the months of January and February, I would quote the following:

But industry and finance speak with divided minds. There are some great enterprises in this country that require foreign markets. Such industries as the automotive, secure in their dominance of the domestic field, are more interested in cheapening costs of production to improve their competitive position abroad than in the tariff. Other manufacturers want cheaper materials from abroad, like dyestuffs, to enter the country. Merchandisers, naturally, seek cheap supplies of finished goods. International bankers are becoming so heavily committed in other countries that there has developed in that quarter a more liberal view toward opening the American market to products of specific foreign industries or countries.

The foregoing quotations indicate that the tariff policy of the United States has created there a condition which has become quite acute; and to-day, owing to the far-seeing policy of this government, we find ourselves in a position where we can await with complacency any action taken by the congress of the United States, feeling that in our present industrial situation we can fully cope with any contingency that may arise. It would be a great calamity if, after more than one hundred years of peaceful relations between Canada and the United States, and at the present juncture, when the relations between that country and Great Britain demand that we become more or less the liaison nation between them, we should enter upon a policy of retaliation in respect of the United States. I say to my hon. friends opposite, therefore, that, in my opinion at any rate, our position in that respect at the present moment is far better than it would have been had we adopted their policy of "no truck or trade with the Yankees" or their high tariff policy of "brick for brick" with the United States. We have lived peacefully with our neighbours, and under the existing conditions we have grown to prosper. If, therefore, we continue on the lines along which this nation has prospered, we are bound in the very near future to take our place amongst the leading nations of the world.

Mr. H. E. SPENCER (Battle River): In rising to take part in this debate I wish first of all to congratulate the Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb) on the very fine presentation he made to the house in submitting his budget. I wish also to congratulate him upon being able at the present time, with the trade of Canada as it is, to announce a surplus of some $69,782,000. To this extent the national debt has been reduced.

The budget has been praised by all members to the right of the Speaker, quite naturally, and criticized by those members who call themselves the official opposition. This is natural under the party system; but as one who does not believe in the party system I will neither praise entirely nor blame entirely the matter contained in the budget. I shall not stint in my praise of those things in it which I think deserve praise, nor shall I hesitate to criticize where criticism is due.

During his speech the Minister of Finance referred a good deal to the prosperity of the country. I am glad to say that to a certain extent there is prosperity, if you take bank clearings, car loadings and so forth. But can we say that we have prosperity throughout this country if the standard of living among the masses of the people is not as high as we might prefer it to be? I would say that 80 per cent of the people of Canada are more worried over making both ends meet than over spending any surplus income which they might have. If twenty people have an aggregate income of $50,000 yearly and one of the twenty happens to receive $40,000 of that total, there is not very much left for the other nineteen.

When all is said and done, what is prosperity? According to aggregate statistics the people of the United States have it in abundance, yet James J. Davis, the United States Secretary of Labour, as recently quoted by the Calgary Albertan, states that 86 per cent of the Americans are poor. Figures compiled by the Federal Trade Commission at Washington show that one per cent of the people own 59 per cent of the wealth of the country; 13 per cent of the people own 90 per cent of the wealth; 87 per cent of the people own only 10 per cent of the national wealth, and of the total national income 50 per cent goes to capital. The United States is enjoying great prosperity; so is Canada, to a certain extent, but if Canada is similar to the United States in the figures I have given,—and I think we are very much like that country in this respect, can we say that we have general prosperity?

We find that our national debt is still very large, totalling $2,227,068,000. A certain amount of that debt is being written off this year, but I claim that we should have a more systematic way of dealing with this debt than by chance surpluses shown in the budget. A few nights ago the hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Irvine), speaking on the budget, made some reference to the need of care being exercised by the Minister of Finance in either paying debts or issuing bonds. At the time the Minister of Railways (Mr. Dunning), was rather critical of the statements made by the hon. member, but I claim that my hon. friend from Wetaskiwin was treating a serious subject in a very able way, and it would be well for this house if more hon. members made a study of the problem my hon. friend was trying to place before us. In my opinion care should be taken by any Minister of Finance not only in issuing bonds but also when he is paying off debts, because if instead of taking advantage of the Finance Act and the treasury board we raise money by issuing bonds or treasury bills, it is a fact that as the hon. member for Wetaskiwin said—in the paying of a government debt we simply create a private debt. To meet the payment of a bond coming due, the Minister of Finance must obtain money through taxation, either directly or through tariff taxes, but in any event the taxes are drawn from the people. They are paid to the minister, and he pays them out to meet the bonds or treasury bills. That money is again released, but it is released only to investors, and while the taxpayers are many the investors are few. If the Minister of Finance tries to pay off large debts in dull times he reduces the purchasing power of the people and drags down prices, making times so much harder; on the other hand it is essential that we should try to raise as much money by way of taxes as the people will stand in prosperous times, when the effect of paying off amounts owed by the government will not be nearly so harmful. There is no doubt in my mind that in Canada we have not taken advantage of times of inflation to pay off our debts. The greatest mistake of all was made during the time of the war, when we did not tax the people who were making large incomes to meet a part of the war debt which was being created.

Referring again to the necessity of watching not only the issuing of bonds, but also the paying of debts by the government, I would remind the house that with a given amount of money and a given quantity of goods, if you put more money into circulation and do not increase the quantity of goods, you will enhance prices, assuming that the velocity of money in unchanged. On the other hand, if you reduce the amount of money by taxing the people heavily, and do not alter the quantity of goods available, you will change the basis of the purchasing power by lowering prices; and therefore it is the business of any Minister of Finance to watch both the payment of bonds coming due, and the issuing of new ones, so that he can act according to the necessities of an inflation or deflation period.

Looking for a moment to the revenue of the country I find that in customs import duties we raised no less than $185,000,000, or 41.11 per cent of our total revenue. According to the Liberal Party handbook of 1919, it is claimed that for every dollar raised by customs duties at least three dollars go into the pockets of protected interests. If this is true —and we will take them at their word— in raising this $185,000,000 for the exchequer $555,000,000 has gone into the pockets of protected interests; if we add the two amounts together we find that this year the people have been taxed to the extent of $740,000,000. Does this look very much as though the party in power have gone very fair in redeeming their promises of lower tariff, or have travelled very far toward the ultimate goal of free trade? From excise taxes, the stamp tax and the sales tax we received $81,500,000 or 18.11 per cent of the total; through the income tax we received $58,500,000, or 13 per cent of the total, and by means of excise duties $63,500,000 or 14.9 per cent of the total. I notice that the income tax stands fourth in the amount of taxes produced, and I want to congratulate the Minister of Finance and those who assisted him in drawing up the budget in that they have not seen fit to reduce the income tax as a certain minority throughout this Dominion have requested during the last few years. During this period of so-called prosperity—and I will admit that it is a prosperous time for the few if not for the many—I will say that we might have gone further and increased the income tax on a sliding scale in order to obtain a little more revenue to pay off a little more of our national debt.

The following are a few items of expenditure:

Penitentiaries	$ 1,800,000
Health	900,000
National defence	18,000,000
Scientific institutions	1,100,000

It is rather a blighting criticism to make when one can say that we are spending twice as much on our penitentiaries, in this law-abiding country of Canada, as we spend on health; that we are spending on scientific institutions only about half of what we spend on our penitentiaries; that we are spending $18,000,000 on national defence, just after having signed a peace pact to outlaw war, and not quite half that amount on the basic industry of this country which employs 54 per cent of the population. I think those figures will be worth looking into, and I am sure that certain adjustments could be made with profit.

In looking over the budget speech of the Minister of Finance, I notice that we are paying annually for the cost of the last war no less than $162,911,000, or 42.3 per cent of our total expenditure. We know very well that the last war was an absolute failure, both to victors and vanquished. What are we doing in a public way to eradicate the roots of war and eliminate the possibility of another such conflagration? We know that wars are no longer caused by religious controversies or national animosity, and very rarely by the need of land for national expansion. But we do know that there is an economic war going on all the time which, if we do not find ways and means to stop it, will lead to military warfare. It is rather interesting when you consider the fact that in olden times the victors in any war always took goods away from the vanquished. To-day all that is changed. When we have half the world at war with the other half to-day, what do the victors do? We know what they did under the treaty of Versailles: they tried so to arrange things that the victors could force their goods on the vanquished—just the reverse of what was the custom in days gone by. Why is this? Through the aid of science and machinery we have brought about a condition where we have to face the problem of consumption and not of production. Science is rapidly transferring the work from the shoulders of men to that of machinery, and it will only be a few years before we will see individual factories in industrial countries—and most of the countries are becoming industrialized—operated by a dozen men only. Under such conditions we have to recognize that unemployment is a sign of social development. We cannot consider unemployment as a passing event or something that will happen only now and not next year, because the countries are turning out goods so much more rapidly than in the past they feel they are forced to look for markets abroad. Most countries are also putting up tariff barriers of one kind or another in an effort to prevent goods from coming in from the outside. If we do not put a stop to this economic warfare it can only lead ultimately to military warfare.

I congratulate the government on the various treaties they have negotiated in an endeavour to get away from this condition, but I cannot agree with their Australian treaty. I think that was a one-sided proposition, because they penalized agriculture for the benefit of industries which were better able to look after themselves. I criticized it and I voted against it when it was before this house. I did so because I believed it worked a hardship on the public of this country in the matter of a very necessary food—raisins. A three cent duty was put on raisins in anticipation of obtaining most of this commodity from Australia. The latest figures I have been able to obtain on this question show that although we consume annually some 37,000,000 pounds, Australia has only supplied us with 824,000 pounds.

I appreciated the minister's budget speech very much, but I would have liked him to go into the problem of how we are to meet this situation of economic warfare and obtained his suggestions how to prevent it from going on and turning into something worse.

The minister claimed that he had a trade balance of $154,100,000, and he tried to make the house believe that that was something to the advantage of Canada; that it was something we could put aside to our credit and use another year. I think it would have been only fair had he reminded the house that this balance should be put against certain invisible items which are now figured against us, such as freight payments and receipts, tourists' expenditures, interest payments and receipts, immigrants' remittances, expenditures of government, charitable and missionary contributions, insurance transactions, advertising, motion picture royalties, and capital of emigrants and immigrants. When all such items are taken into consideration any difference shown would represent capital movement into or out of the country.

Much criticism has been made during the course of this debate, particularly by hon. members directly to the left of the speaker, with regard to the large amount of goods which the United States send to Canada, compared with the goods Canada forwards to that country. The hon. member for Fort William (Mr. Manion) stated the other day that although the United States send so much more to us than we do to them, on the other hand several other countries treat us much better. He referred to the following countries, and said:

> The Argentine buys from us nearly twice as much as we buy from them; Belgium two and a half times as much; Brazil over three times as much; Chile nearly seven times as much; China over six times as much; Denmark twenty-five times as much; Germany two and a half times as much; Japan three and a half times as much; the Netherlands over five times as much; Portugal eight times as much.

I ask the hon. member this question: if it is not fair for the United States to send more goods to us than we send to them; if he is advocating that we trade fifty-fifty with the United States, surely he must be logical and suggest that we should cut down our exports to the different countries I have named until we are on a par with what they are exporting to us. Trade is a natural development and no goods will come into a country unless they are required.

The minister states that about one-third of our total exports is grain. I should like to remind him that if we consider the tremendous percentage of our exports that grain constitutes, we should be placed in a position to secure our farm machinery just as cheaply as possible. We have no opportunity of taking advantage of the tariff schedules, and therefore I advocate most strongly what the hon. member for Last Mountain (Mr. Fansher) asked for a few nights ago, namely, that the Minister of Finance reduce the tariff on combine harvesters from where it is at 10 per cent to 6 per cent. It is, I think, intended to come under the 6 per cent schedule, and it is only fair that in a business like agriculture where we are producing so much of Canada's exports, and where we cannot take advantage of a protective tariff, we should have consideration in this respect.

I notice the hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie) gave the price of the Massey-Harris binder, eight-foot, at $288. That might be so in eastern Canada, but in the west we pay $325 for the same machine. To give the house an idea how prices have risen in western Canada, I might point out that the same type of machine could be bought seventeen years ago for $165 to $170, whereas to-day we are paying $325 for it.

While I am making reference to grain I should like to say a few words regarding some trouble we have been having lately with the Board of Grain Commissioners. Hon. members know full well that some little time ago an amendment was passed to the Grain Act known as the "Campbell" amendment, the purport of which was to enable the farmer to consign his grain in carload lots to a terminal elevator of his own choice. If this amendment had been carried out in the spirit in which it was passed, the pool elevator terminals would have received in a normal way more than 50 per cent of the grain of the country; but owing to outside grain interests bringing out what we usually term a "hybrid" ticket, and this being permitted by the grain commission, a very large quantity of grain has been diverted from its proper and intended channel to other terminal elevators. It has been suggested that amendments might be made to the Canada Grain Act, but what is the use of making more amendments to the act unless we enforce the act as it stands at present? We need amendments, but if whatever amendments we pass are not enforced better than the present Grain Act is, it is useless passing them. I would therefore request that the government at the earliest possible moment see that the Grain Act is carried out as it was intended; otherwise they should find a new board to look after it.

I should like to say a word with regard to this last year's crop in western Canada. There seems to be very little known in eastern Canada of the unfortunate set-back we had in the west during 1928 owing to the effect of frost and some hail. It was very unfortunate that a good deal of idle boasting was done by misinformed people—not by people on the land. This misinformation had the effect of lowering the price of grain. Canada as a whole will suffer through the partial failure of the crop, and there is no doubt that in twelve months, business throughout Canada will feel it.

I notice that the Minister of Finance, during his budget speech, made this statement:

> Our dollar is no longer at a depreciated value.

I should like to remind him that a slightly depreciated currency is sometimes a good thing; that exports can always be sent more readily from a country with a slightly depreciated currency. Moreover, if the money is too dear, it is all the easier for goods from outside to enter. We are in a peculiar situation with regard to Germany, a country that was our main enemy during the war and was defeated. One would think she would be on her knees, but we find through her manipulation of her currency—and I am not supporting that manipulation—the situation to-day is that Germany has a per capita debt of $8.67 as against Canada's per capita debt of $246.64.

I well remember a few sessions ago the consideration being given in the house to the building of several ships for our West Indian trade, and it was found out at the time, that if those boats had been built in Germany instead of in Canada, we could have secured them at half the price. This alone shows that we should pay more attention to how to handle our own credit, and that it is not always safe to consider you are in the very best position possible just because your dollar happens to be at par.

Another statement made by the Minister of Finance was as follows:

> As the years go by an increase in quantity of our domestic production must necessarily be marketed abroad.

What does he mean by this? Does he mean that as the years go by we must have more and more of our goods sent to other countries and not receive anything in return? On the other hand, does he mean that if we export more and more, as I hope we shall, we shall naturally have to receive more and more goods and services in return? That is the only way in which we can trade. If he does not mean that; if he means we are going to send something away and not get anything in return, I am afraid his argument will not hold water. I claim that all countries must consume the money value of their total production, allowing, of course, for all natural exchange of goods and services. If we are not doing that, there is certainly something wrong with our economics.

I am glad to see the slight reduction in the tariff and the benefit that will accrue to the mining and fishing industries. I should like to have seen more attention paid to agriculture, and to the rank and file of the people in the way of cutting down the tariffs on not only boots and shoes, but woollen underwear, something that is so essential in this country.

I know the Minister of Finance wants to get the feeling of the people across the Dominion of Canada, and therefore I am going to read a short resolution passed by the United Farmers of Alberta at their convention this year:

> Whereas the farmers of Alberta have to sell their produce in a world market and at the export price, and whereas their purchases are made in a restricted and protected market, therefore be it resolved that this convention go on record in favour of the principle of world free trade, and in the meantime, support the general policy of substantial reduction in the tariff.

I want to say that I appreciate the abolition of the nuisance taxes. It is true that, directly, the poor man will not benefit very much, but I am against the system of nuisance taxes because they interfere with business. I would much rather have the income tax increased—and would of course pay it myself when I had an income to call for it—than to be bothered with a lot of small nuisance taxes.

I am also glad of the altered tax on sales and transfer of shares, and hope to see this idea developed.

A further statement from the Minister of Finance is "that the administration will refuse to support any extravagance in the spending of the taxpayers' money." That, of course, I heard with a good deal of amusement, Mr. Speaker, considering some of the items that passed through this house last year. I might mention, for instance, the item in the estimates—which was ultimately cut down, I think, from $300,000 to $100,000—for dredging at the island of Anticosti. I would also refer to an item of $231,178 for equipping and furnishing of the citadel at Quebec, a vote which was challenged in this house and was carried by a majority of only eight votes. I would also point to what I consider the unwarrantable expenditures last year at the harbour of Quebec.

I wish to say a few words, Mr. Speaker, in support of the tariff advisory board. The principle of the tariff advisory board is, I think, perfectly sound. It has been criticized as being simply a buffer between those who want protection and the Finance minister. But even if it is nothing more than a buffer I should be in favour of it, because I do not think we have a right to expect any finance minister, whether of the Conservative party, the Liberal party, or the Progressive party, to stand the tremendous pressure that must have been put upon finance ministers in past years, before the budgets were brought down, by those wishing special favours under a protective tariff. But to-day we have something better; we have hearings before a public commission so that those who are opposed to requests made by different corporations have a perfect right to appear and submit their arguments in support of their claims.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I come to the last phase of my address. We have heard a great deal during this discussion with regard to the possibility of interference with our trade by what the American congress might do. Some hon. members have advocated, particularly those directly to the left of the Speaker, that we should have a special session or give power to the government to raise our tariff in case the tariff is raised by the United States against us. The government, on the other hand, has taken a position of watchful waiting. I am going to suggest, Mr. Speaker, a third way. I think it would be foolishness itself to attempt to carry on an economic warfare with the United States. We are just as liable to be as unevenly matched as though we tried to meet them on military grounds. But we have other means. We have to recognize, and they must recognize, that we are one of their best customers. If they do not want us to trade with them, we do not have to trade with them. We can turn our attention in other directions, and I am going to point to two directions only, although there are many. I am going to point, first of all, to Russia, a country of immense potential markets; a country, I might say, to which a delegation of British industries is going, to investigate for themselves conditions there, with the one idea of creating a greater trade between Great Britain and that country. I have not yet seen a real reason why the Dominion government broke off negotiations with Russia when they did, and I only hope that when the Prime Minister speaks in this debate he will state to the house that so far as the government are concerned they are again prepared to recognize that country.

The other channel in which I think we might develop tremendous trade is that of Great Britain. I strongly urge the view that if we are turned off from a market in one direction we can open markets in the other, by enlarging the British preferential tariff. Great Britain takes enormous quantities of our exports, so why not give them an opportunity of sending us their goods in return?

As my time is coming to a close, Mr. Speaker, and not wishing to break the rules of the house, in support of my belief that we should enlarge our preference for trade with Great Britain, I beg to move a subamendment, seconded by Mr. Heaps:

> That the amendment be amended by striking out all the words after "house" and substituting therefor the following:
> "urges upon the government the consideration of an immediate and substantial increase of the British preference as a step towards freer trade relations between Canada and other nations."

Mr. J. E. LAWSON (West York): Mr. Speaker, as I was so fortunate as to be elected a member of this House of Commons by acclamation, I shall not regale the ministry with recriminations as to election pledges. They, in their collective wisdom, deemed it advisable not to create the necessity of mak ing promises in the constituency of Wes York.

In this, my first utterance in this chamber, I desire to advance a plea on behalf of the vegetable growers, of West York in particular and of the Dominion of Canada in general. I am inspired to that subject by the hope that the government will justify, by action, the policy enunciated on its behalf by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb) in his budget address to this house when he said, referring to the government:

> Its policy is to encourage production at home and the marketing of our excess of production abroad.

Under normal conditions the vegetable growers of Canada require no assistance from the government, but when there is a surplus of production in the country to the south then some protection is required for our home market. Climatic conditions do not respect international boundaries, and it must be borne in mind that we are on the northern fringe of the vegetable-growing belt of the North American continent. The normal movement of the vegetable products is from south to north. In the most southerly states the crop—let me take, for example, tomatoes—ripens about the middle of April, and the vegetable growers obtain for the first tomatoes they put upon the market, we will say, eight dollars a bushel, a little later on seven dollars a bushel, and a little later still six dollars a bushel, until such time as they have obtained a return which covers the cost of production plus a reasonable profit. In years of plenty they still have several hundred bushels of tomatoes in their fields, on which, if they can realize the cost of picking and shipping, plus the freight rate, they are that much better off. So they pick this crop and start it "rolling" as it is termed in the trade. They have not found a market for it, they have not even arranged a sale. The crop is started rolling north, and the commission agents along the line are wired to dispose of the commodity at whatever price they can obtain to cover the freight rate and the other costs. So just at the time when the vegetable growers of Ontario have their product ready for the market it is glutted with the surplus crop from the south. Hence the home market is destroyed, and in some cases our tomatoes are left to rot in the field.

Year after year since this government has been in power nothing has been done to preserve the home market, and yet its avowed policy is "to encourage production at home and the marketing of our excess of production abroad." I know some hon. gentlemen will say that if a certain amount of protection is given to the home market you prevent the public from profiting by the bargain prices which sometimes prevail. If the allegation is that this is a temporary condition, I will not attempt to deny it. But what do we find? When our market is glutted with an excess of American production our vegetable growers decrease their plantings the next year. The result is that in time the home market is lost, and just as soon as that happens those who advocate the doctrine that I have referred to will find that no longer will the surplus from the south be started "rolling"; it will be sold in Canada at a fixed price, and our consumers will not in any way benefit.

Let me take the alternative suggestion: Assuming that our market is adequately protected, what will happen? If our vegetable growers find that this year they have a good home market, then next year they increase their plantings, and by virtue of that their cost of production is reduced, the ratio of profit which they require can be spread over a much larger field, and in the long run the consumer in Canada, although at times he will lose a bargain price, will get lower maximum prices at other seasons of the year. In that way a safe, sound and stable home market will be preserved for our home grown products.

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that we have a selfish as well as a public interest in maintaining such a market. I find surrounding all the large centres of population in this country great numbers of returned soldiers who have settled upon the land. In appreciation of the services which they rendered Canada we placed legislation upon the statute books to assist their reestablishment in civil life. I find that in the province of Ontario alone the Soldier Settlement Board has for this purpose advanced $9,367,062, thousands of dollars of which are loaned right in the constituency of West York, which is contiguous to the city of Toronto. Those loans bear interest at five per cent, amortized and repayable in twenty-five years. Surely as business men charged with the administration of the public affairs and the public funds, we are desirous of creating and preserving a home market for our vegetable growers, so that those men may be provided with the wherewithal to repay their loans.

Our present tariff is wholly inadequate for this purpose. With one exception, I think potatoes, we have an ad valorem tariff varying in percentage, but—to continue my illustration—the rate on tomatoes is fixed at 30 per cent. May I ask hon. gentlemen what is the advantage of an ad valorem duty of 30 per cent, when that duty is imposed at the point of shipment and not at the point of entry, and when the tomatoes to which I have referred may be selling at fifty cents a bushel in the far southern states from which they have been started rolling? Such an ad valorem duty will not preserve our home market, and yet the policy of the government, as enunciated by the Minister of Finance, is to encourage production at home and the marketing of our excess of production abroad.

Now, sir, I would feel that I had been remiss if I did not suggest a remedy. The remedy required to preserve the home market for our vegetable growers is a seasonal specific duty of so many cents per unit of any particular commodity. This suggestion is not original; I believe some thirteen countries of the world have such a seasonal specific duty in force to-day. The Advisory Tariff Board, to which the hon. gentleman who preceded me (Mr. Spencer) referred, had a hearing of the vegetable growers and horticulturists of Ontario on December 16 and 17, 1926; they had a second hearing on February 22, 1927, and a third hearing on December 8 of the same year. I find on referring to the estimates that this tariff board costs us $120,000 a year for maintenance; it pays $71,000 a year for advisers, a total of $191,000, in order that, having been advised by their advisers, they may in turn advise the Minister of Finance, and yet they have allowed fifteen months to elapse without rendering any such advice following those hearings. Or if they have rendered any advice to the minister then he has failed to advise the market gardeners of this country what they may expect in the way of protection for their home market in the year to come. And yet the policy of this government is "to encourage production at home and the marketing of our excess of production abroad." I wonder if, while there is yet time, the government will justify by action that policy which the Minister of Finance enunciates, or leave it merely as a euphonious phrase for the consumption of those who, apparently in the opinion of this government, are the gullible electorate of Canada.

Mr. J. E. LETELLIER DE ST. JUST (Compton): It is a great pleasure to me Mr. Speaker, to rise at this time to express my views on the present budget, and I wish to extend my heartiest congratulations to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb), on his ability in the success obtained on realizing such an important result. The people of Canada welcomed last year's budget, which caused great joy and brought about the largest sale of certain classes of goods resulting in great benefit to the people of this country. The expectation of the people, this year, was for a further reduction of the sales tax. Surely they have not been deceived when we contemplate a reduction of the net debt in 1928-29 of $69,782,000. From the beginning of the fiscal year 1923-24 to the end of the present fiscal year, the net debt has annually decreased, the total reduction in the six-year period amounting to about $226,708,000, or a yearly average reduction of some $37,700,000.

It is evident that the people of Canada are not all satisfied with the budget, but it seems fair to say that the great majority of Canadians know very well that, with the conditions that the King government had to face during the past years, it would have been impossible for any finance minister to satisfy everybody. I am more than delighted to concur with the minister and to give him all my approbation when I realize the influential support he receives from the most important business associations and boards of trade of Canada. These associations comprise a large membership. I do not believe I am mistaken in saying that there are more than 100,000 merchants who are distributing over $4,000,000,000 worth of goods each year, or an average of approximately $421 per capita; and they are satisfied to proclaim that there is great prosperity in the country, in that the distribution of goods in the year 1900 as compared with the present would be about as 3 is to 5. This will be nearly enough a correct calculation, without considering the increased needs of the public. The value of the goods distributed in 1900 would have been only $2,400,000,000 if we had our present population, but as we had then over 5,000,000 people as compared with 9,500,000 to-day, we have to reduce the amount of goods consumed by the relative proportion of population. On that basis the value of the goods distributed in 1900, amounted to approximately $1,400,000,000 as compared with $4,000,000,000 to-day. This shows the growth of distribution with the progress of other development in Canada during the past twenty-five years, and yet there are people who criticize the government, proclaiming that there is no such prosperity existing in Canada. The widely prevalent belief, Mr. Speaker, that Canada is entirely dependent upon capital from outside sources to finance her development is rudely dissipated by the disclosure that the Dominion is exporting more capital than she is importing, and has been doing so for the past four years. Canada has always had considerable investments abroad in the form of banking balances in London and New York, railway lines in the United States, and investments in foreign securities by banks and insurance companies as well as by private individual who require well diversified lists of securities. A rising Canadian prosperity, however, with a greater volume of funds seeking investment outlet, has resulted in a situation where the capital to leave the country exceeds by a substantial marign that coming in.

In 1925 the figures of Canada's capital exports over capital imports in round millions were $150,000,000; in 1926, $90,000,000; in 1927, $30,000,000; and in 1928, $25,000,000. The decline in these figures for the last two years is explained by a growing Canadian interest in domestic securities. An increasing absorption of Canada's part of her own bond issues has been a feature of the past few years. In both 1927 and 1928 the Dominion accounted for roughly 50 per cent of the total bond sales, in the former year exceeding the purchases of these issues by the United States. In 1925 Canada had even an export balance in capital with the United States, and in each of the last three years Canadian capital account with the republic has practically balanced.

After careful compilations Canadian investment abroad in 1928 is placed by the Financial Post at $177,000,000, as compared with $207,000,000 in the previous year. Of the 1928 total $112,000,000 went to the United States, $63,000,000 to other foreign countries, and $2,000,000 to the United Kingdom. Taking into account the decreases in government and bank balances due to the expansion of business at home a net new investment of $157,500,000 is left as against a net of $184,000,000 in 1927, and after deducting $11,000,000 from this account and $35,000,000 from other countries, we have a net increase of $59,500,000. A deduction of $5,000,000 in government and bank balances from the total going to the United Kingdom results in a net loss of $3,000,000 in new Canadian investment in that country. Based on figures issued by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics as of January 1, 1927, careful estimates made upon information from most reliable sources by the same authority give the total of Canadian investments abroad on January 1, 1928, at $1,514,500,000 and on January 1, 1929, at $1,672,000,000. Of this total at the opening of the present year Canada had $939,000,000 invested in the United States, $112,500,000 in the United Kingdom, and $620,500,000 in other countries.

This survey furnishes further proof of Canada's advance among the creditor countries of the world as a factor in international finance, with capital furthering industrial developments of many kinds in many distant parts. Investments by Canadian insurance companies in diversified foreign securities continue to increase rapidly with the development of both their domestic and foreign business. Direct Canadian investments in branch plants in the United States commercial field and elsewhere are growing steadily. Canadian holdings of New York stocks and of European and South American government bonds have increased enormously, and altogether the record testifies most eloquently to Canadian prosperity and world progress:

Canadian Investments Abroad

British	$118,479,000	$112,500,000
United States	723,328,000	939,000,000
Other countries	488,779,000	620,500,000
Total	$1,330,586,000	$1,672,000,000

Now, Mr. Speaker, I pass to the agricultural industry, and with great pleasure and true spirit I say that since the beginning of the year 1922, when the present administration assumed office, many new policies have been introduced and developed by the federal Department of Agriculture with a view to increasing agricultural production, and many of these policies have had no small part in bringing about the present prosperity which Canadian agriculture enjoys. These new policies have naturally involved greater expenditure on agriculture on the part of the federal government and the employment of a greater number of agricultural workers, but this expenditure has been more than justified by the increase of our agricultural wealth and in our agricultural revenue which can be traced, directly or indirectly, to those new agricultural activities. In dealing with these new activities probably it will be well to follow the organization of the department and discuss it very briefly, branch by branch.

[Mr. Letellier de St. Just.]

As the Dominion experimental farms provide the basis for the working out and the demonstration of problems dealing with Canadian agriculture in all its phases, new activities on these farms naturally must have a most important effect over a wide area. During the seven-year period under consideration this organization has grown in size, volume of agricultural research and practical aid to the farmer to a degree greater than any previous fifteen-year period in its history. I wish to take the opportunity of expressing my appreciation to the Lennoxville experimental farm, by which the farmers of the eastern townships district, have acquired considerable knowledge through the activities of the active superintendent, Mr. McClary. Many contests have been held there; many old and young farmers have received most important lessons in judging milch cows, and greater interest has been fostered by the establishment of this policy. I have been personally taking a great interest in this special work of helping boys' and girls' clubs in their work in connection with cattle, sheep and swine in my constituency, and I am more than pleased to mention to the members of this house that I was greatly honoured during the course of the year 1927-28 through the members of the young breeders' clubs of the following places obtaining the best classification with their milch herds at the great eastern township exhibition held at Sherbrooke lu 1927 and 1928: Compton, Waterville, Bury, Bulwer, Sawyerville, St. Hermenegilde, St. Hedwidge, East Hereford, St. Malo. The hon. member for Sherbrooke, (Mr. Howard) has taken a great interest in the farmers, and he was a witness of this event. Great progress has been noticed since the federal department stated its calf club work in 1923. The encouragement given to the younger generation and the interest fostered among them by these club activities has been reflected in the marked improvement in live stock production in the districts in which clubs have been organized. I hope the department will continue to give assistance to these organized clubs and develop new efforts through their agronomist in urging new clubs to cooperate with the provincial government.

I desire also to voice my appreciation of the dairy and cold storage branch. The two main lines of endeavour inaugurated by this branch since 1922 have been that of dairy produce grading and the inception of dairy research work. The dairy produce grading has resulted in a great improvement in quality, while the publicity given to that quality through the grading records has brought about a new attitude on the part of producers and manufacturers. The grading has facilitated the trade in dairy produce and increased the good will shown toward Canadian dairy produce in the markets of the world; the increased premium which Canadian cheese now receives on the British market is due very largely to this grading system. Not only on the export markets, but also on the domestic markets has the improvement in the quality of our butter and cheese been marked. The Canadian housewife can now be more reasonably sure of the quality of the dairy products which she purchases. The investigations of the dairy research division have enabled the butter makers and cheese makers to correct some serious defects in the quality of their butter and cheese. Through the elimination of losses considerable profit has been added to the proceeds received from this industry.

The estimated value of the cheese and butter produced in the province of Quebec during 1928 is $30,098,541. This represents a total production of 1,452 factories in the province, as per the reports made by the inspectors at those provinces. This number is made up of 678 butter factories, 537 cheese factories and 238 combined factories, and constitutes an increase of three factories as compared with the number operating in 1927. The production of 721,924 cows was used in these factories. The production of a number of cows was used to produce butter for consumption in a few cities. The number of cows producing for these factories in 1927 was 679,119, so the 1928 figure shows an increase of 42,175 cows. The number of pounds of butter manufactured was 54,904,046 pounds as compared with 55,098,768 pounds during the preceding year, a decrease of 194,722 pounds. The total output of cheese was 44,326,885 pounds as compared with 37,510,737 pounds during the preceding year, an increase of 6,816,148. The minimum price per pound received for butter during 1928 was 37.9 cents, and the price received for cheese was 20.9 cents. This represents an increase of 12 cents per pound for butter and 28 cents per pound for cheese, as compared with the prices received during the previous year. The sale value of the butter produced by the factories in 1928 was $20,832,898 as compared with $21,216,505 during the preceding year, an increase in value of $616,393. The sale value of cheese produced amounted to $9,265,643, as compared with $6,805,658 in 1927, or an increase of $2,459,985. These figures were submitted by the inspectors and were sent directly to the provincial agriculture department, and therefore might be subject to some revision.

The work of bovine tuberculosis eradication through the restricted areas has been and is of incalculable advantage to Canada's stockmen and to Canadian citizens generally. It means more profitable herds and healthier people. There are now about 1,000,000 cattle under this system, and the related policies of accredited herds and municipal testing. The most effective method for the control of bovine tuberculosis so far is that of eradication by slaughter of reactors. This work is carried out in definite areas under the restricted area policy put into operation in 1922. Since that time over 700,000 cattle have been tested in the nine areas already established or in process of establishment.

I should like to mention a few details about the sheep industry, which is one of the most important industries in Canada. During 1928 Canada added 153,082 sheep to her flocks, the increases over the previous year being 4·6 per cent. Every province, without exception, added to its sheep holdings. Ontario, in which approximately 53 per cent of the sheep of the Dominion are to be found, increased its sheep population by 57,839, or more than 6 per cent, while British Columbia added 40,064, or nearly 33 per cent. Other increments ranged from 5,000 in Alberta to 13,060 in Saskatchewan. The relative standing of the various provinces in the middle of the year was as follows:

Ontario	1,014,106
Quebec	863,757
Alberta	515,000
Nova Scotia	270,461
Saskatchewan	183,098
British Columbia	169,057
New Brunswick	160,514
Prince Edward Island	97,082

The related wool clip of 1928 discloses a pleasing progress in this industry. An increase of more than 5 per cent is shown in the volume of the Dominion clip, in which increment every province without exception shared. The total Canadian clip is estimated at 19,611,430 pounds, worth $5,099,000, as compared with 18,672,766 pounds worth $4,108,000 in 1927. The following are the figures for the various provinces in order of importance for 1928 and 1927:

Province	1928 Pounds	1927 Pounds
Quebec	4,969,126	4,956,418
Alberta	3,116,609	3,033,181
Nova Scotia	1,535,462	1,480,541
Saskatchewan	1,064,608	987,458
British Columbia	973,400	717,892
New Brunswick	916,007	873,724
Manitoba	801,468	765,609
Prince Edward Island	549,675	513,882
Indian reserves	17,987	17,410

A large number of my farmer constituents are greatly interested in the development of their flocks.

Another important factor which has contributed to the progress and development of poultry breeding is the effort made by the Department of Agriculture in organizing the holding of the World's Poultry Congress in Ottawa in 1927, which undoubtedly had a tremendous effect in stimulating the Canadian poultry industry, and at which Canada, and especially Ontario and Quebec, held first rank among the many countries which exhibited.

In conclusion, I should like to direct the attention of the government to the many colonization lots which are available in my constituency. The soil of these lots is of the most fertile nature, and I wish to impress upon the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King), the Minister of Immigration and Colonization (Mr. Forke) and their colleagues the other members of the cabinet, the importance of giving consideration to colonization bill No. 16, which was introduced in 1926 but which, on account of the dissolution of parliament at that time, did not become law. I believe this bill could be redrafted so as to help a certain class of labourers who are actually working in mills and factories, but many of whom have been brought up on farms and with a little help of this nature would be willing to take up some of those lots and make them profitable for themselves and the country. I have also received requests from parents having as many as four young men in the family who are just at the proper age to do splendid work on farms and who, if they were protected by such a law, would be willing to purchase some of these lots. If this legislation were passed it would promote great interest amongst labourers who have children of age to help them while they were getting established on the land, and later on these children could establish themselves on farms of their own where I should think they could do splendidly. At the same time it would prevent emigration and induce many Canadians to return to farming, a consummation which would be of the greatest benefit to our national life.

Mr. F. W. GERSHAW (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, in rising to make a few observations on the budget, I must first of all say that I believe the financial statement of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb) has been well received from coast to coast. In this house, however, it has met with two amendments. The acting leader of the opposition (Mr. Guthrie) presented an amendment for the party to your left, Mr. Speaker. True to form, they regret that the financial proposals of the government make no provision for reasonably safeguarding and protecting the interests of those engaged in agricultural pursuits and in industrial employment in Canada. Then we have to-night an amendment by the hon. member for Battle River (Mr. Spencer), which calls for an increase of the British preference.

It would thus seem, Mr. Speaker, that the government is faced with two votes of want of confidence, first, because they have not more adequately protected the interests of Canada, and secondly, because they have not extended the preference more widely throughout the British Empire. Of course, we must have a tariff against non-preferred countries or we cannot extend a preference, and it seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that this government has fairly steadily and consistently been making trade treaties to increase our trade throughout the empire. Trade treaties have been made with the United Kingdom, with Australia, New Zealand, South Africa and the West Indies, and I hardly see that they are open to a vote of censure because they have not acted energetically enough in that regard.

Now, Mr. Speaker, owing to the widespread circulation of the press, and the news which is broadcast by radio, the people to-day are well informed, and I believe that the people of the rural districts are particularly well informed as to the conditions confronting the country at the present time. They have heard —and they have been watching with some anxiety—the news that is coming across the border from the United States. Hon. members here argue that we have nothing to fear from this source. I can hardly agree with that. Our markets suffered some years ago when the Fordney tariff was placed against our cattle going into that country, and already the rumour of a further increase in that particular duty has done much damage to the cattle industry in the west. I believe that definite and considered action will have to be taken, by negotiation and by dealings with countries who will deal with us, but I believe that the real thinking people of Canada will deprecate any attempt to work up an unfriendly feeling with our great neighbour to the south.

The first police barracks, Mr. Speaker, of the royal northwest mounted police were located in the Cypress hills south of Medicine Hat. From there, these pioneers of police forces in Canada, and from other bases, policed the country during the early days. They overcame great difficulties, and they were undaunted by the dangers which beset them on every hand. Many of those pioneers have, through sickness and old age, been retired, and the pensions which they are receiving at the present time are altogether inadequate to compensate them for the services which they have rendered. I have in mind one brilliant police officer who rose from the ranks to be a superintendent of the police. He died and left a widow and two minor children. The pension she receives brings her below the poverty level, amounting to only $45 or $48 per month, and that, Mr. Speaker, you will agree, is altogether inadequate when we take into consideration the cost of living to-day. The pensioners of the Great war have fared fairly well in Canada. Canada has perhaps done more for her returned soldiers, and her disabled soldiers, than any other country engaged in the Great war. It is true that some are breaking down now, and some deserving cases do not come under the provisions of the act. But on the whole they have fared fairly well. The amount spent by Canada in pensions comes to $42,000,000 a year. As time goes on, more and more will require to be spent, but at this time, Mr. Speaker, I would like to urge the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) to reconsider the pensions which the veterans of the royal northwest mounted police force are receiving.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there has been much debate as to the capital debt of Canada. We find, however, that the leaders are fairly well agreed that the capital debt is about two and a quarter billion dollars. Mr. R. A. Daly, president of the Investment Bankers' Association, at the eleventh annual convention, proposed that the debt could be retired in forty years if $23,447,000 were taken off it each year, if this amount per annum, said Mr. Daly, would represent the minimum amount to be retired each year. And, as this amount is no bigger than the average amount of debt that has been retired in each of the last four years, it is apparent the plan is perfectly feasible, especially when we consider that we are now running into a much more prosperous period. Perhaps it will not always be possible, Mr. Speaker, to reduce the debt by the same amount. When revenues are high, such as they have been during the past year, a larger amount of debt might be paid off, and if bad years should come, a smaller amount could be paid off.

There has been a good deal of discussion in this house, Mr. Speaker, as to what prosperity is, and I have a clipping here from a western farm journal, The U.F.A., dealing with that:

What is prosperity? The people of the United States have it in abundance, according to aggregate statistics, yet James J. Davis, United States Secretary of Labour states that eighty-six per cent of Americans are poor. Figures compiled by the federal trade commissioner at Washington show that one per cent of the people own fifty-nine per cent of the country's wealth; thirteen per cent own ninety per cent of the country's wealth, while eighty-seven per cent of the population own ten per cent. Startling inequalities of this character are not confined to the United States. British statistics are also very impressive. And in Canada there is exactly the same tendency at work as elsewhere. We are certainly not in a position to give thanks that "we are not as these others". We have no just grounds for national self-complacency, even though inequality may not have reached such extremes in this country as yet as in some of the older commercial regions of the world.

And then I would like to add, Mr. Speaker, that Adam Smith recognized the principles that citizens paying into the public treasury should be taxed according to their ability to bear taxation; and surely in a civilization where the gulf between the average citizen and that of the comparative few who amass large fortunes is constantly widening, the larger fortunes should bear the larger portion of the taxation. I think this is particularly fitting to have on Hansard just at this time when the Finance minister has not reduced the income tax. This year $58,000,000 was derived from the income tax, and the people of Canada will not object to the minister retaining this tax. Those who are paying it are gaining most by the present good times. There are grounds for objecting to the double taxation, but it must be remembered that any incomes doubly taxed are derived from investments; incomes from salary are not so taxed. The present exemptions are so generous that the tax does not bear heavily on the wage-earner with a family.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that the greatest dissatisfaction in the west at the present time is in connection with the grain grading system. The producer feels that he is not getting the full value for his crop. One inspector may grade a sample No. 3, another inspector may grade it No. 4, and the same inspector may grade the same sample differently at different times, with the result that the man whose grain just misses getting into No. 4 has to take a discount of 17 cents in grade. I am very glad that the whole matter has been referred to the agriculture committee, and I hope some workable scheme will be developed so that this injustice will be discontinued.

Harvesting and threshing combines are being more and more used throughout the west, and if the Minister of Finance could see his way clear, as urged by the hon. member for Last Mountain (Mr. Fansher) to classify swathers and combines so that they will come in under the six per cent rather than under the ten per cent duty, his action would be very much appreciated.

May I, sir, draw the attention of the house to some of the conditions that exist in the so-called dry belt? In times gone by the settlers there suffered great distress, and many of them had to move out of the district. But experience and better methods of farming have made it possible for nearly all the remaining settlers to make a good living. There are, however, certain difficulties in the way of progress, and I hope this parliament will be able to correct some of them. Last session legislation was passed making it possible for a man to file on a second homestead. In the district called A, south of township 16, in the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan, no outsider was allowed to file on a homestead. This turned out to be a wise provision, for if a number of inexperienced homesteaders came in, and there was a return of the dry years, we would have a repetition of all the suffering and poverty and privation that prevailed in the past. At the same time provision was made to encourage those who had remained in the district to obtain more land, and from the handbook issued by the Dominion government I desire to quote the following with respect to area A:

> Lands south of the south boundary of township 16, in the provinces of Satkatchewan and Alberta, are open only for entry to a person who submits evidence satisfactory to the Minister of the Interior that he or she is in permanent residence and conducting farming operations upon a farm of not less than eighty acres and not more than nine miles distant from the proposed homestead.

This second homestead could be taken up by such a person or by his father, mother, son, daughter, brother or sister. The act has been extended to include some other relatives. Unfortunately when the farmer's son or some other close relative applied for one of these available homesteads he found many difficulties. First of all he had to assume responsibility for all relief seed grain liens, improvements, or other debts contracted and standing against the land in the books at Edmonton or at Ottawa. These debts were contracted by the first settler who had abandoned the homestead, but the relative of the resident who took over the holding must assume all those liabilities. True, he may pay off the indebtedness by instalments, but the interest compounded at seven per cent is mounting up all the time. The joint board of representatives of the Dominion and provincial governments may make a reduction, but the prospective settler has no assurance that this will be done. Some of these homesteads have three, four, or five hundred dollars against them, and in certain cases the indebtedness runs as high as a thousand dollars. This is most discouraging to the youth born in the district who wishes to make his home close to his relatives. The case in regard to preemptions is even worse, as the interest piles up to such an extent during the bad years that many deserving men and women find it impossible to retain holdings that they need so badly. Why should the department charge seven per cent interest when they borrow the money at five per cent or less? Let me give the house a few examples of how burdensome this interest becomes. The original price of one quarter section was $456, interest $361, making the present price $817; in another case the same condition obtains, while in a third case the original price of $477 is swollen by interest charges of $284. The farmer under such circumstances finds it impossible to finance his undertaking. The government and parliament of 1910 to 1913 encouraged the people to settle in that district. Those who did so were lacking in the experience necessary to make the venture a success. They made their homes there without warning or advice from qualified persons, and without any supervision. Therefore I submit that parliament should do something to remedy these unfair conditions. Debts due to the crown cannot be reduced by the minister or by any member of his department, nor even by the governor in council. This relief can be effected only by an act of parliament, and I hope that if in the near future the minister sees his way clear to introduce legislation to remedy the evil, every hon. member will support it. If even the accumulated interest could be cancelled or reduced it would bring great hope and encouragement to the people of that large district, and the development which would follow would help also the urban centres. The progress of any town or city depends to a great extent on the prosperity of the surrounding country, and when one large district, namely, the Tilley East area, is virtually not developing at all, and another large district, area A, in that southern country is struggling under such a handicap, city progress must necessarily be slow.

Mr. BRADY: Mr. Speaker, I beg to move the adjournment of the debate.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No, no.

Mr. ROBERT McKENZIE (Assiniboia): It is my intention to take up but a few minutes of the time of the house to make a few observations with regard to the budget. In the first place I would congratulate the Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb) on again bringing to the house a satisfactory budget, the sixth that he has brought down, showing a surplus and a reduction in the national debt as well as a reduction in taxation. The national debt has again been very substantially reduced, and there is also a reduction in the taxes which are collected from the people. Yet in spite of this, we have an amendment moved by the hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie) to the effect that:

This house regrets that the financial proposals of the government make no provision for reasonably safeguarding and protecting the interests of those "engaged in agricultural pursuits or in industrial" employment in Canada.

We who come from the farming areas know quite well that it is impossible for any government to impose tariffs which will in any way safeguard the agricultural interests. We know that up to the present time there has been no purely farmers' organization which has put itself on record as being in favour of increased tariffs on their products. The United States has been pointed out to us as an example, but our farmers are wise enough to regard the United States rather as a warning than as an example to be followed. I do not think this government would be well advised to take any notice of the talk about retaliation because of anything which the United States may possibly do.

We have heard from the hon. member for South Wellington something about the increase in expenditures being out of proportion to the increase in the business of the country. In this connection I would suggest that the business of this country is run, after all, on the same principle as and only on a larger scale than is the business of any of the smaller organizations, such as the provinces, our municipal institutions and so forth. We know that during the later years of the war and the few years following we were not spending a great deal of money in keeping our buildings and other property fully up to their usual state of repair. Hon. members here who own property know that in spite of all they were able to do their property depreciated in value owing to the fact that they were not in a position to maintain repairs. Now the Dominion of Canada, when the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) took charge in 1921, was in the same demoralized state, and since the year 1921 it has been necessary in some cases to increase expenditures in order to restore public property to a proper state of repair, just as was the case in private businesses.

We have heard a good deal from the opposition in regard to the loss of population; we are told that our people have gone in great numbers to the United States. This, we know, is a fact. I was reading a few days ago in a magazine, an article giving statistics in connection with the United States which went on to show that two-thirds of the citizens of that country who have permanently left the United States are living in Canada, and while it is true that they are getting many of our citizens, it is also true that we are getting a great many people from the United States. After all, is it not only natural that two countries side by side should have a large interchange of citizens? This has always been so. There has always been an exodus from one country to the other, but there has also been the reverse movement. I would point out, however, that the greatest exodus that has been known, in my time at any rate, began when our hon. friends opposite were in power, around the years 1919, 1920 and 1921; and it took considerable time to overcome that.

Mr. ROWE: You have not overcome it yet.

Mr. McKENZIE: Yes; read the statistics and you will find that it has been overcome.

It is not my intention to dwell at any length on the budget; anything I might say would be but a repetition of what has already been said. I desire, however, to take just a little time to mention one item in particular and to point out the effect which a reduction in the tariff will have in the constituency I represent. At page 595 of Hansard, March 1, the Minister of Finance in his speech stated:

The resolutions now submitted provide for a revision of certain tariff items of particular interest to the mining industry. In accordance with the traditional policy of assisting the development of our basic industries, the rates of duty on certain machinery and equipment used in the mining industry have been reduced.

We had the pleasure of hearing a very fine address from the hon. member for Nipissing (Mr. Lapierre) with regard to the metal mining industry. The only mining industry about which I am concerned, so far as the constituency I represent is concerned, is the coal industry, and we learn that it is an industry of considerable proportions in Canada. I find that in the year 1927 there was a production of some 17,400,000 tons odd of coal in Canada, being one-tenth of the production of the world that year. Canada too, we are told.

has the second largest coal resources of any country in the world. The constituency I have the honour to represent has a considerable coal mining area, and for the information of the house I wish to make a statement in connection with that industry.

I am sure that the people engaged in that industry will be very thankful indeed that the Minister of Finance at this time has made a reduction in the tariff in this regard. The coal producing area in the districts of Estevan and Bienfait, in the constituency of Assiniboia, which I represent in this house, has recently arrived at a long sought goal, in the progress of converting their lignite coal, of which there are enormous quantities, into high class fuel by the actual production of briquettes from this soft coal. In this area there is an immense quantity of soft coal, and for a long time the finest scientific minds have been engaged with the problem of marketing this fuel. They have attacked the problem from different angles with a view to utilizing this fuel in the most feasible and profitable manner, and now it is thought that this ambition has been realized through the establishment of a carbonizing plant near the town of Bienfait. In this connection I might say that some years ago a lignite utilization board was formed and after investigation they found that by carbonizing this lignite a coal or charcoal was obtained which briquetted quite readily and without reference to the by-products, such as oils, coke, and so on. The result of this carbonizing process was to turn two tons of inferior fuel into one ton of briquettes, which had approximately the same value as anthracite coal and about the same heating value in the furnace as two tons of the lignite coal from which it was made. At present this process is being carried on at the rate of about one hundred tons of briquettes per day, with the possibility of this output being increased to two hundred tons when the plant is fully in operation.

For the information of the house I might say that some ten or eleven years ago the federal government, in conjunction with the governments of Manitoba and Saskatchewan, spent approximately $1,000,000 in the erection of a plant near Bienfait for the purpose of converting this coal into briquettes. The plant was intended to have a capacity of 30,000 tons of briquettes per year, but this venture was not a success because of the unsuitability of some machinery which had been installed. The venture was temporarily abandoned and the plant closed for four or five years. During this period the government of Saskatchewan, after the federal government and the government of Manitoba withdrew from any further connection with the enterprise, became trustees of the property, and in 1927 they announced that they had been successful in interesting certain people in reestablishing the plant. Through their efforts British capital was forthcoming for this purpose and in the spring of 1928 the reconstruction of the plant was commenced. There was an understanding between the government of Saskatchewan and the interests concerned with the reestablishment of the plant that when $600,000 had been expended in remodelling the plant it would be turned over to this company for a nominal fee. The plant was rebuilt during the summer of 1928 and up-to-date machinery installed at a cost of $600,000. This included a Lurgi carbonizing machine the only machine of its kind in Canada. Then the plant was turned over to the company by the government and since then the work of briquetting this soft coal has been going on at the rate of about one hundred tons per day. In addition, in order to encourage the industry and to further the investment of British capital, the government guaranteed to find a market for the output of the plant for one year. This coal will be burned in the public buildings of Saskatchewan for one year at least, or until the plant is properly established.

I may say that this coal is very soft and is readily affected when exposed to the air. This makes the available market very limited, because it cannot stand to be shipped over long distances, and it was for this primary reason that the briquetting process was first introduced by the governments concerned. People who reside in that part of the country look upon this as the nucleus of a great industry which no doubt will be established in that part of the country; very ambitious plans are being outlined and British capital is said to be ready to finance much greater expansion in this field. In that connection I would say that with cheap fuel available in such large quantities; with the possibilities of utilizing the by-products from the carbonizing of this coal, together with the advantages of power and light at a resonable rate, we believe this field well worth investigation by people looking for locations for industries.

On motion of Mr. Brady the debate was adjourned.

On motion of Mr. Robb the house adjourned at 10.52 p.m.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

CHANGE IN MEMBERSHIP OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I beg to move:

That the names of Messrs. Fraser, Cowan and Ernst be substituted for those of Messrs. White (London), Guthrie and Black (Yukon) on the public accounts committee.

Motion agreed to.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' DAYS

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I beg to move the motion of which I gave notice yesterday:

That on and after Monday, 8th April next, and all subsequent Mondays and Wednesdays till the end of the session, government notices of motion and government orders shall have precedence over all other business except questions and notices of motions for the production of papers.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY (Argenteuil): Mr. Speaker, I think this motion requires a little consideration. I am entirely in accord with it as regards Wednesdays, but it seems to me that the government should not appropriate Mondays at this stage of the session to the exclusion of private bills. Yesterday the Prime Minister stated that up to the present private members have had eleven days this session to discuss their motions. This is true, but as a matter of fact so far private bills have occupied practically no time of the house whatever. According to the rules the first item on Mondays is private bills. I find that so far on Mondays private bills have occupied only one column in Hansard, and that was on February 25. In other words, at the beginning of the session private bills are referred to committees, and there discussed; they do not take up much time in the house, but later on in the session very often they require to be discussed on the floor. At the end of last session several very important private bills were left stranded on the order paper. Manifestly this is unfair to the petitioners, and I think it is not consistent with the dignity of the house that these bills should not be dealt with during the session. The procedure governing petitions for private bills is set forth in great detail in the book of rules. If the rules are complied with by the petitioners, and the bills are introduced for consideration at a reasonably early stage in the session, it matters not whether the petitioners be public companies or private individuals, I submit that they should be dealt with, whatever the decision thereon may be.

Last session the Prime Minister introduced a motion similar to this. I find that after it was agreed to there were seven Mondays that the house sat when private bills could not be taken up. I believe that if the house had not agreed to the Prime Minister's motion the difficulties that confronted us towards the end of the session would have been avoided, and those private bills would not have been left to the tender mercies of Tuesday and Friday evenings, which resulted in some of them not being disposed of at prorogation.

If my memory serves me right, Mr. Speaker, when I first entered the house the custom was for the government to take Wednesdays fairly early in the session, but they did not appropriate Mondays until the session was well advanced. I quite realize that this motion is drafted in exactly the same terms as the one which the Prime Minister moved last session, and I have been wondering why that wording is used. I have come to the conclusion that the form is similar to that which was used when Wednesdays only were taken over for government business. As I say, I do not remember that it was the practice for the government to give their business precedence over private bills on Mondays until towards the end of the session. To my mind this change in the old practice has produced what may be called not a proper state of affairs so far as private bills are concerned.

If private bills are allowed first place on the order paper for Mondays, I submit to the Prime Minister that the work of the session would not be delayed at all. After the private bills had been disposed of on Mondays the government would have the rest of the day for their legislation following questions and notices of motion for production of papers. But if there are private bills on the order paper, then I submit that they should have consideration in the first place on Mondays, as provided in the rules. If the Prime Minister will consider for a moment, I think he will agree with me that the effect of this present motion would be practically to deprive private bills of their right to the first place on Mondays throughout the session, and in that case he might as well make a motion for changing the rules altogether; because up to this time private bills have taken only one column of Hansard on a Monday. Of course, when I say this, I have not in mind any particular private bill; it is immaterial whether they be divorce bills or private bills of any other character, or bills in respect to companies. Private bills, in my opinion, should be proceeded with on Mondays according to the rule. I realize that the Prime Minister and the government are responsible for the conduct of the business of the house, and I have no idea of moving any amendment to the motion, but I submit to the Prime Minister that it would be better to adhere to the practice that obtained in the old days, so that private bills would hold their place on Mondays. Otherwise, I am willing that the motion should carry, so that government business would come next after questions and notices of motions for the production of papers on both Mondays and Wednesdays.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): When I drafted the motion I had not foreseen the possibility to which my hon. friend has just referred. The motion in no way affects the right of the house to take up private bills in the first hour on Tuesday and Friday evenings, but I am prepared to admit that my hon. friend, who is an older and more experienced member of the house than I am, may be quite right in what he foresees as to possibilities with respect to the fate of private bills. I therefore very gladly accept the suggestion he offers, to make provision for private bills receiving first consideration on Monday, and if the house will permit me I will amend the motion I have made by adding the words "and private bills on Monday."

Mr. JAMES ARTHURS (Parry Sound): We have had on the order paper from day to day, since February 26, an order for the resumption of the adjourned debate on the motion of the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe-Rouville (Mr. Morin) for concurrence in the first report of the select standing committee on standing orders. This order has not yet been taken up and I have no doubt it is held back at the instance of the government. It has a direct bearing on private members' day, and I should like to know before voting on this motion, if there is a vote, what action the government intends to take with respect to the order I have just indicated.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: It was held back at the express request of my hon. friend. The hon. gentleman asked me not to have the motion proceeded with—

Mr. ARTHURS: On Monday.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes, and I agreed that we would not proceed on Monday; and not having been proceeded with on Monday the motion apparently has fallen by the way ever since.

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre): I would suggest that it is too early in the session to curtail in any way private members' days. We have a large number of notices of motions still on the order paper. These are important, at least in the eyes of those who have sponsored them, and as a matter of fact private members' day is about the only opportunity the private member has of bringing forward what he considers matters of interest to this house or to the public at large. I feel particularly free to speak on this question, because a motion in my name recently occupied nearly a week of the time of the house. Of course, having once introduced the motion I had no further control in the matter. The Prime Minister took occasion to make two quite lengthy declarations with regard to the question of natural resources in connection with that motion. I have no objection whatever to this, but I would point out that under that motion the house entered into a lengthy discussion of the whole subject of natural resources, approaching it from half a dozen different angles. Now I submit that it is not fair to the house that a single motion should be discussed to such an extent while there are eighteen others, of equal importance, which have had no opportunity for discussion. I hope the Prime Minister will see his way to leave this motion for a little while.

Mr. SPEAKER: Shall the motion as amended carry?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. SPEAKER: Do I understand that the motion is carried? Carried.

Motion as amended agreed to.

HIS MAJESTY'S MAIL

Hon. P. J. VENIOT (Postmaster General): I wish to lay on the table a return to an order of the house, reference No. 15, moved for by the hon. member for Toronto Northwest (Mr. Church):

For a copy of all letters, instructions, regulations, orders in council, telegrams, and other documents issued by the government of Canada or any members thereof, and any other person or persons, regarding the substitution of Canadas' Mail for His Majesty's mail on postal offices, postal wagons, motors, or other postal equipment, and in relation to the removal of His Majesty's initials "G.R." from said post office equipment.

I do not know whether I am in order in giving an explanation of this return. If not, I will do so at some other time.

An hon. MEMBER: Not now.

Mr. SPEAKER: Orders of the day.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. VENIOT: I wish now, if in order, to give the explanation I desire to make with reference to the return I have tabled. This return, asked for by the hon. member for Toronto Northwest (Mr. Church) has reference to what has been called the elimination of the monogram "G.R."—

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): If I may interrupt the Postmaster General, may I say that if this privilege is extended to him we shall expect it to be extended to the rest of us to discuss the matter as well as he; otherwise, I rise to a point of order.

Mr. SPEAKER: The matter is one of personal explanation and must not give rise to a debate.

Mr. VENIOT: I do not intend to discuss it.

Mr. SPEAKER: I understand that the Postmaster General wishes to make a statement of fact by way of personal explanation.

Mr. VENIOT: That is all.

Mr. BENNETT: It cannot be personal.

Mr. VENIOT: It is not personal; it has reference to the administration of the department.

Mr. SPEAKER: I would suggest to the Postmaster General that he wait until his estimates come down.

Mr. VENIOT: Very well, Mr. Speaker. I am perfectly willing to wait; only there is a good deal of misinformation being circulated.

MOTOR AND PLEASURE BOATS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. PETER McGIBBON (Muskoka): May I ask the Prime Minister to be good enough to give me an answer to the question I asked him the other day. I know he is busy.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I must apologize to my hon. friend. I have not had an opportunity to secure the answer but I shall let him have it by Monday.

THE BUDGET

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON THE ANNUAL FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The house resumed from Thursday, March 14, consideration of the motion of Hon. J. A. Robb (Minister of Finance) that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of ways and means, the proposed amendment thereto of Hon. Hugh Guthrie and the proposed amendment to the amendment of Mr. Spencer.

Mr. J. C. BRADY (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, the electors of the constituency of Skeena, who honoured me by sending me to this house to represent their views, placed upon me two duties, first that I shall take an interest in all that appertains to Canada with regard to her internal and external affairs and secondly that I might represent them and place their views and their needs before this honourable house. Otherwise I would not presume to say anything in this debate after the wonderful address delivered by the hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie); his was a masterpiece of reasoning which as yet has not been contradicted in any important detail by any of the hon. members who have spoken since.

Before I introduce the subject upon which I would like to speak to-day I would state briefly that the budget is already before the people of Canada; its merits and demerits are known to everyone. The working men of Canada have read it with interest; the agriculturists, the fishermen on our coasts, the lonely lighthouse keepers who keep watch and ward over the carriers of our commerce —the ships that pass in the night—all have read the budget. Likewise the hard-working and poorly-paid lower classes of the civil servants of this country have read it; but the millions of people who are not stockholders in large corporations, who are not presidents of banks, who do not pay income tax or drive the high-powered motor cars referred to yesterday by the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Malcolm), do not find very much meat or comfort in the budget presented in this house on Friday, March 1. When I was considering the budget I thought it would have been a very good thing if the Minister of Finance had taken a leaf from the book of those wonderful, canny Scots who in 1670 created the Hudson's Bay Company, because it seems to me that in all our trade relations which I have had time to read the Minister of Finance or whoever has negotiated the arrangements has been given the thin end of the stick. In those days, Mr. Speaker, when the Hudson's Bay Company traded with the Indians, the measurement of value was skins piled to the height of a rifle, and the canny Scots of those days took jolly good care that the barrel of the rifle was longer than that of the ordinary rifle then in use.

Now, Mr. Speaker, coming to the chief points of my short address to-day, I think it will be a revelation to any thinking Canadian who analyses the trade figures of Canada to discover some cogent truths which I do not think can be contradicted either inside or outside of this house. I am going to make a statement now which has been thoughtfully considered, and before this budget debate is concluded I would like it answered. It is this: Canada to-day is finding it more difficult than ever to retain the major portion of the financial value and the nation-building value of her natural resources and products, in spite of the wealth of her great natural resources. Let me give some figures in connection with the great basic industry of mining, whose development has been a revelation to the world and the admiration of less fortunate nations. Is our mining industry to-day an asset or a liability to the people of this country? That is the question, and what is the answer? It is a terrible indictment against this government to be forced to say that the wealth of our mines, running into millions, is not an asset to Canada. Here is what we did in the nine months ending December 31, 1928: We sent to the United States $135,000,000 worth of semi-raw or semi-manufactured products from our three mineral groups, and we imported $437,000,000 worth. Those are the figures representing the trade in this great basic industry.

What does that mean? It means, in simple language that a child can understand, that for every day of those nine months Canada sent out of the country $1,000,000 to buy goods which could be manufactured in our own country. Shall I bring it a little nearer? For every hour of each day of the nine months we sent out of Canada $84,000 to buy goods which could be manufactured here. Shall I bring it still nearer? Every time the clock in the Victory Tower ticked off a minute we sent out $1,400.

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): Cash?

Mr. BRADY: Yes, sir. If we had stopped there it might not be so bad, but together with that money we sent the very cream of the intellect of this young nation. Furthermore let me add that when the government failed to respond to the needs of technical education in this country and refused the grant, they took a retrograde step from which they will not recover. We are losing from Canada our very brightest scientists and cleverest men. Here is an example; Professor Dickson, one of the brilliant research men of Macdonald college, was receiving a salary of only $3,500, and he was offered a position in Australia at a salary which Canada should have doubled if necessary to keep him here. He was offered a position in an Australian university at a salary of $7,500. And thus it goes on. It is not the fate of any political party which is at stake but the soul and life of Canada, and someone will have to answer for it before very long.

If we could take just half of the manufactured goods we import from the United States over $800,000,000, and manufacture them here and keep $400,000,000 in Canada to circulate here and build up our domestic industries, what could we do with it? We could solve the problem of the Minister of Immigration (Mr. Forke) over night. What a pitiable travesty it is on the days when Canada loomed as the bright star in the centre of this great empire, when we realize that the government of Canada could not reply to the questions asked in the House of Commons at London two days ago. A Labour member of that house asked, "Can the dominions do anything with their great natural wealth to give employment to our highly trained artisans and industrial workers who are out of work?" The one who replied to that question was the head of the Labour Federation in Canada, Mr. Tom Moore, and he said, "There is not a chance for them at all." There is no chance yet, but if our party comes into power I say that not only would every boy and young man in Canada be given a chance to live here, and earn his living but we could assist the motherland as well, and invite the best stock of Europe and give them all work. Sir Wilfrid Laurier, when he was in London at the time of Queen Victoria's jubilee, in the course of a speech said, and I think his words have a present-day significance:

> England has proved at all times that she can fight her own battles, but, if ever the day was to come when she was in danger, let the bugle sound, let the fires be lit on the hills and in all parts of the empire, and though we might not be able to do much, whatever we can do shall be done to help her.

Those are the words of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, but the members on the other side of the house do not seem to like them.

An hon. MEMBER: It is too deep for them.

Mr. BRADY: During these later years the followers of Sir Wilfrid have departed far from his spirit of empire. There is a crisis to-day in Canada which concerns not so much the motherland but the very spirit and soul of this great nation of which we are supposed to be so proud. When I read the remarks of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb) in introducing the budget the other day, one sentence seemed to me to be so striking as to take prominence over everything else. He said:

> It is gratifying to note the steady development of inter-empire trade. Canada, the pioneer of the British preference, looks on empire trade as the keystone of its external trade policy and desires in every way to foster closer trading relations throughout the British commonwealth of nations.

It is not with any sense of pride I speak now, but it is has been my privilege to have travelled throughout the empire and I know its spirit and its great resources. It was that very reason which prompted me to obtain a few figures so that I might be able to give honour, at least, to the Minister of Finance upon the floor of this house if his statement should prove to be correct. The figures I will now give to the house have been authenticated by the Dominion statistician, and if they do not amount to an indictment against this present government with regard to the fostering of trade with the United Kingdom, then nothing will.

When the Conservative party was in power in 1921 the average duty levied against dutiable and free goods coming into Canada from the United Kingdom was 16.6 per cent, and the duty levied on United States goods was 12.9 per cent. I then come to the figures for 1924, because the government cannot be expected to do everything in a year. In 1924 the average duty levied against dutiable and free goods imported into Canada from Great Britain was 18.3, and 13.2 as applied to United States goods. Then we have the figures for 1928, and they cannot be contradicted. In 1928 the average duty levied on all British imports was 20.6 and on United States imports 13.5. These figures show that the present government are bonusing United States goods at the expense of British preference, thus completely disproving the words uttered by the Minister of Finance. There has been an increase of only 6 per cent upon goods imported from the United States from 1921 to 1928, while there has been an increase of 4 per cent upon goods coming in from the United Kingdom. I have nothing but the highest honour for the members of the government individually but their policy is one which never can build up Canada, or bring about the realization of her desires or make her people prosperous. I would like to mention one thing more on the same line. I feel that I could talk for more than forty minutes, but I only want to use my allotted time.

I would like, Mr. Speaker, to say something with regard to the halibut fishermen on the Pacific coast, and especially in relation to the United States government. By the terms of the Washington treaty Canada offered the most extended courtesy to that great nation to the south of us. We opened our harbours on the Pacific coast so that the boats might be permitted at all times to obtain shelter and bait at those ports. Over 21,000,000 pounds of halibut was brought into the port of Prince Rupert last year, and of that amount American vessels, which did not pay one cent in fees or dues, brought in over 12,000,000 pounds in bond to be shipped to the United States free of duty. The time has come, Mr. Speaker, when someone must strike the first blow to indicate our position as a nation. You would think we were in Ceylon and not in Canada. Here is a point I wish to enunciate: The United States government is the embodiment of greatness and power and it is entitled to do everything possible for the good of that country, but we likewise have the God-given right to do the same thing for Canada and our government should protect our fishermen. There is a duty of two cents on every pound of fish that we send in Canadian boats through Canadian harbours into the United States. What has happened recently? Not satisfied with this, a deputation visited Washington requesting that the duty be raised two cents more. In other words, this would prevent all possibility of halibut coming into the port of Prince Rupert. It would compel the halibut fishermen to send their fish to Seattle and other United States ports thousands of miles away, but the Seattle halibut owner's association went to Washington and appealed against this. They said, if, this be done, you will annihilate the United States halibut fishing fleet in the north Pacific. We cannot take our fish to Seattle, thousands of miles away; Prince Rupert is the only harbour on the Pacific coast that suits us as it is the terminus of a transcontinental railway. Surely our fishermen are entitled to a quid pro quo. But there must be no dilly-dallying; the one fundamental principle is that we must stand up for Canada and recognize that great right of self-protection that is ours. How long are the sons and daughters of Canada to be checked on all sides without being able to attain their natural heritage? The fishermen in Prince Rupert are not getting a square deal. The other day an hon. gentleman across the floor went so far as to say: "Do not retaliate." He used the wrong word; there is no retaliation at all; the question is one of protection of ourselves and of our industries.

I should like to refer to another matter which will disclose what is happening in Canada to-day. I took the trade figures for 1928 dealing with Canada and the United States, and I took the same for Canada and Great Britain for the same period. There was an adverse balance of trade between Canada and the United States, amounting to $241,500,000, while with Great Britain we had a favourable balance of trade amounting to $224,800,000. Put in the plainest words imaginable, that money should have been kept within Canada and had that been the case there would have been no need for the minister to worry night after night how to increase the population of this great country; we would have the money to circulate within our own country. What happened to the money we got from Great Britain? It went into the United States to pay for our adverse trade balance with them. That is the answer and there is no use in our endeavouring to fool ourselves. The fiscal policy of the present government is hopelessly wrong for Canada. The Minister of Finance said the other day: "If we have any fiscal problems." Why, the destiny of a country depends upon its fiscal policy! That fiscal policy has a certain objective. If it fails in that, if the theory that they enunciate does not become converted into concrete action of benefit to the people, it is a failure.

To sum up, let me say that with the spread of education throughout the whole country, things are not going unnoticed. The man who wears overalls has as great and profound knowledge of life as he who sits in his Buick or sedan. The working people of Canada to-day are not in accord with what the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Malcolm) said. He said: "We are prosperous." Prosperity is a relative term and if we want real prosperity we must do something more for the masses than this government is doing. If we want to put Canada where she ought rightfully to be as the greatest dominion of the British Empire; if we want to increase Canada's population—

Mr. BRADY: To those who anticipate the sentence I shall only say "Honi soit qui mal y pense." The biggest indictment upon this government is the fact that our population is standing still. It is all very well to talk about our wonderful external trade running into billions and about our wonderful plenipotentiaries in various capitals; but to compare ourselves to the United States population is to compare the little spaniel with the Newfoundland dog. The United States have a population of 117,000,000 whereas we have less than 10,000,000.

I feel this afternoon that what I have said is but a brief indication of what I would like to have referred to had I had more than forty minutes at my disposal. But in conclusion let me say that whatever the government may think or say, the soul of Canada has awakened and the rallying cry will be: "Canada for the Canadians and the great empire to which we belong.

Hon. ROBERT FORKE (Minister of Immigration and Colonization): I only wish, Mr. Speaker, that I was gifted with the eloquence of the member for Skeena (Mr. Brady) in presenting my case this afternoon.

I do not intend taking up very much time in discussing the budget, because I want to deal more particularly with the department over which I have the honour to preside, and as I have only forty minutes in which to speak at this time I intend to devote nearly all of my time to the question of immigration. Perhaps there is no subject that has been more discussed in the country than this same question. You can hardly pick up a newspaper to-day, or a periodical or a magazine, but you will find someone putting forth his views on immigration. The difficulty that I experience however is that there does not seem to be any unanimity in regard to this question.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): What is your idea?

Mr. FORKE: I have not yet heard from the member from Frontenac (Mr. Edwards) any well defined policy on immigration. Labour looks askance at any large immigration into the country, afraid perhaps that it might increase unemployment and make it more difficult for the labouring classes. The railways, on the other hand, claim that the country could absorb a very much larger volume of immigration than is now coming into the country. And I am sure that the agriculturists are not pressing very hard for increased immigration at the present time. I have not had much encouragement from that section of the public in regard to increasing the volume of immigration.

Notwithstanding the eloquent speech that we have just listened to from the hon. member for Skeena, conditions are not so very bad in Canada at the present time. It is the first time that I have heard the statement—and I hope it is not true—that the more wealth we take out of our mines the poorer we become. It seems a strange sort of argument and it is quite beyond me. Every sign points to the fact that things seem to be going fairly well with us. Commercial statistics, leading financial institutions, production, manufacturing, all point to growth and prosperity. The National railways which, a few years ago, were looked upon as a millstone around the neck of this young nation, are becoming, in fact, are a very valuable asset to the nation. Perhaps the only blot—if it can be called that—upon the situation at the present time, is the fact that our young people are not staying on the land but are moving into the cities in increasing numbers. That is not a very good thing for this Dominion, and that, Sir, I believe to be the greatest problem not only in Canada but the world over. It is not an uncommon thing for a Canadian family to leave a farm and to find a family from a foreign country coming in to take their place. While we speak about agriculture being one of our great problems, I do not agree with hon. members on the other side of the house who advocate a policy that would make it more difficult than it is at the present time. Judging from the speech we have just listened to, I am indeed surprised at the tepid amendment which has been offered to the budget by the opposition. I had expected an amendment that had some teeth in it, an amendment that would come out fairly and squarely and state what the trouble was.

A good deal of controversy exists in regard to continental and British immigration. I have never agreed, Mr. Speaker, that there are superior and inferior people. There are backward and forward people and backward and forward nations. We all know, looking into the dim past, that great nations have existed and have passed away, and left little more behind than a name. In more recent times, we also know that nations have reached the peak of progress and civilization and have then faded out of the picture, as it were, and other nations have taken their place. That is what has happened in the past and doubtless the same will happen in the future. Some nationalities, however, are much more easily absorbed than others, and we have to take that into consideration in considering this question of immigration.

I noticed an article in the Saskatoon Star the other day, from which I desire to quote. It states:

> It is unfortunate to have immigrants in the west without knowledge of English, with little, if any, money, with no experience of farm work as carried on in the west. Some of these people have been left stranded at country points without any immediate prospect of employment. It is not fair to leave men without funds, ignorant of English, to shift for themselves in a strange land—this is not colonization.

I quite agree with that sentiment, Mr. Speaker, and I trust, as Minister of Immigration, that I will do my best to prevent an occurrence of that kind. Such a thing as that is of no benefit to immigration. It is of no benefit to Canada to have people come here unable to find employment when they arrive.

Some statements have appeared in the public press lately, in regard to the railway agreement. I would like to say a few words in regard to that. As most of the hon. members know, the railway agreement was entered into to stimulate the supply of farm labour from certain named countries in Europe. I was in the west last summer, met representatives of the four provincial governments out there and discussed with them the supply of foreign farm labour. I had an estimate from the governments of the four western provinces as to what they considered would be required in their respective provinces. We also made an estimate in the department of the amount of labour required during the coming summer. I have only this to say, Sir, that the estimate made by the department was very much larger than that given to me by the various provinces. However, I came to the conclusion that thirty per cent of the single foreign farm labourers of last year's immigration would be sufficient to meet requirements for that class of labour in the three western provinces. There has been a good deal of criticism in regard to that regulation, but I am perfectly satisfied that there will be sufficient labour of that kind to meet all the requirements of the farmers in western Canada. There is no limit placed on families coming in to settle on the land from those countries, and there is no limit on relatives coming out under the regulations. There is no limit on domestics coming out from foreign countries, and there is no quota. I have seen a resolution on the order paper that might be discussed, with regard to a quota; but there is no quota established in regard to that kind of immigration. And, Mr. Speaker, at the end of May, should it be found that there is a shortage of foreign labour, the doors can be opened. I feel it is my duty to see that people coming from countries, unable to speak our language, shall have employment when they do come. That is the only trouble that has arisen in regard to this matter.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): May I ask the minister a question there?

Mr. FORKE: Yes.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Would he kindly give the proportion coming in under this agreement that stayed on the land, and the proportion that drifted into the cities?

Mr. FORKE: I cannot give that information. That has been one of the troubles in the past. We have estimated that probably thirty per cent stay on the land and the balance drift into other lines of employment.

An hon. MEMBER: That seems high.

Mr. FORKE: Probably it is. Those who have made a study of immigration will realize that capital and immigration are closely allied. When large amounts of capital were coming into Canada we had also a large volume of immigration, because the employment of that capital created labour, and the supply came to meet the demand. I think that may be taken as a basic principle. Since 1881 five million immigrants have come into Canada. For the ten years from 1911 to 1921 1,728,921 immigrants came in. I am sorry the member for Skeena is not in his seat, for these figures would interest him in view of his remarks on immigration. Our net gain at the end of ten years was 491,281.

Mr. STEVENS: What ten years?

Mr. FORKE: From 1911 to 1921. During those ten years 1,237,740 people born outside of Canada died or left the country. This figure does not include the Canadian-born who left during those years. I do not wish to make any insinuations against the government then in power, but I want the house to pay particular attention to the fact that that exodus took place when no Liberal government was in office. So that the matter of trade policy or tariff—

Mr. JACOBS: Might I point out to the hon. minister that the Union government was a half-and-half coalition?

Mr. FORKE: I do not wish to draw any unwarranted inferences from those figures, but it is reasonable to state that perhaps the 166,782 immigrants that entered the Dominion for the calendar year 1928 and established permanent homes here constitute a better record than for some of the preceding years when we had 400,000 immigrants annually. It is not the number of people who come in, it is the number who become permanent citizens of this Dominion that really count in immigration. It may be profitable to transportation and other agencies to have a large influx of immigrants who simply pass through the country to return no more, but this type of immigration is certainly not profitable nationally. Since 1881 our record for 1928 has been exceeded only seven times. In 1926, two years ago, 96,064 immigrants came in. Last year, as I have already mentioned, we received 166,782 immigrants.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Where from?

Mr. FORKE: I will give their origin. British, 55,882, I would remind the house that the miner-harvesters are included in that total, and a few thousand should be deducted to cover those who returned to Great Britain. There were 29,900 from the United States, and 28,840 from northwestern Europe. This makes a total immigration from Great Britain, the United States and northwestern Europe of 114,622—all people very easily assimilated into our life. Southern and southeastern Europe sent 52,161, thus making the grand total of 166,782. Let me point out that 70,718 more immigrants came in during 1928 than two years ago.

Those who complain about our lack of immigration are fond of making comparisons with the United States, much to our disadvantage. Indeed, the hon. member for Skeena has just mentioned that we should take a leaf out of the United States' book in regard to immigration policy. Well, Mr. Speaker, we are getting a larger percentage of immigrants to our population than ever entered the United States.

Some hon. MEMBERS: What?

Mr. FORKE: A higher percentage of immigrants to our population than ever entered the United States. When 840,000 immigrants came into the United States that country had a population of over one hundred million. With our population of nine and a half million, a total immigration for 1928 of 166,782 people gives a higher percentage in our favour. Consequently we have a bigger problem of assimilation and absorption than ever confronted the United States. That is something which should be borne in mind by those who would like to pour millions and millions of immigrants into this country. Perhaps we have reached the point where we can about absorb the stream of immigrants now flowing in. As the country develops and capital increases there would be an increase in population, and under normal circumstances we shall be able to absorb more immigrants. In this connection I desire to quote a few lines from a speech delivered by Premier Baldwin when he visited Canada a few years ago. I should like to say that of all the distinguished visitors to this Dominion none have displayed such a grasp of the situation as Premier Baldwin and ex-Premier Lloyd George. They seemed to realize what we need in this young country. Speaking of immigration to Canada, Premier Baldwin said:

If it be no impertinence on my part to say one word to Canadians, I would say: The future is with you; do not be in too much of a hurry. Your country is a country for men from the north, the hardy, virile races. Quality before quantity any day. Build up with the best. What does it matter if it is a hundred years, or two hundred years, or more, before your country is full? Keep the stock you have, and the men and women you have, and see that the coming generations are in no way inferior to them. I have often thought that it is as dangerous a thing to the morals of a nation to get rich too quickly as it is to an individual. Time is on your side. Maintain the values. Maintain the standards. And may the prayer of Canada always be the prayer of the Greek sailor which has been preserved for us by Seneca: "O God, You may save me if You will; You may sink me if You will; but, whatever happens, I will always keep my rudder true."

I think we may take that to heart as a good lesson in regard to our immigration problem.

During the past year there has been a large increase in the number of homesteads taken up. In the four western provinces during 1928 there were 15,566 homesteads taken up, compared with 6,356 in 1927—a gain of 250 per cent. In the Grande Prairie and Peace River country 5,216 homesteads were taken up—a gain of 450 per cent over the previous year. Taking 160 acres as the unit for a homestead, it means that two and a half million acres of land was homesteaded—not very bad progress when we are supposed to be standing still. The people represented by these homestead entries number 41,724. A great many of those homesteaders are young men from our own western prairies, and I hope some from the eastern part of the Dominion also. We can get no better type of colonization than that. The young fellows from our farms in western Canada go out to the new districts and there establish homes for themselves. They are the very best settlers, because, Mr. Speaker, there is no better settler than he who is born in some lone sheiling in Canada.

Last summer I had the pleasure of visiting the Grande Prairie and Peace River country and was astonished to see the progress that had been made. I found fields of splendid wheat ripening in the sun in the month of August, ten days earlier than the crop much further south—ten days earlier than around Edmonton, for instance. I do not think much of that wheat was damaged by early frost, whereas a great deal of such damage was done in Saskatchewan. It is a wonderful country, there is no doubt of it, and it will be rapidly developed in the not very distant future. But I would suggest that no one should get it into his mind that there are vast prairies in the Peace River district similar to those that were to be found in the western provinces away back in the nineties. The soil is good but it will take more labour and more capital to build up homes there than it did in the older districts. I had the privilege of attending a picnic at Peace River lodge, and about the best thing I saw in Peace River was the people there. They reminded me of the pioneers of the early days, in the nineties, in Manitoba—kind-hearted folk, full of hopefulness, looking to the future with optimism, and believing they had the best country under the sun. To me it was a most pleasing experience to go back into that country, far up in the north, and see the splendid crops being raised there.

I should like to have said a few words in regard to some of the different schemes we have, but I am forced to pass on seeing that my time is going rapidly. I think we have covered nearly all the recommendations made by the committee on agriculture which investigated the Immigration department last year. We have extended assistance to boys between the ages of seventeen and nineteen inclusively. As most hon. members know, these boys are going to farm centres established by the different provinces. The province establishes a farm centre, or what may be called a distribution point, to which the boys go. Places are found for them by the provincial governments, and the Dominion contributes $10, the province $10, and the Imperial government $20, making a total of $40 per boy, for the purpose of placing him when he comes to Canada.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): How long does the assistance continue?

Mr. FORKE: The provinces have undertaken to look after the boys, keeping an eye on them, and seeing that they are properly cared for after arriving. This is the most successful movement in a small way I have seen since coming to the department. I have heard nothing but good reports with respect to the placing of the boys who come to the country, and this is the best kind of immigration we can have. These lads come to Canada, become identified with Canadian life and social customs, and in a very few years they will be Canadians in every sense of the word, looking on the country as their own home land.

The committee also recommended a land settlement scheme, in respect to which there was a tripartite agreement between the provinces, the Dominion and the Imperial government. That has been done more particularly in New Brunswick and, to some extent, in Ontario. New Brunswick is advancing rapidly in the matter of land settlement from the provincial point of view. The authorities there intend to settle 500 families in the next three years. They settled 100 families last year and they seem to be doing very well. The province provides the land, the Imperial government advances the money, and the Dominion government renders services to further the scheme. I may say, in regard to domestic servants, that we have entered into an agreement with the Imperial government. They have established centres for the training of domestic girls coming to the Dominion, and these girls are given six weeks' training. We have a lady officer attached to the Department of Immigration and she is over in Great Britain, seeing what training the girls are receiving, and satisfying herself that they will be suitable to Canadian homes. She will have the selection of the girls who come. The province taking any girl who comes from overseas undertakes to contribute $10 towards the upkeep of the central home. This is one aspect of immigration in respect to which the department can never fill the demands made upon it; it cannot supply all the domestic servants asked for.

Now I will say a few words with reference to land settlement generally. We have read some very alluring descriptions of the vast open spaces of the Dominion, millions of acres of fertile land waiting for people to come and cultivate it; and we have read about unemployed people in Great Britan. We are told that if only we would bring these unemployed people to Canada and place them in these vacant spaces the whole face of the country would be transformed, there would be smiling homesteads, happy and contented homes, and everything would go well. It seems quite easy to talk that way, but anyone who has ever had any association with land settlement, with the bringing of people to this country and settling them on the soil, knows that the problem is not so easy as all that. It is much more difficult than one might readily suppose who had never come into contact with that sort of work. I notice that the Hon. Mr. Perrault, speaking in the Quebec legislature, made the following statement:

> It is not the fault of the province if young men show no desire to rush to the colonization areas and build up from the beginning. The fault rather lies in the desire of the younger men to gather in the centres, despite the advantages offered by the government.

It is the same old story: you can put people on the land, but it is a different job to keep them there. It is largely a question of remuneration, a question also of making rural life as attractive as it ought to be. Mr. Perrault adds:

> Yet, within the past fifteen years, the government of Quebec has succeeded in establishing 50 new parishes in the province.

That is not so bad for the old province of Quebec in the way of land settlement endeavour. Frankly, I am not in favour of any land settlement that will burden the settler with large overhead expenses; it is better to begin slowly, gaining experience and building up on a surer foundation. The amazing development that has taken place in western Canada did not come about by means of any great land settlement scheme; it was brought about by people beginning in a small way, humbly, adding to their belongings bit by bit until the whole country was transformed and now we find a population of 2,000,000 producing a tremendous amount of wealth—and this in one generation. That is the way development took place there; it was not brought about by the expenditure of millions of public money to induce people to go on the land.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): They were not state-aided.

Mr. FORKE: There is one thing I have noticed in recent years, and that is the tendency of the farmers in the west to increase their holdings. A few years ago, when I first came to this house, I imagined that a change would take place, that the farms would be smaller units, the population more dense, and that some of the difficulties we were experiencing would disappear. The movement has been the other way, however; the farms are growing larger in the west rather than smaller. That is not the best thing for the country, but it is a fact. The improvement in machinery, with loss of man power, is resulting in a greater amount of produce. I have an idea which perhaps might be worth considering: I wonder whether all this increase in production, with less man power, simply means paying for improved machinery. I wonder whether those who are producing in very much larger volume, as a result of improved machinery, are very much the gainers after they have paid for the machinery they are buying. As I say, that is only an idea, but it is worth noting. There is this to be observed: In buying that machinery and creating that produce they have at least done a great deal towards stimulating industry and helping every other line of public endeavour in the Dominion. I want those people who perhaps are not so closely related to agriculture as I am to bear that in mind and to be always ready to do something to help the farmer in the struggle he is carrying on in a great industry.

Before leaving land settlement I wish to refer to the colonization department of the railways and other organizations and to touch upon what has been done by the different provinces. Before dealing with British immigration, however, I wish to make a few remarks in relation to foreign immigrants from what are known as non-preferred countries, although there is no such definition in the act or in the regulations. Some Hungarian gentlemen came to see me the other day and they felt that a slur was being cast upon them because they came from what we know as a non-preferred country. I wish to make it clear that there has never been any intention that any reflection should be cast on anyone. Indeed, in some respects, countries which are nominally non-preferred are in reality preferred countries, because there has been a more vigorous campaign for immigrants there than anywhere else in Europe.

Mr. FORKE: By the railway companies, under the agreement.

To prevent misconception I want to pay a tribute to the people who have come from those countries. They have made contributions of permanent value to the life of the Dominion; they are taking an active interest in Canadian problems and government, as witness members of local governments and one member of foreign birth in the Dominion parliament. They have worked in our lumber camps, helped to build our railways and highways, dug our ditches and given good service for wages received. They have cleared thousands of acres of our scrub land in the northern part of the prairie provinces and have made the wilderness blossom as the rose. They have built their modest homes; in many instances they have every modern item of equipment on their farms and have purchased more machinery and equipment in recent years than other agriculturists, and they have added to the wealth of the country by the production of millions of dollars worth of farm produce. They have not lagged behind in other respects; they have sent their children to high schools and universities, fitting them as good citizens to take their part in this young and growing nation.

Now I want to say a few words with regard to the situation in Great Britain as it affects immigration. The social and economic structure of Great Britain is not what it was in 1914; in fact all countries have changed greatly since that time. In 1914 there was no unemployment insurance, no sick benefits and no old age pensions, and most of the social legislation now considered important was non-existent. Agriculture was more important; strange to say, in twenty years a vast change has taken place in Great Britain with regard to agriculture. Then cars and motor trucks were little used, and that really has a great bearing on emigration to Canada. Young men were trained in the management of horses; practically all transportation with the exception of that carried on by railways was done by horses. That produced a very large number of young men skilled in handling and managing horses, but you cannot find those people in Great Britain to-day; they are driving motor trucks or engaged in some other work and they do not know anything about horses. That is a fundamental lesson they must learn when they are being trained for farm work.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Does not the minister think it would be easier for these people from the old country to learn how to drive horses here than it would be for the Doukhobors to learn to keep on their clothing in society?

Mr. FORKE: The gospel of socialism had not then taken hold, and there is another thing which perhaps is not so noticeable to any person who has not closely watched the progress of events in Great Britain; the criticism of Canadian rural life was not so strong then as it is to-day. Some sections of the press in Great Britain are very friendly to Canada but are utterly opposed to emigration; they believe that matters can be righted, social conditions made better and England made a green and pleasant land for all who dwell therein. That is a very prevalent idea in Great Britain to-day, which makes emigration from that country very much more difficult.

I see my time is almost up, but I would like to say a few words with regard to the harvesting movement. When I was returning from Great Britain in 1927 I received a marconigram from the British government while on board ship asking if I would permit 5,000 harvesters to come to Canada. That was at the end of July; August and harvest time were almost upon us and I could not agree to bringing that number of people to Canada late in the year, having them take a chance on getting work and being able to live through the winter on the money they made. I refused to agree to that suggestion at that time, and some time ago I saw that a Liberal member of the British House of Commons cited my refusal as another proof that Canada was opposed to British emigration. However, I want to say that no one connected with the immigration department of Great Britain made any such statement; no minister of the crown said anything of the kind, but a private member of the British House of Commons made that statement.

This year they requested permission to send 20,000 men to Canada. I immediately replied that the largest number we could think of was just one-half that, or 10,000 men. We had made an exhaustive inquiry, assisted by the Labour department and in consultation with the provincial governments, as to the number of harvesters who would be required in western Canada, and every estimate we had then was that help would be very scarce, that we needed more men than we could get and that it would be perfectly all right to bring a certain number of these harvesters from Great Britain to Canada. The arrangements were very stringent; the British government undertook the whole responsibility for the movement. They undertook to see that these people would be of a certain age, that they would be people accustomed to hard work, that if they were unable to take care of themselves after reaching Canada they would be provided for and that they would be taken back home if they were unable to locate here permanently and had not earned sufficient money to pay their return passage.

Everyone knows the circumstances of that experiment, but I want to say that the British government lived up to their obligations in every respect and did everything they said they would do. I am not one of those who admit that this movement was a total failure; perhaps it was not as successful as it might have been. Some harvesters came here who were not what they should have been, and I have no doubt there was an occasional Shylock among the farmers who took advantage of some of the boys when they should not have done so. All these things are liable to happen in a movement of 8,000 people, but a very large number of these harvesters gave good service in western Canada. If you will pardon a personal reference, we had four boys from Plymouth on our own farm. They were not miners but dock labourers; they were a little awkward and stupid at the start, but perhaps if I had shouldered coal and carried it on board a ship I would have done much worse than they did. However, they did their work with a little help; they were very satisfactory and I can assure you that I was very glad to have their services. They were well worth the money they received, $4 a day for stooking and $5 for threshing. When they left they were kind enough to leave a letter in the house saying how well they were pleased with their treatment and that at least two of them were coming back to Canada after they had talked matters over with their young wives in England. I do not think that was an exceptional experience; I think the same thing occurred in many other instances. However, I do think this movement proved that any large bulk immigration into Canada without proper care with regard to placing the immigrants and providing employment would be a dangerous thing, and that it should not be duplicated unless every precaution is taken to have employment ready for the men when they come to Canada.

I would have liked to say a word about medical examinations, but my time is almost up so I will pass over that point; I think most of the trouble in that connection has disappeared. The United States has a quota and New Zealand has closed the door altogether; they are not taking any more immigrants at present. The door is open in Canada, but I do not expect any phenomenal increase of British immigrants. I want to say that now in order to discount what may happen in the future, and I do not think anyone who is fair in his criticisms can blame Canada if we are not getting a sufficient number of immigrants in comparison to those going to other countries.

There is another phase of the situation which I would like to point out to the house; I think I observed it in something or other connected with the League of Nations. It was pointed out that the population of Europe has increased by five per cent since 1914, notwithstanding the fact that 10,000,000 people died during the war. The birth rate in Great Britain and in northwestern Europe is falling—

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. The hon. gentleman's time is up.

Mr. A. M. EDWARDS (South Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, in rising to offer my contribution to the budget I quite realize that the subject matter of the debate does not permit of very much controversy. It is rather on the acts of omission that I desire to comment. The preceding speaker, the Minister of Immigration (Mr. Forke) naturally devoted the major portion of his time to affairs pertaining to his department. As I understood his remarks regarding immigration, they were entirely along the lines of immigration to the farm. Before I conclude I wish to show that there is at least one other avenue of approach which, if he would follow it up, would prove a solution of a part of this difficult question.

I wish to congratulate the Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb) for having brought down the budget at such an early period of the session. Ever since we have been hearing so much about the death knell of protection industry has been more or less unsettled each year until the budget was brought down. Fortunately there was not very much to worry about this year, for which we are deeply grateful.

We all appreciate what has been said in the previous speeches, and in the budget speech itself, regarding the prosperity of Canada. I am quite willing to admit this prosperity in a general way. It is true that there have been tremendous building programs in the large centres; the bank clearings, the railway reports and the reports of the insurance companies certainly indicate progress along those lines, but I am not so sure that this condition applies to the ordinary man, the man who is not connected with some of these large institutions. Speeches have been made in this house during the present session by the agriculturists of western Canada and the fruitgrowers of British Columbia, and it would seem that their condition is not particularly good. I remember a large delegation which came to interview the government last year. They met in the railway committee room to present their case. They were the fruit and vegetable growers from coast to coast, and not even the wildest stretch of imagination could place a political aspect upon that deputation. They were here in an earnest effort to try to improve their situation. They asked for some relief during certain seasons of the year, that a seasonal protection should be afforded for one month or possibly six weeks during the time they were marketing their products. During the balance of the year, the ten or eleven months remaining, they were perfectly willing that the products from the United States should come in free of duty. They certainly did not receive very much encouragement at that meeting. I remember talking to one or two of those men who came from southwestern Ontario, in the county of Essex. One man told me that he specialized in the growing of cabbages. He told how the farmers in his district would club together and ship a car or cars up to North Bay to be distributed in that part of the country by a commisison broker. But they also had a home market in the peninsula, the city of Windsor being the principal city market. He told how he had loaded his truck with cabbages and had peddled them for two days in the city of Windsor offering them at 75 cents per bushel, but had very few takers. He went back to his farm and wired the commission broker in North Bay, offering the cabbages at 75 cents per bushel f.o.b. North Bay. The reply came back that the price was too high, that the broker could purchase all he wanted on the Buffalo market at about half the price. That is the position of these growers, and I hope this government will see fit to take steps before the present session closes to protect this ever-growing and very valuable industry.

The member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie) has covered the situation with regard to the Canadian national railways extremely well. He gave a very able description of the way in which the railways had been combined into one unit. He told us of the situation which had existed before the amalgamation took place, and of the opposition of the present government, who were the opposition at that time. I cannot help but think of the posters which appeared on the bill-boards in western Ontario during the 1926 elections. These bill-boards were placarded with the appeal: "Vote for Mackenzie King and save the Canadian National Railways."

The reduction of one per cent in the sales tax is very welcome, but it does not go far enough. This side of the house is on record as being in favour of abolishing the sales tax on clothing and shoes. Those articles are necessary for every family, and it is practically the heaviest tax imposed on them. They are not particularly interested in the income tax, in the three per cent reduction on telegrams and cablegrams, the one per cent reduction on railway tickets or the ten per cent reduction on parlour car and sleeping car tickets. Such reductions apply to only a very small portion of our population, and ninety-five per cent of the people will never be benefited by them.

In my contribution to the budget debate of last year I devoted my time almost entirely to the condition of the textile industry of this country, particularly those branches relating to woollen woven and worsted cloth. If I may be permitted to follow my notes rather closely, I would like to put on Hansard the present situation of this industry. Previous to the tariff revisions in the 1928 budget there was a duty of 12½ per cent on worsted and woollen yarns, 40's and finer, coming into this country under the British preference, the rate on importations from other countries being somewhat higher. I endeavoured to point out at that time what the inevitable result would be of removing this tariff. There would first be the demoralizing effect the change would have on the woollen and worsted cloth industry of this country by the importation of the finished yarns from England. This would take from Canadian workmen the labour required to manufacture the raw wool into yarn and transfer it to the workmen overseas. The scouring and cleaning of the wool, carding it and spinning it into yarns is the heaviest part of the textile industry. This work requires mostly male labour, and the male worker is generally the head of a family. I will prove in a moment how that business, as pertains particularly to worsted cloths, has been wiped out, and I will show how serious this is for the families dependent upon this industry. Not only does it transfer the work to workmen overseas, but it means the scrapping of huge quantities of expensive machinery. I pointed this out in my budget speech last year, as some of the members will remember. If they do not recollect the statement, they will find it on pages 732, 733 and 734 of volume 1 of Hansard, 1928, respecting a comparison of wages as between Yorkshire and Canada; the eight-hour day; the minimum wage law; the Workmen's Compensation Act; safety devices of various kinds which we in this country consider fair and right but which do not obtain in the factories overseas; all adding to the burden of overhead which must be computed in arriving at the cost of production. Living conditions in this country are undoubtedly better, and to this I may add that,, in my opinion, wages in this industry in this country are at the present time much lower than they should be to maintain a good standard of living and at the same time enable the parents to give their children the necessary qualifications to put them in a position to compete in after life on even terms with other children more favourably situated. But under the present unsatisfactory conditions which obtain in this country, not only is it impossible to increase wages, but since 1926 the wages have actually been reduced 10 per cent.

I am going to follow up my statements made in 1928 with facts and figures secured from reliable sources which will show that the statements which I made were correct and, further, that conditions in the woollen and worsted cloth industries are worse than I had anticipated. In the constituency of South Waterloo, which I have the honour to represent in this house, there is one large mill devoted entirely to the woollen woven cloth industry. This plant employs 225 or 230 hands, and I wish at this point to distinguish between the woollen woven industry and the worsted industry, because they are quite different. In the constituency of South Waterloo we have what might properly be termed a balanced community. We have a splendid farming district; we have that district farmed by people who are not only frugal and industrious but really first class citizens and the urban centres are highly industralized. In other words, in this particular part of Ontario, not only in the constituency which I represent but in the constituencies which are contiguous to it, we have what I call a balanced community. In other words, 95 per cent of the products of the farm in that district are consumed by the people living there. This, to my mind, is the real essence of the policy of the Conservative party.

I have selected the textile industry for the reason that it has been so unfairly dealt with by the government, notwithstanding the fact that the case of the woollen and worsted cloth mills was fully and clearly placed before the Tariff Advisory Board, a thorough inspection of the plants made by the board's inspectors, and an admission made by them to the effect that some relief should be given. The inspectors I may say, had free access to the books of the company. The woollen woven cloth mill of which I spoke has not been benefited one bit by the removal of the 12½ per cent duty on yarn, and I will give the house the reason. Manufacturers of woollen cloths using mule-spun yarns have been unable to procure from England mule-spun yarns for their product. There is, in fact, no regular trade in England supplying mule-spun yarns for export, and although a number of sample lots of such woollen yarns have been imported into Canada since these yarns were made free of duty from Great Britain, the Canadian manufacturers, for the reasons before stated, have found it practically impossible to purchase yarns from that source. If it were possible for the manufacturers of woollen cloths in Canada to import these yarns satisfactorily, this would mean only the closing down of the spinning departments of Canada, placing the capital invested in this department in the discard and putting the employees, most of whom are heads of families, out of work. The portion of overhead charges in the Canadian mills which has been borne by the spinning sections of the woollen mills, would be placed as an added burden upon the weaving industry, of the carding and weaving departments of our mills, were the spinning departments closed down and the yarns imported from abroad. The imports of woollen cloths for the ten months ending December last amounted to 14,527,000 yards. or half a million yards more than in the same period of 1927. These figures are from the Bradford Board of Trade and they do not include large inmportations from the continent. It does not require much training in finance to enable one to see that free yarn from Great Britain for the Canadian woollen industry is a proven failure, and I do not think there is any doubt that the Minister of Finance has ample evidence that this expedient of bringing relief to a crippled industry has not brought about the desired result. I am fully convinced, and I believe hon. members of the house are aware, that every possible effort has been exerted by the woollen cloth industry of Canada to meet the competition from Great Britain and the continent. Our Canadian mills are equipped with the very latest machinery and they have availed themselves of every means of reducing costs of manufacturing, but it has been found impossible, by importing the mule-spun yarns, further to reduce the costs of these goods. One of the arguments advanced for removing the duty from these yarns was that the manufacturers of woollen woven goods would be able to bring into this country the yarns to make their product at a less price and that they would consequently be able to reduce the cost.

I now wish to turn to the worsted cloth manufacturing industry in Canada, and I will take as an example a mill in my constituency employing from 800 to 900 people. One can understand that in a town of perhaps 3,000 people an industry employing 800 or 900 hands is a very valuable industry and anything that is done to disturb that industry in any way is a serious matter for the people of that community. I am fully convinced that the means that have been taken to assist this industry have been futile. It is true that worsted yarns can be imported at slightly lower prices than such yarns would cost if made in the mills of Canada. That the Canadian worsted cloth manufacturers are taking advantage of these imported yarns is evidenced by the fact that the importation of such yarns has increased in the period since the budget of 1928, but along with these increases in the importation of worsted weaving yarns, what do we find? Do we find that worsted cloths are coming into this country in less quantity? No. We find that Canada is still being deluged with manufactured worsted goods from Great Britain and the continent, and I do not believe the minister expects at this moment to find the imports of such woven worsteds for the fiscal year ending March 31 will show any reduction from the tremendous imports of these goods in former years. Therefore, even the importation of this yarn free of duty supposed to assist the industry and the manufacturers of worsted cloth, has been a failure.

I will give the figures in a few minutes regarding the importation of all these goods into Canada. Taking the Bradford Board of Trade official figures on exports for the ten months following the budget of 1928, it is shown that 7,416,000 yards of worsteds were exported from Great Britain to Canada as against 6,707,000 yards exported to Canada for the same period of 1927. It is still more alarming to find that in the last six months of 1928 there were 5,020,000 yards of worsted cloths imported into Canada from Great Britain as against 3,904,000 yards in the same six months of 1927, thus clearly indicating that the situation is becoming worse instead of better. When one realizes that the importation of this huge quantity of worsted cloth is more than sufficient to make a suit of clothes for every adult male in Canada, one gets some idea of what is left for the mills and the working people of this country who are employed in that line. The fact of the matter is that in Canada to-day, as a result of many changes made in recent years in the woollen tariff rates, we have arrived at the point where what should be a vast industry in Canada is being sacrificed to competition from other lands, and thousands of industrial workers who should be employed in Canada at Canadian rates of wages are not employed in our country at all. These people are employed in countries overseas, and many of them on the continent, at rates of wages quite incomparable with what these people would be paid if they were living in Canada.

I want to give the house some comparative figures showing the tremendous quantity of worsted and serges coming into this country during the calendar years of 1927 and 1928. This report is from the Bureau of Statistics, so I presume it is accurate. Imports of worsteds and serges, including coatings, are as follows:

Calendar Year	Total Imports
	$13,721,069

Another point I wish to emphasize in this regard is the imports of Australian wool.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Raw wool.

Mr. EDWARDS (Waterloo): Yes. This large worsted mill that I spoke of employing 800 or 900 people, brought into this country every year prior to 1928 from 1,200 to 1,500 or 1,600 bales of Australian wool. These bales weighed 300 pounds each. That wool was brought into this country, mixed with a percentage of Canadian wool, scoured and spun into yarn, and it went on through the process of being made into worsted cloth. This mill in 1928 did not purchase one pound of Australian wool. They had some wool left over, it is true, sufficient for the first two or three months, but after that they bought all their worsted yarns from Yorkshire. The value of the wool imported from Australia for the years ended March 31, 1926, 1927 and 1928—and by the way, this is also a return—is as follows:

1926..	$384,533

Hon. members can see that the amount is divided in half. The quantity in pounds of wool imported from Australia for the years ended March 31, 1926, 1927 and 1928 is as follows:

	Pounds
1926..	728,030

In other words, almost exactly one-half the quantity of Australian wool was brought into this country in 1928 as compared with what was imported in 1927.

Mr. ADSHEAD: It comes in free of duty, does it not?

Mr. EDWARDS (Waterloo): Yes. the result of all this has been to wipe out the spinning industry in worsted mills. About a week ago I had the privilege of spending a day or two in the large mill that I was speaking of, and the spinning department with hundreds of thousands of dollars' worth of machinery was standing idle. By comparing the records of working hours I found that whereas before the tariff was touched on the textile industry, this particular mill a few years ago was operating not only full time but overtime, to-day the percentage of idle hours in the same mill runs from 20 to 40 per cent per week. These figures which I am giving are incontrovertible; they are absolutely correct, and hon. members can see the harm that has been done to this particular industry.

Mr. ADSHEAD: On account of the British preference?

Mr. EDWARDS (Waterloo): On account of the removal of the 12½ per cent on the woollen yarn, and the British preference.

This means that large quantities of Canadian wool formerly used to mix with Australian wool were not used, and the producer of this wool in Canada suffered accordingly. Hundreds of thousands of dollars worth of spinning machinery is standing idle and the employees, mostly men in this department. have been forced to secure work elsewhere. About a week ago I investigated the conditions in the mill, and found this to be absolutely correct.

Now, Mr. Speaker, what is the other side of the picture? Are the people of Canada to-day purchasing their clothes any cheaper? Has there been any reduction in the price of clothing? Are the members in this chamber to-day buying their suits fifty cents cheaper than they were before this tariff was mutilated in this way? I think not. The purchaser of the cloth may possibly get some concession, I do not know; but everyone knows that not very much consideration is given to the cost of the cloth in the price of a suit of clothes, when you take into consideration, the amount of cloth going into a fifty or sixty dollar suit. It does not make very much difference in the price of the suit if you take fifty or sixty cents off the yarn that goes into the making of it.

I think I am justified, Mr. Speaker, in view of the incontrovertible statements which I have made, in requesting the government to institute a commission of inquiry to investigate the whole question of wool production and fabrication of woollen goods in the Dominion of Canada.

The Minister of Immigration discussed the immigration problem, and I said that I might be able to suggest some avenues by which it would be possible to bring more people into Canada. In view of the great immigration problem facing this country, can anyone doubt that British working people, many of them experienced in the textile trades of England, Scotland and Ireland—now unemployed—would add greatly to the prosperity of Canada if they were permitted to come to Canada to be steadily employed in the industry for which their experience has fitted them?

An hon. MEMBER: Besides employing our own people.

Mr. EDWARDS (Waterloo): Yes. There is one other matter which I wish to take up and that is the representations that were made before the tariff advisory board by the textile people last year. That application was bitterly contested by manufacturers of those lines in England. They appeared before that board protesting against any change in the proposal to reimpose the 12½ per cent duty. What do we find to-day? The very same gentleman who appeared before our tariff board protesting against assistance to the industries of this country are to-day using exactly the same arguments before the British board of inquiry with regard to products coming into Great Britain from central Europe. They argue that on account of the lower standard of living conditions the wage costs on the continent are only 77 per cent of those paid in the British mills, and the British application asks for a safeguarding duty which will compensate for this differential.

It was shown before our tariff board that British wages are only about 66 per cent of those being paid in Canadian mills. So that the relative protective duties required against British and continental competition in this market on wage costs alone are shown to be necessarily much higher than those at present in force.

The British safeguarding application is being backed by the majority of the woollen and worsted manufacturing concerns in the Bradford and Huddersfield districts. The opposition comes principally from the woollen and worsted cloth merchants, together with a few manufacturing establishments particularly concerned in this market, whose fear is that the granting of the British application will result in an increase of the Canadian import duties.

The opponents of the British application have attempted to belittle the efficiency of the British mills, just in the same way as those from Great Britain who appeared before our tariff board endeavoured to belittle the Canadian manufacturers of these lines of goods, saying their mills were inefficiently equipped and their machinery not up-to-date. It is the same old story of not being able to produce cheaply enough. The argument all gets back to the matter of wages and the cost of living in lowering the cost of production. Goodness knows we do not want a lowering of wages in any industry in this country; we would rather see them increased.

Boiled down, it simply means that so far as that application is concerned, if the people in Canada making worsteds and woollen cloth cannot successfully compete with the manufacturers in Yorkshire, and if the manufacturers in Yorkshire cannot compete successfully with the manufacturers in Czechoslovakia or some other of the mid-European countries, before long it will not make any difference whether we have the British preference or not, the people of this country will be buying their goods direct from the manufacturers in central Europe. The only encouragement required to transfer these unemployed citizens of the old land to employment in Canada is the encouragement which is possible from an intelligently constructed tariff on woollen textiles, which would enable woollen manufacturing in Canada to regain its place among the thrifty and prosperous industrial structures of the Dominion.

With the permission of the house I will place on Hansard the information which I have referred to, and which is taken from the Manual of the Textile Industry of Canada:

Mr. J. L. ILSLEY (Hants-Kings): Mr. Speaker, I desire to address the house for a short time on some features of the financial statement presented to the house by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb), and then to deal with a few matters of particular interest to the province of Nova Scotia from which I come.

The outstanding feature of the budget, it seems to me, is the announcement that for the current fiscal year Canada will have a revenue of $450,000,000. There are three extraordinary features about that announcement: First, the enormous size of the revenue; second, the comparatively small population from which it is raised; third, the announcement comes after several years of drastic tax reductions. In periods of prosperity revenue is said to be buoyant, and I think it may well be said that Canada's revenues are buoyant at the present time; and this is the best evidence of the real fundamental prosperity of the country.

The existence of such large revenues raises an important question: What should the policy of the government be with respect to expenditures? Undoubtedly a great many people would welcome a policy of freer expenditures. In Halifax we have a paper which at the present time is advocating freer expenditures on the part of the government. This paper says:

> Let posterity carry some of the burden assumed by this generation in the name of posterity.

In other words, there is opposition to these huge surpluses being applied to the reduction of the national debt. But it appears to me that if any hon. member had a business which was heavily mortgaged, and consequently his interest charges were burdensome, he would in times of prosperity attempt to cut down his mortgage and interest charges. Therefore in my view the policy of the Minister of Finance in budgetting for large surpluses, and applying those surpluses to the reduction of the national debt in these periods of prosperity, is the proper policy for the national welfare. And we have the welcome announcement that the bonds amounting to $60,000,000, which will fall due in August 1929, will be retired out of surplus revenues, thus reducing the annual interest charge by $3,300,000.

There is a second feature of the budget which I think calls for passing notice. I refer to the substantial reduction of the sales tax. Speaking for myself, and I think for my constituents, I am glad that the sales tax is being reduced instead of the income tax. Some newspapers give the impression that the only opposition to any reduction in the income tax comes from western Canada. Well, I come from the east, and I think that I am reflecting the opinions of my constituents when I say that it is better to get rid of the sales tax before we begin to reduce the income tax any further. I do not blame the government for not wiping out the sales tax at once. I have listened to the arguments of the opposition during the last two sessions urging that the sales tax should be eliminated entirely; but the answer given by the Minister of Finance, that when great reductions in this tax take place there is a shrinkage in the value of retail stocks, which may very possibly give rise to claims against the government for compensation, appears to me to be a convincing one. The sales tax should be reduced by degrees and eventually eliminated, and that is the policy which the government of the day is following.

There is a third feature of the budget to which I should like to refer, and that is the almost entire absence of any change either upward or downward in the tariff. There are a few tariff reductions and, I believe, one tariff increase, to meet a particular situation. There will be in the country, of course, some disappointment; many persons who would like to have the tariff increased, as for instance the hon. gentleman who has just preceded me, and some of the members from other constituencies in Nova Scotia will be disappointed because there are no tariff increases. On the other hand there are some members of the house who are disappointed because there have not been more drastic tariff reductions. But we should always bear in mind the great difficulties which any government of Canada has to face in adjusting the tariff so as to meet conditions in all parts of the Dominion. The Dominion of Canada is of such vast extent, and has so many industries, that the interests of one industry in one part of the country are very likely to conflict with the interests of another industry in another part; and what would benefit one, so far as tariff changes are concerned, would injure another. And not only is that true, but very often the interests of one industry in one part of the Dominion are not identical with the interests of the same industry in another part of the Dominion. One of the most interesting examples of that is the recent instance of two applications before the Advisory Board on Tariff and Taxation, one by the coal operators of British Columbia, asking for the abolition of all duties on coal, and another by the coal operators of Nova Scotia asking that certain drawbacks be eliminated, which would be in effect an increase or rather a restoration of duties on coal. That instance of conflict of interest between different branches of the coal industry itself shows very clearly the great difficulty which the government of Canada has in framing a satisfactory tariff policy. And what is true of the coal industry is to a certain extent also true of the fruit industry.

I of course come from a fruit growing constituency, and therefore I have listened with more than ordinary interest to the references which have been made by hon. gentlemen opposite to the needs and requirements of the fruit-growing industry. A great many members on the Conservative side of the house have urged that the fruit industry in Canada is not adequately protected at the present time, and that the course of the government is quite clear; they suggest that the government should give additional protection to the fruit industry. Now, because I know something about the fruit industry I should like to discuss that matter from the standpoint, first, of Canada as a whole, and then from the standpoint of the province of Nova Scotia. One would perhaps think, after listening to the discussions in the house, that the fruit industry existed only in one part of Canada, or perhaps in two sections of the country, British Columbia and Ontario. But I would remind hon. members that there are three fruit-growing areas in Canada, one in British Columbia, one in Ontario, and one in Nova Scotia. And in a normal year the fruit area of Nova Scotia produces more fruit than does either of the other areas.

An hon. MEMBER: Oh no.

Mr. ILSLEY: Well, I have the figures; I am referring to a normal year. I am not speaking of the last two or three years, because conditions, climatic and otherwise, have been abnormal; they have been adverse. In a normal year, however, the production in Nova Scotia is greater than it is in Ontario or British Columbia. That was true in 1923 and in 1924, and I believe it was also true in 1925, although I am not sure about that. But when we come to normal years we find that this is the fact. In many respects the fruit industry of Nova Scotia is based on a more solid foundation than is the fruit industry in other parts of Canada, and this for two reasons: one is the cheapness of production of fruit in Nova Scotia, and the other the cheapness of distribution. So far as cheapness of production is concerned, it requires only a moment's consideration to see that where we need no irrigation, where the trees are long lived, where labour is cheap, where the cost of packages is fairly low, production costs are low. And so far as the cost of distribution goes, we are nearer the coast. Our transportation charges to the British market and to the markets of continental Europe, which we are rapidly penetrating, are much lower than are the transportation charges which our competitors have to meet. Similarly, the transportation cost to the great city market of Canada, Montreal, is much less than the transportation cost to the growers in British Columbia. For these reasons, the fruit industry of Nova Scotia rests, as I say, on a solid foundation, and my prediction is that it is on the eve of a great period of expansion and prosperity.

During the last year we have had remarkable results upon the British market and in continental markets. Our barrel fruit has outsold and brought higher returns than the boxed fruit from other parts of Canada. I am entitled therefore to take the time of the house for a few minutes discussing the tariff requirements of the fruit industry of Nova Scotia. There is a great difference in the marketing problems of the fruit growers in British Columbia, in Ontario and in Nova Scotia respectively. I have here a few figures showing the distribution of the British Columbia fruit crop during the last five years. The 1923-24 fruit season I will call 1923, the same applying to the succeeding seasons. The following is the table for British Columbia:

1924	18.97
1925	22.20

In other words, during that period of five years 19.14 per cent of the commercial fruit crop of British Columbia was marketed outside Canada. The figures for Ontario are these:

1924	10.46
1925	37.19

These figures give an average of 14.77 per cent of the fruit of Ontario which was marketed outside Canada in that period. In other words, less than 20 per cent of the British Columbia crop is exported, and less than 15 per cent of the Ontario crop. But when we come to Nova Scotia we find the following figures:

1924	88.2
1925	87.1

The average in this case for the last five years is 83.66 per cent.

Mr. STEVENS: Do they produce any peaches or stone fruit in Nova Scotia similar to the fruit produced in British Columbia and in the Niagara district?

Mr. ILSLEY: I am glad the hon. gentleman has asked that question. I am speaking purely of apples. My figures regarding distribution and marketing relate only to this fruit.

Mr. STEVENS: When the hon. member says that less than 20 per cent of the fruit of British Columbia was exported—or whatever the figure is—does that figure apply to apples alone?

Mr. ILSLEY: Yes, just apples. I am glad indeed to have had an opportunity of clearing up that point. In other words, the province of Nova Scotia is an exporting province. There are those who say that we are turning more to the Canadian market than formerly, and that may possibly be so. But there was the same trend seven years ago, and we came back two or three years later to the foreign markets with a greater proportion than ever. I think it can be safely said that the problems of the fruit growers of Nova Scotia with regard to tariff requirements are very similar to the problems of the wheat growers of the west because both are essentially export industries.

What are these tariff requirements of which I speak? Generally speaking, they are that the tariff should seek a low level rather than a high level. Of course, like everyone else I suppose an individual fruit grower would like a tariff as high as possible on what he sells and a tariff as low as possible on what he buys, but fruit growers as well as others must be reasonable. I think if the fruit growers of Nova Scotia had to choose between a generally high tariff level and a generally low tariff level they would unhesitatingly choose the lower level. And why would they do so? To begin with, it reduces the cost of production. I have here a table showing the extent to which the cost of very many articles used by the fruit growers of Nova Scotia has been reduced during the last seven years. The figures I am about to give are the general tariff rates in 1921 and 1928 respectively. The table does not give the intermediate or British preferential tariffs, because these tariffs do not apply to these commodities:

	1921 Per cent	1928 Per cent
Harrows, manure spreaders	15	7½
Ploughs	17½	10
Other agricultural implements	20	10
Farm wagons	20	10
Fertilizers	10	free
Non-alcoholic liquid preparations for disinfecting, dipping or spraying	25	free
Dry compounds for disinfecting, dipping or spraying	25	free
Dry chemicals for disinfecting, dipping or spraying	17½	free
Spraying machines, fruit or vegetable grading machines, pruning hooks, pruning shears	20	10
Automobile chassis for passenger automobiles valued at retail at not more than $1,200	35	20

I put in that last item because a great many fruit growers in Nova Scotia buy the chassis of a cheap car and convert it into a truck for the transportation of the fruit. In addition, motor trucks for carrying goods entered under a duty of 35 per cent in 1921, while to-day that duty is 20 per cent. In other words, on a long list of articles which the fruit growers must have, the duties have been substantially reduced and that has effected a great saving, not only to the fruit growers of my district but to the fruit growers of the other parts of Canada as well.

The hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie) presented the argument that a reduction in the duty did not lower the price. I was astonished to hear that argument especially in regard to agricultural implements, and I secured statistics from the bureau showing that the prices in 1924 were reduced almost to the extent of the reduction in the duty which took place in that year. I have figures covering a long list of agricultural implements and comparing the prices of January, 1924, with the prices after the reduction in the duty, showing that the reduction actually was reflected in the price of the commodity on which the duty was reduced.

Mr. LADNER: Does the list give to-day's prices?

Mr. ILSLEY: Yes; I can show it to my hon. friend. I think the hon. member for South Wellington started with 1921 instead of with 1924; the reduction took place in 1924 and that was the time with which he should have started. I think that was the error he made when he drew the conclusion that the farmers were gold-bricked by the reduction of duties in 1924, because undoubtedly there was a reduction in prices. Last year the reduction in the duty on fungicides and insecticides made a difference in production costs in the Annapolis valley of a very large sum. I hold in my hand an advertisement clipped from one of the rural newspapers of my constituency, dated April 19, 1928, which reads as follows:

> Owing to the duty being taken off insecticides, we are pleased to advise that we are able to make a big reduction in the price of dusting materials and will be able to sell our sulphur lead mixtures—that is, 90-10 and 85-15—nearly $1 per bag under last year's price.

Then follows some material not relevant to my argument, over the signature of the Niagara Dust Company. That reduction was applied all along the line as the result of a very considerable reduction last year in the duties on fungicides and insecticides. That has to do with the first reason why the fruit growers of Nova Scotia are benefited by a low tariff rather than by a high tariff policy; their cost of production is less and they are thereby enabled to compete in the British and continental markets on more even terms with their competitors in New York state and Virginia.

The second reason is that a low tariff policy undoubtedly has some favourable effect on ocean freight rates. The matter of ocean freight rates is very vital to persons who use the high seas as their channel of commerce, and no subject causes more discussion or arouses more interest in my constituency. This is because any reduction in ocean freight rates is to the benefit of the shipper; any increase in freight rates comes out of the pockets of the shipper, and therefore he is very much interested in anything which influences these freight rates. If we adopt a policy in this country of shutting out imports from Europe and Great Britain and thereby lessening the volume of west-bound cargoes, the freight charges on east-bound cargoes are necessarily affected somewhat. In order to give some authority for that statement I refer to the special committee appointed in 1925 to consider the Petersen proposals. Speaking of ocean rates on the north Atlantic, that committee said:

> The fact that the west-bound traffic offers cargoes on the whole of less than 25 per cent has, of course, a tendency to raise east-bound rates.

The conclusion we are entitled to draw is that a large volume of imports coming into Canada from Great Britain has a beneficial effect upon our freight charges, and that if we shut out those imports from Great Britain or whittle away the British preference as has been advocated by hon. gentlemen opposite, we indirectly raise the freight rates on our shipments to England.

Then there is a third reason why the fruit growers of Nova Scotia are interested in a low tariff policy, and that is because a low tariff policy strengthens the purchasing power of our customers. We know from experience that when there is a strike of any size in the British Isles or any serious disturbance of business conditions there it has an effect on the price of apples. Nothing could be better calculated permanently to disturb conditions in the British Isles than a prohibitive tariff policy on the part of Canada, a policy which would shut out imports from Great Britain, and for that reason I say we should view this matter in its broad aspects and not get our minds fixed upon one little part of it such as a dumping duty to be applied for a month or so or something of that kind. We should view the whole question in a broad way and we should favour a policy which will keep up the purchasing power of our customers in Great Britain.

When the member for South Waterloo (Mr. Edwards) was speaking I was wondering what the effect of his policy would be if carried to its ultimate conclusion. Does he seriously think that we can continue to sell hundreds of millions of dollars worth of our products to the British Isles and decline to take anything in return; does he think that can be done? My submission is that the British preference has been of great benefit to eastern Canada so far as our exporting industries are concerned, and we have a number of very important industries of that type.

While I am on this subject of the British preference I would like to refer to other effects which it has had upon the industrial life of the province of Nova Scotia. During recent years considerable time has been taken up in talking about the Duncan report and the recommendations contained therein. It seems to me that we have overlooked, during our political discussions, the policy which has had such a beneficial effect upon the commercial life of eastern Canada. We have heard a great many lamentations in this house from certain members for the maritime provinces, but there are two members from whom we do not hear, especially at this session; the two members for Halifax. Why? Because the city of Halifax is enjoying a period of prosperity and expansion; enjoying a boom, if you like, which is the equal of any it has ever enjoyed in the past. I think one of the chief causes for this condition was the last budget of the Right Hon. Mr. Fielding, delivered in 1923. In that budget it was provided that goods entitled to the British preference would receive a ten per cent discount on the duty otherwise payable if they entered Canada direct from the British port instead of going through a foreign port and being transhipped. I have obtained some figures from the Department of Trade and Commerce which, to my mind, are somewhat surprising. The following list gives the tonnage of inward and outward bound vessels from the port of Halifax:

	Registered Tonnage
Year	Incoming	Outgoing
1921..	1,359,769	1,620,168
1922..	1,456,991	1,501,762
1923..	1,604,497	1,518,569
1924..	2,318,499	2,146,342
1925..	3,052,078	3,187,189
1926..	3,353,257	3,495,196
1928..	3,439,539	3,438,154

The Postmaster General (Mr. Veniot) suggests to me that the increase in registered tonnage at St. John was even greater than the increase shown by the above figures. It seems to me that this shows very clearly the beneficial effect of that last budget of Mr. Fielding, and the subsequent budget of April, 1927, which confined the benefits of the British preference to goods which came through Canadian ports.

I have cited these facts to show what the interests of Canada demand in the way of a tariff policy. I can only say that a reversal of the policy of the government, which the Minister of Finance has correctly stated to be a low tariff one, would in my opinion, and I think in the opinion of my constituents, have a prejudicial and injurious effect upon the industries in that part of Nova Scotia which I have the honour to represent. I believe it would also apply to the industries throughout the whole of the province, and I imagine the hon. gentlemen who represent the city of Halifax will be disposed to agree with my contention, at least I hope they will.

Before I close I would like to refer to one event of some importance in the political history of the year, the visit of the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) to the province of Nova Scotia. I had the pleasure of attending a meeting which he addressed in the university town of Wolfville, and I listened to his arguments with regard to the exportation of raw materials from Canada. He spoke at considerable length about copper, but we did not know very much about that commodity because we have none in our part of the province. He discussed asbestos, but that also did not interest us very much. But while he was talking about copper and asbestos there were many in the audience, I feel sure there were many among his supporters on the platform, who were thinking about another product, and that product was gypsum. At that time the provincial government of Nova Scotia and the federal government of Canada were putting forth every effort to prevent our crude gypsum from being excluded from the New England and the New York markets of the United States. In that audience were a great many people who realized that if our crude gypsum were so excluded hundreds of men would be thrown out of employment and thousands of persons would be prejudicially affected. I thank the leader of the opposition for his visit to my constituency because he has created an impression there —perhaps he will correct it if it is a wrong impression—that the policy of the Conservative party is one which would throw out of employment hundreds and perhaps thousands of people in the province of Nova Scotia.

It may be said that my argument is one which leads me to support the subamendment which has been proposed by the member for Battle River (Mr. Spencer), but I can only say that the subamendment is in the nature of a motion proposing lack of confidence in the government and I feel that the record of the government has been very good, especially so far as tariff matters are concerned. The government has done as much as could reasonably be expected in view of the conflicting interests which we have in Canada. I, therefore, shall vote against the subamendment, and, of course, against the amendment proposed by the member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie).

At six o'clock the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

CHARTERED TRUST AND EXECUTOR COMPANY

The house in committee on Bill No. 64, respecting Chartered Trust and Executor Company—Mr. Lawson—Mr. Brown in the chair.

On section 1—increase of capital stock.

Mr. GARDINER: According to the order paper this bill is reported back from the committee as amended. I should like to know the nature of the amendment before we proceed further.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Brown): The bill itself does not show any amendment.

Mr. STEVENS: I do not think it was amended.

Mr. ROBB: The explanatory note reads:

The capital stock of the company shall be $1,000,000, divided into shares of $100 each.

The new clause increases the capital to $2,500,000.

Mr. STEVENS: As far as I understand, speaking from memory—I cannot speak positively—there was no amendment to the bill. A mistake must have been made in the order paper.

Mr. ROBB: We might let the bill pass through committee and stand for third reading.

Mr. GARDINER: Mr. Chairman, what do you propose to do with the bill in view of the fact that, according to the order paper, it is reported from committee as amended?

Mr. ROBB: It has been suggested that it might pass the committee stage and be held for third reading until the promoter is present.

Mr. STEVENS: According to the votes and proceedings of the thirteenth instant, number 25, Bill No. 64 was reported without amendment, so that the objection to it, based upon the order paper, would be removed by the report in the votes and proceedings.

Section agreed to.

SUN LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY OF CANADA

The house in committee on Bill No. 16, respecting the Sun Life Assurance Company of Canada—Sir Eugene Fiset—Mr. Johnston in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN: The preamble has been amended. The new preamble will read:

Whereas the Sun Life Assurance Company of Canada, hereinafter called the company, has by its petition prayed that it be enacted as hereinafter set forth, and it is expedient to grant the prayer of the said petition: Therefore His Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate and House of Commons of Canada, enacts as follows.

Then sections 1, 2 and 3 have been struck out.

On section 4—Closing books to stock transfers.

The CHAIRMAN: Section 4 has been amended by adding in the first line after the word "directors" the words "of the company." That is the only amendment to the section.

Section agreed to.

On section 5—Meetings of board of directors.

The CHAIRMAN: In section 5 the word "companies" has been substituted for the word "said" in the first line. Does section 5 carry?

Section agreed to.

Sections 6 and 7 agreed to.

On section 8—Investments authorized.

Mr. SMOKE: Those sections should be renumbered.

The CHAIRMAN: They will be renumbered by the law clerk.

Section agreed to.

On the preamble.

Mr. SPENCER: Mr. Chairman, I just want to draw the attention of the house to the fact that this bill has been before the House of Commons for three years. This is its third year. It has been a very contentious one, and each time it has come up in the house it has been sent to the committee on banking and commerce. It has met with more and more opposition each time, and this year, owing to strenuous opposition in the committee, the promoters of the bill decided to withdraw the most contentious clause of all, that is, the clause with regard to increasing its capital by $2,000,000.

Mr. LADNER: Clarification.

Mr. SPENCER: The hon. member says clarification, but the fact is that the most objectionable part of this bill has been dropped. I simply want to draw the attention of the house to this fact, because in past years some hon. members felt that it was unnecessary to offer any opposition to this bill. The fact that to-day the most objectionable clause has been withdrawn, I think fully justifies the action taken by some hon. members in fighting the bill in past years.

Mr. HEPBURN: Those of us who have opposed this bill can justify our position now in letting it go through. At the same time, however, I want to pay tribute to those who have taken an active part in opposing the bill.

I would also like to pay tribute to the superintendent of insurance who has kept his department free from blame.

Motion agreed to and bill read the second time.

PATENT OF JEAN BAPTISTE HURTEAU

Mr. CASGRAIN (for Mr. Duff) moved the second reading of Bill No. 79, respecting a certain patent of Jean Baptiste Hurteau.

Motion agreed to and bill read the second time.

THE BUDGET

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON THE ANNUAL FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Hon. J. A. Robb (Minister of Finance) for Committee of Ways and Means, and the proposed amendment thereto of Mr. Guthrie, and the proposed amendment to the amendment of Mr. Spencer.

Mr. R. K. SMITH (Cumberland): Mr. Speaker, I listened with deep interest to the remarks of the hon. member for Hants-Kings (Mr. Ilsley) this afternoon, and I think I can sincerely say that his exposition and portrayal of the fruit possibilities and potentialities in the province of Nova Scotia was a very lucid and striking one. The hon. member is thoroughly conversant with that phase of industry in Nova Scotia, and his handling of the matter this afternoon is worthy of at least some little tribute. I do not know that I can compliment the hon. gentleman, however, on his handling of the financial affairs of the Dominion of Canada, not with respect to the figures but in connection with the statement he made that in an affluent condition a farmer who had his farm mortgaged would naturally want to set aside a certain amount each year when conditions were encouraging in order to retire the obligation as soon as possible. Well, Mr. Speaker, for some two years past we have contended from this side of the house that the government with their enormous surpluses should be setting aside a certain amount of money annually in order to retire the national debt within a specified number of years, be it thirty, forty or fifty. And while I am on the question of the overflowing treasury, may I say that if the Dominion government feels so affluent with the resources it has at its command and the revenue it is receiving from the people of the Dominion of Canada, it might well exercise some measure of generosity towards the provinces of the Dominion, some of which are struggling very hard in order to make both ends meet. I speak particularly in this connection with respect to the province of Nova Scotia.

Might I mention here that very recently there has been submitted to the government of the province of Nova Scotia an interim report by the commissioner who was appointed to investigate an old age pension scheme in that province, and he has estimated in this report, which is not at all complete, that the total cost to inaugurate such a scheme—of which, I might say, every person in the province of Nova Scotia is heartily in favour—will amount to $4,400,000, the portion to be borne by the province to be $2,200,000, plus the expense of the administration of the scheme. If there is an overflowing treasury, as has been intimated by many of the members on the other side of the house who have spoken, I think it might well be applied in this direction, so that some of our struggling provinces may be able to put into force some such social legislation as the old age pensions scheme.

The hon. member for Hants-Kings also stated that he was glad to see a reduction in the sales tax. Naturally we are all glad, but the reduction does not go far enough. We advocated last session, as we do now, that the sales tax should be abolished, that on such necessities as wearing apparel and boots and shoes particularly the burden of taxation should not be left on the backs of those least able to bear it. We maintain that the sales tax should be abolished, and there is every reason for the Minister of Finance to take this action. The hon. member expressed the opinion that it would not be wise to abolish the tax immediately for reasons he stated. If I remember correctly, Mr. Speaker, from this side of the house last session it was advocated that a specific date be fixed on which the sales tax would be abolished. Had our suggestion been adopted the shrinkage in retail values which the hon. gentleman put forward as an objection to the abolition of the sales tax would have been avoided, and the matter could have become effective without disrupting business.

He also said that there were a great many lamentations from this side of the house over the refusal of the government to implement in toto the recommendations of the Duncan report. I well remember, sir, when, in the session of 1926, those of us who came from Nova Scotia presented the needs of the maritime provinces, we were taunted from the other side of the house as being calamity-howlers and peddlers of gloom, and similar epithets were hurled at us; but the investigation conducted by the Duncan commission proved that we were not far astray in the claims we made at that time, and the final report fully justified the position we had taken. Therefore it does not seem to me to be appropriate now to accuse us of being calamity-howlers.

Now, with respect to the boasted prosperity of the country, as the hon. member stated, there is a certain amount of prosperity in the province of Nova Scotia. He mentioned Halifax particularly, and I do not think it can be denied that there has been an improvement of conditions at that port; there is a good deal of work going on there to-day. Nor can it be denied that there is some degree of prosperity in different portions of the Dominion, but, as he pointed out, that prosperity for the most part is confined to the larger centres. It is quite true that the banks are bursting with money, and it is also true that the coffers of the insurance companies are overflowing with funds. It may be true that the millionaires are becoming multi-millionaires; but the real test of prosperity is not that the rich are getting richer, and the poor poorer, but that the working people are better off. Unless our national prosperity can stand that test, I do not think it is appropriate for the government to become so insistent about the much heralded prosperity the Dominion is enjoying under their administration; and I submit that the contrary is the fact. Only the other evening the hon. member for West Hamilton (Mr. Bell) cited specific instances of poverty and suffering in his city. Indeed, this unfortunate condition prevails in isolated places all over Canada. I believe there is a measure of spotted prosperity, but it is not a genuine prosperity, for it does not touch the people who most need it, the ones we want to make prosperous—the poor people.

The hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie) in a brilliant speech teeming with facts severely castigated the government for its neglect to adopt means to properly safeguard and protect agricultural and industrial life in Canada, and moved an amendment regretting their failure. In supporting the amendment I do not propose to detain the house at any great length. I associate myself most heartily with the remarks of the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Cantley) protesting against the failure of the government to implement in full the recommendations of the Duncan report. In this protest he is not only speaking his own mind and the minds of the members from the maritime provinces on this side of the house, but he is expressing also the sentiment of all the people of those provinces. The government appointed the Duncan commission, in due course the commission made its report; the government presented it to this house, and it was received with absolute approval by all hon. members. That was about two years ago. Lest there be any misunderstanding with respect to where the government stand in this connection, I may recall to the minds of hon. members some of the statements made by certain ministers. First let me quote the Prime Minister. Speaking in this chamber on January 31, 1928, he said:

> The government at the present time has implemented a very considerable part of the report, and we intend to continue to carry out its recommendations.

That was well over a year ago. Now I come to the Postmaster General (Mr. Veniot). Speaking in St. John on January 18, 1928, he is reported in the Fredericton Daily Gleaner of the following day in these terms:

> The federal government's policy with regard to the Valley railway and the matter of a bounty to the Sydney steel plant would be divulged in a few weeks in a manner that would make every maritimer proud, according to a statement made on Wednesday night by Hon. Dr. P. J. Veniot, Postmaster General, at a banquet tendered in his honour by the Liberals of the constituency of St. John-Albert. All the other recommendations of the Duncan report had been implemented, he said.

On December 1, 1927, speaking at a banquet in the town of Amherst, tendered in his honour, the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Ralston) is reported in the Halifax Chronicle next day as follows:

> Mr. Ralston told of the long cabinet meetings when the Duncan report was being considered, and quoted the statement of Premier King at that time: "I have told the people of the maritime provinces that I have asked this commission to make specific recommendations in order that we might apply specific remedies, and I regard the carrying out of these recommendations as a matter of honourable obligation to the citizens of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island."

Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not think there is the slightest dispute as to where the government stand with respect to implementing the recommendations contained in the Duncan report. They have gone on record as being in favour of implementing those recommendations in toto. That has not been done; there are some major considerations and recommendations that have not been dealt with up to the present time. We want to know from the government when they intend to implement in full not only those recommendations, but also their solemn pledges given to the people of the maritime provinces on the floor of this house and on almost every public occasion in the maritime provinces when members of the cabinet have dealt with the report.

While I am on that subject I would direct the attention of the house to the report of the Duncan commission, page 36, section 23, with reference to the customs tariff on coal. I quote the following:

> Several features of the customs tariff in its relation to coal were brought to our attention both by the government of Nova Scotia and by the operators of the coal mines. These we feel ourselves precluded from dealing with, since they are a matter properly to be considered by the tariff advisory board; but we may be permitted to say that we are impressed with the need for reconsideration of the customs tariff in its relation to the coal industry and coke, and we recommend that the tariff advisory board should be asked to give immediate consideration to the subject.

I would now ask the Minister of Finance whether the tariff board has ever been asked by this government to give immediate consideration to the matter. I pause for an answer.

Mr. ROBB: As my hon. friend well knows, the inquiry has been in progress before the board for some time, and the people in the maritime provinces are some of them divided among themselves as to what they should have.

Mr. SMITH (Cumberland): They are not in the least divided. Two applications have been before the board, one from the Crowsnest Coal Company in British Columbia, and the other from Besco in Nova Scotia; but that has absolutely nothing to do with the recommendation in the Duncan report requesting the government to ask the tariff board to investigate the matter. Will the Minister of Finance now give me a direct answer to a direct question. Has the government ever asked the tariff board to consider the question of a tariff on coal and steel? I do not think the government has ever asked the tariff board to consider the question. It is true that Besco has asked, and it is also true that the Crowsnest Company in British Columbia has requested consideration of a reduced tariff on coal. But so far as I know there has been no reference from this government to the tariff board.

The minister has spoken of some differences of opinion with respect to the matter. It is true that when the bounty question came up they wanted to postpone the hearing in order to have the government of Nova Scotia represented. But the Premier of Nova Scotia properly said: "This is a settled question. This matter has been settled by the Duncan commission and there is absolutely no necessity for us to reopen something that has already been decided by a board with at least coequal jurisdiction with the tariff advisory board." That is why the government of Nova Scotia would have nothing to do with the investigation in that connection; the matter had been settled and settled satisfactorily to the people of Nova Scotia. Not only that, but ministers of the crown had promised that the settlement in accordance with the recommendations contained in the Duncan report would be made. The government of Nova Scotia would have been putting itself in a most anomalous position if it appeared before the tariff board and asked to have something reconsidered when it had already been considered in their favour, having as a matter of fact been unanimously approved by this parliament and promised by the government. This is one recommendation at least which the government has totally ignored. Let me again quote the exact language of the report:

> And we recommend that the tariff board should be asked to give immediate consideration to the subject.

This report has been in the hands of the government for over two years. I do not know that I need stress further the question of implementing the Duncan report except to say this: the people have been waiting a considerable time to have the question properly disposed of. Two years ago, when the government asked for some delay in the matter, many of the members on this side of the house were generous enough, if I may use that expression, to get up and assure them that they would not press the administration at that time, inasmuch as they thought that some little time should be afforded in which to implement the recommendations. We were very glad to make that statement on the floor of the house. But we have waited two years and there is in the budget nothing which intimates that any remedy will be provided as recommended. We are now therefore at the point of vigorous protest. You may call it calamity howling, if you will; you may call us peddlers of gloom or anything you wish. But we are here to perform a duty and so long as we are here we will be heard.

Now I want to deal for a minute or two with the coal industry in Nova Scotia. It is true that there has been a little improvement in the coal fields in that province, due I think, in large measure, to the very capable manner in which the provincial government has handled the mines of the province. There have not been any labour troubles since the Rhodes government came into power. The Minister of Mines is a man of outstanding capacity and ability and he has skilfully guided the affairs of the coal interests in Nova Scotia, so that they have been in a more or less happy position ever since that government assumed power. Nevertheless there is still room for improvement in conditions there. There is opportunity for a larger output of coal in Nova Scotia, provided we can secure the market; and the only way to secure the market is by means of some assistance from this government. Whether it be by lower freight rates, whether it be by tariff measures, whether it be by subventions, whether it be by some system of bonus or by any other means, there is, I say, chance for increased production of coal in Nova Scotia provided we secure the market. I know there are many difficulties in the way of the application of the tariff in its relation to the coal industry, but I am not by any means abandoning what I have always maintained to be one of the things necessary to help the industry, namely, a higher tariff on coal. I have heard a slur cast across the floor of the house many times, but I do not think there is any disagreement, so far as the members on this side of the house are concerned, with respect to properly and adequately protecting every legitimate industry in this Dominion. That has always been the stand of the Conservative party, and that policy has never been abandoned by that party so far as I am able to ascertain. That being the case, there is no reason in the world why the Dominion Fuel Board, constituted by this government, and on which there are many officials, should not be broadened out in scope so that it might be able to bring in proper recommendations to the government as to the best way in which to develop a national fuel and steel policy for this Dominion. No effort has been made by the fuel board along this line. The board costs the country about $20,000 per annum. I have nothing to say with regard to the personnel of the board; they are all capable and efficient men. But they all have other duties to perform, and their work in connection with the Dominion Fuel Board occupies only their spare time. It is incumbent upon the government, if they are not able to cope with the situation themselves—and there is clear evidence that they are not able to cope with it—to place the matter in the hands of some commission or other authority who will work out sooner or later—sooner, we hope—some sort of fuel policy for Canada which will be of benefit not only to the coal interests of the Dominion, to the coal miners, but generally to all the people of the country. We do not know how long it will be before some crisis may overtake us. And we do not want to be dependent upon any country for any staple article such as coal, which is one of the necessities of life. If a big strike should take place in the United States, where we purchase about 17,000,000 tons of coal of different kinds every year, most of it the very kind of coal we can produce in Canada, and if in consequence we were some day unexpectedly shut off from that market—and that might happen —then we should be in a hopeless and helpless position with regard to one of the very necessities of life. I say that I do not believe proper consideration has been given the fuel question in this Dominion, and it is up to this government to place the matter in the hands of some properly constituted board or commission, and have that body develop some scheme and bring in some recommendation which will help solve this great problem. When it is solved, Mr. Speaker, you may rest assured that it will materially help the people of the province of Nova Scotia, one-fifth of whom are dependent upon the coal industry.

Not only has this government not given proper consideration to the coal industry of Canada, but I want to refer to a matter which I brought up last year. When the Canadian National Railways were consolidated, part of the assets of the Grand Trunk consisted of a coal mine in the United States, operated by a company known as the Rail and River Coal Company, and the Canadian National Railways have been operating that company in the United States for several years past. The company employes about 700 men, and according to the labour organizations of the United States the mine is being operated in an improper manner. There is no union labour employed at that mine; they use the cheapest kind of labour and do not recognize the labour unions. Just here I wish to quote a letter from a high official of the United Mine Workers of America. I do not wish to give the name of this official, but if anyone is interested I shall be glad to show him the correspondence a little later. The letter states:

> The Rail and River Coal Company prior to April 1, 1927, operated its mines under the joint agreement with the United Mine Workers of America and up until that time recognized the principles of collective bargaining in its dealings with the organization chartered by the American labour movement and having jurisdiction throughout the mines of America.

> They have operated these mines for some months now and have never signified any intentions of recognizing the United Mine Workers, but seemingly are willing to deal with a group associated under a leadership in this vicinity who, because of their communistic doctrines have in some instances been refused by the authorities in this section, to hold meetings, it having been assumed by the authorities due to literature that was distributed, that this element was opposed to our form of government.

Referring to the United Mine Workers of America, I presume.

> One would think that the Canadian government owning and operating a railroad which in turn operates mines, would at least use a system in the operation of its mines that reflects ideals and principles; namely, collective bargaining in their dealings with their employees in the mines and that they should not deal with a group whose aim has been to obstruct the United Mine Workers of America which has always been a part of the system of collective bargaining.

So I say, Mr. Speaker, that it is about time the management of the Canadian National Railways were instructed by this house not to violate the established principles of labour as followed by the United Mine Workers of America; and to see that the men employed in these mines belong to labour unions and receive the consideration which these unions are always so generous to give their members.

Mr. HEAPS: What is the name of the company?

Mr. SMITH (Cumberland): The Rail and River Coal Company.

[Mr. R. K. Smith.]

Mr. RALSTON: Will my hon. friend give the date of the communication?

Mr. SMITH (Cumberland): November 12, 1928; it was written just a few months ago.

Now I would like to deal with the question of the bounty on steel. There may be some idea throughout Canada that this is a political matter, that it is being raised by those who sit on this side of the house as such and that the feeling in regard to it is not unanimous in the province of Nova Scotia. Let me say that we are simply bombarded with resolutions passed by boards of trade all over Nova Scotia asking us to insist that the government carry out the recommendations of the Duncan commission with respect to the bounty on steel. I am not going to read them all, but I intend to read one or two of these resolutions which I think properly express the feelings of the people of Nova Scotia in this connection. First I will read the resolution passed by the Springhill board of trade, and I might say that Springhill is a mining town. The resolution is as follows:

> Whereas the steel companies of Canada do enjoy a special concession, in th form of a drawback in duty on imported coal used in the manufacture of steel; and
> Whereas the steel companies operating in the province of Nova Scotia are so situated that this concession is of no advantage; and
> Whereas we believe the British Empire Steel Corporation are entitled to a bounty equal to the amount of drawback on every ton of Nova Scotia coal used in the production of steel in this province; and
> Whereas this recommendation has already received the endorsement of the Duncan commission;
> Therefore resolved that the Dominion government be urged to proceed to put this special bounty into effect at once.

Then follow the names of various hon. members of this house to whom copies of the resolution were to be sent. A similar resolution was passed by the Amherst board of trade; it is rather lengthy and I will not read it, but it is in terms very much the same as the one I have read. The Amherst board of trade passed a resolution of this kind in 1929 and they also passed one in 1928. I have a resolution here which I am sure hon. members of this house will be interested to hear. It was passed over a year ago in a county of Nova Scotia in which there is no coal, it properly shows the spirit of the people of that province whether or not they are located in the coal mining districts. This resolution was passed by the board of trade of the town of Lunenburg. I will omit a few of the recitals—

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): Read it all.

Mr. SMITH (Cumberland): I am sure my hon. friend will be glad to hear it all because it is signed by J. J. Kinley, the president of the Liberal association of Nova Scotia. It is as follows:

Whereas, during the last number of years, there has been imported into Canada a huge quantity of coal, occasioning the export of many millions of dollars therefor;

And whereas thousands of tons of foreign iron and steel are being annually imported into this country in direct competition with Canadian industry, while the output of our Canadian plants is less than half their capacity, occasioning the export of many additional millions of dollars;

And whereas the Duncan commission on maritime claims, recognizing the importance of Nova Scotia's steel and coal industry as a national asset, recommended that certain measures be introduced immediately with a view to the establishment of these industries;

Therefore be it resolved that a general policy in connection with the steel and coal industries should be adopted by the parliament of Canada, the aim of such policy being the production in Canada of such coal and steel consumed in Canada, as far as that is possible at the present time; and to take the necessary steps to ensure the expanding of these industries so that eventually Canada may, through them, be enabled to supply its entire requirements;

Further resolved that the recommendations of the Duncan commission made on behalf of these industries be implemented immediately;

Then follows a paragraph containing a list of gentlemen to whom copies of the resolution were to be sent. This resolution comes from the Lunenburg Board of Trade and is signed by J. J. Kinley, president. He is a Liberal member of the local legislature and I think has occupied the position of acting leader of the opposition in the provincial house during the absence of the leader, Mr. Chisholm. It will be very clear to the house that Liberals and Conservatives, boards of trade and the people generally throughout the province of Nova Scotia and I believe throughout the maritime provinces as well, expect these recommendations together with every other recommendation contained in the Duncan report to be implemented without further delay.

There is one other matter I would like to bring up. The other evening I listened to one of the members from Prince Edward Island who spoke in glowing terms of the condition of agriculture in that province. Not long ago I noticed in one of the papers coming from the island that Prince Edward Island farmers were getting very much disturbed and perturbed over the influx into that province of so many California carrots and so much New Zealand butter, so I do not think the island farmer is of the same opinion as the hon. member who attempted to speak on his behalf. Let me say that no matter what the conditions are in Prince Edward Island or the rest of Canada the condition of agriculture and particularly of the dairy industry in Nova Scotia has been made almost intolerable by the influx of New Zealand butter. The herds have been depleted, the swine industry has been affected, the poultry industry has suffered, and generally speaking the whole fabric of agriculture in Nova Scotia has been injured by the influx of this New Zealand butter. The dairymens' associations of the province of Nova Scotia have been passing resolutions for the past three years which have been forwarded to every member, both Liberal and Conservative, from that province. These resolutions have asked the Dominion government to cancel the order in council which permitted New Zealand butter to come into this country under the Australian treaty.

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): How does butter affect the poultry industry?

Mr. SMITH (Cumberland): In the same way that it affects the swine industry; poultry thrive on the by-products of the dairy industry. I should think the hon. member, coming from the part of the country he does, would know all about that. Not only have the dairymen's associations passed these resolutions, but the farmers' associations have asked this government to abrogate that part of the treaty which applies to New Zealand. It has been estimated that over 20,000,000 pounds of butter have been dumped on the Canadian market during the past year. Their seasons are exactly the opposite to ours; it is summer time in New Zealand at the present time, there is a rich carpet of feed for the animals and it is impossible for the farmers in the part of the country from which I come to meet that unfair competition. At this time of the year the cattle in our country require shelter and are simply eating their heads off, while the cattle in New Zealand are roaming around the fields at very little cost, and their butter is thrown on our market under the added advantage of a bonus. It does not seem to me that it is fair to an industry such as the dairy industry to have to work under such a disadvantage. There are but a few branches of agriculture in Nova Scotia which can compete with the other countries of the world, and I do not think the dairy industry comes within that category, under existing conditions.

We could not compete with the western meat trade, but it was thought that we would be able to compete in the dairy business. The farmers established dairy herds all over the province. They began to prosper as a result of the development of those herds, combined with the business in swine which was built up as a by-industry. When New Zealand butter began to swamp the market the farmers discovered that they could not compete and decided they would have to dispose of their herds. When they do that they practically abandon the whole farming industry in our province, because that is about the only profitable phase of it left. I ask the members of the house whether they think it is a proper attitude for any government to take to continue to allow this New Zealand butter to come in and flood our markets and put the Nova Scotia farmers out of business. Resolutions have been sent to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell) from agricultural societies and institutions throughout the whole Dominion, and it seems to me that some attention should be given to this matter. I believe the Australian treaty has been of great help to certain parts of Canada, but I protest against that part of the treaty which allows New Zealand butter to come in under an order in council which was passed without the matter having been discussed on the floor of this house. On behalf of the farmers of Nova Scotia I appeal to the government to give this matter their attention. It is one that is worthy of their notice, and if they knew the conditions which actually exist in the maritime provinces I believe it would have their immediate attention, that is necessary if those conditions are to be remedied.

It is only idle talk to contend that the proposals in the budget form an adequate substitute for the recommendations of the Duncan commission. The coal and steel industry requires a duty sufficiently adequate to safeguard and protect it. It needs a $2 per ton test rate on coal from Cape Breton and Nova Scotia to the Montreal market. A delegation came to Ottawa a short time ago and put this matter before the government. A test rate of $3 per ton was placed on the movement of coal, and while it served some purpose it was found that it was not low enough to enable any great quantity of Nova Scotia coal to seek the present markets and develop new ones. We urge the government to give consideration to the matter of a $2 test rate on the movement of coal from Nova Scotia. We want to see our Canadian coal used in coking plants. The Domestic Fuel Act as it stands to-day is absolutely worthless so far as the use of Canadian coal is concerned. Outside of one small plant in the city of Halifax, Canadian coal is not being used in any coking plant in Canada. They are not taking advantage of the provisions of the Domestic Fuel Act. I was amazed not long ago when I heard a patriotic appeal to the citizens of the Dominion of Canada which was sent over a certain broadcasting station, they were asked to buy a certain grade of coke on the plea that they would be patronizing home industry and helping to build up Canada. But there was one thing they overlooked, and that was to tell the audience that the coke manufactured at this plant was being made of American bituminous coal, coal that could have been supplied from our own mines.

Mr. J. A. GLEN (Marquette): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Smith) will not blame me if I do not follow him in his argument. He was dealing solely with Nova Scotia problems and the dear old Duncan report; I propose to speak on the budget, which is the matter supposed to be under debate in the house.

The budget and the debate which has followed upon it have raised larger issues than are contained in the terms of the budget. It has awakened a realization in the minds of some of the hon. members opposite that this is a glorious opportunity to put the principle of protection on the lexicon of the agriculturists from the west. It has also put the fear in the minds of some of the farmers, low tariff men and free traders, that they might be affected by this false and emotional doctrine. The budget itself is a very harmless instrument so far as I am concerned. I personally have not uplifted my voice to say, nor has my heart been satisfied, that the provisions contained in the budget will alleviate the burdens of those I represent. I am safe in saying that the budget is absolutely inactive to those of my way of thinking, and the only morsel of satisfaction I get from it is that there have been no additional burdens placed upon us. I realize that the possible outcome of the situation in the United States has had its effect; nevertheless I state to this house that despite what may or may not be done by the United States there are certain things which might well be done by this parliament.

I am very thankful that there has been no reduction in the income tax. I with others last year strongly urged that no reduction should take place in the income tax. I took then, as I do now, the broad general principle that no further reductions should be made in the income tax until the war debt has been brought to a point where it can be reasonably expected to be paid out of consolidated revenue. The Minister of Finance

(Mr. Robb), in his admirable statement, showed that this debt took 42.30 per cent of our revenue. Surely the country has a right to expect that those who are sharing in the largest degree the unprecedented prosperity which all members of the house are speaking of, shall make their contributions undiminished under this tax. The loss of revenue by any reduction will have to be made up somehow, and my fear is that when that time comes, it will be by way of indirect taxation. Some say that the farmers would benefit by a reduction. We had an enormous crop in 1928 and we had a great crop in 1927, but I find that for the year 1927-28 only 291 farmers in Manitoba were able to pay income tax, and I shall be surprised if that number is appreciably increased for 1928-29. It has been pointed out several times during the course of the debate, and I would like to emphasize it from my knowledge, that the margin between profit and loss in last year's farming operations is so meagre and negligible that if there is a bad crop in 1930, hundreds of farmers are likely to become bankrupt. I do not think that is an exaggerated statement. From my personal knowledge I have a good acquaintance with the affairs of many farmers in Manitoba, and I know whereof I speak.

But having spoken thus of the budget, to which I will come back, I should like to refer to the amendment moved by the hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie). If only its merit had been as admirable as the form in which it was presented, it would have been irresistible, but the subject matter of my hon. friend's speech was simply an appeal and argument for his point of view in favour of protection. The hon. member for South Wellington is too intelligent to advance the argument that protection could benefit the producer. He knows, if anyone does, that a duty on wheat, which is largely exported, cannot give increased prices to the producer. His amendment must therefore be considered as relating to those whom I might term industrialists. The hon. gentleman's views and mine on that point are as far apart as the poles. There may be room for argument between us with regard to our viewpoint on protection to the industrialist, but there is no argument that a duty on wheat can give increased prices to the producer. Differing, therefore, as I do from the hon. member in the fundamentals of his argument, I must vote against the amendement.

I said in the beginning I thought the budget might have given some remedial relief, and I will instance two commodities which might have been mentioned in the budget. I refer to aluminum and enamelware. These two industries had hearings before the tariff board; they were investigated very thoroughly, and there was in my judgment indisputable evidence presented before the board that a reduction in the tariff on those commodities would be of considerable benefit to the consumer and no detriment to the manufacturer One or two statements have been made in the house somewhat derogatory to the tariff board. Any derogation of the work of the tariff board should in the first instance have come from those who appeared before it, and my information is that manufacturers and all others who have appeared before the board are at one in their sense of the fairness and equity which have been meted out to them in all the hearings. I believe sincerely it is a necessary forum in order to bring out the facts, and the only persons who fear the tariff board are those who do not wish to present their facts in public.

I should like to give one illustration of the effect of what the tariff board has done. Some time ago the Ottawa correspondent of the Manitoba Free Press made a very exhaustive and splendid report of the activities of the Canada Cement Company, and this was published in the Manitoba Free Press. That was followed by an application presented to the board by Mr. A. E. Darby of the Canadian Council of Agriculture. A splendid brief was submitted by Mr. Darby and an equally good response was made by Professor Jackson on behalf of the cement companies. The hearing took place and the issue was keenly fought. The results have not been embodied in the budget, but on the day following the introduction of the budget by the Minister of Finance there was published throughout the Dominion of Canada an intimation from the Canada Cement Company that the price of their goods was reduced ten cents per barrel and in many places fifteen cents per barrel. That reduction which is in some cases thirty per cent and in others fifty per cent of the present duty, on cement, is, I think, attributable to the light of publicity that was given before the tariff board and is as creditable to the cement company as it is to the advocates and to the board itself.

In justification of the reductions in the tariff and in support of the contention that reduced tariffs will provide more employment, I should like to suggest to the government that the present policy of lower tariffs is the policy most suitable for business within the boundaries of Canada. Most of us will remember the direful forebodings that were expressed last session on the budget by hon. gentlemen opposite and in particular, if I remember aright, the hon. and genial member for Fort William (Mr. Manion) was the gloomiest prophet of all. I listened very carefully to his speech the other day and I certainly expected he would come forward with some illustrations showing that his forebodings were true and that his "I told you so" was correct. But I was disappointed; not a single instance did he give to bear out the prophecy which he made during last session. All he gave was his desire—and I presume as a medical man he is entitled to it—to see the red blood of somebody. He likes red and I venture to submit that he is seeing red just now. It happens that in the United States they have a board that is called the committee of ways and means, House of Representatives, and before that board the manufacturers and the people who are desirous of getting tariffs raised, appear and give evidence, I was very much struck, and I think the house will be somewhat surprised to hear this. On January 30, in their committee's prints, page 4449, is the evidence given by the mayor of the city of Lawrence, Massachusetts. This is rather striking in view of all that has been said with regard to employment in the United States and how that highly protected country is the best country in the world in which to live. Lawrence is a city of 94,000 people, situated about twenty-six miles north of Boston and as many miles from the Atlantic seaboard. The present mayor, after giving a picture of the city and its attractions, has this to say:

> Gradually our mills have been going on shorter time and though we have been optimistic relief has not come. It has been said that from 10,000 to 20,000 people have left the city and none arrived to keep up our population. And may I say cotton and wollen mills do not pay a very high rate of wages and in the dull times the reserve fund of the operative is soon exhausted. I have shown this committee a gradual falling off of valuation for tax purposes about one and a half million in 1928 and perhaps another one and a half million in 1929, which is a direct loss to the city in income at our rate of $26.40 per 1,000 (the second lowest for cities in Massachusetts), $79,200. Not this alone but the closing of a mill such as the United States Worsted Company, which employed 1,500 workers, the Pemberton Mills (cotton) which employed 500; Lawrence Duck Company (cotton) employed 500, the Everett Mills with from 1,600 to 2,000 employed, the Katama with 300 employed; making in all 4,500 workers out of employment.

Then he goes on to say:

> It puts a very heavy burden upon our charity and soldiers' relief departments. There are about 450 vacant stores and 2,300 vacant tenements in our city, so it is again the vicious circle. Mills close down or run on short time, merchants and storekeepers, landlords unable to collect and city handicapped in collection of taxes. I realize that tariff schedules and fixing of rates is work of and for experts, which I am not. The members of this committee know far more than I about this tariff. I am not sure that the remedy for the ills of the textile centers of the country is in further adjustment of rates. I am not sure that the evil which has crept in to this great industry is due as some say to an overproduction of cotton and woollen goods; that there are too many spindles in operation; or that it is due to the investment of American money in the mills of foreign countries, where living conditions are lower and wages lower than in this country, or to the tariff. I am willing to be guided by the national organization experts of cotton and woollen trade, as the leading manufacturing men of our city are in harmony with these men who have made an exhaustive study of this situation. Yet when I see thousands of men and women, good, law-abiding, God-fearing people in my home city walking the streets unemployed; when I see the home that has been acquired and gained by the life work of the father of a family and his sons and daughters, slipping out of his grasp, I turn for assistance to every harbour. I cannot see a community that has progressed for seventy-five years bleed to death without lifting my voice in protest. These things should not be in this richest country in the world. I earnestly ask this committee, not for one instant putting my judgment above yours, to give cities like Lawrence, Lowell, New Bedford, and Fall River relief from these burdens. The people cry out in their anguish; cry out for work and an opportunity to earn a livelihood; to rear their families and pay their debts. If the remedy is in the tariff, as many say it is, I trust this committee will apply this cure, correct, and counteract the evil that exists.

I wonder where these forty-five hundred unemployed went. Just let us read a little further on. This is in the form of question and answer:

> Mr. Treadway: Mr. Landers,—
> Mr. Landers is mayor of Lawrence:
> —may I ask you if the authorities, like yourself, as mayor of Lawrence, have endeavoured to locate where your population has moved?
> Mr. Landers: Yes. We have tried that.
> Mr. Treadway: Do you know where they have gone? What percentage of the total population has left Lawrence, for instance, in the past two years?
> Mr. Landers: The greatest percentage of them went to Canada.
> Mr. Treadway: That is, they were French-Canadians and went back over the line?
> Mr. Landers: Yes.
> Mr. Treadway: Were they citizens here, or had they come down from Canada?
> Mr. Landers: No; they were citizens.
> Mr. Treadway: They are our citizens?
> Mr. Landers: Yes.
> Mr. Treadway: Did they move out permanently, or would they be glad to come back, do you think, if business braced up.
> Mr. Landers: There is no question about that. Whenever business does increase in Lawrence, then we have a shortage of tenements.
> Mr. Treadway: During 1923 and 1924 there were no empty tenements in Lawrence?

Mr. Landers: No, sir.
Mr. Treadway: When did the decrease start—in 1926 or 1927?
Mr. Landers: About 1925 and 1926.
Mr. Treadway: It was worse in 1927 than it was in 1926?
Mr. Landers: Yes.
Mr. Treadway: Your population has decreased more?
Mr. Landers: Yes, sir.

I am told that a textile factory is being built in Farnham, Quebec, this year, which fact has some relation to the tariff reductions of last year. But, what I wish to point out is that in the United States, this highly protected country which members on the other side so frequently point to, there is a condition of affairs in that city of Lawrence not paralleled in any city in Canada.

I should like, however, to point out several factors in connection with United States and Canadian tariffs which may be of interest, and which must be considered when dealing with our relations with our neighbours to the south. The United States is held up in this house as a highly protected country, and it is a highly protected country, yielding only to Spain in the height of its tariff walls. The United States is held up in this house constantly as being unfair to Canada, and its tariff walls against Canada are too high; much too high. Yet there are certain facts which must be recognized in connection with trade with the United States.

During this debate it has been held by some hon. gentlemen that Canada has not retaliated, has not built up its walls as high as those of the United States against this country; yet an analysis of the trade flowing between the two countries, taking the figures for 1926, shows that 74 per cent of the exports from Canada to the United States were free, while only 29 per cent of the imports from the United States States into Canada were not dutiable. If the average rate of duty on all imports is taken as a measure of protection, it will be found that for the years 1926-1927 this rate was 13 per cent for the United States and 15.4 per cent for Canada.

An examination of the free list of the two countries reveals certain similarities, and naturally certain contrasts. The core of each list is made up of raw materials, such, for example, as crude minerals, raw cotton, raw silk, tanning and dyeing materials, crude rubber and crude petroleum. In addition there are certain exotic food products, such as tea and coffee, which although dutiable in Canada on the theory that we need the revenue, are not equally dutiable in the United States.

It may be that we sometimes blame the United States unjustly. Certainly we think of them as having a duty on everything that they produce if we produce it, and yet coal is on their free list; cement is on their free list, as well as planed boards and a number of other commodities. We think of them, however, as imposing a duty on these commodities, and there is a duty on them, but only as against countries that themselves impose a duty. In other words, we could have free access to the United States in these commodities under present conditions at least if we gave the United States free access of these commodities into Canada.

The United States has chosen to leave certain industries unprotected. That may seem strange to the members of this house. I do not mean raw materials; I mean manufactured products, such as newsprint, boots and shoes, leather, agricultural implements and binder twine. I wish to draw attention to the fact that only one of these products, binder twine, is unprotected in Canada, and I wish to point out also that our manufacturers are sending leather and newsprint in large quantities to the United States and taking advantage of the free market in that country. I do not know how long these commodities are going to remain on the free list of the United States, but I do know that a lot of the talk that has been heard in this house in the last few days as to "red-blooded action" is not likely to lead to their continuation on the free list, and if they disappear the manufacturers of this country who are engaged in export trade will know whom they have to blame for the closing of the United States market against them.

Comment has been made as to the disparity between our imports from the United States and those from the United Kingdom. I yield to no one in my desire that my adopted country shall trade with my mother country, and yet I cannot close my eyes to sound business practice, and the channels of trade that flow according to climatic conditions. I should indeed, be glad if we were able to buy our raw cotton within the British Empire. With all my heart I pray for the success of the British government in its effort to make the British Empire independent in its cotton supply. We have in India and in Africa the kind of climate that is needed but it takes many years of slow, patient work to lead the producers of these countries to selectivity in seeds, to proper method of cultivation, and to a proper cleaning of the raw cotton. Until such time as the British Empire is self-supporting in the matter of the raw materials we require in this country and which by reason of climatic conditions or otherwise, we cannot ourselves produce, then we must buy them from the country in which we can get them the cheapest, and that country often happens to be the United States.

We have heard a great deal about the iron and steel industry and the necessity of protecting it, and yet in a sense the iron and steel industry is exotic to this country. We are not making a pound of steel from Canadian ore. We import our ore, some of it, fortunately, from Newfoundland, but most of it from the United States. During the sessions of the tariff board the iron and steel producers from all over Canada were present and were asked if they favoured a duty upon iron ore, and none of them favoured a duty upon iron ore. They were business men. They wanted to buy their raw materials in the market which sold those materials at the lowest price, although that market happened to be the United States.

Once for all, let us recognize that we cannot, much as some of hon. members of this house would have us do so, copy the tariff clothes of the United States and expect to be suitably and well dressed. This country is different, geographically and climatically, from the United States. This country develops its natural resources, and tariff laws everywhere must adjust themselves to the conditions which it is proposed they shall serve; and, as a result of our limitations, the raw materials out of which are manufactured the necessities of life have frequently to be imported. Foreign trade is more important to the Dominion of Canada than it is to the United States. Now the United States, by reason of its high tariff, has also restricted its imports, and there is a growing feeling against a high tariff in the United States, despite what is said to the contrary. Leading economists there have indicated that this is likely to be the last high tariff congress in that country, because they realize that their export trade is being diminished so appreciably by high tariffs that they will have to call a halt. As a matter of fact there is a good deal of laughter in the United States, on the part of those who know, with regard to the demands at present made in Washington. And the one thing which will kill any project is to laugh at it. The United States has become alarmed, seriously alarmed as a matter of fact, and if I had time I would read to you an extract from the report of the proceedings of the same committee. It is rather long however and I will therefore give the gist of it. It is this: that the exports to Cuba from the United States have been so tremendously diminished as a result of the imposition of a high tariff against Cuban goods entering the United States that the economists of the United States are becoming very much alarmed indeed. In many cases, the goods formerly purchased from the United States by the Cubans are now reduced to a half and a third. That is the position with regard to the United States. I do not think that anyone can fail to understand why it is that we who represent the exporters of Canada—the industry which is responsible for most of the export trade of the country, the wheat industry—fear that it is likely to be throttled by high duties such as, if hon. gentlemen opposite were in power, would be imposed upon goods entering Canada; because high import duties in Canada would act as they have acted in the United States and everywhere else—they would shut out imports.

In closing I wish to say something on the doctrine of retaliation as preached by the Conservatives. I heard with dismay the other night the astounding proposal of the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Ladner), that the government be given authority to make immediate tariff changes to meet any fiscal changes that may take place in the United States. I can hardly imagine that any responsible member on the Conservative benches would support or even countenance a proposal so preposterous. Let me say to the hon. member that I cannot understand how under any conceivable circumstances any western member would delegate to any government such an exclusive parliamentary privilege in connection with so contentious a subject as the tariff. Goodness knows, we have plenty of trouble meantime with the officials who presume to interpret our tariff regulations, without giving the government a blanket power as is suggested. I am quite sure that we shall hear something from the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) when he speaks on this question. I can hardly imagine his being likely to countenance such a proposal.

If my reading of history is correct, I should say that, apart from religious wars, nearly all wars have had, as one of their primary causes, economic conditions. I was reading Henry Kittredge Norton's book, Back of War, and I want to quote therefrom one or two statements in support of the contention I make. At page 74 the author says:

> It is not needful for us to go into the merits or demerits of protective tariffs. That they result in an intensification of the economic conflict between nations can hardly be disputed, and that is the aspect of the matter which interests us here. The general effect of the protective tariff system is that each nation, no matter how small, strenuously endeavours to become economically self-sufficient. No nation has ever succeeded in doing this. Even the United States, with a vast continent of unexampled resources and a considerable tropic empire, is dependent upon outside sources for rubber, coffee, and a score of other essential raw materials and foodstuffs. Great Britain, with an even more extended and varied territory, is equally dependent upon other nations. The same is true of every other state, yet the effort goes on and each nation strives to increase the amount and variety of its own products, at no matter what economic loss to its own people.

The tariff is the chief and typical instrument by which this uneconmic competition is carried on. In most countries it has long since forgotten the "revenue" stage, and in many it has even passed the "protective" stage. It is frankly a "retaliatory" measure. A prohibitory tariff is erected against the products of a particular nation, either to penalize that nation or to be removed in return for special favours. Sometimes a general reduction is made on both sides by a "reciprocity" agreement. The tariff is a powerful weapon in the economic warfare which is prevalent to-day in peace times. When it is used ruthlessly and with sole regard to the advantage of the nation using it, or as a direct thrust at some other nation, it may well become an important factor in precipitating armed conflict.

And in one short paragraph he sums up his views thus:

War is not to be persuaded out of existence. Our only hope for an era of continued peace is to recognize and deal with the causes of international conflict. These are largely economic. They are not wholly so, and the economic cause is frequently overlaid with numerous layers of insulation made up of high-sounding protestations of patriotism, national honour, and national rights. It is the task of the sincere worker for world peace to cut through these outer layers and lay bare the real causes of dispute, and to demand that the statesmen of the world deal with these sanely and constructively.

If this is not a sufficient authority, I was looking at Norman Angell's book, Human Nature and the Peace Problem, and in it he gives two or three quotations from one of the leading journalists in the old country—I do not think one would be exaggerating if one said, the leading journalist—Mr. J. L. Garvin. Mr. Garvin is the author of a post-war book entitled The Economic Foundations of Peace, and its first chapter summary begins:

A primary war, largely about food and raw materials: inseparable connection of the politics and economics of the peace.

The war with many names was in one main aspect a war about food supply and raw materials. To this extent it was Germany's fight to escape from the economic position of inter-independence without security into which she had insensibly fallen—to obtain for herself independent control of an ample share in the world's supplies of primary resources. The war meant much else, but it meant this as well and this was a vital factor in its causes.

Now it is impossible to develop this theme in a forty minute speech, and it must wait therefore for another place and more leisure. But I view with a good deal of uneasiness the utterances of Conservative members of the house in this debate. Any dispute with the United States which is likely to take place in the future must come about over matters concerning commerce, trade or financial claims. Our Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King), when he was in the old country, made the proud boast that there was between the two countries a boundary in which there was not a fort. Shall we begin a tariff wall against those people, with all the attendant dangers, suspicion and ill will? No one can deny or will deny that the United States have, as Canada has, the right to change their customs law; that is their inherent right as it is ours. Does it not resolve itself simply into this, that if the United States do not wish to trade with us there is no other course for us to follow but to seek the markets of the world, and preferably of course the British market? I shall await with a good deal of interest the speech of the leader of the opposition, for I am quite sure that he will modify the mischievous utterances of many of his followers in this debate during his absence.

Now, one would naturally conclude that I must of necessity vote for the subamendment. I think the subamendment need not have been introduced at all.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. GLEN: I will give my reasons, and then perhaps hon. members will not be so prone to laugh. If the subamendment be carried, what does it mean? It means the nullification of the proposals of the government as submitted in the budget. The hon. member (Mr. Spencer) who moved the subamendment spoke in praise of several of the terms and provisions of the budget, and he would be the last man to wish to bring about its rejection. He is enunciating in his subamendment what by most members on this side of the house is acknowledged as a principle which they can logically support. But the answer to the subamendment has already been made by the Minister of Finance in his budget speech. At page 594 of Hansard of March 1 he said:

It is gratifying to note the steady development of inter-empire trade. Canada, the pioneer of the British preference, looks on empire trade as the keystone of its external trade policy, and desires in every way to foster closer trading relations throughout the British commonwealth of nations.

If that is not a declaration of policy, I do not know what is. The words are as clear and unmistakable as words can be. In my judgment the subamendment is simply a work of supererorgation, and therefore I shall oppose it.

Mr. MICHAEL LUCHKOVICH (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I shall not try to emulate the eloquence of those hon. members who have immediately preceded me, but in my own small way I shall try to tell the house what I think of the budget. I was very much surprised to hear the last speaker (Mr. Glen) say that the budget was a harmless instrument, that in fact it was a negative instrument. I suppose he looks upon the budget very much in the same way that we used to look upon some old woman's medicine—if it did not help, it at least would not hurt. I was also rather surprised to hear him say that he was very glad that there were no reductions in the income tax. Well, some reductions were made in the income tax last session, but on that occasion the hon. gentleman did not show his dissatisfaction by his vote.

Now, the budget presented to the house by the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb) will no doubt be heralded throughout the length and breadth of Canada by the friends of the Liberal party as a marvellous revelation of financial ingenuity, revealing as it does the great ability of the minister and his reputed passion for economy. Right here, sir, in respect to this much talked-of economy, I wonder whether the Minister of Finance does not feel pretty much in the same position as his prototype of many centuries ago, who when questioned by the king of that day as to his happiness and contentment said:

I envy nobody, no not I,
And nobody envies me,
I owe no money I cannot pay;
I thank the river Dee
That turns the mill that grinds the corn
To feed my babes and me.

But when I look into the eye of the minister and see that wistful look of sadness, I have to come to another conclusion.

The Liberals will also point with great pride to the unprecedented surplus of seventy million dollars, to a reduction in taxes, and also to a decrease in the national debt. But no mention will be made of any reduction in the tariff, as it will be found much better to leave well enough alone. One might easily argue that if the minister had not successfully gambled on future prosperity, in other words, if our field crops and the products of our forests, mines and factories had not produced so much wealth and thereby given our people more money with which to pay taxes, the result would not have been so satisfactory to him. But I am willing to give him the benefit of the doubt, and in so far as the sales tax and other nuisance taxes are concerned I shall go even to the length of extending to him my congratulations for the reductions made therein.

I wish to deal with three things, Mr. Speaker; first, the tariff; next, the railway situation; and, if I have any time left, certain phases of immigration. In respect to the tariff changes in this budget, having in view the alleged tariff policy of the Liberal party, I cannot very well see my way clear to offer any commendation to the government. The tariff changes in my opinion are completely negligible in that they offer no relief whatsoever to those engaged in agriculture, and the tariff resolutions that will follow this debate, while on their face they appear impressive, will be found after the calm reflection that usually follows a close analysis to mean but very little. They make free a few minor articles that are hardly ever used in this country, but in no shape or form do they affect any real industry one way or the other. In view, therefore, of the great divergence between Liberal promise and Liberal performance I cannot pass over my remarks on the budget without some appeal to the party to the right of the Speaker for a stricter adherence to the principles on which they were elected to parliament, for I fear if this is not done those engaged in agriculture will be placed in the same position as the polar bear perched on an iceberg which is gradually melting away as it approaches the equator.

It is not enough for the Minister of Finance to make the trite remark, "We are the only low tariff party in the House of Commons." Such a statement must be backed up by action, for actions speak louder than words. It is not the first time we have heard a member of the government do lip service with respect to a low tariff policy and we know it will not be the last; and, having this in mind, well do I remember the remark made by the hon. member for Rosetown (Mr. Evans) wherein he said that the Liberals, after dodging the tariff issue since confederation, experienced a softening of the heart inasmuch as they actually lowered the tariff in 1904 on soft soap and false teeth; and in 1929, after undergoing a similar psychological change, the hon. Minister of Finance out of the goodness of his heart actually ran the terrible risk of lowering the duty on cocoanuts. "From false teeth to cocoanuts we lowered the duty on everything," might very well be the party slogan at the next election.

Now, from information I have gathered from expert sources, I have learned that since 1888 the difference between the Liberals and the Conservatives in respect to the tariff has been eight-tenths of one per cent in favour of the Liberals—a difference which in my estimation is nothing much to blow about. In view of this fact I would like to ask the government whether or not the tariff is an issue, and if it is an issue will the members of the government still claim to be the apostles of a lower tariff? Personally, Mr. Speaker, I feel like the man from Missouri; I do not believe in any platitudinous humbug; I want the government to produce the goods, but have the government produced the goods? My opinion is emphatically in the negative.

I do not wish to burden this house with any statistics or voluminous references; I simply wish to give a review of the three years I have been in this house, which I think will be quite sufficient for my purposes. What happened here in 1927? So far as any revision of the tariff was concerned, absolutely nothing happened, and since one may find reasons for almost anything, so have the government found an alibi for their attitude in connection with the tariff. In that year the minister explained that there could be no revision until the Advisory Board on Tariff and Taxation had finished some cases which were before them. According to my information they did finish some cases that year, but the minister did not take account of those cases at all. Indeed, the only satisfaction we received that year was what consolation we could take from the statement made by the Minister of Finance, as follows:

> We shall move forward cautiously with the aid of the knowledge of the facts secured by the tariff advisory board towards the goal of making our tariff structure bear as lightly as possible on production, on industry and the people generally, having in view the greater prosperity of all legitimate industries of Canada. The tariff must be made to serve the best interests of the Canadian people as a whole. It must be adjusted from time to time to meet the needs, not of one class or group of industries alone, whichever one that might be, but of our whole economic structure.

It is hard to conceive of a more carefully worded statement than the one I have just quoted and behind which the government have striven to remain so snugly secure. Nothing so irritates a bear as to be suddenly awakened from his long winter sleep by a casual intruder, and I cannot imagine a more apt analogy than that of an aggressive member of this house piercing through the thin armour of the superficial apologetics of this statement made by the Minister of Finance. Certainly I cannot regard it as anything but an attempt on the part of the government to put a quietus on the policy of low tariff, in view of some of the disturbing elements on that side of the house. As I see it, the Liberal party is divided into three different parts; we have the Liberal party proper, who preach low tariff but never practise it; we have the Conservative-Liberals, who decry any low tariff whatsoever, and we have the Liberal-Progressives, who have been led into the party opposite by the astute Prime Minister of Canada under whose magic influences they have been lulled into blissful forgetfulness of the policies which brought them here in 1921. Sometimes, Mr. Speaker, it is very curious indeed what strange bed fellows politics do make.

So far as the budget of 1928 is concerned I think very few people in Canada understood what the items in the budget meant; they were chiefly concerned with the schedules of the textile industry, and the only clear thing about them was that they were in line with the policy of the government of reducing the duties on the products manufactured here and then compensating the manufacturer by an equal reduction on his raw material. The advantage of this can be easily seen; it enabled the government to go to the public and say, "Well, you have nothing to complain about; we reduced the duties on what you have to buy" and then they went back to the manufacturer and said, "Well, we did not hurt you any." The truth of this statement is very well borne out by the campaign speeches of some of the ministers. I know of nothing which so exemplifies the dextrous opportunism of the government so well as a poem written by Stephen Rudansky, a poet of the Ukraine, entitled, "We Need Friends Everywhere." The poem is as follows:

There was an old woman to church inclined,
A church-going dame was she;
She brought some candles she opined
Would be a mark of piety.

Wherever an icon she espied
She placed a candle to burn;
"Two still remain, oh where", she cried,
"Shall I place each one in turn."

She spied St. Michael large and grand,
And Satan's image, both well done;
She placed two candles on a stand,
Near Michael and the Evil One.

The people stared, their rage waxed hot,
"Old woman, stop," cried they;
"Oh fie on thee, oh knowst thou not,
"What waits thee on thy judgment day?"

"What sacrilege," the people cried,
"To place a candle there,
"To honor Satan, ah," they sighed,
"Twere better that the stand were bare."

The woman turned upon the crowd,
Undaunted, bold was she;
"Speak not, oh people, out so loud
"On matters of eternity."

For when you die you know not where Your spirit shall reside;
"So why not see ere you get there,
"To you, no ill betide."

"It may be hell or paradise,
"The place which you will share
So don't you think it very wise
To make friends everywhere."

Do not the budgets of 1927, 1928 and 1929 well illustrate the propensities of the government for making friends everywhere, and do they not show the Minister of Finance lighting one candle to the farmer and worker and another to the magnate and industrialist, and are not those budgets evidences of how the present government try to satisfy the industrial east while at the same time appeasing the agricultural west with the result that we get a stand-pat budget which leaves the tariff strictly alone? The budget of 1927 was a stand-pat budget; so was that of 1928, and the budget of 1929 differs from those only in the fact it does not make any reduction in the income tax.

I have spoken of alibis and how the government have been able to fall back on these alibis when necessity dictated. In 1927 the alibi was the tariff board, and this year it is Hoover and the United States. The threat that the United States may raise a tariff wall against Canada has apparently saved the face of the government, for in a way it appears to lend a certain amount of justification to a remark made by the Minister of Finance, as follows:

> The board is continuing its inquiries on which substantial progress has already been made into several larger problems which involve the consideration of whole tariff schedules, and the interrelation of many important Canadian industries. While those inquiries are being pursued opportunity will be afforded for considering the possible effect on trade of changes being proposed in the tariff schedules of other countries, should they be implemented by legislation.

In other words, what the minister means is that we will not do anything with the tariff until we know what the United States intend doing. It not only helps the minister extricate himself from a very delicate situation, but it is drafted with a view to exonerate the tariff board from any charges which might be made against that seemingly useless body, which, after two years of effort and an expenditure of about $250,000, has absolutely no concrete achievement to its credit.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that the farmers of Canada are tired of alibis; the farmers of the west especially are tired of playing the part of a poor relation, as it were, thankful for the crumbs falling from the master's table, for all that is given to them by this budget is a few crumbs. It has long been my impression that reason has very little sway in the realm of politics under the party system. I have a suspicion that politics is run on the principle which Barnum enunciated many years ago. Force is the only thing that counts, and that force was very well exemplified in the budgets of 1927, 1928 and 1929. I think it is time that we snapped out of this state of affairs where idealism is recognized as being worse than useless and where force is the only thing that counts. I do not think the town has any right to lord it over the country, and I do not believe the people of the country should try to lord it over the town, but at the present time it seems to me that the town has the best of it. We do not come down here to destroy the factories of the electors who sent the members to the left of the Speaker to this parliament; all we ask is equal rights to all and special privileges to none. The situation appears to me to be somewhat similar to a pyramid standing on its apex; it is a mighty shaky affair. Until we can get a saner balance between the rural and urban interests we will continue to be like that pyramid and this country will be a mighty shaky affair, and this might be exemplified at the next election.

Members of the Liberal party may individually plead discipline and expediency, but that does not exonerate them from dereliction in the matter. I know how they pledged themselves to what would fit in with their party program, and I know something of the promises they made in preelection campaigns and the subsequent ridiculous excuses they had to make for the nonperformance of those pledges. Let us try to imagine the paradoxical position an honest member would be in on that side of the house. Let us imagine that that side of the house is an order called the order of the orange, the exalted ruler of which is the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Glen). The emblem of this order is an orange placed on a receptacle before the exalted ruler. Suppose an honest member like the member for Dauphin (Mr. Ward) is brought in for initiation. In the course of that initiation he is asked to repeat these words, "I swear to abide by the rules of this order and accept the orange as an emblem thereof." But the member for Dauphin replies, "That is not an orange, it is a lemon." "The lord high executioner says it is an orange," retorts the hon. member for Marquette, with a wicked leer in his eye, "and so an orange it must be." "Well, all right" mumbles the member for Dauphin dejectedly, "if the executioner says it is an orange I will have to accept it as an orange but it looks for all the world like a lemon to me." And so if we apply the analogy to the realm of politics it seems to be a ridiculous statement to make to call the Liberal party a low tariff party when it is not a low tariff party; in other words, they have promised us oranges but gave us lemons instead. I have always considered the Liberal pronouncements on the budget as giving rise to but one remarkable thing, namely, the paradox wherein that party deceives itself to its own benefit at the expense of the public.

I was rather struck with the statement which the Minister of Immigration (Mr. Forke) made last year when I was speaking on the budget. I made the remark that all the farmer members coming from the west should stick to the principle of low tariff; that we must either hang together on that tenet or hang separately when they got back home. I think it was the Minister of Immigration who interjected the remark, "Hear, hear". I wonder if he will make the same remark to-night.

Mr. FORKE: I am still farming anyway.

Mr. LUCHKOVICH: If the minister would make that remark then I would advise the Liberal-Progressives sitting on that side of the house to hail the minister with these words, "We who are about to die salute thee."

I was rather struck with the statement that the government would refuse to support any extravagance in the spending of the taxpayers' money; I imagine they meant the spending of money for good roads and technical education. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that a good deal of money could be lopped off the grants to the Quebec harbour, Ellis bay and other ventures and applied to the building of a much needed all-Canadian highway and technical schools. We would be doing much more good if we spent the money in that manner. In view of the wonderful progress made by Germany and the United States in these matters, the large sums of money spent by those countries and the great international prestige gained thereby, I do not agree with the minister that money spent on these enterprises is extravagance. The chief aim of any government is the greatest happiness for the greatest number, and money spent on technical education which will ensure employment to a great number of our boys and girls and keep them in the country is not extravagance; it is providence. I was rather impressed by the remarks of the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) with regard to technical education. He said that research and technical education were entirely different things having nothing in common. He said that it was only the aristocracy who could dabble in research. I agree with him in that regard, that it is only the university graduate who can take up that line of work. Technical education is limited to the young boys and girls of this country who have not had the opportunity of obtaining a university education. I have always considered too many of those coming out of our high schools were square pegs in round holes. I have always thought there was something wrong with our educational system. But technical education is a great thing for a country like Canada which has a wonderful industrial future before it. I would rather be the Napoleon of bootblacks than a jack-of-all trades; I would rather be proficient in one thing than partly proficient in a hundred things, because I believe that if I were the Napoleon of bootblacks the world would make a beaten path to my door and I would thereby be benefiting the country in which I lived, and also the country would benefit by me.

I will now pass to another matter of very great interest to the people of Canada, that of railroad building. There was a time when the leaders in all walks of life in Canada thought we were at least a half century ahead of our time in railway construction; that in view of our sparse population and limited productive capacity it was suicidal for our railways to make such heavy commitments with no other guarantee than an anticipation of a large business in the near future. To-day we scout such timidity, activated as it was by the belief that railway construction was being overdone. On the contrary we believe that there is not enough of it, especially in such countries as that great hinterland which we call the Peace river. I believe that railways should precede population. If we had a railway in the Peace river that would give the people in that country an outlet, it would be but a short time before that whole country would be very largely populated. We required railways very badly fifty years ago and we require them just as badly to-day, and therefore I am heartily in support of the extension branch line programs of both the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Canadian National Railways. I am, however, more deeply interested in the Canadian National Railways, because it is a publicly-owned railway in which the people are deeply concerned, and in which they have a great financial interest. At the same time, however, I do not wish to deprive the Canadian Pacific Railway of its just share of railway building. I believe there is plenty of room for both railways, but I am also of the view that we should put both of those railways on an equal footing. I am very sorry that the resolution proposed by the hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Gardiner) got such little support in the railway committee the other day. I think if his resolution had passed it would have solved one of our great railway problems in Canada to-day, that of putting both railways on an equal footing.

As I review the railway situation in Canada, both railways have been pioneers in certain parts of the Dominion, especially in the west. The Canadian National Railways has been the pioneer in the northern part of Canada, therefore we believe that they have certain prior rights to large areas in the northern part of Canada. The Canadian Pacific Railway has been the pioneer in the southern part of Alberta, and the southern part of Canada, and it is the opinion of some people that they have prior rights because of the pioneering work done by them in that part of the Dominion. But the situation is becoming more complicated now because both railways desire to build in the northern part of Canada. I believe that some agreement should be reached by which we can allocate the territory that has to be served by proposed new branches of both companies in northern Saskatchewan and northern Alberta. And unless we make this agreement the situation will become very complicated indeed. If hon. members will remember the Willingdon-Edmonton situation of last year, and the rank parallelism and high-handed competitive poaching caused thereby, they will, I am sure, before any charters are granted to private companies subject the applications therefor to the closest and most exacting scrutiny. The Toronto Telegram has sized up the situation in an editorial which reads as follows:

If public ownership of railways is not to die in Canada the national railways must be put on an equal footing with the Canadian Pacific Railway in regard to franchises. As things stand at present the privately-owned system is at an immense advantage. It goes to parliament and gets a job lot of franchises. The routes they cover may or may not be built in the five years the franchises cover. If the branches are not built, it is possible, even probable, that the franchises will be renewed.

The Canadian National Railways on the other hand, must come to parliament with a three-year program for which the money must be voted. Also the work must be completed within the three years.

The advantage the Canadian Pacific Railway has is that it can preempt territory and build only if development justifies it. In other words, the Canadian Pacific Railway can option territory without paying out a dollar. It can also, and at the same price, head off extensions that the Canadian National Railways are not ready to go on with at the present time. Baldly, the Canadian Pacific Railway is in a position to hedge around the Canadian National Railways with franchises that threaten its entire future.

Fair play demands that the railways be put on an equal footing. The Canadian Pacific Railway, when granted a franchise, should be required to give an undertaking that the line will be built within three years. And this undertaking should be ironclad.

Yes, Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Pacific has a great advantage over the Canadian National, as has been exemplified in the construction of the Willingdon-Edmonton line, and if we are not careful the same thing will be experienced in other parts of Canada. I think that the only thing to do in order to eradicate a condition of this kind is to put both lines on an equal footing.

Now, what is this Willingdon-Edmonton situation to which I have just referred? In the year 1927 the Canadian Pacific railway was granted a charter to complete the line from Cutknife to Whitford lake. The construction was completed in 1928. During the summer and fall of 1928 they continued construction and finished the line to Edmonton. But before the line had been completed to Edmonton a dispute arose between the two companies, which culminated in a hearing before the Board of Railway Commissioners in Edmonton on June 14, 1928. The Canadian National Railways protested against allowing the Canadian Pacific Railway Company to build their branch line from Willingdon to Edmonton, on the ground that they had no charter rights thereto. In reply, the Canadian Pacific Railway Company stated the Willingdon-Edmonton line could be built under the authority granted for the construction of the Swift Current Northwesterly branch, the route may of which was approved in June, 1919. I might point out here, Mr. Speaker, that only a few small pieces of the grade between Swift Current and Willingdon have been completed, and at that very far apart.

The Swift Current northwesterly branch was built from Swift Current to Empress, about 112 miles, between 1911 and 1914, and a further section between Coronation and Lorraine, about 20 miles, between 1914 and 1915. In 1919 they again took up the question of the extension of this line to Edmonton, and secured the approval of the then Minister of Railways and Canals for a revision of the route, abandoning about fifty miles of the 310 miles already approved to Chatton and extending it via Whitford lake to Edmonton. At the session of parliament in the same year the company obtained authority to extend its Cutknife line to a point in the vicinity of Whitford lake where it was to join the Swift Current-Edmonton line.

In their evidence before the Board of Railway Commissioners the Canadian Pacific Railway Company argued that they were acting under their main charter granted in 1881, by which they were given power to build branches from their main line to any part in Canada. The Canadian National Railway Company claimed that branch lines had to be built continuously from the main line, and that in this case—Willingdon-Edmonton—it was a mere eighty-mile isolated chunk having no real connection with the main line. As a counter argument the Canadian Pacific Railway Company claimed that they could begin building any branch line from whichever end they chose, they could build isolated chunks no matter how far separated, so long as the plan had been approved by the Dominion railway board. "For example," said Mr. Ruel, vice-president of the Canadian National Railways legal department, "the Canadian Pacific Railway by their interpretation might build a railway from Port Nelson on the Hudson bay across the northwestern part of Canada to the mouth of the Mackenzie river, and say it was really a branch from the main line, since the whole plan included a line from Port Nelson down to the main line someday." It would appear, Mr. Speaker, that when we allowed the Canadian Pacific Railway to build across Canada in 1881, we gave that company a charter with very wide powers, powers that were bound to bring both companies into open warfare sooner or later. It is essential therefore that parliament should find some way of putting these two systems on an equality with respect to charter rights. Allow me to read what the Free Press has to say on this point:—

The west has already had examples of Canadian National Railways being blocked in what it regarded as its own territory when the senate rejected its claims on the ground that the Canadian Pacific Railway had obtained a previous charter which it had not executed. The Canadian Pacific Railway was merely reserving the territory for a period of years until it was ready to go in. If allowed to proceed on the five-year charter basis as against the fact that the Canadian National Railways, before it will be granted a charter, must obtain the approval of parliament for the money to build the projected line, the private company can cut the ground from under the government system. The private company can obtain charters for any part of the country where it might have an idea a mineral strike might be made, a power site developed, or a pulp mill constructed. The Canadian National Railways is prevented from doing anything of the kind. It is obvious that parliament must work out some system that will put the two systems on an equality with respect to charter rights. The simple plan would be to follow the procedure now applied to the Canadian National. When the Canadian Pacific Railway sought a charter it would have to bring before parliament the authorization of its shareholders to spend the money on the proposed road within a three-year period, and forfeit its claim to the territory at the end of three years if the line had not been built.

Such a system would give reality to the business of chartering railway lines. It would be fairer to every one. If it is a good system for the government railway system, it should be a good system for the private company.

My objection to the Willingdon-Edmonton line was that it did not go further north; that it paralleled and duplicated the Canadian National railway for forty miles, thus destroying the business chances of such towns as Lamont, Bruederheim and Fort Saskatchewan, in close proximity to which other small stations have been built along the new Canadian Pacific Railway branch. I was very glad to see the railway built in that part of the country, because the farmers had lived there for thirty years, many of them having a haul of thirty-five or forty-five miles to the nearest station and they very much needed railway facilities. But I was very much against the Canadian Pacific Railway building their line in such close proximity to the Canadian National. For forty miles the present Canadian Pacific parallels the Canadian National, and it is one of the most glaring cases of competitive poaching that I know of. Unless this house does something to eradicate this condition of affairs in Canada, we might some day in other parts of the country have situations of the same character. Therefore I think it is high time for parliament to do something with respect to this railway situation, and the best thing we can do is to put the two railways on an equal footing.

Mr. A. E. BOURGEOIS (Kent, N.B.): Mr. Speaker, it is not my intention to take up at any length the time of the house, for, if I mistake not, it is the desire of hon. members on both sides that the business of the house be expedited, consistently, however, with due consideration of all questions which may be submitted.

It is unquestionably a fact that the presentation of the budget is the outstanding event at every session of parliament. It is always most anxiously awaited not only by the house, but by every constituency throughout Canada. We have not been disappointed in our anticipations. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb) has again not only demonstrated his keen executive foresight in matters pertaining to the successful administration of the affairs of our country, but has also clearly pointed out the enormous development which has taken place in Canada during the last six years, particularly during the year ending 1928, and has most conclusively given proof to all the countries with which we do business, in other words to the world at large, of the solid foundation upon which rests the financial structure of our country.

The unprecedented prosperity throughout Canada is attributable above all to a kind Providence, and as well to the indefatigable and persistent efforts of our Canadian people, coupled with the stimulating effects of a government whose sane economic policy and fostering influences have contributed so much to the success of every branch of industry.

We marvel, Mr. Speaker, when looking back over the years, at the enormous expansion of our external trade since 1922, which has within the last eleven months reached the stupendous figure of $2,401,627,966, brought about by the opening up of every possible avenue of trade, by the negotiation of trade treaties with all the important countries of the world, and by the granting of a ten per cent preference to all imports from British possessions entering Canada through Canadian ports. This ten per cent preference has greatly stimulated business in the ports of St. John and Halifax and ports along the St. Lawrence, but I regret that the shipping interests of the states of Maine and Massachusetts were a little annoyed at our policy in that regard. It was, however, just another successful business adventure by the government to stimulate and increase trade through our ports, and not, by any means, a retaliatory measure. We desire to live on the most mutual good fellowship terms with our American friends, who, I am sure, are conscious of the fact that we are endeavouring in our own way, as they are in theirs, to increase the happiness of our people. This enormous expansion has had most beneficial results; it has enabled the Minister of Finance each year since 1922 to proclaim surpluses instead of deficits, aggregating in the last six years the grand total of $226,780,000, and resulting in a decrease of interest charges to the extent of the tidy sum of $16,340,013. Not only this, but by the application of a sane, moderate customs tariff policy and the reduction of the sales tax, stamp tax, and various other forms of taxation, we are pleased to note that the government has been able to save to the people of Canada the large sum of $241,000,000. Surely this is a showing of which we should be justly proud, and for which, on behalf of the constituents whom I have the honour to represent, I desire to extend commendations to the Minister of Finance.

Now, sir, in so far as conditions in New Brunswick are concerned, I may say that agriculture, which is our basic industry, was not during the last year as prosperous as we would have desired, due to a depressed state of the potato market, resulting not from any fault of the government, as some would have us believe—for we in New Brunswick are fully convinced that the prosperity of a country is dependent above all things upon the industry and efforts of its people in every sphere of activity—but due to a super abundant crop throughout Canada and particularly in the United States, where notwithstanding the almost prohibitive duty of fifty cents per hundred pounds we have been able, including what we have placed on the Cuban market, to dispose of the major part of our surplus production of potatoes. But if the extreme views of the protectionists in the United States prevail with respect to an increase in the tariff on agricultural products, it will be our duty to look to the east, as the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) very properly stated in an address made while on a visit to the maritime provinces some two years ago, making reference to the West Indies trade agreement. I sincerely regret the apparent attitude of the extreme protectionists of the United States, for if carried into effect it will no doubt materially affect our exports. However, I am still hopeful, and as an example of the sentiment which prevails among the more cautious, may I be permitted to quote an editorial published in the Atlanta Journal as appearing in the Ottawa Citizen of March 12, 1928:

There are those among the protectionists themselves who realize that America's interest in Canada is such as to render very dubious the adoption of a policy which would discourage trade relations between the countries, and thus arouse antagonism that might prove far more costly to America than any passing advantage from higher duties on our Canadian imports. Canada can no longer be regarded as merely a foreign country and treated as such by the United States. These countries have too much in common and there now exists if not by treaty, yet by custom and practice, an interdependence that cannot be ignored. American investments in Canada to-day amount to billions of dollars, and not even Britain as a whole has contributed so largely to Canadian development as has America.

The Atlanta Journal concludes:

It is needless to remark that American capital in Canada is subject to the laws and customs of the Dominion and dependent thereon for fair treatment and protection. Small wonder when we consider this situation, that there is disquietude in the citadel of some of our protectionists when the tariff makers at Washington threaten excessive and prohibitive rates on Canadian imports. American business well may be aware.

This, Mr. Speaker, is very significant and a very timely warning.

Coming to the question of our fisheries, I may say that the year 1928 has been a fairly successful one. It would have been more successful had not the price of live lobsters —which has become a very important industry along the counties of Kent and Westmorland—on the United States market fallen from 25 cents a pound in 1927 to 15 and 16 cents in 1928. With a corresponding drop for lobsters sold by the fishermen to the canning industries, this very materially affected the receipts from that source, but the loss was offset to some extent by the catch of oysters, particularly in the bays of Buctouche and Cocagne in my constituency. Only about 1,000 barrels were taken in 1927, as against 3,000 barrels more than in 1928. This increase is due to nothing more or less than the strict enforcement of the fishery regulations. It is indeed a very profitable source of revenue to those living in the immediate vicinity, during the legal fishing season, from the 25th of September until the ice forms about the 1st of December. The epicure who desires an excellent barrel of oysters I would advise to ask for the famous Buctouche and Cocagne bay oysters.

Thanks to the government's initiative, we now have a fortnightly service of five steamers plying between the Atlantic ports of St. John and Halifax and the British West Indies, luxuriously and comfortably equipped for the business and tourist trade, which is bound to develop. These steamers are also provided with cold storage and all the necessary facilities for the transportation of all classes of merchandise. There is no question about the developing of a large trade within a very few years with the British West Indies, whose population and that of the American republics total about fifteen millions. There is undoubtedly a vast trading opportunity in that direction. It now only lies with the business men and manufacturers of Canada, and particularly of the maritimes, coupled with the assistance of our trade commissioners, to get busy and go after the trade.

Now, sir, coming to the industrial situation in New Brunswick, I may say that we anticipate a large development of the pulp and paper industry in the near future at Dalhousie and Athol in the county of Restigouche, and near Chatham in the county of Northumberland. And I have no hesitancy in saying that this development is wholly due to the determination and vision of the Foster and Veniot administration of provincial affairs in the inauguration of a public ownership hydro policy. Had that policy been continued instead of bartering away the Grand falls hydro power site to three private pulp and paper corporations, we would in the course of a few years be distributing power not only to these pulp and paper industries, but also to other industries in various parts of the province. Then the whole population in course of time could enjoy a prosperity such as has been realized in the province of Ontario under a policy of public ownership. But, Mr. Speaker, time, I hope, will bring about a realization of the aspirations of the people of New Brunswick in that regard.

Coming to the matter of expenditures on breakwaters, the construction and repairs to wharves in the interest of the successful prosecution of the fisheries by our fishermen, as well as in the interest of shipping along the eastern coast of New Brunswick, I must say that there is no justification for the insinuations of extravagance made by some hon. members on the other side of the house because of the necessity of the government in seeing to the requirements of New Brunswick and of the maritimes as a whole in this regard. I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that when a request is made and favourably reported upon after investigation by the engineering branch at St. John, the work asked for is absolutely necessary, because a staff of engineers more competent and more devoted to the safeguarding of the people's money, at the head of whom is Mr. Geoffrey Stead in the capacity of district engineer for the province of New Brunswick, cannot be found in any part of Canada.

In conclusion I desire to thank the government for what it has done in this matter of public works in my constituency, and for the interest taken in furthering the prosperity of the province of New Brunswick along other lines, particularly the adjustment in the near future of railway matters and the organization of a separate fisheries department, which I hope will tend to a satisfactory solution of the fisheries question.

On motion of Mr. Ralston the debate was adjourned.

On motion of Mr. Robb the house adjourned at 10.32 p.m.

GRADING OF GRAIN

WHEAT—REPORT RESPECTING PROTEIN CONTENT

Report prepared by associate committee on grain research, National Research Council, being interim report on protein content as a factor in grading of wheat.—Mr. Malcolm.

CRIMINAL CODE AMENDMENT—MOTOR VEHICLES

Mr. T. L. CHURCH (Toronto Northwest) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 80, to amend the Criminal Code (motor vehicles).

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Explain.

Mr. CHURCH: The appalling loss of life in this country from motor cars operated by hit and run drivers has been commented on by many supreme court and superior court judges in all of the provinces as well as by grand juries and coroners' juries. Tens of thousands of lives have been lost, and the necessity for the introduction of a bill of this character was emphasized by Chief Justice Meredith at the London assizes last month, when His Lordship made the statement that everyone knew or should know that the provisions of the criminal code were so uncertain and inconsistent as to be quite inadequate to meet present needs in this matter. The object of this bill is to repeal the section in the criminal code relating to motor vehicles and to enact a provision which will more fully meet the situation. The amendment covers reckless driving, injury to persons, racing, cutting in, hit and run driving and the provision that death caused by motor cars shall be deemed to be murder. Under the code as it stands, murder or manslaughter may be charged where the victim dies, in the case of a hit and run driver, but if the victim survives after injuries there is no penalty except fine under the various motor vehicles acts, and there is no section of the code to fit such a case. The amendments are intended to cover such cases.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

Hon. PETER HEENAN (Minister of Labour): In reply I would say that the government are considering the matter.

MOTOR AND PLEASURE BOATS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. P. J. A. CARDIN (Minister of Marine and Fisheries): A few days ago several questions were brought forward by the hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario (Mr. McGibbon) with regard to the licensing of small boats in certain waters. I observe that the hon. member is not in his seat at present, but since he appeared quite anxious to have these questions answered I would like to present a statement which I have prepared in regard to this matter.

For many years past representations have been made to this department concerning the need for rules that would effectively control the motor boat situation, to ensure that all craft operating at night should carry proper lights and that boats should not be driven at excessive speeds in minor waters. Some ten years ago representations along these lines were first submitted to the department by the municipal council of Madora and Wood through Doctor McGibbon, then as now a member of the House of Commons. These representations were endorsed by the Humphrey township council and by the council of the town of Gravenhurst. Since then delegations representing the Muskoka Lakes Association, which is a particularly active body in that district, have been coming to the department urging that regulations be made and put into effect on the Muskoka lakes for the protection of the lives of those who are using these waters. These representations became so insistent that last year the department decided to enact regulations under the provisions of section 7 of chapter 89 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1927, providing for the licensing and operation of small boats in certain areas. It was decided, however, that these regulations should not become effective last year. Due notice was given in the press that these regulations had been enacted and that it was the intention that they should become effective.

As indicating the view taken of these regulations by the Muskoka Lakes Association, the following resolution was passed at the annual meeting of that body, held on August 14, 1928:

Moved by Sir Thomas White and seconded by Mr. F. C. Gratwich that this association fully approve of the new regulations governing small boats, and that our secretary write the Department of Marine thanking the Minister of Marine, the Hon. Mr. Cardin, and the Deputy Minister of Marine, Mr. Johnston, for their kind consideration and courtesy shown our committee who waited on them on several occasions regarding this important matter, and that our secretary in writing request that the new regulations be put in force on our lakes "as described" next spring, and also request that the Department of Marine advertise the new regulations by poster in all the post offices bordering the lakes by April 15th, and give small boat owners one month to procure the necessary equipment before securing their licenses from the harbour traffic officer, and further that this association heartily approves the action of our executive committee in recommending to the Department of Marine Mr. W. R. Winter, our secretary, for the post of harbour traffic officer with headquarters at Port Carling. Carried unanimously.

On the 15th February last the president and secretary of the Muskoka Lakes Association visited the department and requested that an order in council be passed applying the regulations definitely to the Muskoka lakes during the present season. In view of the fact that it was generally known since last July that it was intended to make the regulations effective in that area this year, and no protest having been received from any quarter, accordant action was taken and the order in council of February 28, 1929—P.C. 363—was passed, a copy of which is herewith submitted. A copy of the order in council of July 12, 1928—P.C. 170—enacting the regulations is also submitted herewith.

The regulations are designed, not for the purpose of creating positions or obtaining revenue, but simply and solely for the protection of human life and property. The fees to be derived from the licenses will be applied towards paying the expenses of the traffic officer and the assistance which will be necessary to properly enforce the regulation.

The view of the Muskoka Lakes Association are set forth in a telegram from the president of that association to the Prime Minister, dated March 15, and reading as follows:

Having noticed a criticism of the regulations for Muskoka by Mr. Peter McGibbon made in the House of Commons, I beg to state that the Muskoka Lakes Association of thirty-five years standing and entirely non-political has been negotiating with the Department of Marine for the new regulations for over three years. The members of our association can not be termed as tourists. They are house-owners who pay taxes and operate ten times as many boats as do the yearly residents. Our lakes are positively unsafe without proper regulations and their enforcement. I have personally talked to many yearly residents of Muskoka and found them all strongly in favour of the new regulations and I firmly believe that eighty per cent of the yearly residents are in favour of the new regulations. I wish respectfully to call your attention to our year book and a letter of August 14th to Mr. A. Johnston, Deputy Minister of Marine. I trust, honourable sir, that the criticism made will not have the slightest effect on the new regulations which we have been striving for years to have put in force.

That is the situation.

An hon. MEMBER: They are ships that pass in the night.

Mr. BENNETT: I am quite sure the member for Muskoka-Ontario (Mr. McGibbon) will be very pleased to receive this information from the minister as a striking illustration of government by order in council.

Mr. CARDIN: It could not be done in any other way.

Mr. BENNETT: Oh, yes it could.

[Mr. Cardin.]

THE BUDGET

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON THE ANNUAL FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The house resumed from Friday, March 15, consideration of the motion of Hon. J. A. Robb (Minister of Finance) that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of ways and means, the proposed amendment thereto of Hon. Hugh Guthrie, and the proposed amendment to the amendment of Mr. Spencer.

Hon. J. L. RALSTON (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, in the short time at my disposal I can only extend a brief but very sincere word of congratulation to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb), and also to the country, on the financial proposals which he has put before the house. I will also deal with some phases of the address made by the member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie), and in doing so I desire to pay him the compliment of having delivered an address which was marked with ability, but which at the same time displayed a great deal of ingenuity and dexterity.

The hon. member is a fine advocate and he displayed a good deal of ability in selecting facts and circumstances which would best meet his purposes, and, in disregarding or omitting to make reference to any embarrassing circumstances or facts which would interfere with his arriving at the conclusion which he sought. I will endeavour to point out one or two omissions which he made and which, had he dealt with them, I think might have given a different impression and led to a different result in his reasoning. Take his discussion of what he called the burden of taxation. As has been done previously in this house—for want of a better argument—the hon. member disregarded entirely the fact that there had been reductions in the rates of taxation. He disregarded the fact that under this administration something like $241,000,000 in taxes had been remitted to the people of Canada, and resorted to the expedient of taking an adding machine and arriving at the total amount of revenue received during the last five years of Conservative government and comparing it with the total received during the last five years of Liberal government. He concluded with the argument that because the total of the last five years under Liberal government was $259,000,000 greater than the total of the last five years of Conservative rule, therefore what he calls the burden of taxation has been increased. He even went to the extent of averaging the amount of the increased burden of taxation each year, and reducing that average to a per capita increase. I would point out to the hon. member that the so-called burden of taxation, which is after all the revenue which has been obtained from the people of this country in connection with the administration of the public services, was increased between those two five-year periods by something like 15 per cent. The hon. member cited a statement of the late Right Hon. William Ewart Gladstone that the rate of taxation meant nothing but that the burden of taxation meant everything. He knows, and the members of this house know perfectly well, that when Mr. Gladstone made that statement he referred not only to the amount but to the capability of the people to bear the burden; the burden of taxation does not mean simply the gross amount, but it refers also to the ability of the people to carry that burden. Therefore, I submit, that in this respect the hon. member omitted to mention a very important fact.

I have before me a comparison of the volume of business—after all, that is what taxation is paid upon—for those two five-year periods. These figures, which appear in the statistics of this Dominion, cover the business done in forestry, mining, construction, manufacturing, trade as indicated by employment in trading establishments, imports, exports, car loadings, shares traded in, and bank debits. The index figure representing the volume of business for the years 1919 to 1921—I am sorry I cannot give the hon. member the figures for 1918, the year he began with, because the statistics have not been made up for that year—is 93.1. I have the same figure for the last four years of Liberal rule—the hon. member referred to the last five years—from 1925 to 1928 inclusive, and it is not 93.1, as it was for the last three years of Conservative rule, but 141.8. There has therefore been an increase of 50 per cent in the volume of business and an increase of less than 15 per cent in revenue collected. That is a very salient fact which the hon. member omitted to mention. He might just as well have said because the country paid $17,000,000 more freight rates last year than was paid the year before that it can be said that there was an increase in the burden of freight rates. But there was no such thing; there was an increase in business, and business was perfectly willing to pay for the facilities to carry on and to take advantage of the prosperity which existed in this country. When my hon. friend compared the period of 1918 to 1922 with the period of 1925 to 1929, he made a comparison concerning a different Canada altogether; a Canada which had emerged from the gloom which existed during the last five years of Conservative rule and had entered into the sunlight of prosperity under Liberal rule.

Allow me to mention another omission which my hon. friend made. It is always a good test to find out what a governing or directing body does with the money which is paid in to or collected by that institution. The hon. member stated that during the period from 1918 to 1922 our friends the Conservatives received and spent $1,739,802,000. That is true. They received that amount and they spent it. But what more did they do? They did not balance their expenditures and I want my hon. friends to note that I have allowed them for all the expenses which are known as war and demobilization expenses.

Mr. BENNETT: For what year?

Mr. RALSTON: For the years 1918 to 1922, and I think my hon. friends, when they are permitted to take off the total of the war and demobilization expenses, are getting the benefit of a good deal, because many items which really belong to current expenses appear in that particular account. I have also given them the benefit of assets transferred from the active to the non-active list, and I still find they are in the hole to the extent of $149,839,-032, after receiving the full amount of $1,739,-802,000 which my hon. friend mentioned the other day. In other words, to take care of current outgoings, leaving aside the transfer of assets from the active to the non-active list, and war and demobilization expenditures, they required $1,889,641,032.

Mr. BENNETT: My hon. friend must be wrong as to that because Mr. Fielding in 1922 said just the opposite. He said the railway deficits.

Mr. RALSTON: I will give my hon. friends the figures taken from the public accounts. I repeat that, having allowed my hon. friends war and demobilization expenses amounting to $1,155,510,989 and after having deducted $237,599,483 for transfer of assets from the active to the non-active list, I find that there is still an increase in debt of $149,839,032. I add that to the amount which my hon. friends collected as revenue and I find the figure which I gave a moment ago of $1,889,641,032.

On the other hand let us take the five years of Liberal rule. As my hon. friend said, we collected $1,998,991,000 and instead of adding to the public debt, as my hon. friends did, to the tune of $149,000,000, we paid off $190,715,-041 of the debt created by my hon. friends opposite, with the result that all we had to spend for current outgoing was not $1,889,000,-000 odd, which my hon. friend referred to, but $1,808,275,959.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Has the minister made any allowance in his figures for railway deficits?

Mr. RALSTON: I expected my hon. friend would ask that. The Conservatives did lend the railways on account of deficit and capital $213,000,000 more than the Liberals did out of current outlay, but on the other side the Liberals paid for pensions and interest $207,000,000 more than the Conservatives did, so that one almost balances the other.

Mr. GUTHRIE: The statement which I made, and which is in Hansard, was that this revenue did not take account of war demobilization and railway expenditures.

Mr. RALSTON: I am pointing out that the amount of money which my hon. friends collected was not sufficient to balance current outgoings and they had to go into debt to the tune of $149,000,000.

Mr. BENNETT: That is not so.

Mr. RALSTON: We collected $259,000,000 more but we were able to pay off $190.000,000 of their debt.

Mr. STEVENS: Where does my hon. friend find that in the public accounts?

Mr. RALSTON: My hon. friend will have an opportunity to reply. I have waited quite a while for my forty minutes.

Mr. STEVENS: The statement is not correct.

Mr. BENNETT: The statement is not correct. Mr. Fielding's budget is clear.

Mr. RALSTON: I am speaking of the statement by the hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie). Let us consider another admission which my hon. friend made. He spoke at some length of the increase in imports of agricultural implements, and he rather indicated that this was injuring the agricultural implement industry in this country. I think it would have been fair if he had compared the import of agricultural implements with the actual increase in production of agricultural implements in this country. Let me give the figures for two years.

Year	Production

An increase of practically 50 per cent in those four years, notwithstanding the decrease in duty of which my hon. friend complained. Something else happened. Nobody apparently was hurt very much by the decrease in duty and by the additional importation of agricultural implements.

Mr. MANION: Except the people of Canada who did not get the work.

Mr. RALSTON: There can be only two reasons for the importation of agricultural implements. One is that the farming community must have been able to secure them cheaper, or else the Canadian industry must have been so rushed with orders that it did not have an opportunity to manufacture them to supply the demand. We must also remember at the same time that during those four years, or, in fact, during two years, Massey-Harris stock, which in March, 1926, was worth fifty, in March, 1927, had risen to one hundred and fourteen. It was split four to one in April, 1927, and to-day it is at eighty-four. In other words, the old stock that was worth $50 is now worth $336, which is an indication that the agricultural implement industry is not suffering.

Mr. McGIBBON: The money was not made in Canada.

Mr. RALSTON: I will give my hon. friend an opportunity. Let me point this out. My hon. friends have talked a good deal and the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. Manion) was particularly strong in talking about red-blooded Canadianism, and the fact that by a stroke of the pen—

Mr. MANION: I did not use that term at all.

Mr. RALSTON: Well, two or three other hon. gentlemen did. The hon. member for South Wellington said half a dozen strokes of the pen would stop these importations—

Mr. MANION: I used the term "red-blooded" but not "a stroke of the pen."

Mr. RALSTON: He said last year that red-blooded Canadianism would wipe out those imports. My hon. friend was a member of a government years ago.

Mr. MANION: Not for long.

Mr. RALSTON: No. I have taken occasion to look up the record of what was imported from the United States in those years and after all this red-blooded Canadianism did not seem to have asserted itself very much. I find that the figures with regard to our trade with the United States are as follows:

Fiscal Year	Adverse trade balance
1912-13	$285,000,000
1913-14	219,000,000

This was money going over to the United States in excess of what was coming back into Canada. I have jumped over the war years because I think that is fair.

1919-20	$299,000,000
1920-21	295,000,000

It stood at between $200,000,000 and $300,000,000 against us very year my hon. friends were in power since 1911, except in the war years, and yet that red-blooded Canadianism did not assert itself. That old clock in the Victory tower which the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Brady) described, was not going, but another one was, and those dollars were going over the United States border. Nevertheless the old pen was allowed to rust on the desk, and the old ink-well was empty. There was no stroke of the pen at any time. I think my hon. friends ought to begin at home. Of course this red-blooded Canadianism exerts itself now that my hon. friends are in opposition. I am reminded of two boys at school who were about to engage in an altercation. The teacher got one of them firmly by the back of the neck, and then the boy got very courageous and shouted: "Let me at him!" Now that my hon. friends are restrained by the fact that they are in opposition, now that they have no responsibility, they are very red-blooded when they are over there, but it is a different story when they get on the treasury benches. As a matter of fact, money is constantly going over to the United States, just as it always has been. I want to remind my hon. friends that we have had in this country during the last year or two some reasons even for increases in imports from the United States. We are using in this country a good deal of machinery which is not made here, and if my hon. friends had attended before the tariff board, they would have heard Canadian manufacturers themselves admitting that much of this machinery could not be made here. Industry in this country is constantly expanding, and we are needing this machinery. Machinery and facilities are needed for the development of our resources all over the Dominion, and it is as a result of that that there has been some increase in imports from the United States. But I do think that industry in this country has obtained full value for what it has imported, and that workmen in Canada are fairly well employed, notwithstanding what my hon. friends opposite have said with regard to conditions in the large centres. I am going to deal in a moment with the figures given by my hon. friend the acting leader of the opposition in regard to unemployment, but I suggest that my hon. friends opposite begin housecleaning at home rather than use all their red-blooded Canadianism only when they are sitting on the other side of the house.

Mr. MANION: The house needs it more when you are over there.

Mr. RALSTON: My hon. friend—I do not mean this personally—supplies it at least so far as putting it on record is concerned, but I do not think he has done much over on this side.

Mr. MANION: I was not there long enough.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: All the white corpuscles are over there.

Mr. RALSTON: Now my hon. friend from South Wellington selected certain figures with regard to unemployment, and he indicated that unemployment was greater now. He said that he had the employment index figures and would give them. He turned them up and gave something which I think rather astounded the house. I do not think very many people realized that there was such a figure in existence. What did he give? He gave the figures of unemployment for December 1922 as 6.4 and for December 1928 as 6.6. If he had looked at the title at the top of the table—I have no doubt that he had in his hands the Labour Gazette of February 1929, the very same book I have in my hands now—he would have seen that he was quoting from the "Percentage of Unemployment as Reported by Trades Unions", and if he had read, as he should have done, the article in which this table is inserted, he would have found that this was a report from 1,695 labour organizations with 190,000 odd members. That was not a large percentage of the number of people who are employed in the Dominion of Canada. If my hon. friend wanted to use the unemployment figures, I submit that he should not have picked out the month of December, because that is not a very good month for anybody; it is not a very good month to select if the purpose is to indicate what the normal conditions are. He should at least have taken the average for the year. If he had done that, he would have found that the average unemployment figure in 1922 was 7, and in 1928, 4.5. But he could have done better than that if he had turned back a few pages in the book from which he was quoting. Then he would have found, not the unemployment figures for 1,695 labour organizations with 190,000 odd members, but the employment figures as reported by firms in Canada employing over 15 men, whether in trades unions or not, and running up to about 910,000 employees. That is the figure he would have found just a few pages back, but apparently he missed that. I am going to give the figures that appear on page 206 of that same record; they show that the employment figure in Canada in 1922 was 78.8 and in 1928, 116.6. Those are the figures which are given in the book which my hon. friend had in his hands. I wish to point out also that employment in the last six months of 1928 was at the highest point it has ever reached since these statistics have been kept.

Let me add, for the benefit of my friends from the maritime provinces, that employment in the maritime provinces for the last six months of 1928 reached the highest point it has ever reached since the record began and particularly as regards winter employment. The figures show this comparison. In November, 1927, the employment figure was 100.1, and in November, 1928, the figure was 109.5; in December 1927 it was 99.1, and in December 1928, 108.1; in January 1928, it was 97.1, and in January, 1929, 103.3. I have another figure even more recent, showing that in February, 1928, the employment figure was 97, and in February 1929, 104.6.

Mr. PRICE: Where did my hon. friend get those figures regarding the maritime provinces, did he get them from the employment bureau?

Mr. RALSTON: I get them from page 206 of the Labour Gazette of February, 1929, from the returns made to the labour department by firms employing 15 men or over.

I should have liked to speak of conditions in the maritime provinces generally, with regard to agriculture, with regard to the great fishing industry which is developing there by leaps and bounds, with regard to the manufacturing industry, and with regard to lumbering. But my good friends from Pictou (Mr. Cantley) and Cumberland (Mr. Smith) have succeeded in making me feel that it is perhaps desirable, both for their information and the information of the house and of the maritime provinces, that I mention one or two matters in connection with the steel and coal industry, because that seemed to be what particularly concerned them. They have talked in this house for a number of sessions about what is known as the Duncan report, and they are down at the present time to one single point. I say that advisedly, because I listened carefully to my hon. friend from Cumberland to hear just exactly what his objections were. He spoke of having the Duncan report implemented in toto—that was the word he used, I listened carefully to hear in what particular respect he considered the report had not been implemented, and that one thing was with regard to steel and coal. My hon. friend from Pictou was discussing exactly the same thing. I just want to remind the house of what the exact situation is with regard to steel and coal, so that at least the facts may be put on record. There was a bonus recommended by the Andrew Rae Duncan commission, the exact terms of which recommendation were:

> We recommend that a bonus should be given in respect of steel when Canadian coal is used in its manufacture, and that the bonus should be calculated on the basis of the present drawback for every ton of coal used in such manufacture.

They recommended a bonus in respect of steel, calculated on the amount of coal which goes into its manufacture. My hon. friend says that that recommendation has not yet been carried out by the government, and that is the burden of his complaint. I have already pointed out to my hon. friend, and it has been emphasized on many occasions in this house, that the steel and coal industry are absolutely interwoven. I believe that no one will agree more readily than my hon. friend from Pictou that the interests of steel and coal in the maritime provinces, and particularly in Nova Scotia, are almost inseparable and are inextricably bound up. If, for instance, assistance is given to coal, then instantly that is reflected in the price which steel has to pay for coal, and that immediately is reflected in the question whether or not there can be successful operation of the steel plant, and whether steel at this new cost can be sold at a profit. On the other hand, if you have assistance given to the steel industry, since it is located directly above the coal mines, you have immediately the question whether steel may not contribute something of that assistance towards coal, whether there will not be an increased production of steel leading to a larger consumption of coal, thereby reducing the overhead. So these two great industries are bound up, and I believe that every man in Nova Scotia and the maritime provinces generally will agree with me in that.

At the present time the coal industry in Nova Scotia is operated by a company under the control of those who own the bonds, and the steel industry is in the hands of and being operated by a receiver. Last session I pointed out the necessity and the desirability of unifying these industries and of reorganizing them so that anyone who proposed that they be assisted might be able to show what earnings were necessary to make a fair return on the capitalization. There are still fourteen large companies to be dealt with. I understand that a new company has been incorporated, but that the reorganization has not yet taken place. Regarding any proposal for assistance I do feel, and I think my hon. friend will agree with me in this, that those who are vitally interested financially ought to be the best judges of how to proceed. They have to have experience of actual operating conditions in order to determine their cost of production, their markets and their competition. Now on the question of delay, it may surprise the house to know that the final coal brief, the brief on which the application is proceeding at the present time, was filed with the Tariff Advisory Board only on November 21, 1928—not two years ago as my hon. friend suggested. My hon. friend knows—I think he was present at the hearing—that that brief puts forward a request, not to the government but to the Tariff Advisory Board, that the bonus which is recommended by the Duncan report should be granted to coal. On the other hand, a brief was filed by the receiver in respect of the steel company, and almost its very first words are a reference to this same thing, namely, the bonus recommended by the Duncan report. It does not ask for a bonus for steel in so many words, but the reference is there, and it was indicated to the tariff board that the steel people considered they should be paid that bonus. This means that the coal people are asking that this relief be afforded them as part of tariff relief, and it means also that the steel people are standing off and saying: We are going to have it in any case, and we are going to have further relief by the amendment of several items in the tariff. It is also important to note that the final steel brief was not filed until November 23, 1928.

The coal hearing went on for three or four days after November and was adjourned until January, 1929, when further hearings took place. There is no question of delay on the part of the government or the Tariff Advisory Board. The solicitor for the receiver said himself on November 27, 1928:

> The brief does raise some new points, but unfortunately, with all the effort we put on it, we could not bring it before the board earlier than we did. We fully appreciate the position you take, and the time and care involved in any investigation relating to an industry such as this, and of course I should think it wise that that full investigation be assured.

That is the situation with regard to those two industries. Yet my hon. friend has been complaining that nothing has been done, notwithstanding the fact that those who are in the industry admit that you must have the fullest investigation, and notwithstanding the fact that the mattter of a bounty on coal or a bounty on steel is wrapped up in the tariff, because the foundation of the claim for the bonus is that there has been a rebate of duty granted in connection with coal coming in for steel-making purposes.

Now this question of tariffs on coal and steel is not by any means a simple one. What happened before the Tariff Advisory Board on the application of the steel company for an increased duty on billets? It was opposed by no less than three big companies. The application for an increased duty on skelp was opposed by three big companies. The application for an increased duty on sheets was opposed by thirteen separate companies. The application for an increased duty on bars and rods was opposed by eleven companies. The coal application was opposed as well, as my hon. friend knows. Some hon. gentlemen in this house are connected with those opposing companies. For instance, I understand that the firm of my hon. friend from Lincoln (Mr. Chaplin) was opposing, as they had of course a right to do, the relief which the Nova Scotia industries were trying to get. My good friend from West Hamilton (Mr. Bell) was present in his professional capacity, and what do you spppose he was doing? I would have expected my hon. friend from Pictou (Mr. Cantley) to take him in hand. My hon. friend from West Hamilton was actually propounding the heresy that there be free pig iron. To add insult to injury, the province of British Columbia was represented officially in opposition to any increase of duty on coal.

Mr. PRICE: May I ask the Minister of National Defence what the Prime Minister of Canada said at Amherst during the campaign of 1926? Free trade or protection.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. PRICE: He said protection. The records will show it.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. RALSTON: It rather indicates that the application is not just as simple as my hon. friends would think. As a matter of fact, it aroused considerable opposition. It is of prime importance to the Dominion to have the steel and coal schedule so settled that the industry may work under stable conditions. I believe my hon. friend will agree with me that it was physically impossible to make a new steel schedule in time for this budget when the adjournment of the hearing took place on January 29. I may say that the board employed two experts, Mr. D. H. MacDougall and Mr. J. Dix Fraser, men who were not unsympathetic by any means to the Nova Scotia steel and coal industry, and I am informed that they both concurred in the view that it was physically impossible to deal with the schedule in time for the budget this session.

This is a summary of the position: The question was brought before the tariff board, and rightly so; it was brought there by the company itself; and it is equally sound policy, in the national interest to have it considered there; the briefs on which the applications are actually being based were not filed until November 21 and November 23, and the hearings were not completed at the adjournment on January 29 of this year; coal and steel are inextricably involved and wrapped up, and any tariff relief by way of bonus to one has to be considered in connection with the other.

I am glad to say that the year's operations have been better than those in previous years. I am glad to have it reported to me that sixty thousand tons more of coal were mined during the three months of December, January and February than during the corresponding months last year, and that there were nine days' more work last January and February than a year ago. I am glad also to have it reported to me that the steel output has increased by some 18 per cent. It is also very satisfactory to know that the extensive branch line mileage this year will create an extra demand for steel. But I do not wish the house to think for one minute that either I or the people of Nova Scotia are satisfied with the position of the coal and steel industry. The prices for coal and the prices for steel are low, particularly for certain products of the steel industry. But I believe we should congratulate both the men and the management on the way in which they have conducted the industry during the past year. I am satisfied that every fair-minded man will realize that all the ramifications and complications incident to a revision of the steel and coal tariff make it imperative that there should be the fullest investigation, as counsel for the receiver himself suggested, in order that the government may intelligently study the representations which have been made to the tariff board.

My friend has spoken of the steel industry as if he and his party were the only people to whom it could look for assistance. The other night he spoke of Russian coal. I think he might have been a little more frank with the house. He did not say that that coal was anthracite coal. Nor did he state that anthracite coal is not subject to duty.

Mr. CANTLEY: I did.

Mr. RALSTON: I beg my hon. friend's pardon; I accept his word. Then he did not tell us that it was his party that took the duty off anthracite coal in 1887.

Mr. STEVENS: 1887?

Mr. RALSTON: Consequently there is no duty on anthracite coal, and that is why it is coming in. He spoke of Russion coal displacing Canadian coal; but as a matter of fact it is displacing American anthracite. That is the policy of his party to let in anthracite free. They are also the ones who took the duty off coke for all purposes so as to permit the Americans to convert their bituminous coal into coke and bring it in here free of duty. They had the chance to renew the bonus on steel, but they did not renew it. It is just another case of doing very little when in power and a good deal of talking when out of power. They had a chance to help the industry in connection with the rebate of duty on coal used in the smelting of metals. A rebate had been granted in connection with coal used for this purpose, and in 1914 under my hon. friend's administration the word "melting" was added so that all foundries would get their coal free of duty. I do not think my hon. friends ought to claim to be entirely the friends of the coal industry in view of their record. They gave a rebate on rods used for fencing. It was good for the agricultural industry but it did not benefit the steel industry. And what do we find on the other side of the slate? On the other side we find the steel policy of this country as laid down by Mr. Fielding in 1897 whereby a bonus was granted on steel when Canadian coal was used in its production, and that gave the steel industry in the maritime provinces its first real opportunity to make headway. But my hon. friends never renewed the bonus. We find also that the Liberal party granted a substantial duty on slack coal. It was only 14 cents at first but the Liberal party increased it to 50 cents. Again, we find the Liberal party taking coal for bunker purposes from the free list and making it liable to a duty with the result that the maritime industry benefited to the extent of 50,000 tons last year. There have also been freight subventions. I wish I had time to give the house an idea of what has developed as a result of the granting of these subventions in the last year. Contracts were closed for waterborne coal amounting to 175,000 tons, which were moved in addition to all rail movements amounting to 50,000 tons, and there will be moved this spring another 25,000 tons. In other words, 250,000 tons have been moved under that subvention. It may be said that some of that business would have been done in any case. It is estimated that 40,000 tons would have been carried anyway, and the estimate remains that 210,000 additional tons of maritime coal have been used by reason of the subvention granted by this government. Now I would ask my hon. friends opposite to point to anything their party has done which has increased the production of Nova Scotia coal 210,000 tons in one year.

I wished to say a word generally with regard to the report to which my hon. friend has referred, but I have not much time left. As I say, he has dealt only with one particular question, steel and coal. I have not an opportunity to point out all that has been done, but I wish the house and the people of Nova Scotia to realize that this government has tried to deal fairly with that report. Harbour commissions have been appointed and money has been loaned to them; a deputy minister of fisheries has been appointed, as recommended; freight rates subventions have been granted, such as I have described; and $875,000 by way of interim payment has been paid out yearly in addition to the regular provincial subsidy. There has been at the same time a 20 per cent reduction in local and westbound freight rates. Now I want the house to understand this, that neither I nor any other man from the maritime provinces regard this as a dole, but as a right to which the maritime provinces were entitled; and my only complaint is that this was made necessary by the fact that when my hon. friends were in power, from 1911 to 1921, they were asleep at the switch so far as the maritime provinces were concerned, permitting an increase in freight rates three times on the Intercolonial railway before there was any corresponding increase on other lines. This government had therefore to come to the rescue, and that is why I say that what has been given is not a dole. The sum of over $7,000,000 has been paid out or will have been paid out this year on account of the 20 per cent reduction in freight rates. And there has been, in spite of that—

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: Time.

Mr. W. G. ERNST (Queens-Lunenburg): I have known the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Ralston) as a soldier, and I have known him as an advocate, and as I listened to him this afternoon I came to the conclusion that he had lost none of his courage as the one and none of his skill as the other, in presenting a hopless case; and I could not help wishing that he were better informed on the subject he has presented to-day than he was only a short year ago when he attempted to dabble in the fishing industry in Nova Scotia. I recollect that in the summer of 1927 there were operating off the coast of that province two trawlers of Spanish origin. They desired to go into a Nova Scotia port and transship their fish to Spain and they sought by different avenues to obtain permission. The result would, of course, have been a much greater productivity on the part of those trawlers. Well, after trying different avenues they applied to the Minister of National Defence, who took up their cause, which he pleaded with the Commissioner of Customs, requesting that the Spanish trawlers be allowed to enter a Nova Scotia port and land their catch for shipment to Spain.

Mr. RALSTON: What are the names?

Mr. ERNST: In a moment I will read my hon. friend's telegram.

Mr. RALSTON: Yes, do.

Mr. ERNST: On behalf of an apparent friend of his in Halifax he asked that the trawlers be allowed to go into Halifax in order to transship their catch, and in his telegram he suggested that such a course would have no prejudicial effect on the fisheries of the Dominion. I was aware that we shipped from Nova Scotia, or had shipped in times past, salt codfish to Spain, Portugal and Italy, and I therefore took the trouble to turn up the records from which I find that in 1927 we shipped to Spain fish to the value of $4,357; to Portugal, $90,702, and to Italy, $855,038. I ask the minister now whether the adoption of such a policy as he advocated in his telegram would not in his opinion prejudice the industry. Let me read the telegram. It is dated Yarmouth, N.S., July 8, 1927:

R. W. Breadner,
Commissioner of Customs,
Ottawa, Ont.

James Fraser Halifax representing parties who operate two trawlers under Spanish flag advises me that operators wish to send trawlers to Halifax to transship green fish one to the other the loaded trawler returning to Spain or tranship to French vessel for Spain. They tell me that there is some regulation under which they may be liable to pay one cent per pound. Think there must be some way out of this. It is represented that it does not in any way prejudicially affect fishing industry and is serious loss to port. Would appreciate your personal attention.

J. L. Ralston.

Now, seeing that we market dry codfish in Spain, I ask the Minister of National Defence whether the first effect of such a policy as he urged in that telegram would not be to cause us to lose that market, and whether, secondly, if we lost the Spanish market we should not also in due course lose the market in Portugal, which is adjacent? Furthermore, Newfoundland, which ships large quantities to Spain, must be affected likewise. And we have to lose, too, eventually, the Italian market in order that the Minister of National Defence might gratify the desire of a friend in Halifax—and apparently without his having inquired into the industry. Such a policy, I say, would represent the sacrifice of $1,000,000 worth of business to the Dominion fishing industry.

Mr. RALSTON: What was the export to Spain?

Mr. ERNST: The figure is $4,357. And, as hon. gentlemen know, Portgual is adjacent to Spain. The market in Portugal represents $90,702 and that in Italy $855,038. But what I am pointing out is the principle of allowing trawlers of foreign origin to come and use our ports as a basis of operations. Once you start that sort of thing with one nation you will have to extend the privilege to others.

Mr. CHAPLIN: It is against our law too.

Mr. ERNST: Yes, certainly. Let me direct the attention of the house again to the wording of the telegram:

They tell me that there is some regulation under which they may be liable to pay one cent per pound. Think there must be some way out of this.

It seems to me this afternoon the minister was exhibiting the same attitude towards the fulfilment of the provisions of the Duncan report; he thinks there must be some way out of it. In the case of fish, the duty was imposed by his government; his government were responsible for the collection of the duty but he, as a responsible minister of the crown, thought there must be some way out.

Mr. RALSTON: Will my hon. friend just follow that through? I have not the faintest recollection of it.

Mr. ERNST: I will hand the file to the minister just as soon as I have finished with it.

Mr. RALSTON: I thought my hon. friend would follow it through and see what was done.

Mr. ERNST: Mr. Breadner stood by his guns and the minister was refused.

Mr. RALSTON: Does my hon. friend know who James Fraser was?

Mr. ERNST: No, I do not; I presume the minister knows, but I do not think it makes the slightest bit of difference who he was. The point is that the minister was trying to find a way out of the regulations imposed by his own government.

Mr. RALSTON: My hon. friend intimated that it was for a friend of mine.

Mr. ERNST: I said apparently it was a friend of the minister's, but my hon. friend will have time in due course to make his explanation.

Mr. RALSTON: That is the point; I will not have time.

Mr. ERNST: I feel quite sure that the fishermen of Nova Scotia will require quite an explanation from the Minister of National Defence.

When the minister was dealing with the recommendations of the Duncan report he referred to the bounty of 50 cents a ton on coal used in the manufacture of steel, and I could not help wondering at his attitude. In 1927 he made a speech in this house during which he gave the house to understand that he was in favour of complete implementation of the report; during the session of 1928 he made another speech on the subject and at that time proposed three conditions which should be met before the report could be implemented. One condition was that the litigation in which the industry was involved should cease; the second was a reorganization and the third a recapitalization. To-day only the litigation has been settled, but I ask the Minister of National Defence whether it is not a fact that when the Duncan commission made its report the conditions with regard to organization and capitalization were exactly the same as they are to-day? So that Sir Andrew Rae Duncan had an opportunity to take all these facts into consideration. The capitalization was exactly as it is to-day; the organization was exactly as it is to-day, and in the face of those conditions the Duncan commission recommended this bounty.

Mr. RALSTON: To whom?

Mr. ERNST: To the government, for implementation.

Mr. RALSTON: To whom was the bounty to be paid?

Mr. ERNST: To the steel industry in the province of Nova Scotia. But my hon. friend is quibbling—

Mr. BENNETT: "I think there must be some way out of it."

Mr. ERNST: The point is that the recommendation is there, but each year the minister brings up more conditions, and it seems to me that the only condition whereby we will have the report fulfilled will be to put the minister and the government out of office.

Now, sir, I desire to go back for a few moments to the fishing industry. Last year the minister made quite a lengthy speech in this connection during which he told of all the things the government were doing for the industry and the great progress which was being made. The latest statistics available with regard to employment in the fishing industry in the province of Nova Scotia are for 1927, and I want to compare them with the figures for 1914, which is the last of the normal pre-war years. In 1914 there were 5,832 men engaged in the fishing industry in Prince Edward Island; in 1927 there were 4,136, a decrease of 1,696; in 1914 there were 29,364 men in Nova Scotia engaged in this industry; in 1927 there were 19,749, a decrease of 9,617; in New Brunswick there were 22,034 men engaged in fishing in 1914 and 12,344 in 1927, a decrease of 9,690. In other words, between 1914 and 1927 the fishing industry in the three maritime provinces lost over 21,000 men, and since this government came into office in 1922, "this government which fosters and assists the basic industries," Nova Scotia has lost 4,230 men. These men have gone to the United States, almost without exception; if you go to Gloucester you will find that a very high percentage of the captains sailing ships operating out of that port come from the southern shore of Nova Scotia. That is the condition of the fishing industry.

Mr. ILSLEY: Is not that due somewhat to the Fordney tariff of 1922?

Mr. ERNST: Undoubtedly it is partly due to that, but it seems to me that if the government would only take a lesson from their failure to meet the Fordney tariff in 1922, we will not get into any difficulties in that respect during the coming year.

Now, what have the government done for this industry? In 1927 they appointed a royal commission to inquire into the condition of the fishing industry; that commission cost the country something over $85,000 and brought in a report which was tabled late last session, too late to come before parliament. Since that report was tabled, however, the government have taken some steps to assist the industry. I have seen great, flaming articles telling of what the government have done. One such article appeared in a magazine called the Canadian Fisherman, telling how the government had reorganized the Department of Marine and Fisheries. In what does that reorganization consist? The government have appointed Mr. Found, who was director of fisheries, to be Deputy Minister of Fisheries; they have created a fisheries intelligence service and appointed as its head Mr Paisley, who was editor of a paper in the city of Sydney, a gentleman who knew nothing about fish but who wrote the most bitter, partisan Liberal articles to appear in any newspaper in Canada. Mr. Paisley was formerly editor of the Sydney Record and now has been made head of the fisheries intelligence service. The government also boast of the changes which have been made in the regulations in order to assist this industry, but those changes are so minor that they cannot be mentioned on the floor of the house.

Then we are told that the government have brought in two bills this session in the interests of the fishing industry, bills 25 and 26. One of these bills provides for the further inspection of fish and the other provides that the lobster seasons be made statutory. It also contains another provision with respect to steam trawlers, one of the most innocuous paragraphs ever to be put into any statute. This paragraph provides that steam trawlers cannot operate from our ports unless they are owned in Canada; broadly speaking, that is the provision. I say to the house that this paragraph is inserted for one purpose only; it is quite innocuous except for the fact that it is placed there to save the government from their own sins. On July 20, 1920, Mr. Edwards, the Assistant Deputy Minister of Justice, was asked to define what constituted a Canadian fishing vessel, since only Canadian fishing vessels can land their fish in the ports of this country free of duty. Trawlers did not actually operate until 1922, although during the war they were permitted by special order in council to operate in order to supply food. In July, 1920, Mr. Edwards gave his opinion as follows:

I am of the opinion on consideration, that the words in question—

That is, Canadian fishing vessels.

—should be construed to mean fishing vessels owned by British subjects . . . . domiciled in Canada.

If that opinion is sound—and the Minister of National Defence, as a lawyer, knows that it is sound—the government have been violating the law for the past seven years in allowing these trawlers to land their fish duty free, and now they bring in a bill which they wave before the fishermen as being of great assistance to them, but which is of no assistance to anyone but the government themselves.

I suppose they also point to the tariff provisions in the present budget; those provisions, so far as they affect the fishermen, consist of four tariff items. The first item refers to rubber gaskets; the Minister of Finance, when he presented his budget with a great flourish, announced that aid was being given to the fishermen through a reduction of the duty on rubber gaskets. So far as I can find out rubber gaskets are used for only one purpose, for sealing sardine tins, and this reduction will aid only one corporation in the province of New Brunswick.

Mr. HANSON: Friends of the government.

Mr. ERNST: The next item is metal swivels; these are used by a very limited class of fishermen, and I doubt if more than 100 fishermen in the three maritime provinces use them at all. The next item is needles of a class or kind not made in Canada for use in repairing fish nets, and I think that provision might save a man one-tenth of one cent per year. The next item covers gasoline engines and their parts. Over 85 per cent of the gasoline engines used in the fishing industry of the three maritime provinces have been manufactured in those provinces. This means a direct blow by the government at the gasoline-engine factories; a direct blow by the government at an industry in the maritimes. To sum it all up, it amounts only to a benefit of two cents per man engaged in the fishing industry.

The minister referred last year to the biological station and told us of the wonderful work which was being done in developing the process of brine freezing, which was to revolutionize the fishing industry. This brine-freezing process, which is practised in a commercial way in the United States and I believe in Great Britain, is capable of doing much for the industry, but I ask the government: How does it propose to see that this benefit is passed on to the ordinary fishermen who are scattered along the thousands of miles of our coast? As it stands at present it will be gobbled up by the corporations and the fishermen will not even get a smell of it. What is needed is a system whereby practical fishery officers would be placed in each fishing district, similar to the system practised by the provincial governments who place agricultural representatives in each agricultural district. Under such a system the practical fisherman along the coast would be helped by the work of the biological station, and until that system is adopted I can only construe the results obtained by the biological station as being intended for the benefit of the corporations, nearly all of which are favourable to the government.

There was a majority and minority recommendation in the report of the commissioners with reference to the trawler question. The majority recommendation was that the steam trawlers should be abolished; the minority recommendation was that they should be regulated. What is the attitude of the government in relation to the trawler question? Both the corporations and the fishermen have a right to know what is in store for them; they have a right to know whether they can count upon a condition of stability. This is a matter of vital importance to the fishing industry in the three maritime provinces and I ask the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Ralston), who represents the province of Nova Scotia, what is to be the policy of the government with regard to steam trawlers? Is he, as indicated in his telegram, seeking to find some way out of this difficulty?

The recommendation was also made that a minister of fisheries be appointed. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) announced to the house in his own pleasant manner that the government would appoint a minister in its own good time; that it would settle upon a policy but only in its own good time. It seems to me that the policy of this government is to do things in its own good time rather than in time for the good of the country. Immediate attention is vital to this industry and it is not fair to the fishing industry of the three maritime provinces that they should be asked to wait until the political squabbles in the ranks of the government are settled. The government has men who are capable of filling this office, men who are practical fishermen. The pronouncement upon fisheries which was made last year by the Minister of National Defence it would seem to me might better have come from the lips of some practical man who understood the industry.

I have dealt with the recommendations of the report, but there are two suggestions I wish to make with relation to the industry itself. If the fishing industry is to survive in the maritime provinces we must organize the fishermen cooperatively. To-day the fisherman is buying and selling retail and the middleman is getting the profit both ways.

Mr. HEAPS: What do the fishermen actually get for their fish?

Mr. ERNST: I can not give the hon. member the exact price, but the average income of the shore fishermen is not more than $300 per year. They should be organized cooperatively in order to eliminate the middleman and get what is coming to them. They should be given an effective voice in dealing with the government and the corporations. In 1905 the government of Nova Scotia placed an act upon the statute books which made possible an organization in eastern Nova Scotia. That legislation was brought about through the indefatigable work of Mr. Moses H. Nickerson, who has always been a great friend of the fishermen. In 1927 that act had become obsolete and it was then amended and consolidated. During the early part of last year the minister told me that this was a matter of provincial concern. I would point out to the minister that the fisheries report, which had not been tabled at that time, recommends, on page 81, that an organizer be appointed by the federal government. The recommendation reads as follows:

> We recommend, therefore, that the establishment of cooperative organizations of fishermen be assisted by the department as soon as possible, and that an organizer, experienced in coperative methods, be appointed and paid by the federal government for the required period to initiate and complete this work.

The fishermen of the province of Nova Scotia are looking to the government to implement that definite recommendation. As a corollary to that recommendation, it is necessary that some system of loans to the fishermen be devised. I am not going to make any definite suggestion or go into the details except to say that the earning power of the fisherman is so small that he can not improve his equipment. He has no capital and if he is to survive he must have improved equipment, and the only manner in which he can procure that is by aid from the government. I ask the government to take this matter into consideration and give us some action, not next year on the eve of an election but immediately, before thousands of our fishermen have gone to the United States.

I do not intend to discuss further the technical details of the fishing industry in the maritime provinces. There are many matters upon which I could speak did time permit, I wish in the few minutes remaining at my disposal to compliment the hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie) on the very able speech which he made, a speech which has the hearty endorsation of myself and I know of every member sitting on this side of the house. It is a speech with which I heartily agree, and the only thing in it to which I wish to refer particularly is his reference to the inroads being made upon our dairy industry by the importation of New Zealand butter. There are three creameries in my constituency and I know what the effect has been not only upon the creameries but upon the farmers supplying the cream to them.

I was surprised this afternoon to hear the Minister of National Defence commending the Liberal government for the raising of a duty, because year in and year out and especially at election time, he and other hon. gentlemen from Nova Scotia have advocated the principle of free trade. The Liberal organ in the province of Nova Scotia, the Halifax Chronicle, advocates it in and out of season. Furthermore, it says that the tariff is the cause of all our worries and ills in the province of Nova Scotia. It says that the tariff has ground us down under the heel of the province of Ontario; it does not say the central provinces because Quebec is a supporter of the government. It claims that our industries are disappearing and our shipping is dwindling away. It is sad to say that that is true with regard to our shipping, but the reason why our shipping is not as great in volume as it was in time past is because we failed to take advantage of the transition from wood to steel and from sail to steam. There is no doubt we have lost other industries; some of them have located in Quebec and some in Ontario. During the last election campaign the Chronicle had a big cartoon which depicted a cow feeding in the province of Nova Scotia and being milked in the province of Ontario, a sentiment which would not tend to promote Canadian unity.

What are the real facts? Let us examine the situation as it stands in Nova Scotia at the present time. I am prompted to do this because the hon. member for Hants-Kings (Mr. Ilsley) started his speech the other day by standing on a pinnacle and getting a broad view. After he had been there for a while he returned to his own doorstep and turned his face to the wall. We have in the eastern end of my province the coal and steel industries. We have scattered round our coast thousands of fishermen who supply what?

They export to a certain extent, but the basis of their market is the home market, the Dominion of Canada. The great proportion of our farms are mixed farms; in fact, farmers engaged in mixed farming are more numerous than any other class of the population. They are raising their products for sale largely in the markets of Nova Scotia. We have scattered all over the province little manufacturing industries, with a few large ones here and there, some of them, it is true, exporting to the whole Canadian market and even to the markets of the world, but in the main they supply the home market. I ask the Minister of National Defence: If that free trade which is preached by Liberal organizations in Nova Scotia came into force in our province, what would happen to the coal and steel industries? They would be snuffed out like a candle. What would happen to the other manufacturing industries? They would also be snuffed out like candles. What would happen to the farmers and the fishermen? Well, we would continue to export them. The cause of our ills is obviously not the tariff; the cause must be sought somewhere else, because if the tariff were taken away completely, Nova Scotia would not be one whit better off in relation to the other provinces. We have, as I have said, big deposits of coal in the eastern part of the province. Developments are being made to-day by scientists, designed to promote the use of that coal to generate electric energy, and I look forward to the day when we shall be generating electric energy not only as cheaply as it is produced by hydro, but cheaper. That day is rapidly approaching, and when it comes I believe the future of Nova Scotia will lie in industrialization, but we shall not get that if we continue to follow policies which are preached by hon. gentlemen opposite. We need the tariff just as much as any other province in Canada.

Our difficulty not being the tariff, what is it? Geography. We are situated on the extreme eastern edge of the continent, and naturally those who have products to sell in competition with the provinces in the centre have a more restricted home market than the man who is in the centre and has his market on both sides. What we need are methods to counterbalance geography, methods which the Duncan commission recommended in the form of a decrease in westbound freight rates. That alone is the solution of our difficulties within confederation. We require freight rates which will enable us to expand our markets to the west and put our people who produce in competition with those in the central provinces on a parity with them. We have to-day a 20 per cent reduction in westbound freight rates. Whether that will be enough, we do not know. It has been applied; the benefits are already being observed, but time alone can tell whether it will prove ample for the needs of the maritime provinces. If it does not, we shall be back here again asking that our people be placed on a parity with the people in the central provinces, not by reductions in tariff, but by freight rates, in order that the position created by geography may be counterbalanced and we shall be given an equal share in the prosperity of Canada.

I shall not detain the house longer, but it seems to me that no method is more unfair to the people of Nova Scotia than that adopted by the hon. member for Hants-Kings and other hon. gentlemen who stand on their doorsteps, and turn their faces to the wall, applying themselves to a particular locality or industry and forgetting the needs of the province as a whole. We have to start with a unit, and that unit must be the province. If we bear that in mind and also bear in mind that in approaching our problems we have to pool them with the other provinces if confederation is to last, then we shall be building for the future a structure that will stand.

Mr. D. F. KELLNER (Athabaska): Mr. Speaker, in rising to make a few remarks on the budget, I give it as my opinion that the budget as a financial document is possibly comparatively satisfactory; but I believe it is a mistaken idea for any nation to assume that the length of its railway lines, the wealth obtained from its mines and the strength and solidarity of its commercial institutions constitute any real gauge of its prosperity. We have to take into consideration the health, happiness and prosperity of the people. About fifty per cent of the people of Canada are engaged in agricultural occupations, and it is passing strange that, in this short discussion, little or nothing has been said about the prosperity or the lack of prosperity of the farmers of this country. The Minister of National Defence (Mr. Ralston) in his speech made reference to the better position of the farming industry and he suggested that in some way or another this was due to the activities of the government. I should like to point out to him that students have attributed that bettering of the condition of the farming industry to the commercial pools which the farmers themselves have organized. From practically every country throughout the world commendations have come to Canada pointing out the advantages that have accrued therefrom to the wheat growers in particular, and also to those engaged in dairying. I have yet to see any such commendations in respect to any government activities, and later I shall mention instances of the lack of consideration which, I think, this government has shown to those industries.

When the minister was speaking a little while ago it seemed to me rather unusual to hear him twitting the Conservatives for actually lowering the tariff when they were in power and more or less asking for commendation from the people because the Liberals had increased the duty on coal from fourteen to fifty cents. The thought that occurred to me at that moment was that in a comparatively short time we shall likely have another Dominion election and in western Canada there will be one issue only, namely, the tariff. I wonder how many of those who in the last campaign supported this government in the prairie provinces will mention the statements made by the minister this afternoon. It would go pretty hard with some hon. members whom I see across the floor sitting for prairie constituencies, to go out and ask for support because the Liberals had increased the tariff on coal and because they had refused to reduce the tariff on some other commodities.

That agriculture generally is not in a satisfactory condition is, I think, pretty well exemplified by what we learn takes place in other countries. I read recently a debate that occurred in the British house in connection wit the depression of agriculture. The debate was introduced by the Conservatives and discussed at considerable length. Among other things, having pointed out the great depletion that had taken place in the agricultural industry, they brought in certain recommendations to the house. Chief among those was that agricultural land and buildings should be relieved of taxes; that there should be a marking of all agricultural products, so that the consumer would know whether he was purchasing a foreign or an English article; and the further suggestion that the forces of the crown should be supplied for at least two days a week with meat raised on the island. I would particularly call the attention of the house to the fact that it does not say meat raised within the British Empire, but raised in the island, which is considerably different from the agitation we sometimes hear for inter-empire trade. When that motion was under discussion one of the labour members moved in amendment, to leave out all the words following the word "house" and to add instead thereof the following:

> Realizes that the continuing decay in agriculture is a grave national concern and should be dealt with by the government without delay, and is of opinion that the placing of British agriculture on a sound and efficient basis so as to yield a fair return to the farmer, with security of tenure, subject to proper use and a satisfactory standard of living to the agricultural worker, depends upon the transference to the state of the ownership of all agricultural lands.

In other words, we have the Labour party in Great Britain coming out with the definite declaration that the only way in which agriculture can be maintained is by state ownership.

In the United States the situation is a little different. There two bills have passed the senate for the stabilization of agriculture by what is really the fixation of prices. Both bills were vetoed by the president, and now a special session is to be called to deal with agricultural problems.

One might go on and give similar illustrations of what is taking place in other countries, in France, Italy, and Germany, in particular, where they are using every method they can to bolster up agriculture. In this country, however, our government has never been very much concerned about agriculture. Our one and only method of dealing with the problems of agriculture, apparently, is to bring in more immigrants, who will settle all the troubles that we ever shall have. There was one other thing done in this country, which, however, did not do the agricultural industry in this country any good, and that was the adoption of the Australian treaty. Some other speakers have already referred to that, and I wish to say a word or two about it.

In western Canada we have always been known as predominantly Liberal, and a good many of the representatives who have been sent from the west to parliament have come down here as supporters of the Liberal party. During the last few years they have not been quite as docile as some of the other supporters of the government, and they have insisted that the government live up to its pre-election pledges and reduce the tariff. So persistent have they been that I think the Australian treaty is the answer to their demands. The government said: We will reduce the tariff, but it will be a reduction on a commodity that affects the western farmer, and we will see if we cannot choke him off in that way. Butter coming in from Australia previous to the Australian treaty carried a duty of 4 cents. The butter produced by our western farmers was largely traded for such commodities as the farm family requires, and with the returns from their butter they would provide themselves with shoes for the children and furniture for the house. It is worth while considering that on these shoes which they bought with the returns from their butter they had to pay a duty of about 22½ per cent, and on the furniture a duty of about 35 per cent. The odds were against the farmer before we ever had the treaty, but after the treaty they were infinitely worse. Something like 18,000,000 pounds of Australian butter comes into western Canada every year; that was the figure for 1928. I do not think anyone would seriously argue for one minute that that importation does not very seriously affect the farmers of western Canada. You could not flood the western Canadian market with that volume of butter without very seriously affecting the price. Had other countries been giving Canada an opportunity to flood their markets with butter, if we happened to have a large stock and they a small one, it would not have looked quite so bad, but there was no preferential tariff arrangement in that regard.

Australia at present has a tariff of 12 cents a pound on butter; New Zealand, 7 cents a pound or 20 per cent ad valorem, whichever is the greater; the Union of South Africa, 4 cents a pound or 25 per cent ad valorem, whichever is the greater; the United States, 12 cents a pound, and a duty of 5 cents a pound on cheese. In addition, Australia gives a bonus to her farmers of 6 cents a pound on every pound of butter exported, so, taking into consideration the Canadian duty of 1 cent a pound, the Australian farmer has still left 5 cents per pound of government money with which to help pay his freight charges on the butter he ships to Canada. It would seem that a government that wished to do justice to the farming population would hardly pass such legislation as the Australian treaty and leave the tariffs on other necessary commodities such as I have mentioned, shoes and furniture, for instance, just where they are. The effect upon the west of the importation of this Australian butter can be readily seen from the decreased production that has taken place in the prairie provinces. In 1927 there was a decreased production of butter in Manitoba of 1,250,000 pounds, as compared with the previous year; in Saskatchewan, a decrease of over 4,500,000 pounds; in Alberta, a decrease of 3,500,000 pounds. There are a good many farmers in Alberta who cannot afford to take a drop in their production to that extent. In the northern part of Alberta the land is covered with brush, and it is a slow process to bring it under cultivation. It is the practice there, until the land is brought under cultivation, to keep a herd of milch cows, which at least supplies the necessities of the family, but under present conditions the herd of milch cows is an additional liability, and through that district you will find farmer after farmer who a few years ago used to keep half a dozen milch cows but who to day has whittled down that number to one or two.

I omitted to mention that the United States government, as indicated by its decision to call a special session of congress, realizes that agriculture in that country is in a very critical condition, and no one would argue for a moment that agriculture in Canada could be very healthy when agriculture across the line is in such a deplorable condition.

I want to say just a word or two with regard to this immigration policy which we are so enthusiastic about, and which is supposed to save the agricultural areas of Canada. We are frequently told that Canadians are leaving the country. I have a clipping of a statement by Bishop Lloyd giving the figures for 1928 as 81,000 odd. According to his theory about the only thing we need do to settle the problem is to go over to Europe and get more immigrants. Frankly, that is the policy which we are following to-day:

In my poor way I am trying to show just where we shall get to if that process is continued. For instance, Canada is taxing herself to send a band of immigration agents to Europe to persuade people to come here. Then our transportation lines cut their rates and bring those people over. In the meantime government officials and others have selected the best land for those immigrants, erected buildings, put up fences and brought a certain portion under cultivation. All this having been done, the immigrants are put on these ready-made farms. The farmer already here is asked to pay taxes to bring in those immigrants to compete with himself. It is manifestly unfair to expect our agriculturists to withstand such competition, and contribute a portion of the expense as I have indicated.

And what is the position from the standpoint of our workers? For instance, suppose a Canadian gets out of work in the fall of the year, he goes to a city in search of employment, as several last fall went to Edmonton. We will assume that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company wants some employees. He goes to the railway company along with two or three immigrants and asks for a job. In the meantime the city has been feeding several hundred immigrants, but they turn them over to the Canadian Pacific Company when they find that the company had promised to provide these immigrants with work for a year. The city contended that the Canadian Pacific should supply board while the immigrant was without work. The company acknowledged the obligation and supplied bread and bologna. When the Canadian citizen and the immigrants approached the Canadian Pacific officials for a job, it is certain that the company, being a good business institution, is not going to take any chance of spending money on bread and bologna, so we know who will be rejected. One of the immigrants will be taken on and the Canadian will have to walk the streets. In all probability he is a property-owner in one of our urban centres. Pretty soon the tax collector comes around and says: Here, your taxes are due. There being no probability of our Canadian getting a job, the only thing that is left for him to do is to turn over his property, pay his taxes, and get out. Unfortunately our answer to any protest from him is simply this: We can go over to England and the continent and bring in other immigrants to take your place. That is the answer Canada is giving to her sons to-day.

Closely associated with the assistance we are giving these immigrants to establish themselves is the policy followed by some of our commercial institutions. For instance, I have before me a letter from the International Harvester Company, headed General Letter No. 42. Let me give it to the house:

To our Dealers and Travellers:

3,000 British Family Settler Plan

In view of the fact that the above organization will purchase a sufficient number of cream separators to entitle them to the quantity discounts, it has been decided to amend our quotations and you are therefore authorized to make quotations as follows:

The 1927 one payment six months retail price less 10 per cent discount and less a quantity discount of..	$ 10 00
For instance, when quoting prices on a No. 3 Primrose, you would take.	120 00
Which is the one payment retail price.
Deduct 10 per cent, which is..	12 00
	108 00
Less $10..	10 00
Making a retail price on this size machine..	$ 98 00

Please understand that these discounts apply to cream separators only and when sold to farmers operating under the 3,000 British settler plan.

This letter cancels General Letter No. 40 of March 31, 1927, and all letters prior to this date covering discounts on cream separators when sold on the above plan.

Yours truly,

International Harvester Company of Canada Ltd.

By F. W. Smith,
Assistant to Manager.

According to that letter, it seems to me that if you had a non-British family settler in any district, and a British family settler beside him, the one would have to pay $120 for a cream separator as against $98 charged the other. It is going pretty far to ask the established farmer to pay that extra money over the price quoted to the favoured immigrant. But I hope I have not led the house to believe that cream separators are the only things marketed in this way. I have another letter from the same company, General Letter No. 65. It contains somewhat similar preliminary comments, and then proceeds to quote prices. Let me read this portion of the letter:

Prices to Settlers: On general line (except wagons, gears, trucks and sleighs) the 1926 retail cash on delivery price less 7 per cent.

On wagons, gears, trucks and sleighs, the 1926 retail cash on delivery price, less 5 per cent.

Prices f.o.b. nearest local agent's shipping point.

The letter also contains the following:

Settlers entitled to special prices: British settlers brough out by the Dominion government under the three thousand family British settler plan, delivery to be authorized and cash settlements made by the land settlement board.

The land settlement board will have full charge of this three thousand family British settler plan, and delivery and settlement will be handled under the plan formerly governing the soldier settlers.

This is the concluding paragraph:

In view of the fact that these British settlers will not be familiar with our machines, the local agent must assume full responsibility to see that all machines are properly set up and maintained in running order, and that the purchaser is fully instructed in their operation.

An hon. MEMBER: What date is that?

Mr. KELLNER: June 26, 1926. The agreement is still in effect. Let me bring out this point in connection with the second letter. It is recognized that those immigrants are not very well acquainted with farm machinery. The result is the company instruct their agent to go out to the farms and set up the machine and show them how to operate it. But when the ordinary farmer buys a similar machine he is told to take it home and fix it up himself. He has to get along with it the best he can. It simply means that the Canadian farmer is paying for this extra service to the immigrant. If we were getting a higher type of farmer there might be some sense in such a policy, but everybody admits that the one we are bringing in cannot compete with the one we are losing, and will not come up to his standard for several years

And unless we do lose them we are apt to get into a worse position than we are in now, because beyond a doubt if we bring them in in large numbers the time will soon come when we shall have the problem of over-production to deal with. That is not entirely my own opinion, because there are a good many concerns who realize the danger of over-production. The United States government have time and again warned the farmers about seeding too large an acreage, and I notice that the Canadian Bank of Commerce in its letter No. 159, being the issue for February of this year, states:

> Agriculture will probably seek to adjust itself to market conditions, which, as far as the west is concerned, seem to require for the present a more gradual increase in wheat acreage than has taken place in recent years, a careful selection of seed, and a shift to mixed farming in certain districts.

I would submit that cutting down of acreage is good business advice, but the matter of mixed farming is somewhat different. That has been tried before, and I am sure the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell) will recollect having told us on several occasions that one of the ways for the western farmer to make money was to ship his cattle to England. We sent a good many officials over there to arrange the removal of the embargo from Canadian cattle and eventually we succeeded, so that for a year or two we did a magnificent trade with England. But in the last year we have not sent one hoof across the ocean. Hundreds of thousands of dollars have been lost in the attempt to get the British market for the Canadian farmer's cattle and it cannot be done.

In regard to steps which the government might take to help the farmer, in my opinion there is possibly nothing of much more importance to northern Alberta than the export rate to the province of British Columbia on grain. Hon. members will remember that in 1925 we amended the Railway Act, adding a clause which we thought would set the same grain rate for grain going west as applied in the east. But since then the authorities have told us that we did not do that at all. However, the railway commission, the first time they investigated the question, took the view that this had been done and issued an order that the rates be brought into conformity with the eastern rates. At the present time that order is not being observed. The rate we are paying on export grain to-day from Edmonton or Calgary to the coast is 22½ cents per hundredweight; were we paying the same rate as that grain would take going east, we should pay 18 cents. But aside altogether from the export rate is the domestic rate of 41½ cents per hundredweight. Imagine a trainload of grain going from Edmonton or Calgary to the coast, one a car of wheat billed for the Orient or some other destination, and the other a car billed for some rancher in British Columbia. There can be absolutely no difference in cost in the handling of the two; yet one takes 22½ cents, which is a four cent steal, and the other 41½ cents. It simply amounts to this, that cattle could be fed more cheaply on Alberta grain in China, Japan or down through the United States than in Canada. I think it is certainly due the farmers of the west that the grain rate receive immediate attention.

I would remind the house that in 1926 we passed a rural credits measure making provision for financing the farmer. Every member in the house expected that by this time the farmers would have borrowed all the money the Dominion government have. Well, they have not yet borrowed one dollar, and what is more they possibly will not for some time. No effort in the world was made to put that legislation into operation until the present winter. Now I understand that there is a movement on foot to get the board started; but by the time the provincial governments have got under way it will certainly be well on into the summer, so that three years will have been lost. Many of the farmers who needed credit and could not obtain it have probably been closed out, and certainly, in any case, have suffered financial reverses by reason of the delay. In a great country such as Canada, with the farming oportunities that we have here, if we can afford to scour the world in order to induce people to come to Canada, giving money to look after them when they arrive, surely to goodness we should have enough money to look after our own people who are already established in the country.

Let me mention something else. We must not lose sight of the fact that there are well over 80,000 people leaving the country every year. Possibly not all of them are Canadians, some of them being immigrants who have been in the country only a short time. Nevertheless there is all too large a percentage of them comprising actual born Canadians and Canadians who have become citizens of the country by naturalization. Now they may have suffered from one of the causes I have indicated and have lost their holdings in the country; and probably some of them have had such an experience as I read about in the newspapers some time ago. A young fellow appeared on the streets of Edmonton asking for a meal. He was arrested and taken to the police court. There he was asked where he had come from and he said, eastern Canada. They gave him twenty-four hours to get out of town, with an alternative of thirty days. On the same day there were some new immigrants in the police court on the same charge and they were sent over to the railway companies to be fed. In view of the fact that the positions in Canada are practically all going to the immigrants, and will go to them so long as there is an obligation on the commercial companies, seeing that we assume that the Canadian shall look out for himself while the immigrant is a ward of ours, I wonder why in the world the Canadian would stay. What inducement has he? The logical thing for him to do is to get out if he finds himself in these circumstances. What I started to say is this: One who has had these reverses and leaves the country, crossing the line or going to some other foreign land, must have unpleasant feelings. What must be the thought that rankles in his mind about Canada? Do you think there can be any love or affection or admiration for this land, so far as he is concerned, or will he not go away more or less with a spirit of hatred and possibly with his mind fully made up that if the time ever comes he would a good deal rather see something dreadful befall the country than see her go forward?

Hon. CHARLES MARCIL (Bonaventure): I have listened with considerable attention to the remarks of the hon. member for Athabaska (Mr. Kellner), who has given his views in regard to certain conditions existing in the west. I am sorry I am not as familiar with that part of the country as I should like to be in order to appreciate his statements. Some of those statements were most surprising to me, but they explain to some extent why no more energy is put into the movement to induce Canadians to go and settle in the west. In the province of Quebec for some years past a very strong opinion has prevailed that we should give to the Canadian who wishes to go west the same conditions as we provide for the immigrant. The committee on agriculture last year made, I understand, the suggestion that the railway rates should be reduced to what they were some years ago for those Canadians intending to go west. I heard no more about it, but I am glad to know that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell), who is a friend of the farmer, will bring this matter to the attention of his colleagues. In Quebec we are still of the opinion that when a Canadian leaves that province he should be given some inducement to go west rather than to the United States. In 1870, when Manitoba was created, the cry raised by Sir George Etienne Cartier, who introduced the bill to provide for the creation of that province, was "Go west, young man." At that time the idea was to stem the exodus from Quebec to the New England states and divert it to western Canada. Unfortunately the west was a long way off; railway communication was difficult and other troubles presented themselves in Manitoba which induced French Canadians to go to the United States. There is a large Canadian population in those states now; it has been placed at 2,000,000 people, and they are the chief operatives in the mills of those states. Latterly, however, there has been a feeling in our province that many of those people would be delighted to go west if they were afforded the same advantages which are offered the foreigner. We all know that the Canadian is the best settler we can have; the man who has been born and brought up in this country, descended from Canadian people for generations, is the best man we can have and every effort should be made to induce these people not only in Quebec but in the maritime provinces and Ontario as well to go west, to counter-balance whatever foreign immigration comes into the country. We all know that if trouble should arise and Canadians should be put to the test as to their loyalty, the sons of Quebec, Ontario and the maritimes will stand firm. For that reason I think the government would be well advised to give this matter some further consideration.

It has been said that Canada is a difficult country to govern. The day this house opened I happened to run across the hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie), who delivered a very nice speech this year. He delivered another very good speech on February 11, 1901, a day memorable to me; the hon. member delivered his first speech in this house that day when he moved the address in reply to the speech from the throne, and I had the honour of following him and seconding the address. That was almost twenty-nine years ago; my hon. friend delivered a very eloquent eulogy of the Liberal party and it was all I could do to follow in his footsteps in the French language. That debate was made memorable through the fact that the member to speak immediately after me was Sir Robert Borden, then plain Mr. Robert Borden, who was making his debut as leader of the Conservative party. In those days the rules of the house allowed only one amendment to the budget speech, but during the last few years we have changed our rules and made the problem much more difficult.

The position occupied by Mr. Fielding at that time was really an easy one as compared to the position occupied by the present Minister of Finance, and I may say frankly that of the twenty-nine or thirty budget speeches I have heard delivered in this house none has been more satisfactory to the country on the whole than that delivered on March 1 last. I am satisfied that any Canadian or any member of this house whose personal affairs were in a condition as satisfactory as that shown in the country's affairs by the Minister of Finance would be entirely satisfied.

As I have said, in those days only one amendment to the budget speech was allowed; only one issue was raised, but under our present rules we may have two amendments to the budget speech, and the two amendments moved this year show the difficult position in which the minister is placed. The first amendment reads as follows:

> This house regrets that the financial proposals of the government make no provision for reasonably safeguarding and protecting the interests of those "engaged in agricultural pursuits or in industrial" employment in Canada.

If that means anything at all it means an upward revision of the tariff; it means higher protection. Then this amendment was followed by the sub-amendment of the hon. member for Battle River (Mr. Spencer), which was as follows:

> That the amendment be amended by striking out all the words after "house" and substituting therefor the following:
> "urges upon the government the consideration of an immediate and substantial increase of the British preference as a step towards freer trade relations between Canada and other nations."

This means a revision of the tariff downward, so here you have the Minister of Finance following the middle course between the opposition asking for a higher tariff and another group asking for a lower tariff. I was glad to hear the Minister of Finance repeat the statement made by Mr. Fielding nearly thirty years ago, that the policy of the Liberal party was a policy of protection for the masses but a policy of lower tariff. That has been our policy since 1879. When I came to this house Mr. Fielding and his colleagues, under our great leader of those days, was trying to get the country on its feet again after a trial had been given for nearly eighteen years to high tariffs under the so-called national policy. Those who remember the conditions in Canada in 1896, after Canada had had nearly eighteen years of so-called protection, know, and if they do not know they can easily ascertain by looking up Hansard, that Canada was then at practically a standstill. Our great western country was being deserted by its settlers; our financial condition in Quebec, the maritime provinces and Ontario was far from satisfactory, and in fact everyone wanted a change. We had been over-protected; a group of millionaires had been created in Montreal in the cotton and sugar industries, the rolling mills and in the construction of railways, and the masses of the people wanted a change in order to make Canada a cheap country in which to live.

That was the policy of the Liberal party at that time, and in 1897, Mr. Fielding and his colleagues started out by saying that they would reduce the cost of living in Canada and would give a preference to British products. So the British preference was introduced, but I can still hear the wails which came from the old Conservative party; Sir Wilfrid Laurier and his colleagues were blamed for giving a preference to England while receiving nothing in return. The Conservative party fought this British preference; they criticized it from every angle; they said it was too low in some cases and too high in others and so on, but when they attained office they allowed the preference to remain as it was.

Then in 1911 the old parliament buildings rang with denunciations of the Liberal party when it was proposed to enter into a treaty with the United States providing for an exchange of natural products. At that time I had the honour of being Speaker of the house; I put the question day after day for nearly two months, but the Conservative party would not vote on the issue and there was no means by which the vote could be taken. Obstruction of all kinds was resorted to and finally we went to the country, but unfortunately in Quebec especially the people did not vote on reciprocity. They were a unit with regard to that question in Quebec; they were all in favour of it, but the fight was carried on in connection with the navy which Sir Wilfrid Laurier had given to the country. It was adopted by the English provinces but Quebec was afraid that it was going to be an instrument by means of which young French-Canadians would be slaughtered throughout the seven seas in defence of the flag of Britain. We had to fight a double fight—a fight on reciprocity in Ontario and a fight on the navy in Quebec. The French-Canadians are a sentimental people, unduly carried away by sympathy, and the member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) and the late member for Jacques Cartier, Mr. Monk, who later became Minister of Public Works, realized this in their denunciation of Sir Wilfrid, and twenty-nine Conservatives and Nationalists were elected in the province of Quebec. But that will probably never happen again in our generation. The province of Quebec was fooled on that occasion, and it was fooled in 1917, and since that time the Conservatives have only returned sufficient men to report the sad news to this house.

I have not the time to say all I would have liked to say, but I wish to put certain statements on Hansard so that they may be read by my constituents. The surplus of $69.782,000 is one which should be eminently satisfactory to the people of Canada. The estimated revenue of $454,942,000, an increase of $25,000,000 over 1927-28, and the estimated expenditure of $385,160,000, an increase of $22,332,000, leaves a surplus of $69,782,000. The debt of Canada has been reduced to $2,227,068,000, which means a net reduction in six years of $226,708,000, or a yearly average of about $37,700,000. In addition to this the rates of taxation in force in 1922 have been reduced and the sum of $241,000,000 has been remitted to the taxpayers. The interest charges which amounted to $133,482,113 in 1922 have been reduced to $117,142,100 as of April 1, 1929, a decrease of $16,340,013. The payment out of revenue of maturing loans is something new, and the reduction in taxation through the elimination of various taxes has amounted to $25,000,000 in a single year. I would like to know where, in the past history of Canada, anyone could find a more satisfactory statement. I know the people whom I have the honour to represent will be satisfied with that statement.

We have heard many wails and all kinds of complaints about unemployment in this country; about those who are going to the United States and who should be kept at home. I can only speak for the province of Quebec, and will cite the conditions obtaining in the city of Montreal as compared with those of ten years ago. There are nearly one million people on the island of Montreal at the present time, and it would be very hard to convince those people that this country is not prosperous. The harbour of Montreal is rapidly becoming one of the great harbours of the world; it is the first harbour in grain exportation. Last year 453,000,000 bushels of grain from all parts of western Canada and some parts of the United States were moved through this port. The development of Montreal has been very great but progress is not confined to that city. A magnificent system of highways has been constructed by the provincial government, covering the province from the west down to the Gaspe peninsula. There has been great development in the cities of Three Rivers and Quebec and in the Lake St. John district. That district has been transformed through the construction of enormous water-powers, the largest development of the kind in the world. Great progress has been made throughout the whole province in the development of water-powers. Twenty or twenty-five years ago Quebec was looked upon as an agricultural province but it is rapidly becoming an industrial province. Considerable improvement will take place in the Gaspe district because our railways will be linked up with the Canadian National railways. That is something which should have been done twenty-five years ago, as was done in many other parts of the country and in the maritime provinces. In many ways Quebec has improved 100 per cent as compared with its condition ten years ago. There is employment for all who wish to work. Of course, there are complaints there, as there are everywhere else, but they are nothing to what they would have been had the state of affairs which existed in 1921 continued.

Let us look at the trade of Canada at the present time as compared with what it was, not ten years ago, but only last year. During the eleven months ending February, 1929, the merchandise entered for consumption amounted to $1,130,350,273, as compared with $988,501,781 for the corresponding period in the previous year; merchandise, domestic, exported, amounted to $1,248,848,500 as compared with $1,121,233,042 for the previous year. The total trade of Canada for the eleven months of 1928 amounted to $2,109,734,823 as against $2,379,198,823 for 1929, which considered in the light of an increase of $2,352,638 in foreign merchandise exported, gives an increase of $271,816,638. If this computation were figures for the twelve months it would show an increase in one year of about $300,000,000. Where can we find a reasonable or sensible man who will be convinced that this country is not in a satisfactory condition when he is shown figures which prove that a country with a population of under 10,000,000 people has been able to increase its total trade by about $300,000,000? In one year's time we have increased our imports by $141,000,000 in round figures, our exports by $127,000,000 and the exports of foreign merchandise by $2,500,000. The budget showed a favourable trade balance of $154,100,000, and nothing could be more satisfactory than that.

There are many facts which have been given in the addresses of bank presidents, the addresses of presidents of railway companies, in commercial papers and other papers of the importance of the Montreal Gazette which I would have liked to read, but time will not permit. In a very interesting publication of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, Agricultural and Industrial Progress in Canada, it is shown that at the present time Canada is the fifth country in the world in point of trade. In 1927 in imports the countries in order of rank were: the United Kingdom, the United States, Germany, France, Canada. With the population that we have, that is a wonderful showing. As regards exports, Canada is in the same position and in point of agricultural trade Canada is also fifth position, the countries in order of rank being: United States, United Kingdom, Germany, France and Canada, followed by British India, Japan, Italy, Argentine and the Netherlands. We have also this statement which is a remarkable one:

> In visible trade balance Canada held third place in 1927, following the United States and British India, while in favourable trade balance per capita, with $15.93, Canada led the entire world.

When I was a young lad fifty years ago I made my debut on a paper which was known then as it is now as one of the leading papers in Canada, the old Montreal Gazette. I was a young reporter in those days, under Hon. Thomas White, who was subsequently member for Cardwell in the house and Minister of the Interior. I am sorry to see that my old deskmate of those days, the hon. member for Mount Royal (Mr. White) is not in the house at this time, but we hope that he will be present before the session ends. The Montreal Gazette, which is one of the most important and influential organs in Canada, publishes every year a review of the business of Canada written by men like the president of the Canadian Pacific Railway, the president of the Canadian National Railways, the president of the Canadian Bankers' Association, the president of the Bank of Montreal, the president of the Canadian Bank of Commerce and other leading Canadians. This is a non-political publication called The Annual Review of the Gazette. I find on the first page of this review for 1928 the following lines from our old friend the hon. member for Mount Royal who, let it be said en passant, is the last survivor of the men who served under Sir John A. Macdonald in the house, and we all hope that he will rapidly regain his health so that he may be able to finish his term. What does he say in this review, for he is the doyen of the Conservative party in the house? He says:

> Needless to say, it has been a year of prosperity. Balance sheets work out gains. A new hope has come to the maritime provinces, crops have been large in the western provinces, and in the middle provinces factory production and distribution have gone beyond record. Foreign trade in value and volume outstrips precedent. This is the sum of the year.

That is the statement of the hon. member for Mount Royal, so that there is not much trouble in showing whether Canada is in a prosperous condition or not. The president of the Canadian Pacific says that his railway has gone into the construction of branch lines because it has faith in the future of the country, especially in the west. I often wonder how it is that the members for Toronto are always quasi-unanimous in criticizing the policy of the Liberal party when, under the Liberal policy, a company like the Canadian Pacific Railway, which has become the greatest transportation company in the world, is able to erect a $16,000,000 hotel in the good old Conservative city of Toronto. It shows it has some faith in the future of Canada, and that conditions in Canada are not as bad as might be thought from listening to some of the statements that are made in the house.

The president of the Canadian National Railways states that he has found satisfaction and a growing feeling of optimism throughout the whole country. It is part of his business to visit every province in Canada, and after doing this he says that the Canadian National this year, after paying all charges except interest charges due the government, will have a surplus of $7,000,000. Those who sat here in 1921 will remember that there was a deficit of $60,000,000 on this road. That has been changed in a very short time to a surplus of $7,000,000, showing that Canada has been making wonderful progress. The Montreal Gazette that I cited a moment ago, in publishing the annual statement of the Canadian Pacific, gives certain figures which I do not want to weary the house with, and then it has this to say:

> This is a remarkable achievement, having in view the fact that so much of the company's western traffic is handled upon a low rate basis. That the gross earnings are the largest in the history of the company is evidence not only of largely increased car loadings, but of extraordinary efficiency in taking care of the traffic available.

Last year was the greatest year in the history of the Canadian Pacific. That is a wonderful thing to say, and surely we are not expected to believe that Canada is not prosperous at the present time.

Let us pass on to something else. Senator McDougald, writing in the article of the progress made by the harbour of Montreal, concludes with these words:

With a grand total of 423,570,557 bushels received and delivered in a navigation season the duration of which does not exceed about 215 days, not far short of an average of 2,000,000 bushels of grain passed through the harbour elevators every twenty-four hours.

Mr. A. E. Phipps, president of the Canadian Bankers Association, has this to say:

The calendar year just closed has witnessed a volume of import and export trade without equal in the history of the country. Abounding national revenues, record wheat production, increasing railway earnings and an unusual amount of building construction as expressed in terms of cost in the larger cities, and in fact in practically all parts of the country, have marked the year. It would be strange indeed if all this were not reflected in banking. Without elaborate statistics, the increase in current loans by the banks, as per return of October 31st last, of $165,000,000, or 15.5 per cent over the corresponding figures of October 31st of 1927, may be taken as indicative of the general increment in volume of banking business. If more evidence were wanted, the increment of 17.8 per cent in aggregate debits to individual accounts at clearing house centres in all Canada for the three months ended October 31st last, as compared with the like for the same period in 1927, affords corroboration nothing short of proof.

The editor of the Montreal Stock Market makes this statement:

By every possible standard of measurement or basis of comparison the Montreal stock market in the year 1928 eclipsed all prior records.

Mr. W. M. Birks, president of the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, speaking on the mercantile situation of Canada in 1928, says this:

Judged by the basal factors which determine our mercantile situation, the year 1928 has been in the van of our entire economic progress. Whether it be cultivation, manufacturing or the development of our natural resources, each tells the same story these past twelve months of an abounding prosperity, which per se indicates prosperous commercial conditions. Unless there were outlets for the products of the plough, the dynamo and the exploitations of nature, there could develop no commerce of proportions. Canada has found itself in the fortunate situation, however, where marketing opportunities of unusual dimensions, both at home and abroad, have absorbed the output of her farms, her factories and her harnessed and natural wealth. More than that, the sinews of commerce have shown remarkable strength. Given the volume of output in Canada and the more than ordinary intake of imported merchandise, the transportation companies and the competing distributing agencies have all made the flow of commerce between our provinces and between Canada and outside countries particularly easy and vigorous.

These are statements which cannot be challenged. Let us see what the president of the Canadian Manufacturers Association, Mr. L. W. Simms, says:

During the past year I have travelled from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and have made also a number of trips which included the principal industrial centres. These gave me an opportunity to discuss business conditions with manufacturers of various lines. The general impression I received was that Canada, on the whole, is making material progress, and that the improvement evident in 1927 has been continued during 1928.

There is no branch of activity, as I said a moment ago, in which greater development has taken place in recent years than in the electrical industry, and here is what Mr. D. C. Durland, president of the Canadian General Electric Company, Limited, says with regard to that industry:

The electrical industry has kept pace with the requirements of national expansion during a year in which more electrical energy has been generated and utilized than in any similar period of Canada's history. The great activity in hydro-electric development manifest during the last few years continues without abatement, and sufficient undertakings are either at present under construction or in prospect to insure substantial progress being maintained during 1929.

At the beginning of 1928 about 4,800,000 horse-power was being generated by Canadian rivers, and about 550,000 horse-power was added during the year. The total of 5,350,000 horse-power is twice that available at the end of 1923. In other words, the annual increase during the last five years has been about 25 per cent.

In view of this very rapid increase in production and demand, it is interesting to note that Canada's potential water-power resources are estimated to be not less than 43,000,000 horse-power, a portion of which is at present unavailable because of its great distance from populated centres. Research and inventive genius, however, are at work devising means of overcoming even this handicap of distance, while electro-chemical and other industries are following electrical projects into country which has hitherto been considered as wilderness. A typical example of this trend is that of the Saguenay river development in northern Quebec, which is now generating 540,000 horse-power at Isle Maligne Station, or twice the amount consumed in the city of Toronto. Three industrial establishments in the immediate neighbourhood, far from any city, will utilize practically all this power. These vast power resources are becoming an increasingly important factor in Canada's progress.

Already this country has the second largest per capita installation in the world, with its 513 horse-power per 1,000 of population, being only exceeded by Norway. To-day $900,000,000, representing approximately $100 for every person in Canada, is invested in hydro-electric plants.

Could there be, Mr. Speaker, a more eloquent, a more glowing description of Canada's progress up to the present time than is contained in the statements which I have just read? In the few minutes remaining at my disposal, I shall have to leave aside much that I should like to have said. Progress has been made all along the line, not only in the hydro-electric industry, but in farming, in the development of pulp mills, in the construction of railways, in construction generally. Here is what the editor of MacLean's Building Reports says:

During 1928 the estimated value of new construction reached a total never equalled previously.

And so on.

I have reluctantly to give up my task, but the task has been a pleasant one, and I must thank those who have done me the honour of listening to me without any interruption, probably because I have become, as Providence willed, one of the oldest members of the house. There are only four or five of those who were in this chamber nearly thirty years ago, but I am glad to know that I have been able to speak in language as eloquent as I used twenty-eight years ago, when I asked my people to remember that in putting their faith in the Liberal party they were putting their faith in the true party, because the policy of the Liberal party has been at all times the policy of the people, for the people, and by the people; and no matter what changes may take place, and changes will happen naturally in all countries governed by the party system, the fact remains that when the country gets in the lurch after eighteen years of protection, and after ten years of war, when bankrupt railways have been purchased and our national credit begins to fail, and the value of the Canadian dollar to dwindle, the country naturally turns its eyes to the Liberal party to save it.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. T. E. SIMPSON (West Algoma): Mr. Speaker during the progress of this debate a great deal has been said about the prosperity which Canada is enjoying to-day, and I have been rather amused at the attempts of hon. gentlemen opposite to show that in some unaccountable way this prosperity is attributable to the policy of the government. Five cabinet ministers and about twenty government supporters have taken part in the debate up to the present time, but not one of them has pointed to any specific act of the administration which to any appreciable degree has contributed to this prosperity. In my opinion Canada, blessed by her great natural resources and by a kindly Providence, supplemented by the skill and energy of her people, is prospering to-day in spite of the policy of the government. If the government would adopt a policy along the lines of that suggested in the amendment proposed by my hon. friend from South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie), a policy which would make provision for reasonably safeguarding and protecting the interests of those engaged in agricultural pursuits and industrial employment, I believe the country would be enjoying more prosperity and we would have greater reason for rejoicing.

I should like to take the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell) to Algoma in order that he might hear what the farmers in that section have to say about the policy of the government—a policy that permits large quantities of fresh vegetables and fruit grown in the United States to be marketed in this country a few weeks before the Canadian crop is ready, thus giving to the competitors of our market gardeners the benefit of the high prices then prevailing; a policy that encourages the importation of New Zealand butter, with disastrous effects on our dairy industry; a policy that in the opinion of the farmers in that section of the country is very unfair to the marketing of their hay. At the present time the price of hay is a little higher on the Canadian side than it is across the line in the state of Michigan, with the result that considerable quantities of hay are being shipped from across the river to compete in our market with Canadian-grown hay, which enjoys a protection of only two dollars per ton. A few years ago this situation was reversed; the price of hay was a little higher on the American side, but the Canadian farmer was effectively blocked from participating in that market by a duty of four dollars a ton. It would be very interesting to hear what the farmers of Algoma have to say to the minister with respect to a policy which they feel does not give them a fair break in their own home market.

Now, sir, in his budget speech the Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb) made reference to the development of trade within the empire. In that regard he spoke as follows:

It is gratifying to note the steady development of inter-empire trade. Canada, the pioneer of the British preference, looks on empire trade as the keystone of its external trade policy, and desires in every way to foster closer trading relations throughout the British commonwealth of nations.

We are all anxious to see trade with the empire increased so long as this increase is developed on a fair and equitable basis; but it seems to me that the policy of the government does not lend itself to the development of that trade, but rather to the development of trade with the United States. Let me give a few figures in support of my statement. Our imports from the United States for the twelve months ending January 31, 1927, amounted to $675,518,000, as compared with our imports for the twelve months ending January 31, 1929, of $840,353,000—an increase of $164,735,000, or 25 per cent. From the United Kingdom our imports for the same two periods were respectively, $164,635,000 and $193,451,000—an increase of $28,816,000, or about 17½ per cent. Our exports to the United States in the same period increased $31,769,000. while to the United Kingdom they decreased by almost ten million dollars. Or take another example. For the calendar year 1928, the increase in our total trade over 1927 amounted to $270,548,000. Of the increase in imports 90 per cent was attributable to trade with foreign countries, and only 10 per cent to trade with countries of the British Empire. Of the increase in our exports, foreign countries accounted for 65 per cent and the British Empire only 35 per cent. It must be apparent that the policy of the government, particularly with respect to our imports, is not developing trade within the empire.

The total trade of Canada during the past year has increased by a very substantial amount. In the conduct of his own business a man naturally is very much interested to see his total turnover increase; but he is infinitely more interested in his financial statement at the end of the year to see if there has been a corresponding increase in his profits or surplus account. Now, let us look at Canada's trading account from that angle. It may be stated by some hon. members that it is not fair to compare a nation's trading with that of an individual or a private company. In some respects I admit that it is not, but the comparison which I desire to make is, I think, an eminently fair one. The following figures show Canada's favourable balance of trade for the four years from 1925 to 1928 inclusive:

These figures show that while we have been increasing the volume of our business, we have not been maintaining a corresponding increase in our favourable trade balance. I am sure the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Malcolm), being a keen business man, would feel considerable alarm if in the conduct of his business, notwithstanding the fact that the aggregate sales or turnover was increasing year by year, there was not a corresponding increase in his surplus or profit account.

How do we account for this? The explanation is that the policy of this government encourages the export of our raw material in an unmanufactured state which commands the lower price, and encourages an ever increasing amount of imports of fully manufactured goods which command the higher price. Take an example. The increase in imports in 1928 over 1927 was made up of 75.5 per cent of fully manufactured products, 2.7 per cent of semi-manufactured products and only 21.8 per cent of raw material, while almost 75 per cent of the increase in exports consisted of wheat. And our imports are constantly increasing. Take the returns for the month of February 1929 and we find that the imports in that one month have increased by $11,000,000 over the imports for the corresponding month in 1928, over $6,500,000 of which consists of iron and its products; and our exports during February have decreased by $6,500,000. This shows an unfavourable balance of trade for the month of $14,782,710. Now last year our imports from the United States amounted to $840,000,000, at least 65 per cent of which consisted of manufactured goods, which would amount to $550,000,000, 75 per cent of which could be manufactured and should be manufactured in this country, representing some $400,000,000. What would it mean to Canada if we were manufacturing all these goods here? Let us ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce to answer the question. In the very excellent speech he delivered the other day he made reference to our exports of manufactured goods, speaking as follows:

> I wish to point out the value of our export of manufactured goods. The ratio of labour to the value of the goods going out of the factories of Canada is shown to be 43.8 per cent. Hon. gentlemen who know something about industry are aware that overhead represents largely labour, expenses of sales force, advertising, bookkeeping, and so forth. All the raw material originating in Canada which goes into the factory as raw material is a finished product to the industry that produces it; therefore it represents labour. A very careful estimate—and I think it is extremely conservative—shows that for every dollars' worth of manufactured products exported from this country fifty cents is spent in the Dominion on labour in some form or other. On this basis our total of manufactured exports represents an expenditure on Canadian labour of over $300,000,000. Allowing $1,500 as the average return for the Canadian worker, it means that 200,000 workers of this Dominion are employed by virtue of our export trade in semi or fully manufactured products. Accepting the ratio of one gainfully employed in every four, it means that the manufactured exports of this country provide employment for ten per cent of our total population.

Therefore, Sir, I submit that nothing this Dominion can do is of greater importance than to assist her industrialists to find outlets for their commodities in the markets of the world; this brings employment to our working men, it brings money to our shores, and it provides markets for the raw material of the Dominion, whether wheat turned into flour, or lumber turned into sash and doors.

That is the reasoning of a keen business man who, I believe, is making an honest effort to increase the export of our manufactured goods. But let us apply that same reasoning to our imports from the United States. Last year we imported $400,000,000 worth of goods from the United States, which goods could be manufactured in Canada. The minister says that one half of that amount represents labour, which would amount to $200,000,000. Allowing $1,500 as the average wage which would be paid, this would provide employment for 130,000 additional people in Canada—more men in this country spending their wages in the products of factory and farm. It is not hard to imagine the impetus this would give to the prosperity of Canada, and if you figure five in a family for each working man it would increase the population of Canada by about 650,000 people and would solve the problems of the Minister of Immigration over night; for no policy of immigration is better than one that provides employment for the immigrant when he lands in Canada. If you can provide the immigrant with satisfactory employment at a reasonable wage, he is going to send word back to his friends and neighbours. So that instead of spending millions of dollars to induce immigrants to come to our shores you would have them rapping at your door for admission.

I want to refer now for a moment or two to the pulp and paper industry. The development of this industry since the war has been very rapid. The production of newsprint in Canada in 1913 amounted to 350,000 tons, and in 1928 this had increased to 2,381,000, over one-third of the total world production. Canada last year exported 92 per cent of her total production, valued at $129,000,000, second only to wheat, and no small factor in the favourable trade balance which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb) was able to show. But as a result of this rapid development our pulp and paper mills find themselves equipped to turn out a greater quantity of newsprint than they can find a market for, so that many of them have machines idle while some have been closed down completely for an indefinite period. If time permitted I could tell some of the experiences which the men have had to endure in some of these centres, in Espanola, a purely paper town in the constituency of East Algoma, and in another in the constituency of Fort William. This means men out of work. While the premiers of the provinces have had consultations with the paper manufacturers and have done what they could to try to remedy the situation and bring about a more even distribution of production, in my opinion this government, if they would take action, could relieve the strain with very little difficulty by placing an export duty on pulpwood. Last year we shipped to the United States 82 per cent of the total production of newsprint, but in addition to that we exported to that country 1,500,000 cords of pulpwood. This wood was manufactured into newsprint in the mills of the United States, and to that extent supplied the demand which otherwise would have been supplied by Canadian mills. If by the imposition of an export duty 800,000 of the 1,500,000 cords of pulpwood could be manufactured into newsprint in Canada it would provide 650,000 tons of newsprint or about 25 per cent of our total production, and that would enable all of the mills in Canada to work to capacity. Canada would receive $30,000,000 more for the finished article than is paid for the raw wood, and in addition employment would be provided for about 5,000 additional men. While we have great pulpwood areas, Mr. Speaker, we do not want to get the idea that our timber resources are inexhaustible; we have arrived at a point of production now whereby vast areas are being stripped of timber each year. The 1,500,000 cords of pulpwood shipped to the United States last year would represent the pulpwood from an area of 360 miles square; Canada cannot go on at this rate indefinitely and still maintain a supply for her own mills. So I submit, Mr. Speaker, that the government could relieve this situation very easily if they wished to do so.

Some person will say, "What about the settler? The settler has to sell his wood, which he cuts in the winter, in order to maintain his family until he clears sufficient land for the raising of crops." I thoroughly agree with that position; the settler must be protected, but I consider that it would not be a difficult matter for the provincial government to arrange with the pulp and paper companies that the actual settler should receive a fair market price for his pulpwood. It must be borne in mind that not over 25 per cent of the pulpwood which we export is cut by actual settlers; by far the larger portion of it is cut by pulpwood farmers and by companies which have acquired large areas of timber for the purpose of cutting and exporting the pulpwood to the United States.

Now I would like to direct attention for a few moments to the iron and steel industry. In his address the other day the hon. member for Swift Current (Mr. Bothwell) devoted some time to this industry and quoted from the brief presented by the Algoma Steel Corporation before the tariff board, particularly with respect to the iron ore industry. He quoted as follows:

> There are in Canada reserves of iron ores of excellent metallurgical quality, and large tonnages of these ores are available and contiguous to the Great Lakes water system, and therefore in a position to be cheaply conveyed to the consuming centres, which are also situated adjacent to the same water system, but all the known deposits of ores located in this district require beneficiation before they can be used in the blast furnace. The cost of beneficiation is in excess of the cost at which American lake Superior ores can be laid down at Canadian furnace docks at the present time, and therefore governmental assistance in the way of bounties would be required to firmly establish a Canadian iron ore industry.

He quoted further from the brief, as follows:

> . . . . until increased mining costs in the American iron ore fields force the price of ore well beyond present levels, we will be unable to proceed with the development of this important future source of supply.

His comment was as follows:

> That was the statement made before the tariff board. If the situation in Canada is such that it is going to cost us considerably more to use our own ore and coal in order to manufacture iron and steel, surely at this time it is good business for us to get our iron and steel from some other place.

The statement he read from this brief is substantially correct with respect to the iron ore situation in this counry. We have large quantities of iron ore in different sections of Canada; in northern Ontario particularly there are large deposits of siderite and magnetite ores, but none of this ore is suitable for blast furnace use in its natural state. It has to be treated; the sulphur, phosphorus and other impurities must be removed and the iron content raised before the ore is suitable for blast furnace use. This costs money, and as a result not a ton of iron ore is being mined in Canada to-day for use in Canadian blast furnaces; the ore is secured from the iron mines of the United States or Newfoundland. However, I contend, Mr. Speaker, and I am backed up in this contention by the commission appointed by the Ontario government some years ago to investigate the iron ore situation, that it is not in the national interest for Canada to be dependent upon another country for the raw material of such a great basic industry as that of iron and steel. This commission, having made an exhaustive study of the whole situation, recommended that a bounty should be paid in order to assist in meeting the cost of the treatment of this ore, one-half of the bounty to be paid by the province and the other half by the Dominion. So far as the province of Ontario is concerned, two or three years ago they provided for the payment of their share of the bounty, but although my hon. friend from Fort William (Mr. Manion) and myself have endeavoured to impress upon this government the necessity of providing their share of the bounty, up to the present time they have not seen their way clear to do so.

Just here I would like to refer to the mining of ore from the Helen mine, when it was in operation, in order to give an idea of what this would mean to Canada. This was a mine at Michipicoten which was operated for a few years, during which time a little more ore was taken from it than was imported into Canada last year, and I will give the actual result of the operation of that mine during that length of time. The company paid in wages $1,820,000, in freight $1,642,000 and for supplies $1,020,000, or a total of $4,482,000, and it is estimated that at least $700,000 of that total was for farm produce. We must bear in mind that the cost of mining ore is almost entirely in wages and freight rates, and I contend that it would be very much in the interests of Canada to keep that money circulating in our own country instead of sending it to the United States.

Some people are opposed to the principle of bounties, and in that connection I would like to quote what Mr. Fielding had to say. As the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Ralston) stated this afternoon, we are indebted to Right Hon. W. S. Fielding for providing a bounty for the iron and steel industry about 1900, which bounty was paid for about ten years. Referring to this fact, Mr. Fielding said:

> In this connection,, I would like to invite the attention of the house to the question of what these bounties have accomplished. I know that with some excellent citizens of Canada the idea of bounties is not popular. More than once I have met people of the very best class who shake their heads over the idea. I think, however, that it can be clearly shown that the treasury of Canada has not lost one dollar from the payment of bounties. The iron and steel industries which have been established in the country have undoubtedly had a great effect in the development of the trade in Canada. Just how far the influence of a steel industry is felt may be a matter of debate. I have no doubt that honourable gentlemen have found many cases where business has been influenced favourably a long distance from the location of an iron and steel plant; I have found such cases myself; and it must be remembered that in all the principal trade centres of Canada vast quantities of goods have been purchased and sold to these steel ports, as I may describe them.

He goes on to show that the collection of customs duties at ports where steel industries were established increased materially as a result of the increased business carried on after the bounties had been paid. He gives a comparison of the ten-year period before the bounties were paid and the ten-year period during which they were paid, which shows that the customs duties collected in the first period amounted to $7,708,566.69 and in the second period, $16,710,211.72. The collections at the port of Sault Ste. Marie increased by almost $1,000,000 per year for the ten-year period subsequent to the payment of bounties. From three to five million dollars was paid annually in wages, and large sums were also paid to our railways as a result of the operations of the steel mills in that city. Since the war the steel industry in Canada has had to contend with very unfair competition in its own market from the large steel industries in other countries, especially the United States. Last year I presented to this house as clearly and as frankly as I could the reasons why we considered this competition was not in the interests of Canada. I offered a concrete suggestion as to how it could and should be remedied. Time will not permit me to repeat this argument to-night, but I will read an extract from the brief submitted by the Algoma Steel Corporation to the Advisory Board on Tariff and Taxation, which shows that our steel industry was operating at less than fifty per cent of capacity, although equipped to manufacture practically all the steel which was imported, with the exception of some of the larger shapes of structural steel. In part, the brief reads as follows:

> From these figures it will be noted that during these seven years (1921 to 1928) our steel-making capacity has been employed only to the extent of 39 per cent of rated capacity, and that in only one year did we exceed 50 per cent, viz: the fiscal year ended June last. The increase in that year was due entirely to the increased demand for standard rails and fastenings.

While our mills were operating at less than fifty per cent of their capacity, we find importations increasing at an alarming rate. Under the heading Iron and Its Products we find the following imports:

1926..	181,196,800
1927..	229,429,485
Twelve months ending January 31, 1929.. ..	330,953,152

There is an increase of over $100,000,000 since March 31, 1927, and of 150 per cent in a period of less than four years. What does this mean to the men engaged in this industry? The following appears in the brief of the Algoma Steel Corporation:

> The salaries and wages paid during this period (1921 to 1928) amounted to $22,501,555.65, or an average of $3,214,507.95 per annum. Assuming full employment for our steel-making capacity, the additional wages paid within our own plant would amount to upwards of $2,000,000 per annum.

Is it any wonder, Mr. Speaker, that those interested in building up the steel industry of this country, and those dependent upon that industry for employment, are asking for a policy which will give them a fair chance in their own market? It is not necessary for me to argue the question further. The government, and particularly the Minister of Finance, is thoroughly familiar with the whole situation. What we want is action. This matter has been before the government for three years; it was one of the first matters placed before the tariff advisory board for their consideration. What I desire to ask, and what the people whom I represent desire to know, is why no provision has been made in the budget of this year to relieve the situation. The government cannot say that there has not been sufficient time in which to thoroughly investigate the matter. I ask the minister in all sincerity to have the courage to adopt a real Canadian policy, one which will enable us to carry on the manufacture of iron and steel within our own country and provide more steady employment for the men engaged in that industry.

Mr. D. J. COWAN (Port Arthur-Thunder Bay): Mr. Speaker, it is customary to congratulate the member who speaks before you and on this occasion I have very great pleasure in conveying my congratulations to one of my fellow citizens who is also a fellow Conservative. The sentiments which he has expressed are those which are dear to my heart. The fact that there are to be no speakers from the other side of the house this evening may be an indication that we have finally tamed them into submission, or perhaps they have realized the hopelessness of answering the arguments which have been developed from this side of the house. I propose to address myself to what is not included in the budget proposals.

By the budget proposals introduced by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb) the government has invited the house to display a trustfulness, not to say credulity which might well tax the faith of the most docile and best disciplined majority. One would have thought that the Liberal lions, particularly from the west, would have demanded a bigger banquet.

In view of the dangerous situation which may arise after the summoning of the congress of the United States, it seems to be the government's policy to mark time with regard to tariff changes; apparently it is the desire of the government to wait and see. The action of the government in deciding to postpone the tariff changes has caused serious and widespread disappointment. It means that all the work of the tariff advisory board during the past year has been swept temporarily into the dust-bin. Many great industrial corporations have spent thousands of dollars in preparing their case and in having it heard before that board. The steel, coal, electric-stove and foundry companies, as well as those requesting a revision and aid in the coal, steel and iron industries have all gone to the greatest trouble to collect their information. The failure of the Finance department to carry out any of the recommendations of the tariff advisory board, or to submit to the House of Commons any such recommendations or findings as have been made by that board, will be found to reflect seriously upon the prestige of the board. Unless action follows as a result of these hearings, in future the industrial companies will decline to go to the trouble and expense of preparing their case for presentation to the board, especially in view of the fact that during the last two years the board has given every indication of deciding these applications on purely political grounds. There has been at all times a juggling and shifting between the tariff board and the Department of Finance until the public and the applicants before that board do not know upon which they should place reliance, or upon whom the blame should be placed for delays or postponements. This deception is parallel to that which was practised upon the patriarch of old Isaac; when he desired to confer a blessing upon his son, through the deception of his wife another son was substituted until the blind old man exclaimed: "The voice is Jacob's voice, but the hands are the hands of Esau."

The Postmaster General (Mr. Veniot) in his speech the other day had some remarks to make in regard to the action of the acting leader of the opposition, the hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie). I am not entering upon a defence of the action of the hon. member for South Wellington. He needs no defence at my hands, nor at the hands of anyone else, for his presentation of the arguments against the budget was one of the high lights of the session. As we on this side of the house watched the countenances of hon. members opposite, we could not help feeling that many of them could only be said to be envious of the courage of the man who could follow his convictions. It was apparent to any observer that his amazing eloquence and convincing logic had almost forced them to exclaim as did that old and troubled Roman governor years ago: "Almost thou persuadest me to be a Christian." The present administration have not that forward look; they are looking at the past instead of at the future, and I propose during the few minutes at my disposal to discuss some of the subjects which I submit, in all fairness, should have been included in the budget.

The first matter I wish to discuss is that of highways. The subject of aid to international highways or a trans-Canada highway was introduced into the house by the hon. member for Athabaska (Mr. Kellner). The situation in Ontario, and particularly in the district of Port Arthur and Fort William, is one that calls for special treatment. In 1867 confederation became possible by the building of the trans-Canada railway. The unity of Canada may be made more permanent by the completion of a trans-Canada highway for motor cars. The motor car of to-day is a universal means of transportation of freight and passengers, and the construction of a trans-Canada highway is capable of hastening the unity of Canada, of bringing the east and the west together, of stimulating the development of Canada in a fuller measure than is possible by any other means. The motor car demands an all-weather surface highway, much as the railway train requires steels rails. Its degree of efficiency in solving the problem of transportation is in large measure disappointing owing to the absence of proper highways. All our previously accepted ideas of highways and their use must be revised in the light of the usefulness of the modern motor car and its amazing efficiency. Experts in construction of highways admit that all-weather motor highways are of material importance, and that the greater initial expense in their construction is amply justified. Highways are a matter not only of local interest but of national importance. The whole nation gets the benefit of them. From a national point of view highways are necessary for postal service, for trade and commerce, and for the general welfare of our citizens. It has now been recognized in the transportation world that motor highways, meaning thereby all-weather roads, rival even the railways in the extent of their operations and the service which they render to the public. We all know that in Canada railways were early recognized as of national importance, and to supply the necessary encouragement to bring them into existence the people of Canada gave large and valuable land grants to the promoters and guaranteed their bonds as well. The people of Canada must do the same thing, but in a different manner, for the national highways. The highways when built remain the property of the public; they do not become the property of private corporations. It is not possible, therefore, to induce their development by giving land grants. It must be done by way of cash subsidies. In 1919 the Dominion government, in cooperation with the provinces, arranged a plan whereby the sum of $20,000,000 was set aside by the Dominion government for main highway construction in Canada, out of which under the arrangement arrived at, the Dominion government paid to the provinces 40 per cent of the cost of contruction, the routes for the various highways being worked out in conjunction with the provinces. I think the proposed construction of a trans-Canada highway embodies a sound national policy and should be accepted as outside and above party politics.

The federal government of the United States has, since 1917, expended more than $650,000,000 among the various states of the union to stimulate and assist them in building their main system of highways. In proportion to the effort that has been made by the United States, $20,000,000 from the federal treasury in ten years is a very small amount. If Canada were making to-day the same effort as the United States, the amount spent on highways by the federal government would amount to $60,000,000. The advantage which would accrue to Canada as a whole by the construction of a trans-Canada highway cannot be measured in dollars and cents. It is estimated that citizens of the United States spent in Canada last year hundreds of millions of dollars. Tourists will not travel in Canada unless good motor roads are provided. There are 20,000,000 motor vehicles being used in the United States of America. The people there believe in using their cars for both pleasure and business; they have built the most wonderful highways throughout the length and breadth of their immense country, and in order to attract them to our northern country we must have all-weather motor highways throughout the Dominion. There is as yet not one transcontinental highway across Canada. We realize in the cities of Port Arthur and Fort William and in the surrounding districts the advantages of having a highway between Duluth and Port Arthur. The value in dollars and cents to the merchants, hotels and business people of those communities of the traffic coming over this route is of transcendent importance. The provincial government should not be obliged to pay the whole cost of the construction of the remainder of the road extending east from Port Arthur to Sault Ste. Marie. This is a work of national and not provincial importance, and a portion of the expense should be borne by the national treasury. I suggest in this connection one other thought; the western provinces, including the district which I represent, have a large mileage and a sparse population. The contemplated highway is a provincial asset and not merely a local improvement. Federal aid should, therefore, be granted to the provinces in proportion to the mileage to be constructed rather than on the basis of population. This highway policy which has been adopted in the United States has worked out very successfully there and I urge upon the government of the day the advantage of adopting the same policy in our own country.

A year ago, speaking in the budget debate, I advocated the policy of the extension of our air mail routes. This method of the transportation of mail has been tried by the Post Office Department to some extent in eastern Canada. I would urge the government to establish an air mail service from Montreal and Toronto to western Canada. I need not dilate on the necessity of rapid transportation of mail. I think the system has got beyond the stage of an experiment. Even now it is certain that a great saving in time will be achieved, and that, after all, is the primary end of air mail service. To-day the post office is a vital and indispensable part of organized daily life, and especially of business and commerce. No possible method of making a more efficient and serviceable handling of mail can be ignored by the postal authorities. It is but a natural development in the evolution of mail delivery that airplanes should be adopted wherever possible. It requires 48 hours for mail by the present mode of transportation to pass from Port Arthur to Montreal, and 60 hours from Winnipeg to Montreal. This by a proper service could be cut down to 10 and 13 hours respectively. I understand that the advantages of the service which has been put on between Rimouski and Montreal have received favourable comment. In the United States the air mail service was put into effect on the 15th of May, 1918. It has met with a gradual response from the mailing public, and has now reached the stage where it has become a daily factor in the business life of the communities throughout that country. Prior to February 15th, 1926, the air mail service in the United States was operated by the Post Office Department. On that date, the air mail service under contract between the Post Office Department and private individuals or corporations was established, and on September 1, 1927, the government relinquished its operation of the air mail service, and now all mailing routes are under contract. I think it is taken for granted that the service provided by airplanes would be more expensive to the department. An increase in the air mail postage rate would help to bear a portion of the extra expense thus incurred. In the United States they have adopted a rate of 10 cents per half ounce, as compared to a rate of 2 cents per ounce for ordinary first-class mail. This increase in the rate would create a fund to offset the increase in the cost to the department for transportation of mail by aircraft. Naturally every city could not have delivery of mail by aircraft, but means could be found of distribution from the larger centres to the smaller communities.

Now I turn to the question of the waterways. One of the questions which had been discussed a great deal in the press, by engineering societies, and by the people generally, is that of a highway to the sea. Should there be a deep water canal connecting the Great lakes with the Atlantic, and what should be our relation with the United States in connection therewith?

We must keep in mind the fact that the United States is insisting upon a seaway by way of the Great lakes and the St. Lawrence, and if Canada does not cooperate, the question of an alternative route through the United States must be considered. This is one of the important questions that has arisen in Canada during the first quarter of the twentieth century, and upon this important question no lead or direction has been given by the Prime Minister or the government of the day. The policy of the government seems to be one of shuffling and evasion. It is to be observed that no communication has passed from Canada to the United States in regard thereto since April 4, 1928, that no advance has been made in the matter of determining the respective jurisdictions of the provinces and the federal authorities and that at least another year will pass away before the government takes any step to reconcile the interests of the provinces and the Dominion.

If any conclusion can be drawn from the attitude and actions of the government, it is that the water-power privileges are the dominant factor and the chief interest underlying the waterways project. This may be of interest to eastern Ontario and a portion of Quebec, but it does not take into account the long view of the interest of the rest of Canada in the canalization of the St. Lawrence river. This is certainly a work for the general advantage of Canada, and the opinion has been freely expressed that it would have been better business to have withheld action on the water-power franchises until the whole scheme had been worked out and a settled policy determined upon as regards both the water-power development and the construction of the canal. I think the time is opportune for the government to give a lead to the discussion on this subject, and that the attitude of the government should be presented to the house and to the public. According to the press reports, a great body of public opinion in the United States views with alarm the franchise proposed to be given to the Beauharnois Power and Canal Company. It is easier to retain than to regain privileges and franchises, and it is the more remarkable in view of the fact that the St. Lawrence advisory commission recommended that the cost of the construction of the canal should be paid out of the sale or earnings of the power franchises. It would appear that the day is past when the cost of the canal is to be borne in the manner suggested by the advisory board. I think the Prime Minister owes it to the house and to the country to state in unequivocal terms the attitude of himself and his government towards this enterprise, so that we shall know the position we are in, and the course he proposes to take.

I intend for a few moments to elaborate on the argument which has just been presented by my hon. friend from West Algoma (Mr. Simpson) with regard to the iron ore situation. The importance of the iron and steel industry in Canada warrants exceptional measures being taken to make that industry as far as possible self-sustaining in regard to its supply of raw material. For the last calendar year, and for several years prior thereto, not a ton of iron ore has been mined in Canada or used by Canadian furnaces. This is a condition that should not be allowed to continue.

The great area of northern Quebec, northern Ontario and Manitoba, known as the precambrian shield, is the most highly mineralized area in the world. Geologists tell us that in that geological formation is found all the great mines that are in existence to-day. Eighty-five per cent of the precambrian formation is in Canada and the remainder is in the United States. The 15 per cent in the United States we find in the great Mesaba range, upon which to-day the prosperity of the United States depends in regard to steel and iron products. Our balance of trade is adversely affected to the extent of over $300,000,000 by the importation of American ores during a period of twelve months.

Under the system of bounties on certain mineral products, there was paid out of the federal treasury up until the year 1911 the sum of $17,000,000. At that time a great number of blast furnaces were established in Canada, at Hamilton, Port Colborne, Midland, Parry Sound, Deseronto, Ojibway, Port Arthur and Sault Ste. Marie, but many of these have ceased to operate as a result of the discontinuance of the bounty provided.

The advantages to be gained by the use of our own ore are apparent to anyone who has given any thought to the subject. Sufficient investigation has been made to demonstrate that there are iron ores in Canada in sufficient tonnage that could be made available immediately by some preliminary treatment. I urge that the federal Department of Mines should conduct experiments to demonstrate an efficient method of beneficiating our low grade iron ores, and assistance by means of a bounty would encourage the installation of extensive plants and permit Canadian furnaces to utilize Canadian ore. Researches have been conducted in the state of Minnesota to demonstrate the most economical metallurgical methods of bringing our low grade magnetites up to merchantable grades. The United States Bureau of Mines at Duluth have been experimenting on ores similar to our own, but of much lower grade, giving from 20 to 27 per cent iron content. I think the department could well make use of experiments so conducted, as they have extended over a period of years. Extensive areas have been explored in many parts of Canada, and I have no reason to doubt that concentrates of merchantable ores will be found in these ranges. This is particularly true of northern Ontario, which on more than one occasion has been referred to as the breaking point between eastern and western Canada.

The development of the iron ore industry would increase the revenue of our railways. It is estimated that at least 65 per cent of the tonnage of the railways in the United States is derived from the products of the mines. It would help to solve the question of providing tonnage and earning power for the Canadian National Railways. It would stimulate the development of all our mining activities, and the increment in the revenues of Canada that the proposed bounty would require would amount to only a very small tax. I would urge the Minister of Finance to take advantage of the opportunity of granting needed assistance to this industry, particularly in view of the fact that the Ontario government in 1924 passed what is known as the Iron Ore Bounty Act, for the very purpose of assisting this industry. It is to be noted in this connection that the treasury would be assuming no responsibility if no iron ore was produced. I suggest it is worthy of a trial to ascertain whether the producers with the aid of a bounty could make a success of the enterprise or not. The advantages are numerous, and the disadvantages are not evident. The Minister of Finance should, therefore, take advantage of the Ontario act, and the Dominion should contribute a sum sufficient to put this enterprise upon a satisfactory basis.

It is a striking commentary on Canadian industry that the number of men employed in blast furnaces in 1913 was 1,589 and that in 1925 the number had been reduced to 656 and is still less at this date. There are now only three furnaces in operation in Canada, and their total output is only 21 per cent of the total capacity of such furnaces.

Iron ore, coal and steel are the three main roots that give life to and support the trunk of the iron trades tree. No matter how widespreading and fruitful its branches, if this tree has its roots outside of Canada it is not a Canadian possession. It is time now to establish, in cooperation with the province of Ontario, this industry on a permanent and successful commercial basis. The time to begin is now, in order that it may be fairly established within the next ten years.

There are many iron ore deposits in northern Ontario that would be developed if this legislation should receive approval, and I know of no legislation of a constructive character that would be of greater advantage to Canada as a whole.

Mr. SPEAKER: Is the house ready for the question?

Mr. J. A. FRASER (Cariboo): Before the question is put, Mr. Speaker, I want to say a few words about the district that I represent in this assembly. I have listened attentively to a good deal of what has been said in regard to other parts of the Dominion, and as I represent the district of Cariboo, from which you do not hear a great deal, I propose for a few minutes to give you a description of my constituency.

In the first place, let me tell you that British Columbia starts at the 49th parellel and extends as far north as the 60th. The district of Cariboo starts at the 49½ parallel and extends north to the 60th. Then if you take it east and west, British Columbia is about 700 miles across, and my constituency takes in only 350 miles of it. You see, sir, I represent about one-half the area of British Columbia, and therefore should have as much to say as the other thirteen members from that province.

An hon. MEMBER: Go ahead.

Mr. FRASER: Thank you. Now, let me say also that so far as occupations are concerned, in my riding they are almost as diversified as its area is extensive, because we have there almost every kind of known occupation. We are richly endowed with raw materials, and we are developing them to sustain our population. We engage in all branches of agriculture, including wheat-growing and fruit-growing. We have the great grain-growing area of the Peace river, as well as other grain-growing areas in the southern part of the district in the neighborhood of Kamloops, up through the Cariboo country along the line of the Pacific Great Eastern. We have in addition a large area suitable for the raising of cattle, in fact the largest area anywhere in the Dominion to-day. And I mean the raising of cattle without the necessity of providing them with shelter during the winter time except in a very primitive way. That area extends from the Nicola valley in the south clear up to the Cariboo country, a distance of three or four hundred miles, and from the base of the coast range on the west to the base of the Selkirk range on the east, a distance of some two hundred miles. We raise a large number of cattle there, but the area is easily capable of raising three or four times the number.

Now, you will appreciate the importance of this industry when you remember that to-day the city of Vancouver provides a very good market for the beef produced from those cattle. The population of Vancouver is certainly going to grow, so there is no need to be afraid of the expansion of the beef-raising industry. It is only a very few years since the city of Vancouver was founded; to-day it has a population of 325,000, and I can assure the house that in the next twenty-five years it will be a city of a million people.

We have also the dairying industry, a very important industry, but it has been affected to a certain extent, and not favourably either, by the policy of this government. I hear from all the dairying centres of my constituency the same complaint that is voiced in this house, and I would suggest to the government that it would be in the interests of the dairy farmers, especially those in my county, if some remedy were applied to meet the present unsatisfactory condition. However, I shall have more to say in regard to this a little later on.

We have also an important fruit and vegetable growing industry, extending from the Shuswap lake and Salmon arm in the east all the way down the Thompson river and up the Fraser river to Lillooet. This is the choicest fruit-growing area in British Columbia, and given a fair chance a very profitable industry could be developed. But under present conditions the people there are not operating very successfully. A similar condition prevails to that which obtains in the west in regard to wheat-growing, as we are advised by members from the prairie provinces. Although they have had a big crop of wheat the complaint is general that it has not been profitable to the farmers. But the reason why we cannot grow fruit profitably in these valleys is that, to a certain extent, the policy of the government is not what it should be. Last session when the question of some measure of protection for the fruit and vegetable growers was before the house I remember distinctly that when I asserted the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) had no intention of putting the dumping regulations into effect he assured me that he could act in five minutes if the occasion presented itself. At that time I said that the Prime Minister had no intention of taking action because he had sat in his place in parliament as Prime Minister for the four years from 1922 to 1926, and there was urgent necessity during all that time to put the clause into effect, but he had not done so. What has been the result? During the whole of last season the fruit growers of British Columbia were demanding that the dumping clause should be put into operation. This was not done by the government, and consequently the fruit growers in this district have suffered very severely.

Now, in addition to these important agricultural activities we have an extensive mining industry. Not only in placer mining, which is the original form of mining, in which you discover a gravel pit, wash the gravel through a sluice box and find in the bottom the pure gold—not only that kind, which I am sorry to say is not as profitable as it was in the early days, but as well mining from all kinds of quartz is carried on. One thing I wish to say in regard to quartz or, as we call it, lode mining, is that it requires a great deal of scientific investigation. Now the government have agreed with British Columbia on the fact that it is properly the work of the federal administration to make a geological survey of that province, and while they are carrying out this work to a reasonable extent so far as British Columbia as a whole is concerned, I am bound to say that in the district of which I am speaking the progress is not at all satisfactory; they are not working fast enough. The district of Cariboo covers one half of the area of British Columbia and in all that area during the last two or three years the government have been spending between eight and ten thousand dollars per annum on the survey. That is not adequate; it is not good enough; it is not satisfactory to the people who are prospecting in our mines. The prospector is gradually disappearing, and those prospectors that remain should be encouraged to a greater extent than they are by this government. And the way in which to encourage them is to furnish them with the geological information which is absolutely necessary before they can proceed with prospecting operations. I therefore appeal to the generosity of the government in this matter; I appeal to the generosity of the minister from British Columbia to remember when he is preparing his estimates that Cariboo wants more money for geological survey work.

We have also very important areas of timber throughout the whole of that vast district. At present they are not being developed rapidly except along the lines of railway where transportation is available. Let me remind the house of the fact that these people's markets are not available from the west coast; they are on the prairies and in the eastern United States. Very large quantities of timber are exported from the Fraser valley in the north and from the Thompson valley to eastern markets in the United States and around Chicago.

Then again we have fishing of various kinds, as well as hunting and trapping. And I do not know where you could go in the world to find more and better scenery than in that country. I remember having heard the Hon. Mr. Tolmie when he was in this house make the statement that twenty-five Switzerlands could be carved out of British Columbia and still leave plenty of territory over. I would go further and say that you could carve twenty-five Switzerlands out of Cariboo alone and have something left over. I have briefly surveyed the territory for this reason: under existing conditions we naturally require a certain amount of government service. We are not receiving that attention which a sparsely settled district requires. Scattered throughout the area are small communities the extremes of which are at least a thousand miles apart, and these communities require, if you are to keep them settled and enable them to make some progress, communication in some form or other with the outside world. One means of connecting these settlements is through the telephone and telegraph. The federal government have undertaken the responsibility of linking up a certain number of these settlements by means of telephone, because it is impossible otherwise for them to be self-sustaining under present conditions. As the population increases the telephone becomes profitable, or at least it will pay expenses. And when that condition arises what happens? The government sell out the telephone to some commercial company and it is then operated on a commercial basis. I submit that the investment of this money in commercial telegraphs is a wise expenditure. How can we expect to have settlers remain in that country under present conditions, living a happy and contented life, unless they are linked up one with another and are able to communicate with surrounding settlements. Just imagine women and children out in these places, small valleys far back from the main highways: do we expect them to settle down contentedly when they are not able to communicate with their nearest neighbour, twenty, thirty or forty miles away, having no word with them from one year's end to the other? Surely that is a condition which the government can remedy. I readily admit that the government have to a certain extent provided these services for several of the communities in question, and we are very grateful for such extensions as have been made. But I wish to impress upon the government that these extensions are not nearly rapid enough. The government do not seem to get down to business and provide the service which the people should be given under modern conditions if they are expected to remain in these localities and be happy, contented and prosperous.

I should like to remind the Postmaster General (Mr. Veniot)—he is not in his seat, but that does not make much difference—that important postal services are absolutely necessary throughout the whole area. From time to time, travelling around the district, I go into little communities where I find that the people have been anywhere from ten to fifteen years without a postal service of any kind, so that the inhabitants are obliged to travel ten or fifteen miles to get their mail. I know of one settlement from which I received a communication the other day which is asking for the establishment of a mail route seventeen miles to the point where the people usually get their mail. I travelled through that settlement in 1924 when the road was first opened and there were settlers there then, and I find in 1929 that these people had not yet been furnished with a postal service. I ask the Postmaster General: does he think that this is treating people in outlying settlements in a fair and reasonable manner? If you want these people to remain where they are you must provide them with reasonable services. If the minister can spend hundreds of thousands of dollars to provide an air service such as exists in the eastern section of the country he should be able to provide a few dollars for the maintenance of some kind of service in these isolated communities.

The other day I heard the Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb) in his budget speech make the statement that there was general prosperity throughout the whole Dominion. Well, I am sorry to have to carry any tale of woe to the minister or to indulge in what he would call whining; but I am bound to tell him that judging by conditions in the district I represent there is by no means any prosperity. How can a farmer in the Peace River country, for instance, be prosperous under present conditions without transportation facilities of any kind, where it costs him 30 cents a bushel to get his wheat to the end of steel? It is useless to talk about there being prosperity in a community of that kind, and it is astonishing to think that not only do these people remain where they are but that thousands are at present going into the district. I should say it is about time the government got busy and did something with regard to the extension of railway facilities to that part of the country.

I have pointed out also that our fruit and vegetable growers certainly are not enjoying any prosperity. I have heard some farmer members say that the farmers on the prairies at present are not getting enough to cover the cost of production, but I should say our fruit growers are doing even worse than that; they are going behind to a certain extent.

Then consider the cattle industry. I do not want to express any tale of woe with regard to that industry, because they have had a pretty good year; I was told on reliable authority that for the first time in seven years they are getting sufficient to cover the cost of production. But you cannot call that industry prosperous.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): And that is the best they have done for seven years?

Mr. FRASER: Yes, and let me say that in the years 1922 and 1923 the statement was made to me by one of the largest raisers of cattle in that district that the money he received for his beef would not pay the wages of his men. Now that industry is making enough to pay the cost of production, but that is not enough; they want something better.

I have occupied more time than I had expected in talking about the Cariboo district, and now I wish to take up the statement of the Minister of Finance with regard to the increase in customs revenue of $28,000,000, or 15 per cent. The claim is made by the minister that he is not increasing taxation in this country, that as a matter of fact he is reducing taxation, but what are the figures? In 1925 the customs revenue was $120,122,453; in 1926 it increased to $143,933,110; in 1927 it was $158,966,367 and in 1928 it was $171,872,768. Then how can the minister say that he is reducing taxation while the amount of money which is being collected in customs duties is increasing? And again, why is he collecting more money in this way? I may be mistaken, but I am under the impression that a certain hon. member on this side of the house is responsible in a large measure for that increase; I refer to the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens), who commenced an agitation in 1925 for the investigation of the customs department. The increase in the amount being collected at present is largely due to that investigation, and I think it is only right and just to the hon. member for Vancouver Centre that some one should mention this fact. I think the country should know that the increased efficiency in that department and the more rigid supervision really has been the result of that investigation.

The Minister of Finance also says that the policy of this government is not a high tariff but a low tariff policy. How those people on the other side of the house do love to talk about a high tariff policy; if they have anything to say about the tariff at all they cannot leave out that word "high." The hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Luchkovich), during the course of his excellent speech the other day, said that he had been investigating the difference between the Liberal and the Conservative tariffs, and over a certain number of years he found that the only difference was that the Liberals had collected six-tenths of one per cent less than had been collected by the Conservatives. I have the annual report of the Department of National Revenue, which anyone can read and from which my figures can be checked, and from this report I want to point out to the house and to the country exactly how the taxation compares year with year. I desire to place before the house the percentage of customs taxes collected by the various governments from 1921 to 1928 on the total duty collected on the total imports entered for home consumption. The contention is always made that, the Conservatives being a high tariff party, when they get into office they impose a higher tariff than the Liberals, but, according to my figures, that is not so. They are as follows:

1922..	16.2
1923..	16.6
1924..	15.1
1925..	15.0
1926..	15.5

In 1921, when the Conservatives were in power, we collected customs duties at the rate of 14.5 per cent on the total imports; in 1928 under this low tariff policy, the government collected 15.5 per cent. So how can any man tell me that this is a low tariff government? Still the Minister of Finance, in the most convincing manner, makes the statement that this is a low tariff government, while, according to these figures, which can be easily checked, they have increased the total taxation on the people of this country by one per cent.

A few days ago the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Glen) made another astonishing statement. With regard to the high tariff policy he said:

> There is a growing feeling against high tariff in the United States, despite what is said to the contrary.

I submit that this hon. member must be a modern Rip Van Winkle; where has he been and what has he been doing for the last few years? Apparently he does not know that there was an election in the United States last fall and that the low tariff party was snowed under to the extent of 6,000,000 votes. Apparently he has never heard of that, and I suppose he never heard that although the Democratic party has been the low tariff party in the United States for the last seventy-five years, during the last election they had to climb on the high tariff band wagon in order to get any votes at all.

There has been a certain amount of criticism levelled at this government during the last few days in connection with their actions with regard to technical education, but in all seriousness I cannot agree with that criticism. I do not know what could be more consistent with the Liberal policy than to refuse to aid technical education. Why should they spend money in training the young men and women along this line when they are doing everything they can to take our industries across the line? Nothing could be more consistent; as a matter of fact, it is the only consistent thing I have seen them do since I came to this house.

The same thing would apply to the matter of highways. Why should this government spend money on a national highway; why should they spend money to build up a Canadian national sentiment? Do not all their policies lead south? The policy which they have adopted in this matter is another consistent thing. Why should not the few of us who are going to be left in this country have an opportunity of getting in our little cars and going down to Washington where we have spent half a million dollars in establishing an embassy? We can go down there and have a look at it, but nothing is more natural than for the Liberal government to refuse to give us a highway across Canada. It might develop a Canadian national sentiment, and that would not be in line with the policy which the government is pursuing.

I am not going to take up very much of the time of the house in discussing the dairy industry because so much has already been said on that subject. I do not intend to burden the records with any extensive figures, but I should like to give a few quotations from the proceedings of the tenth annual meeting of the National Dairy Council of Canada, held in the King Edward hotel, Toronto, November 26 and 27, 1928. Representatives from all over the Dominion of Canada assembled in Toronto to discuss matters pertaining to their business. These men were experts in their line and should know what they were talking about. I would like to read a few words from the address of the president, as follows:

> We feel (and we believe rightly so) that the dairy industry has not had a fair show and that if it had had right consideration we would not to-day be importing fifteen or twenty million pounds of butter per year to feed our own people. It is the duty of this council to do what it can to see that the dairy industry has a chance to develop under just and fair conditions.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Is that Mr. Caulder?

Mr. FRASER: Yes, from Saskatchewan. A Mr. Robinson of Quebec, discussing the reason why there had been a reduction in the quantity of milk and cream produced in this country, said:

When the farmers of this country get a price for their products which will be just a little more attractive to them than they are at present, then the butter fat will be forthcoming, and not before.

That is his reason for the decrease in the production of these dairy products—that the price has been too low. Why is it too low? Ever since the Australian trade agreement came into operation we have been told that it has made no difference in the price of these products, but we have the evidence of expert dairymen to the contrary. I would ask the house to remember that members from British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan, Manitoba, Ontario and Quebec and, I think, from some of the maritime provinces, were present at this convention. They were discussing matters which pertained to their industry, and the following resolution was laid on the table for discussion:

That the National Dairy Council reaffirms its adherence to the principle of adequate protection for the dairy industry on butter and cheese.

That resolution was moved by a Mr. Berry from British Columbia. In moving the resolution he said:

The tariff in this Dominion has been for the benefit of almost everybody but the farmer all the way down the line. There is nothing wrong, to my mind, in the farmer of the prairies asking some advantages in the way of protection. The implement manufacturer and the automobile manufacturer ask for adequate tariff protection, and there is no reason why the farmer should not have adequate protection in connection with the manufacture of butter.

Mr. Clarke, from Alberta, said:

I am sure Mr. Berry has given you exactly the feeling of the western farmers. I think it is up to us to look for protection in our own interests.

Mr. Tovell, a representative from Manitoba, said:

I am going to be quite frank in this matter and say that I believe the dairy business in Canada was more prosperous under the situation which prevailed prior to the coming of the Australian trade agreement, but I would also say that I believe we need to use all the good judgment we can in determining methods to try to remedy the present situation.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. ROBERT MILNE (Neepawa): Mr. Speaker, in rising to say a few words in connection with the budget, it is not my intention to enter upon any discussion of the financial standing of the Dominion of Canada. This question has already been dealt with, and will probably be touched upon later. I may say, however, that the man by the roadside cannot help but be of the opinion that a surplus of practically $70,000,000 is a fairly satisfactory condition so far as the finances of the Dominion are concerned.

There are things in the budget which I like and things which I do not like. I am very glad that this year the income tax has been left untouched. I am pleased also that the sales tax has been reduced, because this is a tax which affects practically the whole consuming public. We have heard a great deal about the prosperity of Canada, and perhaps if we measured that prosperity on the basis upon which it has been measured in this house we might believe that our present prosperity has never been exceeded. But I am of the opinion that this prosperity has not been equally distributed; the primary producer has not been getting his share of it. I do not propose to pick out any extreme cases to illustrate this point. The reason why the primary producer is not enjoying to the extent he is entitled the prosperity that exists at present is because in every case he has to take what is left of the price that is paid for the commodity he has to sell. The transportation people get their share first; the distributing organizations get theirs next, and the remainder goes to the primary producer. It costs just as much to distribute grain whether it grades the highest or whether it comes down six or eight grades below the top. Last year, until a very short time before the binders were put into the fields in western Canada, we were promised an abnormal crop. Climatic conditions, however, intervened during the last few weeks of its development, with the result that a large percentage of the grain in western Canada fell into very low grades. That is, there was passing through the inspection department in Winnipeg more grain grading No. 5, No. 6, and feed, than any other grade. A few days ago I picked up a paper which gave the shippings to the head of the lakes, and it was shown that for the week ending March 8 more grain grading No. 5 was shipped than any other grade. This, according to the figures that were given, was worth about twenty-five cents a bushel less than No. 1 northern, or the top grade of wheat. The same conditions applied to oats and barley; the largest number of carloads were always in the lower grades, which, on the market, were bringing in oats, around sixteen cents below the top price, and in barley, around ten cents below the top price. Just to give an idea of the expense in moving 1,000 bushels of wheat from an average point in the prairie provinces to the market at Liverpool, let me quote from the 1927-28 Canada Year Book, page 286:

Railway freight	$150 00
Inland water freight	82 92
Ocean freight	62 10
Commission, profits, fees, interest, loading and other handling charges	87 03
Insurance	15 26

Or approximately forty cents per bushel. These charges do not vary. That is, it costs just as much to handle a low grade wheat as a No. 1 grade, so when one deducts the forty cents from a low grade grain, it can readily see that the price the producer receives is not very large.

I might give another illustration of how the farmer has to take what is left. About the first of March I noticed these figures in the city of Winnipeg. The consumer was paying $1.13 per bushel for Prince Edward Island potatoes. The transportation company received 45 cents per bushel for carrying the potatoes from the maritimes to Winnipeg, and I am told by some of my maritime friends that the farmers were receiving around 20 cents a bushel. There was another 48 cents that disappeared somewhere, no doubt going to the distributors. The fact that the potato market was $1.13 in Winnipeg at that particular time is no indication that the potato grower in Prince Edward Island was getting a fair price for his potatoes. I might say in passing that the people of the Dominion were subsidizing the railway companies to a certain extent to assist the Prince Edward Island growers in getting rid of their potatoes. Then my protectionist friends come along and ask for a duty on potatoes to hold the market for the potato growers of the Dominion. I maintain that 20 cents a bushel is not of much value to the potato growers of the maritime provinces or any other province. If it is not possible to return more to the farmer than 20 cents, it is not in the best interest to hold any bouquets in front of them to encourage them to grow potatoes. Those two illustrations are given to show that the primary producer is not getting a fair share of the prosperity that appears to exist when we measure it by the number of carloads that are shipped.

Farmers in western Canada are quite frequently accused of being extravagant and inefficient, and I want, in order to give an illustration of the so-called extravagance of the prairie farmers, to quote the census returns of 1926 for the western provinces. These returns show that the average farm buildings, which include the home, barn and necessary outbuildings to carry on farm work in the province of Saskatchewan, were valued at an average of $1,802. That amount would scarcely build a garage for some of my prosperous friends in the industrial sections of the Dominion.

In Saskatchewan only 1.1 per cent of the farms had water piped into their houses. Only 1.9 per cent of the total farms had electric light in their homes. Eighteen per cent of the farmers had automobiles, and in Manitoba, the oldest of the three prairie provinces, only 27 per cent enjoyed the advantages of the telephone. In the fact of these facts will anyone accuse the farmers of the prairies of being extravagant in regard to home conveniences?

Not infrequently we hear it said that the real cause of the farmer's trouble is inefficiency; that if he would adopt the well-tested methods of the businessman, he would soon be out of the woods. This is something I have always doubted, because we have had a number of eminently successful business men try their hands at farming. They undertook to employ their well-tested methods to agriculture, only to find that their farms were a useful device for reducing their income tax. We are forced to conclude that the real dirt farmer knows a thing or two, which even a business man does not know. We are now comforted by seeing this opinion confirmed by the researches of the National Industrial Conference Board of the United States. Its findings were that the average output of the farm worker increased 47 per cent during the period from 1899 to 1925, and during the same period the increase per factory worker amounted to 49 per cent. In spite of our industrial miracles and our Henry Fords, the farmer has managed to keep well abreast of the manufacturer so far as improved production goes.

I am not one of those who believe that all the ills of agriculture can be remedied by the Dominion government or by any government in any section of our country. I am inclined to think that the political parties rather flatter themselves when they try to take the responsibility on their shoulders of bringing prosperity to any one particular class. No doubt through the system of taxation they can have an influence on certain phases of the troubles of a particular class.

I am going to outline briefly what I consider are the real problems of agriculture, and I do not think that this applies particularly to the grain growers of western Canada, because I have listened to a great many members speaking in this house and have talked with a good many of my friends from other sections of the Dominion, and I gather that what I have to say would cover perhaps the whole country from one end to the other.

I think one of the greatest costs is the cost of distribution. The next biggest cost is the cost of transportation, and the third, which might be divided under many headings, is the cost of production. I was somewhat surprised at the hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie), for whose judgment and opinion I have a very high regard, when he said that he could remedy present conditions with a scratch of the pen. I cannot think he was serious in making that statement. Instead of studying the actual conditions he must, I think, have been reading some fairy story about a magic pen in a wizard's hand. This magic wand of protection, together with the British flag, has been very kind to the Conservative party in the past, but in my estimation it has been of little benefit to the farmer. I am rather surprised that my hon. friends opposite should be so eager to adopt any policy that originates under the stars and stripes when they have the British flag nailed so firmly to their mast. One would naturally think they would turn their eyes rather to the British flag and imitate the ways and means evolved under it.

Let me develop briefly the question of distribution, to show where I believe there is room for considerable improvement. It is my opinion that those in charge of distribution have not increased their efficiency in proportion to the increased efficiency of the agriculturist and industrialist. When eggs, graded extras, are selling in the city of Winnipeg for 60 cents a dozen, the farmer receives for them on an average 40 cents a dozen, or he gets about 75 cents out of the consumer's dollar. Later in the season, when eggs are selling around 40 cents a dozen, the farmer and the distributor break about fifty-fifty. I maintain that that is not a fair division. Again, when dressed chickens are retailing in the city of Winnipeg at 37 cents a pound, the market quotation f.o.b. Winnipeg is 23 cents a pound; in other words, the farmer gets 60 cents out of the consumer's dollar, and out of that he has to pay the freight from where he lives to the distributing point. In this case the man who has dressed chicken in his warehouse for a week or ten days receives more for his work than the farmer who hatches the chicken, feeds and protects it for a period of from three to six months, dresses and packs, ships it to market, and pays the transportation charges. Last week the market quotations on potatoes in Winnipeg were as follows: wholesale, f.o.b. Winnipeg, $1.10 per 100 pounds, carload lots; jobbers to retailers, $1.35 per 100 pounds; retailers to consumers, $1.88 per 100 pounds. In this case the producer, after paying the freight, gets 52 cents out of the consumer's dollar. So, Mr. Speaker, I maintain that there is more room for greater efficiency in the distribution of goods than in any other of the lines I have mentioned.

Not having access to the prices of manufactured products at the factory, I am unable to say what the spread is between the manufacturers price and the price the consumer pays, but judging from the number of drummers chasing up and down our country in automobiles and the number you see crowding pullman and dining cars I am fairly well convinced that the cost of distribution of manufactured products is about as far out of line, as is the case with the farmer's products. The farmers are attempting seriously to cope with this difficulty by the establishment of cooperative marketing organizations. We now have cooperative wheat pools, cooperative organizations for the selling of poultry and eggs, and for the marketing of live stock, all of which organizations are making substantial progress in spite of persistent opposition from the old established systems of distribution. Just to illustrate that we have persistent opposition, let me quote from the Canada Year Book, page 770:

> Over one hundred complaints have been received and dealt with since the enactment of the Combines Investigation Act. Many of these have related to the basic industries or manufacturing, most have arisen as a result of rapidly changing methods of distribution, the development of chain stores, cooperative buying agencies, department stores, mail order business, and the growing practice of direct selling.

I received a letter some time ago from a wholesale concern in Winnipeg which is endeavouring to cut corners and reduce the cost of distribution, from which I quote this sentence:

> Many commodities are controlled both as to price and as to channels of distribution by agreements amongst manufacturers, wholesalers and many other groups, which tend to stifle open competition and enhance prices to the consumer.

In spite of all our difficulties we are hoping that these systems that we are trying to develop will return a larger percentage of the consumer's dollar to the producer, without materially raising the cost to the consuming public, and I humbly suggest that our manufacturing organizations should make an intensive study of the distribution of their goods in order to narrow the spread between the producer and the consumer.

I want to refer for a moment to the suggestion that has been put forward by the Conservative party that industry, if given adequate protection, would be able to absorb all the products of our farms. It seems to me that this is rather an unreasonable proposition, and too much to expect. In the development of all countries agriculture has always led, that is, the agriculturists open up and develop the virgin soil. After them come the industrialists and they proceed to develop industry. In this country agriculture is so far in the lead that at the present rate of progress many years must elapse before the consumption of farm products catches up even with our present production; in fact the prospect is too remote to be considered seriously. The following figures will illustrate my point. Our exports of cheese exceed our imports by 135,325,000 pounds. The average per capita consumption of cheese in this country during the past year was four pounds. It will readily be seen therefore that we would need an additional population of 33,580,000 to consume our surplus production of cheese. I was not able to get figures for our other milk products in such definite form, but all told we have an excess production of about thirty million dollars' worth. From the Trade of Canada for 1927. I secured these figures with respect to meat products. Taking our fresh pork, dry salted pork and bacon and ham, I find we have a surplus of exports over imports of 415,930,000 pounds. The average per capita consumption of pork is about 70 pounds. It will be seen that to take care of our surplus pork production we would need a additional population of 5,940,000. Our total exports of beef, including pickle, frozen and live, amount to 102,869,000 pounds. To consume this surplus, allowing a per capita consumption of 70 pounds, which is about what we average, we would require a further population of 1,460,000. Last year our wheat crops was estimated at something over five hundred million bushels. Our average consumption of wheat per capita is about 4½ bushels, and it would take an additional population of 111 or 112 millions to consume our surplus production. In view of these figures I maintain that it is futile to hold out to the agriculturists of Canada the expectation that within any reasonable period of time industry can be developed to the point where our industrial population will be able to consume the surplus products of the farm.

It seems to me that our transportation has always been a difficult problem. Nearly every member who has taken part in this debate has referred to transportation, whether he represented the fishermen of the maritimes or the coal men of British Columbia. I became curious to know how the tariff has affected the capital cost of our railway system. Last session before the special committee on railway estimates a question was asked as to the comparative cost, exclusive of duty, of locomotives, box cars and passenger cars in the United States and in Canada. The figures given are for the year 1927. Locomotives, type 482, cost in Canada $94,250, in the United States $83,500, or an increased cost in Canada of $10,750,—approximately 25 per cent. Forty-ton steel frame box cars cost $2,800 in Canada, in the United States, $2,180, or an increased cost in Canada of $620—a gain approximately 25 per cent. Steel colonist cars cost in Canada $35,000, in the United States $26,000, or an increased cost in Canada of $9,000—approximately 30 per cent. Convertible ballast cars cost in Canada $3,150, in the United States $2,600, or an increased cost in Canada of $550—approximately 25 per cent.

Taking these figures, I calculated what this excess cost would mean for an ordinary train of box cars composed of an engine and fifty cars. The excess cost would be $41,750. This would mean an average increased annual charge, allowing interest at five per cent and depreciation at ten per cent, of $6,262.

Then I proceeded to apply this to the whole railway system of the Dominion. The figures are somewhat staggering, but I give them for what they are worth. I had to go back to 1926 to get the equipment figures, but no doubt there has been an increase in the equipment since that time. In 1926 we had 5,680 locomotives. Taking the average cost at $60,000—this is considerably less than the cost I quoted for type 482, but I thought some of the engines might be smaller, although I have no doubt some are larger and more expensive than type 482—taking this average figure of $60,000 gives a total value for our locomotives of $340,000,000. In 1926 we had 6,628 passenger cars. For these I have allowed an average cost of $45,000—I think I am not too high—which gives a total investment of $297,000,000. In that year we also had 211,255 box cars, including stock cars, ballast cars and other equipment. Taking their average value at $2,000, we have a total of $424,000,000. Adding together these three totals we have a grand total for the rolling stock of $1,061,000,000. If all this equipment had been brought into Canada, taking the rate of duty at 25 per cent, it would mean an extra cost for our rolling stock of $265,000,000.

But I went a little further. We have forty-one thousand miles of railway track. Taking 80-pound steel rails, this would represent 140 tons of steel per mile, or a total of 5,740,000 tons. The duty on steel rails at seven dollars a ton represents a total of $41,180,000. If we add this to the 25 per cent duty on the equipment, amounting to $265,000,000, we have a total excess cost of over $306,000,000. I do not think anyone will dispute my statement that the tariff has increased the cost of building our railways and the cost of our rolling stock.

While this protection was being accorded to the steel industry, in order to encourage the building of railways, Canada gave to various railway companies land subsidies totalling more than 47,180,000 acres. She gave a cash bonus of $225,500,000 and guaranteed bonds to the extent of approximately $484,500,000. And then our good friend from Fort William (Mr. Manion) comes to this house and suggests that the steel industry of Canada has not been receiving fair consideration at the hands of the government. But I would point out further that the steel industry of Canada had a tube to the federal treasury which sucked out in subsidy between 1896 and 1912, ten millions of pure gold. Yet we are told, as I say, that that industry has not been getting fair consideration. In 1922 the hon. member for Fort William made this statement in the house:

> I admit frankly I know nothing of the details as to whether a certain article should have fifteen, or twenty, or thirty per cent protection.

I am inclined to think he has not given the question much consideration since. No doubt, after listening to high tariff advocates and preaching it himself, he has made himself believe that high protection is the only means of making possible the development of the iron and steel industry of Canada. I wonder how long he will prescribe the same medicine for this infant that has been unable to walk after all this pampering for the last thirty-six years. The hon. gentleman in his speech a few days ago referred to the fact that something like $300,000,000 odd worth of steel and its products was brought into Canada last year. He did not tell the house that on this amount of steel brought in there was approximately $50,000,000 in duty collected, or almost half the total wage bill of the whole industry which he included under the heading of imports of iron and its products.

In an effort to gain some information regarding the iron and steel industry, I consulted the year book and found a chart showing the production of the different minerals in the Dominion. It was headed, with nickel produced in Canada, showing 90 per cent of the world's production, while asbestos was 85 per cent of the world's production; and in the whole table iron was not mentioned. I understand that iron is not produced in the Dominion at the present time, and surely it is not for want of protection. There must be something else at the bottom of it; it must be the cost of getting the iron ore, or some difficulty in smelting. While iron is perhaps the most important metal to our industries, at the same time, in my opinion, instead of a tariff to encourage production, what should be considered is the question of research and investigation. That will help solve the problem so far as the iron industry is concerned.

We in western Canada have been struggling with freight rates ever since the Dominion was established and we have been pressing for many years for an outlet to Hudson bay. We wish to have that construction as cheap as is possible, yet out of every rail laid and every spike driven on that line the steel industry gets its toll. In the newspapers the other day I read that three hundred cars of cement were to be shipped into the port for work at Churchill. From every shovelful of cement put into the works at Churchill the Canada Cement Company, with its head office at Montreal, calmly sits by and takes its slice because of the tariff.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): What is the tariff on cement?

Mr. MILNE: Eight cents a hundred pounds.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Did not the recent investigation before the tariff board show that cement was cheaper in Canada than in the United States?

Mr. BLATCHFORD: No.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Yes, in some places.

Mr. MILNE: The report shows that the Canada Cement Company has a monopoly in the Canadian market, and since its coming into existence it has split its stock at least twice. It is a wealthy corporation that practically has a monopoly of the Canadian cement business.

Mr. BLATCHFORD: I would point out that the Canada Cement Company—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. MILNE: Another industry which, in the national interests of Canada—

Mr. BLATCHFORD: May I ask the hon. member a question? Is he aware of the fact that Canada cement is sold at 35 cents a barrel less where there is independent competition?

Mr. MILNE: That was the impression I had from reading the report, but I have not the facts before me and I do not propose to make statements I cannot verify. I maintain that cement and paint are two products that are of national importance. In the first place, cement is a substitute for wood, and we hear to-day great complaints about the depletion of our forests. If cement were made as cheap as possible it would tend to prolong the life of the forests. And paint is a commodity which is used in the protection of wood, and for the same reason I suggest that it also should receive very serious consideration. I submit that the tariff on these two items should be reduced to the lowest point. Now, Mr. Speaker, some people are of the opinion, no doubt—

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. member's time is up.

Mr. W. F. GARLAND (Carleton): I crave the indulgence of the house for a few minutes. I would not take up the time of the house now but for the criticisms I have heard of the speech delivered by the hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie) in this debate. That speceh I regard as one of the best I have ever heard in this house and I wish to congratulate the hon. member upon the able and eloquent delivery he made. One part of his speech to which I wish to refer particularly is the statement with regard to the civil service of Canada, which statement is being taken advantage of by our opponents. I would request the critics of the hon. member's speech to read an editorial which appeared in the Evening Citizen of March 15, 1929, and which I shall read in part. I quote:

Mr. Guthrie's sweeping criticism of the government on the ground of extravagance in management of the civil service has naturally attracted special attention in Ottawa. Some civil servants have felt that the attack was upon their profession. But that is quite a mistake. Mr. Guthrie, as a politician and leader of politicians, was attacking his political opponents. He declared the service to be overmanned and wasteful, but imputed the fault to the government, not to those who compose the civil service. Let the government defend itself.

I would like to know what this government has done for the civil service of Canada. I remember the session of 1923, when I was a member of a special committee appointed by this house to inquire into the operation of the Civil Service Act. This committee worked hard and brought in a report on June 22, 1923, in the dying days of the session. The committee held fifty-seven sittings and examined fifty-one witnesses, but nothing has been done in regard to its report except that during the following session Bill No. 122 was brought into the house to provide for the superannuation of civil servants. The motion which brought that bill to this house was moved by myself and seconded by the hon. member for Ottawa (Mr. Chevrier), but from that time to this nothing has been done by the government. I have been wondering whether at the next session of parliament the government would bring down some measures which would be of advantage to the civil servants of Ottawa, thereby securing a majority of the votes in this section.

The chairman of that committee was the present Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Malcolm), who was very fair and efficient at all times. His report was adopted by the house, and it contained a very strong recommendation with regard to the appointment of a supernumerary staff which could be utilized by the department for rush work such as comes along from time to time in the Department of Public Works, the Department of the Interior, the Post Office department and other branches of the service. This staff was to be composed of employees who were not eligible for superannuation and who were perhaps above the age limit and unable to enter the permanent service. To my mind this plan would do away with some of the over-manning which might be noticeable in such departments at slack periods.

Now I wish to specify some cases in which the government might be of assistance to the civil service of Ottawa. For instance, I would like to ask the government what they are doing for the technical and professional branches of the service. Recently I was amused to receive an advertisement from the Civil Service Commission calling for a qualified chemist to start at a salary of $1,800 per annum, with a maximum of $2,100; in this same branch of the government stonemasons and plumbers are receiving over $2,000 per year. To my mind this is very unfair to technical branches of the service, and we should look after these branches immediately or we will lose all the good employees.

Then we come to the Post Office department. The ordinary householder has three persons who call on him every day, the postman, the milkman and the breadman. The milkman and the bread man have a conveyance which takes them from one customer to the other and they work only about half a day, while the postman is loaded down like a packhorse and walks from one house to another carrying c.o.d.'s, stamps, advertisements and everything in general. Some of these postmen carry from 500 to 1,000 advertisements on one delivery; the department receives one cent for each letter from the merchants, and so the postman makes $5 for the government in a morning with the privilege of doing the same thing in the afternoon, but he is not paid nearly so much as the milkman and the breadman.

Then there is the rural mail delivery, where we find mail carriers selling money orders, delivering parcels and advertisements to box holders, delivering registered letters and so on. A rural mail carrier covering a route of perhaps twenty miles receives some $800 a year, out of which he is supposed to keep a horse or two and a rig, and support a wife and family. After covering that route for perhaps ten years with entire satisfaction to everyone concerned, if he does not see eye to eye with the Postmaster General a good supporter of the government may come along and offer to do the work for a dollar a year less, and the friend of the government will get the contract. This is the treatment afforded employees of the Post Office department. In my opinion no civil servant in Canada should receive less than $100 per month.

Now we come to the experimental farm at Ottawa, and to reach it we pass by the carpenter shop of the Public Works department. There we find capable and efficient employees who receive 85 cents per hour for an eight hour day, with statutory holidays off and a two weeks vacation of 88 hours with pay. Then we go to the carpenter shop of the Department of Agriculture, about 200 feet away; there we find another capable and efficient body of employees who receive 72 cents per hour for an eight hour day, with statutory holidays but with no vacation. In other words, if you are working for the Department of Agriculture instead of the Department of Public Works you are penalized to the extent of $1.04 per day in your salary and you are not given a vacation.

Then if we consider the labourers in the Department of Public Works we find that they receive 45 cents per hour for an eight hour day, starting at 8 a.m. and working until 5 p.m. On the other hand, if we consider the farm labourers at the experimental farm we find that they are getting from 32 cents to 40 cents per hour for a ten hour day, starting at 7 a.m. and working until 6 p.m. In other words, if you are a labourer for the Department of Agriculture instead of for the Department of Public Works you receive 20 cents a day less and work two hours a day longer. The argument may be made, of course, that the men working at the experimental farm are often needed urgently; I quite realize that if the weather is good and there is grain standing in the field an extra hour or so is of great value, but that argument does not apply to the men working in the greenhouses where they keep a high temperature in order to force plant growth, nor does it apply to men working on lawns, around shrubs and so on.

I notice also that men employed in the swine, cattle, horse, sheep and poultry divisions of the Department of Agriculture are paid less than they would receive from an outside individual employer engaged in the same work. Last year, while I was attending the Royal Winter Fair at Toronto, I came across a former employee of the experimental farm who was attending the fair in charge of a Guernsey herd from the United States. He was receiving twice the salary he had been paid by the Dominion government and was very much better off in every way. So far as I can see, the only reason why these employees of the Department of Agriculture are not receiving more remuneration is because the Minister of Agriculture is going so fast in his high-powered car that he cannot see them.

I quite believe that the Department of Agriculture is doing everything it can for the agriculturists of this country, but to my mind they could do many more practical things than send out so many pamphlets which the farmers have not time to read, and which, being no more practical than the government itself, are not of great benefit to the farmer. For instance, I suggest that the experimental farm do something practical in order to show the farmer how to handle his produce better; let them show the farmer how to build a root cellar, for example, giving the dimensions and every other detail with the exception of the cost, because a root cellar constructed by the government or by any corporation would cost twice as much as it should and would cost if constructed by a practical farmer.

I listened the other night to a very practical speech on the conditions affecting vegetable production, delivered by the member for West York (Mr. Lawson). I am heartily in accord with what he said, only I would go one step further: I would put an embargo on all vegetable products imported from the United States which could be produced in Canada. Perhaps I would be told by some people that if that were done the customer would have to pay dearly. But it does not work out in that way, because if the farmer or the agriculturist is making a profit others will come into that line of business and production will regulate prices.

There has been considerable discussion in the house with regard to the tuberculosis test of dairy cattle in restricted areas. A question asked by the member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Howard) on March 14, 1929, appears on page 939 of Hansard, the latter part of which is as follows:

3. As money for this is not available until after the estimates are voted, can anything be done in the meantime?

3. No. Nothing but wait patiently.

How can the farmers wait patiently? I know farmers in my constituency who have had all their herds slaughtered. What does that mean to the farmer? It means that he loses the revenue from the cattle for the length of time he has to wait for compensation. If a farmer is sending $350 worth of milk per month to a dairy and he is shut off for three months, he loses $1,050. It seems to me that it would be only fair to give compensation to the farmer immediately his herd goes down. If not, his herd should not be tested until such time as the government has the money. When the Conservative government were in power they compensated the farmer to the extent of $150 and salvage for pure-bred cattle; this government reduced that compensation to $100 and salvage. The Conservative government paid $60 per animal and salvage for a grade cow; the Liberal government has reduced that to $40 and salvage. That is the extent to which the government has benefited the farmer.

I would like to touch upon another phase of agriculture—the poultry business. We have gone ahead very rapidly in the poultry business. Our production in 1927, as compared to that in 1911, was increased 226 per cent, and we estimate that the total production of eggs for 1928 will amount to three hundred million dozen eggs. From 1911 to 1927 the per capita consumption of eggs in Canada has increased from 17.5 to 29.26 dozen, which is the largest per capita consumption in the world. These figures would go to show that we could not have better possibilities in the future than right in our home market.

The following suggestions for improving the situation appear in the Canadian Poultry Review of March, 1929:

1st. If we could induce the British government to put on an extensive campaign to encourage larger consumption of eggs in the United Kingdom there would be undoubtedly a place for our eggs, and I believe would be the easiest way to solve our difficulties.

2nd. It being compulsory from now on to stamp all eggs being imported into the United Kingdom, I would suggest that our federal government establish a uniform marking for all Canadian eggs exported to Great Britain.

3rd. I would suggest that our association request our federal government to open negotiations with Australia and New Zealand for the removal of the duty on Canadian eggs entering these countries. During April, May and June the selling price of eggs in Australia and New Zealand is such that without the handicap of duty eggs could be exported from Canada profitably.

4th. Someone has suggested that the marketing of all Canadian eggs through one selling agency in the United Kingdom would prove beneficial. It is argued that we are often bidding against each other for the same business, and a common agency would avoid this. I am not prepared to express an opinion as to the plan. It has its advantages, possibly some disadvantages, one of the disadvantages being that many of us have our own established connections which we might not care to dispense with. If it were possible, however, to have 100 per cent cooperation in this scheme, I believe it would be advantageous.

5th. In Germany before the war, and I believe since the war to a lesser degree, the government, realizing that their only hope of industrial supremacy depended on their being able to trade successfully on all foreign markets, established a bonusing scheme, whereby on certain conditions industries received financial aid from the public purse on exports to foreign markets.

I might mention that the above was the result of a meeting of egg producers which was held recently in the city of Toronto. Eggs coming from the United States at the present time have to pay a duty of three cents per dozen. The following is the result of a conference held by the National Poultry Council of the United States:

After repeated conferences in New England, New York and Washington, the following tariff rates are the ones requested by the tariff committee of the National Poultry Council when presenting its evidence before the ways and means committee of the house. It is felt that on a basis of these rates the poultry farmers of America will receive protection against the unfair competition, especially that from the Orient.

1. Birds, poultry, live, including geese, ducks, turkeys, chickens, guinea fowl; also live poultry not otherwise specially provided for; 10 cents per pound. When imported for breeding purposes, $2 each. Baby chicks, 4 cents each.

2. Birds, poultry, dead, dressed or undressed, including geese, ducks, turkeys, chickens, guinea fowl, and every variety of water fowl or game birds; also all fowl not otherwise specially provided for; 10 cents per pound.

3. Eggs, poultry, in the shell, 10 cents per dozen. Eggs, frozen or liquid, whole eggs, mixed eggs, yolks, albumen, melange eggs, yolks, 12 cents per pound.

To my mind, that would leave the poultry industry of this country in an awkward position. With this duty of 10 cents you have a rise of 7 cents against you before you start. I should like to comment on the large number of baby chicks which are coming into this country from the southern states. We in Canada, both in the provincial and the Dominion departments, are doing everything we can to stamp out diseases. The provincial government should be commended for its stand in connection with the testing of poultry stock for tuberculosis and white diarrhoea, and in only allowing school fair eggs to be purchased from hens which are so tested. This will have a far-reaching influence upon the stamping out of poultry diseases. But there is no use in the provincial government doing this work when the Dominion government permits these southern chicks to come in when they are contaminated with these diseases.

I desire to congratulate the Minister of Agriculture on the purchase of the Booth farm adjoining the central experimental farm at Ottawa. In the house last year I said that I considered that that was absolutely necessary. I also said I thought the government was not going quite far enough, that they should buy the adjoining 180 acres or so to the west of the Booth farm. In his remarks at that time the minister tried to convey the impression that this property was quite a distance from the present experimental farm, but as a matter of fact it is only 66 feet, or the width of the road, from the farm. I really believe, looking to the future, that if this property can be bought at the present time the government are making a mistake in not purchasing it. If that were done the central experimental farm property would be bounded by the Prescott highway, the Ottawa-Kingston highway and the Ottawa sururban road. I wish the minister would reconsider his decision in this matter. I presume the government, seeing that it has demolished so much property in the heart of this city, must be sincere in what it says with regard to the future of this great capital. As a citizen of Ottawa I am glad to see the capital beautified, but we are not so anxious to see it beautified at the expense of the ratepayers. As a local man who lives two miles away from the centre of the city and whose property is not much increased in value by the demolishing of these buildings, I see no special benefit to myself.

I was amused the other day at a remark made by the hon. member for Weyburn (Mr. Young). While the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Smith) was making his speech, the hon. member for Weyburn asked: "What has the dairy industry to do with the poultry industry?" I looked up the Parliamentary Guide and to my surprise I see that the hon. member for Weyburn is listed as a farmer. Surely the hon. member must have known better when he asked that question. If he did know better and was asking the question only to take up the time of the house, he could have been more usefully employed in some other way. If he does not know that the poultry industry is very closely associated with the dairy industry, he would be wise, in his Saturday afternoons off, to take a few poultry lessons at the experimental farm.

I should like to place on record a list of the properties that were demolished for park and other purposes by the present government, and the assessments pertaining thereto. The figures are as follows:

Assessment of property expropriated by the Dominion for park purposes, etc.

Wellington street south and Sparks street north, at present demolished:

Land	$256,850
Buildings	55,700
	$312,550

Sparks street south and Queen street north: Russell House block:

Land	$740,450
Buildings	156,700
	$897,150

Bate building, Canal street:

Land	$34,500
	$54,500

Birkett building, Canal street:

Land	$30,000
	$52,000

Ottawa Transportation building:

Land	$18,600
Building	4,500
	23,100

International Paper Company, Sussex st:

Land	$168,300
Building	175,425
	$343,725

The totals are as follows:

Total value of land	$1,248,700
Total value of buildings	434,325

It will be seen that the total assessment amounts to $1,683,025. This may have been of some use to the property owners who sold the property, but to the ratepayers there is a loss in taxes which, on an assessment of this amount, is quite an item. I cannot see what was gained by the demolishing of this property. There might have been some justification for tearing down the first block of property which was demolished, and also the property further along the canal, but I fail to see the justification for demolishing a block such as the Russell House, assessed at nearly a million dollars, thereby tearing down an hotel to make a park when immediately across the street an extension to an hotel was made on a park.

This is all I have to say with regard to the budget. I will close by remarking that the trouble with this government is that its wishbone is where its backbone should be.

Mr. J. F. DESCOTEAUX (Nicolet) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, rising for the first time to address this house, I do so with a sense of diffidence and very hesitatingly. I therefore crave the indulgence of hon. members. Like most speakers who have preceded me, it affords me much pleasure to extend my heartiest congratulations to the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb) on the budget which he introduced in the house on March the 1st.

Since I have had the privilege of being elected to this house I have observed a good many things and I noticed that our hon. friends opposite have never ceased repeating that the country was not prosperous and especially the farming class to which I belong. While observant of what is going on in this house, I have not been blind to what was going on elsewhere, during my travels through my constituency. In the course of my wanderings, I had the opportunity of ascertaining that the way people live and dress was a proof that comfort, with very few exceptions, exists in all families. Mr. Speaker, governments are very similar to private business firms. If at the end of the year we verify that a surplus exists, and that we have also improved our business or property we have every reason to be satisfied. This also applies to the King government which, each year, announces a surplus, and is moreover able to build and repair our public buildings, dredge our rivers, construct railways, build and repair wharves—a very important matter negelected by our hon. friends on your left, Sir, when they were in power.

I can well state to my hon. colleagues that such a policy deserves the support of the Canadian people.

[Mr. W. F. Garland.]

With reference to agriculture our opponents criticize the government for doing nothing or not doing enough for that industry. I have no hesitation in stating, that no government has taken more interest in agriculture than has the present government. One item which has had an injurious effect on our farmers, is the automobile; it has wiped out horse trading and thereby seriously reacted on the hay market. However, I am glad to note that, to-day, the hay industry has made way for the dairy industry—which is the best revenue producer, for counties remote from cities—and note that through the grading of our milk products, the latter have a high standing on foreign markets.

I find, sir, in Hansard at page 751 the following passage from the speech of the hon member for Wellington South (Mr. Guthrie):

> An order in council was passed by this government, which governs so freely by orders in council, giving to New Zealand the same right to bring her products into this country as was enjoyed by Australia. What has been the result? The Minister of Agriculture has been deluged by requests from dairymen's associations in all parts of the Dominion of Canada asking that this treaty be abrogated. Why? Because Canada is importing from New Zealand about $6,000,000 worth of butter to displace $6,000,000 worth of butter which the Canadian farmers could make in this country and could sell in the markets of this country if they were permitted to do so.

I represent a county of which 90 per cent belong to the farming class, and these rural electors are producers of butter and cheese My political opponents in the 1925 and 1926 election used as their war horse the Australian and New Zealand treaties. Result: I was elected as member for Nicolet by a majority of 3,000. The farmers clearly understand that the prices of butter and cheese always fluctuate with the English market prices. The price of butter quoted by the hon. member for Temiscouata (Mr. Pouliot) as it appears in Hansard at page 862—and which was never contradicted—clearly proves that these treaties in no way affect Canadian butter prices. Nothing prevents the Canadian farmer from producing as much and even more, because on the price established three years ago it gives excellent returns to farmers who look after their cattle.

It is impossible for the government to restrict butter exports, and the farmers have understood the advantages of marketing their butter as it is made instead of storing it for a later date when production decreases. If the contentions are that we have bought $6,000,000 worth of butter, then I state that our exporters have sold $6,000,000 too much butter. That easily explains why we import butter at a time when we do not produce enough. On that score, the Canadian consumer may rejoice in having always on his table an excellent and fresh supply instead of margarine that was manufactured or imported in 1923.

It is a pleasant task for me to congratulate the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell) for having graded our dairy products as well as our fruit and vegetables. But he deserves a special mention for his policy in regard to restricted areas which he has established in various provinces of the Dominion, a policy which is bound to render immense services to society since it tends to curtail the ravages of tuberculosis among our people. This is of great interest to me since one of these restricted areas extends from the southern boundary of the province of Quebec to the St. Francis river.

I note with pleasure that the estimates for agriculture amount to $1,189,075 more than those of last year, this leads me to hope that the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell) will complete the work in connection with the restricted areas, and that in a near future one of these areas will include the county of Nicolet or at least extend as far back as the Bécancourt river. I take the opportunity of drawing the attention of the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell), to the fact that the indemnity paid for the cattle which react to the tuberculin test is not large enough, especially for the milch cows. The present fixed price cannot be an adequate compensation for what is known as a good milk producing cow.

I now turn to another question. We have clubs of young cattle-breeders in many provinces of Canada. I wish to draw the government's attention to the fact that these clubs have no pure-bred sires. If we want these clubs to succeed, the government must purchase them or grant these clubs a sufficient subsidy in order that they may purchase sires of excellent stock and dams registered in the Golden Book so that the money spent in purchasing calves will not be a loss.

Before resuming my seat, I wish to thank the government for having added to the National Railways that branch line known as the Q.M.S. When this line will be completed it will link up St. Lambert to Levis, crossing the most fertile counties of the province, such as Verchères, Richelieu, Yamaska, Nicolet and Lotbiniere and then link up with the Canadian National Railway at a point which will be decided later.

Mr. Speaker, I shall close my remarks by once more congratulating the hon. Minister of Finance and further adding that I am one of those who expect the King government to do much for the development of Canada. I shall show my trust by casting my vote in favour of the budget and against the amendment of the hon. member for Wellington South (Mr. Guthrie) and also against the sub-amendment of the hon. member for Battle River (Mr. Spencer).

On motion of Mr. Stevens the debate was adjourned.

On motion of Mr. Robb the house adjourned at 10.56 p.m.

Tuesday, March 19, 1929

The house met at three o'clock.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Sixth report of the select standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines.—Mr. Cahill.

AGRICULTURE AND COLONIZATION

MOTION FOR ENLARGEMENT OF REFERENCE WITH RESPECT TO INSPECTION, GRADING AND SHIPMENT OF GRAIN

Mr. W. F. KAY (Brome-Missisquoi) moved:

That it be an instruction to the select standing committee on agriculture and colonization that, in addition to the order of reference dated March 6, 1929, they have power to consider and report on the subject of storage, shipping, mixing, inspection and grading of grain generally, under the provisions of the Canada Grain Act.

Mr. JOHN EVANS (Rosetown): Mr. Speaker, if I interpret this resolution correctly it means that the whole question of the marketing of grain is to be inquired into by the agriculture committee; I take it that the administration of the entire grain act is involved.

The administration of the grain act has been entrusted to one body of men, the Board of Grain Commissioners, and I believe the government to be in full possession of all the facts with regard to the chaos which existed in western Canada during the last grain marketing season. The Board of Grain Commissioners is practically a creation of this government, and since the board is responsible to the Department of Trade and Commerce the whole of western Canada has been wondering why the government have failed to deal with this problem which brought confusion and loss to the farmers of western Canada last year, and they are also wondering why the government have not dealt with the failure of the board to enforce the provisions of the grain act.

Mr. BENNETT: Would the hon. gentleman speak a little louder?

Mr. EVANS: Mr. Speaker, a number of members are very anxious to hear this discussion, but I can hardly hear my own voice at times.

The whole problem seems to be that the elevator companies have been allowed to use a ticket the wording of which never has been authorized either by the Board of Grain Commissioners or by order in council; there is a line on this ticket which is contrary to the act and which never appeared on any other storage ticket. The ticket says the grain is taken for the Cooperative Wheat Producers Limited, and there is a space left in which the name of the province is to be inserted. Since agriculture was first begun in western Canada there has not been such dissatisfaction with the method of handling grain as there was last year and it all has to do with the right of the farmer to ship his own car of wheat where he wishes to ship it. I do not think anything in our history has shown such a breakdown of our juridical procedure.

In this respect the farmers are in a far different position from that of any other industry in Canada; this business must be carried on cooperatively; our wheat must be transported in bulk through the terminals to the seaboard, and the difficulty has been to preserve the quality of our grades intact until the wheat reaches the markets of the world. The Board of Grain Commissioners is a body of men appointed by the government to administer the grain act in the interests of all concerned; the board is looked upon as having full responsibility for this problem, and is equal in importance to the Board of Railway Commissioners. We believe the board has the power to administer the grain act in all its phases, but it has failed to do that and has allowed the elevator companies to use a form of storage ticket which is not authorized by the act. By this means the board has permitted the elevator companies to set aside the provisions of the act and deny to the farmer the right to ship his own car of wheat to the terminal of his own choice. This has been brought to the attention of the Board of Grain Commissioners many times, but, to the knowledge of any of us here, they have not attempted to rectify the matter or maintain the farmer's right to ship his own car of wheat. The particular section dealing with this matter is section 150 of the Canada Grain Act, known as the Campbell amendment. The government knows how jealously the farmer has guarded this right. Some of us from the west realized the tremendous responsibility placed upon the grain commission and we moved a resolution recommending the advisability of granting an increase in salary.

Mr. KAY: I rise to a point of order: Under standing order No. 38 I think this motion is not debatable.

Mr. SPEAKER: I am not quite sure that it is debatable under standing order No. 38, but I notice there are two motions on the order paper, Nos. 11 and 12, which cover the same question as in the present motion. These motions stand in the names of the hon. member for Willow Bunch (Mr. Donnelly) and the hon. member for Rosetown (Mr. Evans). Under the rules of the house no debate can anticipate a question which is already on the order paper. I would advise the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi (Mr. Kay) to confer with the two hon. gentlemen in whose names these resolutions stand, and then bring forward his motion. I declare the motion out of order.

THIRD REPORT OF SELECT STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. W. F. KAY (Brome-Missisquoi): With the consent of the house I beg to move:

That the third report of the select standing committee on agriculture and colonization be concurred in.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I call Your Honour's attention to the fact that you are now asking the house to concur in a report of a committee on which a motion has already been declared out of order.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No, no.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I understand the report to which this concurrence refers is the same report which was covered by the motion already ruled out of order.

Mr. SPEAKER: It is not the same motion; this motion is in order and anyone may speak on it.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): What is the motion?

Mr. SPEAKER: The motion is:

That the third report of the select standing committee on agriculture and colonization be concurred in.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): What is that report?

Mr. IRVINE: Could we have an explanation of the report?

Mr. RYCKMAN: Read the report.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): May I direct Your Honour's attention to the votes and proceeding's of March 14, where we find the following:

Mr. Kay, from the select standing committee on agriculture and colonization, presented the third report of the said committee, which is as follows:—

Your committee recommends that the house do enlarge the order of reference to the said committee, dated March 6th, 1929, by adding thereto authority to consider and report on the subject of the storage, shipping, mixing inspection and grading of grain, generally, under the provisions of the Canada Grain Act.

Do I understand that the debate may proceed on the motion to concur?

Mr. BENNETT: That stood as a notice, at my request.

Mr. SPEAKER: This motion is debatable.

Mr. JOHN EVANS (Rosetown): Mr. Speaker, the thing which concerns us most is the failure of the grain commission to do their duty. Although the government have been in possession of all the facts from the beginning of the present session, and although demands have been made upon them, we have been left in doubt as to what action the government will take. For some reason or other the board have failed in their duty and we are now asking the government to remedy this state of affairs by the dismissal of those who have failed in their duty and place this matter under the supervision of a board which will carry out the grain act in all its phases. The present board have allowed the use of a grain ticket which permits the elevator companies to send a farmer's car of wheat to their own terminal. Through this method the farmers' cooperative concerns are deprived of the earnings which would otherwise be obtained through the handling of the wheat at, say, Fort William. The car of wheat may also be diverted to some milling company which pays a premium for the select grades which they need, based on the milling value and the gluten content which they desire. The farmer's car may be diverted to some mixing elevator where it is mixed with an inferior quality of grain to the very lowest point for which a certificate could be obtained for that particular grade. When the royal grain commission was sitting in Saskatoon, the right of the Saskatchewan farmer to demand that his grain be shipped to a wheat pool terminal, if he so desired, was read into the record. In the case of the pool farmers the Board of Grain Commissioners have taken no steps to maintain the farmers' right in this respect. They have permitted the elevator companies to divert the farmer's cars to their own terminal and they have done this in defiance of the farmer himself and also of the grain act. Section 150 of the grain act gives the farmer this right and under section 225 of the act they have rendered themselves liable, by violating the law in this respect, to the loss of their license.

There is another way in which the farmer loses the intrinsic value of his grain. This is contrary to the grain act and contrary to the Railway Act as well. It came out before the royal grain commission at Saskatoon that ten elevator companies in Saskatchewan have an agreement with the Robin Hood Milling Company and the Canadian Pacific railway officials that they can go and select cars from the Canadian Pacific railway trains at the terminal or divisional points of that railway, sample them and, if they are of the milling quality which they desire, divert them to their own mills. In this way only the poorest quality of grain goes forward for export and it is on this quality that the price is based. This is a direct infringement of the act and one that never should have been allowed There is no doubt in my mind that the grain commissioners knew of this practice.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The car must be diverted after inspection, must it not?

Mr. EVANS: The practice is that an official of the railway company will go with the miller and the samplers at that point, break the seals on the car, and, if the car suits the miller, he diverts it to his own mill. If it does not suit him, the car is again sealed, sent on to the terminal elevator at Fort William or Port Arthur and the grain sent on from there.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): This is done after the car is inspected or at inspection?

Mr. EVANS: Not necessarily. I think a test is made by the milling company themselves and it depends whether the grain comes from the district which they prefer.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): After the car is sealed and shipped?

Mr. EVANS: After the car is sealed and shipped. The railway companies have been allowing the millers to take the cars which they desire out of their trains at the divisional points. This practice is contrary to the Grain Act and it is such that no other producer in any other industry in Canada would allow. Why should this be practised on the western farmers in this way? We require a complete reorganization of the whole service; we also need a body of men who will carry out the provisions of the act without fear or favour. When our wheat of the highest milling value is filched from our crop by those who are already making unjust profits, the bulk of the wheat is lowered in price on the European market and the miller gets the difference in quality between the cream of the crop and the skimmed grades without paying anything for it, while no farmer receives a price greater than the export price for his wheat or any other produce. A grain commission that allows such practices is certainly incompetent or wilfully neglectful of its duty. I think no such body of men should hold such an important position as that of standing between the grain trade and the farmers to see that justice is done between the two. It is only fair and not unreasonable that we call on the government to remedy this state of affairs. The question does not need to be investigated by any committee; the government is in possession of all the facts. The grain act in this respect is all right. What we need is to have it administered as it is intended it should be.

I find that in a letter to the Board of Grain Commissioners dated October 28, 1927, the secretary of the Saskatchewan wheat pool asserted the right of the farmer in this respect, but in the reply the board maintained the right of the elevator companies to use the ticket I have under my hand, what is known as the "hybrid' ticket. That reply was dated November 9, 1927. In an article by one of the pool officials reproduced in the Western Producer under date of October 13, 1927, there is given the clause in the agreement preserving the right of the grower to his grain in accordance with the grain act and also in a letter written by the solicitor of the Manitoba wheat pool the right of the farmer is still maintained. But from the same letter we find that the commissioner, Mr. Matthew Snow, asserted that the board did not include the objectionable wording in their ticket and never approved it. Later on we find that he had to admit that the board approved the trade using this ticket which contains the objectionable wording.

Many incidents might be quoted, but so that the house will understand the nature of the offence, I will quote just one from my own constituency. Mr. Charles Bell, of Tessier, on November 9 last could not get his wheat out of the local elevator even though he had a special bin ticket and not a "hybrid" ticket. He tendered all legal charges against the wheat in the elevator, but although he had a car already on track to load the wheat, the elevator operator would not load it. Mr. Bell at once wired the Board of Grain Commissioners, but they refused to give orders to the elevator company even in this case where there was no doubt as to Mr. Bell's right in the matter of directing his car to any terminal he might choose. The Board of Grain Commissioners then simply discussed the matter with the elevator company at Winnipeg, the Pioneer Grain Company, who intimated they were willing, without prejudice, to comply with Mr. Bell's demand, reserving to themselves the right which they asserted they had under a contract with the wheat pool. It is a pretty kettle of fish we have here when the Board of Grain Commissioners have to consult a grain elevator company to find out whether they can by any contract or otherwise set aside an act of parliament. This board evidently did not know its duty, and was of the opinion that if any contract existed, an act of this parliament could be rescinded at any time by a grain company doing business in Winnipeg whenever it thought that its interests were being hurt.

There is another outstanding case. Robert Cannon, of Aberdeen, wired the board that a hybrid ticket was used, and Commissioner Snow said that it gave the right to the elevator company to ship the grain to the terminal of their own choice because the grain was taken into storage on account of the Saskatchewan pool. It is no business of any elevator company on whose account it is taken in, and provision for the second name was never made on any ticket approved by the board or by order in council. This means that the Board of Grain Commissioners is allowing the use of a ticket that has not been authorized by itself or approved by order in council. The Board of Grain Commissioners has stated at different times that it had no power to enforce the act in this respect. One of the commissioners attending the annual meeting of the Saskatchewan wheat pool this year declared that he would not enforce the act because of the inconvenience it would cause to the farmers themselves. The farmers in that case gave the board to understand that they expected it to do its duty, and they would be prepared to stand for any inconvenience that would ensue. The board, under section 225, has full power to cancel the license, and the elevator companies, unless some assurance had been given to them either by the Department of Trade and Commerce or by the board itself, knew and must have known that they were using a ticket which rendered them liable to have their license cancelled.

I do not want to speak at any length on this question. I think I have already given the house sufficient information for it to appreciate that nothing can be gained by prolonging this matter, and we expect now that the government will do its duty. These practices have too long been going on in western Canada. The filching of our cars for mixing purposes and for milling purposes in western Canada is a direct loss to the farmer. This cannot go on for ever, although it does seem that the farmer in western Canada seems to be fair game for plunder by anyone that can get away with it. I say again that the duty of the government in this respect is plain, and we expect the government to do its duty.

Hon. JAMES MALCOLM (Minister of Trade and Commerce): It is quite evident, Mr. Speaker, that the desire of the agriculture and colonization committee was that the very matter which my hon. friend from Rosetown (Mr. Evans) has brought up, and other matters pertaining to the grain act, should have the fullest discussion in committee in a manner in which they could not be discussed in the house. My hon. friend is quite within his rights in calling on the government to correct certain evils which he states exist in connection with the administration of the act, and it is the desire, not only of the government, but I think of this whole parliament, which unanimously last year passed certain amendments to the grain act, to rectify any evils which may exist. I am not desirous, without preparation, of going into the discussion of a matter which I think should be reviewed in committee, and in order to receive time for preparation there is only one thing I can do if it is proposed that this debate shall go on, and that is to move the adjournment of the debate, which I now do.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I take it, Mr. Speaker, that this motion is not debatable.

Mr. SPEAKER: It is not debatable.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Under those circumstances, we shall have to vote against the motion.

After Mr. Speaker had called for the Yeas and Nays:

Mr. SPEAKER: Call in the members.

And the members being assembled:

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Since Your Honour invited the members to be called in I have had a conference with the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Malcolm) and the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett), and have ascertained that my viewpoint was not correct. I understood that the motion to adjourn the debate meant an indefinite postponement.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Order, please. I now find that the Minister of Trade and Commerce is quite willing that the debate shall be proceeded with to-morrow on "motions". Under these circumstances we may be able to avoid the necessity for a vote.

Mr. SPEAKER: Is it the pleasure of the house that there be no division?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. SPEAKER: Motion agreed to.

CRIMINAL CODE AMENDMENT

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Justice) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 81 to amend the criminal code.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Explain.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I only hope, Mr. Speaker, that the bill I am going to introduce under such happy circumstances will meet with unanimous approval, although I have some doubt as to this. This bill is similar in form to the bill that has passed this house three or four times in preceding sessions. Its purpose is to repeal certain sections of the criminal code which were enacted in 1919 concerning sedition.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

BEAUHARNOIS LIGHT, HEAT AND POWER COMPANY

On the order:

Introduction of bills—Mr. Church—bill intituled: "An act to annul an order in council relating to the Beauharnois Light, Heat and Power Company."

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member for Northwest Toronto (Mr. Church) has left this note with me:

I wish to drop my Beauharnois motion.

There is no division.

INTERIM SUPPLY BILL

Hon. J. A. ROBB (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as we are approaching the Easter holiday and are near the end of the fiscal year, it has been suggested that to carry on the public service we should vote the usual interim supply. Therefore with unanimous consent I beg to move that the house go into committee of supply.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Mr. ROBB moved:

Resolved that a sum not exceeding $20,454,936.78, being one-twelfth of the amount of each of the several items to be voted as set forth in the main estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1930, laid before the House of Commons at the present session of parliament, be granted to His Majesty, on account, for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1930.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in.

Mr. ROBB moved that the house go into committee of ways and means.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Mr. ROBB moved:

Resolved that towards making good the supply granted to His Majesty on account of certain expenses of the public service for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1930, the sum of $20,454,936.78 be granted out of the consolidated revenue fund of Canada.

Motion agreed to.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in. Mr. Robb thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 82 for granting to His Majesty a certain sum of money for the public service of the financial year ending March 31, 1930.

[Mr. Lapointe.]

Motion agreed to and bill read the first and second time, and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Sections 1 to 3 inclusive agreed to.

On the title.

Mr. BENNETT: This is, of course, without prejudice to our right to discuss these items and must not be taken as acquiescing in the soundness of judgment of the government in voting this sum of money, being one-twelfth of the total of the public service portion of the supply bill, amounting to $20,000,000.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

VALUE OF CANADIAN DOLLAR

On the orders of the day:

Mr. WILLIAM IRVINE (Wetaskiwin): I wish to direct the attention of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb) to a question based upon two sentences which I will quote from Commerce and Finance of March 13:

Canada shipped $1,500,000 gold and, were a free gold market operative in the Dominion, doubtless would have sent much more since Canadian dollars are quoted at a big discount. Canada is evidently resorting to extraordinary measures to keep her remaining gold reserve.

Is the Canadian dollar at a big discount, and is the Minister of Finance resorting to extraordinary measures to retain a gold reserve? And, if so, why?

Hon. J. A. ROBB (Minister of Finance): The answer to both questions is no.

THE GOLD STANDARD

Mr. H. E. SPENCER (Battle River): May I ask the Minister of Finance whether Canada is on a free gold market?

Hon. J. A. ROBB (Minister of Finance): We are on a gold basis.

THE BUDGET

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON THE ANNUAL FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The house resumed from Monday, March 18, consideration of the motion of Hon. J. A. Robb (Minister of Finance) that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of ways and means, the proposed amendment thereto of Hon. Hugh Guthrie, and the proposed amendment to the amendment of Mr. Spencer.

Hon. H. H. STEVENS (Vancouver Centre): The house a moment ago anticipated a few words which I wish to utter and in which I know there will be general concurrence, and that is in welcoming back to our midst the hon. the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe). We all, I am sure, express the hope that the minister will experience a complete and absolute recovery from his illness. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb) will please accept these kind words to the Minister of Justice in place of encomiums upon him and his budget.

Canada, from an administrative standpoint, is considered among political economists to be a somewhat difficult country to govern. The large spaces, the great distances, the paucity of population and the diversity of interests frequently found in widely separated sections of the country constitute difficulties which challenge the very best statesmanship possible. There are in my opinion two types of policy to be pursued, or two methods of approach to the task of governing Canada. On the one hand there is the broad general point of view which, while making reasonable allowances for the diversity of interests of groups here and there, yet keeps constantly in the very forefront of consideration the great potentialities of Canada and the possibility of utilizing these so as to build up an almost invincible economic unit. On the other hand, there is the method which takes advantage of the diversified and, in some instances, conflicting interests and by subtle adjustment of administrative measures wins to its support interests here and there and holds the votes of districts and communities by favours offered, at the same time keeping divided the opposition to the administration. This is in a sense a Napoleonic policy—divide and rule.

The fathers of confederation achieved by their splendid work a great political unit; they brought together the scattered elements in this country and formulated a political organism or unit. But they left to succeeding generations the important task of welding these various scattered groups and interests into one economic entity. Some rather hold that the diverse interests in Canada doom the Dominion to be continuously and forever sharply divided in her interests; in other words, they hold that the agricultural west cannot work in harmony with the industrial east. I believe this to be an entirely false economic doctrine. I hold rather to the view that one is the complement of the other. Unquestionably there are bound to be differences of opinion regarding administration, regarding laws and policies, regarding the direction of trade and so forth; regarding such questions there are bound to be sharp cleavages of opinion. Nevertheless a broad and generous view of the country's possibilities will lead one to the conviction that we can make out of this great Dominion an economic unit prosperous and successful, and of advantage to all its varied interests.

I pause for a moment to ask this question, which I suggest should be kept constantly in mind when we consider the problems of this vast country: what country on the globe has greater potentialities than this Dominion? For instance, geographically it touches both the great oceans, facing on the west the Orient with its new awakening industrial, economic and commercial life, and, on the east, in intimate touch with the Old World and its older civilization and its more advanced economic and industrial communities. In between the two extremes are the vast material resources of the Dominion. It is unnecessary for me to name them; merely to mention the fact immediately brings to the vision of every hon. gentleman some idea of the vastness of these resources. Our climatic conditions are such as to breed a virile race; there is no room in Canada for the drone. In some countries such as the southern part of the United States and equatorial countries there is a lassitude, an indifference, a lack of enterprise and a tendency to loaf which enervates the life of the community, but in this country the whole tendency of climatic conditions is to spur a man on to greater activities. Then in regard to power, which is of immense importance, we are wont to say that this country has illimitable power possibilities.

So, then, what is wrong with the country? Some will say that nothing is wrong. I quite agree that nothing is wrong with the country as such, but unquestionably one could not listen to this debate, for instance, without realizing that there is something the matter, that there are problems still unsolved, that there are questions challenging the attention of this parliament which must receive attention and for which there must be some solution. It would appear, Mr. Speaker, that we have in Canada all the elements necessary to make a great people but that we lack the capacity to take advantage of these elements and of them weld a great industrial, economic, social and national whole. Just in passing I think I can illustrate what I meant when I said a moment ago that in some respects governments may choose the path, when I draw attention to the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Brown), the hon. member for Marquette

(Mr. Glen) and others of their associates who sit in support of the ministers, giving loyal and consistent support to the government, although those ministers hold views on economic subjects entirely different from the views held by the hon. members. Then there is the Minister of Immigration (Mr. Forke), for example, sitting in the same seat with the Solicitor General (Mr. Cannon). Can one imagine two individuals with more divergent economic outlooks? Yet they are sitting in the cabinet together, and what is the situation? I presume that the gentle dropping of words of political advice, political wisdom and political experience by the Solicitor General into the ear of the Minister of Immigration has gradually worn away his resistance and his conscience, like the dropping of water upon the hardest stone, so that now he is able to look with equanimity upon a complete violation of his economic views. That was what I meant a moment ago when I said there is a possibility of governments in Canada seeking to hold power by placating groups here and there, but the question I ask is whether such a process and such a method is in the best interests of the country as a whole.

Now, Mr. Speaker, for a moment or two I wish to discuss two of what I think are the major problems facing this country, and the first is the problem of population which is challenging if it is not actually defying this government, and I go further and say it is challenging this parliament. This persistent shrinkage of our population is appalling; I repeat that the constant shrinking of the population of Canada is a challenge to this parliament. From 1921 to 1928 we lost, in numbers, all the immigrants who came to Canada and in addition 240,000 of our native born. I have the figures before me, and if necessary I can take them back to 1901. For the comfort of the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Ralston), who twitted my colleague a day or so ago because he selected trade figures which were peculiar to this administration, although after all the government of this country is across the way and it is our duty to present to parliament the conditions as they exist at present, I want to say that I am not denying that this problem of population is not peculiar to this government, but I am able to say from these figures that this problem has been aggravated during the time this government has been in office. At this time I want to bring forward this problem as a challenge to parliament and to the government as the leaders of parliament, those who have the responsibility of administration and who must take cognizance of the problem so presented.

What are the figures? In 1921 the census showed a population of 8,788,000; from 1921 to 1928, we had 962,000 immigrants come to Canada; in that same period the births numbered 1,939,000, making a total of 11,689,000. If we deduct from that figure the deaths, which numbered 824,000, we have left 10,865,000 people. If the immigration policy of this country had been wise and successful we should have in Canada to-day, including our natural increase, 10,855,000 souls, but what is our poulation according to the Bureau of Statistics? Our actual population is 9,655,000, and if we deduct that from the figure I gave a moment ago we have an actual shrinkage of 1,200,000 people in the last six or seven years. This is not a question of juggling figures; it is a cold fact confronting this country.

Mr. DUNNING: No.

Mr. STEVENS: I am also glad to see the Minister of Railways in his seat, at least partially recovered from his illness; he shakes his head and says no. That is a habit of his. Does he question my figures?

Mr. DUNNING: Certainly.

Mr. STEVENS: Then I can only refer the minister to the Department of Trade and Commerce, from which I obtained every one of the figures I gave. If the only answer to the presentation of a problem is to simply say that the figures are wrong, and if one takes the precaution of securing his figures from the Bureau of Statistics and then checking and cross checking them, what more can a man do?

Mr. DUNNING: I just want to say that for one comparison my hon. friend is using a definite figure from the census of 1921, and in the other case he is using what is admittedly and what is stated by the department to be an estimate.

Mr. STEVENS: Quite so, but will the minister say that the Bureau of Statistics are out 1,200,000 in their estimates? I will admit that the estimate is not exact; I queried that very point myself and they told me this was their very best estimate, based upon the quinquennial census of the prairies in addition to the information which comes to them from their usual sources throughout the country.

However, the minister is taking this in the wrong spirit. Let me put the problem to the house again. These figures, which are issued by the government, show a shrinkage in population of 1,200,000 people; our total immigration was less than 1,000,000, so we have a shrinkage of 240,000 of our natural born, and that is the problem I put to this parliament. The government can wash its hands of the problem if it so desires, but I invite parliament itself to consider what I believe to be the chief problem facing the country to-day; that is, this abnormal shrinkage in population.

Mr. FORKE: I do not wish to interrupt my hon. friend, because I know his time is short, but has not that same problem faced the country since 1830?

Mr. STEVENS: I have already stated, and I want to make it quite clear, that this is not a situation peculiar to the tenure of this government, but it seems to have been aggravated and it seems to be increasing. This situation seems to be aggravated; for instance, the figures for 1901—that is the earliest I could obtain—show a shrinkage of 2,461,000, whereas immigration amounted to 2,691,000. There was a slight gain made by the immigration there, but for the last eight years we find that we have had not only a complete loss of our immigration, but 240,000 in addition. These figures are alarming and they challenge the attention of parliament; some consideration should be given to them. Governmental indifference is in a measure responsible for this situation. There has been a lack of appreciation of the problem and a refusal to admit the existence of difficulties.

When the Minister of Trade and Commerce spoke on the budget the other day—evidently put up by the government to be one of those to reply to the hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie)—he had something to say on this subject as it related to the farming industry. The attention of the government had been called to the fact that there had been a serious drop in farming production and in the activities of agriculturists. Indubitable evidence was brought forward, and the minister in replying to that evidence said:

> I contend, Mr. Speaker, that there is absolutely no loss to the dairying industry because our farmers are milk producers in other forms.

If the dairying industry has gone into other forms of production, why cannot that be done out of an increased production of milk? With complete complacency the minister says: There is nothing wrong with the dairying industry; it is true they have not made as much butter, but they made more condensed and powdered milk. But the answer to that is this: No country in the world should be going forward with greater strides than Canada, but the minister is satisfied if he can discover that we are merely marking time. It is a startling situation when we realize that the production of the dairying industry fell off 500,000,000 pounds of milk. We should have advanced more than 500,000,000 pounds of milk. It is a serious thing for Canada when we realize that the dairy herds have decreased by 101,000 animals, while there has been an increase in the herds of New Zealand of 57,000. This problem challenges the attention of the government and it cannot stand idle unless it is going to be false to its simplest duties.

We have heard from hon. members opposite about the prosperous condition of this country. I am not going to suggest that there is not a large measure of prosperity in Canada, but I would invite the house to consider the fact that a large measure of the prosperity is merely a reflection of the profits made by Canadians in stock operations on the New York stock exchange. I am unable to give the exact figures in this regard because I found they were not available from the records of the Federal Reserve bank. I am not reflecting on those who did succeed in their operations, I say, "God bless them," but we must not overlook the languishing condition of a basic industry of this country. When we consider how the production has fallen off there is very little comfort in the fact that certain persons and groups have made money on the New York stock exchange.

Mr. ROBB: Some of them suffered losses.

Mr. STEVENS: I do not play the market myself, but the evidence on the financial pages of every newspaper in the country would go to show that the losses during the past few years have been very slight as compared with the so-called winnings, if one can use the gambling term.

I would also direct the attention of the government to the question of trade. When the Minister of Finance was presenting his budget the other day, he used these words:

> It is gratifying to note the steady development of inter-empire trade.

If the minister has an opportunity at some future time I trust he will give us an explanation of these words in the light of the facts which I shall present. The minister continued:

> Canada, the pioneer of the British preference, looks on empire trade as the keystone of its external trade policy—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. STEVENS: Some hon. members are saying "Hear, hear", but I want them to keep this in mind. To continue:

—and desires in every way to foster closer trading relations throughout the British commonwealth of nations.

Are those words sincere? Does the minister really mean what he said? They were given as the views of the government, and I recognize the language of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) in some of the paragraphs. If they are sincere they should show a lower average duty on imports from the United Kingdom; they should show a larger proportion of free goods from England than previously; and they should show an increasing ratio of trade expansion. I will submit some figures which will show how the key-stone works. I am afraid it will be seen that the key-stone is wobbling in its place.

The figures of the Department of Trade and Commerce show that the average duty on imports from the United Kingdom for the six years 1922 to 1927 was 19·1 per cent. The average duty for imports from the United States for the same period was 13·3 per cent. The average duty on imports from all countries was 15·7 per cent. These figures will be found on page 500 of the Canada Year Book if anyone should desire to check them. The average duty on imports from the United Kingdom was 6 per cent higher than the average duty on imports from the United States, and four per cent higher than the average duty on imports from all countries. It may be argued: What is the use of quoting the average percentages of duty? If there is a lowering of the duty rate, it is true there may be an increase in revenue but there should be a lowering in the percentage of duty as applied to imports. What are the facts? In order to be perfectly fair in this matter I will give the figures from confederation down to the present time. These are the figures:

	Imports from United Kingdom
Dutiable goods..	$3,400,000,000
Free goods..	993,000,000

Average rate of duty, 20 per cent.

In other words during all that period 22½ per cent of the goods that came in from the United Kingdom were on the free list. I give the same figures for the United States:

	Imports from United States
Dutiable goods..	$7,500,000,000
Free goods..	5,700,000,000

Average rate of duty, 13.2 per cent.

Mr. DUNNING: Over what period?

Mr. STEVENS: Over all the period of Canada's history from confederation down to the present time. Let me turn to the record of this government from 1923 to 1928 inclusive. These are the figures:

	Imports from United Kingdom
Dutiable goods..	$901,000,000
Free goods..	205,000,000

Or only 18 per cent free.

	Imports from United States
Dutiable goods..	$2,502,000,000
Free goods..	1,797,000,000

In other words, during the last seven years 42 per cent of the goods we imported from the United States were admitted free of duty. Let us compare the totals. The totals for the whole period since confederation are as follows:

	Imports
From the United Kingdom.	$ 4,400,000,000
From the United States..	13,300,000,000

In other words, six times as much free goods entered this country from the United States as from Great Britain. I ask where the key-stone of the foreign trade of this country is. I ask the minister: Where is the enthusiasm on the part of the government for the up-building of empire trade?

Mr. SMITH (Stormont): Are the imports from the United States not largely raw material for further manufacture?

Mr. STEVENS: No, the situation is exactly the opposite. There are some hon. members who hold the view—and it is the old Adam Smith view—that if you want to sell your goods, you have to buy goods. I have often heard that from hon. gentlemen opposite and from some of my hon. friends to my left. I ask them sincerely and earnestly to consider the figures. Since confederation we sold to the United Kingdom $12,500,000,000 worth of goods, while during the same period we sold to the United States only $8,500,000,000 worth of goods. In other words, we sold 50 per cent more to the motherland than to the United States. On the basis of this so-called Adam Smith theory of trade I ask this of my hon. friends: Is it not time that parliament addressed itself to the problem of buying goods where we sell them? Let us remember that in the same period we bought from Great Britain only $4,000,000,000 worth of goods or one-third of what we sold them. We are just $8,000,000,000 behind in our purchases from Great Britain. On the other hand we are just $5,000,000,000 ahead in our purchases from the United States. To show that this condition is increasing in its adverse influence upon British trade, I can quote the figures of the United States. During the years 1923 to 1928 our total purchases were as follows:

From the United States. ..	$4,300,000,000
From Great Britain..	1,100,000,000

In other words our purchases from the United States were four times as much as from Great Britain.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Is it not a fact that we purchased all we needed from Great Britain and the balance went to pay our debts in the United States?

Mr. STEVENS: I see the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Brown) taps his desk a little timidly. I might as well interject this at this point. The excess of our trade with the United States amounting to $5,000,000,000 is represented in $4,000,000,000 of investments in this country. In other words, when we speak of the great investments of the United States in Canada amounting to $4,000,000,000, we ourselves have overpaid that by $1,000,000,000. It is our own money that the United States is investing in Canada. I am not going to labour that point further, but I put to the house this problem as one of the problems challenging the attention of Canada: if we are going to continue this process of trade and purchasing, we are going to make Canada an economic vassal of the United States. If we persist in this course, there is no other outcome for us. I think it is about four years ago, speaking on the budget, I took even a more analytical form in presenting similar figures and I concluded my remarks then with this observation to the Prime Minister. I said: If the policies of the right hon. gentleman are persisted in, he will deliver Canada shackled and bound economically into the hands of the United States. I now bring forward additional figures to show that the progress in that direction is, if anything, accelerated.

There is more that I would like to have said, but I shall have to cut a good deal of it out. The Minister of Trade and Commerce offered, as his answer to the contention that conditions in this country were perhaps not all that some held they were, that car loadings in Canada were some 846,000 cars over what they were in 1923. He used these words:

> It cannot be otherwise than that this increase in tonnage has helped employment in the transportation systems.

He left it at that. What are the facts? I get this from the Bureau of Statistics as well as from the railway board and I hope the minister will not challenge my figures. The number of employees in the transportation business were as follows:

Or 2,000 less than in 1923. Yet the minister came before parliament and said that, because there was an increase in car loadings, there was an increase in employment in the transportation systems. What is the explanation? It is a simple one and parliament ought to know it. We have passed through parliament from year to year large sums of money for the purchase of new locomotive power for the Canadian National; the Canadian Pacific has done the same thing, and to-day they are hauling trains of 100 or 125 cars whereas a few years ago they hauled probably 50 or 60 cars. The result is an actual falling off in employment in that branch of activity. I am not criticizing this; I am saying it because the government comes before parliament and says that because there is an increase in car loadings, ipso facto there is an increase in employment in that branch of activity.

I said a moment ago that there were two types of policy that might direct the affairs of this country. One is a broad, comprehensive policy that keeps constantly in mind the vast potentialities of Canada. I wish to cite just a few of the milestones in Canadian history and I invite the house to consider the fact that every one of those milestones, each one of which called for broad vision, was brought about under Conservative administration.

Confederation was inspired and directed not wholly but largely by the Conservatives; they at least took the initiative in it.

Take the western territories and the organization of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police—the Canadian Pacific railway—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. STEVENS: Some laugh. That was introduced by a Conservative government and was opposed bitterly by the Liberals of that day. The road was said to be incapable of earning the axle grease necessary for the trains, and yet to-day it is one of the greatest, if not the greatest, institution in the world, with its steamships running to all quarters of the globe and its railway lines penetrating every corner of this country—an institution that has done more to advertise Canada perhaps than any other agency that we have, whatever we may think of it.

Then there was the national policy of 1878. I am not going to argue that; I simply say that it was introduced as a result of a large vision of the needs of the country at that time.

Then there was the conduct of Canada's part in the Great war. There may be divisions of opinion and schism in regard to this, but the conduct of that great war by this country was an almost superhuman task, and, Mr. Speaker, there are men who broke under the weight of that responsibility, and no wonder. Nevertheless, that great task was conducted by a Conservative administration.

Then there was the foresight shown in opening up the St. Lawrence river and the making of the little eight-foot Welland canal into a big ship canal; the opening of navigation through the Soo from lake Superior to the ocean, and bringing what was then a great unpeopled west in touch with the seaboard. That task was undertaken by a Conservative administration.

Then there was the co-ordination of the Canadian National railway system. Well I remember the bitterness with which that was opposed. I want to say here that it was one of the most mammoth undertakings ever attacked by any government or any parliament, and it was due to the former leader of this party that that great task was successfully accomplished.

The system of trade commissioners, of which the Minister of Trade and Commerce is to-day so justly proud, was introduced by Sir George Foster when he was Minister of Trade and Commerce.

Then there was considerable of what might be called social legislation. There was a vote of $10,000,000 for technical education, aid to which is now rejected and refused by the government, which has set up in this country a magnificent system of technical education, giving our young lads and our young girls a chance in the growing industrial activities of this country. Aid to technical education is now coldly rejected by this government.

Housing. There was a time immediately after the war when the housing problem in this country was acute. The Conservative government set aside $20,000,000 to help solve the housing shortage.

Aid to highways. One of the most necessary things in this country is a highway to link up the different units of confederation. One of the biggest things that could be undertaken by parliament is the opening up of a national highway to unite this great country. The Conservative government appropriated $25,000,000 for that purpose, and started the work. The work was well done and the money well spent, but there ar certain gaps remaining.

Civil service reform. The basis of whatever benefits the civil servants now enjoy was given to them by a Conservative government.

Mr. MARCIL: Will the hon. gentleman allow me a question? He spoke of technical education and civil service reform. Both of these measures were introduced by the Liberal party, under Sir Wilfrid Laurier.

Mr. STEVENS: No, certainly not. The hon. gentleman is not strictly correct. Sir Wilfrid Laurier, in 1910, appointed a commission, but I have not time to go into that.

Aid to agriculture—

An hon. MEMBER: And votes for women.

Mr. STEVENS: Yes, and we extended the franchise to women. We provided for seed grain advances, and some of our friends from the prairies will realize what a great benefit that was to the farmers.

The original national parks scheme—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Time.

Mr. STEVENS: The Speaker is in the chair, and if hon. gentlemen will allow him to call time, he will do it at the proper time.

The Conservative government introduced measures for the establishment of national parks. The Conservative government created the fuel board, but it has been allowed to languish under Liberal rule and nothing to any extent has been done since this government came into power.

These are some of the milestones, Mr. Speaker, in Canadian history, and it was because of breadth of vision and foresight that these great things were inaugurated under Conservative administration, and to my mind, sir, that is what is required to-day to cope with the embarrassing problems that are now facing us.

Miss AGNES C. MACPHAIL (Southeast Grey): I sometimes think that Canada suffers greatly from an inferiority complex, but evidently it has not infected the Conservative party. I greatly enjoyed the speech of the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens). He always speaks clearly and well, but I am astounded that in this enlightened day he should claim credit for the Conservative party for giving the franchise to women. I do not know of anything more scandalous except the War Time Elections Act, of which it was a part, than the manner of granting of the franchise to women in 1917. Does the hon. member for Vancouver Centre and his party not know that it was the starvation and the fighting and the going to jail and the forcible feeding suffered by the suffragettes of Great Britain, and to a lesser extent of the United States, that gave the franchise to the Canadian women?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Miss MACPHAIL: Hon. members do not show good sense in laughing at that. It is true; it is not a thing to be laughed at. The Conservative government—they called themselves the Union government—gave votes to women in 1917, but not to all women. That would be too risky, and I have noticed that the Conservative government and the Union government did not take many risks; in fact, governments, no matter what kind they are, do not take many risks, and so the Conservative government did not give votes to all women.

Mr. McGIBBON: They gave them to those who were qualified.

Miss MACPHAIL: The hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario (Mr. McGibbon) can make his own speech. They gave votes to women who they thought would vote for them at that particular time, and their guess was good. They gave votes to some women, not to all women, and not because they were intelligent, but because they had a husband or a brother or a son fighting at the front. Whether war time or not, it was a very stupid way of extending the franchise to women.

Mr. HANSON: You were not qualified, that is all.

Miss MACPHAIL If my hon. friend was, I have no apologies to offer because I was not. In 1921 for the first time, women voted, and I am very glad to say that 1921 brought me here. I am sorry that more did not come with me.

To talk for a moment of prosperity, it is true, as almost every speaker has said, that there is a degree of prosperity in Canada, but that prosperity to my mind is spotty, it is felt only by certain classes, and by the classes, by the way, who need it least. We live in a spending age. People want to buy things whether they can afford them or not, and business wanting to help them buy because business, quite rightly, wants to sell, has instituted the instalment plan of buying. We buy stocks on margin. People to-day borrow from the banks to a degree never thought of ten or twenty years ago, and when they borrow from the bank it is written down in bank's books as a deposit. Yet everybody will admit that wealth has not increased by that act of borrowing. The use of automobiles and their rapid replacement has released a very great deal of credit. Possibly the savings of the last generation have been spent, as well as what has been earned in this generation, and in addition, the months and years that lie ahead of us have been mortgaged in many cases to purchase these things. I do not call that very real prosperity. Yet there has been some real prosperity, and I would not want to appear to pass over it. The mining industry has really developed. New fields for agriculture have been opened up, either through a more intensive agriculture or the opening up of new territory, and that is real development.

I want to show the house—and I will have no difficulty in doing so—that farming is not one of the industries participating in the prosperty that is being so much talked about. If the government reads its own publication, Sixty Years of Canadian Progress, published by the Department of Trade and Commerce, it will find that there must be an investment of seven dollars to produce one dollar annually in agriculture; while an investment of three dollars will produce better than two dollars annually in the manufacturing industries. The full figures will be found at pages 60 and 89, but I will not quote them now, having dealt with them last session. I need not say that capital and labour are leaving the land, they are fighting shy of it, because it does not pay the return on either capital or labour that almost any other industry does.

I have before me a statement compiled by and for the life insurance companies of Canada to show that they had better not continue investing their funds in rural mortgages. With the consent of the house I shall be glad to put this table on Hansard. The figures show that in 1926, $73,086,916 was invested in rural mortgages, and the loss was $1,313,810. The amount of money invested in urban mortgages was $192,264,998, and the loss only $256,015. That is, with two and three-quarter times more invested in urban property the loss was only one-fifth the loss on rural property. The figures for 1927 show a little improvement in both agricultural and rural property, but the proportions are about the same. I place these tables on Hansard:

I think many of us have read the articles written by Mr. E. C. Drury in MacLean's magazine dealing with farm conditions. In one of these articles—I do not have the date of its appearance; I made this extract at the time—he stated:

> No farmer can stay on the farm and maintain the same standard of living at the present time as, for instance, those in other businesses. Others are not cleverer, because we are continually filling their ranks with sons of the soil. Considering capital plus labour—farming pays less than any other calling.

I do not think Mr. Drury was overstating what is a well-known fact. To-day one can scarcely sell farm land in many counties in old Ontario. If a sale is effected it must be for the value of the buildings or the value of the land, for certainly the owner will not get the value of both. If farm lands in old Ontario could be sold readily, at least one-half the farms would change hands overnight. It really boils down to this, that the farmer pays more for every service he needs than he receives for the service he renders.

In the Canadian Countryman for February 9, 1929, the editor has worked out a table that will no doubt interest hon. members. I have not time to go through it in detail, but he compares the increased wages of men working in the building, metal, printing and miscellaneous factory trades since 1913 with the increased prices of farm products during the same period. He reaches this conclusion:

> A comparison of this table with the one given previously shows that while people engaged in building trades are getting approximately $1.79 for every $1 they received before the war, farmers are only getting $1.26 in the case of hogs, and $1.44 in the case of eggs, and illustrates clearly the disparity between what farmers earn and what very large numbers of city people earn.

> If farmers received as much for their products as people engaged in miscellaneous factory trades receive for their labour, instead of the price of creamery butter being 40 cents it would be 58 cents per pound; eggs would sell for 54 cents per dozen instead of 38 cents per dozen; wheat for $1.94 instead of $1.32 per bushel; oats for 80 cents instead of 53 cents per bushel; butcher steers for $14 instead of $9.65 per hundred; and hogs for $18.20 instead of $11.50.

But it is not only in labour that the farmer is paying more than he receives—and do not misunderstand me. I do not want labour to get less, rather I want farmers to get more. I am not one of those farmers who want to see cheap labour, and I am not advocating cheap labour—but, I say, it is not only in labour that the farmer pays more than he receives. When he pays for medical services he pays a very, very high rate. One major operation, one long sickness, and he may lose his farm in meeting the expenses. People who are very poor or people who are very wealthy can afford to be sick, but the middle classes cannot. Dental services are also expensive, and necessary. But much as it costs to be sick or to get a tooth fixed, it is nothing to what it costs to die. Speaking for the province of Ontario, I say that a farmer cannot afford to die—the expenses are too heavy. In fact the burial expenses may absorb all his savings. We can fight shy of the lawyer—that is a blessing anyhow—but if we have to employ his services the fee charged by the doctor or even by the undertaker shrinks into insignificance compared with the lawyer's fee. I have had very little to do with lawyers in a business way, but this year I had occasion to in connection with a farm mortgage. The lawyer—he practises in a town in old Ontario—charged the man who was getting a $4,000 mortgage ten dollars for exchange, although $2,000 was paid by an official cheque and $1,000 by a bank draft. Someone else will have to explain this charge; I cannot.

Not only are wages going up all along the line, but taxes also. I might interject here that the end of the raise in wages has not yet been reached: the deputy ministers are to have a very handsome increase in their salary this year, the judges, I dare say, will be back before long for an increase in their salaries, and so it goes. Municipal, provincial and federal taxes have increased enormously, and the farmer not only pays his own taxes but, as everyone of us knows, he pays a good part of the other fellow's in the increased cost of services and commodities.

I do not know of any body of men that is less well informed on actual conditions in the country than the members of the government. When they go out into the country all the people who have been making money on the stock exchange or by some other method entertain them, they get the band out and the flags flying, with the result that being so lavishly entertained our cabinet ministers know nothing about those who are in a poor way and who possibly have not got a dress suit in which to meet these hon. gentlemen. Apparently the government thinks that the wheat crop this year brought great wealth to Canada. The wheat crop of the prairies was certainly a bulky one, and the railways earned as much in hauling down to the head of the lakes No. 3 or No. 5 grade as they did for No. 1. The grade of the wheat does not affect the earnings of the railways. And the banks made just as much on their loan to the farmer who is still carrying that loan as if he had been able to pay it off; indeed, in such cases the banks have made more money in interest charges. The farmer had to borrow funds to buy food and clothes and the necessary machinery to harvest his crop, and in all probability he has not yet paid off that loan. The merchants in the small places would surely agree that they have lost money because the farmer has not been able to meet his last year's debts.

I do not propose to go fully into our loss of population, because this question will be dealt with by my colleague the member for East Lambton (Mr. Fansher). I shall deal only with the loss of population in the last twenty years in my own constituency of Southeast Grey. It comprises nine townships. Between 1901 and 1911 those nine townships lost 6,543 people, and between 1911 and 1921, 4,200, or in that period a total loss of 10,743. One can clearly see that unless this exodus ceases very soon there will be nobody left in Southeast Grey.

I need not further emphasize to an intelligent body of legislators the fact that the agricultural industry in Canada is in a bad way; it is quite clearly the sick industry of the Dominion. And what remedy is offered? I have heard only two; one is protection and the other immigration. It is said that we should have protection by way of the tariff. We have two schools of protection in Canada, both high protection, the only difference being that in the case of the Liberals they talk low tariff and practise high tariff—low tariff to get the votes and high tariff to get the campaign funds in order to enable them to sit on the cushioned seats of the treasury benches. At least I can say this for the Conservative party, that with the one lapse of the Winnipeg convention they are consistent in their tariff policy; whether one thinks of them as they are to-day or as they were a hundred years ago or as they will be a hundred years hence, they are always in the same place—the place of special privilege.

At the moment the Conservatives are advocating protection for agricultural products. I am sorry I did not have the pleasure of hearing it, but I read very carefully, and have re-read a part of it many times, the speech of the hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie). It seems fashionable to congratulate somebody and I shall therefore congratulate the hon. member for South Wellington. And I may truly say this, that his speech has required more answering than the budget itself. I could not accept it all, but the first part was exceedingly good; and with a great part of it I did agree. I gather from that speech that the hon. gentleman advocates in the main keeping our agricultural products at home; that is to say: Don't let the other fellow's products come in, but keep our own products within Canada. One might boil it down to this: Let us eat our own products and so make ourselves prosperous. I am not so sure that it would make us prosperous, but it would make us full. That is clear. On page 757 of Hansard the hon. member is reported:

> I realize quite well that in many respects the United States market is the most convenient, the most expedient market which we have; in many respects it is the very best market in which to sell many of our farm products.

If the hon. member was speaking officially for the Conservative party, then that party was eighteen years too late in finding that out; for in 1911 that was the very thing that was advocated by people who still believe that the United States market is a very good outlet for a considerable proportion at least, of our agricultural products. And if the Conservative party actually thought that the United States was a good market for our farm products, when they went into power in 1911 they could have turned right about face and helped us to market our products there—that is, if it is really the farmer they want to help. It would not have been the first time that a government turned right about face and did what in campaigning it said it would not do.

I heard someone—I have forgotten who—say in this house that he more or less resented the inaugural speech of Mr. Hoover, the newly elected president of the United States. Well, I read very carefully what the newspapers reported of his speech and I considered it masterly. I thought it was a broad-minded speech, with one exception: it is very difficult to be internationally minded on one thing and nationally minded on another, and President Hoover had something to say about a tariff in regard to farm products. We must remember however, if we intend to be fair, that the United States offered us a market for our farm products and kept that offer open for a long time. We did not accept it, and it is their own business if they shut out our products; and we have no right at all to feel any resentment against them. Indeed, they must think we are very hard to please if neither thing they offered pleases us. I am not one of those who believe that the raising of the tariff will not injure agriculture in this country; I think it will. It will particularly injure the cattle and dairy people.

The hon. member for South Wellington did not make clear to me how it is, if protection can operate to the benefit of the farmer, that the American farmer, who has been enjoying a large measure of protection for some time, is poorer, more discouraged and less able to help himself than the Canadian farmer, notwithstanding that he has access to one of the best home markets in the world. How considerable is the protection which the American farmer has enjoyed I will let a noted American tell you. In the last volume of the American Academy of Political and Social Science there appears at page 125 an article by John D. Black, professor of economics of Harvard university. Professor Black canvasses the question whether the tariff will do the agricultural population of the United States any good, and under the heading, "Possible Expansion of the Home Market", he says:

> The question now to be answered is: Assuming that expansion of the home market by shutting out some of these $647,377,000 of imports would be desirable, how much can really be accomplished in that direction, presumably by raising tariff duties? An examination of the tariff list reveals only two competitive products which do not now have tariff protection—cotton and hides. All the others—coffee, tea, bananas, silk, sisal, etc., are non-competitive. There does not appear much room for expansion here. Apparently the end must be obtained mostly by raising the existing tariff rates. But they seem to be rather high already. The ratio of duties collected to values of dutiable agricultural imports is running just under 40 per cent.

These are not my words but the words of an eminent American. I do not think that protection can raise the prices of farm products in a country with an exportable surplus. A very good example of that is to be found in the United States in the matter of wheat. They had an annual exportable surplus of 3 per cent and they had a protection of 42 cents per bushel; yet wheat has been selling in Canada, almost constantly since 1925, higher than in the United States. No one has ever made me see—and I want to see it if it is true—how protection can protect agricultural products in this country with conditions as they are now. What I fear is that the farmer will place himself, if he asks for protection, in the position where he cannot refuse higher and ever higher protection to the manufacturing industry. Let me give an example to show how that works. In the United States, where the general opinion is that something will be done in regard to raising the tariff against imports of agricultural products, the manufacturer of cream separators, feeling that the man who has cream is going to be considered, has already filed a request for an increase in duty on cream separators. And that is exactly what would happen here. The farmer would have to pay over and over again for any slight benefit that might come to him. There are perhaps a few things of which we have no exportable surplus in connection with which he might benefit in a very small degree, but he would then be in the position where he would be absolutely helpless against the manufacturer who would demand more and more protection for himself. I am particularly anxious that the farmer shall not again be fooled by high protection as he was in 1911. And let me say that the protectionists then were not all Conservatives by any means. On page 257 of the same volume from which I have already quoted there is a clear admission that the farmers of the United States have been fooled by the manufacturers in regard to protection. I should like to put this on Hansard:

> The manufacturing exporters know they cannot benefit by the tariff. They know that, on the whole, it tends to increase costs of production including, directly or indirectly, their own. Consequently they will, especially if and when competition in their essential external markets becomes keen, advocate a general lowering or abolition of duties. Their success will depend upon their ability to unite with them the farmer, whose interests are the same as theirs.

In a footnote exception is made of a minority of farmers producing wool, flaxseed, and hard wheat.

> If they become numerous and powerful enough to do this before the farmer ceases to produce for export, their success will be easy. The manufacturers of the last two generations have bamboozled the farmer into voting against his own interests. There is no reason why the intelligent export manufacturers of the future may not with equal skill and better conscience convince the farmer of the truth.

The only other remedy I have heard proposed is immigration. I noted a welcome change in the speech of the Minister of Immigration the other day, but until the present time the government have advocated getting immigrants, getting more settlers, regardless of cost or kind. Their solution for the agricultural problem was the tariff plus bringing in more farmers to produce more goods further to lower the prices we are getting for farm products. Isn't that brilliant? Only a government could do a thing so stupid; they were afraid they could not do it fast enough themselves to ruin agriculture and so they called to their assistance the railway companies and certain religious organizations. I hope that when the immigration estimates come up every farmer in this house, whether he is an Independent, a Liberal or a Conservative, will take the stand that as a farmer he is not going to be so dull as to sit still and see the people's money spent to bring in more farmers to compete in an already under-paid field.

To my mind the way out for the agricultural industry lies with the farmers themselves rather than with the government, although the government can help; the ability to solve the farm problem is latent in every farming community, although it is quite true that the rapid depopulation of the country makes it necessary that we should arouse the latent ability before all the virile and aggressive people have left the land. Farmers have suffered severely from an inferiority-complex, regardless of their political affiliations; the farmers need to trust themselves and stand on their own feet.

This whole condition has come about because the farmer did not look after his own business. He must, not as an individual but as a group, enter the marketing, the financial and the legislative fields; he must become a dominant figure or at least a very important factor in each of these three fields. It is not possible for each individual farmer to study the needs of the market at home and abroad but it is possible for agriculture, well organized and selling its products efficiently, to do that very thing.

We heard a great deal about our importations of cheese, but let me say there is cheese and cheese. I know that when the hon. member for South Wellington made his speech he made no difference, but down at the Chateau Laurier I am sure he would find a great deal of difference. We import a great deal of cheese because it is put up attractively and because it is of a kind the Canadian people want. So far as I know the producers of cheese, not the cheese factories but the people who produce the milk which is made into cheese, have not made any cooperative effort to put their cheese on the markets of the Dominion of Canada in a way acceptable to the Canadian people. In the first place they market it too fresh; sometimes I buy and attempt to eat cheese which tastes and feels a good deal like soap. It was not cheese; it was not ripened; it was not good for the home or the foreign market. Sometimes I buy soft cheese, because I like it; I do not care particularly where it is made. Surely one does not have to eat indigestible cheese just because it is made in Canada; that is carrying patriotism too far. If the men who produce the milk which is made into cheese will make of themselves a cooperative unit; if they will study the needs of the market and the needs of the consumer they will get a better price for their product.

That is equally true of apples. Why is it that the British Columbia apple can compete at a higher price with our Ontario apple right under our noses, when the British Columbia apple has not the flavour of the Ontario Spy or McIntosh? Of course, we have been trained to think of an apple as a beautiful thing and we buy it on its looks, just as men pick their wives. That is why I have been so unlucky.

Mr. RYCKMAN: You have your chance yet.

Miss MACPHAIL: There is no use in my building up false hopes. When a person buys graded apples he knows they will be uniform and attractively and conveniently boxed and he is willing to pay a higher price. Just as soon as the Ontario apple grower wants to get into the cooperative business he can command a higher price. I do not suggest that he go into a cooperative concern organized by a government; if there is anything in this world I distrust it is a concern of that kind. Let me cite the tobacco pool as a very fine example; but if the growers themselves organize they can put their apples on the market and certainly they will be purchased by the people of Ontario at least.

We have a very considerable degree of cooperative marketing in Canada now. I refer particularly to the grain pools, which came about as a direct result of twenty-five years of farm organization and education and not from the work of the war-time wheat board. The farmer is learning to become intelligent as a group. I think it would astonish the house, as it astonished me, to learn that in 1927 we marketed cooperatively $500,000,000 worth of farm products out of the total of $1,750,000,000 worth of farm products marketed. Supposing the farmers said, "We are going to put over the idea of cooperation to every farmer in Canada regardless of what he produces; we are going to carry on an educational campaign through a body which might be called the associated producers cooperatives." Supposing the farmers levied a tax on themselves, of one mill, or one dollar out of every thousand; that would give them the tidy sum of $500,000 a year. With that they could do very many things to sell the idea of cooperation to the Canadian farmer; they could do it through speeches, through discussions, through marketing schools, through moving pictures and the new "talkies" and through lectures, and it would not be very long before the farmers of Canada would be in the position the farmers of Denmark are in to-day. Then they would laugh at anyone who tried to convince them that cooperative marketing was a good thing; they would know that themselves.

Then, when they had gone that far they could go still further. I am sorry time does not permit me to go into this question more deeply, because it is a most interesting field, but the farmers could continue this annual levy in order to arouse the national consciousness to the need of rural culture. That exists to-day to a very limited degree, but it could be extended, deepened and sweetened; it is necesary to the moral well-being of this nation. All of this would take time and money, but it could be done, and there are many things the government could do to assist agriculture. Let me say right now that there is no use spending money for immigration; there is no use talking about our great prosperity until we get the basic industries prosperous. I do not claim for a moment that agriculture is the only basic industry but it is the chief industry and the government could do much for it. For instance, they could take the advice of the tariff board, which would be a very good body if the government would listen to them; they could free the implements of production from any taxation whatever; they could cut down expenditure as far as possible, thus lowering taxation; they could stop bringing in immigrants and they could bring about disarmament. No country in the world could lead the world better in disarmament than could Canada. They could revise the Bank Act in the interest of the masses. That may sound a little like talking about heaven, but it is one of the things they should do. They could carry the grading of farm products through to the finished article. What is the use of grading hogs if we do not grade bacon? Unless we can win a place on the world markets for good bacon there is no use grading the hogs. They could collect data from the whole world regarding agricultural conditions and broadcast it to the farmers of Canada. They could develop a federal health program which would lead to state responsibility for good health. There are many other things I would like to mention but I have not the time.

There is one matter which needs immediate consideration—if they think about it for five years they might do something—the financing of the wheat pool. Why could not credit be arranged between the treasury board and the wheat pool? The wheat pool has the wheat and they can deposit collateral with the treasury board; the treasury board has the right to issue credit, or give authority to somebody else to do it, but the way things are at present, the banks stand between the two and make a tidy profit out of doing nothing at all.

But when we got all that done we would still have this monstrosity known as the House of Commons; we would still have two hundred and forty-five members sitting here with the seventeen or so who are in the cabinet actually doing the ruling. Unless it is changed, we would still have this place where questions are not debated or decided on their merits; where private members, and particularly private members in the governing party are not free to advocate the needs of the people—the Liberal Progressive are a telling example of this. The people's representatives are bound and gagged by party discipline and by rules and customs. Perhaps I should say that they are bound and shackled because they are hardly gagged, but at least they have to talk to a wilderness of empty seats and closed minds.

When agriculture becomes fully organized it will then be powerful enough to be one of that group of interests which stand outside and pull the strings which operate the cabinet. But that does not seem to be a very democratic way of effecting government; I think it would be much better if agriculture strove to have the form of government changed in a way which would acknowledge the economic needs of the country and the economic nature of government; which would acknowledge the right of the agricultural group to function as they desired to were they not bound by the present rules and usages of the house. The people will soon realize that the geographical unit is a false unit in the electing of members to this house. Good sense may overtake us and we will realize that questions should be decided in this house on their merits; and I think there is a day in the future—possibly a long way ahead—when the cabinet will not rule parliament but will be subject to parliament. When that day does arrive we will have something which comes nearer to true democracy.

Hon. PETER HEENAN (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, If I am to finish by six o'clock I must hurry along, and I know the member for Southeast Grey (Miss Macphail) will pardon me if I do not pay her the compliments I should like to have paid her.

During the course of the debate I have noticed that some of the hon. members seem loath to believe in the prosperity of this country. I noted that the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens) hesitated to accept the figures of car loadings as given by my colleague the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Malcolm). He pointed out that although railroading activities were improving in this country there were less men engaged in that industry. In that he is probably correct, but the hon. member should not have taken that decrease in number of employees as proof that we were not progressing. He should have realized that it was because of the more efficient organization of our railroads, the better cooperation and efficiency among railroad men which enabled us to get through the rush periods of traffic without having to bring in men from the United States who would only take wages out of the country. The hon. member stated that 2,000 less men were employed in 1928 on our Canadian railways than were employed in 1923. No doubt that is true, but the wages paid the railroad men in 1923 amounted to $253,000,000, in round figures, as compared with $276,000,000 in 1928.

Mr. HEAPS: Does that include salaries?

Mr. HEENAN: That figure covers operating wages. The Canadian railroad employees had $23,453,000 more amongst themselves in 1928 than they had in 1923, notwithstanding the fact that the last thing which was done under the Conservative administration in 1921 was to reduce the wages of railroad men by 12½ per cent, involving an amount of $50,000,000.

I should like to take the opportunity afforded me in this debate to answer some remarks which have been made by hon. members opposite. I should like first to refer to a statement made by the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett). When in Winnipeg on September 24 of last year he charged me, as I understand from the press, with being adverse to the British harvester movement. The following day I corrected that statement and I thought the matter was ended, but when the hon. member spoke in reply to the speech from the throne he quoted from an overseas publication to the effect that I had repudiated the harvester movement. I do not think it is necessary to go outside of Canada to obtain information as to what Canadian public men have said or with regard to Canadian affairs. I have before me extracts from different newspapers published throughout the country, from Halifax to Vancouver. These newspapers have stated in effect that the Minister of Labour had defended the harvester movement at the trades congress convention. It may be that the hon. member was confused by the tactics of some of his own lieutenants who appeared before the trades congress convention and criticized the harvester movement. I have in my hand the issue of September 22 of the Labour News of Alberta, in which the following appears:

> Senator Gideon Robertson contended that the Britishers were not even required during harvest season. "Due to the influx of old country harvesters," he said, "the second harvest excursion from the east has been cancelled and thousands of young men in the maritime provinces were thus deprived of the opportunity to secure the usual seasonal employment in the west."

If there was confusion it was caused by that statement, and also because one of the delegates, a man prominent in the councils of the Conservative party, not content with things as they were in the convention, having tried to get the reporters to give a garbled account and failed, slipped out to the telephone and endeavoured to give to one of the papers in the east a garbled account of my statement. The editor, however, wanting to be fair, sent a gentleman to investigate the matter and found that it was a deliberate falsehood. The convention took to task the gentleman who sent out the report. That was what caused the confusion. In that connection the Labour News, published at Hamilton on September 28, had this to say:

> It begins to look as though the garbled and misrepresented account of Hon. Peter Heenan's convincing address on immigration at the Dominion Trades Congress convention, given out by an unnamed delegate who by the way is ultra-Conservative, has been swallowed hook, line and sinker by certain Tory newspapers, party writers and leaders.

Commenting on this same controversy between myself and the leader of the opposition, the same editor had this to say:

> The Minister of Labour is right in what he says. The writer heard his address at the congress convention and the minister did not hesitate to tell the delegates that he had been a party to the arrangement to bring British harvest help to Canada.

I defended the harvester movement. Why should I not? The harvest crop of western Canada is of vital interest to the whole nation. It is of vital interest to the farmers of the west, to our railroads and railroad men, and I might say practically every man in the industrial centres of the east depends upon the prosperity of the farmers in the west. Therefore I say I defended the harvester movement, but in doing so I endeavoured to show the importance of the question. I tried to show that every year there sits in Winnipeg a committee composed of representatives of the governments of the three prairie provinces, the farmers, the immigration department, the labour bureau, together with the transportation companies. They estimated that this year 75,000 men would be required. When I was informed of that—I was along with my hon. friend the Minister of Immigration

(Mr. Forke), who was absent at the time —I sent this telegram to every premier in the eastern provinces:

From information to hand annual meeting of Canadian Passenger Association western lines, employment service representatives of all three prairie provinces, immigration authorities and farmers' representatives held in Winnipeg on Thursday, it was estimated that 75,000 harvest workers would be required to handle this year's crop in the west, 25,000 of whom would be locally available. British Columbia estimates being able to supply 6,000 leaving balance of 44,000 to be secured from other sources. As the harvesting of the western crop is a matter of national importance would greatly appreciate an expression of opinion from you by wire at your earliest convenience as to the approximate number from your province who may be expected to avail themselves of the usual cheap rates provided by the railways for transportation to and from the prairie provinces for the purpose of engaging in harvest work.

Peter Heenan,
Minister of Labour.

I received telegrams in answer to those, and for the information of the house I want to read them. Hon. Doctor Forbes Godfrey, Minister of Labour for Ontario, telegraphed me on July 25 as follows:

On account of the fact employment index in Ontario is at a higher point 108.5 than it has been since 1919, the interest shown among our applicants in the harvest excursion is less than usual. In the case of Toronto for instance not more than a dozen men have asked (at the employment office) for particulars regarding the excursion dates, et cetera. The harvesting of the wheat crop is of course a matter of national interest and benefits the Dominion as a whole, including Ontario, and there is not sufficient labour in western Canada to take care of this tremendous seasonal project. At the same time I would expect this year to find a noticeable falling off in the number of men available from Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Taschereau wired me on the same date:

I am advised by employment bureau that Quebec usually sends about 5,000 available workers every year and that same number will probably be available this year.

Mr. J. A. Murray, Commissioner of Immigration for New Brunswick, wired:

Estimate approximately 2,000 harvesters from New Brunswick.

Let me point out that this is about 25 per cent of a falling off from the previous year. Hon. E. N. Rhodes, Premier of Nova Scotia, wired as follows—and I should like the leader of the opposition to take note of this answer, because I understand he was in the maritimes at this particular time; and he can see whether this gospel is along the lines of what he was preaching:

During past four years average 1,700 have gone west for harvest. Would estimate 25 per cent decrease this year owing activities building construction, highways, mining industry, and increased agricultural production.

This is the reply from Hon. A. C. Saunders, Premier of Prince Edward Island:

We are very short of farm labourers in our province, having the largest potato crop in our history. We have a large waiting list of farmers here requiring farm labourers. Demand so very keen doubt if 50 men will avail themselves of cheap transportation rate to prairie provinces.

With those telegrams before us, the promise of 5,000 from Quebec, 2,000 from New Brunswick, 1,275 from Nova Scotia and 50 from Prince Edward Island, or a total of 8,325, leaves us still short by 35,675 of the estimate made by the committee, and we could hardly expect that number from Ontario.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Has the minister the figures for the western provinces?

Mr. HEENAN: The estimate is 25,000 from the three prairie provinces.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Did Mr. Brownlee send that word?

Mr. HEENAN: No, that estimate was from Winnipeg. With that before us, and realizing the position of the workers in England, we heard the cry of the Imperial government and it was decided to try as an experiment the bringing out of 10,000 men. Many opinions have been offered as to whether the experiment was a success or a failure, but at any rate it was tried, and after the Minister of Immigration and the government had exacted every safeguard from the transportation companies and representatives of the Imperial government so that those men would not be a burden on the country, they were permitted to come over. That was the position, and the leader of the opposition should not endeavour to get the government both coming and going on a question of this description. While some of his party and his newspapers are crying out in favour of this scheme, he ought not to have one of his chief lieutenants stand in the trades congress convention damning the scheme. I hope I have made myself clear on that point, and that the leader of the opposition will now take my word for it that I did not repudiate the scheme but was a party to it and glad to make the experiment.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Is the minister going to continue it next year?

Mr. HEENAN: I am making this speech this year. One thing at a time is pretty good.

Some hon. members have spoken on many subjects, and I should like to refer to two hon. gentlemen in particular who discussed the old age pension legislation, the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Ladner) and the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Smith). The hon. member for Vancouver South, in the course of his remarks, made this statement:

> Mr. Speaker, to me it is inconceivable that this government and the Liberal forces throughout Canada should be parties to a scheme to submarine their old age pension legislation after it has served their purpose before the electorate. It seems to me that the suggestion to test the constitutionality of the Old Age Pensions Act by a reference to the supreme court is an indirect method of destroying the effectiveness of the legislation, resorted to by certain forces in the Liberal party that do not approve of old age pensions and would like to shift the whole burden upon the provinces.

At this juncture I would pause to say that the only suggestion that has come with regard to testing the validity of the legislation came from a member on the Conservative side of the house, who has several times put a question on the order paper asking whether the government were willing to test the validity of the legislation before the courts.

I should like to outline briefly the history of the old age pension legislation, and after that I shall be surprised if the house and the country are not convinced that my hon. friends opposite attempted not merely to submarine but to torpedo the whole old age pension legislation at every opportunity they got.

In 1919 it was a plank in the Liberal platform to advocate an old age pension scheme in cooperation with the provinces. In 1922, after the Liberal party was elected to power, a resolution was introduced by the then member for Hull urging that ways and means be devised to establish an old age pension scheme in Canada. In 1924 a resolution was introduced by the present Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King), appointing a committee to make inquiries into an old age pension system for Canada. That committee reported in the same session, and recommended that the provinces be communicated with. That was done, and answers were received from the provinces. It is true that the provinces were not enthusiastic over the scheme. The question was again submitted in 1925 to the same committee, which recommended the same scheme again, and submitted in addition the opinion of the Deputy Minister of Justice to the effect that this was a provincial, and not a federal, responsibility. When the report of that committee was before this house my hon. friend then sitting for East Calgary, and sitting on the Labour benches—I refer to Mr. Irvine—moved an amendment to the effect that the question should be referred back to the committee with instructions to bring in a report upon a purely federal plan. One would have thought that if the Conservatives in this house wanted a purely federal scheme, this was their opportunity to secure one, but the house will be surprised to learn from the record that only two Conservative members in the whole house voted for the amendment calling for a purely federal plan. Every other member of the Conservative party voted against it, and voted for the adoption of the committee's report. The two members of the Conservative party who voted in favour of a purely federal plan were the hon. member for Toronto Northwest (Mr. Church) and the hon. member for the Yukon (Mr. Black).

There was an election in 1925, and in 1926, the first session after the election, a bill was introduced in regard to old age pensions. What was the position of my hon. friends opposite, especially the leaders of the Conservative party, at that time? Sir Henry Drayton, was then leading the opposition in the absence of Mr. Meighen, who I remember well was ill at the time. Sir Henry Drayton had this to say:

> I am not at all certain that it is a good thing for this parliament to try to look after other business than its own, to try to look after provincial business, when I do not think the most enthusiastic supporters of this government can say it is looking after, as they should be looked after, matters of pressing Dominion importance. This is entirely a provincial matter.

Mr. HEAPS: The Prime Minister said exactly the same thing a few days ago, did he not?

Mr. HEENAN: The hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Cahan), speaking on this question at that time, referring to Nova Scotia, said:

> I do not think there is any demand from that province for contributions of this kind in respect of work which they have undertaken as a province and in which the municipalities assist. They regard this as a provincial and municipal affair and they are prepared, I believe, unless there has been a change of sentiment in recent years, to continue it in the same vigorous and successful way in which they have carried it on in the past.

Another very prominent member of another chamber, the leader of the Conservative party in that house, said:

> In this case, according to the Department of Justice, the subject matter over which we are legislating has been assigned under our federal constitution to the provinces. I think it is a good general rule to lay down and to follow as closely as possible, that the parliament of Canada, or any house legislating under a similar constitution, should confine itself to those subjects which have been assigned to it, and the provinces to the subjects that have been assigned to them.

Then my hon. friend the present leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) had this to say in Hansard, March 26, 1926, at page 1975:

I apologize for trespassing again to-night upon the time of the house, but I feel very strongly on this subject. I am deeply interested in it; I desire to see it succeed. I am convinced that it cannot succeed without the cooperation of all the provinces, unless the Dominion, in defiance of our constitutional jurisdiction as voiced by the Deputy Minister of Justice, sees fit to undertake the whole responsibility, which would involve us in an expenditure of $23,000,000 per annum, and, in a very short time, an expenditure of $40,000,000 per annum, an expenditure entirely too large for us to entertain at the present time.

So I do not think we got very much encouragement from our Conservative friends on that occasion. In view of the statements I have quoted, it puzzles me to understand how the hon. leader of the opposition, after saying that it would be in defiance of our constitutional jurisdiction to undertake the whole responsibility, could vote at the Winnipeg convention—the press stated that the vote was unanimous—that the old age pension scheme at present in operation was inadequate and unworkable, and that there should be a federal scheme instead of a Dominion-provincial scheme. But that was the position of the Conservative party. In 1925 they voted in this house against a federal scheme and in favour of a Dominion-provincial scheme, and in 1926 they opposed a Dominion-provincial scheme on the ground that old age pensions were the business of the province, and not of the Dominion.

But the bill passed this house. It went to the other chamber, and there, to use the language of my hon. friend from Vancouver South, it was submarined. An election took place following its execution, and I think of all the questions that were discussed before the public in that campaign, old age pensions was one of the most prominent, and we know with what result. The bill was re-introduced in 1927, and amendments were offered by the Conservative party, which had for their purpose the loading down of the amount involved to such an extent that if they had ever been accepted by the government it would have been killed in the senate almost before it reached the other chamber; because when the senate threw out the old age pension bill in 1926 on the ground that it was going to cost $24,000,000 a year, it could hardly be expected that they would pass an old age pension bill the next year that was going to cost around $176,000,000 a year. When those tactics failed and the law was finally placed on the statute book, one would have thought, yes, one had the right to expect, that hon. gentlemen opposite would cooperate with the rest of the country in an effort to induce the provinces to make the best of the situation and participate in the scheme. But what did they do? They called a meeting in Winnipeg, the Conservative convention, and there in the centre of Canada they broadcast to the four corners of the country discouragement to the provinces, declaring that the Dominion-provincial scheme was inadequate and unworkable, and they voted unanimously for a federal scheme instead of a Dominion-provincial scheme.

Mr. BENNETT: What does Quebec say?

Mr. HEENAN: I will tell the hon. gentleman what somebody else says first.

Mr. BENNETT: Hear, hear.

Mr. HEENAN: They declared for the federal scheme, in face of the fact that my hon friend in the session of 1925 voted against it, and in view of the fact that the now leader of the opposition, my hon. and genial friend, said that it would be an invasion of our constitutional jurisdiction.

Mr. BENNETT: My hon. friend will pardon me, but I cannot let that statement pass. He has made it for the third time, but on the other occasions I refrained from interrupting him. I said the constitutional jurisdiction as declared by the Deputy Minister of Justice. I expressed no opinion of my own.

Mr. HEENAN: I expect my hon. friend is like myself. He accepts the Justice department as the logical authority to give legal advice to this parliament.

Mr. STEVENS: It was asked for by this government.

Mr. HEENAN: My hon. friend can ask for it now if he expects something different. Now, we were told that the scheme was unworkable and inadequate, and at that very time we were negotiating with the western provinces. To-day this so-called unworkable and inadequate scheme is in effect in every province in western Canada with the exception of the province of Alberta. The Premier of Alberta has stated that his government will adopt the scheme this session, and already a bill has been introduced for the purpose.

Then again this so-called unworkable and inadequate scheme is about to be put into effect in the province of Ontario, the most Tory province in the whole Dominion.

Mr. HEAPS: Except Quebec.

Mr. HEENAN: Ontario, I think, sent more delegates to the Conservative convention in Winnipeg last year than any two or three of the other provinces combined. They were unanimous in declaring our old age pensions scheme to be unworkable, but quite recently Premier Ferguson has introduced a bill in the provincial house to take advantage of the legislation. When my hon. friends observe the progress that has been made in this connection I should think they would not start sniping at the scheme and attempt to make the people of this country believe that the Prime Minister stated in this house the other day that it was a vicious system, when as a matter of fact he said nothing of the sort.

Mr. BENNETT: He said it was a thoroughly vicious principle.

Mr. HEENAN: Everyone who was in the house at the time knows that he was speaking on the principle of provincial subventions, and an hon. member here and there tried to lead him to say something—

Mr. BENNETT: Mostly here.

Mr. HEENAN: I would expect opposition from the Conservative party, but I am surprised to find one or two members—whom I would have expected to endorse the old age pensions scheme and help the government in every way to put it into effect—are joining the Conservatives in trying to infer that the Prime Minister called the scheme a vicious principle, whereas as a matter of fact such a thought was far from his mind. But I am not so much worried about what my friends of the opposition think of the government and of the scheme. I am satisfied to reflect that the people who are now benefiting by this legislation are old-time pioneers. Therefore I prefer to take the opinion of those who are sympathetic towards those pioneers and towards this scheme, and I can cite no better evidence in this connection than the views of the Trades and Labour Congress, as set out in the legislative program which they presented to the government on January 8 last. They did not doubt our sincerity. They said:

> It is pleasing to note that the Minister of Labour has continued to publicly urge all provincial governments to accept the federal-provincial Old Age Pension Act and this we accept as a manifestation of the sincerity of the federal government in seeking to have the benefits of the measure made applicable throughout the entire Dominion at the earliest time.

We have been told time and again by our friends opposite that the old age pensions act is inadequate and unworkable. Apropos of this allow me to quote what the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Smith) stated from his seat in this house:

> Might I mention here that very recently there has been submitted to the government of the province of Nova Scotia an interim report by the commissioner who was appointed to investigate an old age pensions scheme in that province, and he has estimated in this report, which is not at all complete, that the total cost to inaugurate such scheme—of which I may say every person in the province of Nova Scotia is heartily in favour—will amount to $4,400,000.

Mr. HEAPS: Where did he get his figures?

Mr. HEENAN: He manufactured them.

> The portion to be borne by the province to be $2,200,000, plus expenses of administration of the scheme.

When a similar argument was advanced by the government of Ontario, I undertook to hazard the guess that instead of costing in the neighbourhood of five million dollars, as stated by the provincial authorities, it would cost approximately half that amount, towards which the Dominion government would contribute 50 per cent. I knew whereof I spoke, for to-day the premier of Ontario realizes that at the most it will not cost the province more than three million dollars. This estimate for Nova Scotia—

Mr. HEAPS: Is it an estimate?

Mr. HEENAN: They call it an estimate, and I like to call it by the same name. This estimate, I say, is ridiculous, because at the last census the number of persons in Nova Scotia over seventy years of age was 24,756. Assuming every one of them was paid the maximum pension, the cost to the provinces would be less than $2,975,000. Our experience in the other provinces has shown that about thirty-five per cent of these old people qualify for some part of the pension. Even taking forty as the percentage for Nova Scotia, the cost of full pensions for all would be about $1,200,000; if thirty-five per cent received full pensions the cost would be $1,027,800. The cost of administration has been exaggerated. In British Columbia it does not cost more than eight thousand dollars a year, whereas it has been estimated that it would cost Nova Scotia two hundred thousand dollars for administration. Such an estimate on the face of it is ridiculous.

I have only five minutes more in which to deal with several questions, and, Mr. Speaker, I do not know which to cut out. Before I leave the old age pensions question let me say that this government is right behind the scheme; the Prime Minister and his cabinet are one hundred per cent in their support of it, and they are all anxious that the scheme should go into effect in every province. We ask support from our friends opposite even at this late date to help us to put it into effect in every province, and when it does go into effect in the provinces we are quite prepared to sit down with them and consider such amendments as may be deemed necessary; because so far as this government is concerned this is not the last word in regard to old age pension legislation—this is the first.

The hon. member for West Hamilton (Mr. Bell) took a fling at the government from many angles, and I want to discuss one point of attack which he made. He attributed the strike in Hamilton to the policy of this government, implying that had this been a protectionist country that strike would not have taken place. Let me point out to him that there has just terminated a strike in New Bedford, Massachusetts, in what is the most highly protected industry in the world. That strike occurred in the cotton mill centre where, according to the American Federationist, the employees are not making a living wage. They had to suffer a 5 per cent reduction. I wonder, therefore, how the hon. member can blame the policy of this government for the strike to which he referred. Let us measure my hon. friend's party and its policy by the strike criterion and see how they fare. From 1912 to 1921 there was an average of 150 strikes a year, while time lost by reason of strikes averaged 1,081,508 working days. In the last three years, on the other hand, from 1926 to 1928 inclusive, there has been an average of 86 strikes per annum instead of 150, while the average number of working days lost was 233,410 as compared with over a million.

The hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario (Mr. McGibbon) advanced a strange argument. He read from the census returns of 1921 to show that the country was not prosperous, and then he went on to make the statement that not one of the men engaged in several occupations which he mentioned earned over $1,600 a year. I would point out to my hon. friend that he was not censuring this government in that regard; he was alluding to what had taken place while his own party was in power from 1912 to 1921. But if he wanted to be fair he could have ascertained from the wages bulletin which we issue that the wages of bricklayers in Toronto had increased since 1921 from $1 to $1.25, or 25 per cent; the wages of carpenters from 90 cents to a dollar, and the wages of electrical workers, sheet metal workers and others similarly, the average increase in wages being 19 per cent. So that if the hon. member condemns his own party—

THIRD READING

Bill No. 64, respecting Chartered Trust and Executor Company.—Mr. Lawson.

SUN LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY

Sir EUGENE FISET (Rimouski) moved the third reading of Bill No. 16, respecting the Sun Life Assurance Company of Canada.

Mr. JEAN-FRANÇOIS POULIOT (Temiscouata): Mr. Speaker, I will not take very long to explain my views in connection with this bill as the amendment which has been made is satisfactory, but I do not think I should fail to present to the house what was said at a public function in the province of Quebec with respect to the way this bill was dealt with last year. The remarks to which I refer were made at a public dinner held in Quebec on June 8, 1928, and may be found in the proceedings of the third annual convention of the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, held at the Chateau Frontenac, Quebec city. With regard to this bill the following words were used:

The west must understand the problems of the east and the east must understand the problems of the west.

That is elementary; no one can object to that.

They are not the same problems.

That is true and it is also elementary.

It must be a matter of give and take.

Mr. BENNETT: Mostly give.

Mr. POULIOT: I think there is nothing so good as a fair understanding.

Some times I read in the papers some things that do not sound well—and when I see, not in our parliament but in the federal house, that westerners object to some bills—

Perhaps in speaking of members from the west he was thinking of the hon. member for West Calgary (Mr. Bennett).

—in which they are not interested, but they object precisely because they are not interested, I am afraid they create a bad feeling in the east. Let me quote an instance. Last year at the interprovincial conference at Ottawa the west came to us and said, we want now the return of our natural resources. Ontario and Quebec, for the first time, said, we have no objection at all, and the return of your natural resources is absolutely agreeable to us. In the past, Outario and Quebec had objected. Some days ago—

This was last June.

—two important bills came before the Dominion parliament, the Sun Life and the Bell Telephone bill, and I am told that these two bills are going to be talked out by westerners.

These are not my words; I am quoting from the remarks of a prominent man in Quebec.

I hope that they won't (hear, hear) and I may say to those gentlemen of the west who wish to talk them out, that if they want to create a bad feeling in the east against the west and call for retaliation—I don't say that they will get it, but I say they are courting it.

I hope my hon. friends in the far corner of the house notice those words.

Mr. EVANS: What is the title of the book from which my hon. friend is reading?

Mr. POULIOT: I am reading from the proceedings of the third annual convention of the Canadian Chamber of Commerce; I am sure my hon. friend has a copy also. I do not make these words mine; I want the house to understand that clearly, because I do not share these views at all. I believe in the freedom of this parliament; I believe that no one can interfere with free speech here, especially an outsider, and no one outside of this house can dictate any policy to members of this house. That is my understanding of Dominion politics. I exercise my privilege of free speech to quite an extent; it is the greatest privilege we have in this country.

Mr. BENNETT: May I ask my hon. friend a question? I suppose he remembers that two distinguished members of this house exercised their privilege of free speech to such an extent that one became Minister of National Revenue and the other Canadian Minister to Japan. Is my hon. friend emulating them?

Mr. POULIOT: I believe both were good appointments; the Minister of National Revenue is doing very well and I do not complain because the Minister to Japan has left this country for Japan. This is free speech again; I could not get accustomed in this house to his snobbish way of speaking when he was a member here; I remember that the second part of his speech used to contradict the first part.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. POULIOT: But to continue—and I will be very brief—I would like to tell my hon. friends in the far corner that they need not be afraid because the worst they could receive from the gentleman who made this speech to which I refer would be the cracker which he found on his door step in Quebec and which did not explode. This is another instance of those crazy utterances of the Premier of Quebec, who quite often does not know the first thing about the matters of which he speaks. The members of this house have no lesson to learn from anyone outside of this house; here we come to an understanding; members are free to express their views and they can say what they like. They use dignified language when they speak to each other or when they address the house, and I have never heard before of an outsider coming and trying to impress his views by threats upon independent members of the House of Commons. I protested against this very thing at a committee meeting this morning. I asked the officers of the Bell Telephone Company who were appearing there if they were ready to take all responsibility for the remarks made by that gentleman, and I received the answer from the attorney of the company in the negative.

I do not intend to occupy the time of the house any longer, but I desired to express my views on this subject. I believe our greatest privilege, as members of this house, is to use the language we think fits the circumstances, and I think this will be a lesson to that gentleman and he will mind his own business in the future, and observe "de Conrart le silence prudent," at least with regard to federal matters.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

THE BUDGET

CONTINATION OF DEBATE ON THE ANNUAL FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Hon. J. A. Robb (Minister of Finance) for committee of ways and means, the proposed amendment thereto of Mr. Guthrie, and the proposed amendment to the amendment of Mr. Spencer.

Hon. PETER HEENAN (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I understand that about three minutes of my time still remain, and I should like to place on record a few figures which will show that the railroad activities can be taken as a barometer of the progress the country is making. I wish to give the tonnage of revenue freight since 1921—

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. member's time had elapsed before the house rose.

Mr. SPEAKER: I understand the hon. gentleman's time has elapsed.

Mr. MURRAY MacLAREN (St. John-Albert): Mr. Speaker, I have had the privilege of hearing the Minister of Labour (Mr. Heenan) this afternoon, and if he will be good enough to listen to me this evening I shall a tale unfold which will go a long way toward assisting him in improving the employment situation in this country. However, to do that he must be diligent; he must prevail upon his colleagues to adopt certain measures which I hope to place before the house this evening. I propose discussing the question of trade as it relates to the welfare of this country. The terms "trade" and "commerce" are somewhat similar, and it is very difficult to differentiate exactly between the two words. There is a general consensus of opinion that the word "commerce" has a greater scope and wider application than the word "trade". But we hear the term "foreign trade," and surely that is wide enough. There is also the phrase "overseas trade," which is equally wide in its scope. I intend to deal particularly with overseas trade as it concerns Canada.

Overseas trade is divided into two groups, the first of which is the imports into Canada. As we all know, these imports enter Canada either through Canadian ports or through ports of the United States. I have before me a table prepared by the Bureau of Statistics which illustrates the progress which has been made during the past years in this respect. Imports which entered Canada through Canadian ports during the year 1928 were valued at $377,402,000, or 96.6 per cent of the total imports. The imports entering via United States ports in the same year amounted to $12,118,000, or 3.1 per cent of the total. These figures show a satisfactory improvement in the use of our own ports and rails. There has been a steady increase in the use of the Canadian ports. For instance, the imports through United States ports in 1921 were valued at $25,936,000 while last year they had decreased to $12,118,000. The statement in detail is as follows:

This improvement has taken place partly by drawing the public attention to the importance of using our own ports and our own rails. I do not think that is a large factor. The main reason is that there have been various preferences, such as the small preference that was added a few years ago, which have brought it about. There can be no doubt about this, because those who recall the instance of the West Indian trade will remember that at that time a small preference was added for direct importation and the improvement followed so soon after that there could be no other explanation. The various trade agreements and treaties that have been passed by parliament in the last few years contain a clause that the preference shall apply when direct importation is made. This, too, has assisted in the improvement. I do not wish to convey the impression as to the treaties and trade agreements that I approve those measures except solely as regards the one point of the mode of import. The merits and demerits of the treaties that we have passed must stand in a separate category and at the present moment I do not deal with them. So far as that goes credit is due to the government for the legislation that has been passed. In like manner equal credit is due to those on this side of the house who have persistently and steadfastly urged that the legislation be brought into effect and who have supported the measures when introduced.

I should like to point out, in reference to the West Indian trade, that not long ago a duty was imposed on bananas coming through the United States and that they were admitted free when imported directly. The United Fruit Company of the United States, a very large, wealthy and powerful organization, which has hitherto been importing through Boston practically all the bananas used in this country, has this year, owing to the duty, arranged to ship bananas from Jamaica to St. John and Halifax. It is doing that because it finds that this fruit can be introduced into Canada two or three days sooner than by shipping it via the St. Lawrence route.

The second great group is that of exports from Canada to overseas countries, and "now is the winter of our discontent," our disappointments and our remonstrances. In the period from 1919 to 1928 exports were as follows:

(2) Exports from Canada to overseas countries

Years ended March 31	(a) via Canadian ports		(b) via United States ports
	Value of exports $	Proportion of total exports %	Value of exports $	Proportion of total exports %

The house will note the large percentage of trade that passes through the United States to the seaboard for shipment overseas. The other day the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Malcolm), in an interesting speech referred, as an illustration of what he regarded as indicative of a distinct distribution of wealth, to the records of car loadings as representing the movement of tonnage and the business which is carried on within the nation. I ask the houses to mark the words "within a nation." He said that the increase in tonnage had helped employment in the transportation systems. This afternoon the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens) also referred to car loadings and he was followed by the Minister of Labour (Mr. Heenan). This is the time when I think the Minister of Labour might, with some advantage, consider another viewpoint of the question of car loadings. The Minister of Trade and Commerce said: See the increase in car loadings in Canada and how from that follow the distribution of wealth and the employment that is offered by the railway people. But the minister failed to trace the course of many of these cars. He made no mention of the $291,607,000 worth of tonnage which was carried into another country for transshipment overseas. He made no mention of the loss at Canadian ports, nor of the loss of railway mileage on goods passing through the United States, nor —and I would ask the Minister of Labour to listen to this—of the loss of employment both on the railways and at ocean ports. I think I can fairly assume that about as much labour is required for unloading cars as for loading them. Many of the figures which the Minister of Trade and Commerce gave should be cut in half because those cars are unloaded in another country and consequently the employment that should come to our railway operatives, the additional mileage that our railways should have and the employment that should be available at our seaports, are lost because of this $291,000,000 worth of goods being shipped through the United States. The index number of employment would do some oscillation if these facts were plainly and fairly placed before the indicator. Some time we will be interested in learning just what is the number of freight cars that are loaded in Canada and unloaded in the United States. It would be most instructive and impressive to know just what is the number of cars that would be required to handle the freight to the value I have just mentioned. I do not for a moment say that there should or could be no transshipment through the United States, but I do strongly assert that the amount now being transshipped should be greatly curtailed, and that our own people, our own railways and ports, should have the benefits of that traffic.

I desire to draw the attention of the house to a report recently issued by the United States government, dated January 28, 1929. It is a report of the Secretary of State, the Secretary of Agriculture, and the Interstate Commerce Commission, in response to a senate resolution relative to the diversion of commerce from ports in the United States to Canadian ports. This inquiry was held at the instance of two American ports which complained that their trade was being diverted to Canada. The phrase "diversion of trade" means to us in Canada the "reversion" or the recovery of our trade, because the principal part of the trade in question is in Canadian goods. Whether or not these two cities were correct in complaining of the loss of trade, the loss certainly was not due to Canada securing that trade. The report itself states that there has been no diversion to Canada, and that on the whole the United States is well maintaining its trade overseas. I commend this extensive report to the attention of the members of the house. It was made after a thorough investigation, and it is always well to get another viewpoint and to learn how our neighbours are regarding questions of trade. I should like to read a few extracts from the report. On page 4 it says:

> On the basis of the value of Canadian commerce handled by American ports and the share of the total commerce of Canada obtained by ports of the United States in the years 1919 to 1928, it appears that the position of American ports has materially improved during this period. Not only is their position in 1928 superior to that in 1919, both on the basis of the absolute value and the proportion that Canada's commerce obtained, but taking the period as a whole there is a perceptible tendency towards improvement in their position.

Again:

> A comparison of the percentages of the total commerce of each country handed by the ports of the other shows that in the year ending March 31, 1928, Canadian ports obtained only 4.8 per cent of the total trade of the United States with countries other than Canada, while American ports obtained 26.6 per cent of the trade of Canada with countries other than the United States.

These are rather striking figures. Again:

> On the whole, available data as set forth in the preceding pages with respect to the movement of traffic through the ports of Canada and the United States do not seem to afford ground for apprehension concerning the welfare of American ports and transportation agencies.

Here is a similar quotation:

> In view of the year to year fluctuation and the lack of any pronounced trend, there appears to be no adequate basis for concluding that there has been any material change either favourable or adverse in the position of American ports with respect to the handling of American export traffic during the above period.

According to the tables given in this report, it appears that there is all the way from $60,000,000 to $100,000,000 more in value of Canadian exports passing through the United States than of United States exports passing through Canada. One table gives the figure as $60,000,000 more, and other estimates place it at $100,000,000. As I have said, the percentage is 26.6 as contrasted with 4.8 per cent.

The separate report which is attached, and which was made by the United States shipping board, is not so positive in tone as the report from which I have quoted, and yet there is no important divergence from the extracts which I have just given. I submit to the house that here is a clear indication that Canada, represented by its government, should be up and doing in this matter. We have heard what the American viewpoint is. They think that they are gradually improving their ocean export trade as compared with Canada. The trend is favourable, they say, and it is for us, and for the government above all others, to set about and see what can be done, not in any antagonistic attitude towards the United States, but with a view to recovering our own Canadian business and securing the employment and returns that will develop therefrom for all our people.

What is to be done to improve the Canadian overseas export trade through Canadian ports? Certainly the action of the government is a large and important factor in this case. It is for the government to have regard for the interests of our country and our people. It is true that port facilities are being improved, and that is important, and in the direction of recovering our trade.

If there be the impression that the Atlantic ports are destined to carry on only a moderate amount of business, and that only in the winter months, that impression can be promptly and completely set aside. The Atlantic ports expect to secure, and will secure, a large overseas trade throughout the year, and gain what should have been theirs years ago. About half of our Canadian grain is exported through Canadian and about half through United States ports. Had the Crowsnest pass rates been made to apply only when transhipments were made through Canada, those rates would have borne more of a national character. Our canal system with its freedom from toll also occurs to one in this connection. One of the purposes sought to be achieved in building the transcontinental railway, according to the preamble of the act, was:

> The development of commerce through Canadian ports.

This is another instance of what I am suggesting. These instances, with a full consideration of section 66 of the London agreement, all point the way to the establishment of free ports on our Atlantic seaboard.

Recently the city of Quebec secured a satisfactory grain rate on the national transcontinental railway. This year when the maritime board of trade proposed to appear before the railway commissioners to apply for a rate on grain based on the basis of the Quebec rate, what do we find? Let me read a Canadian Press despatch of March 13:

> The Montreal board of trade to-day endorsed a resolution adopted by the Corn Exchange Association opposing the application to the Board of Railway Commissioners by the Halifax harbour commission and the maritime board of trade for a reduction of 35.5 cents to 19.34 cents per hundred pounds in "all-rail" rate on grain from Fort William, Port Arthur and Armstong via the national transcontinental railway to Halifax, Nova Scotia, and St. John, New Brunswick, for export. The endorsation will be forwarded to the Board of Railway Commissioners.

Here is the comment of the Telegraph-Journal of St. John, dated March 15:

> The Montreal board of trade appears to have come to the rescue of American ports. It has adopted a resolution which had previously been adopted by the Corn Exchange Association, protesting against giving a rate on grain to St. John and Halifax based on the rate which has already been granted to the port of Quebec. The harbour commissions of St. John and Halifax have asked that the lower rate be given to these ports, and are confident that the railway commission will recognize the justice of their cause. The national transcontinental was built to give a through route without excessive grade, to enable the grain of the west to reach the Atlantic seabord, and necessarily in winter to the ports of St. John and Halifax. Quebec laboured long before it was granted a satisfactory grain rate, and the maritimes are still labouring.
> The members of the Montreal board of trade are quite content that as a result of the tariff the people of the maritimes pay tribute to the central provinces, but when it comes to the matter of doing justice to these ports in the grain rates, that board stirs itself to action to prevent a measure of justice being granted.

Of Canadian grain that passes through eastern Canada, over 80 per cent goes through Montreal. I draw your attention, Mr. Speaker, to those two trade organizations in the great city of Montreal endeavouring to prevent the development and expansion of trade in other portions of the Dominion. There is no room for a trade octopus in this country. I am satisfied that our people will not tolerate an effort such as these two boards are making to stifle and strangle the development and expansion of trade through other ports of this country.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, allow me to sum up what I have endeavoured to place before the house:

1. Direct overseas imports into Canada are steadily improving over overseas imports into Canada through the United States;

2. Overseas exports from Canada are very unsatisfactory owing to the excessive exports passing through the United States;

3. Increased effort can and should be made to retain our own export trade;

4. Favourable freight rates should be afforded for securing export trade through the Atlantic free ports of Canada, and finally, resulting therefrom, greater utilization and increased trade of these ports throughout the year.

Mr. M. J. MALONEY (South Renfrew): Mr. Speaker, I have no desire to prolong this already lengthy debate other than to do my plain duty as a member of the House of Commons. If there is one occasion on which a member should state his views, I believe it to be in the discussion of the budget. The budget is really an auditor's report, coupled with a statement of present and future fiscal policies. As our oath of office binds us to support in every manner possible those acts of government which we believe to be in the interests of the country, and with equal vigour to condemn those which we believe to be the opposite, I for one have no hesitation as the representative of a very important section of this country in standing here and discussing the matters before the house.

The budget, as I say, is the auditor's report. Suppose one of our great banking institutions, one of our great insurance companies, or any other of our great financial corporations, were holding its annual meeting, and the shareholders were obliged to sit down and listen to such a lean and unsatisfactory statement as this government has handed out to the shareholders—the people of Canada—what would the shareholders in any of those corporations say? My belief is that they would readily make up their minds to change the management; and, Mr. Speaker, I have no hesitation in expressing my firm conviction that at the very first opportunity the people of Canada—the shareholders—will change their board of management.

I sympathize with the Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb). He made the best of a very bad case. He used in profusion the grand old battle cry of the Liberal party—lower taxation and economy. And those of us who sat face to face with the Minister of Finance could hardly think it possible that he would mention the words lower taxation when in another very important part of his official statement he observed that last year he collected from the people of Canada almost $430,000,000, while this year he intends to take out of them more than $455,000,000. In other words, he intends to wring out of the people of Canada this year $25,000,000 more than he took last year. Economy! He extolled economy. They are the greatest savers on the face of the earth. Well, what have they done? Last year he told you we spent almost $363.000,000 and this year we are spending $385,000,000; in other words, we practise economy to the extent of spending $22,000,000 more this year than last year. That is certainly economy with a vengeance; it is a very peculiar species of economy, a species which we do not very often see to-day. It reminds us of the old shell game which we used to see at fall fairs in the days gone by. Here we have a government who lower taxation and collect more taxes, extol economy and spend more money. What a singularly wonderful combination of men, a combination of men equalled only by the old sleight of hand artist we saw years ago on the stage, who could deftly flip the cards over and turn them back again. These claims of economy and lower taxation, Mr. Speaker, are really no more fantastic than are the claims which are being circulated throughout the country in the government's propaganda in an endeavour to make the people of Canada believe that we are all prosperous. The only measure of true prosperity lies in the distribution of wealth, and if we follow the arguments advanced, if we follow the full page advertisements in the newspapers for which we are paying and which tell us that we are a prosperous people, if we allow our minds to run along this channel long enough, we shall finally reach that state of mind in which we shall become obsessed with the idea that we are all millionaires. And what a rude awakening there will be for many and many in this country.

Let me ask the Minister of Finance this question: Is he really sincere when he makes the statement that we are indeed prosperous? I would ask him to look a little deeply into that question. Let him go out and face conditions as they are. Let him go out for example among the great wage earning class; let him go into the workshops and, if you will, into the bread line where many a workman is to-day and has been for the last few months; let him go into the humble home of that workman, sit down side by side with him, and ask him whether he feels more prosperous to-day than he did six or eight or ten years ago. And what will the answer be? "No; I am not more prosperous, As a matter of fact I am finding it more difficult all the time to make both ends meet. I am having a hard time to support my family. But that is not all; I am worried because, in the event of my being cut down before this family has become self-supporting, I am in the unfortunate position of being unable to provide insurance to take care of them when I am gone." Not only will the labour man tell him that. Let him go among the farmers of the country; let him go into the beautiful farming sections of this Dominion, and what will he find? He will find farm after farm abandoned; he will find areas once abundantly productive now waste places. If he goes into the homes of those who still live on the land he will find debt there; he will find worry; he will find farmer after farmer with a mortgage on his land, farmer after farmer unable to secure the money to meet the taxes on his land. This, Mr. Speaker, should not be the case in such a wonderfully productive land as we have. These men are left in this position because their markets have been all stolen; they have no hope for the future. Yet the Minister of Finance would try to make us believe that we are indeed a very prosperous nation. Talk about prosperity! The balance of trade is mentioned with great jubilation by this government. But they forget that at least three-quarters of the exports of the country are in the raw or semi-raw state; they forget that they are shipping out of Canada the very things that should make Canada wealthy, handing them over to some foreign nation for the enrichment of its people. In addition to the raw and semi-raw products they are exporting, they might as well include a very highly manufactured article, the product of this country, the fifty or sixty thousand boys and girls who are exported year after year, boys and girls who are compelled to leave this land to earn an honest living abroad. And if each one of these boys and girls has a potential value of $10,000, you can easily see how the government can to a still greater extent increase the favourable balance of trade.

I would ask the minister what this budget will do to lighten the burden and make easier the way of the ordinary citizen of this Dominion. It is true that when the Ontario farmer pays his annual visit to the province of Nova Scotia he will save possibly a quarter on his railway ticket and an equal amount on sleeping car accommodation; and when the poor fisherman, after drawing that yearly $300 in Nova Scotia, takes his annual holiday at the coast, he will find that he has saved possibly 50 cents on his railway fare. That is a wonderful boon and I am sure the fisherman and the Ontario farmer and all of us are delighted that the minister has seen fit to make our lives so much easier by reducing the tax on railway and sleeping car tickets. Again, to take another item: When the workingman who labours six days out of seven draws his princely cheque of $15 on Saturday night and finds it necessary to buy a suit of clothes for his son, he will go into a store and discover that $5 is the lowest he can pay; so three hearty cheers the poor old labourer will give for the Minister of Finance when he finds that he has saved five cents on that suit of clothes for his son. That is one of the great benefits accruing from the budget which has been brought down by the minister.

Had the government of the day been really sincere in their endeavour to aid the people of the country generally, that sales tax would not be in existence now. Had they followed the resolution proposed, I think, by my hon. friend from South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie) not one but two years ago, they would have abolished the sales tax on articles of wearing apparel and on boots and shoes, and thus would have shown that they were indeed endeavouring to do something for the ordinary citizen of the country. But this budget is a worthy successor to several of its predecessors from the same source. There is no relief for the farmer; there is no relief for the labourer other than the old time worn injunction, work harder, spend less, and pay more taxes.

This government claim to be the friend of the farmers, and why? True, they have reduced the duty on agricultural implements, but to-day the farmer is paying more for his implements than he paid before that reduction was made. To that extent they have benefited the farmer. Not only is that the case, but they have reduced the tariff on woollens and on certain grades of yarns, and by that act they have driven out of business many textile plants throughout Canada; they have so tied up the textile business in this country that what was once a prosperous industry is now barely hanging on by its finger nails. As a direct result of that policy, to my knowledge in this Ottawa valley at least seven woollen mills have closed their doors. In addition to that, many farmers in this district and throughout the whole country who found the raising of sheep a profitable industry have gone out of that business because when wool went down they could not make any money. Mutton was allowed to enter Canada to compete with our own product, and that made the situation so much worse. The Prime Minister of Canada has had some experience in raising sheep and chickens; a few years ago he launched a bold scheme and became a sheep farmer. He procured the land and bought a flock of high grade sheep, which he placed in charge of a shepherd; things went well for a time but eventually, after this act of his own government, he was obliged to abandon the project and to-day while he still has the land, the sheep and the shepherd have disappeared. He still has the chickens, but if the government allow eggs to pour into Canada as they have done in the past few years eventually he will abandon the chicken game also.

What else have hon. gentlemen opposite done to show their wonderful friendship for the farmers of this country? They negotiated a treaty with New Zealand and point to it as the greatest aid our farmers ever were given. How has it worked out? Last year we imported from Australia and New Zealand 2,000,000 pounds of beef and mutton and 16,000,000 pounds of butter. Is that encouraging home production? Is that encouraging the farmers of Canada? I represent a county very well suited for the raising of stock of all kinds, well adapted for dairying and for poultry raising. A few years ago the farmers were going in for dairying and sheep raising quite extensively but to-day, because of the acts of this government, they fear to move, and our dairy and sheep industries are falling off. In that great inland county, thousands of miles from New Zealand, to-day we are eating New Zealand meat and butter and American eggs. Why should that condition exist? How does that encourage the farmers of this country? If those products were shut out completely or if those countries were compelled to trade with us on a fifty-fifty basis our farmers would be encouraged, they would be more content and happier than they are to-day. But this government encourages production at home. Why, Mr. Speaker, there never was a government in the history of this country which did less to encourage production at home and in fact did more to prevent it, yet they are the friends of the farmers and of the people generally throughout Canada. How any farmer in this country can support the present government is an unsolved mystery to me, yet quite a few of them even in this house will continue to stick as long as the sticking is good.

In addition to being the friend of the farmer and encouraging home production this government are the champion spenders of all governments of this country. They let money float around like chaff, but the funny part of it is that some of the most laudable projects are turned aside while others of less value are readily accepted. Quite recently this house considered the question of a grant to the provinces in aid of technical education; that request was rudely turned down, yet with great alacrity this same government handed over to Vincent Massey more than $700,000. What has Vincent Massey done to cost this country that amount of money? He has done nothing so far as I know. Oh, yes, he did one thing; he arranged a passage for the Prime Minister of this country on a French boat sailing from an American port when the Prime Minister left to attend the peace pact conference in Paris. Our Prime Minister and Mr. Kellogg did their work nobly, but I fail to see where Vincent earned his $700,000. While we were all behind the Prime Minister in his magnificent efforts overseas I might tell him that we would have felt much better and that the honour of Canada would have been upheld to a much greater extent if he had sailed from a Canadian port on board a Canadian vessel.

Technical education is absolutely essential in Canada to-day. Our whole system of education is of an academic kind. Once we enter the lower grades of the public schools our system heads us straight for the university; our system of teaching is based on no other idea, and we forget that a very large percentage of the people of Canada never see a university. We overlook the fact that our boys and girls who do not intend to take advantage of the opportunity to go to university should be trained in some vocation which will be of use to them when they go out into the world to earn their own living; they should be taught carpentry, book-keeping or some other trade or vocation which will make them useful citizens of Canada. That is the idea of technical education, and with that idea in mind the various provinces to-day are advocating more and more a system of technical training. Our hon. friends opposite, however, prefer Vincent Massey to the education of our children, so what are we to do?

Is this a spending government? It is. They spend millions of dollars to destroy perfectly good buildings in Ottawa but they have not a five-cent piece for a national highway. That is a project which would give employment to thousands of our citizens from coast to coast; it would link up the east with the west and would allow a resident of Prince Edward Island to cross Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, the great provinces of Quebec and Ontario, on through Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia to the coast without setting foot on foreign soil. That is the great advantage of a national highway, and in addition it would bring to this country an untold tourist traffic from all over the world. But our friends on the government side prefer to tear down buildings in the heart of Ottawa rather than to build a trans-Canada highway. They are destructive rather than constructive.

Then we have the tariff board. This board has been in existence two years and even the chairman of it does not know the first thing about its operations. Here is what he said on page 5 of his report to the Minister of Finance:

> Difficulty exists as to determining the nature of the advice we are presumed to tender to the minister. Applications in regard to customs invariably contain submission of evidence with the object of obtaining relief, whether by upward or downward revision of the tariff. Parliament alone can grant that relief. What then becomes the nature of the advice expected from the board?

Here is a tribunal which costs the Dominion of Canada many thousands of dollars each year, and the open confession of the chairman of that board practically amounts to an admission that the only thing he knows with certainty about the operations of the board is the fact that he and two fellow commissioners draw a fine, fat cheque at the end of each month.

The money which is used in maintaining this board could well be spent in many other ways. I would advise the Postmaster General (Mr. Veniot) to get his claws on that money. He can use it, because his department is supposed to be operated for service and not for profit. The people from end to end of this country are crying out for improved rural mail facilities, and I leave it to the good judgment of the Postmaster General if it would not be wiser to close up the shop of the tariff board and spend the money in extending the rural mail system.

While I am on the subject of the Post Office department, I would like to mention a matter which is operating to the disadvantage of a great number of our people. I refer to the special privilege which is given to the large mail order houses of this country. The mail order houses are expanding slowly but surely, and the day is bound to come sooner or later when the old time general merchant will be forced out of business and the merchandising of our country will be in the hands of a few. The Postmaster General is aiding those mail order houses by allowing the use of the mail at a sacrifice price. About two or three times a year these great mail order houses send out many hundreds of thousands of catalogues, the great silent salesmen. Every time an article is ordered from these catalogues it works to the disadvantage of the general merchant. Every transaction with a mail order house must be on a cash basis, while the general merchant carries the settler for from one to three years. The Post Office department is aiding and abetting these large firms in going in and taking the bread out of the mouths of the country merchants. I know of one town in my riding where nearly a carload of these catalogues came into the post office and were distributed to the settlers within a radius of twenty miles at a cost of seven cents apiece. Had these catalogues been obliged to pay the regular mail rate of one cent for every two ounces it would have meant that the Post Office department would have received eighteen cents on every catalogue. That would have totalled about half a million dollars which could have gone to the treasury of this country, and at the same time an unfair advantage would not have been taken of the country merchants. I ask the Postmaster General to look into this matter and if possible to give some relief. The Postmaster General might use that extra money in extending the rural mail system, taking it along with the money which is being wasted by the operation of the tariff board. He could start many rural mail routes, but I suppose he would rather have the tariff board, which is helping the big corporations, and let the poor fellow out in the country walk from one to five miles to get his mail. As I said before, the Post Office department is operated for service without profit, but it is a service to the great plutocrats, in the same way this government has been rendering service to the rich men of the country ever since it became a factor in the affairs of Canada.

The budget is a rich man's budget. It helps the man who travels a great deal or the man who sends many telegrams; it helps the man who is purchasing large articles; and it helps the man who deals in high-priced mining stocks at the expense of the man who deals in the penny stocks. It is generally the poor man who deals in the penny stocks, and they are being penalized while the high-priced stocks are allowed to go practically free. I would like to call to the attention of the Minister of Finance the fact that some of our greatest mining institutions in Canada were once listed on the market as penny stocks. Had this unfortunate tax then been in effect we might not have had the opportunity of developing those rich properties.

I would like to touch for a few moments upon the question of the exporting of raw materials. We have no conception of the amount of money we are handing over to the United States by permitting our raw products to be exported as they are at present. In the county town of my county there is a factory engaged in the manufacture of matches. They utilize poplar wood very largely in the manufacture of those matches. Every winter the farmers cut a considerable amount of poplar pulpwood and they sell that wood to the buyers at a price of from $6 to $8 per cord. It is then loaded on the train and shipped to the United States, and our railways get possibly $2 per cord. In other words, we derive from $8 to $10 per cord from the sale of that wood. Let us see what happens when a cord of poplar wood is used in the manufacture of matches. From the time it leaves the stump until it is turned out in the finished product, a cord of wood represents the distribution of $60. Compare that with the price received for the wood we ship to the United States. There is a difference of $50. Where is that $50? It is down in the pockets of the boys and girls of the United States when it should be in Canada to be spent among our own people. But these matters have been so long urged upon and consistently brought to the attention of the government without result that I fear for the future of this country if the present government is allowed to remain in power any longer.

We have a Minister of Immigration, and a good one, but as a matter of fact we should not have a minister of immigration at all; we should not need one. As everyone will admit, we have the finest country in the whole wide world. We have resources without end; we are economically independent of the whole world; we are self-supporting from every angle, and if our affairs were run properly, we would require no minister of immigration; we would have no reason to go out among foreign nations and seek for people to come to our shores. A proper system of immigration is this: Let us make Canada a country worth living in, and who will come back within our borders? Our own boys and girls who are to-day across the line longing to come back to their old homes but who cannot do so because they are unable to make a living here. Make Canada a country fit to live in and these boys and girls will return. What we need to make this country worth living in is a government which will give confidence not only to our people but to the foreign investor. Both outside of and within Canada are millions of dollars awaiting a favourable opportunity for investment, millions of dollars awaiting their chance to be used in the development of our great natural resources; but the capitalists fear, and they have reason to fear, an inactive, wavering, insincere and compromising government, and they are afraid to invest their capital. With a strong, stable government in power, with money flowing in on every hand, factories which are to-day locked up tightly will again swing open their doors; plants which are now masses of rust and ruin will start up again; our boys and girls will flock back to Canada and our country will once more be prosperous as it should be. When our own boys and girls come back I would suggest this as a policy of immigration: Go throughout the length and breadth of the wide world and pick the best class of men, no matter from where. Coming from the county of Renfrew I can testify to the singular ability of the German and Polish immigrants as settlers on the land. We have in that county a large Polish population and no better people than these ever lived on any land. If we had a million or two or three millions of these Poles in Canada along with Germans, who are equally good, they would help to build up a great country for us.

I would like to touch for a few minutes on the railway situation. I was amused a short time ago when I heard the hon. member for Inverness (Mr. Macdougall) complain about the railway facilities in his constituency. He stated that they were the worst in the world, and I believe he brought the matter to the attention of the Minister of Railways (Mr. Dunning). A day or two afterwards the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Smith) stood up and went him one better. He said that he had the very worst railway in the whole country and he urged the Minister of Railways to take it over and amalgamate it with the Canadian National. I would ask the hon. member for Cumberland to hesitate, because I want to say both to him and to the hon. member for Inverness that if they visited the county of Renfrew and saw the railway situation as it exists under the name of the Canadian National, they would return home and, travelling on their own railways, would imagine they were on a Chicago flier. There are two points in my county which are sixty miles apart, and hon. members will be surprised to learn that it takes four days to make the trip one way on a passenger train. That is in the county of Renfrew, one of the finest counties in the whole Dominion of Canada, and it has occurred under the unfortunate management of the Canadian National railways.

Mr. T. H. STINSON (Victoria, Ont.): Mr. Speaker, I desire to take this opportunity of congratulating the hon. member for South-east Grey (Miss Macphail) on the splendid address which she delivered in this chamber this afternoon. I believe that after two or three more sessions of parliament, she will be content to leave her farmer friends in the hands of the Conservative party.

The budget speech of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb) grows in importance to the people of Canada year by year, and for the last seven years it has been awaited with anticipation and concern by increasing numbers by reason of radical tariff changes or suggested or mooted changes therein. I congratulate the Minister of Finance upon the clear, concise statement that he has given us this year, but my congratulation is much deeper and much more sincere by reason of the fact that this year no radical changes in the tariff are suggested. The government is apparently settling down to a policy of tariff stability. The problem of the tariff has been one of the most persistent and controversial in Canadian history, affecting as it does either directly or indirectly the well-being and prosperity of every citizen in Canada. The government has tinkered with the tariff every year since 1922, with the result that there was nothing but uncertainty in our industrial life for the workers and for the manufacturers, and this had a depressing effect upon the whole life of Canada. If this budget spells stability in tariff—and I hope it does—then we have gone a long way towards creating and fostering an era of prosperity for this country. Let us proclaim to the world once again that the settled policy of Canada is that of reasonable protection.

I congratulate the Minister of Finance further upon his timely reference to our neighbour to the south. Although timid indeed, yet it states that in case the United States should implement by legislation its tariff proposals directed in the interest of their farmers against the products of the Canadian farmer, measures will be taken to protect the interest of our Canadian farmer. I would let the United States understand clearly and without equivocation that their citizens cannot have their own market and ours too, save only on the basis of fairness to our people. The policy of the government of this country should be to protect our farmers and to give them the full benefit of our home market. The farmer in Canada is competing with his fellow farmers in other countries under conditions of absolute unfairness. The product of the foreign farmer is brought into this country under a relatively low tariff or, in some cases, under none at all, while our farmer is forbidden access to other countries save over a tariff wall. Our neighbour to the south has excluded from that market more and more of the products of the Canadian farmer. The Hoover election was fought on the ground of more relief to the American farmer by higher tariffs and the retaining of the American market wholly and unreservedly for the American farmer. What have we to gain by giving our home market in vegetables, vegetable products, fruits, grains, meats, eggs, cheese and butter to the American and other farmers? If the American wants our market, let him compete in it on terms of fairness to our manufacturers and farmers who desire to compete in the American market. What are the terms of competition at present? This is a table of compartive duties on farm products:

American Duty	Canadian Duty
Wheat, 42c. per bushel.	12c. per bushel.
Corn, 15c. per bushel.	Free.
Alsike clover, $4 p. 100 lbs.	$1.50 p. 100 lbs.
Hay, $4 per ton.	$2 per ton.
Butter, 12c. per lb.	4c. per lb.
Cheese, 5c. per lb.	3c. per lb.
Eggs, 8c. per doz.	3c. per doz.
Potatoes, 50c. per 100 lbs.	Free.
Peas, 60c. per bushel.	15c. per bushel.

Is it not time that we attempted to play fair with our farmers and give them the same degree of protection as the United States government gives its farmers? Keep for our own people the home market, which is the most profitable, and free from all the complicated and vexed problems that relate to the foreign market. Peas from Japan and Belgium are right now replacing Canadian peas in our own market. Potato flour is being shipped in from Belgium, and our farmers cannot get a decent price for their potatoes.

No country in the world seems to be so alive to the retention of its home market as the United States, with the result that they consume 87 per cent of all their products both grown and manufactured, and export only 13 per cent. They check and follow importations a great deal more closely than we do. Let me give you an instance in the milling trade. Buffalo in the last seven or eight years has built up the largest milling industry in the world. Under the Tariff Act of 1922, section 311, Canadian wheat can be shipped into the United States in bond for milling, and thus escapes the duty of 42 cents per bushel. The wheat is milled there, and shipped out to compete with Canadian flour in the world market, thus giving the American labourers a payroll of $1,950,000, in which Canadian workmen can participate only by leaving Canada and making their homes in the United States. There is also lost to our Canadian railways the freight on the movement of the wheat to the mills and the flour to the seaboard, which amounts to upwards of $1,500,000, and a further loss on the offal of about $650,000. Here again the American railway man is getting the payroll instead of our good Canadians. At the present time the American mills are importing in bond about 17,000,000 bushels of Canadian wheat for the export flour trade. The American farmer now objects to this, and the matter has recently been submitted to the ways and means committee at Washington, and a merry fight is being waged. The Buffalo millers, in their brief, point out, as I did a year ago in this house, that if the practice was stopped it would not affect either the American farmer or the Canadian farmer, as this Canadian wheat is ground for the export market. The export market is there just the same to be supplied with 16,000,000 barrels of flour made from Canadian wheat, no matter whether it is ground in the United States or in Canada. The Buffalo millers further point out that if the administrative features of the present American tariff were abrogated or made more rigorous to the miller grinding in bond, the advantages in milling possessed by Canada would without question draw United States milling-in-bond trade to Canada, and thus give us a payroll for our labourers, and increased freight for our railroads with increased man power to handle it.

It should be the purpose of government to direct and mould the business policy of our country for the development of our natural resources, and thus give employment to our citizens. A nation cannot exist without people, people cannot exist without homes, homes cannot be maintained without money, and money can only be obtained by the multitude by work, and by labour. Therefore if a government fails in its duty so to direct its policy as to foster and provide work and labour at a fair remuneration, it fails in its duty to the people. The test of a good budget should then be: What does it contain to create industry in order that the foundation of the nation may be maintained in the building up of happy and contented homes? Does the present budget contain one tariff change that will develop a new job capable of employing an additional Canadian boy in Canada? I have failed to find such a change, and the most that can be said for it is that it is, in the words of the Financial Post, "an innocuous budget."

After the budget speech of the finance minister had been delivered, I wrote to a friend of mine who is engaged in the manufacture of woollens, and who has been a supporter of the present administration, and here is what he has to say:

> The evidence brought out before the tariff commission in Ottawa by the textile mills showed that the importations of blankets and rugs, from Great Britain is increasing each year. Our mills are specially equipped for the manufacture of blankets. Each year our trade has continued to fall away as the competition has grown keener.
> The large dealers, such as departmental stores and jobbers can purchase blankets in England and Scotland, and lay them down in Canada for a lower price than it costs us to make them. This is due to the lower cost of labour and coal. The standard of living is so much higher in Ontario than it is in Europe that we cannot get work done on the same basis.
> Textile machinery is not made in Canada, but up to a year ago it was brought in subject to from 10 to 27½ per cent duty. The government, a year ago, changed this and allowed machinery from Great Britain to come in free, but this is no benefit to us as there is now more textile machinery in Canada than can be used. The government also allowed free yarns, but this is no benefit to woollen mills as they all make their own yarns.
> The importations from Germany and France into Great Britain, free, undersell the British manufacturers, who in turn ship the products of their mills into Canada at such low prices they claim they cannot continue to exist, and they are now asking the British government to safeguard their industries against this invasion of their livelihood.
> In the past few years woollen mills that made blankets have closed their doors and nailed up their windows or are being dismantled. One at Chatham, one at Mitchell, two at Renfrew, one at Carleton Place, Midland, Rockwood, Glen Williams, Bullock Corners, Dundas, and many others.
> Unless the government restores the duty which was taken off a few years ago, at a very early date other mills will be compelled to cease operations, thus throwing more workmen out of employment. This has a serious effect on towns and villages where these mills are situated, and makes the matter of unemployment a real problem.

That letter comes from a supporter of the present administration. Every effort is being made by the farmers growing wool in Canada to increase the quality and volume of their product. The wool growers, the manufacturers, the agricultural colleges, and the National Research Council are all cooperating in research work in the growing and the use of Canadian wool. Canadian grown wool is particularly adapted for making blankets and woollen cloth such as tweeds. Blankets and woollen cloths made from Canadian wools are better wearing, warmer, and of superior quality to those made from wools in any other country, and yet the woollen schedule of this government gives practically no protection to this important industry, and thus damages the industry and the farmer who produces wool.

In nine months ending December, 1928, there were $751,010 worth of household blankets imported as against $652,768 worth in the same nine months of 1927. I was sufficiently interested to obtain the December, 1928, figures of imports, and I found that there were blankets coming in from Czechoslovakia at 99 cents a pair; from Belgium at $1.10 a pair; from the Netherlands at $1.62 a pair; from Germany at $2.15 a pair; from the United States at $2.03 a pair, and from Great Britain at $3.69 a pair. These low average prices indicated by the import figures do not seem to be reflected in the prices at which blankets are bought by the consumers in Canada, and I submit that an increase in the duty would therefore have no effect on the retail prices of blankets, but would result in more blankets being made in Canada by Canadian labourers and from wool produced in Canada, which would benefit the farmer, the labourer, and the manufacturer, and make more jobs in Canada for our boys and girls.

Canadian wool is particularly adapted to making the bulk of woollen cloths used in Canada. For nine months ending December, 1928, under the heading "worsteds and serges including coatings," there was imported into Canada $9,642,572 worth. The British government figures for twelve months ending December, 1928, show that they exported to Canada 17,473,000 square yards of woollen cloth valued at $12,743,525—and this is to the detriment of Canadian grown wool, which is particularly suited to the making of woollen cloth. It is the duty of this parliament to see that adequate protection is given to the blanket and woollen cloth mills in Canada which make the types of cloth for which Canadian wool is particularly adapted.

It is stated on all sides that our great need is population. If that is the case the government must find ways and means of employing the population we have and making new jobs for those we desire to add to our population. Consequently the efforts of the government should be bent to the task of creating work in Canada; and our efforts should be directed toward the work of building up a balanced population. The farmer says: If you bring in more farmers and settle them on the land you are intensifying competition for me, and this will help to lower the price of my product. The labourer says: If you bring in additional labourers there will be more competition for the available jobs in Canada. Therefore it is necessary to build up a balanced population in terms of occupation to a point where Canada will present a fairly harmonious economic unit; where the burden of taxation may be so distributed over more shoulders that it will bear lightly upon all; where our transportation machine may be operated efficiently and economically, and where the local consumption of industrial products may be large enough to give industry and the consumer the benefit of savings incidental to quantity production. We cannot overlook the fact that the first duty of a young nation is to make itself economically secure.

It is time Canada took stock of herself, of her resources and her institutions, and commenced to formulate national policies in keeping with her peculiar conditions and limitations. We should strive to reach our effective minimum population and always endeavour to maintain a fairly balanced population in terms of occupation. Build up agriculture and industry side by side. What Canada and many other countries have suffered from during recent years and what has given rise to general unemployment is not necessarily overpopulation, but unbalanced production, and there should be no widespread unemployment in Canada if corrective methods were employed by our government.

In considering the social value of the citizen we must not overlook his performance as a consumer of the products produced within the state. This has an important bearing on employment and general prosperity. Every man, woman and child added to our population is a potential consumer to the extent of $243.30 of manufactured goods, and of farm products to the extent of $87.50.

Mass production is the essential element in successful modern industry. Canadian agriculture will suffer by reason of inflated prices leading to a higher production cost until our general consuming population reaches a point where our industries can function more effectively, and thus reduce commodity prices, resulting in a lower cost of farm operation and of living all round. Until we can bring about a spectacular increase in population the present handicap of high commodity and operating costs cannot be removed. Increasing our imports cannot do this, for imports give the job to the foreigner and not to our own citizens. The farmer is sending his product to the export market, to maintain the workman there to manufacture the goods we are importing, instead of bringing the workman to Canada to make his goods and articles here and thus consume our farm products here.

The importation of 20,000,000 pounds of New Zealand butter is unfair to our farmers. This is the result of the Australian treaty. The bonus given by the Australian government to its farmers on all butter exported permits the Australian to carry his butter to Vancouver without cost, as the bonus pays the transportation charges. Australian and New Zealand butter can be shipped on a through rate from Vancouver to Montreal at $2.30 per 100 pounds. The rate for the British Columbia producer to Montreal is $3.58½ per 100 pounds. So the Australian can ship his butter to Montreal, pay the freight and 1 cent per pound for duty and lay it down for 28½ cents per 100 pounds less than our British Columbia producer. Saskatchewan and Alberta are similarly affected by this unfair competition as well as Ontario. The Saskatchewan producers are now of the opinion that there should be a general tariff on butter which would give our Canadian farmer protection in his home market, which is the proper solution of the problem. Twenty million pounds of butter imported in one year would keep 100,000 cows busy the year around in Canada, and would give employment to a large number of people in caring for the cows and handling the product. If we kept our home market for butter for our own farmers an additional ten thousand farms could be occupied in Canada. The competition which affects our farmers most is from New Zealand, and New Zealand gives us no benefits in return.

And what of the egg situation? Last autumn at the most critical time for our egg men fifty carloads of 500 cases to the car were brought in from the United States, to the great detriment of our market, as eggs collected in April, May and June are put on the market in October, November and December of the same year, and large importations at that time seriously prejudice our poultry industry. Under the new government grading of eggs large quantities not up to the grade of extras or firsts, owing to size, soiled shells, and so forth, must be marketed as seconds. These together with cracked eggs are broken into cans, frozen, and supplied to the bakers the year round. Approximately four million pounds of this product are used in Canada. This frozen egg industry is a very valuable asset to the poultry industry, because if all the frozen eggs consumed in Canada were Canadian eggs it would relieve the market of approximately four million dozen of the grade of eggs which it is most difficult to sell. If there is no protection to the egg buyers from these importations it means that our farmers must necessarily take a much lower price for their supply during the collecting season of April, May and June. Our tariff is three cents a dozen against the American tariff of eight cents a dozen. Last year's tinkering with the egg tariff is going to have the effect of a very much decreased price to our farmers this year, as huge losses were sustained by the packers in 1928 on the eggs they purchased from the farmers in April, May and June of 1928. Frozen eggs imported from China to the extent of upwards of two million pounds per year should not be allowed to come here and compete with our own eggs, nor should they be allowed to be used by our bakers and restaurant keepers if the statement made by a member of the deputation which waited on the government in the spring of 1928, in reference to the repeal of the dumping clause is true, as to the sanitary conditions under which they are put up in China. He said they were put up under conditions that were absolutely unsanitary.

All this tariff trouble has been brought about by reason of the fact that our Liberal friends have been successful in making a section of our farmers and others believe that a tariff is an invidious thing and should be discarded. In the platform of the Liberal party in 1921 we find the following words:

> Whereas the protective tariff is the most wasteful and costly method ever designed for raising national revenue because for every dollar obtained thereby for the public treasury at least three dollars pass into the pockets of the protected interests, thereby building up a privileged class at the expense of the masses.

And yet in spite of that declaration this government has collected in the last year—after having had eight years in which to change the method—$185,000,000 from customs dues—the largest amount ever collected from customs dues in Canada, in any one year. If they believed what they preached to the electorate in 1921-1925 and 1926, and for many years prior thereto, then they should have wiped out the tariff and made good their declaration that the system is wrong. When you go into the figures carefully the fact is revealed that the farmer is not affected to any great extent by the tariff, and if he were given protection for his farm products then the account would be balanced. Let me work out the account for you. If a farmer purchases a complete line of implements costing $2,267.25, the net duty he would pay is $54.31, as follows:

Implements	Selling price	Dutiable value	Tariff rate	Net duty
8 ft. binder	$ 275 00	$170 00	6 %	$10 20
6 ft. mower	110 00	55 00	7½%	4 13
12 ft. hay rake	63 75	38 00	7½%	2 85
16 x 16 disc harrow	76 50	45 00	7½%	3 38
20 dble. disc drill	243 25	150 00	7½%	11 25
1-3 furrow engine gang plough	155 00	100 00	10 %	10 00
5 section drag harrow	32 75	20 00	10 %	2 00
3½ x 3 wagon (complete)	166 00	105 00	10 %	10 50
1 15 x 27 tractor	1,145 00	nil	nil	nil
	$2,267 25	$683 00		$54 31

The average life of the implements mentioned in this table is from eight to ten years, and if you put it at the lesser figure of eight years the duty on his machinery is $6.79 annually.

Now then, let us treat the farmer's food products in the same way, leaving out the non-dutiable articles. We find he pays in duty on food products annually $21.01, made up as follows:

Amounts	Rate of duty	Duty paid
500 lbs. sugar	$1 50 per cwt.	$ 7 50
25 lbs. coffee	03 per lb.	75
25 lbs. tea	10 per lb.	2 50
25 lbs. raisins	03 per lb.	75
25 lbs. currants	03 per lb.	75
50 lbs. rice	75 per cwt.	37½
50 lbs macaroni	1 25 per cwt.	62½
5 bbls. apples	90 per bbl.	4 50
50 doz. oranges	nil	nil
10 doz. lemons	nil	nil
5 doz. grapefruit	nil	nil
1 bunch bananas	50	50
25 pineapples	nil	nil
100 lbs. evaporated prunes	0666 per lb.	66⅔
100 lbs. apricots	50 per cwt.	50
100 lbs. peaches	1 00 per cwt.	1 00
200 lbs. salt	05 per cwt.	10
100 lbs. pears	50 per cwt.	50
		$21 01⅔

This is based on a family of five, which should be a fair average.

Next we come to the tariff on the family supply of clothing. There is no duty on cloth in the bolt entering Canada, nor is there any on raw cotton brought in for manufacturing or finishing in Canada; consequently the amount of duty paid by the average farmer on his clothing budget is very small, less than $15.

This gives us the complete burden imposed annually on the farmer with a family of five by reason of the tariff, amounting in all to $42.80. Of that amount only $6.79, the duty on machinery, is peculiar to the farmer alone, as the other two amounts are collected from every other household in Canada. What does the farmer get in return for the $42.80 which he pays? It is his main contribution toward the upkeep of the federal government. In return he gets a paid representative to Ottawa; government help in selling his commodities and in extending his markets; protection of life and property; experimental farms and research bureaus conducted in his interest; federal grants to highways, at least at times; payment to old age pensions, and many other advantages and assistance from the government. Is not the farmer amply repaid for his annual contribution of $42.80 as likewise every other citizen?

The farmer's share of the cost of provincial and municipal government is at least four times the cost to him of federal government. A little tariff protection will build up a home market for both farmer and manufacturer, and no nation has ever become great and prosperous without a well balanced industrial and agricultural population. Let us strive for a balanced population in terms of occupation to develop one of the finest countries in the world, and build up a strong virile nation capable of taking care of itself.

> The administration will refuse to support any extravagance in the spending of the taxpayers' money.

That no doubt is the basis for the government's refusal to renew the grant of $400,000 per annum to the province of Ontario and other provinces for agriculture; for its refusal to renew the grant to the provinces for technical education; for its refusal to renew the grant to the provinces for good roads. In view of the above declaration against extravagance, I would like to have the minister's explanation and his justification for spending $520,000 in one year for automobiles for the ministers of the crown and others; for spending $3,000,000 on the beautification of Ottawa; $500,000 to buy a mansion in the United States for the Hon. Vincent Massey and $255,000 for the maintenance of embassies at Washington, Tokyo and Paris, and $231,178.91 on furnishings and repairs to Quebec citadel.

Let us end the weary years of fickleness and instability in financial and fiscal affairs; let us restore definitely and clearly the principle of protection in the tariff of Canada, a principle and a practice upon which all can rely, upon which industry can depend, upon which workers and farmers can depend, but a principle and a practice which none should be permitted to abuse. Let us see that the great resources of this country are conserved for the development of our own nation and not of another, and for the multiplication of our own people and the retention in Canada of our own sons and daughters.

I heartily support the amendment moved by the hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie).

Mr. J. A. MERCIER (Laurier-Outremont): The hon. member for Cariboo (Mr. Fraser), speaking in this house last evening, said that in view of the immense territory which he represented he was entitled to more time than the average member. If that principle were applied, very little time would be allotted to me because I represent a constituency small in territory though high in the quality and large in the number of its inhabitants. Among those people who live in the division of Laurier-Outremont you, Mr. Speaker, have many friends who followed with delight and admiration the magnificent course of lectures which you gave at the Sorbonne at Paris this winter, and as an old pupil of yours at Laval university, Montreal, I add my congratulations to those of your numerous friends in the division I represent.

Even at his late hour I desire also to join with the members of the opposition in extending congratulations to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb) upon the concise and able manner in which he brought down this, his sixth budget in the house. But unlike those members, I do not qualify my congratulations, and I assure the minister that we on this side of the house take his word for it when he says that prosperity reigns throughout the land. Our friends opposite criticize that statement and say that Canada is not prosperous, so it might be well to go outside the house and take unbiased authorities in order to arrive at a conclusion as to whether or not Canada is prosperous. We might go to important organizations and bodies throughout this country but we could find none more reliable or more qualified to speak of the prosperity of Canada than our banks, and if I may be allowed to do so I would like to quote a few words from the annual statement of the Bank of Montreal as submitted by its president, Sir Charles Gordon, who said:

> The statement of the year's operations shows that we have fully participated in the general prosperity while agricultural, commercial and industrial activities have been carried on in greater volume than ever before.

The general manager of the bank, following Sir Charles Gordon, said:

> Canada as a whole has enjoyed more prosperity than ever before; our live stock industry has shown marked improvement. Cattle have been in better demand at better prices than for some years past. Between 1926 and 1927 there was an increase of about 25 per cent in the output of our dairy factories, and progress has continued in 1928. One of the happiest developments has been the definite revival of prosperity in the maritime provinces, coming into line with the rest of Canada in this respect. Canada is great in agriculture, but the glory of her heritage lies in the variety of her resources. Minerals are steadily growing in importance. The tourist trade is of the highest importance; according to government statistics tourists from abroad spent $275,000,000 in Canada in 1927. Reports from all provinces report an even larger number of tourists, and the amount spent has no doubt also been greater in 1928.

Looking at the annual statement of the Imperial Bank of Canada we find that the president, Mr. Peleg Howland, said:

> This year has been most profitable to bankers. Our foreign trade has increased, particularly in imports, which would indicate increased spending ability on the part of the people. Our debt has been reduced; our revenues are increasing. Most of our industries will show satisfactory results from their operations this year. It cannot be said that mining activity is not prosperous. Building construction has been active in Canada, the confidence displayed in the continued growth of the city of Toronto particularly by those erecting lofty buildings being very marked. Savings have increased. The country's prospects are pleasing. Reasonable confidence in the immediate future is instilled.

In his turn the general manager of the Imperial Bank, Mr. A. E. Phipps, said that on his return from his western trip Mr. E. W. Beatty, president of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, was quoted as follows:

> I have never seen the country looking better, and in all my experience I have not previously found so general a feeling of complete confidence in this country and its possibilities.

Then the general manager of the bank continues:

> This to some extent sums up my present feelings with regard to the future conditions in Canada which are largely governed by profits from agriculture, which seems to be on an assured basis and given the continuance of the prosperity which the agriculturists have enjoyed for the past few years, I see nothing ahead to check the development of the country.

The annual report of the Bank of Toronto, as shown in the Financial Post of January 18, 1929, contains the following statement by Mr. W. G. Gooderham, the president:

> My first word must be an expression of satisfaction and thankfulness. The rising tide of progress has continued during the year just passed and many new peaks have been established. Agriculture is now in excellent financial condition and it is good to see conditions for the farmer improving, not only financially but in all those things which add to the measure of comfort available to him. Manufacturing lines have enjoyed a good year. In construction there has been unusual activity, while the orders handled by the iron and steel companies, railway equipments and similar basic industries have also been large. Mining steadily makes new records.

Senator Dandurand, president of the Montreal City and District Savings Bank, said:

The year just closed has been one of great prosperity for Canada generally and for our city in particular. We have harvested a record crop, business generally has been very good and a wave of well-being has spread over the country generally.

Sir H. Laporte, president of the Provincial Bank of Canada, said:

The bounteous crops, as well as the sale of live stock at very satisfactory prices, were important sources of revenue for the agricultural class whose buying power has contributed to the speeding up of our industries. The rapid development of some of our natural resources, by the water-power developments and dependable labour. . . .have been factors which contributed to the general prosperity, speeded up the building trade, kept our great transportation companies active and provided employment for our working classes.

I now come to the report of the Royal Bank of Canada. In publishing this report the Montreal Gazette said:

The annual meeting of the Royal Bank is always followed with a good deal of interest . . . . but yesterday's gathering was of particular importance, following as it did one of the most prosperous years in the history of this country and coming on the threshold of what appears to be an era of further and marked progress in the affairs of the Dominion.

In his address to the shareholders of the bank, Sir Herbert S. Holt, chairman of the board, said:

The growth of agricultural, mineral and industrial production has been reflected in growing assets. . . . There was extraordinary growth in the demand for Canadian products; in 1922 the total value of Canadian exports amounted to $740,000,000 and by 1926 this had increased to $1,315,000,000, or an increase of 78 per cent. . . . Exports in the fiscal year of 1928 were only 6½ per cent below those of the record year of 1926, and the last few months have witnessed the development of a new upward trend in foreign sales. I believe, however, at the moment it is no exaggeration to summarize the situation by saying that there is no other part of the world more prosperous than Canada.

Mr. Chas. E. Neill, the efficient and popular general manager of the bank, made the following statement:

To our farmers . . . . the record crop of 1928 has brought substantial prosperity. A pronounced shortage of cattle in the United States has brought about a movement to purchase cattle in Canada.

[Mr. Mercier.]

So far commerce and industry have their feet on the ground and speaking generally, the publicly owned corporations have never been in a more sound or liquid position, with prosperity general and prospects never before equalled in our history.

Almost all indications of Canadian production have shown a spectacular rise during the past four years. This is particularly true to those relating to manufacturing. The amount of electric energy generated daily in 1928 is double the amount in 1924 and this in itself is a valuable index of manufacturing activity. The accessibility of vast water-powers constitutes an outstanding benefit to manufacturing in Canada.

The directors' report to the shareholders of La Banque Canadienne Nationale, as given by Senator Beique, its president, and Mr. Beaudry Leman, its general manager, reads as follows:

The progress of the bank during the year was naturally influenced by the business activity prevalent throughout Canada. Prosperity was not shared equally by all branches of industry but on the whole it was greater than ever before; as evidenced by official and private statistics, returns of the banks and railroads and the statements of the great number of industrial and commercial enterprises. Viewed as a whole, 1928 has undoubtedly been one of the most prosperous years in the history of Canada.

Agriculture, which still ranks as our principal source of wealth, yielded a very high revenue this year, in spite of damages caused in certain regions by premature frost. . . . . Farmers were compensated for the lower prices prevailing for wheat by the economies effected through more efficient machinery. The raising of live stock was stimulated by better prices and prospects in this branch are very encouraging. Agriculture has made great progress in the last few years. The use of more efficient agricultural implements, which are well adapted to the conditions on our western plains and the discovery of new varieties of wheat maturing more rapidly and consequently less subject to damage by frost, have rendered available to agriculture new territories.

For the third consecutive year mineral production has established a new high record. . . . Coal production was greater than ever and it is interesting to note that Canada is relying less every year upon imported steam and domestic coal.

Referring to forestry operations, the report says:

General prosperity in Canada and the United States has caused an increased demand for export as well as for home consumption with a consequent improvement in prices.

Power consumption is undoubtedly one of the most reliable indexes of industrial activity. . . . The water-power development in Canada shows total hydro-electric development in Canada to be 5,328,000 horse-power and that there is actually under construction and development an additional amount of 1,200,000 horse-power.

Labour statistics give a fair idea of industrial activity during the year. . . . . .the indexes show that the ratio of employment was at a higher figure than in any previous year of record. The building trades have established a new high record.

Several industries have benefited by this great activity, particularly iron and steel. Both of the country's railways have more cars in commission, carried more freight and registered larger receipts than ever before.

According to an article published in the Ottawa Journal of January 14, 1929, Mr. E. W. Beatty, chairman and president of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, said:

There exists no surer criterion of national economies than is afforded by the condition and effectiveness of a country's transportation systems. I think there is no question of the fact that the railways of Canada have performed their duty well. It is evident that under ordinary circumstances the next few years wil record a notable forward step in our economic development. The past year has been one of marked progress. For four years in succession, Canada has had a series of big crops. This year all previous records have been broken. . . . Conditions such as these cannot fail to influence the business life of a country, and as the prosperity of the country has been based on the yields of earlier years, the present crop ensures a continuance of activity.

The general satisfactory nature of the country's business has, of course, been reflected in increased railway earnings. To the end of October, which are the last figures available at time of writing, Canadian Pacific gross receipts totalled $183,588,531, as against $160,384,749, an increase of 14.46 per cent, while net earnings increased 31.03.

Industrialism has made an impressive start in many of the western cities. One is used to speaking of western Canada as though that country were solely agricultural in its nature, but times are changed.

Subsequent to the issuance of that report, the following article appeared in one of the Ottawa papers:

Surplus of C.P.R. Nearly 15 Millions

Report Showing the Net Revenue is Issued in Montreal

The Canadian Pacific Railway to-day reported that after payment of all dividends declared for the year, the surplus from the earnings of the railway, lake steamers, and special income for the year 1928 amounted to $14,892,257. The net revenue from the same sources available for dividends amounted to $48,313,437.

Gross earnings from the railway and the lake steamers amounted to $229,039,297, while the working expenses, including all taxes, were $177,344,845, thus leaving the net earnings from the railway and lake steamers at $51,694,452. The special income amounted to $12,677,683. The fixed charges and a contribution to the pension fund amounted to $15,308,698 and $750,000 respectively.

The next authority I would cite in favour of the existing prosperity in Canada is the report of the Canadian National lines. In an article published in the Ottawa Journal at the commencement of the year, Sir Henry Thornton makes certain observations. The article is headed as follows:

West is entering industrial field with oil and mining also prominent states president of national lines. Prairie provinces outgrown period when agriculture only industry—New records made by Canadian National Railways in 1928 —Extensions made and services improved.

The body of the article as given by Sir Henry Thornton, reads:

Canadians in every line of business, from the agriculturist to the manufacturer and the financier, seem to be firmly convinced that as we enter the year 1929 Canada is stepping firmly along the high road to further prosperity. To discuss Canada's progress with men in all walks of life in each of the nine provinces which go to make up this great Dominion of Canada, is to become confirmed in one's optimism concerning this country and its people.

During each year it is my privilege to visit each of the different provinces to talk "Canada" with men in every walk of life. In doing this, and in travelling over the 22,861 miles of line which go to make up the Canadian National Railways system, I think one gains a much more clearly defined picture of what Canada really holds than could be secured through study of many volumes of statistics. The wealth of Canada lies not only in the fertility of her soil, the wealth of mine and forest and the output of factory, it lies also in the determined spirit, the splendid character and the quiet optimism of her people.

Another organization which bears a large part in the industrial activity of Canada is the Montreal harbour commission. I have under my hand an article written in the Ottawa Journal by the Hon. Doctor W. L. McDougald, chairman of the Montreal harbour board, and I would like to cite to the house what he has to say as to the prosperity that exists in Canada at the present time. He says:

The harbour of Montreal, considered as an important operating unit of Canadian enterprise, possesses many faculties, notably those of a favourable nature. But, of all its characteristics, that one which it possesses in most striking degree is its ability to exceed anticipations.

For very many years has this been so. In the years 1907 and 1908, and subsequent years prior to the great war, the harbour commissioners were busily engaged in building and creating a modern harbour, which they anticipated would provide for the legitimate expansion of the port for a period of twenty-five years. This anticipation was exceeded, however, as by 1921 the business had so prospered and augmented that new facilities were necessary.

Accordingly in 1922 the present board of harbour commissioners undertook an elaborate scheme of development. The sum of $5,000,000 was expended on new wharves and additional grain handling facilities. And the port business grew faster than facilities could be provided. A new program was begun at the end of 1923, and on this the sum of $10,000,000 was expended, including new sheds, further wharf extensions, and an increase of 1,500,000 bushels grain storage at elevator "B".

Still the business increased. Expectations were again exceeded, and in 1926 the harbour commissioners applied to parliament for a further loan of $12,000,000 with which to provide additional sorely-needed equipment and facilities at Canada's national port. Work on the new program was begun in 1927 and continued in 1928. But in 1927, as if to lay emphasis on the fact that it was Canada's jubilee year, the port surpassed all previous efforts and new marks were reached in half a dozen lines of activity. Grain exports in that year reached 195,000,000 bushels, revenue increased to around $5,500,000, shipping tonnage increased, total tonnage of commodities increased to 11,921,000, tons, and coal imports grew to more than two million tons.

I skip over the greater part of this report, but before putting it aside I would like to cite the following from it:

The foregoing account will give a general impression of the activities of the year, without dwelling in too much detail on other important phases of harbour activities. It will be seen that the year under review has been one of exceptional achievement, but the commissioners are not yet satisfied that the harbour of Montreal has reached its limit of success. Future years are confidently awaited, and in preparation for the business they will bring, plans were laid during the season now closed for several important schemes of harbour development, which include new construction, rearrangement of many existing activities, and schemes for new undertakings. Of these, one in particular may be mentioned—the provision of an area in the harbour for creation of a new air-port for seaplanes and amphibians. Thus, side by side with the requirements of to-day, the interests of the future are protected at this most modern of Canadian public utilities.

It seems to me that a gentleman occupying the important position of president of the Canadian Chamber of Commerce would know something about financial, industrial and other conditions in Canada and that hon. gentlemen on the other side of the house would all the more readily accept his views when it might be remembered that the same gentleman was a Conservative candidate in St. Antoine division not so many years ago. Mr. W. M. Birks, writing likewise in the Ottawa Journal, says:

Judged by the basal factors which determine our mercantile situation, the year 1928 has been in the van of our entire economic progress. Whether it be cultivation, manufacturing, or the development of our natural resources, each tells the same story these past twelve months of an abounding prosperity, which per se indicates prosperous commercial conditions. Unless there were outlets for the products of the plough, the dynamo and the exploitations of nature, there could develop no commerce of proportions.

Canada has found itself in the fortunate situation, however, where marketing opportunities of unusual dimensions, both at home and abroad, have absorbed the output of her farms, her factories and her harnessed and natural wealth. More than that, the sinews of commerce have shown remarkable strength. Given the volume of output in Canada and the more than ordinary intake of imported merchandise, the transportation companies and the competing distributing agencies have all made the flow of commerce between our provinces and between Canada and outside countries particularly easy and vigorous.

And not the least important for this year of unprecedented commercial activity has been the sustained purchasing power of our own people and that of our customers abroad. We might conceivably have products to sell, internal and external markets where our goods were wanted, means of conveying and financing shipments, but had we all these and lacked consumers in a monetary position to buy not only our own merchandise, but that of a non-domestic character, our whole commercial life would be depressed.

Our people, however, generally are at least comfortably well off, and possess for the most part that wherewithal required for a no mean standard of living. Nor should we overlook the fact that the rehabilitation of European exchanges and the healthier tone of economic life abroad have reacted favourably on our export trade.

I have before me another extract from the same paper, the Ottawa Journal, in which Mr. O. W. Liberty, its financial editor, says, "Canada's advance is outstanding in present day economic history, while future is full of promise. Statistics prove achievements were not equalled by people of any other country—bumper crops one of chief factors in financial situation in which all classes shared—advances in mineral development. General anticipation is that present wave will continue during first six months of 1929 at least."

The automobile has become an important factor not only in the commercial but in the social life of Canada. I have before me an article taken from the Montreal Gazette, of February 24, 1929, in which Mr. J. D. Mansfield, of the Chrysler Corporation, is quoted as saying that he considers the Dominion is coming into its own, and that his company is expanding. It says, "First unit of new production plants will soon be erected. Output for 1928 up over 47 per cent," and goes on:

Expressing the opinion that all business in Canada is on a thoroughly sound basis. John D. Mansfield, president of the several divisional manufacturing companies of the Chrysler Corporation of Canada, Limited, said that the Dominion is not entering a boom period so much as an era of genuinely sound business, when interviewed yesterday morning at the Mount Royal hotel.

Having just come down from Windsor, Ont., where, he said, there is a general feeling of optimism as to the future of business, both in the west and east, Mr. Mansfield is in Montreal to attend the motor show being held this week at the Stadium and to discuss conditions with the dealers in this part of the province.

He feels that the position of the country is very satisfactory and can see nothing but very fair prospects lying before it. The general trend of business is as it has never been before, and he is positive in his assertion that "Canada is just coming into its own."

Turning to the public accounts of this country, a Canadian Press despatch in the Montreal Gazette, dated March 15, 1929, shows that there has been a revenue gain of $32,355,049 in eleven months, that $407,938,555 has been paid into the treasury up to February 28, that the net debt has decreased, showing a reduction of $64,130,157, as compared with February of last year. I shall not read the despatch, because these figures are available to all members of the house.

I wish, however, to quote from the report of the Bell Telephone Company of Canada, which shows a great increase in telephone business. According to the company's annual report, recently published, the total revenue of the company last year was $35,888,980, embracing $26,920,593 from exchange revenue and $8,968,387 from toll revenue, an increase of $3,157,850 over the total revenue of the previous year.

The Montreal Gazette of yesterday's date has an editorial to the effect that the Victoria Daily Colonist reports that exclusive of residences and minor alterations, buildings to the value of $3,253,000 are in course of construction in the city of Victoria, and now that cold weather is departing, contractors are planning still more structures, including public, commercial and other blocks.

I see my time is up, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. F. G. SANDERSON (South Perth): At this late hour, Mr. Speaker, I hesitate to trespass on the time of the house. The arrangement was that another speaker was to be put up on the other side of the house, but he is indisposed and cannot proceed. I should like, however, to take a few minutes to-night to congratulate the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb), who brought down his budget in this house on March 1. Many eminent men have occupied the responsible position of Minister of Finance of Canada, eminent men of different shades of politics, some Liberals and some Conservatives, men who had the confidence of the great bulk of the people of this Dominion from the Atlantic to the Pacific. But I want to say that never perhaps in the history of the country have we had a Finance minister who has won his way into the confidence of the masses to the extent that the hon. gentleman has who now occupies this position. And I would add, Mr. Speaker, that none of his predecessors has had so many obstacles to surmount and so many difficulties to combat. As I say, he has won his way into the confidence of the people to a marked degree and year after year continues to bring down budgets that meet with national approval. Any Finance minister who can reduce the national debt by about seventy million dollars, and at the same time reduce taxation to the extent of thirty million dollars, cannot be open to any severe criticism.

Very attentively, Mr. Speaker, I listened to the speech delivered by the hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie) a few days ago. He made an excellent speech. He had a wonderful opportunity in the absence of his chief, and he rose fully to that opportunity. Not only that, but he enthused his followers sitting around him. But in that speech—and I do not agree with all that he said—he repudiated every speech as a Liberal he made from 1900 to 1917. I do not find any fault, at all—and I say this in no offensive spirit—with the fact that he crossed over to the other side of the house, but, knowing as I do the political views of the people of Ontario, although my knowledge may be limited, I say that however much the speech of the hon. member may enthuse his new-found Conservative friends in the province, I do not think it will lead any Liberal seats into the Conservative column at the next general election.

Mr. GOTT: It is only a supposition.

Mr. SANDERSON: Quite true; but let me tell my hon. friend that no member of this house goes on supposition more than the hon. member for South Essex.

As it is a quarter to eleven, Mr. Speaker, with the consent of the house I move the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to and debate adjourned.

On motion of Mr. Robb, the house adjourned at 10.45 p.m.

Wednesday, March 20, 1929

The house met at three o'clock.

AUDITOR GENERAL'S REPORT

Mr. S. W. JACOBS (Cartier) moved:

That the Auditor General's report be referred to the public accounts committee.

Mr. ROBB: My recollection is that that report was referred to the committee some weeks ago.

Mr. BENNETT: That is my memory of it.

Mr. JACOBS: I was not aware of that fact, and I will ask permission of the house to withdraw my motion.

Motion withdrawn.

AGRICULTURE AND COLONIZATION

MOTION FOR ENLARGEMENT OF REFERENCE—PRECEDENCE OF BUDGET DEBATE

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): During the last few weeks we have been discussing the budget, and at the outset of the debate I introduced a motion to the effect that discussion on the budget should have precedence over all other business save routine. The spirit of that motion, if not the letter, was to the effect that no debate on some new subject should be precipitated into the middle of the debate on the budget. A motion was brought in yesterday to have the house concur in the third report of the select standing committee on agriculture and colonization, and it is apparent that a debate has arisen out of that motion which may be of considerable length, and, as I gather from the different views offered in respect of the matter, it may be contentious in its character. It would be rather unfortunate if the conclusion of the debate on the budget were to be prolonged indefinitely as a consequence of a debate on some other subject intervening. It is I believe, the hope of members of the house pretty generally that the debate on the budget may be concluded before the Easter adjournment. The government does not wish to restrain in any way the right of any hon. member to speak on the budget or on any other matter, but I would suggest that having discussed the budget at the length we have it might be advisable if the matter can be effected by arrangement, to try to conclude that debate before the Easter adjournment. The government does not for a moment ask that the debate on the motion brought in yesterday should be discontinued, but only suggests that the debate on the budget be first concluded and then that it be understood this motion should be considered the next order of business. If any hon. member is going to be prejudiced as to his position in the matter, because of the fact that one member has already spoken, I presume there is nothing to do but to allow the debate on yesterday's motion to continue. But I believe I am expressing the general wish of the house that the debate in that particular be shortened as much as possible so as to permit if possible completion of the budget debate before the Easter recess.

[Mr. Bennett.]

I gathered that the purpose of yesterday's motion was nothing more than to give to the committee wider powers than it now possesses so that when its report comes back to the house many of the questions which would arise in the course of the debate would be anticipated, and the hon. members would be in a better position intelligently to discuss the final report. It may be that some arrangement could be arrived at whereby the committee could obtain that increased power and some of the debate on the question be avoided thereby at this stage. May I say again that it is not the wish of the government to shut off any debate on any question, but it is part of the duty of whoever has the responsibility of leading the house to endeavour so to arrange matters that its business may be conducted in the most expeditious manner. I believe the house feels that having been discussing the budget for two or three weeks, it is advisable to conclude that debate before entering upon one pertaining to another subject.

Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): In the main I am wholly in accord with the observations of the Prime Minister. There is no doubt, however, that the motion that was adopted by the house according precedence to the budget debate excepted questions and motions, so that technically the motion of yesterday was wholly in order.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Not motions.

Mr. BENNETT: I think there is no question about the fact that neither questions nor motions were included.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Notices of motions. Routine motions remain, but not motions which are debatable.

Mr. BENNETT: The debate yesterday arose out of a routine motion.

Mr. SPEAKER: By standing order No. 38, a motion for concurrence in the report of a standing committee is debatable.

Mr. BENNETT: That is what I regard as a routine motion. That being so, yesterday, when the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Malcolm) asked for an adjournment of the debate, I imagine, that he might be enabled to get his papers for the purpose of making such defence as he saw fit with respect to an official of the department under his supervision, and probably because he might desire to make his reply to-day, in which event I gather one of my hon. friends to my left would desire to proceed with the discussion, it occurred to me that he might adjourn the debate so that no time would be lost and we would proceed with the budget. But that is wholly in the hands of the group led by the hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Gardiner) and not a matter in which I can assist the Prime Minister. I fully agree that it is desirable that a debate of this character should be terminated without too much interruption, but we all know in parliamentary life interruptions will occur even in connection with commonplace motions such as a motion for concurrence in a report. We accept that as being so, but if the matter can be carried out in the way I suggest, that would meet the situation.

Mr. ROBERT GARDINER (Acadia): The house has made great progress since we first met. We took only a very short time in debating the address in reply to the speech from the throne and we saved the house a good deal of time in that regard. At that time hon. members did not take the opportunity of discussing problems of importance to the constituencies they represent. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) has suggested that it is desirable that we should try to conclude the budget debate before the house adjourns on Friday night. I should like to assist him as far as possible, but at the same time there are in this corner of the house many members who wish to debate the budget thoroughly in view of the fact that they did not take the opportunity of debating the address. I would regret it very much if any influence were used for the purpose of curbing debate at this time.

Coming to the question more presently before the house, namely, the motion to concur in the third report of the committee on agriculture, I should like to point out that this question as affecting western Canada, and, I believe, eastern Canada also, is one of the most important that will come before the house this session. Of that I am convinced. I know of no other question that has stirred the farmers and producers in western Canada to such an extent as has the administration of the Canada Grain Act. In view of the fact that the debate proceeded for some time yesterday afternoon, and remembering also that the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Malcolm) desired to adjourn the debate primarily for the purpose of securing his papers so that he would be able to take part in the discussion, it would be improper if we were now to curb the debate in any way. I hope, however, that the debate on this question will not continue to any great extent, but I would not suggest to my colleagues that if they have anything important to say on the matter, they should curtail their remarks in any way.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I presume the next order is to proceed with this discussion; but may I suggest to hon. gentlemen that what the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) has just put forward as a means of trying to meet all parties concerned, is something that should appeal very strongly to everyone, and I hope will appeal to my hon. friends, namely, that it be distinctly understood that there is to be no curbing of the debate on this particular question, but that one of each group address himself to it, and that the debate be then adjourned, to be taken up, when the debate on the budget is concluded, and to be then taken up at any length and with due regard to its great importance.

Mr. M. N. CAMPBELL (Mackenzie): I might say, speaking for a number in this section of the house, that certainly more than one would expect to speak in this debate, and it would therefore be impossible to come to any such arrangement.

Mr. BENNETT: The suggestion was not to limit the number to one from each group, but rather that the minister might make his defence to-day with respect to the official concerned in his department, and then one of my hon. friends to my left could make his speech and adjourn the debate so that tomorrow another speech could be made and the budget debate finished. It was not my suggestion to curb the debate.

Mr. WILLIAM IRVINE (Wetaskiwin): The most important thing for us to understand is that the house will deliberate on this question and come to some definite action in good time this session. If this guarantee is given, I do not think we need worry much about the hour.

GRADING OF GRAIN

WHEAT—INSPECTION, SHIPMENT, AND PROTEIN CONTENT—REFERENCE TO COMMITTEE ON AGRICULTURE

The house resumed, from Tuesday, March 19, consideration of the motion of Mr. Kay for concurrence in the third report of the select standing committee on agriculture and colonization.

Hon. JAMES MALCOLM (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the problems arising out of the administration of the Canada Grain Act are, as the hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Gardiner) says, of such magnitude that one naturally hesitates to comment thereon except after one has been very thoroughly and fully informed on every phase of the subject. Personally I do not think much will be gained by debate in the house at this time, but if the house would grant the request of the chairman of the committee on agriculture for an enlargement of the reference, these matters which are contentious could be investigated before the committee by calling witnesses and taking evidence. The committee would then be assisted in making recommendations to the government and to parliament for changes in the Canada Grain Act which would correct the evils complained of if they were found to exist.

Early in the session I consulted with various western members of parliament on both sides of the house, and learned of the seriousness and the variety of complaints that were lodged against the Board of Grain Commissioners and the Board of Standards in regard to the administration of the act. I told all of those members—and they agreed with me—that the government would grant a reference to a committee so that all these matters might be thoroughly gone into and reported upon to parliament. Most of the members with whom I consulted felt satisfied that if the reference were broad enough, nothing would be gained by discussion in the house, until the committee had reported, and I had hoped that the request of the chairman of the committee on agriculture for an enlargement of the reference would be granted by the house so that the committee could proceed with its work. The reference which is before the committee arose out of a resolution by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Millar) stating that proteins should be considered a factor in the grading of grain.

But there are on the order paper two other resolutions, one by the hon. member for Willow Bunch (Mr. Donnelly) contending that the mixing of grain is an evil and that mixing should be eliminated, and another resolution which stands in the name of the hon. member for Rosetown (Mr. Evans), criticizing the action of the Board of Grain Commissioners in permitting the use of a certain ticket which contained additional words—words which were not prescribed in the actual ticket given in the Canada Grain Act. Under these circumstances I do not feel that the chairman of the committee on agriculture and the members of that committee could have done anything else but ask for an enlargement of their reference, so that the whole three resolutions, which I think cover the major points of criticism, might be dealt with and fully reported upon. To endeavour to discuss any one of these points at the present moment before the evidence is heard is in my opinion futile. To discuss charges against the Board of Grain Commissioners when the board have not had an opportunity to give evidence as to why they ruled or failed to rule in a certain way, I think is unfair. So far as I am concerned, I have found the Board of Grain Commissioners at all times anxious to assist in the administration of the act in the interests of the producer. Whether they have made mistakes of judgment or not will be brought out in the evidence produced before the committee. Mr. Boyd has been acting as chairman of the Board of Grain Commissioners since March of 1917. I have had no reason to criticize Mr. Boyd, and I do not propose to pass judgment until evidence is adduced and he has had a chance to reply. Therefore it seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that it would be very much out of place for me as a minister of the crown to join in any comment on a public servant, nor do I think that anything can be gained by this debate. I think I am quite right in saying to the house that much evidence will likely be adduced in the committee, and the report of the committee can, and no doubt will be fully discussed in the house. I think this matter can be very much better handled by having the discussion take place in the light of the evidence which will be taken before the committee. I can therefore only recommend to the house that this debate be as short as possible, that the chairman of the agriculture committee be granted this reference, and that the discussion when the committee's report comes before the house be as full and as free as parliament may wish.

Mr. E. J. GARLAND (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I agree with those who have preceded me in one remark, and that is as to the importance of the question that is before the house at this moment. When hon. members take into consideration the fact that the greatest single wealth-producing commodity in all Canada is wheat, they will begin to realize what it means. When they consider further that it involves annually hundreds of millions of dollars of real new wealth created by the producers out of the soil of the country, they will begin to realize something of its importance. When they further consider the fact that there is not a single financial institution, not a single manufacturing institution, and hardly an individual in the Dominion that is not interested directly or indirectly not only in the proper handling of wheat but in the price received by the producer for it, the importance of this question will be realized.

The Canada Grain Act came into existence in 1900 as a result of widespread agitation among the farmers of western Canada, who at that time were suffering under serious injustices at the hands of the organized grain trade and the railways of Canada. In 1912 it was found necessary to place the administration of the act in the hands of a board of grain commissioners. That board was supposed to be an independent board, an efficient board, one above reproach and criticism, and in order to be sure that it should be that kind of board, we provided that the chairman should receive a salary of $10,000 a year, together with many perquisites in regard to such matters as stenographic assistance, office buildings, office fittings, a special car for travelling, and much else. The two assistant commissioners receive the sum of $8,000 a year, and also participate in these perquisites.

We believed at that time, those of us who were here and interested in the trade, that this was a splendid step forward and would protect the interests of the farmer. After all, what was the object in the appointment of the board? The primary object was to administer the act so that the rights of the farmers would be preserved and protected at all times. Let me emphasize that. Professor Patton, in his well-known work on the "Growth of Grain Cooperative Marketing System," says:

The first grain commissioner—

Referring to the chairman of the commission:

—is the attorney general for the grain growers.

He is the man at all times expected to prosecute any offenders against the act, any men or companies who violate the rights or privileges of the farmers under the act. The Turgeon report also recognizes the importance of this body. At page 154 of the report of the royal grain inquiry commission, headed by Chief Justice Turgeon, which was filed in the house in 1925, these words are found:

The Canada Grain Act, 1912, created the Board of Grain Commissioners to administer the act. The importance of the proper exercise of its functions can scarcely be overestimated. It is of vital concern to Canada.

Chief Justice Turgeon, chairman of the royal grain inquiry commision, was satisfied of the transcendent importance of the proper administration of the act and the proper discharge of the functions of the board.

Let us examine the situation as we have it to-day. In the year that has just passed we have had more dissatisfaction in western Canada than at any other time since I have been there. We have had a more pronounced uprising of definite antagonistic opinion against the board than ever before and if the remarks of the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) in criticism of the Board of Railway Commissioners were justified, then I say to this house that a condemnation more damning than any ever pronounced by him would be justified as applied to the Board of Grain Commissioners. The Board of Grain Commissioners has utterly and completely lost the confidence of those whom it is supposed to protect in western Canada. Of that there is no question. All one has to do, if he seeks evidence of that, is to study the hearings of the royal commission which was appointed by the Saskatchewan government last year, and which has been travelling during the entire grain-moving season through the province of Saskatchewan, and which I understand is about to hold sittings in the province of Alberta. At the most minute rural points, places through which one could pass and find only a round dozen or so of individuals, in the most outlying country districts you would find the hall jammed with two, three, four or five hundred disgruntled, irritated, antagonistic farmers. Something was behind all this dissatisfaction; there was something wrong. This government surely must have known that there was something wrong. The Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Malcolm) should have been apprised of the seriousness of the situation, and I am going to say this much: So far as I know, the moment his attention was called, towards the beginning of this session of parliament, to the need for action in a certain direction, he took action. I will come to that in a moment.

I say that so far as the producers are concerned, the board apparently has failed to function satisfactorily and has lost their confidence. Now I ask this question: Is there any use under heaven in this government persisting in continuing the personnel of a board, irrespective of how worthy they may be, if they have utterly lost the confidence of those whom they are supposed to serve? I do not wish to criticize the individual members of the board, and I have nothing of a personal character against a single member of the commission. Let me further state at this stage, for fear I may forget to do so later, that so far as I am concerned, and I think I am speaking for those in the group around me, there is no intention at any time to attempt to make political capital out of this situation. It is too serious a matter for politics to be permitted to enter into it. I think the western members as a whole, whether they sit in the ranks of the Liberals opposite, or in the group around me, or the odd one or two in the ranks of the Conservative party to my right, are satisfied that some solution must be found of the difficulties facing the grain growers in the west, and that some settlement of the differences that have arisen between themselves and the board and other concerns must be found if we are to attempt at all to remedy the deplorable situation which now confronts us. When you come to a point where a question arises which may involve the loss, not of a million or two, but of tens of millions of dollars to the wheat growers in Canada, the people who produce from the soil real wealth, then surely it is time that the Department of Trade and Commerce, in fact the government itself, take recognition of the situation that has arisen and courageously cope with it.

The board has utterly failed to function. I make that definite pronouncement, Mr. Speaker, fully realizing the seriousness of the statement. The board has failed to function because it has not recognized several factors. These are: first, the immense increase in area of wheat growing since 1912. Why, at that time we never thought of producing wheat in large quantities in the Peace river country; we never dreamt of the western movement via Vancouver of grain to the proportions which it has reached to-day, with new and extensive problems involving terminals, inspection of cargo shipments and all the other diverse problems affecting the trade. At that time we did not dream—we did dream, it is true, but we had not immediately in front of us the problem of a northern outlet, which is another phase now to come under the attention of the commission. The production of wheat has more than doubled in that period. The capacity of elevator space in country houses and terminals has more than doubled in that period.

The problems have also increased almost proportionately during that period, and in latter years an added and very distinct problem has arisen. As long as the handling of wheat continued in the old channels it is true there were difficulties, but those difficulties have been enormously emphasized lately by the institution of the growers' own marketing system. This has brought an entirely new factor into the handling of wheat. The Turgeon commission even as far back as 1925 recognized that the commission itself must be assisted to function more efficiently, and it reported definitely:

We do strongly recommend that the board should be supplied with sufficient expert technical and clerical assistance to enable it to accomplish its routine duties and at the same time to have opportunity to give a large part of its attention to its general functions of supervision, discipline and control over the grain trade.

The Turgeon commission was satisfied that the grain commissioners were not giving proper supervision, were not exercising proper control, were not properly disciplining the trade at that time; and the commission's report recommended definitely that steps should be taken to supply the board with all possible necessary assistance.

Why did the Turgeon commission do that instead of recommending an increase in the personnel of the board? Because the Board of Grain Commissioners themselves have consistently and persistently resisted any proposal to increase their number; and so this way out was discovered and proposed.

Now, since 1925 I must presume that the Board of Grain Commissioners have been supplied by the Department of Trade and Commerce with all the technical assistance, all the technical stenographic and clerical help that they required to function properly. If not, somebody else will be held to account. But we must presume that this has been done, for we are paying the bills. The other taxpayers of Canada are not called upon to pay one dollar in connection with the administration of the Grain Act. We pay for it utterly and completely out of the proceeds of the grain we ourselves sell. Therefore, the Turgeon commission having made this recommendation, we must presume that the government recognized the situation and supplied the board with all the necessary facilities. Yet, Mr. Speaker, during the past year, when as never before at almost every point in western Canada disturbances in connection with the Grain Act had arisen, when as never before the farmers were protesting against the injustices they were suffering at the hands of the country elevator operators, at the hands of the organized trade itself established at Winnipeg, at the hands of the terminal elevators, there was not a single investigation undertaken by the Board of Grain Commissioners until more than 80 per cent of the grain crop had moved. In spite of the fact that affidavit after affidavit had gone into the board at Fort William, in spite of the fact that hundreds of appeals—not ten, not a dozen, but hundreds—had been made to the board for an adjustment of differences as between the farmers and the trade, the board failed to hold one single investigation in western Canada until late in January of this year after 80 per cent of the crop had moved.

Now, Mr. Speaker, is that functioning? In all the years that have passed by ever since this board was established there has not been one single check-off by the board of country houses. There is not a grain-growing farmer in this house who does not understand some of the abuses that take place there. There is not a farmer who does not know that mixing is practised in country houses. The evidence before the Brown commission in Saskatchewan brought out clearly again and again that mixing is practised in the bins of the country elevators. Why, sir, there is evidence to show that elevator agents at country points, having, say, ten bins at their disposal for special bin purposes, have actually had as many as thirteen, fourteen and fifteen farmers hauling grain to special bins and only ten to put them in.

These are the things that have cropped up. I will give another illustration. We find in the little town of De Winton a Chevrolet truck being used to haul wheat—an isolated instance perhaps, but it may be found in other places also. This Chevrolet truck is weighed empty every day after the wheat has been hauled, and there is a variation of over 900 pounds in the weight of that empty truck during thirteen days of hauling; and there has not been a drop of rain in the country in the meantime. Nine hundred pounds variation in the weight of an empty Chevrolet truck in the town of De Winton. I have all the facts in connection with this case and I believe sworn to in an affidavit. An appeal was made to the Board of Grain Commissioners to adjust the discrepancy. What do you think the board did? Did the board send out an inspector at once to check off the scales secretly and quietly? No, the board refused to act and wrote to the complainant: If you will send in an affidavit we will consider the matter. What is the result? The company is notified that Mr. Tom Jones, of De Winton, filed an affidavit with the board to-day that the scales must be out of order, that there is a deficiency of about 900 pounds. The company writes back to the board: We have had a report from our agent that this is not true. The Board of Grain Commissioners having supplied the brass band to warn the elevator agent, now sends an inspector to investigate. Do you think the elevator agent is going to leave his scales untouched? The board defends itself solely on the ground that a clause in the act provides that an investigation shall take place if an affidavit be filed. But in no section of the act does it say that the board has not power to check off at country elevators. As a matter of fact the Turgeon commission in its report says this:

> The board has the power to license elevators and to revoke licenses.

And will the house kindly note this:

> We believe that there follows from this power the obligations to exercise some measure of inspection of the way in which the operators of elevators and other licenses deal with the grain producers.

The Turgeon commission further recommended that there should be surprise check-offs at country elevators, otherwise they never can check up on those problems or difficulties, they never can find out what the elevator agent is doing. If you are going to compel the farmer to send in an affidavit with every complaint, and if the correspondence with the farmer is to be made open to the companies before any investigation is held, you might as well not have the grain act at all for any good it is going to do. If you warn the company beforehand of the action about to be taken, they are certain to safeguard their own interests.

Mr. FORKE: Was that an isolated case or was it an habitual thing? Because a variation of 15 bushels in a load could not often happen without something being heard of it.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I have stated there was a variation of 900 pounds in the weight of the empty truck.

Mr. FORKE: Could it not have been for once a mistake? We have all seen that happen in country elevators.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I presume the board could have found it out had they been interested enough to inquire, but apparently they were not. Let me mention this case. A gentleman named Morrison, down in the constituency of the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Coote), sends in a complaint to the board in writing. The board does not even bother to reply to the complaint; it has not even the courtesy to reply. Mr. Morrison takes the matter up with the member for Macleod. The member for Macleod is quite surprised to find that twenty-nine days have elapsed since the letter was sent and so he wires to the board. The board sends the hon. member a reply by wire but no reply to the man himself, so that the hon. member suggests that the board might have the courtesy to reply directly to the farmer who made the complaint; whereupon the board replies, thirty days after receipt of the complaint in writing from the farmer. Now is that an efficient functioning? Is that an efficient administration of the grain act? Is that acting as attorney for the grain growers? Is it acting in the capacity of protector of their interests and their rights? A board of this character, Mr. Speaker, is of no value whatever unless it keeps in close personal touch with the growers all the time. A board stationed in Fort William is useless, even though it be a good board, even though it be able to perform efficiently its routine functions. To be effective the board must be itinerant at least during the grain moving season. That was recommended also by the Turgeon commission; it was recommended in most emphatic terms. The Board of Grain Commissioners has always resisted the idea of itinerancy of the character suggested by Commissioner Turgeon. I will not mention any names, but one of the commissioners will make the statement to you, "I have travelled thirty thousand miles during the last year." Yes; but I submit that they do not travel to many of the points where they are required. They do not visit the points where controversy is arising. I say to the government, therefore, that if they wish to have the act efficiently administered it will be necessary for them to allow the board—indeed, to compel the board—to be itinerant, to move from point to point throughout the prairie provinces during the grain-moving season, so that at any time when a little cancer spot appears they can administer the proper remedy, and administer it speedily. I am satisfied that there are hundreds of complaints that have been really of minor importance and that could have been readily disposed of through personal attention on the part of the board. But instead of that, these complaints have been allowed to rankle, to canker, to grow and spread into the whole community until a situation has arisen such as I stated at the outset, namely, that the board has utterly lost the confidence of the farmers of western Canada.

There are many other points which one feels called upon to discuss in connection with this particular matter, but I come now to the most important factor in arousing the ire of the farmers of the west during the last year. I refer to the question of the so-called hybrid ticket. It is not necessary for me to go into the whole history of the question. It is sufficient to say that obviously it was the will of the committee of parliament and of parliament itself that the grower of wheat should have the right to determine the destination of his wheat after he had grown it. No one disputes that to-day. No one disputes that it was undoubtedly the will of parliament, and the wish of the pool through whom the grower handles a good deal of his wheat to-day, that he should have the right to determine where it should go. After the act is amended the grower gets the right to determine the destination of his grain, and then somebody does something with the schedules to the act. The old ticket is submitted for change, not to parliament but to the governor in council, and a change is brought about by order in council, taking out of the act almost all of clause 150.

Mr. CHAPLIN: On whose recommendation?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): On the recommendation of the board—and it is inserted into the ticket itself. As Mr. Milliken, the legal counsel for the Saskatchewan pool, has said, where five words would have sufficed—

Mr. MALCOLM: My hon. friend has made the statement that on the recommendation of the board there was passed an order in council which takes out of the act practically all of section 150. What does he mean by that?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I did not say that. At least, I should have said they copied out of the act on to the new ticket almost all of section 150, and left certain other words. So far as that particular change was concerned, although much of it was unnecessary, five words would have sufficed, as Mr. Milliken said; but instead of that forty words odd are transferred from the act, having the effect, as they appear on the ticket, if not of abolishing the rights of the grower, at any rate of permitting the abuse of the ticket. The Minister of Railways (Mr. Dunning) shakes his head. Well, I say this to him definitely. While the wording provided for by the order in council would in itself have caused no harm, if the wording of the ticket as authorized by the order in council had not been such as it was, the addition of the other words would not either have caused any harm. In his evidence before the committee the other day Mr. Milliken so stated There is no necessity—

Mr. DUNNING: Does my hon. friend mean to say that taking a section of an act which embodies a contract and putting that into the form of the contract makes it possible to break the contract which the act provides for?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): When additional words are inserted.

Mr. DUNNING: Additional words were not put in by the order in council, as my hon. friend knows.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The minister is setting up straw men to have the pleasure of punching their noses, and that does not do any good because the hon. gentleman heard me clearly. I have made myself clear in the matter. I have stated definitely that the wording of the act copied into the ticket did not of itself create a situation which would result in a violation of the grower's rights.

Mr. MALCOLM: The previous ticket was copied from the act. Did not the board do the proper thing when they asked that the ticket be reprinted so as to bring it into conformity with the act as amended at the last session of parliament?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): No; and I will tell you why. To have properly recognized the intention of parliament, they should have taken into consideration other clauses in the act as well as that particular one, and instead of putting in the words, "the grain is deliverable to the person on whose account it is taken in the store," the intention would have been more clearly indicated had they said that the grain should be deliverable to the person who owns the grain—the owner of the grain.

Mr. MALCOLM: My hon. friend surely does not imply that the board should recommend putting into the ticket something which is not in the act. The act provides distinctly that the ticket shall indicate what the act itself states.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The minister says that this question of ownership is settled in the act. There is no question about that, and if that were recognized by everyone else, if everybody understood the act as the Minister of Trade and Commerce understands it, no problem would have arisen. But unfortunately the organized grain trade took advantage of the situation and added certain other words, the effect of which—and, I presume, the deliberate effect—was to take away from the pool men their rights under the grain act so far as the destination of the grain was concerned.

Now, note this point. In October, 1927, the pools asked the board to stop the use of this ticket, stating that it was not prescribed by the act. I make the further assertion that at no time, either by order in council, by act of this parliament or by any other legal method was this hybrid ticket legalized in any shape or form.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): That is quite right, yet the Board of Grain Commissioners recognize it as an ordinary ticket for handling purposes; the Board of Grain Commissioners not only permit its use but use the wording of the ticket to compel farmers to accept the diversion of their grain by private grain companies. Can I make my words stronger that that? The Board of Grain Commissioners, knowing all that was meant by the addition of those words and seeing the effect in actual operation, permitted the use of an absolutely illegal ticket which only had the result of taking away from the farmer his right to name the destination of his own grain. Hon. gentlemen may raise the question of contracts until they are black in the face; they may cite the pool contract with the trade; they may cite the grower's agreement with the pool, but that has nothing whatever to do with the Board of Grain Commissioners or the administration of the grain act, and no one recognized that fact more clearly or more distinctly than the Minister of Trade and Commerce when his attention was called to it.

Just at this point I would like to quote to the house the position taken by the minister in this matter. A dispute had arisen between the firm of Thompson Brothers and the Home Grain Company in the little town of Rowley, which resulted in an investigation being held towards the end of January of this year. After the hearing had been completed Mr. Boyd, chairman of the board, decided that since this involved an interpretation of the contract he was not in a position to give any ruling on the facts, and suggested that a court case be started. It was not Mr. Boyd's business to suggest that; his business was to administer the act and to say, "We rule that in order to give the farmer justice under this act you must divert his grain to the terminal of his own choice." He did not say so, however; he said "We must have the court's interpretation before we can give a ruling." This decision was communicated to the Minister of Trade and Commerce, and in giving the house his reply I ask hon. members to notice how clearly the minister recognized the situation and how willing he was to meet it. I have no blame to attach to the minister at this time; my attack is entirely on the Board of Grain Commissioners because of their failure to function. I quote the telegram sent by Mr. Malcolm to Mr. Boyd under date of January 28, 1929:

> Further replying your message from Calgary twenty-fourth instant re pool contracts. Parliament amended law to assure producer's right to determine destination of his own grain. Board should take position that no contract between pool and grain trade should deprive producer of that right. Government approves board's recommendation that board bear expense of court action to sustain grain act in this regard.

That was the position taken by the Minister of Trade and Commerce and I applaud him for it, but why have not the Board of Grain Commissioners taken that identical position for the last two years? There is only one obvious answer; either they are stupid to the point of idiocy or they have turned their sympathies directly to the trade instead of to the producer. There is no other possible explanation of their actions. I have before me the entire correspondence which passed between the Board of Grain Commissioners and the farmers of Alberta, and in case after case the board have used the hybrid ticket and the acceptance of this hybrid ticket by the farmer even though unwittingly or even under protest as an excuse by which they can suggest to him that he is in a difficult position and had better abide by the situation. What an amazing thing! In some cases they have succeeded in "coaxing," as Mr. Milliken said, the grain trade to recognize the situation and to give the farmer his right; they have succeeded in doing so by coaxing, but in no case that I know of have they attempted to enforce the provisions of the act under the powers given them. They have the necessary power; there is no special need for them to come to parliament and say they have not this power. It is true that the enforcement might create a momentary difficulty or some local dissatisfaction, but one or two cases of the exercise of their powers would quickly bring the trade to terms and compel them to recognize the rulings of the board.

Why, Mr. Speaker, I have heard one of the commissioners stand before a convention of several hundred farmers and farm women and tell that convention in eloquent language that he had no more power and the Board of Grain Commissioners had no more power to enforce the act than any delegate present at the convention. Just imagine a situation of that kind. Speaking at the convention of the United Farmers of Alberta, at Edmonton, Mr. Robinson said:

> . . . . something evidently overlooked by the U.F.A. board or the spokesman for the board, and that is the Board of Grain Commissioners has no more authority to carry out any of the provisions of this act than any delegate in this room. They have unlimited scope as to making regulations but they have no authority to enforce them.

As a matter of fact, they have the authority to revoke the licenses of the companies; they can close up the warehouses, but as I said a moment ago that might create a temporary difficulty especially to the producers of wheat. This is just an illustration in passing. Note the delicacy of the situation; here are the members of the Board of Grain Commissioners, appointed at handsome salaries and pretty handsome perquisites, to administer the grain act. That board has been in existence since 1912; all the present members have not been on it long but it has been in existence since then. In all the years that have passed these problems have been arising, and if you ask them they will frankly admit that during those years they have made rulings at times which have been utterly ignored by those against whom the rulings were made. Yet in all those years I do not know of a single case in which they have come back to this parliament and said, "We cannot enforce the act; we have no power to enforce it." So they have waited until the year 1928, when a situation has arisen which threatens utterly to overthrow them and dismiss them from office; now they turn around and tell the farmers at a meeting attended by hundreds of the organized group of the province of Alberta that they have no power to enforce the act and that in effect they have been receiving money under false pretences since their appointment to office. What an amazing situation; what a criminal situation, to find any board accepting handsome salaries annually to administer an act when the rulings which they may have to make as a result of that administration have no weight and they have no power to enforce them! Have they ever asked for power from parliament at any time? I know only too well that a few years ago parliament readily would have agreed to any enlargement of powers the board might have requested; we would have given them the necessary policing powers if they had sought them. I do not think there is any doubt but that this parliament is as anxious to do what is right for the growers of wheat and to see that the act is justly administered as are any of the growers in western Canada.

Here is another peculiar situation. Apparently this year, when a serious matter arose, the Board of Grain Commissioners would not undertake any investigation unless affidavits were sent in. I know of many cases in which such affidavits were sent in; as a matter of fact I helped prepare one for Thompson Brothers in Rawley. What did the Board of Grain Commissioners do? They dropped a little note to the grain company concerned and said, "Here, we have this complaint from Thompson Brothers; make a reply to it." The only reply sent in by the company was an ordinary statement not made under oath and not conforming in any way to the rigid regulations enforced by the board with respect to the growers. That is absolutely unfair, and I am informed that cases have arisen in which the board have called up the company on the telephone and said, "We have this complaint against your company; kindly pay attention to it." They deal with the trade on the one hand by accepting ordinary documents, letters signed by a general manager or by a solicitor for the company, but a farmer must file a sworn affidavit. I have no complaint to make with regard to that except that in many cases it is an unnecessarily rigid and stupid regulation and prevents the proper functioning of the board and the proper administration of the act. The Board of Grain Commissioners should be intelligent enough to know they should not enforce that peculiar affidavit form of filing complaints in all cases. It is quite true it does apply to some cases, but it was passed upon by the board and used by them as a means of delaying rather than assisting in clearing up any difficulties which might arise.

There is much more to be said on this subject, but I am sure others will follow me, and in closing I simply wish to say this: that the organized farmers of my province at annual convention assembled, and after full consideration of this situation and having heard a member of the commission in his own defence and in defence of the board, passed a resolution, with one dissenting vote, in which they asked for the dismissal of the present board and the appointment of a board consisting of five members, one of whom should be a resident of Alberta and one of Saskatchewan. I suppose the residence of the other members would depend upon the will of the members from other parts of Canada. We specifically asked for that in order that there might be a personal contact between the grower and the representative of the commission. It is not fair to us to have a board, the principal work of which is done in Winnipeg or Fort William, operating so closely with the trade and practically never coming in touch with the growers. I would ask the government to take into consideration the dismissal of the present board of grain commissioners.

Mr. BROWN: Is the hon. member in favour of or opposed to the motion before the house?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I am in favour of widening the scope of this resolution. As it reads at present it does not include the term "administration of the Grain Act." If that term were included in the resolution so as to make a full investigation possible, it would relieve my mind of a great deal of worry.

Mr. JOHN VALLANCE (South Battleford): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with a great deal of interest to the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Garland), and it is quite easy for those of us who have some knowledge of marketing conditions and farming in general to follow him. Until quite recently there was a resolution upon the order paper standing in the name of the hon. member for Rosetown (Mr. Evans), and I had been a little afraid that we would not reach that resolution because I realized that it would have caused considerable discussion and probably argument. I agree with all the hon. member has said, but I think we should have a short resume of what happened prior to this last year and the conditions which prevail to-day. This would assist the hon. members who come from other parts of Canada and who may not be acquainted with the conditions prevailing.

For a number of years the farmers of western Canada were obliged to market their grain through the Northwestern Grain Dealers' Association. It was the common practice for the farmer to ship his wheat through a line elevator to the commission house he desired to deal with. The farmer believed, rightly or wrongly, that he had that privilege up until 1924-25, and then he suddenly realized that he did not have that right. At that time we had created one of the greatest cooperative marketing organizations which this world has ever seen, and in order to make that a success it was absolutely necessary that we should have physical control of as much of our crop as possible. At that time the pool did not have the local facilities with which to handle their wheat; they were forced to depend upon the facilities belonging to the Northwest Grain Dealers' Association, and if we had not the right to designate the terminal to which our wheat should go we were going to lose a great deal of the benefit from that cooperative organization. In the session of 1925-26 this house passed what is commonly called the Campbell amendment, but owing to the dissolution of the house it did not find a place on the statute book. During 1926 we again considered this matter and the amendment passed. We had the right to put our grain through any line elevator and ship it to the pool terminal. Those of us who were privileged to be in the house at that time well remember the lobby which was put on by the Northwest Grain Dealers' Association in opposition to this amendment. They realized that if this great cooperative organization obtained the right of designating the terminal, they would then lose the whip-hand over the farmer. However, it went through and, as we thought, we had that right.

In 1927 the pool still found that they had not facilities to take care of all their wheat. As has been pointed out by the hon. member for Willow Bunch (Mr. Donnelly), there are three ways in which a farmer can market his grain. He may sell it on what we call the street, that is, sell it to the elevator companies; he may grade it to store; or he may store it in a special bin. The member for Bow River mentioned the agreement which was entered into between the pool and the Northwest Grain Dealers' Association. I think it is only right that that agreement should be mentioned in this debate in order to clarify the situation which exists to-day. There was an agreement entered into between the pool and the Northwest Grain Dealers' Association whereby the association were to be allowed to take all street wheat and ship it to their terminal, but it was stipulated that any rights which the farmer had under the Canada Grain Act were to be retained. The so-called hybrid grain ticket has come about through the interpretation of that agreement. The grain trade interpreted the agreement to mean that they had the right to designate the pool wheat going through their local elevators to their terminals. The pool contended, and contended rightly, that they had not that right. This agreement was presented to the Board of Grain Commissioners for adjudication, and I am absolutely in accord with the member for Bow River when he says that they should not have considered it in any way. They have no right to consider any agreement entered into by any group or individual; their function is the administration of the Canada Grain Act, and I think the board have realized the mistake they made.

A condition exists in western Canada to-day which has never existed before. At this juncture I would like to read a portion of a letter I received the other day, which I think will explain the conditions which exist in western Canada. This letter is written from Davidson, Saskatchewan, and reads in part as follows:

> What I want to talk to you about in particular to-day is the grain situation. There is no use in disguising the fact that the thing is very serious out here. This, in spite of the fact that you may or may not have heard anything to the contrary which I know nothing about. The thing has not fully exploded yet but it is just sizzling, and when it comes it will be a hurricane. So far as I am concerned, I have no grievance other than where the thing has been an injustice done my fellow man, and, of course, can only talk of the thing from the standpoint of the fellow who has been wronged.
> I might interject that the writer of this letter is not a wheat pool contract signer.
> The trouble that I refer to is the regulation whereby the line elevators were allowed to deny to the shipper the right to designate the place his wheat was to be shipped to after he had it in the elevator, which, of course, was aimed at the pool, and it surely landed hard. They are just getting wise to the full import of what that did to them, but when they all wake up, there sure is going to be something doing.
> Now, I don't belong to the pool, and, of course, it did not hurt me. I am going to be absolutely honest with you, and tell you that I know nothing at all about this thing so far as its being brought about is concerned, except what I hear. The first intimation I had that there was a nigger in the wood pile was last fall when room was hard to get in the elevators—
> Now I want you to mark this.
> —and I made a protest to the elevator man that the pool people were getting better service at the line elevators than the non-pool men, and pointed out to him that it was poor business for them to take care of that wheat that they got no commission from at the other end, and turn down wheat that they derived all the benefits of handling from. He told me then that all pool wheat this time went to the company's terminal and not to the pool terminal. You can see at a glance, without further elaboration on my part, just why my wheat lay on the ground a month while he threshed nearly 8,000 bushels and hauled it to the elevator right from the machine and never put one solitary bushel through the pool elevator.

I think the condition as revealed in the letter which I have just read has been prevalent throughout the west. We find a line elevator company giving all their facilities to the pool and denying to the non-pool farmer the same facilities. We have an instance in this letter of 8,000 bushels of non-pool wheat lying on the ground in order that they might take care of pool wheat. If this proves anything, it proves that there must be a great deal of profit at the other end and it is that which the farmer to-day feels he is losing. Further on in this letter the writer says, mentioning the name of his friend:

> . . . . has now found out that he lost over $100 by not being able to designate his terminal, and I will say, in the mildest terms I can, that he is sore.

Someone may ask: How did he lose $100? The pool have been in the habit of paying two cents a bushel to all pool members who ship their wheat through their own facilities, so that if an individual cannot ship his wheat through his pool facilities, he does not share in that distribution of two cents a bushel. It may be asked: But how can the grain trade or the line elevator companies help this state of affairs? There are many ways. I think I might as well read the whole letter. the writer continues:

The next question that calls for an immediate answer is this. How did this thing come about, and who was responsible? I do not know myself, for, as I said before, I did not pay any attention to it, but they tell me that this thing was finally put up by someone to the Department of Commerce—

He means Trade and Commerce.

—and an order in council was made allowing this nefarious thing to be done.

I might state that I disillusioned his mind on this point.

If that is so, it has made a nice mess for us to clean up.

He goes on to discuss the whole matter. After listening to the speech of the hon. member for Bow River I have reached the conclusion that this grain commission has been very inefficient in the administration of the act. It occurred to me, while he was speaking, that if they have proven inefficient in the administration of this act which means so much, not only to our farmers, but to Canada as a whole, it might be possible to devise some other ways and means whereby we could administer the act more efficiently.

Mr. CHAPLIN: The commissioners might be changed.

Mr. VALLANCE: I do not know that that would do much good. While the suggestion of the hon. member for Bow River has been received with a great deal of, shall I say, happiness in the west, namely that there might be five commissioners instead of three, and that they might be given deputies so that they could move about and keep in close touch with the farmers, it seems to me, because of the importance of this particular branch of industry, it would not be a bad thing for a department of government to be set up under a responsible minister to administer the grain act, in the same manner as the great transportation companies move the freight. While they may be responsible for the freight while it is in transit, they have no interest in it other than to transport it. Therefore I suggest that we set up a department of government under a responsible minister, and I think not only would the matter be more efficiently handled, but we could clean the trade of many of the evils that exist today. I think we could eliminate mixing. The department would stop all mixing after the grain leaves the farmer's hands, until it is out of the country or in the hands of the millers. If they want to mix it, let them do so, because they have to bear the consequences—the farmer through the inspection department, and the miller through the manufactured product—and it will hurt no one but themselves. Let the government take all overages to help defray the expenses of the undertaking. This is a steal that has no justification other than the sanction of someone who did not have the interest of the producer at heart. The pool is the only one which has been honest enough to give us some light on the subject, and its report of 1928 (Saskatchewan Cooperative Wheat Producers, Limited) shows that in handling 106,374,576 bushels it had an overage of 627,032 bushels. That was shrinkage at the initial elevator, but at the terminal it took on the more honourable name of overage. In fact it did not perform the thing they intended it for. I will admit that in the pool the farmer evidently gets it back in some way, but why take it from him at all? What about the line companies who handle approximately the other 50 per cent of the wheat? I would not even think they would be guilty of taking less than the pool, so that if the pool takes, out of what it handles, more than 627,000 bushels, there must be about 1,500,000 bushels of overages every year.

I am in sympathy with the attitude of the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Malcolm). I think his suggestion was a good one. I think that the Board of Grain Commissioners should be allowed to appear before the agriculture committee. I think it is only British fair play to give them that opportunity. I have had the opportunity of meeting the board on a previous occasion. I think it would be only right and proper for the group that met the Board of Grain Commissioners on that occasion to draw the attention of the house to something that happened at that time. Hon. members will remember that on the evening of February 22, 1929, the hon. member for Willow Bunch (Mr. Donnelly), rising in his place in this house on a question of privilege, drew attention to an article that had appeared in the Mail and Empire of Toronto. It has already been put on Hansard, but I think perhaps I had better read it, because it contains some statements and there have been statements made in answer to it which need clearing up. The article is from the pen of T. H. Blacklock, written, I suppose, from the press gallery. It says:

Did Hon. James Malcolm, Minister of Trade and Commerce, break faith with the western farmer members not officially supporters of the government? They assert that he did and that the conference with the grain commission was restricted solely to western Liberals after Mr. Malcolm had promised the western farmer members would have an opportunity to discuss the grain trade with the grain commission.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that there are a few western farmer members sitting on the Liberal benches. The hon. member for Weyburn (Mr. Young), the hon. member for Melfort (Mr. McLean) and many others were at that gathering including myself, but apparently this writer does not identify us as western farmers. probably because we are supporting the Liberal government; I do not know. The article goes on:

A few days ago western farmer members waited on Mr. Malcolm to discuss the abuses of the Grain Act during the marketing season for last year's crop. It is claimed by them he placed the greater responsibility for the abuses on the wheat pools, which was suggestive that the western farmer members better not raise the question or the wheat pool would suffer. Finally, it was agreed they were to meet the grain commission.

Yesterday, certain members of the government and the official prairie Liberal members met the grain commission, but the farmer members of Alberta and Saskatchewan were not invited. One of the reasons advanced for this exclusion is that members of the government and western Liberals made statements about the wheat pool which would have been resented by western farmers.

I pause, Mr. Speaker, to draw your attention to that statement. I want to deny right here that there was anything said in that conference with the grain commisison which was detrimental to the wheat pool.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. This matter has already been the subject of debate in this house, and the hon. member must not refer to a past debate.

Mr. VALLANCE: It was not debated. The point of order raised by the hon. member for Willow Bunch was not allowed.

Mr. SPEAKER: Exactly. Because it was not allowable.

Mr. VALLANCE: Have I not the right to refer to it?

Mr. SPEAKER: No.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): That matter was not under debate at all; it was not debated.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. gentleman is referring to a debate which took place in the house during the present session, and that is against the rules.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): No.

Mr. SPEAKER: Yes.

[Mr. Vallance.]

Mr. VALLANCE: If I am not privileged to draw the attention of the house to something that has already been before the house—

Mr. SPEAKER: I might remind the hon. gentleman that the matter before the house is a motion to concur in a report of the agriculture committee. The question is a very simple one, and hon. gentlemen should not roam so far from its subject matter. I have allowed a certain freedom in this debate, but really the hon. gentleman is going beyond the bounds.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out that it is somewhat late in the session to take that attitude in connection with this question after so much latitude has been allowed on every other question that has come up.

Mr. SPEAKER: If the hon. gentleman finds that my ruling is not to his liking, he may appeal it.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): I have no desire to appeal.

Mr. VALLANCE: I have no objection to your ruling, Mr. Speaker. The only objection I have is, why should it be applied to me?

Mr. BENNETT: That is what every man says.

Mr. VALLANCE: Other hon. gentlemen have wandered further afield than I have. The hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Cahan) rose on a question of privilege the other day—

Mr. SPEAKER: Which was a question of privilege.

Mr. VALLANCE: I might at least be allowed to state this in connection with the article to which I have referred. There was no member of the western Liberals who attempted to do anything detrimental to the pool. I was one of that handful of men in the city of Saskatoon who were responsible for bringing Mr. Aaron Sapiro to this country Mr. Blacklock in the next article that appears over his signature says that he got the information from an independent member of the Progressive group.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): May I ask the hon. member to name the independent member? So far as I am concerned, I repudiate the charge. I deny it categorically. Mr. Speaker, this is really a question of privilege affecting the honour of members on this side of the house, in this corner at least. I personally have no knowledge of this matter. The hon. gentleman is imputing somewhat dishonourable actions to us, and I ask him now to name the gentleman to whom he refers.

Mr. VALLANCE: I would refer the hon. member to the individual who wrote the article, T. H. Blacklock.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): That is not an answer. The hon. member must take responsibility for the statement he makes in this house.

Mr. VALLANCE: I take responsibility to this extent, that some member of the press gallery known as T. H. Blacklock had an interview, according to his own statement, with an Independent member of the Progressive group who gave him certain information. He does not name the member, but says an Independent member of the Progressive group, and if the members of that group are not responsible, it is up to them to clear their own skirts. I am trying to clear mine. I suppose some of the hon. members think that one day I did wear skirts. So I did, and I am not ashamed of it.

Mr. BENNETT: That is highly relevant to this discussion.

Mr. SPEAKER: I would remind the hon. gentleman who has the floor that Bourinot says, at page 326:

> Nor is it in order to read articles in newspapers, letters or other communications, whether printed or written, emanating from persons outside the house, and referring to, or commenting on, or denying anything said by a member, or expressing any opinion reflecting on proceedings within the house.

Mr. VALLANCE: I agree with the Minister of Trade and Commerce, Mr. Speaker, that this question should be referred to the agriculture committee, that the scope of the reference should be enlarged, and that all individuals who are interested should have the opportunity of appearing before the committee, either voluntarily, or if the committee desires their attendance, that they be called. In view of the conditions that exist in western Canada to-day, I think possibly the best thing that could have happened was for this discussion to take place.

Mr. T. W. BIRD (Nelson): Mr. Speaker, I have not spoken on the budget, and after these few remarks it is not my intention to take part in that debate.

I do not agree with the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Malcolm) that this is not the place to bring this matter to the attention of parliament. When a public scandal occurs of the magnitude of this I think the floor of parliament is the first place where it ought to be aired. The agriculture committee will be none the worse for knowing how seriously the farmers of the prairie provinces are viewing this question.

The hon. member who has just preceded me (Mr. Vallance) very clearly and accurately gave the history of the Campbell amendment. I shall not repeat his remarks except in so far as may be necessary to emphasize the fact that in 1927—I hope the noisy individual sitting in the back row on the opposite side will restrain himself a while—I say that in 1927 the so-called Campbell amendment passed this house. Our memories, I am sure, are long enough to recall the circumstances and also to remember that that amendment gave to the wheat producer the right to determine the destination of his grain. That is a very elementary right. It is astonishing that the right of the wheat grower to control his own property until sold could ever have been called in question. That right was reinstated by the so-called Campbell amendment.

The history of the amendment is significant. Properly speaking, the name of Mr. Turgeon ought to be connected with the amendment as well as the name of the member for Mackenzie, because its wording originated with Mr. Turgeon, who was the chairman of the grain commission that prior to the session of 1925 took evidence throughout the west. Its report was submitted to parliament that session, and its recommendations were embodied in a bill which came before a committee of this house. That bill contained the Campbell amendment in the very words in which the member for Mackenzie introduced it to this house in 1926 and 1927. The reason for it was obvious, as the last speaker has very well pointed out. A change came over the outlook of the wheat growers of the west in 1924, when the establishment of the pool gave them a new interest in the control of their product, and when representations were made to the Turgeon commission that the provisions of the grain act giving to the farmer the right to choose his terminal were so obscure that advantage was being taken of the obscurity by the grain trade to deprive the farmer of the right to control his commodity. The Turgeon commission determined to remove that obscurity and to state the farmer's right in words that would leave no doubt as to what was intended.

Now, as I say, that recommendation came before this house in a bill which was introduced in the session of 1925. We all know how it failed to pass. All the forces at the command of the grain trade were brought to bear upon this house, and that elementary right of the farmer, which only the year previously had begun to assume some kind of value to him, was denied. In 1926 we all know what occurred. After the election the government met parliament minus a majority. At the beginning of the session the Progressive members came to an agreement with the government that certain legislation should be passed. Prominent among that legislation was the Campbell amendment. In pursuance of the agreement it was passed through the committee, but we all know of course that it, with other legislation, fell by the way. The following session, after another election, the Campbell amendment was once more introduced, and a good many of us remember very clearly the effort which the grain trade again made to prevent the farmer from regaining this elementary right. I was not on the committee to which the amendment was referred, but I attended its sittings regularly, and I remember the high priced legal advice sent down from Winnipeg to instruct the committee on the rights of the grain trade. I remember distinctly an address by one of these legal stars. He almost shed tears over the prospects of the grain trade in Winnipeg if this right of the farmer was reestablished in law. I am certain that one of those legal gentlemen actually did become moist around the eyes when he thought of what was going to happen to the Winnipeg grain trade if this simple amendment became law. There is a saying that corporations have not any emotions, and therefore do not shed tears. I think it was some great English writer who asked, whoever saw a corporation shedding tears. Well, we pretty nearly saw it on that occasion; we saw a great deal of emotion displayed in committee over the frightful injury that was going to be done the grain trade by reestablishing in law this simple elementary right of the farmer. But the grain trade did not get its way. The government of the day may take credit to itself for honouring its promise of the year before. Anyway, this simple provision became law in 1927 and has since been known as the Campbell amendment.

Now, Mr. Speaker, although the grain trade were foiled in parliament, they were not at the end of their resources. What they had failed to do in parliament they immediately sought to accomplish outside. We sometimes hear about the audacity of elected members, but their audacity is timidity itself compared with the audacity of these representatives of high finance, who when foiled in parliament by the representatives of the people immediately turned around and tried by other means to defeat the law. In the olden days they spoke of running a coach and horses through an act of parliament. The grain trade, in less than a year after this amendment was passed, ran whole trainloads of grain through that act of parliament. How did they do it? Very simply. They issued a form of warehouse receipt which was contrary to the act passed the same year. A copy of that receipt I have in my possession. The grain trade, I say, in order to defeat parliament, issued a warehouse receipt in a form contrary to the express statements of the act. The Campbell amendment was put into words which as we thought were perfectly clear and definite, and the resources of parliament were drawn upon to make the meaning of that amendment unequivocal beyond a doubt. Yet within a few months there was issued a document which in plain words is a forgery. A document was issued that destroyed that act of parliament, and this was done by the simple means of introducing three short English words, one noun and two prepositions—"on account of." By inserting these words into this document the grain trade of Canada proceeded once more to rob the farmers of the west of a valuable right which was theirs and which should never have been held in doubt. Talk about changing the landmark of your neighbour. This is the modern form of changing your neighbour's landmark. In the old times they said, cursed be he that changes his neighbour's landmark; and to that all the people said, amen. Here is the grain trade of Canada changing a landmark which had been erected by parliament only a few months previously for the purpose of protecting the grower of wheat from the grain trade itself. This false form, this form in its forged state, was issued in spite of section 225 of the act, which expressly forbids anyone, under penalty, to do anything of the sort.

> Every person who uses any form other than those in the first schedule to this act, or those authorized by the board with the approval of the governor in council, shall, in case any such forms are applicable, be guilty of an offence under this act, and shall be liable to a fine or forfeiture of license.

Here is the grain trade defying parliament and defying the government. Here is a private trade, whose object is private profit, shattering to bits an act of parliament passed so recently, and then snapping its fingers at the government whose right it was to superintend the issue of these tickets.

Now the farmers of the west, with ironic humour, have called this a hybrid ticket.

It is an interesting research sometimes to try to find out why the popular mind should originate a nickname of that kind. Why call this forged document a hybrid ticket? It seems to me quite obvious that it is the fruit of an unnatural union between the brains of the grain trade and what is in the place of the brains of the grain commission. It seems to me that a document of this kind could not be possible except by the subterranean processes that have gone on between the grain trade on the one hand and, on the other, this body that was supposed to stand in defence of the farmers. That is the origin of the idea of the hybrid ticket.

I want to say—it has already been said but I wish to say it more emphatically if possible—that the grain trade committed these crimes against the elementary rights of the producers and were condoned in so doing by the Board of Grain Commissioners. I do not see why the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Malcolm) should want all this extra evidence when we are faced with a fact so elementary in its character, the fact of a responsible body, deliberately and without excuse, pandering to the demands of the grain trade in face of an act of parliament which had been passed only the previous session. It is not necessary to quote them, but we have documents to show that as early as the same fall in which the Campbell amendment was passed the pools of western Canada protested against this very warehouse receipt. They sent their protest to the Board of Grain Commissioners. We have on record the replies which were given by the grain commission to these protests, and in these replies the board say that these forged warehouse receipts are in harmony with the grain act. How do they harmonize this document with the grain act? Well, there is only one explanation, and it is this. When the grain commission considered the subject they did so with their eyes not on the grain act, where they ought to have been, but on a private contract. The grain commissioners when they wrote that reply had regard not to the document which was their official guide but to a document which did not concern them in the slightest, a private contract that was supposed to be in the vaults of the grain trade association and of the pool. These grain commissioners in making their weighty decision which nullified the effect of the Campbell amendment were concerned about enforcing a private contract when they ought to have been concerned about enforcing an act of parliament for which they were paid and, as has been well pointed out, paid by the farmers themselves. If only these gentlemen had read this part of that contract with a sympathetic mind they would have seen that, as well as the human language could do so, these very rights were safeguarded, the rights which this forged ticket has taken away from the farmers. Yet they allowed that document, that private contract, to poison their judgment and divert their concern from the farmer to the grain trade.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, let me say to the Minister of Trade and Commerce that this is not a matter of the personal character or personal concern of the Board of Grain Commissioners. In considering this question let us put the board on the one side and let us put on the other the hundreds of thousands of farmers and their families in western Canada; let us try to look at this question in its true proportion. Here are the farmers of the west, who feel that the handling of their wheat is the most vital question in their lives, and you cannot wonder at farmers being suspicious when the very thing which they have put into the hands of the grain commission means almost life and death to themselves and their families. The proper administration of the grain act is more than a technical matter with farmers; it comes right down to their standard of living.

I am disappointed with the Minister of Trade and Commerce in this respect; I do not think he apprehends the seriousness of the situation; I do not think he is looking at it from the standpoint of the man who is growing wheat and whose whole life depends upon the proper and honest handling of that wheat. The minister is looking at this matter too much from the point of view of the Board of Grain Commissioners, but he must not look upon these men in the light of ordinary government employees. The members of this board stand in a peculiar relationship not only to himself but to the farmers of Canada, and I would like to say that the whole value of a commission, whether it be a grain commission or a railway commission, depends upon the nature of the discipline which a government is prepared at any moment to hand out to it, when the government thinks it has been biased in its decisions. I think a commission like this is a danger and a menace to the people concerned if the minister, through a mistaken sense of fair play or tenderness on his part, allows this commission to go unpunished for a minute.

I want you to put in the other balance these hundreds of thousands of farmers and their families in western Canada. These commissioners are human; they are not supermen. When you select ordinary human beings and appoint them to a commisison, by that act you do not make them more human beings. They are still like the rest of us; they still possess the same susceptibilities. The only difference between them and the rest of us is that they have been elevated to a position where the exposure is ten-fold, yes, a hundred-fold more severe, where their rectitude is put to greater tests than ever we can know. If that is the case, and of course it is the case, then what is the duty of a government? The duty of a government is to be beforehand and not behindhand in disciplining these people.

I want to say that the members in this corner of the house always have been very generous to the grain commission. There was a time when the members of that board needed increased salaries, and where do they get their support? The support came from western members; it was through the initiative of western representatives that the remuneration of our grain commissioners was raised. Why was that done? It was done because the representatives of western agriculture knew that these men were in exceptional circumstances, with great responsibilities resting upon them, and they knew it to be important that these men should be sufficiently well paid to put them in a position where outside influences would have the least effect. The representatives from the west supported that increase unanimously.

I think the grain commissioners were abundantly thankful at that time to the western members; shortly afterwards I remember walking into the room of an hon. member upstairs, and in the middle of the floor was a packing case. The hon. member handed me a letter and said, "What do you think of that; shall I accept this?" Here was a token of gratitude from the grain commissioners to a member of parliament for the part he took in raising their salaries. I said to that member, "If I were in your position I would not un-nail that packing case; I would send it back to where it came from and tell these commissioners to express their gratitude by giving the farmers of the west a square deal." Have they done so? If I had known what I know now of the fidelity of the grain commissioners of the west certainly I would not have let a misdemeanor like that pass without investigation.

An hon. MEMBER: What was in it?

Mr. BIRD: It does not matter what was in the case; it might have been worse instead of better.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): I would like to ask the hon. member if he did investigate the matter.

[Mr. Bird.]

Mr. BIRD: No, I did not investigate it, but I would like the hon. member to remember my advice in the circumstances.

Mr. FORKE: It seems to me that is rather a serious charge to make against the board.

Mr. BIRD: I make no charge.

Mr. FORKE: Pardon me; I will repeat your words and if I am wrong you may correct me.

Mr. BIRD: I wish to correct the hon. gentleman now; I was making no charge.

Mr. FORKE: My hon. friend said a package was on the floor of the room of a member of parliament, and with it was a card saying this was sent in recognition of services rendered in a particular way. Were not those the words my hon. friend used, and was not that an attempt to bribe that member of parliament?

Mr. BIRD: I am leaving the hon. gentleman to put his own construction on it; I introduced the incident for another purpose.

Mr. FORKE: The hon. gentleman is casting a very serious reflection on the personal integrity of the grain commissioners.

Mr. BIRD: I am not concerned about the seriousness of the reflection.

Mr. FORKE: I desire to be just, that is all.

Mr. BIRD: Does my hon. friend say I am not being just? Am I not taking the responsibility for that statement? I do not say these things without deliberation. Now let me put a question to my hon. friend: What objection has he to my making that statement? Does he believe I am making it without responsibility? That is a fair question.

Mr. FORKE: All I have to say is that the hon. member said either too much or too little.

Mr. BIRD: That is a very free and easy kind of a phrase to bring into a dispute; my hon. friend copied it from the Minister of Finance who never has anything else to say in a difficult situation. I have said neither too much nor too little; I have said the exact truth, which I can substantiate by at least two other members of the house. I introduced the incident quite legitimately, in order to prove that the members of the commission are human and to indicate what the members on this side of the house expected a few years ago when they were 100 per cent behind the grain commission. They supported the grain commissioners at that time because they thought that an increase in salary would incite those men to give the farmers of the west a square deal.

I do not think there is anything in this debate which the government or the Minister of Trade and Commerce, or even the Saskatchewan Liberals, can regard in a political light. So far as the last speaker from that side of the house is concerned there can be no possible doubt but that he with others has been just as eager as we on this side of the house that this matter should be considered. I am sorry that the last speaker (Mr. Vallance) has thrown out the suggestion that some independent member had given an interview to a member of the press gallery, without indicating who he was.

Mr. KENNEDY: It is not a case of too much or too little.

Mr. BIRD: I happened to be one of the four members who interviewed the Minister of Trade and Commerce at that particular time, but I am not going to say that I was not the member referred to, because if I said that it would be a reflection upon my colleagues. If the hon. member has any idea just who it was he should tell the house and not leave a general suspicion hanging over the rest of us. He has had sufficient experience in the house to know that the members of the press gallery are experienced men. They have means and methods of gathering news which are not always obvious to the individuals from whom they obtain the news.

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): All the member for South Battleford (Mr. Vallance) said was that the statement appeared in the press announcing that members on this side had said a certain thing; that that was denied, and the next day the press correspondent came back with the statement that he would not retract what he had said because he had obtained his information from a member in that corner of the house.

Mr. BIRD: I did not understand it in that way; I thought he had said that himself.

Mr. DONNELLY: I have the article here if the hon. member wishes to see it.

Mr. BIRD: I am perfectly willing to take back what I said in so far as it reflected upon the hon. member. I understood that he himself had made that surmise, but if the statement was made by the press I am perfectly satisfied. However, I will say I am just as much surprised at the press as I was surprised at the hon. member when I thought he had made the statement. It is not fair to the members of parliament that such a statement should be issued which causes innocent members to come under the suspicion of their friends in the house.

Mr. JOHN MILLAR (Qu'Appelle)): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with considerable interest to the discussion which has taken place on this matter. I agree with what has been said as to the magnitude of the grain trade and the fact that the system has fallen down, but I think it is most unfortunate that this matter should come up in this house before it is dealt with in committee. When the chairman of the agriculture committee made a motion in the house which asked for the broadening of the reference, I was rather surprised to see the objections to that motion coming from the southeast corner of the house. We tried to arrange this matter in the committee so that the reference would be broad enough to enable the matter to be discussed in committee; the member for Bow River (Mr. Garland) asked the chairman very pointedly if it would be interpreted in that way, and he received an answer in the affirmative. I was therefore rather surprised to see objections offered to this motion from that corner of the house. We have the situation of the three men composing the Board of Grain Commissioners being charged with the most serious blunders and not having the opportunity to defend themselves or offer an explanation.

One of the matters was discussed with the board in a committee of which I formed a part, but only one. It may be that other members of the house met the members of the board at a different time to discuss other matters, but they would be very, very few. In a general way the members of the Board of Grain Commissioners are being charged in the House of Commons with most serious offences; in fact insinuations of bribery are made. The newspapers of Canada will be full of this sort of thing and it will be two or three weeks before the members of the board will have an opportunity to offer a defence. I think that is very unfortunate and very unfair; it would have been better to have had this matter taken up in the agriculture committee where the members of the board could have appeared and given their explanations. The members of the committee could arrive at a decision and then report back to the house where the matter could be discussed. In that way, there would have been no undue publicity in the public press.

I should like to say a word here with regard to the commissioners. It has been stated by those who have already spoken that there is no desire to accuse the commissioners of, I think the expression was, "dishonesty." I submit that the commissioners are being treated in a way which is equal to being charged with dishonesty; a serious stigma has been placed upon them before they have a chance to defend themselves. I believe I have known one of the commissioners longer than any other member of this house, except the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell)—for some thirty-five years. I would like to speak first of Mr. Snow. He was a farmer near the town of Wolsely, and I believe he was present at the very first meeting of the grain growers' association. A little group of about twenty-five met and organized a small association. That association was jeered at and laughed at for years; it had all sorts of difficulties to meet and contend with; and it had to fight its way up. Those men spent their own money and sacrificed their time in driving around the country through storms and all kinds of weather. That little group depended more upon the advice of Mr. Snow than of any other individual, with the exception of the Minister of Agriculture. What would have happened if the infant organization had not been well and truly nurtured during those early days? We probably would not have had any permanent farmers' organizations to-day. It was very important that the foundations of the organization should be well laid, and I believe they were. I know of no one, outside of the Minister of Agriculture, who played a greater part in that work than did Mr. Snow. He was later appointed, on the recommendation of the farmers themselves, to the position of deputy to the Warehouse Commissioner, Mr. C. C. Castle. He travelled through the western country for years, investigating every complaint which was received in writing. He adjusted many differences, and I know of no period in the history of western Canada when the grain trade ran as smoothly or as satisfactorily. Are these things all to be forgotten? Is there no such thing as gratitude?

Mr. BENNETT: It is a lively hope for favours yet to come.

Mr. MILLAR: That may be my hon. friend's conception, but it is not mine. I have known those three men for many years, and I know of no time in their history when they could be accused of an act that was dishonourable or ungentlemanly. I admit they made a mistake. They made a mistake in regard to the hybrid ticket, and I have no hesitation in saying to them that in that they were wrong; they blundered. But if the men who are attacking the commission, as they are, wish to be consistent, they will, as contract signers of the pool, be almost compelled to ask for the resignation of the directors of the pool, because this was caused by two things, first, the action of the Board of Grain Commissioners, and second, the action of the directors of the pool.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): What under heaven have the pool directors or the pool contracts to do with the administration of the grain act?

Mr. MILLAR: If my hon. friend had waited a moment I would have come to that point. I admit they had nothing whatever to do with the administration of the act. In arriving at the decision they did, they were wrong, but the difficulty that has arisen and the loss that has been sustained were caused as much by the action of the directors of the pool as by the action of the Board of Grain Commissioners. If either had been absent, such a condition could not have occurred.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Will the hon. member explain that? It is not clear.

Mr. MILLAR: I do not think it needs any explanation.

Mr. GARDINER: It certainly does.

Mr. MILLAR: If they had not signed the contract, the loss could not have occurred.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Has the hon. member read the contract?

Mr. MILLAR: I have heard parts of it read.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Is the hon. gentleman aware that under clause 15, I think it is, the contract carefully provides a full safeguard that the grower's rights under the Canada Grain Act are preserved to him?

Mr. MILLAR: I am aware of all that. I have heard that clause read.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): In what way are the pool directors responsible?

Mr. MILLAR: The hon. member has had his forty minutes and, I have only the same length of time.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The hon. member has made a mistake and cannot get out of it.

Mr. MILLAR: They both blundered and it was an act of injustice.

Mr. FANSHER (Last Mountain): May I ask a question?

Mr. MILLAR: No, I have only forty minutes.

Mr. FANSHER (Last Mountain): Then let the hon. member prove his statement that they blundered.

Mr. MILLAR: There is widespread dissatisfaction, but the situation is simply this: that the grain trade has grown to enormous proportions and our machinery for handling the trade has not grown in proportion. Trade practices have changed; new trade practices have grown up and the machinery is not sufficient. The board was simply undermanned and I should like to ask those who have been making the attacks on it: If they were placed in an important position and found that the job was enough for five men, whereas there were only one or two to do it, would it be just to blame the one or two men for failure to do five men's work? It is a little unfair, it seems to me.

The dissatisfaction that is rife in western Canada to-day may be placed in three classes: mixing, diversion of cars and a lack of a proper system of grading. The difficulty is that the farmers themselves have not been united. Let us take the matter of mixing first: can anyone claim that there was such a crystallized public opinion on the matter of mixing that even a government which was prepared to go ahead and pass legislation was in a good position to do so? What happened in 1925? The pool officials who were present in the committee at that time when the matter was being discussed, represented a body who were not themselves a unit. One of them stated in the committee that the pool was mixing and did not wish that privilege taken away. I am not blaming the pool for that. They had not come to an agreement. There were differences of opinion, and that is and has been the case up to recent months, all through the country. Mainly because of the work of the committee last year public opinion has now been crystallized, and there is a strong majority of opinion in favour of stopping mixing entirely. But that has been brought about only within recent months.

In the case of diversion of cars, has there been united public opinion? That is one of the greatest evils. The railway companies and the elevator companies gave consent to the opening of cars and while I cannot see that this is illegal, it certainly has caused the farmer a great deal of loss. But on that point there has not been crystallized public opinion; there has been a difference of opinion. When those interested as much as the farmers themselves were not a unit on the matter, I cannot see how the grain commission could reasonably or consistently go ahead and prevent the practice of diversion of cars.

I am free to confess that a reorganization is necessary but I think it would be unfortunate that the course suggested should be taken, namely, that the three commissioners should be discharged. Men against whom no proof of dishonesty can be brought should not be treated in this way. If, on account of any other cause such as ill health or physical disability, it is found that they are not able to fill the bill; that they are not the big men we want, for any such cause I would say that a reorganization should take place, and new men should be appointed. But it is only just, that as regards men who have served the country as faithfully as they have, and, as I said before, against whom no charge of dishonourable conduct can be made, it should be left to the Minister of Trade and Commerce and to the government to bring about a reorganization just as the head of any large business concern would do. That would be far better than the method of attacking the Board of Grain Commissioners without giving them a fair opportunity to defend themselves and suggesting that they should be publicly discharged, to that discharge of course being attached a certain amount of disgrace. It takes a long time to build up a good reputation, and some of these men are probably as jealous of their good names as any members of the house. No matter what hon. members say about their good intentions towards these men, and what they personally think of them, if this course is taken of publicly attacking the members of the commission and publicly discharging them, their names are gone; they are blackened. For instance, a man like Mr. Enow who is nearly seventy years of age, a man to whom the country is very greatly indebted, will be cast off with a blackened name and a destroyed reputation. I do not think that is good for the welfare of Canada. If men are going to be attacked in this way, where will you find good men who will take their place? Good men will be very shy about accepting this job if men such as the ones we have now are to be attacked in this way and discharged in the manner suggested.

Mr. M. N. CAMPBELL (Mackenzie): When the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) this afternoon made efforts to prevent or to curtail this debate, I think he failed to realize the vital importance of the question to the farmers of western Canada. As a western member himself, he did not realize, I think, how very important this matter is. During the eight sessions that I have been here as a member in this house, with the exception of one other matter, this is the most important question so far as the interests of the farmers are concerned that has come before parliament in that time; that one exception was the Crowsnest pass rates case in 1922.

May I give a brief summary of the history of the grain act, particularly with respect to the special bin ticket, since 1900. The first grain act, known as the Manitoba Grain Act, was passed in the year 1900. That act provided for three forms of ticket—the cash ticket, the regular storage ticket, and the special bin ticket. It is the special bin ticket around which the whole controversy rages to-day. The particular section of the 1900 act with which we have to deal in this connection says that wheat, if in carload lots, was deliverable to the party upon whose account it was taken into store. But the ticket set out in the schedule of the act said that the grain was deliverable "to the above-named or his order," and the farmer's name, of course, would appear at the top of the ticket. and so it referred to that particular farmer. Section 225 of the Canada Grain Act, the present act, makes it an offence for anyone to use tickets other than those set out in the schedule of the act.

In 1912 the whole act was redrafted, and section 159 of the new act said that the grain was deliverable to the person upon whose account it was taken into store, while the ticket read "to the above-named or his order," just the same as it did in the old act of 1900.

In 1925, the act was again revised, but you find that same provision in the act, and those same words on the ticket, and that continued up until 1927, so that for twenty-seven years there was no change so far as those words in the act, and on the ticket issued under the act, are concerned.

The amendment of 1927 made some fundamental changes in the act. It gave to the producer the right to determine the destination of his grain. Some of us claim that the producer always had that right, but the amendment placed it beyond a doubt that the individual farmer had the right to say to what terminal point and to what terminal elevator his grain should be delivered. This change in the act of 1927 necessitated a new form of ticket because it altered the right of the parties as to the terminal destination of their grain, although it did not in any way alter the section as regards the particular words that we have been considering. Section 150 of the amended act of 1927, says that the grain is deliverable to the person on whose account it is taken into store. So in twenty-nine years there has been no change so far as that particular wording is concerned. But the new ticket that was issued by order in council P.C. 807, dated May 4, 1927, provided that instead of the grain being deliverable "to the above-named or his order," as had been the case since 1900, the grain was deliverable to the person on whose account it was taken into store. That is the crux of the whole matter, and that is the point to which I wish particularly to refer.

May I say that this provision was made in the bill which was drafted by Chief Justice Turgeon, and the amendment of 1927, so far as this particular phase is concerned, brought the act back to the exact form in which it was when it was introduced in this house. As hon. members know that act was amended in the agriculture committee and went through the house in its amended form, and the amendment of 1927 was simply putting back into the act the exact words that were in the bill as originally drafted by Chief Justice Turgeon. So therefore I think I am perfectly right in saying that the ticket drafted by Chief Justice Turgeon to come into conformity with the act is the one that we should have at the present time, and the one that should have been covered by the order in council to which I have referred. That particular form of ticket will be found on page 82 of the act. It says that the grain is deliverable "to the person above-named or his order," and that is what we should have at the present time. This is where all the trouble began. This is where we find something wrong in the wording of the ticket.

May I point out that while it would appear fairly obvious on the surface that the grain interests made some representations, I do not know to whom, whether to the Board of Grain Commissioners or the cabinet, in connection with the drafting of this ticket, the pools were never consulted in this matter, although they control fifty per cent of the grain, and they knew nothing about this ticket or about its form until months after when it was in use. I contend, and the minister will bear me out in this for he is on record as taking the same stand, that any agreement existing between the grain pools and the grain trade has no bearing on the act, that no private agreement can over-ride the act. Nevertheless, because a certain agreement has been brought into the discussion, I shall make a brief reference to it.

In the handling contract between the pools and the grain trade, clause 15 reads as follows:

The pool agrees that all pool grain, of whatever class, forwarded to terminal points, shall be handled through any elevator the company desires.

I think that is quite plain. It goes on:

Provided that nothing in this clause contained shall take away from the grower any rights he may now have under the Canada Grain Act.

That also appears to be perfectly plain, and it appears to me that there could not be any misunderstanding about it. The grain companies, however, immediately claimed that a pool grower had now no rights under section 150 of the act, as those rights had been assigned to the pool as an organization, and they claimed that pool grain delivered into a line elevator was taken into store on account of the pool. That is where those words "on account of" become of such vast importance. We can see the bearing which the change in the ticket has on the whole matter under discussion. The pool officials claim that under the arrangement which they had with the grain trade all the street wheat would, of course, be taken to the company's own terminal. They further admitted, after a long discussion with the grain trade, that so far as they were concerned they were willing to allow any pool grain to go to the company's own terminals unless the grower expressly reserved his right under the Canada Grain Act; and to place the matter beyond all doubt they had this particular clause which I have just read inserted into the agreement. That is their contention.

In section 25 of the same agreement there is another clause to the effect that the company guarantees that in the conduct of their business they will not in any way discriminate between the growers who are members of the pool and those who are not. Now, if the company's contention is right, if they are right in saying that this agreement waived on the part of the growers the right which they had under the Canada Grain Act, then they are violating this other clause in that same agreement, because they do not dispute the right of a non-pool farmer to determine the destination of his grain, while they do dispute the right of a pool farmer to do so. Therefore this other section, No. 25, has been violated by them; that is, if they are right in one case they are wrong in the other.

In addition to this new form of ticket which was covered by the order in council, which apparently was not sufficient, the trade brought out the other ticket which has already been referred to and is known as the hybrid ticket. It reads that the grain is received from John Smith, say, on account of the Saskatchewan Cooperative Wheat Producers Limited. We find after "on account of" the particular pool name added; sometimes it is inserted with a rubber stamp, at other times it is printed right in the ticket, although no such provision is made in the original form. Our contention is that the grain trade had no right whatever to change the original form of the ticket. They claim that under this hybrid ticket grain delivered by a pool farmer to the elevator is not subject to his order, that it is taken into store on account of the pool. It is quite obvious that they could not have done this had it not been for that particular form of ticket which was authorized by the order in council that I have quoted, because it is stated to be taken into store on account of, instead of—as it should be—"to the above named or his order." I see no reason whatever for this form of ticket being authorized. The form should be similar to that suggested by Chief Justice Turgeon, because the clause in his draft act is exactly the same as the one that appears in the present act.

I have under my hand sessional paper No. 141 covering correspondence between the board, the pool, grain trade and the complaints of farmers in connection with this matter. May I read telegram No. 41. It is in reply to a telegram forwarded to the board by the Saskatchewan pool asking the board's opinion on certain provisions of the act. It reads:

Winnipeg, October 25, 1927.

To the Saskatchewan Cooperative
Wheat Producers Ltd.,
Saskatoon, Sask.

If Arrand is owner of the grain delivered by him to State elevator, until said grain is handed over to pool at terminal he has a right to order his grain shipped as he desires.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): Mr. Speaker, is the hon. member in order in view of your ruling given a short time ago?

Mr. CAMPBELL: The signature is "M. Snow," grain commissioner.

Mr. SPEAKER: What is the substance?

Mr. CAMPBELL: It is in reply, Mr. Speaker, to a telegram despatched to the Board of Grain Commissioners by the Saskatchewan Cooperative Wheat Producers Limited, and gives the board's decision on the point referred to.

Now, this decision is very important, because it bears out our contention in full. In the first place, the board rule that the grain does not become the property of the pool until it has arrived at the terminal. That is covered by the agreement between the pool signer and the pool organization. In effect the grain does not pass over to the pool. In fact I may read clause 5 of the contract between the grower and the company:

> Wheat shall be deemed to be delivered to the association within the meaning of this contract so as to render the association accountable for only when the storage and bills of lading, warehouse receipts and so forth shall have been transferred and delivered, properly endorsed by the growers to the association.

That is our contention, and in this decision the board bore us out. They state very definitely that the grower has a right to say where that grain shall be shipped. On November 11, 1927, there is another telegram to the Saskatchewan Cooperative Wheat Producers, Ltd., Regina, signed by F. J. Rathbone, secretary of the board. It reads:

> . . . . board directs me advise if pool member delivers grain to non-pool country elevator with instructions that grain is delivered on account of pool and accepts tickets issued accordingly, grain is then deliverable to person on whose account taken into store, and if tickets read "on account of pool" grain is then deliverable to pool in accordance with tickets.

Now, sir, that alters completely the original decision; it is an entirely different decision. This decision is that if the grower puts his grain in the pool and takes out what we call a hybrid ticket, the grain then becomes subject to this contract and the grower has lost control of it. On another point they state:

> Under grain act any farmer, pool or non-pool member, delivering grain either to pool or line country elevator can demand tickets in form as provided by the grain act.

This is another important decision. In this case they do decide that the grower, if he is not satisfied with what we call the hybrid ticket, can demand the regular ticket. So even a pool farmer would not be under any great disability, he would simply have to refuse the other ticket. May I read another telegram, No. 62 in the file:

> Fort William, Nov. 15, 1927.
> To the Manitoba Cooperative
> Wheat Producers Limited, > Winnipeg, Manitoba.
> Answering your wire, have advised Canadian Elevator Board of opinion that if when grain delivered agent was advised same was on account of pool, and if tickets so issued, under grain act grain is deliverable to pool on whose account taken into store.
> F. J. Rathbone.

There you have an entirely different decision. In fact these three decisions that I have quoted are at variance one with the other. In this case the board rule that if the farmer brings in grain and says it is pool grain, and the tickets are issued that way, he has no alternative. Let me read No. 65 in the file. This is another telegram: This is a question put to the board by the Manitoba pool. It reads:

> Winnipeg, Nov. 17, 1927.
> To Board of Grain Commissioners,
> Fort William, Ont.
> We stated your yesterday wire not clear. Consequently still don't know your opinion. Advise definitely board's opinion as to whether or not Canadian Elevator Company obliged to bill this grain to pool terminal if grower instructs.
> Manitoba Cooperative Wheat Producers Ltd.

The reply of the board is No. 67 on the file. It reads:

> Reply your wire, reference Canadian Elevator case, board will consider question fully just as soon as full board able to meet. Full board not in Fort William.
> F. J. Rathbone.

There you have an evasion again instead of giving a decision on the point referred to them. About this time the board referred the matter to the Department of Justice, and may I quote from the opinion of the department which was given on January 11, 1928:

> It is contended on behalf of the pool that the intention was that the company should have control of the shipment unless the grower should elect to exercise his right under section 150; that that is the effect of the proviso of clause 15 of the agreement mentioned above. . . .
> Owing to the fact that the parties have failed to express their intention clearly, I entertain considerable doubt as to whether the grower may, if he chooses, elect to divert the grain to a terminal of his selection. I should think he probably can, if he has not stored the grain in the country elevator on account of the pool, but Mr. Boyd has not asked advice upon this point.

This opinion is not definitely expressed because the questions were stated in an indefinite way, but so far as the opinion goes it does rule that the grower would have the right to refuse a hybrid ticket; he may choose what he will accept. I wish to read again from letter No. 93 on the file. This is from Fort William and is dated January 16, 1928. In part the letter reads:

> While the Canada Grain Act provides that the shipper may select the terminal point and the terminal elevator to which he desires his grain to be shipped, the board understands that the pools have entered into contracts with line elevator companies authorizing them to ship to their own terminals any pool grain received by them.

There is a remarkable thing. After the rulings they have given, they now invoke this particular agreement and in effect say to the farmer that because of this agreement he has lost his rights under the grain act. May I refer again to the telegram despatched by the minister to Mr. Boyd, No. 618 on the file, in which the minister points out clearly to that gentleman that the agreement should not be invoked. The telegram is dated Ottawa, January 28, 1929, and reads in part:

Parliament amended law to assure producer right to determine destination of his own grain. Board should take position that no contract between pool and grain trade should deprive producer of that right.

The telegram is signed James Malcolm and shows clearly that the Board of Grain Commissioners in this case were in conflict with the minister so far as the ticket was concerned. Let me refer again to the letter, No. 140 in the file. This is dated October 18, 1928. It is addressed to the Western Elevator Company Limited, Winnipeg, in relation to a letter from Mrs. F. J. Kernen, with regard to a car from Sutherland, Saskatchewan. The letter reads in part:

The board is informed that ordinary storage tickets were issued against this car, and if so, it appears to the board this party would have a perfect right under the grain act to give instructions as to what terminal this car should be shipped to.

There is a clear and unequivocal decision as to what would happen when the ordinary tickets were delivered; yet in this particular case, and in many others following, where the regular tickets were delivered, the board took no action whatever to enforce it. On November 20 the board drafted a circular letter, numerous copies of which exist. They seem to have sent out this circular to any farmer who made complaint, and in it they say:

Many informal investigations and numerous conferences were held by the board with interested country elevator companies with the hope that the elevator companies would honour the tickets issued by them in the name of the individual by shipping the grain to the terminal elevator designated by the holder of the tickets in accordance with the provisions of section 150 of the Canada Grain Act. However on discussing these particular complaints with the elevator companies it is pointed out by them that although tickets were issued to the farmer in his own name it was subsequently discovered that the farmer is a pool member and in view of certain contracts which had been entered into between the grower and the pool, and the elevator companies and the pool, they are justified in treating the grain delivered by you as pool grain, and under the terms of their contract with the pool they have the right to ship such pool grain to their own terminal elevator.

There again we have an entirely different decision, the board acting as parrots for the grain trade and simply repeating the opinion of the trade and passing it on. We have entirely contrary decisions on the part of the board, who apparently were taking their legal advice from the grain companies. As each different case is submitted to them they shift their ground and fall back upon some other decision altogether. And that the companies themselves were not entirely sure of their ground is proved by the fact that in many cases when complaints were made to them they did agree to concede to the farmer the right to which he was entitled under the grain act. Let us take the case of the North Star elevator of Louis Heinz, Saskatchewan. This car was loaded contrary to the shipper's instructions, and in a letter dated January 25, 1928, the company admit the farmer's right in the matter and agree to send another car in its place. In case after case, company after company I find agreed, when the circumstances were submitted to them, to send the grain to the terminal of the farmers choice, showing clearly that they were not sure of their own ground. In these particular cases the farmer had received the straight ticket and not the hybrid ticket. Let me now refer to letter No. 278 on the file This is from Messrs. Hudson, Ordmond, Spice & Symington and is addressed to the secretary of the board. It has reference to the case of H. L. Stutsman and Pioneer Grain Company, and reads in part:

This grain was originally shipped to a terminal of the company's selection because it had come to the knowledge of the agent that it was in reality pool wheat and was in his judgment, therefore, under the pool contract.

Here the regular ticket was given to the farmer. He gave instructions according to his right and later they found it was pool grain inasmuch as he had asked to have it shipped to the pool; yet without any right whatever —and it is lawyers who are writing—they take it upon themselves to handle the grain through their own terminal. In such cases the board deliberately ignores the act, taking no means to have the law enforced.

With regard to this so-called hybrid ticket, may I refer to a memorandum drawn up by the pool's solicitor at Winnipeg. The memorandum gives some data of an interview between the board and some of the pool's officers at Winnipeg in December, 1927. I quote:

The board said it had not included the words "on account of Manitoba Cooperative Wheat Producers Limited" when drafting new ticket for use under Campbell amendment. Those words had been subsequently added by the grain trade but the board had approved of their so doing because they considered it necessary to indicate on the ticket the person on whose account the grain was received.

Further on in the brief they point out that Mr. Snow, speaking for the board and in the presence of other members of the board, stated that the board had not included the objectionable words. Let me read what is said:

He said that the new wording had been added by the grain trade, but that the board had approved of the trade so doing, because the board considered it necessary to indicate on the ticket the person on whose account the grain was taken into store.

Previous speakers have reminded the house that no ticket is legal unless it is prescribed in the act or by order in council, and this particular form was never covered by any order in council, so that it comes directly into conflict with the act. May I quote from a letter written by the secretary of the board to the attorney for the Saskatchewan pool. This is dated December 14, 1928, and appears as No. 162 in the file. In part, it reads:

With regard to your observations while travelling with the Saskatchewan grain inquiry commission as to the form of tickets which are used by a number of elevator companies contrary to the wording of the Campbell amendment, I am directed to say that this is the first intimation the board has received that country elevator companies are not issuing tickets strictly in accordance with the above amendment.

It seems rather remarkable that a year after the complaints were made and a year after, according to this memorandum, they admitted having approved of the ticket, they claim to have no knowledge at all of it. The letter goes on:

The board further directs me to say that if any elevator company has issued tickets which are not in accordance with this amendment, it will do everything in its power, under the provisions of the act, to have the elevator company concerned honour the tickets in the manner in which they have been issued.

However, sir, there is nothing in the file, no copy of a circular letter or anything to prove that they ever took any action of that kind.

Now may I again read a letter which is number 211 in the file, dated January 6, 1928, from Mr. Snow to R. Cameron, Aberdeen, Saskatchewan:

A great many complaints are reaching the board in connection with the use of the ticket you complain of, but the elevator companies claim that under an agreement they have with the Saskatchewan pool a party delivering pool grain must state it pool grain—

This is about the sixth time the opinion of the board has been shifted.

—and that they have the right to select the terminal elevator that this grain can be consigned to.

[Mr. Campbell.]

Further on it says:

At the present time the board is unable to compel the country elevators to consign pool grain to any other terminal than the one they select.

That is a remarkable thing, because under the act they are given the power to discharge elevator operators, or to take away the license of any country elevator, but now they state they have no power whatever.

Again may I refer to two cars of grain shipped by John Hill of Lake Valley, Saskatchewan; this is a case of grading. Mr. Hill took samples from these two cars, which cars graded No. 4 at Winnipeg; the samples, both at Moose Jaw and at Winnipeg, graded No. 3, and when he called for a re-inspection only ten days later he was told that the samples had been destroyed. However, there is a letter from the chief inspector to the board stating that these samples were kept for thirty-one days. I quote this to show that they have not been checking up in these matters as they should.

I beg to move the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to and debate adjourned.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Thursday, March 21, 1929

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

First report of the select standing committee on public accounts.—Mr. Casgrain (for Mr. Jacobs).

DEATH OF MARSHAL FOCH

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it is appropriate that at this time and in this place mention should be made of the sorrow with which Canada, in common with all parts of the British Empire, and in common with the nations which were allied and associated with France in the Great War, learned of the loss which the world has sustained in the death of Marshal Foch. It is unnecessary to review either the noble life of Marshal Foch or the incidents of his great career; they are known to all. Suffice it to say that never before in the history of mankind was the fate of so many nations entrusted so completely to the judgment of one man. That so great a trust was wisely reposed, is everywhere acknowledged. In expressing, therefore, to France our sympathy in her national bereavement, we give expression as well to a sense of world loss in which we also share.

It was my privilege, on the occasion of the visit of Marshal Foch to Canada in 1921, to extend to him, on behalf of the Canadian people, a welcome to the capital of our country. May I be pardoned if I venture to repeat to the house, from the report of what was then said, words with which I concluded my remarks, and which, if they possessed aught of appropriateness at the time, have an added significance in the existing circumstances of to-day. They are repeated in the belief that a word of just appreciation to the living is worth many eulogies upon the dead. Seeking to express the feelings of the Canadian people I said to Marshal Foch:

"It is, however, not alone because in the hour of supreme conflict in the world's greatest of wars, millions of warriors looked to you as their leader, or because a war swept world hails you to-day as a deliverer, that we most honour you. Rather is it that in your singleness of vision and humility of spirit we perceive the secret of all guiding genius worthy of the name.

> Who is the happy Warrior? Who is he > That every man in arms should wish to be?
> —It is the generous Spirit, . . .
> Who, doomed to go in company with Pain,
> And Fear, and Bloodshed, miserable train!
> Turns his necessity to glorious gain; . . .
> He labours good on good to fix, and owes
> To virtue every triumph that he knows.

In Foch, the man, we discern the character of the happy Warrior. He who, whether amid adversity or triumph, loves mercy, seeks to do justly, and walks humbly with his God. To have had among us one who is truly great, a hero with a hero's soul, is to inspire within our country more of reverence for the source of all true greatness. For this inspiration, which we shall ever hold in remembrance of this visit, we thank you, too, with all our hearts.

As Canadians, we honour your illustrious name; your immortal fame we shall ever cherish. May the light that never faileth lead you on!"

That prayer, Mr. Speaker, would appear to have been answered. We are told in the press despatches that among the last requests of the great soldier was that he might be moved into the sunlight. That wish has been fulfilled, not with the aid of his physician, but by the hand of the Creator.

May I add, Mr. Speaker, that the government has given instructions that the flag which flies over these parliament buildings shall be flown at half mast during the time of the funeral of Marshal Foch, as a mark of national respect to the memory of this great and good man.

Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, we who sit to your left desire to associate ourselves with the very moving observations that have been made by the right hon. the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King), for we realize that in the passing of Marshal Foch there has departed from this world one of its very greatest citizens. He was great not only as a military genius, not only because in a moment of great peril, when he was entrusted with grave responsibilities, he discharged them in a manner wholly satisfactory to those who had reposed their confidence in him, but he was great because of the possession of those qualities which one of our own great writers has referred to as the earmarks of true greatness. He was a man of great humility, with a high sense of duty, a fine regard for his obligations to his fellow-men, and above all, with a true respect of his obligations to his Creator. We are told that at moments of the direst stress and strain, when the fortune of armies hung in the balance, it was his custom to repair to a little chapel and there to offer his devotion through Mother Church to his Creator. For one possessed of such power and occupying such a high and responsible position, to be mindful at moments of great crisis of his obligations to his God was characteristic of this great soldier and truly great man.

We do indeed grieve and sympathize with France in the death of her greatest soldier, one whom we have reason to regard not only with the highest esteem, but more, with almost affection because in a great crisis of the war it was to the Canadians he turned as the spear head of his attack, realizing that in their valour, in their bravery and their courage, he had the instrument best suited to accomplish the purpose which he had in mind. That in itself was a wonderful tribute paid by a great soldier to the valour and courage of our Canadian soldiers.

We grieve to-day with practically the whole world. It is an odd circumstance but it is a fact that the deceased marshal had never heard a gun fired in anger, until after the Great war broke out. Until then he had had no military experience in the field. He had been simply a student of war, and his two military textbooks are perhaps the two greatest books on war that the world has seen, for he applied to modern conditions the science of Napoleon, and in so doing made victory possible.

I remember having heard in England that a number of soldiers were regretting that Field Marshal Earl Roberts was not acquainted with the German language, and was therefore unable to appreciate the great works that had been produced by some of the masters of war in the German empire. But Earl Roberts remarked that he did not think it essential that he should be thus qualified because there was a colonel on the staff college of France whose works he did understand, and who he believed in the event of there being a great war within a limited number of years must be the man in whom the armies of many nations would repose their confidence. The foresight that characterized the view of Earl Roberts at that time was amply justified by the result.

The affection in which the late Marshal Foch was held in Great Britain is evidenced by the fact that our sovereign conferred upon him the Order of Merit, and indeed Foch was a Field Marshal of the British army at the time of his death. No greater honour could have been conferred upon a man who was not a British subject than was conferred upon Marshal Foch by the sovereign of the British Empire.

It is fitting that we in this parliament of Canada, the oldest and the greatest of the overseas dominions, should associate ourselves with the citizens of the great republic where he was born and of which he was such a distinguished citizen, associate ourselves also with the motherland and the other overseas dominions and with the other nations who were associated and allied with us in the Great war, in their grief at the passing of one whose genius, whose foresight, whose steady nerve, whose devotion to duty, whose calmness in the great moments of the war enabled him to snatch victory where defeat seemed imminent, and made the path of duty the path of glory, as was said by one of our own great poets when speaking of Nelson. And so to-day we associate ourselves with the right hon. the Prime Minister in the tribute that he has paid to this great figure which has just been removed from amongst us. We grieve with his native land, but we rejoice that a soul so great has passed to his eternal home.

Mr. JOHN EVANS (Rosetown): Mr. Speaker, we in this part of the house wish to associate ourselves with the sentiments that have been expressed by the right hon. the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) and the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) in their tribute on the death of a world hero. In Marshal Foch the world had a hero, not one of the foolhardy kind, but one whose courage was born of faith and of the guidance sought from the One in whose hands the destiny of all nations lies. Being a man of faith, he was also true to duty. He came forth at a time when the allies needed somebody in whom they could place their trust. Marshal Foch was a patriot of the first order, not one that sought glory particularly for himself or even for the French nation, for he had the cause of humanity at heart.

In considering the life of Marshal Foch let Canada to-day, with her two races, learn the lesson of cooperation, as our parent nations did in the time of their anguish when they made common cause in the task of winning the war. The name of Foch will go down in history, not particularly as that of a French patriot but as one who made humanity's cause his own. It is at times like this that the significance of all our actions and the eternal bearing which they have is brought home to us. Perhaps we can do nothing better now than to look back over the years leading up to the war, and in a national way do some real heart-searching and thus strive to find out if we can whether we were, either personally or nationally, in any way responsible for that great struggle which took away so much of the cream of humanity. To-day we mourn the death of a great and a good man.

Hon. CHARLES MARCIL (Bonaventure) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, I trust the house will allow me—being one of its oldest members—to thank, on behalf of the French-speaking people of Canada, the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King), and the distinguished leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett), for the so well deserved tribute paid to the great field-marshal Foch. If the citizens of English origin in this country manifest both admiration and veneration for the memory of this distinguished man and illustrious soldier, such admiration and veneration are doubly felt by those in whose veins flow the same blood as that which flowed in the veins of Ferdinand Foch.

We, of French ancestry, have always sought the "entente cordiale" between Great Britain and our former motherland. We most anxiously hoped for this entente, under Edward VII—the great arbitrator of peace in Europe—and we finally realized it with the great world war of 1914. We were doubly honoured on that Sunday morning in December, 1921, when Ferdinand Foch visited Ottawa to officially thank the Canadian people for its participation in the war. He had then gloriously crowned his victory, and had what is more the very great satisfaction of having prevented further carnage the moment that honour had been vindicated.

The hon. leader of the opposition has just told us that Field-Marshal Foch was mindful of his obligations to his God, and that, in the midst of the greatest battles, it was his custom to repair to a little countryside chapel and there invoke the aid of his Creator. He gave us a beautiful example of piety, that Sunday morning in December, 1921, when in leaving the railway station, he drove to the Basilica to hear holy mass, kneeling in the choir beside His Grace the Archbishop of Ottawa. He performed this religious duty previous to receiving the welcome tendered to him by the people. We have a vivid recollection of his visit to the University of Ottawa, the seat of French culture, and furthermore he duly paid his respects to the representative of our Sovereign in Canada.

No more need be said. I think it was but proper that a French voice be heard in this house so as to thank those who paid tribute to the great departed soldier. What we are saying to-day will be re-echoed in France, in Paris. Even at present, the government of the French Republic is making arrangements to pay the late Field Marshal Foch the supreme honours paid to her great men, to those who have well served their country.

I wish to thank the leaders of the three parties—since there are three parties in the house—for their participation in this display of sincere friendship and bonne entente we have shown to-day, by paying tribute to the great generalissimo who has just passed away.

GRADING OF GRAIN

WHEAT—INSPECTION, SHIPMENT AND PROTEIN CONTENT—REFERENCE TO COMMITTEE ON AGRICULTURE

The house resumed from Wednesday, March 20, consideration of the motion of Mr. Kay for concurrence in the third report of the select standing committee on agriculture and colonization.

Mr. M. N. CAMPBELL (Mackenzie): The Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Malcolm) in his brief address yesterday protested against this debate, Mr. Speaker, and asked that the committee on agriculture be permitted to inquire into the subject matter and recommend any changes that may be necessary in the Canada Grain Act. But in this debate we are specifically considering the failure of the Board of Grain Commissioners properly to enforce the Canada Grain Act. Now in substance and in effect the minister has recommended that the committee on agriculture be asked to recommend whether the act should be enforced. What we want, Mr. Speaker, is not more recommendations. What we want is not more legislation. What we want is the present act administered without procrastination and without equivocation; what we want is not the present supine and spineless attitude but the present law administered in the interest of the producers.

Yesterday the minister stated that he had found the board at all times ready to administer the act in the interests of the producer. That statement is amazing to me, particularly in view of sessional paper 141, which I have under my hand, and which gives a mass of evidence to the contrary. This sessional paper was compiled in the minister's own office.

Hundreds of resolutions have been passed by the farmers of western Canada asking that the administration of the grain act be transferred from the Department of Trade and Commerce to the Department of Agriculture. In effect, the farmers of western Canada are expressing a lack of confidence in the Minister of Trade and Commerce and, conversely, they are expressing confidence in the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell). And I must admit, Sir, that I have a good deal of sympathy for that view. I really believe it would be a victory for the farmers of western Canada if such a transfer were made at the present time. I have a high personal regard for the Minister of Trade and Commerce, but I must confess that so far as I can see his department has failed, and failed utterly, properly to administer this act in the interests of the producer. Therefore I say it would be a victory for the farmers of western Canada if the transfer asked for were made and responsibility for the administration of the act placed upon the present Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. MALCOLM: Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the hon. gentleman a question. He has made a charge—

Mr. CAMPBELL: I have only a few moments at my disposal.

Mr. MALCOLM: I think, Mr. Speaker will give the hon. gentleman extra time. He has stated that in his opinion the Department of Trade and Commerce has failed to administer the grain act. I want him to substantiate that charge with some evidence.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Mr. Speaker, it is unnecessary for me to go over again the facts that I placed before the house yesterday and the facts that were adduced by the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Garland). Surely those facts prove that the grain act has not been properly administered.

Mr. MALCOLM: The hon. member for Bow River stated yesterday that his criticism was directed against the judgment of the Board of Grain Commissioners. He quoted a telegram addressed by me to the board, and he distinctly stated that he heartily agreed with the opinion therein expressed.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Mr. Speaker, I read the very same telegram yesterday afternoon. Surely the minister will admit that the Board of Grain Commissioners are a part of his department; therefore their failure properly to administer the grain act is a failure on the part of the department. He cannot possibly separate the responsibility of the Board of Grain Commissioners from the responsibility of his department.

Mr. MALCOLM: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. gentleman admits that the moment the question referred to was called to the attention of the minister, the minister wired the commission his opinion, which is satisfactory to the hon. member, how can he argue that my department failed in carrying out the act?

An hon. MEMBER: Order.

Mr. CAMPBELL: May I say, Mr. Speaker, that we do not want opinions; we want action from the minister. The Board of Grain Commissioners failed to act when the minister expressed his opinion—and by the way that opinion was not expressed until nearly eighteen months after the trouble began—and if that is all we are to expect from his department, I think I have proven my case.

The farmers are demanding, first of all, a change in administration. And that is fundamental; if we have a proper change in administration, then everything else will follow as a matter of course. Secondly, they are asking for a change in the ticket covered by order in council P.C. 807—the ticket that made all this trouble possible. We are asking that the ticket drafted by Chief Justice Turgeon for the very section of the act under which we are operating to-day be put in its place. Lastly, may I say once again that the farmers are asking for a fearless enforcement of the law in the interests of the producers.

Mr. THOMAS F. DONNELLY (Willow Bunch): Mr. Speaker, I do not at this time intend to delay the house with any long discourse on this motion. This is neither the place nor the time to discuss it. I do not believe that any such discussion would result in our reaching any conclusion as to what really should be done. In my opinion the place to discuss this matter is the agriculture committee. Therefore I associate myself with the chairman of the committee (Mr. Kay) in asking that the scope of inquiry of the committee be enlarged and that this whole subject be referred to it for investigation. Before that committee we can take evidence, we can hear from the men who are being accused, and we can decide what are the best measures to adopt in order to remedy the evil we are complaining of. I do not think that the order of reference asked for by the committee on agriculture is quite wide enough; it seems to me that we should also include the administration of the grain act itself as well as the question of mixing, storing and marketing of wheat.

I wish to associate myself with those members who have already spoken in regard to the claim that the west considers this a very serious question. I fully agree with them when they say that the prairies are on fire and that the western farmer is expecting some redress from the wrongs from which he is suffering at the present time. The whole problem is a serious one to western Canada; the western farmer's bread and butter, his livelihood, depends upon the proper solution of this problem. I say therefore that he is expecting some redress. At the same time I wish to correct a false impression which prevails not only in this house but in the press of the country, namely, that the only evil in respect to which the western farmer is asking for redress is in connection with what is called the hybrid ticket. This is a slight wrong; it is an injury, but it is not so grave as is made out, it is not the great evil which the farmers are anxious to have removed. In my opinion it is but of minor importance compared to many other questions. I held meetings throughout my constituency last year, from one end of the district to the other, discussing the wheat question, and only at one of those meetings was the hybrid ticket introduced or spoken of. The press of the country seems, however, to be under the impression that the hybrid ticket is the only matter that calls for consideration. For instance, I read in this morning's Citizen an article in which the following appeared:

> The great denunciation, however, was over this hybrid grain ticket, by which it is claimed the farmer is double crossed and his wheat, destined to a pool elevator, gets to one of the private trade.

I say, however, that this matter is of comparatively slight importance. Let me show just how important it is. The other day in the committee we took up the matter of the Alberta pool. We were told that the pool had under its control only 50 per cent of the wheat of that province, while just 20 per cent of the wheat was handled through loading platforms and other public elevators, the other 30 per cent being handled by pool elevators. Now, not more than 10 per cent of that 20 per cent would go through private elevators under special bin tickets. I doubt whether more than 10 per cent would go through private elevators in that form; and of that quantity not more than half, that is to say, 5 per cent would come from farmers who are asking to be relieved from the hybrid ticket. So that when we analyze it we find that the complaint in regard to the hybrid ticket has reference to just 5 per cent of the people who are marketing wheat in Alberta. As I say, therefore, the question of the hybrid ticket is not of such great importance to the western farmer; it is not the only evil from which they are seeking relief. Personally I represent not only the pool but other farmers in my constituency outside the institution. I belong to the pool myself and have been made one of the victims of the hybrid ticket, and I do not believe in it. I am speaking not only for the men who are in the pool but also for those who are outside it, and I want to see justice done. But the point I wish to emphasize is that the western farmer is suffering from many evils other than that of the hybrid ticket. I agree with those who say that the act should be better administered. What is the use of having good laws if they are not administered properly? They serve no purpose in the world. But we do not pretend that the law embodied in the grain act is by any means perfect; far from it. I do not agree with the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Campbell) when he says that we do not want any more legislation but that we want only the proper administration of the grain act. What we need is not only the efficient administration of the act but the amendment of the act itself.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I was referring to one specific thing and not to the whole grain act.

Mr. DONNELLY: Well, that is what you said, and I took it for granted you knew what you were saying. I cannot help that. I repeat, we do not want merely the proper administration of the grain act; we want to have the act itself amended in many forms.

Now, you may ask, what is the cause of all this trouble? Where did it originate? Well, Mr. Speaker, it is a long tale, and it puts me in mind of these lines from one of our noted English poets:

> A lamentation and an ancient tale of wrong
> From an ill used race of men who cleave the soil,
> Sow the seed and reap the harvest with enduring toil.

Yes, it is a long tale of wrong, and it began away back in 1912 when members of the opposition were in these seats. In the session of 1912 they passed an amendment to the grain act making a partial sample market possible at several of the inspection points. They instituted a partial grain sample market, with the result that immediately after that we found men interested in private elevators going to our inspection points, looking over samples, taking out the tops of each lot of grain, having them diverted to their own mills and mixing elevators, and mixing them there. And this grew from bad to worse until at the present time we find all our mills throughout the country diverting wheat at Moose Jaw, Saskatoon, Winnipeg, Fort William, Kenora, Vancouver and throughout the country. These people break the seals, look at the grain, and if it is satisfactory to them they take it, sending it on if it is not suitable. In other words, the cream of our wheat is taken. But it is taken not only by our own mills and mixing elevators at the head of the lakes, but even American millers are coming over and picking out millions of bushels of the best wheat and shipping it across the line, where it is mixed with their product, milled and the flour sent out to compete with our own flour. This is one of the evils from which the farmers are asking to be relieved. I said the trouble originated away back in 1912. But the evil, which has increased to such an extent, was actually legalized in 1925. At that time the house passed legislation making legal the practice of mixing.

That illicit practice of mixing went on from bad to worse, from year to year until last year we saw in this house reports brought in from England indicating that our standards had degenerated and were not as good as they used to be. Complaints came from all parts of the country. The Prime Minister himself received a letter from the corn exchange in Liverpool complaining of our standards, and the question was asked everywhere: What is the matter with your wheat? What is wrong with it? It is not as good as it used to be. Is it any wonder the farmers in the west became alarmed and were up in arms? They said, "Here is the one product which has built up western Canada. Here is the one thing which has made western Canada what it is, the one thing on which the whole Dominion depends. Yet we find these men degrading our wheat, spoiling it, making money out of it while we are doing the work." Yes, Mr. Speaker, the farmers said, "The ox that treads the corn is still muzzled, and the grain trade is bound to keep him there." That is the cry throughout the west to-day. Last year someone or other—I do not know who it was; I do not know whether it was the inspectors or the grain commission, though evidently it must have been the grain inspectors, with the consent and knowledge of the grain commission—said, "We will have different standards; our standards at present are not good enough." And so they raised the standards of their own accord; this they did last fall. Let them deny it if they will. Yesterday I was sitting in the committee and I saw standard samples from 1924, 1925, 1926 and 1927 brought right up to date. We looked over those samples and any man could see that the standard this year was at least one grade higher than that which prevailed before. Mr. Newman who gave evidence, testified that the standards were one grade higher than they were last year. Someone did it, and what was the result? When the farmer began to send his wheat to Fort William or when the man back in the country sold his wheat to the country elevators, he found a big change. I saw hundreds of these elevator men throughout the country last year, and they told me they bought the wheat under the old standards but when they sent down the first two or three carloads they were told that the grades were not holding up. Wheat which they bought as No. 1 was graded No. 2 and No. 3; wheat they had graded as No. 3 was graded No. 4 and No. 5 and so on, and they were told they would have to grade harder. They were told to throw away their old standards and to grade harder, because the standards were changed. No wonder Doctor Birchard, when he examined the samples, when he ground and tested them by the milling and baking tests, said that the standards this year were better than ever before. He said he could get better flour and more flour out of No. 2 and No. 3 wheat than ever before. No wonder he could, because this year when he was grinding No. 3 wheat he was grinding what was No. 2 wheat last year; when he was testing No. 4 wheat this year it was equal to No. 3 wheat last year, and so on. That is the reason he found the flour so much better and why the baking and milling tests were so much more satisfactory.

Then what happened? When the wheat reached the old country it took the buyers there until the middle of November to realize that the wheat they were getting this year was better than it ever had been, and they were willing to pay a higher price. They tested the wheat and when they found it was so much better this year they paid a better price and the spread between the grades closed up. In the meantime, however, half the wheat had passed out of the hands of the farmers into the hands of the grain trade, and the trade made the extra money. I do not know how many millions of dollars the farmers lost; no one will ever know. No doubt it will run into tens of millions of dollars just through that simple act of raising the standards. And who raised them? The standards must have been raised by the inspectors.

Then we are told that when the Grain Standards Board met on October 9, to look over the grain, they lowered the standards; they decided the standards were too high and lowered them by half a grade. I had the experience personally of having wheat graded after October 9, and I got a better grade than I had been given in September; all the farmers experienced the same thing. So I contend that the grain commission should have known of this condition; if they did not know of it they should have found out.

Mr. MALCOLM: Will my hon. friend permit a question? I hope he will explain to the house that the standards are set by the standards board and not by the grain commission and that 50 per cent of the representation is from the producers.

Mr. DONNELLY: I am saying that the standards board lowered the grades on October 9.

Mr. MALCOLM: The grades were too high.

Mr. DONNELLY: Yes, someone raised them before that time.

Mr. BENNETT: Does the hon. gentleman know who set the first standards?

Mr. DONNELLY: They are supposed to be set on the standards of the year before, which continue until the standards board meets. For some reason, however, in the early part of the year someone raised the standards, and when the board met on October 9 they lowered the standards by half a grade. Still the grades were higher than last year, indicating an irregularity of some kind in connection with the setting of the grade standards.

Mr. FANSHER (Last Mountain): Who was responsible for that?

Mr. DONNELLY: It should be under the grain commission; they are responsible, of course. The raising of the standards in this way was one of the chief causes of the unrest in western Canada, but there is still another reason why the prairies are alarmed. To-day the farmers are better educated than ever before with regard to the marketing of wheat. They are learning about these things; they have found that they not only have to grow the wheat but they must learn how to market it. The directors of the pool travelled all over the country, holding meetings and discussing with the farmers their difficulties and needs, and the farmers are beginning to learn some of the evils of which they have been victims. Last year the agriculture committee of this house summoned several witnesses, from whom we obtained a good deal of very useful information. After the session was over we had thousands of copies of that evidence printed; we went west, held meetings throughout the province and scattered these reports everywhere. The farmers read the evidence, and when they found out what was going on in connection with the marketing of their wheat they became alarmed, and that also has had a good deal to do with the present condition of affairs. Those are the two chief causes of the present feeling in the west.

Then what are the farmers demanding now? There are minor issues here and there, of course, but there are three main demands which they make: First of all they demand that the mixing of grain in private terminals be discontinued at once, or in other words that all private terminals be done away with and that all terminals at the head of the lakes be made public terminals. They demand that our straight grades, from No. 1 to No. 6, be stored in separate bins, that we have officers who will go into these terminal elevators and enforce the law against mixing and that a fine be provided commensurate with the crime, a fine of $2,000, $5,000 or $10,000, if necessary, in order to enforce the law. They demand that there be no mixing at the seaboard, transfer elevator or on the way to market overseas, that any mixing be done when the grain is in the hands of the consumer, either the old country buyer or the old country miller, that the mixing be not done in this country at all and that the wheat as sold by the farmer should reach the consumer without being mixed in any way That is their chief demand.

Someone may ask what of the off grades, the grades mixed with seeds, which have to be cleaned. We would say that those grades should be stored in public elevators also; let them be cleaned under proper supervision; let the seeds be taken out and sold and let that grain be put in the public elevators. All other grains such as wet grain, damp grain, smutty grain and so on, should be cleaned and sold as such out of hospital elevators and should not be sent to the markets of the world as straight grades.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Does the hon. gentleman recognize any problem at all with regard to the mixing of grain in country houses?

Mr. DONNELLY: We recognize that such mixing is almost impossible to control, as it is impossible to control mixing by the farmer, but we demand that once the grain is inspected and passed on to the terminals it should not be mixed at all.

Another thing the farmers of the west demand is the proper administration of the Canada Grain Act; they realize that at present this act is not being properly administered under the grain commisison. The commission say it is impossible for them to enforce the act. Our grain trade has increased by leaps and bounds during the last few years; the area devoted to the growing of wheat has multiplied five, six or seven times. A few years ago we shipped our wheat only from Fort William and Port Arthur; to-day we are shipping out of Vancouver and Prince Rupert and soon we will be shipping through Hudson bay. We say that under these conditions a small commission of three men located at Fort William is not capable of looking after this great business and of administering the grain act as it should be administered. We believe the whole grain commission should be renovated; it should have more assistants, more clerks, and the number of commissioners should be increased. It should be scattered all over the prairies so that it could look into the numerous diculties which the farmers have to contend with and be able to adjust them in a proper manner. That is their second demand. They have a third demand, and it is this: that the diverting of wheat which goes on at the present time from Winnipeg, Moose Jaw, Saskatoon, Calgary, Edmonton and Vancouver be stopped.

Mr. BENNETT: Will the hon. member amplify that? There are many members from the east who have no knowledge of these matters, and it would assist them if the hon. member could give a little further information in that regard.

An hon. MEMBER: Your policies are wrong in the east.

Mr. BENNETT: It is the government that is wrong.

Mr. DONNELLY: I will explain what I mean by this diverting of wheat and the skimming of the cream off the different grades. First let me explain just how the different standards are set. Specimens are drawn and they are set as the standards for the different grades. Everything that goes into No. 1 grade must be as good as or better than the standard sample. Let me put it this way: Suppose 90 is the standard for No. 1; anything that goes into No. 1 must range between 90 and 100.

Mr. HAY: Are those standards set by the board, or designated by parliament?

Mr. DONNELLY: The statutory grades 1, 2 and 3 are set by law. The samples of wheat which are drawn to represent those grades are taken by a body of inspectors. Grades 4, 5, 6 and feed, which are not statutory grades, are set by the Grain Standards Board, a body of men who are chosen every year, I think. They meet in the fall of the year and draw the standards for those several grades.

Mr. BENNETT: The producers are represented on that board?

Mr. DONNELLY: That board is made up of representatives of the producers, the millers and the grain trade. These men meet about the first of October in Winnipeg and set the standards.

[Mr. Malcolm.]

I will explain further what I mean with regard to this diverting of wheat. Of necessity, some of the wheat in No. 1 grade will be right down on the line at 90, and will range up to 100. When the wheat comes into Winnipeg, or into the Grain Exchange building to be inspected, it first goes into the room where the inspectors are. The grade is fixed on the sample and it is then put in an adjoining room where it is available to everyone. Suppose we have a sample which runs as high as 100. A representative of some milling firm from across the line comes in and sees that sample classed as No. 1. He realizes that it is right at the top of the grade, and he says, "Send that to my mixing elevator," and the car of wheat is sent to the elevator to be mixed, or possibly sent to some mill to be milled. The result is that they have bought the cream and there is nothing left but the wheat which is just on the line. Then again, you may have a wheat so near the border line that the inspectors are unable to decide whether it should be graded No. 1 or No. 2. It is put in No. 2 and when the expert comes along he sees that it should probably be No. 1, and he buys the car to be sent to the elevator to be mixed with other grades of wheat.

Mr. ADSHEAD: He buys it as No. 2?

Mr. DONNELLY: He pays the price for No. 2, but he is getting practically No. 1 wheat. Not only do they do that, but during the past season, as has been brought out before the royal grain commission sitting in Saskatchewan at the present time, they have gone through the railroad yards accompanied by inspectors and have broken the seals on cars and picked out the best grain. This procedure has taken place at Kenora, Calgary, Saskatoon and all over the country.

Mr. HEAPS: What authority have they to go in and take the cars out of the yards?

Mr. DONNELLY: You will have to ask the grain commissioners. They are the ones who say what shall and what shall not be done.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Have they any authority?

Mr. DONNELLY: No.

Mr. IRVINE: Was that done under any authority?

Mr. DONNELLY: Apparently not.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Who actually affixes the seals?

Mr. DONNELLY: The railway companies.

Mr. ADSHEAD: If the railway companies put them on, has anyone the right to take them off before the car reaches its destination?

Mr. DONNELLY: Only with the consent of the railway company.

Mr. VALLANCE: The inspection department.

Mr. DONNELLY: The inspection department have the consent of the railway companies to break the seals to inspect the grain.

These are questions which can be brought out only in the committee, and that is why I think the whole thing should be sent to the committee to be dealt with there. These are questions which interest the farmers, not only in western Canada, but over the whole of the Dominion, and I think the matter should be sent to the agriculture committee to be looked into with the view of enacting remedial legislation.

Mr. A. M. CARMICHAEL (Kindersley): Mr. Speaker, I do not believe I should find it necessary to make any apology for continuing this debate. I consider this matter to be one of major importance, in fact, I am not so sure but that it transcends in importance even the debate upon the budget. Therefore, not having any intention of taking part in the budget debate, I feel quite clear in my conscience when I take some part in this debate.

I say this matter transcends in importance the budget debate, more particularly for financial reasons. When the Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb) brought down this budget and announced that he was saving the tax-payers of Canada approximately $25,000,000, because of certain reductions in taxation, that fact was received with approval throughout the length and breadth of Canada. Twenty-five million dollars is a large sum of money; it is more than most of us have ever seen or are likely to see. But I want to make this statement: Because of the unscientific grading of our 1928 wheat crop and the ineffectual administration of the Canada Grain Act in relation thereto, the farmers of western Canada have been deprived of an amount seven times as large. I see the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Malcolm) draws a big sigh.

Mr. MALCOLM: One hundred and seventy-five million?

Mr. CARMICHAEL: I hope this will get under his skin sufficiently to cause not only a little perturbation of feeling, but some action, for that is what we are looking for in western Canada. He may be inclined to question the statement I am going to make, but I intend to prove it with figures.

The wheat crop of the prairie provinces for the year 1928 amounted to 511,444,000 bushels in round figures. Let us take the average price received for the four years during which the wheat pool operated in western Canada, namely 1924, 1925, 1926 and 1927. I do not intend to take the maximum price, but only the average price as given in the January, 1929, monthly Bulletin of Agriculture Statistics. The average price received during the year 1924 was $1.21 per bushel.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): What was the yield for that year?

Mr. CARMICHAEL: I will come to that later. The average price for the year 1925 was $1.25 per bushel; and for the year 1926, $1.08. During 1927 there was considerable wet, damp and tough grain. The weather conditions were very adverse in our province during that year, and the average price received was only 97 cents per bushel. We will not take any one year, but we will add the four of them together and take the average of the average prices of the four years. The total is $4.51, and dividing that by four we get an average price of $1.12¾ for the four years during which the pool operated. The same publication tells us that the average price of the 1928 crop was 77 cents a bushel.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): How does the hon. member know?

Mr. CARMICHAEL: My hon. friend will have to ask the Department of Trade and Commerce.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): Who is the author?

Mr. CARMICHAEL: I shall have to refer my hon. friend to a department of the government for the authority. It is printed by F. A. Acland for the Department of Trade and Commerce.

The average price over the four-year period was $1.12¾ and in 1928 the price was 77 cents. The difference, which is 35¾ cents per bushel, represents the loss on the 1928 crop. If you take that on the total crop of 511,444,000 bushels, you have a figure amounting to more than $175,000,000.

Mr. MALCOLM: Does my hon. friend attribute the loss in price on last year's crop to the administration of the act, or does he give any credit to the frost of the season and a lower grading on account of the frost?

Mr. CARMICHAEL: If the minister had caught my remark, I attributed the loss to two things: first, the unscientific grading of our wheat, and, second, the ineffectual administration of the Canada Grain Act. Those two factors are responsible for the loss of $175,000,000 to the farmers of the three prairie provinces. That is seven times the amount that we will realize from the so-called, much approved Robb budget of this year.

Mr. MALCOLM: Does my hon. friend argue that we could devise a method of grading—the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Millar) spoke of protein content— that would give an additional $175,000,000 to the farmer for a frost-affected crop?

Mr. CARMICHAEL: According to the evidence produced before the agriculture committee I am quite satisfied that a method can be devised whereby the value of the wheat will go to the producer thereof, rather than to the milling interests or to the commission men, who are the middlemen in between the producer and the consumer. This is such a serious feature that I attribute a great deal of importance to it, much more so than possibly the hon. member for Willow Bunch (Mr. Donnelly) does. He tried to give the house the impression that the matter was of rather minor importance. It is of a great deal of importance and it is the chief cause of unrest in western Canada.

I should like to deal for a short time with the matter as it appears from the viewpoint of the farmer under perhaps three different headings: his lot and condition prior to the operation of the pool; his situation under the four years of pooling grain, and his situation during the 1928 crop season. I will deal more particularly with my province of Saskatchewan—the pool operated in Alberta in 1923, but the quantity of grain handled was so small that it did not have any appreciable effect on world prices. In 1924 we had really the inauguration of wheat-pool marketing on a large scale. Let us take the year 1923 and consider the lot of the individual farmer during that year. According to this publication the statistics were as follows:

Total world production, 3,818,000,000 bushels.
Western Canadian crop, 454,000,000 bushels.
Price realized—
Manitoba, 67 cents per bushel.
Saskatchewan, 65 cents per bushel.
Alberta, 65 cents per bushel.

When the individual farmer came to reckon up his accounts in the fall of the year, and pay for the expense of handling the crop, the cutting, twine, threshing, hauling, different interest accounts and store accounts, he found that he was behind. He found that it cost him more to handle his crop than he realized from it, and in my particular section of Saskatchewan there was a great deal of unrest among the farmers. It was freely stated there that it cost in the neighbourhood of $1 a bushel to market that crop. I am not going to take that because it might be considered an extreme figure. An hon. member in this corner of the house told me that he kept close track and he found that it cost him 93 cents a bushel to handle that crop. Supposing we take the figure of 90 cents a bushel, which is well within the mark, and the farmer realized 65 cents; that is, he lost 25 cents on every bushel he produced. If he produced 2,000 bushels of grain that year he lost $500. If he produced 3,000 bushels, he lost $750. If he produced 5,000 bushels, he lost $1,250. The more bushels he produced, the more he lost. Is there then, any reason for wondering that the farmer was very much discouraged? The morale of the farmer at that particular time was exceedingly low. In fact, many of them who were able to get out of the farming business did so. But those who had the desire to stick there were instrumental in bringing about the formation of the wheat pool which began operations the next year, 1924. Let us glance at the operation of the wheat pool during those four years. In 1924 the total world production was somewhat less than in 1923, less by 349,000,000 bushels and the western Canadian crop was less by more than 200,000,000 bushels. Some would be prepared to say that that accounts for the enhanced price. We will let them say so. These are the prices during the crop year of 1924:

	Per bushel
Manitoba	$1 24
Saskatchewan	1 21
Alberta	1 20

That is quite an advance over the prices of the previous year. Let me give the figures for the next year, 1925:

	Bushels
Total world production	4,030,000,000
Western Canadian crop	372,000,000

That is, the total world production was considerably more than that of 1924 and also more than that of 1923, and the western Canadian crop in 1925 was considerably more than that of 1924. But how do we find the prices?

	Per bushel
Manitoba	$1 22
Saskatchewan	1 25

That is four cents over the price of 1924.

Alberta	$1 19

Let us take the next year, 1926:

	Bushels
Total world production	4,178,000,000
Western Canadian crop	385,000,000

Both greater than that of the preceding year. Yet when we look at the prices, they are as follows:

Manitoba	$1 09
Saskatchewan	1 08
Alberta	1 05

It will be noticed that the price is still keeping up even though the world production is increasing each year. The figures for 1927 are as follows:

	Bushels
Total world production	4,204,000,000
Western Canadian crop	457,000,000

Both greater again. That was the year of adverse weather conditions, and yet the prices were as follows:

	Per bushel
Manitoba	$1 06
Saskatchewan	97

We can see that during those four years the farmer was receiving considerably more for his labour than he did during the year 1923. As a result, his morale improved considerably, and his financial standing in the community was enhanced to no little extent. This was all brought about by the orderly marketing of his crop through the wheat pool, and by the elimination of the middle man. I would like to point out that the enhanced prices given to the farmer were partly brought about by the pool method of marketing, and with all due respect to what my hon. friend from Willow Bunch has said about mixing, considerable profit did accrue to the pool members through the mixing of grain at the head of the lakes.

Here is another point that we who are interested in this matter should notice. There are approximately 5,000 country elevators scattered over the three prairie provinces. Approximately 1,000 of these are owned and controlled by the three western wheat pools, leaving 4,000 owned and controlled by the grain trade. In the province of Saskatchewan the wheat pool handles about 60 per cent of the wheat. There you have a rather peculiar situation. The pool handles about 60 per cent of our Saskatchewan wheat, and yet we have only 20 per cent of the elevators through which to handle it. They handle the larger part of the Saskatchewan crop through a small number of elevators at country points. Knowing the importance of having the wheat go through their own terminal elevators, every effort is made to get every pool member to ship his grain through his own pool elevator to his own pool terminal. I do not think I need amplify that point.

Hon. members know that at the head of the lakes the mixing privilege prevails. Considerable mention has been made of mixing. I need only to refer to what is called the Price, Waterhouse report of 1918 to give you some idea of the large profits that are made by the terminal elevators at the head of the lakes. In opposition to what one hon. member said as to the unimportance of this point, I would like to emphasize its importance, and that is that pool wheat, in the opinion of pool members, should go through pool country elevators and go to pool terminals.

There is another advantage to be gained. In the 1927 crop year, we were paid 1½ cents a bushel for every bushel we shipped through the pool elevator. If a man shipped 10,000 bushels of wheat through a pool elevator, he would get a cheque for $150, which is a nice little sum to get from the profits of these elevators. That makes the farmers naturally want to have their wheat go through their own elevators, but here is the unfortunate situation. There are not sufficient elevators to handle all the wheat which the pool members wish to market. In my own town last year the pool elevator was plugged to the roof practically all through the shipping season. Millions of bushels of pool grain must go through other elevators to get to the head of the lakes if it is to get there at all during the crop year. That brought about a situation where the pool had to make an agreement with the grain trade, and they did enter into an agreement whereby pool wheat would be handled by their country elevators, but on the strength of the 1927 amendment to the Canada Grain Act such wheat could be sent to pool terminals if the grower of the grain so desired. That is where the whole trouble comes in. That is where we have our quarrel with the administration of the Canada Grain Act. I am not particular whether the Minister of Trade and Commerce gets into the quarrel and takes the responsibility or not. The responsibility rests upon the Board of Grain Commissioners, and the board being a part of the department, I do not see how the minister can very well entirely evade all responsibility. I have covered the four year period. Let us now look at the individual farmer during the 1928 crop year.

In the year 1928 also we had a large world production of wheat. I have not the complete returns, but the figure I have is that the world production, excluding Russia and China, was 3,780,000,000 bushels. If the totals from Russia and China are included, the world's production would probably be greater than in 1927. Our western Canadian production was over 513,000,000 bushels, but our price in Manitoba was 92 cents, in Saskatchewan 77 cents, and in Alberta, 75 cents. Let us see what that means. The 1928 Saskatchewan price was 44 cents per bushel less than the 1924 price, 48 cents a bushel less than the 1925 price, 31 cents a bushel less than the 1926 price, and 20 cents a bushel less than the 1927 price, when we had a great deal of inferior grain which had to be reconditioned and put through the drying elevators. That represents a tremendous loss to the agriculturists. I pointed out earlier in my remarks that it represents an average loss to the farmer of 35¾ cents a bushel on the movement of the 1928 crop. Bringing it down to the individual farmer, I have figured it out on a basis of 90,000 pool farmers, with an average production of a little over 2,000 bushels, and taking this loss of 35¾ cents a bushel means a loss to each pool member, and by the way, that is the farmer I am particularly interested in in this connection, of over $700 for the 1928 crop year. Now if we apportion the $25,000,000 saving as outlined in the Robb budget among the 90,000 pool farmers, do you know, Mr. Speaker, what it would amount to? It would amount to just a little over $13 a year to each one of these pool farmers who had stood a loss of over $700 in the movement of the 1928 crop. How long a time, then, and how many more of the so-called beneficial Robb budgets would we have to have for the pool farmer to make up his loss in one year? It would take just about fifty-five years, and that is a little too long for most of us to wait.

The hybrid ticket has been mentioned, and it is not necessary for me to dwell on that. The intention of the 1927 amendment to the Canada Grain Act was to give the producer of grain the right to designate to what terminal elevator his grain should go. The grain trade seemingly has been able to circumvent that intention. Thus far they have been enabled to do so by means of the agreement which they were able to force—I might almost use that expression—from the pool officials. I use the expression "able to force" from them, because the agreement was not consummated until just before the movement of the 1927 crop began. Here were the farmers throughout the country with grain to move and no agreement consummated between the pool and the trade. The trade was able to say: Here is what we will give you; take it or leave it. In that way they forced the agreement on the pool authorities, and after getting them in that corner the trade tried to make it a six-year agreement. It was finally adjusted on a three-year basis, which means that the agreement operated for 1927 and 1928, and will operate for 1929, when it terminates. I presume that if during that time the trade realize as much out of our grain as they did in the 1928 crop year, they will be able to lie low for a while thereafter. I hope, though, before the movement of the 1929 crop we will have some action.

The Board of Grain Commissioners are coming in for a share of criticism to which they are certainly entitled. They are a body of men well paid, and apparently well qualified to administer the Canada Grain Act. And yet they have failed to administer it properly. Resolutions have been passed by at least two of our farm bodies in the west. I have before me such a resolution passed by the Saskatchewan section of the United Farmers of Canada assembled in annual convention last month. The resolution reads:

> Whereas the present board has demonstrated its inability to supervise in any manner the operations of country elevators, and for all practical purposes has ceased to fulfil the purpose for which it was originally appointed;
> And whereas the producers of grain have lost confidence in the present board;—

Omitting part of the resolution I direct the attention of the house to the following words:

> Be it resolved that this convention demands the removal of the present Board of Grain Commissioners.

That, Mr. Speaker, is the almost unanimous opinion of the farmers of western Canada today; they are demanding the removal of the Board of Grain Commissioners. They are not charging them with dishonesty; neither has any member of this house, so far as I know; they are simply charging them with failure to carry out what they were appointed to carry out. In a word, the commissioners have failed to administer the Canada Grain Act properly. The public of western Canada has lost confidence in the board, and no matter what amendments might be proposed to the act, no matter how far in the agriculture committee we might investigate the board, it is my opinion that we cannot bolster up that public opinion any longer to tolerate the administration of the act by the present board. The demand is insistent that a change be made in the personnel. If the Minister of Trade and Commerce wishes to be fair to public opinion in the west and to what, I believe, he knows to be fair himself, I think he will agree with me that it is time that the wishes of the agriculturists of the prairie provinces should be considered and the required change made.

The motion before the house is, of course, that this report be concurred in. The report calls for enlarged powers in order that the committee may consider and report on the subject of storage, shipping, mixing, inspection and grading of grain. They are all very good, they all should be considered. But from that report has been left out the most essential part so far as the farmers of western Canada are concerned; there is no mention of the committee taking into consideration the administration of the Canada Grain Act. I am of opinion, Mr. Speaker, that this omission should be made good, that the committee should investigate the administration of the Canada Grain Act. But I am not prepared to admit that the action which we are looking for by the Department of Trade and Commerce should be deferred until such investigation is made. No matter how much investigating may be carried on, no matter how dense a smoke screen may be thrown around the activities of the Board of Grain Commissioners in the course of the investigation by the committee on agriculture, I am of opinion that this investigation would not restore public confidence in the present members of the Board of Grain Commissioners.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Does the hon. member think a smoke screen will be thrown around the investigation before the agriculture committee?

Mr. CARMICHAEL: My experience has been that more smoke than screen is thrown around whatever we undertake to investigate. Such a dense cloud of smoke is thrown around the real issue that it becomes more or less obscured as the investigation proceeds.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Does not the hon. member think that some good suggestions may be made?

Mr. CARMICHAEL: Yes, I think possibly some good suggestions may be evolved through such an investigation. But the best suggestion made in the course of this debate, and it has been emphasized over and over again, is that the board should be quietly but very definitely relieved of the position which it now holds, and another board, possibly of five members, put in its place.

Hon. CHARLES A. DUNNING (Minister of Railways and Canals): Mr. Speaker, I regard the Canada Grain Act as a unique piece of legislation. Nothing akin to it is to be found on the statute books of any other country, so far as I know. It has been evolved gradually out of a desire on the part of succeeding parliaments, without regard to which party was in power, to surround the marketing of the major raw product of this country with such safeguards as will ensure fair treatment of the producer by those engaged in the business connected with his product or in the transportation of it.

Legislation of this character is invariably difficult to administer, for the reason that in a measure it deprives men of the right to make the usual contractual relations with each other in connection with the ordinary buying and selling of commodities. I think it is correct to say that since there was first the Manitoba Grain Act—as it was originally called—down until to-day succeeding governments of whatever party have adopted the position of trying to find out so far as possible what the people of the three provinces particularly concerned thought should be done with respect to this act or to any amendment of it as the case might be. I think too that it may well be said that every government has shown a willingness to respond to the united judgment of the representatives of those three provinces with respect to the development of the act from time to time.

The act does show historically a development resulting from careful thought and careful study by the farmers themselves who are primarily affected, and by their representatives in this house, to whatever party they might belong. Furthermore, the act bears upon its face an historical record of the effect of investigations by, not one but by at least five royal commissions appointed either by federal authority or by the authority of one of the provinces primarily concerned. I had the privilege of serving as a member of one of those royal commissions some years ago. It was also my duty as an agent for my fellow-farmers to handle a great deal of grain during a considerable period of years, and I do deprecate in the very strongest terms the use of extreme statements and arguments which overshoot the mark, in attempting to secure redress in connection with a matter of this kind. Particularly do I deprecate the use of figures such as those advanced by the hon. member for Kindersley (Mr. Carmichael) a few moments ago, when he stated in the plainest of terms, on the basis of some hypothetical calculation which he made, that, given a proper grading system, it would have been possible for the farmers of western Canada to have received $175,000,000 more for the 1928 crop than they did receive.

Mr. CARMICHAEL: I did not put it that way.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend in answering a question made it clear that it was his intention to convey that impression. However, if he wishes to correct it I am quite prepared to let him do so.

Mr. CARMICHAEL: I took the average price of the four year average and showed what the total amount would be from the 1928 crop, deducting the price of the 1928 crop from that average.

Mr. DUNNING: Yes; but my hon. friend said in reply to a question that in his opinion the difference was due to two things and two things only—unscientific grading and faulty administration of the grain act. Let me say to him that I have a great deal more faith in the western Canada pools than to believe that they would permit for a moment to exist a situation which if removed would allow them to get $175,000,000 more for the farmers of the west.

Mr. CARMICHAEL: That is why we are doing so much talking.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend is not speaking for the pools any more than I am, and I am satisfied of this: Having sold personally, or under my personal direction, more grain for the western farmers than any organization outside the pool, I want to assure the hon. gentleman that if there is any means of getting any such sum for the farmers of the west it is quite within the power of the wheat pool, and within the power of any other large organization controlling such a volume of grain, to get that sum in spite of any grading system. And the pool officers would be the first to confirm this statement. Why? If it is possible to get any such spread as that it is not only within the power of the pool to get it, but I am sure they would do so in a moment. They can ship that grain over, in spite of any grading system, and dispose of it in sample cargoes, without obtaining a certificate from the Board of Grain Commissioners. Normally it does not pay to do so—and why? Because there is in fact no such wastage as that depicted by my hon. friend. That there is wastage and loss no one denies; I would be the last to deny it. In connection with varying types of damage to which the western crops are subject from time to time; with the necessary variation in standard samples from year to year; with slips in administration; with the ever present desire of the grain trade to make as much as they can: with all these things to contend with, undoubtedly there are, and always have been from the very inception of the grain act, losses to farmers individually. But to take an average set of conditions over four years, disregarding, as my hon friend did, average world prices for the same four years, and merely to rest a case on the argument that we should have as much this year as our average of last year—

Mr. BENNETT: No, no; he did not say that.

Mr. DUNNING: I will correct that—that we should have at least as much this year as the average of the past four years—

Mr. CARMICHAEL: I do not want the minister to represent me as saying something which I did not say. I repeat, I did not make any such statement.

Mr. BENNETT: He said, the average of the average.

Mr. DUNNING: Very well, the average of the average. I presume my hon. friend will take the leader of the opposition's word for it, that what he said was that we should have as much as the average of the average for the past four years; that is to say, the average of the average of our receipts for the past four years. But the hon. gentleman disregards entirely the average world prices for those years. May I point out, however, that when we come to deal with figures in that way, taking an average of an average over a period of four years, no farmer has yet lived on an average. The fellow who has No. 6 wheat this year cannot be comforted by the reflection that the average of the average of the last four years was No. 4, with therefore a higher price and a higher intrinsic value. He does not live on the averages he gets; he gets what he can out of the wheat which he has just then, and the average of what went before does not do him very much good.

I do not want to spend a great deal of time on this question except to say this. While I agree with my hon. friend that losses do exist, to build up any such fantastic total as $175,000,000 of a loss to western farmers on this year's crop is tremendously to overstate what could possibly be accurate, and it is not doing justice to the intelligence of the farmers of western Canada or of the management of the pool, who of course could easily avoid such a stupendous loss if there were any danger of its being incurred.

Mr. EVANS: May I ask a question?

Mr. DUNNING: I have only forty minutes.

Mr. EVANS: Did I understand the minister to say that the pool could ship its own wheat through all the transfers and terminals and maintain its identity to the European market?

Mr. DUNNING: Undoubtedly.

Mr. EVANS: How can they do it?

Mr. DUNNING: Only one year ago the head of the pool came to me as Minister of Railways, responsible for the operation of the Port Colborne elevator, which handles more grain than any other elevator in Canada, and asked whether special arrangements could be made for transfer at that point from the larger vessels travelling on the upper lakes to the smaller boats going through the St. Lawrence, and I said that I should be delighted to make special bin arrangements so that the shippers might be sure of the identity of their own grain during transit—so far as that particular elevator was concerned at any rate—on the one condition that they used the full bin space allotted them, and did not merely keep a few thousand bushels at the bottom of the bin, monopolizing the whole space of the bin. That has not yet been made use of. But there is no doubt at all that the wheat pool to-day can ship its own grain from the prairies, through its own terminal at Vancouver, loading into boats chartered by itself and delivering in Europe, exactly as it pleases. That is the situation, and I do not wish to be betrayed into appearing to criticize the pool management. What I am saying is that if there were any such loss as that represented by the hon. member for Kindersley then the wheat pool undoubtedly would be at fault in selling the crop for $175,000,000 less than it was really worth; because I am sure of the ability of the men managing the pools to handle the situation with sufficient care to see that no such tremendous loss would occur.

Mr. CARMICHAEL: The pool does not handle all the crop.

Mr. DUNNING: Well, take half of it; let us say the loss to the pool members was $90,000,000, taking my hon. friend on his own ground. I repeat, I have more faith in the management of the western pools than to believe that.

With regard to the grain act, I am of the opinion, as the minister stated at the outset, that these matters could be more effectively discussed in committee. I have spent twenty-six or twenty-seven years in the west and I do not remember a year in which the grain act and the marketing of grain has not been under discussion by the organized farmers of the west. It was my privilege as one of them to come to Ottawa from time to time and to go to other places as well to recommend specific changes to deal with specific matters which in our judgment would improve the marketing of grain. And the act has been built up gradually just in that manner. That it is perfect no one will contend for a moment. Indeed, one of the reasons why the Canada Grain Act is not perfect to-day is the fact that the farmers of western Canada have not always been agreed to what constituted perfection in connection with some important parts of that legislation. I know that my own views are not necessarily the views of the farmers of the west; I never arrogate to myself the privilege of speaking for all the farmers. Many of these matters have been matters of dispute—friendly dispute, it is true—over a period of years within the farmers' organizations themselves, as my hon. friend from Rosetown (Mr. Evans) knows. Let me say however that the description used here of the hybrid ticket is not a correct description as applied to the ticket under discussion, but is a correct description as applied to form B-1 in the existing grain act. Form B-1 was used for many years before it found a place in the grain act. And what is it? It is a true hybrid. And what is a true hybrid? It is neither one thing nor the other, but a part of both. Form B-1 is a graded storage ticket but subject to inspectors grade on dockage. It is not a special bin ticket. In big black type in the form of ticket in the act itself the words appear, "This is not a special bin ticket." I will not criticize my hon. friend from Bow River (Mr. Garland) and others for the view they have expressed in this regard, because the practice is general throughout the west and has been for many years. The grain trade had been representing that ticket for the last fifteen years as a special bin ticket. It is not. And why not? Because it involves no obligation upon the elevator company to preserve the identity of grain delivered; it only imposes upon the farmer the obligation of seeing that the identity of the sample of that grain is preserved. The special bin ticket on the other hand, form C, imposes upon the elevator company the obligation of maintaining that grain in its identity and of delivering at the terminal that identical grain. The graded storage ticket, which is not a hybrid, involves the obligation that the farmer shall deliver his grain, and the elevator company guarantees the grade and states plainly on the ticket what the grade is. The principle of the old grain act was that the elevator company must guarantee to the farmer one of two things. Either they must guarantee the grade of his grain to be delivered at the terminal or they must guarantee to preserve the identity of the grain delivered to them and deliver it to the terminal. That did not suit the grain trade of that day, so they instituted this cute thing which finally found its way into the Canada Grain Act, and we must remember that it found its way there with the consent of western farmers. The line elevators instituted this ticket, which relieved them of the responsibility of guaranteeing either the grade or the identity of the grain. They use first a graded storage ticket, but across its face was stamped "Subject to inspectors, grade and dockage"; the elevator company could do what they liked with the grain, but they were supposed to forward a sample to the chief inspector, paying the farmer later for, or delivering to him at the terminal, the grade set by the inspector on the sample. As a result of years of experience and as a result of repeated fights before the Board of Grain Commissioners in connection with the matter I have no hesitation in saying that not in 20 per cent of the cases where this hybrid ticket was used were samples ever sent to the chief inspector for grading. I make that statement, and the records of cases before the Board of Grain Commissioners will bear it out. As the hon. member for Rosetown well knows, I was in the unfortunate position of leading a minority fight against that ticket for a long period of years. I say I led a minority fight, because the great majority of the farmers in western Canada did appear to be deceived into the belief that this was a special bin ticket and that they were receiving the advantages of separate binning.

Mine was a losing fight, so much so that in 1925 that particular ticket was placed in the Canada Grain Act and to-day I may inform my hon. friend from Bow River that under this thing which is generally called a special bin ticket and which by law is not such a ticket, an elevator with only ten bins, as he put it, can and does receive grain from fifty farmers if necessary. That is how it is done, and that is the true hybrid ticket. In my personal opinion, which I do not hesitate to state to-day as I stated it years ago, the great mixing evil depreciating the quality of Canadian grain starts right there, because the great majority of western farmers who are using line elevator facilities are doing so under that B-1 ticket, which is a hybrid and which involves a guarantee neither of grade nor of identity by the elevator company but the forwarding of a sample to the chief inspector. I suggest to this committee if it sits, although I am not a member of it, that they find out how many samples have been forwarded this year to the chief inspector under ticket B-1, for determination as to grades. I venture to say they will find that the condition which existed a number of years ago exists to-day and that in practice samples are not forwarded in more than 20 per cent of the cases in which this ticket is used. However, I must say again that the system was started with the consent of the farmers; I must admit that whether I like it or not. Some of us protested strongly, but I must admit that until this year the farmers have appeared to be satisfied with that system. Although I am not a lawyer it is my opinion that the addition of the words mentioned by the hon. member for Bow River would constitute an illegal addition, but I am prepared to hear evidence on that point and I suppose lawyers will try to convince judges that this was a perfectly proper addition. However, it is only carrying one step further what was done over a long period of years with respect to this hybrid thing which is neither one thing nor the other.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Just to make the record clear, I would like to ask my hon. friend if it is not true that ticket B-1 is not a special bin ticket and never was such; that it has stamped upon its face the words "This is not a special bin ticket." And is it not true that ticket C is a special bin ticket and that most of the discussion has been about that ticket?

Mr. DUNNING: Does my hon. friend say that most of the discussion has been about ticket C? I will venture this assertion, and I hope the committee will investigate its accuracy, that ticket C, the special bin ticket, is not issued by a line elevator in western Canada as a general practice at all; they issue ticket B-1, as they always have done, calling it a special bin ticket, and in spite of the words stamped on the face of the ticket the farmer is led to believe that he is getting a special bin.

Mr. BENNETT: Surely the hon. gentleman does not mean to say that the farmer is so lacking in intelligence as to be unable to read what is on the ticket.

Mr. DUNNING: As a result of long experience in dealing with these matters I state that as a matter of fact the farmer does not study the ticket he receives when he is getting his grain from a threshing machine. I have made that statement at scores of farmers' meetings in past years, and it is a question of fact. The practice which I am now outlining, that of issuing this ticket and describing it as a special binning, has been carried on in western Canada for more than twenty years; I will leave it to any farmer here who has studied the question, and I will be content to leave it to the investigation of the committee.

Now I want to pass on to another important point, and here I wish it made plain that I am merely offering criticism of a system rather than an argument in answer to my hon. friend from Bow River; I am trying, from an experience covering a number of years, to place on record some things which may be worth investigation by this committee in the general interests of the farmers of western Canada. I refer to the mixing evil, and here again my position has been rather that of a lone wolf. I believe to-day, as I believed twenty years ago, during the period when I had some familiarity with this matter, that the practice of permitting the mixing of the various grades of grain in terminal elevators or in private elevators operated to the detriment of the producers of grain in Canada. To-day I believe that just as strongly as I ever believed it; if hon. members who are familiar with western farmers' organizations will let their minds go back a few years they will remember, in connection with the losing fight on this very question, when the farmers were offered the glittering bauble of a sample market if only they would permit unlimited mixing, and the majority of the farmers agreed to that proposal. At that time I made a statement; sometimes I am mistaken but in this case I was right, when I said, that if unlimited mixing were permitted there would not be one public terminal at the head of the lakes within five years from that time with the exception of a government elevator. Has that statement been borne out? To-day there is not one public terminal at the head of the lakes with the exception of the government elevator operated by the Board of Grain Commissioners, and which receives just the rag-tag and bob-tail which none of the private houses will take. That is the position, and it has been brought about because the majority of the farmers in western Canada, no matter what their shade of politics—and I am not discussing this on a political but on an economic basis—consented to it. Mixing was legalized then; it is legal to-day, and in my opinion we never will get back to a place where the wheat of western Canada will take its proper place in the markets of the world until we eliminate the mixing of the straight grades of grain.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friends from Alberta applaud that statement. It is only fair to say that as far as I can judge from the public records, the farmers of Alberta to-day are in about the same frame of mind with regard to that matter as the farmers of Saskatchewan were ten years ago; that is to say, the farmers of Alberta to-day appear to be satisfied that there is some advantage to the producer in mixing. There is evidence of that in the attitude of the official organizations. It is only during this year that one is able to say with any degree of confidence that the farmers of Saskatchewan are convinced that mixing is a real evil. They were more or less deluded previously by the argument which was used so frequently: You had better not give the Britisher a better article than he is paying for. That is the stock argument with respect to mixing; that it is an advantage to skin the grain down in grading, so low that it will just come within its grade. From my experience in selling grain to European buyers, I am convinced that the European market will respond in price to the quality of the run of cargoes received. This phase is in the mouth of every grain trader in Liverpool, London, Amsterdam or Rotterdam. If the run of cargoes of our No. 3 shows evidence of having been skinned to the limit of that grade, then the quotations for No. 3 northern coming from the other side will be depreciated in consequence. If, on the other hand, the run of cargoes of No. 3 shows that it is the average of the grade, then that fact will be reflected in the prices quoted. We should have a public terminal system where the grain would be binned only with grain of its own grade. The certificate which the buyers receive, bearing the guarantee of this government as to quality, should be bona fide. They want us to live up to that certificate; that is what constitutes our great advantage in the markets of Europe.

Mr. BENNETT: Is not that where the responsibility of the government comes in?

Mr. DUNNING: The responsibilty of the manner in which this whole matter has been handled is the responsibility of this parliament, regardless of party.

Mr. BENNETT: It is the government of the day that is responsible.

Mr. DUNNING: Of course, and no one seeks to evade that. I hope my hon. friend will not try to make political capital out of that fact.

Mr. BENNETT: The government should be held responsible.

Mr. DUNNING: The administration of this act is committed by this parliament to a board of three men appointed for a period of ten years. If I wanted to make political capital out of the matter, I could say that my hon. friend's party was responsible for two out of the three present commissioners, but I do not fault them for that, not at all.

Mr. BENNETT: Only one.

Mr. DUNNING: I do not know who appointed Mr. Snow, but my recollection is that he was appointed during the regime of my hon. friend's party.

Mr. BENNETT: The present Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb) appointed him.

Mr. DUNNING: In any event, Mr. Snow was in a very high official capacity for a long period of years in the service of the warehouse commissioner and the Board of Railway Commissioners. It was a natural promotion for a man with his experience. I am not faulting my hon. friends for their appointment of the chairman. I knew Mr. Robinson many years ago as director of the Grain Growers organization, and later as vice president of the Cooperative Elevator Company in association with myself. I do not know a more honest, fair-minded man, nor a man who works more honestly and conscientiously, as he sees it, in the interests of the farmers whom he represents. Mr. Snow's name has become synonymous with the gradual development of the Canada Grain Act from the time it was administered by the warehouse commissioner down to the present time. Western Canada farmers know him very well. My acquaintance with the chairman is not so great.

These men are admittedly honest, and their judgment has been complained of, as far as I can learn, only in connection with one particular phase of the administration of the act. I do not intend to discuss the merits of the case for, after all, it is a matter of legal opinion, and I am not qualified to say whether that is right or wrong. I have my belief, and I do not mind expressing it—with due deference to the lawyers present—that the addition of those words was not legal. I argued that with respect to the addition of the words "subject to inspector's grade and dockage" many years ago before the act was amended, and I take the same stand to-day regarding the new addition. I admit that the legal authorities said I was wrong before, and apparently beat me on the issue. They may beat me again, but I have a right to my opinion.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. gentleman has since become a better lawyer.

Mr. DUNNING: No, I have no aspirations in that regard.

Mr. BENNETT: It has been a gradual evolution.

Mr. DUNNING: While I have the greatest respect for the legal profession, and particularly for the opinion of my hon. friend in connection with legal matters pertaining to grain, because he has had very considerable and very creditable experience in that regard, I am not usually regarded as being a friend of that learned profession.

I was discussing the matter of the mixing evil. I think it is correct to say that the farmers of western Canada, taking the three provinces as a whole, are not agreed that mixing should be abolished. The root of the whole trouble, so far as grain grading is concerned, and so far as the intrinsic value of our product on the other side is concerned, lies, in my opinion, in the wide extension of mixing which has been made legal since the grain act was amended in 1925. That amendment was passed after full investigation although not agreed to by the whole representation of the farmers, notably the hon. member for Rosetown and the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Coote).

Mr. BENNETT: Particularly the president of the grain growers organization.

Mr. DUNNING: I do not intend to attach any blame to anyone in that regard, because they were representing, as they saw it, the wishes of the people who sent them here and the people who were mostly concerned with it. There are difficulties connected with the elimination of this mixing evil. We have been told that we have something like 140 grades of wheat, and have been asked how we can find room for all these grades. If we could only ensure that the six straight grades of wheat would be all binned separately and not with each other, I would regard that as the greatest possible step forward. If we are to have private elevators, let them be placed in the position which they were in under the old grain act; that is, as hospital elevators existing for the purpose of treating grain which required treatment. Some grain requires treatment by way of cleaning of a special character, separating from impurities of one kind or another, wild oats, weeds, and so forth, which exist to such a degree as to prevent the wheat being allowed in the straight grade. That grain is rejected for those reasons, but with the special machinery which is now in existence, to a far greater extent than ever before, the special cleaning will result in the wheat coming out of the cleaner equal in quality to wheat of the straight grade, because the only reason for its rejection in the first place was the presence of those impurities. It might be thought necessary to admit that wheat back into the straight grade bins. But take wheat which is tough, damp, smutty, or requiring special treatment, although we find that the rejections for dampness or the presence of impurities—

Mr. BENNETT: They can dry it.

Mr. DUNNING: I do not agree with my hon. friend that the mixing of dried No. 3 with straight No. 3 does not depreciate the quality. I know it is argued that it does not, but I have tried it and have found that it depends too much upon the human factor. If the temperature of the drier is regulated with hairline accuracy, then it is possible for the wheat to come out of the drier having an intrinsic quality equal to the average of the grade, but unfortunately, depending as it must upon the human factor, the millers have complained and complained with justice that there has been too much moisture extracted and the chemical content of the kernel affected thereby, or, on the other hand, there has been a cooking process rather than a drying process.

Mr. BENNETT: In Vancouver, where they have a mild climate, they have met with considerable success in drying wheat.

Mr. DUNNING: That is another calculation which has to be taken into consideration in this drying process. The same thing is true of the climatic conditions in Liverpool. The same is true in Liverpool also, but it is too much of a chance for us to say in law that grain which has been treated by means of drying can at all times thereafter be admitted into the public bin of the straight grades. If that were done, it would tend toward depreciation. To my mind the greatest problem we now have to face in connection with the question of grain is to restore in the buying countries full confidence in the integrity of Canada's grain standards. That confidence has been impaired right from the farm itself whereby, following after strange gods in the matter of new varieties of wheat, there has been a tendency—

Mr. BENNETT: That is rather hard on the present Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Malcolm). He is a strange god!

Mr. DUNNING: I might put the leader of the opposition in the deity class, but I never dreamed of putting the Minister of Trade and Commerce there.

Mr. BENNETT: I thought the strange god the hon. member meant was the new Minister of Trade and Commerce.

Mr. DUNNING: As I was saying, there have been, to an increasing degree during the last number of years, attempts at growing new varieties of grain, some of which have not maintained the characteristics essential to keeping up the standard of quality for Canadian wheat. In some districts we have grown white wheats, starchy wheats and spotted wheats. The result of that is inevitably to produce from time to time, mixed samples, mixed cargoes, and from that is bound to result a loss of confidence in the standards specified in the act for Canadian grain, which standards declare plainly that the grain must consist of a certain percentage of hard, red, vitreous kernels.

Mr. BENNETT: That is, the statutory grades, commercial grades.

Mr. DUNNING: Yes. The same is true of the measure of these set from time to time by the grain standards board. I do not think many farmers yet appreciate how difficult is the work of that board. I am not speaking particularly in defence of them, but it is proper that farmers should have an appreciation of the difficulties which their representatives have in connection with this matter, because it must be borne in mind that the Grain Standards Board is set up under the authority of the act. The Grain Standards Board is not responsible to the Board of Grain Commissioners; it has specific duties assigned to it by the act, and the membership is defined by the act.

Mr. BENNETT: But the Board of Grain Commissioners are really responsible for the appointment of it.

Mr. DUNNING: Yes, but their appointments must be made in conformity with the conditions set out in the act.

Mr. BENNETT: But the responsibility is theirs.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend surely does not suggest that a better method of appointment can be devised than for the board to ask the Minister of Agriculture of each of the provinces concerned to nominate its members, thus getting to the point where the Grain Standards Board contains more than 50 per cent of the producers' representatives,

Mr. BENNETT: But the responsibility must be that of the Board of Grain Commissioners, because the statute imposes upon them the duty of appointing the Grain Standards Board. The Minister will remember the section.

Mr. DUNNING: There are restrictions placed around the board in the matter of appointment.

Mr. BENNETT: Quite so.

Mr. DUNNING: Whoever the members of the grain standards board may be, I do not think there is a sufficient appreciation of the difficulties they have to face. They have to deal with setting standards for damaged grain, grain damaged in varying degrees and with varying types of damage. Unfortunately they cannot commence their work until sufficient of the damaged grain is available to make it possible for them to know just what type of damage predominates.

Mr. BENNETT: Otherwise they have no job.

Mr. DUNNING: Otherwise they have no job until the grain comes forward. In any year, and particularly during the past year, with the increased use of combines and more rapid harvesting, by the time the grain standards board can get samples of a particular crop, a great quantity of that crop has already moved forward and been graded, if the law is carried out, in conformity with standards set for the previous year's crop.

Mr. BENNETT: It is the "if" that causes the trouble.

Mr. DUNNING: Quite correct. I believe, however, it is possible to have the grain standards board meet earlier, provided that the Board of Grain Commissioners, instead of being tied up as they are by law at the head of the lakes, had an office in each of the provinces producing the grain. I am not saying that they should not have an office at Fort William, but they should have one in each province producing grain, if for no other reason than to see that the first grain threshed is submitted to Winnipeg in order that the grain standards board may function as early as possible, instead of waiting for carloads of wheat to come forward which are invariably accompanied by many other hundreds of carloads which are being graded in conformity with a standard which existed the year before. An improvement can be made in that connection. The point I started out to make was the difficulty with which the grain standards board is confronted, no matter who the men may be. The type of damage to western Canada's wheat crop in one year may and frequently does differ entirely from the type of damage which existed the year before. Everyone who studies the matter at all knows that the intrinsic value of wheat is affected quite differently by rust from what it is affected by frost; that it is affected quite differently by frost which comes a month before harvest from what it is affected by frost which comes a week before harvest. All these factors create a different intrinsic value in that particular year's wheat crop as compared with the wheat crop of any other year. It is one of the worries of men who are responsible for handling large organizations for the farmer to know just what intrinsically is going to come out of the particular damage they know may have occurred through rust and frost, to name only two things, and there are more types of damage as the years go by.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. gentleman's time is up.

Mr. MALCOLM McLEAN (Melfort): Mr. Speaker, I had not expected to speak in the house on this question because, in my opinion, it is a matter that could better be disposed of in committee, and had I been a member of the committee I would not now be taking up the time of the house in discussing the question. Unfortunately, however, it has come into the house from the committee and we must deal with it. I am not opposed to dealing here with the matter of amendments to the grain act, but I do not think this is the time at which that should be done.

Much has been said about the discontent in western Canada in connection with the crop of last year. I do not think the discontent has been at all exaggerated, but I believe the causes of that discontent have been in many cases misstated and understated.

Mr. BENNETT: Understated!

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): Certain causes have been understated. For instance, I have not heard much yesterday or to-day as to the true cause of the first trouble and first loss in connection with the crop of last year. That was during the week in which the twenty-second of August fell last year and it was a week of almost intermittent frost. There was not a week of frost every night in any one district, but over a period of a week there was frost in different districts every night. On the twenty-second of August I happened to be on the train going from Winnipeg to Regina and shortly after daylight, on looking out of the window, I saw the potato tops were as black as my boots. A portion of the crop of Manitoba had been cut by that time, but the great bulk of the crop of Saskatchewan and probably all the crop of Alberta was still standing. That was the first cause of loss, and anyone who thinks that a frost of sufficient severity to turn potatoes black will not damage grain before maturity should look into the matter more closely. It certainly caused a tremendous loss. I am of the opinion—I am not going to guarantee this, because I am not as scientific, or as dogmatic, at least, as was the hon. member for Kindersley (Mr. Carmichael) a little while ago—that that week of frost cost the farmers of Saskatchewan between $75,000,000 and $100,000,000, owing to the deterioration in the quality of the grain and the loss of weight. An early wheat that was nearly matured would not lose so much in quality and would not lose nearly so much in weight as the later wheats. These later wheats, which were still fairly green when the frost came, lost tremendously in weight and quality.

Mr. BENNETT: Tremendously in weight.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): They lost tremendously in weight; there is no question about that. On the other hand, the farmers who were fortunate enough to have their crop matured and cut at that time, some men who were fortunate enough to have grown garnet wheat, which matured fairly early, and had it cut a few days before the frost came, in many cases had the best year in their farming history because there was an immense crop on the ground, and garnet ripened early, graded high, and sold at a comparatively fair price.

I should like to say this further, so far as discontent in western Canada last year is concerned. While the frost did do a tremendous amount of damage, much of the crop, which was graded low, was still a high quality wheat for the simple reason that it was nearer to maturity before frost came. I say, much of it, but not all of it. Later on, due to various factors, prices were low on the world's market, and just here I would refer for a moment to the statement made by the hon. member for Kindersley, who, as I understood it, said that in his opinion unscientific grading caused a loss to the farmers of $175,000,000. That point has already been dealt with by the Minister of Railways (Mr. Dunning), and I shall not spend much time on it, further than to say that the pool should pray to be saved from their friends and their advocacy. The price was low because of the production on the world's market, not because of unscientific grading. To illustrate that, let me say that before a single bushel of grain was cut or threshed or graded, the price was down on the world's market. Even before the frost came the price was down. I remember getting a telegram from one of my friends in eastern Canada a little while before that, asking my opinion as to the likelihood of a rise for a quick turnover in the grain market, and I remember that I replied to the effect that there was absolutely no warrant for any bullish feeling in the west at that time so far as I could judge.

Mr. BENNETT: The price went up after the frost.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): The price may have gone up a little, but nothing in proportion to the damage done. I think I know the reason for that. The farm newspapers, pool officials probably, and certainly trade officials, when asked their opinion as to the damage done by the frost said that it had done a certain amount of damage, but not excessive harm; and we all try to believe that frost has not done much harm until the grain is actually threshed and we cannot get away from the fact.

Mr. WARD: Is it not true that there was a report broadcast all over Canada that we were likely to harvest not less than half a billion bushels?

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): It is true, I think, that we harvested half a billion bushels. There was a tremendous crop in the ground. Speaking of the damage done by frost, I remember that away back in 1907 there was a frost in July or early in August, and meeting an old farmer friend of mine I asked him what damage the frost had done. It did not appear serious, and I remember very well that he replied, "I have never yet seen a frost come during the ripening season which did any good to the crop." That crop of 1907 was probably the worst in the history of western Canada in this century, and the crop of last year and of the year before would have repeated that experience had it not been for the early maturing varieties of wheat which had been developed—largely due to the policy of the Department of Agriculture at Ottawa, which has been striving for the past thirty or forty years to produce earlier-maturing wheats. In 1927 we were saved from the loss that came in 1907 through the early freezing of late-maturing grain.

The fact remains that the loss last year was not due to unscientific grading, but to crop damage and a low price on the world's market. The hon. member for Kindersley took the average prices for four years, one of which was 1924, a very low-yield year in western Canada, and he averaged the price received at $1.12. Then he said that the 1928 crop would sell for only 77 cents a bushel. That statement is almost too ridiculous for me to attempt to refute it. Who knows what the 1928 crop is going to sell for? No one knows yet what it will sell for.

Mr. CARMICHAEL: The bulletin here will tell you.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): We are not paying any attention to the bulletin.

Mr. BENNETT: It is issued by the government.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): Which government?

Mr. BENNETT: The government of this country.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): It was not the government of this country that said that, and I challenge anyone to prove it.

Mr. BENNETT: There are the official figures in the bulletin.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): How does he know they are right?

Mr. BENNETT: I do not know.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): And he does not know.

Mr. BENNETT: He is paid to know; I am not.

Mr. GOTT: I think the hon. member ought to take the word of the hon. member who quoted these figures.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): When I want to address myself to the hon. member for South Essex (Mr. Gott), I will do so.

Mr. GOTT: I expected a sarcastic reply from the hon. member.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): The hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) was addressing himself to me, for which I thank him.

The serious part is this, Mr. Speaker. A report goes out from this house attributing this statement to the hon. member for Kindersley, and where he is not known and where his way of reasoning is not generally understood—I know he is absolutely sincere and that he believes he is right, but his reasoning is absolutely wrong—people will say: This was said on the floor of parliament by the hon. member for Kindersley, and everybody knows he is a truthful man, so they will think it must be so.

It seems a waste of time to attempt to refute such a ridiculous proposition as was put forward by the hon. member for Kindersley, but let me just add this: The pool in the last four years set their initial price at $1 a bushel, and the farmer pays the freight to Fort William. This year they set the price at 85 cents a bushel. Later on, just about this time of the year, the pools make a payment on account. This year they made a payment of 12 cents a bushel. The total payments on No. 1 northern in store at Fort William up to March 20, 1929, amounted to 97 cents per bushel. In other years the payment by this time would come to around $1.25, and that much at least was expected this year. The pool is not to blame for that. They set their initial price low to protect themselves and protect their farmer members. Why say that unscientific grading had anything to do with the price when the price was set before a bushel of wheat was graded? The price was based on the world's production and demand. I am not going to say any more about that.

The question of mixing was not touched on very much in the earlier part of this debate, but it has been dealt with to some extent to-day. To my mind this question of mixing is far more serious than the question of the hybrid ticket, which was dealt with yesterday. The first frost caused discontent in the country, and a tremendous economic loss; there is no question about that. The low price on the world's market, and the low payment in western Canada based on that low price, caused another great loss and a great deal of discontent. The question of mixing is probably the most serious one facing the western farmer to-day. The best organized farmers are most vehement in their condemnation of that practice, and of that I shall give evidence in a little while. Unfortunately there are two kinds of mixing: One that could be controlled by legislation and the other that probably could not. As evidence of the type of mixing that is hard to control, I propose to quote from an article published in the Regina Leader of April 22, 1928. It is headed:

Aiming at Fewer, Better Wheat Varieties, Pool backs Zoning System.

And proceeds:

Realizing the necessity of maintaining uniformity in the standard of pool wheat, the directors of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool have been actively investigating ways and means of encouraging the production of fewer and better varities in the province and have actively associated themselves with the promotion of a zoning system.

"One of the factors making for lack of uniformity," said a wheat pool official yesterday, "is the great increase in wheat varieties that has developed since the introduction of Marquis in 1903. It is true that great advances have been made in the production of wheat by cross breeding and selection by different agencies such as experimental farms and prominent seed growers, but with no restriction on the number of varieties licensed the result has been that a large number of varieties have been produced, not all of which have proved superior to the existing varieties.

"In many cases the new wheat varieites are higher yielding or have greater rust resistance but are lower in milling or baking qualities than the previous standard varieties.

I have read sufficient for my purpose. That is a situation that can be hardly dealt with by legislation, but it has been extremely expensive to the farmers of western Canada. There is, however, a type of mixing that can be controlled by legislation. In a return handed down last session in reply to a question by the hon. member for Willow Bunch (Mr. Donnelly) it is stated that in the crop year 1920-21 twelve million bushels of No. 1 northern wheat were taken into store and eleven million bushels taken out—a little less; ten million bushels of No. 2 were taken into store and sixteen million bushels taken out; sixteen million bushels of No. 3 were taken in and nineteen million bushels taken out. Coming down to 1926-27, we find the situation worse. The practice is legal, but it is bad. In that year fourteen million bushels of No. 1 northern were put into store, and eighteen million bushels shipped out; thirty-two million bushels of No. 2 were put into store, and forty million shipped out; fourteen million bushels of No. 3 were put into store, and twenty-seven million bushels shipped out. My hon. friend from Kindersley stated, if I heard him aright, that the higher price paid by the pool was due largely to profits made on mixing. Well, if that kind of mixing can be any more profitable than the other kind I cannot understand it.

Objection has been taken to the grading system. Overseas it was complained that the grade was gradually getting lower; for two reasons; one, that the quality of wheat was gradually changing, new varieties being introduced and new areas being brought into cultivation that did not produce as high a quality of grain as the older land; the other reason for the decline in grade was the mixing. Under these circumstances it was inevitable that there should be a lower standard of grain delivered on the old country market. There was considerable discontent, and last year apparently efforts were made to tighten up the grades. The grade delivered to the Alberta pool out of the crop of 1926, which has been quoted as a fairly high-grade crop, was as follows:

2.6 of the wheat handled was No. 1; 8.2 per cent No. 2; 17.3 per cent No. 3; 10.6 per cent No. 4; 10.9 per cent No. 2 tough; 20.5 per cent No. 3 tough; 11.1 per cent No. 4 tough.

Those were the grades that year. The balance is not divided into grades, but doubtless there was damaged grain that had to be hospitalized before it could be placed on the market. Probably last fall there was a gradual tightening up of grades. The standard grades set by law should not have been changed. I have not heard very much direct evidence that they were changed. But there was quite an apparent difference in the commercial grades, and that again I think was for two reasons; one, that the wheat last year while it graded low—it was certainly frosted—was of unusually high quality. There had been a spendid growing season and until frost came the growing conditions had been almost perfect, and after the frost they continued almost perfect over the greater part of the west. Not since 1924, when we had a good deal of wet, cold weather, have we had such favourable conditions. Complaints were coming from the old country of the degrading of grain in previous years, and an effort was made at tightening up the grades. That was the state of affairs when the Grain Standards Board met. As described by the Minister of Railways, it is a thoroughly representative institution. That board set the standard so high that Dr. Birchard, the chemist of the Board of Grain Commissioners, protested, and the standard set was lower than it would otherwise have been. I cannot understand why the board should be condemned for that action of their chemist. It is unfortunate that the Grain Standards Board met so late in the season, but this point has already been dealt with by previous speakers. The reason may be better understood if I quote from the evidence given by Mr. Plumer, representing the president of the Alberta wheat pool, at the sittings of the agriculture committee on the 13th instant. I am quoting from page 18 of the report of the committee of that date.

He said:

We asked a few years ago that the setting of the standard samples be arranged at a date when our Alberta friends could be represented in them more fully than they had been up until that time, and since then we have had some better satisfaction than we had prior to that time. It is unfortunate that the samples cannot be set definitely until nearly the middle of October usually in that a large percentage of the Manitoba and eastern Saskatchewan grain has moved. At that time there would be a possibility of a slight change in the standard sample.

Now, it is only natural that there should have been a change last October if, after a series of years of low-grade commercial standards, there came a year of high-grade commercial standards. But the standard was set late in the year and apparently higher than usual. If the standard was deliberately lowered in previous years because of weather conditions affecting the grain, it is natural that that lower standard would be reflected in lower prices in the old country according to the world market at the time. An effort was made to get it back as quickly as possible to the high standard that obtained before. I do not think the commissioners should be very much condemned for that. It was not of their doing.

These are three of the reasons that have caused a great deal of discontent in western Canada during the past year: Frost—low price—mixing of grain. The mixing gave rise to the greatest discontent. The tightening up of the grades also caused discontent.

A good deal has been said about the diversion of cars after inspection of the grain. I think that to some extent a wrong impression has been created by those who have discussed the question. There is only one legal way in which carloads of grain can be diverted. If a farmer ships his grain to an agent, whether to the pool or otherwise, and gives him authority to handle it to the best advantage for himself—the farmer—and the agent gets an offer at Winnipeg or elsewhere, and decides to sell the grain, and sends the car to the mill or the elevator people who are buying the grain, I do not see how that practice can be legally stopped. The hon. member for Kindersley said that he was not interested in any but the pool farmers. This house cannot take that narrow, parochial view; we must be interested in the welfare of all the farmers of western Canada so far as grain growing is concerned. I do not see how we can legislate to compel a man to ship his grain right through to the terminal without liberty to sell it while in transit. Ever since western Canada commenced to grow wheat there has been a degree of diversion and I expect it will continue to some extent. If, however, there has been an illegal diversion of cars by agents of milling companies or of purchasing companies, who break the seals and order the cars diverted, without the authority or permission of the owners or of the agents representing the owners of the grain, then of course it becomes a criminal offence and should be taken to the proper authority. It should not be laid at the door of the Minister of Trade and Commerce but should be taken to the Minister of Justice or to the police department, inasmuch as it is a criminal action. To my mind the matter could be easily settled.

There is another cause of discontent—in my opinion a very minor cause—and that is the so-called hybrid ticket. In the discussion in the house yesterday we heard of nothing else but the hybrid ticket. But if the hybrid ticket is the whole cause of the trouble why did we not hear about it a year ago? That ticket was in use by the grain trade in the handling of the crop of 1927. In my opinion it is a wrong that should not be tolerated; I do not think it should be used. I do not believe that the grain trade is living up to the spirit of the agreement it made with the pool. But I do think that they are going to put up a fight—at any rate they are likely to attempt—to prove that they have a legal right to do what they are doing under the contract entered into by them with the pool. As I say, however, that hybrid ticket was in use in 1927, and we heard little about it. The pools themselves were not very sure whether that agreement into which they had entered might not bind them to some extent. As a matter of fact, there enters into the matter a question of considerable legal importance. The legal question involved is, I take it, as to the time at which the ownership of the grain ceases to lie with the grower and becomes vested in the agency to which he is sending it. Now if the pool were buying the grain, which it does not do, and paying for it as soon as it was in the elevator, there would be no question about the fact that the pool would own the grain and the farmer would not be able to direct shipment of it to any particular terminal. But if he were not able to ship it to any particular terminal elevator, neither would he be able to order the car in which to ship it. If therefore he is able legally to order the car in which to ship the grain I am firmly convinced that he has a right under the law as it stands to ship to the terminal of his choice.

The chairman of the royal commission which investigated the subject in 1925, Mr. Justice Turgeon, has been quoted by some hon. gentlemen in this house; and I notice that his opinion was quoted by a member of the house in the debate that took place three years ago. I will not take the time now to read at any length from Mr. Justice Turgeon's statements, but this was his argument: "According to the agreement entered into by each producer who joins the pool, the grain remains his own property until sold by the selling agency, and the producers are virtually doing their own mixing." It was in reference to mixing that he was speaking at that time, but the same principle applies. If the owner of the grain, the grower, is only sending his grain to the agency to be dealt with afterwards, then by no stretch of the imagination can it be said to be the property of the agency; it is the grower's own property until delivered. Although I have no knowledge of law, I think I am on pretty sound ground in making this statement. The amount of grain which is handled in this way is extremely small. I do not know what the percentage is in Saskatchewan, but in Alberta, according to a statement made the other day, the pool in that province handles 50 per cent of the grain; and of that 50 per cent 60 per cent is handled in their own elevators and 20 per cent of the total crop shipped through line elevators and handled under graded storage receipt, special binning, and so on. Posibly not more than 5 per cent of the total grain of that province is handled through special bins in line elevators for the pool, and I think it is no exaggeration to estimate that not more than half of the farmers whose grain goes into these special bins and is there by the line companies consigned to their own terminal elevators have entered any objection to the hybrid ticket. You would have heard more about it if they had. So that probably not more than 2 per cent of the growers were at all dissatisfied with it. Yet we find in this house, until this afternoon, that nearly 100 per cent of the objection to the motion now under consideration is represented as having to do with the hybrid ticket. I do not think this is the wisest way to deal with the matter.

As evidence that I am giving more than my own opinion I may say that last fall I received from many branches of the farmers' organization in Saskatchewan, which province produces more than half the grain of all western Canada, many resolutions asking for assistance in doing two things. One was to have the mixing evil eliminated in order that the high standard of Canadian wheat on the world's markets might be retained. This organization resolved that the standard for grading out of private terminals should be equal to the average of the same grade at inspection points. Technically that is difficult to secure, but that was their desire. There was another resolution dealing with the transfer of the administration of the grain act from the Department of Trade and Commerce to the Department of Agriculture. I intend to deal with that later on. But what I want to point out at the moment is that there was no suggestion in any of these resolutions in regard to the hybrid ticket; it was not recognized as causing any particular trouble. It may be that there is a difference between the situation in Saskatchewan and that in some of the other provinces. An hon. member has referred to one difference, and it is this, that in Saskatchewan opinion against mixing is almost unanimous at the present time. The members from the province of Saskatchewan in this house, and who were in the province at that time, were invited to confer with the authorities of the Saskatchewan pool before coming here. This is coming to be an annual practice, and it is a wise one. We attended that conference and heard many matters discussed, and the so-called hybrid ticket was among them. It was also discussed the year before to some extent. At that gathering an understanding was arrived at that a written statement would be sent to the members from Saskatchewan in this house setting out the reforms which the pool was really anxious to secure and was fighting for. I hold that statement in my hand; I received it from an officer of the pool. I find that it deals first with mixing in general, the great evil which is recognized to-day by all the farmers of Saskatchewan; and regardless of what anyone says, mixing is the first evil. Damage from frost and other natural causes is an important consideration with which we cannot deal, but mixing is the paramount evil in respect to which immediate relief is asked. Another trouble is in regard to the definition of No. 3 northern wheat; a better definition is desired. The situation there is rather confused because of changes that have developed since No. 3 was first dealt with. The memorandum also covers such grades as amber, durum, No. 1 and No. 2 Canadian western, and so forth. But there is nothing at all in the memorandum about the hybrid ticket. I say therefore that it is not fair for some hon. members to make such a fuss about the grain commission in reference to this ticket.

I must hurry on because my time is getting short, and I am not so much interested in rehearsing the difficulties of the farmers in western Canada as in trying to find a remedy for those troubles; because no matter where farming is carried on, the history of agriculture throughout the world teaches us that the farmer is always just one jump ahead of disaster. In the semi-tropical zone in the southern states the citrus crop is just a little ahead of frost; a little further north the cotton crop is faced with the same difficulty; and the same is true of corn, wheat and other products. I presume that the farmers in the rich province of Ontario are also pursued by trouble from time to time. However, in my opinion it is better to improve conditions than to talk about them.

Now in connection with the administration of the grain act I will admit that there are inequalities; there are certain difficulties that must be overcome. Let us look for a few moments at the history of the Manitoba Grain Act and its administration for the past thirty years. That act was secured after a hard fight by the organized grain growers of western Canada; they came down here and put up a good battle and finally had the act put through. That battle stirred up and interested every farmer in western Canada, so that when the act was passed almost every farmer in the west knew exactly what its provisions were, what it meant to him and all about it. During this time the population of western Canada was small; farming was carried on in a small area, over which the soil was very much the same and the climatic conditions very similar. The organized farmers were familiar with the law. In addition to that the warehouse commissioner, the administrator of the act, was located in Winnipeg, and his deputy was in the field. I refer to Mr. Snow, who has been so maligned here, in my opinion without adequate cause. However, the farmers of the west were thoroughly aware of their rights, privileges and responsibilities under that act; the deputy was in the field all the time, settling problems, meeting farmers who had grievances or who were dissatisfied or who wanted information, and in those days with a small territory involved it was possible to keep things running smoothly.

To-day, however, conditions are different. The territory involved has increased to twenty times its former area; the yield of grain has increased ten times; there are twenty or thirty varieties of wheat now where formerly there was one, and there are thousands of farmers who are not so familiar with the act. Some may doubt that; the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) asked the Minister of Railways a few minutes ago if it were true that the farmers did not know their rights and privileges under the act. It is extremely difficult for them to do so, as is shown from the debates which take place in this house in connection with different pieces of legislation. There are times when we are in doubt as to the provisions of certain acts, so we cannot wonder that the farmer is uncertain also. The facts remains that many farmers in the west are not thoroughly familiar with their rights and privileges, and that is only natural.

[Mr. McLean.]

I happened to listen to some of the evidence given before the royal grain commission when it sat in Saskatchewan last fall. That commission was very helpful, not only through the information it gathered from the farmers but by means of the information it was able to give to them. Many farmers appeared before that commission, gave their evidence on oath that they had done so and so, that they believed they could be compelled to do so and so and that they did not know they had power to demand certain other things. The chairman of the commission or one of his assistants had no difficulty in showing the farmers their position under the act, but before that many had not known of them. That is a very different situation to that which existed twenty-five or thirty years ago, when the farmers knew pretty well what was in the statute.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

SUSPENSION OF SITTING

A message was delivered by Major A. R. Thompson, Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, as follows:

Mr. Speaker, His Honour, the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General, desires the immediate attendance of this honourable house in the chamber of the honourable the senate.

Accordingly, the house went up to the senate.

And having returned,

Mr. SPEAKER informed the house that the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General had been pleased to give in His Majesty's name the royal assent to the following bill:

An act for granting to His Majesty a certain sum of money for the public service of the financial year ending the 31st March, 1930.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. MALCOLM McLEAN (Melfort): Mr. Speaker, when I was interrupted by the request from the Deputy of the Governor General that this house should attend him in the senate chamber, I was dealing with the means which, in my opinion, should be taken to improve the handling of grain under the Canada Grain Act. A request was made last fall by the organized farmers throughout Saskatchewan for some action on this matter, and the following resolution was passed by many branches:

Whereas we believe the administration of the Canada Grain Act should be under the control of the Department of Agriculture, as it deals with the grading and the movement of the most important agricultural product in Canada, and further the Department of Agriculture, having a wide knowledge and sympathetic interest in and understanding of agricultural problems, is the logical department to administer the said act;

Therefore be it resolved we request the Dominion government to remove the administration of the Canada Grain Act from the Department of Trade and Commerce and place it under the Department of Agriculture.

When the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Campbell) was speaking this afternoon he made the statement that we would be expressing a lack of confidence in the Minister of Trade and Commerce through the passing of this resolution. It is a matter not of expressing a lack of confidence in the Minister of Trade and Commerce, but rather of expressing confidence in the Minister of Agriculture and asking that the administration of this act be placed under that department, in which department probably ninety-eight to one hundred per cent of the farmers have confidence. It would be an expression of confidence in the organization back of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell), which organization has a wide knowledge and sympathetic interest in and understanding of agricultural problems. It is agreed that the Department of Trade and Commerce is the logical department to help the farmers sell their products, but in the handling and shipping of their grain, and the solving of other problems which might arise, the farmers of western Canada need the assistance of such men as Doctor Grisdale, Mr. Newman, and Mr. Clark. Those are the men who have developed marquis, garnet and other varieties of wheat which have so greatly benefited the country. The farmers believe that such an organization back of the minister would naturally be more sympathetic than would be an organization of salesmen. They would be more effective in their own sphere, and so the request has been made that this matter be transferred to the Department of Agriculture.

I should like to see this resolution carried out to the fullest extent. I am not a member of the agriculture committee and, therefore, could not urge my views upon that committee, so I desire to move that the motion be amended by adding thereto the following words,

"and also the administration of the Canada Grain Act."

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: I am afraid the hon. member will have to redraft his amendment. The motion before the house, moved by Mr. Kay, reads:

That the third report of the select standing committee on agriculture and colonization be concurred in.

The motion which had been previously moved by the chairman of the agriculture committee was ruled out of order, and the amendment suggested by the hon. member would not attach itself to the motion under debate.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): Would Your Honour be good enough to give me an opportunity to put it in order, and advise me as to how it could be done? Hon. members may laugh, but I remember a case not very long ago in which the Speaker himself saw to it that sufficient time was given to an hon. member to draft a motion and obtain a seconder.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Why do you not ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce?

Mr. McLEAN: There was a minister of trade and commerce for a short time in this country, under the "shadow government," whom I would not care to consult.

Mr. CHAPLIN: You might have avoided your trouble.

Mr. G. G. COOTE (Macleod): Mr. Speaker, the report which is being discussed by the house deals with a matter which is of very great importance to Canada generally, and to the grain producers of Canada particularly. Parliament also is greatly interested in this matter, and rightly so. During the years 1921 to 1927 the government has received a surplus of revenue over expenditures under the administration of the Canada Grain Act amounting to over $2,500,000. I have been asked by members of this house why it is necessary to have the grain act at all; why it is necessary to have grading and inspection of grain. I think that question can be answered very readily: It is because of the immense volume of grain which has to be handled in a short time. It might be enlightening to members of this house to know that during one week in the year 1928, the week ending September 23, fifty-one million bushels of grain were delivered at country elevators and loading platforms in western Canada. During that same week 47,000,000 bushels of wheat alone were delivered. During one week last year over 24,000,000 bushels of grain arrived at Fort William and Port Arthur to be unloaded at the terminal elevators. From the few figures I have given I think the members of the house will readily see the necessity for the Canada Grain Act, and the necessity for efficient administration of that act. I think it is putting the case very mildly to say that the producers of grain in western Canada are very much dissatisfied with the present situation, and with very good cause.

I am not going to attempt to-night to deal with the questions of grading, mixing, storing, handling, et cetera, of grain, as I think these phases have been covered very fully by previous speakers. Several members of the house seemed to take the attitude this afternoon that the grain act had been very well administered, and that we were not justified in asking that the Board of Grain Commissioners should be removed from their present position. One hon. member said that we should not question the honesty of the commissioners; that it is not fair to do so. Personally I am not questioning the honesty of any member of the Board of Grain Commissioners, and I do not think any hon. member has done so during the debate, none at any rate, that I have heard; but we do question the efficiency with which they have administered the Canada Grain Act. We think they have been very remiss in their duty. Surely we can discuss the administration of the act without bringing into question the honesty of the men who are administering it.

While I said that I would not deal with the question of grading or mixing, I should like to make just one reference to a statement made by the Minister of Railways (Mr. Dunning) this afternoon in regard to the special bin ticket; that is, the ordinary "C" ticket. On our own farm I have been in the habit of receiving this ticket for many years; I have signed hundreds of them and I know positively they were the special bin ticket. It may be that in many cases a graded storage ticket is being given to the farmers in lieu of the special bin ticket. I should not like to make a very positive statement in regard to that, but in our own case I know we have been receiving the regular special bin ticket.

Mr. DUNNING: From an ordinary line elevator company?

Mr. COOTE: Yes, because until last year we did not have the pool elevator at our point. At the last annual convention of the United Farmers of Alberta, the question of the administration of the Canada Grain Act was discussed at considerable length, and after that discussion the following resolution was passed practically unanimously by the convention. I think it is my duty to place it on Hansard.

[Mr. Coote.]

Board of Grain Commissioners

Whereas the Canada Grain Act was passed for the protection of the farmers, and

Whereas the Board of Grain Commissioners was appointed to insure to the farmers the protection intented to be extended to them by the Canada Grain Act, and

Whereas, in the opinion of this convention the present Board of Grain Commissioners have failed to function in such a manner as to give to the farmers the protection that parliament intended them to have, and,

Whereas, the farmer has, as a consequence, lost confidence in the personnel of the present board, and

Whereas since the creation of the board (comprised of three commissioners) the production and shipment of grain has increased enormously, and

Whereas, export of grain through Pacific ports has since been developed, and

Whereas, the extension of the area from which grain is produced in large quantities makes it impossible for a board of three commissioners functioning properly, to give the farmer the protection the Grain Act was designed to extend to him.

Be it resolved:

(a) That this convention demand the removal of the present grain commissioners;

(b) That this convention request parliament to amend the Canada Grain Act to provide

(1) A board of five commissioners, one of whom shall reside in Alberta and one in Saskatchewan.

(2) That the duties of the board be defined and extended and that power be given to the board to enforce its orders.

(3) That the board be given power to investigate and be charged with the duty of investigating on its own initiative, every operation incidental to the movement of grain from the time and place of its being threshed to its final destination, whether in or out of Canada;

(4) That the board be charged with the duty of holding sittings throughout the three prairie provinces, each year, during the period from the first of September to the end of February next for the purpose of enquiring into the operations of the various facilities operating under license and regulation under the Canada Grain Act and to hear all complaints;

(5) That the foregoing provision be given effect by the increase in number of commissioners and not by the appointment of inspectors.

(6) That parliament provide funds to pay to commissioners salaries sufficiently large to make available for the office, candidates of outstanding ability, industry and integrity.

That resolution is very definite. There was no question in the minds of the delegates at that convention as to what should be done. Although the resolution does not say so, I think I might add that it was the opinion of the United Farmers of Alberta that the appointments to the board should not be made because of political considerations.

Mr. BENNETT: What is the date of that resolution?

Mr. COOTE: January 15, 1929. Practically every corner of Alberta was represented at that convention; in other words, the convention was quite representative of the producers of grain in that province.

This might be a good time to place before the house a little news item copied from one of the daily papers published last month. I am sorry I have not the name of the paper. The heading reads:

Grain industry is loosely organized. Decision reached by commission after hearing 250 witnesses.

The despatch is from Davidson, Saskatchewan, January 16, and it reads:

After 250 witnesses from all parts of the province have testified before the royal commission concerning the various phases of the grain industry one factor stands out as the dominating feature of the entire situation. That is, that the entire system is loosely organized from the moment the grain is being selected for seed up to the time it goes into the terminals at Winnipeg and Vancouver. The Canadian Grain Act has been amended and reframed frequently always with a view of facilitating the movement and marketing and giving the producer the best opportunities indicated by experience and their wishes for securing the best price level afforded by world market quotations.

But evidence is accumulating that many of these so-called privileges for which the farmers and their political sympathizers fought for years are dead letters for one reason or another.

It would be interesting if we could find out just what those reasons are.

Evidence of well-informed farmers before the commission suggests that the mass is not informed as to just what these privileges and the law applying to shipping and merchandise and grading are.

I have another quotation also taken from the press. It is presumed to be a statement made by Commissioner Brown, Chief Justice of Saskatchewan and chairman of the grain commission:

Someone playing fast and loose with the farmer.

There is no doubt about that.

Mr. DUNNING: Will the hon. member state the authority he is quoting there?

Mr. COOTE: I am quoting just from memory. I will make it very plain that I think that statement was made by the commissioner. I remember seeing it.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend read from some authority. What is the authority?

Mr. COOTE: That is taken from one of the daily papers, and is a press despatch from Davidson, Saskatchewan, dated January 16. I am sorry I have not the name of the paper. It is possible I can find out and let the minister know.

Mr. DUNNING: I do not wish to object, but my hon. friend knows it is quite out of order to read anything of that sort without stating what it is.

Mr. COOTE: I think it was reported in practically all the papers. This is only one of a great number of statements that have appeared in the press in reporting the proceedings of that commission.

In the short time that I have left I do not think I can do better than deal with one case in the province of Alberta which will bring very clearly before the house the manner in which the Board of Railway Commissioners have been administering the act. Several members said this afternoon that most of the complaints had been in regard to the so-called hybrid ticket. In the case to which I shall refer the hybrid ticket is not dealt with at all; the regular ticket was issued. This is the case of Mr. Randle, of High River. I shall quote from sessional paper No. 115B, which was recently brought down.

The first correspondence in the case is a wire from Mr. George E. Randle, of High River, to the Board of Grain Commissioners, dated October 19, 1928, and reading as follows:

Car one three nine three one two C.P. billed to government elevator Calgary re Bawlf Grain, High River, was in special bins. Tickets in my name. My billing instructions were to bill to pool terminal, Vancouver. He refused to do so. I offered to pay the handling charges. I demanded my tickets. He says he has cancelled my tickets and offered me so-called pool tickets. Can you give this your attention before this car is unloaded? I want my original storage tickets in my own name. I have another carload of wheat in this elevator. Wire me collect.

I hope the house will notice that this man claims that he had special bin tickets. Next is a wire from M. Snow, Winnipeg to Mr. Randle, High River:

Your wire received. Taking this matter up with the Bawlf Grain Company at once.

That wire is marked "Collect." Next is a wire from Mr. Snow to the Bawlf Grain Company, Calgary, dated October 19:

Wire from George E. Randle, High River, re car thirteen ninety three twelve, billed government elevator Calgary, claims agent cancelled tickets made out in his own name, changed to pool tickets. Demands original storage tickets restored and car billed pool terminal Vancouver. Answer.

The answer is given in a telegram dated October 25, from the Bawlf Grain Company to the Board of Grain Commissioners, Winnipeg:

All tickets issued to George Randle who is member of wheat pool. He did not notify us at time grain was being delivered that it was pool wheat which is contrary to clause twenty-one of our agreement.

That is the most outlandish statement that I have yet seen in this correspondence, that it was contrary to a section of their agreement with the pool that Randle should bring wheat to this elevator company and not notify them that it was pool wheat. I continue to read:

Request our Winnipeg office quote you wording of clause twenty-one.

For nerve, I think that telegram certainly is the limit.

Mr. CAMPBELL: If the hon. member has the contract there, would he mind reading that particular clause?

Mr. COOTE: I think I have it somewhere, but I do not know whether my forty minutes will allow me to read it. I may do so later. Next is a wire from M. Snow to the Bawlf Grain Company:

Board understands tickets issued R. Randle's name. If so, on what authority did your agent change tickets to show grain delivered account of pool. If agent did this board believes Randle had right to receive original tickets and give shipping instructions.

The board seemed to be very definite that if this man had the tickets he should have the right to direct the shipment of his grain. Next is a wire from the Bawlf Grain Company, dated October 20, to Mr. Snow:

Referring your wire re Randle, High River, would quote clause twenty-one of our contract with pool. Is not this our proper procedure?

What possible clause could be put in the contract which would allow the grain company, after issuing regular tickets to a man, deliberately to cancel them and issue what they call a pool ticket?

Next is a letter from Mr. George Randle, and may I draw the attention of the house to this: Mr. Randle complained by wire on October 19, and he does not get any reply from the board, except an acknowledgment of his telegram. On November 5, after waiting sixteen days without a reply, he writes to the board as follows:

High River, November 5.

To the Board of Grain Commissioners,
Fort William.

On October 19, I sent you a wire in connection with a car of wheat No. C.P. 139213, shipped from High River, and unloaded in Calgary. This wheat was put in a special bin and the tickets were made in the name of Geo. R. Randle, as I did not belong to the pool at that time.

[Mr. Coote.]

I hope the house will notice that the tickets were issued to Randle when he was not a member of the pool. He goes on:

I was busy threshing and did not go and get my tickets. By the time I was in turn for a car the price of wheat was off a good deal, so I joined the pool.

Mr. DUNNING: No comment needed on that.

Mr. COOTE: Comment is unnecessary. He goes on:

When the car was loaded I asked the Bawlf elevator man to not bill the car as I would attend to that, but when he found that I was going to bill the car to the pool terminal at Vancouver, he flew into a rage and . . . . me—

There is a blank space there where some word has been omitted. I suppose it was not parliamentary language:

—so I asked him for my tickets, and he said that he had cancelled my tickets and offered me some so-called pool tickets, which I refused to take.

Is not that a most outlandish thing for any elevator company to do, deliberately to cancel this man's tickets?

Mr. DUNNING: May I point out that while that is outlandish, the first outlandish thing that happened in connection with that case was that the farmer did not take his tickets when he delivered the grain, but left them in charge of the elevator operator—a most foolish thing to do.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): But very commonly done.

Mr. DUNNING: Unfortunately, yes.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Unfortunately, I agree.

Mr. COOTE: May I interject that this man was very busy running a threshing outfit? I hope that we shall be able to get these elevators run in such a way that if a man does neglect to come in for his tickets for a few weeks, the tickets will still be there and the elevator company will not dare to cancel them and issue new ones.

Mr. DUNNING: You cannot depend on that under any administration.

Mr. COOTE: Mr. Randle continues:

There is about two thousand bushels more of my wheat in the Bawlf elevator at High River.

May I pause to point this out: If the board had taken prompt action in this case, the next car might have been shipped to the pool terminal. Mr. Randle's letter continues:

Now when I sent you that wire I was under the impression that as an individual I had some rights under the Canada Grain Act, and that the Board of Grain Commissioners were appointed to help enforce, impartially, the rights of the Canada Grain Act, but it seems I was completely mistaken. According to the way the line companies are acting with the farmers we have no rights or title to our grain all because we have signed a pool contract, and I have also learned that the decisions and commands of the Board of Grain Commissioners have been disregarded and ignored by some of these same grain companies.

As I said in my wire, I would like to have my original storage tickets in my own name, and if I have no right left to me, to have my own tickets and to bill out my own grain, I sure want to know it, so I may be able to act accordingly at any future time.

It is not to be wondered at that this man, after waiting for sixteen days, would like to know whether he had any rights or not.

Mr. HAY: Would there not be a pool ticket issued for the grain, and should not the pool direct the shipment of the grain rather than the farmer?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): No.

Mr. HAY: He says he joined the pool.

Mr. COOTE: This man delivered wheat to the pool before he was a member of the pool, and certain tickets were issued to him.

Mr. HAY: Would not the elevator company be bound to take the pool's instructions rather than instructions from the farmer?

Mr. COOTE: They had already issued a ticket for this grain. By what right could the elevator company officials tear up the man's ticket and write other tickets?

Mr. HAY: They could take instructions from the pool.

Mr. COOTE: They had no such instructions. The next communication is in the form of a letter from the Board of Grain Commissioners at Fort William to Mr. Randle at High River. It is a circular letter that, I think, was sent to every farmer who had had difficulties of this nature with the grain company. The letter reads in part:

Many informal investigations and numerous conferences were held by the board with interested country elevator companies with the hope that the elevator companies would honour the tickets issued by them in the name of the individual by shipping the grain to the terminal elevator designated by the holder of the tickets in accordance with the provisions of section 150 of the Canada Grain Act. However on discussing these particular complaints with the elevator companies it is pointed out by them that although tickets were issued to the farmer in his own name it was subsequently discovered that the farmer is a pool member and in view of certain contracts which had been entered into between the grower, and the pool, and the elevator companies and the pool, they are justified in treating the grain delivered by you as pool grain and under the terms of their contract with the pool they have the right to ship such pool grain to their own terminal elevator.

The board do not interpret the contract; they state the objection of the company.

As it now appears that the board is unable to obtain an amicable adjustment of the complaints filed with the board without the necessity of holding a formal investigation as required under the provisions of the "Canada Grain Act", it has been decided to hold such an investigation of a specific complaint, upon completion of which the board will then be in a position to decide, in view of all the circumstances connected with this matter, what further proceedings may be taken to determine whether the holder of tickets issued in his own name has the right to ship his grain to a terminal elevator selected by him in accordance with section 150 of the Canada Grain Act.

That is a very strange attitude for the board to take—to find out whether parliament meant what it said. On December 3, a long while after Mr. Randle made his complaint, the board wrote to him suggesting that if he wanted his claim further investigated he should file an affidavit as required by the Canada Grain Act. Then we find the affidavit submitted by Mr. Randle. It is dated December 13, 1928. It is a statutory declaration setting forth the steps which Mr. Randle took in connection with this grain, and with the consent of the house I will place it on Hansard. The information is practically the same as that contained in his first letter to the board. This is the affidavit:

Canada, Province of Alberta, to Wit:

In the matter of the "Canada Grain Act" and in the matter of complaint by George E. Randle of the town of High River, in the province of Albert, farmer, pursuant to the said "Canada Grain Act" and sections 108 and 166, thereof.

I, George E. Randle, of the town of High River, in the province of Alberta, "Farmer", make oath and say:

1. That I am the complainant herein.

2. I delivered about three thousand (3,000) bushels of wheat to the Bawlf Grain Company's elevator at High River. I was busy in the field running a threshing outfit, and this grain was delivered by truck, and I was never into the elevator until the day when a carload of this grain was loaded out, car C.P. 139312. I was not a member of the wheat pool when this grain was delivered to the Bawlf Grain Company, but there were no cars to load for some time and the truck was delivering wheat to the pool elevator and I did sign a pool contract a few days before this car was loaded. I never received nor saw any tickets for this grain.

3. The elevator man told me they were special bin tickets in the name of George E. Randle. I had told this man that I was going to sell this grain. The day he loaded a car I sent my father-in-law, a Mr. Bower, over to the elevator with a signed cheque to pay the charges, and to instruct the elevator man to bill this car to the pool terminal at Vancouver. He refused to do so. I then went over and took a Mr. A. L. Clemens as a witness.

4. I asked the elevator agent why he did not bill the car to Vancouver. He flew into a rage and said he did not want me coming around there trying to run their business, and also that they did not want any more of my grain to handle, so I asked him for my tickets. He said he had cancelled my tickets and he offered me some "so-called" pool tickets, which I refused to take. He billed the car out and I understand it was unloaded in the government elevator in Calgary.

5. I do not know what they have done with the balance of my wheat when the settlement for this car No. 139312 came to High River, this elevator agent goes and deposits it in the bank to my credit, and they charge me eighty-nine (89) cents remittance.

6. Now I deposit all my grain cheques in a Calgary bank. The Alberta pool make all payments at par in Calgary.

7. The Bawlf agent in Calgary refuses to refund this charge.

8. I wish steps to be taken through you or otherwise to have this car of wheat in the government elevator diverted to the pool terminal at Vancouver, also to instruct or require the Bawlf Grain Company to make the initial payments at par in Calgary to me.

Swern before me at the city of Calgary, in the province of Alberta, this thirteenth day of December, A.D. 1928.

Signed—Geo. E. Randle.

(Signed) J. C. Brokovski,
A Notary Public.

The Board of Grain Commissioners forwarded a copy of this affidavit to the Bawlf Grain Company and requested a reply. The reply of the company to the board is as follows:

Calgary, December 21, 1928.

Replying to your favour of December 15 regarding a declaration filed by Mr. George E. Randle, of High River, we have investigated this case and have the following to report:

Mr. Randle delivered his grain to our elevator as non-pool wheat, and after it had been stored for some time he decided to join the pool, without notifying us to this effect, which is contrary to clause 21 of our agreement with the pool,—

Contrary to clause 21 of their agreement with the pool that George Randle did not advise the elevator company he had joined the pool. The letter continues:

—as had we known that this wheat was to be shipped to the pool we would have issued the regulation pool ticket in the first place.

I should like to know what the regulation pool ticket is.

As Mr. Randle then refused to accept tickets which were offered him, his wheat was shipped out and handled in the regular manner.

The stand which we take in this matter is that Mr. Randle would not have the right to change the status of his wheat without first giving us a chance to change the class of tickets which had been issued against this grain any more than he would have the right to demand one northern graded storage tickets for grain after we had stored same, for instance, as three northern.

That, Mr. Speaker, is the most colossal piece of nerve on the part of an elevator company that I have ever witnessed.

We will be glad to have you advise us on this matter, stating as to whether or not in your opinion this grain was handled according to the proper procedure.

On January 9, nearly three months after Mr. Randle had sent his wire to the board, they wrote to him the following letter, of which I will omit the first paragraph as it contains nothing of importance:

Mr. W. R. Bawlf, president of the N. Bawlf Grain Company, Ltd., interviewed the board yesterday and was advised that in the opinion of the board, as their agent issued storage tickets in your own name, you had the right to give shipping instructions which should be carried out. Mr. Bawlf, however, pointed out to the board that according to instructions received from the Alberta Cooperative Wheat Producers, Ltd., they were compelled to ship all pool grain to Fort William or to the Canadian government elevators at Calgary and Edmonton. He further stated that at the time your grain was shipped to Calgary it was impossible for you to obtain permits. Under these circumstances Mr. Bawlf has instructed their Calgary office to interview representatives of the Alberta Cooperative Wheat Producers, Ltd., with a view of determining whether under these circumstances your grain should not be shipped in accordance with the instructions received from the general manager of the Alberta Cooperative Wheat Producers, Ltd. Immediately Mr. Bawlf receives a report from his Calgary office as to the result of the interview with the Alberta pool he will advise the board, when they will be glad to communicate with you further in connection with this matter.

I do not know, Mr. Speaker, whether there is any further correspondence between these interested parties; I have not been able to find any on this file. The net result is that after almost three months the board decided that Mr. Randle should have been allowed to name the terminal to which his grain would be shipped; but that does not seem to help Mr. Randle very much.

In my opinion the case boils down to this. What use is the Canada Grain Act to the farmers of western Canada if we have not the right kind of men on the grain board to enforce its provisions? The present board has, I think, made scarcely any effort to enforce the penalties on companies for disobeying the shipping instructions of these men. In almost every case on this file when the men had the regular ticket, after they filed affidavits the company settled with them, or at any rate the board told the companies that they should obey the shipping instructions; but in nearly every case that was too late to secure redress. It may be that we need some amendments to the act, but these cases certainly point to the need of a larger board. I think it should be composed of five commissioners.

I think the resolution which we are discussing is not complete. Several suggestions have been made, and some hon. members have expressed a wish to enlarge the referenec to the agriculture committee to allow investigation of the administration of the Canada Grain Act. To-day I spent considerable time endeavouring to frame an amendment that would effect this purpose and yet be in order. I hope the hon. member for Melfort (Mr. McLean) will not think I am attempting to forestall him in presenting this amendment. I beg to move, seconded by the hon. member for Camrose (Mr. Lucas), that the following words be added at the end of the question:

on condition that the said committee be hereby given power to investigate the whole administration of the Canada Grain Act.

Mr. DUNNING: Carried.

Mr. J. L. BROWN (Lisgar): I shall not take up much time, because in my judgment this matter would have been better dealt with by the committee before this long discussion was entered upon. However, there is a possibility that if the farmer members of Manitoba remained silent at this juncture their silence would be misconstrued. I am in full sympathy with any movement that has been made or can be made to improve the condition of the wheat producers. Perhaps longer than any other member of this house, not even excepting the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell), I have been associated with movements for the benefit of the farmers.

Mr. FORKE: Question.

Mr. BROWN: Well, as long ago as 1884 I was connected with the organization which then undertook to remedy grievances that existed in the grain trade, and from then down to the present time, with the exception of a very few years, I have been in close touch with the farmers' organization. I make this statement because the impression might go abroad that we from Manitoba have not been as anxious in some of these matters as the representatives of other provinces.

The statement has been made that this is one of the most important questions that have been brought to the house. That is true. The statement has been made also that the western farmers are greatly excited in this matter. Possibly that also is true. It is not to be wondered at that they are excited, that the heather is on fire, in view of many speeches that have been made and such extreme statements advanced as those we have heard from the hon. member for Kindersley (Mr. Carmichael) this afternoon. Perhaps it might be just as well to say this: that we who have been posing as leaders in the farm movement ought to be reasonably moderate in our statements and to make sure that at least they approximate to the facts. I do not know that I have ever heard a more absurd statement than the statement that the farmers of the western provinces lost $175,000,000 in their wheat crop in the past year because of weaknesses in the grading system. I do not propose to discuss the particular grievances of which the farmers are complaining. The first occasion on which this matter was brought to my attention—that is, the demand for the discharge of the grain commissioners—was at a United Farmers of Manitoba convention in Brandon this winter. I happened to be on the resolutions committee, and while we were preparing resolutions for the convention we received one asking for the dismissal of the grain commission. I intimidated to some of those who were with me on the committee that I should probably have to oppose it. That was carried to the president of the Manitoba wheat pool, who came to me afterwards and said, "I understand you are opposed to that resolution." I replied, "I am not necessarily opposed to it, but I do want evidence as to why they should be dismissed, and if such evidence is not forthcoming at the convention I shall certainly oppose the resolution." The resolution was introduced on the floor of the convention and neither the mover nor the seconder offered the slightest reason why the commission should be dismissed. All that was said was that the Board of Grain Commissioners had lost the confidence of the farmers; but nothing else was said that would warrant the convention in taking a step of that kind. And I am still in the same position: I want evidence given to show why the board should be dealt with in that drastic manner. Now I submit that this evidence would properly be given before the committee on agriculture. When the resolution came before the convention I quite naturally opposed it for the reasons I have stated; and when this committee meets, as it will meet, we shall expect that evidence to be adduced. And upon that evidence we will take action.

I am satisfied that the board is not above criticism in this matter, but at the same time it would be well for us to consider the question calmly and judicially, and not in a spirit of hysteria; and when we meet and receive the evidence we shall act accordingly. In the meantime I am heartily in favour of accepting the report of the committee, as moved by the chairman of that committee, and heartily in favour also of having added to it the words that have been proposed by the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Coote). Indeed, had he not moved the amendment in the words he has submitted, I had the very same words under my hand and intended to move the amendment. I still hold that the cause would have been better served had we deferred this discussion and taken action in the committee. Had we done so, we might have saved time and advanced the cause better than we have done so far.

Mr. W. R. FANSHER (Last Mountain): It is not necessary for any member to apologize for taking up a few minutes of the time of the house to discuss this question. When we realize that the grain trade of western Canada amounts in the aggregate to approximately three-quarters of a billion, it means something to the other industries throughout the rest of Canada.

A great deal of technical evidence has been given us by different members who have participated in the debate and it will not be necessary for me to go into that phase of the situation. But some remarks have been made which probably deserve a little more than passing attention. Yesterday, speaking in the house, the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Millar) had the idea that if we as westerners were demanding the recall or dismissal of the Board of Grain Commissioners, the directors of the pool should also be requested to resign. I inferred from his remarks that he was implicating the directors of the pool through the contract which they were able to make with the grain trade, as we call it. It has been said time and time again that the board have a particular function to perform. Their appointment, as set out in the Canada Grain Act, requires that they shall see that the provisions of that act are carried into effect. We have had a great deal of substantial evidence brought before us to the effect that they have been very neglectful of their duties, and because of that and because they have completely lost confidence of the people of the west, the demand for their recall or dismissal has been made.

I cannot understand why any part of a contract with an organization which may have been set up by the farmers to market their wheat should be said by any member of this house to be connected with the administration of the Canada Grain Act. The interjection of that argument into the debate brings about a peculiar situation which should be cleared up. It is generally supposed when this argument is advanced that a contract between the grain trade and the pool overrides a contract which the ordinary wheat producer has signed, called a pool contract. Both these contracts state very plainly that notwithstanding any of the provisions of the contract nothing shall interfere with the rights of the grower as set forth in the act, and I think it has been amply proven by different speakers that the grain act does give the farmer the right to determine the destination of his own grain. I will read part of clause 15 of the contract made between the pool and the grain trade:

> The pool agrees that all pool grain of whatever class, forwarded to terminal points shall be handled through any elevator the company desires: Provided that nothing in this clause contained shall take away from the grower any rights he may now have under the Canada Grain Act.

Then it goes on to state the charges. That clause was inserted by the grain trade for the express purpose of handling street grain; there was no other way in which they could handle that grain, but the grain act specifically sets forth that a farmer or a producer of wheat who has a carload lot is entitled to demand the delivery of that wheat in a car at that elevator, and he can determine the destination of that car; he can determine to which terminal elevator that car shall be shipped. Now I want to read clause 5 of the pool contract, which will show exactly when the grain becomes the property of the pool and when the farmer gives up his right to determine what shall become of that grain. Clause 5 is as follows:

> Wheat shall be deemed to be delivered to the association within the meaning of this contract so as to render the association accountable therefor only when the storage tickets, bills of lading, warehouse receipts, shipping bills therefor or other documents of or evidencing title thereto shall have been transferred and delivered, properly endorsed by the grower to the association.

I think that sets out fully the situation which has been somewhat beclouded here by some of the speakers.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Then it follows that although a man has a pool contract his wheat does not go to the pool unless he endorses the ticket?

Mr. FANSHER (Last Mountain): It resolves itself into this: If I wish to put my wheat through what we call a line elevator at the initial point, according to the grain act I have the right to demand delivery of that wheat in a car on track. When that wheat is delivered in the car on track the bill of lading is made out in my name; I have the privilege of endorsing that bill of lading back to the line elevator company, if I wish, or to the pool elevator or to any commission firm; I have complete control of that bill of lading and of the tickets which are issued. It cannot be contradicted that clause 5 of the grower's contract is the clause under which he has that right which has been disputed by some hon. members of this house.

Now I wish for a moment to direct attention to some remarks which have been made with reference to drawing the members of the Board of Grain Commissioners into this debate in a personal way. I can assure hon. members that it is not now and never has been my intention in discussing this subject to refer to the grain commissioners in a personal way. I do not think it was the intention of any hon. member to question the honesty of this board, but we seriously question whether they have been fulfilling the office to which they have been appointed. They have not been functioning as they were intended to function and as they have functioned in previous years. The hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Coote), the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Campbell), and others have quoted from returns to this house in order to show that in some cases thirty days have elapsed before any action has been taken when action was demanded. I may have a good piece of machinery; I may have had it for a number of years. If it becomes worn out and does not fill the bill I do not take it to pieces and say this part is no good or that part is no good; the machine simply does not fill the bill. I need a new machine, and that is what we are demanding now. In connection with the marketing of our next crop we want something in which we will have more confidence.

There was a suggestion made by the hon. member for South Battleford (Mr. Vallance), that we needed a new government department, but with that suggestion I cannot agree; it seems to me that we have enough ministers in the government now to carry into effect all the legislation passed by this house. But there is a demand that the Board of Grain Commissioners be enlarged because of the changed conditions in western Canada. A very much larger area has been brought under cultivation in recent years, and I heartily agree with the resolutions which have been read in this house and with the demands made by other hon. members that the membership of the board be increased to five and that they be distributed over the various provinces interested in this trade. We have heard read the resolutions passed by the United Farmers of Canada, Saskatchewan section, and the United Farmers of Alberta, and it is not necessary for me to read them again. I also have in my hand a similar resolution from the Canadian Council of Agriculture, which I received only to-day, demanding that the present board be replaced by a new board of five members.

The Minister of Railways (Mr. Dunning) this afternoon discussed the question of mixing. If I understood him correctly he suggested that mixing be stopped by law, and he also left the impression with the house that the western farmers were not unanimous and that they had arrived at no definite decision in regard to this question of mixing. Representatives of the three western pools appeared before the agriculture committee and presented to us a resolution which had been unanimously agreed to by the three organizations. This resolution covered the mixing of grain, and I believe the remedy they proposed for this evil is even better than the stopping of mixing by law. It has not been mentioned before, but there is a possibility of still skimming the grades even though we stop mixing by law. When samples had been taken and the wheat graded, any company would have an opportunity of looking it over and taking the low of that grade and designating it to certain terminals. It is quite true that this would have to be done under the jurisdiction of the Board of Grain Commissioners, and might not necessarily be mixed with other grades, but it would be the low of that particular grade. Other cars which were at the top of the grade could be put in other terminal elevators, and all the cars of the high of the grade could be segregated and put in another terminal elevator. The low of the grade would be setting the price of that particular grade, while the wheat which was at the top of the grade and worth more money could be offered at a premium, the same as premiums are being asked for at the present time. Those large organizations in western Canada, representative of the majority of the farmers of Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba, were unanimous in their agreement of this particular measure being incorporated into the Canada Grain Act. They felt that it would effectively deal with the evil of mixing. They requested that the standards for outgoing cargoes be made up of 75 per cent of the Winnipeg averages—the average of the high and low of the grades going through Winnipeg—and 25 per cent of the standard set up for the graders by the inspection department. It can be seen quite easily that a standard so set up would be so near the average of the grade that it would be practically impossible for any company, no matter how much they would desire, to flout that particular clause. If we had an efficient Board of Grain Commissioners it would be practically impossible for them to get a grade of wheat out of the terminal elevators which was below the average of the grades. In that way there would be a more even distribution of the price of the wheat, commensurate with the quality, back to the growers of the product. If we had the Winnipeg averages, as we call them, as a standard for the out-turn cargoes it might happen that, unless there was a certain leeway, it would be rather difficult to get out a wheat which was below the average of the grade going into any particular terminal elevator. In my opinion, it is necessary that there should be a slight leeway, and that leeway is supplied by the particular clause which the western organizations requested should be incorporated into the Canada Grain Act.

I have received a great many copies of the resolution which has been passed requesting that the administration of the Canada Grain Act be placed under the Department of Agriculture. That resolution does not cast any reflection upon the Department of Trade and Commerce, and it is not a personal matter so far as I am concerned. Many members of the house have attended the meetings of the agriculture committee and they have seen the work of some of the experts of the department in connection with the grading of grain. In every case where the grading of grain was under review, technical men of the Department of Agriculture were present. Mr. Newman, who followed Doctor Saunders, was present, along with other members of the department. We all know the wonderful work which Doctor Saunders performed. He gave us marquis wheat, which was one of the greatest wheats the world had ever known at that time. We have another wheat now, the garnet wheat, and it is meeting with some favour in the old country and on the continent. In order that this wheat may be put on the market in its proper form the Department of Agriculture, along with the Department of Trade and Commerce, is shipping to Europe some 10,000 bushels of it. Who will go over with that wheat to see that it is correctly milled and put on the market in the proper shape; to see that the bakers know how to handle it, and so on? It will be the technical men from the Department of Agriculture. When we desire information regarding the quality of wheat, the grading of wheat, milling and baking, and so on, where do we go? We go to the Department of Agriculture to obtain the advice of their technical men. It is true the Board of Grain Commissioners maintain a laboratory in Winnipeg where they have a chemist who can mill and bake, and so on. He is there for the guidance of the inspectors, because occasionally a certain wheat comes in and they want to know what it is, and that information can be secured readily through that laboratory. But when it comes to testing, the propagation of new brands of wheat, setting them out and giving them to the farmers to test, all this work comes under the Department of Agriculture, and because of that it seems to me that the only logical place for the administration of the Canada Grain Act is under the Department of Agriculture.

There is one thing more in connection with the grading of grain which I think should be mentioned in this debate. There is a need for considerably more specific knowledge in the setting of standards by the Standards Board. In my opinion, the visual grading of wheat has become obsolete, and when this matter comes before the committee it is my desire, and I am sure it is the desire of many of the members, that the committee should consider this question. When the Standards Board meet they should take into consideration the advisability of having milling and baking tests made before they finally set the standards of the grades.

There have been so many points brought out during the course of this debate that it is very difficult not to repeat some of the arguments which have already been put forward. But when it comes to the administration of the act I think we are all agreed that it is very important that that should be carried out in a proper manner. We may have an act which is as near being one hundred per cent perfect as it is humanly possible to make it, but if there is lax administration of the act, it renders it null and void.

I am pleased indeed to associate myself with the amendment which has been moved by the member for Macleod (Mr. Coote), and I hope the agriculture committee will give this matter their fullest consideration when it comes before them.

Mr. W. T. LUCAS (Camrose). Mr. Speaker, it is not my intention to detain the house at any considerable length, because this matter has been fairly well debated, but I should like to make a few remarks in order to clear up one or two points. It has been stated on the other side quite frequently that the proper place to debate this question was in the committee. With that I am quite willing to agree, but the reason the question has been debated in the house is that we were not able to get the amendment moved by the hon. member for McLeod (Mr. Coote), dealing with administration, embodied in the report of the chairman of the committee to the house.

Mr. BROWN: Will the hon. member give the reasons why it was not embodied?

Mr. LUCAS: I will give this reason. We met in the committee one morning and spent the most of the session debating this very question of widening the reference to deal with the whole matter. A motion was first moved asking for a widening of the reference very much along the lines of the third report presented by the chairman of the agriculture committee. To that resolution was added an amendment asking that the word "administration" be included. That was passed by the committee at that sitting. Personally I have never heard any reason why that resolution as amended was not presented to the house.

Mr. BROWN: Was the reason not that the hon. member for Rosetown (Mr. Evans) would not withdraw his resolution?

Mr. LUCAS: I do not know why the chairman of the committee refused to bring before the house a motion that was passed by the committee instructing him to do so. I hope, however, that the amendment now before the house to have the order of reference amended will be accepted and we shall then be able to debate the question in the committee. The chairman of the committee agreed that we might discuss the question in the committee, but we were afraid that while we might discuss it to our heart's content, when we came to make the report to the house, we would not be able to make any recommendations regarding administration unless we had the word "administration" added to the reference.

In regard to the administration by the present board, the remarks I have to make are not to be taken personally. After coming to the house I met these men and, so far as I know them, they are all very fine men, but that in my opinion does not excuse them from not carrying out their official duties. When a farmer delivers a load of grain to the elevator he receives a receipt for it, and in order that there may be uniformity in those receipts and that every elevator may not provide a receipt of its own, the Canada Grain Act definitely lays down the form of receipt that shall be used. Moreover a penalty is attached for any violation of the form or the use of any other receipt. Section 225 of the Canada Grain Act reads:

> Every person who uses any form other than those in the first schedule to this act or those authorized by the board with the approval of the governor in council shall, in case any such forms are applicable, be guilty of an offence under this act, and shall be liable to a fine or forfeiture of license.

I have under my hand the orders in council and the recommendations to the governor in council asking for two changes in these forms, and while I have no particular complaint to make in regard to the changes that were asked for, I should like the house to pay particular attention to this important fact: On May 18, 1928, a letter was addressed to the Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce and signed by the secretary of the Board of Grain Commissioners, as follows:

> Under the provisions of subsection 3 of section 170 of the Canada Grain Act, the board recommend for the approval of the governor in council, that the word "graded" be deleted from the first line of the "subject to inspector's grade and dockage" ticket, (which is designated B-1 on page 82 of the Canada Grain Act) for the reason that this form of receipt was never intended to be used as a graded storage receipt but simply as a receipt that grain, which was later to be subject to the inspector's grade and dockage, had been received into the elevator.

Note this part:

> As new supplies of tickets are about to be printed by country elevator companies, it would be appreciated if the minister would recommend this change to become effective as soon as possible.

On Friday, May 25, 1928, order in council P.C. 871 was passed, as follows:

> The Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General in Council, on the recommendation of the Minister of Trade and Commerce, and pursuant to the provisions of subsection 3 of section 170 of chapter 86, R.S.C. 1927 "An Act respecting Grain", is pleased to order that the word "graded" be, and it is hereby deleted from the first line of the "subject to inspector's grade and dockage" ticket, which is designated B-1 on page 82 of the said act; the Board of Grain Commissioners having reported that this form of receipt was never intended to be used as a graded storage ticket but simply as a receipt that grain which was later to be subject to the inspector's grade and dockage, had been received into the elevator.
> E. J. Lemaire,
> Clerk of the Privy Council.

The point I want to make is this: that the Board of Grain Commissioners found it necessary, in order to delete one word, to ask the governor in council to pass an order for that purpose. If that was necessary—and the act states that the only way in which these tickets can be changed is by order in council on recommendation of the board—how in the name of common sense could the Board of Grain Commissioners, without getting an order in council, recognize a new form of ticket containing several additional words that meant a great deal to the producers of western Canada? That is a very important point to keep in mind. If the board found it necessary to have a new form of ticket along the line of what is known as the hybrid ticket, it was their duty so to recommend to the Minister of Trade and Commerce and to ask that the ticket be authorized by order in council. When they did not do so, and when they recognized the use of that ticket in the grain trade, to my mind they certainly violated their trust.

The farmers of western Canada are not asking for a board to give them any special favours, but they are asking that the Board of Grain Commissioners administer the law as they find it. If the law is not as it should be, then it is up to this parliament to change it, and in the meantime we expect the board to carry out the law as parliament lays it down.

While I am on my feet I should like to endorse the suggestion that has already been made with regard to transferring the administration of the Canada Grain Act from the Department of Trade and Commerce to that of Agriculture. I want to assure the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Malcolm) that it is not that I do not feel he is thoroughly competent to administer his department, because in my opinion the Minister of Trade and Commerce is one of the most competent ministers on the other side of the house; but I believe that the Department of Agriculture is the one best fitted to administer this great business of handling our grain. Why should the most important product of the farm be administered under the Department of Trade and Commerce, when all the other products of the farm which enter into the trade and commerce of the country are administered under the Department of Agriculture? Take our dairy products, for instance. We have an exportable surplus of dairy products amounting to $40,000,000; meats and meat products, $61,338,000; poultry, $875,000; fruits, $5,683,000; potatoes, $7,338,000; or a grand total of exportable agricultural products of $115,234,000. All these products are graded, inspected and administered by the Department of Agriculture. I was particularly struck by this fact the other day in the agriculture committee where we had technical men from the Department of Agriculture before us dealing with such questions as the different varieties of wheat and the baking and milling qualities of wheat. We found that Mr. Newman, who is in charge of that work at the experimental farm, has been giving practically his whole time to the introduction of new varieties of wheat and the testing of them for milling qualities. He told us that he had been to Europe and called on various millers there; he follows the wheat from its growth in the soil right through to the milling end. All this work is done under the Department of Agriculture, which I believe is the proper department to undertake it. I hope that this question will be carefully gone into, and that politics will not enter into it at all, because it is a very important question and should be dealt with strictly on its merits. When the committee reports and brings in its recommendations I am sure that the house will pass them, and I hope that they will tend to bring about a more satisfactory condition in the production and marketing of our grain, which is the most important product produced in Canada.

Mr. MILLAR: May I ask the hon. member a question? With regard to his remarks as to the action of the chairman of the committee in failing to submit a motion prepared by the committee, is it not a fact that when the chairman reported back to the committee the reason he had failed to present that motion, and a new one was prepared, it passed the committee unanimously? Did not the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Garland) ask most pointedly of the chairman whether he would or would not rule that an inquiry into the administration of the Canada Grain Act should be permitted under that new motion, and was not the answer in the affirmative? Was it not the understanding of all members of the committee that this matter would be wide open, and was not every member of the committee satisfied?

Mr. LUCAS: I think that what the hon. gentleman says is quite correct, but the fear in the minds of a great many members of the committee was that while we might be able—

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: I would call the attention of the hon. member to the fact that in discussing what happened in the committee he is clearly out of order.

Mr. JOHN EVANS (Rosetown): Mr. Speaker, while I have the right to speak on the amendment, I would not have taken the floor at this time but for an allegation made by the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Brown). It seems that he accuses me of some motive in not withdrawing the motion on the order paper. I want to inform the hon. gentleman that I was never asked to withdraw it, and I had no motive in keeping it there. While I am on my feet, I wish to say that the government could have prevented this debate going on had they taken this corner of the house into their confidence.

Mr. MILLAR: Did not the hon. member for South Battleford (Mr. Vallance) ask the hon. member if he was willing to withdraw the motion?

Mr. EVANS: What goes on around the corridors or is whispered from one to another, I do not wish to recognize here. I was never asked by the committee to withdraw that motion. Had I been asked, I would have stated my reasons and would have expressed my willingness to do so. I had no motive in keeping the motion there. I wanted to do the very best thing. All I wanted was for the government to act, and they never said that they would act, and that is the reason the motion was placed on the order paper in the first place.

I wish to answer one or two statements that have been made by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Millar). He has stated that the pool was in favour of mixing. I do not think that the hon. gentleman can substantiate that statement. That the pool did mix I do not deny, but was the farmers' organization to send out grain in its purity when they would get nothing for that higher quality, because all the prices are based on the prices of the lowest grades for which any company can get a certificate? Would it be fair to ask the farmers' organization to ship that grain into the markets of the world at the same price as the grain companies and those who mix down to the very lowest point were getting?

Mr. MILLAR: Is it not a fact that Mr. Murray, one of the representatives of the pool, made the statement in the committee in 1925 that as a pool they were mixing, and did not want that privilege taken from them?

Mr. EVANS: Mr. Murray made the statement that he did not want that privilege taken from the pool because the others were allowed to mix; but had there been some guarantee that mixing would be stopped, the pool certainly would have stopped it. The pool never asked for it, and never did want it.

The hon. member for Qu'Appelle also made another statement on the same page of Hansard regarding the breaking of seals and the diversion of cars, and added, "I cannot see any illegality in it." Let me ask, why are cars sealed? Why even is a shipping bill used? Why does the railway company give a receipt for the contents of the car? Is it not for the reason that the shipper must have the assurance that the quantity and quality of the contents of the car shall be sent to its designated destination? It is done for no other reason, and we have a right to expect that.

Mr. MILLAR: Has not the railway company the right to break its own seals at any time it sees fit?

Mr. EVANS: They seal the car and give a receipt to the shipper, and no man has a right to break that seal until the car arrives at its destination.

The Minister of Railways this afternoon said there was some doubt whether or not the hybrid ticket, so-called, was illegal. I understood him to say that.

Mr. DUNNING: If my hon. friend will permit me, I did not state that as my own opinion. I did state that I expected the lawyers would do in regard to it the same as they did with respect to the old hybrid ticket; they would argue that the addition of those words did not constitute an illegal ticket. But I expressed my own opinion, as my hon. friend will remember I did in regard to the old ticket, that the addition of those words, or indeed of any words, is a contravention of the act.

Mr. EVANS: I should like to ask what, according to the Grain Act, legalizes the use of any ticket? Is it not this? First of all, the ticket must be approved by the Board of Grain Commissioners. In the next place, it must be also approved by order in council.

Mr. DUNNING: That is right.

Mr. BENNETT: Hear, hear.

Mr. EVANS: If there is any doubt as to the illegality of this ticket, will the minister say that the Board of Grain Commissioners authorized it, or was it approved by order in council?

Mr. DUNNING: No.

Mr. EVANS: I do not think he will.

Mr. DUNNING: Surely my hon. friend is not trying to quarrel with me? I refuse to dispute with him. I am in agreement with his view; not in opposition.

Mr. EVANS: But why cast any doubt on the illegality of the ticket?

Mr. DUNNING: I am not.

Mr. EVANS: There is only one way in which the ticket can be made legal, and that is by order in council. That is all I have to say.

Mr. JOHN VALLANCE (South Battleford): Mr. Chairman, may I ask the hon. member for Rosetown (Mr. Evans) a question?

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. VALLANCE: Why not? I understand the hon. member for Rosetown stated that he was never asked to withdraw his motion. Did he make that statement?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Question.

Mr. VALLANCE: Mr. Speaker, am I in order?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: Order. The hon. member is quite within his rights. He spoke on the main motion; now he is entitled to speak on the amendment.

Mr. VALLANCE: I understand that the hon. member for Rosetown stated that he was never asked to withdraw his motion.

Mr. EVANS: By the committee.

Mr. VALLANCE: A sub-committee was appointed by the committee on agriculture. That sub-committee was composed of three members, the chairman, the hon. member for Last Mountain (Mr. Fansher) and myself. We discussed the possibility of both the member for Willow Bunch (Mr. Donnelly) and the member for Rosetown withdrawing their motions in order that we might ask for the enlargement of the scope of the committee's work. If the hon. member—

Mr. CAMPBELL: Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. The hon. member is discussing the work of the committee.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: If the hon. gentleman is discussing the proceedings of the select standing committee on agriculture and colonization, he is out of order.

Mr. VALLANCE: I am not discussing the committee on agriculture, but the subcommittee. The hon. member for Rosetown was approached by the member for Willow Bunch and myself, after I had approached the latter and asked him to withdraw his motion. As I say, we approached the hon. member for Rosetown and asked him if he would withdraw his motion. So if he now states that he was never asked.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. VALLANCE: While I do not wish to say that he is wrong, I have positive proof that he was asked to do so by the hon. member for Willow Bunch and myself.

[Mr. Dunning.]

Mr. SPENCER: Mr. Speaker, may I correct the statement made by the hon. member for South Battleford (Mr. Vallance)? The hon. member for Rosetown distinctly said that he was not asked by the committee on agriculture, and that any request made to him by individuals he did not consider seriously.

Mr. MILLAR: That was not his first statement.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. VALLANCE: The committee on agriculture appointed a subcommittee, composed of the chairman, the hon. member for Last Mountain and myself. As a member of that subcommittee I asked the hon. member for Rosetown—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I offer no apology for participating in this debate. No question more vital to the welfare of Canada can engage the attention of this parliament than the orderly marketing of the product which constitutes the greatest new wealth of this country from year to year.

The administration of the Grain Act is the most important matter concerning the marketing of wheat and grain at this time or at any other time since the act was passed. After listening to the observations that have been made by hon. gentlemen, principally from Saskatchewan, which is our largest wheat-producing province, it is quite apparent that there is a very grave state of affairs in that province with respect to the administration of the act. It is equally true with respect to Alberta and Manitoba, as hon. members from those provinces have made perfectly clear in their addresses during the course of this debate.

But to my amazement I find an endeavour being made by those who sit to the right of the Speaker to divest the government of all responsibility and to fix it upon the unfortunate commission; they are to be the scapegoats for this grave situation. My understanding of responsible government is that the government yonder must accept responsibility for the administration of the Grain Act. I think yesterday the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Garland) suggested there might be some analogy between the grain commission and the railway commission. Let me point out that the railway commission is a court of record under the statute creating it, while the grain commission is merely a commission under the Department of Trade and Commerce of this government. One is a court that is not responsible to the Minister of Railways (Mr. Dunning); the other is a commission over which the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Malcolm) is supposed to exercise jurisdiction and control, and to see that it properly functions in accordance with the provisions of the statute in that regard. And if it does not do so we will hold the government responsible for its failure.

There are two counts in the indictment made against this government. The first count is the inactivity of the grain commission; the second is that it has entirely failed to discharge its duties when called upon to do so. The one count is inactivity; the other inattention. It is suggested as a result of the indictment that the members of the grain commission should be removed. Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not propose for a single moment to discuss the question as to whether or not there is evidence upon which the grain commissioners should be removed. That is not my purpose at the moment. But I desire to read the section of the statute in that regard, in order that there may be no misapprehension as to what exactly is meant when hon. gentlemen ask for the removal of the present members of the board. Section four of the grain act provides that:

> There shall be a commission, to be known as the Board of Grain Commissioners for Canada, which shall consist of three commissioners appointed by the governor in council.
> Each commissioner shall hold office during good behaviour for a period of ten years from the date of his appointment, but he may be removed at any time by the governor in council for cause.

I need hardly say to this house that this means that the Governor General may, upon the report of the responsible minister—not remove those gentlemen, but remove them only for cause after they are afforded an opportunity to be heard in their own defence. That is elementary. The other day, it will be remembered, an injunction was granted by Mr. Justice Eve to restrain the Salvation Army Council from removing General Booth unless he was given an opportunity to be heard; and it is within the minds of most members of this house that only last year the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) issued a commission to deal with a judicial situation in Manitoba in order that the accused person might have an opportunity to be heard. Where an appointment is made by the governor in council for a period of years, and that period has not elapsed, the incumbent may indeed be removed, but only in the terms of the statute for cause; and that cause must be established before the tribunal that hears the evidence when the accused have an opportunity to state their defence. This House of Commons is not the place in which that matter can be determined. We may indeed discuss it, but these gentlemen cannot make their defence, and I do not propose to-night to enter into any consideration as to whether or not they have violated the conditions under which they hold office, or whether or not they have made themselves liable to dismissal. I do not propose to discuss that question. But I say that the committee on agriculture is not the committee to hear that complaint, because it is a committee set up by this parliament. It is for the governor in council to set up a tribunal which will hear and adjudicate upon the charges made against these gentlemen, and then they may have an opportunity to be heard—that opportunity which is the right of every person who is charged with the commission of any offence under our statutes, whoever he may be.

I repeat, therefore, that I do not intend in any sense to discuss the question whether or not they have, for the reasons given in this house, made themselves liable to be dismissed. That is a matter that must be determined by the administration, and this house will hold the government responsible for such action as it may take. I need hardly say further that this is a case in which a grave reflection has been made against a member of the administration. It is in essence the statement that the Minister of Trade and Commerce of this country (Mr. Malcolm), is unfit to discharge the duties of his office. It is a charge which is supported to-day, with a wealth of authority, by the hon. member for Melfort (Mr. McLean), who closed his illuminating observations by contending that the matter should be taken entirely out of the hands of the Minister of Trade and Commerce and handed over to the benign influence of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell). I have no doubt that those who sit to my left—

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): I know the leader of the opposition does not wish to misquote me. It was not for that reason at all—that the Minister of Trade and Commerce was unfit to hold his high office—that the suggestion was made.

Mr. BENNETT: I am glad that it was not because of the benign influence of the Minister of Agriculture that it was suggested that he should take charge of the matter; because those who hear the calm, judicial way in which he disposes of every question —"What are you going to say about it?"— can understand how greatly conditions would be improved if the administration of the grain act were left to the Minister of Agriculture rather than to his colleague. But, sir, there is a much more serious matter involved. A minister of the crown is charged here in terms, by name, as having been derelict in his duty, as having neglected to discharge the obligations of his office and to look after his department as he should; and I say to this house that it is perfectly clear that what the gentleman had in mind when they made that representation was what transpired when the customs inquiry was instituted to determine the culpability of the government with respect to the administration of the Customs Act. It will be in the memory of most honourable members of this house that the report of the committee which investigated matters in relation to the Department of National Revenue was amended and adopted by this house by a majority of ten. The resolution, which in terms censured the administration, disclosed that:

> Ministerial action has been influenced by the improper pressure of political associates and friends of the minister, or acting minister, administering the department...

And, further that:

> The Prime minister and the government had knowledge for some considerable time of the rapid degeneration of the Department of Customs and Excise, and their failure to take prompt and effective remedial action is wholly indefensible.

These words have indeed a deep significance in relation to the matter now under discussion by this house. It has been charged in this chamber, by gentlemen who produce evidence to support their contention, that the grain act has been interfered with by the action of the governor in council in approving of a certain form of ticket, and by the elevator companies, without the approval of the governor in council, utilizing a certain form of ticket to the injury of the farmers of the west. These charges have been abundantly substantiated and supported. And, what is more, it is shown that great loss has ensued. It is perfectly clear that in May, 1927—bear in mind the month and the year—the governor in council, on the recommendation of the Minister of Trade and Commerce, gave his approval to a form of grain ticket, which grain ticket is not in accordance with the provisions of the statutes of Canada in that regard.

Mr. MALCOLM: That has not been shown.

Mr. BENNETT: Well, I have the ticket and I have the statute. However, since the minister suggests that it has not been shown I will show it to him now so that he may have no doubt as to the accuracy of what I am saying. I suggest that he turn to the grain act and look at form B1, which is printed at page 1970 of volume II of the revised statutes of Canada. There he will find that the ticket begins in these words:

> Received into store from . . . . bushels . . . . pounds . . . . subject to inspector's grade and dockage.

And the ticket that was approved provides this:

> Received into store from . . . . subject to inspector's grade and dockage . . . . on account of——naming one of the pools.

Mr. MALCOLM: No; that ticket was not approved.

Mr. BENNETT: The substance of that ticket was approved in the first instance, and this is the ticket from which I am reading. There are two tickets now; let us have no misunderstanding. The Minister of Railways (Mr. Dunning) shakes his head. In May 1927 a certain form of ticket was approved. That form contained the provisions as set out in the statute. The minister will find, at page 1971, that these words occur:

> Will be delivered, within the time prescribed by law, to the person above named or his order.

Those are not the words that appear in the approved ticket. That is point No. 1. No. 2 is that the grain elevators, instead of relying upon that ticket, changed the ticket to read as I read it a moment ago—the form of ticket to which I alluded, containing the names of the pools of the various provinces. That is beyond peradventure the fact. Now, sir, I ask you this question: is it not within the knowledge of this house that in October of that very year 1927—October, mark you—a complaint was made to the administration with respect to the kind of ticket that was being used. That was stated the other day in the committee on agriculture from which this reference comes. So that as long ago as October 1927 this administration had knowledge of the fact that the grain business of the country was being transacted in a manner and form contrary to the provisions of the statute in that behalf, and that loss of money to the farmers was being incurred. I now ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce: What did he do about it? What did the grain board do about it? And remember that, as the hon. member for Rosetown (Mr. Evans) has said, no ticket was valid unless approved by the governor in council. When, therefore, it came to the knowledge of this government —and it did come to their knowledge, as was shown in the committee—that that ticket was being used, why did not the government take action? Why did not the minister do something to protect the growers and producers of this country in order that they might secure the benefit of the statute in the form in which it now stands? The Minister of Trade and Commerce might say, "I was new to the department, I was feeling my way and gathering information as I went." But that excuse is not open to him. We heard this afternoon from his colleague the Minister of Railways, who observed that he probably knew more about the grain business than any other member of the house—a statement with which most of us will agree. Then why did he not tell his colleagues about it instead of telling parliament now? That is the point.

Mr. DUNNING: It is only fair to myself and my colleague to say that on the occasion when he learned of this practice and consulted me about it, I advised him to the best of my ability and along the lines my hon. friend is now contending, which reseulted in the telegram which the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Garland) was generous enough to read.

Mr. BENNETT: That was on January 17, 1929. But what happened in between?

Mr. DUNNING: It was the first I knew about it.

Mr. BENNETT: The Minister of Railways says it was the first he knew about it. But in the meantime he made journeys to the west and he was aware of the condition; he knew the feeling of the people with respect to that form of grain ticket. He knew it, and so did the Minister of Agriculture whom my hon. friend from Melfort is now going to promote. They both knew about it because they were journeying to and fro. The expense account with respect to private cars shows that, if nothing else does. Then I say, sir, that if these gentlemen, with the knowledge they have and which they have had, as they will not deny, had made the speeches to one another which they made in this house this afternoon, this trouble would have been remedied and the difficulty would not have occurred. If in 1927 the Minister of Railways and Canals had told his colleague the Minister of Trade and Commerce what he told the house this afternoon, do you think this could have continued? Certainly it could not. Then why this exhibition of knowledge this afternoon in this house when it might have been made quietly and directly to his colleague and the injury remedied?

Mr. DUNNING: Surely my hon. friend does not dispute my word when I say that my first knowlerge of the use of the words complained of was when the Minister of Trade and Commerce came to consult me about the matter, and to the best of my recollection that was during this winter.

Mr. BENNETT: That makes it worse than ever. In the winter of this year the Minister of Railways and Canals heard that the words complained of were inserted in the ticket without the authority of the government. The Minister of Railways and Canals is a very astute gentleman; I am bound to accept his statement and his recollection of the facts, but all I can say is that in the province of Saskatchewan he heard many things much more clearly which he should not have heard and failed to hear the things he should have heard. That is all I can say in relation to that matter, but I fancy most members of this house must be struck with the fact that with two members of the government from Saskatchewan, a gentleman from Ontario administering the statute which comes within his department looking to them for guidance, for wisdom and for the assistance that one colleague would expect from another, finds one silent and the other blind. That is an amazing state of affairs.

Mr. DONNELLY: May I ask my hon. friend a question? As a representative from western Canada did he hear anything in the west in regard to this hybrid ticket?

Mr. BENNETT: I may say to the hon gentleman, in answer to his inquiry, that I certainly did hear that it was the subject matter of much discussion, and until I came to Ottawa I assumed that the ticket had been approved by the governor in council or it would not have been used. That is what I assumed, and my hon. friend from Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens) tells me he heard of it also. Is it possible that only those who should not hear do hear and that those who should hear are deaf?

Mr. DONNELLY: May I ask what time my hon. friend heard of it?

Mr. BENNETT: I am sorry I cannot fix the exact hour and second to gratify the very laudable curiosity of the medical gentleman, but I am satisfied that his diagnosis of the situation will not be assisted by any knowledge he might obtain in that regard; in fact I am quire certain that his diagnosis would entirely coincide with that of his colleagues and of those gentlemen who sit to the right of the Speaker, who are so anxious to divest themselves of responsibility as far as the government is concerned and place it upon the poor unfortunate grain commission while they avail themselves of the attacks made by the gentlemen who sit to my left.

Mr. DONNELLY: My conviction is that you did not hear of it until last fall.

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Speaker, while the hon. gentleman, if he were amenable to the rules of this house, would have remained in his place and withdrawn that observation, he has indicated his training sufficiently by escaping from it. It is unnecessary to say that that form of tactics is not unknown but is rarely practised in parliament.

Mr. DONNELLY: I beg my hon. friend's pardon; I was just returning to my own seat.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. member for Willow Bunch (Mr. Donnelly) was not the gentleman to whom I referred at the moment. He was just getting to his own seat; I am glad he succeeded in getting there, and I trust that the hon. gentleman, having arrived at his seat, will now conform to the rules of parliament and be the honourable gentleman I know he is and withdraw the observations he made. I would ask you, Mr. Speaker, to exercise the power which rests in you as the chief commoner of this country, and see that this is done.

Mr. DONNELLY: I understood the hon. gentleman to say that after I made a remark I withdrew from the house; I only withdrew in order to reach my own seat. Perhaps I misunderstood him.

Mr. DUNNING: What remark should be withdrawn?

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. gentleman says I told an untruth, that his conviction was that I did not hear of it until this fall.

Mr. DUNNING: On the point of order, with all due deference to my hon. friend I did not gather that he made any statement as to the time at which he heard the news in question, and I understood my hon. friend from Willow Bunch to say that it was his belief that the leader of the opposition had heard it last fall. Is there anything wrong in that?

Mr. STEVENS: He must accept the statement which was made.

Mr. DUNNING: If a statement to the contrary is made he must accept it, of course.

Mr. BENNETT: The apology made by the Minister of Railways and Canals for his dutiful supporter from Willow Bunch does credit to his desire to protect him and is in keeping with the tactics resorted to by the hon. gentleman himself. So we will leave it at that; I am perfectly content that the ideas of parliamentary decorum are being observed, and I have nothing further to say. The honour of parliament is in the hands of the Speaker and of the administration, not in mine; for the moment the leadership of the house apparently is in the hands of the Minister of Railways and Canals and so we will leave it at that.

However, Mr. Speaker, I was suggesting that it would be highly desirable for one who is so experienced in the working of the grain act as was indicated by the Minister of Railways this afternoon, one who proudly boasts of his wide experience in the co-operative field as manager, director and otherwise, instead of making his speeches in parliament and railing against those who are endeavouring to place their position before this country fairly, to direct his attention to his colleague who, under the law, is responsible for the administration of that act.

So it appears that there is only one excuse, only one suggestion that possibly can be made in this respect; it now appears that there is to be a great contest as to who is to administer this act. Whether or not the contest is for the purpose of insuring the orderly marketing of grain or the orderly securing of votes does not yet appear; whether or not it is to be for the purpose of advancing the interests of the Minister of Railways, the Minister of Agriculture or the Minister of Trade and Commerce, who happens to reside in eastern Canada, has not been determined, but from the observations made this afternoon by the hon. member for Melfort (Mr. McLean) it is quite apparent he is all for the Department of Agriculture because they grow wheat. It might be equally true that there are those who sit opposite who are for the Minister of Railways and Canals because he has an elevator at Port Colborne and because he has to do with the transportation of grain. In the meantime the Minister of Trade and Commerce is to be left out in the cold, and someone else is to take from him the powers he has heretofore exercised because he has not done so in such a way as to be able to satisfy the claims of the hon. gentlemen who have spoken. That is the position at the moment, and it does indeed throw a very great illumination upon the situation as a whole; it shows that in this contest for power and control the interest of the producer has been forgotten; it shows that the only concern in the minds of hon. gentlemen is whether the Department of Agriculture, the Department of Railways and Canals or the Department of Trade and Commerce shall undertake the administration of this act.

That is the position at the moment, and in the meantime orders in council are being violated and there is no complaint; the provisions of the grain act are being laughed at and no one is concerned; the committee on agriculture and colonization has been considering many phases of this matter from several standpoints, but now the whole concern is who is to administer the act. Well, Mr. Speaker, this is not exactly the spectacle one would expect to see; it is not exactly the reason one would expect to be given in answer to the charges which have been made.

As I said before, I am not going to discuss the question of the responsibility of the grain commissioners; they must have a chance to be heard. However, I will say that it is perfectly apparent to anyone who has listened to this debate for the last two days, as I have, that any agreement which might be made between the pools and their customers cannot possibly affect the administration of that act. It is equally clear that any agreement which might be made between the line elevators and the pool cannot affect the administration of that act. It is equally clear that it is the duty of the minister to see that that act is administered, and if he fails—he fails if his commission fails—the government fails. In the telegram he sent he gave his benediction and approval of certain actions which the board was about to take, and he spoke of the board as being one over which he had power and control. The very essence of it, as distinguished from the railway board, is that one is a court and the other is not. One is a body which merely administers certain statutory provisions; the other is a court charged with certain duties and responsibilities which it must administer as a court and not otherwise. These distinctions are clear.

I will not labour the matter further, except to direct the attention of the house to the fact that this is a much graver situation than some of the hon. members would seem to think. It involves the failure of a minister, charged by some of his own supporters with unfitness, to discharge his duties. It is a case of ministerial responsibility. It is something more than asking whether the law shall be administered under the control of the Minister of Agriculture, the Minister of Railways, or the Minister of Trade and Commerce. When this committee meets it will have to sit and hear evidence and determine whether or not this minister, who has been charged by his own supporters with unfitness, is indeed as unfit as has been alleged. One could not have listened to the defence which was made by the Minister of Railways, conversant as he is with the terms of the act, without realizing that he agreed at least in part with those who complain about the administration of the act. All I can say is this: When the proper tribunal is set up under the statutes for the purpose of hearing evidence and determining whether or not the grain commissioners have done their duty, they will have an opportunity to present their defence and it is not for me to prejudge them or to determine the truth or validity of the defence which they shall make.

It is an entirely mistaken idea to consider this matter as touching only western Canada. It is vital to every manufacturing interest in Quebec and Ontario; it touches the economic life of the whole of Canada, for if the grain crop does not bring the maximum sum it should to those who produce the grain, under the sanction and with the support and approval of the law, there is just that much less new wealth in this country for the purpose of keeping the factories busy and developing the trade and commerce of Canada. I have less knowledge of the technical side of this statute than those who have spoken, but I would venture to direct attention to what I conceive to be the questions which must be determined and settled. These questions involve the fitness, not of commissioners, but of a minister of the crown responsible to this parliament, and under him the right of the government to maintain office in face of the charges which are made by their own supporters against the administration of the Canada Grain Act.

Hon. CHARLES A. DUNNING (Minister of Railways and Canals): Mr. Speaker, I desire to address myself for a few moments to the amendment in order to correct, if possible, some of the statements which have been made by the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett). He stated first that the speakers in this debate have unanimously condemned the administration of the grain act by the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Malcolm). I have paid very close attention to this debate and I think it has been plainly characterized by the universal expression of the view that the Minister of Trade and Commerce was not being charged as the leader of the opposition says he was. I do not recollect a single speech in this debate during which any member charged the Minister of Trade and Commerce with dereliction of duty in the slightest degree, but I do recall that several speakers very specifically and generously accorded to the Minister of Trade and Commerce his due in that regard. My hon. friend was not generous enough to do that in his own remarks.

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. DUNNING: I desire an opportunity to answer.

Mr. BENNETT: Allow me to correct any misapprehension; I charge now that the responsibility rests with the minister, although the charge is against the commission. That is what I desire to make clear.

Mr. DUNNING: We will let Hansard speak for itself in the morning.

Mr. BENNETT: I say that.

Mr. DUNNING: The hon. gentleman asserted that members of this house had charged the minister with a dereliction of duty.

Mr. BENNETT: I say so, yes.

Mr. DUNNING: He used also a lot of other phrases, which we will all read and understand at the proper time.

The second statement to which I desire to direct attention was that I had boasted of knowing more about the grain business than any man in this house. I leave that to the members themselves who heard my remarks this afternoon, and who will also have the opportunity of reading Hansard in the morning. My only desire this afternoon was an endeavour to contribute something of a constructive character, and there was no political colour of any kind in my utterances. I endeavoured merely to speak in a somewhat informative fashion of things of which I had some knowledge, without arrogating to myself that superiority of knowledge of which the leader of the opposition spoke, and which he exhibits so very often.

I am pleased to note that my hon. friend apparently believes that when a public officer, who under the law can be discharged only for cause, is accused of any dereliction of duty, that officer has the right to be heard in his own defence before he is discharged for cause. I believe I am correct in saying that whatever cause may be assigned for dismissing the Board of Grain Commissioners, at least no charge of dishonesty has been made; indeed I doubt whether it could be said that the charge has gone as far as inefficiency. The charge seems to be rather of a lack of judgment in a particular case, and so far as that is concerned, the Minister of Trade and Commerce can speak with greater authority than myself.

The third misstatement on the part of the leader of the opposition to which I wish to refer was his reference to the contest between three departments of this government for the control of the Canada Grain Act. He knows as well as I do that the first mention of any possibility of that act being administered by the Department of Railways came from himself on the floor to-night. No one else has referred during the course of this debate to any such possibility, and my hon. friend simply invented it in order that he might have something to talk about, being rather short of material with which to make a speech.

I take the attitude which I took this afternoon, and without seeking in any way to evade the proper responsibility of the government, I repeat it: The Canada Grain Act has been built up by a succession of parliaments rather than a succession of governments. Committees of this house have suggested from time to time amendments in this rather unique statute, and the government of the day, as I said this afternoon, has endeavoured to carry out the desires of the producers as represented on those committees. There have been difficulties in the administration of this act, and there will be difficulties in the future. The hon. leader of the opposition put his finger on one of them when he said that the Board of Grain Commissioners is not a court of record, or a court in the ordinary sense. Many of the members who have spoken have rather ignored that fact—perhaps they have not caught the full significance of it. They seemed to expect the Board of Grain Commissioners to take the place of the courts of the land with respect to matters pertaining to grain.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No, no.

Mr. DUNNING: But in any case that cannot be hoped for. The only features of the law which the board is empowered to enforce and to exact penalties for, involve either a prosecution by the board in the ordinary courts of the land or a revocation of license by the board. That is one point which, I think, might well be considered by the committee.

Mr. BENNETT: Power to dismiss officials.

Mr. DUNNING: They may, of course, dismiss officials, but I have not yet heard any complaint against a particular official working under the board. They are given no power, for instance, to deal otherwise with the Grain Standards Board than the law provides, and I do not think much complaint is being made with regard to the Grain Standards Board. The demand is rather whether the existing machinery cannot be improved in the light of circumstances that have developed in the last year or so. Everyone knows that the functions of the Grain Standards Board are far different in 1928 or 1929 from what they were in 1907, 1908 or 1910. I simply plead with members on both sides to attempt to approach these difficult matters connected with the marketing of grain in the same non-partisan manner as parliament has endeavoured to deal with this question throughout the whole history of the Canada Grain Act. In that way we can do more constructive work for the people of western Canada than by attempting to play politics with a matter of such great importance.

Hon. JAMES MALCOLM (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) when he rose to speak made a statement which I very much resent. He intimated that the government or the Minister of Trade and Commerce was endeavouring to hide behind the Board of Grain Commissioners and shoulder the responsibility onto them.

Mr. BENNETT: Undoubtedly.

Mr. MALCOLM: There has never been said by any man in the house before that the minister in any way shirked responsibility or was not willing to take full responsibility for the administration of his department. It has not been shown by any hon. member that the Board of Grain Commissioners are guilty of any crime. Just a few days ago, and for the first time in history since the pools were inaugurated, the government had the unanimous advice of the three presidents of and the three lawyers for the pools, gentlemen who came to us in the most honourable fashion to tell us for the first time what was the joint opinion of their members who represented fifty per cent of the producers of western Canada. We were glad to meet them and to receive the benefit of their advice. These men pointed out to us that certain changes in the act would be an improvement in the handling of grain. They pointed out to us what they thought would be advisable in the way of legislation in order to make the act more suitable. But not once in the whole interview did they make or infer a single charge against the honesty or even the judgment of the Board of Grain Commissioners.

We have heard a great deal of discussion in the house about a ticket, and my hon. friend tries to attach a certain amount of blame to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. I am quite prepared to assume full responsibility for anything I have done in connection with this ticket. Certain amendments were made to the grain act and I think some hon. members understand them much more clearly than the leader of the opposition does if his remarks are an indication of his knowledge of the matter. The amendments made to the act call for a change in the form of ticket. The Board of Grain Commissioners recommended to the minister that a certain form of ticket should be used to bring it into conformity with the act. My hon. friend says that the order in council did not bring the new ticket into exact conformity with the act. There may be a point in what he says, and I will come to that in a moment. That ticket was put into use in May, 1927, and it has remained in use ever since. The criticism of the Board of Grain Commissioners is not that they authorized anything or that an order in council was passed for anything, but rather, that they permitted the line companies to insert certain additional words in the ticket. When those tickets were first used the line elevator companies added the names of the Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta wheat producers associations. It was called to the attention of the board that these words were in direct violation of the act in that they were not included in the ticket as prescribed by the act. Mr. Murray, counsel for the pools and counsel for the trade, who insisted they had the right to insert those words, argued before the board and counsel of the grain commissioners on the effects and legality of the use of the words. The counsel whom the Board of Grain Commissioners engaged to advise them was Mr. Fisher, and his advice was that the use of these words on the ticket did not change the form of the ticket, as they merely constituted a statement of fact. Not satisfied with that—and I want my hon. friend to realize this, when he talks about maladministration or neglect of duty—the Board of Grain Commissioners came to Ottawa and, as he well knows, consulted the Department of Justice. The Deputy Minister of Justice gave them his advice and a ruling on the addition of the words in question, stating that he did not think the addition of the words materially affected the form of the ticket. Therefore when my hon. friend criticises the Board of Grain Commissioners, and when any other members criticize them for permitting the use of the ticket, they are also criticizing the judgment of the Department of Justice.

My hon. friend says that I knew of this long ago. Quite so; I did know of it and I take responsibility for knowing of it. I knew the grain trade who had the handling of certain grains desired to have some specific words on the ticket to indicate the grain which they were handling for pool members as distinguished from the grain which they were handling for their own customers. I know the Board of Grain Commissioners did not want the ticket used, and took advice as to whether they could legally stop the use of it or not. They did not authorize the use of it. The Deputy Minister of Justice advised them he thought the ticket was within the meaning of the act. Very well; a whole session of parliament passed. Did we hear any complaint last year from members about that ticket? Not a word. A whole year passed; the first complaint I recall receiving was last fall, and very late in the fall, from one of our own members, the Deputy Speaker (Mr. Johnston) to the effect that there was grave complaint in the west against the use of this ticket. Hon. members talk about millions of dollars, as if they were as common as the sands of the sea. My hon. friend knows perfectly well that when the grain trade was handling under contract certain grains for the pool where the pool did not have the country facilities to handle it, the loss that came to the farmer was a loss brought about by one set of conditions alone. The profits of the pool terminal elevators are divided among the members who have the opportunity to use the pool terminals. Therefore it is desirable that a member of the pool should, if possible, get his grain to a pool terminal, resulting in two or three cents a bushel profit therefrom. That is perfectly justifiable. You cannot blame a man for wanting to ship his grain to his own terminal. Under section 150 of the Canada Grain Act, long before the so-called Campbell amendment, every member of the government claimed that the farmer had that right. It was said that the Campbell amendment was unnecessary, but the house agreed to the amendment as hon. members felt that it would strengthen the act. When my hon. friends from the west wanted the amendment, parliament enacted it practically unanimously. The loss that occurred was simply the loss to those farmers who lost their share in the profits of the pool terminals. I do not know how much grain went through the pool terminals or how much grain could have gone through the pool terminals. I do not know whether the facilities of all the pool terminals were taxed to the utmost or not, but the only loss that could have occurred to the farmers of western Canada was if the pool terminals were not used to their capacity, because they could only distribute the total profits of capacity occupancy. That is all the profit they could have made, and if the pool terminals were not used to capacity, there would have been the two or three cents a bushel loss which other farmers received who shipped their grain through the pool terminal. That is the situation with regard to this hybrid ticket. The Board of Grain Commissioners wanted to discontinue its use. They asked the Justice department for an opinion, and the Justice department said that they believed the ticket was within the law, so that if any criticism is coming to the board for not stopping the use of that ticket and allowing the use of the words, the board have the opinion of the Justice department to back them up.

When we heard the complaint that was made this fall about the matter, I immediately began to investigate to see how wide-spread it was, and I discovered that the board, on every occasion when it had been called to their attention, told the farmer—the telegrams are on record, and the board will have the records for their defence—that he had the right to apply for a ticket under section 150, and the line companies were informed that they had to give that ticket. The board never denied the right of the farmer to get the ticket under section 150, the ticket prescribed by law. Certain elevator companies probably were guilty of refusing to give that ticket, and I think the board are able to show that they were quite willing in every case to prosecute the grain company for their refusal to give that ticket. Every time they attempted to prosecute, the company gave the ticket, and they were ordered to give it on many occasions.

I am not a man who has such a high opinion of himself as to refuse to accept the opinion of trusted and tried officers of my department. When I came into the department I believed that Mr. Boyd, who had been chairman of the Board of Grain Commissioners for twelve years, was a good public servant and that he had done everything he could to administer the grain act in a proper manner in the interests of the producers for whom it was designed. I knew that Mr. Boyd had served under half a dozen different ministers since May, 1917, and when the term of his office expired I was quite willing, having regard to his experience, that his term should be renewed and his services continued. These men as far as I know have been competent men, and I have laid no charge against them. I want the leader of the opposition clearly to understand that I am not trying to hide behind the skirts of anybody. The Board of Grain Commissioners are competent officers of my department. They have been there for many years administering the act. The officers of the pool, in consultation with members of the government the other day, suggesting changes to the act, made no charge against the board. A lot of members of parliament have charged the board with incompetence, and a lot of resolutions have been passed, but up to the present time I do not think one single specific charge has been laid in this house against the honour of this board, nor do I think such a charge could be proven. I do not think anything can be said about the board unless it can be shown that their judgment was faulty in permitting the use of a ticket after they had received the advice of the Department of Justice in regard to it.

Mr. BENNETT: I know the minister does not want to be interrupted, but I think the advice which was given him by the Department of Justice is hardly what he suggests. It reads:

> It is contended on the other hand that the grower in such circumstances has no right to control the shipment of grain because the pool, being fully authorized as his agent to do so, waived the statutory right given by section 150 (2). Owing to the fact that the parties have failed to express their intention clearly, I entertain considerable doubt as to whether the grower may, if he chooses, elect to divert the grain to a terminal of his selection. I should think he probably can, if he has not stored the grain in the country elevator on account of the pool, but Mr. Boyd has not asked advice on this point.

Mr. MALCOLM: My hon. friend is perfectly right. We never asked advice on that point. We never denied the right under section 150.

There has been so much said about the question of the loss in value in the different grades that I think it is worth while for me to make a few remarks on that subject. Under the Canada Grain Act there is a standards board set up each year, "which board shall meet and take samples of the year's crop and thereon set the commercial grades." The standards board is composed of fifty per cent producers, and on it are such men as Dean Rutherford, of the university of Saskatchewan, some officers of the pool, and officers of the producers' organizations. The other members of the standards board are millers and grain dealers. The Board of Grain Commissioners also has a representative of its own on the standards board. Someone has charged that the Board of Grain Commissioners did not see that the standards were proper this year, but the very evidence brought out here tonight shows that the Board of Grain Commissioners did all they could to assure that they should be proper, for the standards were accepted unanimously by a board set up of fifty per cent producers, and the only one who protested that the standards were too high was an officer of the Board of Grain Commissioners, Doctor Birchard, their chemist, who said that the lower grades of this year's crop had a higher milling value than in previous years, and as a result this should be considered.

Mr. FANSHER (Last Mountain): Did not a representative of the pool, Mr. McCrea, object strenuously to these standards?

Mr. MALCOLM: I never heard of it. The board unanimously accepted the standards, and when Doctor Birchard pressed his point he was told that the samples he had taken to ascertain the milling and baking qualities of the lower grades were unfair and that he should take other samples from the head of the lakes. He milled and baked further samples, which proved his contention that our lower grades this year have a very substantially higher milling value than in other years. Immediately the standards were set and Doctor Birchard had ascertained the high milling value of the lower grades, the Board of Grain Commissioners notified the Liverpool corn exchange and the corn exchanges of Europe that this year our low grades had an exceedingly high milling value, and in consequence closer prices have existed between the grades this year. To say that in so far as the setting up of standards is concerned the Board of Grain Commissioners did not function or did not assist is to state something that is not true. Mr. Boyd, Doctor Robinson, Mr. Snow and Doctor Birchard have not control of setting the standards. That is in the hands of the Standards Board, but so far as they could through their officer and chemist they tried to influence the opinion of the board that the wheat this year of the lower grades was of an exceptionally high milling value.

Another matter has been referred to with which the Board of Grain Commissioners have nothing to do; the law entirely decides the matter. There is a great diversity of opinion as to the benefits and evils of mixing. Many men in this chamber have shown that the farmers have lost a very great deal of money through mixing, that their wheat has been bought on the maximum of the grade and shipped out on the minimum, that they have not received the profits therefrom but that the intermediate handlers have reveived the profits. So far as the cooperative organization is concerned no great losses can occur, because whatever profit is made by mixing goes to the members, but in so far as the private seller is concerned it is quite possible that mixing might take from him some profit which would be made by the mixing house. If the pool operating their own mixing house make money on mixing, the one question for parliament to consider is, does mixing lower the standards of our grades on the markets of the world and thereby reflect on the quality of our wheat? But, Mr. Speaker, in spite of all the discussion on mixing, in spite of all the discussion in Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba on mixing, farmers by the thousand claim that they are being defrauded by mixing. Is not that true? I think every hon. gentleman from the west will agree that there is much complaint against mixing, but I would ask the house what in the name of goodness can the Board of Grain Commissioners do to prevent mixing when parliament made it legal in the statutes, and when, I, with the board, have to administer an act which says that mixing is legal? So all this pile of criticism of this evil which some of my hon. friends want to centre on the Board of Grain Commissioners, a board which I as minister will defend until something specific has been proven against them, all these things are not things which the board can direct. You can appoint any five men, or any fifty men, and even if they be supermen they will not be able to give satisfaction to the grain producer on the question of mixing so long as the Canada Grain Act permits the practice.

There is another point, Mr. Speaker, to be dealt with. Before parliament was called this session I did my very best to secure the fullest information as to the seriousness of the complaints referred to in this debate. I found that in Alberta, in Saskatchewan and in Manitoba there was serious complaint against the use of the ticket to which I first referred, and that the board were charged with making a very grave mistake of judgment in not immediately prohibiting the use of the ticket, it being charged that by their failure to do so they had allowed the grain trade to deprive the farmer of his rights under section 150. Undoubtedly if the board had prohibited the use of the ticket litigation would have followed. But I need not argue the point; I have no fear on that score. I found out also that very grave dissatisfaction existed on the question of mixing and on the question of grades.

Immediately parliament assembled I called the members from the west into my room and discussed the matter with them. I found they were very desirous of cooperating with me to improve the grain act. They made certain charges against the Board of Grain Commissioners for allowing the use of this ticket, but their principal desire was to endeavour to improve the legislation so that it could be better administered.

My hon. friend from Rosetown (Mr. Evans) brought this question to the fore by his resolution to dismiss the board. Thereupon I said that I had no other course open to me than to allow the committee on agriculture and colonization to hear any evidence that might be submitted pertaining to the board's action. And now my hon. friend the leader of the opposition says that this is not a case for the committee to hear. Let me say that throughout this debate, although there have been complaints that the Board of Grain Commissioners have not administered the act in the interests of the wheat producers, no proof has been submitted to show dereliction of duty, as he expresses it; not one word of proof. I make that assertion after having listened to the whole debate and after a careful perusal of Hansard. No hon. member has proven the Department of Trade and Commerce was derelict in the administration of the act. Therefore I submit it is the easiest matter in the world to deal with the respective resolutions of my hon. friends from Rosetown, Willow Bunch and Qu'Appelle by giving to the committee on agriculture and colonization the widest possible powers to investigate the problems which arose during the past year. I venture to say that in the investigations of those problems, and the placing of the board in the hands of the committee to explain their actions, the net result will be that no man will be able to substantiate any charge of inefficiency that he may prefer against the board.

I can assure my hon. friend the leader of the opposition that so far as I am concerned I am not going to hide behind the fact that I am a new minister and have had only two years' experience in my department, because I believe that when I took office I had to deal with a body of commissioners which knew the Canada Grain Act reasonably well, men who were honourable and clean, and who gave me the best advice of which they were capable. Up to the present time I have had no reason to distrust these men. If they have failed in matters of judgment, that is only a human failure. Whether or not they have failed I do not know. but I do know that their action which is criticized the most, has been sustained by counsel and by the Department of Justice.

There is nothing further, Mr. Speaker, that I can add. I think the house should let the matter go to the committee on agriculture and colonization for investigation, and I think that during the investigation many of the remarks that have been made in the course of this debate will fall to the ground.

Mr. JOHN MILLAR (Qu'Appelle): Mr. Speaker, before the debate is closed I desire to make a correction. The hon. member for Rosetown (Mr. Evans), perhaps unwittingly, misrepresented what I said yesterday. His statement was to the effect that I said that in 1925 the pool were in favour of mixing; also, that Mr. Murray, one of the members of the pool, before the committee of 1925 simply stated that the pool were mixing because the others were mixing. Now, neither of those statements is correct. I should like to quote my exact words. In endeavouring to make plain to the house that there was a division of opinion in 1925 in regard to mixing I said:

> The pool officials who were present in the committee at that time when the matter was being discussed represented a body who were not themselves a unit. One of them stated in the committee that the pool were mixing, and did not wish that privilege taken away.

My first statement that the pool were not a unit is quite different from the statement attributed to me by my hon. friend that the pool were in favour of mixing. The latter part of my statement I still stand behind. I have the printed report of what Mr. Murray said, and it bears out my statement rather than the statement of the member for Rosetown.

Mr. W. F. KAY (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker—

Hon. H. H. STEVENS (Vancouver Centre): Before the mover of the resolution (Mr. Kay) closes the debate, Mr. Speaker, I desire to say a word or two. This question is usually looked upon as peculiar to the interests of hon. members from the three prairie provinces, and as a consequence it is generally accepted as desirable that they should be the ones to debate it. Therefore I hope I shall not be considered an intruder.

Some ten years ago we had perhaps what may be termed a rather intense discussion of this subject, out of which grew the grain act as it was amended in 1919. I should like to bring to the attention of the house what I think is at the very root of almost all the complaints regarding the handling of grain. First, mixing is the term that is used as being peculiarly objectionable to the producer. But what is it that inspires a desire to mix grain? A former leader of the Progressive party and a former minister of agriculture, the Hon. Thomas Crerar, in the session of 1919 gave a very clear statement of the reasons why mixing occurs. I have not his speech under my hand, but I can send for it. It will be found in Hansard of that year at about page 3000 or 3100.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. STEVENS: If my representation of what he said is questioned I will send to the library and get Hansard. Indeed, I may as well send for it now, seeing that apparently there is some question. However, what he said was this: that a superintendent of an elevator—he was speaking then of public terminal elevators at Fort William—knew perfectly well that he could not weigh out of an elevator exactly the same amount of grain as he had weighed in because of an invisible disappearance or shrinkage in the handling of the grain. In other words, he was bound to have a certain amount of shrinkage. He said further that if there was a shortage at the annual weigh-up in that particular grade of grain he had to go on the open market and buy the grain and replace it. Therefore, he said, all superintendents used every conceivable means to maintain the quantity of grain in the elevators—always; because the superintendent, knowing that he would be held responsible for shortages and shrinkages, invariably did a certain amount of mixing in order to maintain his quantity of the higher grades. And to do this he would mix a lower with a higher grade so as to keep the quantity.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): Shrinkage is provided for.

Mr. STEVENS: A very small shrinkage is provided for in the act—30 pounds to the car, if I recall rightly. That is allowed in the act, but it is not enough and is known to be not enough. My contention in 1919 was this—and I hold it is good to-day—that no public terminal elevator handling grain of other people should be allowed to mix one grade with the other and thus make more money from the outgo and out of the overages than they would make if they handled the grain strictly in conformity with the act. The evil of mixing has, I think, been demonstrated in this as well as in previous debates, and there is one simple fact which the house ought to face. It is this. It has been demonstrated over a long period of years, whatever may be the reason for it, that the farmer usually gets the short end of the deal in the handling of the annual grain crop of the country. Reasons may be assigned here and there, but the long and short of it is that the farmer pays the piper, to use a common expression. Surely then parliament ought to address itself primarily to the importance of protecting the interests of the farmer. I am not saying this simply to curry favour with the farmer; I make the statement in order to indicate what is the primary principle that should be observed in the whole discussion of the problem. Parliament ought to address itself to the protection of the farmer's interests, the interests of the producer of the grain. Now, if by the introduction of these tickets, or if by any action of the grain commission or any action on the part of the operating companies, the farmer or the producer—I will use the latter term—feels that he is not getting full value from the sale of his crop, then parliament ought to give the matter immediate attention.

Now I have Hansard and I will quote the exact words of Mr. Crerar. Referring to some observations I made regarding overages at the head of the lakes, he says:

> Every man. . . knows this fact, that you cannot operate a terminal elevator or a country elevator or for that matter any other elevator, where grain is handled in bulk, and have your outturn correspond identically with what you put into the elevator.

He laid that down, and I lay it down, as a primary principle in the handling of grain: You cannot expect to take out of the elevator the same quantity as you put in of any grade. He goes on:

> I have stated also that the owner of a terminal elevator warehousing grain is responsible for every bushel of grain that goes into that elevator. Not only so, but he is responsible for every bushel of grain of a particular grade that goes into that elevator.

That was the second proposition laid down by Mr. Crerar. Further on, having discussed the eventuality of a shortage, he says:

> In that event I have to go into the open market and buy the grain necessary to make up the deficiency. . . Now, how do the overages arise? Naturally, when the superintendent of an elevator is conscious of the fact that his elevator is short on any grade at the end of the season, or it is short on the total amount of grain put in, and his company has to go into the market to buy that grain to make up the deficiency, he uses every precaution to insure that his elevator comes out right.

If you will take the annual reports as published previously I notice that the 1927 report does not cover this particular phase of the subject—you will find set out a record of the weigh-ups of the various elevators, and in these weigh-ups you will see that invariably the overages occur on the higher grades and any shortage that takes place is in the lower grades. What is the explanation? It is a simple one. If an elevator found that it was a little short on No. 1 it fed into No. 1 bins a certain quantity of high grade No. 2, thus not only maintaining but increasing No. 1. And a high grade No. 3 was slipped in with a good grade No. 2. The result is, as the Minister of Railways (Mr. Dunning) mentioned a moment ago, that out of these elevators there invariably comes the minimum of the good grade instead of an average grade. Now this has been going on year after year and very little has been attempted in the way of a remedy. The question may be asked: What can be done? Before I answer that question I want to go a step further. Some hon. gentleman a moment ago spoke about the pools. I will not deal with the pools because I have not looked into the matter since the pools have had charge. The cooperative groups—that is to say, the Saskatchewan Cooperative and the Grain Growers' Grain Company of Manitoba—commenced operations some fifteen years ago or thereabouts, and they did exactly the same thing that the private elevators do, because they realized that they would also be faced with shortages in the various grades. Under the act which I have here they are allowed to take, for impurities in the grain, up to 3 per cent dockage.

Mr. DUNNING: That is set by the inspector.

Mr. STEVENS: It was fixed in the old act. However, I will accept the minister's word.

Mr. DUNNING: For dockage the inspector sets the amount.

Mr. STEVENS: Dockage was allowed.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend is referring to shrinkage.

Mr. STEVENS: No, I am referring to dockage. However, I will not quarrel over the point. In any case, we will put it this way: They are allowed to make a certain dockage. Invariably that dockage exceeds what is necessary to allow for the impurities in that shipment. In other words, it would be impossible to fix it exactly, so a small margin of safety is allowed; but mark you, in every instance the elevator gets the protection rather than the shipper of the grain.

I have just had placed in my hands some observations made in 1925. I refer to the Grain Growers' Grain Company, and according to Price, Waterhouse and Company's report in 1916-1917, their earnings were $446,000, made up from elevator operations, $238,000; screenings, $51,000; and overages, $157,000. I do not cite this for the purpose of reflecting on this company, because the pressure of business forced the grain growers, the Saskatchewan cooperative and I believe the pool, to do exactly what other elevators had been doing. In 1919 I argued in parliament against allowing the principle of overages at all, but I remember that Mr. Crerar and others from the west opposed that idea, so it was fixed by statute that one-half of one per cent would be the maximum allowance for overage.

Mr. DUNNING: Was it not one-quarter of one per cent?

Mr. STEVENS: No, one-half of one per cent; that was fixed by statute. We must remember that one-half of one per cent of the western crop is an enormous amount; it is a heavy toll to levy on the crop. It is my opinion that overages should not be allowed, and I believe the agriculture committee should take this phase of the question into consideration, because after all it lies right at the very root of the whole trouble; I believe that an elevator should be given fees for the services rendered and that the shipper should get the full return on his shipments. In the case of grain containing impurities, instead of making an arbitrary dockage of two per cent or three per cent, which is a heavy toll, in my opinion the grain should be cleaned before it is weighed and graded for distribution. By following these processes I believe very much could be done to lessen these difficulties.

Mr. BROWN: I think if the hon. gentleman looks into the matter he will find that the allowance is one-quarter of one per cent.

Mr. STEVENS: I am told by my leader that the hon. gentleman is right; it was fixed at one-quarter of one per cent in 1925, but previously it was one-half of one per cent.

Mr. BROWN: I believe it always was one-quarter of one per cent.

Mr. STEVENS: I will look up the resolution which was presented to this house in order to have it clearly before us. The resolution says:

> . . . . if a surplus in any grade of grain is found in excess of one-half of one per cent of the gross amount of the grain received in the elevator during the crop year, such excess surplus shall be sold annually by the Board of Grain Commissioners. . . . .

I understand that was amended in 1925 to one-quarter of one per cent.

The first point I wish to make in these observations is that in all the questions we have been discussing in connection with the handling of the grain crop and in every decision which has been made, the handler of the grain has received the benefit rather than the shipper. That is the basis of our complaint, and I think the time has come when our primary objective should be to give to the shipper of the grain a maximum return for his goods; I will leave it at that.

I have before me the annual report of the Board of Grain Commissioners for Canada for the crop year 1927. I ask the minister if there is any explanation why we have not had the report for the year 1928 in our hands long before this. Nine months have passed since the end of the crop year, which was on August 31. 1928, but as yet we have not received that report. As a matter of fact, the section of the act is as follows:

> The board shall, within thirty days after the close of each calendar year, make to the minister a report respecting,
> (a) all such matters as appear to the board to be of public interest in connection with the inspection, weighing, storage and transportation of grain; and
> (b) such matters as the minister may direct.

In the first place, I want to direct the attention of the minister to the fact that the statute calls for a report to be made by January 30, and it should be printed and in the hands of members of parliament immediately after the opening of parliament. In the second place I want to draw attention to the fact that the reports now do not contain a statement of the annual weigh-up, so far as I have been able to see, and the annual weigh-up is of immense importance. For instance, there should be shown very clearly what additional overages there are in each elevator for each year, and out of what grades those overages come. That may be in the report, but I confess that in looking through this report I have failed to find it. I direct the attention of the minister to that because if we have not that information we cannot properly gauge the merits of the act or the outcome of the administration of the act.

I am not going to detain the house longer; I want the minister to feel that I am quite certain there is no desire to impugn his personal capacity or his personal honour, nevertheless the fact remains that on his shoulders rests the responsibility for the administration of this act, and if the act is not being administered satisfactorily parliament must look to him for the explanation. That is really the point we all desire to make very clearly. I agree with my leader that the Board of Grain Commissioners should not be judged without being heard; if they have not properly administered the act then they should be censured, but in the meantime we in parliament must hold the minister in all cases responsible for the proper administration of these acts.

CANADA—NEWFOUNDLAND TRADE AGREEMENT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to ask the Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb) if he has any statement to make to the house in connection with the report that the trade agreement between Newfoundland and Canada had been terminated, or that notice to that effect had been given.

Hon. J. A. ROBB (Minister of Finance): I have not read the report. Did it appear recently in the press?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes.

Mr. ROBB: About a year ago Sir John Bennett, then representing the Newfoundland government, came to Ottawa and we negotiated a trade agreement on behalf of the Dominion of Canada and the colony of Newfoundland, giving Canada most favoured nation treatment, including the British preference, and giving to Newfoundland the same concessions in Canada. It was also arranged that we should assist in some way, through the Department of Trade and Commerce, in the maintenance of a steamship service carrying mails between a port in Canada and a port in Newfoundland. The necessary orders in council were put through here and the necessary legislation passed in Newfoundland, but subsequently it was learned that there was a difference of opinion in Newfoundland as to the interpretation, and until that matter should be straightened out we have made no payments on account of the subsidy. Recently Sir Richard Squires, the present Prime Minister of Newfoundland, has been in Ottawa and has had a conference with the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Malcolm) and myself, and we understood that we were reaching an agreement that would be mutually satisfactory both to Canada and to Newfoundland.

Mr. BENNETT: Would that involve the termination of the present agreement?

Mr. ROBB: So far as we understand, the present agreement still stands.

MEDICAL RELIEF FOR INDIANS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. A. BRADETTE (North Timiskaming): I would ask the Minister of National Health (Mr. King) in the absence of the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Stewart), if any official report has been received from the Ontario government with respect to providing medical relief for the Indians in James Bay basin. A despatch from Toronto dated March 19, reads:

Hon. William Finlayson, provincial minister of lands and forests expressed the willingness of the Ontario government to cooperate with the Dominion authorities in carrying medical aid to the stricken Indians in the Moose Factory district in a letter forwarded to the Department of Indian Affairs at Ottawa to-day. Provincial air force machines will be placed at the disposal of any doctors the Dominion government may decide to send to the Indians' aid. Captain W. Roy Maxwell, director of the force, is ready to lead the expedition.

Hon. J. H. KING (Minister of National Health): In the absence of the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Stewart) I may say that the matter of medical relief for the Indians comes under the Indian department. I shall bring the matter to the attention of the Minister of the Interior and he will be able to give my hon. friend an answer later.

GRADING OF GRAIN

ALLEGED MIXING AT MONTREAL ELEVATORS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. A. MERCIER (Laurier-Outremont): I would ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Malcolm) if the government has been made aware of a statement issued by the chairman of the harbour commissioners of Montreal, and published in the press of yesterday, denying that grade mixing has taken place at Montreal.

Hon. JAMES MALCOLM (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Yes, the government has received a copy of a telegram which was sent to the chairman of the Saskatchewan commission I think, by the Montreal harbour commission.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

INQUIRY RESPECTING FURTHER LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, perhaps this would be an opportune time for the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) to indicate in as general a way as possible what government business will engage the attention of parliament during the remainder of the session.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if my hon. friend will regard my statement as a general one and not hold the government too closely to it, I would say that I think the house has now before it, either under government notices of motion or government orders, practically all the legislation that we intend introducing this session, with the exception of four bills of which I will make mention. There may also be a bill from the senate dealing with the Companies Act; it does not appear on the list before me. The Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) intends to introduce a bill respecting the Juvenile Delinquents Act, and another bill respecting the administration of justice in the Northwest Territories; the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Dunning), a bill with respect to the Montreal terminals, and the Postmaster General (Mr. Veniot) a bill respecting certain postal employees. I think those bills cover all the legislation to be introduced.

JACK MINER BIRD SANCTUARY

INQUIRY AS TO FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. J. WARD (Dauphin): I desire to ask the Prime Minister if it is the intention of the government to grant any financial assistance to the Jack Miner bird sanctuary at Kingsville, Ontario.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): The intention of the government will be announced in the supplementary estimates; but it might please my hon. friend and Jack Miner if I were to say that we are favourably contemplating such a grant.

RELIEF TO WELSH MINERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. R. GEARY (South Toronto): Mr. Speaker, will the right hon. Prime Minister be good enough to say whether the government has taken into consideration the question of making a grant for the relief of the distressed coal miners in Wales?

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I have already intimated to the house, in answer to a similar question which was asked by my hon. friend from Toronto Northwest (Mr. Church), the position of the government in this matter.

INQUIRY FOR RETURNS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. N. CAMPBELL (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, on March 4 a motion standing in my name passed the house for the production of correspondence between the government, the British High Commissioner and the British Federation of Industries with respect to the British preference. I have not yet received the papers, and I would ask that they be presented as soon as possible. On the same day another motion standing in my name passed the house for the production of papers in connection with the sale of section 26, township 32, range 32, west of the first meridian. I should very much like to secure these papers at the earliest possible moment.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I shall ask the Secretary of State to take note of my hon. friend's wishes regarding these matters.

THE BUDGET

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON THE ANNUAL FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The house resumed from Tuesday, March 19 consideration of the motion of Hon. J. A. Robb (Minister of Finance) that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of ways and means, the proposed amendment thereto of Hon. Hugh Guthrie, and the proposed amendment to the amendment of Mr. Spencer.

Mr. F. G. SANDERSON (South Perth): Mr. Speaker, all things come to those who wait. About sixty hours ago I began a few observations on the budget and spoke for four or five minutes before the house adjourned. At the time of the adjournment I was dealing with the speech of my hon. friend from South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie) delivered in criticism of the budget. He admitted, at least in a half-hearted manner, something that his colleagues who have since spoken have not admitted, namely, that there is some prosperity throughout the Dominion. He qualified his admission by saying that this prosperity, he thought, was confined to the larger centres, such as Montreal, Toronto, Hamilton, Winnipeg. My hon. friend from West Hamilton (Mr. Bell) in his speech a few days ago went a great deal further than the hon. member for South Wellington in denying that Canada is prosperous. In fact my hon. friend from West Hamilton may be called—and I do not say this in any offensive way—the leader of the pessimists and the wailers of woe and calamity on the other side of the house. To show the house that he has not changed his views in that regard, I propose to quote from a speech that he delivered in the session of 1926. On February 2 of that year he was making, I think, his maiden speech—at any rate, it was a speech, and he referred to the conditions in the city of Hamilton, in which he was born and which he now has the honour of representing in this house. Time will not permit my reading the whole speech, but I may be permitted to quote a portion of it from page 664 of the 1926 Hansard. He said:

> I speak now of the city of Hamilton in western Ontario, the plight of which is similar to that of many other cities in that part of the country; a city where for the last three years thousands of people have been face to face with the grim spectre of starvation. When in the recent campaign it was part of my personal duty to acquaint myself with the actual situation as it existed in that city, I ascertained from the only official records available, those of the chamber of commerce, that employment in Hamilton at any time during the past year was at best but 42 per cent of the normal—42 per cent, not of the possible, but of the normal. In other words, one-half of the living of the people had been swept away by failure to provide safeguards for such manufactures as those people live by.

Mr. SPENCE (Parkdale): Hear, hear; that is right.

> That is a condition which is not of any recent making, it has existed continuously for the last three or four years, and it shows no improvement to-day.

Then the hon. gentleman went on to tell of the people in Hamilton climbing up the mountain to pick bark, herbs and leaves which they took back to their homes to burn and keep themselves warm.

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): Did my hon. friend ever hear me say that the grass grows in Hamilton on the main street as it does in dear old South Perth?

Mr. SANDERSON: The grass that grows in South Perth is the verdant grass of the farm, the backbone of the country. I am not a farmer nor a playwright, but I am passing this on to my hon. friend.

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): I knew that before you started.

Mr. SANDERSON: Now, if my hon. friend will permit me to proceed, I should like to direct the attention of the house to some of his remarks in a recent debate this year. Speaking in this house on March 12, he made certain statements to which I shall refer. However, just before I take that up, let me say this. The hon. member speaks of South Perth. I want to say that during the 1926 campaign the hon. gentleman undertook to do a good deal of campaigning in the province of Ontario on behalf of the Conservative candidates. At that time he had two songs; one was poverty and the other scandal. He went into several constituencies in western Ontario, and I am credibly informed that the result was not very satisfactory to his cause. I hope I do not do my hon. friend any injustice, and probably if he had not interrupted me I might not have brought this matter to the notice of the house.

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): Go as far as you like.

Mr. SANDERSON: I am going as far as I can. The hon. gentleman made three or four speeches, and rumours had it that the board of strategy, who were directing affairs in the Conservative campaign in Ontario, sent him home, because instead of gaining Conservative votes he was making Liberal votes. I am sorry he did not come into South Perth. I should have been glad to have him there, because had he come into South Perth and delivered one or two of the speeches he made in some of the other constituencies my majority would have been 100 or 150 more than it was.

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): I will be there next time and you won't come back.

Mr. SANDERSON: I shall be glad to welcome the hon. gentleman. I want to tell him, however, for his own sake—and I may be foolish in doing this—that if he comes to South Perth he had better forget the poverty and the scandal. Now to turn to what the hon. gentleman said when speaking on March 12 in reference to the city of Toronto. He did not say anything about Hamilton—and, by the way, before I get away from Hamilton perhaps I might make this observation: I do not know the city of Hamilton as well as my hon. friend does; he was born there, he lives there, and he is one of the representatives from that city. But I am credibly informed by people who have lived in Hamilton for many years that that city was never before in the state of prosperity in which it finds itself to-day. I am told that all the manufacturing plants are busy, running full time, that there is a great deal of prosperity, that trade and commerce in the city is flourishing, and that Hamilton is in a very healthy condition financially. My hon. friend may deny this; I do not know. However, I am merely giving information which I have received from people now living in that city.

Mr. RYCKMAN: Why do you object?

Mr. SANDERSON: I am not objecting; I am delighted. I was just wondering whether the hon. gentleman would admit it. Perhaps he will not. However, to get down to the speech of my hon. friend from West Hamilton delivered on March 12. At page 872 of Hansard he is reported—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Go on.

Mr. SANDERSON: My hon. friends cannot rattle me; let them go as far as they like. Speaking of the great city of Toronto, he has this to say:

> As an example, I will take the largest, richest city in the province of Ontario, the city of Toronto, and in order that I may not be accused of bias,—

I am sure no one would accuse my hon. friend of bias.

> —I will refer to two great Liberal journals; to the two great pillars of the Liberal party in the province of Ontario—the Toronto Globe, pillar of cloud by day, and the Toronto Daily Star, pillar of fire by night. I will refer particularly to the pages of the Toronto Daily Star, ... The Star refers to the condition of one family, which it says is typical of many, and headlines the article thus:
> Brave family to end of their resources.
> Child breaks down through malnutrition.
> Father out of work for a year.
> The article continues:
> They stuck to it through thick and thin until at last one of the children broke down under the strain. Malnutrition in reality, starvation, pure and unadulterated.

Mr. GEARY: When are you going to make your own speech?

Mr. SANDERSON: I have listened carefully to some of the speeches of my hon. friend and I have not interrupted him.

Mr. GEARY: I will not interrupt you.

Mr. SANDERSON: But I would ask my hon. friend from South Toronto (Mr. Geary) whether he endorses the remarks of the hon. member for West Hamilton as to the condition of the city of Toronto, as he intimated when speaking on March 12. I imagine that the hon. members who come from Toronto will not endorse that speech. Now, my hon. friend from West Hamilton quoted the Toronto Star of December 7. Is he not aware that in December of each year the Toronto Star carries a fund for those who are in want or those who have been unfortunate, as a means of providing a Christmas donation? Is he not aware that this article in the Toronto Star to which he referred appeared in one of the editions in which they were asking for subscriptions from the people of Toronto to assist the poor during Christmastide? My hon. friend surely cannot be very familiar with conditions in the city of Toronto. Anyone who goes through the city of Toronto, even staying an hour or two there; anyone who visits the downtown district; anyone who gets on a street car or takes a taxi and goes into the outlying districts, knows—and this is conceded by the press and by the people of Toronto—that there has been more development, there has been more progress in that city in the last two years than in any ten years of its history. My hon. friend may persist in his tale of woe. There are many other extracts from this speech of his delivered on March 12 which it would be interesting to comment upon, but I will leave it at that.

There are some other hon. members on the opposite side of the house who will not endorse some at least of the statements which have been made by hon. gentlemen regarding the lack of prosperity in the Dominion of Canada. My good friend, the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Chaplin)—I am sorry he is not in his seat just now—while perhaps somewhat prejudiced politically at times, is nevertheless considered to be one of the shrewdest business men in the province of Ontario, and possibly his version of business conditions in Ontario will be taken as coming with more authority than that of my hon. friend from West Hamilton. I have before me the Toronto Globe of Saturday, February 23, 1929. Now, if I were dealing with the profits and the statements of a private company I would not read this; but this is a public company, the president of which is the hon. member for Lincoln. The article to which I refer appeared on the financial page of the Toronto Globe on the date I have mentioned. I cannot read the whole of it because time will not permit me to do so. However, my hon. friend from Lincoln, the president of Hayes Wheels and Forgings Limited, gives his views as reported in connection with the statement of the company at their annual meeting. I read:

Profits of Hayes Wheels and Forgings Limited for the year ending December 31, 1928, were $461,331, after providing for all manufacturing, selling and administrative expenses, according to the company's annual financial statement.

President J. D. Chaplin, in reviewing operations, said: "During the year your directors found it necessary to make certain important additions and extensions to the power plant and manufacturing facilities at Merritton and Chatham, which involved expenditures aggregating $242.077. After providing this amount and retiring first mortgage bonds of a par value of $26,500, the company's working capital stands at the substantial figures of $868,785.

The profits for the year 1927 were $186,894, showing an increase of no less than $117,377 for the year 1928 as compared with 1927. Then the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Chaplin) went on to give a little review of business conditions as follows:

General business conditions throughout the country have displayed a healthy tone of prosperity and it is my belief that we can look forward to a continuance if not an increase for the year 1929.

I merely draw the attention of the house to this statement, and since picking up this paper I just happened to notice on this same page, a statement which I will read for the benefit of the hon. member for West Hamilton:

Steel rolling mills are unusually busy. Algoma rail plant is operating at full capacity.

Then down the page it says:

Hamilton Bridge Company. . .
The Hamilton Bridge Company have booked a $500,000 order from the Dominion government for the construction of No. 6 bridge on the Welland canal. . . . The plants will run at full capacity during the whole of 1929 on orders already booked.

That is one of the large manufacturing concerns in Hamilton.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Is there anything in the paper about labour conditions in Hamilton, as to whether or not there were any strikes or whether everything was peaceful?

Mr. SANDERSON: Nothing that I can see; if there are any strikes in Hamilton or if there were any difficulties in regard to labour, the hon. member for West Hamilton would have been on his feet before this, so I think we may take it for granted that conditions in the city of Hamilton are far from what my hon. friend would like us to believe.

Now, Mr. Speaker, with regard to prosperity in this country, it was stated by the hon. member for Southeast Grey (Miss Macphail) during her address the other day that perhaps the great basic industry of agriculture was not sharing in the prosperity to the extent that some other branches of trade and commerce were and I am frank enough to admit that at present perhaps the agricultural industry is not enjoying its full share of prosperity as compared with different branches of manufacturing. I want to say, however, that there were reasons for this condition during the past year. We have had some very interesting debates in this house, one of which was concluded last night, and anyone who has followed conditions in the prairie provinces knows that while there was a wonderful crop in the west last year, which promised to be perhaps the best paying crop in the history of that part of Canada, many thousands of acres of wheat were touched by frost before they were harvested. This resulted in a good deal of trouble and difficulty with regard to the grading of wheat, so that the financial returns from that magnificent crop were below what they would have been if Providence had not sent the frost.

Then I come down to western Ontario and particularly the county of Perth and adjoining counties. The crop of last summer at one time promised to be good, but harvesting weather was bad and the result was that the yield was away below the average not only in wheat but also in oats, barley, flax, and all other grains. I think my hon. friend from South Huron will bear me out in this. In addition, last fall there was a considerable increase in the price of cattle; many farmers purchased cattle at a high price and then the market slumped, with the result that they were left with these cattle on their hands. These were conditions which no one could control; they were conditions over which this government or any other government which might be in power in Canada would have no control at all. I would like to point out, however, that as between the Conservative party and the Liberal party, the Liberals always have recognized agriculture as the basic industry of this country while the Conservative party have not done so, although at present in order to gain some votes, they appear to be flirting in a political way with the agricultural sections of Canada. However, you only have to look over this house to notice the farmer members on this side and to compare them with the farmer members on the other side.

Mr. COTNAM: Liberal-Progressives?

Mr. SANDERSON: I will include the Liberal-Progressives with the Liberals in this statement.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I am afraid they are included outside the statement, also.

Mr. SANDERSON: I will say to my hon. friend that so far as I am able I will take them inside the statement

Mr. CAMPBELL: There is no reason why you should leave them out.

Mr. SANDERSON: It was quite unintentional. What I am trying to get at, if I may be allowed to go on, is this: I do not think the Conservative party will be able to bring many farmers into their camp by any high protection policy in Canada.

Now I want to refer to the speech delivered a short time ago by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens). As I have observed my hon friend in this house I have noticed that he has the ability in speaking to build up an argument out of very little and bring it before the house as though he really believed it himself; he has that ability more than any other member here. He took credit to the Conservative party in his address for very many things; he started in to credit the Conservative party with what he considered advancements in legislation and in everything pertaining to the development and progress of Canada; he would not give credit to the Liberal party for anything. He gave the Conservatives credit for the Royal Canadian Mounted Police; for the national policy; for the Canadian Pacific Railway; for the Canadian National Railways and for the Welland canal. He left out confederation and the discovery of America; perhaps he only overlooked them, but at any rate he ended with the war.

Mr. GOTT: Signing the peace pact.

Mr. SANDERSON: The hon. member for South Essex (Mr. Gott) usually talks about onions, but now he is talking about the peace pact. The hon. member for Vancouver Centre mentioned, near the close of his speech —a very admirable speech to listen to—about the part—

Mr. RYCKMAN: Tell us about it.

Mr. GOTT: He is looking for onions now.

Mr. SANDERSON: The hon. member said:

> Then there was the conduct of Canada's part in the Great war. Nevertheless, that great task was conducted by a Conservative administration.

I always considered that the Union government had something to do with the prosecution of the war. If my hon. friend had not interrupted me so much perhaps I would not have mentioned the fact that I have always considered that the successful prosecution of the Great war was due to those men who went overseas, to their dependents who were left in Canada and to the loyalty and sacrifice of all the people and that the government of the day, whether a Conservative or a Union government, deserves very little thanks.

Mr. MANION: Quite a number of the men who went overseas are over here on this side of the house.

Mr. SANDERSON: Quite true, and my hon. friend was one of that gallant company. Now that the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. Manion) has spoken I will remind him that he joined the Union government shortly after the war, but he must not forget that the opinion of the people of Canada with regard to the prosecution of the war by the Conservative and Union governments was shown quite definitely at the first opportunity they had of marking their ballots. The hon. member for Fort William was not in the ministry very long, and he had another brief stretch of about thirty-six hours in 1926.

Mr. GOTT: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. SANDERSON: No; you will have an opportunity to make your speech a little later on.

The governments in power at Ottawa, whether they were Conservative or Union, did many things in connection with the war, with regard to war contracts, munitions, boots and shoes and other matters which were not creditable to them.

Mr. RYCKMAN: Is that all you did?

Mr. SANDERSON: I did as much as my hon. friend. I must beg my hon. friend's pardon; I had forgotten that he lost a son in the war. I am not going to permit my hon. friend to get away with these interruptions. I will tell the hon. member that I did not stay at home and profit by war contracts; whether he did or whether he did not, I do not know.

Mr. SPENCE: Because you could not get any.

Mr. SANDERSON: Am I to be permitted to continue my remarks without further interruptions?

Mr. SPENCE: Talk some sense.

Mr. SANDERSON: The hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Spence) is not talking sense.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. SPENCE: You are making a joke of the whole house.

Mr. ELLIOTT: You are certainly not taking it as a joke.

Mr. SANDERSON: The hon. members cannot distract me from my speech. I intend to say a word or two with regard to the tariff advisory board. A great deal of criticism has come from the other side of the house regarding that board. The hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie) referred in his remarks to the expenditure of $120,000 to cover the work of the board. I will take this opportunity of congratulating the member for West York (Mr. Lawson) on his maiden speech in the house, but I must draw attention to the fact that he stated the total expenditure for the tariff advisory board was $191,000. I would point out that both hon. members were incorrect in their statements; the total expenditure last year for that board amounted to only $71,000. The board is doing a great work as a fact-finding organization. Information is obtained from those who apply to the board, whether for an increase or reduction in the tariff, which could not be obtained in any other way. I direct the attention of the house to the fact that the government introduced last year about one hundred and eighty new or amended items, all of which had been brought about through the work of this board. The revision this year is somewhat smaller, but the government has revised in the course of two budgets close to 20 per cent of the total items in the customs tariff, which revision has been brought about through the work of the tariff board. This board has also brought out many differences of opinion among hon. members on the other side of the house. I hold in my hand the record of the public sitting, reference No. 2, on iron and steel. This covered the application of the Algoma Steel Corporation for an increase in the duties on steel and iron products. That application was bitterly opposed by some of the so-called high protectionists. The hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Chaplin), while he was not there in the flesh, was there in the spirit by proxy through his manager, Mr. Taylor, and advocated a lower tariff. The hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Cantley) was there, but he stuck to his guns and combated the arguments of Mr. Taylor, the manager of the company of which the hon. member for Lincoln is the president. Several other gentlemen were there but I will not take up the time of the house in naming them, other than to say that it only proves that the tariff board is bringing out facts with regard to the manufacturing interests, costs, markets, production, and everything pertaining to manufacture, which could not be brought out in any other manner.

I want to read to the house something from the proceedings of the third annual convention of the Canadian Chamber of Commerce which was held in Quebec city on June 7, 8 and 9, 1928. These remarks were made by Mr. C. H. Carlisle, president and general manager of the Goodyear Tire and Rubber Company. I do not know his politics, but perhaps my good friend, the hon. member for East Toronto (Mr. Ryckman) who has interrupted me once or twice and who is also, or was, interested in a rubber company, can tell me what this man's politics were. Mr. Carlisle goes on to say:

> I question whether the average individual has given enough thought to the export business to know just what it means to this or to any other country. There is not a great deal of difference between conditions governing an individual and those governing a business or a nation. An individual who spends more than he makes finds himself indebted, and, being indebted, he is not happy, he is not an asset to his family, nor to his community, nor to his country. If he can produce more than he spends, then he accumulates wealth; his whole trend of life is changed, he is a better citizen, he becomes an asset to his family, his town and his country. The same is true with a company. The company whose expenditures are greater than its income must necessarily be in an unhappy condition; its securities will not sell at a normal price; the people who have invested their money in that company have not a sure investment; the bank with which that company deals is not dealing on a very sound basis.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. R. C. MATTHEWS (Toronto East Centre): Mr. Speaker, I propose to address a few words to the house on the question of the retirement of our public obligations. For a number of years there has been in the minds of many Canadians the hopeful expectation that among its financial proposals, the budget would deal with a definite plan for the retirement of the public debt. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb) cannot have been unaware of that expectation, but for some reason he has not seen fit to give parliament assurance even of consideration of the question.

In the last two years there have been several addresses delivered in this house, in which particular reference has been made to the retirement or amortization of the public debt. In 1927 I called attention to the national importance of an orderly plan of debt elimination. I also took the liberty of pointing out that the Minister of Finance stopped in his budget speech at the current fiscal year and went no further. I then urged an investigation and the formation of a definite plan to extinguish the whole of Canada's funded obligations within a given period. My leader (Mr. Bennett), and the hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie), have spoken specifically and forcefully to the same end. Indeed, with a more profound knowledge, and a better grasp of affairs than I can command, they have brought home to the government the economic necessity of providing by statute for the extinction of our funded debt. The leader of the opposition pointed out last year, that in fairness to the taxpayers, to the country and to posterity, this problem should be met. He stated that the sum of $19,829,904 set aside annually at four per cent per annum would retire the debt in forty-five years.

If we take this year's surplus of $69,000,000 and deduct $20,000,000 as one year's portion of such a debt retirement plan, we have left $49,000,000, which is an amount within $9,000,000 of the estimated total sales tax for the present fiscal year, or if applied to income tax, it is more than double the whole amount collected from individuals.

Now, Mr. Speaker, what is the position of the debt? And what is the reason for debt retirement? Why do we urge it, and why does the government refuse to apply the principle of amortization? Let us first look at the funded debt itself. It consists of the following issues of securities:

20,000,000	4½%	bonds due 1930
45,000,000	4 %	notes due 1930

93,926,666.66	4 %	bonds due 1960
$2,330,835,086.39

This is a list of twenty-four issues of bonds, and one issue of notes. Of these twenty-five separate loans only three have any provision whatever for sinking funds. It is noteworthy that these three are sterling issues, marketed in England, and no doubt the English bankers who sold them, insisted on the sinking fund of one-half of one per cent as a condition of their offering them to the public of Great Britain.

The complete list totals $2,330,835,086.39 interest bearing securities, on which the interest must be paid year by year, and the principal as the bonds severally become due. But of this amount the sum of $1,258,293,406.27 falls due in nine issues between 1929 and 1934 inclusive. These successive issues, sweeping upon us like ocean waves, cause much concern in financial and commercial circles as to what course the government will adopt to weather the seas and to keep the financial ship of state on an even keel. So far, no course with enough merit to commend it to the taxpayers of Canada, has been suggested by the government. The Minister of Finance has announced that he expects to pay cash for $60,000,000 five and one-half per cent bonds coming due this year. So far as it goes, this is satisfactory, but what the taxpayers are asking the minister is: "What of the future? What is proposed in respect to the colossal amounts coming due in the next few years? How is the debt to be paid and within what period?" To this the minister makes no reply. He offers no prospect of legislation dealing with the debt as a whole.

Lord Goschen once said, that everyone who makes proposals with regard to the public debt, must feel that he must make out a strong case for the action he proposes to take, before he is justified in disturbing the markets or the credit of the country. The proposals we from this side have made, if put into effect, will improve the market for Canadian government financing, and will add to the credit of the country, and not only add to it, but will help to sustain it in periods of money stress or stringency. For example, the sum of $20,000,000 used annually in the buying of Canadian bonds for sinking fund purposes, would have a most salutary effect upon the market for Canadian government securities.

Now, Sir, perhaps something can be learned if we inquire in a general way into the methods employed by other countries. This inquiry should be broad. and it should be fair. Perhaps the best example that can be cited is that of Great Britain.

For one hundred and forty years Great Britain, except in certain intervals, has had debt retirement plans in operation. They are taken as a matter of course. When she funded her obligations to United States a few years ago, a sinking fund was an essential part of the plan. The total amount funded was $4,600,000,000, which is being redeemed by a cumulative sinking fund in sixty-two years. On December 15 last the half-yearly instalment of principal and interest was paid, the instalment being $94,200,000, of which $27,000,000 was principal and $67,200,000 was interest. Since the funding of this debt to United States, Great Britain has paid $964,380,000, of which $147,000,000 has been on account of repayment of principal, and the balance, $817,380,000, is interest. The outstanding amount due from Great Britain to United States is now $4,453,000,000.

On her domestic, as well as her foreign debt, Great Britain has taken definite action. In 1928 the Chancellor of the Exchequer made a new announcement. He recurred to the policy instituted in Mr. Disraeli's government by Sir Stafford Northcote with the full support of Mr. Gladstone in 1875. He established in last year's budget a fixed debt charge for all the services of the debt, including the sinking fund. This debt charge is £355,000,000 a year, which is designed to retire the entire debt, including government stocks, savings certificates and all internal and external obligations, including also the debt to the United States, in fifty years, without any addition to present taxation. What a magnificent contribution to sound finance!

The British government is not shirking its obligations to its own people, or to the world. It is to-day the magnificent example of stern adherence to duty in sound financial administration. That honest determination has a foundation built deep and strong, laid well over a century ago by a far-sighted statesman. When William Pitt assumed the high office of Chancellor of the Exchequer in 1782, one of his first concerns was the state of the country's finances. The American war debt alone was an alarming spectre—$600,000,000. The national debt had reached the gigantic total of nearly a billion and a quarter dollars. The yearly deficit was a menace. The country looked to its young and brilliant chancellor. He restored confidence in three ways: by discovering new avenues of trade; by efficient administration; and by providing for the amortization of the public debt.

Now, Mr. Speaker, that was much more than a century ago, and if I use William Pitt as an example I should be in a position to justify my choice of such example. Sufficient time has elapsed for historians to form a judgment. I turn to Lord Rosebery, a distinguished scholar, himself one of that line of great men who have been prime ministers of England. One hundred years after Pitt's debt retirement scheme was put into effect, Lord Rosebery looked back over Great Britain's history, and indeed the history of the world, with its wars and tumults, its great conquests and struggles. He held the greater part of the Victorian era in review. He saw in their true sense of proportion the chancellorships of Goschen, Gladstone, Northcote, Disraeli, Goulburn and Althorp, and, with the achievements of these men before him, he penned his verdict on the debt retirement plan of William Pitt. May I read that verdict?

> . . . . the minister reached the culminating point of his financial fame by his plan for the redemption of the national debt, which his contemporaries regarded as his highest claim to renown, and which is accordingly inscribed on the scroll to which he is pointing in Lawrence's majestic portrait. . . . He created an independent board of commissioners for the reduction of the debt, to whom a million was to be annually paid; they were to be officials of the highest character and distinction: the Speaker, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, the Master of the Rolls, the Accountant General, the Governor and Deputy Governor of the Bank of England; and in this form the board exists to this day.

Does the hon. the Minister of Finance aspire to reach the culminating point of his financial fame by inaugurating a debt retirement plan, or does he consider that he has already attained his highest claim to renown and is entitled to take his place among the immortals?

Lord Rosebery further says:

> Its real value lay in the fact that it was an honest and steadfast method of paying off debt; and experience tells us, that debt is in reality only reduced by the patriotic resolve of parliament; which is rendered doubly efficient when, as in Pitt's scheme, the fund devoted to debt redemption is placed beyond the casual interference of a needy minister, and when its operations are scarcely perceptible to a public, justly if sometimes ignorantly, impatient of taxation.

I made reference a few moments ago to the chancellor's 1928 plan of debt retirement. With the contribution of £355,000,000 steadily maintained, free from unholy hands, Britain will extinguish her total present debt well within the span of life of persons now living, and who can to-day comprehend the plan. The Chancellor of the Exchequer, speaking in the House of Commons on April 24th, 1928, said:

> The payment of £355,000,000 a year, if steadily maintained, even if the rate of interest falls no lower than 4½ per cent, will extinguish our entire debt, internal and external, including our debt to the United States, without any addition to present taxation, in a period of exactly fifty years.

I now turn to the United States. The position of the United States of America is well known. Under Mr. Coolidge there was economy and retrenchment. The gross debt which stood at more than $26,500,000,000 has been scaled down in eight years to $17,604,290,562.93. The reduction in the fiscal year ended June 30th, 1928, was $905,883,703.17. Of this amount $540,246,020.30 was discharged from ordinary receipts on the established debt payment program, and $365,637,682.87 was discharged from surplus.

In our own country some of the provinces have adopted debt retirement plans. The province of Ontario recognized its responsibility to the taxpayers and instituted an investigation. Its debt stood at $319,963,354. The government asked for a committee, one member of which was to be named by the Investment Bankers' Association, another by the Canadian Bankers' Association, and the government named the financial controller of the province of Ontario. This committee reported to the Provincial Treasurer, who adopted a debt retirement plan whereby the whole debt of the province as it stood on the 31st day of October, 1925, including the obligations of the Hydro-Electric Power Commission and the provincial debt, will be retired in forty years from that date. All bonds issued since October 31, 1925, have been in conformity with the plan of retirement, either serially or by annuity.

Mr. ROBB: I do not like to interrupt the thread of my hon. friend's argument, but could he tell the house how the debt of Ontario compares to-day with the debt of 1925, when this plan was introduced?

Mr. MATTHEWS: I am sorry I have not the figures at hand in regard to the total debt, but I do know that the old debt of Ontario under the plan has been reduced by six million dollars. Since it was put into operation three further bond issues have been made, and they have been either on the serial or the annuity plan.

What about other countries? Well, Mr. Speaker, I hold in my hand a booklet describing in detail all foreign bond issues made by governments, states, public utilities, and so forth, in New York, representing post-war financing up to December 31, 1928.

In all there are 437 issues representing $6,448,000,000, distributed over five continents and thirty-eight countries, including Austria, Belgium, Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Finland, France, Germany, Greece, Hungary, Irish Free State, Italy, Jugoslavia, Norway, Poland, Argentine, Brazil and many others. Practically all these countries are paying large sums into sinking funds for the retirement of their obligations. There is one notable exception—Canada.

None of the Canadian issues listed have any sinking funds to retire them by maturity. Only one of them can be called for payment to take advantage of cheap money for conversion or refunding, and that issue is $100,000,000 5 per cent bonds, and is not callable prior to 1942.

So, when the hon. Minister of Finance sees no necessity or obligation to propose a debt retirement plan he is out of step with all the financial authorities of Europe and America. He places Canada in a position of complacent isolation. An announced plan of grappling with the debt problem would strengthen our hands when we come to finance, which we must do in the comparatively near future. We can strengthen our position and bring it into high relief. To flaunt before the eyes of parliament and the country a huge surplus is but to glorify overtaxation. The announcement by any government, that taxes are extracted from the people of Canada far in excess of all requirements, is but to invite the government supporters to press for capital expenditure for political expediency.

As I see it, Mr. Speaker, this Dominion is in need of business administration, both as to capital and current outlay, and a reduction of taxation to actual financial necessities. We are spending too much money uselessly, prodigally. Last year, in the old land, after the estimates had undergone their annual scrutiny and had passed the house, the government undertook a campaign of economy, and they clawed back over fifty millions of dollars—£10,500,000, to be exact—that had already been voted. What this country needs is a little clawing back of unnecessary expenditure. Taxation should be so low that the Minister of Finance would have to do some real clawing to balance his budget.

What I propose in regard to the debt is that after the most searching investigation, there should be put into effect a scheme of orderly reduction, year by year, over a fixed period, at the end of which the whole of Canada's funded obligations as they stand at present shall have been retired. Furthermore, that all future issues of securities by the Canadian government shall be payable in instalments of principal and interest, or be payable serially, or have sinking fund provisions, that will retire them in a fixed period.

This question is not sectional or territorial. It is not political. It is national in the highest and truest sense. In it, to a degree, is wrapped up the economic well-being of the nation. The goal is definite and attainable. That attainment is in the interest of all the people. Its influence on the budget should result in the lowering of taxation so that the real needs of the country, and that only, should be the paramount test of estimated outlay.

For these reasons, Mr. Speaker, I urge with earnestness and confidence that Canada be allowed to take her rightful place financially with other nations. No country has a more assured future and, therefore, none can more easily plan and complete the absorption of her outstanding obligations.

Mr. E. J. YOUNG (Weyburn): I am impelled to take part in this debate because of certain utterances of hon. gentlemen opposite. Statements have been made from the opposite side of the house which had much better been left unsaid, and policies have been advocated which if carried into effect could have none other than a disastrous effect on Canadian trade and on Canadian industry. When members of parliament get up in their places and openly advocate a policy of retaliation against a country which as yet has done us no harm; when they openly demand a fiscal policy of an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth; when they even go so far as the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Ladner) did, and urge that parliament abdicate its powers and surrender into the hands of the ministry full control of the tariff and taxation, in order that that power might be used to wage a tariff war against another country: when members of parliament do these things, I say, it is time for all those members who believe that we are sent here to look after the affairs of our own country, and not to vent our spleen on other people, to raise our voices in protest.

I wish to correct a wrong impression that has been circulated throughout the country by a portion of the press in regard to the speech of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb). The minister delivered his budget speech on the 1st day of March, and the next morning a section of the Tory press came out with great black headlines, "Robb threatens retaliation." I listened closely to the speech of the Minister of Finance, I have read it carefully in Hansard since, and I can find no word or sentence in it that would indicate in any way that he had any thought of retaliation.

The sentence in the minister's speech on which the press bases its opinion is this: "It is our desire to trade freely with any and all who are willing to trade with us." Was there any suggestion of retaliation in that statement? In order to understand clearly what the minister meant by these words we should keep in mind what has gone before. In 1911 the American government, under a Republican president, offered Canada better trade relations. The government of the day was about to accept, but it was defeated at the polls, and a government of the party represented by hon. gentlemen opposite came into power. They refused that offer. They refused it, not politely but rudely, churlishly, boorishly. They said to the Americans, "We don't want to have any truck or trade with you."

Mr. McGIBBON: Does my hon. friend know that everything in that treaty was given later and that they did not keep to it six months?

Mr. YOUNG: (Weyburn): I am coming to that. A short time after, the American government, under a Democratic president this time, gave us free of charge many of the things contained in that treaty. This was the second gesture in the way of friendly relations made to us by the people of the United States. The same party was in power in Canada then, and how did they respond that time? Was there any talk then of retaliation? Was there any talk then of paying them back in kind, when they reduced their tariff against us? When they reduced their tariff did that party in Canada say, "We will respond"? They said, "No; we have those Yankees where we want them. We have made them give us something and we have given them nothing in exchange."

Mr. McGIBBON: Does the hon. gentleman make that statement seriously, that we gave them nothing in return?

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): I said, that is what your party said.

Mr. McGIBBON: No, they did not.

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): That party openly boasted that they had secured from the Americans what we expected to secure from them in 1911 and that they had not given them anything in exchange. Now, there were two separate occasions on which the people on the other side of the line made friendly offers of better trade relations with this country, both of which were rejected by the party opposite.

Now let us come back to the statement of the Minister of Finance. What did it mean? It was an intimation to the United States government that if they are still in that humour, if they are still disposed to have better trade relations with this country, they will find us in a more amiable mood, ready to trade with them. As the minister said. "We are willing to trade freely with all those who are willing trade with us." That was not a threat of retaliation. It was an olive branch, held out to a country which had twice held out the olive branch to us.

Mr. MANION: Is my hon. friend making that statement authoritatively? I see the Minister of Finance in his seat, and he does not contradict it. Is that the interpretation we are to accept?

Mr. ROBB: Is there any objection to a statement of that kind?

Mr. MANION: I have no objection; all I want is a frank interpretation of the statement.

Mr. ROBB: The hon. gentleman is making his speech.

Mr. MANION: The minister does not deny it and we will accept that interpretation.

Mr. McMILLAN: There is nothing wrong about that.

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): I am accused of having a definite aim in life. I think it was the hon. member for Fraser Valley (Mr. Barber) who said that my ambition was to destroy the fruit and vegetable industry. In reply to that, all I have to say is that it is the ancient privilege of a man who has no case to abuse his opponent. But in all these matters of the tariff I frankly confess that my concern is for the interest of the consumer. I believe with Bastiat that all economic questions should be studied from the consumer's standpoint, for the consumer's interests are the interests of the human race. Let me repeat these words, for I want them to soak in. "Study all economic questions from the consumer's standpoint, for the consumer's interests are the interests of the human race." What after all is prosperity? In what does it consist? Does it not consist in having plenty of everything for everybody? Commodities good, cheap and abundant, so cheap and so abundant that everyone can enjoy them? And every measure you take to increase the volume of commodities in the country and to lower prices widens the circle of people who are enabled to enjoy the use of those commodities, and is a step in the direction of prosperity. On the other hand, every measure you take to restrict the volume of commodities coming into the country and to raise the prices of them, confining their use to a narrower circle of people, is a step in the opposite direction.

I know that is not the idea of prosperity held by hon. gentlemen opposite. Their idea of prosperity is a smaller volume of commodities sold at high prices, and at a handsome profit, to a restricted circle of consumers. Perhaps I can best illustrate it this way. I go into the restaurant in this building and I see hon. gentlemen who, although they may not be wealthy, are at least sufficiently well off to be able to buy anything they want to eat without regard to the cost. I see them eating bread and butter on the fifty-fifty basis —half bread and half butter. It does not matter how dear the butter is, they eat it. I see them eating tomatoes at 30 and 40 cents a pound and strawberries at 50, 60 and 75 cents a box. They are not eating celery but the hearts of celery. They are willing to pay a good price for these things; they are willing to pay an extra few cents a pound for butter or an extra few cents a bunch for their vegetables. And they call that prosperity. But that is only one side of the picture. From there I go into the cottage of the working man. There I find the mother eating bread without butter in order that the little butter which there is may be spread on the bread of the children. She tells me that she has been downtown and has looked into the shop windows which she sees filled with the best fruits and vegetables. But they are beyond her reach. However, she says that perhaps later in the season they may be cheap enough for her to buy some. That is the Conservative idea of prosperity—plenty of everything at high prices for the few who can afford it, and scarcity among the masses who cannot.

Mr. MANION: And plenty of work for the people to buy it with.

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): We will see about the work later on.

Mr. GEARY: You say either too much or too little.

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): I will say the rest presently. We on this side have a different idea. We believe that prosperity is measured by the manner in which people live.

Mr. QUINN: Faith without works is dead.

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): If my hon. friends would do some good work on the other side it would help somewhat. As I say, we believe that prosperity consists in a higher standard of living for the people. We are not alarmed at a few million pounds of butter coming in from New Zealand because we know it is going into consumption; we know from the returns of the department that the people of this country are living better than ever before; we know that in spite of the fact that a few million pounds of butter are coming in from New Zealand, the people of Canada to-day are consuming dairy products to a greater degree than ever before. In fact, they are consuming products to such a degree that if the increased consumption were reduced to terms of butter it would amount to no less than 70,000,000 pounds of butter annually within the last few years. How can the people of Canada afford to consume so much more of dairy products than they were a short time ago? The answer is obvious; it is because they are more prosperous. I am not dismayed when I hear these stories of carloads upon carloads of fresh fruits and vegetables coming into this country, because I know every one of these articles is going into consumption; someone is eating them, and a larger importation simply means that a wider and ever wider circle of people are enjoying the fruits of the earth. That is prosperity, and that is being extended under the policy of this government.

All this talk about the importation of fruit and vegetables breaking the home market and ruining our own producers is arrant nonsense. The argument they put up is this: they do not care how much comes in during the winter time when our fruits are out of season, but when our Canadian growers are ready to put their fruits on the market they say the importation of a few carloads breaks that market. I think most of us remember when transportation conditions were such that we could not transport these articles any distance, and what was then the condition of the local grower? The fluctuations in price were far greater than they are to-day. In those days the consumer had nothing at all in the way of fresh fruits and vegetables until our own crop was ripe; then we had such quantities that they were sold very cheaply and it was not very long before they were all gone. To-day, with modern transportation facilities and with the tariff as far out of the way as we have been able to get it, we find an ever-widening circle of people who are able to enjoy the fruits of the earth.

Now I would like to discuss for a moment the fruit situation in British Columbia because from that quarter comes the greatest agitation for prohibitive duty on fruits and vegetables. The fruit growers of British Columbia went to their provincial government two or three years ago and persuaded that government to form what they called a Committee of Internal Direction, or something of that kind. To this committee they gave power to handle all the fruits and vegetables grown in that province. This was not a voluntary pool but a compulsory arrangement under which every grower was forced to sell his products through that concern at a price named by them, to the party named by them and at a time named by them. If he dared sell his products anywhere else or in any other way he could be taken into court and fined. This matter came to light in an investigation which was conducted before the tariff board, and the observations of the chairman of that board are well worth remembering. I am sorry I have not them with me but I will give them to the house from memory. He said that this was the most remarkable thing that had ever come to his notice; it was not voluntary co-operation but an attempt on the part of the people of one province to control the supplies of the people in the prairie provinces, and the strange thing about it was that the people in the prairie provinces were powerless to help themselves.

That organization was set up, and one of the first things they did was to fix the price of onions at $40 per ton. With freight and handling charges added, that brought the price of onions on the prairies to the point where we thought we could buy them cheaper elsewhere, so we bought our onions in Ontario and left British Columbia holding the bag, so to speak. Then what happened? Last winter these people came to Ottawa from British Columbia to hold a conference with the fruit and vegetable growers of the east, and put up this proposition: They said, "You form a committee similar to ours and you control the supplies in the east as we control them in the west. Then we will get the government to shut out all supplies from the south and we will have the people of the prairie provinces in the hollow of our hands." Parliament was sitting at the time. We who are supposed to fix the tariffs of this country were in session here, and these gentlemen over in the Chateau Laurier drew up a list of values which were to be the values for duty and which would fix the duty on fruits and vegetables for the coming season, in utter contempt of parliament. That was the aim of the fruit and vegetable growers in British Columbia; that is the aim of the people here who are clamouring for higher duties on fruits and vegetables. They want to shut out supplies from all sources but their own; they want to form a monopoly and hold the people of the prairie provinces in the hollow of their hands. Why, in a good many cases they cannot even supply our requirements; they cannot supply more than one-tenth of the prairie market for peaches, yet they would have us pay a duty of 80 per cent on imported peaches in order that they might extract an exorbitant price for that one-tenth of our requirements which they can supply.

When I first came to this house three years ago the thing that struck me most in the debates was the solicitude of hon. gentlemen opposite for the farmers. Bankers, professional men, manufacturers, and business men generally would get up and constantly urge protection. Protection for what? They urged protection for the farmer, and as I listened to those debates the question kept recurring to my mind, "What have we done to be so much loved? Why do our friends in these other professions seem so anxious all of a sudden for the welfare of the farmer, when we had always considered that they had no interest in the farmer at all except as a lamb to be sheared?"

Mr. GEARY: Did you expect us to be hostile?

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): No, but I expected you to tell us what was really in your minds. However, here was the position: After the close of the war a great wave of high protectionist sentiment swept over the world. That wave did not make much headway in Canada, and the principal reason was that the farmers of Canada, from coast to coast, were a unit in opposing it. Those in Canada who were interested in high protection, some because they honestly believed it would be good for the country and others because they believed it would be good for their own pockets, realized that they could never force the government to increase the tariffs in this country unless they first succeeded in dividing the farmers on the issue. So these were the tactics they adopted: They tried to pick out those isolated groups of farmers specializing in certain commodities and persuade them that if they would accept protection on their particular commodity they would benefit at the expense of the rest of the community. We must admit that they have met with some degree of success, because to-day we find poultry producers asking for higher duties on eggs; we find fruit and vegetable growers asking for higher duties on fruits and vegetables which will exclude these articles; we find dairymen asking for higher protection on dairy products, and so on. They have persuaded these farmers that it would be to their particular advantage to eat a little of the protectionist pie, but in this respect I think the farmers would do well to take warning from what has happened to the farmers on the other side of the line.

In the United States protection has been carried to ridiculous extremes. The farmer has been told that protection would be a benefit to him and he has been given protection on all his products. If there is any country in the world where protection would benefit the farmer it is the United States, because there he has such an enormous home market of his own. The farmer fell for that argument and voted for protection, and what has been the result? The farmer of the United States to-day is in a far more pitiable plight than any other farmer of whom I know; he finds himself in this position, that no matter what price he receives for his products his production costs are always just a little higher. He is like the ox in the treadmill, forever climbing but never ascending; or like the ancient Tantalus, dying of thirst with water all around him or starving to death with food in abundance just beyond his reach.

I have here a copy of The New Republic of New York, which contains an article dealing with the condition of farmers in the United States to-day. It reads as follows:

> With the failure of farm income, deflation occurred, followed by a land crisis. Bankruptcies and foreclosures were widespread and inevitable, and the tragic procession of defeated farm families began to move citywards, seeking livelihood in other occupations than those to which they had been trained. By 1924 it was a migration; then a rout. To-day we know that we suffered a net loss in farm population of four millions, and still land panic is with us. Farms are still being foreclosed in numbers by mortgagors, and land prices are strikingly subnormal.

The Ottawa Journal, an independent paper published in this city—

An hon. MEMBER: An independent paper?

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): I am just taking it at its own valuation. The Ottawa Journal of May, 1928, speaking of farm conditions in the United States, has the following to say:

> Agriculture has not shared in United States prosperity. Of 6,371,640 farms between Maine and the Golden Gate one in five is mortgaged for 40 per cent; two in five are on unimproved roads; only one in twelve has improved machinery. So says the United States Census Bureau.

The result is that to-day the farmers of the United States are demanding such fantastic schemes of relief as the McNary-Haugen relief bill, and you cannot blame them because they have been promised better prices if they would vote for protection. They voted for protection but the better prices never came, and now they are asking congress to guarantee those better prices.

The hon. member for Fort William (Mr. Manion) made a reference to a particular case in his speech which I cannot allow to pass unnoticed. He referred to a shipper, I think it was in Toronto, who sent a consignment of dress goods to Detroit, only to find that the United States tariff had been raised overnight and the shipment could not enter. In the United States tariff there is a provision which is called the flexible provision, and which permits the president to increase the duty by 50 per cent under certain conditions. The inference was that this flexible provision had been used and the duty raised so that this shipment could not enter the country. That story has been going around in different forms for the last two or three years; sometimes it is ladies' dresses sometimes it is sweaters, and sometimes it is iron and steel goods. I have tried repeatedly to trace these stories down but have been unable as yet to find that there was one authentic case.

Mr. MANION: I will give you one.

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): Give me the particulars of the case, the name of the shipper, the name of the consignee, the date of the shipment and the description of the goods. I will undertake to investigate any cases and for every one which proves to be authentic I will produce five cases where our own Customs department has done the same thing, or even worse.

Mr. MANION: That has nothing to do with the question I asked a minute ago.

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): It has a whole lot to do with the question of retaliation. If we are going to resent that sort of thing on the part of the United States government, they have much more cause to resent it on our part.

The member for Last Mountain (Mr. Fansher) referred in his speech to a matter on which I would like to comment, the classification of the new combined harvester-thresher. When the customs tariff was drawn up there was no such machine coming into the country. Harvesting machines were put in the 6 per cent class, but this machine has been put in the 10 per cent class. I consider the request of the hon. member that it be put in the 6 per cent class to be a very reasonable one, and I urge the minister to do this. I would urge that it be done during the present session of parliament and not leave it to the tender mercies of the customs board, because in that case it might never be considered.

There is one sentence in the budget speech of the Minister of Finance which I view with grave concern. It is as follows:

> Resolutions will be submitted for your approval empowering the governor in council, when satisfied that copper bars are being sold in the country of export at a lower price than for export to Canada, to impose, under the general tariff, a duty on copper rods of one-half cent a pound, to equalize such differential as may exist.

I am opposed to the granting of that power to the ministry. In the first place, it is not economically sound; and in the second place, it is subversive of the powers of parliament. A peculiar situation exists with regard to copper. Ninety-five per cent of the world's copper is controlled by the United States; it is not all mined there, but it is controlled from that source. The only smelter of any size outside of that American ring is the smelter at Trail, British Columbia. This small ring of men who control the copper situation in the United States have formed what they call the Copper Export Association. They would like to fix the price for copper for all the countries in the world, but when they attempt to fix the price for the United States they run foul of the Sherman anti-trust law. But the American government permits them to fix the price for export, and after they have fixed the price for export each member goes back to his own factory and quietly quotes an American price of half a cent per pound below the export price. It is a very simple arrangement, but how it would stand investigation in the United States, I do not know. Since they fix the price at half a cent per pound higher for export than for domestic consumption, the Canadian who has to buy copper bars is forced to pay half a cent per pound more than do his American competitors. There is a small concern at Brockville, Ontario, which makes a business of manufacturing copper rods out of copper bars. They obtain 60 per cent of their copper bars from the smelter at Trail—that is all they can get there—and the other 40 per cent they have to buy in the United States, and for that they are forced to pay $8 to $10 per ton more than do their American competitors. When they go out to sell their product they find themselves faced with the competition of American firms who have bought their bars at a lower price, and the proposal is that we give to the governor in council the power to put a duty of half a cent per pound on copper rods so that this Brockville company will not be subject to this unfair competition. The obvious answer to the American Copper Export Association has been made by Noranda mines, who have decided to build a smelter of their own. But that cannot be done for some time, and the question is: What will we do in the meantime? This concern at Brockville employs about thirty-one men and, as I said, they obtain 60 per cent of their copper from Trail and 40 per cent, which is subject to this extra price, from the United States. The proposal is to add a half cent per pound to all rods coming into Canada in order to protect this industry which employs only thirty-one men and obtains only 40 per cent of its raw material from the United States. In order to offset a handicap of $8 a ton on 40 per cent of the raw material of 31 men it would add $10 a ton to the price of the raw material of several Canadian factories that use copper rods as raw material. It would increase the price on 100 per cent of the raw material used by other factories in Canada which employ many times 31 men. You cannot put that duty on without increasing to every factory the price of their raw material, and in that way it is economically unsound.

But the worst feature of the proposal is that it is subversive of the powers of parliament, Parliament has been maintained by the British people throughout the ages for one purpose above all others; to restrain the power of the king or of the government of the day. If we never do anything else but hold the ministry back from usurping powers which do not belong to them, we justify our existence; if we fail to do that we cannot justify our existence. It may be said that the ministry is honest and we can trust them, but these gentlemen will not always be in office.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The matter of restricting the powers of government is a very vital one, and I agree with the hon. member in that regard, but is he prepared to vote against a government that proposes this?

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): The hon. member will get his answer in due course.

Parliament has always been maintained for the purpose of preserving the rights of the people against encroachments by the crown. The ministry might be entrusted with this power and not abuse it, but we must not forget that it was always during the reigns of good kings that the people lost their liberties. They said, "The king is good, the king is wise and he may be trusted with this power." They gave him the power and he used it with wisdom and with mercy. But in time another king sat on the throne and he abused the power. If we give this power to the ministry we know they will not abuse it, but some day hon. genelemen opposite may be in power and we certainly will not be able to trust them. If we grant this power to-day we will be asked to-morrow to grant similar powers with reference to something else. "T'will be recorded for a precedent and many an error by the same example will rush into the state." I am not in favour of granting this power to the ministry. I hope the Minister of Finance will not press it.

Mr. B. W. FANSHER (East Lambton): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with a great deal of interest to the speech of the hon. member for Weyburn (Mr. Young), and I was very much interested in his last argument. But I wondered all the time how he would apply his reasoning to the present budget, the subject that is now under discussion, and my curiosity in that regard was not satisfied, because he sat down without giving us any idea of his opinion regarding the value of the budget.

The financial statement as presented this year is, from some aspects, very gratifying. The contribution through various forms of taxation of $450,000,000 to the public treasury by less than 10,000,000 citizens is a notable achievement. The contribution on an average of $45 for every man, woman and child, or $225 for every family of five, speaks well for the thrift and industry of the Canadian people. If we add to this amount the taxation levied by the provinces, counties, townships and municipalities, we commence to realize the huge amount that is annually provided to the different governments and taxing bodies by the Canadian citizens.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb) this year, as has been his custom in years past in presenting his financial statement, has divided his tax receipts under three main divisions. In the first he includes those taxes derived from customs and excise duties; in the second, war revenues, and in the third, receipts from the postal department, interest on investments, money received through the administration of the Canada Grain Act, and various other miscellaneous receipts. He estimates that by the end of the present month, which is the end of the fiscal year 1928-29, he will have collected in taxes from the first group, $248,400,000, made up as follows:

Customs import duties	$185,000,000
Excise duties	63,400,000

Under the heading of war revenue he estimates that the amount that will be collected will be as follows:

Sales tax and stamp taxes	$ 81,500,000
Income tax	58,500,000
Delayed business profits tax	450,000
Miscellaneous	2,200,000
Total	$142,650,000

In the third group he expects to receive the following:

Interest on investments	$11,600,000
Post office	31,000,000
Dominion lands	4,000,000
Canada Grain Act	3,000,000
Miscellaneous receipts	9,350,000
Total	$58,950,000

This makes up the grand total of taxation this year of $450,000,000. Not until our entrance into the Great war were any of the taxes enumerated in the second group imposed; all our taxes were derived from the sources mentioned in the first and third divisions. Since our entrance into the war large sums of money have been levied through war taxes, but never during any single year have receipts from war taxes been sufficient to meet annual war expenditures. There has always been a deficit. Year by year the minister has given us a statement of the actual receipts from these war taxes, but never in any year with the exception of one—and I believe that was the fiscal year ended March 31, 1925—has he given us a statement of the actual annual expenditures on war account. That year he showed that receipts from war taxes amounted to $147,000,000 and expenditures to $167,000,000, or a deficit of $20,000,000. This year the minister estimates that receipts from war taxes will amount to $142,650,000 and expenditures to $162,911,000, leaving a deficit of more than $20,000,000. This deficit on war account becomes a direct charge on other forms of taxation, and as long as we have deficits on war account, it seems strange to me that reductions in taxes from year to year should be simply in connection with war taxes. It is my firm belief that war taxes should be sufficient to meet annual war expenditures, and I would go further than that and say that war taxes should be sufficient to meet the annual charges on war account consisting of interest on war debt, pensions, soldiers' civil re-establishment, and so forth, and also to provide whatever sum is paid annually upon our war debt. If that were the case, this year we would have to raise under the heading of war taxes $20,000,000 more to meet our annual war expenditures, and another $70,000,000, the amount applied on war debt, or a total of $90,000,000. That $90,000,000 has to be taken from other sources of revenue, and it simply means that out of the $248,000,000 provided by customs tariff and excise duties we have to take $90,000,000 to meet our expenditures on war account, and to make our annual reduction in war debt.

As I said a moment ago, to my mind war taxes should meet war expenditures. In 1927 and 1928 we had large reductions in the income tax, the sales tax has been reduced year by year, and in no financial statement that has been presented have we ever received sufficient revenues to meet war account. The income tax should be put back where it was before 1927. The sales tax is being continually reduced and it is one of the most direct means of raising revenue with the least expense. It often appears curious to me why we should be persistently reducing the income tax and the sales tax, while the customs tariff, the tax that the Liberal party specified they would reduce, has not received any material reductions during the life of this parliament. If the reduction in war taxes goes on each year, we will soon be faced with the fact that we shall have to take half the revenue derived from customs and excise duties to meet our deficit on war account. And then we shall soon begin to realize what Sir Thomas White meant when he said that the war debt, if it was paid, would be paid out of the top six inches of Canadian soil. If our war expenditures and the reduction of our war debt is to be paid through the customs tariff, we can readily see that the financial burden of the war is going to be placed on the shoulders of the people on the soil, because those on the soil bear most of the tariff burden.

The Minister of Finance says that the policy of this administration is not a high tariff policy, but a low tariff policy. But having said that, he at once proceeds to lower those forms of taxation which do not bear upon the tariff at all, and he leaves the tariff practically untouched. As far as this budget is concerned, it seems to be somewhat of a watchful waiting affair—watching to see what the United States will do at the next session of congress in regard to raising the tariff, and waiting to see how much political capital the Conservative party might make out of such a step if it were taken. To a certain degree I am somewhat in sympathy with this watchful waiting policy. If the government of the day ever had an excuse for not giving tariff reductions, perhaps it has a better one at this session of the house than it has ever had before during the term of this parliament. There are fields in which the Minister of Finance could, I believe, have implemented some of the promises given in the Liberal platform of 1919, and one of these I believe to be the lowering of the duty against British goods. Although it might be advantageous to adopt a watchful waiting policy this session as regards the United States. I see no reason why it should not be to our advantage to lower the duty against British goods. Then, too, the policy espoused by the United States is to be directed largely, we understand, against agricultural products. There is therefore a large number of commodities with which they would not concern themselves, and I can see no reason why we should not proceed to give tariff reductions upon some of those commodities upon which the tariff board has already passed. It may be that the government has let the opportune time slip by for giving substantial reductions. I notice that some members on the government side of the house seem to entertain that view, judging by what they have said in this debate. They seem to be fearful that the golden opportunity has passed by. I quote from the speech made by the hon. member for South Huron (Mr. McMillan). Speaking in this debate, he said:

> I urge upon this government that its duty is to proceed more rapidly along the lines of a well-considered tariff reduction. I urge them again that we can do this kind of thing only in periods of good times. We cannot do it in times of adversity. Now is the golden opportunity, and we should be taking advantage of it. Apparently, however, the government seem inclined to mark time.

The hon. member for South Huron is evidently getting anxious and somewhat fearful lest we have no tariff reductions this year. He almost seems to think that the government has sinned away its day of grace so far as tariff reductions during the life of this parliament are concerned. I notice also in the speech of the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Brown) a somewhat similar sentiment. He has this to say:

> From the standpoint of the ordinary consumer I confess that there is not a very great deal in this budget; it does not contain much meat, of course, but we may be glad that it does not contain any poison.

The hon. member has evidently given up all idea of getting any meat from any of the budgets presented by the Minister of Finance, and is now willing to be thankful if only no poison is administered. I hope that the hon. Minister of Finance will bear in mind these expressions of his supporters when he prepares his next budget.

I wish to deal for a few minutes with some of the commodities that were considered by the tariff advisory board. It is a well-known fact that the Liberal platform of 1919 enumerates a large number of commodities which they proposed placing on the free list. After enumerating those commodities, of which cement was one, the resolution concludes with this sentence:

> The Liberal party hereby pledges itself to implement by legislation the provisions of this resolution when returned to power.

The tariff board has investigated the duty on cement, and anyone who reads the evidence which was taken in that case must come to the conclusion that the manufacturers of cement are not entitled to tariff protection. I find that during the last year for which I can get complete returns, there was imported into this country 73,652 hundredweight of cement, on which there was a duty collected of $5,875, or eight cents per hundredweight. There was manufactured in Canada, 35,230,527 hundredweight. There was exported 900,000 hundredweight, which left to be consumed in Canada, 34,330,527 hundredweight. Now it can be readily seen that with a duty of 8 cents per hundredweight, the protection furnished on the amount consumed in the home market amounted to $2,746,442. Putting it in another way, that amount of protection is provided, for while the government obtains one dollar in revenue, it provides for the industry, $467, or in the ratio of $1 for the treasury and $467 for the industry. In the light of those figures I can see no reason why we should not have had cement placed on the free list in this budget.

Sewing machines have also been investigated by the tariff board. The number of sewing machines imported during the last year for which complete returns are available was 19,929, valued at $593,657, or at an average price of $30 per machine. The duty collected was $161,953, or an average duty of $8.12 on each sewing machine. The Bureau of Statistics inform me that only one company manufactures this machine in Canada, and hence they could not furnish me figures giving the number of machines manufactured. But they did give me the value of those exported, namely, $3,464,098. Reckoning each machine at a value of thirty dollars, we find that 1,135,469 machines were exported.

I may say that I have selected some of these articles because they are in general use, and the following tabulations will, I believe, be of interest to the house:

Stoves, coal, wood and oil—
Imports	$ 506,410
Duty collected	126,382
Percentage	24.95
Total manufactured in Canada.	5,675,202
Exported	114,482
Used in Canada	5,560,720
Protection afforded	1,390,180
Ratio	1 to 11

That is, for every dollar received by the treasury eleven dollars was provided the protected manufacturers.

Furniture is very necessary to the settler, and in fact to every citizen. What do I find in regard to furniture manufactured entirely from wood? These are the figures:

Imported into Canada	$ 2,271,777
Duty collected thereon	634,980
Percentage of duty	.28
Manufactured in Canada	35,733,818
Exported	296,778
Used in Canada	35,437,040

For every hundred dollars' worth of furniture imported twenty-eight dollars was collected in duty. It is obvious that every time a hundred dollars' worth of furniture is manufactured in Canada there is provided by way of protection to our furniture manufacturers an equal percentage, amounting to $9,922,371. The ratio between the treasury and the manufacturer is 1 to 15.7.

Now let me give some figures with regard to enamelware. The conditions surrounding the manufacture and sale of this commodity have been examined by the tariff board, and anyone who reads their report can come to no other conclusion, it seems to me, than that the tariff duty should be reduced. Here are the figures:

Imported	$ 314,369
Duty collected	100,778
Percentage	.32
Total manufactured in Canada.	2,171,384
Exported	32,882
Used in Canada	2,138,502
Protection afforded	684,320
Ratio	1 to 6.8

I have similar figures relating to cutlery most of which we import.

Imported	$1,401,801
Duty collected	341,265
Percentage	24.34
Total manufactured in Canada.	693,100
Exports	958
Used in Canada	692,042

We collected 24.34 per cent on a million and a third dollars' worth of these imported goods in order to protect less than half of that amount manufactured at home.

Now, the total duties collected on these five commodities, leaving out sewing machines, amounted to $1,209,280, and the protection provided represented $14,912,756, or a ratio of 1 to 12. Why do I mention these commodities? Largely because they are required by the immigrant and by the settler, and it seems to me that the protection afforded has a direct bearing upon our immigration problem. For years past this government and its predecessors have in their efforts to attract settlers given assisted passages to intending immigrants from the old country and in some cases provided what may be termed ready-made farms. We have gone to this expense to bring in immigrants, but we have failed to tell them that when they proceed to furnish their homes with these necessary commodities, no matter whether they buy imported goods or goods made at home, they will be taxed at the high rates that these figures disclose. It seems to me that as a complement to our immigration policy it would be advisable to place these commodities on the free list or as nearly so as possible and thereby reduce the purchase price to the intending settler.

We have heard a good deal in this house about prosperity. Some say we have it, some say we have it not; some want to know what it is and others, where it is. It depends a good deal on whom you ask as to what answer you will receive. If you ask the banker, he will say yes; ask the broker, he also will say yes, we have prosperity; ask the manufacturer and he will say the same thing. But ask the farmer and he will invariably say, no. I am glad to notice that in this house there has been somewhat of a change in attitude towards the farmer and farmers' rights. I well remember that during the fourteenth parliament the members in this section of the house were termed calamity howlers because they persisted in pointing out the plight agriculture was in. Some were termed the Jeremiahs from the west. But I observe that to-day large numbers in all parties in the house are agreed that the farmer is not enjoying that degree of prosperity which he should. On that, most of the members of the house are agreed. And with that idea in mind I turned to the census report, secured from the Bureau of Statistics, and published after the enumeration of 1921. I went over the figures given for the ridings of nearly the whole province of Ontario, taking all that portion lying south of Muskoka, Victoria county and Renfrew—what is known as old Ontario. In that area I find 385 townships, scarcely a single one of which has not witnessed a decline in population. The following table, which gives the figures from 1901 to 1921, will show the decline that has taken place, with increases in a few instances.

Net loss		150,433

It will be seen that the total decrease in that twenty-year period is 177,744, while the increases in a few townships total 27,311. But those increases are due entirely to the overflow from cities like Hamilton, which have extended into the townships.

Mr. ADSHEAD: What was the net loss?

Mr. FANSHER (Lambton): The net loss is 150,433; but I believe that the increases are due largely to the overflow. Now, to obtain a correct idea of what that loss in population means, I would point out that it represents more than one-third of the population of the city of Toronto in 1921, the last year for which we have a return; it is more than the entire population of the cities of Hamilton and London combined; it is 70,000 more than the entire population of the city of Ottawa as recorded in 1921; and it is larger than that of a dozen cities in Ontario combined. It is no wonder then that the farmers, so far as Ontario is concerned, are alarmed at the problem which faces them.

Judging by the budget one would think that we had not a real problem to face in this country, that all that was necessary was to levy taxation to meet the required expenditures and that no adjustment of taxation should be made to alleviate some of the conditions which, as we see, have been prevailing in Ontario during this century. I venture to say that when the next census is taken we shall find that the loss has persisted in about the same degree as it continued from 1901 to 1921, and it will then be readily understood why the farmer is concerned about the taxation proposals of any government. It is on account of this loss that he is so insistent in his demand that tariff taxation shall be reduced; because ever since the national policy was forced upon this country agriculture has been made the pack horse for all other industries. Or, to change the figure of speech, agriculture has been the big brother who has had to support all other infant industries; and although they have become strong he is still looked upon as the big brother. But as these records show, we are faced with a diminishing population and the agriculturist is not standing up under the burden.

My hon. friends of the Conservative party say, increase the tariff and protect the home market. If there is any place in the Dominion where the result of that policy should have proven satisfactory it is right in the province of Ontario, where we are closest to the largest markets which the Dominion furnishes. Yet in these twenty years for which I have given figures we have witnessed a decrease in population to the huge figure I have indicated.

Mr. DUNCAN SINCLAIR (North Wellington): Mr. Speaker, in rising to make a few observations on the budget I wish first to congratulate the hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie) on his wonderful address. He has placed the condition of affairs in this country before the people of Canada so that a child could readily understand it, and has shown that this is due to the action or the inaction of this government.

I agree with the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb) that there is a certain amount of prosperity in Canada at present, but I regret to say that this prosperity has not to any great extent touched the farmer or the labouring man. This talk of prosperity reminds me of an incident which happened while I was a salesman for one of the largest implement concerns in Canada. I was sent out to see an Irishman in order to collect a past due account; I passed a pleasant hour with him and he kept me away from the subject as long as possible. Finally, I said, "Well, Pat, we have had a very pleasant visit, but money talks and if you do not pay up the firm will sue you." He said, "Mr. Sinclair, do you mean to tell me that money talks?" I said, "It sure does, Pat." Then he said, "That's funny it never has been on speaking terms with me." This wonderful prosperity about which the minister speaks is not on very good speaking terms with the farmer and the labouring man throughout Canada to-day.

Before dealing with the importation of butter into this country under the Australian treaty I wish to make a few remarks with regard to an incident which occurred in the agriculture committee a few days ago. Present at that meeting was a representative of the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell), and he gave us some figures which only strengthened my opposition to this treaty. He assured us that New Zealand butter did not hurt the dairy industry of Canada, and then he went on to say that the farmers in New Zealand did not need barns to protect their cattle, and that the cattle were put on grass for practically twelve months of the year, while the farmers of Canada have to stable their cattle for six months and give them high priced feed in order to meet the unfair competition from New Zealand. He also told us that the average farmer could keep from fifty to eighty cows on one hundred acres, that the land was worth from $300 to $700 per acre and that there were plenty of buyers who would pick up this land whenever the farmer wish to sell.

Knowing something of the dairy industry I have just figured this out roughly, and I find that eighty cows on one hundred acres, giving twelve and a half pounds of milk each milking, would average twenty-five pounds of milk per cow per day, or two thousand pounds of milk in all. With three hundred milking days, giving the cows sixty-five days' holiday, which is a long enough holiday for any cow, that would mean six hundred thousand pounds of milk per year. I see the minister is in his seat, and I hope he will take notice of this. We were also told that the price of cheese regulated the price of butter. If we consider twelve pounds of milk to equal one pound of cheese we find that the dairy farmer in New Zealand would produce fifty thousand pounds of cheese per year; at twenty cents per pound, which is one cent less than the figure he gave us, this would mean an income of $10,000 per year for the New Zealand farmer. If we allow the farmer $3,000 a year for expenses we find that he has a net profit of $7,000 per year, and I would like to ask the Minister of Agriculture if he can find any dairy farmer in the province of Ontario making that much money on one hundred acres of land.

Properly speaking this Australian treaty should not be so designated because Australian butter is not interfering with us at all. I cannot understand the attitude of hon. members on the government side of the house who argue that shipments of New Zealand butter do not interfere with the dairy industry of Canada. Hon. gentlemen opposite must have received petitions from all over Canada protesting against this treaty and stating the injury it is doing to the dairy industry of Canada. Even the Minister of Agriculture, in his address, said:

> There is nothing wrong with the dairy industry. See all the milk and cream we are shipping to the United States; see all the milk and cream we are using in ice cream. We may be short on butter but we are producing as much or more milk than ever.

This statement was made in face of the fact that in 1928 we had 100,000 cows less than in 1927. I fancy I see the disgusted look on the faces of those 100,000 of our best milch cows upon discovering they had to leave their good Canadian homes and go across to the United States, a disgust accentuated by the nonsense talked by the Minister of Agriculture. That is nothing, however, to the look of contentment mingled with gratitude on the faces of the 60,000 additional cows in New Zealand during the past year—which increase was brought about by the prosperous condition of the dairy industry of that country as a result of the kindness and the generosity of the Canadian government—as they wallow in New Zealand's luxurious grass, saying "We will come to your assistance, Canadian Minister of Agriculture." They came to our assistance in January, 1929, when we imported 7,660,681 pounds of butter, valued at $2,710,988; this was in January, when our cows were all housed in expensive buildings, each of which cost the farmer from $5,000 to $6,000. They do not need buildings in New Zealand in order to shelter their cows except in rainy weather, and when it is raining the farmers cannot construct buildings anyway.

How can the minister argue that the importation of such a large amount of butter into this country since the passing of this act has not hurt the dairy industry? Since this act went into force we have received under it, mostly from New Zealand, more than 30,000,000 pounds of butter valued at almost $11,000,000. This enters Canada under a duty of one cent per pound, while New Zealand charges us six cents per pound. Will the minister say this is fair competition?

What have the dairymen done about it? On November 29 last a deputation from the National Dairy Council of Canada waited on the government asking for some protection for the dairy industry, but they received no encouragement; at their annual meetings in 1927 and 1928 they condemned the treaty and pleaded with the government for some adequate protection for the industry. The farmers' association of Nova Scotia, at their annual meeting this year, condemned this treaty and Dr. Cumming, head of the marketing division of that province, declared that New Zealand butter was setting the price for Nova Scotia butter. Is this fair competition? Mr. Calder, president and general manager of the Saskatchewan Co-operative Creameries, declares that in three years Canada has ceased to export 25,000,000 pounds of butter annually and has imported an equal amount, and the figures given out by the Bureau of Statistics prove this to be so. I regret, therefore, that in this budget the government has made no provision for the protection and safeguarding of this great industry.

I should like to comment on the immigration policy of this government. I find the following figures prepared by the statistical branch of the government with reference to immigration during the year 1928:

Canadians entering United States.	73,154
Canadians returning from United States..	39,887
Loss of Canadians to United States	33,267
Immigrants from United States, other than Canadians..	25,007
Net loss to Canada..	8,260
Immigrants from United Kingdom	50,872
Immigrants from continental Europe	75,718

Deducting the figure 33,267, which represents the loss of Canadians to the United States, from the figure 50,872, the immigration from the United Kingdom, leaves a net addition of 17,605 of British stock. During the same year, 75,718 aliens were received from continental Europe, which added to the 25,007 from the United States gives a total of 100,725 aliens added to the population of Canada, as compared with 17,605 of British stock. That is, during last year we added about six aliens to our population for every one of British stock, and we paid out $2,704,698 to do that. Surely our continental immigrants are costing us too much good Canadian money. This government was so pleased with the year's business that they raised the salary of the deputy minister from $8,000 to $9,000. I would ask any manufacturer in the house if he would increase his manager's salary, or even retain his services, upon such a showing.

I wish to say a few words with regard to agricultural implements. I find that the farmers of this country paid the United States the huge sum of $40,000,000 for agricultural implements purchased during 1928. Every bolt and nut on these machines could have and should have been made in Canada. The purchase of farm tractors alone amounted to $21,000,000. If the government were working in the interests of the Canadian farmer it would see that tractors were sold to our farmers as cheaply as they are sold to the farmers to the south of us.. If the government would adopt the policy of Canada for the Canadians and have the goods consumed by our people manufactured in this country from our own raw materials, thus giving employment to our own boys and girls, many of the problems of the Minister of Immigration (Mr. Forke) would be solved. Our boys and girls would be glad to come back from the United States to the country they all love so dearly. Ramsay MacDonald, a former Prime Minister of Great Britain, addressing a meeting in that country shortly after his return from Canada last year, said:

> After more than twenty years' absence from Canada, I hardly recognized places I had visited before. It was an absolute revelation and a good revelation to me. If you go to the United States and try to find the soul of the country, you will find it to be largely materialistic. I have been trying to get in touch with whatever is the soul of Canada, and it is certainly not materialistic.
> There is a vitality of expansion, a youthfulness, and a hopefulness in Canada. Her weakness is that she has not got sufficient magnetic power to keep her people, both Canadian-born and British immigrants within her own borders. The great magnet that is always pulling them is the United States, and it is of the most vital interest to Canada to devise some means whereby she can accumulate sufficient magnetic power to hold her population within her domains.

The magnet which is drawing our boys and girls to the United States is that of employment. The burning question is: How can we keep them? The only solution I see is for the government to have our raw materials manufactured at home in Canadian factories by Canadian workmen, rather than in the United States. What an army of men would be employed if the $40,000,000 worth of farm implements purchased by Canada in the United States were manufactured here. The American manufacturers realize this and are becoming alarmed. An Associated Press despatch from Washington, dated March 6, says:

If the Canadian farmer stopped buying farm implements in this country a steady market would be gone which nets American manufacturers forty million dollars a year by taking up the slack of the over-production of American factories.

President Hoover therefore will bring his influence to bear on leaders in both houses to have the farmers tear down their tariff increases and at the same time placate the business men and persuade them to withdraw their lobby against agricultural increases generally.

I also quote the following from an editorial appearing in a Canadian newspaper:

Canada, United States Best Customer

During 1928, a Washington despatch informed us yesterday, Canada was Uncle Sam's best customer. We bought goods from him to the value of $916,155,506.

We bought more goods from the United States than England, which has four times our population.

We bought twice as much as Germany, which has six times our population.

Every day, indeed, during the whole of 1928, Canada sent $2,500,000 across the line for United States goods. Two and one-half millions a day.

What did the United States buy from us? The answer is that while ten million Canadians were buying nearly a billion dollars' worth of goods from the United States, one hundred and twenty million people in the United States bought only $488,000,000 worth of goods from Canada.

And that isn't all. Because while a tremendous part of the two and a half million dollars that went out of Canada each day to the United States was for manufactured goods —goods which had provided work and wages for Americans, and which were sold to us at a rich profit—the great proportion of what the United States bought from us was raw material. Goods the Uniated States had to have.

The moral has been pointed a thousand times. But how long will be it be before the government of this country has the sense and the courage to act upon it?

When the hon. Minister of National Defence (Mr. Ralston) was speaking the other day he mentioned the stock of the Massey-Harris Company. He said:

In other words, the old stock that was worth $50 is now worth $336.

I do not know whether he mentioned that as being an indication of the general prosperity of this country, but I should like to ask him—

Mr. RALSTON: I meant it as being an indication that the industry had not been hurt.

Mr. GEARY: On its Batavia business.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Wellington): I should like to ask the Minister of National Defence what the local agents of the Massey-Harris Company have made during the last four years; has their income advanced in the ratio that would be indicated by the figures I have just quoted—$50 to $336? Have the experts who set up those machines made any advance in the last four years? Have the farmers who bought those machines made any advance; and has their stock increased from 50 to 336 in the last four years? I know for a fact it has not.

I know there has been prosperity in certain places and it has something to do with financial prosperity, too. I find that our minister at Washington is experiencing wonderful prosperity and by leave of the house I should like to place some figures on Hansard:

Our minister at Washington has cost the country about $100,000 in the past year. For what purpose? Attending pink teas and other functions! What other possible excuse has the government, because, while 10,000,000 Canadians were buying $916,000,000 worth of goods from the United States, 120,000,000 people in the United States bought only $488,000,000 worth of goods from Canada. What has the ambassador done to save or protect this country after we have spent $100,000 on his expenses at Washington?

I believe the time has arrived when Canada should cease to be taking up the slack of the over-production of United States implement manufacturers, and it is up to us as Canadians to take a firm stand in the matter. We do not need to worry. The United States manufacturers are anxious to retain the best market they have, and they will gladly come over here rather than lose their very best customer. Why not make them come? Let us break this endless chain which the United States manufacturers are always so boastful about, and let us have this magnetism which Ramsay MacDonald claims we lack.

We have heard a great deal in the house and in the press in regard to our wonderful coal deposits. At our present rate of consumption we have in Canada enough coal to last for thousands of years. What is the government doing about the matter? Why send $100,000,000 per annum to the United States for coal when we have an abundant supply both east and west? Why not use this magnet Providence has provided, give employment to our people and keep this large amount of money in our own country? Someone has figured that if 1,000,000 tons of imported coal were replaced by Canadian coal, employment would be given to 6,666 people, who would earn an average of $1,500 a year. That money in circulation in Canada would keep up a good thriving town. Workingmen require clothing, doctors, lawyers, teachers and ministers, besides giving our farmers a good market for the products of the farm.

I am heartily in favour of the amendment moved by the hon. member for South Wellington and I regret the government has not made provision for reasonably safeguarding the interests of those engaged in agricultural pursuits or industrial employment in Canada.

On motion of Mr. Cotnam the debate was adjourned.

On motion of Mr. Robb the house adjourned at 6 p.m. until Thursday, April 4.
